1. It seems the progressive districts are growing more so, while the ordinarily indifferent and backward ones are more dilatory than ever. But the schools themselves are the organizations that really work out the problems, so we have hopes that in some cases they are going to continue their good work in spite of disinterested district officers. In fact we are informed that in one district it got so bad that not a single district officer reported at the convention. We could have heard as much from them if they had been in Berlin, yet in spite of this situation the schools themselves have gone right on and kept the district up to second grade. Things will be better there now, for at the bottom of one of the report blanks recently received it is noted: "We resolved that we would never again permit the district to get into a like condition." We would that many more districts would so decide. There is a definite and essential place for the work of the district and stake officers, and we respectfully suggest that the membership at large should demand a greater degree of faithfulness and efficiency from those chosen to serve in this capacity.

2. Ever and anon, as the poets would put it, we are afflicted with the old officers quitting without giving their successors any information as to what had gone before. It should be a standing rule in the code of honor that every officer turn over his work in good shape to those who follow. If little has been done, deliver that little in good shape and do it promptly. And please report all changes in officers to this or the superintendent's office—preferably both.

3. From the reports we have received we glean the following interesting items in addition to statistics reported elsewhere:

4. Northern California appointed the district superintendent as one of a committee to work out the recommendation of the secretary of the moving picture bureau.

5. The British Isles Mission had planned to hold a big educational institute this winter, but war conditions prevented. But the secretary says he is voicing the sentiment of the people over there, when he says it only made them more determined to keep on trying till they were successful.

6. Florida seems to want less duplication of work, and has passed resolutions seeking to make library work and literature work all the duty of the same board.

7. Two districts asked for legislation without the formality of seeing that the proposed amendments were printed sixty days prior to the General Convention. They ought to start earlier. One district began early and neglected to send in their action for publication.

8. Nauvoo has adopted the joint auditing board plan, whereby they appoint one member to work with one each from the district and Religio and audit all the district accounts.

9. Northeastern Illinois reports an average Christmas offering of $2.42 for each of their 701 members.

10. Northeastern Kansas wants the General Convention to enact the same legislation as the Religio has concerning the use of tobacco. (Religio Constitution, art. 3, sec. 3, p. 16.)

11. Massachusetts reports this: "Resolution: in substance—that we look with favor upon the coordination of such phases of church work as should be united."

12. Western Michigan has decided to hold institute work in each school which wishes it instead of one general session in the district.

13. Clinton asked the district conference to appoint committee to work in the interests of the Red Cross.

14. Kansas City Stake has a new standard of excellence and has decided to hold definite study classes instead of usual institute work at conventions. A resolution prevailed recently to have monthly stake institutes with dinner served at 6 p. m. in the church parlors at Central, for the purpose of educating and promoting the spirit of good fellowship among the workers of the stake. A committee was appointed to formulate ways and means of standardizing the reports and reporting of the local secretaries.

15. Western Nebraska reports seven schools and fourteen gospel literature boards in the district, which is certainly a good showing.

16. New York believes in coordination. They decided to appoint one member of the library board for Sunday school and Religio. They asked the church to concur and have the one act for all three organizations.

17. Kirtland Sunday school and Religio decided to send a delegate and pay expenses. Some other districts took similar action, agreeing to pay a third each, including the church.

18. Chatham reports over $2 each for their membership in the district. They talk of buying a typewriter for their secretary.

19. London has adopted the budget system of financing for the district.

20. Seattle and British Columbia favor the adoption of a pin to be indicative of membership in the Sunday school or church. It will likely be presented for consideration at the General Convention.

21. We are pleased with the nice gain shown in the total membership of the association in spite of the fact that there seems to be a marked decrease in enrollment in the beginner grades in many places.

22. Our impression is that there is a growing tendency to favor coordination. It seems we have been piling on new offices and new duties till we have about reached the zenith. There is apt to be a reaction, which after all may be for the best.

23. There is more work to be done, but the absorbing question is: How can it be done best? Perhaps out of some revolutionary suggestions we shall evolve a better plan than the one we have. But anything we do will still require intelligent cooperation.

E. D. MOORE.

THE NEXT NUMBER WILL APPEAR LATER

On account of requiring the room for convention and other reports, it became necessary to hold out till a later issue the second and concluding article by Brother Francis Earl on "Russellism weighed in the balance." As soon after conference as possible, we shall be glad to print the article.

STATISTICAL REPORT OF SECRETARY

Table with columns: Districts and Schools 1917, Latest Report, Previous Report, Gain, Loss, Membership (Latest Report, Previous Report, Gain, Loss), Teachers, Home Dept., Stan Exc. (Latest Report, Previous Report). Rows list various states and districts like Alabama, Australia, Canada, etc.

Summary table for specific regions: Kansas, Wichita; Nevada, Hualpi; South Dakota, Spearfish; South Dakota, Wagner; Sweden, Stockholm.

Number of the districts 33, nw districts 1, Wheeling, West Virginia; loss, 1, the Nodaway District, which was incorporated into the Far West Stake organization.

First grade districts are listed in black face type, there being seven of them. The number of schools reported is 786, a loss of 9 over last year.

We have 3,902 teachers reported. The total membership of the association is 44,396, a gain of 4,372.

The home department figures are included in this tabulation, but the totals and comments thereon are included in the report of the superintendent of that department.

REPORT OF PRESIDING BISHOP TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

PRESIDING BISHOP

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: 1. In submitting the financial report of the church for 1917 we consider the Saints should be commended for the very satisfactory progress made, and we are especially pleased to call attention to the following facts which the report discloses:

2. A reduction in the liabilities of the—

General Bishop's office to December 31, 1917$ 56,059.55
Graceland College to June 30, 1917 20,514.80
Sanitarium to December 31, 1917 8,598.49
Herald Publishing House 19,515.33
Total reduction of$104,688.17

3. This leaves a present total indebtedness of $266,886.90 owed by the church and these auxiliary institutions December 31, 1917.

4. It should also be noted that the net assets of the general Bishop's office have increased $184,449, which is $128,389.45 more than the liabilities were decreased. This is occasioned by payment of tithes and offering in real estate, and from the natural increase arising from the necessary business transactions of the office, etc.

5. The total amount of the bills payable of the Presiding Bishop's office December 31, 1916, was $192,462.98 December 31, 1917, was 136,679.93 March 9, 1918, the amount is 80,306.67

6. At the beginning of the year 1917 we suggested that the Christmas offering could be raised to $90,000, if each member of the Sunday school would pay at least $2. We are pleased to say that a universal response by the Sunday schools throughout the country returned up to February 15, 1918, the very satisfactory sum of $74,676.18. To the untiring and systematic work of Brother A. W. Smith, second vice president of the General Sunday School Association, no small amount of credit is due for the success of this effort. Besides meeting the general church administration expenses, needs of the missionaries, and supplying the worthy poor, all of which have been augmented by the rising prices, a general policy of repair and improvement of all church holdings has drawn heavily upon the receipts.

7. Noteworthy among these is the renovation of the Kirtland Temple, and protection of the Nauvoo property from the rising waters of the Mississippi River.

8. As heretofore reported in the church papers, the new Holden Home for the Aged, which was contracted for with the concurrence of the Post Conference Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Bishopric, has been opened, Bonheim Home family have taken up their residence there, the Bonheim Place has been renovated and is now occupied as the home of the Independence Sanitarium nurses. The outlay of some of these funds represent permanent investment.

9. Better general church office accommodations, from time to time urged by General Conference resolutions, has been temporarily supplied by securing, with the sanction of the High Council, the former residence of Bishop E. L. Kelley, northeast corner River Boulevard and Lexington Street. Such alterations as required have been made. The Presidency and Bishopric moved into their new quarters March 5, 1918.

10. The Independence Storehouse began business June 18, 1917, under the management of Brethren Bert E. Peterson and Lester H. Haas as stewards. From July 18, 1917, the Lamoni Supply Store has been operated as the Lamoni Storehouse under the management of Brother C. E. Blair. After a careful survey of the situation, a building was erected upon part of the Herald Publishing House block. The college laundry equipment, to which was added laundry and dry cleaning machinery, to equip a laundry suitable to the needs of the territory was placed in the new building, and the Lamoni Laundry was established and began business about January 1, 1918, under the management of Brethren Robert J. Wildey and Arthur E. Stoft as stewards. This enterprise was made necessary because the steam arising from the college laundry became offensive to those living in the Patroness Hall, and the space it occupied was required for other purposes. Besides this the laundry equipment at the Saints' Homes was very inadequate to their needs.

11. We acknowledge the loyal support and splendid cooperation of the local bishops and bishop's agents and solicitors, who have so materially contributed to the accomplishments of the year.

12. Pleased with the progress made during the past year, and confident of the continued success of the work, if we all discharge our several duties with an eye single to the glory of God, with you we are anxious to press forward to greater achievement in 1918.

Respectfully submitted,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

EASTERN COLORADO.—At Denver, February 23 and 24, 1918. District presidency, J. R. Sutton, A. E. Tabor, and M. F. Ralston, in charge. Statistical reports showed total membership of 1,051, a net gain of 34 in six months. Thirty-six ministerial reports were received, showing good results. Bishop's agent's report showed total receipts since last report of $5,800. Spiritual reports indicated advancement. Two priesthood meetings were held, with good attendance. Recommendations for ordination were received from Trinidad: Thomas McPhail, to office of priest, Milton Clow to office of teacher. Wiley and Colorado Springs both asked for the next conference but it was voted to have it at the latter place. Motion prevailed to suspend the district rule and hold it the last Saturday in August and the first Sunday in September. Delegates to General Conference: Ammon White, Alice White, M. F. Ralston, Mrs. F. G. Pitt, A. E. Bullard, F. D. Bullard, Florence Bullard, F. R. Brown, Sister Adkins, A. E. Tabor. Alternates: Corda McCormick, Sister Tabor, Emma B. Lewis, Sr. W. T. Bozarth, Sr. S. Conway. A very spiritual sacrament service was held, prophecy, tongues, and admonition being in evidence. A contribution of $36.75 was made, which was equally divided between the five missionaries present: Ammon White, F. G. Pitt, E. F. Robertson, O. E. Sade, J. R. Sutton. Coral E. Willis, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Far West Stake Reunion will be held at Stewartville, Missouri, August 16 to 26, 1918. R. S. Salyards, stake president, 119 North Nineteenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Notice of Appointment, District Choristers

To Whom Concerned: The following have been recommended by their several districts for appointment as district choristers, and the recommendations are hereby approved and the appointments published, with the approval of the First Presidency.

Brother David E. Dowker, 6549 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, Illinois, as chorister of the Northeastern District, vice Brother O. O. Randall, who is compelled to retire on account of failing health.

Sister Maybelle Higgins, Deer Lodge, Montana, as chorister of the Western Montana District.

Brother Fred A. Cool, Warrensburg, Missouri, as chorister of the Holden Stake, vice Sister Lola A. Johnson, compelled to retire on account of ill health.

We not only bespeak for these now entering into office the hearty support of the musical forces of the several districts in which they shall labor, but take this occasion to thank the retiring officers for their services of the past.

Respectfully,

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Chorister.

By ARTHUR H. MILLS, General Secretary.

Approved by the Presidency, Frederick M. Smith, President.

Our Departed Ones

HINDS.—Ida F., wife of Peter M. Hinds, died at her home, 1112 West Sixth Street, Waterloo, Iowa, March 4, 1918, aged 54 years and 4 months. Funeral sermon by Reverend Clyde J. Askins. Interment in Fairview Cemetery.

HANSON.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 14, 1918, Sister Nellie Hanson, aged eighty years. She was born in Norway in 1838, came to America in 1843, and married Peter Hanson in 1855 at Ottawa, Illinois. Of seven children one died in infancy and four after reaching maturity, namely William, Melvin, Alma, and Dorcas, the latter as the wife of Hiram Harder. John H. and Carrie R. Nelson remain. Sister Hanson was baptized in 1868 in Illinois by Thomas Hougas. Funeral service in charge of John Smith, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

TONEY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 22, 1918, Sister Mary A. Toney, aged 86 years, 10 months, and 7 days. Born near Erie, Pennsylvania, May 15, 1831. Married David W. Bennett in 1848. Of ten children six are living, in Iowa, Nebraska, California, Washington, Illinois, and Pennsylvania. Mr. Bennett died in 1887. She married twice later, Mr. Chivington and Mr. Toney. Both died. She was baptized in Fremont County, Iowa, in 1880, by J. R. Badham. Her life was exemplary in deeds of kindness and in gospel faith. Funeral service in charge of John Smith, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

GAYLORD.—Eleanor B. Harrington, whose maiden name was Pack, was born at Kirtland, Ohio, September 14, 1837. Married Daniel B. Harrington, deceased, November 1, 1854. Seven children were born to this union, all of whom survive: Daniel Bert, of Anahuac, Texas; Arby Cyrus, Tabor, Iowa; Lydia Caroline Davidson, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Eleanor Viola Gaylord, Kansas City, Missouri; Mark Joseph, Independence, Missouri; Clara Ophelia Roberts, Kansas City, Missouri; Emma Celestia Foulks, Shenandoah, Iowa. Was a member of the church since the early days of its history.

and continued a true and faithful member. Died March 20, 1918. Funeral in Saints' church, Independence, Missouri, in charge of I. N. White and E. L. Kelley, the latter preaching the sermon. All the children were present except Daniel Bert, of Texas.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR APRIL

The April number has been issued, and makes a very attractive and "chummy" number. The editors have succeeded in creating a delightfully personal though not too intimate style that we all like. It is well illustrated, crisp and breezy in style, yet contains food for many a serious thought. The May number is announced as a convention number, featuring convention news from the young people's standpoint especially. The magazine is well patronized and deserves it.

WANTED

Boy or young man to learn the bookbinder's trade. Write to the Herald Publishing House, giving references, etc.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING SERIES IN STEPPING STONES

In a recent number of the Stepping Stones, began the first of a number of stories by Brother Fred W. Smith, most of them complete in one number, and having as a basic theme the Christmas offering for 1918. They teem with interest and have a distinct message that will make them a valuable contribution to our church literature.

APRIL 6 IS "WIN THE WAR DAY"

On the anniversary of the declaration of war by the United States on the German power the entire Nation is expected to rededicate itself to the task of "making the world safe for democracy." For one minute during that day every man, woman, and child is asked to stop and seriously consider what more he or she can do to bring victory for the principles of right. On this day, as well, the Third Liberty Loan will be launched, in a drive to sell bonds totaling three billion dollars. These bonds are to draw 4 1-4 per cent, and those holding the other issues are privileged to convert them. It is officially stated that this interest rate is the highest that will be granted. Our readers will be especially impressed with the significance of the date, it having been observed as the opening date for our annual conferences of the church ever since its organization on April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York. Then there are many who believe that Christ was born on that date, rather than on December 25, and evidence seems quite easily adducible that his resurrection was on April 6.

WE DON'T DO MUCH

Our attention has been called to a drive by the Christian Church to be made this week, April 1 to 6, in an effort to collect or receive pledges to the extent of $2,000,000,000. On account of the handicap of the war, they state that they are in serious need of funds. The Christian Reporter before us states that the assessment for Nebraska is $75,000 or $3.10 per member. This amount is to be paid in excess of all other dues previously paid, and is a special fund for this current year, over all previous and regular dues. It brings then, to mind, the question, Why should we not do likewise? Such a collection upon our part would not only wipe out the whole of the debt, but would give a consider-

THE DAILY "ENSIGN"

In accordance with our custom, a daily edition of the Ensign will be published during the sessions of the coming General Conventions and Conference. This is in addition to the regular weekly editions, and will not be sent to those receiving the weekly edition unless subscribed for.

It will be the usual price, so low that every family in the church can afford to have it come to their homes. The entire series during conference for

It is largely a labor of love to get out these issues, help being scarce and we not having the facilities for getting out daily editions, but as a service to the church which we believe has always been appreciated, we are willing to do it, if we may have your cooperation by way of subscriptions. Tell your neighbors and friends about it, and see if every family in your community cannot be on the list.

By the issuance of the Daily we can have more room for the human interest incidents which always abound at such gatherings. We realize that only a very small percentage of the church membership can attend these meetings any one year, but that all who are not there—and some who are—appreciate the little touches which go right along with the transaction of weightier problems. Keep track of the details of what promises to be a most important conference, through the Daily Ensign.

The first issue will be on the second day of the conventions. We believe we can be assured of good mailing facilities, the papers going the evening published, giving you the news promptly.

able working fund as well. It is quite probable that this church pays less per member than almost any other church in America. We hope later to make an analysis of the report of the Presiding Bishop.

SEE ABOUT YOUR UNITY

Most of the subscriptions to Unity, the monthly priesthood paper, expire with the March and April numbers, having been written during conference time. Let us urge that all in attendance at the conference go to the bookstand and either renew or pay a quarter for a new subscription. During the past year it has contained much of inestimable value to the priesthood and some details on special items which perhaps would have never appeared elsewhere. Give the periodical your royal support and do not miss a number.

"BLEST BE THE TIE THAT BINDS"

Brother Ralph Dudley, of Niagara Falls, Ontario, is serving his country in England and in a letter requested the Saints to unite in singing for him at their next prayer meeting the beautiful song: "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." This was done and it was a very spiritual time, the Spirit attending in power. The tie that binds us is surely a blessed one, uniting and holding us, no matter where our lot may be cast.

PACKAGES TO SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

The warning is that friends of the men at the front should not attempt to send fresh fruit to them, for it can be had right from Italy in much better condition and more cheaply. Candy, chocolate, etc., are on sale at the Y. M. C. A. huts at reasonable prices, while 17 varieties of cakes and cookies baked fresh in France are to be had about as cheaply as we can buy them here. Fully two-thirds of the articles sent are to be had there at wholesale prices. Send letters, many of them, but hesitate long about sending parcels to fill up the badly needed transports. One shipment recently filled a train of 20 cars, only one of them being letters.

"THE FINISHED MYSTERY"

In a number of instances, the police in various cities have seized all the available copies of a book put out by the Millennial Dawn sect entitled The Finished Mystery. In Saskatoon, Canada, such a seizure was recently made, including copies of the Bible Students' Monthly. The International Bible Students' Association, as the members style themselves, have voiced protest to the secretary of state for Canada, but we have not heard of the outcome. The suppression is made on the grounds of their containing seditious matter detrimental to the present war situation.

Sister Helen Strong, Lamoni, Iowa, kindly gives us permission to use extracts from a letter to her from her husband from "Somewhere in France," which we are glad to present, as it gives us the viewpoint of one in the firing line: "When we come back victorious, as we surely will, I can say that, with God's help . . . we have won humanity's struggle. God is surely with us, for it is not glory we are fighting for, but to avenge the wrongs against God and his children—the poor, helpless women and children of Belgium and France. We cannot deny that it is a fight for God and the right; and we must keep close to humane rules of warfare in order to meet the approval of our Maker. I really and truly believe he has intrusted the future welfare and safety of the world into our hands; and we must fight a fair fight, that is, as nearly as our enemies will allow us. . . . There are only nineteen men in this Headquarters Company, and they are all fine, clean-cut gentlemen—we are just like a family of brothers. All were business men before coming into service, for most of their work here is clerical and accounting. You couldn't find a nicer, bigger-hearted bunch of fellows anywhere."

RAILWAY STRIKE AFFECTS CONVENTIONS

Early arrivals at the conventions found considerable difficulty in getting to Independence from Kansas City, on account of the prevalence of a street car strike in Greater Kansas City. On Sunday there was no service at all to Independence. By Monday, however, cars were running about every fifteen or twenty minutes, all carrying an armed soldier at each end of the car. Considerable excitement prevails in Kansas City over the general situation, as it affects practically all branches of union labor, the demand seeming to be primarily a recognition of union labor. Originating in the laundry trade, it has spread to the others.

Religio delegates are all wearing a purple cardboard disk which indicates they are Religians, and their names and home districts. This makes it convenient to shake the hand associated with a familiar face, drop one's eyes to the coat lapel a moment and instantly recall what we shouldn't have forgotten—the owner's name. We like to see the conventions continue this much appreciated practice. A celluloid "Z. R. L. S." button is furnished to attach the identification card.

NAMES OF RELIGIO COMMITTEES

The following committees were chosen by the presidency of the Religio: Credentials: John Zahnd, J. W. Gunsolley, Ray Lloyd. Resolutions: Mrs. E. S. McNichols, Mrs. R. J. Hitch, C. D. Jellings, F. F. Wippen, Harry Barto. Auditing: D. J. Krahl, Frances Moler, C. J. Hunt. Chorister: D. E. Dowker. Press: E. D. Moore, S. A. Burgess, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, James W. Stobaugh. Appropriations: B. J. Scott, R. A. Lloyd, Harvey Sandy. Notification: A. E. Warr, Edward Rannie.

Elder O. J. Hawn and family, accompanied by Sister Smith, from Bay City, Michigan, motoring to General Conference, stopped Monday for a few minutes at this office. They seemed to be enjoying their outing immensely. They left here about one o'clock, p. m., expecting to reach Kansas City by evening.

NOTICE: CHANGE OF DATES IN PRESENTATION OF "ELIJAH"

Owing to the unfortunate inability to secure soloists for the important soprano and contralto roles of the above oratorio, the dates of its presentation at the coming General Conference have been changed to Thursday and Saturday evenings, April 11 and 13, respectively.

Both renditions will be given at the Stone church at Independence, at eight o'clock, sharp.

ARTHUR H. MILLS,
General Secretary of Choir Movement.

HOME DEPARTMENT BUTTONS

In his supplemental report, William F. Sage, superintendent of the Religio home department, told us he had secured a new supply of the gold and enameled Religio pins, which are on sale at 50 cents each. The profits go to the furtherance of the home department work.

Brother Edward Rannie joyfully seconded the first motion presented on "the previous question." What would this hurry up motion do without Brother Rannie, who specializes on it each year? He gets variety by moving the matter and allowing others to second.

THE RELIGIO CONVENTION

The lecture by Augustine Dwyer at 8 p. m. on "The greatness of that which is least" was very largely attended, and as usual the interest and attention were excellent. He applied many pertinent "little" events in history to present-day conditions and evidently made a deep impression on the vast audience.

There was a congregational song service led by D. E. Dowker, a goodly number of the previously advertised songs being sung. A beautiful vocal duet was rendered by Mrs. M. Brackenbury and son Edward. The service was in charge of T. J. Elliott and prayer offered by J. W. Wight.

The weather man had threatened us with rain but it failed to materialize, much as moisture is needed for growing crops. During the night it grew colder and snow was imminent, but it, likewise, was dissipated and left us lovely weather for the second day of the convention.

Early copies of the Daily Ensign greeted us, with detailed news of the previous day's work. The Daily has come to be an essential feature of our big gatherings and is well supported each year, whether issued from one publishing house or the other. Those who understand the peculiar difficulties under which our editors and assistants work at these times will always be charitable and overlook the minor errors which are bound to creep in.

The early prayer meeting at 7.30 p. m. Wednesday morning was in charge of R. A. Lloyd and R. W. Farrell. It was devoted almost exclusively to testimony.

Workers' conferences were held from 8.10 to 9 in charge of heads of various departments, as follows:

Presidents, G. S. Trowbridge.

Vice presidents, T. J. Elliott.

Secretaries, James W. Stobaugh. (He was there, but no other secretaries—as usual.)

Treasurers, R. A. Lloyd.

Gospel literature workers, R. W. Farrell.

Much interest was manifested in these meetings and the attendance good, especially at the last-mentioned.

At the morning business session it developed that the auditing committee had not been able to comply with the request of the convention, to secure vouchers for all expenditures by the various department heads, and the treasurer made explanation according to information he had secured which was received as satisfactory. The moral of the incident is to get receipts for all moneys paid out when spending money for other people as committees or agents.

The following extracts from the report of the president of the Religio were referred to in a report of the resolutions committee, with a recommendation that they be referred to the executive committee of the Religio and the Presidency of the church with power to act. It was done. They read as follows:

(6) Field Worker

Our experiences of this year have confirmed us in the opinion that we ought to have some one who could devote his whole time to the Religio work with a view to instructing, advising, and enthusing the district and local workers, traveling among the districts and locals, and by personal assistance helping the district and local officers or field workers to become more efficient. In order that this general field worker might have more prestige, it would probably be well if either the general president or the general vice president was assigned to this work. Personally, I think the vice president would be the best officer for the work, both on account of the nature of the vice president's work being more in line with the work to be done, and the further fact that it would appear advisable that the president be permanently located where he can be reached easily, and handle administrative problems to better advantage than one who is constantly traveling about could hope to do.

(8) The Boy Movement

We are strongly inclined to the opinion that the Religio ought to assume the responsibility for this budding department of the church work, and would recommend that action with this end in view be taken in conference with the church officers, who have been giving the matter consideration.

A number of amendments to the constitution had been proposed, some this year and some left over from last year, having been referred to a resolutions committee of five. They acted on all of them and brought in recommendations that covered in some manner each of them. All Religians and many others will be especially interested in these changes, as they materially affect a number of rules hitherto observed.

This paragraph was added to the duties of the secretaries:

At the organization of the local, the secretary or organizing official shall immediately report the enrollment and names and addresses of all officers to the district or stake secretary. He shall also report the names of the officers and members to the general secretary, accompanied by a remittance equal to five cents for each member. If not in a stake or district, this latter action only is necessary. Should the name of the district secretary be unknown, same should be requested of the general secretary at once.

This was added to article 3, section 3, page 12, of the constitution:

Upon report of the organization of a local society in the district or stake, he shall immediately report enrollment of same to the general secretary.

The proposition to require that all district or stake elections be held at the convention prior to December 31 each year was laid on the table. The intent of the change was to get reports of changes in officers before the General Convention, which has been most difficult in some instances with winter elections. The secretary intends to formulate a blank to be sent to district secretaries on which the items of each convention, including the changes in personnel, may be promptly reported.

This is a big change:

All persons eligible, who give their names at the time the organization is effected shall be charter members, after which anyone desiring to become a member may do so after having attended three meetings in succession.

It will be noted that it disposes entirely of the custom of admitting by presentation of names before the society and acceptance by vote.

This was adopted and will become a part of the constitution:

All members of the society eight years of age or over are given the privilege of voting.

A big slice was taken out of the section on duties of the lookout committee (article 5, page 22). Everything after the word duties in the sixth line is stricken out, making it read this way:

It will be the duty of this committee to bring new members into the society, to introduce them to the work and to the other members, and to look after and seek to reclaim any that seem indifferent to their duties.

On the subject of withdrawals (section 4, paragraph 20) this was adopted to replace present rule:

Any member desiring to remove and unite with another society or home class, if in good standing, shall be given a letter of removal, recommending him to membership in such society or home class.

Still another amendment was adopted, affecting section 5, article 4, page 20, reading as follows:

Members who have become lost to the society by removal from the local or through failure to report after an absence of three months shall be dropped from membership in such local society.

A sweeping change was made when sections 6 and 7, pages 21 and 22, on expulsions and appeals were stricken out. Nothing is left in about expulsions and appeals, and what has for a long time been a dead letter is now effectively buried.

The chairman was asked what should be done about members already on lists who had not attended or reported for three months. He ruled that in fairness they should be given three months after the passing of this new rule.

Elder T. W. Williams spoke for half an hour during the session on "Supplying the social needs." His address was pointed and pungent, eliciting frequent expressions of approval and disapproval. His policy was expressed as being almost exclusively an affirmative one. The negative law of Moses was presented as only a schoolmaster to lead to the affirmative principles set forth by Christ. The principle of Confucius: Do not unto others what you would not have others do unto you, was contrasted with the affirmative enunciation of Christ: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

Brother Williams always sets people to thinking, a most desirable result.

For years the Religio has enjoyed the questionable luxury of an appropriations committee, appointed for each convention. This committee meets and passes on the financial needs of the various officers and recommends definite amounts to be appropriated to them. Just why such a committee should be more competent to decide such matters than the executive committee which does the extension work and decides on policies is more than we can comprehend, but the custom was observed as usual.

This committee recommended $50 each for the following, with a contingent fund of five hundred dollars to be used for extra expenses of each officer as the executive committee is satisfied they are just: president, first vice president, second vice president, secretary, library commission, superintendent of temperance department, superintendent of normal department, member social purity board, member gospel literature commission, superintendent of home department, lecture board. The amounts were voted. The sum of $60 was voted for the treasurer, and $25 for the furtherance of the organized class work. For advancing funds to lecturers from the lecture board, $100 was set aside, as a loan, and $250 for expenses of field workers, to be used at the discretion of the presidency.

At the forenoon session a motion to ask the president of the church who he wanted to act as president of the Religio was laid on the table. But when the election of officers for the coming year was taken up in the afternoon, it developed after G. S. Trowbridge was nominated for president, that he favored such procedure as a feature of the coordinating committee's report, previously adopted. A motion to secure a nomination from the presidency of the church was rushed through and the notification committee soon returned with this statement:

The Presidency requests us to inform you that they are well satisfied with the one now holding the office.

G. S. Trowbridge was then renominated and unanimously reelected.

It was proposed that two vice presidents should be elected. It being put to the chair, President Trowbridge ruled that it was constitutional to do so, so T. W. Williams and F. M. McDowell were elected first and second vice presidents, respectively, the first to have the usual duties of the vice president, the second to have charge of the boy movement of the church, which work Brother McDowell has been doing under appointment of the president of the church.

T. J. Elliott, former vice president had been nominated but found it necessary to decline on account of other church work preventing him from caring for the duties of the office, as did also E. D. Moore when nominated. Edward F. Yerrington and Joseph Johnson were both voted on for first vice president.

The following were unanimously elected to the offices indicated, there being no competing nominations:

James W. Stobaugh, secretary; R. A. Lloyd, treasurer; William F. Sage, home department superintendent; Harvey Sandy, member joint gospel literature commission; J. W. Gunsolley, temperance superintendent; Vernon A. Reese, member library commission; Charles B. Woodstock, member social purity board.

The appointment of a lecture board was referred to the executive committee. An effort was made to have the church, Sunday school, and Woman's Auxiliary join in this work, but the suggestion was referred to the executive committee, with full power to act.

Mrs. Corinne French sang "Our Redeemer's love." Elder F. G. Pitt, accompanied by Rosa Parks Pitt, his wife, rendered appreciated vocal solos at various periods during the convention.

At 3.15 Wednesday, an experience meeting was held, devoted to very brief speeches and questions and answers. What to do with children under eight years of age in the Religio sessions was the chief topic of the first part of the discussion, there being many divergent and interesting thoughts presented. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that they should have stories of some kind, especially those told from the Book of Mormon and church history by a competent teacher. One sister spoke highly of the work of Sister S. Forties, of Independence, in this connection and a resolution prevailed to ask the executive committee and the Board of Publication to consider the advisability of publishing the results of her work, they having power to act.

The revising committee which is composed of three persons appointed annually by the executive committee to read and revise the Religio Quarterlies before printing were voted $36 a year for that work.

The advisability of holding Religio sessions on Sunday evening was brought up for informal discussion in the experience meeting. It seemed that city members invariably like the Sunday evening hour the best, while rural and small community members prefer the other evenings for meetings, most of them observing Friday evenings. A proposed straw vote to indicate the general preference caused considerable flurry, as it was feared by some that such a vote might be construed as official and therefore place a ban on the side discriminated against. No vote was deemed necessary though the discussion was interesting and profitable. Locals should meet at the best time for their individual needs and as may be agreed upon.

At 4.30 J. W. Rushton addressed the audience on the topic: "The Religio missionary society," in a very able address which was reported and will no doubt appear later in some of the church publications.

The evening service Wednesday was devoted to a showing of colored stereopticon slides and a two-reel moving picture feature, both of the Mesa Verde ruins. Appropriate explanations and appreciated wit were furnished by F. M. Sheehy, who is to give an illustrated lecture during the conference week. The picture machine used was one of those recommended by A. W. Smith, of the moving picture committee of the Religio.

The attendance was good at every session, presaging masses at the conference gatherings to begin sessions on April 6. Weather continued excellent and the spirit of the gathering most commendable.

GALLANT MEN

The representation from the Massachusetts District this year is unusually large and representative. An interesting feature is that not a solitary elder has been elected as a delegate to the General Conference since they have ex officio rights. But instead, eight sisters were appointed in a delegation of ten. Eight elders are chosen alternates, and seven of them are here in case there should be any vacancies in the regular list. North Dakota did likewise two years ago and when the aye and nay vote was called the sisters cast votes for one hundred members while the brethren, as ex officios, voted for one each.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The first session of the twenty-seventh annual convention of the General Sunday School Association was a Christmas offering experience meeting in the upper room at 8 a. m., April 4, 1918, at Independence, Missouri.

It was in charge of Superintendent G. R. Wells, who announced that it was as much of a testimony meeting as any prayer and testimony meeting and had the additional advantage of having a topic assigned. Bishops B. R. McGuire and J. F. Keir were present and addressed the audience on the subject under consideration. The former summed up the entire effort in the statement that it was the united effort that effected the results, and when we united we could accomplish most any task. He graciously gave credit to Brother Keir for a number of the articles appearing over his name in the church papers relative to the Christmas offering. Brother Wells had hoped at the beginning of the campaign that it would be possible to pay off the church debt and induce the Bishop to wear a "mile of smiles." Brother Keir told us he made up for any that the Bishop lacked when the money came in so freely on the big Christmas offering which totaled over $75,000 at this time.

While it was impossible for A. W. Smith, the second assistant superintendent of the association, to be present, he was given due praise for the excellent work he did in enthusing the schools all over the association.

While the report to the conference will show something like $136,000 in bills payable, which constitutes the indebtedness of the church, the Christmas offering since that time has been applied on it till only about $80,000 is left to liquidate, and some of that impossible to pay because the creditors do not wish to have their money. But he wished it to be understood that when every cent of the debt was paid, there was still a need for funds for extensive work on the part of the church, so there was every reason for a continuance of the efforts and he looked for a much larger offering this year.

Brother Keir suggested that only one cent a day saved by half the membership of the church would total $146,000. Boys and girls who early learn to sacrifice and work for the church are the ones who will always appreciate it best. In the word work he always noted first the two letters: o and k, which O. K.'d work.

Strange as it may seem to some, the total receipts of tithes and offerings this year were 95 per cent greater than the previous year. There is every reason for continuing the efforts.

It would have been a great experience for every Sunday school member to have been present at that big meeting. It is impossible to describe the intense interest, the enthusiastic reports of the workers, the plausibility of the little schemes for earning and saving offerings. We can tell some of them, but the psychological effect of such an hour will not yield to cold type.

A number told of promising the best day's wage each month and that they were enabled to increase their earnings wonderfully because of it. Others found it did not impoverish them, but rather to the contrary, to give liberally to this and other funds. A novel method was that of one Independence class of girls—and it should work as well for others—who resolved to fine each member five cents whenever the interesting diversion of gossip was indulged in. All derogative remarks were counted, and the result was astonishing in financial results, not to mention the good effect on the class. One of their specialists turned in $1.09 the first Sunday. Just where the odd cent was lost we were not informed.

Thanksgiving offerings, auction of farm products, taking subscriptions to the church papers, selling of home grown songs, ornamental cards sent to cradle roll members' homes, the Christmas gift certificate, saving all the pennies that come into one's possession, third Sunday's school collection, birthday offering, selling junk, and numerous other methods were suggested for earning or securing offerings.

The spirit of giving has been engendered as never before, and no one doubted that last year's record could be doubled if we kept at it as we might.

We were interested in one statement from Wisconsin that they found the agitation for a greater offering increased their enrollment. Those who are afraid on this account, please take note.

At the close of the meeting J. W. Wight made the suggestion that there be a General Convention offering taken, based on one fourth of a cent a pound for each pound the donors weighed. It was acceded to and at last accounts he and others had collected a hatful of money and were still at it.

The first business session was at 10 a. m., and opened with G. R. Wells in charge, assisted by Daniel Macgregor, first assistant superintendent.

Elders H. A. Koehler and J. F. Sheehy rendered a vocal duet which they use effectively in their missionary work: "Gates of gold."

While the constitution provides that the superintendent of the association shall preside over its meetings, Brother Wells did not care for "splendid isolation" since the Religio and the church always gave the assembly the privilege of choosing whom they would have to preside. So by motion and vote the superintendency were chosen to preside, with E. D. Moore, secretary of the association, as secretary of the convention with power to choose assistants. He chose James W. Stobaugh.

The following committees were appointed, the superintendency having been given the right:

Notification: F. W. Kueffer, of the Central Oklahoma District, and Clarence Dickens, of the Saint Louis District.

Resolutions: A. E. Warr, of Alabama; Fred A. Cool, of the Holden Stake; V. D. Schaar of the Eastern Michigan District, who declined on account of poor health; James Pycock, of the New York District, he taking place of Brother Schaar; Mrs. Bertha Graham, of the North Dakota District; Mrs. Inez Smith Davis, of the Toronto District.

Press: S. A. Burgess and E. D. Moore for SAINTS' HERALD; Pearl Gardner and Louise Geisch for Zion's Ensign; J. A. Koehler, for metropolitan press.

Chorister: Mrs. E. S. McNichols, assisted by F. G. Pitt and Matthew Liston.

Ushers: local deacons.

The rights and privileges of the floor were given to all visiting Sunday school workers, which did not include the right to vote.

In his printed report the superintendent said this in the first paragraph:

1. Your superintendent has a conviction that all general church officers are entitled to voice and vote in all our conventions, both general and district, or stake, and that by virtue of their God-appointed prerogatives which we could not give or take away. I do not believe that we must have an amendment with sixty days notice in order that these ministers may have a right to the floor. That would seem presumptuous. True, it is a basic principle, but if we are to put all basic principles in our constitution, where would we stop? Let us not forget that the constitutional law of the church is basic, and to that we all owe allegiance. I ask the convention to approve of this ruling and make it a matter of record, merely recognizing a right that already exists.

In answer to a query, he ruled that it would include the following: First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, quorums of seventies, high priests, Order of Bishops, Order of Evangelists, elders under conference appointment and in districts. A motion amended the list to include all conference appointees, which would extend it to some priests. Thus amended, the ruling was adopted for General Conventions and districts and stakes as well. It was ruled that it did not require constitutional amendment, since it was simply recognition of rights already existing.

The report of the coordinating committee which had been adopted by the Religio (and printed in the minutes of that convention) was presented for adoption. Considerable sparring was indulged in by opponents, to secure more time for consideration or to modify in some way, but this was not effected. It was an interesting time trying to keep the whole situation untangled, but order was established, the big artillery thundered, though of course we would hardly dare add that the machine gun fire rattled, but after an illuminating discussion, principally for those who were not present at the adoption in the other convention, it was adopted by a vote of 193 to 56. Not so nearly unanimous as in the other instance, but a large majority.

The principal objections are concentration of power and limitation of the principle of common consent. It was also urged that paragraph six of the first section was not consistent in view of the part the church takes in the matter now. The superintendent ruled, and it stood, that this convention could adopt the proposition as it affected the association and not as it affected the conference, which will have to decide for itself as to the advisability of concurrence. The Women's Auxiliary will bring it up at their convention next week and decide on their attitude toward it. The Sunday school member of the coordinating committee was naturally vigorous in defence of the measure, from every standpoint, he and others urging that no rights were to be trampled on, the organization and their work remaining intact and their working efficiency increased by a much better coordination of effort.

One of the special numbers of the afternoon was a vocal solo by Fred A. Cool, entitled "Calvary."

The report of the treasurer and the auditors' report that it was correct were adopted.

A motion to refer a proposition endeavoring to establish a uniform plan for reporting Christmas offerings for publication to the executive council and the Presiding Bishopric, carried.

The question involved the matter of printing or not printing the names of those who contribute in the schools; which has been frequently discussed the past year. It was hoped by the mover of the resolution, that there could be some agreement reached, and the schools asked to concur. We will inform our readers of any action taken on the matter.

On Thursday evening there was a masterly address by R. W. Farrell, on the Sunday school of the future, written before the convention and before there was a report formulated by the coordinating committee, yet containing many of the same ideals as suggested in that report.

The Mount Zion Sunday school orchestra and a male quartet rendered special music, and there was a vocal solo by Blanche Allen Needham.

After the formal closing of this meeting the stake Sunday school officers gave a brief program in the upper auditorium, which included a short speech on historical items of interest concerning Independence.

The audience was asked to adjourn to the lower room where a "Quorum of Twelve" ladies were ready to shake hands and introduce all the visitors to each other. It was a seething mass of joyous greetings for about an hour and friends met friends and strangers became acquaintances with the utmost informality and gladness. The orchestra furnished the music while the inattentive, surging roomful conversed the louder. It was a successful affair.

The first session on the morning of April 5 was at eight a. m., in charge of G. R. Wells. It had been advertised as "everybody's conference." It was a development of the conference idea which has always been a popular one at the conventions, of having groups of workers get together and discuss special problems in the various departments of the work. It was an excellent thing, but it was noticeable that there were invariably people in one group who were compelled to make choice between several most interesting discussions, not being able to attend more than one of them.

This was such a conference at which all who desired might discuss and hear discussed the problems in which they were especially interested, as they referred to the Sunday school work. A question box had been prepared and placed in a prominent place the previous day so all who desired to do so might drop in questions.

When the session opened there were about thirty-five questions on hand, which were distributed to the heads of the various departments who had been arranged on the platform. In another place we may summarize some of these, as they will be of special interest to many.

The time was fully occupied and the meeting a great success in every way. Many of the questions were of general interest, while some were so personal that they were held for a personal conference with the ones affected. It is not possible to make a general ruling which will decide all mooted local questions.

The weather was cold and raw, developing into slight precipitation at noon.

The business session took up the recommendations of the resolutions committee, on matters which had been referred to them.

The Clinton District had asked for the creation of the office of temperance superintendent in the Sunday school as they are now had in the Religio, but the committee did not favor such duplication of work and the convention indorsed their views. It was decided to take no action on the matter.

A resolution proposing to give the home department members voice and vote in the schools under whose jurisdiction they were enrolled was laid on the table.

A recommendation had come from the Northeastern Kansas District that the convention adopt a rule, similar to that of the Religio, declaring those addicted to the use of tobacco as disqualified to hold office and the resolutions committee proposed the following:

"Resolved, that members of the Sunday school who are addicted to the tobacco habit are disqualified for officers or teachers."

It was ruled that it would be the sentiment of the body if adopted, yet not a part of the constitution.

The resolution was finally amended and passed to read as follows:

"Resolved, that members of the Sunday school who are addicted to the tobacco habit should not be elected for officers and teachers if other material is available."

This resolution was adopted, referring to preparation of institute and reunion programs:

"Resolved, that local and district executives, reunion institute workers, and field workers laboring in connection with the Sunday School Association be and hereby are directed to confer and advise with the general normal superintendent in the preparation of their educational programs, in order that, consistent with local needs, the fundamental training required by the workers of this auxiliary be uniformly presented."

The superintendent had suggested that the lessons committee was unwieldy and should be reorganized or discharged. The paragraph reads:

9. The lessons committee is composed of three elective members, J. A. Gunsolley, Heman C. Smith, and John F. Garver; the editors of the five Quarterlies; and the general superintendent, (chairman ex officio,) making nine persons so located that it is impracticable to get together unaided. For the reason given in paragraph 6 the lessons committee has nothing to report this year; and there has been nothing to report the past three years. The committee has apparently served its purpose. We recommend that either it be discharged or reorganized. If discharged, we urge that the executive council be authorized and directed to employ best available talent for doing whatever professional work that needs to be done on our lessons course, at the earliest possible opportunity. The first year of the course begins in January and we ought to start it with an improved series. We have lost one valuable year for preparation, but it is barely possible that beginner and primary grades may be benefited by January, 1919, if work is started promptly. If the lessons committee is reorganized, it should be smaller, of expert talent, and given facilities for meeting and doing real work. The bravest and most patriotic soldier would be at a disadvantage in meeting the foe without the best weapons obtainable. We ask our teachers and officers to be consecrated, but they are worthy of the very best tools that learning and talent can produce. A primary worker needs something more than Bible references and lesson story, especially as the majority of them are without training in this most important of all our teaching—laying the foundation.

The committee recommended the following:

"Resolved, that the lessons committee be discontinued, and that the executive council be authorized and directed to secure the services of the best available talent for doing whatever professional work is necessary in our lessons course."

Brother Wells was asked if this would mean the employment of talent inside or outside the church, and he stated that the lessons should be of the church, and for the church, consequently it was natural that members of the church who were qualified should be secured.

A resolution prevailed to defer action till after election of officers in the afternoon.

The superintendent had also suggested that auditors should be appointed who could conveniently meet and audit the books of the treasurer each year. The committee suggested that the general church auditors do this work each year and the suggestion was concurred in.

The Nauvoo District had proposed an amendment to the constitution which was to the effect that all districts with membership of 1,500 or less might dispense with the delegate system.

The proposition came up for consideration and the following prevailed:

"Any district or stake association may dispense with the delegate system in providing representation in its district or stake conventions."

It was ruled by the presiding officer that it would still be necessary for each district to meet at their next convention with delegates elected, and that such a convention could decide whether or not it would dispense with the delegate system in the future. If such action were taken, it would not longer be necessary to elect delegates for any convention.

The following was presented in response to the request sent to the First Presidency of the church for a nomination for superintendent of the association:

"The Presidency, after approval by the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, submits to the Sunday school convention as per request, the following names for consideration in choosing a chief executive for the Sunday School Association: Gomer R. Wells, Albert L. Sanford, of Boston, and Robert A. Lloyd, of Saint Louis, Missouri.

"Respectfully submitted,

"FREDERICK M. SMITH, President."

The chairman (who happened to be Daniel Macgregor, Brother Wells having retired while the matter was under consideration) was asked to rule whether or not it was allowable under the provisions of the adopted coordinating committee's report to nominate others for the office of superintendent than those already placed before the body. He ruled that it was permissible, and Daniel Macgregor was nominated.

He made a brief statement of his situation and feelings in the matter, leaving it to the judgment of the convention, and he also retired, asking R. S. Salyards to preside.

A motion was considered at length as to the advisability of referring the name of Brother Macgregor to the Presidency for report, but it was defeated and the vote taken, which resulted in election of G. R. Wells as superintendent, by a very large majority, he receiving 203 votes, Albert L. Sanford 18, R. A. Lloyd none, Daniel Macgregor 21.

For first assistant superintendent, the nomination and vote was as follows: Daniel Macgregor 249, Albert L. Sanford 20, C. F. Davis 1, Robert A. Lloyd 1. T. W. Williams and F. J. Ebeling had been nominated but declined.

For second assistant the vote was Albert L. Sanford 27, Arthur W. Smith 193, C. F. Davis 3.

Secretary: E. D. Moore 201, Nena Young 5. Brother Moore requested that some one else be elected if suitable candidate could be named.

Treasurer: Mark H. Siegfried unanimously elected.

Home department superintendent: Frank F. Wipper 13, Mrs. J. C. Schwab 154. Brother Wipper nominated the latter and urged that the vote be cast for her that his hands might be freed for other work.

Cradle roll superintendent: Mrs. H. B. Roberts unanimously elected.

Member library commission: S. A. Burgess unanimously elected.

Member social purity board: R. W. Farrell unanimously elected. He was also likewise elected member of the gospel literature commission.

The only new member of the list is Sister Schwab, of Independence, Missouri.

A document came from the Southern Missouri District petitioning the convention "to discourage and cry out against the narration of goblin and fairy stories and all others not founded on truths, but to rather encourage the proper narration of scriptural stories and those founded on the actual experiences of our membership in these latter days, thus increasing their faith in the cause of Christ."

In the preamble it was suggested that the telling of fairy and goblin stories might poison the minds of innocent and confiding children rather than feeding them the truth only.

It was referred to the resolutions committee who reported that they did not consider it necessary to legislate on the resolution, but it should be a matter of education.

Superintendent Wells explained that the origin of the resolution was traceable to a misunderstanding of the real art of story-telling, which included a selection of good stories as well as the ability to tell them. That there was a place for fairy stories, a place for all good stories, but that it was highly improper to take just any story and tell it any place it happened to be convenient. He informed us that the missionary whose objections had brought about the action had since that time more fully understood the scope of the work and would not now urge the adoption of such a resolution.

At the morning session Sister Walter W. Smith, who specializes on story-telling, told us that the best single book on the subject was the Bible, it containing the sort of stories that children liked, for they were most of them concerning the development of the people of those times as children of the world; learning how to appreciate it, therefore, with all the accounts of mistakes and accomplishments, was a vital source book for most excellent stories.

The suggestion of the committee, that no action be taken, was adopted.

The officers having been elected, the proposal of the resolutions committee that the executive council of the Sunday school choose such aid as necessary in working out the lessons course, was adopted.

Nellie M. Anderson was reelected historian of the association, her report to the convention being that a history had been compiled from the organization of the association to the present time.

The executive committee of the Religio reported through its secretary that they had decided to invite the Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary, General Conference, and Board of Trustees of Graceland College to each appoint one member to be a member of the lecture board, with a member to be appointed by the Religio.

Considerable argument was produced that it was better to refer this to the new educational department provided for in the coordinating committee's report—if the conference adopts it, and the Woman's Auxiliary does likewise. Others urged that it was a board which should begin its work immediately and not have to await the uncertainty of the formulation of the new department. The latter idea seemed to prevail, for it was decided by motion and vote to refer to the executive committee for appointment of a member to act with the one appointed by the Religio, and the others which may be appointed later.

The revising committee was reelected, consisting of A. Carmichael, J. W. Wight, and G. N. Briggs, all of Lamoni.

Treasurer M. H. Siegfried explained the manner of handling the stewardship resolution adopted by the association last year, which directed the Sunday school to turn over to the church all surplus over $600 on hand at the close of the year. He had conferred with the Presiding Bishopric and they agreed that under the circumstances it was not for the best interests of all concerned at the time. He had intended to suggest some changes in the resolution for further procedure, but the adoption of the report of the coordinating committee made it unnecessary.

That is the dominating feature of the convention, the effect the new move will have on everything. Every resolution of importance is discussed in the light of how it will affect or be affected by the new arrangement. Some of the opponents to the measure seemed to see danger in the future for a number of things that we were assured by friends of it were only imaginary. That word coordinating is a much used one and will be for some time to come. Late comers are glad to have it reviewed frequently so they may understand more about it, and naturally its exponents like to accommodate them. So we hear it explained from many angles.

Superintendent Wells addressed the audience briefly after his election setting forth most effectively some of his ideals and convictions. He has thought deeply on the subject and been engaged in it for a number of years as a general officer, in one capacity and another, so his vision is large and comprehensive. He only chafes under the difficulty of attaining the ideals he has in mind for the association as well as himself. He is too many times compelled to do the things which of themselves are not especially constructive, while the need increases for personal aid and advice.

The committee to gather the convention offering, based on the weight of each delegate, one fourth of a cent a pound, was busy as well as large. No one was intentionally missed, though some of the light weights accused the heavy people of shying at it. At the evening service it was announced that the sum of $94.37 had been raised for a Christmas offering from the General Sunday School Convention.

The attendance is very gratifying, being almost as large as at conference time, and about every good seat taken at the later business and program sessions.

There was a half hour of excellent music at the evening session of the convention on Friday. The Mount Zion Sunday school orchestra, under leadership of E. C. Harrington, and the young people's chorus, separately and unitedly furnished excellent selections. Elder G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, was present and offered prayer.

The Turner family of Independence, rendered a brass instrument quartet, and some children, grandchildren, and close relatives of T. W. Chatburn, deceased, sang a vocal selection: "Oh, hail us, ye free."

T. W. Williams gave the address of the evening on "The two-fold aim of the Sunday school." Following this, the audience joined in singing "I'll go where you want me to go."

A vocal solo was rendered by L. A. Fowler.

The convention adjourned, it being one of the most important ever held by the association, considering the scope of the coordinating movement. As that document provides, there is a possibility of the next convention being held some day during the General Conference rather than preceding it. No doubt this and a number of matters will be decided by that committee if the General Conference decides to concur.

During the later sessions there was an enormous crowd, and in the evening there were not nearly enough seats.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

The first session was at eight a. m., in the basement, called by the President of the church and including all members of the Melchisedec priesthood and priests under conference appointment. Such meetings are to be regular features of the conference each morning except Sundays. Instruction is to be given by the lecture method and discussions not indulged in at that time. Israel A. Smith was announced for a lecture on the legal aspects of a stewardship on Monday morning.

The first business session of the sixty-fifth Annual Conference of the church convened in the upper room at 10 a. m., with a packed house. The Presidency were given authority to complete the organization, make appointments of speakers, set time and place of meetings, etc.

At this juncture President Frederick M. Smith read the following document as the report of the president, which should be very carefully read and assimilated. We print it in full herewith:

PRESIDENT'S REPORT TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

To-day we enter upon the second year of the United States' participation in the great war. As a church we cannot dissociate ourselves from a keen and vital interest in that Nation. The majority of our members are in the United States. We believe this Government was founded for God's purposes. Our great social objective centers geographically near the heart of continental United States. Towards the goal we yearningly look, and faithfully strive. In no church should greater loyalty to the United States be found than among the United States Latter Day Saints. The year has been one of anxiety and feverish activity and happily may it be said that with few exceptions our people are doing their full individual duty towards the Government. With the cause of the allied arms we are closely bound in interest, and for the success of the cause of liberty we should fervently and continually pray. We stand for peace, but not for peace purchased at the sacrifice of principles fundamental to true liberty. We deplore war; but not even our religious belief in peace can justify a refusal to lend our assistance in a gigantic struggle for the fundamentals of democracy. We therefore stand for loyalty to our Government, and for its fullest expression I plead.

A YEAR OF ADVANCEMENT

In the church work the year has been one of steady advancement. In stakes and some of the districts changes are being introduced which already have resulted in improved spirituality; and it must never be forgotten that, however much we may emphasize the social aspects of our religion, however yearningly we look into the future, near or far, to see the walls and towers of modern Zion or ken the industrial activities, the prime object of our organic existence is the erection, maintenance, and constant fortification of a standard of ethics and moral excellence which shall challenge and hold in its illuminating grace the admiration of all peoples. In our material successes lurk potential dangers and it is our spiritual task to keep these dangers other than kinetic. To maintain ethical and spiritual excellence while material successes run apace is not impossible, though difficult. It means close clinging to religious landmarks in our intellectual and social development.

CHANGES INTRODUCED

The year has been one marked by the introduction of changes which have worked towards the advancement of our cause, though the full benefits have not yet been felt; for until complete adjustment is had to any change there is friction likely to develop. But despite this, there has been brought about a closer working understanding among the general officers of the church which promises a facilitation of administrative affairs, and this cannot but be considered as a distinctly forward move. To promote further this working understanding and to widen the circle of mutual and reciprocal confidence among the officers of the church shall be the continuation of a task to which we have long been devoting ourselves.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR

The Presidency the past year has worked under conditions at times far from advantageous. The one counselor has from physical causes been able to give little attention to the work of the Presidency, as is well known to the church. That he is at this conference time able once more to take his place part of the time in the general councils is highly pleasing to all his confreres and particularly so to the other member of the Presidency. May the Divine will be that he will soon be able to take his full share of the burden.

WORKS OF THE TWELVE

Thus shorthanded, the work of the Presidency has at times been made more difficult by the absence of the chief from his desk. But thanks to the splendid assistance of others called into help, the work has gone on apace.

After the adjournment of last conference, the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric held councils in Independence, at which were present such members of the Twelve as were at last conference. Following this the various members of the Twelve, acting on suggestions and direction of the Presidency, went into various fields giving official attention to matters demanding it.

Apostles C. A. Butterworth and P. M. Hanson, then in Australia, were in charge of the work there until the latter returned to America, since when the former has remained in charge, directing the affairs of the mission. He reports that though Australia has been hard hit by the great war, yet loyalty and devotion to the church and devotion to its cause has grown, and he is heartened by the young men who are rallying to his and our support. He has visited all parts of the mission but West Australia and New Zealand. On the whole the missionaries there have made a goodly report. For this mission see report in another place, in the report of the second mission conference held December last, and pronounced to be a marked success—"the most profitable gathering ever held" by the church in that country, says Brother Butterworth.

Brother Hanson left Australia in August, and spent one month in New Zealand and two weeks in Hawaii en route to America, which he reached in time to attend the fall council of the Presidency and Twelve held in November.

Of the death of Apostle James E. Kelley, the Twelve has taken due notice in the resolutions which will doubtless be presented.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy has, in harmony with instructions from the Presidency, devoted his attention largely to study and research into the literature of archæology, but has taken several trips to places needing his official attention in regulating, etc., and has been in frequent consultations with the Presidency and others of the Twelve on various matters coming to the Presidency's office. Under his direction the Far West Stake was organized last spring.

Apostle Peter Anderson, has by ill health been kept close to home; but as his strength permitted he attended near-by district conferences and reunions and assisted Apostle Sheehy in the organization of the Far West Stake, and has been of much assistance to the Presidency in counseling and advising in matters coming to the Presidency's office and others referred by the office to him.

Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Twelve, reports having been extremely busy for the year and furthermore reports having been abundantly blessed by the Lord of the harvest; in fact he reports that never has he had richer spiritual experiences in his forty-two years of ministerial service, and reports having been loyally supported by the ministry wherever he has traveled in his efforts to labor among them. But he calls attention to the fact that in many branches the Saints are starving because of the lack of shepherds to properly feed the flock, and holds that the attention of the church must be paid to this matter of providing good executive officers to have charge of branches and districts, and considers this to be one of the chief works of the Joint Council. Under the direction of and in harmony with the First Presidency, Brother Griffiths has traveled and labored diligently throughout the year, going where his services as one of the regulating officers of the church were needed.

Apostle U. W. Greene after the spring council went East and labored through the eastern districts or fields, giving attention to matters coming under his direct observations there, and spending most of the time up until the fall council in the field usually spoken of as the Eastern Mission. Though struggling against some hindering causes he was able to spend a great deal of time in the field while in that part of the country. After the meeting of the fall council, Apostle Greene traveled through the Northwest and West, familiarizing himself with the needs of the field in that part of the country, though before completing the trip he was called home on the account of serious sickness in the family. But with his work in the field and the various councils which have been held during the year, his attendance at reunions and other places and conferences, he has found his year a very busy one indeed.

After the spring council mentioned above, Apostle J. F. Curtis traveled in what has been known as the Great Lakes Mission, finishing up work which was left unfinished by him the previous year, traveling through Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ontario, New York, and Pennsylvania, returning by way of Ohio and West Virginia, looking after matters in that field and familiarizing himself with a portion of the general field with which he had no acquaintance previously. After the fall council, in company with Brother Hanson he traveled in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico, and then Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, and Idaho, dedicating churches, attending district conferences, settling difficulties, and discharging the general functions of one of his quorum.

Apostle W. M. Aylor, following the spring council, in company with Apostle Gillen, traveled through Iowa, North Dakota and the prairie provinces of Canada, getting acquainted with an entirely new field to him and doing much good in preaching and visiting among the Saints at the various district conferences and reunions. After the fall council, Brother Aylor, in company with Brother Greene, visited the Spokane and Washington countries, going down the Pacific Coast to the California districts and returning by way of Utah and Colorado. On their trip they got in touch with many of the brethren under General Conference appointment and were enabled, by instruction and encouragement, to do much good towards stimulating greater activity and a broader conception of the work. What with attending district conferences, reunions, and presiding over priesthood meetings, and meeting and talking with the various missionaries in groups and locally, Brother Aylor has indeed spent a busy year. He reports this the most active year of his ministerial life and he is much encouraged in his work.

Apostle R. C. Russell has been hindered a great deal during the year by sickness. Just before the close of the spring council until some time in June he was at the Sanitarium; then going to his home he remained there until the reunion season. After that he visited reunions at Erie Beach, Low Banks, and Kirtland. Despite his physical handicap, he traveled considerably through Ohio and other eastern States and was able to do a great deal of good in church work. He was in attendance at part of the council which was held in the fall, missing some of the earlier sessions. After the close of the fall council Brother Russell remained in and around Independence, attending to such matters as were turned over to him by the First Presidency's office and assisting in the councils and consultations which were frequently held on church matters at the office of the First Presidency. Besides this he was able to attend district conferences at Topeka, Eldorado Springs, Springfield, Holden, and in fact has been able to accomplish a great deal in spite of his handicap. He reports having enjoyed his work and having been greatly blessed therein.

Apostle John W. Rushton has traveled over the western States extensively, including Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, and British Columbia, attending such duties as he found within his province, assisting also in adjusting difficulties in Colorado Springs, and Bisbee, Arizona. His attention has been given to conferences and reunions in various parts of the western country besides preaching and lecturing where opportunities permitted. As secretary of the Quorum of Twelve and responsible for the work in the western part of the country, he has had, of course, to carry on a large amount of correspondence. Brother Rushton, though in attendance at the spring council, was, because of his distance from the office in the fall, not present at the fall council. But he has kept busy in his work as a church officer and has found pleasure therein.

Apostle James A. Gillen after the spring council traveled with Brother Aylor through Iowa, the Dakotas, and in the prairie provinces of Canada, but was recalled from that field by the Presidency to assist in office work, and from that time up to the present he has been engaged as a very industrious assistant in the Presidency's office, helping to care for the voluminous correspondence of the office. He has proven a splendid assistant and his faithfulness and zeal in helping carry the burden of the office are duly appreciated. Besides his work as office assistant to the President he has visited many conferences and reunions in the near-by territory and has made several trips to adjust difficulties in which it was necessary to have the attention of the Presidency's office.

PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

Touching the work of the Presiding Bishop it must be said that in the expansion of church work there has developed an interlacing of the detail work of the Presidency and Bishopric that renders the offices quite inseparable in their activities. The splendid spirit of cooperation manifest by the Presiding Bishopric and the loyal assistance rendered the Presidency by them is valued. By instructions of the President, Bishop McGuire and Bishop Keir have traveled as extensively as their duties would permit; this, for the purpose of getting acquainted with the Saints and their needs in various parts of the country and permitting the Saints to meet these men in whom it is necessary for the Saints to have such unbounded confidence. In thus traveling, the members of the Bishopric have gathered an insight to the work and a knowledge of affairs which cannot but be of great service to them in their department, and of service to other general church officers.

Under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric several industries have been started in the nature of stewardships which make towards the development of the general work, and hold promise of progress toward Zion conditions. Under their direction also the Holden Home has been opened and is receiving inmates. This is a consolidation of home interests which will be to the interest of the work.

COUNCIL MEETINGS HELD

In mentioning the work of the various members of the apostolic quorum, reference has been made to a fall council. In November the Presidency called the Twelve who were available from their various fields for consultation in the Presidency's office at Independence; and for some days the council was in session discussing matters which pertained to general church affairs and taking such actions as were justified. From this council much benefit was derived and great good was done to the church work. After the council, under the direction of the Presidency, the Twelve went into various fields or assumed various activities. Of this mention was made in setting out in detail the work of the individual members.

Besides this council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric held in November, there were held at different times during the year councils to which great importance must be attached. Under the direction of the Presidency, at different times during the year, there have been called to Independence the presidents and bishops of the various stakes and these in connection with the Presiding Bishopric of the church have met with the Presidency for the discussion of such affairs and activities in the stakes as touched upon and pertain to the general Zion development. From these councils there has been great strength of determination gathered and the influence emanating therefrom will be felt eventually in all parts of the church. The brethren counseling were heartened and strengthened, and of even greater importance has been the resultant unity of action in the various stakes, and a dissemination of the knowledge of details and working plans which has greatly enhanced and fortified the work in the stakes. It is the full intention of the Presidency to have these councils with as great frequency as might be demanded by the needs of the work or as may appear wise.

It would be difficult to say too much for the benefits accruing from the various councils which have been held during the year in the Presidency's office. This movement marks a distinct period in the history of the church, and good reasons appear why it should be encouraged and promoted. It will now be seen that while the Presidency has been short one counselor, and while one has, because of physical disadvantages, been prohibited from doing his work as a member of the Presidency, yet there has been utilized by the President, not two, but a large number of counselors; an opportunity gladly seized by him, grateful indeed that there is accessible such a body of counselors with whom to share the responsibility of making decisions looking towards the promotion of general administrative and executive affairs of the church. Appreciation is herein expressed for the splendid service and assistance given the Presidency in this way by the various brethren.

SCATTERED MEMBERS

We wish to call attention of the conference to the portion of the report of the Church Recorder which states that of the total membership of the church there are 34,500 who are reported as scattered members, or who are reported as not being in branches. Many of these, without doubt, with the proper care can be recovered to the records, but this means that there should be assigned to some officers the task of looking up these scattered ones and reclaiming them. And to this matter the Presidency is quite determined to give careful attention in the hope that we can organize or perfect some plan by which information in regard to these scattered members may be gathered. We are encouraged by the fact that in some places live pastors have given their attention to this matter, and in at least some instances have succeeded in discovering practically all of the scattered members. This gives us hope to believe that with proper attention the statistics now given can be changed, with great benefit to the scattered members and the church.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

The attention of the delegates of the conference is directed to the report from Graceland College, with particular reference to the work this institution is doing in the way of assisting the Government in its wireless and other work. Notice should be taken of the recommendation of the college president in regard to a new dormitory and a library building. The Presidency urges that some provision be made by this conference for the erection of these new buildings for Graceland College. They are badly needed, particularly the library building, and some way should be devised by the conference to supply these pressing needs of the college. The work of Graceland College as the head of the educational system of the church is becoming splendidly organized, and the efforts of those who have this work in charge are to be commended.

CHILDREN'S HOME

Attention is directed, too, to the report from the Children's Home trustees, particularly that paragraph speaking of the possible use of the home as a clearing house. This is an important matter. For long have we felt that the work of this Children's Home was not being carried on in as scientific a manner as is desirable; and this suggestion by the trustees is timely. Some action or references should be had looking to the carrying out of the plan suggested very briefly by the trustees.

NAUVOO

Attention is also called to the report of the committee on memorial to martyrs, to the suggested need or advisability of locating a man with his family at Nauvoo to take care of the property of the church there, and particularly that property on which in all probability will be located whatever memorial to the Martyrs it is decided to erect. This matter should have the attention of the church.

LIBRARY COMMISSION

Adverting to the report of the Library Commission, it may be said that perhaps this commission has been carried long enough to serve the purpose of its creation, viz, to tide over a transitional period. The Presidency believes that our development as an organization has been such as to justify recommending that the church librarian become identified with the librarian of the college; that the college library be made the library of the church in fact, or the chief division thereof, and to the work of the librarian be referred the task of unifying all our library interests. This can be done by the organization of a library force under the direction of the general librarian, and the library at Graceland College can be made the basis or nucleus for all library interests of the church; and, as has been suggested previously, there can be attached to the general church library such departmental libraries as are made necessary by our church work in its various aspects. This carries with it the question of the erection of the library building at the college to which reference has been made in another part of this report.

CHANGE IN HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT

The Presidency also recommends the discharge of the standing committee we have had, known as the committee on revision of church history. There exists a necessity for a reorganization of our historical department, and this is touched upon by a resolution which will reach us from the joint council. The work of revision, if necessary, can be left to such committee as may be appointed by the Presidency and those they will call in consultation thereon without the necessity of carrying this standing committee.

CHURCH ARCHITECT

The Presidency feels that we have reached the point in our church development when we should have a general church architect to whom shall be referred all matter pertaining to church buildings in which the church is generally interested, and to whom might be assigned the task of developing what will, we hope, be eventually a distinctive type of church architecture. This matter has been suggested to others of the brethren. The Presidency asks authority from the conference to so appoint a church architect.

CHURCH PHYSICIAN

It will be remembered that for some years the church has been without a church physician. The President of the church has had this matter under contemplation and advisement for some time, and we present now the name of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington as church physician, and ask ratification. Under the direction of this chief medical officer we should make and maintain decided and distinct efforts to promote the health interests of the church. An important work in preventive medicine should be fostered.

QUORUM WORK

The Presidency has had from time to time reports from various quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons organized in various parts of the country, but these quorums are not keeping up as high a standard of work as is desirable. It is, however, possible that this can be greatly improved by a closer supervision of this work from the First Presidency's office, and this task will be undertaken. To the brethren of the Twelve there must be assigned to a large degree the task of visiting with these various quorums in different parts of the country with the idea of stimulating, enlivening, teaching, instructing, and other necessary work. Quorum presidents in all parts of the country are urged to keep closely in touch with this office, reporting their difficulties as well as their successes. In the stakes, where the organization is more complete, to the stake presidents must naturally be referred the task of looking after these local quorums more closely, and where they are thus organized with better and larger machinery it is expected that the quorums will attain a higher degree of excellence and set a standard of activities as educational factors in the church, which will go far toward enhancing our spiritual development and welfare.

The Presidency some two years ago urged the reorganization of the Standing High Council with a view to having it more easily convened, without delay and large costs. This was done, and with satisfactory results. On several occasions this council has been convened for the purpose of hearing matters submitted by the Presiding Bishop, on which he desired counsel and advice, an opportunity which the Bishop has gladly seized to share responsibility with this body of advisers to the bishop.

THE BOY MOVEMENT

Because it was felt that there existed a well-defined demand for it, the Presidency, in the course of the conference year, appointed Brother Floyd M. McDowell general director of the boy movement. Brother McDowell has somewhat reluctantly taken up the responsibilities of this task, but we are fortunate indeed in having one of Brother McDowell's training to assume the leadership of this responsible movement. Attached hereto is the report which Brother McDowell has submitted to the Presidency, of the work so far accomplished by him and of what he has in mind. Those interested in the boy movement should note well this report of Brother McDowell to the Presidency:

"IOWA CITY, IOWA, March 10, 1918.

"To President Frederick M. Smith; Dear Brother: When I, in December last, after repeated requests from you, finally consented to assume the responsibility of attempting to work out a plan for centralizing the so-called 'Boy Movement,' I did so because I was supremely anxious that the church do something in a systematic way for the boys, and not because I considered myself qualified to offer at once a solution to the problem. If the task seemed immense to me at that time, it seems doubly so at present, since I have been thinking over it. If anything is accomplished it will be due to the hearty and prayerful support of the Saints.

"My time during the winter has been almost completely taken up with my school work and if I seem to have accomplished little this is all the excuse I have to offer. I have secured from Sister Audentia Anderson much of the correspondence of her committee which was appointed at the last General Conference to consider this work. In this material I found many helpful, yet widely divergent, suggestions. I have also reviewed some literature on boys' organizations as time would permit, as well as endeavoring to get in touch personally with capable men who have had experience in working with boys. In addition to this I have been recommended as an assistant scoutmaster and have been put in charge of a local patrol of Iowa City boys. This I believe will result in the best possible experience for me, as the boys are well trained scouts, and the chief scoutmaster one of the ablest boy leaders in the country. Since my name appeared in the church papers I have received many inquires and a few valuable suggestions from interested Saints throughout the church.

"I have recently submitted to the HERALD a short article setting forth my views as far as they have matured and offering a tentative plan of procedure. In brief the points emphasized were as follows:

"1. That it would be unwise to draw up at present an elaborate constitution for a general organization and proceed to hand it down ready-made to local clubs, irrespective of their particular needs. The more flexible the general organization the better.

"2. That the work of the general director should for a time be limited to collecting information, encouraging local organizations, acting as a sort of clearing house for the experiences of the various groups and imparting such information to those interested.

"3. In order to facilitate this work, each of the local organizations was asked to furnish me with certain definite information in regard to its organization, its constitution, members, etc.

"4. That branches having no organization but desiring to do something should write me, stating their needs and desires and expressing a willingness to cooperate with the general movement as far as possible.

"5. That at least a year should be spent in a united effort to collect information and try out plans and theories, in the hope that we might as a result be better able to devise just that sort of an organization best suited to the purposes and needs of the church.

"6. That wherever we could find a group of boys willing to organize, and a competent leader, a member of the church, we should encourage them to secure the boy scout's literature, and, if thought desirable, join in with that organization, keeping close tab on the results and reporting their experience as suggested above. This, we suggested, was made possible by the very nature of the boy scout organization itself, which intends that each church look after the religious training of its boys, and only provides those activities that encourage a clean, healthy, normal life. I have gone over their literature and I find nothing objectionable in it to my way of thinking.

"7. That local organizations already formed may either join the scouts as suggested or continue their own form of organization for the year, reporting their experiences and making every attempt to find the best.

"8. That some attempt be made to coordinate this movement with one of the auxiliaries of the church so as not to increase the already preponderant number of such organizations.

"These suggestions are based on practically no experience with boy movements, and very little time devoted to serious study of the problem. As a result they may seem very incomplete and immature. They represent, however, the best that I can do at present with the limited time at my disposal. I am ready and anxious for constructive criticism. I am convinced that there are a large number in the church ready to go to work to do something for the boys. Here is an opportunity. Let them not worry so much about not having a general organization of our own at present. Let them see to it rather that capable and dependable leaders are chosen to work with small groups of boys of similar age and interest, and the organization will later take care of itself. Let us all think together, work together, and pray together for the success of the movement, keeping in touch with the 'central office' at all times, and perhaps a year from now we may be able to report to you some more tangible results.

"Respectfully submitted,

"F. M. McDOWELL,

"Acting General Director of the 'Boy Movement.'"

REPORT OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE

Special attention of the delegates and ex officios of the conference is directed to the report of the coordinating committee. This committee is a joint one appointed by the church and the three auxiliary societies. For some years the Presidency has been of the opinion that in the work of the auxiliary societies there has been too strong a tendency toward independence of activities, and even government, and we feel that the report of the coordinating committee, looking to the correction of this evil, is opportune and is worthy of the careful consideration of the conference.

WOMEN'S BUILDING

A building owned by the church was by the Presidency and Bishopric last spring turned over to a committee of the local Woman's Auxiliary for use as a Women's Building. Later the local Woman's Auxiliary having relinquished control thereof, the Presidency appointed a committee to conduct the affairs of that building. The committee is Mrs. Joseph Sturges, Mrs. Joseph Mather, Mrs. Ellis Short, Mrs. Dora Glines, and Mrs. F. M. Smith. Something of the work of that committee is reflected in the following report submitted April 1 to the Presidency:

"We, the members of the Women's Building Committee, have the following report to submit: With the exception of a short time during the coal famine at the holiday season, the building has been open since July, 1917.

"During the summer a knitting class met at the Women's Building; and eighty garments were made for the Navy. Millinery, dressmaking, and Spanish classes were held there from September until the close of the Independence Institute at holiday time.

"The building committee has received donations from the following: Brother Zimmermann, four beautiful rugs; Brother William Crick, $200; Laurel Club, $150; by rent, $62; by solicitation, Independence Local, $54; Northern California District, $5; Southern California District, one comforter and $63.50; Chatham District, Canada, $3; and through special efforts of the committee, $45. Total amount $583.50. Expenses for furnishing the building $412.95, leaving on hand $171.55.

"As far as limited space would permit, a home has been prepared for girls; a labor exchange has been established; and provision made for a home economics class, under Government supervision; a complete conference directory, also names and addresses of Saints in the stakes; and for the past six weeks warm lunches have been prepared for the school children and others who cared to come."

COMMITTEE ON CHURCH OFFICES

For some years there has existed by appointment of General Conference a committee to provide church offices. For the present, at least, this committee has become unnecessary because of the outcome of another matter referred to the Presidency and the Bishopric. It will be remembered that the auditors called attention to some accounts which needed adjusting, and by proper action, adjudication or the task of making the adjustments was referred to the Presidency and Bishopric. One such account was that of the former presiding bishop, E. L. Kelley. It is pleasing to report these adjustments made on the basis of details submitted to the Standing High Council and approved by that body. In the settlement the church came into possession of the residence building on the corner of West Lexington Street and North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, now known as Bartholomew Hall. Although the General Conference has twice or more times authorized the erection of an office building, under the present prevailing high prices of building materials, it was deemed wise to use Bartholomew Hall for office purposes for the present at least. So with such alterations as are necessary this building is now used for general office purposes, and occupied by the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and provisions are being made there for the Church Recorder, and assistant Church Secretary, with meeting place for the Twelve and desk room for its secretary.

The Presidency has striven for a closer working arrangement of the general offices with a view to closer cooperation and to avoid unnecessary duplication of efforts and records, and this is a step there towards, and it is hoped to promote a closer working affiliation of still other offices with that of the Presidency.

The committee to provide church office building is now unnecessary and it is recommended that it be discharged.

On the whole the work is distinctly onward. From many quarters come the evidence that the Spirit of the Master is working mightily with the people. Men of the ministry are enthused by the sense of increased power when working whole-heartedly for the general interests. Malcontents there are, conspicuous at times, but under the action of the sifting forces they are becoming more outstanding with consequent diminution of influence. Everywhere are the lines of loyalty and disloyalty being more rigidly and distinctly drawn. Loyalty is the demand of the hour. Loyalty to God, to our Nation, to the church, to each other. May God grant that we measure up to the demand!

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

The opening prayer was by Frederick A. Smith, presiding patriarch of the church. Richard S. Salyards was chosen secretary, with his son Richard as assistant.

For press committee W. W. Smith and T. W. Williams were appointed, and they arranged to send out a mimeographed news bulletin to the press and telegraphic messages to the associated press. All those furnishing the names of periodicals likely to want to use this material were assured it would be supplied.

For stenographers the following were appointed: Belle Robinson James, Ruth Lewis Holman, Eunice Winn Smith.

It was brought out definitely that all reports for insertion in the Church Recorder's report should be in his hands before the end of the calendar year. Those submitted to the First Presidency for publication in the printed reports should be in their hands by March 1, and not later than March 15.

The committee on boundaries appointed was R. S. Salyards, C. I. Carpenter and P. T. Fairbanks.

The auditing committee had been changed by the committee in charge of vacancies. J. F. Garver had resigned and it was very inconvenient for Daniel Macgregor to leave at the time, so Kearney L. Kelley and R. B. Trowbridge had been appointed to serve with Charles Fry. Roy S. Budd gave valuable assistance at Independence.

They reported the report of the Presiding Bishop as correct. Some suggestions were made as to figures in the reports and clerical errors. Their report and that of the Bishop were adopted.

They also reported separately on the accounts of the publishing houses, the homes, the college and the sanitarium. Changes in methods of bookkeeping and collection or charging off of certain accounts were recommended. In most cases the reports were adopted and the recommendations referred to the boards or trustees in charge.

The budget proposed by Graceland College in the report from that institution was referred to the Order of Bishops for consideration and report. The same was done with the budget made up by the sanitarium trustees.

The paragraphs numbering 18 and 19 in the report of the president of Graceland College, urging the need of a college building, were referred to the Order of Bishops for consideration and report.

Marion Keir was appointed official page of the conference.

Brother A. N. Hoxie not arriving, E. C. Bell and A. H. Mills were in charge of the music and had appointed Robert Miller organist.

The recommendation of the President that the Library Commission be abolished and the work taken over by the college librarian was referred to the joint council, with power to act.

The president's recommendation that the committee on revision of church history be discharged was adopted.

The report of the coordinating committee, which had been adopted by both conventions, was brought up. A motion prevailed to limit speeches to five minutes, but before any were made it was put to vote and carried almost unanimously without debate.

A lengthy report from the Australian Mission Conference held December 25 to 29, 1917, was read, indicating good conditions in that mission.

The following was read and action deferred till Monday afternoon business session:

The Joint Council, while appreciating the able service of the Church Historian during his long incumbency, recognize that the demands on that department have increased to such an extent that in our judgment it is advisable to recommend to the General Conference a change in this department.

Therefore, be it resolved that we approve of the selection of a church historian and two assistants; and further, that the appointments of these historians be left to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric.

A request for the privilege of adding a name to the delegate list which had not been appointed as delegate or alternate was denied.

A resolution was adopted indorsing the address of the President and ordering that the first paragraph be telegraphed to President Wilson.

A new feature of this conference is a detailed program of the preaching services, printed in full and placed in the hands of each member and visitor. As many as seven sermons are arranged for simultaneously in the different church buildings in Independence and Kansas City. The subjects of the discourses are listed and it has been hoped to have each reported for publication in pamphlet form, the best to be selected from the seventy-five listed. The announcements run to include Sunday, April 14.

The upper and lower floors were given over entirely to the young people of the conference for Saturday evening. Only those invited were to be allowed on the main floor of either room, though visitors were given the privilege of occupying the gallery. This is perhaps the first conference where Youth has been given such privileges.

CHURCH SECRETARY

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: The work of this department has been conducted in the face of some difficult circumstances. My appointment to the Far West Stake required the greater portion of my time; and in addition to the demands of the stake work, entrance of the assistant secretary into military service, in the month of September, further hindered performance of the work. However, I gave attention to matters of pressing importance and permitted a certain amount of routine work to remain until conditions would permit full performance of all duties of this office. The Assistant Secretary was discharged from military service about February 1, and is now in position to give the work of this department attention. I have written articles for the press, furnished information required in the usual lines, and otherwise striven to meet the demands.

Railroad rates to General Conference and Conventions may be granted by the Burlington Route from leading points in the States of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, as last year; but no decision can be reached until about March 10, when advices from United States Government authorities in control are expected. In addition to regular clergy reduced rates the usual reductions granted to ministers from the East attending the annual meeting, also to parties traveling together as lay delegates, have been granted. War time conditions, with the policy of discouraging large gatherings, are not favorable to rate concessions. No effort has been spared, however, to secure benefits for our people.

Clergy Credentials.—We know little more than has been published heretofore concerning clergy rates in territory other than the following:

New England and Eastern Canada.—No clergy rates whatever; no local lines grant reductions so far as we have learned.

Trunk Line Territory, New York to Pittsburgh and Buffalo. No clergy bureau maintained by associated lines. The Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania lines, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, and some other roads will grant clergy rates between eastern points and Chicago and Saint Louis. Some roads issue to located pastors only; others to ministers attending General Conference; others trip permits. Applications to passenger departments will determine. As stated heretofore, the true policy is to ask for what is needed.

Central Territory.—Pittsburgh and Buffalo to Chicago and Saint Louis. Some lines will grant to missionaries, some to pastors only.

Western Association Territory.—Issued to ministers in Northern Michigan and South Dakota only, by local roads, to those in charge of congregations. Two lines have granted passes to ministers traveling in Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana; see statement under Transcontinental.

Southeastern Territory.—South of Potomac and east of Mississippi Rivers; credentials issued to general and local ministers devoting entire time to church work.

Southwestern Territory.—“Certificate good for travel locally (intrastate) in the States of Texas and Louisiana, and to make interstate trips between Texas and Louisiana.”

Transcontinental Association territory:

The Transcontinental clergy certificate is good only upon lines parties thereto named below and their connections as follows:

(1) Locally and for interstate trips between the following described territory:

Arizona, British Columbia (Great Northern Railway only), California, Colorado, Idaho, Manitoba (Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railways only), Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota (C. B. & Q. R. R. and M. & St. L. R. R. only), Texas (Rio Grande, El Paso & Santa Fe R. R. only), Utah, Washington, Wyoming.

Exceptions: Certificates will not be honored, as follows:

(a) Locally between any two points both of which lie east of the territory given in Section 1. (b) For interstate trips via Chicago & North Western Railway, between points in Wyoming and territory east thereof. (c) Between points in Colorado and territory east thereof. (d) Between points in New Mexico south of Rincon to Deming and to El Paso, inclusive, and points east of New Mexico, Colorado, and Wyoming. (e) Between points in Wyoming east and north of and including Cheyenne and points east thereof.

(2) Members of Transcontinental Clergy Bureau who honor clergy certificates locally within the territory described in Section 1, according to their local regulations:

Arizona & New Mexico Railway.
 Arizona Eastern Railroad.
 Bellingham & Northern Railway.
 Bullfrog Goldfield Railroad.
 Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway.

 Union Pacific Railroad.
 Wabash Railroad.

Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad.

*Certificates will be honored by agents of Minneapolis, Saint Paul & Sault Sainte Marie Railway for tickets at Clergy fares to points west of and including Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and Nelson, British Columbia.

Transcontinental clergy certificates are not honored by the lines named in preceding table locally in the territory east of that described in Section 1, but only from points on the lines named in Section 3, to points within the territory described in Section 1 above, or vice versa, according to the local regulations of each line.

Annual clergy certificates will only be issued to those coming within the requirements of the clergy rules as printed herein, and who reside within the territory west of and including Port Arthur, Chicago, Saint Louis, Memphis, and New Orleans (including the States of Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee), and whose duties require them to travel to, from, or within territory described in Section 1.

Exception: Bishops and such other general or national church officers who qualify under rule 1, page 3, but who reside east of the territory described in paragraph above, will not be debarred, on account of residence, from receiving annual certificates, provided their jurisdiction requires them to travel over these lines.

Local railroad and steamship lines in the territories named will at times make special concessions within their own rules. Rates from such may be obtained by interview or by written application accompanied by certificate of appointment or special letter of indorsement. Assistance will be furnished any so applying, so far as practicable, by this department.

Appointments of 1917.—The General Conference of 1917 made appointments as follows: Patriarchs, 17; high priests, 34; bishops, 7; seventies, 122; elders, 90; priests, 5. The post conference appointed 27; a total of 302.

Business Deferred or Referred.—Minutes of 1912, page 1629; status of a seventy expelled from his quorum: Referred to joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. Minutes 1916, page 2246; committee on revision of Rules of Order and Debate. Minutes of 1915, page 2022: vacancy in office of Church Physician. Minutes 1915, page 2044: matter affecting officers of branches; referred to committee on Rules of Order and Debate. Minutes of 1915, page 2057: atonement question from Eastern Colorado District; referred to Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. R. S. SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA, March 1, 1918.

Church Secretary.

CHURCH RECORDER

To the First Presidency and the General Conference of 1918, Independence, Missouri: 1. In submitting our tabulated report of statistics for the year 1917 we call attention to the following items: Our total membership for 1916 was 82,964, to which there has been added by baptism 3,890, and received by transfers 2,460, making a total gain of 6,350; from which must be deducted our losses of transfers 2,373, expulsions 71, and deaths 610, a total loss of 3,554, which makes a net gain of 3,296, bringing our present membership up to 86,260. There have been 396 ordinations, and 578 marriages, while the reports show 5,649 holding the various orders of the priesthood, and 34,500 as absent from the branches. 1,818 children's blessings were reported.

2. Of the 3,890 baptisms 1,675 or 43 per cent were males, and 2,215 were females; while 1,447 or 37 per cent were under fifteen years of age: 2.7 per cent of our entire membership moved from one branch to another as shown by the transfers; 6.6 per cent hold some order of priesthood; 34 per cent are not in touch with the branches. Our 3,296 net gain represents a 3.8 per cent increase, and the 681 actual loss as shown by the deaths and expulsions means a .07 per cent loss.

3. Our totals might have been much larger but for the fact that no reports were received from the following districts during the year: Southern Queensland, Australia; London, Toronto, and Owen Sound, Ontario; Birmingham, London, and Sheffield, England; Germany; Society Islands; Eastern and Western Wales; Northern Michigan; Independence Stake; Kansas City Stake, Missouri. Since closing our books the Owen Sound District reports have been received; this being a new district, unavoidably delayed their reports until a new record could be made up for them from the records of the formation to correct their literary productions have seemed to be obstinate and displeased, and not all of them, for some have cheerfully stood corrected, seeming to be glad to know the truth.

ORGANIZATION

5. The First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric remain as at last report, with two members in each. The traveling High Council has suffered a loss by the death of James E. Kelley, who died June 4, 1917, thus leaving a vacancy in that quorum.

6. The General Standing High Council has reported no changes.

7. Presidents of Seventy remain as at last report. Upon recommendation of Presidents of Seventy the conference dropped, without prejudice, Francis C. Smith, William R. Smith, Samuel O. Foss, Milton F. Gowell, Thomas J. Sheldon, Frank J. Chatburn, Charles H. Porter, Charles G. Lewis, Benjamin F. Renfroe; and Charles E. Crumley and Edwin J. Goodenough for cause. Provision was also made for the ordination of Robert T. Brown and Edward Curtis.

8. Provision was made for the ordination to the office of high priest of Henry P. W. Keir, Robert N. Burwell, William R. Adams, Daniel J. Williams, David T. Williams, Hiram E. Moler, James F. Mintun, Warren E. Peak, Robert T. Cooper, Arthur E. Starks, James E. Bishop, Elmer O. Clark, Albert W. Craig, Edward Ingham, Edward Rannie, and Hans N. Hansen.

9. Subsequently, at the organization of the Far West Stake the following were ordained high priests, to act in high council: Coventry Archibald, Herbert D. Ennis, George W. Best, Paul H. Pugsley, David C. Wilke, Louis A. Keck, Samuel E. Jobe, John E. Hovenga, Benjamin R. Constance, Coleman Snider, and Zenos J. Lewis.

10. The nomination of the following bishops was also approved, Buford J. Scott, Elmer O. Clark, Harl A. Scott, Albert W. Craig, Edward Ingham.

STAKES

11. In harmony with provision made by the General Conference, one stake has been organized, including territory hitherto included in the Far West and Nodaway districts. It was organized June 2, 1917, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. Richard S. Salyards, sr., was approved as president; Buford J. Scott as bishop.

12. The council was organized with the following members; Coventry Archibald, Herbert D. Ennis, George W. Best, Paul H. Pugsley, David C. Wilke, Louis A. Keck, Samuel E. Jobe, Temme T. Hinderks, John E. Hovenga, Benjamin R. Constance, Coleman Snider, and Zenos J. Lewis.

13. The bishop nominated Elmer E. McCormick and Austin M. Dobson as his counselors. Subsequently the president of the stake nominated as his counselors John W. Roberts and Louis A. Keck, who were accordingly ordained.

OTHER STAKES

14. Holden, Independence, Kansas City, and Lamoni Stakes have each continued active organizations, and some of them, especially Independence and Lamoni, have been making special efforts along economic lines, the result of which is being watched with anxious and hopeful expectation.

15. Lamoni has lost one of its presidencies by resignation, viz: Edward J. Giles; and one of the council, Charles F. Graham, by death.

COMPETING ORGANIZATIONS

16. There is nothing of special importance to chronicle under this head.

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

17. The Sunday School Association, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and the Woman's Auxiliary have been active and are occupying as helpers indeed.

MISSIONARY WORK

18. Radical changes in policy have been inaugurated in the conduct of the missionary work. Members of the Quorum of Twelve received no special fields of appointment, but are left to labor where needed under immediate direction of the First Presidency. Former missionary lines were practically wiped out, and the seventy and others are appointed to special fields without reference to said lines. Two hundred and sixty-three received appointments to special fields, including 15 patriarchs 34 high priests, 7 bishops, 117 seventies, 87 elders, and 3 priests. At the post-conference councils twenty more received appointments.

IMPORTANT COUNCILS

19. A series of councils have been held at intervals during the conference year by some of the general and local authorities which are reported to have been very important in results, but as this department has had no official information regarding their purpose or accomplishments, we cannot speak definitely regarding them.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION

20. This board controls the publishing interests of the church at Lamoni, Iowa; Independence, Missouri; Porsgrund, Norway; (Sandhedens Banner formerly published at Porsgrund, is now issued from Lamoni;) Society Islands; and Australia, and issue the same periodicals as published a year ago, in addition to large quantities of books, pamphlets, and tracts.

21. The second volume of Young People's History and the Concordance of Book of Mormon have been placed in the hands of the board, awaiting its action in publication.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

22. The workings of this institution can be best determined by reference to its own report.

22½. Last year Albert Carmichael and Gomer R. Wells were each elected to succeed himself on the board of trustees. The terms of Charles B. Woodstock and Thomas A. Hougas will terminate at this conference. Those of John W. Wight, John F. Garver, and George N. Briggs in 1919, and those of Albert Carmichael and Gomer R. Wells in 1920.

HOMES FOR THE AGED

23. The vacancy in the board of control for the Homes at Lamoni, occasioned by the death of Bishop Joseph Roberts, was supplied by the selection of Bishop Carmichael. So the board as now constituted is composed of Albert Carmichael, Richard J. Lambert, and Alvah J. Yarrington.

24. We have no special information of the Homes at Kirtland, Ohio, and Independence, Missouri.

25. Recently an additional home for the aged has been opened at Holden, Missouri, but as to its conditions we are not informed.

CHILDREN'S HOME

26. This institution is still making a commendable effort to fill the measure of its creation in the church. Trustee Lucy L. Resseguie was chosen to succeed herself; Floyd M. McDowell to succeed Joseph Roberts, and Albert Carmichael to succeed Heman C. Smith. The term of Trustees Callie B. Stebbins and Richard J. Lambert expires at this conference, and those of Minnie B. Nicholson, Alvah J. Yarrington, and Floyd M. McDowell in 1919.

SANITARIUM

27. The resolution of 1916 providing for a change in the manner of appointing trustees for this institution was rescinded and William D. Bullard, George H. Hulmes, Lester H. Haas, Joseph A. Tanner, Clarence O. Leeka, Mark H. Siegfried, and Benjamin R. McGuire were sustained as the board.

28. Of the particulars of the operation of this institution we are not informed.

ORDERS OF ENOCH

29. So far as we are informed, these organizations are confined to the two mentioned in our last report, viz, at Independence, Missouri, and Lamoni, Iowa. No material change is reported.

GENERAL CHURCH LIBRARY COMMISSION

30. This commission is changed by the substitution of Edward D. Moore for Heman C. Smith as representing the general church, and about the usual character of work has been done.

PRESS AND PULPIT

31. The work done against us through these mediums is decreasing gradually, both in volume and effect. We have prepared several articles for the press and corrected many more.

32. We still have other invitations not reached as yet. Some prominent writers and educators are constantly consulting this office regarding proposed publications.

MUSEUM

33. This work is practically at a standstill, nor can much more be done until better facilities are provided. The case used for relics and specimens occupies place in the church library and is in a dilapidated condition, the construction of the case having been very unsatisfactory.

34. The office has insufficient room to accommodate the museum (the filing of documents constantly increasing), and retain sufficient working space.

LOCAL HISTORIANS

35. This class of officers is of great value to the work of the department, and many of them have been faithful and efficient in service.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Historian.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: The attached reports of the president and of the treasurer and business manager of the College were at a formal meeting adopted by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, and made the report of the board to the General Conference.

Respectfully submitted,

A. CARMICHAEL, Chairman.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 27, 1918.

ANNUAL REPORT OF PRESIDENT

To the Board of Trustees: 1. Like all other educational institutions in the country, it was fully expected that war conditions prevailing would adversely affect this institution. However, what was our surprise at the opening of the year to have a considerably larger enrollment than last year, and as the work has continued the enrollment in the different departments has increased.

2. Instead, therefore, of the anticipated decrease, there has actually been an increase. The increase has been not only in numbers, but in interest and accomplishment. With very few exceptions the students seem to sense the situation throughout the world and to realize, as never before, the value of time and their responsibilities in the premises.

3. The attendance is twenty-five per cent higher than a year ago, the increase being quite uniform in all the departments.

4. Students are enrolled from twenty-one States, Canada, England, and Hawaii. Lamoni leads with thirty-one per cent of the student body, eleven per cent being from the community surrounding Lamoni, twenty-two per cent coming from other parts of Iowa, while the remaining thirty-six per cent are enrolled from outside of Iowa. Following Iowa the enrollment is as follows: Missouri, Wisconsin, Montana, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Idaho, Hawaii, California, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, Canada, New York, North Dakota, Alabama, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Texas, Florida, Arkansas, Minnesota, Oregon, England.

5. The attendance is very cosmopolitan. In addition to American students, the following are represented: Hawaiian, Japanese, English, Negro, and Indian.

War Conditions

6. Along with the other educational institutions of the country, Graceland has been called upon by the Government to do her share in meeting the special conditions surrounding us. To do that she has modified her courses in certain particulars, added new departments and new courses, and throughout the year work in all departments and all courses has been so conducted as to assist in every possible way the work of the Government.

Wireless

7. The demand for wireless operators for the Government service is very great and, on the special request of the signal service branch of the Government, our wireless department has been put on a war basis, especially equipped and fitted up to prepare drafted men to become wireless operators on being taken into the Army.

8. The assistance to the Government in this particular respect has been very great and has received special recognition. In four and one half months we have been able to prepare the drafted men of our church to enter the Government service fully equipped for work on an entirely different basis than if they had not taken this course. They are able to do a much more efficient piece of work for the Government and for themselves. Important as is the work of the private in our Army it is fully acknowledged that this war, as never before in the history of the world, is being fought and will be won, not in the trenches or on the battle front, but in the scientific laboratory, around the mathematics table, in the aviation corps, by the wireless operators, and the other many special divisions of the Army, so to the extent to which Graceland can contribute her share of well equipped men for these higher and more important branches of the service, to that extent is she doing her share towards the winning of this war to "make the world safe for democracy."

9. The college is to be congratulated that it has in Mr. Arthur B. Church, the director of the wireless department, a young man of great devotion to the best interests of the church and the college. He has shown great skill and efficiency in his work.

Home Economics

10. The Government early recognized the share that the departments of home economics in our colleges and universities should have in bringing to the attention of the public generally the problems of food conservation. In common with other colleges of the land our department of home economics has been placed at the disposal of the Government and has been used to the very great advantage of our student body and of the surrounding communities. We were fortunate indeed in having at the head of that department Miss Mabel Knipschild, who had just returned from a year's graduate work in Columbia University, New York, in special preparation for her work here. She brought to the department an ability and an enthusiasm rarely found, thus making it possible for the Government to carry out its plan of educating the public along the lines of food and clothing conservation in a most effective manner.

11. The department has thus been enabled to perform a most efficient piece of work in the present crisis.

Short College Year

12. In response to the call of the Government to release college students, particularly men, as early in the spring as possible, the college authorities submitted to the students a proposition of shortening the college year one month by having sessions six days in the week in place of five and omitting the spring recess at conference time. Although this would deprive the students and the faculty of the benefit of the General Conference sessions, and would mean a curtailment of many college functions of a social and athletic nature, it was almost unanimously approved, there being less than a half dozen dissenting votes.

13. This plan will enable the college to close on May 2 in place of June 1, thus releasing the student body for the month of May, which is, in the middle west, a very important agricultural month. It will also enable us to graduate a class of wireless operators on May 2 and give us the months of May, June, July, and August to conduct a summer session exclusively for the benefit of prospective radio-telegraph operators, thus enabling us to graduate two classes of wireless operators before September 1, in place of one, thereby doubling our output of efficient wireless operators.

Accrediting

14. As was reported to you a year ago, we have received full recognition from the State Departments of Education, both at Des Moines through the State Board of Educational Examiners and at the State University of Iowa through its official examiners. The college department itself and the academy have both been placed on the fully accredited list and the graduates from the department of education in the college who have had the required amount of work in psychology, principles and history of education, and allied subjects are granted State teachers' certificates without examination. These certificates are practically equivalent to life certificates, as they can be renewed without examination so long as the graduate continues in the teaching profession.

15. Although this accrediting, so far as the granting of the state certificate is concerned, was not accorded us until late in the college year of 1916-17, it was made to apply to the class graduating last June because of the high quality of work being done in the college. Thus our graduates of last year were granted State teachers' certificates, and there will be a considerably larger class to be recommended to the State Department of Education for state certificates at the close of this year.

16. The State is exceedingly glad of the opportunity to avail itself of our equipment in the way of library, laboratory, and teaching ability to prepare efficient teachers. There is no trouble in securing positions for all of our well prepared graduates in education, the calls being in excess of our ability to meet.

Dormitory Facilities

17. We have not been able to meet all the demands made for dormitory accommodations during the present college year. The time will shortly come when some provision will have to be made to meet these requirements. The advantages of college dormitory life are so great, especially when it is sometimes very difficult to secure suitable accommodations in private homes, that our needs must not be overlooked.

Library and Museum Building

18. The most urgent need, however, is for proper library and museum facilities. We have a most efficient library, adequate in every way, with the small yearly additions that should be made, to meet our requirements for many years if it is properly housed and properly cared for, which is not possible under present conditions.

19. What we must have is a library building which will properly house our library and will give us room for our museum and other equipment needed for work in our science courses. We have the beginning of a most excellent museum and historical collection, valuable not only from the standpoint of anthropology, archæology, and history, but, if put in shape so that it is easily available, very valuable for all of our science courses.

20. We are very severely criticized by every official examining board of the State for our inadequate facilities for properly taking care of our library, and it is absolutely impossible to provide suitable facilities in our present building.

21. It is urgently recommended that provision be early made for a new building, especially designed for library and museum purposes. It is believed that much of the work of construction could be done by student labor, thus giving employment to needy students. The excavation and other preliminary work could well enough be done during vacation when student help could be used very extensively. Such a building would relieve our great congestion in the main building, releasing our present library room for regular class rooms, thus assisting very materially in administration and efficiency.

Zion and Education

22. On invitation of the editors of the Herald I prepared an article a few weeks ago on the topic at the head of this paragraph, and among other things said the following:

23. "Zion is to be a land of plenty, a land of wealth, a land where there is to be no misery, no poverty, no hunger, no one without everything his needs and just wants require. To bring this condition about God's spiritual and economic laws must be observed.

24. "It will not satisfy Zionic conditions for the few to be spiritual and to be educated, for the few to be in a condition to appreciate and to take advantage of all opportunities. One prospers just in proportion to the prosperity of the average man with whom he is brought in contact. If the masses of the people are poor and ignorant, every individual, every interest, every industry in the community will feel and register the pulling down power of their backwardness as inevitably as the thermometer records the temperature of the air. Every man who through ignorance, lack of training, or by reason of any other hindering cause is producing or earning only half as much as he ought, by his inefficiency is making everybody else in the community poorer. The necessity for education has increased and will continue to increase with the advance in complexity of the processes of civilization. Because of the unparalleled progress in most directions during the past fifty years the need for education has in a generation multiplied many fold."

25. A few weeks later I received a letter from one of our traveling missionaries reading in part as follows:

26. "I read with keen interest your article on education in a recent issue of the Herald and I wish our people could sense with deeper interest the importance of education and training for our young people. I cannot see the complete redemption of Zion in any other way than through education as defined by Spencer, 'to prepare for complete living.' Certainly with that thought goes the special help and power that God will bestow upon his worthy people. In my travels as a missionary there has been constantly before me the sad picture of our young people in matters of education. I believe that fully seventy-five per cent of our people have not an education in the public school beyond the eighth grade."

27. That this report of conditions is not altogether in error seems to be substantiated by reports which I have received from time to time from branch presidents who have written that there are no young people in their branches able to take advantage of Graceland College because they have not been taking advantage of the public school system in their own communities much, if any, beyond the compulsory school age. This condition must be remedied if we are to be in a position to profit from the institutions of higher learning in this country and to be prepared for the work of Zion. A recent writer in the Herald said:

28. "Each person is an integral part of the church, and the church can make progress only as its integral parts make progress, and that as each member fails to take advantage of the privilege the church offers him, just that long will the church fail to reach its ideal, and will fail until each person finds his or her place and fills it, and fills it well."

29. Graceland is exerting her ever-widening influence in the way of a solution of this most important problem, and until it is solved our mission will be only partially executed. With the cooperation of the members of the church, the alumni, and ex-students, an enormous influence can be wielded—in fact, with united effort it will be almost invulnerable. If each contributes his fiber to the strand a cable may be woven which will prove strong enough to advance the solution of the problem well on the way.

Faculty and Student Body

30. I have enjoyed no one of the three years I have spent in Graceland more than the one just closing. This is largely due to the almost unparalleled cooperation and unity of purpose on the part of almost every member of the faculty and student body. The world war crisis has its compensations, and one of them has been the serious-mindedness on the part of the young men and women gathered from many parts of the country to further prepare and equip themselves for the work of the future.

31. Almost without exception they have been loyal to the best that is in them, sensing, as never before, the value of time and opportunity. It has been a real pleasure to see the marked development in many of their lives, and there is every possible evidence that there is a very large piece of work ahead for many of them.

Band and Orchestra Department

32. The demand for the organization of a department where our young people could secure proper instruction in band and orchestra instruments was so great that, after consultation with the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, the college authorities decided to open such a department with the opening of the present college year. The new department has been very enthusiastically received, and with our already well organized vocal, piano, oratory, and public speaking departments it gives us a studio adequate to meet the needs along these lines in a most satisfactory manner. The income from tuition has more than paid for the cost of the department. It was fully expected that this would be true, and our experience has justified our hope.

Lectures, Musicals, etc.

33. To the already quite extensive lecture, musical, and entertainment courses offered for the benefit of the student body and the community, we were able, through the assistance of the general officers of the church and one of the brethren dealing in motion picture machines, to add one of the very best motion picture machines on the market to our equipment. As an accredited institution of higher learning we have had the services of the State University, the State Agricultural College, and the United States Bureau of Economics at Washington, District of Columbia, in the way of providing some of the very finest educational motion pictures and sets of stereopticon slides with prepared manuscripts as a basis for lectures to be given by members of the faculty. These motion pictures and sets of slides shown weekly throughout the year are of great advantage to the institution.

34. Our last addition has been a large assembly Victrola with a very fine selection of records. These are of value not only for the entertainment of the students but for their education as well. The records at times are used in class work to add interest and enthusiasm to the regular exercises.

35. These new inventions—the motion picture machine, the modern type of stereopticon, the talking machine—increase our possibilities greatly, and properly handled are a source of great good to our work.

Outlook

36. The past year has been one of progress, advancement being made along many lines. Yet there is still so much to be done, so many activities and interests to develop, that the end is not in sight. However, with the continued cooperation on the part of the membership of the church and the continued loyal support and unity on the part of the student body the goal will be reached. The outlook is most encouraging in spite of the great amount yet to be accomplished.

37. As has been our policy in the past, so it will continue to be, not to undertake too much, but to do well whatever is undertaken, believing that the policy of thoroughness and of intensive effort will in the long run spell a progress which would be impossible if the available funds and energy were scattered over too wide a field. This institution has a very definite field of usefulness and it prefers to do its work so well that it will continue to deserve a constantly widening field of opportunity.

38. It is believed that this policy commends itself to all interested in the institution's welfare as well as that of the church at large, and the college, therefore, renews its expression of hope that it may deserve the continued support of its many friends whose cooperation even in a small way will make for big success.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE N. BRIGGS,

President.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER AND BUSINESS MANAGER

To the Board of Trustees: 1. I herewith submit my report for the fiscal year July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917, for publication with other reports to General Conference.

2. This report does not give items of all receipts and disbursements, nor the details of all resources and liabilities, and losses and gains; but such report is made out and filed with the Board of Trustees and with the Presiding Bishop after the close of the fiscal year, June 30, at which time the books are closed.

3. A comparison of the expenditures, taking the amounts actually expended from July 1, 1917, to January 31, 1918, and estimating the amounts required from January 31 to June 30, 1918, with the budget allowed for the year July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, shows the following results:

5. An examination of the items which vary from the budget will be of interest. The increase in the cost for operating the heating plant is due to the advance in the cost of coal, and is less than was anticipated. This was a condition that could not have been foreseen a year ago.

6. In light and water, the increase over budget may be due to the fact that in prorating the charges for heat, light, room rent, and board the per cent for light is a little too small; also no direct charge for water is made to students, as is the case for heat, light, room rent, and board.

7. The item of interest is below the budget for the reason that a goodly portion of the debt has been liquidated.

8. The one fifth of the debt has been more than paid by

$1,843.68, the total amount paid to January 31, being $10,006.31. About $2,500 has been paid since, up to time of this report, March 1.

9. The amount of tuition received is $714 more than the estimate, while the receipts from temporary endowment subscriptions are $856.56 below the estimate, and offerings are $47.50 below. This showing is probably due to the fact that part of the College Day collection was sent directly to the Presiding Bishop.

10. Taking the budget as a whole, then, not counting the amount paid on indebtedness above the budget allowance, we are below the budget $67.22, which, it must be conceded, is a good showing, considering the advance in prices of fuel and all lines of material and help.

Budget for 1918-19

11. In presenting the budget for 1918-19 it is deemed best to call special attention to some things. In the allowance for the faculty an increase is asked for, part of which is to provide for one additional teacher, which additional allowance will be more than made up by additional tuition from the added department. The balance is required to meet the needs of the members of the faculty on an allowance basis, due to the great increase in cost of provisions.

12. In library care we are asking for an increase of $400 so as to be able to provide a librarian whose time may be devoted to the care of the library, rendering it of much more service, and saving to the college very many valuable books lost each year by lack of supervision, which is absolutely impossible under present arrangements. This will also assist in meeting the requirements of the state examiners respecting our library facilities.

13. The items, then, for the ensuing year are as follows:

Allowances for faculty	$11,500.00
Heating plant, fuel and labor	1,800.00
Insurance	300.00
Library care	600.00
New books	100.00
Advertising (including catalogue)	300.00
Office help	600.00
Light and water	450.00
General expense	400.00
Interest	600.00
One fifth indebtedness	8,162.63
Repairs and upkeep on real estate	1,200.00
Repairing and replacing furniture	300.00
	$26,312.63
Less: Tuition receipts	$8,500.00
Offerings	500.00
Endowments	200.00
	$ 9,200.00
	$17,112.63

Indebtedness

14. On January 31 the total indebtedness is shown to be $25,135.08, of which amount $7,100 is in gold bonds drawing 5 per cent interest and payable in 1920; $9,223.49 represents amounts received from the church, and not expected to be repaid; about $1,200 more is in the nature of bequests, or practically that, and will not have to be paid. The balance, $7,611.59, represents notes payable not due, none of which are drawing more than 5 per cent and some of them no interest, and personal current accounts that can be paid at any time. It will appear from this that substantial progress has been made in complying with the Lord's injunction, "The college debt should be paid."

Scholarships

15. Agreeably to the action of the last General Conference setting aside a part of the annual College Day collection as might be advisable as a fund to be loaned to students to assist in their educational expenses, scholarships have been awarded to eighteen students amounting to $1,022.70.

16. Zion's Religio-Literary Society sets aside annually $400.00 to be used for the same purpose, and there is available at present several hundred dollars in the hands of the treasurer of that society. Nine students this year have availed themselves of this help, borrowing $426.

17. The General Sunday School Association also placed in the hands of the college treasurer several years ago a small fund of five or six hundred dollars which is being used in the same way.

18. All these funds are serving a good purpose and should be perpetuated. Their help is much appreciated.

Student Self-Help

19. About twenty-five young men and young women are employed, some working for full board, and some for less, to do the work of the college hotel, caring for the dairy, firing the furnace, caring for the buildings, library, gardening, etc. Something over two hundred dollars a month is thus earned by these young people to assist them to an education, many of whom would be deprived of this privilege but for this help. An allowance of fifteen cents an hour is made them for their services, being an increase over former allowances to correspond to the advance in the price of board.

Hotel

20. Owing to the advance in the price of foodstuffs, the price of board was increased to $3.50 a week and room, light, and heat to $1.25, making the total $4.75. The price for those rooming at the farm was advanced to $4.50. At these prices it is doubtful whether the hotel is on a paying basis; it is hoped, however, that it will show when the books are closed June 30, that it has not run behind to a serious extent. Every effort is being made to keep the cost of operating down to the minimum. We are doing our utmost to cooperate with the Government in food and fuel conservation, and it is a matter of sincere gratification to find that the students and members of the faculty boarding at the hotel are in full sympathy with the management in this effort.

Gardening and Canning

21. A greater effort was put forth the past season to raise vegetables for canning and for immediate use on our tables. Something like three thousand quarts of beets, tomatoes, beans, and apples were thus preserved for winter use. Stahl canning and drying outfits were purchased for this purpose. It is hoped that very much more will be done the coming season, as weather conditions were not favorable for truck gardening last season.

Farm

22. The closing of the farm accounts June 30, brought a pleasant surprise in that a gain of over $1,600 was shown. This was due quite largely to the unprecedented advance in grain, live stock, and in fact, all farm products and property. It is the intention to build up the soil as rapidly as possible by crop rotation and fertilizing. It was pretty well run down when we acquired possession.

23. Quite a lot of fruit trees have been planted, but many have died, due partly to a lack of care, and partly to being planted in the wrong kind of soil. The coming season we shall have a man giving a large part of his time to gardening and caring for the orchard, which will, doubtless, bring better results.

Laundry

24. The laundry has been discontinued and removed, the Lamoni Steam Laundry taking over such of the equipment as they could make use of. As a result of this removal the insurance rate on Patroness Hall has been lowered a little more than one half.

Improvements

25. A number of substantial improvements have been made about the college premises.

26. A concrete chimney for the heating plant has been erected at a cost of $750. Specifications for this work were sent to a Chicago firm which does this sort of work in all parts of the United States and in foreign lands, and their bid was $1,390; so that we figure a saving on this of $640, and believe we have something that will last a long time, while iron smokestacks had to be renewed every three or four years.

27. In order to make room for our radio department, home economics, and chemical laboratory, the basement halls were plastered, board floors placed in two rooms, the walls of one room lathed and plastered, and a new concrete floor laid in the main basement hall.

28. A new hardwood floor was laid in the kitchen of Patroness Hall. Two rooms were provided for taking care of vegetables and other things, one to keep supplies from freezing, and one to keep supplies by freezing. These are built of concrete, covered by reinforced concrete roof and about eight inches of soil, attached to the north side of Patroness Hall at the west end.

29. It is contemplated this coming summer to provide new quarters for the shop, building on a second story to the boiler house, raising the present roof, and building a reinforced concrete floor for the second story, to partially relieve the congested condition in the main building, using the present shop room for laboratory purposes.

30. We expect also to provide an outside bake oven for the hotel, as the baking of seventy-five or more loaves of bread a day in an ordinary hotel range such as we have is next to a physical impossibility.

Respectfully submitted,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY,
Treasurer and Business Manager.

Sunday School Questions And Answers

[The following questions were presented in substantially the form given here, at the "everybody's conference" at one of the Sunday school sessions of the General Convention. The answers are summarized and presented here, as given by the heads of the various departments involved.—EDITORS.]

Question. What objections are there to empowering officers of the school to do all its business?

Answer. This perhaps is intended to apply to the purchase of supplies and equipment. They should do as the officers of most organizations do, purchase without order all necessary supplies for the school without presenting to the school, but anything special or unusual which involves the expenditure of any appreciable amount should have the consent of the school.

Q. Are entertainments and suppers good methods for raising funds for Sunday school purposes?

A. This seems to answer itself in the question which follows it on the same sheet: Is it not better to make individual offerings? There is no absolute rule on whether the method is right or wrong, but the Presiding Bishop has offered as his opinion that entertainments and bazaars are not the best methods of raising money. Especially should they be frowned on when they do not give value received. In some communities the local feeling is such that no funds at all are raised in this manner, while in others it is a popular plan. It is the consensus of opinion that it is always better to produce and thus earn money, if that is possible.

Q. Should the district Sunday school association have a chorister?

A. Every district or stake should have a chorister to aid and encourage, enthuse and instruct the choirs and orchestras in the district or stake. Such a chorister should be more than a convention or conference leader, but should be so in touch with the work in the interim that when such gatherings are held it will be of united and trained singers all ready to do excellent team work. The church and the auxiliaries may each choose one if desired, though if the district desires to come under the general choir movement it should select some one person at the conference time and have the selection ratified by the general chorister, but this would not preclude the having of other choristers for the auxiliaries if that were thought best.

Q. If you could have but one book as an aid in the art of story-telling, what would it be?

A. The one best book for all who attempt to tell stories is the Bible. It is full of stories especially adapted to children. It contains the ideals of the development of a race and therefore has a strong appeal to children, because they too are in the development stage. It progresses from the earliest story, sometimes called the morning stories, to Paul and the abstract theological problems he propounds. The stories of the Bible have the highest literary value, the English being simple and the best we know. No other book has had as careful attention paid to the character of the language used. The best reason for using the Bible is that the child may grow up with deep ideals and feel a nearness to God not possible otherwise. It will be a basis, a foundation, on which to build an enduring character.

Q. What is the best method for reaching the children of the street with the Sunday school?

A. There is only one good way, and that is to go to his home, make the acquaintance of his parents and through them invite and encourage the children to attend the sessions. One must do that in some way in order to get them interested, for in no other way can they be reached.

Q. How many examinations in the normal course?

A. Presuming that this is based on the Hurlbut text, we reply that there are three. The first fifteen lessons are included in the first, those on the geography and institutions the second, and thirteen on the pupil and the teacher make up the third. Passing in these, a diploma is given.

Q. Has it been done or is it best to urge that soldiers at the front be enrolled in the home department?

A. It has been under consideration but it seems preferable to let districts and locals keep in touch with the men and carry out this work rather than for the general organization to try it. The soldier in uniform especially likes to keep in touch with home conditions and home activities. This work could well be kept up by the personal correspondence which should regularly go to him from his home communities. Write to the men at the front often, as urged in the recent Autumn Leaves; not with four or five pages of advice on how to live, but with enthusiastic presentation of home news and developments. The home class work will be especially appreciated, coming from such a source.

Q. Why is a library board?

A. Because there is a need that we continue to gain our information principally from reading. The ancient method of learning about all that was known by the oral or spoken word is no longer in vogue. We read to get it now, therefore should read intelligently. It is often urged that we do not have time for reading, but it reminds us of the Sunday school superintendent who gravely told his school at the close that they intended to sing "Take time to be holy," but there wasn't time. We should allow for it. The effect of coordination on the library work might be to consolidate it with the other organizations and centralize the work more than it has been done. That is the tendency, for under the present triple board there is too often a waiting for each other to begin, only to put it off still more upon the election of a new member of the board. According to the situation, use city libraries, or state circulating library, to good advantage. Adopt the circulating library plan in use in some stakes and districts, or buy books for local libraries. Use any of these as the local situation indicates is best. Get books and use them, not putting them in a glass case and leaving them there as ornaments.

Q. Would it be in order for a school to have a second assistant superintendent?

A. The Book of Rules says there shall not only be one assistant, but as many as there is need for. Schools should have as many as there is a demand and use for. Let necessity determine.

Q. Who is in charge at institute meetings?

A. It is the same old story of who shall preside. If the district superintendent and the field worker are both present, it is largely determined by which of them prepared the program or whether it was both of them. There should be no boss in any of our gatherings, but by concurrence and consultation these things can be worked out in Christian love.

Q. How shall we program an institute session?

A. It is a basic principle that we all want something new. It is legitimate, for we have variety in everything that is natural. However, the programs should be based on a definite need of the district and the locals which go to make it up. First, get in touch with the district and those needs, then initiate those things that meet and supply them. Look into the corners, as it were, and determine whether the class problem is understood, whether there is sufficient understanding of the teaching art, whether the duties of the various officers are well understood. Find out many things through the secretaries, which will mean that the secretary should be alert and in touch with the situation. If these officers are not thus qualified, see what can be done to remedy the situation. So work out the programs that they will satisfy a legitimate demand for constructive knowledge.

Q. Are field workers under direction of the district superintendent?

A. Not necessarily, but they should work together. It will be necessary to keep in touch with the situation and unitedly try to help the schools. Field workers are not essential in all districts or stakes, but in some places where the district officers cannot take the time to circulate among the schools as a Sunday school missionary, it is advisable to adopt the sentiment of the association and use the general field worker who can do this, and thus greatly aid the schools in their local problems.

Q. What is meant by "number at last report"?

A. This is likely a reference to an item on several of the blanks which inquires as to the enrollment when the previous report was sent in. It is a general rule that the number or total at the last report is the one reported to that office. It is often confused with other reports and wrong figures used. For instance, the secretary of a district may report to the secretary of the association at the end of the year with a total membership of 964. At a convention in June he reports to the district convention that the enrollment is 1,046, which would be correct, but it would plainly be wrong to use that number as a "number at last report" when sending in the annual report to the general secretary at the end of the year, for the number then reported was 964. Always keep in mind the time covered in the report, and by the simple expedient of copying the items in the minute book, pick up the proper total from which to compute, whether it be enrollment or finances.

Q. Is it practical to have organized classes in small schools?

A. In schools where the classes are small and the teachers indifferent, it is not generally advisable, but where the class is of ordinary size and the teacher enthusiastic and progressive it is a desirable thing to do, for thus they take a step which will make them a large class and a large school. They will become more interested and as a consequence, bring others to the school.

Q. Should convention sessions, general, district, and local, begin on time?

A. They surely should, for promptness always pays. - The more frequently we open a meeting late, the worse the habit grows. Be prompt.

Q. What should be done to promote orchestra work where there is good material but no instructor?

A. Start right where you are. When you get going, there will be more enthusiasm, more demand, and a much better opportunity to secure a leader from among yourselves than to wait indefinitely for some leader to come along and suggest organization. Development comes with activity, and birds of a feather flock together. If you want an alert leader, be alert as an orchestra, and you'll come much nearer getting him than by waiting.

Q. What instruments should one have to start an orchestra?

A. Use the same methods prescribed in the previous answer. Start with what you have and do not wait for a well-balanced orchestra. The best instruments may not be had at first, but as the movement develops, others will become sufficiently interested to secure those lacking, and thereby build up a successful organization.

Q. Should the district president of the church or the superintendent of the normal department organize a normal class?

A. It is possible for the former to do this, but it is the better plan as a rule to confer and agree on it, after which it matters but little who does the organizing.

Q. What is the best plan for getting substitute teachers?

A. There may not be a best plan for everybody, but there are several that have proven successful. One is to have a reserve teacher class, from which any one may be selected to substitute, they having previously studied the lessons. Another is to have a substitute teacher for each class appointed, who will automatically take up the work when the teacher is absent. One brother who is superintendent of a small school, sews one each of all the quarterlies together, studies each of them, and when necessity demands, teaches any class that needs his services.

Q. Can a school be a good school without knowing anything about the standard of excellence?

A. Yes. But it will in most every case be a better one if it observes the various features it contains and seeks to supply those not had. Districts adopt standards for their schools, and when they do so, the schools should become sufficiently acquainted with them to realize shortcomings and overcome them.

Q. May districts or locals provide for officers not mentioned in the constitution?

A. They may. There have been officers in nearly all the departments long before it was thought necessary to include them as an integral part of the constitution. But it is well to be careful about adding offices not needed. Possibly some department already provided for could handle the contemplated work.

Q. What jurisdiction has a district superintendent over the local superintendent?

A. There is no place for bossism, but unity and cooperation. When these prevail, the question will not arise; when they do not, no rule will fit all the variations that will arise.

Q. In case of the death of a superintendent, is it wise to elect some one to fill out the term?

A. If the assistant superintendent is qualified to do the work, he should be asked to fill the place till the next election, and another elected to fill his place. If not, elect some one for superintendent. But it is always best to use the assistant as such, not as a figurehead, which will prepare him for intelligent service.

Q. Should the superintendent and assistant superintendent both be teachers in large schools?

A. No, not on general principles. There may be cases where it is necessary for a time, but the rule should be that in large schools they look after the details of the work so well that there will be no time left for teaching. They might well be chosen for teachers of the teachers in week-night meetings when such are held, provided they are well qualified to do so.

Q. What special work is there for the assistant superintendent to do?

A. He may be assigned the work of reception committee, to work with others if necessary and make all visitors feel at home and welcome. In some places he is chosen as Christmas offering superintendent, having to do with pushing the matter in a personal way. He might specialize on school equipment, studying up what may be had that the school has not secured for better work. In some places he is chosen as absentee superintendent, looking after absentees, in connection with the teachers.

Q. Is the follow-up system of post cards a good one, used for absentees?

A. Yes. Use any good method for keeping absentees interested and getting them returned to the school.

Q. Can field workers for the Sunday school and Religio secure reduced fares?

A. Yes, in some of the western States, but no such workers are appointed merely to secure this privilege. It is only incidental; the first aim being to get competent workers.

Q. Is the gospel literature distribution an important work?

A. Second only to the preaching of the gospel. Those not of our number should be supplied with information and the Sunday school should foster this branch of the work, organizing local and district boards. This is done by electing a member to work with one each from the Religio and church, they forming a committee to handle and coordinate literature distribution, calling to their assistance such help as may be required.

NOTES FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS

A question was sent in for answer at the "everybody's conference" at the Sunday school sessions, asking if we might not have a booklet of instruction for superintendents on the duties and privileges of that office. Brother Wells pointed out that such a booklet would cost considerable for initial outlay and could not be sold as cheaply as a Sunday school periodical, which died from lack of support—The Exponent. However, when there seemed sufficient demand to justify, such a book would easily be provided. He called attention to the fact that there was already on sale at both publishing houses, a leaflet of boiled down information on the subject by a trained teacher and sold for only five cents. It is Notes for Sunday school and Religio workers, number S63.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN OKLAHOMA.—At Seiling, February 23, in charge of A. W. Sanders, district president, L. D. Dykes, secretary. Reports from branches showed work progressing, with many calls for preaching in both new and old places. The Canadian Center Branch reported in a practically disorganized condition, was by vote declared disorganized. Next reunion at Eagle City, date to be set later by district officers. Next conference at Eagle City. It was an excellent conference. Alice Diamond.

SPRING RIVER.—At Nowata, Oklahoma, February 23 and 24, 1918. Reports from the following officers: district president, district treasurer and bishop, and elders' and deacons' quorums. Spiritual reports from branches as follows: Arma, Nowata, Joplin, Scammon, and Webb City. We have 14 branches in the district and every one sent in report of membership as follows: Angola 68, Arma 28, Fairland 275, Joplin 405, Lowell 58, Mulberry 73, Nowata 54, Pittsburg 165, Pleasant View 97, Purcell 80, Scammon 109, Traverse 47, Webb City 316, Weir 151, and this with a scattered membership of 260 brings our total membership to 2186. Choosing of delegates to General Conference. Ordinations: O. O. Nunamaker and James D. Green, priests; Walter Sumner, teacher. Ordination of Robert E. Jones to the office of teacher provided for. Sister Alice Jones elected member of district good literature committee. Next conference at Scammon, Kansas, May 25 and 26, 1918. John C. Virgin, secretary.

WINNIPEG.—At Winnipeg, February 9 and 10. Regular routine work is dispensed with. Bishop's agent reported balance on hand to be $541.84. Receipts for year 1917, $654.15. Expenditures, $666.72. Balance due church, $529.27. A resolution was passed that this district petition General Conference for at least two missionaries to be sent from the coming Conference. Resolved that it is the sense of this body that the General Conference reconsider the resolution relating to members withdrawing without an elder's court. The following officers elected: president, Nelson Wilson; vice presidents, W. O. Arnold and O. L. D'Aicy; secretary, Mrs. J. T. McGreger; treasurer, W. I. Arnold; member library board, Mrs. Jennie Hanlon; member social purity board, Mrs. Nelson Wilson; temperance superintendent, Nelson Wilson. Bishop's agent sustained. Delegates to Conference: E. F. Robertson, Nelson Wilson, T. J. Jordon. Last named an alternate. Time and place of next conference left in hands of district presidency. Mrs. J. E. McGreger, secretary.

Reunion Notices

At Logan, Iowa, the Little Sioux District will meet August 23 to September 1, 1918. Officers of the association met in Logan, Iowa, March 26, and arrangements are under way for what they believe will be a very successful reunion.

Our Departed Ones

BROWN.—Brother Isaac N. Brown was born in Decatur County, Iowa, near Grand River, September 5, 1858, and died April 4, 1918, at Terre Haute, Iowa, aged 60 years, 6 months and 29 days. He was married to Miss Nora Permela Green February 21, 1885. To this union were born two sons, who with a host of friends and other relatives, live to mourn their loss. He joined the Baptist church in early manhood, but afterward transferred his membership to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He was a kind friend and a good neighbor, a loving husband and an indulgent father, always thoughtful for the feelings of his fellow men and ever ready with deeds of charity. Funeral in charge of Elder Eli Hayer, sermon by Elder J. S. Roth. The Baptist choir furnished very fine music. The church has lost a faithful member and the community a noble citizen.

EATON.—Herbert Edwin Eaton was born November 17, 1888, at Deer Isle, Maine, died March 28, 1918. Baptized at Deer Isle November 6, 1908, by Elder Ames, ordained to the office of deacon at Summerville, Massachusetts, by Elders M. C. Fisher and C. H. Rich, February 5, 1911. He leaves to mourn, a saintly wife, a mother, two brothers, a grandfather, and a host of relatives and friends. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Foss, assisted by Elder George Robley.

NOTE THE NEW RULING IN EFFECT NOW

At the Sunday school convention at Independence the superintendent ruled and the assembly sustained him in it, that all general church officers, which included the following, were hereafter to be given voice and vote in all general and district or stake conventions: First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, quorums of seventies, high priests, Order of Bishops, Order of Evangelists, all elders and priests under conference appointment. All elders may vote in district conventions; under conference appointment at General Conventions.

"I like every line and every paragraph of the [coordinating committee's] report."—Walter W. Smith.

The conference delegates are becoming accustomed to the registration rules and the line up out in the library building where the credentials committee enrolls and hands out the badges, is often as long as a city bread line. Seats will be at a premium and no one cares to wait till the last minute.

STOREHOUSE ON ORIGINAL PLAT

In his speech at the Sunday school convention program, Bishop J. F. Keir told us that where the present Independence Storehouse was started was the same plat marked for it on the original plan made by the early Saints for the establishment of a storehouse. While it is only a coincidence, yet it may possibly have some significance.

We overlooked mention of the names of the credentials committee to the Sunday school convention: C. F. Davis, Mrs. E. S. Nichols, and E. A. Curtis. They made a very efficient and smooth-working committee, doing their work so well and quietly that the convention hardly knew they were on duty.

During the conference the Sanitarium is open to visitors from two to four p. m., at which time visitors are conducted through the institution at fifteen-minute intervals.

"This is the biggest action ever before the church," said Bishop B. J. Scott in reference to the coordinating committee's report. And he added: "It is the biggest honor that can ever come to the auxiliaries."

In his speech at the Sunday school convention, R. W. Farrell formulated the attitude of the real Latter Day Saint as one who was continually asking, not How little can I do? but How much can I do? In Rhode Island, there are seventy-two men appointed to specially look after the intellectual needs of the people, and just one to look after the spiritual—the State secretary of the Sunday school. The Sunday school of the future will supplement the home and not be in the position of the home supplementing the school. No Sunday school can be devised which will be a perfect substitute for a good home.

"I have been preaching for weeks in a section of the country where sassafras grew on every farm as a pest, yet I had to come to General Conference to get a cup of it to drink as a spring tonic."—J. D. Stead.

"It is hasty and inconsiderate, in my judgment," said J. W. Wight in an opposition speech to the adoption of the coordinating committee's report.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

The official program for the conference had listed in the blanks set apart for upper and lower auditoriums of the church for Saturday evening, April 6, "Young people's activities." All visiting young people and a few general officers had been issued a button on which the words: "We're going forward" were inscribed. Those wearing such buttons were admitted to the front seats of the upper room at 7.30, while the gallery and back seats were given over to visitors.

Addresses of welcome were made by the presidents of the I. X. L. class of the Sunday school, and the Junto class of the Religio, two large organized classes which have excellent ideals and live up to them. They have furnished twelve teachers to the school and have twelve more ready for substitutes. Service with them is a practical thing and they make the most of it. Another class had joined in the reception, but they did not have a representative in this feature.

There was excellent orchestral and vocal music, with addresses by President F. M. Smith, Walter W. Smith, and G. R. Wells.

One of the statements by President Smith was significant: "The church is passing into a period when it must depend on its young people." When he had been asked by representatives of the class for the lower room for an evening, he told them to take the whole building, for he knew it would be impossible to try to hold any other service at the same time.

Following this period, the whole invited audience went to the lower room where banners and pennants had been hung in booths to indicate locations for various States of the Union. There was a place for all from Iowa, a big one for Missouri, while Canada had a good booth, well filled. A considerable number of places were arranged, separately or conjointly, for many of the States. Getting the attention of the roomful of joyful young people, it was suggested that everybody in each booth turn around and shake hands and get acquainted with all the others from the various States. When that was done, the stentorian voice of R. C. Russell told us from Iowa to go out and visit the people from some other State. As we marched to the time of a snare drum, we discovered the player thereof was our smiling Bishop McGuire, who was evidently no novice at the art. This was an interesting feature, the various parties visiting and chatting with the others, meeting old acquaintances and making new ones.

Finally the whole crowd, led by President Smith and the boys from Camp Funston who were there in uniform on a furlough granted especially by request of Brother Smith, went to the dining room where a three course luncheon was served to a roomful of guests. There were so many that the host classes had to observe "F. H. B." which, being translated, means "Family hold back."

The toasts and responses were excellent, the one proposed by R. C. Russell on "The flag," being answered in an eloquent and effective manner by Daniel Macgregor. One of the speakers was Sergeant H. E. Gold, who has been leading in the religious interests of a group of soldier lads at Camp Funston. It was a delightful evening and much credit is due the local young people for its entire success.

There were thirty services listed on the printed program for Sunday, eighteen of these being preaching. There was sacrament service in the following places at eight a. m.: Stone Church, upper and lower auditoriums, Second Independence, Enoch Hill, Walnut Park, Central Kansas City. Sunday school was held in these places at 9.30 to 10.40, with preaching in the same places, respectively, by the following: F. M. Smith, U. W. Greene, J. J. Cornish, Peter Anderson, F. A. Russell, James A. Gillen.

In the afternoon Walter W. Smith preached in the Stone Church, upper auditorium; R. C. Russell in the lower room; G. T. Griffiths, Second Independence; C. J. Hunt, Enoch Hill; William Aylor, Walnut Park; F. A. Smith, Central Kansas City.

The evening list was by the following men, in the same order as to place: Elbert A. Smith, Richard Baldwin, O. J. Hawn, M. C. Fisher, J. F. Curtis, Paul M. Hanson.

The Monday morning priesthood meeting was devoted to an address on "Stewardships and trusts," by I. A. Smith, being a masterful presentation of the legal phases of stewardships. The basic thought seemed to be that the trust company form of handling property was the best for this particular feature.

At nine a. m. there was prayer meeting in the upper room, and for the choir members in the lower room.

The quorums of Presidency, Twelve, high priests, and seventies met in joint session at this time and continued till noon, discussing in detail the document from the Church of Christ congregation, which the latter had adopted. The quorums discussed it paragraph by paragraph and finally unanimously adopted it as a whole.

The elders met in mass session at the Second Independence church, and discussed a number of questions pertaining to their work and made up a program for the future meetings.

At 10.30 the Woman's Auxiliary met in its first session in the lower room. There was a very large attendance, a number of women standing throughout the service. There were a few men present, including one of the HERALD editors, who found a seat on a magazine on the floor.

President F. M. Smith read at length from letters by S. A. Burgess on the status of woman in the church, past, present, and future, indicating that she had not yet reached the heights to which she should ascend in such standing. It was a clarion call to the women of the church to arouse, recognize and accept the responsibilities and privileges of womanhood, eschewing all feminism, but in the true womanly appreciation of things as they are, carry out the charge to them. The statements and conclusions were endorsed by President Smith.

Sister F. M. Smith read a lengthy letter which she had written to the coordinating committee, of which she is a member, setting forth some of her ideals as to the Woman's Auxiliary. It was a strong presentation of the case and no doubt will be published entire, later on.

The special music was two solos by Nelle Atkinson Kelley. The attendance and interest speaks well for this growing and important organization of women, which includes a young women's department for those on the threshold of woman's life, and also the Oriole work for young girls.

The sermon at eleven was by Mark H. Siegfried. The attendance was all that could be desired, every meeting being supported by a fine attendance.

The two o'clock business session on Monday, April 8, took up the matter of reorganization of the historical department by the appointment by the joint council of a historian and two assistants. Historian Heman C. Smith was present and made a statement, saying he was willing to step aside if thought best, and would continue to support the church in whatever capacity he could. His testimony to the efficacy of the work and the principles which permeated the organization was a reaffirmation of what he had preached in his ministry for years. He assured the conference that he would continue as a staunch supporter of the church. However, he would have appreciated a consultation in the matter and of having the privilege of suggesting as to availability and qualifications of his successors.

A resolution prevailed to refer the matter back to the joint council for the purpose of allowing the Historian to appear before them.

The appointment of a member of the lecture board, for which provision was made by the Sunday school and Religio, was referred to the coordinating committee.

The following document, momentous in its character, and which had previously been adopted by the Church of Christ, was presented and adopted by a practically unanimous vote, there being but one against it. Older members will know, and younger ones will be interested in the fact, that this matter has been before the church for many years, as is set out in the document itself. It is surely a matter of much gratification to all concerned that it has so shaped itself.

We present the report of the committee in full:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CHURCH OF CHRIST

During the dark and cloudy day that followed the disruption of the church, at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the apostasy of the leading elders of the church at Nauvoo, Illinois, there were many attempts made by the dis-appointed Saints to find safe ground, and the true light. Several of these, seeking to find the better way, united to form the nucleus of the reorganization of the church. One of these groups of old-time Saints, which was striving to honor the law revealed in the restoration of the gospel, was located in Woodford County, Illinois. As early as 1856 these Woodford County Saints sought to unite their efforts with those forming the Reorganization. Elders Granville Hedrick and Jedediah Owen, who had been elders in the old church, were sent to represent them, and were accepted and given the right hand of fellowship by the conference of the brethren of the Reorganization. No definite union, however, was formed, and the Woodford County Saints continued their work alone, gathering to themselves other elders who had received their ordination from the church, before the death of Joseph Smith, among them being Zebulan Adams, David Judy, John E. Page, and Adna C. Haldeman.

About 1867 these with others removed to Independence, Missouri, and organized, or rather continued the branch organized by these brethren in Woodford County, Illinois. Elder Granville Hedrick was the presiding elder until his death. Subsequently the branch has been presided over by those who received their authority through ordination, from these older elders and their successors; and have always maintained an honorable name and place among men, and have held their priesthood in righteousness before God.

At various times since 1856 efforts have been made by the eldership of the Church of Christ and of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to form a working basis of harmony between them.

In 1897 overtures were again made by the elders of the Church of Christ, and a joint committee composed of Elders Richard Hill, John R. Haldeman, George P. Frisbey, George D. Cole, and James A. Hedrick of the Church of Christ; and Elders Joseph Smith, Alexander H. Smith, Roderick May, George E. Harrington, and William H. Garret of the Reorganized Church. This group of men conferred from January 16 to 20, reaching a number of points of agreement.

Again in 1900 another joint committee, composed of Elders George P. Frisbey, Abraham L. Hartley, Richard Hill, Alma Owen, George D. Cole, and John R. Haldeman of the Church of Christ; and Elders Alexander H. Smith, Edmund L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, Roderick May, and Richard S. Salyards of the Reorganized Church conferred from March 6 to 11. They reaffirmed the agreements of the former committee with slight alterations and amendments, and adopted a further series of agreements, and adjourned; no permanent mutual working basis was then established; but a much better understanding of the grounds held by each organization, was gained.

During the latter part of the year 1917, a desire was expressed by the Church of Christ for further conference upon the question of a working basis of harmony, and accordingly, on December 30, 1917, a joint committee, composed of Elders George D. Cole, Clarence L. Wheaton, and James H. Hartley, of the Church of Christ and Elders Francis M. Sheehy, Walter W. Smith, and Mark H. Siegfried, of the Reorganized Church, met. There were also present, by invitation of the elders of the Church of Christ, Esie Stafford, Thomas J. Sheldon, and Israel A. Smith, the latter acting as secretary of the meeting. The former articles of agreement were adopted with slight alterations and amendments. The whole ground of differences was reviewed in a spirit of candor and brotherly solicitude for the welfare and progress of Zion. Adjournment was taken to January 27, 1918, when additional articles of agreement, and a plan for submitting these articles for the approval of the two organizations at the April General Conferences was adopted.

We most respectfully submit the following articles of agreement adopted by the joint committee, and recommend that they be adopted as the working basis of harmony between the two organizations:

AGREEMENTS OF WORKING HARMONY

1. Agreed, that we believe in the restoration of the gospel, and the angel's message through Joseph the Seer.
2. Agreed, that so far as the fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ are concerned, both organizations believe the same, as per copies of the epitome attached.
3. Agreed, that the Book of Mormon is a divine record, and the redemption of Zion must be by purchase.
4. Agreed, that we indorse the revelations contained in the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants.
5. Agreed, that we indorse the revelation found in the letter from Joseph Smith, the Seer, to W. W. Phelps concerning the "one mighty and strong," dated November 27, 1832.
6. Agreed, that we indorse the articles on Marriage and of Governments and Laws in General, in the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants.
7. Agreed, that we believe that there are individuals in the different factions who hold the priesthood.
8. Agreed, that where there are six or more regularly baptized members, any one of which is an elder, there the Church exists.
9. Agreed, that an organization is necessary and such an organization as the number of members, and the will of God enables them to attain to.
10. Agreed, that wherever a branch exists the power of church extension exists also to its fullest extent, when acting in harmony with the law.
11. Agreed, that any man holding the priesthood, and possessing the proper qualifications, may be chosen by the church, by acting in accordance with the law to act in any specific position.
12. Agreed, that faith and righteousness and the call of God are the chief essentials for the possession of the Melchisedec priesthood.
13. Agreed, that in the opinion of this council, in order to accomplish the work of the Lord committed to his people, it is necessary for them to unite in one organization, in harmony with the law of God.
14. Agreed, that the city of Zion will be built at Independence, Missouri, and that the Saints of God will gather there.
15. Agreed, that the principle of consecration is necessary to the establishment of Zion.
16. Agreed, that the law of Christ requires that every man be made a steward, and that none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God, whether officer or member, and that all shall be equal in temporal things, and that not grudgingly, in order to be united according to the law of the celestial kingdom; and that the time has fully come to apply this law in Zion; and that we will labor together to see that it is enforced as soon as possible.

17. Agreed, that we believe in the literal gathering of Israel, and the restoration of the "Ten Lost Tribes."

18. Agreed, that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and the earth will be restored to its paradisaical glory.

19. Agreed, that the question of who the one "mighty and strong" is, whether Christ or man, be left an open question until further revelation from God shall definitely determine who it is.

20. Agreed, that the doctrine of baptism for the dead (by proxy) be not taught as a part of the faith and doctrine of the Church, unless commanded by a revelation accepted by the church.

21. Agreed, that what is known as the "King Follet sermon" and the book of Abraham be not accepted as the basis for doctrine.

22. Agreed, that the branch of the Church of Christ on the Temple Lot, which was presided over by Elder Granville Hedrick and his successors, shall be continued, and that no change be made in the custody of the Temple Lot.

23. Agreed, that all other minor points of difference in belief and practice, that may exist between the officers and members of the two organizations, be left to the elders for settlement as they assemble in council from time to time.

24. Agreed, that whereas the Church of Christ, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints consist of members who have been baptized by men holding authority, conferred by ordination under the hands of the servants of God, called during the ministry of Joseph Smith, who have remained true to the original faith of the church, organized April 6, 1830, and, whereas, both organizations stand for and maintain the same fundamental doctrine and practice, and have the same purpose and ideal in their church government and work; therefore, be it mutually agreed, that each recognize the standing of the other as representing Christ, the Master, and the priesthood of each as legally constituted, and the administration of each as equally binding before God, when done in accordance with the law.

Resolved, that these articles of agreement be submitted to the General Conferences of both organizations, which are to be held April 6, 1918, at Independence, Missouri, for approval as the working basis of harmony between the Church of Christ, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Chairman.

WALTER W. SMITH, Secretary.

This resolution from the Northeastern Kansas District was read and by motion referred to the joint council:

Resolved, that we, the Northeastern Kansas District, hereby petition General Conference to enact a law whereby the branch clerks can transfer the membership of a recorded non-resident to the branch where he has for one year taken up his residence, and that the names of those unlocatable shall be transferable after one year's absence, to the general church record.

Lamoni, Iowa, and Kirtland, Ohio, were both offered as places for holding the next General Conference, invitations having been sent in from both.

After some debate and humorous allusions to local conditions, the vote was taken as to the place, and resulted in 297 for Lamoni and 65 for Kirtland.

The time for the conference was taken up. Two dates were proposed, April 6, 1920, and the same date in 1919. It was moved to defer decision on the time till the last session of the conference, but this was voted down and by a large majority it was decided to hold it in 1919. So the next conference will be in Lamoni, April 6, 1919.

The discussion had brought out the difficulty of housing so large a congregation as comes to the conferences, so this resolution came up for discussion, being championed in his characteristic manner by Daniel Macgregor:

Resolved, that the time has come when a building of suitable size should be erected for the convenience of the annual gatherings of the church.

The time till adjournment was taken up with this speech and it was continued till the following business session, two p. m., April 9.

These announcements for preaching were the order for the evening:

Upper auditorium, Stone church, S. A. Burgess; lower room, A. B. Phillips; Second Independence, E. E. Long; Enoch Hill, F. J. Ebeling; Walnut Park, R. Archibald; Central Kansas City, A. H. Parsons. Two of these were substitutes for those who were indisposed.

By request of the former Church of Christ brethren, J. J. Cornish was announced for Sunday evening, April 14, at their church building on the Temple Lot.

Visitors' day at the Independence Storehouse was announced for Thursday afternoon. We hope to secure some interesting information for the church as to the operations and extensiveness of this institution.

The eight o'clock priesthood meeting was addressed by President F. M. Smith, he taking up a number of interesting phases developed by the weekly letters which had been received by his office the past year. He assured his hearers that the letters were to be continued, and that once every three months a digest of them would be made up by himself and presented to each member of the Quorum of Twelve. The priesthood paper, The Unity, was mentioned as the official exponent of the views of the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, and should be so received. Many of the propositions therein presented were the result of extensive questionnaires sent to specialists in various lines. On the subject of specialists, he hoped there would be more of them, but that need not imply that such specialists were to be fools on all other subjects. As for himself, he professed to be a specialist in nothing, but had studied much to be able to know such a person when he met him or knew of his work. Uniformity in the use of church letter heads for stationery was urged for simplicity and effectiveness.

At 10.30 the sisters of the Woman's Auxiliary held a business meeting, at which time the report of the coordinating committee was presented, it having been adopted by the conventions and conference. It was discussed at length, being thoroughly explained by one of its ardent male champions, and adopted. The election of officers, which was to have been held at this time, was postponed till a later meeting.

The elders in their meeting, discussed conditions under which Zion might be established, the part the Order of Enoch might play in it, and principles of stewardship, etc. The basis of discussion was a paper by B. L. McKim. The subject was continued.

The sermon at the church at eleven o'clock was by H. A. Koehler, following prayer meeting in the upper room and choir institute in the lower room.

The business meeting at 2 p. m. took up the discussion of a suitable building for holding general meetings of the church. It was soon referred to the council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Order of Bishops, for consideration and report at the next conference.

It may be recalled that the suggestion came up last year that there was an urgent need for such a building, it being emphasized in the report of the President. Disposal was made of it by referring to the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, with power to act. This year it includes all the bishopric and asks only for consideration and report.

The budgets proposed by Graceland College and the Sanitarium for their expenses during the coming year were indorsed by the Order of Bishops and approved by the conference.

In the report of the President to this conference, as our readers may have noted in last week's issue, there was a recommendation that the request of the president of Graceland College for a new library building and more dormitory facilities, be granted, and that the church library be taken over by the college, they handling the work done by the library commission in the past.

The Order of Bishops brought in the following resolution on the matter after it had been referred to them, and it was adopted:

Resolved, that we recommend to the General Conference that the question of building a dormitory and library building for Graceland College be deferred for the present, and that the matter be referred to an architect for the purpose of preparing plans and specifications and an estimate of the probable cost, to be submitted to the next General Conference, having in view the development of a general plan for buildings for our educational institution.

That part of the President's report asking for the privilege of appointing a church architect was adopted.

It was asked if such a man might be expected to do more than merely plan the buildings. The President expressed himself as hoping that it would be possible so to develop the work that there would be a demand for such a man to come to the proposed place and aid in deciding the site as well as the character and style of the building. He might be of great assistance in this as well as in the mechanics of the building.

It has always been the case that it was wise to consult with the Presiding Bishopric before building a church building, but this will give all the branches a better opportunity to secure competent help at a reasonable rate.

After the adoption of the recommendation for appointment of a church architect, the following motion prevailed:

Moved that it be the sense of this body that no church site shall be chosen or edifice erected by any branch without first conferring with the Presiding Bishopric and the church architect.

The appointment of a church physician was indorsed and the choice of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington approved. Brother Harrington was present and expressed himself as willing to act to the best of his ability.

The appointment of Floyd M. McDowell was approved as leader of the boy movement in the church, and the final placing of the work in its proper department under the new coordinating plan referred to the coordinating committee.

By motion and vote, the committee on church offices was abolished.

The following was proposed, and after some long speeches and an attempt to pass a motion limiting debate on it, and all other discussions to come up in conference, to ten minutes, the conference adjourned till Wednesday at 2 p. m. The resolution, seeking to suspend the sections of the Book of Rules providing for presiding priests, teachers, and deacons, is as follows:

Section 161, chapter 14, of the book or Rules of Order and Debate, page 100, provides that the officers of the church recognized by these meetings (referred to branch business meetings) as having right to preside are: a presiding elder, priest or priests, teacher or teachers, a deacon or deacons, etc.

This gives rise to the order in the church of the choosing by the branches of "presiding priest, teacher, and deacon," which thing seems otherwise provided in the law.

Inasmuch as this matter gives rise to confusion among the Saints and inasmuch as this matter with all the rest of the Book of Rules is under consideration,

Resolved, that section 161, chapter 14, of the Book of Rules, be suspended until such time as the revision of the Book of Rules be completed.

Also that section 6, chapter 1, relating to selection of officers of branches be so interpreted as not to compel the election of presiding priest, teacher, or deacon.

The evening session in the upper auditorium was given over to the Woman's Auxiliary. The chief features of the program consisted of an address by T. W. Williams on "Woman's place in the world," and a paper by Audentia Anderson on "The awakened woman." The piano being temporarily out of commission on account of tuning, the special musical numbers were not had, though Robert Miller substituted with a very satisfactory pipe organ solo.

The preaching during the evening was as follows: Lower auditorium, A. E. Warr; Second Independence, S. A. Burgess; Enoch Hill, R. T. Cooper; Walnut Park, F. M. Cooper; Central Kansas City, Carl T. Self; Temple Lot, T. W. Williams.

The priesthood meeting on Wednesday morning was, as usual, well attended and in charge of President F. M. Smith, who occupied the time. He discussed in detail some of the criticisms arising from the weekly letters, on the standard of living. He was forceful in the presentation of the thought that we should have a higher social standing in many instances than we now maintain, as representatives of the church and men of God. While sacrifice is essential and therefore commendable, there are times and places where penuriousness is the height of folly. He urged that our people do not swing the pendulum too far, yet seek to think in larger terms than we have hitherto done. The calling of men to the priesthood by inspiration and a sacred observance of the principles governing was brought out, and a higher standard urged.

The prayer meeting in the upper auditorium at 9 a. m. was largely attended, the seats on the lower floor and the choir loft all being full, with most of them taken in the gallery. In spite of the admonition of the brother in charge, it was impossible to hear many of the testimonies, for the building is large. It was a little unusual in that there were no hymns after the one at the opening of the meeting, the time being occupied entirely with prayers and testimonies.

At the same hour there was a choir institute in the lower room, not very largely attended.

The elders had an interesting paper by Samuel Wood on Zion and Zionic conditions. They have a five-minute rule for their speeches and usually dismiss in time to return to the church and hear the sermon. The seventies meet in joint session every day and they sometimes adjourn in time for the sermon, also. They were just a little late this time, but heard most of the sermon by G. N. Briggs on "Zion and Education." This was one of a series of sermons on Zionic problems, each presented at a day service during the conference. The first was on Sunday afternoon by Walter W. Smith on "Zionic spiritual conditions." On Monday it was one by M. H. Siegfried on "Zionic temporal problems." Tuesday it was by J. A. Koehler on "Spiritualized industry." G. N. Briggs followed on Wednesday, while the series is continued on Thursday with a sermon by B. R. McGuire on "The gathering." At Second Independence, C. O. Leeka is to speak on "Husbanding my stewardship." At Walnut Park, Thursday evening, G. J. Waller is to preach on "The part of the business man in building up Zion." The interest is great and no doubt uncounted good will result from these vital sermons.

At 10.30 on Wednesday the Woman's Auxiliary read reports of officers and elected officers. Much good work has been done the past year and the outlook is good for the coming one. They had asked the President of the church to nominate the president of the society, in conformity with the rule in the coordination resolution, and he had sent in the name of Mrs. D. J. Krahl, of Holden, Missouri, who was elected.

For first vice president, Mrs. Lula M. Sandy, of Kansas City, the president the past year, was elected (but she resigned on Friday and Mrs. Fred Koehler of Independence, Missouri, was chosen); and for second vice president, Mrs. William Madison, of Independence. We inferred that the latter would likely be continued in charge of the reunion features for the coming year, but of course this will be decided as the advisory board meets later.

The secretary was reelected, Mrs. Pearl Gardner, of Independence. For treasurer, they elected Mrs. Edna J. Esgar, of Independence. Mrs. Mark H. Siegfried was elected historian. This group of officers constitute the executive committee, and will appoint the heads of the bureaus and the editor of the department in the HERALD.

When the business session convened at 2 p. m. it took but a few minutes to put into effect the ten-minute limit to speeches on the question at issue: the suspension of the provision for presiding priests, teachers, and deacons. But there were a goodly number running to the limit. Some strong arguments were presented on both sides of the question. The new group system was urged as the proper solution of the matter, obviating the need of a presiding officer in each grade. It was urged by some that the members of various grades of the Aaronic priesthood should work as a committee and thus agree on the division of work rather than have one man set at the head, often to the disadvantage of others as capable and willing. Others were as insistent for the continuance of the present rule, claiming it was the only lawful method and without objectionable features.

A motion to refer to the committee on revision of church rules was lost. On a counted vote to adopt the resolution to suspend the provision in the Book of Rules, it was found 296 were in favor of it, while 165 were against it. Answering a question as to whether all branches should immediately adopt the provision and dispense with these presiding officers, the President suggested it might be well to correspond with the office regarding it.

The following names were presented for ordination to the office of high priest: William A. Blair, of Detroit, Michigan; R. A. Harder, of Flint, Michigan; James L. Gault, of Detroit, Michigan; David E. Dowker, of Chicago, Illinois. Brother Harder asked for time to consider; the other three expressed a willingness to act to the best of their ability and were indorsed by the conference.

The drive for the Third Liberty Loan being in progress, President F. M. Smith had been asked for names of speakers for various schoolhouses throughout this end of Jackson County. He replied that he could furnish a hundred if necessary. A large list was read, containing the names of those who had been suggested, and a meeting was held to make up the arrangements for Friday evening, the 12th.

The annual oratorical contest was held in the evening at 7.30, there being four contestants and a number of visitors from Graceland. Two of the musical numbers were given by Graceland students and faculty.

David Hopkins was given first place with his oration on "America and the world war," with Clifford Kelley, second, his subject being "Woodrow Wilson, the man of the hour." Third place was given to Ronald Carmichael with his oration on "Peace," with fourth to Mark Tapscott, on "The German Tragedy." Brother Hopkins is from Saint Joseph, Missouri; Brother Kelley from Independence, the son of T. C., and the latter two reside in Lamoni. These are always very popular events.

In the lower room the speaker was J. J. Cornish, with a roomful. The other appointments listed were J. W. Davis, Second Independence; H. A. Higgins, at Enoch Hill; O. Salisbury, at Walnut Park; J. E. Bishop, at Central Kansas City.

The morning priesthood meetings are well attended, the special request of the President being that all arrange to be there, and not make other appointments. Bishop McGuire used most of the hour in setting forth the attitude of the bishopric on the gathering. He explained the questionnaire which is being sent out to many branches. In answer to a question sent in, he made this pointed reply: "The church has for a long time been ready for the operation of business on the stewardship basis. How are you conducting yours?"

The sermon at 10.45 was on the gathering, by Bishop McGuire. It is needless to say it was very largely attended, for that goes without saying at this conference. The capacity of the big church is strained at every meeting. It is without doubt the largest conference ever held by the church. Local authorities have much difficulty in trying to handle the situation, it being almost impossible to find people in the crowds in the church and outside. Some even try to send in names of people they want to find, and have them read before the audience, but since this could easily become a public nuisance, it is frowned on by those in charge.

The Order of Bishops have been meeting regularly each forenoon, as well as the quorums of high priests, seventies, and mass meeting of the elders. The bishops are the appropriations committee of the church and pass on all such matters before they are finally allowed. The joint council holds sessions from nine to twelve each morning. Numerous other meetings of a public and private nature are heard of here and there, giving an outlet for the social tendencies as well as offering opportunities to secure information.

One large meeting was announced to meet in a private house one evening, composed of Michigan Saints. There are very many of these. Another group was formerly from Northeastern Illinois. The reunion phase of the conference is one greatly appreciated and of much value.

At the business meeting at 2 p. m. Thursday a letter from the secretary of President Wilson was read, acknowledging the receipt of the telegraphic excerpt from President Smith's report and sent to the White House during the first sessions of the conference. Appreciation was expressed for the loyalty of the organization, as shown in the act.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported five sessions, and three of them joint. Thirty-six of the fifty-eight in the quorum were present, and all but five had reported their work the past year.

The following report from the Sunday School Association will be of interest in that it summarizes for the convenience of our readers some of the important things done by the convention. It reads as follows:

REPORT OF SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The association held its twenty-seventh Annual Convention here, April 4 and 5. In each of its eight sessions a progressive spirit was in evidence. Of business transacted, the following should be reported:

1. Hereafter the following will be recognized as having ex officio right of voice and vote in district or stake as well as in General Conventions: The First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, quorums of seventies, high priests, Order of Bishops, Order of Evangelists, all General Conference appointees in General Conventions and all elders of district or stake in conventions of the same.

2. The report of the coordinating committee was presented and indorsed.

3. The First Presidency, having been requested to nominate, presented three names for superintendent which also had the approval of the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. The election of officers resulted as follows: For superintendent, Gomer R. Wells; first assistant superintendent, Daniel Macgregor; second assistant superintendent, A. W. Smith; secretary, E. D. Moore; treasurer, M. H. Siegfried; Home Department superintendent, Mrs. J. C. Schwab; Cradle Roll superintendent, Mrs. H. B. Roberts; member of Library Commission S. A. Burgess; member of Social Purity Board, R. W. Farrell; member of Gospel Literature Commission, R. W. Farrell; historian, Miss Nellie M. Anderson; revising committee, A. Carmichael, G. N. Briggs, J. W. Wight.

By joint action of Religio and Sunday school executives, L. F. P. Curry was reelected normal superintendent and E. F. Yerrington assistant; by similar action, the work previously done by organized class superintendent was for the coming year lodged with the vice president of Religio Society, T. W. Williams, and the matter of extension superintendent of Home Department work is yet to be considered by the president of Religio, superintendent of Sunday School Association, and the Home Department superintendents of the same, with power to act.

4. The convention favors a uniform blank for collecting and reporting the Christmas offering. This was referred to the executive council and Presiding Bishopric with power to act.

5. The following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, that members of the Sunday school who are addicted to the tobacco habit should not be elected for officers and teachers if other material is available."

6. According to resolution, all "local and district executives, reunion institute workers and field workers laboring in connection with the Sunday School Association be and are hereby directed to confer and advise with the general normal superintendent in the preparation of their educational programs, in order that, consistent with local needs, the fundamental training required by the workers of this auxiliary may be uniformly presented."

7. By resolution, the lessons committee was discontinued, and "the executive council be authorized and directed to secure the services of the best available talent for doing whatever professional work is necessary in our lessons course."

8. It was decided that hereafter the general church auditors shall be employed to audit the accounts of the General Sunday School Association, thus discontinuing our own board of auditors.

9. The former rule concerning holding of mass conventions was rescinded and the following adopted in its place: "Any district or stake association may dispense with the delegate system in providing for representation in its conventions." The chair ruled that it would be necessary for delegates to be sent instructed on this matter and that a standing rule might then be adopted, subject to such alterations as future conventions might wish to make. This ruling was not questioned.

10. The Religio Society, through its executive committee, invited the association to appoint a member on the Lecture Board. This was referred to the Sunday school executive council with power to act. It will be considered soon.

11. After consulting with the Presiding Bishopric, our treasurer has turned over to the church a surplus of $2,300. In regard to the stewardship created last convention, it is expected that the new movement toward fuller coordination may possibly affect the temporal side of the stewardship, and hence the terms of the resolution are being held more or less in abeyance, upon the advice of the Presiding Bishopric.

12. It was resolved to have a convention Christmas offering. This was enthusiastically received and resulted in the sum of $102.49 being turned over to the Presiding Bishopric.

Respectfully submitted,
GOMER R. WELLS, Superintendent.

The report of the Religio Society will also be of interest for the same reason. It was presented and spread on the minutes, reading as follows:

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: The twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the Religio Society was held April 2 and 3 with large attendance at all sessions.

Among many matters acted upon we mention the following points of interest:

1. The report of the coordinating committee was adopted in full by a large majority.

2. Constitution amended by fixing age at which members may vote at eight years or over; sections referring to expulsions and appeals thrown out; duties of district, stake, and local secretaries more specifically outlined so as to make the recording of newly organized locals by the general secretary more prompt and easy.

3. The President stated that the second vice president should be the one who had been appointed in charge of the boy movement whereupon F. M. McDowell, of Lamoni, was elected second vice president. Other officers elected were: G. S. Trowbridge, Saint Louis, president; Thomas W. Williams, Los Angeles, first vice president; James W. Stobaugh, Kansas City, secretary; Robert A. Lloyd, Saint Louis, treasurer; William F. Sage, Detroit, Home Department superintendent; Harvey Sandy, Kansas City, member Gospel Literature Commission; J. W. Gunsolley, Kansas City, superintendent of Temperance Department; Vernon A. Reese, Chicago, member of Library Commission, and Charles B. Woodstock, Lamoni, member of Social Purity Board.

4. In conjunction with the executive council of the Sunday School Association, the executive committee appointed

L. F. P. Curry as normal superintendent with E. F. Yerrington, assistant. T. W. Williams was placed in charge of the organized class work.

5. The matter of arranging for the Lecture Board, heretofore under the direction of the Religio, a joint board was referred to the executive committee with power to act. That body has requested the General Sunday School Association, General Conference, Woman's Auxiliary, and Board of Trustees of Graceland College to appoint a member to sit with Religio member.

6. The enrollment of the society at present is 18,311.

7. Among other appropriations, $250 were set aside by the convention for use of the field workers.

Respectfully submitted,
JAMES W. STOBAUGH, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 11, 1918.

The Quorum of Twelve presented preambles and resolutions on the death of James E. Kelley, of that quorum. An engrossed copy has been ordered and will be presented to the family.

The Latter Day Saint Traveling Men's Association officially reported that they had met and decided to change their name to the Latter Day Saint Sales Association, inviting all engaged in that work to join with them for mutual benefit.

The Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce extended a cordial invitation to the conference to hold its 1920 session in the City of Brotherly Love. It was referred to the Presidency for securing additional information and to report at the next General Conference.

The time limit for new business was set at 2.30 p. m. on the 12th.

A motion prevailed to dispense with the present system of church auditing and authorize the Presidency to appoint one or more auditors for the church accounts. It was brought out in the discussions and explanations that under the prevailing system it was necessary to do all the work in the spring, in a comparatively short time, while it was often best to attend to it at different times during the year. There are a number of expert accountants in the church as well as others who may be secured, and the resolution was evidently intended to allow discretion in the matter of choice.

The nomination by Bishop McGuire of Mark H. Siegfried as member of the Board of Publication in place of E. A. Blakeslee, was indorsed and he was elected. The board at present constituted is: Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, Frederick B. Blair, Albert Carmichael, Mark H. Siegfried, all bishops.

For trustees of Graceland College, Charles B. Woodstock and T. A. Hougas were reelected. The other members are A. Carmichael, J. F. Garver, J. W. Wight, G. R. Wells, G. N. Briggs.

The present Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium was sustained: W. D. Bullard, G. H. Hulmes, L. H. Haas, J. A. Tanner, C. O. Leeka, B. R. McGuire, M. H. Siegfried.

The committee on Bible normal book was continued: S. A. Burgess, J. A. Gunsolley, F. M. McDowell.

The following from the report of the committee was adopted as the expression of the conference:

8. Before publication, such a book should be given critical consideration in regard to doctrine, historical facts, construction, and arrangement. Certainly the author should be consulted in regard to any and all changes, but it appears vital that the work be made as satisfactory as is possible. The committee would, therefore, respectfully suggest, that:

9. The matter be referred to determine the question of demand and if the demand warrants, as we trust it does, that the manuscript be submitted to the First Presidency to consider its availability, and upon receiving their approval, the work should be pushed to see that a suitable book in the near future is published. Respectfully submitted.

S. A. BURGESS, Chairman for the committee.

March 4, 1918.

The committee on the Book of Mormon concordance, having finished their work, were released, with appreciation of work done: Heman C. Smith, H. O. Smith, Duncan Campbell.

The committee on Saints' Homes at Lamoni was sustained: A. Carmichael, R. J. Lambert, A. J. Yerrington.

The following committee of brethren to confer with the members of the Church of Christ was continued: F. M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, B. R. McGuire, M. H. Siegfried, W. W. Smith.

The committee on church Book of Rules was continued. It was explained that the parliamentary part had been ready for publication for over two years, but the part on church courts and procedure was in the hands of the Presidency and was not completed because of changes in the methods being evolved. The committee is: F. M. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, H. O. Smith, J. A. Tanner, E. L. Kelley, A. B. Phillips, T. A. Hougas.

The Gospel Literature Commission, composed of Harvey Sandy for the Religio, R. W. Farrell for the Sunday school, and E. D. Moore for the church, was sustained.

The name of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington was proposed for chairman of the Social Purity Board. It was referred to the coordinating committee and present board sustained till that committee made appointment. The personnel at present is C. B. Woodstock, R. W. Farrell, J. F. Garver. The suggestion involved the release of the latter.

The committee on revision of the Young People's History, being the Board of Publication and the Church Historian, having concluded their work, was released.

It was announced that a number of copies of the reprinted and bound volumes of The Evening and the Morning Star, put out by the Church of Christ, were on sale at the conference, at one dollar each. The reprint includes fourteen numbers, twelve from 1832, and two of 1833.

The first rendition of the oratorio, "Elijah," was given at the church on the evening of the 11th, evidently with very gratifying success. We were about to repeat the trite expression that there was a large attendance, but it may be interesting to know that people were calmly filling the church steps, waiting for standing room as early as six o'clock, when it had been announced that the doors would not open till 7.15, and the service begin at 8.15. The ticket system of seating is an improvement, and should be continued. The suggestion that it might be still improved by giving out only one ticket to the person calling for them would work a hardship on the noble sisters who sacrifice their own pleasure and remain at home during the other services, thus not securing the privilege of attending. However, it will be worked out, likely with general satisfaction, in the future. Brother Albert N. Hoxie, general Church Chorister, now in charge of the musical activities at the League Island Navy Yard, acted as director, having arrived in time for one of the chief rehearsals. Since we are not musicians and incapable of intelligent detailed report, we respectfully await such information from others qualified. Realizing this in advance, we did not ask for tickets, preferring to allow others to attend who were sufficiently trained to more thoroughly enjoy the occasion.

The other services of the evening were preaching by: C. O. Leeka, at Second Independence; G. J. Waller, at Walnut Park; Guy Kuykendall, Central Kansas City; John Davis, Church of Christ.

The speaker at the church at 10.45 a. m. on Friday was Daniel Macgregor on "A marvelous work and a wonder."

One of the special features of the priesthood meeting at eight o'clock was the necessity for looking after the scattered members.

This was mentioned in the report of the President and supplemented by the experiences of some of the brethren who have been very successful in such work the past year. There are many members whose names are on the church record but who are isolated and out of touch with the organization. It is possible to do some of the very best missionary work by looking up these people and affiliating them with a branch conveniently near.

At the business session R. A. Harder, of Flint, Michigan, reported that he had fully considered the proposal for his ordination as high priest and was ready to accept, should the conference so order. It was moved to provide for his ordination and adopted.

The care observed in the selection of men to this office was briefly set out at this juncture by President Smith, he explaining that the call came from the First Presidency, was carefully scrutinized and passed on by the joint council, the recommendations sent to the Quorum of High Priests for their sanction, all before the name was presented to the General Conference for ratification.

The Quorum of High Priests reported 238 members, 193 of them reporting.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported that 40 of their members had reported.

The Third Quorum of Seventy has 21 members and of this number 18 are present at the conference sessions.

As a question of personal privilege, U. W. Greene set forth the situation under which Elder Rees Jenkins and wife were remaining in Palestine. When Brother Greene and wife and Brother Koehler and wife left the Holy Land, Brother Jenkins and wife had already been instructed to leave, but they thought best to remain. Money was left on deposit in the banks there for their use and since that time the Quorum of Twelve had instructed that they leave and had seen that about $1,400 had been sent for that purpose. The latest accounts of their whereabouts were to the effect that Brother Jenkins had been taken captive by the Turks on the evacuation of Jerusalem while Sister Jenkins remained in the city. It is supposed he is located with the Turks somewhere in the Damascus region.

The new agricultural organization reported they had held three sessions with much interest. The following officers had been elected: T. A. Hougas, president; F. A. McWethy, first vice president; Floyd M. Lesch, second vice president; W. S. Macrae, secretary. The object was the general uplift of the church along this line and the name of the organization had not been decided on.

A resolution was presented in which the attendance of our members at the picture shows offered to the general public was proclaimed to be unwise and not in conformity with the ideals of the church, was laid on the table without debate. This question comes up every year, and since the church has already taken a stand against theater going, dancing, etc., it seems the assembly is not disposed to further legislate, believing the present regulations are sufficient if lived up to.

A resolution to favor the idea of the First Presidency calling a fast at the beginning of each conference was referred to them without debate or instruction.

The Order of Bishops recommended that R. J. Lambert be continued on the Board of Trustees for the Children's Home. It was so ordered.

The following was adopted, after considerable debate:

Whereas, some misunderstanding and confusion has arisen over the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 129:8 and Conference Resolution 710, concerning the personnel of the bishopric, therefore,

Be it resolved, that it is the opinion of the bishops present at the conference that the term bishopric as used in Doctrine and Covenants 129:8 has reference to the men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head and that these should constitute the Order of Bishops.

The time for adjournment came, and among the announcements we noted one that the seventies and bishops should not leave conference at adjournment, but remain for post conference sessions.

The evening service in the upper auditorium was devoted to the Sanitarium. It was in charge of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, and thirty nurses in uniform were present, two of these rendering a piano duet, and the head nurse, Sister Sarah B. Rodger, spoke of the value of the institution as a training school. Couched in her statement was the information that the Sanitarium is a training school recognized by the State of Missouri. Nurses are taken in on a probation of three months, after which they may continue to serve for the balance of three years, if found eligible. Those desiring to do so may engage in the profession for three more years and by passing the State examination become graduate registered nurses.

Miss L. Keeley, chief of Red Cross Base Hospital No. 28, at Kansas City, spoke at length on the work of the Red Cross, and the character of work the nurses were expected to do. She portrayed the vital need for good nurses and very succinctly showed the moral safeguards to be even better in the foreign service than at home, though strict in either case.

Miss Anna Barr, head of the Visiting Nurses' Association of Kansas City, also spoke on public welfare work and its value as a social asset.

A double quartet rendered a vocal selection. J. W. Rushton gave a fifteen-minute address on patriotism as expressed in the devotion of the Red Cross nurses. A service flag with five crosses on it was dedicated, it being the number in the service from the Sanitarium. It was an interesting and educational occasion.

The speakers at the evening services were as follows: E. F. Robertson, Second Independence; L. G. Holloway, Enoch Hill; J. E. Vanderwood, Walnut Park; James E. Yates, Central Kansas City; R. L. Fulk, Church of Christ. A number of our men spoke at various schoolhouses throughout the eastern end of the county on the Third Liberty Loan. Among the number were R. S. Salyards, Daniel Macgregor, T. W. Williams, and others. We may learn of the full list later.

At the eight o'clock meeting on Saturday morning the priesthood were edified by the vital interpretations put on different phases of their work by President F. M. Smith. A goodly number of questions had been handed in, growing out of the previous sessions, and the answers to them seemed very satisfactory.

A rousing meeting of those interested in the boy movement, now in charge of F. M. McDowell was held in the basement at 9.15. It was in charge of Brother McDowell and he counted it a very great success, for the speeches were animated, to the point, and each full of meat. It certainly was a fine presentation on a small scale of the great interest throughout the church on the handling of the movement. It was tacitly decided that we should agree with Brother McDowell and try out the Boy Scout organization until such time as we are able to put into operation an organization of our own, to meet our own needs. That such a thing is possible is exemplified in the Oriole circles throughout the church, and which is yet in its infancy. Brother McDowell will not be able to give the subject very much personal attention for some months, being in attendance at the University of Iowa, so we should carefully note any suggestion we have from our experiences which will help him to formulate something for the good of all our boys, from the younger ones to the older. He desires that we shall do so, and will likely communicate with the church through its periodicals.

The meeting at 10.45 in the upper room was addressed by Doctor W. A. Wilson, of Kansas City, and was for men only. The doctor presented some most pertinent facts on the handling of the social disease problem and the comments were very favorable indeed.

The Woman's Auxiliary held a reception in the high school building, a report of which will likely appear in their official columns later.

At the beginning of the session at 2 p. m., the following resolution was presented:

Resolved that as citizens of the United States, we hereby reaffirm our belief in and fidelity to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and as officers and delegates of this sixty-fifth General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, hereby renounce all organizations of any name or character which have expressed opposition to, or sought to hinder the administration of the Government's purpose in the conducting of the present war; and unreservedly express our loyalty to and support of the United States Government in its conducting of the war against the Teutonic allies, humbly praying God's blessing on the allied cause so that complete victory may bring to us an enduring peace, preparing the way for the coming of the kingdom of God.

It was adopted practically if not entirely unanimately, and without debate.

The following report from the committee on boundary lines was read and adopted:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 12, 1918.

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The committee on boundary lines appointed by the conference reports as follows:

Petition of the Eastern Michigan District asking for a division of said district was referred to the committee by the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric with their recommendation of approval. The proposed district to the north to comprise Huron, Tuscola, Sanilac and Saint Clair Counties; the one to the south to be composed of Genesee, Lapeer, Oakland, Macomb, and Wayne Counties, with the addition of Livingston, Washtenaw, and Monroe Counties from the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. We recommend this division subject to the approval of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. We further recommend that the district to the north be known as the Eastern Michigan District and the one to the south to be known as the Detroit District.

In order to officially place the dividing line between the Central Nebraska District and the Southern Nebraska District, as understood by these districts, the committee recommends, subject to ratification by the conferences of the respective districts, that the line be continued from the northwest corner of Lawson County eastward on the Third Standard Parallel North Latitude to the northwest corner of York County, instead of following the Platte River from the western line of Lawson County to the eastern line of Hamilton County as at present.

A committee from the Saskatchewan District request that said district be divided, and we recommend that the request be granted, and that the dividing line be the line between townships numbers twenty-four (24) and twenty-five (25); the other boundary lines remaining as at present. We further recommend that these districts be known as the Northern Saskatchewan District and the Southern Saskatchewan District.

Respectfully submitted,
R. S. SALYARDS,
C. I. CARPENTER,
P. G. FAIRBANKS,
Committee.

The mass meeting of the elders reported that they had elected C. I. Carpenter as president, and associated with him as counselors the presidents of the various quorums of elders. They had held six sessions, discussing Zion's conditions, the gathering, and preparation therefor. There were 226 elders registered for ex officio votes, but of this number only 65, or an average of 28 per cent had been in attendance.

The credentials committee reported the following interesting figures:

There were registered 714 certified members of the conference. Of this number 464 were ex officios, and 250 delegates not ex officios. A goodly number of districts were listed as having sent the full delegation.

Representative William P. Borland, from Missouri, was present and by invitation of President F. M. Smith, addressed the assembly a few moments. He spoke very highly of the standing of our President in the affairs of the State and Nation and commended his sterling integrity as a man. His speech was very cordially received.

The following report was read from the Woman's Auxiliary. An additional report stated that they had taken up at the reception given by the sisters, the sum of $132.35 for the relief of the sufferers in Syria and Armenia. They had announced this fact at the opening of the conference session, and the result of the collection was $122.85 in addition, which would be forwarded to the committee in charge of this fund. The report is as follows:

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: The Woman's Auxiliary has just closed a successful convention. The program was carried out as printed with one or two exceptions. Our speakers were President F. M. Smith, Mrs. F. M. Smith, Miss Charlotte Dryden of Ames, Miss Sarah Pettit of Columbia, Mrs. Audentia Anderson of Omaha, J. W. Rushton and T. W. Williams of California, and Mrs. Lula Sandy of Kansas City. Several meetings held over the appointed time. One extra business session was called. The attendance at the meetings was the largest in the history of the auxiliary.

The elected officers are: Honorary president, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith; president, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Holden Missouri; vice president, Mrs. Fred Koehler, Independence, Missouri; second vice president, Mrs. William Madison Independence, Missouri; secretary, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, Independence, Missouri; treasurer, Mrs. Edna Esgar, Independence, Missouri; historian, Mrs. Madge Siegfried, Independence, Missouri.

The convention ratified the following nominations made by the elective officers: Editor-in-chief, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, Omaha, Nebraska; superintendent Educational Bureau, Mrs. Dora Glines, Independence, Missouri; superintendent Home and Child Welfare Bureau, Mrs. Lydia Wight, Lamoni, Iowa; superintendent Relief and Service Bureau, Mrs. Helen Silsbee Smith, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; superintendent of Young Woman's Bureau, Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa.

The convention recommends for your approval the name of Mrs. Callie B. Stebbins of Lamoni, Iowa, on the Children's Home Board and Mrs. Jennie Studley of Roxbury, Massachusetts, on the Social Purity Board.

It will be of interest to the conference assembled to note the following actions taken by the convention of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The report of the coordinating committee was heartily indorsed and by request of the convention the Presidency of the church placed in nomination their choice for presiding officer for the ensuing year. Their nominee, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, being further ratified by the joint council was unanimously approved by the convention.

The following resolution was approved: That we heartily indorse the sentiment of the speech made by President F. M. Smith to the women on Monday morning, and that we request the executive committee to take under consideration the printing of the speech in leaflet form.

Another resolution was approved as follows: "Because of the lax conditions existent in several of the European nations regarding polygamy and the sacredness of marriage relationship, Be it resolved, that as an international convention of women we favor an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding polygamy.

The executive committee appointed a special committee to draft resolutions expressing our attitude as an organization concerning Red Cross work and war time activities for women. The report of the committee was approved. It reads:

In these days of tragic warfare involving many nations and inflicting unspeakable suffering upon all sections of society, we recognize that the women and children of many of the smaller nations have been especially called to endure bitter privations, sacrifices, and dreadful atrocities. As American women who enjoy the blessings of God in protection from undue hardships, from privations and hunger, with homes still inviolate from ruthless foes, we feel with deep sympathy and concern our true relationship with our suffering sisters in other lands. While we thank God very reverently for his blessings to us in this regard, we would not forget the needs or the sorrows of our allied sisters, who have been driven to despair in this horrible struggle marked by death, grief, and ruin.

We have noted with admiration and anxiety, the sublime heroism of our Belgian, Italian, and French women and the noble devotion of our British and colonial sisters. Their splendid loyalty, expressed in deeds of sacrifice and service, stands as a glorious spectacle of ennobled womanhood which all the dark and dreadful history of this war cannot eclipse. Sad as are the events of the past few years, we feel that the awful depths to which the unfortunate women of such countries as Armenia, Serbia, Palestine and Asia Minor have been plunged, have not been fully sensed. No imagination can picture too fearfully the catalogue of sorrows and indignities to which they have been subjected. We rejoice that our great and powerful Nation has joined with allied democracy to do all possible to stop these organized attacks of conscienceless power (which, in its ruthless march to a sanguinary victory, tramples helpless infancy, maidens chastity, and womanhood's honor under its iron heel) and, in a united effort for a righteous cause would make the world safe for peace, industry, and the homes of the future.

Be it resolved, therefore, That we, the women of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, represented in the convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, hereby express to the President and Executive of the United States, our unreserved support of the Administration's policies in this crisis, and do pledge ourselves to earnestly do all within our power to secure the final triumph for which we hope and work and pray.

And be it further resolved: That we, the Woman's Auxiliary, show our profound sympathy with the sufferers of Armenia, sending them greetings and good cheer in this dark period of their history, by forwarding for their relief the sum of $132.35 (collected from those in attendance at the convention), care of Cleveland Dodge, treasurer.

The above action was taken with the approval of the Presiding Bishop.

The important feature which promises a greater forward movement this year, tending toward closer coordination with the other departments of the church, is the adoption of the report of the coordinating committee. The convention as a whole has been satisfactory.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL, President.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, Secretary.

The report was adopted and a motion prevailed that we indorse the sentiments expressed in the resolutions in favor of a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy. It was further provided that we send a copy to the secretary of the British Isles Mission, to be read before their conference, and likewise to the Australian Mission conference.

Brother Arthur Allen was recommended for ordination to the office of high priest and indorsed by the conference.

Early adjournment was had with the announcement that it would likely be possible to adjourn finally at the close of the session on Monday, April 15, at 10 a. m.

Saturday evening at the Stone Church the Oratorio "Elijah" was again given by the conference choir, with the same soloists as on Thursday. Several meetings were arranged during the evening of various organizations. Several, also, went out to speak at different points in the country for the Liberty Loan. B. S. Lambkin was announced for the Second Independence Church, and speakers were also announced for Enoch Hill, and Walnut Park.

The Sunday services at the Stone Church were again attended by capacity congregations. Prayer services were held in both upper and lower auditoriums, at Second Independence, Enoch Hill, Walnut Park, and Central Kansas City Churches at 8 a. m. At 9.30 Sunday school followed at each church, in charge of local Sunday school officers.

At 11 a. m. F. M. McDowell spoke in the upper auditorium on "Youth and the Church," and was well liked. At the same hour Bishop E. L. Kelley spoke in the lower auditorium; R. S. Salyards at Second Independence; Bishop J. F. Keir at Walnut Park; and T. W. Williams at Central Kansas City Church.

The services were well attended. But in the afternoon at 2.30 p. m. and in the evening many crowded to the Stone Church to hear Augustine Dwyer on "Church decorum," and attend the patriotic service in the evening. At 2.30 Bishop B. J. Scott spoke at Second Independence; D. J. Williams at Enoch Hill; D. J. Krahl at Walnut Park; and T. J. Elliott at Central Kansas City Church.

In the evening the upper auditorium was well filled by 6.30 and the services opened at 7.20 with "The star spangled banner." U. W. Greene offered prayer, after which Albert N. Hoxie of the United States Navy Department Commission on Training Camps, conducted a songfest illustrating how he teaches the boys in camp. "The battle hymn of the republic," "Old folks at home," "Keep the home fires burning," "Old black Joe," "There's a long, long trail," "Round song," and "Just a baby's prayer at twilight," were sung in order. Some of them were repeated several times. The last was declared to be the most popular among the boys in camp.

Then the audience arose and sang, "Onward Christian soldiers," and President F. M. Smith was introduced as the speaker. He gave an emphatic declaration of our position on war activities, loyalty to the flag and country. It was a clear cut statement and may be published later.

Two of the boys' favorite songs were then given, followed by a solo by Mrs. W. N. Robinson. Mrs. Robinson sang several of the camp song solos, and a few were sung by the men alone to show how they sounded in camp. Through the service, all the soldier boys in the audience were seated on the front of the rostrum. Walter W. Smith, who was in charge of the service, spoke very briefly but feelingly, and called for the mothers of boys in the service; then the fathers; then for brothers and sisters to rise.

After "Nearer, my God, to Thee" by the congregation and General Conference choir, T. W. Williams offered the dedicatory prayer for the service flag for the office of the First Presidency. There are four hundred and seventeen names in at present, but the list is incomplete. President F. M. Smith stated there should be one thousand, if all were listed. The name and service of every one in any arm of service of the United States and its allies is desired.

Announcements of meeting for Monday postponed the business session to 2 p. m.

At the same hour Bishop A. Carmichael spoke in the lower auditorium; T. C. Kelley, at Second Independence; J. A. Tanner, at Walnut Park; and Hubert Case, at Central Kansas City church.

A rain Sunday night cleared the air. Eight o'clock found the eldership again assembled in the lower auditorium. President F. M. Smith addressed them on the great necessity of care in grammar and spelling. Various questions were answered by President Smith and Bishop McGuire.

At nine o'clock the various quorums met; the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, Bishopric, seventies, and high priests. Prayer service at the same hour was followed by preaching at 10.45 by Apostle J. Frank Curtis.

The building was again well filled before the opening of the business session. Evidently the delegates were holding their places steadily and but few have left the conference. The missionary chorus appeared at 1.45 p. m. and sang a few hymns. At 2 p. m. sharp, as usual, the gavel fell for the opening of the session. After singing number 97 in Saints' Hymnal, Apostle G. T. Griffiths offered prayer. Minutes of previous sessions were read and approved.

Administration committee reported one hundred and sixty-two administrations, with great benefit to those receiving administration.

Order of Evangelists reported. The First and Second Seventy reported that each quorum had contributed twenty-five dollars for purchase of a Liberty Loan bond.

The Order of Bishops reported nine sessions held, with sixteen bishops present at this conference; average attendance ninety per cent. They have discussed consecration, stewardship, and inheritances, and will continue to meet after conference to discuss these vital questions.

The joint council reported, reapproving their previous action in regard to the Historian's department. Motion was duly made to adopt. A substitute was offered that Heman C. Smith be sustained as Historian, and the joint council choose an assistant. The substitute lost, the original motion obtained.

The Presidents of Seventy reported J. W. Davies for a president of seventy. S. S. St. John, P. R. Burton, J. N. Carlile, Hale W. Smith, J. W. Curtis, L. W. Fike, and E. J. Gleazer for ordination as seventies. All accepted and were approved.

The Presidency presented the names of S. H. Parker, of Australia, E. R. Davis, C. E. Jones, and Jesse Hardin for ordination as high priests, with the approval of the joint council and High Priests Quorum. Their ordination was approved and provided for. The High Priests Quorum reported the selection of W. S. Macrae as counselor to the president of the Quorum of High Priests. The selection was approved.

G. W. Burt and R. Baldwin were called by the Twelve to be evangelical ministers and were both approved.

At 3.40 the table was clear and motion duly presented in order to sustain Frederick M. Smith as prophet, seer, revelator, and President of the church; Elbert A. Smith as counselor; Quorum of Twelve, Presidents of Seventy, three Quorums of Seventy, Presiding Bishopric, Patriarch, and Order of Evangelical ministers; Order of Bishops, Standing High Council, Quorum of High Priests, elders, Aaronic priesthood, Chorister, Recorder, Secretary and various departments of church work.

Appointments were read and approved. Announcements of joint council meeting at 9.15 the 16th, of Presidency, Twelve, Seventy, and Order of Bishops. Conference adjourned.

Benediction by F. A. Smith.

SAINTS' HOMES

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: 1. The Saints' Homes for the aged at Lamoni, Iowa, have, during the year 1917, been filled to their capacity. Until the new home at Holden was opened, we had many applications for admission which could not be granted for want of room; these were turned over to the Presiding Bishop, who now passes on applications for admission.

2. Five deaths have occurred at the homes in Lamoni during the year, two at Liberty and three at the Saints' Home. There are in the two homes 52 inmates, 18 men and 34 women.

3. The management has been in the hands of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric: A. Carmichael, R. J. Lambert, and A. J. Yarrington. A. J. Yarrington has occupied as business manager, under the advice and counsel of Bishop Carmichael and Counselor R. J. Lambert. Sister Alice P. Dancer had continued as matron at the Saints' Home and Sister J. T. Williams as matron at Liberty Home.

4. The woven wire fence on the railway right of way referred to in our last report has been completed and the farm is now entirely inclosed with woven wire fence. Our cross fences are yet of barbed wire, and as rebuilding becomes necessary, should be replaced with woven wire.

5. The improvements to the property during the year are: The erection of an additional silo, purchased second hand at a favorable price and moved to the home farm; the painting of the tool house erected last year, the hay barn, and the two silos.

6. The high-class dairy herd started two years ago is developing finely and should be a substantial source of income to the home. An examination of our accounts shows the fact that butter and milk are higher than at any year since the establishment of the home, yet our expenditures have been the lowest for these items, and except for extremely dry pasture last fall this department would undoubtedly have shown a nice profit. We have on hand a fine lot of young heifers to replace our older cows, for which there is a ready market, and a number of valuable males eligible to register, ready for sale. The farm has produced a car load of hogs which are now on feed for the spring market.

7. The building of the steam laundry in Lamoni has solved our laundry problems, and the opening of the new home at Holden has afforded relief from being unable to care for worthy ones for lack of room.

8. The following is the financial report for the year ending December 31, 1917.

Respectfully submitted,
A. J. YARRINGTON, Manager.

SANITARIUM TRUSTEES

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: 1. The personnel of the Board as sustained by the last General Conference has not been changed. J. A. Tanner has acted as president; L. H. Haas as secretary; and George H. Hulmes as treasurer. M. A. Etzenhouser acted as manager until July 1, 1917, when L. Stover succeeded him.

2. In June a class of three girls was graduated and appropriate commencement exercises were held at the Stone Church.

3. On the recommendation of Doctor G. L. Harrington, the Public Health Department was discontinued.

4. Since October 1 the superintendent of nurses, Miss Sarah E. Rogers, has been in Detroit, Michigan, taking post graduate work in nursing, and additional work in hospital management. She expects to return about April 1. In her absence the work has been done by Miss Laura E. Mann.

5. Because of the increase in the prices of material and provisions used at the Sanitarium it was found necessary to increase the rates. Rooms that were formerly $10 are now

$12.50 per week; and those that were $20 are now $25. The charge for the operating room remains the same.

6. The staff of under-graduate nurses has been increased to twenty-two.

7. Below we give a statement from the patient's register:

Number of patients admitted	1917
Number of patient days	8,784
Average number of days for each patient	13
Number of patients dismissed	635
Number of patients died	35
Number of patients L. D. S. members	303
Number of patients not members	366
Number of patients paid from the church	90
Number of minor operations	187
Number of major operations	170

9. At the meeting held March 5 the Board adopted the following budget and approved the following financial report of the year's business, as submitted by the manager.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 6, 1918.

CHILDREN'S HOME

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. During the calendar year 1917 the Children's Home trustees have conducted the home the entire time.

2. Brother and Sister Joseph Goode retired from the positions of superintendent and matron May 1, and they were succeeded by Brother and Sister J. J. Boswell, from the Walnut Park Branch at Independence, Missouri, who completed the work for the year, although the health of Sister Boswell indicated that a change would likely be necessary, in order to avoid a breakdown.

3. The enrollment for the year has been quite varied, having been as low as eighteen and as high as thirty-five children, ranging in age from two months to almost sixteen years.

4. No less than one dozen homes of Saints have been opened to receive a child from the home for adoption or its practical equivalent, while others have been removed by those who placed them in the home, the circumstances which necessitated placing them in our custody having changed.

5. There is a disposition among the people of the church to place children in the home for the purpose of keeping families of children intact. The trustees have been of the opinion that the home can be of greatest usefulness to the church by acting as a sort of clearing house, receiving the orphaned or neglected children as their fully empowered guardians, and placing them by adoption into Latter Day Saint homes that will properly protect and develop them. This policy will likely be adhered to more closely as the demand for room in the home shall increase.

6. The Board of Trustees as at present constituted and organized is: A. Carmichael, president; R. J. Lambert, secretary; A. J. Yarrington, treasurer; Callie B. Stebbins, Lucy L. Resseguie, Minnie B. Nicholson, Floyd M. McDowell.

7. The terms of Callie B. Stebbins and R. J. Lambert expire at this conference of 1918, and it will be necessary to elect their successors for the term of three years each.

8. The finances of the home are made to appear in the report of the treasurer hereto appended.

ORDER OF EVANGELISTS

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: 1. Since last reporting to you, one year ago, we have had fifteen men out of our twenty-seven on our list under conference appointment; they have done what they could under existing circumstances. The work of this order does not seem to be fully understood as yet, which has made it impossible for us to push our work to any extent, but they have stood ready to do whatever they could when called upon or the opportunity offered. Several of them have labored in a local way, accomplishing what they could according to their limited opportunities. A number of them, as heretofore, have not been very active because of increasing years.

2. Up to the time of this reporting, seventeen of the order have reported the following work done: 1,397 sermons, 44 baptisms, 85 confirmations, 19 ordinations, 92 children blessed, and 930 patriarchal blessings given. Only 474 visits have been reported, which have been made in an official way, which does not represent the real amount of labor of this character that has been done. Considerable of the work done by these men cannot be shown in figures very well, having a spiritual character that cannot be recorded altogether in figures.

3. We anxiously hope that the time will come when the work of these men will be better understood and the effort put forth can be productive of greater good than at the present time. There has been no change in the order during the year.

Very respectfully submitted,
 FREDERICK A. SMITH, President.
 H. O. SMITH, Secretary.

LIBRARY COMMISSION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. Organization: Shortly after the adjournment of General Conference last year the library commission met and organized for the year's activities. Owing to the sickness of Chairman Elbert A. Smith, E. D. Moore was elected temporary chairman. Bishop J. F. Keir was continued as treasurer, and the undersigned was appointed secretary. S. A. Burgess and Edward D. Moore were chosen publicity editors and also purchasing committee. Sister Estella Wight was retained as general church librarian. At this organization meeting the members pledged themselves to an unremitting effort during the year, to arouse and maintain a greater interest in library work throughout the church and auxiliaries.

2. Accomplishment: We have endeavored to get in touch with, and arouse to activity, every district and stake library representative whose name and address we have been able to obtain. The publicity committee has rendered effective service through frequent announcements in the church papers. Four general letters have been sent out to district library board members, encouraging them to activity, instructing them as to their duties, and emphasizing the possibilities and responsibilities of library work; a paper on library work to be read at reunions and conventions was given wide circulation; and a suggested library program for local Religio societies was widely advertised and mailed to all local library boards interested enough to make request. Numerous inquiries have been received from district and local boards and given careful attention. We feel that progress has been made in the work of this department, but there is much room for improvement, as evidenced by the following brief summary of the year's work: Corresponded with 80 districts; received response from 57; and 30 made annual report. Of the thirty district boards making report, eight had not organized and ten had received no report from any of the local boards under their jurisdiction.

3. Suggestion. Where the board members live in different parts of the district and do not meet at district conference or conventions, it is quite a problem for them to organize and outline their work. As a result, many boards have not taken this initial step and library work in such districts is at a standstill. In other districts, after the boards have succeeded in organizing and arranging their work, the subsequent inactivity of one or two board members has blocked the wheels of progress. To make matters worse, it happens that in certain districts the elections in connection with district conference and the Sunday school and Religio conventions are held at different times of the year, thus causing frequent changes in the personnel of the boards and in the offices of chairman, secretary, and treasurer. Every such readjustment requires time and delays the operations of the board. As a result of the foregoing conditions, there is a growing demand for a greater centralization of library authority and responsibility. As one person usually does the work of the board, it is suggested that it be arranged so that he may go ahead with the work and not be handicapped and delayed by being required to obtain the cooperation and approval of the two other members. Especially does there appear to be a crying need for some such an arrangement in outlying districts where active workers are few and far between. It is possible that the stakes and better equipped districts may be satisfied with the present arrangement, but it is not working successfully in by far the majority of districts. The greater question is, "How can one person be elected or appointed so as to represent the three organizations now represented on the boards?" We leave this question with you, feeling that in the multitude of counsel there will be found wisdom sufficient to improve the present method of conducting library work.

4. The Library Mission. The Lord has said in latter-day revelation, "Become acquainted with all good books," and "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom." Reading exerts a powerful influence for good or evil upon human thought and conduct. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." The great mission of the church is to save mankind from evil. So the best way for the church and auxiliaries to prevent unprofitable and harmful reading is by supplying good books and encouraging and promoting the reading of them.

5. As a church we have a peculiar and distinctive message to bear to the world—the unchangeable and everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ. *It is said that the missionary spirit is the life of the church. "Let him who is warned, warn his neighbor." This may be done by the "spoken word" and by the "written word." Is there not, then, a need and room for library work in the church. Surely, the collection and distribution of the mental and spiritual food preserved in "all good books" is a service of inestimable value to mankind, and no district or branch of the church can afford, through any action or inaction on its part, to deprive its members and others of the benefits of library work.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN

I hereby make the following report concerning the general church library for the year just past. Since my last report, March 3, 1917, to present date the following books have been acquired by purchase or donation:

Journal of History (two bound volumes); Saints' Herald (two bound volumes); Autumn Leaves (two bound volumes); People's Bible Encyclopaedia (1 volume) by Charles R. Barnes; Poetical Works of Walter Scott; Tale of Two Cities, by Charles Dickens; Whittier's Poems; Longfellow's Poems; England and America (two volumes), by Mary A. M. Marks; Bryant's Poems; The Weavers, by Gilbert Parker; Two Years in Peru (two volumes), by Thomas J. Hutchinson; The Four Gospels in African Dialect; Through America, by W. G. Marshall; The Mound Builders, by J. P. McLean; American Antiquities, by Josiah Priest; Third Party Movements Since Civil War, by Fred E. Haynes; The Latter Day Saints, a study of the Mormons, by Kaufmann; Report of Board of Control of State Institutions; The Church Enchained, by William A. R. Goodwin; Incidents of Travel in Central America and Yucatan (two volumes), by John L. Stevens; Hill's Practical Reference Library (four volumes); Presbyterians, by Reverend George P. Hays; Who's Who in America (volume nine); The Quakers of Iowa, by Louis Thomas Jones; United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; The Occult World, by A. P. Sinnett; Christ's Object Lessons, by Ellen G. White; Statute Law Making in Iowa, by Benjamin F. Shambaugh; Iowa Year Book of Agriculture; Census of Iowa, 1915; Expense Report, State of Iowa; Marches of the Dragons in Mississippi Valley, by Louis Pelzer; Lynn Vital Records, Massachusetts; The Mormon Problem, by C. P. Lyford; The Democratic Text Book; Mississippi Valley in British Politics (2 volumes), by C. W. Alvord; Rules of Order and Debate; Manual of Useful Information; Items of Interest (Manual); The Crusaders; Jean Ingelow (poetical works); Child's History of England, by Charles Dickens; the Reconciler of the Bible; Questions Asked by Protestants.

A total of 55 volumes accessioned during the year, making a total number of all volumes accessioned 2,242. There are a few books on hand not yet accessioned. Nothing in the way of furniture has been added this year.

As the library is the property of the general church, the librarian believes that its benefits should not be localized, but that it should be developed to such an extent as to meet the needs of many, and especially missionaries out in the field. She therefore respectfully makes the following suggestions and recommendations:

First: That the missionaries be requested by the General Library Commission to send in a list of names of the books which they think would be especially helpful (and in some cases absolutely necessary) to the missionary in public discussions, debates, and in replying to questions which he is required to meet. The missionary cannot carry all the books he needs for all such occasions, and they are often not easily obtainable. With a view then to their special needs, let the board select from these lists and purchase the books as fast as practicable.

Second: The librarian believes that the general library should contain books setting forth properly the beliefs and creeds of the various denominations, for the same purpose as above mentioned. These in addition to the large number of books we already have against our church.

Third: When such books are purchased, a printed list should be made and sent out to each missionary, and arrangements made whereby any book may be sent upon his request, free of charge except for postage each way.

Fourth: That some of the incomplete files of old magazines and papers be disposed of, since many of them are of little use except to take up space and require time to be cared for.

Fifth: That a time limit be decided upon within which a borrower should return a book.

GOSPEL LITERATURE COMMISSION

To the Religio and Sunday School Conventions: 1. It is not possible to make a report that will convey an adequate statement of the amount of work done by the General Commission this year. This has been a year of organization. Hundreds of local boards have been organized in branches, and thousands and thousands of pieces of church literature have been distributed; one branch placed over 100,000 Stepping Stones. This work was done by the Brooklyn Branch, and Brother Christy writes:

2. "In the last two years we also distributed 60,000 other pieces of literature." Australia, under the leadership of Sister Blanche Flood, should be credited with 16,000.

3. When the present members of the commission consented to take charge of the work for the past year, they knew that many serious obstacles would stand in the way, not the least being lack of time in which to do the work; justice; but the members feel glad now that they did what they could, and are assured that a good foundation has been laid, on which to build during the coming years.

4. Owing to the fact that members of the district and local boards are elected, as well as those of the general commission, organization has moved only as fast as district conventions and conferences convened. Even yet there are many districts and hundreds of branches which have not carried out the instruction of their church to organize local literature boards. A few branches are not willing to act in unity with the main body, and have either ignored or egotistically turned down requests to organize local boards. Yet nearly every person to whom we have written has caught the spirit of the work and responded with favor and enthusiasm.

5. This work of placing the printed gospel message into the hands of men and women outside the kingdom of God is second only in importance to preaching the gospel, and the commission believes that some person or persons should be appointed who could devote undivided attention to the interests of church literature distribution. The commission has cooperated with the advertising manager of the Board of Publication and we feel confident that many sales of church literature have been effected. That department is now in a position to help fully cooperate with local boards, and urges that they be representative and businesslike, so that their work may be of greater service to each community in which they serve.

6. We see a bright future for this work and urge that it be continued, and believe that the next report will contain full credit for the work done during the past year, only about one tenth of the reports being in at the time of this writing.

7. The personnel of the commission is as follows: H. Sandy, member for the Religio; R. W. Farrell, for the Sunday school; E. D. Moore, for the church. The undersigned has acted as superintendent of the commission, having charge of the direct correspondence with the districts and some locals. A good card index has been arranged and the work can easily be taken up by anyone. Harvey Sandy had supervision of the four stakes in Missouri, while E. D. Moore looked after Lamoni Stake. We have all corresponded considerably and have been distributing a leaflet of instructions concerning details of the work, gotten out by us during the year. Some of these are still available for those interested.

R. W. FARRELL, For the Commission.

SOCIAL PURITY BOARD

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. Another conference year closes and the necessity of reporting forces home the fact that time is passing rapidly, carrying in its passage whatever of opportunity for service the year may have held. As individuals and as a board we have sensed keenly conditions and needs of the hour which have called for action. Some work of a general nature has been performed, but each member has been loaded to the breaking point with immediate and imperative duties which have made unremitting demands upon time and energy.

2. Under these conditions a full measure of service has been impossible. This must not longer be true of the men whom you select. The work undertaken by the Purity Board must be done—but it will require time, consideration, and prayerful effort from an individual or a board who will have time for connected study and research as a basis for a sound and logical campaign under the inspiration of the gospel. There must be an effective organization and setting in operation of the forces of intelligence and righteousness which have ever been the Master's weapons against evil.

3. We can report such activity as our limited time permitted. Advice has been gladly given in response to letters of inquiry as to means and measures for local work. Books and pamphlets have been sent out where there seemed an opportunity for them to do good. We have gladly given our cooperation in local efforts to promote the physical and spiritual well-being of our young people. Clean Life Clubs are to be encouraged; with proper organization and supervision they will help to accomplish the desired end. However, the inspiration for such a movement must come through the spirit of the gospel, rather than to be introduced among our people as a provision from the world.

4. For the coming year we offer the following recommendations: a. The imperative demands of the time for conservation of vitality and virtue must be met by an intelligent, systematic campaign against all forms of vice and those forces of unrighteousness, wherever found, which tend to undermine the health and spiritual strength and vigor of our membership. The policy must be a constructive one, making provision for and encouraging every logical expression of the normal, invigorating, happy activities of youth.

b. As a centralized agency for accomplishing this task, some one or more persons must be found who can and will take the time and make the effort to qualify for acceptable leadership. Activity must not be impulsive or hasty—yet the situation demands action. Preparation will require time and means and talent, plus humility in the service of God and humanity.

c. The day demands specialization. It is a crime to ask men or women, already overburdened with immediate and imperative duties, to assume an additional task which calls for technical knowledge and effort in a specialized field. If three members are again elected on the Purity Board it should be definitely understood that one of the number, or another whom the board in concurrence with the general church authorities should designate, should immediately prepare for active leadership in a forceful, though consistently conservative, campaign.

d. A book is needed embodying in clear and concise form the essentials of pure and clean living, sex instruction, personal health, sanitation, diet, and simple directions for the prevention of disease and the care of the sick. This should be written with the Word of Wisdom as a foundation, and having as a motive the perfecting of a people, strong in body and mind, who shall be ready to meet the Savior when he comes.

e. Other literature should be prepared and judiciously distributed to meet specific needs, of which the conditions in our army camps at present is a good type. This will call for a technical knowledge of conditions and of necessary precautions only obtained by specialized preparation.

f. Some one should be prepared to present the philosophy of clean and pure living in strong lectures and in a vigorous personal campaign, organizing the forces of good against "every appearance of evil." Other men and women who have specially prepared should be given an opportunity to serve in a similar manner, under a judicious and conservative appointment. Mere zeal and ambition must not be mistaken for real ability to successfully present a solution to the problems centering about the sex life.

g. An effort should be made to coordinate all work of a similar nature now being attempted or done by the Woman's Auxiliary, the new boy movement, the temperance department of the Religio, and the Purity Board.

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.
R. W. FARRELL.

COMMITTEE ON REVISION OF CHURCH HISTORY

President F. M. Smith, Independence, Missouri, Dear Brother: 1. The Committee on the revision of church history, consisting of M. H. Siegfried, Charles Fry, and the undersigned, has not been passed any work the past year to examine.

2. Early in February, the present year, I took the matter up with the Historian, Heman C. Smith, and he advised me that: "All that has been written so far, has already passed the committee, so there is nothing more at present for them to examine." Our report is in records of last conference.

E. L. KELLEY.

COMMITTEE OF MEMORIAL TO THE MARTYRS

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. At the last conference this committee was reconstituted in harmony with a suggestion in the report of the Presidency. In June, 1917, the new committee, Bishops Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, Mark H. Siegfried, and George P. Lambert met at Nauvoo and observed conditions surrounding the property belonging to the church, known as the Joseph Smith Homestead, the Mansion House, and the Nauvoo House. The matter was presented to the Standing High Council June 18, 1917, and that body gave their approval to the expenditure of a maximum sum of $5,000 to properly protect the property.

2. It was decided to strengthen the retaining wall in front of block 145 by riprap. The execution of this work was cheerfully undertaken by Bishop George P. Lambert, a member of the committee. He reports that it was successfully done at a cost of $297.25. The city of Nauvoo donated the stone. This gift we acknowledge with thanks.

3. Owing to the stage of water maintained by the Power Company, the basement of the Nauvoo House has from three to four feet of water in it. It was thought the best way to remedy this and make the place habitable was to fill the basement. This work has been provided for, but to date circumstances have prevented its accomplishment. As soon as possible this will be done.

4. The committee has also had under advisement the placing of an iron fence around the half block on which are located the graves of the Martyrs. This work has been deferred because of the prevailing high prices of the necessary material.

5. It is believed by the committee that something should be done toward the preservation of the old homestead and the permanent care of the grounds of all three properties. If it could be arranged to locate there some well-informed man and his wife, the place could be made a depot for the sale and distribution of our church literature, etc. These parties could also act as caretakers. By such use of this historical property a number and class of people, not otherwise reached, would be brought in touch with the church.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: Since our last report the manuscript for the second volume has received the finishing editorial work, is now in the hands of the printer, and some of it in type. Much of the printing will be done by the time the conference adjourns, and be ready for distribution sometime during the summer. The office is now taking orders for it at the same price as volume 1, viz: one dollar.

COMMITTEE BOOK OF MORMON CONCORDANCE

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. Soon after the adjournment of the last annual conference the committee met at the office of the Historian, Lamoni, Iowa, and pushed the work as fast as was consistent with necessary accuracy, in order to get it completed within the time specified in our last report.

2. Elder Campbell, of the committee, feeling that his physical strength would not sustain the effort to complete the work, withdrew, and the other members continued the work unto completion and turned it over to the Presidency and Board of Publication, as instructed, with the following statement:

"LAMONI, IOWA, July 2, 1917.

"To the First Presidency and Board of Publication: 3. Having at last practically finished our task of preparing a concordance to the Book of Mormon we, as instructed by the General Conference, present the manuscript to you, hoping and praying that it may prove to be a blessing to the lovers of that sacred volume.

4. "The task has been a long and trying one; and while we think it is as near perfect as we could expect to make it, we are conscious that with the many dangers of error we have failed to avoid them all. We hope therefore that criticisms will be tempered with charity.

5. "If the proof reading can be done from the book itself, some errors may be eliminated, and if it can be arranged for one of our committee to assist in the proof reading, it would be an additional safeguard.

6. "Elder Duncan Campbell of our committee has not been with us since the last conference, but his former service and his valuable suggestions during our last session have been almost indispensable.

7. "Our work being now practically finished we ask to be released as a committee.

"Respectfully submitted,
HEMAN C. SMITH,
HYRUM O. SMITH,
DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

TEACHERS' EDITION OF THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The work of the "Teachers' Edition" of the Inspired Translation is steadily being pushed to completion. The work done now includes the New Testament and about one half of the Old Testament. A committee, appointed by the Board of Publication to review the manuscript for the New Testament, has finished this work and reported favorably, excepting a few changes, and recommends publication of the same.

A. CARMICHAEL,
For the Committee.

GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

1. The stewardship intrusted to the association by the 1917 convention and conference has a twofold aspect: spiritual and temporal. In the temporal, we can report a fair showing. Starting the year with $2,800.76 in cash and notes, we have paid all authorized expenses and close with a present net worth in cash and notes of $5,855.65, making a gain of $3,054.89. The terms of the stewardship require that all funds on hand over and above $600 on December 31 shall be paid to the Presiding Bishop as a surplus. To honor this we have issued the necessary order on our treasurer for $5,255.65; but he, after consultation with the bishop, believes it is wise to postpone the completion of the transaction until the meeting of the executive council and convention, at which time some modifications of the terms of the stewardship in this particular will be proposed by the bishop, who believes the present terms are prejudicial to the best interests of the association.

2. We are not sure that the spiritual side of our stewardship makes as definite a showing. It is easier to manage a business profitably than to produce enthusiastic, consecrated officers and teachers who are determined to be efficient workers with the children and youth of the church. Dollars can be manipulated, but consecration is a quality of mind and agency. There is a way to touch the heart, fire the imagination, and create vision in all who need it, but it requires a larger use of printer's ink, the mails, and more office help.

3. We started a service survey some three years ago with a view to locating and classifying auxiliary workers having special talents, ability, and experience. The purpose was to meet a present and near future demand for field workers, writers of teachers' and officers' helps, designers of lesson materials, such as blackboard illustrations, maps, pictures, and handwork for cradle roll, beginner, and primary departments. We need more people who are capable of helping to further improve our course of graded lessons and make it the very best our church can produce. This survey has not been completed, no progress having been made for two years, for want of office help to carry it through.

4. Last year the superintendent asked the executive council to grant authority to assemble our most available talent, the lessons committee, at an expense of about two hundred dollars, to coordinate the five grades of the lessons course, making it sufficiently permanent to justify the expense of getting out teachers' helps, maps, illustrations, etc., all of which are too costly to buy for mere temporary use. Our editors have been working apart, with no opportunity for coordination. The council did not want to spend the money. Over his protest, they voted to make the superintendent editor in chief of the lessons, upon the theory that he seemed to understand what was needed to put the course in proper shape; and therefore was competent to do the actual work. We submit that a superintendent of public construction must know what ought to be done and must recognize capable workmen, but that does not make him a carpenter, joiner, plasterer, metal worker, plumber, or electrician. My coworkers did not realize that the work involved the services of a stenographer all the time, which of course would have cost more than two hundred dollars. They did, however, authorize me to secure temporary help when crowded. This we have been unable to secure, except to a limited degree. We have been unable to touch that particular work.

5. Considering that over one third of the baptisms into the church are of persons under the age of fifteen, the church is vitally concerned in the matter of a systematic course of lessons on the faith of the church, to put in the hands of parents and teachers. It is a great trust—the spiritual phase of our stewardship and, in our estimation, the largest phase. If, after that has been developed to the fullest practicable extent, there remains a surplus in dollars, well and good. But this should be regarded as the secondary and not the primary purpose of our stewardship.

6. In many respects our workers have been marking time. We come this year with some honest doubts that our present district machinery of organization is practical. For example: The last three years we have been trying to secure through district superintendents a complete list of local superintendents with addresses. This is called for by general church as well as our own association officers, and the Government asks for information on same. Simple as it seems, we have failed; there are always several hundred names short. The lowest delinquency was 14 per cent of district superintendents that failed to respond. This year it is 22 per cent. It was lowest when we kept closest to the typewriter with follow-up letters. This is just one item. We might mention others. The Library Commission secretary wrote to 80 district board officers, of which 37 per cent failed to report. Of those who reported, 26 per cent had not organized and 33 per cent had no reports from local boards. Our general cradle roll superintendent says that 32 per cent of district superintendents failed to report. The Gospel Literature Commission reports that 90 per cent of district officers were delinquent. Delinquency of this kind is responsible for this report being delayed to First Presidency.

7. Out of all this discouraging condition there arises one common, definite conviction that we have not seen in reports of other years, and that is: We must have simpler administration. It calls for one-man leadership, no matter how many advisers we may give him. It calls for greater centralization of responsibility. In this respect we are hoping that our coordinating committee may be able to give us practical relief.

8. We now have 83 districts, 7 of which are first grade according to standard of excellence. The number of schools reported is 786, a loss of 9 over last year. Contrasted to this is a reported total membership of 44,396, which is a gain of 4,372. Some of our weak schools disorganized and the members were placed on a home class basis. We prefer a live home class to a school half dead, without officers to properly man it. We ask missionaries and all others to consider this before organizing. Total membership now includes those enrolled on cradle roll and home class records. Formerly secretaries were not all reporting it that way. Some of the increase is due to that. The number of teachers reported is 3,902. For April-June quarter, 1918, we printed 45,100 Quarterlies.

9. The heads of all departments have done faithful work. My first assistant, Daniel Macgregor, was given the care of appointing field workers and oversight of institute programs at conventions and reunions, and has done good work, considering the constant demand made of him as missionary. At least 35 field workers were appointed, 13 of which were already working as district superintendents. We have received 9 reports. Very few have had time and means to plan and carry out any definite work. Our second assistant, A. W. Smith, cooperating with the Presiding Bishop, went over the top with the greatest Christmas offering we ever had, over $73,000.00, which he modestly affirms was due not so much to personal efforts, as to "the wonderful cooperation and devotion of the schools and the blessing of God." He dealt directly with local superintendents and not through the regular district organization, an important point in the secret of success. We are asking self this question: "If direct contact is best for special campaigns, why not best for the regular work of general officers?"

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY

To the First Presidency and General Conference: 1. We are glad to be able to report that we believe the Religio Society has made some progress during the last year. We started the year with a definite aim of trying to make the Religio more profitable to the church in holding the interest of the young folks in church matters, and also in training them to greater usefulness in church work.

2. With this end in view we recommended to the General Religio Convention the appointment of a general field worker to devote his whole time to the work, which suggestion was approved, subject to concurrence of the joint council of the church. On conferring with the joint council, suggestion was made that more would doubtless be accomplished if a number of workers were particularly requested to do field work for the Religio than if one should devote his whole time to the work. Based on this suggestion, various members of the Quorum of Twelve furnished a list of those in their missions of the previous year whom they thought would be in position to render us the assistance needed.

3. We wrote to all of the forty-three whose names and addresses were submitted, sending them a somewhat lengthy suggestion of the plan we felt would be most advantageous to follow in doing field work, and asking them to cooperate with us. A majority of those addressed answered, although some of those answering expressed the opinion that they would not be able to put forth a very great effort for the benefit of the society. All, however, were encouraged to do the very best they could in helping us to accomplish the ends sought. A recent request for reports resulted in replies from fifteen, only a few of whom had been able to do any systematic or extensive work.

4. This confirms us in the opinion that while district or regional workers, devoting such time as they might be able, would be of much assistance to the Religio, we really need some one devoting his whole time to the work, to visit districts and assist the district and local workers with suggestions and explanations so as to make their work more effective.

5. I have personally been able to visit sixteen districts other than the Saint Louis District, during the course of the year, most of these visits being on Sunday. The visits have been profitable in giving me a better vision of the work, outside of any profit they might have been to the districts.

6. We have encouraged throughout the year, with the general, district, and local workers, that the Religio work be made more of a departmental work, each officer being made responsible for the carrying out of the work under the charge of his particular department, and we feel sure that if this system is carried out, it will result profitably.

7. Most of the general officers have been active in their various departments, but we do not feel that a detailed report would be profitable here, as same may be obtained in the printed reports of the Religio Society.

8. Particular attention has been given throughout the year to the encouragement of the program work and the social work, feeling that these departments are perhaps the most attractive features of the Religio work with the young people, whose interest in the church and its work we are trying to arouse and keep.

9. It has become apparent to us that the result would be greatly to the benefit of the Religio Society if the sanction of the church was publicly placed upon the work of the society, as we have found in some districts that the impression, which we are sure is erroneous, has obtained that the Religio Society did not have the entire approval of the parent body. This has made the work somewhat difficult in those places.

10. We wish to accomplish whatever work the church may feel can profitably be handled by our society, and shall always work to that end.

Respectfully,
G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
President.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 7, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: 1. In submitting report it is with the feeling that the year has been one of profit and great activity in all branches of our work, resulting in some progress and solid growth. Many new locals have taken up our work and better district organizations have been effected.

2. It has been our desire to be able to report at this time that an organizer has been appointed over each district in the church, that the work might be carried on according to the new constitution. But so far the list is incomplete. Forty-six organizers have been appointed over as many districts and many of them have entered heartily into their work and carried out our plans. Some are just learning their work, and some have been but recently appointed. In another year greater progress will be made. The Woman's Auxiliary work is entirely new in many places and progress is slow.

YEAR BOOK

3. Work on the new Year Book was begun some time ago, and is progressing nicely. It was decided to prepare a supplement to the present Year Book, giving all necessary changes and advanced ideas, but using the policies of the present Year Book as a basis for our work the coming two years.

4. This decision was reached after long discussion, and after hearing the opinion of absent as well as present members of the executive committee, for many reasons, chief among them the reduction in cost. We expect to have the outline and plans for the book prepared and ready to submit at the convention.

COORDINATING COMMITTEE

5. Our member of the coordinating committee has written her suggestions to the other members of the committee and has submitted them to our executive committee. They seem fair and reasonable. We feel sure that she will care for our interests, in her outline of departmental work and ideas of close cooperation with other church departments, and enlarged vision of federating all the woman's activities within the church under the Woman's Auxiliary.

EDUCATIONAL LINES

6. We feel we have made great strides in educational lines this year. The contributions to our column seem to indicate a greater vision and higher spirituality on the part of our women. Our column in the Saints' Herald has been very ably edited by Sister Audentia Anderson, with Sister Alice Mae Burgess as assistant for Autumn Leaves. In all about seventy-six contributions have appeared, besides reports and notices, announcements of various character, eleven of them from the General President, twelve from other officers and supervisors, and fifty-two were original articles contributed by women not officers of the society. Besides this, eighteen contributions came from brethren, about half of these being in connection with the boys' organization of the church.

7. The column for the Young Woman's Department in Autumn Leaves, cared for by Sister Burgess, has been in most efficient hands. Many good things have appeared there all through the year's work, and Sister Corless has also done splendid work in Glad Tidings. We would urge that the brethren feel free to use our column when they desire to help with the work. We shall be glad to have their suggestions.

HISTORICAL

8. The work of the historian has been a little hindered by the change of constitution of last year, it being necessary to appoint the organizer for each district before progress could be made. Sister B. C. Smith, our historian, had it well in hand when she was taken ill. She expected to finish up all work on the history up to the conference of 1917, and had asked then to turn the work over to her successor.

DEPARTMENTAL

9. The work of our several bureaus have been in competent hands this year. Sister Dora Glines for the Educational Bureau has gathered about her splendid specialists in all lines of the work, and shows clear understanding, great courage, and a large vision.

10. Sister Lydia Wight for the Child Welfare Bureau has done her best for the work, but being obliged to spend her days in the schoolroom this year she has not had the time to give the work that she should have had.

11. Sister Helen Smith, of the Relief and Service Bureau, has given us some splendid things in writing, and her hand can be seen, too, in directing the work in many places.

12. Sister Alice Mae Burgess, of the Young Woman's Bureau, has moved out along new lines, and at the close of the year we feel that the young women of the church have a splendid adviser and helper in Sister Burgess.

OUR HONORARY PRESIDENT

13. The work of the honorary president deserves special mention. Her advice has been sought and followed on all issues that have come before the executive committee, keeping in touch with the general president by continued correspondence, having submitted to her all new moves in advance for counsel. She has answered many letters, counseled with all who asked advice, and sought in every way to further the work. Besides this she has served for the Woman's Auxiliary on the coordinating committee.

EXECUTIVE MEETINGS

14. Regular meetings of the executive committee have been held, nineteen in all, except in the month of August, at which policies have been discussed and many hours spent in executive session and special committee work. The meetings have all been well attended, each member has taken a keen interest, and has given conscientious service.

REUNION WORK

15. Our reunion work this year was in charge of our second vice president, Mrs. William Madison, who reports furnishing material for programs for Woman's Auxiliary meetings at fifteen reunions, and attending one herself, at Calumet, Oklahoma, in the interest of the work. She is already preparing for next year's work so as to be ready to handle it on a broader scale than before.

CORRESPONDENCE

16. The correspondence has been very heavy, due to the fact that the constitution and other things were changed at the last convention, and the changes have brought many queries, while, in order to get our organizers appointed it has been necessary to write to the men in charge of the work in each district, and follow up this correspondence. All of our department supervisors and secretary have attended to a large correspondence also.

PERSONAL FIELD WORK

17. At the beginning of the year's work, all of our general executive committee were by motion made general field workers, with power to introduce the work and organize it, under the direction of the president. As a result we have organized the work in nine districts and stakes: Little Sioux, Far West, Eastern Iowa, Northeastern Kansas, Central California, Southern California, Northern California, Central Michigan, and London. The work in four districts being done by the general president, three by Sister Glines, and one by the women of the district.

18. Our general executive committee represented the work personally at nine reunions, four of them were attended by the president, the rest by others of the committee. In all much personal work has been done by the committee and more especially by the president, who has introduced the work at thirty-one different places, besides having charge of and carrying on the work of the Kansas City Stake. Six locals in Michigan, seven in Illinois, three in Kansas, nine in Missouri, three in Iowa, one in Indiana, have been visited by her. The traveling expenses incurred have been met by the locals.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

19. Among the many splendid things accomplished this year I want to speak of the work done by Sister Glines in California in the summer. Her intelligent presentation of the work there has brought about excellent results for our work, and the organization of all California as far as districts are concerned is truly praiseworthy.

20. Also some very splendid work was done in the London District by Sister Louise Evans, of Michigan, resulting in a new understanding of the work there and the organization of that district.

21. The work in the Holden Stake, particularly the Oriole work in charge of Sister Krahl, also is to be commended. Many others might be mentioned whose work has been splendid and important, and it means much to us at this time to have splendid, true women coming to the front and taking up the work.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

22. We may report the work in the foreign missions as advancing nicely. Several letters have come in from across the water, and have been promptly answered, giving all the help possible.

FINANCIAL

23. Sister Sheehy, our Treasurer, reports:
Balance on hand February 12, 1917:

General Fund	$125.18
Children's Home	24.40
Total	$149.58

Received to date February 15, 1918.

General fund	$345.63
Children's Home	450.93
Old Folk's Home	10.00
Year Book fund	8.10
Oriole Fund	42.00

Total $856.66

Total receipts to date. $1,006.24.

Expenditures

General running expenses	$376.00
Children's Home	475.00
Old Folk's Home	10.00
Oriole fund	9.45
Year Book fund	3.45

Total $873.90

Balance on hand February 15, 1918, 132.34

SECRETARIAL

24. The present enrollment is estimated at 3,376. The change in constitution and the appointing of organizers have delayed the report of many districts. Educational classes, 64; Home and child welfare, 34; Relief and service, 132; Oriole circles, 71; Young women's, 5; Total, 236.

25. This probably constitutes a small part of our work. Personal letters might have helped get the reports in from many places, had we the time.

CHILDREN'S HOME

26. The report from the trustees of the Children's Home informs us of the activity of the different societies of women in Lamoni in mending and making over garments for the children of the home. Some help has also been given by societies in other parts of the church, all of which was needed and is gratefully acknowledged. Not so much partly worn clothing has been donated this year as in other years, and their supply is getting low and all donations will be acceptable. Clothing should be sent clean and not too much work to warrant the expense of making it over.

IN CONCLUSION

27. The Woman's Auxiliary work is advancing satisfactorily with the help we have had. Oh, for workers to send out into the field to answer the calls coming from all over the church, many of which we are unable to answer. The women need what we have to offer, and are eager to grasp and quick to see the wonderful possibilities for service through this auxiliary of the church, and we are encouraged by the support being given our movement by the men of the church, and we might well wish for more help from them.

28. May God's directing power be over the conference, and in all the work of those in charge, is the prayer of,

Your coworker,

MRS. LULA M. SANDY, President.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

MOBILE.—At Bay Minette, Alabama, March 23, 1918, at 10 a. m., with district president in charge. F. M. Slover and James Davis were chosen to assist the vice president in presiding. Minutes of last conference read and after correction were approved. All officers of district reported. Branch reports read from Escatawpa, Mobile, and Bay Minette. Sixteen ministerial reports were read. Auditing committee reported the district debtor to the secretary for $1.31, also an error in bishop's agent's report of ten cents in favor of agent. The Horse Shoe Branch was declared disorganized. (Colored.) Sister Nora Warr was elected member of the gospel literature board. Secretary was authorized to make out a budget covering expenses till next conference including sufficient to purchase supplies asked for by secretary, each branch to be assessed equally to pay same. After business was finished, a round table discussion was held. Preaching during conference by Brethren Davis, Slover, and Miller. Two prayer meetings and two priesthood meetings were held. Conference adjourned to meet at Escatawpa at the call of the district presidency. Edna Cochran, secretary.

Convention Minutes

MOBILE.—At Bay Minette, Alabama, March 22, 1918, presided over by T. J. Booker and H. M. Aebli. Prayer meeting at 9.30 a. m. Institute work at 10.30, business at 2 p. m. Minutes of last convention were read and approved. Officers reporting were: superintendent, secretary, treasurer, member library board, home department superintendent, cradle roll superintendent. School reports were read, also secretary's annual report to general secretary. Membership at close of year was 402. Officers elected for the year were: superintendent, A. E. Warr; assistant superintendent, H. M. Aebli; secretary-treasurer, Edna Cochran; member gospel literature bureau and library board, H. M. Aebli; superintendent home department, Missouri Booker; superintendent, cradle roll, M. F. Warr. A joint session of Sunday school and Religio institute work was held in the evening after which the convention adjourned to meet on Friday preceding the next district conference. Edna Cochran, secretary.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Minnesota District: Is your name appearing regularly on the bishop's agent's books? We mean you. Many others have their names there and new names are being added each year. We want yours. We know you have been intending to send some tithing for years, but somehow just kept putting it off. Good intentions are fine, but did you ever try to figure out just how many bushels of good intentions it takes to buy a sack of flour for a missionary's family at the present prices?

Dear Saints, let us examine ourselves. Are we doing our part? Are we ready to meet the Bridegroom? Jesus says: "Be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Write me to-day and see how much better you sleep at night.

Your brother in bonds,
LESTER WHITING, Bishop's Agent.

FROM HERE AND THERE

JOINT EXECUTIVE APPOINTMENTS

Some appointments are handled each year by the executive officers of the Religio and Sunday school. The Religio calls such a group an executive committee, while the Sunday school terms it an executive council. It means the same thing. One of the joint appointments is the normal superintendent, to which office they elected L. F. P. Curry, with Edward F. Yerrington as assistant superintendent. For superintendent of organized classes, to work for the joint interests of the Sunday school and Religio, T. W. Williams was chosen, he being first vice president of the Religio, and it coming naturally into his care. The selection of an extension superintendent for the home department was left to the superintendents elected by the Religio and Sunday school and the president of the Religio and superintendent of the Sunday school.

The Sunday school executive council reelected all the editors of the Sunday school Quarterlies for another year: Mrs. Christiana Salyards, senior grade; Mrs. Daniel Macgregor, junior grade; Miss Lucie H. Sears, intermediate grade; Miss Ruby Williamson, primary grade; Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith, beginner grade. They referred the appointment of field workers to the first assistant superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, with the idea that he would consult with the new coordinating committee so as to secure concerted action with the Religio. The work of the second assistant, A. W. Smith, will include the Christmas offering campaign the coming year. The proposition to work out a uniform blank for reporting the totals of the Christmas offering the coming year was referred to the treasurer of the association, M. H. Siegfried, the Presiding Bishopric, and A. W. Smith, with power to act.

One of the enjoyable annual diversions of the conference is the regular prebusiness-session speeches by Elder J. J. Cornish. He tells reminiscences of his early experiences in a very entertaining manner. The big audiences listen with much interest, for the brother's life has been an eventful one.

The bishops expect to remain in session for some days, if not a week or two, after the conference, to continue their discussions of stewardship, inheritances, and the Storehouse. They hope to come to a unanimity of opinion on some of these vital questions before adjourning for the year.

Many matters of importance have been referred to the post-conference council, and they will doubtless remain in session for two or three weeks after the conference before separating for the year's work.

Among the many pleasant little gatherings which get together at conference time, we note one in which all the children of W. W. Blair participated. There were Charles E., George W., Frederick B., David H., and William A., with Mrs. Minnie B. Nicholson, in the little group which were all privileged to meet for one day. Every one of them is engaged in some part of the church work, William A. being one of those whose ordination to the office of high priest was provided for at the conference.

Brother Leroy Colbert said they couldn't have Religio on Sunday evenings because Wisconsin was a great dairy State and they had to milk the cows. Brother Wight asked him if they let them go on Friday evenings.

Hard of hearing folks likely appreciate the faithful services of J. O. Dutton at each conference, he acting as yell leader, and to low-voiced speakers invariably calls: "Louder, louder." And the speakers respond.

One of the announcements during the conference was a preaching service in the Danish language, by Elder H. N. Hansen, at one of the homes, for the Scandinavian Saints.

It is interesting to hear some of the open forum sermons preached by some of the older brethren who get together in little groups just outside the church at conference time. They usually have some hobby, or some little leaflet of their own they want to give away or sell, and they themselves are much interested in what they have to say.

The latest word from Brother Rees Jenkins is that he is a prisoner in the hands of the Turks, supposedly somewhere in Lebanon. Sister Jenkins is in Jerusalem. Money has been forwarded to them during the past year through the Spanish embassy at Washington.

EDITORIAL

AGREEMENT WITH CHURCH OF CHRIST

One of the most important acts of the recent General Conference was the adoption of articles of agreement with the Church of Christ people of Independence, Missouri. These articles are twenty-four in number and appear in full in the HERALD for April 17. They are entitled "Agreements of working harmony."

They are the culmination, up to date, of a long series of conferences between committees and representative men. They are the fruits of a spirit of harmony and agreement that of late has grown very strong—sufficiently strong to prompt mutual concessions and allay ancient prejudices.

The spirit of "working harmony" is the important thing. The letter of the articles is of secondary importance and is chiefly useful in clarifying the situation.

It may be frankly conceded that previous to the conference some members were quite alarmed, or at least gravely concerned, over rumors presaging such an action. There were many private arguments over the question in which both the pro and the con found valiant champions.

But the unanimity characterizing final action was most gratifying. The articles had previously been adopted by the Church of Christ members in their annual conference on the Temple Lot. They were then submitted to the consideration of a mass meeting of quorums of the high priesthood and finally came before the conference itself. So our readers may be sure that they were subjected to the closest scrutiny. The final action of the conference was practically unanimous, only one vote being noted on the negative side of the question.

This means, of course, that all vexed questions of doctrine, baptism, and priesthood were very carefully considered by the best intelligence that the church could assemble at a General Conference, both among the priesthood and the delegates.

Though arguments might be advanced upon both sides of the question, as is usually the case, this assembly conceded that our Church of Christ brethren had established their claims so far as they may be involved in tracing baptism and priesthood back to valid original sources. As an organization they have held to the fundamental doctrines of the church and have been guilty of no moral lapse. In fact in the face of adroit efforts to bribe and seduce from their trust they have kept themselves clear from evil forces and designing men. Hence no charge of apostasy from the original faith could be supported, were there any among us inclined at this time to make such a charge.

In the above we have attempted to summarize the feeling that seemed to exist among the priesthood and in the conference. It may be that there will still be some among our readers inclined to challenge the wisdom of adopting these articles. But that matter is no longer a subject for argument. The jury has returned its verdict. Or if that figure be not appropriate, in plain terms the quorums have spoken and the conference has spoken. The matter is settled, both by vote of the elders and by vote of the delegates sent up to the conference to represent all the people.

We have entertained a feeling of serenity for some years concerning the great events yet future, among which the building of the temple at the place designated is not to be the least. We have felt deep in our souls that at the set time God would clear away every difficulty. We now see in the agreement reached a long step toward such a clearing. We take the step with faith, to the extent that all may not be clear to the sight.

The Church of Christ brethren are as deeply interested as we in the prospective temple. They have held possession of the Temple Lot while we have held the title. The hands of all have been tied. But now we are in agreement. And a part of that agreement is that we do all recognize the voice of God in revelation as directing our further movements.

We need not run without tidings or start groundless rumors concerning temple building. That matter with the time and manner of its accomplishment rests with God. We are quite content to abide his revelation. The important thing to us is that interested parties are drawing together in spirit in an agreement of "working harmony." We like that term, "working harmony." The living temple of men and women must be brought into a condition of "working harmony" before it will be in condition to enter the temple of stone and receive the blessing of an approving God.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE REPORT OF THE BISHOPRIC

The year just past has proved to be a remarkable one in the administration of the financial or temporal law. The Christmas offering, under the direction of Brother A. W. Smith and Bishop J. F. Keir, has shown a remarkable increase—up to over $75,000. The tithes and offerings and consecration have also shown a good increase of about 95 per cent over the preceding year. This means that they have more than doubled within three years' time. As a result the debt has been greatly reduced, as the sum of $104,688.17 is shown by the Bishop's report as having been paid out thereon for the year 1917, and $56,372.26 up to March 9. This means that this year the financial status is much stronger and the church more nearly ready for progressive movement.

The movement in church offices is important in giving them the necessary space, and that without the very large expenditure which was at one time feared. As a result it is possible to combine the general offices in one building. The Church Secretary has removed his office to Independence, and the Church Recorder expects to do so in the very near future. The First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric also have much needed additional space, and that convenient to the conference visitors and to the church people.

The Home at Holden has opened up a splendid opportunity, not only meeting the need within that stake, but giving the church a much needed Home at a very reasonable figure, which will probably permit of disposing of smaller places, so that it will mean no additional expenditure, and will mean a real economy in administration.

A storehouse has been opened both at Independence and at Lamoni, and an effort is being made to extend their benefits to the neighboring stakes.

The one at Independence is in commodious quarters and has a branch grocery store on West Lexington Street, just opposite the new church offices, and doing a nondelivery business. At the main store, they do an extensive business in coal, hay, feed, cement, brick, etc., and have recently put in groceries and meat, doing pleasingly well for the short time they have been going. In fact, during conference time they had to refuse orders from more distant parts of the city, their delivery system being overtaxed.

At Lamoni a healthy growth is shown. A store doing a general grocery business, was taken over early in the summer. To this, in February, 1918, a meat market was added, buying out one of those then in existence in the town of Lamoni, and moving the equipment to the Supply Store building. In addition to this, one of the coal plants in Lamoni was bought out, including the track frontage and coal elevator, and is now added to the storehouse. This will permit of their securing coal and food supplies for the benefit of the poor Saints and the Homes, to the best advantage, and buying for a large part of the vicinity, enable them to secure a favorable price.

The mill which was taken over first by the Order of Enoch, and successfully administered by them, was, at the request of the Presiding Bishopric, transferred to the storehouse. For the part of the year that it has been administered it shows a good net profit of close to $900. The advantage of this is, that it is showing what we can do, and must eventually result in a saving to the church and the membership. As the quality of its goods becomes better known, we should, for another year, have a yet more favorable report.

Different members of the church have been appointed to take charge of these different departments of work in the storehouse, as a stewardship, and are making good with their stewardship. In addition to this, we have had, for several years, a light plant, furnishing power and light for the Herald Publishing House, the mill, the town of Lamoni, and several neighboring towns. It also manufactures and sells ice, and is controlled by a number of the brethren, as a stewardship, and by them, also, successfully administered in the interest of the church and general body.

The Lamoni Steam Laundry opened in January as another stewardship, under the direction of two of the brethren, but the amount of work that they received, caused an immediate need of increased facilities, to double or more than double their former capacity. All of these are taken on the basis of stewardship. As the church may better interpret stewardships, these properties will be so held.

In addition to this, certain of the faculty of Graceland College placed themselves upon a stewardship basis, and agreed to teach at the college during the school year, and render such other services as the church authorities may direct, during the summer months. It has not meant much for them in salary, but does in increased security, in that the church, to a certain extent, agrees to deal fairly with them, and assist them in meeting their debts, occasioned by their education in preparation for this present service. Effort is made to make it perfectly fair to all concerned, but it means a spirit of consecration on the part of these young men.

We have had for years, this spirit of devotion on the part of the missionary force, and on the part of those engaged in the publishing interests and certain parts of the institutional work of the church.

S. A. B.

THE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

It will be noticed that by the report to conference, the publishing house at Lamoni shows a loss for the year. But the report of the general manager gave two causes for this. One is the result of a damage suit, caused by the electric light plant, several years ago, at a time when it was owned by the Herald Publishing House. A man came in contact with a live wire. It would seem that he was very negligent in doing so, still the jury gave a verdict against the electric light plant (the Herald Publishing House).

The publishing house sends the HERALD, free, to all missionaries. They also send the Ensign, free, to missionaries, though this latter does not enter into their report. Despite the much higher cost of paper and other materials, the price for the HERALD has not been increased. Tracts are published in great numbers, and are turned over to the church at cost, to be sent to the missionaries, at the order of the Presiding Bishop or First Presidency. Tracts and other books so sent out, by the church to the missionaries, have been charged to the church account at their cost. This account has run close to $8,000 but was charged off, this past year, as a surplus, and so donated to the general church.

The Bureau of Publicity is also permitted to take tracts, or whatever is considered necessary, in pushing the work of the church, and heretofore, no account has been kept of this. The amount, however, has not been very large, but it is an item to consider.

The publishing house prints tracts and books to meet the missionary need, without regard to profit. They have in consideration, publishing tracts and books in other languages. And while they consider carefully the demand, the sole criterion is not a question of profit, but in addition to this is the needs of the work of the church.

Some of those who are upon the Herald Office pay roll, spend a large part of their time in other work of the church and its auxiliaries. If two or three men spend two thirds of their time in the interest of the general church work, and the Herald Office furnishes the postage for this extra work, and stenographic help, it can be readily seen how this would tend, also, to lessen profit. But it means the good and gain of the church.

In other words, the Herald Publishing House should not be considered alone as a business proposition, from the amount of net profit, but must also be considered as an instrumentality of the church, and the way in which it helps in the work of the church. In some instances it would be more expensive for the bookkeeping to keep track of the above items than the information would be worth to the church, since it is church service. It is safe to say that the direct help given by the Herald Publishing House to the church, payment of salaries, furnishing of postage, and other help, would amount to several thousand dollars in a year's time.

In addition to this, the publishing interests help the missionaries' families by offering ready employment. We think it may be seriously questioned whether low pay, long hours, and frequent changes, mean economy of operation. It has been found elsewhere that they do not. The development of a strong esprit de corps is of vital importance from a financial standpoint. But we have to consider the relation of our publishing interests to the church, and these men are working on a missionary basis, and many of them on less, and many young people are given an opportunity to help out in this way. The publishing house helps the Saints by offering steady employment, near their homes, to many of the young people of the church.

The policy of the management is to keep the prices as low as is reasonable, to the end that they may assist as much as possible, in the preparation of church literature, and encourage the membership, especially, to subscribe regularly for the church publications. The profit goes to the benefit of the church; and its work helps to carry out progressive movements on behalf of the church, in assisting in the opening of new fields by the preparation of suitable literature.

Some wonder why the church publications do not have a larger amount of advertising. The reason is very simple. The paper is not a local one and so cannot carry local advertising to great advantage, since a larger part of the subscription list is away from the point of publication. Yet, the subscription list, as a whole, is not sufficiently large to greatly interest national advertisers, and the amount that can be received for such advertisements scarcely pays for the expense of printing, under existing conditions. For this reason it is thought better to use the pages in an affirmative way, among our own people, calling to their attention our own publications.

The advertising manager informs us that there has been a healthy increase in the receipts of all periodicals published by the Herald Publishing House. The importance of this is that it represents an increased subscription list. Yet, an examination of the figures would still show the figures to be much lower than they should be, as the SAINTS' HERALD should be in every home as the official organ of the church. The Autumn Leaves should be available, at least, to all of our young people. S. A. B.

THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

Owing to the reports from General Conference, all but incidental reference has been excluded from our pages the past two months to the Third Liberty Loan. The dominant note of this conference, however, has been loyalty to the Government, support of all of its activities, including the loan. The First and Second Seventy each raised $25 for the purchase of half of a bond, to be held conjointly. Many of our men went forth to speak at the various schoolhouses, on behalf of the loan, and a hundred or more could just as well have been furnished as not.

Bishop McGuire, in his sermon on Thursday, the 11th, emphasized the value of the loan and urged that we should subscribe according to our ability. He answered the question in regard to turning over our surplus, that we could subscribe and then if we did not know what to do with the bonds, send them to him as he receives mail three times a day.

We have suggested this before that we can help both the Government and the church in this way, if we desire to do so. Purchase one or more bonds and then send to the Bishop such part as we may desire to consecrate. Of course, he will also need cash for the carrying on of the work of the church, but we have our several duties to perform and that of citizens must not be neglected. Bonds are not received as tithing.

As to the security, the wealth of the country is back of them. The United States has never defaulted on any loan or part thereof. In the past, a four per cent bond has sold as high as \$139 $\frac{7}{8}$.

From all reports the loan is being liberally supported. Lamoni oversubscribed her allotment before the drive began, and to date has raised over forty per cent more than that amount.

WHERE THE CREDIT IS DUE

During the recent municipal election at Independence, Missouri, it seems that the Democratic administration claimed credit for the success of the Electric Light Plant. Whereupon, there appeared in The Daily News for April 1 (a Republican paper), an announcement in black-faced type, covering over half the front page, as follows:

So the People May Know Where Credit Belongs for the Success of the Electric Light Plant!

NOT SWAPPING RESULTS WITH PROMISES, BUT PROMISING MORE RESULTS!

Whatever success has been derived from the Electric Light Plant has been due to the efficient plan inaugurated by William Pitt, a Republican councilman from the fourth ward, and not as claimed by the present Democratic administration. and not as claimed by the present Democratic administration.

Succeeding William Pitt as chairman of the electric light committee, who has maintained the high standard of success begun by his predecessor, was David H. Krahl, another Republican councilman, and following him the present chairman of the electric light committee, David H. Crick, who is now following out the identical plan formulated and installed by Councilman William Pitt.

We offer you now the same type of business men who will continue in effect the same principles that have won success thus far. A vote for the Republican ticket will spell not promises, but results.

The feature of interest to our readers is that William Pitt is a son of Patriarch F. G. Pitt; David H. Krahl is David J. Krahl now president of Holden Stake, who was, for several years, bookkeeper in the office of Bishop E. L. Kelley; David H. Crick is a brother of William Crick, and also a member.

A SURPRISE IN FIGURES

The Christmas offering is only partly reported in the Bishop's report for the reason that his report closed for the year 1917. Still it shows an increase of nearly $30,000 over the year before.

Consecration has more than doubled, showing an increase of nearly $21,700 over the previous year.

Tithes and offerings, total over $361,000 against $233,000 the year before—an increase of $128,400 for the year, amounting to over 50 per cent.

It has also been noted there is over $3,000 for a special debt fund.

These items alone, omitting donations to special institutions, show a total of $436,577, an increase for the year of over $180,000.

On the other hand, elders' expenses are over $31,000—an increase of $4,000. Elders' families show $140,400—an increase of nearly $14,000.

A large part of the increase has gone to the reduction of the indebtedness of the church and its various institutions, as is shown by the report of the Presiding Bishop. The amount to aid of the poor is practically the same as the year before, as is also the item of interest.

RUSSELLISM WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE--Part 2

BY FRANCIS EARL

THE END OF THE ADAMIC AGE

In the new order of things started by Noah and his family, God allowed humanity to have its way and to work out its own schemes without divine interference, except in extreme cases. He allowed the world to learn lessons, while he carried out his own great plan, of which redemption is the center and Messiah's kingdom the circumference for the recovery of mankind from their fallen estate. (Romans 5: 12.)

The pastor here assumes that after the flood God left Noah and his posterity practically to themselves, without divine guidance except in extreme cases, and to learn lessons by their experiences, without any special warning from himself, while he carried out his own plan of redemption and Christ's reign and kingdom, and thus, without any special hope in humanity.

In view of historical facts contained in the Scriptures and general history, the position taken by the pastor is one showing ignorance upon his part, as will be shown in the following. We learn from the Scriptures that Noah was a preacher of righteousness (2 Peter 2: 5). The righteousness of faith came not by the law (Romans 3: 21). The righteousness of God, which is of faith, is revealed by the gospel of Jesus Christ (Romans 1: 17). That code spoken of by Saint Paul was not given until long after Noah preached righteousness (Galatians 3: 17). It is evident, then, that that which Noah preached was the same that was preached to Abraham (Galatians 3: 8). It was also preached by Moses and to the children of Israel (Hebrews 11: 26; 4: 2; 1 Corinthians 10: 2-4).

Melchisedec, king of Salem, was a king of righteousness, as well as a king of peace. We have historical evidence that this Melchisedec was no other personage than Shem, the son of Noah. We also have Heber, special mention of whom is made in Genesis 10: 21, from whom originated the name "Hebrew." This we have from Josephus' Antiquity of the Jews. Thus we have three men who were preachers of righteousness, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We next notice the name of Abraham. We have evidence that he called upon the name of the Lord and the Lord came to his aid and delivered him from his enemies and started him on the road to Canaan, that the city of Salem was known and occupied long before Abraham left Chaldea, that Abraham was considered a great man by many among whom he sojourned, and that he understood well the promise of God concerning a redeemer. It was when men departed from God that he withdrew from them his Holy Spirit and left them to themselves, and when they sought him he was ready to bless them, as we shall see later on in this review. And it was by reason of this knowledge, given of God, that the redemption of Christ and his kingdom was the theme of all those ancient worthies, including the prophets down to the time of John the Baptist.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM INTERPRETED

The stone represents God's kingdom which the clay on the feet of the image imitated. The stone represents God's elect church gathered out from Jews and Gentiles and from every nation and denomination to constitute Messiah's kingdom. Shortly this kingdom will be established in power and great glory, and the kingdoms of this world will disappear as by magic. Messiah's kingdom will then grow until it fills the whole earth and brings all things under its control, every willful sinner being cut off in the second death.

Much has been assumed by different religious leaders concerning the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream and the little stone kingdom, many applying the stone kingdom to the various religious movements represented by themselves, and yet confessing that God has not called them by any special revelation, thus practically assuming to be this great movement of God, but having no authority or right from God to move in the matter. Some have assumed that the great image lay so that its feet were located in the United States of America. We now notice clearly the interpretation of the little stone: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom."

Now how any movement can be regarded as set up by the God of heaven when it is purely human and without any special call from God, is beyond the comprehension of the writer of this review. It is a plain fact that any movement to be God's kingdom must be his government, whether it be a church or political power, and the only rule we have by which to discern his government is that found in the Holy Scriptures. We, therefore, turn to Acts 7: 38. The organization of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai is here termed as the church in the wilderness. We find that in it was a prophet, and those intimately associated with him, forming a presidency through whom God gave instructions to the people. There were twelve men called out by revelation to be princes, judges, or, comparing with Matthew 19: 28, apostles; there were seventy elders whose duties were similar to that of the twelve; there were high priests, elders other than the seventy, priests, and Levites. This is the description of the church referred to in Acts 7: 38. That church was God's government and his kingdom (1 Samuel 8: 7).

We now turn to the New Testament and learn that the New Testament church was organized by the same pattern (Matthew 10: 5; Mark 3: 13; Luke 6: 13). These men had successors (Acts 1: 26; 13: 2). Saint Paul at this time had been in the ministry seventeen years or more. (See first two chapters of the Galatian letter.) There were seventy chosen whose duties were similar to that of the twelve (Luke 10: 1); there were elders, bishops, teachers, deacons, evangelists, and, with the aid of ecclesiastical history, we find that there were high priests and priests. Thus, we find God's kingdom twice built by the same pattern, and when built a third time we must expect it to be built by the same pattern. Indeed, it would be unsafe to accept any other, however strong its claim might be.

We notice further that the kingdom was the same from its beginning to its full development, having a small beginning and growing until it fills the whole earth. God has already set up the kingdom spoken of in Daniel 2: 44, and by the pattern twice shown to the world. All questions on this matter will find ready answer by writing to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE VALLEY OF DRY BONES

The Scripture tells about the resurrection of the dead, that it will not be the body which dies that will be resurrected. The body returns to dust. In the morning of Messiah's reign God through him will grant each of Adam's race a "body as it hath pleased him." The saintly few will share in the first resurrection to glory, honor, and immortality, the divine nature far above angels. Then will come God's blessing upon the world to give them restitution—earthly bodies. It is manifestly much easier for God to give as he purposes, a new body, than, as we once surmised, to gather each atom of dust from every quarter to restore it as the same body. Not a passage of the Scripture mentions the resurrection of the body, but many passages mention the resurrection of the soul which will be awakened and given a new body, earthly for the earthly class, heavenly for the heavenly class. (1 Corinthians 15: 37-40.)

The pastor here refers to the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel. The prophecy is directed to the house of Israel; it sets forth the expression of the people at the time and then gives the promise of the Lord to the whole house of Israel, and, applying to the resurrection, it shows the time when this promise would be fulfilled. We notice also the words, "I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves" (Ezekiel 37: 12, 13). Now notice, the grave is a thing of the earth, the body is formed from the elements of the earth, therefore, when the body goes back into the elements from which it is formed, it goes back to the earth, the grave (Ecclesiastes 12: 7). Here we are informed that the spirit, sometimes called the soul, goes to God, and in Zechariah 12: 1 we are informed that God placed the spirit within the body. We notice again that the word soul is differently applied: sometimes to the body, and sometimes to the spirit, and in one place in Saint Paul's writings it is spoken of as distinct from either body or spirit (1 Thessalonians 5: 23). We will further notice this subject later on.

NOT DEAD BUT SLEEPETH

Although death to man and beast is the cessation of life, yet to man God has given precious promises of a future life by a resurrection. Therefore, the Scripture speaks of man as not dying but merely falling asleep. The unconscious sleepers are all promised an awakening in the resurrection morn. Jesus declared that all in their graves should hear his voice and come forth, some to a life of eternal reward for present faithfulness, others to a trial or judgment to determine their everlasting destiny. (John 5: 28, 29.)

Jesus awakened Lazarus whose sisters were Martha and Mary, at whose home he frequently stopped at Bethany. When Lazarus was seriously sick, the sisters sent Jesus a message, "he whom thou lovest is sick." To their surprise he allowed Lazarus to die. Mentioning the matter to his disciples, he said, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." And later "Jesus said unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." Jesus said not a word about the dead going to heaven, purgatory or hell, as was once believed (John 3: 13; 11: 13, 14; Acts 2: 29, 35). This word sleep has long been used as symbolical of death. "Abraham slept with his fathers," and his fathers were heathen. Saint Paul refers to "those who sleep in Jesus," and tells us "we shall not all sleep," referring to those who remain alive until the establishment of Messiah's kingdom and the first resurrection at the beginning of his reign. These sleep neither in heaven, purgatory, nor a hell of torment. The Bible declares, "They that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to shine as the stars, and others to be in contempt and shame until they have demonstrated their repentance and loyalty. (Daniel 12: 2.)

THE DYING THIEF'S HOPE

After this defense the penitent thief turned to Jesus, saying, "Lord, if you are a king and ever come into your kingdom, remember this poor thief; do something for me." Jesus replied, "Amen," that is, "so be it as you ask. Although I seem to have not a friend in heaven or earth, yet I say unto you this dark day, you shall be with me in paradise. My kingdom shall be established; under its influence earth will become a paradise; you shall be rewarded there." The misplacement of the comma in our common English version has thrown us all astray. Evidently Jesus did not go to paradise that day, because paradise is not yet established. Furthermore, three days after, when he arose from the dead, he said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended unto my Father." Saint Peter tells us that he was dead and that his soul was raised from the dead on the third day. (Acts 2: 31.)

QUICKENED IN SPIRIT

Only believers could receive a Pentecostal illumination. They must believe, and know also, that he is no longer a man, but again a spirit being. The third day after calvary, the women who carried spices found the sepulcher empty. Mary met Jesus but knew him not, for he appeared as a gardener. Jesus revealed himself by his voice; he said, "I have not yet ascended to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God." The news spread: Saint Peter and Saint John were amazed and both ran to the sepulcher. They saw nothing but the vacant tomb and the folded clothes. Later the same day two of them journeyed to Emmaus. They were conversing eagerly when Jesus, in another form, unrecognized by them, joined them. He quickly explained to them the types and prophecies which foretold Jesus' death as man's redeemer, saying, "thus it behooved Messiah to suffer and to enter into his glory." Telling the experience afterwards, they said, "Did not our hearts burn within us as he talked with us by the way and opened unto us the Scriptures?" At their evening meal he revealed himself and vanished. The same evening many of them were gathered in the upper room discussing the remarkable events of the day, the doors being shut, yea, bolted for fear of the Jews. Suddenly while the doors were still shut, Jesus appeared in their midst, still differently. This time he appeared like his former self, even this affrighted them, though he told them that what they saw was flesh and blood, and proved it by eating. He was no longer the fleshly Jesus; in his resurrection he returned to his spirit condition (1 Corinthians 15: 44), but he had power to materialize as the holy angels (and himself, before made flesh) had done.

SETTING FREE THE PRISONERS

The Bible alone teaches that men die when they seem to die, yet it calls this a "sleep," because there is to be an awakening, a resurrection of the dead, both just and unjust. The prophets and apostles all "feel asleep" as well as others of Adam's race. They were sleeping in a great prison house, unconscious until the prison tomb shall be opened and they shall be called forth.

The pastor assumes, first, indirectly, that man had no existence previous to his entrance upon this earth life; and, second, directly, that there is nothing of man that retains consciousness between death and the resurrection; third, that the soul sleeps in the grave; fourth, that there will be no resurrection of the body; fifth, that paradise did not exist when Jesus said to the thief on the cross, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise," and that it will not exist until Christ shall establish his kingdom dominant on the earth. Hence, sixth, that the ancient prophets, the apostles, and all the righteous have no conscious existence in any way whatever between death and the resurrection; and, seventh, that there is no pit or prison to the inmates of which Christ went and preached while he was put to death in the flesh.

Now, let us see what the Scriptures set forth along these lines, as well as other sources that are in harmony with them. We notice, first, that man had an existence before entering upon this earthly life. Saint Paul, in Titus 1: 2, speaks of a promise made before the world began, and from the language here given we cannot but understand that God did not make this promise to himself, but to those who were capable of hearing and rejoicing in the promise made.

We now turn to Job 38: 7. In this we learn that the morning stars and the sons of God sang and shouted for joy. Paul informs us what it was that caused the joy (Titus 1: 2). The promise affected them; they were interested in it; it had to do with their entrance upon the earthly life. In Ezekiel 28: 13 we learn that the king of Tyre was spoken to and that he had been with God in the garden of Eden, and also with him in the holy mount (Sinai), and Jeremiah was ordained a prophet before he was born (Jeremiah 1: 5). Second, we next learn that man is composed of spirit and body, and that the spirit and body united constitute the soul of man. In Ecclesiastes 12: 7, we learn that when the silver cord is broken, the dust (body) goes back to earth as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. Both Saint Paul and Saint Peter refer to the breaking of this silver cord when they speak of the time of their departure. (2 Corinthians 5: 6; Philippians 1: 23; 2 Peter 1: 14.) In this departure the apostles expected to be separated from the flesh—their bodies, and to go into the presence of Christ. Were they mistaken? We think not. Reference is made to the same thing in 2 Timothy 4: 6. To be with Christ at the time of their departure, they meant the granting of the request Christ made to his father (John 17: 24). Saint Paul also speaks of the inner man and the outer man (Romans 7: 22; 2 Corinthians 4: 16; Ephesians 3: 16). In Zechariah 12: 1, we learn that God formeth (placeth) the spirit of man within him.

Third, we now notice the soul proposition. The pastor assumes that the soul sleeps in the grave. We find in the Scriptures the word soul sometimes refers to the body and sometimes to the spirit. In Genesis 35: 18; 1 Kings 17: 21; the word refers to the spirit. In Psalm 78: 50; Isaiah 38: 15; James 5: 20; Revelation 16: 3; the word refers to the body, and in Genesis 2: 7; Leviticus 4: 2; 23: 30; 1 Thessalonians 5: 23, the word refers to the bodies living on the earth, the united body and spirit. And in Revelation 6: 9 reference is made to the spirits between death and the resurrection, especially those of the righteous.

We now refer the reader to Revelation 19: 10 and 22: 8. We here notice that the party referred to by John was an angel, and one in the performance of his angelic duties. Comment on his previous labors as a prophet or apostle is not necessary here; the reader can draw his own conclusions. And, while this is fresh in mind, we refer to Hebrews 1: 13, 14, and 12: 23.

Fourth, the pastor assumes that there is no resurrection of the body, but let us see what the Scriptures have to say on this matter. In Job 19: 26 Job declares that in his flesh he will see God, even after the destruction of the same by skin worms. And in Isaiah 26: 19 we read, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." And the Lord says in Hosea 13: 14, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave."

We now turn to the language of Jesus, "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11: 25. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15: 22. Now, take notice, in Adam the body dies, in Christ the body is raised from the dead (Matthew 28: 6; Mark 16: 6; Luke 24: 6; John 20: 16; 1 Corinthians 6: 14; 15: 20; Acts 17: 31; 2 Timothy 2: 8). At the time of Christ's resurrection there were others raised from the dead at the same time (Matthew 27: 52, 53): "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the Saints which slept arose, and came up out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many."

In Psalm 17: 15 we read, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness"; Romans 8: 23, "Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body"; 1 Corinthians 15: 38, "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body"; 1 John 3: 2, "We shall be like him."

Fifth, paradise. The pastor here assumes that paradise did not exist when Jesus said to the thief on the cross, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Jesus tells us that the poor man Lazarus was carried by the angels to Abraham's bosom, and Josephus tells us that the Jews who were the custodians of the Holy Scriptures at that time, called Abraham's bosom paradise. Saint Paul tells us about paradise and speaks of one who was caught up into it (2 Corinthians 12: 3, 4). This might have been the place spoken of in Revelation 6: 9, 10.

Sixth, the assumption that the ancient prophets, apostles, and all the righteous have no conscious existence in any way whatever between death and the resurrection, has already, we think, been sufficiently noticed.

Seventh, we will next notice the assumption about the spirits in prison: "The prophets and apostles all 'fell asleep,' as well as others of Adam's race. They are sleeping in the great prison house until the prison tomb shall be opened." Will the Scriptures bear out this position? Let us see.

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.—1 Peter 3: 18 20.

Let us now see what the prophets have to say of this event:

Thus saith the Lord God; in the day when he went down to the grave I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed; and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descent into the pit: and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.—Ezekiel 31: 15, 16.

The great earthquake and darkness at the time of Christ's death upon the cross fulfills this prophecy as no other event has ever done. "The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him."—Ezekiel 32: 21. "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zechariah 9: 11. This was a part of his mission. (See Isaiah 61: 1; Luke 4: 18.) Saint Paul also speaks of the same event in Ephesians 4: 9. Also notice Matthew 12: 39, 40; Luke 11: 29.

SAINT THOMAS THE DOUBTER

"We must all be changed that we may be spirit beings like him, which surely means that he is no longer flesh. He was put to death in the flesh and quickened in spirit," writes Saint Peter (1 Peter 3: 18).

If, according to the Scriptures, Jesus told the truth, the pastor has miserably failed in doing so, for we read the language of Jesus: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 39. The pastor assumes that the Bible tells us that Jesus was no longer flesh. It is a fact, that nowhere in the Scriptures can we find a single passage to warrant such a statement, while the fact is it was the same body that was put in the tomb which was raised from the dead, and to prove it he showed to his disciples his hands and his feet, and requested Saint Thomas to thrust his hand into his side. The pastor cites 1 Corinthians 15: 50, but it does not prove his position. That which was once the life of the body had been withdrawn (See Genesis 9: 4; Leviticus 17: 10, 14; Deuteronomy 12: 23). But the flesh and bones were there, for Jesus plainly said so, and it is much safer to believe him than the pastor. He again cites 1 Peter 3: 18, but it will not prove his position. Peter informs us that while Christ's flesh was in the sleep of death his spirit was actively engaged in his father's work, as we have already shown.

PENTECOSTAL PREACHING

Only the twelve were specially ordained to the apostleship to be mouthpieces of Jesus to the church. Their decisions would bind on earth the things bound in heaven, and loose on earth the things loosed in God's sight. Even these did not receive the heavenly Father's sanction until Pentecost when they received the Holy Ghost. Scripturally, no one is authorized to preach or teach except he has received the spirit of God, and every one who has received that spirit has divine authority to preach, wholly irrespective of earthly ordination. (Isaiah 61: 1).

GOD'S CHOSEN VESSEL

Saint Paul became the successor of Judas. There were to be twelve apostles of the Lamb, a crown of twelve stars on the church's brow, and twelve foundations to the new Jerusalem, and in them were the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. We are sure Saint Paul's name is among them, this is in accord with the testimony that he was not one whit behind the very chiefest of the apostles, and was more abundant in visions and revelations than they all. Matthias was chosen before Pentecost and was never recognized by God.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION

The church, after the death of the apostles, not having the conveniences of Bibles and education, looked too implicitly to their bishops or pastors, and without authority accredited them with divine inspiration similar to the twelve. After two hundred years the mistake was partially recognized and an attempt was made to rectify it, but in the wrong direction.

In the above we notice that the pastor assumes, first, that the apostles, with the exception of Judas, were to have no successors in the apostolic office, and that Saint Paul succeeded him. Second, he states that without the Holy Ghost or Spirit, no one is authorized to preach or teach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and refers to the Pentecostal outpouring as a sample of its work. Third, that Saint Paul, as successor to Judas, is to be numbered among the original twelve apostles. And fourth, notice the position, God has left the Bible for our guide and no need of further revelation from him.

We now notice, first, no successors to the apostles. We find by the historical fact as found in scripture, that this is not true, for we find Matthias was chosen to succeed Judas, and the statement that he was not recognized, is an assumption and without any foundation whatever; and that the apostles were to have no successors in the apostolic office is equally without foundation. We find, according to the New Testament record, that there were at least six apostles, other than the twelve first chosen (Acts 1: 25; 13: 2; 14: 14; Galatians 1: 19; 1 Thessalonians 1: 1; 2 5, 6). When Paul and Barnabas were chosen, Paul had already been in the ministry seventeen years. See first two chapters of the Galatian letter. That the apostles were God's mouthpiece to the church is also an error, as James, called the Lord's brother, is recognized by all historians as being at the head of the church in all the world. (See Acts 15: 13-22, Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, first appendix.) Upon his death he was succeeded by Simeon (Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chapters 12 and 20). It is urged by the pastor that because no further mention is made of Matthias, he was not recognized. But the same can be said of the majority of the original twelve.

Second, the statement that it is necessary to be in possession of the Holy Spirit to be properly qualified to preach or teach the gospel of Jesus Christ, is true. But is the pastor thus qualified? The preaching of Peter on the day of Pentecost was: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." —Acts 2: 38, 39. The gift of the Holy Spirit was manifest then through the gift of tongues. In 1 Corinthians 12, Saint Paul gives description of several gifts of the Holy Spirit, and as the pastor assumes that these were done away, we can but conclude that he has neither the qualification or right to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, from the fact that he is not in harmony with it.

Third, it is true that Saint Paul was a chosen vessel of the Lord. But this would not prove that he should be numbered among the original twelve. As to the names of the twelve apostles on the twelve gates, it is possible that all who have served Christ acceptably in the apostolic office will find their names written there.

Fourth, the pastor assumes that God gave to man the New Testament and then left him to himself, and that there is no need of further revelation from God. In connection with this position he states, "The church, after the death of the apostles, not having the conveniences of Bibles and education, looked too implicitly to their bishops or pastors," and then after two hundred years found their mistake, but then too late to undo the wrong. If there ever would be a time when there would be a need for revelation, it would certainly be a time like this. This, indeed, fulfills the language of the prophet (Amos 8: 12). Please note the plain statement, "They shall not find it." It must come, then, by revelation. God must open the heavens and set his church—kingdom—(Daniel 2: 44) in order. It would be decidedly unsafe to trust in any religious movement or organization not in complete harmony with that given twice in the Holy Scripture (Numbers 1: 4; 11: 16; Matthew 10: 2; Mark 3: 14; Luke 6: 13; 10: 17; Acts 1: 22; 13: 3; 14: 14; 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4: 11), with also the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost (1 Corinthians 12). The pastor, having set these things aside, is by the balance found wanting.

GENTILES FELLOW HEIRS

While Saint Peter was speaking, these consecrated people, drinking in the message, fully accepted the terms of discipleship. Then God gave a manifestation of his acceptance of them by the gift of the Spirit, such as was common to all Christians at the beginning of this age. Peter, astonished, then said, If these have received the Holy Ghost, who can forbid them water baptism which is only a symbol of their consecration to be dead with Christ? Here Gentiles first began to be grafted into the olive tree. (Romans 11: 7.)

In the above there are two points of issue between the pastor and the gospel of Jesus Christ: First, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, not that he denies their having been with the church in those early days, but that he claims them to have been done away. It is true they were done away, but not by the will of God. God withdrew his Spirit because of the fact that the world of men corrupted the gospel and were not willing to abide in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

The reader will please notice that there is no limit placed upon these gifts. When the gospel of Jesus Christ was preached and men obeyed it, the signs were to follow, and did follow, so long as men complied with the gospel of Jesus Christ. We now refer to one of the early fathers who wrote about the latter part of the second century, about A. D. 175 or 180:

These accounts are given by Irenæus in those five books of his, to which he gave the title of "Refutation and overthrow of false doctrine." In the second book of the same work he also shows that even down to his times instances of divine and miraculous power were remaining in some churches. "So far are they," says he, "from raising the dead as the Lord raised and as the apostles by means of prayer, for even among the brethren, frequently in a case of necessity, when a whole church united in much fasting and prayer, the spirit has returned to the exanimated body, and the man was granted to the prayers of the Saints. . . . Wherefore, also, those that were truly his disciples, receiving grace from him, in his name performed these things for the benefit of the rest of men, as every one received the free gift from him. Some, indeed, most certainly and truly cast out demons, so that frequently those persons themselves that were cleansed from wicked spirits believed and were received into the church. Others have the knowledge of things to come, as also visions and prophetic communications; others heal the sick by the imposition of hands, and restore them to health. And, moreover, as we said above, even the dead have been raised and continued with us many years. And why should we say more? It is impossible to tell the number of the gifts which the church throughout the world received from God, and the deeds performed in the name of Jesus Christ that was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and this too, every day for the benefit of the heathen, without deceiving any or exacting their money. For as she has received freely from God, she also freely ministers." We hear many of the brethren in the church who have prophetic gifts, and who speak in all tongues through the Spirit, and who also bring to light the secret things of men for their benefit, and who expound the mysteries of God.—Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, book 5, chapter 7.

Second, his reference to baptism is not full and correct. He says, "Which is only a symbol of their consecration to be dead with Christ." We find that baptism is represented as a birth (John 3: 5). Please notice—Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. It is represented as a death (Romans 6: 4). It is the door into the church (John 10: 2; Galatians 3: 27). It is for the remission of sins (Mark 1: 4; Acts 2: 38; 22: 16). In 1 Peter 3: 21, only is it referred to as an answer of a good conscience toward God. And, indeed, could one stand before God, not having obeyed this principle, and have a good conscience, especially if they had turned down the opportunity to obey? Nowhere is baptism referred to as an outward sign of an inward grace.

We have now placed the teachings of the so-called pastor, C. T. Russell, in the gospel balance and weighed them and found them wanting. They are not in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ, according to the Scriptures, history, and sometimes with themselves. And, as a result, judge them unsafe to follow.

GENEALOGY OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

Some are asking why the New Testament writers, Matthew and Luke, wrote such different accounts of the lineage of our Savior. The lists of his ancestors back to David agree only in two names. All the others are entirely different.

Having examined the subject and read what eminent students say about it, I feel satisfied that the reasons for the difference are plain, and that it was not a case of error or of ignorance, either in Matthew or in Luke. Following are what appear to be the facts.

Matthew gave the genealogy of Joseph, the reputed father of Jesus, whereas Luke, when he came to write, traced the ancestral line of Mary, the wife of Joseph and mother of Christ, back to David and Adam. He may have had two reasons for doing so. First, that it might be doubly proven and accepted by the Savior's friends, and be on their records, that their Lord was a descendant of David, as had been declared by the prophets that he should be, not only through his supposed father but also through his mother. Luke's second idea may have been that some would say that Christ was not the son of Joseph in fact but only in name, therefore he would give Mary's lineage from David, of which there could be no doubt.

Comparing Matthew 1: 12 with Luke 3: 27 we see that the two lines unite or come together in Salathiel and Zorobabel, which manifests that Joseph and Mary were of the same original family as well as being of the tribe of Judah.

But it is said that Matthew wrote that Joseph was the son of Jacob, whereas Luke states that Heli was Joseph's father. The reply to this is that though every family of Jews wrote a complete genealogical account of each child, the published record was only traced through the male line, as the Bible makes plain to all. Every lineage is given from son to father, and never from daughter to father or to mother, therefore Joseph as the son-in-law of Heli is counted as his son. Then from Heli the lineage is traced through his ancestors back to David.

Another instance of this kind is seen in Luke 3:27, where it reads that Salathiel was the son of Neri, whereas 1 Chronicles 3:17 states that Salathiel was the son of Jeconiah. Probably Salathiel's wife was daughter of Neri, and, according to Jewish custom, her husband's name was substituted for her name. Salathiel was counted as the son of Neri because of his marriage to Neri's daughter.

CAN ZION BE REDEEMED?

Thinking of the redemption of Zion, and the movements now on foot looking to that end, the question arises in the minds of many: "Can we redeem Zion now? What can I do to assist in the redeeming process? Am I unable to give anything?"

All have a part to play in the work in hand, and we should endeavor to bring ourselves into that condition where we will be willing to do the part that is ours. If unknown to us we should be so earnest in the work that we would seek to find out our part and then do it. Zion redeemed will be only for those who have worked for its redemption.

The Lord has given advice all along the way which, if heeded, will help us in the doing of our part:

And both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.

It is just as possible that we in our understanding have made this apply to others. It might be well for us to turn the searchlight our own way and see if we can find there a disregard of the advice given. It might be possible that all are guilty to a greater or lesser degree.

"Unnecessary wants." Who is to determine as to what is an unnecessary want? That must be determined by each individual. We have heard some say: "If the rich of the church would consecrate, it would be possible to redeem Zion." But do we want the richer members of the church to have all to do with the redemption of Zion?

"Well," it might be said by many, "I have nothing to give. In what way can I help?" I once heard a Salvation Army captain who told her little band of followers to be careful of the little things. That has always remained with me, but until of late, I have not thought of it in the light of Zion and her redemption.

Are we careful of the little things? Do we repress the little, unnecessary wants that seem to us as not worth while? We might mention a few of the very small ones and draw some conclusions. Possibly some will smile and conclude that all the cranks are not yet dead, but to the writer these are vital questions, and especially in these times of stress when the governments of the world are asking all to conserve. If all were to watch the little things we would be enabled to save many hundreds of dollars each year.

Many nickels go into chewing gum in a year from the homes of the Saints. Have you ever stopped and figured what it would mean in a year if each member of the church were to spend only one nickel in a week for gum? There are 86,260 members. Each spending the nickel would mean $4,315 in a week. Thus looking at it in the individual standpoint, it would not amount to much, but when it is all put together in the hands of the Bishop, we have a large sum to be applied toward the redemption of Zion. And it surely can be classed as an unnecessary want as well as a harmful and unseemingly habit.

Then we have the moving picture habit that might be figured in the same way, and surely we can place it among the unnecessary, as well as harmful habits. See Autumn Leaves for February, article, "Pleasures of the world."

We might continue with the use of tea and coffee, also tobacco, as well as many other unnecessary and harmful habits. The money thus spent, were it saved and turned into the Bishop's hands, would go a long way toward the goal sought.

"Gather my Saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant by sacrifice."—Psalm 50:5.

What are we sacrificing for the redemption of Zion? Will we forego the things mentioned, and thus have a part in the work intrusted to all, by turning the money saved from the repression of these unnecessary wants toward the work in hand? If I want to have a part in the redemption I must sacrifice and carry into effect the active exercise of repression of the unnecessary wants, and not expect from others that which we would not do ourselves.

True, the more we indulge in things that come under the unnecessary wants, the more we will have to repress, thus the rich and poor come under the same advice. It does not need to matter to us as individuals what Brother So and So is doing, it is what can, and what will, I do? I must work out my redemption myself, and the working out of my redemption in the way prescribed I am helping in the redemption of Zion.

It is thought by some that when they pay their tenth they have done all that is needful for them. I heard a brother make the remark that he had cleared a certain sum of money and had given the bishop a check for his tenth, and that he had lifted his obligation to the church by so doing. I do not think he did. See Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4, top of page 150.

"For Zion must increase in beauty." The beauty of Zion is her equality coupled with righteousness. We cannot be equal until we are righteous, nor righteous without equality. As was stated in a recent sermon in the Ensign, preached by W. W. Smith, we must be willing to give or be equal not because we fear results, but because we want to, because of our love of right doing. Needs and just wants, is the thought put forth by the Master.

In the last revelation to the church we are told that we are in the hastening time. Thus we should heed the admonition of the Lord to his people.

We find some who look with suspicion upon every move toward the gathering of moneys, or to ascertain the worth of the members. How can we expect to accomplish the work of the Lord if we have no confidence in the men called to put into operation the law?

Let us move forward, having faith in God, give of the little as well as the big things which when brought together in one make the big things possible. Then shall we be able to occupy in the land of Zion redeemed, where we will have the protection promised. Zion as a land can never afford us such safety until she puts on her beautiful garments and becomes the perfection of beauty from which God will shine.

MORMON

As to the etymology of this word, the following will likely be of more than passing interest to most if not all. Mr. Braden, et al, used to say that it was so derived as to mean hobgoblin when properly translated, but here is what the United Editor's Encyclopedia and Dictionary has to say with reference to the matter: "According to Smith's etymology, Mormon is from "Reformed Egyptian" mon, and English more, and means "more good." We had this rendering, or rather a knowledge of it by tradition, and had at times wondered as to how near to the truth Joseph had approached. It is small wonder, then, that we were pleased to find this confirmation: In his Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 639, Sanford has this to say under the caption of "Mormons, or Latter Day Saints. The word is derived from the Gaelic mor, 'great,' and the Egyptian mon, 'good,' thus meaning 'great good.'"

POLYGAMY

Not the etymology this time, but from the encyclopedia before referred to, we have this:

The great social peculiarity of the sect is their practice of polygamy. [Speaking with reference to the Utah people here.] It was not so, however, at first. Rigdon, Kimball, Pratt, Hyde, and Young are its true originators; Emma, wife and widow of the prophet Smith, stoutly denied that her husband ever had any wife but herself. Young's "revelation" she declared to be a fraud, and in consequence she withdrew to Nauvoo. Her four sons followed her, and have now founded a monogamic community, called the Josephites, but naming themselves the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. These consider that the church led by Brigham Young was simply a faction of the original church, and that it went into apostasy.

Thus it is that after years of unmerited vilification the truth is being unfolded until the last prop of the vilifier is being removed and he is left without excuse!

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AMERICANS TO THE CORE WHEREVER THEY ARE

Wherever Americans live abroad, in temperate, torried or arctic zones, they are banded together as Red Cross workers.

In the far-off island of Guam, in near-by Porto Rico, in ancient China, in quaint Honolulu, in frigid Alaska, in sweltering Brazil, in Chile, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Africa, and other foreign lands, American men and women are giving money and sending supplies to the Red Cross.

The sun never sets on the activities of the Red Cross in behalf of our Army and Navy and the suffering civilian populations of the warring nations. While the Red Cross workers in the Central Division are deep in sleep, the Red Cross workers of Shanghai, Manila, Peking, Tokio and other far-eastern cities are up and doing.

Down in Santiago, Chile, the Red Cross chapter has eighty-two members and they sent to the national headquarters $8,247, or an average contribution of $100 a member! From Seoul, Korea, comes the report that five hundred members are contributing $750 a month and hope to make it $1,500. In Buenos Aires they held a bazar and raised $105,000 for the Red Cross! In Honolulu the sum of $110,861 has been paid into the war fund. And these are typical of all the foreign chapters.

It takes weeks, sometimes months, for reports to come from some of these chapters, but invariably they bring inspiring messages and substantial gifts from Americans whose spirit is with the mother country in the struggle to make the world safe for democracy.

COOPERATION AND EQUALITY

"Civilization is cooperation, . . . union and liberty are its factors. . . . No slaveholding people ever were an inventive people. . . . The upper classes become luxurious and polished, but never inventive." In other words cooperation and equality mean social progress. A democratic form of government is valuable, but forms are nothing when the substance is gone. From popular government the substance of freedom may most easily be taken. The book emphasizes that unjust and unequal distribution of wealth are not incidents of progress, but tendencies which must bring all progress to a halt, that they do not cure themselves, but on the contrary, unless the cause is removed, grow greater and greater. This means injustice.

Justice is the law of health, sympathy and strength, of fraternity and cooperation. Justice with liberty, fraternity and equality means progress.

"Who shall measure the heights to which our civilization may soar? Words fail the thought! It is the Golden Age of which poets have sung and high-raised seers have told in metaphor! It is the glorious vision which has always haunted man with gleams of fitful splendor. It is what he saw whose eyes at Patmos were closed in a trance. It is the culmination of Christianity—the city of God on earth, with its walls of jasper and its gates of pearl! It is the reign of the Prince of Peace!"—The Law of Human Progress, by Henry George.

THE MORAL ORDER

Fundamentally everybody believes that right must triumph.

In a given situation he may not be able to defend his faith, but still he holds it, that the right is sustained by the laws of the universe.

Defending the right as it is given him to see the right, is the chief end of man.

Charles Sumner, standing in Faneuil Hall in the darkest days of the antislavery movement, declared:

Nothing can be settled which is not right. Nothing can be settled which is against freedom. Nothing can be settled which is contrary to divine law. God, nature, and all the sentiments of the heart, repudiate any such false seeming settlement. Amidst the shifts and changes of party our duties remain, pointing the way to action. By no subtle compromise or adjustment can men suspend the commandments of God. By no trick of managers, no hocus-pocus of politicians, no mush of concession, can we be released from this obedience. It is then in the light of duties that we are to find peace for our country and ourselves. Nor can any settlement promise peace which is not in harmony with those everlasting principles from which our duties spring.

There is something in every man's heart that responds to that sentiment. That sentiment inspires us all to the last measure of devotion. Man will fight for the right with more constancy than for life itself.

Once the moral order is clear, grimmer determination is the fruit of every reverse.

No race that had not already lost its moral integrity has ever deliberately surrendered the right.

Unfortunately the right is not always clearly distinguishable. In too many struggles we are beset with mixed motives. But we are looking for the right, and our courage grows as our assurance becomes stronger.

Nearly all great struggles arise over material things. They end in a determination of essential right and wrong.

How the incidental things that started this war have faded from consideration, and how the great test between liberty and absolutism has come to the front, between peace loving democracy and war loving autocracy!

Would Americans face the cost, the burdens, and the slaughter of this war for any other thing than the triumph of right in the world? It is unthinkable. Nothing America could gain in a material way would hold our people to the war a week.

The test of a civilization is its moral fiber. The test of a race is its moral fiber. The peoples of moral fiber have dominated and always will dominate.

The test of everything in this world is what contribution it makes to right thinking and right living.

Our Puritan ancestors were narrow and bigoted, but they saw one thing clearly, that it is the moral order that is to be conserved. We are a power in the world to-day largely because of this New England inheritance.

We shall always be a power in the world so long as we know deep down that "by no subtle compromise or adjustment can men suspend the commandments of God."—The Des Moines Register, March 27, 1918.

THE SPIRITUAL MEANING OF DEMOCRACY

"The President's declaration that the object of this war is to make the world safe for democracy," said my friend to me, "has been enthusiastically welcomed. But are we so sure that democracy is the best form of government, that it is worth what this war is costing us?"

No, I am not sure that any form of government is worth fighting for. But democracy is much more than a form of government. France is a republic, Italy is a monarchy; but both are democracies. The United States is a republic, Great Britain is a monarchy; but in some respects Great Britain is more democratic than the United States. It has in its Imperial Government both referendum and recall; the United States has in its Federal Government neither.

Democracy is not a mere form of government. It is a religious faith. It is a spirit of life—a spirit of mutual regard for each other's interest and mutual respect for each other's opinions; it is government by public opinion; it is liberty, equality, fraternity, in the institutions of religion, industry, and education, as well as in the government; in a word, it is human brotherhood. It involves four fundamental liberties:

- Religious liberty.
- Industrial liberty.
- Educational liberty.
- Political liberty.

And these liberties are not only rights; they are also duties. We sometimes ought to forego our rights; we never ought to abandon our duties.

1. The prophet Ezekiel, overcome by the vision of Jehovah in the temple, threw himself upon his face before his God. And the voice said unto him, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak to thee."

It is a fundamental right of man to stand upon his feet and face, unafraid, the Almighty. This is his right because this is his duty. It is not right for him to allow any priest, church, creed, or book to stand between him and his heavenly Father. The priest, the church, the creed, the book, may help to find the way to God; they may help him to understand his God; but they never should be allowed to take the place of God. God is not an absentee, to be interpreted only by a messenger or a letter. He is man's "Great Companion." The messenger and the letter are useful only as they bring the soul into companionship with that Companion. It is the right of every man to give account of himself to God because it is the duty of every man to give account of himself to God. No substitute can do it for him. The recognition of this right and the fulfillment of this duty forbid all spiritual despotism, and are a sacred and solemn guarantee of spiritual liberty.

This is religious democracy.

2. God made this world for the habitation of man and has given it to him for his dwelling place. It was not made for white men or for Anglo-Saxon men or for rich men or for wise men or for good men; it was made for all men. They are all his children. And they all have a right to a share in it. In the Father's house there is bread enough to spare; why should anyone perish with hunger? That is the question which the hungry in every land are asking, and they have a right to ask it. Society is not divinely organized when some men have so much that they know not how to use it, and others so little that they know not how to live.

Whether the twin evils of luxurious wealth and sordid poverty are due to the rich or to the poor or to neither but to a vicious organization of society we do not here consider. They are evils which democracy is endeavoring to cure by promoting a better distribution of wealth. And in doing this democracy is endeavoring not only to secure to all men their rights but to enable all men to perform their duties. For it is the duty of every man to put into the world at least as much as he takes out of it, and the duty of society to make this possible for every man.

I have met many skeptics, but never one so skeptical that he doubted the Biblical statement, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb." Coming into the world naked, it is clear that if we are to possess anything we must either produce it, accept it as a gift, steal it, or get it out of the common stock. Whoever does not by some service of hand or brain or heart, by what he does or what he endures, by what he makes or what he says or what he suffers, contribute his share to the world's welfare, must be classed with the beggars, whether he is clad in rags or in velvet. To make such contribution is the duty of every man. A fair opportunity to make such contribution is the right of every man.

This is industrial democracy.

3. We are in this world in the making! The object of life is the development of men and women. It is therefore the duty of everyone to make of himself, and of every parent to make of his children, the best product possible. The northern radical affirms that the Negro can be made the peer of the white man, and therefore ought to have the same education. The southern conservative declares that the Negro never can be made the peer of the white man, and therefore ought not to have the same education. Both are guessing. What the Negro race can become after an education like that of the Anglo-Saxon race no one can foretell. And the experiment can never be tried. For it is not within the power of man so to shape the world's destiny as to pass one race through the educational process through which other races have passed. It is neither possible nor desirable that the Africans or the East Indians or the Chinese or the Japanese should become replicas of the Anglo-Saxons.

This truth democracy recognizes, and therefore wherever it has gone it has established the public school. The object of education should not be to run all pupils into the same mold. The school should not be a foundry. The object should be to give to every pupil a chance to grow. The school should be a garden. Education, therefore, should prepare for life, which is itself the larger education. It should be adapted to the present conditions and the prospective needs of the pupil. The growing recognition of this truth has created optionalism in education, has added industrial training to academic education, has provided, as never before, for woman's education. To enjoy an opportunity for education is the right of every individual; to make that opportunity so varied as to meet the varied needs of the members is the duty of society; to avail himself of the opportunities to make all of himself that he can make is the duty of every individual.

This is educational democracy.

4. It is the right and duty of every man to govern himself. It is one object of education to prepare him to perform this duty. It is his right to determine his own destiny—his right because his duty. And as he must see with his own eyes, work with his own hands, and think with his own brain, so he must guide himself with his own judgment and rule himself with his own conscience. If he is blind, some one else must see for him; if he is paralyzed, some one else must work for him. So, if he has no judgment or no conscience, some one else must guide and rule him. But every normal man is furnished with eyes to see, hands to work, judgment to guide, conscience to rule. Such is the assumption of democracy, which holds that the object of all just government is to prepare the governed to govern himself. Democracy, therefore, in the family and in the school trains the growing child in the art of self-government. And democracy in the state throws responsibility upon the untrained citizen and is not discouraged if he blunders and sometimes blunders badly, for democracy believes the untrained voter will learn by his own blunders.

This is political democracy.

This is the democracy for which we are fighting against its resolute and remorseless foes. . . .
—Lyman Abbott in The Outlook, April 17, 1918.

"Some (preachers) bequeath to the world their thoughts memorable, others a style unforgettable; but, whether their forte was the 'soft lute of love' or 'the loud trump of war,' none can be famed for an excellence supernal without a spirituality which is the white flame that welds all elements imperishably."—Gerald Culberson, in The Christian Standard.

TEMPERANCE HONOR ROLL

The following States have ratified the prohibition amendment which has been submitted to them by the National Congress. The slogan of the movement is "Make 36 White." If thirty-six vote to ratify the amendment, we will then have national prohibition, superseding all State laws on the subject.

It is notable that in practically every instance, the vote has been overwhelmingly in favor of the measure.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Tribute to a Beautiful Life

"Beautiful lives are those that bless; Silent rivers of happiness."

How fittingly these words apply to the life of our Sister Emma Smith, whose earthly course ended on Monday, March 4. How many there are who could bear witness of happiness increased by the goodness that went out from her, not to those only who came into personal contact with her but to many whom she had never seen.

Unobtrusive, even shrinking, by nature, from anything which would single her out in public, yet she had the strong convictions which overcame her timidity and caused her to stand fearlessly, though modestly, for what she believed.

Familiar to our readers as Mrs. B. C. Smith, her name is inseparably connected with the woman's work of the church. As a delegate to the General Conferences and to the Sunday school conventions she is also widely known, and this quietly dressed woman, slight of form and fair of face with the delicate waves of silvery hair, an embodiment of what she stood for as a leader among her sisters, will be remembered and missed by many in attendance at these gatherings.

Sister Smith had been with the women's movement from its inception, being one of those who assisted in its organization under the name, Daughters of Zion. With the first two presidents, Mrs. C. B. Kelley and Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, she served as a member of the advisory board. Then herself being chosen to preside she filled this office until three years ago when she was elected vice president. Two years ago she was chosen historian for the Women's Auxiliary, her intimate knowledge of the proceedings of the society making her especially qualified to write its early history. In this work she continued until by illness she was obliged to lay it aside. But the essential part of her task was finished, for she had the history completed almost to date, where others could more easily take it up.

In her long service as president, which covered so many of the formative years of experiment and adjustment in the organization, it may be truly said of her that she bore the burden and heat of the day. Devotion to duty and hope for the continued progress of the work carried her through the most discouraging times and kept her watchful to serve the interests of the society in all its departments. And this was but the continuation of her active service in the church which found other opportunities before the women were organized. From the early years of the Independence Branch to the time when her work was laid down, she was, with a few interruptions, either an officer or a teacher in the Sunday school, occupying at one time as superintendent of the primary department and in later years teaching in the senior department.

Becoming identified with the Woman's Auxiliary, and, as president of the local work as well as of the general, representing its high ideals for the home and the family, she felt an added responsibility as to what might be observed in her own children, and she said to them, "I could not work—strength and courage would fail me—if my teachings were not upheld by the conduct of my children."

Consistent mother that she was, how she sympathized with and aided these children in their preparation for the work of life, the daughter finishing her schooling with a kindergarten course and spending afterwards a few years in teaching. What a wealth of experience with child nature to bring to the calling of motherhood and to make her an efficient worker in Sunday school, in fact, with children anywhere. Two little daughters now claim her care; and how the grandmother did delight in these babies!

A course in architecture took the son far from his mother's side, but her letters followed him weekly, without fail. And did his come as faithfully in return? Yes, with just the same regularity. And as years passed and he followed his chosen occupation, they told of successes in his work, but they told also of the meetings of the Saints and of church work he was taking up, then finally of his ordination and of his desires to be faithful under increased responsibility.

Surely the time had come when this mother could go in peace, trusting her loved ones to Him who had guided her in guiding them. Her place cannot be filled, but close beside it is the dear daughter, now with her own family in the old home, caring for the father, left to mourn but not without comfort.

Glimpses into the life of this one who has gone showed her in the large circle of relatives, everywhere a comfort. Again we see her sitting up at night with a sick neighbor, getting close to the hearts of those who watch beside the dying. In her home, simple in its furnishings, one was always impressed with the beauty of order and of cleanliness. Her table exemplified the combining of economy with dainty serving of palatable, wholesome food, and those who ate there were both pleased and satisfied. And the one who with busy hands accomplished all of this was just as ready to lend her aid in homely tasks when enjoying the hospitality of another, as the writer of this sketch can lovingly testify.

For a number of years Brother Smith served as deacon of the Independence Branch. In the arduous work of pressing the grapes and bottling the new wine for the sacramental cup, his wife each year assisted. Her bread furnished the waiting multitudes with the emblem of the broken body of her Lord. Such humble tasks, but for what noble purpose! And when at last she passed to his presence, how glad she would be to stand before him as one who had served!

Her life here is ended but her works do follow her.

The Need and Purpose of the Woman's Auxiliary

[The following paper was prepared by the Honorary President, Mrs. F. M. Smith, to submit to the committee on co-ordination. It was also read before the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric on March 30, and before the Woman's Auxiliary meeting at Independence, Missouri, April 8.—HERALD EDITORS.]

The development of the general woman's movement of the church depends largely upon the success with which the organization of woman's work is effected in the church. Many of the men of the church find their need for organized expression supplied partially by the quorums. Quorum work or meetings not being available to the women of the church, they should have an enlarged, comprehensive women's auxiliary as the channel through which their cooperative efforts can find expression. Furthermore, there are goals which can be reached only through women's societies, and it is my belief that a general organization embracing all local and specific groups of workers, a general woman's auxiliary, is not only highly desirable but practically indispensable to the church. Its work could be accomplished by no other auxiliary, and in order to point out the necessity for its existence, I shall touch briefly on its various departments, somewhat as discussed in the present Year Book, with a view to showing wherein their fields of activity are peculiar to a purely woman's organization.

YEAR BOOK

The present Year Book does not explain the scope of the departments as simply and comprehensively perhaps as it might. This is particularly true for those who have never familiarized themselves with the problems and activities of social welfare work, or even with the terms pertaining to social welfare, such as child welfare, relief and service, in the broadest sense, etc. On the other hand, we are extremely gratified at the evidences of unusual progress and advancement resulting from the publication of our first Year Book. As a result of the suggestions and lists of books contained therein many of the aid societies have in conjunction with their actual labors, taken up the study of such subjects as would fit them to become competent to meet the problems of modern relief and service. Again, a sister writes that the women in an outlying district are deriving much benefit from such books as Earl Barnès' Great Educators, and Women and Progress, and Bennett's American Women in Civic Work, which are suggested in the Year Book.

The work is not feminism, we are never pushing fads, but our whole effort is to keep our work of a sane, safe, stable character. It is not uncommon for such books as these to awaken in women the possibilities for self-improvement and development as mothers and home makers, and the appreciation of the value of the individual home as the foundation of society.

HOME BUREAU

Woman's first duty is in her home, as has been rightly said; but many elements enter into the training of a good home maker. The problems and activities which pertain to the home, which correctly come under the Home Department of the Woman's Auxiliary, are directly connected with the education of the women on the many general and specific subjects pertaining to home problems. This education is carried on under the direction of the Educational Department of our auxiliary, but in the interests of the Home Department. The latter emphasizes particularly such branches of instruction as assist directly in the maintenance of the individual home. Home economics, sex hygiene, sanitation, child training and child psychology, and various parents' problems, are subjects which are essentially a part of women's work and of the Home and Educational Departments of the Woman's Auxiliary. These, and many actual duties pertaining to the ideal home, cannot be as comprehensively conducted or superintended for women by any other organization.

SOCIAL WELFARE BUREAU

Arising from the existence of the individual home and directly connected with its problems, is the field of social welfare, sociology is the big term, which in its broadest sense embraces child welfare, relief and service, and whatever activities tend to raise the standard of the home as a general institution, thereby dealing with the homes of the community, of the church, and of the Nation. The home, although the important social unit, is not an isolated unit. The members from one home must associate more or less with those from every home in the community in their school, industrial, social, and religious life. The prevailing world conditions have emphasized the problems of social inequality, and with our Zionistic ideas expanding as they are, the demand for scientific and reasonable application by our women is steadily increasing.

In the interests of their own homes and in the interests of humanity the women of this age are coming to assist greatly along the lines of social welfare. Many and varied are the movements of a constructive nature, as well as otherwise, which can be carried on in a community. The world has seen the need for such work and the peculiar adaptability of women to this kind of service.

The various kinds of war work, activities too numerous to mention at this time, logically fall under social service work or relief and service work. And I trust that our sisters have reported their war activities to our general secretary. It should be an important part of our work at the present time.

Surely social welfare work is a legitimate one for our Woman's Auxiliary, and it is not, as some say, taking a woman from her home, for besides the many consecrated women who are unmarried or without children, or whose children have left the home nest, who long to render service, a woman who would conduct her own home under the most favorable conditions must have an interest in the life of those about her.

As a common example of child welfare work, and its influence on the individual home, a school teacher may feel that certain of her pupils are not properly cared for at home, through poverty, ignorance, or neglect, but can do nothing herself. By cooperation through an organization for social welfare, however, some sympathetic woman or women can be sent into the homes of these pupils, where she can teach the mother to properly feed, bathe, and clothe the children before sending them to school. With the bodies well cared for, the mental training of the children is enhanced. The standard of the entire schoolroom is thereby raised, and the improvement is reflected in the child from the better home, because the poorer home has been elevated. The social welfare work of a community reflects so directly on the individual child that the actual and educational work in social welfare is not only a legitimate and worthy field of activity for women, but resolves itself into an actual duty. But while welfare work affects the individual character and home, it is an activity which cannot be as advantageously carried on by individual women. It is time that it be carried on by cooperation, by organization, and, quite necessarily, by a woman's organization, such as our General Woman's Auxiliary.

RELIEF AND SERVICE BUREAU

Relief and service work, that phase of social welfare which deals with the material alleviation of the suffering caused by lack of social adjustments resulting in sickness, poverty, misfortune, makes a strong appeal to the women of our church, and there exists great need for woman's assistance therein. For the best expression of such assistance, the closest cooperation is urged with church officials and the closest coordination among the women. This is a work which belongs logically to the Woman's Auxiliary—to studiously, scientifically, and we might say organically, render the women's assistance much needed by the arm of the church carrying on this kind of responsibility.

EDUCATIONAL BUREAU

The direction of the ideal home, and the allied work of social welfare, child welfare, and relief and service cannot be as successfully accomplished by untrained and untaught women, and for this reason the Woman's Auxiliary strives to maintain a strong and reasonably complete Educational Bureau. In addition to the specific subjects which pertain directly to the Home and Social Welfare Departments, are those general subjects on which the women should be informed in order to study to advantage the more specific branches. An expert on home economics or sanitation must understand the simpler principles of chemistry. One cannot expect to become proficient in child training and child psychology without a foundation of general psychology. Relief and service and welfare problems can scarcely be studied without a basic idea of social problems. And while it is admitted that the Sunday school and Religio should have to do with certain lines of educational work for the youth of the church, there are yet aspects of juvenile education which belong exclusively to parents, particularly to mothers, and for this educational process to be carried on in the home, the mother must herself receive instruction and assistance. It would seem reasonable, also, that such instruction and such subjects as these could be presented with more significant application to women's problems by the woman's organization itself, than by the college or other educational organizations of the church, although the Educational Department of the Woman's Auxiliary has been and should be closely coordinated with the educational activities of the general church.

YOUNG WOMAN'S BUREAU

A logical and important department of the Woman's Auxiliary is the Young Woman's Department, separate from and independent of either the Sunday school or the Religio. These auxiliaries provide activities along specified lines, the Sunday school as regards religious instruction and the Religio as regards social and literary activities; but it remains for the Woman's Auxiliary to provide a young woman's organization for self-expression and development along the lines peculiar to women, and under the direction of the exclusively woman's organization of the church. The new movement for older girls and young women under the Young Woman's Department provides for both social and educational development along lines not touched upon by the other auxiliaries, and particularly the association with and direction of consecrated and sympathetic women through the Woman's Auxiliary. The Orioles, the organization for younger girls, is essentially a part of the Woman's Auxiliary in that the girls at this age are especially urged to expect the comradeship and censorship of their mothers first, and the supervision of the women of the auxiliary second, in the carrying out of their own functions. To draw hard and fast lines between the activities of girls connected with the Woman's Auxiliary, and with the Religio would be unnecessary, and yet every alert, conscientious mother follows her girl intimately until the young woman forms a home of her own. I believe, therefore, that a Woman's Auxiliary composed largely of mothers would be incomplete without a Young Woman's Department, as a girl's organization would seem unstable unless affiliated with the Woman's Auxiliary.

It is therefore my opinion that the Sunday school should be confined in its activities largely to religious education, the Religio to social functions with allied literary and educational features, such as debates, oratorical contests, and literary readings, and that the Woman's Auxiliary be adapted to fully meet the requirements of the church for a purely woman's organization such as is essential to the development of the general woman's movement. The Woman's Auxiliary then in its large envisagement should be a federation of all women's activities within the church, holding in view always the larger interests of the general church.

MRS. F. M. SMITH.

Relief and Service

(Compiled and read by Mrs. Mable Gross, Saint Mary's, Ontario.)

It has been said that they who live to themselves alone are of all people the most miserable. That we may be enabled to administer relief and give service to our fellow man should be the aim of all.

Each day comes to us laden with possibilities and to meet these constantly increasing responsibilities our lives should be developed along practical lines. The past generation of noble women sought an outlet for their energies in "the sisters' prayer unions," and the "United Daughters of Zion." Now we have a larger and broader organization known as "The Woman's Auxiliary."

Our heart's desires are the same as the desires of the women in the ages past. They wished for happiness; so do we. They wished to succeed; so do we. They desired to make mankind better and to ease the load of suffering humanity and to make this old world a better and brighter place in which to live. Their ideas of happiness, success, and service may differ from ours, but each and every one is striving for that ideal that goes to make up a useful and successful life.

"Specialists" is the cry of the age in which we live. Are we preparing ourselves to be specialists along any line so we may be able to give our best to our fellow man?

Our duties in this life are threefold. Our duty to self, to society, and to God.

Let us look at our duty to self first. Are we careless and neglectful of our opportunities for improvement? It has been said that if we get but one new thought a day, in forty years we have fifteen thousand of them. Let us then be up and doing. Shun idleness as you would shun bad company. It has been said that the Devil tempts all other men, but an idle man tempts the Devil. The idle brain is the Devil's workshop.

It was while King David tarried in idle luxury in Jerusalem instead of leading his armies to battle, that he fell into the double crime that is the worst blot upon his fair name.

Let us not lead a life of idleness. May we ever be up and learning to administer relief and to give of our best to humanity. We will meet difficulties, as those before us can testify, yet they are our best friends, because struggles make men and women. How many would be following "the Man of Nazareth" to-day if, when he was tempted of the Devil, he had yielded?

We are all familiar with his life of service. He himself said on one occasion that he came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Have you an aim in view? Whether the sailing be smooth or rough, are you ever pressing forward towards your harbor of refuge?

A steadfast purpose in life makes the difference between true life and mere existence. One has a harbor to make; the other is driftwood. One is laying up treasures in heaven; the other is bankrupt.

What does our account with self say? Are we striving to make our life worthy of a Father's blessing?

Come now for awhile and examine our duty to society. This comes under two heads: our speech and our influence. We are familiar with one of the doctor's first orders, namely: "Let me see your tongue." Did you ever stop to ponder what busybodies our tongues are, either for weal or woe. We say so much that if it could all be printed, in thirty years we would have a library of one thousand five hundred and sixty volumes, according to Professor George S. Goodspeed, of the University of Chicago.

How much of our talk is idle gossip? Yea, worse than gossip. How often do we by a word relieve or administer help and comfort to each other? How often can it be said of words of ours:

"It was spoken for the Master,
O how lovingly it fell!
It was uttered in a whisper—
Who had breathed it none could tell.
It was spoken for the Master,
Only just a little word,
But the chords that long had slumbered,
In a grief-worn heart were stirred.

If our words could all breathe a prayer as expressed in the hymn, our life would be acceptable to our Master. Our influence is for good or ill. Look around and ask yourself the question: Am I what I ought to be? Am I paying the debt I owe my associates wisely and well? Do I always point them upwards? Am I calling their better nature into play? Have I qualified myself so that I may give intelligent service, and am I ready at all times to help the church officers in looking after the poor, sick, and needy? It is a Christian act to minister to the sick, but a brotherly act to remedy the cause and prevent disease.

Are we by our influence elevating mankind, teaching them the better way and lending a helping hand at all times?

In our account with society may we ever remember that a word once spoken never dies; that our influence lives after us; that the service begun here shall bear fruit in the hereafter.

Next comes our service to God. This one is the most important. We owe him homage, honor, and obedience, yet how often we fall short of living up to our privileges. We who call ourselves his children often begrudge the few hours each week spent in his service, and if called upon to make some sacrifice for his cause we think the load heavier than we can bear, yet Christ spent his entire life ministering to others. It is said that while on his way to Calvary, carrying his cross, he asked permission to stop and rest awhile on the stone step of a humble shoe-maker. With the mistaken zeal of his fellow countrymen the shoemaker bade him harshly to go on. Jesus looked at him sorrowfully and answered, "Thou shalt go on and on till the end of time." That man's opportunity came to him then and there, but he was too blinded by the bitter enmity of his brethren, the Jews, to heed it. While this legend may or may not be true, still it shows how quick we are to follow popular opinion instead of blazing a trail and leaving a path firm and true behind us.

We have the Bible which abounds in stories of unselfish lives, of men and women who have led lives of service and been blessed by a kind and loving Father.

May we ever keep the vision of administering relief and service to others ever before us. It is a beautiful vision, and needs our whole heart and soul in it even as Christ our elder brother showed us how. That a brighter and better day may dawn for the sisters of our beloved church, and that we may be instrumental in bringing it about is my prayer.

Social Justice

What is social justice? The term has been bandied about for many years now and volumes have been spoken and written concerning its meaning, with the effect of confusing many and enlightening but few. None who deeply study conditions will undertake to support the proposition that social justice prevails now, or ever did prevail. Some man has always been at a disadvantage, and not through his own fault. Conditions justify the assertion, though, that we are nearer to-day to a realization of the square deal for all. This does not mean that any one of many utopian dreams has come to pass, nor that an ideal has been attained. It means that forces have so reacted upon conditions that men vaguely feel if they do not realize fully something of the obligation resting upon them to consider the other fellow. It does not mean that the unrest is being stilled. The man who is comfortable is inclined to agree with conditions that contribute to his situation, but under him and around him are others who are not comfortable, and whose consequent dissatisfaction is certain to disturb him. Thus is the continuation of the turmoil made sure, to the end that with each readjustment of social relations we are coming a little closer to the time when the world will be a good place for all to live in. Through this unrest the race of man has come up from darkness toward the light, and by it will be led on to the time when social justice will be a fact and not a hope. In sorrow and bitterness man learns his lesson, but beyond the strife always glows the light of that day ahead when "all men's good is each man's aim." Then will humanity know the full meaning of social justice.—Omaha Bee.

For darkness passes; storms shall not abide,
A little patience and the fog is past;
After the sorrow of the ebbing tide
The singing floods return in joy at last.
The night is long, and pain weighs heavily,
But God will hold his world above despair.
Look to the east, where up the lurid sky
The morning climbs! The day shall yet be fair.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Introductory Remarks at the London, England, Conference

(The following speech by Elder W. H. Greenwood was delivered at the opening session of the conference of the London, England, District, January 19, 1918. Reported by Elder Dover E. Judd.)

Saints, I am pleased to be with you. I did not anticipate this privilege until a few days ago. Now we are come together for the purpose of conferring. That means that every individual present is an especial unit of this body. There are no big I's or little you's in connection with this great work; but there are important parts, and parts which must be recognized as vital.

I am pleased to be associated in this work, because I realize up to the present at least, that we are in possession of the greatest thing in the world—either religious or otherwise. Stripped of the possession of our holy religion, I do not know to what depth it is possible for those whose minds have been enlightened to sink. On the other hand, the faithful observance of those things that have been revealed unto us personally—if they have—then there is no power in the world, you can call it by whatsoever name you like, that will raise a man and glorify him physically, mentally, and spiritually, as this great work we represent, which we are proud to call a "marvelous work and a wonder."

Now I want to suggest to you to-night that it means work, and, as we are met in this conference, we have met together to work; and the work is not our work but God's. We simply adopt God's work. God has enlightened our intelligence and has revealed unto us his law, made known his organization, and has placed us in the channels whereby we shall be enabled to move and accomplish those things which he has designed in each one. And the first thing that is demanded of us is that we should lay hold of self—take possession of this body of ours and control it. Until we realize that fact, we cannot be of any moment in this great work, because every unit in connection with this work must be an independent unit. Blessed with volition, with individuality, and personality that cannot and will not be destroyed here or hereafter, are we.

You can therefore see the object of this work, and the heights to which it will lead us. I have thought of the expression in the Scriptures, of one of the inspired writers, where he mentions the fact that "ye are gods to whom the word of God came," simply because it revealed the mind, the will, the desire, the expression and the power of God to the human mind.

I am satisfied that we are moving. Some of us are moving onward, some the other way. Now is the testing time, and this cause must win. When you come to analyze the whole situation, it is an individual matter, and just exactly as I heard Bishop May explain with regard to the definition of the term Zion, it must be brought right home, and we must conceive Zion—purity of heart—wrap it up (if you will allow the expression), and put it right inside.

Man is of the earth, earthy, and it is very seldom we leave the earth. We seem to be tied to it. While it is true we are very nearly related to the earth—and we must be absolutely related to it—so whatever kind of heritage we desire we must make, and we shall have only ourselves to blame for its failure.

However, we are gathered here to-night for the purpose of doing business of conference, so let our minds be constrained with the love of God that the divine expression and impression, and above all the disposition, be manifested through us, for that reveals the mind of God.

A FEW OPINIONS ON COORDINATION

[The following brief statements were solicited from a few men selected at random from various parts of the country. While the report of the coordinating committee has been adopted now, and will be in effect hereafter, these opinions, rather representative of the sentiment expressed at the meetings, will be of interest.—EDITORS.]

A. E. Warr, until recently a missionary in the South: "The demand of the hour is for unification of purpose, that we may have concentration of effort. The Lord has emphasized that before Zion can be redeemed his army must become very great. This means thorough discipline. Discipline can be had only when there is a 'well-recognized directional head.' Such contingency is well met in the principle of coordination found in the report of the coordinating committee. The document bears evidence of careful thought and is as explicit as is consistent with the complexity and amount of subject matter covered. It is an index to the great forward movement upon which we are now entering."

Matthew W. Liston, Flint, Michigan: "We have read with interest the report of the coordinating committee, and think it a move in the right direction. It means a closer relationship of the departments under the direction of those who should be in a position to understand the needs of each. The time is ripe for this movement, and we think good will result."

J. W. Wight, Lamoni, Iowa: "True coordination should be hailed by all that principle that brings into existence that unity of correspondence that aims at a final coexistence with God. A coordination, that seeks to invade the right of the people and by its terms exalts the prerogatives of any above the rights of their true place and calling is not alone harmful to the body as a whole but to the one is 'exalts.' As the committee's report on coordination exalts the privileges of the Presidency of the church above their legal rights, and at the same time removes the inherent right of the people to exercise the initiative, I am opposed to it."

iliaries approving the coordination move is the finest piece of legislation ever struck off by these enlightened handmaidens of the church. It will make for unity, energy, push, and progress. The auxiliaries henceforth cease to be juvenile; they are adults and of equal partnership in the great family of the church. Subject as they will be to oversight and administration of the presiding quorums of the church, they will undoubtedly receive an inspiration such as they have never before felt."

S. A. Burgess, of the HERALD, as interviewed by the assistant editor: "The adoption of the report on coordination is the most vital action ever taken by the auxiliaries since their first organization. It recognizes the unity of our aims and purposes. It preserves the lawful rights of the people in common consent, yet secures the advantage sought by other organizations in a nominating committee, but with the added virtue that this committee shall be the spiritual leaders of the church. It means the elimination of unnecessary duplication of effort, and secures the reduction of cumbersome joint committees, valuable as a transition, to a few efficient officers immediately in charge and responsible."

Edward Rannie, Independence, Missouri: "In my work as a missionary, and also as a pastor over a district, I have learned by experience and observation that the auxiliaries in the districts and branches are not accomplishing near the amount of good possible because they have not been cooperating, but working independent of each other. As a result very much precious time is wasted. When the details of the plan of the committee are worked out, and we get it in full operation, we will have better results from our work. I see no bears in the way at which to be frightened. My anticipations in the results of the plan are very optimistic."

A Remarkable Opportunity for Registered Men

Registered men taking Graceland's radio course take it under the absolute guarantee of the Government that when inducted they will be placed in the radio division of the signal corps. Men drafted before the completion of their course receive attendance records filled out on government forms, instead of the usual certificates. Their training will be finished at the cantonment training schools or at special schools.

"Of what benefit will attendance upon the radio class be to the student? 'First of all he will be trained for some definite work in the Army. He can serve with the confidence that he is being used by his country to the greatest possible advantage. Unlike the ordinary recruit, he will enter the Army as a trained instead of an untrained man. While he will go to the cantonment as a private, he may, when assigned as a radio or buzzer operator, advance to the rank of corporal or sergeant and wage of from $36 to $51 monthly. In proportion as he shows his ability and interest rapid promotion will lie ahead of him.'—Extract from Government Bulletin.

The summer school of the Graceland Radio Institute begins May 6. It will be an intensive course of fifteen weeks in radio telegraphy and signal corps training. It will be fully preparatory for all branches of government and commercial radio operator's service. For detailed information write the Graceland Radio Institute, Lamoni, Iowa.

You must help your fellow men; but the only way you can help them is by being the noblest and the best man that is possible for you to be.—Phillips Brooks.

Can you look an honest man or pure woman in the eye?

CAMP CUSTER, MICHIGAN, April 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been intending to write a letter to the HERALD for some time but have been so busy that I have neglected it. I came to Camp Custer last September and have been here since that time. We have been very fortunate in being able to get to Battle Creek to church almost every week. We have no church there, but hold our services in a hall on the third floor over the Olympic Lunch, on East Main Street, one block east of Jefferson Avenue. We have been able to locate a few of our boys here in camp, but we still feel that there must be many more that we have not been able to find.

There are many more coming into camp at this time, and we would be very glad to make their acquaintance or help them in any way possible. The Saints at Battle Creek are very hospitable and always welcome us to their homes.

Church services up town begin at 10 a. m. and at 7.30 p. m. If there are any that cannot get up town, I would be only too glad to have them come to my barracks and get acquainted.

Are We a Cowardly People?

[The following is a personal letter sent to one of our brethren whose letter appeared in the HERALD. It contains interesting food for thought.—EDITORS.]

The HERALD of recent issue has just been laid aside after twice reading through your letter. That issue contained many good things but none that brought to me more satisfaction than did that letter. The impulse comes to me too strong to be resisted to write you and say "Thank you."

Perhaps because it is both my duty and privilege to teach patriotism to the many children with whom I come in almost daily contact that I realize the importance of what we say before them of the big issues of the day and also the effect that comes from reading the overcharged utterances of some who write through the HERALD and other papers with no thought of the impression upon others.

When I see the glistening eyes of these children, not far removed from the peasantry of Europe, and hear the proud ring in their voices as they talk of "my country" and "my flag" and how they absorb the story of the making of America and its ideals it more than repays for the dull routine of teaching. I tell them that we have made many mistakes in carrying out those ideals and that many have not yet been reached but they are our ideals and it is for us to try to reach them. Not all of them will be upright and virtuous citizens but some of the ideas stick and will have their bearing upon the future. Perhaps I have wandered a bit from my subject, which was why I appreciated your letter. Some time ago a young friend was persuaded to read the HERALD, thinking that in his isolated condition the editorials and articles from various writers would broaden his viewpoint of the church. Also I wanted him to see that independent thinking characterized our people, as his relatives, mostly aristocratic stock, accuse us of being ignorant and duped by false teachers. What I did not think of was the possible effect of the letters upon him because time is so taken up that I can rarely give them more than a glance.

Unfortunately about that time he visited a branch and heard much about Zion but from a wrong angle. The statement was made why should we worry about the war, God would call us to Zion and we should be safe. Can you not picture the indignation of that boy, with a long line of liberty-loving ancestry behind him, saying, with flashing eye, "Is that your idea of God and his plan for Zion, to gather a lot of cowardly people together to save their necks while the world suffers? That isn't the kind of a God I read of in the Bible. Zion is a place from which blessing is to go out to the world."

He took his leave shortly after and so did not hear the pastor straighten out the tangle for the benefit of the flock. Right on top of that he read some of those letters in the HERALD to which you referred. He just about lost his faith in us as a people. When one is young, unacquainted with the rank and file of the church, not cognizant of the fact that there are many peculiar people among us, and that the HERALD is an open forum to all, these things weigh more heavily upon him than upon us who have had more experience. It has taken much time, tact, and prayer to persuade him that we are not all "slackers," "pro-German" sympathizers, or seditious in our thoughts. It wasn't the gospel he doubted but the Saints. When the articles by Brethren Rushton, Stebbins, and your letter came out I felt it was in answer to my prayer that some might write on the subject so that it might be clear to him.

If we could remember to make our criticism constructive and to put forth the positive rather than the negative side of life to our young people would we not be helping them more? When we think of the long line of men and women who have endured that posterity might enjoy liberty and freedom we ought to endeavor to make that sacrifice worth while. We are links in the great chain, connecting those who came before us with those who are to come. May we who have the hope of Zion in our hearts not fail in our efforts to hold the chain together.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO, April 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Saints of Niagara Falls have been made to rejoice by the return of their president, Elder William Place, after spending the winter in Jacksonville, Florida, for his health. Brother Place and family were welcomed home by a reception held by the Saints in the basement of the church.

Several touching speeches were made during the evening ending in a very touching address from our president expressing his regret in losing an active worker in Sister Chambers and daughter, Sister McDonald, as they are moving to Low Banks. The sister replied in a way that made us feel the "at-one-ment" of the gospel. She said in part: "Though we have to separate and a little space divide us, yet in the gospel we are one, and if we pray in earnest our prayers will mingle together before our heavenly Father as in many of the pleasant hours we have spent together in the past."

The Saints sang number 52, "Blest be the tie that binds," after which refreshments were served, and closed a happy evening by saying farewell to our sister, and singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

LORAIN, OHIO, April 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: After reading the article by Doctor O. T. Hayer in the HERALD for March 27, I felt impressed to write a little out of the abundance of my own experience along that line, as I am one who has all my life been a victim of the monster known as fear.

As it is evident that there are many others afflicted in the same manner, we feel that it is a topic which should be much discussed in these days when it is necessary that each individual should give of the best that is in him toward the consummation of the great work of redeeming Zion. This we know to be impossible when in the grip of fear.

It is doubtless true that there are many in the church who are in possession of the happy gift of being able to give full expression to their talents and abilities unhampered by fear, but like the poor that we always have with us, there are always those who because of fear to assume responsibility or otherwise exert themselves are constantly robbing the different departments of the church of much that might add to their life and vigor, and consequently increase the influence of the church upon the world.

The psychological effect of fear is to render one actually incapable of doing the desired thing, and when we consider that active self-expression is the means by which our mental powers grow and develop, it is not difficult to understand how fear can stunt the intellect and make mental dwarfs.

Faith and fear are in opposition to each other, and where one exists, the other cannot. John understood this when he said that perfect love casteth out all fear.

The best way to eradicate fear is to get into such a worthy condition before God that his love can have its perfect manifestation in our lives. Fear will then disappear as the dew before the noon-day sun.

Let us all strive to lay aside fear, knowing that we shall have the approval and the help of God in so doing, for "God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

A sister in the faith,

HAZEL L. MINKLER.

Editors Herald: Having read the Ensign and Saints' Herald for over a year, and not having seen anything from our branch called the Minnesota Branch, getting its name from the State from which the Saints came, I thought I would write. I love to read the letters from the brothers and sisters.

I usually read the first page of both papers, or perhaps a sermon, and then hurry to the back for the letters written, for it seems almost like a "heart to heart" talk with the brothers and sisters, and being isolated from the branch in the winter, for we live eleven miles from where the Saints meet to worship, words fail to express the comfort derived from perusing the pages of both papers. They are silent preachers, and how much knowledge gleaned by closely reading the sermons, for sometimes when I am studying, trying to connect a certain passage with another, trying to get an understanding of the scriptures, here come along the silent preachers, and explain just what I have been trying to find out.

I love this latter-day work and can testify to its truthfulness. I have had spiritual dreams guiding me in the straight and narrow way, and have been healed by fasting and prayer, and by the power of the Holy Ghost. It has given me joy past understanding.

My grandparents were affiliated with the church in its infancy, when Joseph Smith the Seer was its leader, and some of them were in the Haun's Mill massacre. They always testified to the truthfulness of the gospel and the purity of the life of the seer.

Both grandfathers were elders in the Reorganized church under Joseph Smith the prophet, and I feel that I have a great privilege in being united with a church in which God gives a knowledge of the truth by the Holy Ghost.

-Dear brothers and sisters, let us study to show ourselves approved of God, by searching the scriptures, and church books, for in so doing, it is readily seen where one is the witness of the other as God in his wisdom has given us these witnesses, that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every word might be established, yet the knowledge will not do us any good if we do not obey its teaching. But we must live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

I feel my unworthiness, and desire to press onward to the high calling to perfection. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may not fall by the wayside, but that I may be a bright and shining light, guiding others into the fold and kingdom of God. I am always praying for the advancement of the work and the redemption of Zion.

I am ever your sister in Christ,

EMMA CHEESEMAN.

SAULT SAINTE MARIE, ONTARIO, March 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from the "Soo" to show that we are not dead yet as some have prophesied we would be, but are still here, trying in our weak way to do our bit.

We have not made a showing as some branches of the church have done, but we are still earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints. Brother Mac Brown, our worthy president, is an active worker, earnestly trying to get us all into the harness that we may all pull together. Brother Mac realizes that in unity there is strength, giving all an equal privilege to develop their talents along gospel lines, for we are all called to labor in the vineyard.

We have a full quorum of branch officers at present, which we have not had for years: Elder Mac Brown, president; Brother A. Tomlinson, priest; your writer, teacher; and Brother H. Campbell, deacon. We have also the assistance of Brother E. Lockyer, deacon, from Manitoulin Island.

So with the Lord's help and the united efforts of his Saints, we desire to accomplish more good this summer than what we have in the past. We have often heard it said that the Soo is a hard place, but I can't see it that way. I believe that if the work is presented to the people in the proper way and manner that good results will follow.

We must be earnestly engaged on the firing line. We must bring our gospel before the world. There are honest hearts beating in this Soo yet, but if we are going to follow in the same old rut we will be a mighty long time in getting the gospel before them. What we want is a missionary of the proper caliber with grit and sand enough to propose a series of meetings on the street corners or some place where we can get in touch with the public and to unity with the branch officers in order that there may be a unity of purpose.

We realize that the world is growing more wicked. They do not want the gospel. We will admit that at the present time it seems to be a difficult task to get our gospel before the people, but it may be our own fault, perhaps we are hiding our light under a bushel. I believe we must use every means, device and way to present the angel's message before the sons and daughters of men. The Master went everywhere doing good. He is our leader and commander. Are we willing to follow? Surely the servant is no greater than his master.

In conclusion, let me say that there are great opportunities in this city to present this gospel. Lots of good shady places are here where we can hold forth in open air meetings. Will we be favored with a good live missionary this summer? I hope we will. Ever praying for Zion's welfare and its ultimate triumph.

Yours in bonds,

THOMAS B. CAMPBELL.

The Higher Powers of Man

We feel it an unusual privilege to present for sale to the church a new book of the character of The Higher Powers of Man, by President Frederick M. Smith, Ph. D.

While it was not written to be a popular seller, being the dissertation submitted to the Clark University at the completion of his work to secure a doctor's degree, it will find a popular response with trained minds all over the church and among able thinkers who are not members with us.

It proceeds in a masterful manner to elucidate the wonderful yet not commonly understood phenomenon of "second breath."

A most convincing bibliography has been consulted and is presented for the benefit of those who wish to follow incidental references to their sources.

To own and assimilate such a book instills an inward dignity and inspirational impulses which in a measure satisfy our innate longings for greater comprehension.

The scope of the book is rather extensive, an explanation of the ecstatic feelings occupying the most prominent place.

The binding is in beautiful green cloth, lettered in white. The type is large and clear. There are 232 pages. The price is $1.25, postpaid.

Our Departed Ones

WILDERMUTH.—Eloise, daughter of H. S. and Berta Wildermuth, was born September 11, 1915, blessed by P. G. Hager September 25, 1915. Died March 24, 1918, near Amboy, Washington. Sermon by G. M. Shippy.

KILTS.—Lysander Kilts was born June 20, 1839, departed this life at the home of his youngest daughter February 14, 1918, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Married Sarah Winnie, November 22, 1859. She died sixteen years ago. To this union were born 10 children, 5 boys and 5 girls. All were with him at the last except one boy who died 30 years ago. He was baptized October, 1888. Thus another faithful one has gone to his reward.

CHRISTENSEN.—Sister Sine Christensen, born February 6, 1835, at Egtved, Jutland, Denmark. Died April 5, 1918. In 1857 she became the wife of Marcus Christensen and to them were born 7 children, 4 sons and 3 daughters. The husband and the sons preceded her in death, 3 daughters and 7 grandchildren remain to mourn. The family came to Iowa in 1871 and have resided in Pottawattamie County since. Baptized September 27, 1874. Funeral sermon by H. N. Hansen, assisted by Hans Petersen. Interment in Hazel Dell Cemetery.

HANSEN.—James C. Hansen was born in Denmark, July 9, 1849. Came to America in 1885, settling near Guilford, Missouri. Baptized at Guilford by A. J. Moore June 3, 1889. Was a faithful member of the church until the time of his death, which occurred February 5, 1918, at Guilford. Left to mourn are his wife, one brother, and 3 grandsons, in America, and 4 sisters in Denmark, and also many friends. Funeral from Guilford church, in charge of W. B. Torrance. Sermon by O. W. Okerlind. Interment in Twinford cemetery.

GAYLORD.—Philinda E. Russell, born in Meggs County, Ohio, April 6, 1845, died at Tabor, Iowa, April 7, 1918. Came to Iowa with her mother and stepfather in 1854, settling near Tabor, and on February 12, 1863, married M. W. Gaylord, who, with 5 sons and 16 grandchildren, survives her, two children having died in infancy and two after maturity. She was a devoted wife and mother, a helpful neighbor, and a worthy member of the church with which she united soon after her marriage. Funeral services conducted at the home by Charles Fry.

FROM HERE AND THERE

"Christianity teaches people to wear clothing; mixed bathing teaches them not to."—J. O. Dutton.

"We are still mostly a country church."—D. J. Krahl.

"A number of people here have as much intelligence as I have."—John Zahnd.

"I went into a restaurant one time and asked if they served lobsters," said F. J. Ebeling. "The clerk looked at me and quickly answered, 'Certainly, what will you have?'"

"When an energetic person has time, he will study the thing nearest at hand. I knew of a man who studied navigation all one winter, the driest thing in the world."—R. W. Farrell.

Seats for the two renditions of the "Elijah" oratorio, on the nights of the 11th and 13th, are given out by the ticket method this year. The local people are urged to allow the visitors to attend on Thursday evening, while they may attempt to do so on Saturday. Tickets are given out without charge to those who ask for them to the capacity of the house, in two colors, for the two evenings. None under fifteen years of age are admitted.

THREE SAINTS ON CITY COUNCIL

They had a city election in Independence on April 2, and John M. Lloyd and David Crick were elected as members of the city council, while George A. Gould held over. They were elected on a straight ticket for clean government. In fact the whole ticket elected represented the better element for a clean city, without saloons.

NEW CHURCH AT PONTIAC, MICHIGAN

The Saints at Pontiac have purchased a church building in an exceptionally favorable location in the center of this city of about twenty-seven thousand. It will be remodeled by easy stages, including the installation of a stone basement. The branch was only organized in 1916, following a series of street services, growing from about a dozen to half a hundred. We congratulate you, Pontiac, on the favorable proposition you have been able to secure, and Detroit on the result of intelligent missionary effort.

The Religio executive reelected J. A. Gunsolley as editor of the Senior Religio Quarterly and Charles B. Woodstock as editor of the Junior Religio Quarterly.

THE HIGHER POWERS OF MAN

This is the title of the dissertation of President Frederick M. Smith, in book form, for presentation at the Clark University to obtain his degree as doctor of philosophy. It is just off the Herald Office press, nicely bound in cloth, of large, clear type, and will be of much interest to many in the church. He has lectured on some of the subjects included in the book, and to the delight of practically all studious people. The sale price is $1.25 and the proceeds over the expense of production will revert to the church through the Board of Publication. The book should have a wide reading on its merits, as we believe it will have. A limited number were printed, and we suggest that orders be sent in early, either to the Herald or Ensign Office.

LATTER DAY SAINT SALES ASSOCIATION

The Latter Day Saint Traveling Men's Association met and decided to enlarge their field to include all who were engaged in sales work of any kind. The new name is the title to this paragraph. They have enrolled quite a number and hope to have many others affiliate with them. The enrollment fee is two dollars, after which there are annual dues of one dollar. The present intention is to use this fund for the publication of a monthly periodical especially for the assistance of the members. Salespeople all over the church will no doubt be interested and may become members on the terms indicated above by corresponding with Clarence Skinner, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

THREE GOOD BOOKS FOR NORMAL WORK

Elder A. E. Warr, who has been engaged in normal work for a number of years, recommends the following as excellent texts for normal superintendents who desire to become better acquainted with the principles involved in good teaching: Common Sense, by E. W. Thornton; Training for service, by Herbert Moniger; A Bible School Vision, by P. H. Welshimer. They may be secured of the Herald Publishing House.

Various members were speaking of the qualities of the men who have been proposed for ordination to the office of high priest. Finally, when David E. Dowker's name was under consideration and others had spoken, J. J. Cornish bobbed up and exclaimed: "I blessed him and baptized him, so it's all right." And it was.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Irreligious disputations over religious questions have furnished the Devil with six thousand years of grand opera. It is time that the Saints should withdraw entirely from such a chorus and learn more of the major and minor notes of the grand new song whose sweet concord shall entertain the angelic host.

It is always best, when at all possible, to concede and believe that an opponent is honest in his convictions. One who is too swift to make a charge to the contrary casts rather a severe reflection upon his own sincerity. It is better to concede a mistaken honesty to ten hypocrites than to call a man a hypocrite, who is really contending for what he believes.

Christ at rare intervals denounced individuals. But he was an infallible judge of human nature. Not many of his followers have the gift of discernment so highly developed that they can safely go beyond him and make their denunciations other than of rare occurrence.

Religious questions seem to have created more friction in the world than any other questions. Probably because the methods that men have sought to employ in the religious field are more obviously out of place there than in any other field.

Two politicians who are struggling for supremacy expect to encounter guile. Each expects the other to use the weapons of the world. But when two long-robed priests in the heat of debate detect the mutual gleam of hate in rage enkindled eyes strangely enough each is surprised and feels deeply aggrieved.

While in the past political questions have whetted swords and set men at each other in more or less honorable combat (usually less honorable) religious questions, and discussions of them, have created the most bitter, cruel, and unjust hatred, hatred that has known neither pity nor reason.

It is evident that from the first improper word in "religious" discussion to the last act of unbridled hate that commits the heretic to the flames the man who uses such means to advance his cause has not yet grasped the first faint gleam of the intelligence that God is love.

God and Christ and the Holy Spirit are one in opinion upon all subjects, because they are free from all error, and all inevitably arrive at one correct conclusion.

It is evident that a similar condition may obtain among the children of God when they arrive at a certain stage of development. But it is equally evident, painfully so at times, that a long and thorough education and discipline are necessary before that stage is reached.

The Holy Ghost is to guide the Saints to the final destiny of all truth. We may as well expect that differences of opinion will be in evidence at all points this side of the terminal. Thus we may avoid some unpleasant surprises and preserve the equilibrium of our spirits.

We repeat that we may well expect differences of opinion and so be prepared to deal with them in such a way that they shall not work injury to the church. We suggest that as one of the first great steps toward unity we learn to talk our differences over in a proper way—a way that shall preserve and cement our fellowship instead of severing it.

We must hold together in bonds of brotherly love while we journey to the point where the mists shall clear away and absolute oneness becomes possible.

It is no sin for Saints to differ. It is a sin for them to quarrel about their differences. God has been offended in the past, not because his people have seen things in different lights, but because of the way in which they have treated each other as a result of such differences.

First, we must have unity of purpose and spirit, based upon love. Afterward we may secure unity of opinion and teaching, based upon a mutual knowledge of truth. That is the divine order of progression.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE BUILDING OF ZION

President Smith laid great stress in his report, on the necessity of spiritual Zion, and that a temporal Zion or building without righteousness would avail us nothing. A moral or ethical basis is primary.

B. R. McGuire also emphasized this feature strongly in his sermon on Thursday morning, April 11, in that he pointed out that the Jews possessed the land, they had the people, they were gathered, they owned the temple lot, they built the temple, and possessed the temple, yet they failed because they rejected Christ, their temple was destroyed and they were driven out. Reference was also made to the conditions eighty years ago in Missouri, and the query directly confronting us as to how we shall meet the issue of to-day. Will we need to be chastened or will we learn without punishment to do the will of God, and that righteousness is primary?

As has already been indicated in the news of conference a number of sermons were arranged on this theme, in the upper auditorium at the Stone Church for the forenoons of the week. These sermons were supplemented by others in the near-by branches upon the same theme. Most of these sermons have been reported. We trust the result will be a clearer definition and a clearer realization of what is required.

The Order of Bishops continued to meet, after the close of conference, having to determine what is meant by stewardship, inheritance, consecration, and the storehouse. It is required of them in the up-building of Zion. The joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, seventies and Order of Bishops, also had these same things under consideration in their post conference sessions. But back of it all still stands the individual citizen of the kingdom of God, and the necessity that each one of us keep the commandments of God and seek to do his will. The moral and ethical issue is the basis, the foundation stone of Zion. It is a time for preparation; it is a time for watchcare that we stumble not in a sudden hour of weakness, but that we live so as to have the Spirit of God with us to protect and guide us.

The work of the church depends upon the youth for the next generation and when the fires of life run high there is need of divine protection and divine help that we keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

IN RETROSPECT

The dominant note of the recent General Conference was loyalty. This factor was emphasized more than any other one idea before the conference. The Sanitarium has four nurses in the service and dedicated a flag on Friday evening. The church has many hundreds in the service, if not a thousand, and dedicated a flag to be hung in Bartholomew Hall, on Sunday evening.

The patriotic service on Sunday evening has already been set forth in detail, except the able address by President F. M. Smith, which was declared by citizens of Independence to be the clearest statement of our duties and the aims of the war, that they had yet heard. The report of the Presidency opened and closed with a statement concerning the war and our loyalty to the Government. This was telegraphed to President Wilson, and an acknowledgement received from Secretary Tumulty.

On Saturday the conference adopted a further resolution to the same effect. At every service our boys in khaki were honored guests. Frequent allusions were made, almost daily, to the American flag, and the service flag, hung in the front of the upper auditorium. To those privileged to attend the conference there could be no doubt where this church stands.

The second dominant note was youth. But very few changes in fact were made this year, or even intimated, but the importance of young people to the church, in right service, was emphasized many times.

The early morning priesthood meetings were one of the most important factors in the conference, and the most beneficial. President Smith took personal charge and the greater part of the time was spokesman, setting forth his high ideals for the men of the ministry.

The preaching services were arranged in a regular program. This did not interfere with spiritual preparation and power. Services were arranged at six or seven different places all day on both Sundays. Thus a wide choice was offered to those who attended.

The most important matters of business transacted were the agreement with the Church of Christ, often called Hedrickites, which was adopted, practically unanimously, by both bodies.

The adoption of the report of the coordinating committee, providing for six departments, the six heads of which, with the President of the church, constitutes a coordinating committee, to rearrange the work of the church institutions and auxiliaries for efficiency.

The suspension of the requirements in the Rules of Order and Debate for the election of branch priest, teacher, and deacon, sometimes called presiding priest, teacher, and deacon, was adopted by a large vote but not a two thirds vote.

The provision for a reorganization and development of the Historian's department, authorizing the joint council to provide for a historian and two assistants.

The presentation of the names of two men to be ordained evangelical ministers; of men to be ordained high priests; and of some six or seven to be ordained seventies; J. W. Davis to be ordained as President of Seventy; W. S. Macrae as counselor to J. A. Tanner in the presidency of the High Priests Quorum.

Among various reports adopted, involving but little discussion, we recall: the Library Commission is referred to the joint council with power to act; the library building and dormitory at Graceland College deferred for one year with provision for securing plans including plans for the erection of these buildings with relation to the buildings already erected and other possible buildings. The erection of a meeting place for General Conference was referred to the Presidency, Twelve, and Order of Bishops to investigate and report next conference. The Graceland Extension Institute and Lecture Board were referred to the committee on coordination. The Eastern Michigan and Saskatchewan districts were divided, and the boundaries of the Northern Nebraska District defined. Provision was made that the Presidency appoint one or more auditors, as may be required, who will do their work at such times during the year as may appear advisable, reporting to each General Conference. The committee on church office buildings discharged. The Presidency was authorized to appoint a church architect. The boards of Graceland College, Sanitarium, Children's Home were sustained. Mark H. Siegfried was nominated as a member of the Board of Publication and so chosen. The selection of Doctor G. I. Harrington as physician to the church was approved. The selection of Floyd M. McDowell to take charge of the boy movement was approved and the classification of this movement referred to the coordinating committee.

MERIT APPRECIATED

It is interesting how the thoughts of many run in a similar direction. Elder T. W. Williams has been among those missed at recent General Conferences. Last year he arrived in time to attend the last session of the conference. This year he was on the ground bright and early, in fact, he was one of the five speakers at the General Religio Convention; he was one of the speakers at the General Sunday School Convention; he was one of the two speakers of the evening at the public program, Tuesday evening, of the Woman's Auxiliary; he was placed upon the program of the Sanitarium to dedicate their service flag but had to find a substitute because he was appointed to go to one of the outlying schoolhouses to speak on behalf of the Third Liberty Loan. He offered the dedicatory prayer for the service flag to be hung at Bartholomew Hall representing the service of the members of the church. He was spokesman on Sunday morning at Central Kansas City Church, where he had formerly been pastor. His paper at the High Priests Quorum sessions was so acceptable that it was ordered placed in the archives of the quorum for preservation. He spoke at least twice at the church on the Temple Lot, by request. He was elected first vice president of the Religio Society. Evidently he has returned to active service and is glad of it.

"STAND UPON THY FEET"

(A sermon for young people delivered at the Saints' Church, Lamoni, Iowa, April 21, 1918, by Elder E. D. Moore.)

Among the numerous Israelite captives in Babylon was a man who had been carried with them from Jerusalem, where a settlement had been made on the River Chebar, one of the many sluggish streams of this vast Asiatic plain.

We can well imagine the intense longing with which he and his companions in exile scanned the western sky, thinking of the former home conditions so ruthlessly broken up, to be displaced by a condition of virtual slavery in a strange land.

This destruction of Jerusalem and the consequent captivity was the same which Lehi and his party had escaped, being directed through the wilderness and across the sea to a choice land—another continent. God led the one party, and though the others had rebelled and gone astray, he was seeking after them and was about to send a prophet to warn and bring them back to the old paths.

Evidently God was not willing that the oppressed Israelites should charge him with neglect and thereby fall into the depths of the vices so rampant in that age. They had been given the law of Moses with its minutæ of observances, but it had been forgotten. It was necessary that it be brought to their remembrance. So Ezekiel was chosen.

A HEAVENLY VISION

On this day as he stood among the captives on the Chebar, the heavens opened and a wonderful vision was spread before his eyes. It is not necessary that we dwell at length on the details of this, for our occidental minds are incapable of fathoming the intricacies which appeal to those of the orient. Even when the interpretation is given, we often feel incompetent and incapable of understanding the figures involved. But it was a wonderful sight and full of meaning. So amazing was it that the young man fell to his face on the ground and heard a voice speaking. The words he heard we wish you to hear (Ezekiel 2: 1):

"Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee."

God could have given his message to the prostrate man, but his was a message of action and a charge for which the embryo prophet should be ready and alert. The wondering man arose to his trembling feet. The Spirit told him he was to be sent to the children of Israel, the descendants of their father Abraham who had by command of God left these same fertile plains some twenty-five centuries before, to settle in the rough and uninviting little country of Canaan to the west.

Ezekiel was sent to a rebellious people, denominated as impudent and hard-hearted. He was to deliver his message with a "Thus saith the Lord," and they, whether they accepted or rejected, should know that a prophet had been among them.

EATS A BOOK

What a glorious privilege it is to be the mouth-piece of God! Yet what a responsibility, lest in our enthusiasm our own message creep in and lead ourselves as well as others astray!

But there was more for him to do, a definite preparation for an important work. He was to open his mouth and eat. As he looked, he beheld before him a roll containing writing within and without, lamentations, mourning, and woe. He was instructed to eat the book and its message and go speak to the house of Israel. He tells us the taste was "in my mouth as honey for sweetness."

He was about ready. The details were specific: "Thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language. . . . They would have hearkened unto thee. But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee."

Not a very encouraging situation, to know beforehand that one's message will not be accepted. Yet he was warned to fear them not. His forehead was to be as adamant and he was not to be dismayed at their looks. Furthermore, when those whom he had warned died in their sins, the condemnation would be on themselves, while if there were others who thus perished without his warning, the sin was to be upon his own head. There was no escaping the consequences, irksome as the task might seem to be.

A WATCHMAN IN ISRAEL

Now his experiences began. The Spirit carried him away and set him down in a distant settlement of his own people. He remained a week, a silent and much astonished stranger among them. When the Lord again spoke to him, he was told that a part of his duty was to be a watchman, to see things as they were. That is an important qualification for any of us.

Not only was this newly selected servant taught how and what to speak, but he had training in how to demonstrate to his people certain important events in their history. One of these was to take a tile and set it up to show how Jerusalem had been besieged and overthrown. With a razor he was to shave his head and beard and with the hair demonstrate God's judgments on the rebellious house of Israel. His was an important work and it must needs be he have good training. He was now a prophet of God.

PAUL IN PREPARATION

We present here another young man in training for a servant of God. A bright light had stricken him with blindness, and after he had fallen to the earth, a voice from heaven commanded him:

"Rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee."

It was God speaking to the aggressive Saul, and the words here are the ones he recalled and quoted to King Agrippa as he stood in his presence. As he concluded the marvelous story of his conversion, he asked the king: "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest."

You will recall the classic answer of the proud monarch, convinced against his will: "Paul, almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

The preparation of this apostle to the Gentiles was a little different from that of Ezekiel, yet his was as important a message. He was to be sent to a people rooted and grounded in the most bewildering polytheism, victims of a general and insidious licentiousness that had for years been a part of their religious observances.

To a man of the caliber of Paul, it was no doubt a "mean job"—mean as we count pleasant duties. Why should Paul the brilliant and talented Pharisee be sent on a disagreeable mission? He was a man who could move kings and rulers. Yet we hear of him living close to the heart of humanity, where he could minister rather than be ministered to. He lived in his own hired house for two years and was a man evidently beloved of all. His training had been of the best, yet he counted it not too good to be used to the utmost in the service of his fellow men.

OUR OWN PREPARATION

Possibly there are some Ezeziels or Pauls among us. We have gone into some detail as to the methods of their preparation and sought to emphasize an outstanding characteristic of both situations that they might be inspirational to us in our preparation for further service. We are confident there are few among us who are to escape responsibility, and it becomes us to understand it now.

It is time for us to get our ostrich heads out from the sand where we may have hidden them to shut out the sight of danger or disagreeable tasks. The call to us is also, "Rise, and stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee." The admonition has come again and again, "Come up higher," and possibly we have not sensed the fact that it was a personal call to us. The time is at our door when we must either accept the responsibility manfully or run from it like Jonah. We are not assured that God will be as solicitous for us as he was for him. The thing that swallows us up may not be as kindly dispositioned as the fish that was prepared for Jonah when he was running away from his Nineveh assignment.

HAVE WE DIGESTED BOOKS?

We may have a book offered us to eat—several of them. If we have not assimilated the three standard books of the church, and become familiar with a goodly number of others, we may be required to do so. Somehow we can but believe it will be to our advantage to have done so before the compulsion time comes. We are all aware that a familiarity with the Scriptures in the possession of a good man, is "as honey for sweetness," when used by the inspiration of God's Spirit. Solomon puts it: "Apples of gold in pictures of silver."

OUR ATTITUDE

The record says that Ezekiel went with bitterness of spirit. We know that Paul was constantly beset with a "thorn in the flesh," evidently an affliction that caused him much sorrow. We must expect that it will require considerable fortitude at times for us to take up uncongenial tasks. But when we are really converted and prompted by the Spirit of God, there will come an adaptability to our natures that will allow us to feel as interested in the welfare of the rebellious and unkind as to associate with those actuated by the highest motives. Though it may not be natural for us, we can all acquire the attitude of "all things to all men," that Paul says he did.

In our deep meditations it is only an ordinary conclusion for us to decide that we are not exactly well-placed in our present station or office. It is possible for us to feel that we can do other work much better and gradually become dissatisfied with ourselves and what we are doing. We offer no objections to that—if the chief dissatisfaction is with ourselves. There are those who constantly yearn for new fields to explore, new seas on which to sail, new duties with which to become acquainted. Good. Let the urge ever be forward.

In a recent magazine, Charles P. Steinmetz, who is paid a hundred thousand dollars a year for his dissatisfaction, gives us this most pertinent statement of his ideals:

"If I were able to bequeath to every young man one virtue or quality, I would give him the spirit of divine discontent, for without it the world would stand still."

But don't forget that God is as cognizant of the difference in discontent as is man—and we all think we can distinguish the difference. Divine dissatisfaction, if allowed to have its full sway, will eventually lead us to a celestial condition where we will have a real content. Mere human disgruntledness is bound to lower us in our own estimation and consign us to sorrow and woe.

A little newspaper item recently struck us as typical of life in general. The news dispatch ran about as follows:

CRAWFISH CLOSES FACTORY

An insignificant crawfish, measuring three inches in length, that became lodged in the meter, shut off the supply of water for the big La Belle Iron works at Wheeling, West Virginia, and caused the big plant to close down temporarily, making idle three thousand workmen. The crawfish had traveled from the river through the pump plant to the city reservoir and through the water mains, a distance of more than eight thousand feet, before reaching the meter.

It has been our sad privilege to see little, insignificant, two-legged, human crawfishes travel much farther than that and finally work out the complete disorganization of Sunday schools and even branches, as well as endless other trouble. Have you ever known a human crawfish, always traveling backward, always suspicious, constantly ready to pinch? Their discontent was not what we could call the divine variety.

NOT QUALIFIED

In a careful survey of ourselves we may find disappointingly few real qualifications. That is the rule, at least, yet it is our observation that God is constantly calling men to occupy in positions for which they are not qualified. They may be of the right disposition and temperament; they have had training which has largely fitted them for the work, but a careful study of the situation will usually show that we are given a new goal and asked to reach it. It is well that we do not lose sight of that.

There are those in all lines of endeavor who are asked to occupy, possibly in the priesthood, but who put it off because of lack of qualifications. Such should beware lest the responsibility rebound like a boomerang and be the means of much loss. Why, the Government of the United States doesn't require that a man be a soldier before he can enter the ranks. Raw recruits are taken in, some of them very raw, and by putting them through certain training, physical and mental, they become proficient. Have we less faith in our ability to qualify in the army of the Lord?

MISTAKES

Then most of us are prone to look backward and become morbid over the mistakes we think we have made. If we had only decided more wisely, it would have been so much better and we could move forward with better grace. While it is essential that we avoid making mistakes as much as possible and be wise servants, we should get much consolation from the fact that all mistakes do not remain such.

When the Pilgrim Fathers landed on the bleak and rock-bound coast of New England instead of sailing on to Palm Beach, it may have been a mistake. Everything was against them, the weather, the soil, the Indians, but they stuck to it. True, a few did later pull off and start a New Dorchester in South Carolina. It was more favorably located and should have outdistanced its namesake, but it didn't. To-day old settlers will show you the ruins where once stood New Dorchester, while the city in Massachusetts, a part of Greater Boston, is a seething beehive of industry. Not all of our so-called mistakes are such.

Then it is possible we have the wrong viewpoint, which is an easy thing to acquire. Our failures may be similar to the one a young man made in the following story we once read:

Some years ago a discouraged young doctor in one of our large cities, was visited by his father, who came up from a rural district to look after his boy.

"Well, my son," said he, "how are you getting along?"

"I'm not getting along at all," was the disheartening answer. "I'm not doing a thing."

The old man's countenance fell, but he spoke of courage and patience and perseverance. Later in the day he went with his son to the "Free Dispensary," where the young doctor had an unsalaried position, and where he spent an hour or more every day.

The father sat by, a silent but intensely interested spectator, while twenty-five poor unfortunates received help. The doctor forgot his visitor while he bent his skilled energies to his task; but hardly had he closed the door on the last patient when the old man burst forth:

"I thought you told me you were not doing a thing! Why, if I had helped twenty-five people in a month as much as you have done in one morning, I would thank God that my life counted for something."

"There isn't any money in it, though," explained the son, somewhat abashed.

"Money!" the old man shouted, still scornfully. "Money! What is money in comparison with being of use to your fellow men? Never mind about your money; go right along at this work every day. I'll go back to the farm and gladly furnish the money to support you as long as you live—yes, and sleep soundly every night with the thought that I have helped you to help your fellow men."

Ah, Saints and friends, it may not be that we are called to be Ezekiels or Pauls or commissioned servants of God, but it may be our great privilege to go back to our farms, our workshops, our desks, or counters or typewriters and there dedicate our noblest service to the unleashing of the bonds that have hitherto bound our men who are sent out. There are skilled men among us who are not permitted to occupy because too many of us have not sensed the real situation. And it is also possible that some of the things we are doing ourselves are as truly service to our fellow men as were those of the young doctor. Let us not undervalue service.

The details of stewardships, inheritances, consecrations, and tithing are being worked out as never before, and there is no reason why we should not understand, if we care to.

NUMBER OF TREES IN THE APPLES

There is an old Bantu proverb that says we can count the number of apples on a tree but we cannot count the number of trees in the apples.

We can usually count our membership, locally and otherwise, but who of us can predict the future should the latent talents among us really be developed? We can very easily compute the number of men sent out under conference appointment each year, but are there any among us who can estimate the actual results they will attain once we range ourselves unitedly back of them? Only God can say. He has in fact told us that "I have many forces at work in the world, . . . I have many spiritual forces at work that you know not of. You see but the smaller part of my work, and the world perceives it not at all."

History is moving rapidly, in the world and in the church. Only yesterday, speaking comparatively, the Sunday school and the Religio and the Woman's Auxiliary were but children playing in the back yard of the church. To-day they are recognized as strong departments in the kingdom of God on earth. It is a new responsibility pregnant with possibilities—if we are big enough to be men. It is time for us to lay aside our swaddling clothes and our milk bottles and take our places as coworkers in the establishment of Zion. As the words of our text ring out, let us remember them:

"Son of man, arise and stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee." E. D. MOORE.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE

We are just in receipt of a notice from the League to Enforce Peace, of a special meeting to be held in Philadelphia, May 16 to 18. The object of the convention is to sustain the determination of our people to fight until Prussian militarism has been defeated; to confirm opposition to premature peace, and to focus attention on the only advantage the American people are hoping to gain from the war—a permanent peace guaranteed by a League of Nations. It is signed by J. Cardinal Gibbons, John Sharp Williams, Samuel Gompers, William H. Taft, Alton B. Parker, and Henry Van Dyke.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

What of the Times?

For hundreds of years did danger lurk
In "David's City" ruled by the Turk;
But our God hath decreed
That she shall be freed
And no king can stay its forthcoming!

For this is the age long since foretold;
Days filled with wonder, each morn unfold;
The time is now here,
"Men's hearts fail with fear"
To but guess at the next thing coming.

In the world is commotion and danger;
For many are now moved by anger,
But to us who have heard
The angel's glad word—
"The hour is at hand for his coming."

Lo! The time has now come to rejoice,
Let us lift up our heads, and with voice Ring out far and near
"Oh, ye people, fear, God's judgments, this hour is now bringing."

Then what is there left for our doing?
And what task shall we be pursuing,
When men's hearts are sore vexed
Even nations perplexed
To find aught that will stop the destruction?

Let us hasten the "city" to found;
In its walls only peace shall abound:
And it's there, we may flee
And in safety can be,
Till Jesus, our Lord, is seen coming.

Shall his people still longer delay?
Ah, where, oh, where can we stay,
If unfaithful we've been,
Can we hide from him then?
E'en the rocks and the hills will be falling!

For the "old things" are passing away:
And the "new ways" are coming to stay.
Do not labor for self,
Nor yet for yourself,
But labor each man for his brother.

All we have should we now hold "in trust":
'Tis the only way that is just,
Then let each one receive
As each one hath need
Of the things to this life pertaining.

Ah, glorious day, long foretold—!
Come, hasten your joys to unfold!
The signs all betoken
What prophets have spoken,
So, welcome, earth's glad Sabbath morning!
MARY E. GILLIN.

Look Up, Sad Heart

Look up, sad heart, look up to see
The face of Him who died for thee;
Oh, feel the smile that o'er it shone,
The smile that welcomed back his own.
The bounds of earth his feet have trod,
He wandered here so far from God;
He knew temptations, doubt, and fear,
The hour of trial, the bitter fear.
Away from earth he needs must go,
His sorrowing friends were left below.
Oh, hear him say as then, to thee,
"Where'er I go, thou shalt be.
My Father's house holds mansions fair
For thee I now shalt one prepare;
My pierced feet have marked the way
That leads unto eternal day.
I will not leave you here alone;
To you the Comforter shalt come,
Unto the heart with grief bowed low
The Father's precious gift shalt go.
I feel the pain, I know the care,
My grace shalt strengthen thee to bear.
Oh, rest your broken heart on me,
While God, the Father, blesseth thee.
I am the resurrection sure,
And life to all who shall endure.
Let not your heart so troubled be,
With faith believe and trust in me.
There is no victory for the grave;
Far greater is my power to save;
The seeming darkness of the way
Adds splendor to the eternal day.

CHARACTER BUILDING--Part 2

BY WARDELL CHRISTY

THE TRUTH ABOUT NARCOTICS

After men are enlightened and still persist in the use of tobacco, they should be compelled to associate with the other creatures who use it, and by the way there are only three creatures that will use it; these are, mankind, the loathsome tobacco worm, and the rock goat of Africa, and the smell of the latter is so offensive that every other animal instinctively shuns it.

About the most offensive thing you can imagine is a breath saturated with a combination of tobacco, beer, whisky, and possibly a little limburger cheese thrown in, a combination that would put a goat out of business. It took the Hun to invent the asphyxiating bomb and shell, with which to kill his enemy on the battle field, and the Christian world shudders at the horrors and cruelties of the battle field. Yet many so-called Christians to-day indulge in habits which are as destructive, and the deadly narcotic stalks about in our land destroying body and soul, unmolested and unafraid, because he is petted and caressed by the civilized world until, like the tamed snake, we have supposed him harmless. So he goes where he will, in the crowded street car, and thoroughfare, the theater, the public offices, the places of innocent public amusements, the school yard, and in some places even the church. Men will even carry its deadly fumes into the sleeping rooms of their innocent wives and children to poison their bodies and distort their spirits and thus lay the basis for a thousand ills, physically, morally, and spiritually.

I copied a little history of the discovery, name, and transplantation of the curse, from page seven of Tobacco Mysteries Exposed, by Doctor Krauss:

Tobacco was the name of a "Y" shaped Indian pipe that usually consisted of a hollow forked reed, the two prongs of which are fitted into the nostrils, the smoke being drawn from the tobacco placed in the end of the stem. That is where the word tobacco is derived. Tobago also was the name of an island and it was first believed that that is where we got the name of tobacco. It was Christopher Columbus who gave it the name, owing to its resemblance of the shape of the Indian pipe.

Tobacco is now found growing in almost all the inhabited countries but it is a native of America and the adjacent islands. So Columbus, besides discovering America, was the real discoverer of tobacco in 1492, when he found the native Indians using the weed upon his first visit to the New World.

Extensive investigations have established the fact that tobacco smoking was first a religious rite which gradually became a social habit among the natives. Columbus and his successors some years afterward carried the plant back to Spain and a Spanish monk also identified the weed in a province of San Domingo and called it tobacco.

Sir Walter Raleigh took the weed to England, and Jean, Nicot introduced it to the French, and from thence the name nicotine was introduced. Adventurous traders brought some seed to Turkey and other places, when some Spanish argosies traveled with some seeds westward from Mexico to the Philippine Islands and again to China and Japan and now for four centuries after its discovery tobacco is being cultivated in nearly every country and used by every race of men.

"A corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit . . . neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit . . . by their fruits ye shall know them." From its discovery to the present time there is nothing to be recorded as being of benefit or blessing to the users of tobacco and other habit-forming narcotics and drugs. Their use has called for the outlay of millions of dollars annually, which has brought nothing but physical, moral and spiritual loss to the users, and has robbed thousands of innocent dependents of the real necessities of life, and the comforts and educational advantages that would have robbed the earth in glory and the home in the beauty of holiness.

Ten thousand times ten thousand lives, not only of the users of narcotics, but of the innocent offspring of these fathers and mothers, have been cut short, and untold sufferings endured, our insane asylums, prisons, and highways are filled with the degenerates, the living fruitage of the evil tree, narcotics.

While walking in one of Minnesota's beautiful little towns one day, I walked into the rendezvous of an Episcopal rector. Upon knocking I was bidden to come in. On entering I found the spiritual adviser in a reclining chair, with his feet resting comfortably in another chair well cushioned and conveniently located, and placidly pulling away at what would be classed as a very fine Meerschaum pipe. He was surrounded with many volumes of classics and good literature; the furniture was of a superior type, but no less than seven different styles and shapes of pipes and other smoker's articles adorned the furniture, ranging from the expensive Meerschaum to the old Meerschaum which was as black as creosote paving block, and the air was as foul as the air in the corral of the rock goat. I know, and you know, that I had just as well look for spiritual gems in a gambling den as in that environment, even though he be labeled "minister" and pose as the representative of the meek and lowly Jesus.

My mission was to talk insurance, but almost instinctively I said, "Doctor —, if you were to call upon a physician for advice, counsel, and professional instruction, and you found him surrounded with all classes of intoxicating liquors, with several empty bottles at hand, and leisurely pulling away at a partially emptied vial, what would your better impulse and judgment suggest to you?"

"To turn around, walk out, and find a physician whose mind was not so contaminated."

"Well, if my mission here this morning were to obtain spiritual instruction and help to Christ in this life, I would be compelled to do the same."

He jumped to his feet as if intending to throw me out of his den. "What do you mean by that statement, sir?"

"Simply this, that I am sure that tobacco is as much a poison, narcotic, and destructive force as the other, that it is unclean, and that the Spirit of God does not dwell in unclean temples, and if liquor disqualifies a man to direct me in moral and physical disorder or order, tobacco would likewise disqualify a man to direct me in moral and spiritual order and disorder.

Then followed a long argument pro and con as to the merits and demerits of the filthy weed. It was gratifying to learn that the so-called representative of Christ and the exploiters of the tobacco industry were using the same arguments to justify themselves in their nefarious business and habits.

However, one thing he said is worthy of repeating. "If tobacco is so injurious and wrong why is it that God did not say anything about it in the Bible, as he did about liquor?"

Well, the truth is that when tobacco was discovered and its use established, man was not on speaking terms with God. God was willing and anxious to speak if there had been hearts and minds attuned to heavenly messages. The use of tea, coffee, and tobacco was introduced at a later time. As soon as there was a prophet raised up who was willing to hear, God spoke and said, "Tobacco is not good for man, and hot drinks are not for the body or belly." But men have assumed about the same attitude toward the counsel and instructions of God in this as in every other age. The men of the church sneer and say: "God is not concerning himself with such trivial matters, and this revelation which seeks to rob us of our liberty was hatched under the hat of the supposed prophet; while some people, with very good intent, possibly, have been 'seeking out inventions' to distort the message and advice of God, and thus make themselves and others believe that God did not mean tea and coffee when he said 'hot drinks.'"

It was the wise man who said: "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." In other words God made man good and to walk straight but he has sought out many sinful practices, and the new ways of making one's self more wise and happy than God has made us, as indicated in Ecclesiastes 7: 29, and have invented many concoctions that have proved very detrimental to his best friends.

TEA AND COFFEE

If we were unable to find one direct commandment prohibiting the use of tea and coffee, there is but one thing necessary to be proved in order to make its use a sin and unwise upon the part of any true Latter Day Saint. That is that it has no real food value, and that there is no longer any doubt that thousands have been materially injured as a result of its use.

If it were possible for me to produce one victim of the caffeine drug, whose life was ruined and whose death was a result of its use, then it would become men of God, if no other class, to take careful research into its merits and demerits as a beverage for continued and pernicious use. Every day adds a new name to the long list of witnesses and living examples of the nerve-destroying effects of caffeine and theine.

Look around you and see, dyspepsia, nervous irritableness, ulcers and cancer of the stomach, annually on the increase, with almost every reputable physician in the country testifying that a large percentage of this is due to the use of tea, coffee, tobacco, and alcohol.

I am asking no quarter of the tea and tobacco soaks when I state that it is my candid opinion after some very careful investigation and a special instruction, in which a voice spoke to me in the silent hours of the night, which I believe to have been the voice of the Spirit of God and said, "Lift up your voice and cry out against tobacco, tea, and coffee, and its ill results in my church." This was during my first months of service in the Brooklyn Branch. Since that time I have had the pleasure of seeing many turn from those evils to total abstinence, and have rejoiced in their testimonies of physical and spiritual blessings.

Thousands of babes are started in life with a handicap, many suffering nervous debility, rickets and lastly, infantile paralysis as a result of the indulgence of the mother, while carrying the babe, in the use of these stimulating drugs, and the feeding of it to the child after it is born. Many well-developed and physically strong people have succumbed to its powers and have lost health and life as a result, as the following will prove. "Tea drives woman to suicide; leaps from a window" was the heading for the following article in the New York World for January 27, 1917:

Miss Bridget Gilroy, forty-four years old, suffering from a nervous breakdown brought on by excessive tea drinking, jumped from a fourth floor window of Saint Catherine hospital building. The woman's nervous condition, which resulted in her death was undoubtedly caused by tea drinking. Coroner Wagner said after an investigation. I understand she had made efforts to break herself of the habit but had been unable to do so.

Miss Gilroy was taken to the hospital yesterday afternoon by her brother, Patrick Gilroy. She was a nervous wreck and he said it was the third time she had collapsed in the last year. She was placed in the woman's ward on the fourth floor. This morning she left her bed and walked out of the ward unobserved. In the corridor she met a nun and asked to be directed to the wash room. She went in, closed the door behind her, and jumped from the window. The draught from the open window opened the door, and the nun saw that the room was empty. She hurried to the window and saw the body of the woman stuck on the fence below. Doctors hurried out, but the woman was dead before they reached her. "We simply could not stop my sister's continual tea drinking," her brother said; "she always had a pot brewing on the stove and drank it all day long, with every meal and between meals. She drank at least fifteen cups a day."

I can almost hear the tea toper say, "She was a hog and used it to excess." She could have drunk fifteen cups of pure, unadulterated water with physical benefit and mental upbuilding, and if traditions had taught her that she must have flavored drinks, she could have drunk twenty cups of pure barley water, what the Lord told us to use if we needed flavored drinks, and would have received no injury, but blessing; provided she did not drink it hot.

Less than two months ago a lady told me that her son had heard me deliver a lecture to some young people on the importance of clean living, clean thinking, and good habits, who on returning home told his mother there was to be no more tea, coffee nor tobacco in their home, that he immediately quit and she made the effort to stop her tea with him. She was one of our good sisters that drink from six to twelve or fifteen cups a day. There are not such a few in this, which we would call without thinking, extravagant class, that you had better stop and honestly count before you pass judgment.

The effect of her continued stimulant was immediately manifest. She was attacked with severe headaches, and weakness which continued for some six days, at which time she was unable to get out of her bed, and she called her son and said, "If you do not get me some tea, I will die." He made her the tea and the first dose of the stimulant revived her. With a few additional cups and a few hours, she was on her feet again, a living inebriate.

If her husband was addicted to the use of whiskey and lived constantly under its influence, and he would not attempt to conquer it she would call him a brute. Should he make as feeble an attempt to surmount the habit and in the height of a trial give up and call for his booze, she would call him a sissy, a coward, anything but the real thing.

Yet that woman had said to me, "Never again tea for me." She said her son had stuck to his vow, all honor to his courage and manhood. He is the kind of stuff of which real men are molded. May God not only help him to be a free man but may his example incite the shame that will cause the mother and all like her to assert her womanhood, until she is a free woman and no longer a slave.

If the ill effects of the drug (and I mean tea and coffee, as well as tobacco, and alcohol, when I use this term) were confined to the users alone it would not be so bad, but alas it is not. Every one who knows anything at all about the matter knows that it does not, and every one who will may know as much if he is willing to be taught.

Proof is better than mere testimony. If any mother wishes to prove the ill effects of narcotics upon her innocent child she may do so. Let the nursing mother take a few drops of laudanum and see how quickly the drug will take effect on the child. Let a mother who is free from the caffeine poison and whose child has not been fed the poison constantly, try the same experiment with coffee or tea and see for herself the results.

I know a mother who was very careful as to her diet, who did not drink coffee at her own home, but who after the birth of her baby while visiting away from home was induced to drink coffee, "Oh, you must have a cup of nice warm coffee this cold weather. How can you eat without it?" And such foolish advice as the addicts use to persuade all with whom they come in contact to poison themselves. She yielded to the persuasion, not thinking of any ill effects to the child, but the child immediately became sleepless, restless, nervous, awaking with tremors and startling expressions, all of which was unusual with her babe. Her good sense suggested it might be the coffee. She refused to drink more and in a short time her babe was its normal self again, sleeping quietly and with perfect poise. Most doctors of this time are agreed that tea and coffee are destructive poisons and doing great injury to the human race.

The following letter from Doctor W. A. Sinclair of Boston, Massachusetts, will be self-explanatory. It is in answer to a letter addressed to him by the writer for first hand information from a practicing physician who is a member of the high priesthood, and a man of large experience and extended practice. Let me ask you before giving it; do you not think his statements of more value than the pompous assertions of some dignitary to the contrary, who never had any experience with medicines and possibly never studied anatomy a day in his life? Judge ye this day with whom ye shall stand.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, November 22, 1917.

Dear Brother Christy: Your communication just received and I hasten to reply. I find I have an extra book on caloric values with information you ask, so will send it to you immediately. I have marked the chief things, especially in regard to tea and coffee and the time needed for them to be ingested. (See page 9.) Hope this will assist you in your investigations of liquid poisons, with which the human family are seeking to destroy themselves.

With saintly regards, I am, sincerely,
W. A. SINCLAIR.

The information especially marked in the book to which he refers is this: Tea contains about one grain of caffeine and from two to three grains of tannic acid to the teacupful. Coffee contains about 1.7 grains of caffeine and 3.24 grains of tannic acid to the cupful. Every cup of coffee you drink you are taking from one to three grains of deadly poison, and about three and one half grains of tannic acid, which is the basis of our common writing fluid. Almost every mother who is sane would know that to allow a child to drink that much strychnine from one to five times per day, would eventually kill it, and if you saw your baby pick up the ink bottle and deliberately drink the contents, you would immediately send for the doctor, and almost go frantic with fear. Yet in your ignorance you coolly and deliberately feed it to yourself and family daily, gradually developing in them nervous troubles, loss of appetite, kidney trouble and Bright's disease, rheumatism, rickets, and infantile paralysis.

SELF DENIAL AND THE TEMPORAL LAW

The major part of our activities, no matter in what sphere we happen to be, are generally conducted for the betterment of ourselves. This seems to be a rather selfish statement, yet no matter how altruistic we become in our endeavors, the greater part of our efforts are centered in and for ourselves. This is true both in our spiritual and our temporal labors. We recognize the fact that our highest aim should be to separate self as much as it is possible and make our work a work for others.

We have attained this to a greater degree in our spiritual than in our temporal lives, with a good opportunity for improvement in both. At this time, when our minds are turned towards Zion and all that Zionic conditions mean to us, we feel the need of that quality of self-sacrifice along temporal lines being more highly accentuated so that our endeavors in both fields of action might attain that proportion necessary for the realization of that condition.

In the great crisis that has come upon the world at this time, we note to what extent the people of our Nation have had to change the order of their lives, deny themselves many things and make sacrifices in order that the affairs of the Government might be carried to completion. We cannot help but feel that they are willing to sacrifice and to keep on sacrificing for the safety of the Nation of which they are a part. We of the church should be even more willing to deny ourselves and sacrifice to obtain that condition of life to which we are looking forward.

We should not forget that the Saints have been warned and forewarned that the time was fast approaching for the building up of Zion; and that we have a work to perform each and everyone, to further its redemption as a refuge for those that love and serve the Lord. In latter-day revelation the Lord tells us:

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

We do not want the same thing said about us; but to the contrary, we want to be obedient and to impart of our substance to the poor and afflicted as is contemplated in the law. If each and every one of us has a work to do, we want to find out what it is, and then do it the best we can. We have been admonished that we all should labor together with God. It matters not, if we are in the missionary work or in the affairs of business, we are called according to the gifts of God unto us. (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.) What an opportunity this gives to everyone to be a colaborer with God in the fulfillment of his purposes.

We are learning in a small way the lessons of economy and frugality thrust upon us by the world war, lessons that should have been learned by Saints years ago. God's servants have been endeavoring to impress these lessons upon the minds of the people of the church since the early days of the restoration. It is not necessary to mention the many different ways in which these lessons may be applied in our lives. To the careful and prayerful student of the gospel plan, these different methods will be presented from time to time and he can act upon the same.

One of the most important of these lessons to be learned is that of adhering more strictly to the word of God in the matter of our dress. Listen to latter-day revelation: "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands, and let all things be done in cleanliness before me." Our clothing should then be plain and simple, fulfilling in every way the purpose for which they were intended. How much could we save, to place in the hands of the Bishop for the carrying on of the gospel work, if we were all economical in this regard. Some one says, Why, brother, we give our tithing first and then our clothing is purchased out of the remainder or nine tenths. That is as it should be, and yet economy in our wearing apparel would increase our free-will offerings and our consecrations greatly and they should be given, as you know, after our tithing is paid. A conscientious application of this latter-day message to our lives will tend to make us a humble and consecrated people prepared to dwell in Zion.

Another measure of economy should be considered out of the many that present themselves to us. "Economy in our eating" is chosen along with "economy in our dress" because these two important subjects have to do with everyone that is a member of the church. Our appetites are creatures of habit and can be trained so that they want the choicest and finest of everything, or be just as satisfied with plain, wholesome foods. It is a matter of fact that these foods contain the highest percentage of nutrition and therefore by the use of them we not only economize but give to our bodies health and strength which is the foundation for success in life. In Doctrine and Covenants, section 86, we are given wisdom in this regard and are told that our lives shall be spared and the destroying angel shall pass us by if we would only heed the advice given. A more strict observance of this Word of Wisdom would give cleaner, stronger bodies for the indwelling of God's Holy Spirit, besides making us masters of ourselves by learning to control our desires and deny ourselves those things that are not for our good.

This self-denial and economy under which every member of the church should place himself, will develop a people and an organization that will be in condition to meet the Savior when he comes to earth to dwell with us. We must be a uniformly developed people, not given to keeping only part of the law; but we must keep it in its entirety. We should then make a study of our lives and see if we can improve them by denying ourselves those things that are not beneficial to us and by so conducting ourselves, do our part in the great work of redeeming Zion.

ALBERT J. BANTA.

The schools must also consciously specialize in training for that most complex and difficult of all human activities, self-government. One need only to look at the spectacle of misgoverned American cities to realize how lamentably we have failed in the past. We are failing largely because we are starving our schools financially, and almost ignoring them as communities. Surely one of the compensations for the sacrifices of this righteous war, must be a quickened sense of social values finding its most important outlet in an educational revolution which will establish in America's schools, "Democracy in education: education for democracy."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

LIVING IN A LIMOUSINE AND LIVING IN A TUB

There was quite a little group of people on the curbstone, waiting for a break in the stream of passing automobiles: among them two shopgirls and I.

The girls recognized a woman in one of the limousines as the wife of a very rich New Yorker; and their comments were distinctly envious.

I smiled to myself as I listened.

For only a few days before I had been at a party where the lady in the limousine was present: and I wished that the girls might have been there, too, and heard the remarks that she made.

She came dressed in a thousand dollars' worth of clothes, with five or ten thousand dollars' worth of jewels sprinkled over her. And, from the minute of her arrival until she left, her conversation consisted of nothing but cynicism and complaint.

She had just moved into a new apartment: it was noisy, she said, and she hated it already.

The limousine her husband had given her as a birthday surprise—and he ought to have known that she loathed upholstery of that color.

She had seen all the new shows, and they bored her to death.

Of all the bitter, soul-sick people whom I have ever met she takes first prize: and the little shopgirls envied her.

What feelings would have been in their hearts if they had lived in Athens about 400 B. C., and had seen a poorly dressed man in a wooden tub?

Pity, probably: perhaps contempt.

Yet, when Alexander the Great visited that man and offered him any favor in the world, the man replied that he wanted only one thing—that Alexander should step out of his sunlight.

A curious old world, isn't it, where a lady in her limousine, possessed of everything, is still dissatisfied: and Diogenes in his tub, owning nothing, can be so content?

We are on the threshold of a period when the struggle to get things is going to take on a new, perhaps more bitter phase.

The men who have carried the hard, unpleasant burdens of the world have learned, in this war, their power over the world.

They have learned from Russia that the most strongly entrenched government cannot stand against them.

They have learned from England that Labor can dictate to cabinets; in this country as Samuel Gompers says, they have made in three years a generation of progress.

I do not see how any real lover of the race can fail to find satisfaction in this great forward movement of the common man.

The movement will have its excesses, but has capitalism had no excesses? It will frequently prove expensive, but so has every previous regime.

My fear for the common man is not that he will cost the world too much, but that, when he gets what he wants, he will find that he has still somehow failed of happiness.

I would have him study a little the strange case of Diogenes, and of the limousine lady.

Before he sets forth on his journey to the top, I would have him cut out these lines of Milton and paste them in his hat:

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit in the center, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts
Benighted walks under the midday sun;
Himself is his own dungeon.

From the dungeons of poverty and hunger and want the common man is going to be delivered. I would put him on his guard, lest, in escaping from these, he be plunged into the worse dungeon of spiritual death.

His mind is filled now with the thought of a day when everyone will have his own limousine.

I ask him to remember that a world in which we all lived in tubs would be a first-class world, if we all had the spirit of Diogenes.

And that where there is no vision the people perish just as surely as where there is no food.—Bruce Barton, Editor, in Every Week.

WEALTH, POVERTY, AND SPIRITUALITY

[In the monthly magazine edited by Professor Rudolph M. Binder, called Studies in Social Progress in the Gospel of the Kingdom, there appears in each issue weekly lessons on some social problem of the day. The March number is devoted to "Wealth and poverty." While they are all interesting, we present as a typical one the lesson for March 24 for the careful consideration of our readers.—EDITORS.]

Scripture Lesson: Luke 16: 19-31.

Introduction: Perhaps the most striking proof of the theory that moral rules are made by society is the doctrine that prospective happiness and righteousness are supposed to go hand in hand. Society could not have existed without the belief that righteousness and well-being are inextricably united, for without vision the people perish. The brutal facts of life in those early days when might was right compelled men to invent a theory that morality was after all justified and that its tenets would help men to live a better life. The idealist had to save his soul by this belief or despair. Since society is built essentially on the ideas of mutual helpfulness and cooperation for the improvement of all, it must of necessity adopt this theory to maintain its own courage to go on living and progressing. Yet the facts of life were generally opposed to it. Intelligent men who lived not in dreams, but faced facts, had to recognize the discrepancy between theory and practice. The Psalmist is troubled at the prosperity of the wicked and confesses that "their eyes stand out with fatness; they have more than heart could wish" (Psalm 73). The violator of ethical rules too often escapes the punishment he deserves; the wicked flourish like a green bay-tree, while the righteous begs his bread. But society could not live without the ideal that virtue must ultimately be rewarded and the punishment of the wicked was transferred into the future life. The problem which puzzled the Psalmist could be solved only by a reference to an eventual reversion of present facts. "Until I went into the sanctuary of God; then I understood their end. Surely thou didst set them in slippery places; thou castedst them down into destruction."

The upshot of the whole development, which can only be referred to here, was that the notion came to be entertained that this world was given over to wickedness and that a rectification must take place in a future life. The parable of Lazarus was taken to describe an actual event; the rich must have been wicked, because under no other conditions could he be conceived to have amassed a fortune. The economic distinction between rich and poor came to be eventually the equivalent of a moral difference—an idea which was almost universal in Old- and New-Testament times and is still prevalent among the poor classes. To put the matter bluntly, the poor is supposed to be poor because he is righteous, while the rich is rich because he is wicked. Scientifically this notion has been translated into the theory that environment and special privileges are responsible for the success of one man and for the failure of another.

The meaning of spirituality: Owing to the clash between the idealist and the practical man, as pointed out in the preceding section, and the inability to reconcile the two views, spirituality came to mean aloofness from the world, contemplation of the future without troubling about the present, and immersion, so to speak, in the perfect love of God. A negative character was thus given to spirituality, it came to mean inaction, receptivity instead of creativeness, dependence instead of self-reliance. This was primarily an oriental doctrine which had permeated not only India, but the countries around the Mediterranean. It continued to exercise its influence in the Christian world long after it had been repudiated by Jesus. It has survived in the form of monasticism to this day, but found its climax in the Mendicant orders of the Middle Ages, e. g., the Dominicans, Franciscans, and others. The vow of poverty meant a distinct repudiation of wealth and of the activities creating it. The majority—and the poor are always a majority—naturally adopted this view and came to look upon the rich as unspiritual. By the same twist of logic they considered themselves as spiritual, because they did not engage in money-making activities but strove merely for a living. This view had taken such a firm hold on the men of the Middle Ages that many rich persons divested themselves of their wealth at least a few days before death.

This monastic conception of spirituality is, however, utterly repudiated by Jesus. All life is intended to grow more perfect according to its kind. Social life purposes to make us more perfect human beings by cooperation in all things. This can be done only by action, not by inaction. The idler and the parasite have no place in the kingdom of God, because that is conceived after the analogy of the human organism, where each member must do its part (see Proverbs 6: 6, 18: 9; Romans 12: 11; Hebrews 6: 12; where idleness is reproved). Jesus wants a positive, not a negative morality; the doing of good things, not the omission of evil acts. As the author of Ecce Homo says: "The sinner whom Christ habitually denounces is he who has done nothing; the priest and Levite who passed by; the rich man at whose gate Lazarus lay while 'no man did aught for him'; the servant who hid his talent in a napkin." The Master wanted efficiency, productiveness, and social, i. e., useful activity.

The rich man: If the idea just developed is clear, the condemnation of rich men is easily understood. What did a man do in those days when he had become rich? Dives "was clothed in purple and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day." The other rich man (Luke 12: 13-21) said unto himself: "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." Such men become idlers, parasites, and profligates, and hardly enter into the kingdom of God, perhaps with more difficulty than the camel through the eye of the needle—not because they are rich, but because they are not exercising their God-given faculties for their own and their fellow men's development. Riches as the cause of self-indulgence are condemned; as a means of further service they are praised. It is, after all, character that counts in the kingdom; and the rich man with a sense of responsibility and a willingness to serve has as good a chance to be spiritual as anybody else.

The poor man: No man is spiritual by virtue of his economic condition, not even the poor. Poverty has its own temptations. They are envy, hatred, and malice toward the rich. There is the tendency to let some one else make provision for the poor, because the "world owes him a living." If the test of useful activity as a measure of spirituality be true, it is applicable equally to the rich and the poor. Within his own opportunities the poor man has as good a chance to attain to spirituality as the rich. He has the same expectation with his two talents, properly used, as the man with five or ten talents. And within his own sphere he has as much of a chance to be harmful as the rich. Sabotage, "loafing on the job," watching the clock, and other short-comings are as effective obstacles to developing spirituality as the "deceitfulness of riches."

Poverty, as such, has indeed no claim either to matter of character, which may develop in the cottage or to greater spirituality than wealth. It is a stage as well as in the palace.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Zion is Being Redeemed

After numerous requests I will give an account of myself through your columns as it has been almost a year since I troubled your pages with a letter.

Since September last I have been located here in Independence in office work, and the reason for my long silence is that I have been quite busy of late.

It is indeed much better to be where we can have the fellowship of those whose joys are our joys and whose sorrows we share than to be located in a place far removed from the church and the Saints of God. Then when I say that I have been enjoying to the fullest degree my sojourn in Zion, I tell it mildly.

My mind seems to dwell to-day upon my early experiences in the church which carries us back over a period of six years. When I received my patriarchal blessing late in December, 1911, under the hands of Brother John H. Lake, I was told among other things, that I would hear of new stakes being appointed in Zion, and Zion being more permanently established, which would cause my heart to rejoice to know that I had found the people of God and that he was preparing a way of shelter and glory for them, and if I would be faithful I should dwell with them. At that time I think we had only two stakes, if that many, namely; Independence and Lamoni, and the thought of there being other stakes appointed was rather new and unexpected to me, probably due to the fact that I knew but little about the work at that time. But time has passed and the work has made a decided move forward, other stakes have been appointed, there being five in all fully organized, truly Zion is being more permanently established. But the end is not yet. The work of the Lord is ever onward and upward, and those who come with their hearts and lives wholly consecrated to His service shall be instrumental in helping to build up the kingdom here upon earth.

For ages we have looked forward to this glad day, we have longed for and prayed that it might soon come, and now at the glad dawning, I sometimes wonder if it is not here before we are prepared as a people to receive it. Let us not be as the evil servant who shall say in his heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of."

Our Master, realizing the nature of man and the difficulty of the natural mind to comprehend the things of the Spirit, found it necessary to compare spiritual things to natural things that even those who walked with him during his sojourn upon the earth might understand his teachings. "Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when you see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

See the little child as he grows old enough to become interested in the plant life, he delights to sow the flower seeds in the springtime and await the coming of the first unfolding bud. But it is with impatience that he does so. Have you not seen the little fellow go to the flower bed only a few hours after the seeds were planted to see if there be any sign of life? He will keep this up for several days and at last give up in disgust, and decide that the thing he had hoped to see will never be. Having forgotten it for a day, a refreshing shower falls upon the earth, and to his surprise and delight, there has appeared the lovely little plant.

Some say that we are once a man and twice a child, but in many ways we seem to never outgrow our childhood. How many of us have grown impatient and said in our hearts that Zion will never be redeemed? Where is our faith? Let us not say we have faith unless we can show it by our works. James's statement that we could not have a living faith without works, is just as true to-day as when first uttered. It was by faith that the ark was builded, and the redemption of Zion must come about in like manner. Paul tells us that all ancient worthies died in the faith, and believing that they should awaken in the likeness of the promised Messiah. We oftentimes wonder if we truly be in the faith when we begin to complain and find fault because Zion is not redeemed already. We should not forget that as the tender plant begins to show signs of life, its development is very slow, and we can scarcely tell that it is really growing at all; but as the showers and sunshine come to nourish it progress is made, and ere the end of summer it becomes fully developed and the harvest is sure. In like manner Zion will be redeemed, just that certain will the Lord bring to pass his work.

The voice of the Spirit to us as a people for years has been, Prepare ye! Prepare ye! and we have listened to it with joyful hearts, still, almost as soon as we get outside of the house of God we let the admonition be forgotten and drift back into the same old rut and allow ourselves to continue in a careless way—serving God half-heartedly. God has never decreed that he would save mankind against the will of the individual. While it is true that he wills that none should perish, but that all should come to repentance; we should not forget that we have the coming to do. How often have we heard the exhortation, "come up higher." That has been the call to this generation, which proves beyond question that God is the same in every dispensation to all people under like circumstances. To the Jews he said, "How oft would I have gathered you . . . but ye would not." Has it occurred to you, dear reader, that the same condition exists with Israel of the latter days? Until we are prepared as a people for the coming of the Savior how can we expect him to come? How can there be a kingdom established without proper subjects? Should he come to an unprepared people, his advent would only mean the condemnation of that people.

We read, preach, and sing of Enoch's city, and long for the day when it shall return. To hasten that glad time, we must do our part individually and collectively. Enoch's city was founded upon certain laws and principles. These laws were lived up to, thus were the people developed into Christ-like characters. "As himself each loved his neighbor, all were of one heart and mind." We must, as the people of God, reach that oneness before Zion is redeemed. Some may say that this is impossible; but wisdom teaches us that obedience to the same law will bring the same results.

The application of the temporal law to our lives will put us in a condition that will enable us to attain unto the celestial glory. The spiritual side of our nature, that which is from above will be developed into a perfect man to the fullness of the stature of Christ. The temporal law does not simply mean rendering unto God the tenth of our increase; that point is only rendering unto God that which is his. The civil law of our country compels us as citizens to render unto every man justice, whether in dollars and cents or other things. Many have paid their honest debts to their fellow men, according to the laws of the land, and for years withheld from God that which they knew to be his. There is a difference in being willing to impart that which we know belongeth to another and being willing that our brother should have and enjoy the same things that we have, and in order that he may be so blessed, give of our possessions until he is equal with us. When we reach this point we are beginning to love our neighbor as ourself. The application of the law of consecration to our lives will develop us into characters of this kind. The Lord wills that his people shall possess the land of Zion according to the latter law. If we work to this end we shall be prepared to dwell in Zion when the same shall be redeemed. It is necessary that we should labor together in the common cause, and lay our all upon the altar of God, if we would appreciate the blessings that God has in store for the faithful.

God's hand is held out over us, he is ready and willing to bless us, and inasmuch as we will be faithful stewards his protecting care will be round about us, and we shall have no need to be alarmed when we hear the words, "Who shall abide his coming; who shall stand when he appeareth?"

In bonds of love,

South Sea Islands Mission

Just a word that you may know we are still alive and all enjoying our work, and about ready to leave for the island of Apataki, something like one hundred and eighty miles distant, where our mission conference will be held, commencing April 6. We are anticipating a large gathering this year as the island is a central one, thereby making it possible for the larger portion of the membership to reach the island with but very little expense. We leave here the evening of the 26th, and will, if all goes well, reach Apataki about noon of the 29th. We will make the trip on a small power boat.

We were permitted to-day to bury in baptism in the great Pacific another Lamanite. The past year has been a very good year for baptisms, but other conditions are not as encouraging as we would like to have them. We are planning for a year of hard work this conference year, and are sure we will not be disappointed.

There is a large field in this mission which has never been opened, and cannot successfully be worked at the present time with our limited force. We long for the time when we shall be able to wage an effort among the islanders in this part of the Pacific who do not now know the true gospel.

Our prayers are that the Lord will be with you and is with you in the General Conference, that the work may be furthered.

Still in the conflict,

PAPEETE, TAHITI, March 24, 1918.

Are We Drifting into Danger?

So many times Saints have said to me, "Why don't you write? We've enjoyed your writing so much." A dear brother once said to me, "You should never let your pen go dry."

I regret now not having kept up my correspondence in the papers, but dear Saints, so much has been crowded into my life in the last few years and trials were so many that I almost forgot my duty to God's people. One great trial that came to me was the loss of my companion, who was a patient sufferer from cancer, of which he died. I also had a siege of pneumonia and was delirious for several days, but the prayers of the faithful Saints were heard and I am a living witness of the mercy of God. God has been merciful and kind to me and I can testify of his marvelous love as I have been healed more than once, the doctors have often told me that my recovery from pneumonia was simply something they could not understand as they fully expected my death. One doctor told me it must have been due to my strong constitution, not giving God the praise. Such is the weakness of the world.

We are living in the hastening time, in an age of marvels. Confusion is everywhere. The world is turned upside down. But out of all this chaos God's purposes will emerge and a new era will dawn, for Babylon is doomed. This war is most terrible to us but it is only an incident in the great plan of God. Prophecy is being rapidly fulfilled, Gentile times are closing, and Jesus Christ will soon be here.

The great world is steeped in iniquity, the Jews are going home, and Zion will soon be gathered. It is hard to reconcile the purposes of God with the suffering of the nations but we must not lose faith.

The millennium will soon be here, peace shall be the rule and Jesus Christ shall reign. Before that wonderful time shall come, a preparation is necessary. Who are preparing themselves? Only those who are wise. We understand from the reading of the word that a division will take place. Five wise and five foolish. The door will be shut. Who can picture that scene? Despair, anguish, weeping, and wailing. Alas! Alas! For the foolish virgins. Awake, awake, put on thy beautiful garments, O Zion!

I presume I will be thought "narrow-minded and old-fashioned," for expressing my views according to the way I see them. I am quite well aware that this is not an old people's age. You are an "old fogie" now at thirty or forty and the Doctrine and Covenants is out of date. So, as I am "old-fashioned," I may be pardoned if I say the Religio convention of April, 1918, although advancing some modern ideas in regard to children, did not reach that high standard of spirituality that was its privilege. We hammer and pound at creeds and modern theology, but how much farther in advance are we than they?

The old religion of our fathers at least observed the Sabbath to keep it holy; they made a strong point of this part of the law, and were probably extreme, but are we not going to the other extreme when we advocate basket ball, swimming pools, reading rooms, tennis, etc. in conjunction with the church?

Doctor May, of Cleveland, ascribes "lack of disciplining in youth" as largely responsible for the large numbers of army rejections. Our Religio convention says: "The child mind will never be reached by putting on a restraint." I will cite another witness, the Apostle Paul, who said that disobedience to parents would be one of the signs of the latter days. This is very much in evidence. If children were properly restrained, as they should be, they would respect their parents instead of being disobedient. They would also respect the God which they do not.

Lack of restraint is responsible for a great many things. God knew this when he said, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." Lack of restraint leads to the jails and penitentiaries where they must submit to restraint.

The Religio convention has also put itself on record as saying that "the only place for serious, long faces is in Germany." If we have not serious faces in America and Canada now when God's judgments are over us, it is high time for seriousness. Jesus Christ put the question, "When the Son of Man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?" Will he? Many have been looking forward to this convention and have been disappointed. Why? Because instead of bread they got a stone. Has the church entered the arena of the world? The great burden of Religio workers seems to be, "What amusement can we give to hold our young? They must have something sensational, equal to the movies. Are we going to cater to this false appetite, and bring down the judgments of a just God?"

The Religio lessons are full of grave thoughts, both spiritual and inspirational for young and old. The leaders are to blame for part of this state of affairs. They are catering to the world. We have come out of the world; then we should be distinct from the world, and not be partakers of its follies.

The young are compared to flowers. Well, what sort of a flower garden will you have if you do not pull out the weeds? I notice weeds grow pretty fast and need lots of careful watching. I know a boy of eleven years who is a regular cigarette fiend and will steal his sisters' hard-earned wages to get them. What about no restraint in his case?

They say, who have come back from Over There, that at night the troubled earth between the lines is carpeted with pain. They say that Death rides whistling in every wind, and that the very mists are charged with awful torment. They say that of all things spent and squandered there, young life is held least dear.

It is not a pleasant prospect for those of us who yet can feel upon our lips the pressure of our mother's good-by kiss, but, please God, our love of life is not so prized as love of right. In this renaissance of our country's valor, we who will edge the wedge of her assault make calm acceptance of its hazards. For us the steel-swept trench, the stiffening cold, weariness, hardship, worse. For you for whom we go, you millions safe at home—what for you?

We shall need food, we shall need care. We shall need clothes for our bodies and weapons for our hands. We shall need terribly and without failure supplies and equipment in a stream that is constant and never ending. From you who are our resources and reliance, who are the heart and hope of that humanity for which we smite and strive, must come these things. Buy your country's bonds! Buy them to-day!

The United States Government Bonds of the Third Liberty Loan are an investment made safe for the people. They are in the highest possible sense a security of the people, by the people, and for the people. They can be had in denominations so low and on such terms that virtually every citizen of this Nation may share in the benefits they bring and the purposes that they serve. They are to-day the safest possible investment in the world.

Buy your country's bonds! Buy them, as the mainspring of our holy endeavor. As your duty to the cradle and your fealty to the tomb! Buy them! Buy them to-day!

Hot Drinks Cause Cancer

About two years ago I wrote concerning Doctor William Mayo, president of the American Medical Association, and a statement made by him, in a speech before that society here in Detroit, that in his opinion hot drinks were the cause of cancer of the stomach.

The Word of Wisdom was given to us by the Prophet over eighty-five years ago, and in it the word hot is used unqualifiedly; a definite statement is made that hot drinks are not good for man.

I have always insisted that we make a mistake when we try to attach other and obscure meaning to words used in instruction given us by the Spirit through his servants, the prophets. I refer to those who have sought to make it appear that the Lord meant "hot with whiskey or brandy as they are used in to-day," etc., also to recent attempts by editors of Religio Quarterlies and others to show that h-o-t spells caffeine, iced tea, chocolate, in fact anything except "opposite to cold," "high temperature," thus, in my opinion, indicating a lack of faith in the prophecies as given and a seeking to find excuse for what seems to them to appear to be blunders made by the prophet in his use of even so simple a word in English as a vehicle of expression in giving us instruction through the spirit of revelation.

I am sending a clipping taken from the Detroit News, March 25, 1918, showing how the use of the word by Joseph Smith so many years ago is now vindicated by this man of science.

Will we who defend modern revelation some day fall in line with Doctor Mayo and apply this instruction not only to overly hot water, barley, postum, soup, etc., as distinguished from drinks that are merely warm, or from cold drinks?

STOMACH CANCER BLAMED TO OVERHEATED FOODS

Doctor William J. Mayo, of Rochester, Minnesota, now major in the United States Army, says that thirty per cent of all cancers of civilized man are in the stomach, and this condition is uncommon among primitive men and animals. He believes that many such cancers are caused by chronic ulceration of the stomach.

Doctor Mayo told the national session of the clinical congress of surgeons of North America, according to the Milwaukee Free Press, that men had cancer of the stomach more frequently than women because man is in the habit of taking his food hotter than the average woman takes hers. Woman sits at the foot of the table and pours the tea and coffee, serving the men of the household first and drinking hers after it has cooled somewhat. Among the Chinese the same rule holds good of eating rice, for the women eat at the second table.

Doctor Mayo said food and drink should not be taken into the stomach hotter than can be borne comfortably in the mouth, for the mouth has sensitive nerves expressly to protect the doorway to the body, while the stomach has not.

Observations

In order to love your neighbor as yourself, it is necessary that both you and your neighbor live and study harmony and adjustment. If not we will feel as did "Uncle Eben." "I'se willin' to love my fellow men, but I can't get up no no' ambition to 'sociate wif' some of 'em than a rabbit has foh makin' up to a houn' dog." So be sure you are not actuated by the hound dog's appetite.

"The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me." But what shall we say of the singer who in sweet tones sings: "Kindly feel another's woe, and long to ease his pain," and then goes out, and produces woe and causes pain, by gossip's venom and poisonous gases?

We still remember a brother's sermon which always contained a "now, in conclusion." After the congregation became accustomed to him and his ways, it was comical to watch its effects on them, for when he announced that "now, in conclusion," some settled down for another nap, while others shifted their position to "sit it out." For, like a woman's postscript which is said to exceed the length of the letter, so the conclusion was more exhaustive than the sermon.

We knew a minister of a popular church some years ago, who knew the Bible so well, that he challenged us to name a passage or quote a verse. He would immediately give us the book, chapter, and verse. He was a splendid revivalist, and he could even make a Latter Day Saint feel creepy by the horrors of hell he portrayed. Before he left the community he became noted for cheating, lying, and petty thieving. We concluded that he neither believed in his Bible nor in the hell he portrayed, that he represented the hearer, but not the doer, of the word.

We have heard that in arguments at law, one may prove too much. The strongest sermon we ever heard on the "Word of Wisdom" was by a brother who, among other things, said of tobacco: "A dog won't touch it, no, a hog won't touch it," and of coffee he said: "Some of you drink coffee so strong it would float an iron wedge." Afterwards we heard comments by brethren who heard it as follows: "Well, Brother So-and-So hit us hard, but if he won't touch tobacco, he is more like the hog than I am." The other remarked, "Yes, and he told an untruth about coffee, because you can't make it strong enough to float iron and he knows it."

We knew a brother who seemed to judge the prayer of a brother by the shirt worn by the worshiper. We were holding a series of meetings in a little city and called on a brother to make the opening prayer one Sunday afternoon. After services, Brother Critic said, "Alma, why did you call Brother Doe to the stand this afternoon?" "Why," said I, "he is an elder and made a good prayer." "Yes," said Brother C., "but he wore a hickory shirt." ALMA.

A Tribute to a Mother

Almost a year had elapsed since a telegram came bearing the words, "Mother is dead." She had failed in health, and had gone to visit a daughter in New York, hoping that the change would renew vigor and strength. She left the family circle behind whose thoughts and prayers were continually for her, that the Lord would spare her to return to them in better health.

But when the telegram came, "Mother is dead," those anxious hopes were crushed, like sand beneath our feet. God alone knew what that message meant to me.

My mother, Mary Matthews, became associated with the church in her early married life and spent her days faithful to the cause. Yet with all her service to the church, she never neglected her home. She was the mother of fifteen children, twelve of whom were reared to manhood and womanhood, and can testify to the blessedness of having such a mother.

Always ready to be of service to the church, her home was open to the missionaries when they were passing that way. Nor was this her only method of service.

Her faith was strong to the hour of her death. When she was stricken with her last illness, she desired an elder to administer to her, for she said, "I will not get well unless I am administered to." Her wishes were granted and Elder L. H. Lewis of Hammondsport, New York, was sent for. She received relief from time to time, through administration. One time she said, as she was passing through great suffering, "This is to test my faith."

The pure mother love was faithful to the last, for her desires were to see her children as the hours of her life were drawing to a close.

That calm, patient spirit she bore in her last hours as she did through the pathway of life. Her husband, two daughters, one son, and two sons-in-law watched over her in her dying hours.

The end came peacefully. It was the thirteenth of May—Mother's Day. While the day was spent in tributes to mothers, God was pleased to take her unto himself. Reverently her body was borne home to the loved ones who were waiting for mother.

I thank God for my mother and what her life has done for me. The value of a true mother is much, and while life lasts her memory, with her influences for good, will be an anchor of protection to me through the pathway of life, and eventually, I pray, will lead me to the throne of God where we shall meet to part no more.

Trusting I may live worthy of receiving the crown of eternal life,
Your sister in the faith,

MRS. IRA W. HULMES.

Formation of Character

All intelligent people have conceived some idea or notion or belief of a supreme being; of God, and upon that belief hinges two things, conscience and character.

The faculty, power, or principle, within us that decides as to the virtue or vice of every act is always formed by our comprehension of Deity.

Internal self-knowledge of right and wrong, good and evil, can occupy no higher ground than our conception of the Creator. We therefore automatically approve the rightfulness and condemn the wrongfulness of all things in harmony without imagination of the attributes of the Supreme Being.

The clearer, the more concise, our knowledge of God, the nearer exact and unswerving will be our characters, while a vague, hazy, indefinite image of Deity bespeaks an unscrupulous character.

Herein then is couched the subconscious or psychological mainspring of conscience and character.

Nothing can be more natural than for us to aspire to the object of our loving devotion, so the inner, hidden, and highest ambition is to become like the God we worship.

If we have unbounded admiration for the All-Father of the Prince of peace, our motto will be the golden rule; our highest ambition, to return good for evil.

On the other hand, if our divine homage goes after the gods adored by the heroes of apostate Israel, our highest aim will be to smite our enemies under the fifth rib, to exterminate or enslave them.

Nations are composed of individual units, and the nature of their gods shape their attitude toward their neighbors. The god worshiped by one half of the Teutons plunges all but a few of his friends into endless conscious torment in hell, fire, brimstone, while the god worshiped by the other half throws both friends and foes, innocent mothers and helpless babes, into purgatory, to be tormented until their friends pay the priest to liberate them.

The God of modern Christendom, according to the creeds, outdoes wicked man and devils in inventing inconceivable and endless torture for all but a shamefully small minority. (See "Future Punishment," by Bishop R. C. Evans.)

The world-wide "abomination of desolation" is thus seen to be the direct and natural outcome of modern religion. The nations are simply assuming the attributes of gods they worship. Or as Pope said, "The God assumed has native form again."
D. R. BALDWIN.

Calling on the Name of the Lord

In this, as in all or most other maxims of the Bible, we are compelled to differ from the general construction placed upon it. I have so found it necessary, because one very dear and closely related to me, declared, by way of summing up his own conviction of the plan of salvation, that "Whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved." It is quite obvious that this cannot be true, in the merely bald literal way in which the sentence stands, but is undoubtedly true in its proper application, and bearing in mind the contest, the circumstances under which the words were used, to whom spoken and for whom intended, etc.

In referring to Romans 10 wherein the words occur, we find that Paul was speaking to the brethren of the church, then in Rome, and he is assuring them; that with regard to the house of Israel, his desire and prayer to God is, that they all might be saved, at the same time lamenting the fact that they were going about seeking to establish their own righteousness of Christ, and whether they be Jew or Greek it made no difference, for if they or anyone else desired to be saved, they must conform to the righteousness of Christ, therefore, "Whosoever calleth," etc.

It appears, however, that the same old difficulty existed then, as now: they couldn't rightly call on his name, for the simple reason that they did not believe him as he really is, but only as they thought their law represented him to be.

For instance, they believed in a God who was so mercilessly cruel and revengeful, that according to their law, if a man was caught picking up a fig from a tree, perhaps to satisfy hunger; or a woman taken in sin, the one should be stoned to death, and the other one crucified, and that is not the God in the Bible.

Similarly, in these days, there are, or have been those who believe in a God so monstrous that a little unbaptized infant would, at death, be immediately consigned to a burning fiery furnace. Or that those who die without a knowledge of the gospel would also be totally annihilated. And we have no hesitation in saying, "That is not the God of the Bible, either."

This, in effect, is doing what the house of Israel were doing, "seeking to establish their own righteousness." So that it is no wonder as Paul says: "Satan is transformed into an angel of light, what wonder therefore if his ministers be transformed into ministers of righteousness." Which knowledge prompted him to declare, or rather propound the question in this same chapter of Romans 10, "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" As it is written, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them that bring good tidings of great joy."

From this, we gather the idea that it is impossible to call on the name of the Lord in the proper way until we have heard who he really is, and believed the things he has delivered to those recognized by him as his ministers, and have expressed a willingness, out of a glad heart, to observe the same.

Paul says we must first seek to establish the righteousness of Christ, so we want to find out what that is. And in the gospel narrative we notice that when John was baptizing in Jordan, Jesus came to him to be baptized, and John recognizing the Lamb of God, was so much astonished that he was led to exclaim, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Hear the gracious and wonderful reply, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus [this way] it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

Jesus declared he came not to do his own will, "but the will of him who sent me," therefore if it was necessary for the Son of God to humble himself in this way in order to do the Father's will, then it is equally necessary for every man and woman to seek baptism in the prescribed method in order to conform to the righteousness of Christ.

Who is there among God's people that have not, while in the very act of being put under the water, felt an impulse almost irresistible to cry out, "Lord Jesus, help me." That is, at that solemn and heart searching moment, the potential Saint has realized more than ever before, the vital need of calling on him to save him. And it is in this connection that the promise holds good, "shall be saved."

Perchance, it has never occurred to a great many people, that there are ways of calling on his name which the Lord has condemned, and it may startle them to hear it so stated. Nevertheless it is a fact, for we read that Jesus declares: "Not everyone that saith unto me Lord! Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." And we have already seen what the will of the Father is.

We take the position that to enter into the kingdom is to be saved, therefore we have the right and the wrong way of calling on his name for this desirable result. The wrong way is condemned, for just to call on his name, and rest content with the mere act, perhaps on one's deathbed, will merit the rebuke, "faith without works is dead," whereas, the right way is righteousness, and in its fulfillment it necessarily entails works whereby we show or prove our faith.

Our Lord says further: "In vain do they call me Lord, and do not the things that I say." And more strongly still: "Many will come to me in that day and will say unto me, Lord! Lord! have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wondrous works?" Yes, there will be a great many in that day, who will so call on him, and expecting to be received and welcomed by him. Because, forsooth, they have organized churches, guilds, societies, formulated creeds, confessions and ceremonies, preached blood and fire, and total destruction on all who do not believe as they do.

But what a sad disappointment awaits them. Listen to his reply: "Depart from me, ye never knew me," so it amounts to this: that after all their professions of Christianity, (for it will hardly do to say the sentence will be pronounced upon those who have never made any profession) they have never known him as he is in reality, never understood nor known his doctrine and the gospel that he brought to mankind.

We have at least one instance on record, indicating how they called on the name of the Lord. And by reading up Paul's defense before King Agrippa we find that first of all he called out: "Who art thou Lord?" And the Lord revealed to him who he was, and then he asked: "What wilt thou have me do? Go into the city and it shall there be told thee what thou must do." While he was praying during his three days blindness, along comes good old Ananias, and laid his hands upon him saying: "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest [you see it was the same Lord] hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight," "and now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

Thus, we find that this great preacher to the Gentiles was brought to know who the Lord was and is, by revelation, then God sends one of his faithful servants to declare to him the Lord's will. Thus he saw, heard, believed, was baptized, had hands laid on him, and knowing the Lord now, as he is, was able at the same time to "call upon his name and be saved." So even if we had not our Lord's example, we still have that bright example of the great apostle. And while I have this in mind, with the permission of the editors of the HERALD, I want to introduce a personal note by way of emphasis.

For some time I had been greatly troubled over my own condition, which was not at all satisfactory to my own mind, and night and morning I had made it a special matter of prayer, especially that God would show me what he would have me to do. Also, that if he had chosen me to do some kind of work in the vineyard, that he would reveal the fact to his servants, and assure them that I was chosen as an approved instrument in his hands.

Just about this time (six months ago) I had a beautiful vision, I saw a great plain and a vast concourse of Saints grouped together in rows, each row rising a little higher than the next, and one stood out in the front, baton in hand, ready to give the signal to the gathered Saints to break forth into shouts of praise. The signal came, viz, the unrolling of the heavens as a scroll, and the face of the Lord revealed, ready to descend with all the heavenly host with him. And so the great choir of Saints welcomed the Savior with a glad and glorious hymn of praise. The one who stood in front was myself, and I could have wished the vision to continue, so grand and beautiful was it, but it ended here and it made a great impression upon my mind. Now the sequel.

Contrary to all expectations, I was privileged to pay an unexpected and surprise visit to some of the Saints in Manchester. And at a service of prayer and fasting on Sunday, April 1, Brother W. H. Greenwood announced to the church that he had been commanded by the Spirit to set me apart for the Melchisedec priesthood. And after being sustained by the vote of the church, I was ordained an elder by W. H. Greenwood, W. R. Armstrong, and Dewsnup, the former being mouth in supplication. I shall never forget my feelings, as I realized in a flash, this mighty and wonderful answer to my prayer, and it was others who told me that the vision I had, was to show me that I was chosen to assist in preparing men and women for the second coming of the Master. And this was to be done in traveling capacity, owing to the opportunities that might present themselves in my peculiar circumstances.

Already, the word has been spoken in the most unlikely quarters, and I seem to feel there are great possibilities in the future. I am keeping a record of these events as they occur, but I most of all feel the need of the earnest prayers of God's faithful people, the whole world over. May I therefore trespass upon the accommodation of the HERALD in making this request known. I have a long and wonderful story to tell, from the time of the wreck of the Argyll, my last ship, by way of continuation of "the story of my life," if it should ever be desired, but let me now in conclusion plead for a closer cooperation in this grand work, for "the time is nigh at hand, aye, even at the very doors."

Yours for the Christ's sake,

WILLIAM MOORE.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, March 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: We would like to have the Saints know how we are getting along in this region. We are a little band of isolated Saints, about twelve in number, residing about six miles from Hot Springs. Brother Thomas Donathan preaches for us every third Sunday, and while he is only a beginner, he does finely, every sermon getting better.

I have been blessed much in administration and had a beautiful vision in which angels were preparing a white garment for me. I realized they were ready to show me to a fine mansion. I want to so live that not only I, but my three little girls may be worthy to wear the beautiful garments of the righteous and live in a mansion prepared for us.

ALICE SANDERS.

LACHINE, MICHIGAN, April 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: Elder and Sister J. A. Carpenter, of Alma, visited us a few weeks and while here gave a lecture on Mormonism. The meetings were well attended and were a great help to the Saints young in the work. On April 3 they left for their home in Alma. We were grieved to see them go and miss them very much. But we will always remember the many lessons he taught us.

In gospel bonds,

BRANCH CORRESPONDENT.

HANDSWORTH, BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, April 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: We have just held the annual conference of the Birmingham District, and had a very nice time together and enjoyed a good degree of God's Spirit among us. The business session commenced Saturday, March 30, under the presidency of the associate missionary in charge, W. H. Greenwood, and the district president, J. Schofield.

The usual routine of business was gone through, statistical reports of branches in the district, namely, Summerfield, and Priestly Road of Birmingham, Lancaster, Stafford, were read. Also the reports of the ministers as well as the district officers were read.

Sunday morning we had a baptism. A Canadian soldier, who was on sick leave, and had been a Mormon priest, was baptized by Elder A. Kendrick. The morning preaching service followed under the lead of Brother W. H. Greenwood, Brother W. B. Arrowsmith addressed the Saints. The afternoon was set aside for sacrament under the lead of W. H. Greenwood, with four other brethren assisting him. During the meeting the brother who was baptized in the morning was confirmed by Elders W. H. Greenwood and A. Kendrick. Several called for the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick. There were also a number of testimonies, songs, and prayers. A good spirit prevailed.

The evening meeting was in charge of Brother J. Schofield, and Brother W. H. Greenwood gave the Saints a good spiritual feast from text in Psalm 119: 73, 74, 89. Sister Ar-rowsmith rendered a solo entitled "Moment by moment." Altogether a good Sabbath was spent.

Monday morning commenced again for the remainder of the business. Important items were discussed and two brethren were recommended for ordination, Brother Bailey to office of teacher, and Brother F. C. Schofield to the office of deacon. Brother Schofield was ordained during the session.

After the business was over, the Saints were desirous of having a prayer and testimony meeting which was in charge of Elders F. H. Edwards and E. A. Webbe. Some fifteen testimonies were given, also songs and prayers, and a very good conference closed about 7.15 p. m. Monday evening.

All who were present said that they had been built up spiritually, and everything pointed to the fact that we had had a very successful conference.

Trusting that when we meet again for another conference we may improve still more, I remain,

Your brother in the gospel,

W. B. ARROWSMITH, Secretary.

GLEN EASTON, WEST VIRGINIA, April 17, 1918.

Editors Herald: This is my first attempt to write to the HERALD but I have thought many times that I would, as it is hard sometimes to keep silent, especially when we have feasted on the good things and been partakers of that which God has promised to those that love him. And he says if we love him we will keep his commandments.

As far back as I can remember, the HERALD has been a weekly visitor in our home, and I have learned to love its pages, as it brings us news from our brethren and sisters, and from those in foreign lands, with whom we have been permitted to mingle.

Brother C. Edward Miller's Hawaiian number was a success and it made us feel we were really visiting among the Hawaiian missions. Brother Paul M. Hanson is also remembered and we would enjoy receiving one of their scorched post cards.

It seems to me when I read so many inspiring letters that I have not accomplished much, for my only desire is to live that my life may be a light set on a hill, that others might see by my good works that I am striving to please my God.

We are few in number in our branch, as so many of the Saints have moved away, yet there is one thing that is encouraging, and that is that God has promised to meet with two or three.

Knowing that we are only a small branch, we want to awake to a sense of our duty and so live that we can be able to receive strength from the vine which is Christ.

We have had an abundant out-pouring of God's Spirit upon us. Last Sabbath the spiritual gifts were made manifest among us. My soul was made glad, and I felt to say as did the Psalmist of old:

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth."

May we all as God's people, so live that we may be able to gain a celestial glory.

In gospel bonds,

MRS. S. M. LYDICK.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, April 24, 1918.

Editors Herald: The last few months have been a very trying time to the Saints here in this city. Peculiarly so in that sickness of one form or another has been in almost every household of the Saints. But through it all we have had the best and most spiritual meetings that have ever been since I have known the branch over twenty years ago. And there seems to be a kind and warm feeling of brotherhood existing among the people.

Our membership is comparatively small and about one third absent from branch, with only two elders to care for the work, and the president, William R. Norris, almost incapacitated by illness. And, too, almost every family is among the "poor" of earth and there are long distances to travel on the street cars. Such are a few of the difficulties that we encounter.

In the past years we have struggled against great odds, but have had missionary work done here by some of the most able men in the church, and with seemingly little result. So that, at times, we have felt that the city was well-nigh like Sodom and Gomorrah, ripe for destruction.

But at different times we have felt by the Spirit that there were some to be gathered out from here. And lately there have been those who have attended and have asked for baptism, which would give some encouragement. But that is not what I started to write about.

I want to tell you of the spiritual growth of our own people, and what we are trying to do to further that growth.

Our prayer meetings are very good, as also the preaching service. And our Sunday school is most excellent, we feel. The older Saints attend and are very much interested in the lessons, and we are all greatly blessed in the study together.

We have a study class (used to be called Religio) on Sunday evenings and will study the subjects that are of special and vital importance to our present progress in the development of Zion conditions. We want to know what the revelations have been relative to these conditions and what interpretation has and is being placed upon those revelations by those whose duty it is to teach. And so with the Compendium, the Instructor, the three books, the SAINTS' HERALD and The Unity, we are going to canvass the ground and if God will give his Spirit to aid in the work, we feel that the effect of our efforts will be felt for good.

We most earnestly desire to be faithful to the end and to be prepared to accept all truth in every move that is for the uplift of his people. And just as earnestly do we wish to be fortified against the insidious advances of that which has no place in his divine plan. And so we desire a prayer from those who know us and our difficulties and say, to the great family of God: "Let's get ready."

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from the lone missionary in the northwest corner of the land of liberty. I am the only one laboring in this State and the large province of British Columbia excepting Brother J. M. Terry, of Seattle.

I am plodding along doing what I can until I am either released or have an elder to labor with me after General Conference, of which I shall learn very soon now. Since last writing I have visited Bellingham, Lynden, Alger, and Vancouver, also New Westminster. I spent the greater part of the time in Lynden, helping them to get settled down in their new quarters.

Several of the brethren bought a nice little bungalow and we took out the partitions, put in a new floor, and converted it into a convenient chapel, a credit to so small a band of Saints. They belong to the Bellingham Branch, sixteen miles away. We all worked, from the least unto the greatest, until we had it all ready for our first service Easter Sunday. The Lord is certainly blessing the Lynden and Bellingham Saints because they love the work, not forgetting the missionary's wants. May the Lord continue to bless them in all things.

From there to Alger, a logging camp, secured the Odd Fellows' hall, the only place I could get, having been denied the only church on a former visit, when we even had the minister to come. He had to leave his church because of the nonattendance of his congregation. This is very much like the dog in the manger. So I hustled around, visited homes, posted bills, and waited for eight o'clock.

Thirty-four greeted me, and gave me an attentive ear for one hour and a half. I spoke on church organization. But I was disappointed when I learned that I could not have the hall again until the next week, as dances and lodge meetings were of more importance, at least to the owners, as they only got one dollar and a half a night from me, and five from the others. But the caretaker assured me that if I would let them know the next time a little beforehand, I could have it as long as I wanted it. He and his wife have attended all my meetings. Sister Roden and her husband took care of me while there, supplying all my wants.

I am at home for a few days, awaiting a conference appointment. This is a hard field, and the one working it should have an auto, and I may ask the Saints for one if I am returned here.

ISAAC MCMULLEN.

CAMP DECATUR, GREAT LAKES, ILLINOIS.

Editors Herald: I have been in training only a few days and am prepared to write a few lines which should bring forth encouragement to every person who has accepted our gospel.

When one enters the gates of a Government institution to be a "Jackie," or a boy in "olive drab," he becomes one of them and his individuality is lost. But it is not a bad change since he can continue to do right.

Before telling you of the pleasant experience I enjoyed last night, I believe it is well to briefly sketch my new life. Company 75 is located in Camp Decatur (a detention camp). There are one hundred and forty-four men in each company. Each barrack holds twenty-four men, so you can readily figure six barracks per company.

The day we arrived and were located it was my good fortune to be appointed company clerk. My duties are numerous, but not too difficult. My new position causes me to enter each barrack in our company several times each day.

After seeing many men and how they live, I am glad that I was assigned where I am. We have a good "bunch" of boys. Two of them are comedians but their wit hinges too much on the vulgar. That may sound contradictory but I believe not. We are fortunate that there are not more. Even these have good in them.

But let me tell you of my pleasant experience. Last night I took out my Saints' Hymnal and asked the boys to gather around and sing. Soon we were six deep. Some were on benches, some on the table, and others were hanging to the man ahead of them.

One man, he must weigh one hundred and seventy, let his whole weight fall on me so that he could look on the song book.

Had you been walking by and heard us singing, you would have found good material for an editorial.

I am glad I am one of the Saints. I can feel that I am being watched over and cared for. In closing let me say that I find this experience to be only one of the many I will have to go through in order to fully prepare myself for a life of service.

Respectfully,

E. R. KUHMANN.

COLUMBUS, NEW MEXICO, April 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to let you know I am still on the map and expect to be until Christ comes, even if I have to do a kitchen police duty every seven days.

The other day while on kitchen police I became acquainted with a young fellow from the hospital corps who was also on. He turned out to be a former Baptist preacher, a really nice young man. He was aware that there was a difference between our church and the Mormons. He wanted to know why we believed differently from the Mormons. He thought both of the churches believed nearly the same. I told him several reasons why I didn't believe their way.

I gave him my Book of Mormon and several church publications. He is quite interested, and wrote the Herald Publishing House for some books. I pray that God will enlighten his mind. He also has my Young People's History of the Church. I'm going to let him have the Doctrine and Covenants also.

His and my work are so different that we see each other only at mealtimes, when, between mouthfuls, we talk things over. Of course the fellows call me a Mormon. One fellow asked me how many wives I had. I answered that I had less than the law allows. He said that the law only allowed one, and I told him I hadn't even that many. "But," I continued, "that's not saying that I never will have, just wait until the Kaiser decides to call it quits."

My folks paid me a visit and are now in Saint Joseph to stay. We had a little sandstorm for a change yesterday.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may hold out faithful until the end. Will Brother Benjamin Bean, of Sacramento, California, please give me his house and street number again? Your brother in Christ,

ROY F. URSENBACH.

From Australia

Things socially are in a most disturbed condition consequent upon the clashing of loyalists, who support conscription and the war, and the pacifists who oppose both and passively resist recruiting.

It cannot be but that, with the empire struggling against the greatest of military despotisms for her very existence, such conditions are fraught with deepest danger to the social fabric.

Home Rulers and their antitheses have brought Irish troubles from over the sea to perpetuate and spread enmity and strife.

Last week a climax was reached when in their annual "Saint Pat's" procession Sein Finn and other disloyal emblems were daringly carried and cheered through the streets of Melbourne.

This furnished cause for an immense loyalist deputation to the mayor and requests that Mannix, the Catholic Archbishop, be deported were freely voiced.

Australia is seemingly hopelessly divided, socially, politically, religiously, and in all that makes for peace, progress, and happiness.

In spite of these disturbing elements we move steadily forward, all departments of our church activity assume greater proportions and also importance in the minds of the Saints.

In Melbourne there is continuous growth, numerically, educationally, and I trust, spiritually.

The Saints in Australia have their eyes upon Zion and are carefully watching for signs of the gathering to develop, and have been gratified to note in HERALD and official communications that the Spirit of God is moving upon the church towards that much desired and glorious consummation.

Apparently "the Gentile fullness now comes in." The "distress of nations" now so universal seems like the death throes of this order of social and national life and a preparation for the little stone Kingdom which is to fill the whole earth.

I was struck with the statement in The Unity of January, 1917, referring to the cataclysm imminent in America as also throughout the whole world. There is one bright feature to the child of God and that is the promise couched in the Savior's words: "Lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh."

My life labor and prayers are for Zion's redemption and I hope to be faithful to that great ideal.

Fraternally yours,

J. H. N. JONES.

Important Information for Registered Men

The Federal Board for Vocational Education recently published a booklet which they sent out to all the institutions under their supervision giving radio training for registered men. The purpose of the booklet is to assist these schools in advertising the great need of radio trained men in the signal corps. It is written in the form of questions and answers, a few of which follow:

"What assurance can be given the student that he will be assigned to radio and buzzer work in the service?" "The Army needs 15,000 radio and buzzer operators. It is looking to the conscripted men trained in these schools as the main source of supply for these operators. Their names will be filed with the Army authorities at Washington, who will see to it that when they reach cantonments they will be assigned to radio and buzzer work. When the occupational census is taken at the cantonments, the fact that they have been trained as radio and buzzer operators, which they should state on their blanks, also insures their being assigned or detailed to the work for which they have made special preparation. Arrangements will be made by the Army authorities to furnish information to the proper officers of the cantonment concerning these men. These men will also have the evidence of the certificate or record of attendance upon classes, which they should be urged to carry with them to camp and present to the division signal officer."

"Of what benefit will attendance upon the class be to the student?" "First of all he will be trained for some definite work in the Army. He can serve with the confidence that he is being used by his country to the greatest possible advantage. Unlike the ordinary recruit, he will enter the Army as a trained instead of an untrained man. While he will go to the cantonment as a private, he may, when assigned as a radio or buzzer operator, advance to the rank of corporal or sergeant and a wage of from $36 to $51 monthly. In proportion as he shows his ability and interest rapid promotion will lie ahead of him into the position of master signal electrician, with a wage of $81 per month."

"What service will these classes render to the Nation?" "These classes will serve at least five ends: (a) They would attract many conscripted men to the idea of fitting themselves for the radio or buzzer service in the Army in which they are to serve in some capacity. (b) They would give these men a chance to prepare themselves in part at least before call to service is made. (c) They would sort out these men in a very effective way by dropping those unable to make a satisfactory progress in the work. (d) They will give

SUCCESSFUL RENDITION OF "ELIJAH" IN LAMONI

The Lamoni choir sang the oratorio "Elijah" in Lamoni on the evening of April 25, to a large and very appreciative audience. There were many favorable comments, indicating that they were at their best. It was given as the last number of the lyceum course, which has been run on a community basis, which allows practically all who desire to attend any number to do so, practically filling the house each time. The previous number was a concert by a 45-piece orchestra, be-

The Higher Powers of Man

We feel it an unusual privilege to present for sale to the church a new book of the character of The Higher Powers of Man, by President Frederick M. Smith, Ph. D.

While it was not written to be a popular seller, being the dissertation submitted to the Clark University at the completion of his work to secure a doctor's degree, it will find a popular response with trained minds all over the church and among able thinkers who are not members with us.

It proceeds in a masterful manner to elucidate the wonderful yet not commonly understood phenomenon of "second breath."

A most convincing bibliography has been consulted and is presented for the benefit of those who wish to follow incidental references to their sources.

To own and assimilate such a book instills an inward dignity and inspirational impulses which in a measure satisfy our innate longings for greater comprehension.

The scope of the book is rather extensive, an explanation of the ecstatic feelings occupying the most prominent place.

The binding is in beautiful green cloth, lettered in white. The type is large and clear. There are 232 pages. The price is $1.25, postpaid.

BUY THRIFT STAMPS

The campaign to sell War Saving Stamps and Thrift Stamps is at its height. It has been discovered in some States that they are far behind the quota and that as many as a million dollars a week must be sold to reach the requisite amount. Stamp solicitors are to be backed with the same authority as the Liberty Loan workers, which means that all who refuse to purchase will be investigated. Those who are unable to do so will be excused, while those who can but do not will be listed on yellow cards as slackers. We are pleased to see the great interest manifested in Lamoni, especially among the school children, who have bought very generally and liberally.

Brother George Elson, of Wayne, Nebraska, has had two operations of late and desires the prayers of the Saints that he may be spared the serious pain and possible complications that may ensue. It is not convenient to call an elder for administration.

WELL-KNOWN COUPLE MARRY

At the home of the bride's sister in Lamoni, a pretty little family wedding occurred recently in which the contracting parties were Miss Mabel Knipschild and Henry C. Smith. Heman C. Smith performed the ceremony. For several years Brother Smith has been located at Boston being engaged in architectural work. He attended Graceland College several years and is the son of the late Mrs. B. C. Smith. The bride has been a much respected teacher at Graceland College for some years, being thoroughly imbued with the spirit of gospel service and having the ability to weave it into all her work. They left the evening of the wedding, April 19, for Boston, where they will reside.

W. W. SMITH DELIVERS COLLEGE BACCALAUREATE

The baccalaureate sermon for the Graceland College graduating class was delivered this year by Elder Walter W. Smith, of Independence, at the morning hour, Sunday, April 28. It was a highly satisfactory occasion from every standpoint. Sister Smith accompanied him on the trip. In the evening Bishop J. F. Keir addressed a large audience on temporal subjects eliciting many favorable comments.

Some most successful theater services were held by the Saints in Owen Sound, Ontario, the past winter, Brother Benson Belrose being the speaker. The bad weather prevented them from being as well attended as could have been desired, but they were commended as "very attractive" by one of the local newspapers. Finally, in response to the many questions sent in, he advertised a sermon on the differences between the church and that in Utah. He had a large and interested audience who seemed to appreciate very much his lucid explanation. At another time he spoke on "Does the forty and two months mentioned in Revelation 13: 5 refer to the duration of the present war?" He contended it had no such interpretation. The various clippings sent us concerning the meetings indicate the services are creating much favorable attention.

A request comes in from Sister Etta Miller, of Clyde, Colorado, that the Saints in Denver look up Mrs. B. L. Wren, of 2053 Glenarm Street, and let her know where meetings are held. She is not a member but interested.

Sister C. G. Tong, of Remus, Michigan, says they have been especially tried this winter with so much cold and snow, but are going to start their Sunday school again as soon as possible. They try to keep in touch with the progress of the church and yearn for the time when all God's people can be gathered and enjoy associating together.

Prayers are desired for Sister Inez Fry, of Missouri Valley, Iowa. She desires to avoid the operation which has been pronounced necessary. She has a large family and is a widow. Her faith is in the Lord and his power to save.

The discussion of politics was strictly forbidden at a recent meeting of the Buckeye Republican Club, in Columbus, Ohio, while they and invited guests from clergymen and church members of all denominations as well as members of the other political parties, and women, listened with interest to an address on "The Holy Bible and the war—how it will end," by L. C. Lewis, one of the officers in our branch at Columbus. Many friends were made. The Saints at that place are getting into the temperance arena again, seeking State ratification of the constitutional amendment.

CHURCH RECORDER MOVING

The office of the church recorder will likely be established in Independence before June 1. In the meantime Brother Carpenter desires that his correspondents hold all minor inquiries till about that time or till further notice is given, as in the process of getting everything moved it will be impossible to attend to anything except very urgent matters. All ordinary mail for the office should from now on be directed to C. I. Carpenter, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Elder Solomon Tripp is now located in Anderson County, Kansas, one mile south of Mount Ida, and wishes to get acquainted with the president of the district. If there are any Saints there, living near Carnett, Welda, or Mount Ida, he desires them to either call on him or drop him a card so he can look them up.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION IN SESSION

The Board of Publication of the church has been in session on the 27th and 29th, at Lamoni. A number of problems of considerable magnitude are before them. Under the newly adopted coordination plan, all the publishing interests of the church would come under the department of publication, including the issuance of the Sunday school and Religious Quarterlies, which have hitherto been under the charge of the officers of those organizations. The change of supervision may be made gradually, since provisions for it allow a year's time for adjustment.

COLLEGE ANNUAL SOON READY

The students at Graceland have prepared and turned in for printing the Acacia, their college annual, which will be on sale in a very short time. They tell us it is better than ever, and from the information they furnish, we are inclined to believe they are right. They have 16 extra pages this time, making a total of 128. The foreword is by President F. M. Smith; there is a late picture of Peter Choso and wife (Peter is the Japanese student who attended Graceland for some time and who named the annual the Acacia—he is now in Japan) the book is profusely illustrated with Paul N. Craig's famous cartoons and the art work all through is excellent, as we have ascertained from an examination of the cuts. The frontispiece is a picture of Graceland in three colors. The winning oration of last year is reproduced, on the subject of patriotism. There is a new department on wireless, and there are some most interesting pictures and accompanying text on the military department. The book is bound in strong paper and sells for $1.35, being well worth the money to anyone.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

I take great pride in my own firmness. But, oh, how I deplore the stubbornness of my brother!

When a man is pursuing a wrong course, adverse criticism often merely serves to steel his purpose. That is the brute in man dominating reason. Like a pig that resents guidance, he is the more determined to take his own course.

Two brethren, both of whom are very positive, were engaged in an argument. Finally one of them said heatedly, "The trouble with you is that you are stubborn." The other replied with equal vehemence, "I am not stubborn. I am firm." It is a wise man who can draw the line for himself. Anyone can draw it for another.

Keen repartee is by no means confined to polite society or celebrated wits. Some time ago, as the story runs, a Lamoni school-teacher was quarreling with a Lamoni schoolgirl. It was by no means the first quarrel, and at last the vexed teacher said, "What would happen if you should agree with me once?" The answer came back serenely, "Why then we would both be wrong."

A local politician delivered a speech that to him seemed to merit preservation. He went to the local print shop and arranged to have it set and several copies struck off. At the day set for delivery he called at the office but was told that the speech was not yet all in type. Much annoyed he inquired the reason. The printer replied, "We used up every capital I in the shop before we got it half set and had to quit."

A preacher had held some very successful meetings to which the people flocked. When asked the attraction he struck an attitude and replied, "The attraction? I am the attraction!" The politician might be forgiven, but how about the preacher? Jesus said, "I will draw all men unto me." When a preacher concludes that he is the attraction, he has confessed that he is not in partnership with Jesus Christ. For even egotism gone to seed would not claim to be the superior attractive force in such a partnership.

The pastime of compelling some one to kiss the flag is becoming much too popular in America. The latest demonstration of such "patriotism" occurred "somewhere in Iowa." In this instance the mob compelled a man ninety years old to kiss the flag. As he had been bedridden two years there was little risk attending the enterprise, and it gave a very correct gauge of the courage and intelligence of the men who carried it out.

The flag is the most revered national emblem. To submit the starry banner to the lips of an alien enemy who hates it is an insult to the flag. Imagine a man whose wife has been insulted by a black-guard adjusting the difficulty by compelling the wife to submit to the kiss of her traducer.

Men who are hunting down alien enemies by way of mob investigation and jury are mostly of military age. They may not be of conscript age but probably most of them are of an age that would permit them to enter the Army as volunteers. They are so very patriotic that they certainly should flock to the colors and be sent at once to the front trenches. There perchance they might stop some German bullets that otherwise might destroy something or somebody of value to the country.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE COORDINATING COMMITTEE

One of the most important features of the recent conference was the provision for the coordination committee. A careful reading of their report will show that this committee will have much to do with the various institutions and organizations of the church. In fact, it will act as a sort of managing board to divide and arrange the work of the several different departments.

When the work is once outlined it is quite possible that this committee will not have very much to do. Still, it may prove of value as a permanent board for the exchange of ideas. But during the next few years it may have much to do in bringing about a more complete coordination and rearrangement of work.

It seems apparent that many departments of our work could with profit be more closely affiliated and consolidated.

We have already referred to the new arrangement of the annual General Conventions, which will now be held as a department meeting. In this, we confess we see a great gain without any corresponding loss. Most of the auxiliary business could be handled to advantage in this way.

As to the matter of nominating heads of departments, this has caused a good deal of discussion in the conventions. It seems quite evident that the First Presidency are at the head of the whole church and preside over the whole church. President F. M. Smith has made this his special prayer that he might know men, and be able to choose experts, or men of ability, for the several departments of church activity. He with his counselors will nominate the heads of departments, and he, with the heads of departments, will nominate the divisional heads, or the other officers found necessary.

It is quite evident to anyone who has studied our auxiliary societies carefully, that the constitutions, both of the Sunday school and the Religio, will require a careful and broad revision in accordance with this new plan. It should be taken up by the general officers before the meeting of the next General Convention.

It is regrettable that in the past the auxiliaries have been forced to go out to make their own way, to succeed. We are very glad to note their return, and a day of closer unity before us.

A number of matters have been referred to this committee to determine and adjust. The boy movement, arrangements for the lecture course, and it is quite possible that the library may also be considered by this committee; since these are some aspects of it at least, which greatly concern the several different departments, as at present we have libraries at the college, the church at the Herald Publishing House, editorial library, the Sanitarium, and general church offices in Independence; while the Sunday school and Religio are very greatly interested in all of the local libraries throughout the church, and are especially concerned about this part of the movement. In fact, it is noted that nearly all departments of the coordinating committee are concerned with some phase of the library work.

We have long been of the opinion that the Library Commission represented a transition. Its primary purpose was to bring about a closer relation between the church and the auxiliaries. It seems quite evident that the work can be better handled in most districts and stakes by a single, competent person, who assumes the responsibility. Whether it is best to have a committee or a single individual in the branches, is open to some question, though it is quite probable that one active member would accomplish more than several lukewarm ones.

As to the general Library Commission, in addition to supervising the work of the various local and stake libraries, we have to consider the interest and needs of the general church library, which should primarily concern itself with books for and against the church, and books concerning religion and its various phases.

The Historian's library, the editorial library, the church Presidency's library, Presiding Bishop's, Sanitarium, and college libraries also need attention. The latter is probably the largest library the church now holds, and when a library building is erected it is quite probable that part, at least, of the church libraries will be housed in that building. But it is also evident that church books of references will be needed by the general officers in Independence, and also, a department library for the Historian and for the editorial rooms.

We very heartily favor this new move and urged several years ago that such a building should be erected and that it should house the college library and general church library.

We note in the case of library work, and also in the case of other departments of work, a tendency to hesitate and wonder what will now happen. We would rather strongly urge that your work be carried on energetically and put in as good shape as possible, then when the change is made, or whatever changes are made, our particular part of the work will be in the best possible shape to be taken over. We should not have a period of comparative idleness. That which is worth while should be and will be preserved.

This coordinating committee at present consists of President F. M. Smith, Gomer R. Wells, G. S. Trowbridge, George N. Briggs, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Bishops B. R. McGuire and A. Carmichael. We are advised that they will meet the first part of May.

AN OLD SONGBOOK

E. C. Bell, of Saint Louis, assistant general church chorister, brought with him to the conference the front cover of an old songbook, "The new lute of Zion," which was once owned by Elder Mark H. Forscutt, and was used by him during the General Conference of 1871. On the front cover is listed every song that was used during that conference, together with the day on which it was used, for each of the services for April 5 to April 9. We note "Coronation," "Walk in the light," "A calm and gentle quiet," "Rest for the weary," and "Over there." It will scarcely be necessary to add that this last song has no reference to the popular song by that name used to-day. It was very much used some forty-five years ago in the church.

Brother Bell has the whole of this book, including the songs, in a collection of some twenty-odd volumes of old songbooks.

THE HIGH PRIESTS

The Quorum of High Priests held, during the recent conference, a series of successful and progressive sessions. On April 6 they held a brief service of prayer. The morning of the 8th was taken with the joint meeting of the Twelve, seventies, patriarchs, bishops, and high priests, on the agreement with the Church of Christ.

Seven sessions were held of which four consumed from two to two and one half hours apiece, taking up such questions as the historical evidences showing baptism for the dead, as a part of the doctrine of Christ, by T. W. Williams, who gave a careful review of the early Christian church and its practice, quoting many authorities on early church history. He continued with Biblical criticism and quoted what appears in church history and the Doctrine and Covenants to further the view.

Albert Carmichael discussed the storehouse in theory and practice, and answered a number of questions. He told what is being done in a practical way in Lamoni, the grocery, meat market, coal elevator, and the mill, all of which are directly controlled as a storehouse, and other industries in view.

Orman Salisbury discussed whether the business of the storehouse should extend outside of a stake, to which he gave an affirmative answer.

Richard Salyards discussed the organization of Zion, as compared with the present stake organization. The principal difference pointed out was, that in Zion the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, assisted by the general High Council, presides, though the Presidency and Bishopric may be assisted by ward bishops or a local stake presidency, who will be in charge, especially during the absence of the presiding officer.

Walter W. Smith discussed the law concerning presiding priests, teachers, and deacons, prior to the time that this matter was taken up by the General Conference. He urged that there is no provision in the law for such officers.

John F. Garver presented the stake as a number of units in the ward and a number of divisions and branches, yet a unit under the stake presidency.

Nearly all of these papers led to critical discussions and developed a clear understanding of the new movement in the church. They were held in the building on the Temple Lot. We hope to have some of them later for publication. S. A. B.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION MEETS

A number of important meetings were held in Lamoni on April 26 and 28, the business transacted including the following:

The board was organized with Bishop B. R. McGuire as president, and Bishop M. H. Siegfried secretary.

Bishop A. Carmichael was reelected manager of the Board of Publication, which includes a general business supervision of the Herald Publishing House, Ensign Publishing House, and of the Standard Publishing House, Sydney, Australia.

O. W. Parker, who has been acting as assistant business manager of the Herald Office for the past two years, was chosen as business manager for the coming year.

R. J. Lambert, now a member of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric, and who has had about twenty years of experience in the various branches of the printing trade and in other business, was chosen to take charge of the Ensign Publishing House at Independence as business manager. He will also be associate editor, with Walter W. Smith as editor. In addition to these duties, Brother Lambert will assume the duties of advertising manager of the Board of Publication the coming year. He will move his family to Independence in a few weeks.

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith were chosen editors of the HERALD, with S. A. Burgess associate and E. D. Moore assistant editors, the same arrangement that has prevailed the past year.

Sister Estella Wight still guides the destiny of Stepping Stones as its editor. The editors of Zion's Hope will continue to be Estella Wight and Ethel I. Skank.

After careful deliberation, the board decided to adopt the cash basis for transaction of all business for the publishing interests. Further announcements will no doubt be made by them, but we are informed that it will go into effect on June 1, 1918. This will affect agents especially, and will mean that no more book contracts will be issued from that time.

The board retained Heman C. Smith as editor of the Journal of History till notified of the action of the joint council on the appointment of a church historian.

AN UNJUST RESTRICTION ON THE PRESS

It seems we must join in the general protest against the excess postage bill to go into effect July 1, which will greatly increase the postage rates on newspapers and magazines by the arrangement of a zone system. It will increase the postage bill of publishers from 50 to 900 per cent.

Perhaps you have read the extensive arguments as to why it should be repealed, but we have seen no good reason why it should not. It seems to us to be discriminatory, for without the privileges of the press untrammelled, we are bound to take a backward step—a move toward the condition which brought Russia into submission to a dominance about which she knew but little. We need our publications; they have a distinctively educational place in our lives. We are not all able to secure skilled training in schools, but for a small investment we can keep in touch with the progress of one of the most critical periods of the world's history. To raise the price of postage in this manner will react upon the ultimate buyer and levy a tax which it seems to us should not be required.

Write to your Congressman, explaining that you are opposed to the excess postage bill and want it repealed. It can be done, and should be. Send your letter right away.

GENERAL MANAGER FOR CHURCH FARMS

At joint meetings of the boards and committees involved, recently held in Lamoni, arrangements were completed whereby the services of Brother Floyd T. Lesh, of Oil City, Pennsylvania, are secured as general manager of the farm interests of the church institutions in Lamoni. These include the 40-acre improved farm at the college and a considerable portion of the 60-acre college campus, the 200 acres connected with the Saints' and Liberty Homes, and 38 acres of the Children's Home property.

He will attempt to so coordinate the work of these institutions in an agricultural way as to make them more profitable and at the same time a demonstration of cooperative efficiency.

Brother Lesh has a degree of bachelor of science in agronomy from the Pennsylvania State College, with considerable farming experience previous and since.

If practicable, it is hoped to install a course in agriculture at Graceland College for the coming year, with Brother Lesh in charge. No doubt adequate announcements will be made as soon as possible concerning this feature. Incidentally, but of interest to our young men, he has figured prominently in college athletics. He is now as enthusiastic over wrestling with his new assignment, and we wish him all success.

CONFERENCE NOTES

This is not the time to teach "hurry to Zion," but to prepare. Do not gather in haste; use wisdom; consult the Bishop, then wait until arrangements can be made. Zion must be built up lawfully.

Buy liberty bonds. If you do not know what to do with them, send to the Bishop. Mail is delivered to him three times a day.

Zion must be a place which socially reflects the glory of God.

Socialism does not mean the Socialist party any more than democracy means the Democratic Party. Socialism is much broader than the Socialist Party and certainly much broader than the doctrine of Marx. Socialism is no more a matter of Marxism than democracy is a matter of the revolution.

This misuse of words has been amply illustrated by the story of a man who refused to subscribe for a Liberty Bond on the grounds that Woodrow Wilson was fighting this war to make the world safe for democracy, and he was a Republican.

Is he in fact made of the same psychic material as were the prophecies and expectations of him, turning the souls that follow him, not like neurotics and psychasthenics, away from reality, but with a supreme and unique energy to it, modulating over from will be to is in the birthhour of our era and lapsing since to has been in the many conjugations of our complex grammar of assent, which has every conceivable mood and voice as well as tense, for the verb "to believe," like the verb "to love," has not only every form of inflection but may have a vast number of both subjects and objects. Or will such studies, if confirmed, do for Jesus what Kant sought to do for God, soul, and immortality, by exalting them above the categories and making them postulates for conduct? and may we thus establish faith in Jesus by the practical rather than by the theoretical reason?—G. Stanley Hall.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

FOLLOWING DAME FASHION

In traversing the streets of Kansas City the other day, and passing one of the large, fashionable stores whose display windows were offering an exhibition of models of the latest styles of womens' apparel of a more or less attenuated, depleted, or perhaps suggestive form, and before which, critical, admiring, and possible or prospective customers in great numbers thronged the sidewalks—customers whose street apparel suggested but little lack of money, elegance or display, to say nothing of clothing outworn or of such long service that made it uncomfortable for bodily service, shabby, or threadbare—but rather that there was an ambition and desire for some new display or attraction for their physical charms, lately ordered by an all too willing disposition to manifest their loyalty to one of the worst tyrants that has ever cursed humanity; whose almost universal sway makes any attempt towards normal, sensible, healthful, or real economic habit, an unpopular and thankless task.

Had the day referred to been of a temperature that generally is experienced in the months of July or August, instead of a bitter cold winter's day, the "spectacle" that presented itself to a "heathen," or an unsophisticated observer of bare throats and neck, and—and—shoulders covered (mostly) by heavy furs and also by prominence and contrast, the clothing (or lack), at the extremities, might not have been so striking.

We were led into wonderment why, in the name of all that is really beautiful, sensible, or—shall we say it?—modest, the modern goddess of fashion could not or would not, have ordered those furs or comfortable clothing, placed where they would do the most good, or by the laws of health and modesty, where they belong—upon the extremities—the feet and limbs, instead of a dress that was "Hooverized" top and bottom, three or four inch heel, kid boots, and silk hosiery, conspicuous oftentimes for what they failed to conceal.

We wondered how long before the present generation would resist these senseless drains upon the normal vigor of the women of our country, and furnish the Nation with the "sinews of war" and with a strong and virile manhood and womanhood in time of peace.

We wish to call attention in this connection, to some of the prophetic utterances of the prophet of the Lord, that we believe have a bearing upon the subject under consideration.

"Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness."—Isaiah 1: 27.

"What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it."—Isaiah 14: 32.

The writer has in his time listened with pleasure, and we believe with profit, to the eloquent pleas of Father McGlynn, ex-priest of the church of Rome, who was president of the Anti-Poverty Society of New York, an organization that included many in its ranks—unselfish and patriotic workers for the success of a plan for a more just and equitable arrangement and distribution of earth's natural gifts and bounty among the people who toil and produce. But its survival was of short duration.

I have never thought but that socialism, as a whole, has had among its supporters and followers many great and good meaning men and women, who had honestly thought that they had discovered a remedy for unequal conditions in the social affairs of the world. These all may have had the elements of a preparation of the minds of many people for the serious consideration of God's plan for a realization of the great mission of "the desire of all nations," and the hope of the world.

It is the purpose of the writer to call attention to a thing or two that may have been overlooked because of environment, lack of study of the books in which God has sought to convey fundamental information, and education concerning the final, actual, or complete "redemption of Zion, the pure in heart."

For those who desire to understand the real meaning of the writer, we would like to call attention to the reading of the third chapter of Isaiah, 12th to 28th verses; we will, however, quote from 12th and 16th verses.

As for my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. . . . Moreover, the Lord saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks, and wanton eyes, [deceiving with their eyes—margin], walking and mincing, [tripping nicely—margin] as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet.

Bells upon the feet have already been introduced in parts of the earth, and may easily become associated with other follies whenever the mistress of the devotees of fashion so orders.

Evidently, the fulfillment of these predictions could not have had their complete fulfillment either antecedent or subsequent to the time of the siege of Jerusalem by Titus. But as is seen in the fourth chapter, they must refer, in point of time, to the Zion of latter days.

I have thought that the trend of events might justify us in calling attention to fashionable follies in our day and warrant us in making the application to growing tendencies in the direction here referred to, and to other plain restrictions offered in the Book of Mormon, New Testament, and latter-day revelation, which certainly synchronize or harmonize into a warning voice as from the Lord, whom we profess to be willing to heed when he counsels, or to believe and try to practice, as though we were willing to try to "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," or seriously regard it as a necessity in the establishment of the Zion of the latter days.

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." "Gather my Saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," (Psalm 50: 2 and 5.) "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." (Psalm 102: 16.)

We are told also, through the seer of latter days, that "the glory of God is intelligence." And, if, as Paul says, "we are to be glorified together with him," I have thought of some things that we, as Saints, may have overlooked, that form a natural bar to his presence and society, or suggest something of the character of the cleavage between the wise and the foolish virgins.

"And again, thou shalt not be proud in thine heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

The cultivation of a taste and true artistic habit will betray the soul's alignment with the mind of God, the Creator, who evidently never designed or contemplated the turning over of the creature that he had made and had pronounced as "very good," to the deforming, mutilating, and corrupting processes of men and women that have become almost, if not altogether, alienated from God in thought and deed.

Is not the body more than the raiment? said Jesus. "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" was the inquiry. "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek! . . . but seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." And the additional necessities which would naturally follow in an alignment with his will were to be among the things promised and to be provided for.

These things spoken to the disciples then, may legitimately be applied to all of his professing followers, in our opinion. And the difference between our real needs for every physical, moral, and spiritual service and enjoyment, and the multiplied wants which modern fashion pacemakers order, is the thing which we are trying to call attention to.

Concerning John the Baptist, said Jesus, "But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses," and from this we infer, and from the description of John's raiment, that God, at least, considered the message of Christ and his great forerunner was of more importance and paramount to any superficial ornamentation or display.

"Let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of your own hands." Not all men or women have a natural adaptation for the vocation of tailoring or dressmaking, or the arranging of suitable, as well as natural and comely befitting head or foot covering, but these will be found among the inhabitants of Zion redeemed—everyone to his natural gift or calling for service in these matters—but the term beauty in this connection is to be determined in its character by the relation that it bears toward the economic, moral, mental, and spiritual growth and needs of the soul.

"They that wear soft clothing live in kings' houses," and foolish men and envious women strain all of their faculties of mind and body toward the imitation or accomplishment of the superficial life, while their soul lives in the cellar or garret.

The thinking or observant visitor or guest, amid the throng at a popular function, no matter where he may be, will soon discern by acquaintance the vast inequality of mental or spiritual estate attained by the two classes or general divisions of society.

Matters of common gossip—small nothings—of the conventional style—conversation a la mode, or as an art—if Talleyrand may be quoted, who said, that "the art of language was to conceal ideas," are to be found among the miseducational accomplishments of modern society.

Another, and probably smaller coterie or group, may be found of kindred affiliation, whose attention and time has been largely engaged in the contemplation and study of the lives of truly great and good men and women—for none can be truly great without being good. Chief among them is the center figure of all history, who has said, "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" In our day, in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5, we have this last word.

Behold, it is my will, that those who call on my name, and worship me according to my everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, . . . Wherefore fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul, and seek the face of the Lord always.

Profligacy among young men, and a disinclination to assume the financial burdens of a matrimonial alliance with a fashionable—but uneducated in the fundamental affairs of life—young girl of a, perhaps, foolish mother, a girl who is likely to feel indisposed to assume a habit of life or dress which her husband's income can afford, and who might, by extravagance, invite poverty and a homeless condition and want in old age—as well as be the cause of many crimes of a social, or even of a financial character.

The pride or passion, desire or compelling force, that leads women, in or out of the church of God, to follow the suggestive manner or apparel worn by so many women and girls, can be interpreted in no other way than an attempt by the pacemakers of fashion to attract, principally, the attention of the male portion of society to their physical charms, and, as a rule, is in exact inverse ratio to their intellectual, spiritual, if not moral attainments or character.

The writer would not favor the extreme of a universal or unattractive costume for women, which is in its nature opposed to the manifestation of a true and permanent beauty, but that which is of a character that is mentally, morally, and spiritually well balanced and regulated in its attitude toward, and in its affiliation with, the mind of Jesus Christ. But a change is needed to a manner of clothing or covering that will protect and preserve the idea of economy, freedom of movement, and healthy exercise of bodily function and normal activity, as well as to be a complete defensive habit, free from the danger of immodesty, and which will make an improper exposure in active, physical, or outdoor exercise an impossibility.

As matters now stand, a woman who would attempt to cover her extremities with protective clothing such as men wear, for instance, and a pair of warm, foot-fitting, serviceable, comfortable, healthful, sensible shoes that betrayed the presence of courage and brains in the mind of the manufacturer and of the wearer—a shoe that was fitted to the plan of God in her creation—the howl of “immodesty” would arise from the throats of a thousand fashion-clad women, subjects of the modern mogul of fashion, whose aim is toward more poverty for the poor through the compelling forcing of fashion to either an imitation of the rich, or ostracism from their society.

We are told in a revelation given to the Church of God in 1832, that the Lord designed that the “church might stand independently above all other creatures beneath the celestial world,” a condition we are, as yet, far from having attained to, either commercially, financially, morally, or spiritually. We are still subject to many of the unprofitable, expensive, wasteful habits and examples set for us into which we are often too easily led by our environment.

“I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil,” was the word of the Master.

“He that overcometh shall inherit all things.” The beginning of the service by and through which only, we can “inherit” all “good things” is by learning by experiment of the “sweets of self-denial.”

We are advised or admonished by real or assumed authorities, solicitous for our spiritual welfare regarding our attendance at, or our prohibition of theater visits, moving or screen pictures (good, bad, or indifferent), from those holding variously graded opinions. Conscientious people differ as to complete prohibition, and what others might consider, not only harmless, but even of an entertaining and educational character.

But whatever may be the final verdict concerning those who indulge in, or who abstain from these things, I think that timely attention of professed Saints should be called to the body and soul destroying fashions of the day, and that something looking toward reform in dress, and independence from bondage to fashion in apparel be sought, so that reason, reflection, and hygienic control of the wonderful plan and creation of God, made after his own image, shall permit unhindered service for self, for humanity, and for Christ in the glorifying of him “in our body and spirit which are his.”

Since commencing this article some time ago, the matter has been emphasized by observation and acquaintance with the effects produced by imitation of the fashionable habit of women especially, and the spirit that is being fostered and encouraged in the direction of worldly pride in, not only expensive, but an immodest tendency upon the part of the young, or the middle aged, married, or unmarried.

Saint Peter tells us that in his day, saints were called to be “a chosen generation, . . . an holy nation, a peculiar people; . . . which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God.” “Dearly beloved,” he says, “I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul.” And of women, “Whose adorning; let it not be that of outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart.”

The prophet, Moroni, in foretelling by the Spirit of prophecy concerning the destruction among the Gentiles in our day—and which we are now witnessing—says: “And I know that ye do walk in the pride of your hearts; and there are none, save a few only, who do not lift themselves up in the pride of their hearts unto the wearing of very fine apparel, unto envyings and strifes," etc. "Why do ye adorn yourselves with that which hath no life, and yet suffer the hungry and needy, and the sick and afflicted to pass by you and notice them not? Why do ye not think that greater is the value of an endless happiness than that misery which never dies, because of the praise of the world?"—Book of Mormon.

Any habit or custom whose influence has a tendency to stimulate toward a wrong direction of the sex forces, is a distinct tendency in favor of one of the greatest corrupting forces of our age.

Any woman, young or middle aged, married or unmarried, who offers to the public gaze that which belongs only to a Godly marriage estate, is, consciously or unconsciously, lending her influence to one of the most dangerous evils of our time.

Shakespeare has said: "There's naught so much as modesty, becomes a woman; the charest maid is prodigal enough if she unveil her beauty to the Moon. Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes; contagious blastments are most imminent. Be wary then; best safety lies in fear."

"Come out of her, O my people, and be not partaker of her sins, lest ye receive of her plagues," is the warning message in the Apocalyptic vision had by Saint John on Patmos Isle. M. H. B.

TIME OF HOLY SPIRIT BAPTISM

Does one receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit immediately following confirmation? Possibly there is not another question relating to gospel obedience more frequently asked and no other fact on which there is a greater diversity of opinion. The HERALD editors having asked me to offer some suggestions, I undertake the task, not with the hope of settling the question, but rather to stimulate thought, with the possibility of an abler mind being moved to elucidate more clearly, for it is certain that many an honest heart has desire to learn to the degree of being able to reach a settled and soul-satisfying conclusion.

What is the baptism of the Holy Spirit and how may I know when I have received it? are no doubt the two correlated questions that should be answered if anything like a settlement of the issue is to be reached. The receiving of the Spirit to at least the degree of the impartation of a gift and the amount of fire necessary to produce the burning process to the extent of the "remission of sins," would seem to be the paramount answer. The time of such reception would likely be the very first moment of one's worthiness to receive. Most people seem to feel that the moment confirmation has culminated, or even while the hands are yet imposed is the "time."

It would certainly seem that if any had become fitted by both experience and office to become immediate recipients of such "baptism" that the eleven apostles were such ones. Luke 24:45-49 seems to clearly point out that the time is near for these men to receive the Holy Spirit in baptismal or enduing power. The fiftieth verse seems to clearly portray that Christ confirmed these men, and yet it was not until ten days later that they received. But some one says, "If I could receive such a demonstration as did they, I would not care if it were a year later, I would be satisfied!" My dear brother, the facts are that it may be because you are not satisfied is the very reason why you have not as yet received it, if so be you have not so received.

After elucidating by name the nine different "gifts" which the Holy Spirit imparts (1 Corinthians 12:9, 10), the writer of the Corinthian letter says:

But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body [the church], whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

Suppose, then, immediately after I have been confirmed there is imparted unto me the "gift" of faith; am I to say that I have not yet received the Spirit baptism? If not having so received, whence that "gift of faith"? It may so happen that one has gone for months or possibly years with the thought in mind that as yet no baptism of the Spirit has been received, and such an one has in all that time been in the exercise of "knowledge" or "wisdom" or such gift at least as the Holy Spirit has willed to divide unto him! Just because we have not been able to prophesy or speak in tongues, or have not worked miracles or interpreted tongues, it does not follow that we have not been baptized with the Holy Spirit.

We should ever feel that so soon as God determines that we are in a "worthy" condition to so receive that he will instruct the Spirit to do its work with and in us, and that whatever that Spirit wills to impart to us as a "gift" he will do so. The thing for us then to do will be to use rather than to abuse the gift. Though privileged to exercise a certain gift I have never felt that the right to so exercise was mine without the like evidence, at least, of Cleopas and his companion while on their way to Emmaus: "Did not our heart burn within us?" As the presence of Christ imparted unto them this warmth of feeling so will the presence of the Comforter that came into the world to take his place as our companion impart unto us, and more especially so when such Spirit wishes us to exercise the gift he has imparted unto us to the edification of all. This would seem to be the safe rule at least remembering the while that "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." (1 Corinthians 14: 32.)

"The conclusion of the whole matter" then, would be that because one does not receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit immediately at confirmation it does not follow that he has "made a mistake," or yet that it is quite possible that such an one has actually received of such baptism and made the mistake of not knowing it by not understanding the actual situation. Different ones have said that they have gone for months before so receiving and have known definitely when it did come, while others have said that it has gone on for years.

With a wish that the day may hasten when there shall be a greater unity along all lines and a deeper devotion to God and his truth, with more and more of a true overcoming of the vices of the world and a putting on of the whole armor of God.

THE NEW JERUSALEM

Four months of British occupation have worked a transformation in Jerusalem. From a city of squalor and poverty under Turkish rule it has changed to a city of cleanliness, industrial activity and content. Impartial and sympathetic justice maintains order and protects property; intelligent direction finds useful labor at good wages for all the unemployed; the sick are cared for; schools are organized; sanitation is provided. Roads are being built in the city and from it to neighboring points; the whole occupied region of southern Palestine is being improved—not by half-starved and slave-driven labor, but by workers well fed and well paid. The shepherds who watch their flocks upon the Judean plains rejoice in the fact that they can pursue their pastoral occupation in a hitherto unknown security. Predatory tribesmen find it unwholesome to venture where the flag of Britain waves. And not least among the blessings is the relief from extortion by the Turkish officials, who collected taxes and fines and tribute whenever they needed the money.

This is the kind of thing that Great Britain has done wherever she has gone in her wanderings on the highways and byways of the world. Imperialistic she has been, but imperialistic in the spirit of freedom and democracy.—Denver News.

CHURCHES AND CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

[The following information is furnished by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, and contains some most pertinent statistics.—EDITORS.]

During the ten-year period ending December 31, 1916, the total church membership in the United States increased from 35,068,058 to 42,044,374, or by 19.9 per cent; the number of churches, from 212,230 to 228,007, or by 7.4 per cent; the number of ministers, from 164,830 to 191,722, or by 16.3 per cent; the number of Sunday school scholars, from 15,337,811 to 20,569,831, or by 34.1 per cent; the number of Sunday school officers and teachers, from 1,746,074 to 2,049,293, or by 17.4 per cent. These data, which constitute a few of the significant facts developed by the Census Bureau's recent inquiry relating to religious bodies, are contained in a statement issued by Director Sam L. Rogers and compiled under the supervision of Mr. William C. Hunt, chief statistician for population. The statistics presented are preliminary and subject to later revision, but are substantially correct.

The total number of denominations covered by the statistics was 201, an increase of 13 over the number reported for 1906. This increase is the net result of the consolidation or dropping out of 16 small denominations and the addition of 29 small denominations, the latter comprising some which were actually in existence in 1906 but not then brought to light, and others resulting from consolidation of formerly independent churches, reorganization within existing denominations, etc.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

Of the 42,044,374 church members reported, 15,742,262, or 37.4 per cent, were Roman Catholics; 250,340, or six tenths of 1 per cent, were adherents of the Eastern Orthodox churches (mainly Greek Church and Russian Church); 359,998, or nine-tenths of 1 per cent, were members of Jewish congregations; and the remainder, 25,691,774, or 61.1 per cent, comprised the membership of the various Protestant churches; together with that of a few bodies, such as the Latter Day Saints, the Spiritualists, and others, not usually considered as belonging to any of the groups named.

In comparing the figures just given, it should be borne in mind that the Roman Catholic and the Eastern Orthodox churches include in their membership all infants and the children who have been baptized, whereas the Protestant churches do not, as a rule, receive young children as members; and that in the case of some of the more Orthodox Jewish organizations only the male incorporators of the institutions or those who have bought shares or memberships in them are treated as members.

The foregoing percentages, therefore, overstate the relative strength of the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches and understate that of the Jews.

The canvass showed 9 denominations which had a total membership of more than 1,000,000 each and an aggregate of 32,468,732, or 77.2 per cent of the entire membership reported for all religious bodies. These organizations, with their membership, were as follows: Baptist, Northern, 1,227,448; Baptist, Southern, 1,711,591; Baptist, National (colored), 3,018,341; Disciples of Christ, 1,231,404; Methodist Episcopal, 3,718,396; Methodist Episcopal, South, 2,108,061; Presbyterian in U. S. A., 1,613,056; Protestant Episcopal, 1,098,173; Roman Catholic, 15,742,262.

The aggregate membership of the several Baptist denominations (North, South, Colored, and 14 others) was 7,236,650; of the various Methodist denominations (Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal-South, Methodist Protestant, African Methodist Episcopal, African Methodist Episcopal Zion, Colored Methodist Episcopal, and 11 other Methodist denominations, 5 of which are white and 6 are colored), 7,165,986; of the Presbyterian denominations (Presbyterian in U. S. A., Presbyterian in U. S., United Presbyterian, and 7 others), 2,257,439; and of the 21 Lutheran denominations, 2,463,265.

MINISTERS

The total number of ministers reported, 191,792, comprised 20,287 Catholic priests, 356 priests of the Eastern Orthodox churches, 719 Jewish rabbis, and 170,359 ministers of other churches, mainly of Protestant denominations. The percentage of increase in number of ministers during the ten-year period, 16.3, was somewhat less than that in membership, 19.9. The average number of church members to each minister for all denominations in 1916 was 219. For the Roman Catholics, however, the corresponding average, 776, was much larger.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS

The canvass showed 207,789 Sunday schools, with 2,049,293 officers and teachers and 20,569,831 scholars. These totals comprise 195,276 Sunday schools, with 1,959,918 officers and teachers and 19,951,675 scholars, conducted by church organizations, and 12,513 undenominational and union Sunday schools, with 89,375 officers and teachers and 618,156 scholars. The average number of officers and teachers to each denominational Sunday school was thus almost exactly 10 and the average number of scholars was a small fraction more than 100; whereas in the case of the undenominational and union Sunday schools the average number of officers and teachers was a little more than 7 and the average number of scholars not quite 50. The number of scholars in the Roman Catholic Sunday schools, 1,853,245, was equal to 9.3 per cent of the total for all denominational Sunday schools. This proportion was very much smaller than the corresponding one, 37.4 per cent, which Roman Catholic church membership represented of the total. This difference is due in large part to the fact that the attendants at Protestant Sunday schools include many adults, whereas practically all scholars in Roman Catholic Sunday schools are very young children, and in many cases the parochial school takes the place of the Sunday school. Moreover, as already pointed out, the total membership of the Roman Catholic churches includes all infants and children who have been baptized, whereas that of Protestant churches consists almost entirely of youths and adults.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Late Convention

A week has passed, and we have scarcely yet gotten our breath after the whirl of the conference time. Such crowds of happy people, and such meetings, and greetings, smiles and nods! Truly it is a "home-coming" we would all miss were the fates to place our conferences farther apart!

The first public word of our woman's convention plans was given when Sister Frederick M. Smith, one evening at the close of a Sunday School convention program, was privileged to make announcement of the coming meetings for women. She read the outlined program and assured all the women, visiting as well as local, that real, definite, and special interest for them was to be found in the women's work of the next week.

Monday morning found the lower auditorium of the church well filled with women at the appointed hour, and before the details of assembling were over every available seat was taken, and scores of women stood throughout the splendid addresses which followed. A brief summary of President Frederick M. Smith's address will be given later in this column; that of Sister Smith was published very recently. Through an oversight, Brother Smith's talk was not regularly reported, and the sketch referred to is only made possible through fragmentary, penciled notes.

Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley, of Omaha, Nebraska, sang two lovely spring songs, which made a happy interlude for the morning. Sister Lula Sandy presided with grace and tact, and held an informal reception at the close of the program, meeting many acquaintances made during her year of active work as Auxiliary president, as well as friends, old and new.

Tuesday morning, the 10th, saw the business well under way, violin solo by little Miss Lillian Green making a bright bit in the morning. Sister Walter Smith and Sister Viola Short were appointed a committee to wait upon the First Presidency asking for nomination for Auxiliary president. Reports of officers and supervisors were read, and since most of these have already been published in various forms in the Ensign or HERALD, we will likely not use them entire in this column as heretofore.

Resolutions of respect in memory of our late Sister B. C. Smith were adopted by the convention.

Sister Sandy presided at the annual open meeting on Tuesday evening in the upper auditorium. Sister George H. Hulmes led the great conference choir in a beautiful anthem, and Brother Robert Miller played an inspiring organ solo between the two addresses of the evening. These latter were by Elder Thomas W. Williams of Los Angeles, and Sister Audentia Anderson of Omaha. Synopses will appear in due time.

The election of officers for the coming year was completed Wednesday morning, the musical offering being a piano solo by Sister Laura Kelley Green. A full roster of officers, with addresses, as well as those of the supervisors chosen later, will be found elsewhere in this department.

Thursday forenoon was full of good things for the women in attendance at the convention meetings. Sister Charlotte Dryden, former teacher in the home economics and public speaking departments of the Iowa State Agricultural College, at Ames, talked of the practical value to the average home maker, of an education along domestic lines. Brother John W. Rushton talked of the relation between religion and economics, a dissertation which it is a pity every woman in the church did not hear, and which, we regret to say, was not reported so that it could be passed on in the complete form in which it was given. Miss Florence Carvin, demonstration agent for Jackson County, representing the Food Administration, gave a most forceful and vital talk upon woman's work in the present crisis and the need for every unit to stand squarely back of the Government in its efforts to rightly use the food supply of the Nation. The musical numbers were by Brother Arlo Hunt, violinist, and Sister Madge Nesbitt, soprano.

Friday morning, Sister Lula Sandy gave a most excellent address on good leadership. She has promised to arrange her notes in shape so that our readers may enjoy the splendid ideas she advanced. A round table conducted by Sister Madison, though somewhat crowded for time, resulted, we hope, in the clearing up of some problems for the visiting sisters.

Another year we expect our programs will be arranged so as to avoid some of the difficulties which handicapped us this year. The hour for our opening each morning conflicted with the closing hour of the prayer service above stairs with the result that from fifteen to twenty-five minutes were lost each day because of the confusion incident to the belated entrance of those who had attended the prayer service. We "live and learn," and we may safely conclude some mistakes will not be repeated, if possible to avoid them.

An extra business session was thrown in on Friday afternoon, and the week of activity for the woman's department closed on Saturday morning with a musical and reception held at the high school building, the interest and attendance having entirely outgrown the capacity of the woman's building, which had been originally selected. Almost every seat in the auditorium was occupied, and all intensely enjoyed the lovely musical and literary numbers which had been arranged by the committee, headed by Sister Walter Smith. Sister Blanche Allen Needham, of Toronto, Sister Madge Nesbitt, of Independence, Sister Nelle Kelley, of Omaha, and Sister W. N. Robinson, of Kansas City, sang solos, and Sisters Mildred Mather and Glenna Kennedy, both of Independence, sang a duet. Sister Israel A. Smith gave a reading from "Hiawatha," and Sister Marguerite Wickes, of Chicago, played two piano solos.

An appeal was made to the women for contributions to the worthy cause of succoring the women and children in starving Armenia, which resulted in a collection of $133. During the noon intermission, the brethren of the conference, hearing what the women had done, took up a collection of $122.85 to add to the amount, which totaled a nice little sum to forward to the Armenian relief cause.

Altogether, we feel that the events of the late convention show a real, earnest awakening upon the part of our church women, the world over, and a very great desire upon their part to take up more intelligently than ever the work which is clearly theirs to perform. While we recognize that in the great multiplicity of calls and meetings and interests in evidence at the conference time, we seem not to find time to accomplish all we had wished, yet we feel that the sisters who came to the conference from a distance cannot but go home with a greater sense of what it has meant, and is meaning, to be banded together in this woman's organization of the church. It has been most definitely recognized, and it is to become more and more clearly felt to be a great factor for good in the work before us as a religious body. The eldership is getting a better view of the possibilities in the branch and district work which may become realities through the proper directing of the woman forces of the church. Let us hope that each one of us will see the place we are to occupy, the niche in the vineyard concerning which we will be asked some day to report, and, seeing this, will feel a keener delight in occupying there efficiently.

In Sympathy

It is with deep regret we learn that our outgoing president, Sister Lula M. Sandy, has been called upon to part with her beloved mother. The latter was taken ill during the conference, and the season of convention was clouded for Sister Sandy by the anxieties attendant upon her mother's illness. Culminating as they have, in this parting, we wish to offer to our sister, all the heartfelt sympathy it is possible for us to feel and sense in this, her great sorrow? We realize that words are poor comfort, but we do know that in God's good provision, the mere knowledge that others suffer with us, helps to make such affliction bearable, and sooner or later, will have its part in helping us to take up our broken lives and reconstruct them, patiently and efficiently. We feel that our sister realizes the strong hope we, as Saints, have, that for us there is a beyond, a time and place where sorrow will have no part. May God's peace speak the comfort we are powerless to bestow.

To know how to grow old is the masterwork of wisdom, and one of the most difficult chapters in the great art of living.—Henri Frederic Amiel.

Some Resolutions of Interest Passed at Late Convention

"Because of the lax conditions existent in several of the European nations regarding polygamy and the sacredness of the marriage relationship, Be it resolved: That, as an international convention of women, we favor an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding polygamy."

"In these days of tragic warfare involving many nations and inflicting unspeakable suffering upon all sections of society, we recognize that the women and children of many of the smaller nations have been especially called to endure bitter privations, sacrifices, and dreadful atrocities. As American women who enjoy the blessings of God in protection from undue hardships, from privations and hunger, with homes still inviolate from ruthless foes, we feel, with deep sympathy and concern, our true relationship with our suffering sisters in other lands.

"While we thank God very reverently for his precious blessings to us in this regard, we would not forget the needs or the sorrows of our allied sisters, who have been driven to despair in this horrible struggle marked by death, grief, and ruin. We have noted with admiration and anxiety, the sublime heroism of our Belgian, Italian, and French women, and the noble devotion of our British and colonial sisters. Their splendid loyalty, expressed in deeds of sacrifices and service, stands as a glorious spectacle of ennobled womanhood which all the dark and dreadful history of this war cannot eclipse.

"Sad as are the events of the past few years, we feel that the awful depths to which the unfortunate women of such countries as Armenia, Serbia, Palestine, and Asia Minor, have been plunged have not been fully sensed. No imagination can picture too fearfully the catalogue of sorrows and indignities to which they have been subjected.

"We rejoice that our great and powerful Nation has joined with allied democracy to do all possible to stop these organized attacks of conscienceless power, (which, in its ruthless march to a sanguinary victory, tramples under its iron heel, helpless infancy, maidenly chastity, and womanhood's honor!) and, in the united effort for a righteous cause, would make the world safe for peace, industry, and the homes of the future.

"Be it resolved, therefore, That we, the women of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, represented in the conventions of the Woman's Auxiliary, hereby express to the President and Executive of the United States, our unreserved support of the administration's policies in this crisis, and do pledge ourselves to earnestly do all within our power to secure the final triumph for which we hope and work and pray.

"And be it further resolved, That we, the Woman's Auxiliary, show our profound sympathy for the sufferers of the land of Armenia, and send them greeting and good cheer in this dark period of their history by forwarding for their relief the sum of $255.85, collected from those in attendance at the convention."

Report of President of Woman's Auxiliary

To the Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, Greeting: In the year that has just past into history, and the year of stress that is before us at this time, there is being sought everywhere the true relation of women to life around them. At no time in the history of the nation has woman been so valuable to her generation as she is at this crisis of the world's affairs. We have been told that 99 per cent of all that people stand for in morals, education, charity, character, wealth, strength, and health is molded in the home; and since this is true the time of recognition has come for the home maker and she will receive her reward in the warm recognition that is coming to the women the world over as it has never been given to them before.

We have just passed through a critical year in the woman's work of this church. Many changes have been made; many are before us. We have not been able, at all times to carry out our plans as we wished because of the changes that are taking place in a national way in our country; but we have many things to our credit in the year's work. The personal touch with the women and men of the many branches in many States has been one stride forward this year. The educational class work on the cooperative plan that has really been begun this year is another step up, and the cooperating of all of our work under the minister who has charge of local and district work is another help in the right direction. I hope we have not moved too fast in the forward direction, so that the mass of women who are endeavoring to follow our plans have not been able to keep the vision of the work clearly before them; and I feel sure that we have not, from the many letters that have come to me, and I think the next year will bear fruit for the workers of this year.

YEAR BOOK COMMITTEE

The Year Book committee, consisting of your president, Sister Gardner and Sister Madison, has decided to submit to you a supplement to the Year Book at this time, giving all necessary changes and advanced ideas, but using the policies of the present book as a basis of our work for the next two years.

The decision was reached after long discussion, and after hearing the opinion of absent as well as present members of the executive committee, for many reasons, important among them being the reduction in the cost of the book, as both paper and printing are expensive at this time. The outline and general plan are ready to submit at this conference session.

EXECUTIVE MEETINGS

The meetings of the executive committee have been held regularly each month, three being held in April and two in most of the other months. No meeting has been missed except in the month of August, when most of us were away doing reunion work. Your president has presided over all but two of the meetings, and all policies have been discussed and many hours spent in executive session and special committee work. The meetings were well attended. Each member has taken a keen interest and has given conscientious service.

Sister Walter Smith, our first vice president, cared for the work at executive session in my absence.

CORRESPONDENCE

My correspondence has been very heavy this year, due to the fact that the constitution and other things were changed at the last convention, and the changes have brought many queries. I have endeavored to answer all letters promptly. Perhaps close to 1,000 letters have been the year's work to all parts of the United States, Canada, Australia, and the Islands. In addition to this, in order to get our organizers appointed, it has been necessary to write to the ministers who are in charge of the work all over these countries. Several times the mail has carried fifty letters from my desk at one time. All of our department supervisors and the secretary have attended to a heavy correspondence as well.

PERSONAL FIELD WORK

At the beginning of the year's work all members of our general executive committee were by motion made general field workers with power to introduce and organize the work under the direction of the president. As a result we have organized the work in the ten following districts and stakes: Little Sioux, Far West Stake, Eastern Iowa, Northeastern Kansas, Central California, Northern California, Southern California, Central Michigan, London District, and Australia this year. The work in four districts was done by your president; in three districts by our educational supervisor, Sister Dora Glines; in one district by Sister Louise Evans, and in the others by the sisters themselves.

Our general executive committee represented the work personally, at nine reunions this year. Your president attended four of them. In all, much work has been done by the whole committee and more especially by the president, who has left her home and introduced the work at thirty-one different places during the year besides having charge of the work in the Kansas City Stake. Six branches in Michigan, 7 in Illinois, 3 in Kansas, 9 in Missouri, 3 in Iowa, and 1 in Indiana have been visited.

Much of the understanding of our departmental work that is had now throughout the church has come from this personal touch with the leaders, both men and women, all over the church.

EDITORIAL WORK

Sister Audentia Anderson reports that "our Auxiliary work has been represented in 49 issues of the HERALD this year. Seven contributions from the president, 12 from other general officers and supervisors, besides various announcements and notices of a business character. We also were favored with 18 contributions from the brethren, about half of these being in connection with the proposed boy organization of the church. We had 19 reports from various locals, districts or conventions, besides publishing all the reports of officers last year. Best of all, we had 53 original articles contributed by women, other than those mentioned above. Altogether the Auxiliary columns for the past year have represented contributed thought and effort of 64 different women of the church. We rejoice to see the steady development of this branch of service and expression, and trust that the sisters will perceive it to be what it really is, an opportunity and a privilege—one from which they get good and inspiration in proportion to the effort they put into it. Make the trial and prove the statement.

Sister Anderson also mentions the column in the Autumn Leaves under the care of Sister Alice Burgess, and hopes that she will be continued next year in the work.

Our editor reports seven contributions from the general president for the Woman's Auxiliary column of the HERALD; but they constitute a small part of the real editorial work from her pen. Besides these, two articles have been written for the Autumn Leaves, two for the Glad Tidings of Michigan, six messages for special occasions, such as conferences for Denver, Michigan, Minnesota, Kirtland, and Saint Louis districts; two papers for reunion work, and a special message for both the Australian and the Tahiti papers. I have tried to do the work with clear vision and a keen insight into things as they are, that good might result to the work.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

Among the many splendid things accomplished this year I want to speak of the work done by Sister Glines in California in the summer. Her intelligent presentation of the work there has brought about splendid results for our work and the organization of all California, as far as districts are concerned, is truly praiseworthy.

Also some very splendid work was done in the London, Canada, District by Sister Louise Evans for the Woman's Auxiliary, resulting in a new understanding of the work, and the organization of that district, the Lord speaking on the same day and commending the work of our sister and others.

The work in the Holden Stake, particularly the Oriole work in charge of Sister Krahl, is also to be commended. Many others might be mentioned whose work has been splendid and important, and it means much to us at this time to have splendid, true women coming to the front and taking up the work.

REUNION WORK

Our reunion work this year was in charge of our second vice president, Sister William Madison, who furnished material and corresponded with workers at fifteen reunions, and met four days personally with the sisters at the Calumet, Oklahoma, reunion, holding daily conferences and one public meeting.

Some plan should be devised in the year to come whereby each district holding a reunion could get in touch with our reunion committee and have their help in the Woman's Auxiliary work for their district. Sister Madison is preparing for the next year's work now.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

We may report the work in the foreign missions as advancing nicely. Several letters have come from across the water and have been promptly answered. The last one tells us of the organization of the Woman's Auxiliary for the mission of Australia.

SECRETARIAL

"The Woman's Auxiliary for the year has an enrollment estimated at 3,376. These figures are not accurate for the reason that only 19 of our 41 organizers reported. The reason for this failure to report is due to the fact that almost half of the organizers were appointed so late in the year. The appointment of the organizers has necessarily been slow, since, according to the by-laws of the Auxiliary, the president shall confer with district or stake officers before making her nominations for organizers.

"The total number of classes, circles or organizations enrolled in the Woman's Auxiliary are: Educational Bureau, 64; Home and Child Welfare, 34; Relief and Service, 132; Young Woman's, 5; Oriole, 71; total, 236, with an enrollment of 3,376 (estimated)."

FINANCIAL

Sister F. M. Sheehy reports as treasurer: Collected for the Children's Home, $450.93; for the Old Folks' Home, $10.00; collected for general fund, $345.53; Oriole fund, $42.00; Year Book fund, $8.10. The funds for the Children's Home and the Old Folks' Home have been turned over to them as they came in.

Such things as stamps, telephone calls, printing, etc., have been met out of the general fund, for all of the officers, as the bills were presented.

My traveling expenses have been heavy this year; some $120 in all, and they have all been cheerfully met by the branches or districts visited. This money has also been reported to Brother McGuire, our Bishop. This also includes the work done at reunions, each reunion paying a share of my expenses.

An allowance of ten dollars a month was made me by the General Executive Committee to be used if needed to meet the expenses of the office. Such an amount was drawn in May, June, July, September, October, November, and December, $70.00 in all, $12.05 being returned, not needed, making $57.95 allowed. This money was spent in the following way: Stamps, $4.25; telephone calls on toll lines, $4.30; carfare, $2.40, and help in my home while out of the city attending to Auxiliary work, $47.00.

All of my typewriting and letter writing I have done myself, and all money not absolutely necessary, I have returned to treasurer. Some help has been given others of the officers who were struggling along trying to carry the Auxiliary work and their home duties as well. Sister Gardner's expenses ran about forty-five dollars for the year, and included car-fare, telephone calls, stamps, and such help as she needed in her home in order to carry on her work.

HISTORICAL

It will be necessary to omit the report of our historian this year, since right at the close of the year we lost her by death and were unable to secure her report. I might say that she was in attendance at all of our meetings until her illness and showed a keen interest in her work. She reported that she had the history almost complete up to the conference of 1917 and hoped to be able to finish it as the year closed. Her work was always well done, so we feel sure that the new historian will have no trouble in taking up the work where she left it off.

Educational.

"The work of the Educational Department this year has been handled in the same way that our universities and colleges handle their extension work. Each supervisor has outlined a set of instruction sheets covering the year's work. These instruction sheets give title of subjects, texts used, references, and leading thoughts and questions on each particular lesson. The courses have been sent free to every organizer, educational supervisor or individual who has asked for them, which number, coming from various parts of the world, is by no means small.

"Letters urging the women to sense the necessity and value of study, listing the various subjects handled, together with the names and addresses of the supervisors of the various subjects, were sent to every organizer.

"Thirty copies of a paper setting forth the general plan of the educational work for the year were prepared and given to the reunion chairman, Mrs. William Madison, for use at the reunions and conventions held during the summer and fall of 1917.

"Articles for publication have been written by several of the educational workers and Sister Glines, the supervisor, has contributed several splendid articles for our column."

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE

"The work done by the Home and Child Welfare Department has not been great, but we have tried to do what we could and to prepare well the material before giving it out for others to use.

"Many personal letters have been written and outlines of work sent to twenty-five people in charge of local and district work.

"Papers for two reunions were prepared and one district conference was cared for by personal talk. Besides this many copies of our plans were sent to Sister Madison for field work.

"Much work was done in a local way, about Lamoni, testing out some of our ideas for general work. And some of our plans have been published in the Auxiliary columns."

RELIEF AND SERVICE BUREAU

Sister Helen Smith has developed some good ideas and given them to us along relief and service lines this year. And as this is a branch of the old work that we are trying to lead along new lines, they are very important to us. Many changes have been made in the work this year and we feel that we are on the right track, and we recommend her work to you.

YOUNG WOMAN'S BUREAU

Sister Burgess has been one of our women who has given a large part of her time to the school room this year, and has felt the press of work about her quite a handicap. But some definite things have been accomplished and the year has been an encouraging one. She reports:

"The first four months were spent in writing to many workers in touch with the young women in and out of the church; in reading and careful consideration of the problems. It was not until autumn that it was possible to outline the first tentative steps toward organization. Since then I have recognized more and more the necessity of working out these problems of the work inductively. We must have reports from a great number of local organizations before we can successfully outline an adequate general organization. All of our auxiliaries have begun that way."

Sister Burgess expects to present to the convention something definite and suggestive in the way of planning for general organization.

"Three chapters of the new movement have reported definite organization. Some six others have reported indefinite organization or proposed organization."

The Oriole work has been in the capable hands of Sister Gardner this year with Sister Burgess assisting and cooperating whenever possible.

Sister Burgess has done considerable personal work for the Auxiliary in the Des Moines District, the Lamoni Stake, the Kansas City Stake, and Independence Stake. At the Boone reunion she organized the girls and meetings were held every day especially for them.

The department conducted by Sister Burgess in the Autumn Leaves has been to her a subject of much thought. She has a "keen realization that its purpose should be three-fold: To bring before the young women the purposes of the Young Woman's Bureau, that is to keep every girl in touch with the girl movement of the church; second, to stimulate the young women to greater activity and service in the church, the home, and the state; and third, to furnish a channel for their own self-expression and communication. Five assistants, contributing editors, have helped in this work this year."

CHILDREN'S HOME

The Board of Trustees for the Children's Home report that the home has been well filled this year, and the different societies of Lamoni and other places have given continued interest and active help throughout the year in the mending and making over of clothing for these, our children.

They tell us, too, that it has been necessary to spend more for clothing this year than heretofore, owing to the fact that less partly worn clothing has been sent to the home, and that the supply is getting low. Further donations will be acceptable. All clothing should be clean and free from infection when sent to them. This is a worthy cause and we hope that all will remember to do their part.

IN CLOSING

I can report to you to-day that the work is moving onward for the Woman's Auxiliary work. As I traveled about this year and did personal field work in many states there came to me the conviction that we were winning friends wherever the work was presented: that there had come to many such understanding of the work as they had not had in the past, and that many were ready to enter our ranks now who did not care to do so in other years. Many of our missionaries have written me this year and asked if they might organize in their territory for the Woman's Auxiliary, and we have been indeed grateful for their help.

I want to speak for a minute about the women who have borne the burden of the work with me in the heat of the day. My first vice president has been an able counselor, a true friend in every time of need, and ever ready to lend a hand when it has been necessary that help be given. The time will come, if it is not here, when her counsel will be sought on important matters in this church. Our honorary president has never failed me and I have been pleased to write her in advance on all phases of the work. She has been absent from us most of the year but her help has been all that it should have been and much credit is due her in our work. Our editor has been my chief joy and delight. To open my HERALD each week and read the work of her hands has given me courage many times to work out the details of many complex problems. I often sought the counsel and advice of Sister B. C. Smith in my work and always found it good. She will be sadly missed from the council of workers in the years to come. Our supervisors I have spoken of before; they have been loyal helpers, every one, and appreciated for their full value. None know better than I the help a good secretary and treasurer can be on an executive committee and I have found ours above the average. Long years of experience has given Sister Gardner a good hold on the work. Sister Sheehy, our treasurer, made good from the beginning.

Our reunion work was in good hands with our second vice president in charge and altogether we have worked in harmonious unison the whole year.

I find my hands tied at the close of the year's work with many duties pertaining to my home; but my earnest prayer is for the onward progress of the work before us, for I know that God's hand is in the work, and that all will be well.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. LULA M. SANDY.

Fraternal Insurance

[The following letter is sent us by the author, F. M. Freeman, of the Toronto Branch, being copied from the Zion's Ensign, believing it would be of interest to the Saints now that the subject of insurance is so often before us. He adds in a postscript that since writing the letter in 1899, in fact eleven years ago, he has severed connections with all secular societies.—EDITORS.]

Editor Ensign: In your issue of March 16, 1899, you gave your readers a report of the Manchester District Latter Day Saint Burial Society, which was established in 1880; you also commented very favorably upon its aims and objects, saying that something in this line would be a good thing for the Saints in this country, materially lightening the expenses which must be met in giving an affectionate sepulcher to loved ones. I fully and heartily agree with your sentiments, in more ways than one.

I am sure that we as a brotherhood should form a sick and funeral society of our own and thus save our young people from entering those secular societies, also giving us members an opportunity and the pleasure of leaving those societies and joining with our own. (I do not wish to ignore the usefulness of these secular societies when run on sound principles, but if the Church of Jesus Christ, so-called, had done its duties to the poor and needy, these societies would not have been wanted.) We Saints should live higher.

Some will say that there is no need for any Saints to belong to these secular benefit societies, others will say it is wrong to belong to any secret society. I know some think the church books condemn anything of this kind, that is, secrecy, and I suppose some look upon these societies as an evil, but a necessary evil.

Then the sooner we remove this evil, the better for us, as the Church of Jesus Christ, for the Lord has promised us that if we live right and are faithful, he, the Lord, will send or bring many of his people who are not members of our church into our fold, and these will bring their wealth and lay it at the feet of the Bishop for the use of the church in general so that there shall not be a poor nor needy member among us.

I believe that if we, as a people, lived as directed by the three standard books of the church, that is, be governed by the law of the celestial kingdom, or the kingdom of Christ, then all things would work together for our good. On the other hand, the Lord has said if we cannot abide under the celestial law while here, we shall not enter the celestial kingdom. I know that we as Saints of the Lord, can devote our time and talent in many ways for the spreading of the gospel truths, and the preparing for the coming of our Lord better than in attending our lodge duties; I am not condemning anyone, for I myself have been connected for the last thirty-five years with secular sick and funeral societies, but I am certain we could have one of our own, and instead of paying money or rent for large halls and officers' fees, delegates' expenses, presentations, and many other expenses incidental to running of these societies, the surplus could be used for the building of Zion.

I will do my utmost in starting and helping on a sick and funeral society of our own.

I advise that some of our officers who are men of business take hold of the matter either under the church control, or as the Ensign was started, although not the property of the church, yet conducted by officers of the church and for the benefit of the Saints at large. Then the time might come when this society would become the property of and under the management of the church. Let the headquarters be either at Independence or at Lamoni.

I would like to hear others upon this question either through the columns of our church papers or write directly to me.

I was glad to see a meeting called at Independence for the consideration of laying a manufacturing plant. Go ahead, my brothers, it is a move in the right direction. If I can be of any service to you, you can depend upon me.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

F. M. FREEMAN.

A Letter of Explanation

To our many friends in the church and out, especially those with whom we have labored as missionary in the past eighteen years. Twelve months ago I was released from the missionary field.

During the past year I have received and am still receiving many calls to come to the various places for funerals, administrations, and special days. Now I appreciate the confidence of my many friends in this, but that all may have an opportunity to know why I have not always responded I write this letter for publication.

When I was released I was badly in debt, with nothing to pay with, and as no provisions were made, either temporarily or otherwise, I was and am now under the necessity of doing something not only to meet my obligations, but to make a living for self and wife. So I have been and am now gathering some stock around us and doing such work as comes to my hands. This ties me close to home, as my wife's health will not permit her to do the necessary everyday work, so when I am called to places that prevent my returning the same day, I am under the painful necessity of not responding. I am sure it makes me feel badly as the ones who are disappointed by my not responding, for there has not been a time to my memory that such calls as have come in the past twenty years have not been complied with as far as possible. Now to be so situated that I cannot do so from a financial standpoint makes me sorry indeed.

I do not want the above to be so interpreted as to imply that the Bishop has not given assistance, for after my release my wife took up the matter with him and very promptly he has been and is now giving her financial aid, for which we are both very grateful.

Still laboring (all I see my way clear to do) and praying for the redemption of Zion, J. M. BAKER.

"Mormon Contradictions"

[The following letter was written as a review of "Mormon Contradictions," an attack on "Mormonism" in general, containing some misstatements concerning the fundamentals of our faith. It was written by Elder J. W. Wight, of Lamoni, over a year ago.—EDITORS.]

Your letter containing "Mormon contradictions," etc., was duly received and would have been answered before only that I wished to be careful in replying to the pamphlet, hence took the time to look up some matters relating thereto. Must say that it is one of the most inconsistent constructions that has ever come into my hands, so far as it relates to the belief of the Reorganization. It is clearly evident that this man, VanZandt, is ignorant of our teaching and belief only as he has been able to gather much of it from the ipse dixit of others.

He lays down the premise that, "If their so-called inspired books contradict themselves and each other, Mormon claims are false, and Mormonism should be banished from the earth." He should be willing to accept his own standard as to his faith and claims, if he have any, in the Authorized version of the Bible, or the Revised version if he depend upon that instead. It is certainly fair that a man's belief be measured by his own standard, and no honorable controversialist can find fault with this conclusion. If it shall be shown then that the version of the Bible accepted by him contradicts itself, then his "claims are false" and his faith "should be banished from the earth." Since he has laid the premise he has no right to find fault with the conclusion.

The Inspired Translation, Genesis 2:5, but agrees with the King James version, Genesis 2:4, 5, "the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, [emphasis mine] and every herb of the field before it grew." No, "Joe Smith" did not forget this when he came to 1 Corinthians 15:46, 47, but it was Mr. VanZandt who "forgot" or purposely failed to supply pretext and context which would have made it so plain that there could have been no chance for his quibble. Here it is entire (44-50):

"It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit, that which is natural first, and not that which is spiritual; but afterward, that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as they have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."

When examined in the completeness it but contrasts the Adam in Eden, in his flesh, with the Christ-Adam in his flesh, showing that the first was fleshly in his nature while the latter was spiritual in his nature, and to warp it into a preexistent meaning is to do violence to the argument of the apostle. Hence there is no contradiction whatever.

On page 5 we are told that Adam praised God because of his sins! but the text clearly shows that the thanks were due to the fact that, "my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God." Every Bible student will no doubt agree that the "transgression" was that of cohabitation, hence Eve was right in the statement that without it "we never should have had seed." The argument with reference to the failure of Jehovah's plan can be made against the King James as readily as against the Inspired Translation, for in Genesis 1:28 are to be found the same words as in the Inspired Translation: "Be fruitful, and multiply," and in 2:16, 17, is the command not to partake. The better thought would be that when God gave the command to multiply, he foreknew that they would transgress and would therefore be able to "multiply, and replenish."

All that is said of the Inspired Translation on page 6 of the pamphlet, may be said of the King James, Genesis 1:24-31. In verse 26 God has "man" having "dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Then in 2:5, notwithstanding man was to have "dominion over," "and there was not a man to till the ground." Yes, we have the King James committed to the thought that God tells man to have this dominion before there was a man "to till the ground!" Where was this man when God told him to exercise such dominion? In his preexistent state, doubtless. "This would have to be true for Smith's claims to be true," we are told. That is that all this creation of man and beast was "immaterial." In the King James we are told that the Lord God "created and made . . . every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew." Were these "immaterial" plants and herbs? and would they have to be such before the claims of the King James version can be true? Treading on dangerous ground, are you not, Mr. VanZandt? Cannot a spiritual creation be as material spiritually as a physical creation can be material physically? Think of it and be a little wiser before you make such an attack again!

On pages 6 and 7 we have a wonderful contradiction. The Inspired Translation, 5:9, tells us that Cain is to be the father of Satan's lies, while in John 8:44 Jesus says of Satan: "When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it." Then we are asked, "Can both of the statements be inspired?" Most assuredly when not distorted. As Adam is the father of all men in the sense of being first of all flesh (not as Brigham put it, however), so Cain became the father of Satan's lies here on the earth in the sense that he was the first man to father them. But since this man is so efficient in proving the Inspired Translation not inspired, suppose he try these statements from the King James version, Genesis 6:6, "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Compare this with Numbers 23:19, "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent." The Inspired Translation clears this up and leaves no contradiction.

On page 7 our critic turns his attention to Book of Mormon contradictions, as follows: 2 Nephi 13: 4: "For the gate by which ye should enter, is repentance and baptism by water." Then in 3 Nephi 3: 10, we have: "Now I would have you to remember also, that there were none who were brought unto repentance, who were not baptized with water; therefore there were ordained of Nephi, men unto this ministry, that all such as should come unto them, should be baptized with water, and this as a witness and a testimony before God, and unto the people, that they have repented and received a remission of their sins."

In the first instance it says "and then cometh a remission of sins by fire, and by the Holy Ghost." The last words our critic left out of his quotation thus destroying the real meaning. In this instance the thought was doctrinal and referred to a completed remission, while in the latter quotation the writer was giving a historical fact, something that had happened beforetime, or before the recording of the fact, and simply referred to the degree of remission received up to and including their baptism—no contradiction at all. Take Acts 2: 38 and we have Peter saying that they were to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, that is the degree of remission to be had up to this point of obedience. Then was to come the gift of the Holy Ghost which would produce a completed remission.

For instance, Matthew 3: 11, John says he baptized with water, but the Christ who was to follow him was to baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire. Our critic might have quoted 3 Nephi 3: 7, "And began to testify boldly, repentance and remission of sins through faith on the Lord Jesus Christ," and then have argued that it taught that remission was to come through faith and not by baptism! The fact of the matter is that his reasoning is faulty and pursued with reference to the Bible would make it contradictory also. The real fact is that Nephi but says that when these people had completed their repentance then they were baptized and that all told they thus witnessed their forgiveness. He could have played the part of the skeptic with reference to the Bible by quoting Luke 7: 50, "Thy faith hath saved thee," then turned to Romans 8: 24: "We are saved by hope," and then have said, "Does inspiration contradict itself thus?" Or he could have gone still further, Romans 10: 9, and found us saved by confession; Ephesians 2: 5, by grace; Acts 4: 11, 12, by the name of Christ; Acts 11: 13, 14, by words; Titus 3: 5, by mercy; 1 Peter 3: 21, by baptism, or 1 Corinthians 15: 1, 2, and there found that we are to be saved by the gospel! The real fact is, that it takes a combination of the whole to produce salvation just as it requires faith, repentance, baptisms, and the laying on of hands, to produce a completed remission of both the body and spirit, each playing its part and without obedience to which such "completion" can never result. And this is the teaching of both the Book of Mormon and the Bible. It is but the part of quibbling to undertake to destroy the teaching of either to deal with them in the manner our critic has done in this case.

Our critic, on page 8, now finds another seeming contradiction. He cites 2 Nephi 1: 4, and quotes: "That ye may not incur the displeasure of a just God upon you, unto the destruction, yea, the eternal destruction of both soul and body." Then to make the contradiction he quotes 6: 5, as follows: "The paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous, and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous; and the spirit and the body is restored to itself again, and all men become incorruptible, and immortal." The writer of both these quotations is discussing the condition of two classes, the wicked and the righteous, and in the first instance harmonizes his teachings with Jesus and Paul—Matthew 10: 28, "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." 1 Thessalonians 1: 9, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Nephi is in good company to say the least. In the second instance he is confining the argument to the righteous, hence the "all" could refer to no other class of people since the argument was thus confined. Read and analyze carefully: "God must deliver up the Spirits of the righteous [emphasis mine], and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous, and the spirit and the body [of the righteous] is restored to itself again, and all [righteous] men become incorruptible," etc. This is the only safe analysis for this was the only class he was discussing. In fact had our critic read the preceding paragraphs of this chapter he would not have had opportunity for criticism.

On page 9, he turns to the Doctrine and Covenants with this flourish: "Having shown that both their Bible and Book of Mormon contradict themselves, hence, are not inspired," etc. Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5: "And after having received the records of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, jr., might have power to translate through the mercy of God, the Book of Mormon." Then in 23: 1, we have: "Behold, thou wast called and chosen to write the Book of Mormon." Our critic confines this to Smith when the title of the revelation says it was given to him and Oliver Cowdery. All acquainted with the facts know that Oliver Cowdery acted as one of the scribes. But our critic says: "Anybody with half sense knows that there is a vast difference between 'writing' and 'translating' a book." But anybody with whole sense ought to know that translated matter must be written before it can be put into book form! And such an one ought to know that a "writer" may never use a pen but depend entirely upon his stenographer. The quibble is really too insignificant to give it so much space.

On the next page our critic calls Smith a "blatant deceiver" because on the title-page of the original copy is to be found "Author and Proprietor." If this critic had not before been aware of the fact, let him now become aware of it that the law required this to protect the copyright. So falls his cob house!

Our critic next quotes from sections 45, 57, and 84, Doctrine and Covenants, and first scoffs at the thought of buying land for the "New Jerusalem!!" What would he have done to get possession of the land? He says that instead of a place of "safety" it became a place of "terror." For the time being, yes. And yet it is a fact that the Reorganized Church is now dwelling there in "safety," and that the title of the Temple Lot has inhaled from the day of purchase. That is, it has never gone into the hands of the "Gentiles." But says our critic, "they ran the Mormons out, and neither their New Jerusalem nor their temple has been built there." Well, what of it? The "generation" (one hundred years) has not yet expired. But how would it be possible to build a New Jerusalem in Missouri and yet have it come down from heaven? Well, any but our critic will be able to see that there can be a city of that name on earth as well as one in heaven? They are building a new Jerusalem in the land of Judea now. Ephesians 3: 15 shows that there is a "family" in both the earth and heaven. But our critic is disturbed because it happened that the Saints were driven from Independence by the "wicked." Let him turn to Isaiah 52: 1 and treat it in the same way and where would he be? Listen, "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: For henceforth there shall no more come unto thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." And yet, using our critic's language, "Those whom they call wicked actually ran them [Jews] out!" Will he say that Isaiah was a false prophet? The fact is that just as this prophet was speaking of futurity so was the Doctrine and Covenants. He might try his analysis on Genesis 17: 8, 48: 4, and tell us that the Lord made a mistake, for the seed of Abraham was driven out of that land. Have they lost that "everlasting possession?" The skeptic would say yes. What will Mr. VanZandt say? I would say that the possession is still intact, and when Israel shall come into "his own" it will be his as an "everlasting possession." And such will Independence be to the Saints of the most high God.

Now we come to one of the worst distortions as to grammar that it has so far been our privilege to meet with. On page 12 of his pamphlet and quoting from Doctrine and Covenants 89: 2, we read as follows: "And again, I say unto you, my servant Shederlaomach, You shall be a lively member of this order; and inasmuch as you are faithful in keeping all former commandments, you shall be blessed forever." His analysis of this sentence places it in the perfect past tense! when in reality the tense is future! So much for his analysis. Could he perform facial contortions like unto his grammatical ones he would be a contortionist of the first place! As to the tense of this language I have consulted two high-school teachers and three college professors and they are united in placing the tense in the future, so that his criticism falls flat and entirely removes any semblance of a contradiction between the passages quoted by him—the so-called contradiction being found in section 90: 6.

He next quotes from Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4, 90: 5, 98: 5. Since "the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul," it but follows that until the body is resurrected there cannot be a redemption of the "soul," the entire man. Nothing difficult about that. "For man is spirit" in the same sense that Paul knew a "man" but whether in the body or out of the body he could not tell. (2 Corinthians 12: 2, 3.) "Care not for the body [alone] . . . but care for the soul" is the evident intent—that is, care for both body and spirit. The word "care" is doubtless used in the same sense as used by the Master, (Matthew 6: 24,) "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" "Do you think such a mixup is inspired?"

The quotations from the Pearl of Great Price are from the Utah edition and are not to be found in the original publication, and as we are no more in favor of a plurality of gods than is our critic we pass that by as in no sense reflecting on our faith. Besides, as the Pearl of Great Price was not published until eight years after Smith's death, he can be held responsible only for such as are verified statements made by him.

The next criticism is but a quibble of the lowest order. Genesis 11: 6 says the Jehovah "confounded the language of all the earth" but Ether 1: 1 says: "And it came to pass that the brother of Jared did cry unto the Lord, and the Lord had compassion upon their friends, and their families also, and they were not confounded." All this can be true without a discrepancy. There was but one language in all the earth and that was confounded. But that the Lord could order that the Jaredites might understand each other and there be not the semblance of a contradiction is also true, and more especially so when he was using them for a special purpose as a result of their faithfulness.

He next finds a contradiction between the Book of Mormon and the Bible, because Alma 21: 7 says they "took upon them the name of Christ, or Christians," before Christ, while the Bible (Acts 11: 26) says: They "were called Christians first at Antioch." Yes, the disciples in Canaan were first called Christians in Antioch, but the disciples on the American Continent might have been called Christians many years before and yet not the slightest contradiction. As to when the disciples on the Eastern Continent were first called Christians has nothing to do with when the believers in Christ were so called on the Western Continent! To learn that Christ was known before his existence in the flesh, read carefully the following: Colossians 1: 15-17; Ephesians 3: 9; John 1: 1-4; Daniel 3: 24, 25; John 8: 56-58; 1 Corinthians 10: 4; John 17: 4, 5.

The next objection—"He shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers." Our critic supplies the word in, instead of at, and bases his argument upon that word. We turn to the New Standard Dictionary for a definition of at, and find as one of the chief ones: In proximity to; in the vicinity or region of; close to; by, near. And that Bethlehem, three miles from Jerusalem, was in "proximity to; in the vicinity or region of," there can be no doubt, so that there is no contradiction. Our critic dare not call in question the New Standard, as that is the very acme of dictionary attainment.

All the statements made in Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1; 76: 1; Nephi 1: 21, are true. "The purposes of God cannot be frustrated." That they may be suspended is clear, but not "frustrated." Those who sought to build Zion and were hindered by their enemies, were themselves excused for their failure, but Zion will yet be built, in fact is already in the process thereof, and God's "purposes" "cannot be frustrated," neither can they "stay his hand." Jesus said, Matthew 16: 18, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." And yet the skeptic will tell you that the church was "prevailed against" and during the "Dark Ages" did not exist. The first two years of the Rebellion, the North was prevailed against but finally became victorious. So will it be with Christ's church; it will prevail.

Our critic next becomes troubled over "Elias" and "Gabriel," being one. Or that Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 says Elias visited Zacharias, while the Inspired Translation, Luke 1: 19, says it was Gabriel! Was not Gabriel "a messenger from God?" and that is one meaning given by my Bible Dictionary of Elias, or Elijah. "No comment needed."

Because Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6 says, "Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come," our critic asks, "If this is true, didn't Jesus act silly in praying for those who killed him?" No. Luke 23: 35, Inspired Translation, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Meaning the soldiers who crucified him.) These soldiers did not "kill" in the sense of murder as they were but executing the law in harmony with their sworn duty, while the Doctrine and Covenants clearly refers to murder. Quite a difference. A man may not be "forgiven," yet come out of prison when he has "paid all that is due."

Referring to 1 Nephi 1: 35; "Says that Nephi, who is said to have written some of the books in the Book of Mormon, 'took Laban by the hair of the head' and 'smote off his head.' Is it possible that one so vile that he cannot be pardoned is inspired to write for the instruction of saints?" It is said a half-told truth is but a falsehood in disguise. Shakespeare says, "Oh, while you live, tell truth, and shame the Devil." Why did our critic not tell why Nephi did it? After being commanded three different times by the Spirit to do it, and then told that "It is better that one man should perish, than that a nation should dwindle and perish in unbelief," Nephi says, "Therefore I did obey the voice of the Spirit." How would he like a skeptic to quote 1 Samuel 15: 33: "And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal," and then ask, Can "one so vile" be "inspired" as a prophet of God, without giving any of the condoning facts in the case? Does he call this fair dealing? It is the worst of quibbling. By the same method of dealing, infidelic in its nature, he could destroy the Bible. (Exodus 2: 12.) Let him try his hand at explaining that! Or is a Bible killing, though God does not command it to be done, better than a Book of Mormon killing?

His next criticism is that the Inspired Translation (1 Corinthians 12: 29-31) says: "Are all workers of miracles? . . . I say unto you, Nay"; read Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2: "I came unto my own, and my own received me not, but as many as received me gave I power to do many miracles." Then he says, "No comment needed." Had he but turned and read section 46: 6-9 there would have been no chance for a comment as it relieves all possibility of even an implied contradiction.

His next quotation is from a Utah production, concerning Smith living to be eighty-five, etc., and we leave it for that church to deal with. However, from the standpoint of a Christian he ought to apologize for the following: "Wasn't Joey smart?"

A man may be a true recorder of events as they happen, but yet not be certain as to his chronology, hence the criticism on this point falls flat as is the reasoning! But note the inconsistency of this critic. He first quotes from Nephi, who is talking of the record made on the plates in the which he claims no mistakes unless it may be possible in a chronological sense, then he calls up the writings of Moroni who has reference to the abridgement of his father, Mormon, as made from the former plates and in which he admits the possibility of mistakes because they did not write in Hebrew, and then our critic either in the confusion of his own mind or with a desire to mislead, seeks to make a contradiction where it does not exist. If he was ignorant of the fact that Mormon made an abridgement from the plates of Nephi, then it will be well to withhold his criticism until enlightened!

Under the caption, "More Mormon teaching" and from pages 22-30 he quotes from the books and teachings of the Utah church, repudiated by us, hence we follow him not. But on page 30 he says: "The Reorganized Mormons say they do not believe in baptizing for the dead." Whatever the "Reorganized Mormons" may say the Reorganized Latter Day Saints say no such thing! He may have found individuals who have said what he says but the church has never said such a thing. Were they to make such statement they would be out of harmony with 1 Corinthians 15: 29, "Else what shall they do that are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" Then our critic emits the following choice literature! "Now, let the Reorganized crew speedily do one of two things: namely, either quit printing and circulating such rot, or else quit telling the lie that they do not believe it." For shame! Mr. VanZandt! You know what the Master said about calling your brother a liar.

On page 37 he again pays his respects to the "Reorganized Mormons," and extracts from a purely monogamic statement what hitherto it has been left to known polygamists to evolve in order to bolster up their tottering structure! It would really be amusing only that our smile, if seen by this critic might so completely upset his equilibrium as to start him to yelling once more, "Let the Reorganized crew spew, howl and lie." And we would not like to see him make a second descent of that nature for fear of such injury to his otherwise high moral ideas of fair dealing and brotherly love that his ideals might be lessened beyond hope of repair! The fact was that the Lord commanded his people to have "save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none." It was "whoredom" and "abominable" before God for David and Solomon to have "wives and concubines" and his command was to have save it be one wife, concubines none. Is that plain enough? And the "otherwise" simply meant this: that without such "command" they were to hearken unto these "things." First, that it was abominable before God to have wives and concubines; secondly, to "have save it be one wife . . . and concubines none." Why? For herein was to be found "the chastity of women." Is it not strange that to defeat the "Reorganized folks" our critic has to consort to fellowship with Utah interpretation and thus become the companion of polygamists! To be fair with Jacob, the author of the above, why did he not quote from paragraph 9 of this same chapter, as follows:

"Behold, the Lamanites, your brethren, whom ye hate, because of their filthiness and the cursings which hath come upon their skins, are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandments of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife and concubines they should have none; and there should not be whoredoms committed among them." Or why did he not quote a preceding portion of verse 6 where the writer speaks of "grosser crimes" the which he clearly shows to have been whoredoms and polygamy? To seek to distort the meaning of this "otherwise" plain statement I had before thought that none but polygamists would stoop to! Or had he been anxious to determine the teaching of the Book of Mormon on this point he might have turned to Mosiah 8:1, and read of Noah: "For behold, he did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines." Again; Ether 4: 5, "And it came to pass that Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he had many wives and concubines." And then in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7 he could have found, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." In 49: 3, he could have found: "And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made." And to have settled the matter still more completely he could have quoted our marriage covenant as used by us both as to church and nonmembers, as follows: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." (Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2.) These were the teachings of Joseph Smith and, so far as we have been able to find to the contrary, were in accord with his practices. The fact was that the polygamous revelation, so-called, was never heard tell of till August 29, 1852, more than eight years subsequent to the death of Smith! And it is so out of harmony with every teaching of his that we do not believe he ever claimed to get such a thing. But even granted that he did practice polygamy, beginning as early as October, 1841, according to the testimony (!) of the Utah people, is it not very strange that none of all the women they claim he married ever gave birth to a child? He was in the very strength of his physical manhood and his wife was bearing children during that time, even giving birth to the youngest shortly subsequent to his death. Many of these same women gave birth to children in Utah, but during the three years, nearly, not one of them gave birth. The real facts in the case are that it was not until in June, 1845, within a few days lacking a year after his death, that the first polygamous child was born and that to Brigham Young. *But say, do you notice that our critic in speaking of Mr. Young calls him Brigham, while in speaking of Mr. Smith he calls him Jo or Joey. Why? Was it because he preferred to be respectful to a known polygamist?

But he presents Lucy Walker Smith Kimball's affidavit as an everlasting quietus. Wonder why the Utah people did not put her onto the witness stand during the Temple Lot Suit? They knew that her testimony would not bear the light! Our critic might enlighten us as to how Andrew Jensen, their church historian at the time, could say that Joseph began the practice of plural marriage in October 1841, while President Woodruff on the witness stand in the above suit and under cross-examination could say that "up to the first day of October, 1842, there was no such system (polygamy) taught or practiced openly or secretly to my knowledge." (Abstract of Evidence p. 304.) But Judge Phillips, the man who presided over the court in the Temple Lot Suit, and after having the evidence of the president of the church and such other notables as the Utah church was willing to put on the witness stand, some of them the women claimed to have been Smith's wives, decided as follows: "It is charged by the Respondents, as an echo of the Utah church, that Joseph Smith, 'the Martyr,' secretly taught and practiced polygamy; and the Utah contingent furnishes the evidence, and two of the women to prove this fact. It perhaps would be uncharitable to say of these women that they have borne false testimony as to their connection with Joseph Smith; but, in view of all the evidence and circumstances surrounding the alleged intercourse, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that at most they were but sports in 'nest hiding!' And speaking of polygamy he says: "Certainly it was never promulgated, taught, nor recognized, as a doctrine of the church prior to the assumption of Brigham Young." After a court thus speaks why the need of multiplying evidence? The fact is that while in Utah for three years trying to convert that people, I sought to find if there was any positive evidence that Smith ever practiced polygamy but found it not. But one may ask how was it that these women could actually testify that they were the wives of Joseph Smith? Here is the secret of it all; On page 364, Abstract of Evidence, Emily D. P. Young testifies as follows: "At the time I married Brigham Young, in November, 1844, I was at the same time sealed to Joseph Smith, sealed to him for eternity; I was sealed to Brigham Young for time, and to Joseph Smith for eternity." After Smith was dead, and when he could have no say in the matter they sealed these women to him for eternity and in that way they became his wives! For shame! As to Cowles' statement it is also contradicted by Woodruff in his sworn testimony and at the time when he was president of the church in Utah. But our critic says that "Mr. Cowles who was Smith's first counselor at the time he decided to leave them on account of polygamy." The real fact is that Cowles was never a counselor to Smith.

Having thus disposed of everything in this pamphlet that in any way relates to our teaching, unless there is some point overlooked, we now turn attention to his challenge and ask him this. Suppose that we were to issue a challenge of like import that we are willing to prove that his particular religious convictions are wrong, or permit him to affirm them and then say: "If they stand the test," his particular convictions are right "and there is no use of discussing any other subject. If they do not stand the test," his particular convictions of religion are "wrong and there is no use of discussing any other subject." He knows full well that "I call on you to meet me in public discussion," is mere gush, and that no honorable controversialist would take the slightest notice of it! Let him frame a proposition governing the belief of both parties and mutually agreed to, so that each side must both affirm and deny, and send to J. W. Rushton, 591 West 34th Street, Los Angeles, California, and it is likely that he will find himself in discussion on the issues involved, as soon as arrangements can be made. Is he ready to meet the issue fairly? It is always esteemed the part of the coward to wish to involve an opponent without being willing for self to be involved. Let him play the part of an honorable debater or forever hold his peace! The elders of the Reorganized Church have ever stood ready to enter into a friendly discussion, in the way of public debate, upon the issues involved between the disputants. This can be said to be the only fair way to honorably settle the question of differences. Whatever his religious convictions he should be as willing to affirm them as he is ready to demand the same of us.

I trust you will have the patience to go over this carefully, and shall there be anything that is not satisfactory be frank in letting me know.

Very sincerely,

J. W. WIGHT.

A Religious Advertiser

One of the strangest characters we ever knew, was a man who claimed to be sanctified, "walking twenty feet above sin every day." He always occupied a prominent place at the camp meetings. He was an enthusiastic, though not a "sweet singer." His favorite hymn was "Glory to the bleeding Lamb." He invariably came in a word behind on each line, and when all others had finished he would come in with "Lamb," his eyes raised heavenward—a rapt expression on his face. When jollied about being a little slow, he smiled and said, "If I quit with the rest, the rest would not hear me."

He was an advertiser of self. He was fond of asserting that strictly honest men were very scarce, and, said he, "When you find one, you will find hair growing in the palms of his hands."

One day we heard him talking to a crowd, asserting his sanctification, holiness, freedom from sin, etc. We walked up to him and asked if sanctification and holiness made a man honest.

"Most assuredly," said he.

"He won't lie?"

"No sir, he can't lie."

"Very well, my friend, give me your hand," said I. He did. I turned it over searchingly, examined the palm, and remarked: "No hair! By your own statement you are proven a false witness."

How the crowd roared, and his "testimony meeting" was broken up.

He was fond of "scorching" those who wear jewelry, but was always calling attention to the "whang leather" chain he wore. He came up to us in a crowd, one day, and taking hold of the watch chain we wore, he said: "Now you see, here is a Latter Day Saint preacher, and he is a commandment breaker, wearing a gold chain."

I asked him if the harm were in the chains we wore, or in the pride of our hearts in wearing adornment. He quickly replied: "Why it's in the pride, of course."

I then said, "My friend, you stand convicted before this jury for two reasons. One is, for calling my chain gold when it is ninety-eight per cent brass, or cheap metal—and the brass is sticking out in spots so if you would, you could easily see it. The other—you are continuously calling people's attention to your 'whang leather chain.' I never yet called a person's attention to my chain, and I am quite sure that the pride is all yours."

He, in his later years, became a great "camp meeting" enthusiast, and one year, after he and his sons planted a large field of corn, perhaps eighty acres or more, he decided to spend the summer attending camp meetings, and said that he would turn the fields over to the Lord, who would take care of them, and so testified in all the camps. The result was high and abundant weeds, poor corn.

For years afterwards the scoffers would, on seeing a weedy field, remark, "He must be attending camp meeting," or, "That fellow must have turned his field over to the Lord to tend."

And so we can learn something, even from extremists.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Convention Minutes

Western Montana Sunday school, at Bozeman, May 31. Prayer meeting 10.30 a. m. Business meeting and round table in afternoon, program in the evening. Mrs. G. W. Thorburn, superintendent; Miss Catherine Murray, secretary.

The Presidency

Elder H. E. Winegar having presented his resignation to the Presidency as president of the Western Montana District, the Presidency has appointed Elder A. J. Moore to act as president pro tem until the convening of the next district conference. We trust that those concerned will take notice and give Brother Moore the support that it will be necessary for him to have.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

President.

Conference Notices

Northeastern Illinois, with the Mission Branch, near Seneca, Illinois, June 8 and 9. Branch presidents and secretaries have statistical reports in on time, also reporting average attendance at all regular meetings of the branch, stating the number of members and nonmembers. We desire that all the priesthood report their labors, including those not elected to branch offices. Use the regular blank now in general use among us. Those coming please write O. T. Hayer, Marseilles, Illinois, R. F. D., and you will be met at Seneca or Sheridan accordingly. Address all mail to F. E. Bone, 4339 Jackson Street, Chicago, or to J. O. Dutton, Marseilles, Illinois, care O. T. Hayer. May there be a good attendance and the Spirit of the Master attend our gathering. J. O. Dutton, president, F. E. Bone, secretary.

Reunion Notices

North Dakota, at M. D. Graham's place, 8 miles above Burlington, North Dakota, on the Mouse River, July 5 to 14. If you come by rail, notify M. D. Graham, who is one of the committee and he will meet trains at Burlington and Minot, and convey you by auto to the grounds. We expect two of the Twelve and a patriarch. Plan to attend now. Warren McElwain, for committee.

Information Wanted

The officers of the Central Texas District would like to obtain information of the whereabouts of the following members of the Cookes Point Branch, now disorganized: H. C. Percy, O. A. Percy, Anna Percy, F. M. Mayberry, Julia A. Taylor, W. W. Brown. When last heard of they were in Arkansas. We would also like to know the addresses of the following: J. F. Webb, Cora B. Webb, Leonard Webb, J. W. Cox, Daniel Stanley. Address Sheldon Armstrong, secretary, 56 Vida Avenue, Houston, Texas.

Post Conference Appointments

The following list of appointees is supplementary to the one presented to the General Conference and represents the work of the joint council in post-conference session.

Corbin, C. J., listed among the elders, should be changed to read A. J. Corbett.

Higdon, A. T., was listed among the seventies by mistake. Should be classified among the elders.

Evangelical minister. Barkus, J. W., Queensland District, Australia.

- INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 27, 1918.

Our Departed Ones

BINGER.—At Independence, Missouri, April 20, 1918, Charles Binger died, aged 53 years and 15 days. He was born at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, baptized at Independence, Missouri, March 28, 1860, by F. C. Warnky. He leaves to mourn, a wife, son, 3 daughters, and one brother, also a host of friends, and other relatives. Funeral sermon at the Stone church by J. C. Foss. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GARROD.—Ernest Garrod departed this life April 8, 1918, at Walkerville, Ontario, after an illness of nearly four years from Bright's disease. Married Mary Mildred Crouchman April 21, 1909, who, with four small children is left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father. Baptized by J. Leslie Brown, January 22, 1916. Funeral service conducted by Elder Brown; sermon by R. D. Weaver, in the Saints' church at Windsor, with interment in Windsor Grove Cemetery.

REAMS.—James C. Reams was born in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, in 1839, and came to Poweshiek County, Iowa, in 1864, after serving two years in the Army. Married Lucy J. Graham. He, with his wife, was baptized into the church in 1880, and in the fall of that year the Sheridan Branch was organized at his home. He died at the family home in Tama, Iowa, April 18, 1918. His companion and 6 children survive him.

SHIVES.—Mary E. Simmon was born March 18, 1844, in North Carolina, and married in 1862 to John H. Daniel, who died. She was married again to Charles A. Shives who preceded her to the beyond about 13 years. She died at Omaha, Nebraska, April 17, 1918, and was buried April 19, from Duffy and Johnson's undertaking parlors. Funeral sermon by James Huff. She was a member of the church with membership at Deloit, Iowa.

FROM HERE AND THERE

SECOND RED CROSS WAR FUND

A national campaign will be opened on May 20 and continue till the 27th, in an effort to raise a fund of $100,000,000 for the American Red Cross. This is not a membership campaign but a straight-out move to raise the money essential for the many-sided activities of this great agency for good. Of the total collected 25 per cent may be retained by local chapters for war relief needs, the balance being used by the general organization in its general war fund. It is pleasing to note that our members in common with all patriotic citizens, are liberally supporting this as well as other legitimate activities for the successful prosecution of the war.

AUGUSTINE DWYER IN HOLDEN

The Holden Progress speaks very commendatorially of the recently delivered lectures at Holden by Brother Dwyer. He has been using some of his hand colored slides, a number of them taken under his direction. He delivered one of his lectures at the Saints' Home at that place.

APRIL 6 MAY BE NATIONAL LEGAL HOLIDAY

Senator Smoot of Utah has introduced a bill in the Senate which would make April 6 a national holiday known as Liberty Day. War was declared on Germany on this date. The text of the bill follows, as it was read twice and referred to the judiciary committee.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the sixth day of April in each and every year after the passage of this act, being the day of the declaration of war against Germany, be, and the same is, made a legal national holiday, to be called Liberty Day: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to affect judicial proceedings or the issuance or service of process on that day in any manner."

POOR JOB WITH BLUE PENCIL

Brother J. O. Hower, secretary of the Spokane reunion committee, says we mixed his notice when we edited it for printing. In boiling it down we made the mistake of calling it the Idaho reunion, when it is the Spokane District reunion held in Idaho, at Coeur d'Alene, June 21 to 30. The district conference will be held during this time and everything is favorable for an excellent gathering. It will be well for those interested to look up the HERALD for April 24 and read the notice for the detailed information.

BOY POWER

Suppose there are ten millions of boys in America. If every one of them bought one quarter Thrift Stamp a week it would mean two million and a half dollars. There are fifty-two weeks in a year, and that would mean $130,000,000 a year. Think of it. You ought to save half of that anyhow. Or say $50,000,000. That's what boys could do. It's up to you to do your part of it. Why, just the boys who read The American Boy ought to put a couple of millions into war stamps. You could do it as easy as pie. And when it was all over with you would still have your money. It wouldn't have been wasted. How many boys would $2,000,000 send through college after the war? Start now, and by the time you are ready for college you will have pretty close to enough to send you a year anyhow.—From The American Boy.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE WHEAT CLUBS

Members of six hundred homes in Montgomery, Alabama, have pledged themselves to abstain from the use of wheat till after the next harvest. The Traveling Salesmen's Bureau of the Ottumwa Commercial Club have gone on record in favor of the plan and urge that hotels, restaurants, and public eating places cut off all wheat foods. The wheat situation is critical and we urge that every effort be made to cut down its use till harvest, and where possible the organization of Total Abstinence Wheat Clubs. By this time most of us have found we do well on war bread, and few of us would care to go back to the prewar kind.

RED CROSS COMMISSION TO PALESTINE

The American Red Cross has made comprehensive plans for the relief of the people of the Holy Land and a commission of fifty-seven men is on its way to that devastated land, to be joined later by Doctor John H. Finley, who will head the commission. The war council has appropriated $390,000 as a beginning. The commission will work in conjunction with the British Syria and Palestine relief fund and the American Armenian and Syrian Relief committee, both of which have been doing all they could. The chief object just now is said to be the relieving of physical distress of the civilian population.

In a postscript to one of his business letters Brother Andrew Walters, of Barryton, Michigan, says the Fork Branch of that place is not altogether dead but in a scattered condition, like sheep that have been chased by wolves. However, they hope to gather soon, according to the plan of God in his own time and manner. Brother Walters assures us he finds the Master willing to bless in one's efforts to do his duty, and hopes to gain knowledge and wisdom under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

RALLY DAY AT GUILFORD

Last Sunday was observed by the Latter Day Saint people as a rally day. A fair-sized crowd was present. Twenty-six persons came in five Ford cars from near Bedison, a splendid time was had, lunch was served in the basement of the church to the visiting members. Alec Jensen gave a splendid talk on "Practical efforts." In the afternoon the choir was organized after which a prayer service was enjoyed by all. The boys at the front as well as the men at the head of our Government were interceded for.—Guilford (Missouri) Times, April 18, 1918.

ONE OF THE BEST BOOKS ON GRAMMAR

At the general priesthood meetings at Independence, President Frederick M. Smith said the best book he had found, for anyone who desires a single book on the use of good English, is English Grammar Simplified. The clarity of style and brevity of scope commend it to anyone needing such a text. Order of the Herald Publishing House, if desired, at 85 cents, postpaid.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT PROGRAM

Under the most auspicious circumstances the commencement program was rendered at the Saints' church in Lamoni on the evening of May 2. It was the largest graduating class in the history of Graceland. The musical features were well-selected and appropriate. The address was by President Frederick M. Smith, on a subject furnished by the Government, "War and education," a strong presentation which we hope to publish. It was a most satisfactory evening. One of the new features this year was the graduation of a class in wireless telegraphy, they being given certificates of ability as operators. Three of the wireless list have already enlisted in the signal services of the Army or Navy. The new class in the work opens Monday, May 6. The graduates and those securing special honors were as follows:

KIRTLAND MISSION BELLS

We have a copy of the first edition of Kirtland Mission Bells, which made its debut into literary circles on April 6, "proclaiming the message of the restored gospel of the latter days," as its title-page tells us. The illustrated heading shows the names of the bells to be the branches of the Kirtland District: Akron, Cleveland, Barberton, Canton, Kirtland, New Philadelphia, New Philadelphia Central, and Alliance. The publication will be sent out free, supported by offerings for mailing expenses. The first issue is a four-page sheet, about the size of Autumn Leaves, but the editors and managers hope to increase it in size and make it better. We are informed they intend to make it a district help and are printing it on their own press and with their own equipment. The name of the editor does not appear, but we accuse E. A. Webbe with being responsible. Brother John Collin has a cartoon in this number.

DOUBLE NUMBER OF THE UNITY

The priesthood journal, edited by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, comes out in a double number for March and April. Among the subjects discussed, we note the following: "On the work of the deacon," "the weekly letter," "Efficient executives," "To revive branches," "On manifestations given locally," "Is hell a good place?" "Has jealousy a place among us?" "Constructive loyalty demanded," "Salesmanship," "A fallen soldier's prayer." We were pleased to note the interest in this monthly as manifested at the recent meetings at the General Conference. A large number of renewals were handed in. Have you forgotten yours? The price is 25 cents a year and may be sent to either publishing house.

HOW JOSEPH SMITH DID NOT ATTEMPT TO WALK ON THE WATER

There is an old, old story that reappears from time to time to the effect that on a certain occasion Joseph Smith, the Martyr, professed to walk upon the water as a demonstration of his power, using as a means of support planks or slabs concealed beneath the surface of the water.

This old story having again reappeared we propose to assist in giving it publicity, and to that end herewith reproduce the so-called testimony of professed eyewitnesses. An Iowa man has the honor of appearing as first witness:

AS IT IS SAID TO HAVE HAPPENED AT NAUVOO, ILLINOIS

John Carrell, of Madrid, has lived as long upon Iowa soil as any citizen of Boone County. He moved with his parents from Clay County, Indiana, to Jefferson County, Iowa, in March, 1843. This was before there was any settlement beyond the borders of the Black Hawk purchase, and two months before Captain Allen located at Fort Des Moines at the Raccoon Forks, and three and a half years before Iowa was admitted into the Union. . . .

It was during the summer of 1843, and while the Carrell family still lived in Jefferson County, that Joseph Smith made his rather famous attempt to walk upon the waters of the Mississippi River. The Mormons were then located at Nauvoo, Illinois, only about thirty miles from where the Carrell family lived. . . .

When the word went out that the Mormon Prophet would walk upon the waters of the Mississippi, and the day named on which he would perform this supernatural act, thousands of people gathered upon the banks of the Great Father of Waters to witness the performance. We say supernatural act, because he expected to imitate the act of our Lord, when he walked upon the waters of the Sea of Galilee.

Mr. Carrell says that hundreds of people went from the counties of Jefferson, Van Buren, Lee, and Des Moines to be present and see what would happen. These took a position on the Iowa side of the river, while on the Illinois side crowds could be seen for a long distance up and down the river.

Around Joseph Smith stood, first, the elders and chief men of the Mormon church, second, the Nauvoo Legion in all their military toggery, third, the rank and file of the faithful, and fourth, the doubting Gentiles who stood at a respectable distance to look at what they termed a miserable farce. In the arrangement of things it will be seen that no unbeliever in the supernatural power of Joseph Smith, was allowed to be near him. A careful scrutiny of what was to be done was the thing to be avoided.

When everything was in readiness the Prophet moved off upon the surface of the waters and advanced out toward the main channel about twenty-five feet and as he thus advanced the elders lifted their eyes heavenward and cried, Behold the divine power of our Prophet! This was taken up by the lesser lights and repeated until the hills reverberated with their shouts.

At the end of twenty-five feet he came to a halt and turning around, lifted his hand in a commanding way and then all were silent. "Listen," said he, "to what I am about to say. You have seen me walk thus far upon the water. If there is one among you who doubts my power to walk upon these waters anywhere and everywhere, let him speak now and say so." All were silent. "I take for granted then," said he, "that you all believe I possess the power to do so." There was a general response in the affirmative. "If you have full faith in me," he continued, "that is all the Lord requires of you and it is therefore needless that I should do more than I have done to convince you." Saying this he returned to the shore amid the shouts and congratulations of his followers.

While this thinly disguised manifestation of divine power seemed to be accepted as a veritable truth by the faithful followers of Joseph Smith, the doubting Gentiles, who stood afar off, refused to be convinced without further investigation. So, as soon as the Mormons had withdrawn a short distance, half a dozen skiff loads of those doubting Gentiles pulled to the spot where Joseph had done his miraculous walking. They found the water to be quite deep there and they further found that some timbers had been placed on supports just below the surface of the water, and on these, and not on the water, Joseph had done his miraculous walking. This bursted the supernatural bubble, causing the Gentiles to go away more disgusted with Mormonism than ever. Never in the history of our greatest river was a more sacrilegious act performed upon its waters.—Boone County (Iowa) Democrat, September 19, 1902.

THE LONG DISTANCE SYSTEM

In this instance the episode was made a regular old time holiday. "All Judea" went out to see.

But notice: The hundreds who went from the counties of Jefferson, Van Buren, Lee, and Des Moines in Iowa (the witness was from Jefferson County) took their stand on the Iowa side of the river, opposite Nauvoo; while on the Illinois side multitudes gathered around the immediate scene of the miracle.

The river at this place is approximately a mile and a half wide. Yet this multitude of witnesses on the Iowa side (including Mr. Carrell) saw clearly and heard distinctly all that was done and said during this "rather famous attempt to walk upon the water." The day of miracles was not then past.

AS IT HAPPENED ON MUD CREEK, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO

The next witness is an Ohio man, a Mr. Cartwell, and the harmony existing between him and Mr. Carrell is manifested in the fact that he locates the event in Muskingum County, Ohio, on a stream bearing the euphonious title of Mud Creek, among the very "elect" of a tried and true Presbyterian community. We quote:

Charles R. Cartwell, writing in the Chicago Tribune, repeats this joke played on the so-called "Prophet" Joseph Smith, sr., of the Mormon Church:

"Sometime in the thirties Smith and a party of his followers were proselyting in Muskingum County, Ohio. He appointed a certain day when he would show the people his wonderful powers, and that he was a second Christ, by walking on the waters of Mud Creek. The water was always muddy. A day or two before the time set grandmother's brother Robert and a couple of neighbor boys were accidentally attracted to the Mormons working at the creek, and, concealing themselves, watched the Mormons put down stakes and put planks on them from bank to bank, the plank resting about six inches under the water. After the Mormons left the boys went down and took out the center plank, where the water was about ten feet deep. The next day 'Balaam' Smith came down to the creek, and after a long exhortation, started across the creek. He was all right and on top till he came to the center, where his 'powers' seemed to leave him, and he, like McGinty, went to the bottom. This was the end of Mormonism in that old tried and true Presbyterian county."—Literary Digest, April 9, 1904.

AS IT HAPPENED IN KIRTLAND, LAKE COUNTY, OHIO

Next appears a set of witnesses who locate the event at Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio, on the Chagrin River. It is said that variety is the spice of life, if so this must have been one of the most highly seasoned events in American history. R. B. Neal prefers the Lake County men for some reason and gives their testimony in "Sword of Laban Leaflet No. 17."

I was born in Tioga County, New York, January 16, 1820, and came to Chester, in Ohio, 1829. I well remember going to Kirtland one evening with a two-horse wagon load of men and boys to see the Mormon Prophet, Jo Smith, walk on the water.

There was a large crowd on both banks of the river below the bridge east of the Flats. Jo addressed the crowd on faith for some time. He said all that was needed to perform miracles was faith. He put on a white robe and began his walk and talked of FAITH bearing him up. He suddenly went down and the Gentiles shouted and said "plank" had failed. The Mormons said his faith had failed. He was helped out of the water. I was seventy-five to a hundred feet from him.

A. P. BARBER,
Justice of the Peace.

John A. Eddy learned the carpenter trade with my father and married my sister. He told me that Jo Smith announced in a Mormon meeting at such a time he would walk on water.

That Grandison Newell and my father paid him one dollar a night to watch and see what the Mormons did.

The night before the walking was to be, Jo Smith, Brigham Young, Sidney Rigdon, and William Aldrich worked half the night and drove stakes in the river in the shape of a horse-shoe, the ends being on one bank and in deep water. They placed green sycamore slabs, which would sink in the water, on the crotched stakes, which were eight or more inches under the water, altogether between two and three hundred feet long. After they left I removed one of the slabs near the center.

According to appointment Prophet Joseph Smith came with several hundred Mormons and Jo addressed them. He said they could walk on the water if they only had faith.

Jo, arrayed in a long white robe, walked some distance, turned, and walked backward, and where the slab had been removed, went in all over. He got to shore by the aid of a limb of a tree.

Jo said at once to the audience: "Oh, ye of little faith, if you had faith as large as a grain of mustard seed, I could remove mountains."

AN ECHO FROM BRADEN

These affidavits are put forth with all the airs of a new discoverer; but as they are dated 1885, about the time Braden held his debate in that vicinity with Bishop Kelley and are of a piece with the "evidence" that he gathered we doubt not that Braden arranged and secured them. What they cost him we do not know.

A PLANK MISSING

These testimonies have several fatal defects that would bar them from any court as reliable evidence.

In no place do they give the date of the alleged occurrence. No attempt is even made to approximate a date. Even the year is not named. This looks suspicious. It is suspicious. Some one instructed these men to omit dates. Dates are dangerous. They open up an opportunity for evidence in rebuttal.

If a date were given history would show at once the whereabouts of Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, William Aldrich, and others mentioned as parties to the plot. One or all of them might have a clear and positive alibi. Hence no dates, lest truth should silence these "witnesses." Longfellow says:

When by night the frogs are croaking, kindle but a torch's fire,

Ha! how soon they all are silent! Thus Truth silences the liar.

Again note that most of this is hearsay testimony, quite valueless as evidence in any court. F. J. Goldsmith tells us what John A. Eddy told him. And another of the witnesses not here quoted, William Rockafellow, tells us what Leonard Rich told him. Also it is perhaps worth while to note that in the testimony Joseph Smith and others are represented as driving stakes in the bottom of the river to support the planks. The river at Kirtland at the place indicated is very shallow and swift and has a solid rock bottom.

BOAT LOADS OF THEM CAME

Another testimony is put forth which we cannot forbear to present. R. B. Neal quoted it in Word of Truth, June 4, 1913.

I've had the following written by Brother J. Adin Morrison, Greeley, Colorado (1029 10th Avenue), on hand ever since 1908. While I thought it true I could not prove it, hence I did not publish it. Now I can prove every item by sworn proof.

But hear him: "As a Prophet of the Lord Joe Smith must work a miracle. So he gave out that he would 'walk on the water.' This in imitation of the Savior. Boat loads of people came from Saint Louis and other points to witness the marvelous feat.

"Promptly at the appointed time Smith appeared in a white robe and walked out into the water some distance without sinking. But suddenly, either from accident or mischief of a skeptical person, one of the submerged boards which had enabled him to perform his astonishing stunt slipped from under him and he unexpectedly went down into the water. So both the faith and works of the Prophet failed. The large crowd "tumbled" but not in the way Joe had expected as the jeers and yells testified. There are living witnesses, today, to the truth of the above statements.—Word of Truth, June 4, 1913.

THE MORRISON EXCURSION

Wise Mr. Morrison gives neither time nor place, neither date, month, year, nor locality. His attention is concentrated on great fleets of vessels with crowded decks hurrying from Saint Louis and "other points" to Nauvoo, Kirtland, or Muskingum County, to behold Joseph Smith walk on the waters of the Mississippi, Chagrin River, or Mud Creek.

Mr. Morrison has all the others beaten. It is hard to excel a real oldtime western man at such a contest. It is in the air out there. That was where Mark Twain got his start.

But the thing that gives this story class and distingtion, the real nub of the joke, the thing that outdoes Mark, is to get up such a real Wild-West story and then get it published in a "religious" periodical called the Word of Truth.

NOT THEIR BUSINESS

Probably the men who are so busy circulating these stories are something like the old pioneer in the following anecdote. This old man was very fond of "drawing the long bow," and one day was recounting his adventures in the big redwood forests of California. He declared that the forests were full of great trees five hundred feet tall and one hundred feet in diameter standing so close together that he could hardly get his knife blade between them, and through those forests roamed the great black-tailed deer with a spread of antlers of over fifteen feet.

At this point some one asked him to explain how these deer roamed through a forest where the trees stood so close together that he could hardly insert his knife blade between them.

Without a blush of shame the old man turned on his questioner with contempt and replied, "That, sir, was not my business; I left those details to the deer."

ALSO IN PENNSYLVANIA AND CANADA

Since we wrote the foregoing portions of this editorial a correspondent sends in an extract from The Mormons and their Bible, published in 1901, by M. T. Lamb. We have not verified the extract, not having access to the book.

From this writer's testimony it seems that the affair is no longer merely interstate—it broadens and becomes international. Pennsylvania is added to the list, and Canada. We quote:

Twice he (Smith) essayed to walk upon the water, in imitation of our Lord upon the Sea of Galilee, and each time the announcement brought a crowd. The paraphernalia in each case was the same. A platform of planks was secretly constructed just under the surface of the turbid water, but Providence intervened in each instance to confound the plans of the head of the church.

The first instance was in Western Pennsylvania and the spot selected for the miracle was the still water just below the breast of the dam. Some mischievous boys surreptitiously removed the plank where the pool was deepest, and Joseph, walking forth on the water with the greatest assurance, suddenly disappeared with a loud splash, as if some gigantic crustacean had pulled him under.

The second attempt was in Canada, and a member of a Baptist Church at Evanston, Wyoming, who witnessed it as a girl, is my authority. In this instance the rapidly running water had destroyed the integrity of the invisible platform, and the Prophet had a narrow escape from drowning.

The element of absurdity enters into this affair early in our review of the testimony. But that is not our fault. That is the fault of the witnesses and their fondness for geographic diversity. We hear the sound as of one walking upon many waters.

Probably the old and oft-exploded story is not worth the attention that we have given it. Still the various testimonies as collated may be of passing interest or diversion to some.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE WAR AND OUR IDEALS

[Address by President F. M. Smith at General Conference, April 14. It is planned to include this address in the official minutes of the 1918 conference.]

Contemplation of the great world war has always been accompanied by a depression of spirit. The awful uncertainty of it all, the rapidly changing picture which the conflict presents, nations dissolving over night, new nations being added to the list, the battle front changing almost continuously, keeps one in a constant state of agitation as to what is to happen next. Through all there has been upon me a burden of depression which seems to say, "The worst has not yet been reached." And, while I have been called "pessimistic" and chided for speaking particularly to our soldiers about the probable long duration of the war, I cannot but feel that it is far better for our boys to go to the front appreciating the enormity of the task we are undertaking rather than to think they are going for a play spell.

On the train from El Paso a few days ago I fell into conversation with a sergeant from Camp Cody, at Deming, and he seemed to think that it was very doubtful if the boys then at Deming would see France, and if they did they probably would be taken on a warship, or on a transport; they would see beautiful France behind the lines and perhaps get a glimpse of the coat-tails of the fleeing Germans as they hustled back to Berlin, and that was all.

"Why," said he, "I don't imagine that a German is an eight-story man; I believe every man that is clad in khaki is good for six of them."

I replied: "I don't want to underestimate the ability or the splendid fighting qualities of the American soldier, but I also do not want these boys to underestimate the magnificent military machine that the Germans have been forty years in building, or the splendid qualities of the soldiers of life-long training." And I ventured the prediction that not until we have three men in the allied forces for every man wearing the uniform of the central powers will we ever whip them. They have all the advantage of position; they have every advantage of the long years of training. I believe this war will not end until all our resources in man power, woman power, and wealth are thrown into the conflict. To do this the Nation must be awakened to the fact that we are in war and in one of the most devastating and destructive wars the world has ever seen.

Our boys are going to the front. Why? It may be safe to say that nine out of ten go to the front because this country is calling, and they go in response to the call of their country. But not yet, in my opinion, in the hearts of our great American Army has been awakened the ideal for which we are fighting. The men at Washington see it, and no man in the wide world has a clearer vision of the ideals for which this country stands than the magnificent man who is in the chair as our chief executive, President Wilson. I pay tribute to-night not only to him as President of the United States, but as one of the greatest statesmen the world has produced! We do not fully realize that America is at war, or just what it means to be at war, because we have not yet been hard hit; and hard hit we will be, if I mistake not the signs of the times. It may be that we need the new birth that will come from being hard against the sore realities of war. As a country at large there has not yet been developed the patriotism we should have in fighting for the ideals that are before the country. But it will come! Latent in the heart of every American is a patriotism unexceeded in any other country, but it is latent in too many instances. It must be aroused and that patriotism must burn not only beneath the khaki coat, but in the heart of every woman and every man in civilian pursuits.

As a Nation we have gone to war several times for selfish and altruistic reasons, but never before have we gone to war for so high an ideal as is that which is directing and guiding our statesmen to-day. Even the statesmen of Great Britain, who are perhaps as world statesmen and politicians unexcelled in intelligence and acumen, have been startlingly pleased and exalted by the fact that this Nation, one of the richest and one of the most powerful nations of the world, has entered the war purely for an ideal. And it has become a bond of friendship between the English-speaking nations that will forever wipe out the bitterness that may have existed as a hang over from the Revolutionary period. Never again will the great English-speaking nations of the world call each other enemies, let us hope.

We have not time to-night to go into details of this great conflict that we might like, but we wish to speak briefly of some of the leading characteristics or ideals of a few of the nations who are fighting together for the same cause. We cannot neglect Belgium, for as one of the most active industrial nations of the world, it has for years occupied a position unique among nations because of its helplessness and its small size; but for all that, it has developed a people whose industries are unexcelled in the world. The magnificent spectacle of that little nation throwing all of its man power before the great war machine rolling ruthlessly over western Europe, and holding it in check, though it meant the sacrifice of its citizens by the thousands, until the allies could make preparation to stop the onward march of that machine, will never in its splendor be surpassed as a military spectacle, and will always challenge the admiration of those who read of it.

Great Britain has been the mother of nations; her jurisprudence has gone around the world, and everywhere the flag of Britain waves it is recognized that in the administration of her laws there is a quickness of justice meted out which challenges the admiration of all law students and those who love justice. One of the great characteristics of the British Nation is the excellence and quickness of its jurisprudence. Our own Nation, so far as its laws are concerned, has much for which to thank Great Britain. With perhaps one or two exceptions our State laws are based on the British jurisprudence. She has taught us our law and even yet we are behind her in the excellence of her great law when seeking for justice.

Italy we might call the mother of religions or the mother of churches. Whatever we might have to say of the great Catholic religion, which has its home in Rome, we must recognize that because of the universality of that church and its religion, and the large number of churches which have sprung from her either as a protest against her in a religious way, or having been fostered by her, we do look back when reading history to Italy as the mother of churches, though in this thought we do not lose sight of Judea and the Christian religion which sprang therefrom, nor yet lose sight of the fact that in the Roman Empire Christianity found shelter in its early days. Besides this for Italy as a nation it must be said that everywhere Italy's flag is seen flying, people recognize that beneath its protecting folds, the world has had a development in art and literature that in excellence is surpassed nowhere in the world. In the history of art, in all its ramifications, in painting, architecture, sculpture, we are inevitably led back to Rome and to Italy.

France, it may be said, stands as one of the most persistent proponents of liberty and her national motto to-day is shouted as the battle cry of thousands and thousands of soldiers, stimulating them in their struggles, fighting to the last drop of blood, even though against overwhelming numbers. There is no finer national motto than that of France, "Liberty, equality, and fraternity."

Of America it can be said that in the expansion and development of international law she has been always the earnest advocate of wider freedom and national liberty. While America has not been recognized in the past as being an European power or having influence in the affairs of Europe, or perhaps in the world; yet, if anyone will examine the history of international law, he will see that on practically every point which has to do with the freedom of the sea, the free exchange of commerce, the widest expanse of liberty, America has always stood as a factor which could not be denied in her demands for higher international liberty, always a keen advocate of the great underlying principles of international law which have so ruthlessly been swept aside by the Teutonic Nations, but which will be eventually reestablished in greater power than ever before. America, then, stands forth with an ideal freer from selfishness than any other nation. And that is as it should be. One of the youngest and most powerful of nations, we cannot but expect that in erecting her ideals she shall pass on beyond the ideals of the nations from which she sprang.

Thus there are allied in the mighty struggles against the great devastating ruthless hordes of Huns the nations holding aloft the highest ideals of civilization.

What a bond of fraternity, what a cause for which to fight and upon which to ask the blessings of God!

I may be permitted to speak somewhat about our own interest as a church in this great conflict. We cannot go into it deeply, but we can to some extent.

Our work in England as a church, so far as proselyting is concerned, is practically at an end. We can do nothing, we can hope to do nothing more than to care for the little remnants of branches or local congregations which may be left there. The "Man Power" bill which recently passed Parliament, is calling to the colors all the British subjects under fifty-one years of age, without any class exemption. That means that everyone holding the priesthood will be called to the colors, no matter what his priesthood or how important his work in the church may be. It will, therefore, leave the care of the branches to older men, and we may be compelled, in order to care for them, to send some of our own men who have volunteered to go or who may be called upon to do the work. Our English brethren have gone to the front; many of them have bled; many have left their bodies in France or Flanders; some have come back disabled for life, unable to resume its activities, yet have come back with an enhanced opinion of religion, with closer devotion to God, with a deeper sense of what his work means on this earth.

In Canada we have a repetition thereof. While it is true that Canada has not been as hard hit as Great Britain, yet it is true that responding to a large degree to the same ideal that is held up before our people to-day, the splendid manhood of Canada has flocked to the colors until practically all of their perfect manhood have gone to the colors, under certain ages. Conscription is in effect there; they will, doubtless, have to raise the age limit as they have done in Great Britain. There are hundreds of our people from Canada at the front; and let it be said that these Canadian soldiers are fighting with a zeal and idealism that makes them among the finest soldiers on that front.

The same is true of Australia; from all over Australia come reports to my table, of branches that are being hard hit because of young men going to the front; and while they have been fighting local conscription, there has been in effect a social conscription which practically compels every young man of military age to go to the colors and volunteer. That same thing is in effect to a certain extent in America and there are many young men volunteering to go to the colors because they are feeling the effects of the social conscription which is at work, and which will increase as far as its pressure is concerned, until every man able to be at the front who cannot give a good reason for not being there, is going to be kept busy the rest of his life explaining why he was not with the colors.

So far as the church in America is concerned our boys are going to the front, we see no reason why they should not, but see many reasons why they should.

Let me repeat what I have said before in your hearing; as a religious denomination there is no church organization in the wide world which has better, sounder, and deeper-lying reasons for protecting this Nation and giving our Nation our deep and full-hearted support than this church, because to no other church is assigned that peculiar belief that the divine, overruling, great Intelligence, has directed the national affairs from the time independence from Great Britain was declared; and believing as we do in the divine instigation of her institutions, that God is directing her statesmen in international affairs, then we can do no other thing than say, "When my country needs me, needs my service, here am I. Here it is." And, hence, I can grasp the hand of every one of our young men going to the front, either by drafting or enlistment, and feel that in bidding him "Godspeed," I am but pronouncing a blessing on one who has gone to the front to fight for me, my home, and yours; for whether we realize it or not, the institutions of this country are jeopardized by the success of the central powers to-day. Take a look at the war map of Europe to-day and then learn what has been figured out in advance by the Teutonic forces as to what they should accomplish along certain lines and what should be their ultimate objectives; and you will be startled to know that they have gained at least three fourths of the objectives they started out to accomplish; and if they are defeated, or do not accomplish the conquering of the other fourth, it will only be because this Nation has come to the rescue and thrown all her resources into the balance.

Now, while I approach it with a little hesitancy, I cannot but say something about how our work has been affected in Germany itself. We have had no reports from the branches in Germany for some time; naturally we could not get them! But very early in the war we had reports from the small congregation at Hamburg, in effect that out of six men who hold the priesthood four of them had been either killed or permanently disabled and the other two were at the front; and so it goes with nearly every branch from which we have had word. And when I think about our people fighting under the German colors, there comes to me a sanctification of our cause that does not come when I think of our own boys alone; and I cannot help but believe that because of the idealism of this Nation, because of the inevitable success of the flag which has never yet been pulled down, because of the high standard of the international liberty that we are fighting for, the day will come when the Germans themselves will salute our flag in all earnestness, in all seriousness, and with reverence, as being the emblem of one of the most highly actuated and purest-spirited nations in the world. And when that time comes, the Stars and Stripes will be recognized as a world flag in influence and in the principles for which it stands.

Do we owe allegiance, then, to our country? Answer it! For the time is coming, if it is not here, when every man and woman and child in this country will have to answer to what degree he owes allegiance to this country and give an active response to the answer. We must not be found short even one per cent in our sympathy with the allied governments as they are organized to-day, but with the principles for which they are fighting we must be one hundred per cent pure for liberty and the ideal which has been erected by this Nation and which is being fought for by her and her splendid allies. God grant that when the time comes for our church people to give that answer, it will be that which we will be proud of, and it will be that we are under His protection and direction fighting for the ultimate glory of His cause.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

Many have raised the question of the constitutionality of the conscription law of May 18, 1917. They have stated that it was sustained by a divided court, by a bare majority in fact, and that Justice Brandeis was opposed to the decision. Yet, all of the reports we have received here state that the Supreme Court unanimously upheld the constitutionality of the act. This is the case with The Public for January 11,—The Outlook for January 16, as well as the daily newspapers.

Others state that its constitutionality depended on Section 4, quoted below. This would also appear to be incorrect or unfounded. Considerable arguments have been made concerning this point, and John Spargo, so recently a socialist, asserts that the Government has the right to draft without making exemptions. This argument appears to be sound.

Section 4: And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organizations; but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant.

We concede that this church holds strongly for peace and against war, as is shown in the Conference Resolutions for 1911, previously quoted. It is also shown in sections 95 and 102 of Doctrine and Covenants. On the other hand, we have never made it a test of fellowship. Members of the church have taken part in the Civil War and the war with Spain, without being called in question, let alone being expelled from the church. In fact the church members have and still hold a very strong loyal attitude for service.

We note now that President Wilson has acted under the last clause and has declared what is noncombatant service. It may be noted with much interest that he has included within this order of March 20, 1918, not only those who have been certified by their local boards to be members of a religious sect or organization as defined in section 4 of said act, but also those who object to participating in war because of conscientious scruples, but have failed to receive certificate as members of a religious sect or organization. These will be assigned to noncombatant military service. It may be noted that this action has been taken in time to prevent any conscientious objector being required to give real combatant service; also, that a serious effort is being made to deal gently and fairly with them, and not to permit this excuse to be used as a loophole for entire escape of all service. No man is entitled to complete exemption, but so far as is possible his conscientious scruples will be observed and he treated accordingly.

The executive order is as follows:

I hereby declare that the following military service is noncombatant service:

a. Service in the medical corps wherever performed. This includes service in the sanitary detachments attached to combatant units at the front; service in the divisional sanitary trains composed of ambulance companies and field hospital companies, on the line of communication, at the base in France, and with the troops and at hospitals in the United States; also the service of supply and repair in the medical department.

b. Any service in the quartermaster corps, in the United States, may be treated as noncombatant. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service in the following: Stevedore companies, labor companies, remount depots, veterinary hospitals, supply depots, bakery companies, the subsistence service, the bathing service, the laundry service, the salvage service, the clothing renovation service, the shoe-repair service, the transportation repair service, and motortruck companies.

c. Any engineer service in the United States may be treated as noncombatant service. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service as follows: Railroad building, operation, and repair; road building and repair; construction of rear-line fortifications, auxiliary defenses, etc.; construction of docks, wharves, storehouses, and of such cantonments as may be built by the corps of engineers; topographical work; camouflage; map reproduction; supply depot service; repair service; hydraulic service; and forestry service.

ASSIGNMENT OF OBJECTORS

2. Persons ordered to report for military service under the above act who have (a) been certified by their local boards to be members of a religious sect or organization, as defined in section 4 of said act; or (b) who object to participating in war because of conscientious scruples, but have failed to receive certificates as members of a religious sect or organization from their local board, will be assigned to noncombatant military service, as defined in paragraph 1, to the extent that such persons are able to accept service as aforesaid without violation of the religious or other conscientious scruples by them in good faith entertained. Upon the promulgation of this order it shall be the duty of each division, camp, or post commander, through a tactful and considerate officer, to present to all such persons the provisions hereof, with adequate explanation of the character of noncombatant service herein defined, and upon such explanations to secure acceptances of assignment to the several kinds of noncombatant service above enumerated; and whenever any person is assigned to noncombatant service by reason of his religious or other conscientious scruples he shall be given a certificate, stating the assignment and reason therefor, and such certificate shall thereafter be respected as preventing the transfer of such persons from such noncombatant to combatant service by any division, camp, post, or other commander under whom said person may thereafter be called to serve, but such certificate shall not prevent the assignment of such person to some other form of noncombatant service with his own consent. So far as may be found feasible by each division, camp, or post commander, future assignments of such persons to noncombatant military service will be restricted to the several detachments and units of the medical department in the absence of a request for assignment to some other branch of noncombatant service, as defined in paragraph 1 hereof.

REPORTS BY COMMANDERS

3. On the first day of April, and thereafter monthly, each division, camp, or post commander shall report to the Adjutant General of the Army, for the information of the chief of staff and the Secretary of War, the names of all persons under their respective commands who profess religious or other conscientious scruples as above described, and who have been unwilling to accept, by reason of such scruples, assignment to noncombatant military service as above defined, and as to each such person so reported a brief, comprehensive statement as to the nature of the objection to the acceptance of such noncombatant military service entertained. The Secretary of War will from time to time classify the persons so reported and give further directions as to the disposition of them. Pending such directions from the Secretary of War, all such persons not accepting assignment to noncombatant service shall be segregated as far as practicable and placed under the command of a specially qualified officer of tact and judgment, who will be instructed to impose no punitive hardship of any kind upon them, but not to allow their objections to be made the basis of any favor or consideration beyond exemption from actual military service which is not extended to any other soldier in the service of the United States.

MAINTENANCE OF DISCIPLINE

4. With a view to maintaining discipline, it is pointed out that the discretion of courts-martial, so far as any shall be ordered to deal with the cases of persons who fail or refuse to comply with lawful orders by reason of alleged religious or other conscientious scruples, should be exercised, if feasible, so as to secure uniformity of penalties in the imposition of sentences under articles of war 64 and 65, for the willful disobedience of a lawful order or command. It will be recognized that sentences imposed by such courts-martial, when not otherwise described by law, shall prescribe confinement in the United States disciplinary barracks or elsewhere, as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary; but this shall not apply to the cases of men who desert either before reporting for duty to the military authorities or subsequently thereto.

5. The Secretary of War will revise the sentences and findings of courts-martial heretofore held of persons who come within any of the classes herein described, and bring to the attention of the President for remedy, if any be needed, sentences and judgments found at variance with the provisions hereof.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Our Land

(Tune: "America.")

O, Lord, this nation bless,
Keep it in holiness
Ever divine.
Send angels on the breeze
When soldiers cross the seas,
O, shield them from disease
For they are thine.

From thankful hearts will raise
Anthems to thee in praise;
In every clime.
We need thee every hour,
Lead us by thy great power;
Protect, in this dark hour,
This land of thine.

We know our cause is just,
And in thy love we trust
This land to thee.
Tho' men face shot and shell,
They'll do their duty well,
And nations soon will tell
They made men free.

My Message

Could I but go to the children of men
With only one message to speak,
Then this is the "truth" I would bear to them:
"Of the seed you sow, you must reap."

For if in the morn of our happy life,
We scatter the seeds of sin,
Be sure that later, when deep in the strife,
We must gather them in again.

But, if in the glow of the day's bright morn,
We cherish the good and the true,
We will harvest our crop without the thorn
All the way as we journey through.

Let us sow to-day with a lavish hand
Seeds of truth and of honor's kind,
And reap on the morrow a harvest grand,
And the man like his Maker find.

So let me go to the children of earth,
Tell this story again and again,
"Whatsoever you sow, whether ill or of worth,
'Tis of that you will garner in."

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 16

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE BAPTISTS

Like the Quakers, the Baptists believe there was no need of continuous succession of apostolic authority or organization, yet differ in believing that the evidence of the existence of the church of Christ exists in the fact that some one or more people have continued to believe in baptism by immersion, oppose infant baptism, and that the same ones felt willing to represent the principle of religious liberty. The Quakers predicate the proof of divine authority solely upon the fact that some one or ones claim to be moved by the Spirit to represent morality and Christian deportment without any of the outward ordinances.

There are two general classes among the Baptists, one claiming that the church has continued from the days of John the Baptist till now in continuous succession, while the other class, and this class is much the largest, claim there is no proof of this, but that the church was sunken in spiritual darkness for several centuries, yet wherever there is one who believes in baptism by immersion and certain other not very well defined principles, that there is a Baptist and one who has authority to represent Baptist principles, though there may be no church organization. While this class does not advocate the church in succession, they do advocate that there have always been Baptists here and there, believing that there has never been a time when there were none who did not believe in Baptist principles, even though there may have been a time when none practiced them.

The Reverend T. G. Jones, D. D., in his History of the Origin and Continuity of the Baptist Church, while advocating succession virtually admits the opposite in the following language found on page 451:

Under the figure of the woman (Revelation 12) the church existed for ages in obscurity, and an obscurity so deep as that its very existence was then by the great world unknown and is now with difficulty traced.

And on page 46 of the same work says:

As a visible and located organization, where is the church founded at Jerusalem? For long years it has ceased to exist in member digesta.

Relative to the same subject—succession—Reverend Heman Lincoln, D. D., Professor of church history in New Theological Seminary, says:

We can attempt nothing more, with our present data, than to prove the existence of Baptist principles from the apostolic age to the present time. To trace a line of churches holding these, unmixed with radical errors, no wise and cautious student will undertake.

Doctor D. B. Ray has given this question of succession great prominence in his works. In his book entitled, Baptist Succession, pages 142-145, he makes the claim, and tries to sustain it from some historical data which is very unsatisfactory even to many of his associate Baptist ministers, that "the Waldenses descended from the Novatians," and "that the Waldenses were in existence under various names up to the times of the apostles." And on page 99, he claims that the German Baptists descended from the Waldenses, and says on pages 102 and 103 that they were also called Mennonites, but that "the modern Mennonites are wholly different from the ancient Mennonite Anabaptists, for the so-called Mennonites of the present time admit of pouring for baptism, while Mennō and those old Mennonites were uncompromising dippers." He follows this statement on page 104 with the conclusion, "that the Baptists may be considered as the only Christian community which has stood since the days of the apostles"; yet on page 453 says, "The existence of the church of Christ does not depend in any sense upon his people to prove, from uninspired historical records, her continued existence in the past," and really admits doubt as to the possibility of proving that which he has asserted as proven from these same uninspired historical records on page 455 in the following not-to-be-misunderstood language: "The absence of a connected history of the church is what a reasonable being, under all circumstances, would naturally expect." He really admits that all the effort he had made in his book covering nearly four hundred pages to prove from uninspired historical records, or by quoting other's conclusions who had tried to prove from the same class of records, a connected history of the church, had been a failure, and we should naturally expect nothing else.

Doctor William Williams, who stands equally prominent in the Baptist Church as authority, and has ably filled the chair of church history in Greenville Theological Seminary, says,

There is no doubt in the world that in our so-called histories of the Baptists, many sects are claimed as Baptists which, if now reduced, would not be acknowledged as such by any church or association, e. g., the Novations, Donatists, and Paulicans. . . . As history now stands (what future research will develop we cannot tell) it is impossible to trace any chain of Baptist churches from the days of the apostles till now.

Those Baptists who are urging our claim on the ground of historical succession, are only doing harm to us with all intelligent and well-read people.—The Christian Record, August, 1873, p. 348.

Reverend George D. Taylor, D. D., in his book entitled, The Baptists, Who They Are, and What They Have Done, says on page 8:

I propose to show that Baptists not called by that name, but called by first one name and then another, and yet holding substantially Baptist principles and Baptist practices, have existed in all ages from the Reformation back to apostolic times. We do not speak of the Baptist Church being continuous as we do of the Roman Catholic Church, or the Church of England. All we mean is that there have been in all the ages men and churches maintaining doctrines and practices such as Baptists and Baptist Churches now maintain.

By the above quotation it will be readily seen that leading representatives of the Baptist Church are not agreed as to how the authority of the apostles has passed down to them, unless it be through men and churches, who, while holding some features of faith in common with some of the features of present-day Baptists, yet these same men and churches held just as many views dissimilar to them, and held equally as many views in common with others of the popular churches of the present day.

The peculiar ideas of the Baptists, in a more general way, will be better understood by quoting what they have said, by comparing these statements with what other churches have and do believe, and with what the record in the Bible presents as the "faith once delivered to the saints."

ORIGIN OF BAPTISTS

The oldest Baptist Church in America originated with the baptism of Roger Williams and his congregation in 1639.—Baptists of the United States, by J. M. Peck, p. 628.

Governor Winthrop writes under date of March 16, 1639, "A sister of Mrs. Hutchinson, the wife of one Scott, being infected with Anabaptistry, and going last year to live at Providence, Mr. Williams was taken (or rather emboldened) by her to make open profession thereof, and accordingly was baptized by one Holyman, a poor man, late of Salem. Then Mr. Williams rebaptized him and ten more."—Two Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the Formation of the First Baptist Church in Providence, Rhode Island, April 28, 1889, p. 35.

J. M. Cramp, D. D., in Baptist History, says, on pages 460, 461:

Roger Williams, preaching at Salem, prior to his banishment, of which an account will be hereafter given, was distasteful to some of his hearers. . . . It is certain that he had not then professed Baptist sentiments. But shortly after his settlement at Providence the whole subject of baptism came under consideration and discussion. . . . The result was, however, that twelve men declared themselves Baptists in principle. Then the question arose, How were they to be baptized, since they had no minister? . . . In this dilemma they adopted the only expedient that seemed to meet the case. One of their number, Thomas Holliman was chosen to baptize Mr. Williams, who then baptized the other. This was in March, 1639. A church was immediately formed, of which Mr. Williams was pastor.

Says Doctor Ray:

Baptists have with one voice denied any connection with the Romish apostasy, and claimed their origin as a church from Jesus Christ and the apostles.—Baptist Succession, p. 3.

Baptists, whether they regard his spotless character, his talents, his learning, the service he rendered, the urbanity and the modesty that distinguished him, will mention John Clark as the real founder of our denomination in America.—Origin of the Baptists, by S. H. Ford, LL. D., p. 26.

The last of the prophets, and the first of the heralds of the gospel, like the star of morning, shining clear and radiant from the bright sky, and then fading away in cloudless splendor of the orb of day—in the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ came John, baptizing in the wilderness. That was the beginning.—Ibid, p. 174.

AUTHORITY

God has assigned us an honorable position. . . . In religion the stand taken by the old reformers is fully recognized: nothing to be admitted which cannot be sustained by Scripture and reason. . . . They desire to clear away all rubbish and to find "the old paths."

We profess to be walking in them and to carry out the Reformation to its legitimate issues.—Cramp, in Baptist History, pp. 584, 585.

The commission was not given to the disciples in their apostolic character. If this was the case, the authority of the commission ceased with the apostolic office. . . . The commission was given to them in their church capacity, and, consequently, it remains with the churches to this day. While the Savior was with his disciples, in person, he retained in his own hands all authority in his kingdom. But before his ascension to the Father, he clothed his church with executive authority in his kingdom.—Baptist Succession, p. 34.

How dare anyone to adopt, as authority in religion, any rule except the word of God? As the New Testament is the last will of our Lord Jesus Christ, it contains all the duties enjoined upon the children of God in the Christian Dispensation.—Ibid, p. 184.

CHURCH

Matthew 16:18. The Savior did not confine this prediction to the local assembly at Jerusalem. He referred to the church institution which should exist in the shape of local churches throughout all the coming ages.—Ray, in Papal Controversy, p. 22.

Speaking of the officers of the church, Paul says, 1 Corinthians 12:28. . . . The first officers of the church were apostles, the second class were prophets, and the third class were doctors, rather teachers.—Ibid, p. 203.

But it is evident that this authority of binding and loosing, retaining and remitting sins, has reference to the authority given to the church to receive or expel members, and do whatever a church of Christ is authorized by the New Testament to do.—Ibid, pp. 260, 261.

We reject hereditary membership, holding that men are not born Christians, but that they become Christians when they are born again, and that until then, they have no right to Christian ordinances, because they cannot enjoy Christian blessings. . . . We gather from the teachings of the apostles that a man should be a Christian before he avows himself to be one; we admit none to our fellowship without a profession of repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Their baptism is at the same time a declaration of their sole reliance on the Savior, and their symbol of their union with him in his death and his resurrection—a spiritual, vital union. Our churches so constituted, profess to be societies of believers, congregations of saints.—Cramp's Baptist History, p. 586.

We now affirm that the Baptist denomination is the only one on earth which claims Jesus Christ in person, as its founder and head.—Baptist Succession, p. 178.

It must not be forgotten that the Baptists differ from all others in the fact that they hold that persons must be saved, or prepared for heaven, before they are qualified to enter a church of Christ.—Ibid., p. 393.

In the General Association, in 1774, the question was mooted whether the office of apostle mentioned in Ephesians 4: 11-13, still existed. By a majority it was decided that it did. It was also resolved to fill the office, provided suitable persons could be found. [They selected three; Samuel Harris, Elijah Craig, and John Waller by private poll.—Author.] . . . But the arrangement lasted only a year, and was never revived. As for the apostolic office, it is clear that it, like the prophetic office, was extraordinary and depending on special inspiration, and that one important function of the apostles was personal testimony concerning Christ's life and work; so that altogether there are and can be, in strictness, no successors to the apostles.—The Virginia Baptists, by Reverend George B. Taylor, D. D., p. 22.

The officers which usually belong to a church consist of a pastor, and from two to seven or nine deacons, according to the magnitude of the church and its exigencies. Their ministers and pastors are ordained with the imposition of hands by a presbytery, consisting of any number more than two. Every candidate for ordination, however, must be presented, previously approved, by the church of which he is a member.—Buck's Theological Dictionary, pp. 326, 327.

HOLY SCRIPTURES

Baptists of every sect hold to the entire sufficiency and supremacy of the Holy Scriptures over all formulas or standards of human composition as their guide in matters of religion the sole rule of faith and practice.—Buck's Theological Dictionary, p. 625.

In fact it is but the united voice of all Baptists throughout the world, that, "We profess to take for our guide, in all matters of religious belief and practice, the New Testament, and nothing but the New Testament."—Baptist Succession, p. 185.

Those who wrote the Scriptures were moved to this work by the Holy Spirit.—Ibid., p. 173.

CONFESSION OF FAITH OR CREED

Our fathers founded, and the centuries have handed down to us a church without a written creed. This is not to say that the church has no beliefs, deep and strong convictions. Some of these beliefs have perished.—Two Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary, p. 11.

In the midst of such a multitude of opposing parties and doctrines, it becomes absolutely necessary for those who would dwell together, to express their views of Bible doctrine; and as a summary of faith must be expressed in order to Christian union, it can certainly be no more harm to write than to express it orally. This summary of doctrine, whether written or unwritten, is the creed of the individual who holds it; it is a Bible creed only so far as it comports with inspiration.—Baptist Succession, pp. 186, 187.

Jesus Christ has but one kingdom on earth, and that is a visible organization, especially to them who have been born again. It has visible subjects; those who have exercised repentance and faith, and have been buried with Christ in baptism, and are walking in the ordinances of the Lord's house. It has visible laws, which are contained in the word of God. And it has visible ordinances: baptism and the Lord's supper. . . .

Some characteristic features which have distinguished Baptists from all others. . . .

1. The Baptists, as a church or kingdom, recognize Jesus Christ alone as their founder and head.

2. The Baptists regard the Bible alone as their rule of faith and practice.

3. The Baptists perpetuate the Bible order of the commandments. They teach repentance, faith, baptism, and the Lord's supper.

4. Baptists immerse, or bury with Christ in baptism, only those who profess to be dead to, or freed from sin.

5. Baptists recognize equal rights or privileges in the execution of the laws of the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

6. Baptists observe the Lord's supper at his table in his kingdom.

7. Baptists have never persecuted others, but have themselves always been peculiarly persecuted and everywhere spoken against.—Baptist Succession, pp. 14, 19, 20.

There are certain fundamental principles which they (the Baptists) hold, and have ever held, and which have largely characterized them as a people:

Christ Jesus, the sole lawgiver in spiritual things;

The word of God, the only authoritative guide in religious faith and practice;

BAPTISM

We have the Baptist view, that while baptism is a solemn duty enjoined upon every child of God as a prerequisite to church fellowship and communion, they do not regard it as essential to salvation.—Baptist Succession, p. 207.

APOSTASY

The church of Rome, as an organization, has never been, is not now, and never will be a church of Christ. She did not originate with the Church of Christ. She is of her father, the Devil.—Baptist Succession, p. 331.

History gives abundant proofs that unscriptural traditions began to prevail immediately after the apostolic age. In fact Paul says (2 Thessalonians 2: 7): "The mystery of iniquity was not. What was Christ commanded? But rather, centuries, had begun its deadly work before the death of Paul."—Ray, in Papal Controversy, pp. 187, 188.

When Constantine the Great declared for Christianity, he expected to stand in the same position toward that religion as he had before occupied with regard to Paganism. . . . The profession of Christianity in those times was a very different thing from what it had been in the first and purest ages. Scripture was smothered by tradition. . . . The inquiry was not, What was Christ commanded? But rather, How may influence, and power, and patronage, and wealth be obtained? How may the gospel become popular? Such being the views of the leaders, it is not surprising that the people groveled in worldliness, or that rulers determined to use Christianity as a State machine, as they had used Paganism. Constantine led the way, and his successors naturally trod in his steps. . . . The bishops were too ready to invoke the exercise of his authority, and there was not religious intelligence enough among the people to discern and resist the usurpation.—Cramp's Baptist History, pp. 51, 52.

Pursuing his inquiries, Wickliffe went farther than he originally intended, and propounded opinions which were extremely unpalatable to the staunch supporters of popery. . . . The injustice of the popes in regard to the mendicant controversy, and their steadfast resolve to uphold all abuses and resist all reforms, filled him with disgust. What was the character of the system which cherished such enormities? In answering that question, he was led to compare the professed Christianity of the fourteenth century with the New Testament. The contrast shocked him. He saw that the religion of Christ and his apostles had long been practically abjured.—Ibid., p. 119.

Such a time of general liberty was that glorious epoch known as Protestant Reformation. Night had long wrapped in darkness and tyranny a sleeping world. Suddenly, as at the trump of God, men everywhere awoke and struggled to roll off the weight that was crushing them.—Origin of Baptists, p. 51.

The Baptists, like many other religious organizations, are divided into several sects, some contending for close communion, others opposed, some contending that those who are once in grace are always in grace, and cannot fall from it, others opposed to this idea; some are Calvinistic in regard to election, others Arminian; some believing in the six "principles of the doctrine of Christ," as referred to in Hebrews 6: 1, 2, while others reject the ordinance of the laying on of hands for confirmation, blessing children, or in the healing ordinance. Then, again, some contend for "the baptism of the Holy Ghost," while others argue that "real baptism of the Holy Spirit always endowed the possessor with the gift of tongues or inspiration."

These differing views among those who claim to be Baptists give rise to different organizations all having a distinctive name, so that it is impossible to determine who the true Baptists are, but can the more easily determine who is in agreement with the New Testament doctrines, and who are not, and whether any of them are followers of the one after whom they claim to be named, John the Baptist, for he taught, and baptized with the "baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," and the teachings of those who now claim to be Baptists is a baptism that is not essential to salvation, but is to be applied to those only whose sins have been remitted.

While these churches claim to be independent local organizations, supreme in their sphere, and not subject to any general organization, yet they have a missionary union, to which all the local organizations are to a greater or lesser extent subject in the great work of evangelization, which work is the primary work of the church of Christ.

THE SABBATH DAY,

WHAT CAUSED THE SABBATH DAY TO CHANGE FROM THE SEVENTH DAY TO THE FIRST

This seems to be a very difficult problem for many people to understand. We are asked this question quite frequently. I will try to answer it as nearly right as I possibly can.

You will notice in reading your Bible, that Jesus was crucified on Friday and rose from the dead on the first day of the week—the day we now call Sunday, or the Sabbath Day.

The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulcher, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulcher.—John 20: 1.

But Mary stood without at the sepulcher weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulcher, and seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus. . . . Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to, my God, and your God. Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her. Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.—Verses 11-14, 17-19.

You will notice that each time he met with them, it was on the first day of the week. He showed them his hands and his side; breathed on them and gave them the Holy Ghost, at least told them to receive it; and taught them of the remission of sins. (Verses 22 and 23.)

The next first day, or "eight days" from the previous meeting, the disciples "were within" met together again. (Verse 26.) Jesus met with them and further taught them, especially Thomas, who was not at the meeting the previous first day or Sunday, and also did many things of which John does not tell us, as referred to in verse 30.

It was upon the first day of the week that Jesus walked with the two disciples, and in the evening was made known to them at the supper table.

And they rose up the same hour and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and those who were with them, Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known to them, in breaking bread. And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and said unto them, Peace be unto you.—Luke 24: 33-35.

We wonder how it happened that Jesus Christ, the apostles, and those that were with them, were gathered together on the first day of the week? But it had been the custom of Christ to go into the synagogue and teach the people. Well, there was a good reason for it. He could reach the people better because it was the custom of the Jews to meet together on the Sabbath Day. "Jesus answered . . . I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort." (John 18: 20.) The Jews were seventh-day keepers, and Jesus went within the temple court and synagogue because he could reach the people better on that day.

But then the resurrection day had not yet come. When it did arrive, on that very day, he commenced meeting with his disciples on the first day of the week as we have seen. Why should he meet with the Jews on the seventh and with his disciples on the first day of the week? This custom seems to have been followed by the disciples right along.

We sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow.—Acts 20: 6, 7.

You will notice that this company of disciples stayed a whole week, seven days, at Troas. No meeting is mentioned until Sunday or the first day of the week came round, then they met "to break bread," that is, take sacrament, and on the same day, the Apostle Paul preached to them. I wonder why those disciples let the seventh day pass, and then met and worshiped on "the first day" following! Strange, isn't it?

The Corinthian saints were instructed by the same apostle thus:

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.—1 Corinthians 16: 2.

This was done to raise collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem.

What? Did not Paul know this was not the seventh day of the week? If he did not, it was strong presumptive proof that it was not so regarded by the church in his day. According to his instruction, the saints must have been in the habit of meeting on the first day, and from week to week they gave into the treasury the offering for the poor saints, that there be no "gathering" of money when he came. In other words, that the collections for the poor saints might be ready when he came. If they did not meet on the first day of the week how could the contributions be assembled and in readiness when Paul arrived? If it be said they could lay by in store, each at his or her own home, and take it to church the following Saturday, the object sought by Paul would fail, that there be no gathering when he came. Whereas, if they met on the first day and deposited their gifts in the church treasury there would then be money on hand when he came, and no further collection necessary.

If they laid by in store, at home on the first day of the week, to be collected the next seventh day, then there would be difficulty in telling just how much one might be able to give. In that time one might earn one dollar or twenty dollars; might sell a house and lot; or lose the house by fire or cyclone; or lose a horse by death or by his being stolen; or obtain a hundred dollars by the sale of the same horse. In a thousand and one ways his financial condition might change.

But if they meet on the first day of the week, as we have seen they did at Troas and Jerusalem, and deposited their gifts in the church treasury, none of these difficulties would be in the way.

We see then, that Christ and his apostles, when they wished to reach the Jews, went unto their temple and the synagogues on the Sabbath Day, and after the resurrection of Christ, when they met alone it was on the first day of the week more often than any other. Why they did this is very strange if Jesus had not taught them to meet on the first day, as Jesus had taught them to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Why did Jesus rise on the first day of the week? Was it an accident? Surely not. Why should he select that day of all others on which to rise from the grave? It did not just happen so, for Jesus says "all power is given unto me, both in heaven and in earth." (Matthew 28: 18; John 10: 17, 18.) You see he had his choice of the day on which he was to be crucified.

There came to him certain of the Pharisees, saying unto him, Get thee out, and depart hence; for Herod will kill thee. And he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. Nevertheless, I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the third day; for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.—Luke 13: 31-34.

Strange, isn't it, that he must walk three days before his crucifixion, and in three days he had finished his work? At the time the Pharisees told him this, at that very hour he began to weep over Jerusalem, saying:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen her brood under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.—Luke 13: 34, 35.

It would seem strange if all these things would happen just so. It was not an accident. Hear this statement that Jesus himself makes:

I lay down my life, that I may take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10: 17, 18.

Having that power, he surely had his choice of days on which he would take up his life again, or rise from the dead. Is it possible that Jesus deliberately chose the first day of the week, or was it an accident? We think not an accident, because he was perfected. It would be impossible for him to make such a mistake, after breaking the bands of death, and thus making possible man's deliverance from sin and the grave.

Did he meet with his apostles and those who were with him on this and the next succeeding Sunday, and teach them to worship, not knowing at the time it was the first day of the week? Who can believe that he made such a mistake?

That eloquent Apostle Paul says:

Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body [the church] is of Christ.—Colossians 2: 16, 17.

He also says, "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, [the Mosaic law] that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross," then follows the injunction to let no man judge you in respect of the Sabbath Day, as well as other things. Yet Adventists often judge us harshly because we do not keep the seventh day.

"For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."—John 13: 15. Should we obey the Adventists and Jews and keep the Mosaic law after it had been nailed to the cross, or should we obey Jesus? I prefer to follow Jesus. Since he laid down his life for us we should follow him in preference to anyone else.

Paul regarded the Sabbath as he did other things in the law, as a "shadow of things to come," as we have seen. He further says, "the law having a shadow of good things to come."—Hebrews 10: 1. And when the "good things to come" (the gospel) had arrived, the shadow was no longer observed, but was taken out of the way. Should we follow others and not Jesus and his apostles?

Some say it was Paul's custom also, to go into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day and teach the people. Paul says: "Follow me, even as I have followed Christ." Christ kept the Sabbath Day, and Paul follows right after him and did the same thing.

How Christ and Paul kept the Sabbath Day, you have already seen. They went to teach the Jews.

It appears that failure to keep the Sabbath Day was one of the most frequent charges the Jews brought against Christ. As the law then stood, he laid himself liable to a severe punishment for failing to keep the Sabbath Day. According to some people's idea, he twice laid himself liable to a charge of keeping the first day within eight days after resurrection.

Paul, following right along after him, laid himself liable to the same charge for meeting with his disciples at Troas on the first day of the week "to break bread," to take the sacrament, to preach and worship otherwise. Of course, all who worshiped with him were subject to the same condemnation.

Can they accept all of this or will they accept Paul's statement that the "holy days," "new moons," "the Sabbath," under the law were "taken out of the way" when the "good things to come" had come, and had been finally established, taking the place of the law which was a shadow and could not "make the comers thereunto perfect." (Hebrews 10: 1.)

If Paul followed Christ in teaching the Jews in their synagogue on the Sabbath, did he not also follow him in meeting with, and preaching to the Saints in their place of worship "on the first day of the week"? If not, whom did he follow? The Adventists and Jews, or the teaching of Jesus?

Did Paul and the disciples at Troas keep the first day wilfully or ignorantly? Which? If either wilfully or ignorantly is he a safe leader? If neither wilfully nor ignorantly, then why insist that those who now are in the habit of meeting and worshipping on that day, wilfully or ignorantly keep "the first day"?

What a pity some of our Adventist friends were not there to inform these misguided people that such a great mistake as this was being made, and not allow the whole world to be deceived, and cause a confusion of this kind. "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the Saints." (1 Corinthians 14: 33.)

What a pity our Adventist friends were not there to help the Jews to instruct the Savior and his company, and tell them of their wonderful mistake. If the Jews did inform them of their mistake, neither the Savior nor his disciples heeded it then. Why should we heed it now?

Let us rather follow Jesus and his apostles in preference to anyone else, as Jesus says: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matthew 28: 18) and he is the Son of God.

H. M. TAYLOR.

Thus man is at once a citizen of two countries of very different constitutions. The religious consciousness has generally worked apart from the secular by different categories and with other rubrics. There are everywhere dual characters in which religion is separated by a water-tight compartment from daily life. Their pathetic souls are torn by the conflict between faith and reason, or feel with Jacobi that there is a light in the heart that goes out when we carry it into the head. Among the English it was Hobbes who chiefly set the fashion, so conspicuously followed in England, of keeping religion and rational activities entirely apart, and Newton and scores of more modern English and American thinkers have thus partitioned their souls.—G. Stanley Hall.

TITHING PAYS

[The following interesting account appeared in The Outlook for May 1, 1918, under the title, "The conviction of a skeptic." The author is May Dewhurst. While we might print a large number of incidents in which the exceptional favor of the Lord has been manifested toward those among us who have faithfully observed the law of the church regarding tithes, offerings, and consecration, we are pleased to note that the Lord seems to recognize the principle by whomsoever practiced.—EDITORS.]

A stranger in Geneva, New York, notices first the massive gray-stone Methodist church, which dominates the main street and throws its English Gothic tower skyward with a valiant air. It was built by working people, and so recklessly built that the congregation found itself saddled with a building debt of $82,000, a weekly budget of $230, and an income of less than one hundred dollars. In two years the debt has been cut to $49,000, and the weekly income is nearly $300. The church has more than a thousand members, of whom 350 are "tithers." A tither is a person who sets aside one-tenth of his income for Christian activities. These Geneva Methodist tithers are doing more than pay for their church; they are pioneers in a financial policy which bids fair to spread through Methodism.

When the Centenary Commission of the Methodist Church, the organization which is preparing for the centenary of its Home and Foreign Missions, asked me to go to Geneva to write the history of its tithing and stewardship movement, I was scarcely enthusiastic. I doubted if I would find much of a "story," and, with war-giving and war-saving in mind, I doubted if I would be sympathetic toward what I found.

Nevertheless, I was curious to talk to these people who found it possible to give so much in the face of rising prices, war charities, and added taxes. How did they do it?

My directions led me first to the town's principal shoe store, where I asked for Mr. Cassatt.

"We tithers," he said, proudly, turning to me after waiting on a customer, "don't feel that we begin to give until after we have returned our tenth to the storehouse. I've already paid in $700 on the church debt, and have pledged a thousand more in ten years. By that time I hope to wipe off the $2,500 mortgage on my own home."

I tried him with a mean attack.

"Doesn't your wife ever tell you that you could own your own house sooner if you didn't pay so much on the church?"

"No, she doesn't. She's not that kind," he answered promptly. Humiliated, I went elsewhere to seek understanding.

Mrs. Silver, a young and pretty widow, lives with her four children in a shabby little house, overlooking the big frozen lake. She was introduced to me as one who had just joined the Tithers' Association and wanted to give one tenth of the dollar a day she earned by sowing bags for the near-by flour-mill.

"I guess I can give one bag and trust Him to stretch the other nine," she explained. When I spoke of fuel and clothes, she agreed, smilingly, but said:

"There's always money spent foolishly which could be better spent by the Lord, and it ain't right to rob him of what's his."

I went on down the frosty lake to the home of Mrs. Silver's neighbor, Mrs. Hardy.

"What do I think of tithing?" she repeated, as she brought me into the neat, warm kitchen. "Why, if I didn't tithe I'd be picked as clean as a bird. I've got to tithe to keep goin'."

"But what does your husband say about it?"

"My husband is a drinkin' man, as I guess you've heard. He says I shan't touch a cent of his money, so I take a tenth of what is left after I've paid for food and rent; sometimes it's only five cents, sometimes it's ten, but whatever it is it doesn't belong to me."

When I returned to the church, I found a meeting of a group of ministers from near-by parishes, gathered to learn the technique of putting tithing before their congregations. There were sixteen, most of them young fellows with bluff ways and honest faces. They came from farming communities and had the hard task of persuading the New York farmer that a tenth of his produce did not belong to him. I was amused at the naive way they ran business and religion together, and at first I was genuinely shocked at the familiar way in which they addressed the Deity. Their homely speech seemed blasphemous until I grasped the fact that no disrespect was intended and that they but put into practical expression the philosophy of pantheism.

"A man looks up into Jesus' face and says, 'Lord, I surrender; all to thee I owe.' And the Lord says, 'If you mean business, what are you going to give?'"

"The Lord's no fool. We get our business sense from him, along with every other good thing."

"Why wouldn't the Lord take care of the tither? He knows he gets his money that way to carry on his work. If he owns a tenth of a business, he'll see that it don't suffer."

When they knelt for prayer, I found I liked their "Amen's" and "Yes, Lords," and "Hallelujahs" chiming across the speaker's invocation. It all had a lively sense of intercession and emotional validity.

Later, some of them told of their experiences, especially of the rewards reserved for those who clung to their stewardship.

"You'll never find a tither in the poorhouse," one said, and another, "I'm a parson on six hundred a year; and I found I had to tithe to get out of debt."

One told of a man in Syracuse who tithed regularly when the tenth was only ten dollars a month; he prospered until it grew to a hundred dollars. This looked too big to relinquish, so he gave up the practice. Disaster followed, until he was brought to poverty and humility. He began tithing again, and now he is on his feet financially and spiritually.

"I want you to hear the story of Mrs. Gordan," said one young minister. "She has a masterful, loud-spoken way about her, which made some of us in the church think she ruled the house. I guess this story shows who is master. She told it to me last night after prayer-meeting.

" "Gordan," I says to my husband, "this week you'll have to take your tithe money or go hungry. There's nothing in the house to eat, and there's no money to buy anything."

" "Wife," he says, "I guess we'll go hungry."

" "But, husband, the Lord means you to work, and you can't work if you don't eat."

" "Have we enough to buy bread?" he asks.

" "Yes, there's enough for bread and maybe butter, and there are some potatoes left from that bushel last week, but that's all there is."

" "All right; this week we'll eat bread and butter and potatoes, but we ain't a-goin' to touch the Lord's money."

" 'And just the next day the postman brought us a letter, and in it was five dollars that we had lent two years before and given up for a bad debt.' "

But the best story came from Syracuse, where a manufacturing concern has put the tithe into its articles of incorporation. It is a business for making dish-cloths, and has five directors, four of them brothers; they employ about seventy-five people. There is a clause in their constitution that ten per cent of the profits must go for "Kingdom work" before any dividends are paid. The business prospered, and the directors wanted to expand with new machinery and additional capital. They went to the bank and asked to borrow $25,000. The president of the bank knew the concern, thought it a good proposition, and offered to float their bonds. The bank's lawyer went over the company's books and papers, found the tithing clause in the articles of incorporation, and called a halt. He pointed out that interest on bonds is always a first lien on a company's income; that here there was some other claim ahead of interest, and he advised that the articles of incorporation be amended to strike out this absurd clause before money could be safely loaned.

When the directors learned of this, they held a prayer meeting to decide what they should do. After prayer and hymns a secret vote was taken as to whether the offending clause should be cast forth. "Yes" meant that they would yield to the bank; "No," that they would retain the provision. On counting the votes there were five "Noes" in the ballot box, and the company has gone on with its old machinery and its old capitalization, but doing the biggest business of its experience.

As I took the train for New York I found myself believing the unbelievable. I had not met anyone who wanted to give up tithing. I could not make anyone admit that it was irksome or a hardship. In the past four years, all over the world, sacrifices for patriotism have become commonplaces. But we had grown a long way from the pains and privations of the early Christians. We had forgotten the blood of the martyrs. It might be that their seed was quickening and a new spirit about to appear. Perhaps the indictment of Christianity that many had felt this war to be might yet be quashed and the church return to its old-time leadership through the hard road of sacrifice and self-denial.

BETRAYING OUR CAUSE

Opposing universal military service, The Public of New York, says:

Thousands of our finest young men are renouncing all that life holds dear in order that the next generation and those that follow may live in a world freed from the oppression and brutality of organized and aggressive force. Thousands of mothers all over the land are finding comfort in the faith that defeat of Germany will bring with it defeat for all time of the theories and the institutions that have impelled Germany to plunge the world into this red horror, just as they would have impelled any nation where the minds of men lived under their baneful sway. President Wilson has set the Nation's seal on this faith—a faith holy with the tears of women and the blood of men. It has become a promise and a determination. It involves the defeat of Germany only because the German Government has become the supreme exponent of the statesmanship that relies on force and aggression. British labor would not go on for a single day without this faith, if the war were a struggle between parochial nationalism and nothing more. Pacifist America—pacifist in the sense that the President is pacifist—would not face the stupendous sacrifices that lie ahead of us if we were not sustained by this faith. We are united for the defeat of Germany as the first necessary step in its realization. And looking ahead, the statesmen and the democratic forces of America and England are united for the second step. Given the defeat of Germany and her compulsory acquiescence in a world program, they are determined that this program shall begin with the casting out of the diplomacy that relies on great military establishments which burden the people, stifle democratic aspirations, and in themselves incite to aggression and bellicosity. Premier Lloyd George has said within recent weeks that one of the country's most important war aims would not be achieved if after this war there were need of universal military service. To admit such a need is to admit that the allies are to fail, and the coming peace to be but a truce. Condition universal military service on failure or only partial victory in the present war and all England and America would answer "Aye" to those who urge it with this condition. But condition it on allied victory, and the answer of the allied democracies is that he who proposes it proposes the betrayal of our cause and mocks our dead.

THINGS THAT MONEY CANNOT BUY

[An extract from a discourse by Rabbi Leon Harrison and issued in booklet form by the Temple Israel, Saint Louis, Missouri.—EDITORS.]

It is possible for these very things, unbought and unpurchasable, that must precede large possessions to make their use wise and beneficent. They are open to the poorest. In the divine order of the world, the dearest things are the cheapest. What all men need, all men may have. What material fortune can buy is only material things. The enrichment of the mind, the sovereignty of conscience, the divinest impulses and felicity of the soul are not exposed in the marketplace. We may mention them in the order of the faculties that make up our inner life. Culture is such an acquisition to which there is no royal road, for which there is no payment possible. To acquaint ourselves, as we are told, with the best that has been known and thought in the world, is culture. Its price is humility, industry, persistence, open-mindedness, judgment. Its pleasures outweigh all coarser joys. Its sense of power enlarges the man. Its free play of thought grasps the immediate needs of the times and qualifies the patient student for splendid usefulness.

And in the moral sphere—the higher plane, character—the hardening of impulse into integrity, the mastery of the will, is the ripened fruit of sustained and patient struggle, the reward of many a victory, the final triumph that makes at last the better choice the easier and habitual one. The shadow of character is reputation. And to gain this supreme equipoise of self, is an achievement that is the crown and consummation of a serious and noble life.

No resources can by any forcing process reach these ends or work these mines within the breast of man that must be made our own by patient labor. And may I be permitted to place even above these, the culture of the soul that we call religion. The fountainhead of enthusiasm, the spring of consolation, the secret of strength has ever been religion. And curiously, with perhaps the single exception of Buddha, not one of the great masters of religion has been among the great and wealthy ones of the earth. Even Buddha left his high place and embraced poverty and asceticism ere he felt qualified for his great work. And above all other inspirations and powers that have swept the world with a tidal wave of salutary and cleansing influence, is this august dominion of the soul.

Congregational Singing

Within the past few months there have come to the writer a number of queries and comments, the general burden of which evidences that all over the church attention is being turned to congregational singing as an important feature of our worship. Saints everywhere are asking each other and us, Why is our congregational singing not better? Should we not have more congregational singing than we do?

We may flatter ourselves by believing that this is an animus that is being felt only by ourselves, and that we are sensing an impetus that may place us as a church in the van of musical progress; but not so. The impulse that is urging us forward in this line is also tugging at the heartstrings of humanity all over the Nation. It is the force that is filling men with the desire to sing, and to sing with other men; to impell them to express the song spirit in the mass rather than in the small group. It is the spirit that is permeating the Nation to-day and that is not only the cause, but is rendering possible the growth, of community singing all over the land. It is the hidden spring of comradeship, quickened into action, bringing men into closer relationship. Man is by nature a gregarious animal, and it is a most hopeful sign to see men quitting the solitude that has had so much of sordidness and seek companionship in the universal language of song, their hearts thereby more closely drawn together.

All over the land communities are recognizing the great value of the singing of the masses, and many a community is enjoying its regular weekly "sing" under a public song leader. The Government is awake to its importance and is fast supplying all the cantonments, training camps, billets, and even the divisions in the field and at the front, with song-leaders, whose work is to cultivate the song spirit among the troops and provide for its proper expression.

But if community and nation are both mindful of the need of song in the congregated mass, and are supplying such need, why should not the church be equally alert to answer the call? Particularly, why should not this church be foremost in providing for the proper expression of this song spirit in our congregations? Should not our warfare be as much cheered by song as the warfare that is waged in daily life, or upon the fields of carnage?

Congregational singing is of far more importance than we have hitherto believed. We have thought that it was merely a routine of our service, to be entered into with no special concern and to be conducted with no particular effort. We have not thought that it had any important bearing upon the spiritual welfare of our service and have allowed it to go poorly, or well, or indifferently, as chance or "luck" might order.

Good congregational singing is more necessary to the spiritual welfare of a service than we can fully understand. We have seen services where the congregation was actually brought into spiritual union with God and wherein he who delivered the spoken message was given his measure of divine unction by the songs that welled up from the hearts of the congregation. Again, we have seen services where the spiritual grace of both speaker and hearers was banished by the depressing character of the congregational singing. It is exceedingly hard for a sensitive man, whose soul is responsive to concord or discord (and God's servants should all be so) to surmount the chilling influence of indifferent congregational singing.

The branches of this church should see to it that the part the congregation plays in the song services of the church should be well done. No branch should rest content until its congregational singing is so excellent that the true spirit of worship is reflected and induced through the spirit of song; until the comradeship of gospel ties is increased and cemented more firmly thereby; until both speaker and hearer receive the inspiration that the song spirit may give; and until our congregational singing, like the candle set in a candlestick, shall shed its light upon all "in the house" and thus glorify the name of God. A chorister should be selected who will not be merely a perfunctory leader of a few overworked hymns, but who will develop the branch by practicing with the members until their work is up to a proper standard. Old hymns that have been droned through for years should be brought up to correct time and expression. New hymns, and hymns that have been seldom used, should be practiced until the stock of hymns available is both varied and large. How pitiful it is to see a congregation whose resources of hymns are limited to a dozen or so old time-honored numbers that have been overworked so badly that they no longer carry their charm and interest. This chorister should be one who will push his work: not let it drag him along lines of least resistance. He should rally the musical interests of the branch, make them understand the burden and responsibility upon them; enlist them in a consistent, continuous effort to develop along lines of progress that will result in a permanent improvement in the work of the congregation.

The burden of developing the congregational singing of any branch must primarily rest upon the chorister and, if such development is needed, he must bestir himself to secure it. He should seek the cooperation of the branch officers and arrange that necessary opportunities for practice are found. The claim will probably be made in some branches that because of the multiplicity of meetings, such opportunities cannot be found. But they can be found if sought. Some branches have, with gratifying results, instituted a song service of fifteen to thirty minutes preceding the evening preaching service. Others have found that a like time after a prayer service was both convenient and practical. But these opportunities may be found for the seeking; and practice had in them, if persisted in for a year or so, will bring results really worth while.

The chorister who is intent upon the advancement of the singing powers of his branch (and no branch should permit its chorister to be indifferent in this regard) should insist that the supply of hymn books is adequate to the needs of the congregation; that they are properly distributed throughout the congregation and that they are really used. He should see to it that the hymns are practiced in the proper tempos and with the proper spirit. And, most important of all, his efforts should be to thoroughly awaken in the Saints the true spirit of song and to encourage its interpretation; for therein may they be truly said to "sing with the spirit."

Too often choristers and branch officers fail to realize that the singing of the congregation is of first importance. In many places it has erroneously been assumed that the business of the chorister is to train the choir to sing the anthems. This is but part of his work. Anthems are good and desirable. But better a branch with hearty congregational singing than one where the music work is centered around the weekly anthem, the congregation singing with indifference.

Our church work is peculiar in that it deals not only with the individual as a unit, but with the group of individuals constituting the congregation. We must not neglect the things that concern the spiritual welfare and happiness of our people in their assemblies.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Inappropriate Music in Church Services

[Brother James A. Morrison, of Kincardine, Owen Sound, sends us the following, clipped from the Christian Guardian. It contains some pertinent thoughts that some of our choristers might bear in mind.—A. H. M.]

For many years, writes Reverend S. D. Chown, general superintendent of the Methodist Church, to The Guardian, I have had a burden upon my soul for which I now seek relief in writing you this letter. I have waited long in vain for others better qualified than I to assume the task which I here and now essay.

So much money is spent upon choir music in our Methodist churches that, if it were producing its appropriate results, hundreds of souls should be converted to God each year, and the spiritual life of our people notably deepened and enriched. It is surely not irrational to suppose that the purpose of choir music is to spiritualize the public services of the sanctuary; but it is one of the curious commentaries on the situation that the churches which spend most money on music as a rule secure the least results in the quickening of the spiritual life of the congregation.

The failure to get appropriate returns for the money invested, however, though it is a bad business proposition, is the least evil in this connection.

How often a faithful minister spends the greater part of a week in brain sweat, putting his very lifeblood into the preparation of a message to win souls to Christ. In a profoundly prayerful spirit he carries his message to the pulpit, and, having delivered his soul with unction from above, sits down, still praying that arrows of conviction may reach the hearts of the people. But in a moment there bursts into the subdued atmosphere a solo, a duet, a quartet, or chorus so foreign to the nature of the purpose of the service hitherto that the effect of his week's work is in a moment fatally weakened, if it is not nullified, in respect to many of his hearers.

Will you therefore kindly permit me to make some good suggestions, born of my experience in the pastorate, which I hope, will be accepted and helpful? In successive pastorates it was my custom to have the choirmaster come to my house previously to the Friday evening practice, when we could go over together the services for the coming Sunday. I gave him my subjects, sometimes the manner of the treatment I proposed, and told him what I wanted the sermon to do. We discussed together what music would be appropriate, and sought to produce a service which would be at once artistic and spiritual unity. I may say that I always found my choirmasters more than willing to cooperate with me in this way, and I feel sure that if our ministers would tactfully approach the leaders of their choirs, with very few exceptions they would heartily reciprocate the confidence, and put themselves to considerable inconvenience to work out the best results. In my judgment a service so arranged has the maximum both of attraction and usefulness for the majority of the people.

I may say that while I have always highly valued the artistic music, yet as a Christian minister I have never felt at liberty to permit it to dominate or destroy the spiritual worth and purpose of a service. Singing for the sake of tone production simply might as well be in Choctaw as in English. Clear articulation is essential to intelligent worship. Without this there cannot be spiritual edification. No amount of aesthetic pleasure can satisfy the hunger of our higher nature.

I would further suggest that the contributions of the choir should precede the sermon unless a peculiarly fitting selection, mutually agreed upon by the pastor and choir-leader, and having a culminating effect in respect to the great purpose of the whole service, be rendered after the preacher has spoken.

With a great desire in my heart that there should be no spiritual wastage in our services, these suggestions are humbly submitted.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Parting Word

Owing to circumstances over which I had no control, I answered the call of the business world the first of January, this year, and literally have had to drop all of my Woman's Auxiliary work, since then.

I found my year of service as president a profitable and enjoyable one, a year of education. I gave to it my best thought and effort. The vision of the work as it opened to me was wonderful indeed, and I wish to thank all of the helpers all over the church who contributed to its success. Most of all I am grateful for the directing hand of the Master, which I felt was with me all through the year, giving me inspiration and strength for its duties.

I had many plans for making the convention programs real success, but the serious illness of my mother during our sessions, and her death just as the conference closed, stunned me so that I could think of little else, and many things were forgotten or pushed aside that might have helped us. I have lost a great inspiration for good work, in the death of my mother, for she was always a source of strength to me.

I am hoping now at the beginning of the new year, that all our workers will lend their support and help to the new officers that have been chosen to carry on the work this year, in order that we may have a successful growth—a period in which great strides can be made—and satisfactory advances toward the goal be effected.

Ever praying for the onward progress of the work in all its departments, I am, a worker still among you,

MRS. LULA M. SANDY.

Are you good for anything to yourself? Can you be happy alone?

A Reunion Suggestion

Conference is over, and we pick up our work for the reunions of the church with an added zest, hoping to be helpful to the sisterhood of the church.

There are some of us who up to now have felt, and rightly so, that our church work was the first consideration, after that, other things. We are beginning to feel now, however, that for the time being, at least, work for humanity should be placed first, that we might follow the injunction of our Lord, "Go, and do thou likewise."

In Luke 10: 25-37 we are told that we must do two things in order to gain eternal life: "Love the Lord . . . and thy neighbor as thyself." To love and worship the Lord is not enough; we must do the other also.

Recount the deeds of the Samaritan which entitled him to be called truly a "neighbor." He went near to the stranger needing help; he bound up his wounds, pouring in healing oil; he conveyed him on his own beast to the inn; took care of him; nursed him through the night; the next morning he gave money to the innkeeper to pay for the stranger's comfort until such time as he could care for himself!

Our great work in the war just now is very similar; we must follow the Lord's injunction, "Go and do thou likewise;" we must be the good Samaritans. The Red Cross gives us the largest opportunity for such direct service, and each of us should diligently seek to learn the way of largest service. Hence, may not the sisters spend every afternoon of our reunion time in active Red Cross work? The use of a large tent could be secured for the purpose, and those in charge of Red Cross work would supply instructors and materials for work.

And then, how we could work! And while our hands are busy, we could be talking over the problems of the Auxiliary work, the relief and service, educational, the young woman's, or the home and child welfare departments! Any part upon which help is needed could be discussed under capable leaders, and found to be more profitable than a set program, besides the sisters will be serving in the largest sense.

There is not a sister in the entire church, no matter how poor or how unskilled, but can assist in Red Cross work in some way—either directly or indirectly. She may wash dishes for another sister who is skilled in knitting or sewing, so that the latter may have time to do the actual work; or she may care for the children of another, or some sick person, that the usual caretaker may be released for service. What matters it what we do, only so we serve to the best of our ability?

Cast about you and make an inventory of your abilities and your time, remembering that the Lord requires of us only what we are able to do; but let us be very, very sure we are really willing and ready to do that much!

Are we spending our time wisely, as it is? Is all our time and strength spent on our own housework? Have we set up idols there to which we unconsciously bow down? Think how our men are sacrificing the comforts of home and all its niceties of appointment, cheerfully and ungrudgingly! Can we not make similar sacrifices, looking upon our house-keeping labors in that same light of human necessity, and thus "boil it down," eliminating much that is superficial and unnecessary, and spend the time so saved in labor direct for our own boys, and the "stranger"—who is, after all, our "neighbor"?

Every individual can serve her country in this hour of need; the Red Cross worker who comes among you can tell how you may help, whether you live in town, or in out-of-the-way farm homes.

This is but a sketch of a part of our plans for reunion work this fall. Details will be furnished soon. Meanwhile we shall appreciate receiving suggestions, ideas, and constructive criticisms. What difficulties do you anticipate? How may we help you?

MRS. WILLIAM MADISON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1015 West Maple Street.

"You Lucky Little Woman!"

"Why, you lucky little woman!"

At the remark, the slight figure in the faded dress raised her head in apparent surprise, a question fitting across her grey eyes.

The expert worker from the Government who had just addressed the assembled women of a school neighborhood concerning their duty to the Nation in this hour of great peril and need, took the hand of the little woman before her, with gentle deference and sisterly comradeship, as she repeated:

"Yes, I mean it! You lucky little woman! Here you come to me and tell me you are grieving because you cannot do more for your country. You cannot go out and work in the Red Cross shops; you cannot plant wide areas of war garden; you cannot train as a nurse, and go to France; you cannot act as canteen worker, or even be at the trains to help serve hot coffee to the boys in khaki as they pass through your home town! And you are sad at heart, and discouraged, because all this is denied you, denied you, for the reason that you have five small children at home, who need your whole time and service! I say, 'lucky little woman!' What more patriotic duty can you perform for your country, than to bear, and rear, five stanch little American citizens? Nothing could be of greater service, nothing is more vital and necessary, nothing is recognized as of greater importance than just this work you are doing! Why, to nourish and feed, and to inspire with right purposes and clear vision, to instill ideals of justice and righteousness, to train in loyalty, devotion, and high principles of truth and courage—five splendid American units is a task worthy of the most noble patriot living! In fact, it is a task which can only be performed by our fine, intelligent, American motherhood!"

Two Views

[We present two views of a subject which thoughtful mothers must have considered many times. Give both a careful reading, and let us hear your conclusions.—A. A.]

THE CHAPERON

According to Webster, the chaperon is one who attends a lady in public places as a guide and protector.

The services of a chaperon should also be employed in gatherings of young people. In many parts of America, the office of a chaperon is almost unknown, and in no part does she occupy the perfectly-defined position that she holds in Europe. In the older countries arduous indeed are her duties; even in some countries where many other things fill us with disgust the ideals in regard to the social privileges of the young people are superior, in many ways, to the lax standards of propriety in our own country. Respectable young ladies in these European countries do not entertain young men alone, nor do they go riding, walking, or to places of amusement, or even to church, unattended by a chaperon. Not so in our country, where even the most casual observer may see the almost criminal leniency of parents in regard to this mingling of the young.

No one can attain his or her highest efficiency in life if the social side of his nature is undeveloped or neglected.

Young people with the consent of their parents, and the supervision of a matured and congenial friend should occasionally meet and have their games and good times together. On occasions they should meet as friends in pleasant social intercourse. Not isolation, but a sane education in regard to social relations and moral obligations will be the safeguard of the virtue and the honor of our young people.

There should invariably be some one of responsible qualities and agreeable manners to superintend all gatherings of the young. Parents and teachers, attention! It is your duty to bring before our young folks the necessity of properly supervised association between the sexes.

The social activities which may be made attractive to your young folks are many and varied. Their association together should not be prohibited, but encouraged in the right way. It should be safe and wholesome at all times. Plain, simple gatherings should be planned, for either few or many, with impromptu or prepared programs. Fishing parties, picnics, rowing, golfing, are all interesting to active, normal, youth, and under proper chaperonage and guidance should be provided often enough to stimulate and develop the social life of the young people. The chaperon chosen for such work should not be of the frivolous, light-minded type, even though she may be a married woman, but rather a woman of sound judgment, with tact, and ingenuity, and a clear vision both of dangers and of preventives. She should be able to supervise the games, indicate the proprieties, and in every way keep the minds of the young people pure and wholesome and their actions clean and unselfish, instilling into their minds the maxim, "Good company and good conversation are the sinews of virtue."

Of course we must take it for granted that our young people wish to conduct themselves properly on all occasions, but they must be trained to see that the presence of the chaperon is an official sign that proprieties are being observed. The girls should desire this for the protection of their own good names, and the boys should demand it for the protection of the girls they admire and respect.

The chaperon should mix agreeably the different elements of the company, smooth out annoyances, solve difficulties, and avoid perplexing or embarrassing situations. She should be resourceful, and plan beforehand many pleasant diversions for the entertainment of her charges. She is the court of appeal should any debatable question arise, and her decision in the matter should be regarded as final. She should fix the time of arrival or departure, and should be careful that her requests are observed with respect.

It may be readily seen that the duties of a chaperon are many and often trying, but when those under her charge bear in mind the obligations they are under to her, it will make her position much easier.

There are many prejudices current concerning the idea of chaperonage in this freedom-loving Nation, and owing to this, the position of a chaperon is quite generally ignored. Often this prejudice is merely an opinion formed without due examination or contemplation, and experience later of a bitter nature, may prove its error. Prejudice possesses the power of apparently turning truth into wrong, and it is its nature to oppose the turning of light upon itself. It is the offspring of ignorance and, even though it invariably results in mischief and injury, it will not die until truth and light shall destroy darkness and error.

Prejudice against the chaperon in this country must be overcome, for the evil which has grown from our too great laxity is everywhere apparent. The many protests which are arising all over this country against the free way in which our girls are picking up acquaintances with the soldiers and being allowed to come and go without proper environment thrown about them, are evidences that it is time we should call a halt, and educate away the prevalent prejudices against the proper guarding of our girls and boys. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again," although it may be trampled under the foot for a time, and we hope to see the truth about our responsibility to the young arise again in such force that no such disaster shall befall them in the future as has blotted the past. A true gentleman will then be careful to see that a young lady he admires shall be protected in every way, and shall welcome the presence of a chaperon for that purpose. Our girls will not then look with favor upon any boy who is lax in this particular. Our standards will rise in every way accordingly.

It is natural and right that emotions of love should spring up in the hearts of young people in the mating time of their lives, but these should be guided in pure channels by the intelligent sympathy and understanding of one who is exercising this kingliest and queenliest of functions, that of chaperonage. Nice discrimination and exact courtesy will become a rule, and we will no longer find boys treating girls with rudeness and disrespect, nor girls permitting or inviting liberties the ultimate harm of which they do not understand. Parents and teachers should no longer ignore the proper education of the young along these lines, that no wall of modesty or safety shall be broken down unwittingly. Standards should be set up, of so high and idealistic a nature, that our young people shall admire and aspire to reach them. Conversation should be wholesome, intelligent, and sensible; habits of courtesy and self-respect should be instilled into the young people by example and precept. Girls should be taught that upon their own moral integrity and purity of thought and action depend, in large measure, that of their boy friends, and that even the future race will feel the imprint of their characters. Boys should learn that men who have contributed to the progress and uplift of the race are those who respected and protected womanhood in every phase, and who, through thrift and industry, have been able to render definite service to their fellows along lines of honor and clean living.

Let us do, not only our "bit," but our utmost to bring about a better social condition among the young. Let us uphold the banner of purity and righteousness, which will one day wave over the hosts of victory. The future is filled with hope and promise in the highest development of individual character.

MINNIE HARRING.

WISE CHAPERONAGE

I wonder how many mothers have ever been chaperons to a houseful of lovely, fun-loving girls? To those who have, no doubt, there has come the same impressions which often came to me in the days when I bore that responsibility.

In these days when we hear talk of the "honor system," and of "student control" in our educational institutions, we often wonder whether we have always adopted the best methods in our attempt to protect and help our girls.

In many years of contact with young people, I have come to the conclusion that many of them are hungry for human sympathy, a complete understanding of the problems and temptations of their lives. I fully realize that the same method may not be used with any two young people; that some who have been taught deceit by being continually suspected, others who lack self-confidence or self-control, and many kindred weaknesses must be studied, and the methods of dealing with them may have to be changed often.

In many homes the young people—and this is especially true of girls—are guarded and watched so closely, that a continual suspicion seems to exist in regard to every movement, when they are out of the parents' sight. In other cases, there is the other extreme, a laxity of control and seeming indifference with the remark so prevalent, "I never fear but that my children will get along all right! They are able to take care of themselves!" If the child has been taught the facts of life as he should be, and is prepared to meet temptation when it comes, without defeat, this may be a sane conclusion; but, alas, too many have been turned adrift without proper chart or compass! In these days, when the military uniform seems to furnish an attraction, one often wonders at the pitiful sights seen on our city streets, and the thought comes, "Where are the mothers of our American girls?"

I have found, with almost no exception, that boys and girls respond to a sympathetic request for better things. Teach them what they should know; appeal to their love for strong physiques, for ability to make good homes in the future, to be fit fathers and mothers to the coming generations; then give them a reasonable freedom! God told men the results of sin—then made them free moral agents.

Do not chaperon too closely!

CHARLOTTE DRYDEN.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From the New Zealand Mission

Brother Savage and I thought that news from this mission might be of interest to you, so we have decided to write an account of our labors in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Since arriving in Auckland, New Zealand, we have been kept very busy, having decided to rent a little shop with dwelling attached where we could both make our home with our families, also exhibit church literature. This shop has been the biggest boon that I have come across in connection with the church. I'll tell you why. The Mormons have their church about two hundred yards from it and have a sign over the door. "Come and hear the Mormon point of view." Since we have come here and they have learned of our existence they have painted the sign out. We have a notice in our window: "We are not Mormons, and denounce the doctrines of polygamy, Adam-god, blood atonement, etc." Hundreds of people stop to read our books in the window. We have Brother Elbert A. Smith's "Open letter to the Clergy," opened right out so that it can be read from beginning to end, and many stop and read it right through. We have also arranged against the window, the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, 1844 Times and Seasons, page 423, opened at the place where Hyrum Brown was cut off from the church three months before the death of Joseph Smith, for preaching polygamy, Joseph, and Hyrum Smith signing this statement. We also have the 1852 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. Then we have our modern Doctrine and Covenants, also the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, 1908, all opened at the marriage covenant. Also a footnote showing Hyrum Smith's denunciation of polygamy. These show that polygamy was not preached till 1852.

Of course we have other church literature and books, such as True Succession in Church Presidency, Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed, and others.

It would surprise you the number of people that read those books. The Mormons pay a daily visit to our window to see if there are any fresh books or notices. So much for the work of the shop.

Now for our personal labors, we have been tracting from house to house keeping a record of each house that accepts or rejects our tracts, so that we can call on them at regular intervals. We have also been holding street services, and if crowds denote success, then we have been truly blessed, and when delivering tracts at these meetings it is surprising. I have been nearly crushed on a couple of occasions, would have been if it had not been for Brother Savage's stalwart form at my side. Their hands were outstretched everywhere.

Sunday, March 23, we attended the Mormon street service. At the close, Brother Savage stepped forward at the invitation to ask questions, and when he began to apply questions regarding polygamy, they stated that it was a dead issue with them since 1890. Then a few moments after, when Brother Savage had questioned them further, they stood up boldly defending it. But when the books were brought out to show up its fallacy, they left. We then made alternative speeches regarding the above.

On Wednesday evening we spoke from the same spot where they held their street service, having previously announced this meeting, "Exposing Mormonism" but they did not turn out to defend themselves. We had a good meeting. Again on Sunday, the 31st, we attended their open-air meeting, their mission president being present. At the close of this meeting Brother Savage was again in prominence, and when the president was asked a question he evaded it so I stepped into the ring, and asked him did he believe in polygamy as a principle. He answered that they did not preach it. I stated that he had not answered my question, and again asked him, did he believe in polygamy, but he would not answer me. So I then challenged him to prove the abominable doctrines that his church had heaped upon the head of an innocent man (Joseph Smith). He answered, "I absolutely refuse to debate." So I set forth to denounce their teachings, Brother Savage following on in turn. They withdrew while Brother Savage showed why they would not answer our questions.

When I referred to their secret oaths, two of their elders who had been on the outskirts of the crowd came boldly forth and they said they defied me to give proof, so I simply said, Do you not believe in them? He would not answer, so I read them out for him, and then I said, now will you just open your shirt bosom and let these people see whether you believe in these things or not, and let them see if you have not the garments on in connection with the oaths? I said I was open for examination. He then said, "I refuse to make public the sacred things of the church." After he had admitted this, Brother Savage explained why he had asked the president of the mission if they would receive as high a glory without obeying the so-called celestial law of plural marriage, as they would if they obeyed it. When asked why they did not accept the Doctrine and Covenants published in the lifetime of Joseph, the Martyr, they answered, "It is too old." This brought a roar of laughter. Finally the evidence being too solid they left, being counted out by the crowd.

We at least have been able to defend an innocent man, and have cleared his name in the sight of many people who had been led to believe that polygamy, Adam-god, blood atonement, etc., were taught by Joseph Smith.

Many people who have been caught in the meshes of Mormonism have come to us to find out the truth, and our little shop has many a visit of this kind. There are a good many Mormons in this place and we have no members, only having been here but a few weeks, but we look forward to good results, and pray that God will give us the increase.

May God bless his work that the honest in heart may be gathered into the fold, and Zion redeemed, is the prayer of Your brother in Christ,

A. V. ROBINSON.

Lamoni Items

College is out, the students have scattered to the four winds and will proceed to put into operation some of the many ideas they have developed in their past year's experience. A few remain, however, including some from the Hawaiian Islands. The summer term of the wireless school opened on the 6th with only a fair attendance. With so many opportunites for employment at attractive remuneration, it is only the far-seeing lads who have looked into the future and seen the possibilities for a much more useful future in withdrawing from this employment for a short season that they might be worth much more in the future. And the rest of us aren't much different, are we?

We were all much pleased with the baccalaureate sermon by Brother Walter W. Smith to the graduating class of Grace-land on May 28, and I noted one of the HERALD editors mourning because in the grind of post conference duties cleaning up their desks they hadn't arranged to have it reported. Well, perhaps Brother Walter can preach it again sometime and let us all have a chance to read it.

About this time the presiding Bishopric were here, meeting on the Board of Publication and looking after numerous other interests. Brother Keir preached on Sunday evening, the 28th. As he looked over the audience he said: "Since most of you folks here are farmers, you will understand—" Just how he could tell, we don't know, but as a matter of fact, there were perhaps less than a dozen men in the big audience at present engaged in the art of farming. Perhaps it was because most of the rest of us have been favored in the past with pastoral experiences and even to-day prefer the smell of newmown hay to the perfume afforded us by some cities. But it's all right, Brother Keir, we are strong on gardens and hens. One of our sisters who is a farmer's wife says: "We are boarding ourselves and feeding the world." It was a most practical sermon and unanimously approved by the big audience. You'll find Lamoni Stake to be deeply driven and worth tying to.

Then Brother Fred M. blew in and delivered his masterful commencement address to the graduating class. It was on war and education and we are informed it will appear in the HERALD in the near future. You should read it.

There is to be quite an exodus of our best workers in the near future.

Brother Elbert A. Smith will remove to Independence to enter more actively into the work of the First Presidency.

Brother C. I. Carpenter is wondering where he ever kept so much equipment in the church recorder's work, for he is now trying to pack it for shipment to Independence where they will reside.

Brother Richard J. Lambert is severing the ties which have bound him to so many activities in the community for years and will take his family to the central place, where he takes charge of the Ensign Office.

Brother Frederick B. Blair has arranged it so Harold C. Burgess will have charge of the electric light plant while he leaves to take charge of the bishopric work of the Kansas City Stake. For the present his family will remain in Lamoni.

It seems too bad to lose all these valuable workers, which includes their families, but if their experiences among us have qualified them for better service, work which is in demand elsewhere, we shall join in wishing them continued success in their new fields. As Brother Elbert tried to console us in a recent meeting, when one goes, several come in. He read a considerable list of names which included a goodly number of men prominent in church work, who had moved into Lamoni from other points in the past ten years. The spirit of "I'll go where you want me to go," is the one which will redeem Zion, and we are glad to see it so prominent among our people everywhere.

The positions of branch clerk and recorder, a few of the many held by Brother and Sister C. I. Carpenter, were filled by the election of Miss Amy Vredenburg, secretary of the stake presidency's office. We consider this a good move and one worthy of consideration in other places. It gives extensive clerical work to one in a position to give the necessary time to it and where the benefits of consultation are most conveniently available. As the vote of thanks was rendered to them for past faithful services, a unanimous rising vote was taken, and while on our feet, Brother Hopkins, acting stake president, suggested we sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

We do, but are not sure this is one for us. DELBERT.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

The First Presidency has received the resignation of Elder Samuel Twombly as president of the Northeastern Kansas District because of his appointment to another field of labor, and notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder G. E. Harrington as president of said district until the convening of the next district conference. Those concerned please take notice. We trust that Brother Harrington will receive the full support of the membership and officers of the district.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of the Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: Having again been appointed to act as your servant another conference year, I will, all being well, and if God wills, be in the field of labor just as soon as Sister Christensen recovers sufficiently for me to leave home.

And I beg for a congenial cooperation with conference appointees and local officers in the district. Let me know as to what extent you can and will help us in the field of labor, new openings, etc., and I earnestly request all branch presidents to send me their quarterly reports regularly, and see that they are mailed not later than June 25, September 25, December 25, and March 25.

And as bishop's agent, I am always ready to give due credit and receipts for tithing, freewill offerings, and oblations, in large or small amounts, also assist you in taking inventories of your earthly possessions. All your money should be sent to me by bank draft or express money orders, as they can be collected at most any given point. All remittances and correspondence should be sent to my field address, Haileyville, Oklahoma. Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 7.

Attention Saints of Central Oklahoma District: I heard a preacher make the statement that a kicking horse found it necessary to stop pulling so that he could kick, and so I will not do any kicking against the Saints of the Central Oklahoma District, but just ask their cooperation in the year's work that is ahead of us. Cooperation and coordination is what we heard at the General Conference and General Conventions at Independence, about every session and that is a good slogan to tie to and we should put it into practice, if we get any good from it, so I ask your help and will try and render a faithful service in return. My visits to the branches as president of the district the present year will be shorter but I will try to make them just as often. This will be done so that I can reach the isolated ones. I want to visit as many as possible and where I cannot come I will try and get some one else to come. I will come whether there is an opportunity to preach or not. It is a very important part of the Lord's work to take care of the membership.

It is necessary that all the priesthood be active, and if you have concluded that you are not a gifted public speaker that will not be an excuse for idleness. You can be a patient student of the Scriptures and of the history and doctrine of the church and as a result enlighten the minds of your neighbors and take a message of good cheer to the homes of the Saints, wherever you have an opportunity to visit them. I will send a report blank to each member of the priesthood a short time before the district conference and expect a report of what has been done.

I want a letter from each isolated member, or family, in the district so that I will know where you are. Write to my mission address, Skiatook, Oklahoma.

Your brother in gospel work,

EDWARD RANNIE.

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, May 18, 1918.

Notice of Appointment, District Choristers

To Whom Concerned: The following have been recommended by their several districts for appointment as district choristers, and the recommendations are hereby approved, and the appointments published, with the approval of the First Presidency.

Brother W. T. Spanswick, 1209 Fairmont Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa, as chorister of the Pottawattamie District, vice Sister Audentia Anderson, resigned.

Sisters Ollie Derry, Logan, Iowa, and Arthur Lane, Pisgah, Iowa, associate choristers of the Little Sioux District, vice Brother Fred Fry, resigned.

We urge for these now entering into office the hearty support of the musical forces of these districts, wherever they shall labor, and also express our thanks to the retiring officers for their labors in the past. Respectfully,

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Chorister.
By ARTHUR H. MILLS, General Secretary.

Married

BATY-LENTON.—At the home of her brother-in-law, 12 Daisy Avenue, Plymouth Grove, Manchester, England, Sister Mary Lenton and Patriarch James Baty were united in marriage by Bishop R. May, assisted by High Priest W. R. Armstrong, on the afternoon of March 30, 1918. After the ceremony the company was entertained at tea by the bride's sister.

MATHER-BATY.—At 12 Daisy Avenue, Plymouth Grove, Manchester, England, Sister Elizabeth Ellen Baty and Brother Samuel Frederick Mather were united in marriage by High Priest W. R. Armstrong, assisted by Patriarch James Baty. After the ceremony the company was entertained at dinner by Sister W. R. Armstrong. The couple then left for Llandudno, North Wales.

Our Departed Ones

EPPELRY.—Eli Epperly died April 25, 1918, at his home in Duncan Township, Mercer County, Illinois. He was 77 years old and had been a member of the church since March 4, 1863. Funeral in charge of David Holmes, in the Buffalo Prairie church. Sermon by W. E. Peak.

STEVENS.—Ralph Ammon Stevens, son of Herbert and Cassie Stevens, born April 28, 1916, blessed September 9, 1917, by J. W. Metcalf, and died March 31, 1918, at his home near Green, Kansas. Little Ralph wandered into the hog lot and received wounds from being attacked by the hogs, which caused his death. Sermon by J. W. Metcalf.

KAHLER.—Joseph L. Kahler, born at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, August 26, 1834. Died at Holden Home for the aged, April 9, 1918. Baptized May 1, 1870, by E. C. Briggs. Married Louisa McMasters. To this union were born 7 children. Three sons, 2 daughters, and 2 sisters are left to mourn. Funeral from the Saints' church at Holden, Missouri; sermon by G. W. Beebe, assisted by C. F. Scarcliff. Interment in Fairview Cemetery.

RUSS.—Flora J. Russ, born at Cleveland, Ohio, July 13, 1845. Baptized at Cadillac, Michigan, in 1911. On March 18, 1916, she entered the Saints' Home at Kirtland, Ohio. Removed to the Holden Home for the aged April 2, 1918, where she died on April 29, 1918. Leaves 3 children to mourn. She was spoken of as an exemplary woman in acts of kindness toward her neighbors and friends. Funeral sermon by C. J. Hunt, D. J. Krahl assisting. Interment in Fairview Cemetery.

PARKER.—Jesse Parker was born in Edgar County, Illinois, October 15, 1885, died April 24, 1918. Baptized November 1, 1914, by J. H. Baker. Married Miss Ella Bishop October 15, 1907. To this union were born 4 children, 3 boys and one girl. One child preceded him in death. Leaves wife, 3 children, father, mother, four brothers and four sisters to mourn his loss. Died near his home near Beaver, Oklahoma. Death caused by heart failure. Was a good man, well respected by all. Sermon by Elder Niles of the Christian Church. Interment in Beaver Cemetery.

ANWAY.—Mary Angeline Scott was born March 29, 1842, in the State of New York. Married William H. Riddle in 1859. To this union were born 2 children. Married Erastus W. Anway in 1866, who died October 8, 1912, at Summit, Oklahoma. To this union were born 9 children. Died March 19, 1918, at the home of her daughter Julia Prock. She leaves to mourn her death, 3 daughters, and 4 sons: Mrs. Ella Gernhart, of Sioux City; Mrs. Julia Prock, of Des Moines; Mrs. Carrie McClain, of Lakin, Kansas; Frank, Rhodes, Iowa; Charles, of Lamoni; George, of Joes, Colorado; and Alma, adopted son, of Des Moines, Iowa.

SCOTT.—Lulu May Bass was born at Lawrence, Michigan, February 10, 1863. Removed with her parents to Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1884. Baptized at Lawrence, Michigan, July 1, 1883, by Columbus Scott. Married Carter Scott at Lamoni, Iowa, March 29, 1885. To this union were born 3 children, the oldest of them died in infancy. Veta, the wife of Julian Butterworth, of Laramie, Wyoming, and Erald, of Davis City, Iowa, remain. She died at Davis City, Iowa, April 8, 1918. Funeral sermon by Heman C. Smith. The large concourse of people in attendance testified of the universal love in which she was held by those within and without the church.

BUTCHER.—Eliza Butcher died at her home in Belvidere, Illinois, after a protracted illness, on the morning of April 12, 1918. Her maiden name was Marshall, and she was born in Orsett, Essex, England, September 26, 1851. Married Joseph Butcher in 1860 and they migrated to America in 1879. Leaves husband, one daughter, 2 granddaughters, one sister, and 5 brothers. Funeral address by F. M. Cooper, at the home. A faithful member of the church for many years; her life was replete with all of her Christian virtues, and was dominated with patience and loving kindness toward all of her friends and associates.

SPENCER.—Elijah Spencer was born in Pennsylvania, January 10, 1848, and died at Mount Ayr, Iowa, April 22, 1918. Came to Iowa in 1867 with his mother and stepfather, James McDiffit and wife, Davis City, Iowa. Married Henrietta DeVoss in 1870, and 9 children were born to them, who, with his wife, survive. Baptized by Charles Jones, at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1872. Buried at Davis City, Iowa, from Saints' church, R. J. Lambert speaking, singing being furnished by quartet and accompanist from Lamoni. His last sickness was of short duration, while at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Glaud R. Turpen, Mount Ayr, Iowa.

A 100 PER CENT CHURCH PAPER CAMPAIGN

"We are contemplating a 100 per cent church paper campaign (at least one church paper in every Latter Day Saint home) in the Fremont District. Do you still allow ten per cent to be applied on Christmas offering? Have you any suggestions for the campaign? Please answer at once as I expect to mail the letters to the schools in a few days."—Ethel I. Skank, Librarian, Henderson, Iowa. We print the sister's card request in full, for it is just the thing on which we have been working as much as we could for the past three months. It is the sort of a campaign that every branch and district should feature. We allow a ten per cent discount to be taken from all new subscriptions received for the church papers, if the sender says it will be used for Christmas offering. We have a number of suggestions to offer, chief of which are that the gospel literature organizations be used whenever possible, and if they have not been formulated, try to get the very best business and executive ability to be had in each community, for it is an important piece of work. We offer to send the lists of subscribers to the church papers to those who will really make use of the information and are authorized to handle such matters. It is information that we do not send out promiscuously. Sample copies will be sent to those who need them, to introduce to new members. We answered Sister Skank by return mail and will try to be prompt in replying to all such matters. Who'll be next for such a campaign? Address the advertising department here till Brother Lambert gets moved and in shape to handle it in Independence.

We ask that those of our readers interested please note that the new address of Brother H. W. Savage and family and A. V. Robinson and family is 418 Queen Street, Auckland, New Zealand.

EDITORS OF AUTUMN LEAVES

Some one calls our attention to the omission of the names of the editors of the Autumn Leaves for the year, in our report of the proceedings of the Board of Publication last week. It was an oversight, and we submit the information that the same arrangement as prevailed last year was continued: Elbert A. Smith and E. D. Moore as editors.

Brother George Elson, of Wayne, Nebraska, desires that the Saints pray that he may recover from the effects of several operations. His condition is such that he is beyond any human help, he believes, and we should remember this brother who has long been a sufferer.

COPIES OF THE COORDINATING COMMITTEE'S REPORT

The new edition of the Sunday school constitutions and by-laws will soon be ready for distribution, and in addition to the usual contents, there will be a copy of the epoch-marking report of the committee on coordination, which was adopted at the recent conventions and conference. It should be the aim of every adult member of the church to become fully conversant with this document, for its effects are far-reaching and will no doubt pave the way for many more changes in our methods of procedure. The work of the districts is not definitely affected as yet, but it will no doubt be brought up and suggestions made for changes in their methods. Be ready to help decide on a satisfactory arrangement. The only change in the Sunday school constitution this year was a provision which allows any district or stake to provide for mass conventions as a standing rule. It is necessary to send a delegate representation to the first convention, at which time they may adopt such standing rule if desired.

MUCH TOURIST TRAVEL IN DECATUR COUNTY

A large number of tourists pass through Lamoni in a year, in fact, according to the official count made last year to determine the advisability of federal aid in road building, this county had the largest percentage of any, of tourist travel. The percentage was 38.8 per cent, according to reports published in the Service Bulletin of the Iowa State Highway Commission of recent date. It is interesting to also note that the average percentage of motor drawn traffic is 86 per cent. Truly we seem to be nearing the horseless age. In Calhoun County the count was made in very bad weather, yet only 32 per cent of the traffic was horse drawn.

Brother Richard Baldwin began a series of preaching services in Columbus, Ohio, on the 12th.

If there are any of our boys at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Georgia, they are requested to write to Jesse V. Johnson, Thirty-first Company, Eighth Battalion, First Replacement Regiment, Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Georgia. He would like to know whether there are any Saints residing at or near that place, if so, please write to him.

SHANGHAI JEW OFFERS £10,000 FOR JERUSALEM HOSPITAL

"A gratifying feature of the meeting [of Jews in Shanghai, China, December 31, 1917] was the announcement that a local coreligionist of international fame, who desired to remain anonymous for the present, had authorized him to write to the leaders of the Zionist movement in London submitting them an offer to build a hospital in Jerusalem at a cost of £10,000, and to procure a suitable site in the best and healthiest quarters of the city and to accept the offer, subject to Palestine being thoroughly restored to the Jews. This announcement was received with intense satisfaction and loud bursts of cheers from the audience. As a result of the meeting, a committee was elected. . . . The Jewish Community of Shanghai has voted to erect 100 cottages at a cost of fifty pounds sterling each, to house 100 Jewish families in Palestine, as its contribution toward the Restoration Fund."—The American Hebrew.

Mrs. J. M. Faulkner, of Allentown, Washington, a sister 68 years of age, is desirous of letting her light shine brightly that others may see her good works. Yet she is afflicted, having suffered a stroke of paralysis over a year ago, and asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health.

LIKES CLARK'S ARCHÆOLOGICAL ARTICLES

The editor of The Spokesman, a trade journal devoted to vehicles, accessories, auto tops and bodies, etc., recently sent us a copy of the April number, published at Cincinnati, Ohio, in which he had taken special notice and given space for an extensive review of the article by Elder C. W. Clark, of Columbus, Ohio, on "The Mound Builder and the Indian." This appeared originally in the Ohio State Archæological and Historical Quarterly and was reproduced in the HERALD last year. In a personal letter Mr. Hutcheson says: "I very much enjoyed the article as Mr. Clark has certainly handled the subject in a masterly and scholarly manner." Brother Clark has written a series of short articles on the Book of Mormon and archæology especially for the Autumn Leaves, and they will likely start late this summer.

WAR AND EDUCATION

(The Graceland College commencement address, delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, May 2, 1918, by President Frederick M. Smith.)

To one alert to the European situation to-day and keenly interested in the part the United States is playing and is destined to play in the great world conflict, the war becomes a subject close to the heart. And the object of the Government in asking that this subject be coupled with that of education in the commencement addresses of this spring is obvious.

As a fit starting point for the address this evening we read the following extract from a schoolmate, now a colonel with the American Expeditionary Forces in France. He says:

It is indeed gratifying to see how seriously our people back home seem to be undertaking to do their part in winning the war. Do they yet realize there is no short cut—no "get-rich-quick" method—that the sacrifices and the elimination of selfishness must be real? It is touching, here in beautiful France to look out over the countryside with its simple, frugal people, and wonderfully cared for farms, to think how near they have been to devastation in a horrible manner, and it is a terrible sight to see, just a little way toward the front, the complete devastation and waste that would overtake this section, and our own country, if the German were able to carry out his will.

What is war? It is the individual fight writ large. Might was right, and to resist the single individual, two or more united. The aggressor calling others to his assistance through mercenary reasons or others, once more compelled the defenders to enlarge their group. Thus groups became involved, one group resisting the encroachments, ravages, plunderings, of another.

THE MOTIVE FOR MAKING WAR

It is but natural that the smaller group, smarting under the defeat by the more powerful one, should develop ideas of right, ethical rights, and from these nations of tribal freedom sprang the ideas of democracy. In the smaller nations subject to over-running by hordes of barbarians, has the idealism of democracy had its richest development, as witness Greece and her resistance of northern invasion.

The numerical enlargement of the contending groups has reached the maximum of proportions in the present war. One can hardly grasp the meaning of the statement that thirty-seven millions of men are under arms on the various battle fronts to-day. But the end seems not yet to the number of nations likely to become involved before peace returns.

What of the ideals of the contending nations? Of Germany it must be said that her ideal seems to be world domination by force of arms with all other nations placed under tribute. Wilhelm II is a bungling Cæsar; with Cæsar's ambition, but lacking his ability and statesmanship. Will Germany accomplish her purpose? The question is not idle, for to-day nearly three fourths of the objective had in view for this time has been accomplished. Will she win the other fourth? The answer is up to America.

Our boys are going to the front. Why? It may be safe to say that nine out of ten go to the front because this country is calling, and they go in response to the call of their country. But not yet, in my opinion, in the hearts of our great American Army has been awakened the ideal for which we are fighting. The men at Washington see it, and no man in the wide world has a clearer vision of the ideals for which this country stands than the magnificent man who is in the chair as our chief executive, President Wilson. I pay tribute to-night not only to him as President of the United States, but as one of the greatest statesmen the world has produced! We do not fully realize that America is at war, or just what it means to be at war, because we have not yet been hard hit; and hard hit we will be if I mistake not the signs of the times. It may be that we need the new birth that will come from being hard against the sore realities of war. As a country at large there has not yet been developed the patriotism we should have in fighting for the ideals that are before the country. But it will come! Latent in the heart of every American is a patriotism unexceeded in any other country, but it is latent in too many instances. It must be aroused, and that patriotism must burn not only beneath the khaki coat, but in the hearts of every man and woman in civilian pursuits.

As a nation we have gone to war several times for selfish and altruistic reasons, but never before have we gone to war for so high an ideal as is that which is directing and guiding our statesmen to-day. Even the statesmen of Great Britain, who are perhaps as world statesmen and politicians unexcelled in intelligence and acumen, have been startlingly pleased and exalted by the fact that this Nation, one of the richest and one of the most powerful nations of the world, has entered the war purely for an ideal. And it has become a bond of friendship between the English-speaking nations that will forever wipe out the bitterness that may have existed as a hang-over from the Revolutionary period. Never again will the great English-speaking nations of the world call each other enemies, let us hope.

We cannot neglect Belgium, for as one of the most active industrial nations of the world, it has for years occupied a position unique among nations because of its helplessness and its small size; but for all that, it has developed a people whose industries are unexcelled in the world. The magnificent spectacle of that little nation throwing all of its man-power before the great war machine rolling ruthlessly over western Europe, and holding it in check, though it meant the sacrifice of its citizens by the thousands, until the allies could make preparation to stop the onward march of that machine, will never in its splendor be surpassed as a military spectacle, and will always challenge the admiration of those who read it.

WHAT WE OWE OUR ALLIES FOR

Great Britain has been the mother of nations; her jurisprudence has gone around the world, and everywhere the flag of Britain waves it is recognized that in the administration of her laws there is a quickness of justice meted out which challenges the admiration of all law students and those who love justice. One of the great characteristics of the British Nation is the excellence and quickness of its jurisprudence. Our own Nation, so far as its laws are concerned, has much for which to thank Great Britain. With perhaps one or two exceptions our State laws are based on the British jurisprudence. She has taught us our law, and even yet we are behind her in the excellence of her great law when seeking for justice.

Italy we might call the mother of religions or the mother of the churches. Whatever we might have to say of the great Catholic religion, which has its home in Rome, we must recognize that because of the universality of that church and its religion, and the large number of churches which have sprung from her either as a protest against her in a religious way, or having been fostered by her, we do look back when reading history to Italy as the mother of churches, though in this thought we do not lose sight of Judea and the Christian religion which sprang therefrom, nor yet lose sight of the fact that in the Roman Empire Christianity found shelter in its early days. Besides this, for Italy as a nation it must be said that everywhere Italy's flag is seen flying, people recognize that beneath its protecting folds the world has had a development in art and literature that in excellence is surpassed nowhere in the world. In the history of art, in all its ramifications, in painting, architecture, sculpture, we are inevitably led back to Rome and to Italy.

France, it may be said, stands as one of the most persistent proponents of liberty; and her national motto to-day is shouted as the battle cry of thousands and thousands of soldiers, stimulating them in their struggles, fighting to the last drop of blood, even though against overwhelming numbers, while the Marseillaise is the battle song of liberty. There is no finer national motto than that of France, "Liberty, equality, and fraternity."

Of America it can be said that in the expansion and development of international law she has been always the earnest advocate of wider freedom and national liberty. While America has not been recognized in the past as being an European power or having influence in the affairs of Europe, or perhaps in the world, yet, if anyone will examine the history of international law, he will see that practically every point which has to do with the freedom of the sea, the free exchange of commerce, the widest expanse of liberty, America has always stood as a factor which could not be denied in her demands for higher international law which have so ruthlessly been swept aside by the Teutonic nations, but which will be eventually reestablished in greater power than ever before. America, then, stands forth with an ideal freer from selfishness than any other nation. And that is as it should be. One of the youngest and most powerful of nations we cannot but expect that in erecting her ideals, she shall pass on beyond the ideals of the nation from which she sprang.

Thus there are allied in the mighty struggles against the great, devastating, ruthless hordes of Huns the nations holding aloft the highest ideals of civilization.

What a bond of fraternity, what a cause for which to fight and upon which to ask the blessing of God!

THE GREAT NEED OF EDUCATION

What is education? It is, in brief, the rational response, reaction, to environment. It is more than mere existence or biological response to stimuli. It is a reaction which improves upon environment, may even rise above it, and mold it. Education, then, demands the following of some other line than the one of least resistance. It means ultimately the trained and rational reaction of body.

Never was there greater need for speed in acquiring education and training, my fellow students. America needs you! For upon America has fallen the burden of the world. America needs me! should be at once the cry and dynamogenesis of every student.

Are we fearful that it is useless to make great preparation because the war will soon be over, and our efforts will therefore be tardy? Listen! Germany is on what to her is foreign though conquered soil. She may be stopped; but that is not enough. She must needs be whipped. To do so means pushing her back to her own soil. Once on her own soil, how will she fight? Her fighting, however, will be multiplied, for the line will be shortened, the morale improved because defending homes.

The Teutons have eight or ten millions of men, Germany, five or six alone. It will take three to one to whip her because she has the advantage of position; ten to fifteen million allied soldiers will be needed.

After the war, what? Reconstruction! As it followed the Civil War in America, so then, will it follow this war, but with its problems multiplied and intensified. Then one country was involved, now a score or more. The world's industries diverted from peace to war channels must be reorganized and re-directed, and under great changes in social and political legislation, change of ideals and objects. The millions of soldiers must be returned to the arts of peace, rehabilitated, with minds broadened and sharpened by the terrible experiences of the war. Men and women of training, trained bodies and minds will be needed, needed as never before. What a goal to work for! Let us work, therefore, preparing for the war, with its great ideals in view, yet looking beyond to the great reconstruction period with its serious and awful demands. Speed up your activities, call on the higher powers of your being, of body, mind, and soul. Interest is the compass to guide your course, loosen those innate though latent powers.

THE CALL TO SERVICE

Never was there greater need for religion as an anchorage in the times of great stress and strain. It is the awakener of the soul, and determines our conscious attitude toward God and his creatures.

The message, then, I would leave with you graduates, in summing up, is:

Standing before a world conflict the passing of which floods the world with misery and into whose vortex of devastation and carnage millions of fighting men are rushing, with the nations of the world arming with feverish haste for even vaster battles, the vision of all the horror and suffering would be soul-wrecking did the picture close there. But round the edge of the black battle cloud is rimming the silvery hues of the ideals for which the allies struggle, and the sight of the hurrying patriots gives courage and hope. And above the din and carnage rises a clarion call to you, fellow students, and to me. It is the call to service. It demands speed in your preparation, restless and ceaseless activity of training to take your part in the struggle when needed, or to take up the task where the soldiers leave it, for over the battle fields, bathed with their blood, must be wrought the blessings of peace. Stout hearts are needed for the war conflict, but even stouter and braver are needed for the reconstruction, for then the battle becomes the somber one of industry from which the glamor of war is lacking. But trained minds and hands will still be needed.

Train, therefore, for the war and what lies beyond. God's purposes must be wrought. They demand men and women of determination and training. Religion, with its clear-eyed vision of God's ultimate purpose furnishes us our determination, the tremendous needs of the hour and the future supply the dynamogenesis. Therefore fix your interest and work while the day lasts.

MARRIAGE IN THE MILLENNIUM

Question.—Considering Matthew 25: 32 to 47 inclusive, Inspired Translation, the second coming of Christ and the judgment. The unrighteous are cast into endless punishment, the righteous into life eternal. Will the Saints and these other righteous be changed at this time? Will there be marriage after Christ comes? If all are changed, how can there be marriage?

Answer.—In the first place we must consider that this is only part of the theme which is taken up in the twenty-fourth chapter, concerning the signs of the times, the destruction of Jerusalem, the coming of the Master, and the destruction of the wicked—three distinctive ends. In the second place, this question evidently refers to the people in the beginning of the millennium. There is much reason for supposing that the Saints of the most high God, will be turned, neither to the right hand nor to the left, but that they will be with him on the throne.

As to conditions during the millennium, there are many passages which may be quoted. We note two to the effect that the Saints will be caught up to meet him and be ever with the Lord. One of them indicates that our bodies will be changed, but just when it will be, is not so definitely stated.

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then they who are alive, shall be caught up together with them into the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.—1 Thessalonians 4: 16-18.

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself.—Philippians 3: 20, 21.

We note also that there are passages referring to children and infants in the millennium, and the change which will take place at a hundred years of age, evidently indicating that there will be those, called the wicked, or the sinners, still on earth at that time. There will be those who do not receive the benefit of his ministrations because they are unwilling to do so.

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. . . . And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den.—Isaiah 11: 6, 8.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die, but shall live to be an hundred years old; but the sinner living to be an hundred years old shall be accursed. . . . They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.—Isaiah 65: 20, 23.

And their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their law-giver.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

Nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

This would seem to indicate that there will be those on the earth who are not changed at once at his coming, but who live and rear children. A further quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10 will show that it refers to this period, "They shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation." Evidently there will be a separation of the righteous and the wicked, but evidently there will also be those living, who marry and are given in marriage, who multiply, that is, have children. Evidently these righteous are changed in the twinkling of an eye at a hundred years of age, so they do not sleep in the dust.

THE RED CROSS WAR FUND

During this week there is a national campaign in progress to raise $100,000,000 for the war fund of the American Red Cross. It is a large amount, but the demand is so great that it deserves all the support we can possibly give it.

The amount raised this time has nothing to do with memberships, nor is it to be determined by the amounts donated at former times. The entire amount raised in this drive, from May 20 to 27, will go to the war fund, to be used in a work of mercy among our allies as well as among our own soldiers. When there is a call for help from such situations as the Halifax and Guatemala disasters, or devastation at home, it is cared for from the fund derived from memberships.

We are much pleased to note the hearty response indicated at the beginning of the campaign and feel sure it will easily succeed. Lamoni expects to raise her allotment without personal solicitation, headquarters being established where each may call and pay his allotment of the local quota.

The raising of the War Savings Stamp quota is done in the same manner. Local committees allot the amount it is thought each family or individual should pay, and he tries to do that much or more.

WHO OWNS THE LAND?

In connection with the Liberty Loan, there is one point that but few may know, that is, a land owner in America does not hold his land by absolute title. The absolute title is in the Government. What he holds, is at the best, a fee simple title. He holds it in fee or in other words, in fief.

We take our law from England. In England the allodial title was in the crown; even the great lords held their title in fief for certain service, a sort of higher kind of rental.

When we speak of the Liberty Bonds, it would amount practically to a mortgage on the absolute title. It is superior even, to the land itself. It is difficult to see how any other title could possibly be better. If the Government falls and is entirely wiped out, then our holdings of personal property, or even of land, will be worth but little.

Because worship is a renewal of our depleted spiritual energies, it is naturally intermittent. One need not jeer at the worshiper for spending so little time on that which he declares to be his salvation. For it is work, play, and love that he must earn the right to pray as he earns the promise of sleep.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 17

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS

The religious movement which finally resulted in the organization of the Seventh Day Adventist Church began with the preaching of the second advent of Jesus Christ by one William Miller, who began preaching upon this topic as a minister of the Baptist Church in 1832, not being ordained till 1833. He continued to preach as an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, although not representing Baptist ideas, till he was severed from that church on January 29, 1845, and even then continued to preach without any further ordination till his death, which occurred in 1848. It is claimed by some of the Adventists that he represented the fulfillment of the angel messenger of Revelation 14: 6, and by others, the John the Baptist of the present dispensation.

He advocated a definite time when Christ would make his second advent, but in all this he was deceived, and deceived many others, yet it is inconsistently claimed that God directed him in his work and covered the mistake he was making so that he did not know of it till the time was past. With him was associated in the mistake he was advocating as to the definite time when Christ would come to earth again, Ellen G. Harmon, now White, and who still apologizes for the mistake that Miller made.

While a belief in the seventh day as the day of worship to be observed by all who profess to follow Christ, and a belief in the unconsciousness of the spirit in man between death and the resurrection, and the total annihilation of the wicked, are peculiarities fundamental in the faith of the Seventh-day Adventists, yet William Miller believed in neither of them. He always believed and taught that the first day of the week was the Lord's Day, that the spirit of man was conscious between death and the resurrection, and that the wicked would be punished in a conscious state forever. With all these differences in the teachings of William Miller and the Seventh-day Adventists, yet they claim that he was the man through whom God brought forth the work represented by that church. He also represented that Jesus Christ was coming to reign on the earth a thousand years with his saints, while Satan was bound, while the Adventists advocate that the saints will be caught up to remain with Christ somewhere away from the earth during the thousand years, and that during that time the earth is desolate without inhabitants, and Satan has supreme control.

This will give information sufficient to convince the reader that the religious movement had its origin with, or was founded by one ignorant of the main principles now advocated by the Adventists, by one deceived as to the most inspiring theme in the beginning of this movement—by one who knew not the will of God—a commandment breaker, and having the mark of the beast, if the ideas claimed to be revealed through Mrs. Ellen G. White, the present prophetess of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, be correct.

The time set for the end of the world passed, the people believing in the message of Miller were disappointed, and many of them lost all their earthly possessions by reason of the disappointment and the foolish disposition they made of their property thinking they would not need it any more. They found some consolation in learning that they were not only wrong in setting a day for the coming of Christ and the end of the world but also in worshipping on the wrong day of the week. Through a Seventh-day Baptist lady they became acquainted with what they deemed the correct day on which to worship, from which time they began to advocate the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath for Christians.

At first, and for several years, those who were associated together in this movement were opposed to church organization, and it was not till 1860 and 1861 that an organization and the naming of the church was agreed to fully. Organization was brought about, so they claim, through necessity and as dictated by Mrs. E. G. White.

All persons who have been immersed, it matters not by whom, are accepted as members of this church; however, do such ones as have been baptized wish to be immersed by an Adventist minister it will be consented to. They accept baptism as the door into the kingdom of God, yet deny that it is "for the remission of sin."

They claim to be in the line of apostolic succession, giving as a reason for this claim that "they teach the pure gospel as taught by the apostles."

Their church officers are evangelists or ministers, local elders, and deacons, the minister holding the highest office.

They advocate the preexistence of Christ, but not the preexistence of the spirits of men. They believe that Satan was once a holy angel but fell from that honored position. They believe in the gifts of the Spirit as enjoyed in the New Testament times.

I give the following quotations from their own works in proof of what they claim to believe:

CHURCH ORGANIZATION

During the last six months of 1853, the number of believers in the third angel's message increased greatly. . . .

Up to this date, Seventh-day Adventists were without a formal organization of any kind, not even having a church organization.—Rise and Progress of Seventh-day Adventism, p. 194.

After the time had passed there was great confusion, and the majority were opposed to any organization, holding that it was inconsistent with the perfect liberty of the gospel. Mrs. White was always opposed to every form of fanaticism and early announced that some form of organization was necessary to prevent and correct confusion.—Ibid., p. 195.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church began in 1845, but was not regularly organized; that is, no special church organization was started among them, until the year 1857, when what we call church order was established among us.—Uriah Smith, in Letter of April 17, 1895; See Zion's Ensign, June 17, 1903.

And in a general gathering of representatives of our people from Michigan and several other States, held in Battle Creek, from September 28 to October 1, there was a candid consideration of the subject, and a full and free discussion of legal organization for the purpose of holding office and other church property—meeting houses, etc. . . .

As the result of the deliberations at this gathering, it was voted unanimously to legally organize a publishing association.—Rise and Progress of Seventh-day Adventism, pp. 226, 227.

This conference also took into consideration the subject of a name by which our people should be called. . . . The "Church of God" being proposed, it was objected to on the ground that it gave none of the distinctive features of our faith, while the name "Seventh-day Adventists," would not only set forth our faith in the near coming of Christ, but would also show that we were observers of the seventh-day Sabbath. So unanimous was the assembly in favor of the latter name, that when put to vote only one man voted against it.—Ibid., p. 227.

October 6, 1861, the Michigan conference was organized. . . . By vote of the conference it was recommended that the churches enter into organization, adopting the following as a church covenant:

"We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together as a church, taking the name Seventh-day Adventists, covenanting to keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus Christ."—Ibid., p. 228, 229.

ORIGIN OF THE CHURCH

The reader may now understand the real position of the man whom God had led in the great movement which occurred in fulfillment of the first message of Revelation 14: 6.—Life of William Miller, by James White, pp. 368, 369.

In 1832 he [Miller] for the first time publicly gave the reasons of his faith.—Great Conflict, p. 331.

In 1833 Miller received license to preach from the Baptist Church of which he was a member.—Ibid., p. 332.

As John the Baptist heralded the first advent of Jesus, and prepared the way for his coming, so William Miller and those who joined with him, proclaimed the second advent of the Son of God.—Supplement to Experiences and Views of Her Early Writings, by Mrs. E. G. White.

AUTHORITY

It would not be consistent for ministers of another denomination to ordain a man to eldership in a Seventh-day Adventist church. I think such a thing would be entirely out of place.—J. W. Watt, President of Vermont Conference of Adventists, in a letter dated December 30, 1904, SAINTS' HERALD.

Some of our earliest ministers were those who had been ordained to the gospel ministry in other denominations, and went forward under that ordination.—Elder J. N. Loughborough, Church Historian, in a letter, May 12, 1904, SAINTS' HERALD.

The great stir on the subject in America began to be developed under the labors of William Miller, of Low Hampton, Washington County, New York. . . . In the year 1816 he was converted to Christianity, united with the Baptist Church of Low Hampton, and remained a member of this church till his death, which occurred in the year 1848.—Seventh-day Adventism, p. 30.

Of the condition of Adventists after 1844, and their disappointment, J. N. Loughborough writes:

The existing prejudice against Advent doctrine was an almost impossible barrier to the people; and to try to teach them again without the clear and positive light as to the cause of the disappointment, would be useless. The Advent believers themselves needed to have their own souls inspired anew with a heavenly commission, before the people could be correctly taught.—Seventh-day Adventism, p. 89.

In a letter dated Oakland, California, May 12, 1904, Mr. Loughborough further says:

The first one ordained as a Seventh-day Adventist minister by Seventh-day Adventists was myself. This ordination was at Grand Rapids, Michigan, in the month of June, 1854.

And in a letter dated August, 1904, he says that the men who ordained him were Elder James White, formerly of the New England Christian Church, and Elder M. E. Cornell, formerly of the First-day Adventist Church.

DOCTRINE OR FAITH

1. That there is one God, a personal, spiritual being, etc. . . .

2. That there is one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Eternal Father, the one by whom he created all things, and by whom they do consist; . . . that he dwelt among men, full of grace and truth, lived our example, died our sacrifice, was raised for our justification, ascended on high to be our only Mediator, in the sanctuary in heaven, where, with his own blood, he makes atonement for our sins; which atonement, so far from being made on the cross, which was but the offering of the sacrifice, is the very last portion of his work as a priest. . . .

3. That the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were given by inspiration of God, contain a full revelation of his will to man, and are the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

4. That baptism is an ordinance of the Christian church, to follow faith and repentance, an ordinance by which we commemorate the resurrection of Christ; . . . and that no other mode fitly represents these facts than that which the Scriptures prescribe, namely, immersion.

5. That the new birth comprises the entire change necessary to fit us for the kingdom of God, and consists of two parts. . . .

6. We believe that prophecy is a part of God's revelation to man; that it is included in that Scripture which is profitable for instruction.

7. . . . That the second coming of Christ is to precede, not follow, the millennium. . . .

8. That the mistake of Adventists in 1844 pertained to the nature of the event then to transpire, not to the time. . . .

9. That God's moral requirements are the same upon all men in all dispensations: that these are summarily contained in the commandments spoken by Jehovah from Sinai, engraven on tablets of stone, and deposited in the ark; . . . that this law is immutable and perpetual, being a transcript of the table deposited in the ark in the true sanctuary on high. . . .

10. That the fourth commandment of this law requires that we devote the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, to abstinence from our own labor, and to the performance of sacred and religious duties; that this is the weekly Sabbath known to the Bible, being the day that was set apart before Paradise was lost. (Genesis 2: 2, 3.)

11. That, as the man of sin, the papacy, has thought to change times and laws (the law of God), . . . and has misled most all Christendom in regard to the fourth commandment, we find a prophecy of a reform in this respect to be wrought among believers just before the coming of Christ. . . .

12. That as all have violated the law of God and cannot of themselves render obedience to his just requirements, we are dependent on Christ, first, for our justification from our past offenses, and, secondly, for grace whereby to render acceptable obedience to his holy law in time to come.

13. That the Spirit of God was promised to manifest itself in the church through certain gifts, enumerated especially in 1 Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4.

14. That God in accordance with his uniform dealings with the race, sends forth a proclamation of the approach of the second advent of Christ. . . .

15. That the grave, whither to all tend, expressed by the Hebrew sheol and the Greek hades is a place of darkness in which there is no work, device, wisdom, nor knowledge. . . .

16. That the state to which we are reduced by death is one of silence, inactivity, and entire unconsciousness. . . .

17. That out of this prison-house of the grave, mankind are to be brought by a bodily resurrection; the righteous having part in the first resurrection, which takes place at the second coming of Christ; the wicked in the second resurrection, which takes place in a thousand years thereafter.

18. That at the last trump, the living righteous are to be changed, . . . and with the resurrected righteous are to be caught up to meet the Lord. . . .

19. That these immortalized ones are then taken to heaven, . . . where they reign with Christ a thousand years . . . that during this time the earth lies in a desolate and chaotic condition . . . and that here Satan is confined during the thousand years. . . .

20. That at the end of the thousand years, the Lord descends with his people and the New Jerusalem (Revelation 21: 2), the wicked dead are raised and come up upon the surface of the yet unrenewed earth, and gather about the city, the camp of the saints, and fire comes down from God out of heaven and devours them. They are then consumed root and branch, Malachi 4: 1, becoming as though they had not been. . . .

21. That new heavens and a new earth shall spring by the power of God from the ashes of the old, and this renewed earth, with the New Jerusalem for its metropolis and capital shall be the eternal inheritance of the saints, the place where the righteous shall evermore dwell.—Origin,

Progress, and Principles of Seventh-day Adventists, pp. 27-31, Edition of 1879.

OFFICERS

A clerk is chosen to keep the records of the church, and an elder, elected by vote of the church, is ordained to look after its spiritual interests. If the church is large, its temporal affairs are assigned to one or more deacons chosen by vote of the church for this purpose. They hold that the terms, elder, bishop, and pastor signify the same officer, confined to a particular church. These need not be ordained ministers. Evangelists are ordained ministers, who travel from place to place to preach the gospel, and are the only ones competent to ordain local elders or deacons.—Ibid., pp. 12, 13.

The next advance in organization from single churches is the State conference. . . . At each annual meeting an executive committee of three is elected by vote of the delegates, of whom the president of the conference is chairman. This committee have supervision of all the ministerial and religious work of the conference between the yearly meetings.

The next outward sweep from the State conferences is the general conference. . . . This conference also annually elects its executive committee of three, to have charge of the doings of the denomination in all parts of the field. The president of the general conference is the highest officer in the body.—Ibid., pp. 13, 14.

FINANCIAL SYSTEM

Means to sustain the work are raised by a plan denominated systematic benevolence, founded on the instruction of Paul in 1 Corinthians 16: 2. By this system it is designed that everyone shall, upon each first day of the week, lay by a sum equal, as near as may be, to one tenth of his income from whatever source.

Each church appoints its collector and treasurer, who, once a month, or in rural districts once a quarter, gathers up these contributions. . . . These funds are sent by the church treasurers to the State conference treasurers. . . . An auditing committee is appointed which examines the accounts of all the ministers in the employ of the conference and settle with each one according to the amount of labor performed. Of the funds remaining in the State treasury after such settlement, the conference sends such amount as it sees proper to the general conference, which is then put in the hands of the general conference treasurer to be expended under the direction of the general conference committee.—Ibid., pp. 15, 16.

An address was published in the Advent Review, volume 13, February 3, 1859, treating upon the tithing principle.

This address had been adopted by the church in Battle Creek, January 26, 1859. It was suggested that property was worth at least ten per cent per annum. And it was therefore recommended that each person give at least one per cent on all his property free from debt, and a weekly donation besides, as he might deem proper, thereby raising a fund to be used in the support of the gospel ministry.—Rise and Progress of Seventh-day Adventism, p. 223.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

The next day, which, as nearly as I can remember, was about the first Sabbath in August, 1831, I [William Miller] delivered my first public lecture on the second advent.—Life of William Miller, p. 80.

The Adventist ministers, when delivering their discourses, pointed to the fact that the world's history showed the nations of the earth to be in just that condition symbolized by the image of Daniel 2, when the stone should smite the image on the feet, and the God of heaven set up his kingdom; and in chapter 7, when "the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven was to be given to the saints of the most high." They called attention to the fact that the signs—physical, political, and moral—were just what the Scriptures said should be seen when the Lord was about to appear.

William Miller began his public speaking on this theme in 1832. One of the specific signs given by the Savior as a token by which we might know that he was "near, even at the doors" (Matthew 24: 29-33), was fulfilled the very next year after Mr. Miller began to preach.—Rise and Progress of Seventh-day Adventists, pp. 32, 33.

MEMBERSHIP AND BAPTISM

We have always so far as I know accepted members into church fellowship who have been immersed by other denominations; if the person is sincere and is satisfied with his former baptism, it is all right.—Letter of J. W. Watt, December 30, 1904. President of Vermont Conference.

A believer who has been baptized by immersion by an evangelical minister, is usually received in full fellowship into the Seventh-day Adventist Church without being rebaptized, unless he, himself, desires rebaptism. The usual method would be to receive him on profession of faith and previous baptism.—Editor W. W. Prescott, Review and Herald, in a letter of September 11, 1904.

BIBLE

Last night in my sleeping hours I seemed to be in a meeting with my brethren, listening to one who spoke as having authority. He said, "Many souls will attend this meeting who are honestly ignorant of the truths which will be presented before them. Conscience tells them that what they hear is true, for it has the Bible for its foundation.—Mrs. Allen G. White in General Conference Bulletin, February 23, 1895, p. 337.

But the word of God was the only testimony accepted by the preachers of the Adventist faith. . . . The Bible and the Bible alone was their watchword.—Great Conflict, p. 335.

LAW OF GOD

The law of God is the standard by which the characters and lives of men will be tested in the judgment.—Great Conflict, p. 482.

The law of God existed before man was created. The angels were governed by it . . . it was not then written, but was rehearsed to them by Jehovah. . . .

After Adam's sin and fall nothing was taken from the law of God. The principles of the ten commandments existed before the fall, and were of a character suited to the condition of a holy order of beings.—Spiritual Gifts, vol. 3, p. 295.

SABBATH

The Sabbath, therefore, lies at the very foundation of divine worship, for it teaches this great truth [that God is the Creator], in the most impressive manner, and no other institution does this.—Great Conflict, p. 437.

When God spake the law with an audible voice from Sinai, he introduced the Sabbath by saying, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy."

On the seventh day of the week, God rested from his work, and then blessed the day of his rest, and set it apart for the use of man.

I was then carried back to creation and was shown that the first week, in which God performed the work of creation in six days and rested on the seventh day, was just like every other week.—Spiritual Gifts, p. 90.

Two causes have operated to introduce the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath among Adventists, and thus to develop that class known as Seventh-day Adventists.

First, a seventh-day Baptist sister, Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, from the State of New York, moved to Washington, New Hampshire, where there was a church of Adventists. From them she received the doctrine of the soon-coming of Christ, and in return instructed them in reference to the claims of the fourth commandment of the decalogue. This was in 1844. Nearly that whole church immediately commenced the observance of the seventh day, and thus have the honor of being the first Seventh-day Adventist church in America.—The Seventh-Day Adventists, p. 5, ed. 1879.

SATAN

Before the fall of Satan, the Father consulted his Son in regard to the formation of man. . . . When Satan learned the purpose of God, he was envious of Christ, and jealous because the Father had not consulted him in regard to the creation of man. Satan was of the higher order of angels; but Christ was above all. He was the commander of all heaven. He imparted to the angelic family the high commands of the Father. The envy and jealousy of Satan increased. . . . Satan began to insinuate his dissatisfied feelings to other angels, and a number agreed to aid him in his rebellion. . . .

At length all the angels are summoned to appear before the Father to have each case decided. . . .

The Father decided the case of Satan, and declared that he must be turned out of heaven for his daring rebellion, and that all those who united with him in his rebellion, should be turned out with him.—Spiritual Gifts, pp. 36, 38.

REVELATIONS

Within two months after the passing of the time Miss Allen G. Harmon [now White] of Portland, Maine, then about seventeen years of age, began to receive revelations.—Rise and Progress of Seventh-Day Adventists, p. 91.

Of Mrs. E. G. White's inspiration, Uriah Smith says:

It comes to us as a divine message; it is a ray of light from the throne; it is instruction by the Holy Spirit.—Replies to Elder Canright, p. 77.

OTHER CHURCHES

Satan has taken full possession of the churches as a body. . . . Their profession, their prayers, and their exhortations are an abomination in the sight of God.—Early Writings of Mrs. White, p. 35.

MARK OF THE BEAST

The Sunday Sabbath is purely a child of Papacy. It is the mark of the beast.—Advent Review, vol. 1, No. 2, August, 1850.

Sunday keeping is an institution of the first beast, and all who submit to obey this institution emphatically worship the first beast and receive his mark, "the mark of the beast."—Ibid., extra, pp. 10, 11.

LORD'S SUPPER

The salvation of men depends upon a continual application to their hearts of the cleansing blood of Christ. Therefore, the Lord's supper was not to be observed only occasionally or yearly, but more frequently than the annual passover. This solemn ordinance commemorates a far greater event than the children of Israel from Egypt.—Spiritual Gifts, No. 3, p. 228.

While the Seventh-day Adventists will acknowledge that William Miller was wrong in the time he set for the coming of Christ to earth, in believing in the first day of the week as the day of worship for Christ's followers, in his belief that there is a conscious entity in man that at death departed from the body and still remained conscious, in Jesus Christ reigning on the earth during the thousand years, yet they still make the claim that God chose him to do the work he did, and that he proclaimed the first angel's message of Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Neither did William Miller believe in the miracle-working power of the Holy Spirit in this age of the world, yet the Seventh-day Adventists make that as one of their special pleas, based upon which belief are the spiritual testimonies of Mrs. E. G. White, whom they claim to be a prophetess. They also claim to believe in the gifts of healing and the casting out of evil spirits, both of which Miller denied.

Their only reason for believing, so far as investigation discloses, that they are in apostolic succession, is that they claim to advocate the same truths that the apostles did. They do not claim to have any officials in the church holding apostolic authority, and deny that such an office is necessary to be in the church to-day.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF PRIESTHOOD

To present something new, or to give more detailed instruction on the duties and prerogatives of those holding the priesthood, than has already been placed before the readers of our church literature, would be a difficult undertaking. However, there is room for much to be said in regard to the sacred calling and responsibilities of those who, by virtue of their calling, constitute the official representation of the Lord's kingdom on earth.

One of the prerogatives of this sacred calling is that of authority, even being associated with the kingly office. "And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father." Revelation 1: 6.

Speaking of Joshua, son of Josedach, the high priest who should build the temple of the Lord: "Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne; and the counsel of peace shall be between them both." (Zechariah 6: 13.)

It appears that this attribute will adhere to all who have part in the first resurrection, for "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." (Revelation 20: 6.) Since this text appears to apply equally to all who come forth in the first resurrection, may we find food for thought in the question: "Will the priesthood be limited then, as now, to the male sex?"

Since no kingdom can be successfully perpetuated without rulers, God has wisely designated that his kingdom, in its present militant state, fighting sin in all its forms, and also in the peaceful reign with Christ as its triumphant head in the celestial state, shall be supplied with a requisite number of subordinate officers, or rulers. That these officials are to be selected by the Lord, perhaps no one will dispute. We have no promise, however, that all who may hold the priesthood in this life, will be found worthy to reign with Christ, though they may obtain an inheritance with the redeemed.

In worldly kingdoms or governments, advancement is seldom dependent on meritorious service. It often results from the unscrupulous intrigues of ambitious adventurers and office seekers, who make use of any available means to ingratiate themselves into the good graces of the powers that rule. It frequently comes through the caprice of the ruler who has power to advance subordinates, his selection falling upon those far down the line of merit, while others more capable and far more worthy are left unrecognized.

We are able here to discern one of the causes of failure and overthrow that invariably comes to human institutions and kingdoms, operated solely by human wisdom, void of divine guidance. A study of these things teach valuable lessons, not by way of similarity, but by way of contrast between institutions, human and divine. To begin at the bottom, God never calls to the priesthood, any man who seeks that office from motives of self-aggrandizement. If perchance the misdirected zeal of some one becomes responsible for the ordination of such aspirant, there remains one of two results to accrue: Either failure to properly function the office (the most probable result), or genuine repentance on the part of the individual, predicated on earnest desire to serve in humility of spirit.

Divine wisdom usually makes selection of those who feel unworthy, and frequently incapable, of filling the position to which they are called. Thus, a humble spirit is one of the most essential attributes. With this must be associated a willingness to work. Success in the work is further dependent on the elimination of self, and will power sufficient to subdue worldly ambition. Christ, ordained to be a high priest forever, the head in divine authority, gave up every selfish, worldly ambition, spurning the satanic offer of the kingdoms of the world, in order that he might do the will of his Father, and make it possible that humanity may obtain the "life more abundant."

By his humble service, and his great sacrifice for sinful humanity, he has given us the only faultless example by which to measure our work. We may not be able to reach the exalted standard that he set, but to keep before our vision this perfect ideal will give inspiration to our efforts, and perseverance, regardless of obstacles, will bring a measure of success, the full scope of which it may require eternity to unfold. Jealousy has been responsible for the wrecks of many great enterprises; and if we entertain it in our service, that is destined to fit us for the place which Christ has gone to prepare, there is no power to prevent those efforts from bearing the indelible stamp of failure.

To be chosen as the representative of any great government is a glittering attraction that finds a hearty response in the ambitions of many professed patriots. Priesthood is delegated authority, and the recipient of it is a commissioned representative of the kingdom of God on earth. The honor attaching to such position is far greater than the honor attaching to a representative of worldly government. Divinity selects one, humanity the other. But unfortunately, in this as in many other things the world has departed from the true standard of honor. As a vast multitude of people are unable to discern the value, or appreciate the importance of the priesthood in the kingdom of God, it would be folly to ask an aspiring, ambitious statesman or politician, to govern his course by the sacred honor standard attaching to the ministry, to whom the call from God comes in his appointed way.

Thus it is apparent that the world in general, so long as sinful influences retain their hold upon the hearts of mankind, will never honor or appreciate the work of those whom God honors with a call to the priesthood. But, a study of the work to be done in this life; a limited vision of the continuance and enlargement of that work in the millennium, and throughout eternity, gives encouragement and strength to those whose life work is builded upon the immovable foundation of eternal truth and righteousness.

Deception and base intrigue may be used by representatives of human institutions, to further their selfish designs. They may be able to prevent a knowledge of their sin reaching the victims of their wrong-doing. Perhaps in no phase of human operations, more than this, is the contrast between the way of the Lord and man's ways more sharply drawn. There is not only no room for a representative of the divine institution to hope to advance by deception, but there is absolutely no escape from failure and degradation on the part of those who attempt it. He who knows the human heart, who knows the good and bad qualities attaching to the individual, as well as the possibilities of developing the proper representative of his cause, knows the moment that an individual departs from the path of rectitude.

Brethren of the priesthood, one and all, regardless of the particular office occupied, there is positively but one road to success. That road is so circumscribed, that you cannot take with you any useless appendages, in the form of human schemes to bolster up selfish ideas or enterprises. Do you desire to reach the greatest success that will ever be granted to mortal man, by traversing this one road? As you start, you will need a strong devotion to the principle of right, and a fixed consecration of self to work to establish and build up righteousness. As you advance you will find it necessary to throw off all human attributes that impede your progress, such as selfish ambition in worldly things, ill will, hatred, jealousy, in fact, every human attribute that does not blend with the divine.

As you divest yourself of these hindrances, you will acquire a greater supply of charity; brotherly kindness, long suffering; deeper interest in the salvation of humanity, and a greater love for the work into which duty leads; and in a corresponding measure lose your love for those things of the world which are not needful. Your joys will increase as you study to show yourself approved of God. Your talents will develop, and you will be able to drink more copiously from the fountain of divine truth.

Your activities will increase in the Master's work. Pressing on in this road, you increase in wisdom and become a more able representative of the kingdom of God to those who desire the light and righteousness of God's revealed truth. You will obtain a more perfect conception of the beauty and grandeur of the divine plan given of God, through the mediation of Christ, for the redemption of humanity. Persevering, you will find self swallowed up in the one desire to serve God, by doing his will in the interest of humanity. There may come to you as the end is near, the blessed assurance that was given to Paul, when he could say: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Finally, leaving behind the scenes of your earthly labors, what joy may thrill your souls at the sound of the words, from him in whose cause you have given your lives: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many." Success, then, is an assured reality. You will have traversed the road which gave to you the experiences, in the line of duty, to qualify you to take up the work anew of ministering unto the children of God, perhaps those in glories inferior to the celestial, until Christ shall be crowned Lord of all, and hailed by the entire human race (except the comparatively few lost in the second death), as the Redeemer of the world. Here lies the acme of success that will crown the true and faithful representative of Christ, whose life work magnifies his calling. No more holy or lofty ambition can inspire your efforts. No greater success is within the reach of mortal man.

ATTITUDE OF QUAKERS ON THE WAR

[In their yearly meeting, held at Philadelphia, March 29, the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, unanimously adopted the following resolutions, which are a reaffirmation of the beliefs of the church for many years, and an expression of their loyalty to the Government.—EDITORS.]

This decisive hour of history summons our society to make its utmost contribution to humanity's deepest needs. Believing that this requires us to meet the moral and spiritual issues of the times simply and fearlessly, we feel called to make clear our Christian faith as applied to war.

Our society's opposition to all war as un-Christian has been maintained throughout its history. In 1660 our forefathers declared:

We utterly deny all outward wars and strife, and fightings with outward weapons, for any end, or under any pretense whatever; this is our testimony to the whole world. The Spirit of Christ by which we are guided is not changeable, so as once to command us from a thing as evil and again to move unto it; and we certainly know, and testify to the world, that the Spirit of Christ, which leads us into all truth, will never move us to fight and war against any man with outward weapons, neither for the kingdom of Christ, nor for the kingdoms of this world.

These convictions have been reaffirmed by friends in all generations and during the present war our yearly meetings throughout the world have given clear evidence that they are steadfast to the same principles.

The basis of our opposition to war is much more than any single command of the Old or the New Testament. It is our faith that the way of love by which our Master, Jesus Christ, met and conquered evil, remains for his followers to-day the true method of combating wrong. For us, as for him, this involves refusal to use means which, like war, violate love and defeat its ends; but it does not mean a weak neutrality toward evil. For us, as for him, it means a life of action devoted to the heroic purpose of overcoming evil with good. The unspeakable sufferings of humanity are now calling us and all men to larger sacrifices and more earnest endeavors to put this faith into practice. To such endeavors we dedicate ourselves.

In accordance with this faith, we desire to maintain all our relationships to-day.

To our beloved country, we affirm the deep loyalty of grateful hearts. We long to help her realize her noblest capacities as a great Republic dedicated to liberty and democracy. But we believe that we best serve our country and all humanity when we maintain that religion and conscience are superior even to the State.

To President Wilson, we declare our appreciation of his steadfast and courageous efforts to keep the aims of the United States in this great conflict liberal, disinterested, and righteous.

To our fellow-countrymen, who are following the leadings of conscience into ways where we cannot be their comrades, we give assurance of respect and sympathy in all that they endure. Finally,

For all men, whether they be called our enemies or not, we pray that the sacrificial love of Christ, stirring us to repentance, may reconcile and unite all mankind in the brotherhood of his Spirit.

CHURCH BUILDING

A wise resolution:

Moved that it be the sense of this body that no church site shall be chosen or edifice erected by any branch without first conferring with the Presiding Bishopric and the church architect.

This was adopted by the General Conference. It will put a stop to a lot of unwise church building propositions. We have too many church edifices now in places where we have no use for them and where a little foresight would have shown there was no good reason for building them.

"I know where a lot can be bought cheap," or "I'll give the land to build a church upon," has too often been the thing that has determined the location when a few more dollars would have put the church in the proper place.

"I'll draw the plans just as good as an architect," is sometimes the very generously intended offer of some good brother who once planned a lean-to for his barn.

"Oh, we'll just build it ourselves," is the solution of the problem of how it is to be paid for, and then every man in the branch donates a day or a week. He saws a board in two where it may or may not need it, finds a nice place to nail it on, and when it is all done it is like a crazy quilt, and nobody is glad they have a church. They not only have a church but they have a church debt as well, and old Satan knows by experience that a church debt and a church quarrel are twin brothers, and he sticks a fresh cigar in his mouth and his thumbs in the armholes of his vest, and thoroughly enjoys what follows.

This will now become a thing of the past, and churches will be built where they ought to be and as they ought to be.

President Smith's suggestion that all church buildings be built in such a way that their very appearance will show that they are Latter Day Saint churches, is also a good one.—An Editorial in April Glad Tidings.

SCANDAL AND SCANDALMONGERS

[Some most pertinent comments on this subject are to be found in the following extracts from a recent sermon by Rabbi Leon Harrison, of Temple Israel, Saint Louis.—EDITORS.]

Moses, the tongue-tied, planned a Magna Charta for the race, while Aaron, the eloquent, built them a calf of gold. You will notice that deep rivers run silently and noiselessly. It is only shallow brooks that chatter and babble as they flow. It is shallow men and women that chatter and babble and talk, talk, talk, until one would think that Keely, seeking the secret of perpetual motion, would have found it in the tireless tongues of our gossips and scandal-mongers.

Now the original impulse to comment on persons is wholesome and sound. We are men, and nothing human is alien to us. We naturally prefer flesh-and-blood to abstractions. We are interested in the first-hand knowledge of our fellow creatures. There is an innocent curiosity and a delight in the humanity of men that is full of charm and interest. Thousands have read Boswell's gossipy "Life of Johnson," to tens that have read Johnson's ponderous works. Froude's chatty life of Carlyle will live as long as the master. How could we dispense with Eckerman's "Conversations with Goethe," or Cross' almost autobiographical "George Eliot?" They are delightful personal incidents, gossip raised to a fine art, gigantic photography of souls. Would that some adoring crony of Shakespeare had left us some such graphic diary of his sayings and doings. We see the man thus in negligee, without the pose and lime-light and the canonizing of legend. Dotage by no means begins with our anecdote. And it is sheer pedantry to deny the human interest to the masses that we allow to their master minds.

But the ethical difference is obvious between photography and caricature, between reporting and reviling. The distinction between innocent gossip and malicious scandal is similar to that between humor and sarcasm. In humor we laugh with the humorist; in sarcasm he laughs at us. There is bitterness in the latter, the arrow is poisoned, the wit is venomous. And it is impossible for one to talk much or habitually about others without becoming scandalous. Rumor grows like a rolling snowball. It is a river that digs its own channel, deepens and broadens as it goes, and is fed by innumerable tributaries. It is a muddy river filled with refuse and rotteness and slime, and woe to him that drinks therefrom without repeated filtration. Only the hog delights in its muddy wallow. And I sometimes think that the animal origin of man is traceable in the human varieties. Among men, we recognize clearly the ox, the bear, the fox, the lion, the snake, the vulture. There are those in every community, snakelike in their writhing, sneaking, prying, and distribution of venom. They delight in guttering for the indiscretion of a woman or the first financial trembling of a man. Her indiscretion becomes vice, ruin, agony; his difficulty becomes danger, disaster, downfall. They are coarsely and correctly branded in our good Anglo-Saxon as backbiters. They are vermin. If they see a tidbit, if they spy an infirmity, if they can smell out a scandal, they roll the choice morsel under their tongue, they revel in the miserable secret, they gloat over it with their cronies, they hiss it, they hint it, they carry it as a delicacy to their fellow vermin, and they all enjoy a grand cannabalistic feast over the dead or dying reputation of their helpless victim. You can grapple with a foe, you can catch a thief, you can face an enemy and exchange blow for blow. But what can you do with a thief of character, with an assassin of reputation, that stabs you in the dark with a sharp tongue and poisons the weapon that inflicts the wound? What avails denial or defense, what possible reparation can be made? . . .

We are not cruel or criminal as a rule in intention, but careless. But in many instances, carelessness is virtually cruelty and crime. Carelessness in a surgeon may mean manslaughter; in a general, massacre; in a judge, the shipwreck of a human life. The great catastrophies of history were not deliberate villainies. The slaughter of the "Light Brigade" was not bloody murder. Nay, but "somebody blundered." The worst harm is done when meaning none. The sneer spoken in jest is repeated in earnest. The slur said good-naturedly is circulated maliciously. Your tone is kindly, you smile with good humor and feel it. You hedge your assertions around with doubts and hearsays and cautions, and they are repeated without any doubts or hearsays or reservation, without your smile or good nature, as absolute truths. And you are responsible for all the hideous consequences. . . .

Of course you know that it is not you that I am addressing. It is your neighbor. You hope she will lay it to heart. It is quite impressive—this innocence of the scandalmonger, and, let me add, the attitude of those that listen to such innuendoes. The receiver is worse than the thief.

THE REDEMPTION OF JUDEA

(From a correspondent with the British forces in Palestine to The American Hebrew, published in the issue of that magazine for April 5.)

The British forces drove the Turks out of Jerusalem on the first day of the Jewish feast of Chanuka, the anniversary of the entry of Judas Maccabeus into the city after the rout of the Hellenistic hordes. The coincidence is a happy one for the future of Palestine. As the Maccabean victory marked definitely the defeat of a debased Hellenism which threatened human liberty and morality, the present British victory marks definitely the defeat of the debased German will to domination which threatened the independence and well-being of all small nationalities.

The rapid advance of the British forces from Gaza has released the whole of Judea in little more than a month. Within twenty days of the taking of the stronghold of the Philistines, the army swept over the Plain of Philistia, the smiling park of the Plain of Sharon, and reached the River Audja, ten miles north of Jaffa. Within another twenty days it broke the Turkish defense line in the hills from Hebron to the ancient Bethel, and left no organized band of the enemy throughout what was the ancient kingdom of Judah. The area restored comprises all the Jewish colonies of Southern Palestine, Castinieh, Ekron, Katurah, Rehoboth, Rishon-le-Zion, Petakh, Tikvah, lying in the plain, and Hulda, Mozah, and Artuf in the hills. It comprises also, besides Jerusalem, with its 50,000 souls, Jaffa, which is the economic and cultural center of the infant Jewish resettlement, and Hebron, which is a holy city, and has a Jewish population of several thousands. It comprises also the large villages of Ramleh and Lydda and Mejdal and Bethlehem, which have a considerable Christian as well as Arab population. And the occupation means that the nucleus of the Jewish resettlement is saved, even if disaster should overtake the settlements of the north.

Within the country the English advance is taken almost as a matter of course. The Jewish people have been counting on it for a year, and they show no exuberant enthusiasm now that their expectation has been fulfilled. They are more excited about the formation of the Jewish regiment, of which tidings have reached them in a somewhat distorted form. They regard it as a striking manifestation of the national spirit which is their peculiar pride, and they inquire anxiously when it will arrive in the country to help drive the Turks from Galilee. Probably many of the young men will be eager to join the ranks when the regiment arrives in the land. The settlers agree that the redemption came just in time to save them and their colonies from ruin. Menaced for three years by Turkish spite and jealousy, which occasionally broke into outrage, and by arrogant and methodical destructiveness, which sacrificed everything for military needs, they were likely to have suffered the fate which befell the Jews of Jaffa when the British Army had to fall back last April. But the swiftness of the advance paralyzed the power of destruction as well as the power of defense. Save for Petakh Tikvah, the largest of the colonies, which is situated in No-man's Land between the two armies for a period, the villages have escaped with a few shells and bombs and a few days of Turkish occupation. To-day they are the favorite resting places of the British troops, who find something of the joys of home among the gardens and villages and cottages. The orange groves, the vineyards, the plantations, which have somehow survived the drought of petrol and the wanton spoiling of the Turks, are a delight of fruitfulness, and the rich tilth is sharply contrasted with the stony, half-cultivated fells of the surrounding Arabs. The colonies, on their side, have a warm welcome for the British soldier, who comes not only as their deliverer, but in some cases as their kin. For there are young men born and bred in Palestine who, having emigrated in hard times to the Antipodes, have now returned to their homeland in the ranks of the Australian Imperial forces. The Arabs, too, are quick to realize the difference between the new and the old army sojourning in their midst. They are reaping a harvest with their eggs and their half-ripe oranges—most of the Arab population, adult and infant, is engaged in hawking oranges on the roads—and they are again plowing with their wooden plowshares, drawn by camel and ox, being convinced that they will have the benefit of this year's sowing, the first they will have enjoyed for three years.

The war, however, has already made a fair retribution for the harm and hardship it has caused to the country. Against the loss of markets and the destruction of much property and the felling of the scant timber, may be set the opening up of roads and railways and the linking up of Palestine with Egypt. Palestine is again fast coming into its natural heritage as one of the chief junctions between the Orient and the Occident. The danger is rather that it will lose its simplicity in isolation, which in former ages helped to preserve its position and influence. The Jews are already in the forefront of the work of expansion. During the Turkish Army's occupation of the South, a little settlement of them had found its way, or was transplanted forcibly, to Beersheba, to work as artisans on the railway or on the water supply. The Jewish agriculturists, too, now find themselves placed near the main lines of railways, so that their produce will be carried to all parts of the land and to lands beyond. Jaffa is again becoming a port for the embarking of light ships, and some of the ancient harbors at the mouths of the Wadis which have been derelict for nearly 2,000 years have suddenly sprung into fresh life. The opportunities for Jewish enterprise and Jewish energy to regenerate the land of their fathers will be multiplied manifold after the war is over. Jaffa and Gaza have to be rebuilt; in Jerusalem cleanliness is to be added to godliness; the plains of Philistia and Judea are to be recovered to their old beauty and fertility, and the hills of Judah and Benjamin are again to be terraced and planted and dotted with villages. The green plains to the south and east of Beersheba, which were thickly populated in the Byzantine epoch, have been given fresh opportunities by the Turkish railway to the Egyptian frontier. They can easily be put into working order, and are to be settled and reclaimed. But even before the end of the war something can be done in these directions to prepare for the new age and to make the redeemed land at once more useful to the redeemer. Simple measures of irrigation would immediately render large areas, now waste, capable of full cultivation, and a population to work the land scientifically could be found in the Jewish villages and towns. Moreover, there are still in Egypt some thousands of Palestinian refugees waiting to return to their homes. The Germans during their occupation of Jerusalem and Beersheba have done something in the way of town planning and building and tree planting, which shows what a little skilled direction may accomplish. The spiritual renaissance, which the romantic return of the world's most steadfast nationality to its home, will bring, may in part wait till the days of peace; the material basis of that revival may be laid in the days of war.

In ancient Winchester lies the recumbent statue of a woman from whose mouth is growing a rose, because, so runs the beautiful story, from her lips came never a word of malice towards any human being. And so the rose of silence became the rose of beauty and honor; and the fragrance of her virtues lives in carven stone. The quality of mercy shines therein—the sacredness of silence, the divineness of human charity, living when the heart is dead, speaking when lips are dust, immortal as the God of Love, the Lord of life.—Rabbi Leon Harrison.

The spendthrift may be forgiven, but his wealth is squandered. The man who by a course of physical indulgence has undermined his health may receive God's forgiving favor, but his broken constitution remains.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

From Our New President

To the Woman's Auxiliary; Greeting: To be associated again with the general work of the Woman's Auxiliary brings pleasant anticipations as well as a keen sense of responsibility. I thank you for your confidence as expressed by your vote. With the Spirit of the Master and your co-operation I trust the year shall be a successful one.

In the first executive meeting held immediately following the recent General Convention I felt the strangeness of the absence of some of the pioneers with whom I had been associated, and especially of one who has gone "over there"—not to war and strife but to paradise and peace—our dear Sister B. C. Smith.

I recall the occasion when the executive board met some seven or eight years ago and departmental work was suggested. How we stood on the threshold of the new era and drew aside the curtains of the future and peered into distant fields of usefulness. The vision was not altogether certain, but slowly the mists have cleared away and we have moved in and occupied. The women of earlier days, who made possible this great organization, are succeeded by others of no less high ideals—the present executive women with whom I am to be associated—are forward-looking, Zionward-looking women of marked intelligence and efficiency.

But of what practical use are ideals unless they appeal to our sisters. In 1916 a year book was published containing the aims and purposes of the organization; and loyal women that you were to the spirit of progress, you adopted it. Of the large number that were published only a very few remain. In 1917 you amended the constitution, and yet again in 1918 a few more changes were made. This year, by your action, we are issuing a supplement to the year book which will contain the constitution and by-laws as they now stand, and a new message from our honorary president, president, and each general supervisor. Notice will appear in this column when the supplement is ready. Believing you wish to be thoroughly up to date on the organization, we bespeak for it your enthusiastic patronage.

The work of a new year opens before us. First let loyalty to our Government be expressed in what our hands can do for war relief. Let us be found in the Red Cross work rooms as often as our circumstances will allow. Do not think you can only go when your work at home is all done. Let the home make a sacrifice for those who have gone to protect it. If there is no Red Cross unit in your town, take the initiative and gather as many women together as you can, send for a Red Cross instructor, and begin work. Too long we have been followers when at times we could with all propriety have been leaders. The conservation of food and the use of the new flour substitutes should be our constant study until we have a proper knowledge of the new combinations that will, in lieu of wheat, still enable us to maintain health. (See our home economics course.) Those who cannot go to the Red Cross rooms and have little to do with providing of foods may prepare the story envelopes for the soldiers convalescing in the hospitals. The knitting must go on, for many more thousand garments will be needed this winter than last. I have just read of an elderly woman who adopted a soldier boy, about to be sent to France, from the desire to send a motherless soldier to the front with the parting memory of a mother's smile.

REUNIONS

Already notices of reunions are appearing and preparations are being made. Are you going to attend? "Let all things be prepared before you" can well be applied to reunion work. Sister William Madison of the executive committee is in charge of plans and programs and is enthusiastically at work. Notice will be given when they are ready.

ORGANIZERS

I consider that organizers are the live wires that transmit information and lines of work from supervisor to class leader. They should radiate enthusiasm throughout their district. Much of the success of this work will depend upon the activity of these important officers. In responding to a call for organization the organizer, if she can go in person, should make a survey of the surrounding conditions herself that the studies or activities asked for are suitable and in keeping with the needs of the people. Sometimes work taken up has been discovered to be inappropriate and is consequently abandoned in a short time.

In these days of destruction our work of construction must go on with greater activity than ever before. We are building for Zion, and not what we shall obtain in Zion but what we shall bring to Zion should be our thought. "Inefficiency," said one of our generals recently, "is treason." Are we fully loyal to the church if we are not acquiring greater efficiency year by year? Therefore if we are home makers let us be the very best home makers possible and remember that many elements enter into that art. If we have little ones about us or those in the teen age think what possibilities are ours. When this dreadful war is over and society is reorganized we shall need the clean lives of young men fresh from the home influence to occupy in both public and private affairs—and who can be better equipped? Those who have not the care of children, and who thus have more time for study, could well take up the great, social problems and prepare for service along this line. Of the fine arts and æsthetic culture too much cannot be said in favor.

To our girls, the Orioles and Temple Builders who are putting sweetness into life and receiving tenfold therefrom, and who are discovering themselves and finding the line of work that will perfect their character and establish their personality, we say Godspeed.

Finally, to all, let us renew our efforts in our respective lines of work. Let us be heartened by the progress of the past and the prospects for the future, and may success crown every endeavor.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,

President Woman's Auxiliary.

Pebbles Dropped

Recently we published the resolutions of sympathy and cheer which the women of the General Convention passed in regard to our allied sisters across seas, who are suffering so severely because of this war. The money which was collected at the time, to be forwarded to the treasurer of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, was duly sent and has been acknowledged in the following courteous letter to our General Secretary:

ONE MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK, April 30.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
711 South Fuller Avenue,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Mrs. Gardner: We are inclosing our treasurer's official receipt for your generous contribution of $255.85. We wish to extend to you the sincere thanks of this committee for the hearty support of the woman of your church, and for the incentive it proved to the men to join with them. To this we would add the thanks of these stricken people whom we are endeavoring to save as a nation from extermination.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. JAQUITH, Assistant Secretary.

Our Secretary of State, Robert Lansing, sent to Mr. Vickery, secretary of the above-mentioned relief committee, a copy of a cablegram which had been received from the relief workers in the stricken eastern country, showing the gratitude of the people there who had received succor at the hands of our countrymen. The text of this message coming from Cairo is as follows:

"Fifty-five hundred refugees arrived from Jerusalem the week following Easter. The new relief hospital and orphanage creche are taxed to capacity. Army contracts will provide industrial employment. Trowbridge spent Easter in Jericho, welcoming many old friends among the Armenians deported from central Turkey via Salt. Following are some of the expressions heard from the exhausted exiles during the first ration distribution in Jericho:

"God bless America!"

"God sharpen King George's sword!"

"Your kindness is the first we have known in three years!"

"Can we find work in Jerusalem?"

"Where can we enlist?"

"It was a touching scene to see bereaved refugee families visiting Gethsemane and Calvary. All Christian sects have pledged the military governor to observe Easter, and to regard as holy places, Bethlehem and Jerusalem. There is concord and good cheer, and they are burying ancient bitter strifes. Four thousand Jews held an open air meeting on Mount Olive, April 11, and heard the British Zionist Commission; sane, earnest speeches, heartily cheered."

Sister Gardner also received the following from Representative William P. Borland, dated at Washington, May 1:

My Dear Madam: In response to your letter of April 25, I am sending you herewith a copy of House Joint Resolution No. 177 which proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in regard to polygamy, and which is pending before the house committee on the judiciary. When the measure comes up on the floor for consideration, I shall be glad to bear in mind the views of the Woman's Auxiliary as expressed at your recent convention.

"With kindest regards, I remain," etc.

The resolution referred to by Mr. Borland was introduced by Mr. Gillett, on December 7, 1917, and is as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each house concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States, namely:

"ARTICLE XVIII

"Section 1. Polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall not exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

We have inserted these letters in this column, to give our readers a realization that our responsibility as women does not end with discharging only the duties of our household, although we do feel that they come first. There is nothing about the duty of a mother which necessitates her being in ignorance of the important forward movements of the day, nor to prevent her from having an intelligent opinion concerning the same. Neither should she hesitate to recognize the fact that her influence may extend beyond the confines of her own home, and that if she can rule in the one wisely and well, she may also express that wisdom and efficiency in terms which are of wider value to the community about her.

We should be interested in the making of laws which are to govern us, and our children after us; we should feel that it is a privilege to understand what the lawmakers of our country are about, and, so far as our influence lies, try to convey to them whatever of light, encouragement, or conviction has come to us. You remember Ruskin said, of womanhood:

"What the woman is to be within her gates, as the center of order, the balm of distress, and the mirror of beauty, that she is also to be without her gates, where order is more difficult, distress more imminent, and loveliness more rare."

Thus may we not feel that our sisters at the convention took a well-conceived step into a kingdom rightfully theirs, when they adopted two such thoughtful resolutions—the one dealing with their God-given powers of comfort and "balm for distress," and the other with their not so well-recognized powers of "order," and propriety? If all laws were just, if all humanity dealt fairly and in love with each other, we might feel content to sit comfortably aside, and let others manage affairs for us; but when we know that this condition of right-dealing is not yet attained, that human nature still has too much of self interwoven into its fabric, are we then to be forgiven if we fail to lift our voices in protest or warning? God grant that the voice of the suffering ones of earth may arouse into finer and nobler action the better and higher powers of man, that they may reflect more truly the divine which is in all humanity, to the end that error shall be removed from the blinded world! Doing War Work at Home

(This is the first of a series of weekly articles on how mothers can help in Children's Year. This one is by Mrs. Max West.)

Women who are shut out of many of the more dramatic forms of war service because their domestic duties are exacting and make frequent or long-continued absence from home impossible have a special part to play in Children's Year, the Government campaign to save 100,000 babies and get a square deal for children.

The Federal Government, through the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, is asking particularly of mothers a patriotic service which will demand the united efforts of a great many American women for the year. The work began on April 6, 1918, but it will go on far beyond the year's limits; for its purpose is to make the children grow up strong in mind and body, able to "carry on." The third of our population who are children to-day will soon be men and women who must take their part in the gigantic tasks of reconstruction after the war, tasks which civilization and democracy demand shall be well done.

About one third of the drafted men examined for the Army in this country are rejected for physical defects, many of which might have been prevented or cured in infancy and early childhood if the parents had understood how it could be done. And the defects which disqualify a man for service in the Army hamper him in civil life as well.

Is it not obvious that a nation, which learns that so great a proportion of its young manhood is in something less than normal physical condition and that a large part of such weakness was easily to have been prevented, is blind and stupid if it permits such conditions to go on unchecked? So mothers especially are asked, as a patriotic service, to help make the citizenship of the future strong, efficient, unhandicapped by bodily imperfections. Mothers and fathers have not always been able to get for their children the advice of doctors and skilled nurses in guarding their children's health and in caring for the ailments that seem little and not worth bothering about. In this way many slight physical handicaps have been allowed to develop into serious defect. But the knowledge which we now have that such defects can often be prevented makes more than ever important and hopeful the work which mothers can do in safeguarding the conditions under which the present generation of children is growing up.

This is no small task which the women of America are being asked to undertake. More than 10,000,000 children under five years of age in the United States are just passing through the physically most hazardous years of the whole span of life. Mothers can do more for them now than can be done at any other period to correct curable defects and especially to start them along the road to normal and healthy development by proper food, careful attention to their hygiene, and by keeping close watch over them that war conditions shall not interfere with their welfare. And very often what their mothers can do for them now will determine their future usefulness as citizens.

In our work for America's babies we have England's splendid record before us; for by resolutely safeguarding her mothers, infants, and young children England brought her infant death rate for the second year of the war down to 91 deaths for every 1,000 births—a point lower than has ever been recorded before in that country, and, incidentally, one which is several points lower than the average even in time of peace for the part of the United States for which figures are available.

What are the dangers that threaten children—dangers made more than ever threatening by the strain of war conditions? What can mothers do to combat them? These are questions which will be discussed from time to time in this column.—Government Bulletin.

Women at Biennial Urged to Produce and Save Food

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, May 3.—"We stand with our backs to the wall. That call to the civilized world made by General Haig is being answered by the women of the civilized world," Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the National War Garden Commission of Washington, told members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in session here to-day.

"Women have been leaders in thrift. The women of France astonished the world when they helped pay off the debt following the Franco-Prussian war. In this war food and thrift go hand in hand. We must all set our minds to winning this war. The victory will be brought about if we have the ability to grow food and to save it. To the glory of England the 'chow' for the men in the trenches goes into them whether it is quiet or a raining hell of shells is falling in a sector.

"Our boys must get the same service. They are giving their lives; must they be allowed to worry whether food is coming to them or not? How are you going to answer that question? The answer is food as close to the kitchen door as possible. Plant it, can it, dry it, for the Hun hungers, and if you do not help to feed yourself you will help feed the Hun when he gets a strangle hold upon the resources of the world.

"When you leave this annual meeting will you not carry the message of food production and food saving wherever you go? The National War Garden Commission will send you free instruction in either or both. It will suggest how to organize for community work in canning and drying. You can help win this war right in your own home."—Omaha Bee.

Music at the General Conference

The music at the General Conference now passed into history marked a distinct step in the cultural progress of the church. It evidenced the fact that the church has attained some real growth during the past year, in musical appreciation and intelligence. The standard of music rendered was higher; the intelligence with which it was rendered was of a better order and the pleasure with which the people heard it was likewise more keen. All this is very gratifying, indeed, to those who have labored earnestly to accomplish this result.

Although the anthems of the 1918 conference series were well rendered and highly enjoyable, the piece de resistance of the entire conference was, of course, Mendelssohn's great sacred oratorio, Elijah. This difficult work, exceeding in that respect our previous oratorio, Handel's Messiah, was rendered with eminent credit to our musical forces. The intricacies and difficulties of this great tone tragedy had been mastered by the bloody sweat of hard labor and were rendered faithfully and conscientiously. The big choir, which at each of the two performances numbered over two hundred, was truly an item to warrant real pride. In its hands the majestic choruses rolled forth in grandeur and sublimity, losing not one whit of their tragic import or triumphant ring. This big choir formed a ready instrument in the hands of our general church chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, for the proper spiritual interpretation of this great masterpiece.

The arduous solo parts were most excellently rendered by Mrs. Blanche Allen-Needham, soprano, of Independence; Mrs. Raymond Havens, contralto, of Kansas City; Mr. Richard C. Smith, tenor, and Mr. Paul N. Craig, bass, of Lamoni. As to accompanists, Miss Marguerite Wickes, of Chicago, and Mr. Robert Miller, of Independence, served as pianists, and Miss Amy Winning, of Kansas City, as organist. All but one of the foregoing, Mrs. Havens, were members of the church.

Altogether, the event was a most auspicious one in the annals of the church's musical progress.

The most unique musical event of the conference, as well as a most interesting one, was the patriotic song service held on the Sunday evening of the 14th of April. Brother Hoxie is under Government appointment and holding the rank of first lieutenant, one of a commission on training camp activities, and is the song director of the League Island Navy Yard, at Philadelphia. Printed copies of the songs used in the camps were supplied to the audience and under Brother Hoxie's direction were sung as the men in the ranks sing them. The inspirational enthusiasm engendered by these songs swept the vast multitude assembled, and many a bosom swelled and many an eye was moist under the glow of patriotic fervor. We believe the fires of true patriotism burn the more brightly in the hearts of many who heard this service.

Altogether the conference was a memorable as well as an epochal one, musically.

The Song and the Soldier

"We want bullets and mouth organs," writes Tommy Adkins to the folks at home. The same request in all the languages of warring Europe is expressed in thousands of letters from the trenches of France and Belgium, of Russia, the Balkans, and Asia. For the army of to-day needs music as much as it needs ammunition.

It is music that eases the tension of existence in riddled trenches and exposed positions and makes the long, hot march endurable. Officers, recognizing the sedative influence of music in this most nerve-racking of all wars, have encouraged the men to sing and have made urgent appeals for banjos, whistles, and all sorts of small instruments.

And the music itself is different from that used in other wars. No longer is it the thrilling bugle strain, the stirring trumpet call. That is now reserved for the recruiting station and the barracks at home. The man at the fronts gets most comfort from music of a gentler nature.

THE KIND OF SONGS THEY SING

If, as Kipling says, "The soul of a regiment is in its songs," it becomes a matter of considerable interest to study the musical preference of the various fighting armies.

With the English and Canadians the jolly, robust tunes are the order of the day, and "Marching through Georgia" and "John Brown's Body" vie in popularity with "Tipperary." American love songs as well as American marching songs are favorites with the "Tommys," for "the sweetest girl" is, of course, a conspicuous figure in his lyrics. Our boys when they get over to Europe will find the musical fare pretty much what they have long been accustomed to.

The Russian armies are unique in fighting to the accompaniment of majestic choral music. Journalists returning from the eastern front report that one of the most inspiring experiences they have known was to hear a Russian Army corps render one of these chorals. Almost all the men are gifted with fine voices. They also sing the lovely folk melodies for which their land is famous.

The German Armies reflect the musical development of their country in the vast number of beautiful songs they sing. Schubert, Schumann, and a host of modern composers supply the musical needs of the Kaiser's men. And, strange as it may seem, the theme of their songs is not "blood and iron," nor even the patriotic appeal, but reveries of home life, golden haired maidens, and blue-eyed children.

Love is the burden of the Frenchman's song, in war as in peace, and when he is not singing the "Marseillaise" he is chanting the praises of Fifi, or Nanon, or Lisette. If he be from Brittany and the northern provinces his song is of a sturdier character; if he is from Picardy and the south it is sadder and more passionate.

So the armies of all nations to-day turn in their music away from the thrill and in horror of the battlefield to the home scenes and the home ties, each in its own peculiar fashion. These are the things even the staunchest comrades are loath to discuss with one another, but where speech fails, music speaks. And it is this bond of music, this socializing influence of song that, in victory or defeat, does more than anything else to confirm that feeling of brotherhood and unity that strengthens the poor, human spirit for the superhuman task before it.

So it is throughout the world. Music fulfills a need nothing else can supply.

American Church Music Originated on Leather

The organ as well as all other musical instruments were looked upon as devices of Satan in days of yore, and were not admitted into the church until the 1700's. To a New England tanner of prerevolutionary days we owe the element of music in church services to-day.

William Billings, father of American church music, worked away at tanning shoe leather, but his occupation did not dampen his creative ability. His head was full of a medley of tunes that wanted to get out, one by one, and live an individual existence. So he began writing his themes on strips of leather, and even chalking them on the rough boards of the tannery walls.

Billings himself was a queer mixture. Half blind, lame and paralytic, his poetic and musical talent remained intact and unhampered. Demosthenes, though a stammerer, became one of the world's greatest orators; and so with Billings, who, not over-kindly treated by Nature, won for himself the title of "Father of American church music" by sheer enthusiasm for music and characteristic yankee persistence and nerve.

PIONEER IN INTRODUCING MUSIC IN CHURCH SERVICE

His creative ability soon altered the regulation Sunday at church. He published a small volume of his songs, introduced cello playing into church choirs, taught congregations how to start singing to the note of his primitive "pitch pipe"—in short veritably educated the church-goers up to his rough, pioneer standard of musical appreciation.

Such a church program was a startling order of events in those days of the New England Puritan. Few churches at that time indulged in anything more than the stiff, old Puritan psalms and chants. It was only around the 18th century that ministers were beginning to appreciate the spiritual and social value of singing songs together.

Billings paved the way up to the point where musicians of finer culture and greater talent could carry out American church music to the heights it has since attained.

Musical Musings

The love for music, like charity, should begin at home.

Trying to raise musical children in unmusical homes is like attempting to grow sunflowers in the shade.

Considering the fact that most children are musical, what a sad commentary on parents and music teachers it is that most adults are not!

Children cannot very well choose their parents nor parents their children, but both can exercise considerable control over their musical environment.

It is certainly strange that some of the most sanguinary homes have indecent "rags" called music littered all over their parlors.

If there were as many chamber music circles in our homes as there are bridge parties what a generation of music lovers we should become!

LETTER DEPARTMENT

"A Higher Standard Urged"

If I were asked to preach, I would like to use as a text parts of a paragraph found in the HERALD of April 17, 1918. The whole paragraph reads thus:

"The priesthood meeting on Wednesday morning was as usual, well attended, and in charge of President F. M. Smith, who occupied the time. He discussed in detail some of the criticisms arising from the weekly letters, on the standard of living. He was forceful in the presentation of the thought that we should have a higher social standing in many instances than we now maintain, as representatives of the church and men of God. While sacrifice is essential and therefore commendable, there are times and places where penuriousness is the height of folly. He urged that our people do not swing the pendulum too far, yet seek to think in larger terms than we have hitherto done. The calling of men to the priesthood by inspiration and a sacred observance of the principle governing was brought out and a higher standard urged."

Also a part of another paragraph taken from an account of another meeting: "President Smith addressed them on the great necessity of care in grammar and spelling."

Italics are mine, and would be my text. Note the first sentence in italics first. I have oftentimes wondered what representative men of the church, when visiting us, think of the personal appearance of some of us, especially the priesthood. I have watched, as it were with one eye, the well-groomed visitor and with the other the local man as they have been introduced to each other. The latter perhaps with a week's growth of beard, or a shiny rubber collar—or none at all—or perhaps no tie; shoes that never had been blackened; a suit of clothes that had never been brushed—much less cleaned and pressed—and looking as if it had hung on a bed post from Sunday to Sunday. Maybe presently such an one is asked to assist, preside, or even preach.

Last Sunday a Catholic couple ate supper with us. Did we bring them to church with us afterward? No, we certainly did not! Were we justified in not inviting them? I think so! Not very long ago, I succeeded in interesting a gentleman from Saint Louis in our work. His father was formerly a Methodist minister. He was stopping in the city over Sunday, but instead of inviting him out to our meetings, I asked him to look our people up when he got back to Saint Louis, trusting that conditions were better there. Our neighbors are Presbyterians and are dissatisfied with their religion. Do we ask them to our preaching services? No! I cannot.

This is what worries me: Am I justified, as one of the local men and an officer of the branch, in trying to rectify such conditions? I'm sure I would offend some if I spoke to them of their personal appearance: and yet they themselves wonder why we have such small congregations, half the Saints even, not coming to our meetings. Of course, it is chiefly those of the "higher standard" who stay away. And can one wonder at it, if, when attending last, they sat behind some one whose head was unkempt, or even scurfy, or whose neck and ears were anything but clean: and wishing to ignore such things they look away to the preacher just in time to observe him using a dirty red handkerchief. What are their thoughts if such men pass the sacrament? Or if they hear them preach of Zionic themes? And when they hear them testify to being blessed with the gifts of the gospel, what do they think?

Maybe some will think I am pessimistic, but even if I am, I cannot shut my eyes to facts! I always think of how we will affect strangers who come to our meetings occasionally. We want them to come again, therefore a good impression must accompany the gospel message. Such conditions must be eliminated before Zion can be redeemed, I take it. The poor have the gospel preached unto them, but poverty is no excuse for such conditions existing.

And let whoever cares to, comment on the faults of not speaking loud enough and of speaking too loud. One of the priesthood of this branch cannot be heard all over the church when he starts to preach, another drives and keeps people away because he speaks too loudly.

ONE WHO CARES.

Some Chimes of the Times

[The following is taken from the first issue of the new publication put out by the Kirtland District, Kirtland Mission Bells, dated April 6, 1918.—EDITORS.]

Once upon a time a kindly disposed secular church official called at this office to convert us from our unfortunate calling and belief. As he was an authority by reason of extended experience and mission work in Utah we conceded his claim to be qualified to give us good advice for our future activities:

We plead we were willing to discard any wrong if he would aid us in filling the void with righteousness. What denomination should we take up with, then, for the Latter Day Saints, if discarded? Oh, any of them—they were all good! The answer not being definite enough we begged the privilege of calling the roll in order of importance! Catholic? Oh, my! no—just the Protestant churches, he meant. Presbyterians? Methodists? Baptists? Congregationalists? All good, all very good! United Brethren? Lutheran? Unitarian? Christian Science? Millennial Dawn?—Hold on! He—well, he wasn't quite so sure about the status of the last few—and some others!

So we asked him if he would help us by listing in two columns the elect churches and the dubious ones, but the great authority was also dubious about his ability to do so! Then we gently suggested that other great authorities were at times just as unable to define the true standard which we contend can only be found in the original guide book, the New Testament.

If we are to take anything less than therein recorded—who shall say how much less? If we are to attach more than therein demanded, who shall set the extent? The doing of these very things has brought in the famous 57 varieties of creeds: Religion not preserved but in a pickle; no wonder many honest men turn sour on all religious thought.

It is a world of professing Christians that is torn with war—but which one of the powerful churches is strong enough to stretch forth its arm and save its own and all other communicants? If it were a Christianity united on the principles of the gospel as given to the church he set in order, it would give its peace to the war-stricken world in an hour!

The trouble is, in our humble opinion, that the great mass of Christians have only made a partial acceptance of his law—that which has not suited them they have ignored, that which they felt it lacked in ritual has been added, till there are enough various forms of church doctrine that any kind of man ought to be able to find one to his exact tastes, but they are losing out faster than ever, because the spiritual food is not supplied—"there is a famine for the word of God." If each of several churches shall deny one part of his doctrine (which, he said, was his Father's) together they have denied it all!

Now, then, let us find the old path; let us measure up with the New Testament pattern in detail; let us be satisfied with naught but the very best when we seek a spiritual home, a social circle for our children, or would exercise the nobler side of our character, let us "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good," the old battle cry of the Latter Day Saints.

Christ gave a perfect organization, to perfect a certain condition among his people; anything short of that perfect order will not bring the hoped for results. The poor are to have the gospel; it will work its perfect way until "no poor shall be found among them." We see the working out of this beautiful principle in our work. Unselfishness must take the place of the spirit of selfishness (Babylon)—where every man seeks but his own interest, ignoring the universal right.

The day is coming, and now is, when every true man presseth into the kingdom. Prejudice is being dispelled everywhere where the Saints live true to their calling.

Additions to Roll of Honor Christmas Offering

We are rather disappointed in not receiving a greater number of additional names to add to the Roll of Honor, for we are quite sure that many more of the Sunday schools have a pro rata that would entitle them to be listed on this Roll of Honor. However, we have no way of determining, and as the schools have failed to advise us we shall have to be content in reporting what we have.

We have received quite a number of very good letters telling us of the splendid starts made this year, in fact some of the Sunday schools report that they already have more than they sent in last year, while others are working hard and will reach last year's total long before July 1. What is your school doing? Remember the amount we are going to raise this year is $100,000. Quite a sum, is it not? yet not so much when we distribute it around to all the schools. But, let us not consider the amount large, let us simply think of it as our goal, our aim, our bit, and let us do as our good Nation recently did—"Go over the top" with an oversubscribed total. Remember—those who say "We can't," without trying, acknowledge defeat without an effort to win; they are quitters—surely we have no such people in our good organization.

Now, all together, let us take the first line trenches by July 1—that means only $50,000—and fortify ourselves for the final drive and complete victory—$100,000 before January 1, 1919.

A Testimony of Healing

[Sister A. McKenzie, of Sarnia, Ontario, had occasion to desire the testimony of Sister Maggie Macgregor written out for her personal comfort. She sent us the same and we publish it for the faith it may inspire in many others who are suffering or may suffer from affliction or accident.—EDITORS.]

When I was in Stonington, Maine, about eight years ago, assisting my companion in the missionary work, the following incident occurred. A great interest had been awakened in the town and my companion and I were busy from morning till night each day visiting and talking gospel to both Saints and outsiders. This continued for several weeks, we leaving our boarding place and going about two miles to town and busying ourselves among the people. Then we would go home again after preaching service.

One dark night my companion was called to the telephone and requested to come to administer, and I came home with the landlady, Sister Marshall, and went out sometime later to see if my companion was coming. I went down the steps from the elevation on which the house stood. I could not see the steps but I knew there were six of them, as I had counted them, but I forgot that this last step was a big round rock and I stepped out expecting to reach solid footing, and missing the stone, came down full weight on the side of my foot.

I knew I had a terrible sprain, the pain was so intense. I did not mind the suffering I would have to endure nearly so much as the interruption in my work. I had honestly thought I was spending my time profitably for the work and had believed the Lord had blessed my efforts to do good. But I could not reconcile these pleasant thoughts with my accident. Why did the Lord permit me to fall if my work was acceptable to him? Why must I lie idle for a couple of weeks if my services were pleasing to him? As I lay there in too great pain to arise, my heart sank. Had I been deceived in my labors, and had the Lord taken this way to keep me at home? The thought was unbearable.

By and by I crawled into the house and Sister Haskell hastily ministered to my wants, getting me hot water and consecrated oil. I bathed my foot which was now swollen badly and then anointed it with oil. As I did so I said mentally, "Lord, if my work here has been acceptable to you, cause that foot to get better so I can walk to church tomorrow night."

I retired, determined to do nothing to my foot but anoint it with oil and bathe it. It pained me all night and in the morning I could not even rest it on the floor. They helped me downstairs and again good, kind Sister Haskell got me warm water and oil. I anointed it and offered the same prayer. Instantly the Spirit of the Lord rested on me, and I said to Sister Haskell, "I shall not be surprised if I walk to church on that foot to-night." She laughed and said, "Oh, no, you will do well if you can go Sunday."

I said nothing, but my faith was increasing. My companion went off alone and I put in the morning writing. By noon I could let my foot rest on the floor when I was sitting. By evening the swelling had gone down so I could force my foot into my shoe by leaving the lacing wide apart.

I told Brother and Sister Haskell I was going to try to go to church with them. I was still very lame and they tried to persuade me to not attempt such a thing. But to me it was the test of God's acceptance of my work and I was bound to try.

I got ready and started and when about four rods from the house all pain left and I felt as light on foot as a deer. I almost skipped over that two miles of rocky road to church and was so happy I could scarcely contain myself. I felt that God had acknowledged my work among the people and that was worth enduring a dozen sprains to me. My foot and ankle became blue like a bruise for about two weeks and remained swollen, but I suffered no more pain, and never limped a particle again though I was on my feet as usual, going two miles to town and then from house to house all day every day. But it was exceedingly happy work, for my confidence had not only been restored but increased.

There is no work like the Lord's work to make joyous the heart.

Your sister,

MAGGIE MACGREGOR.

OXFORD, WEST VIRGINIA, April 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: While I sit here this Sunday afternoon, I am pondering over the warring nations, "nation against nation and kingdom against kingdom." While we have been looking forward to this for a long time, now it is here upon us, and the end is not yet.

And who shall be able to stand? Dear Saints, if ever there was a time to keep the camp fire blazing, to be ready at a word, it is now. Let us shake off the coals from our garments, and arise in the strength of the Lord. We feel now that other great things will be added to the many which have already come. Let us watch and pray, and stand in holy places.

When we think of the many boys at the front ready to fight for liberty and freedom how our prayers should be lifted to God in their behalf! May peace soon cover the whole earth.

We are located five miles from Cabin Run Branch, where we are keeping hotel and post office. We miss the Saints very much. "Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints, how dear to our hearts are communion with Saints."

We took the Daily during conference. We saw that only two had been sent to labor with us. Pray for more workers to be sent into the vineyard, for the harvest is ripe in iniquity and sin.

I was at Clarksburg District conference last fall. We had a grand conference. Oh, may we be able to meet together often and enjoy His blessings He has in store for those who are worthy.

There are many of the old elders, such as Brethren Samuel Brown, McConaughy, Stubbart, from whom we would like to hear through the HERALD. They have labored here and we still remember them.

With love and best wishes for all in their new fields of labor, I remain,

Your sister,

FLORENCE WILLIAMS.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO, May 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from a missionary tour up north in Haliburton County. Visited Cameron, Gooderham, and Highland Grove. At the last named place I spent four weeks, baptized three, organized one Sunday school with a full set of officers, and settled existing trouble. Also established a weekly prayer meeting to be in charge of Brother Huff and Brother Simmons, blessed two children there and one at Gooderham.

We had good attendance all through our services and believe much good was done, both within the church and with those outside, and we look for further additions to the church later on. I felt well in presenting the message of love and pray God to give the increase.

Upon my return home, I found that our worthy Brother Laval Stoner had passed away. The cause of his death was heart trouble. He was a very honorable man, a true Christian, but had been misunderstood and hindered in his labor of love for the church and his Master, but through it all he remained true to his covenant and calling, and has passed on to his reward. He leaves a wife and several sons and daughters and near relatives and a host of friends to mourn his demise.

He was laid to rest to-day; Bishop Evans preached a masterly sermon. The church was pretty well filled and some have expressed themselves as well pleased with the sermon, and we hope much good will result therefrom. We extend to the wife and family our deepest sympathy in this their sad hour of bereavement, and pray God's blessing to rest and abide with them to comfort and to cheer them through life.

THE LONE NEPHITE.

FORT RILEY, KANSAS, May 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: "To be or not to be, that is the question" that has confronted me for the past three weeks. A Power higher than man's has, it seems, decided that I shall be for some time longer, at any rate. I have been trying to thank him for this blessing and I also thank those who have remembered me in their prayers.

For three weeks I have been a pneumonia patient in the base hospital at Fort Riley and have learned something of one of the unpleasant sides of the soldier's life. I am sure that just now I could write a volume on the subject: "Pneumonia and hospital life." I am going to try, however, to forget most of it, and only remember the cheery nurses, doctors, and patients; and the hardly concealed desire of the convalescent soldiers to return to their companies and serve their country.

I expect to return to my company in a few days and resume training. In the meantime I'll be trying to serve my heavenly Father with increased faithfulness.

Yours in the faith,

JAMES N. AUTES.

HIGHLAND GROVE, ONTARIO, May 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: This is my first letter to you, but I would like to write a few lines in favor of Elder Tomlinson who was in our midst for five weeks. But I am sorry to say he has left us, much to our disapproval and that of the people of this community.

Elder Tomlinson is a man surely endowed with the Spirit and very industrious. When in our midst he baptized three, and before going away organized a Sunday school, which when he left two weeks ago consisted of thirteen members and in two Sundays had increased to thirty-six members. We think it is progressing excellently for so small a beginning. But there is one drawback to our Sunday school work which others may have noticed as well. The passages referred to in the Quarterlies are mostly taken from the Inspired Version of the Bible and the people here are not thoroughly acquainted with the latter-day work, therefore acquire mistaken views of the version as they say we have a Bible published to suit ourselves.

If we get the elder to come again, our Sunday school cannot fail, but if he doesn't I'm afraid we are undertaking a serious task to teach the people from the Inspired Version before they are made acquainted with the fact that it has a definite place in modern literature.

Now you will understand our difficulties and one of the reasons we desire that Brother Tomlinson come again in the near future and explain the gospel in its fullness.

Yours, very sincerely,

RAY HUFF.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Owen Sound District; Greeting: During the past year we have done remarkably well in this district but there is still much to be accomplished.

I have not been able to meet with as many of the Saints in this district as I would have liked, owing to circumstances over which I have no control. We trust, however, that the Saints will not think that this is neglect on my part. I hope to be able to visit more branches in the future.

I would be pleased to have the names of all in this district on our books as having contributed toward God's work. Nearly all the branches have a solicitor who will be glad to issue receipts for tithes, offerings, etc. Those who have not access to a branch solicitor kindly send to me, and receipt will be promptly issued. Let us all assist in the upbuilding of Zion. Shall we have your cooperation?

Your servant for the Master's cause,

JAMES A. MORRISON, Bishop's Agent.

KINCARDINE, ONTARIO, Box 41.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Western Oklahoma District and the Panhandle of Texas; Greeting: It has pleased the appointing powers to assign us to your part of the country. You will notice by the letter "M" which follows our names that our work is to be that of missionaries. That means, of course, that we will deal largely with scattered Saints, and only incidentally with those who live within the limits of organized branches. For this reason we would be pleased to hear from the isolated Saints. We are desirous of starting and as far as practicable establishing the work in as many new localities as we can. To this end we desire and ask your assistance, and while this is especially true of Saints who live in localities remote from branch organizations, yet district and branch officers can be of assistance also in the suggestions they may be able to offer in regard to the needs of the work in places known to them. We, therefore, invite correspondence from all, local officers, members in branches, and members out of branches. Some of the Saints who live in the old established branches may have relatives or friends who live in localities where our work has never been introduced. There may also be Saints who do not take the church papers and who will not, therefore, see this notice. These we would like to hear from through others.

There must of necessity be some cooperation between the missionaries and the branches, for the former depend upon the Saints, both in and out of the branches, for means to carry on their work. Gospel work depends upon democratic action, that is, so far as possible, action by the whole. Another expression indicating this kind of labor is "team work." "Democracy" and "team work" are modern expressions, and their practical application is essential to present-day success. For this reason we desire your correspondence which means your suggestions and substantial cooperation.

Elder Vanderwood is somewhat familiar with the field, having been with you before, but Elder Barmore is entirely unacquainted. To facilitate our relations and mutual labors our addresses are given below:

Elder J. E. Vanderwood, 1302 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri, and Elder A. C. Barmore, Hugoton, Kansas, care J. D. Barmore.

Praying that God's blessings may attend this year's work, we are,

Your brethren in Christ,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.
A. C. BARMORE.

The Higher Powers of Man

We feel it an unusual privilege to present for sale to the church a new book of the character of The Higher Powers of Man, by President Frederick M. Smith, Ph. D.

While it was not written to be a popular seller, being the dissertation submitted to the Clark University at the completion of his work to secure a doctor's degree, it will find a popular response with trained minds all over the church and among able thinkers who are not members with us.

It proceeds in a masterful manner to elucidate the wonderful yet not commonly understood phenomenon of "second breath."

A most convincing bibliography has been consulted and is presented for the benefit of those who wish to follow incidental references to their sources.

To own and assimilate such a book instills an inward dignity and inspirational impulses which in a measure satisfy our innate longings for greater comprehension.

The scope of the book is rather extensive, an explanation of the ecstatic feelings occupying the most prominent place.

The binding is in beautiful green cloth, lettered in white. The type is large and clear. There are 232 pages. The price is $1.25, postpaid. The proceeds from the sale of the book go to the church.

ADDITIONAL ACCREDITING EXTENDED TO GRACELAND

Graceland authorities take great pleasure in announcing that the State has extended further recognition to Graceland in the way of accrediting the work done in her commercial department. The work of the college and academy have already been fully standardized and officially accredited.

Beginning with the school year 1918-19 a combined academic-commercial course will be offered, graduates from which will be entitled to full admission without examination to the State University of Iowa and all other colleges and universities belonging to the American Association of Colleges and Universities, and will at the same time prepare one for a business life as stenographer, steno-type operator, or book-keeper. This combination has not heretofore been possible, but now, due to the excellence of the work offered at Graceland, students will be able to reduce the period of their preparation one year by enrolling in the combined course, taking in addition to the required work in the academy the following electives: Stenography or stenotypy, salesmanship, commercial arithmetic, commercial law, typewriting, bookkeeping, spelling, and penmanship.

On graduation from such a course one will be able either to continue in college or university, using his ability as a stenographer, stenotype operator, or bookkeeper to assist him through his college course, or if he finds it necessary to do so he can enter at once into active life in the commercial world.

The demand for well-educated and efficient stenographers is very great at present. They can enter the Government service at beginning salaries of from $1,000 to $1,200 per year.

The next college year at Graceland opens September 5, 1918.

Write to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for a free catalogue, fully explaining the above course as well as all the other regular courses offered in the college, academy, bookkeeping, shorthand, stenotypy, oratory, vocal and instrumental music, including piano, violin, band and orchestral instruments, wireless and home economics courses.

A COORDINATED CONFERENCE

The Lamoni Stake is announcing in this issue that it will hold conventions and conference on June 6 to 9. Details involved in this announcement will be sent direct to the branches and communities involved throughout the stake, but we are sure our readers will all be interested in the fact that this will be a new-style arrangement, along the lines of the recently adopted coordination idea. When the people come together on Thursday evening it will be as a stake conference; when it closes it will be likewise. During the four days they are together, the three auxiliaries will likely have as much time as they have ordinarily had, at convenient and desirable times, but with the added advantage that they are recognized as strong departments of the church, worthy the attendance and definite interest of every member of the church. The heads of the departments will have every opportunity to look after their interests, but it will be in conjunction with the stake officials. There will be harmony and unity, we are sure, for every officer is willing and glad to try out the new arrangement, which, though not providing for districts and stakes, will no doubt soon come to that. There is to be a vacancy in the presidency of the stake Religo; the president of the stake is being asked to present a nomination. The new president will be asked to nominate a successor to take the place of the retiring secretary. Thus it will be seen that new ground is being broken, but the Saints are glad to make any changes that will improve our gatherings, which this no doubt will do.

If there is a member of the church in the Saint Louis Branch by the name of Stahl, he or she is requested to communicate with Eva Milligan, 297 Alfred Avenue, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada.

THE AUTUMN LEAVES

"Let me congratulate you on the excellence of the May Autumn Leaves," is the way one discriminating brother expressed himself recently to the Leaves editors. Another puts it: "For quite a while I have belonged to the church, taking the HERALD and Ensign," and supposing that was all that I needed, but I got hold of a sample copy of the Autumn Leaves last fall, and now I wouldn't think of being without it. It is bright and cheery, with excellent stories and comments—simply great, I tell you." If there are others like that, get acquainted by asking for a free sample copy, or better still, send in a dollar for a year's subscription.

MOTHER'S DAY AT LAMONI

The services in honor of the mothers of our land held at this place on the 12th were pleasingly successful. The speaker of the morning was Elder Hubert Case, and the special music was appropriate and well-rendered.

HISTORICAL SMITH HOUSES TO BE PRESERVED

Bishop B. R. McGuire and wife, J. W. Layton and wife, M. H. Siegfried and Bert E. Peterson, of Independence, Missouri, arrived here last Friday, driving through in a car. Mr. Layton and wife will make their home here. They will occupy the old Mansion House, recently occupied by John Kendall and family. Mr. Layton will be caretaker of the Joseph Smith properties which are owned by the Latter Day Saints. The Latter Day Saints are contemplating extensive improvements to the Smith properties. The old Mansion will be newly weather-boarded, new floors will be put in and it will be fixed up generally. The old Smith homestead will be treated in a similar manner, and the Riverside Mansion will also be overhauled, the rooms tinted, etc. The stone foundation on the north side of the Riverside Mansion will also be pointed out with cement so it will be kept intact. The Latter Day Saints recently decided to improve these premises thoroughly, the idea being to preserve them. They expect to spend several thousand dollars in the work. This is an act that is to be commended and the people of Nauvoo should and no doubt will appreciate it. It was high time something should be done as the buildings were fast going to wreck. Elder Arthur Allen, of Independence, Missouri, who came here a week ago, will superintend the work. Mr. Allen has charge of the ministerial work in the Nauvoo District, comprising two counties in Illinois, three in Missouri, and eight in Iowa. He will make Nauvoo his headquarters.—The Nauvoo Independent, May 15, 1918.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

There is one book which should be on the reading table of every member, that he may become entirely conversant with its teachings: the Book of Mormon. It was printed and in circulation before the church was organized in 1830. It contains information which is not to be found in any other book, and is the only one of its kind in the world. There are a number of bindings to be had, but the most popular is the No. 11, cloth binding, at 90 cents each. The next one is No. 12, in full leather, a very durable binding, at $1.40, both postpaid.

MOTHER'S DAY AT LOGAN, IOWA

Mr. C. L. Crow reports a successful Mother's Day program at Logan, with the chief address by Elder W. R. Adams. The church decorations were profuse, in lavender and white. An offering was taken, totalling $48, which will be turned into the Christmas offering. The details of the program are interesting but too extensive to be listed in full here.

ORDINATION OF A BISHOP AT DES MOINES

President F. M. Smith visited Des Moines, Iowa, and held services on the 5th, at which time Elder E. O. Clark was ordained a bishop, the ordination having been provided for by the 1917 General Conference. A large attendance was had, people coming from a number of the outlying branches in the district to hear President Smith preach, morning and evening.

EDITORIAL

THE TESTING OF WOODROW WILSON

In July of 1915 the writer was called upon to deliver a Fourth of July oration at Lamoni, Iowa. At that time we made a certain statement regarding President Wilson. The oration was published in the Lamoni Chronicle. In the published version will be found this paragraph:

I say our President Wilson, because I believe he is the president of all the people. . . . At the last presidential election I was in the West and could not vote; but, nevertheless, I regard him as my president, and when he was nominated I felt a premonition so clear that it seemed to me prophetic that if he should enter the White House he would be tested in the midst of crises, as Abraham Lincoln was tested in the great crisis of the Civil War. . . . I believe and hope that he will stand the test.—Lamoni Chronicle, July 22, 1915.

At the time the premonition therein mentioned was given, we had no idea of the nature of the testing, as at the time the world was at peace. When the statement above quoted was made publicly it was made with some trepidation. But we are rather glad now that it was in print nearly two years before America entered the world war for democracy.

Probably the ordinary citizen can but dimly comprehend the terrible responsibilities and stupendous problems that have weighed upon the lonely "school-teacher" in the White House during the months preceding the declaration of war by the United States and in increasing measure since our entry in the conflict.

Every step taken of necessity involved the fate of millions of individuals; yes, of nations—even of the world at large. Yet the President has so governed his course that to-day he is clearly recognized as the chief of the Nation in fact as well as in office. He is regarded as the spokesman for the Nation, if not for all the entente allies. He and David Lloyd George are without doubt the most preeminent spokesmen for democracy in all the world.

A rather remarkable editorial appearing in the Chicago Herald-Examiner for May 21 might well be quoted in this connection:

President Wilson on foot, marching in the Red Cross parade in New York last Saturday, won such an ovation from the citizens banked along the curbs as New York had never before witnessed.

The incident was unparalleled in our history and impossible in the life of any other nation.

For the chief magistrate of 110,000,000 people, clad in the ordinary garb of a citizen, unguarded by soldiery, exposed to hostile attack, to march for block after block along crowded city streets in a time of war and unrest would be a thing unthinkable in any other land.

Nothing but cheers, applause, riotous demonstrations of public devotion and approval was manifested during the President's progress.

Nothing like it as a tribute to a man and a leader has been witnessed in this country.

Partly, no doubt, the enthusiasm of the throng was due to the real democracy of the President's action in making himself a part of the marching thousands.

But the tribute was a deeper one, a more significant one, than that alone.

It was the expression of the deep conviction of the people that the slender, intellectual-faced man marching behind the flag had grappled with and conquered the problems of the war.

It was a more enthusiastic tribute because it represented a conviction attained only after a long period of doubt and questioning. . . .

The cheers that arose from the tens of thousands who lined the streets were a tribute direct from the hearts of the people to the man in whom they repose complete confidence. They would be duplicated in any American city where Mr. Wilson might show himself under like circumstances.

We believe, and indeed hold it to be almost obvious, that God brought forward Abraham Lincoln to guide the destiny of America during the Civil War. He stood for the Union and was the great antagonist of slavery. Casting back to the words of Jesus concerning a house divided against itself, for his confirmation, he announced that the Nation could not long endure half slave and half free.

To-day slavery has reappeared in a more terrible form. The people of Belgium, of Northern France, and Northern Italy, of Servia, and Montenegro, and all parts of Russia overrun by the central powers are slaves. Men, women, and children are deported, separated, taken to fields, factories, trenches, and mines and set to work at the point of the bayonet. They are not bought or sold, they are taken without remuneration. The people of the South had a proprietary interest in their black slaves. They represented an investment. And with the possible exception of sugar plantation negroes, they were generally well fed and housed.

But Germany has no interest in her slaves excepting the temporary interest to get what she can out of them in a very short time. Indeed her interests, she assumes, are served by their death. Next to the violation of women, and the marshaling of hosts to tread down and slaughter free peoples, the most terrible crime of German imperialism is the restoration of human slavery in the twentieth century.

Against this President Wilson has raised his voice and declares that the world cannot continue half free and half slave. May we not believe that as God raised up Lincoln he has also raised up Woodrow Wilson in a time of even greater national and world peril. Future generations may hail him as another emancipator.

At least, one bright spot is found in the very real and very dark clouds that overshadow us as a Nation, and that is seen in the fact that we have a chief executive of high ideals and very extraordinary abilities in whom we can trust. True we may not trust far in the arm of flesh when not supported by divine direction. But in the past God has used good men for the accomplishment of his purposes in the political realm.

Let us pray then that he may support our President and continue to direct and uphold him until his work is done. And may he be spared the sad fate that befell Lincoln in the very hour when the clouds broke away and the sun shone forth. We shall need this man in the much greater work of "reconstruction" which will follow the war, and which was so apparently bungled in the South due to the loss of Lincoln's guiding hand.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MEMORIAL DAY

Our readers have doubtless already had their attention called several times to the proclamation of President Wilson, asking that Memorial Day be made a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer, throughout the country for peace and justice. No one can read it without being impressed with its deep reverence and devotion.

It would seem difficult to believe that any of our readers are still in the dark as to the real situation or the underlying causes and occasions of the war.

Very recently the Department of State published a translation of a Spanish document warning neutral nations against German frightfulness. The importance of this summary, which is printed elsewhere in this issue, rests in the fact that they have first established its German origin.

If such a story as this stood alone it would cause us to doubt its authority, but when it is coupled with positive proof before the war of such teachings by military leaders widely spread and widely taught, and coupled also with other authenticated documents likewise printed before our country entered the war, and to this is added the proven facts in Belgium, this document becomes but a single incident.

We may well pray for peace, but recognize that in absence of activity, death is not peace, or at least not such peace as the world needs. It needs peace with righteousness and justice.

We read and hear many things concerning the war and its length, some that it will go on for countless years, others that it will be at least three years or longer, until the United States can put every available man in Europe. Others say that it is doubtful if it will last another year. This has been said before, sometime it will be true.

But that is not a difficulty, for our duty is clear, to save as much food and work as much as possible, to invest as liberally as we can in the Government bonds, the Red Cross, and Y. M. C. A.; to do our part now. This is simple and is quite clear, regardless of the length of the war.

It is evident from a mechanical viewpoint that the quicker the strength of this country is exercised the sooner we realize the necessity of sacrifice and full support, the earlier will a true peace be possible. By a true peace we do not mean the triumph of one nation over another. We mean that the rights of the people should be upheld and the world protected in part at least from this awful bloodshed.

While we talk of peace and pray for peace, we have to note the destructive consequences following in Russia and in Italy in dealing with those who keep not a truce. Peace becomes something to achieve with great care and patience. We want no peace with treachery. Peace with treachery would be no gain.

There are many who give diverse interpretation of the prophecies of the Old Testament and of the Book of Revelation; some seek to find therein an early peace and then a great final battle; others that this war will continue until the end of the world. Yet it is plainly written that no man knows the day or the hour of His coming. It therefore becomes our part to do what we can for right, and to seek and pray earnestly for justice, for divine protection and for peace. That much is clear.

While there is a diversity of opinion in the interpretation of certain passages, while some look for the millennium, it is clear that it is not given to us to know when the divine event will be ushered in. It is given to us to do all that lies in our power to make the world better and a safer place for our children to live in.

Some complain because some of our boys are going forth to take their share of the burden as citizens and claim truly the superior mission of the church. Yet these lose sight of the fact, that only a very small percentage have as yet been called to the colors. There are enough left to carry on the work for the establishment of Zion and for the declaration of the divine mission. It is our duty to pray for those who go, for the way to open, and that we may be given wisdom for our present duties as church members and as citizens.

This is a time of religious revival in the belligerent nations, especially in western Europe. Some men see it in the outpouring of wrath for the sins of the nations, which are indeed great. It is our duty to pray for greater light and wisdom that our house may be set in order and men's hearts turn to higher ideals and a seeking of that which is sure, and enduring, rather than the pursuits of fleeting pleasures which destroy. While we pray for peace we should pray to deserve peace and also seek to make our own prayers effectual.

We should not seek peace with fear, nor a peace which in a physical sense could only be temporary and which in a spiritual sense would be a compromise with wrong. As we see it, a real peace is such as the Master declares: "My peace I leave unto you." This is a peace in the soul which is one of the consequences of right living and right thinking.

Believing as we do that the Lord raised up men to found this Government and that a just democracy is the divine order, we especially should pray for a lasting and enduring peace with righteousness. Humbly we should seek divine guidance and help for all our work, and especially for these grave problems before us now. Our prayers should be, not for our own way, but for divine protection and for his way that right may be manifest and the will of God done on earth. For this, we as a people can pray with deepest faith.

It is all right to view the mistakes we have made, but it is all wrong to become discouraged or despondent over the result of our mistakes, and cease our efforts; that would not be learning by what we have suffered.—H. E. Moler.

STEWARDSHIPS AND INHERITANCES

Definitely to establish a proper method of procedure in the application of all the features of the financial law of the church as given in the revelations for its guidance has for many years been the aim of the men chosen to occupy in the financial arm of the church.

Of late the time for the granting of inheritances and stewardships seemed to have drawn near, and a point reached where there might be unanimity of opinion on the definition of these terms and the application of just rules in their administration. The Order of Bishops have worked faithfully, in sessions at General Conference time and in the interim. Much progress was made, but there was still a lack of complete agreement.

Perhaps most of us hardly realize the complexity of the legal aspects of this subject, especially when it is recalled that the laws of the various States affecting the holding of property differ so widely. There must be contracts entered into; they must be valid in every respect and not affect deleteriously the title of any property or prove disadvantageous to either party in the affair. These features are considered for their full value by the bishopric of the church; and those having to do with the carrying out of the provisions of the law in future years will appreciate the care given the many details, some of which are yet to be decided.

But the big thing is that they have now arrived at a "working basis" from which we may expect the problem to rapidly near solution. Following the adjournment of the General Conference in Independence this spring, a number of meetings were held, participated in by the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, the three quorums of seventy, and the Order of Bishops. In such an aggregation one will find all phases of our church experience represented in the lives and experiences of those present. There were men who own and manage large industries and men who do not own their homes and have few financial interests. There were those with years of ripe experience to their credit and some young in years but eager to learn.

Naturally there would be those opposed to individualism and in favor of the group control. And of course men were there who considered the individual's rights too sacred to be hampered by group restrictions.

Last year a paper had been presented which defined the inheritance as one's home, to be held in fee simple, while the stewardship is one's business and may or may not be identical with the inheritance. It was proposed that the stewardship might or might not be held collectively or individually.

This year another proposition was presented, which provided that inheritances should be held in fee simple title, while the stewardship was to be held in group title or in trust, but none by individuals.

It will be seen by a comparison of the above ideas with those incorporated in the following, which was finally adopted, that a golden mean was arrived at. As one of those present put it, "The Doctrine and Covenants invariably speaks of an inheritance as including a stewardship." Such provision is made in the resolution adopted April 17:

In order to establish a working basis, be it resolved:

It is the opinion of the Order of Bishops that an individual should hold (in fee simple) his inheritance, which should include sufficient for the just wants and needs of himself and family, as may be decided by the individual and those whose duty it is so to decide.

All other property held by an individual or individuals should be held in trust for the benefit of themselves, their fellow church members, and the whole body of the church.

With such a basis from which to proceed, we are confident the church at large will move forward in great strides toward Zion's redemption.

WHAT SHALL THE EDITORS DO?

Ye editors note in many manuscripts received for publication misspelled words, wrong punctuation, grammatical errors and errors of facts. We hesitate to make alterations in an article without the author's consent, and yet it is our experience that when we write calling a brother's attention to such facts as these he takes it as a personal reflection and writes a very caustic, in fact, often almost an insulting letter in reply.

It is our experience that we find it difficult to go over our own manuscripts critically. We would appreciate having some one else do so before publication. Our interest is only that we should represent as correctly as possible the thought of the church. Frequently through some error the manuscript does not say what the writer really wishes to say.

Again, we are urged that it is best just to use the blue pencil and say nothing about it. We dislike very much to alter and then publish an article, so it would seem to the writer that the final recourse would be to accept or reject an article when we receive it, without explanation. That would be an easy way. But is it the best way?

The editor in chief has urged that we set a higher standard and require that articles be well written before they will be considered; that the time is here when we should expect and require better writing. This would be an easy way for the editor.

With manuscripts before us, we note not once but many times by different writers long, involved sentences, sometimes ten to twenty lines long and so involved that they mean nothing when analyzed, as the verb is omitted; or what is said in the first line is unsaid in the last. What is the use of writing unless one has something to say, and says it?

An article should not be longer than the subject would justify, and should avoid repetition; it should have continuity and move toward a definite end.

Many object on the grounds that the HERALD prefers no personal controversy. They claim the right to reply to many articles or editorials which appear, urging they are personal attacks, which in most cases are not intended nor thought of. We are open as a rule to one well-considered reply, but we note that a controversy quickly degenerates practically to "you're another." After one or at the most two articles have appeared on each side, scarcely any new matter, if any, is brought out. But the reply will be filled with "to the law and the testimony: Now, brother, I've got you there. Own up." The insinuation is made that the other writer in representing the law and testimony is not honest, instead of discussing the real question.

The HERALD welcomes affirmative discussion, attempts to demonstrate a clear fundamental principle, but when we are simply trying to tear down some one else's position it is not as a rule very profitable. Yet if the editor, seeing this, has courage to cut off further negative repetition, he is criticized and a few will remember for a long time. We want the truth.

The editors do not claim nor desire the right to be the sole writers or that their views alone must appear, or even that what they think is correct. We have published many articles which we personally considered wrong, or which presented a line of argument which did not appeal to us, as it is quite right that different views should be presented, provided always that they do not threaten greater injury than good. But the interest of the church and of the whole body is primary. Again we state that we welcome affirmative discussion and will be glad to have affirmative articles presenting a different point of view. But we are compelled to limit the number of replies, especially when they are negative and merely try to disprove and ridicule some one else's position.

I have seen the crowded, stuffy, gossipy congregation in their mourning uniforms, and have been forced to reflect with a sigh of relief that the world has indeed need of all this gloomy and incongruous formality, for the object it mourns has passed out of its hands at last, and it has but a poor shell to make mock form over.—Earnest A. ORIGINAL ARTICLES

WILL THE JEWS BELIEVE ON CHRIST BEFORE HE COMES?

The writer of this article believes that before Christ comes the gospel will be preached to the Jews and as a result of that belief they will gather to Palestine and Jerusalem, and it shall be our purpose to present the matter in an affirmative manner, and hope that some of the brethren will present the opposite view in the same manner, because I know some hold the opposite view to what I do.

For the Jews to gather to Jerusalem and to Palestine and the Latter Day Saints to Zion means more than just going there. The Lord has never done any great work without leaders. When he wanted to bring the children of Israel out of Egypt he sent Moses and inspired him for the great task. Moses organized them into a great government, a great army, and the Lord says that the restoration of Israel will be a greater event (Jeremiah 16: 14-17). The Lord will send hunters and fishers to seek them out from all parts of the world, that must mean his ministry. Paul said the deliverer would come out of Zion (Romans 11: 26) and what will deliver them from their long night of spiritual darkness? Surely it will be the gospel of Jesus Christ as preached by his servants sent forth from Zion, where the prophet and apostles of the church are found. The law says that the twelve apostles are to regulate the affairs of the church in all the world, to the Jews as well as to the Gentiles (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12), and in Church History, vol. 1, p. 549, Joseph Smith said, "And they [the twelve] are to travel and preach among the Gentiles until the Lord shall command them to go to the Jews." When the gospel is taken to the Jews the arm of the Lord will be revealed in power. (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.)

In the preface to the Book of Mormon we are informed that one of the purposes of the book is to convince the Jews that Jesus is the Christ.

In Mormon 2: 39 we read about the plates being hidden away, and that in the Lord's own due time they would come forth. Commencing with verse 40 and including verse 42 we find the following:

And this is the commandment which I have received; and behold they shall come forth according to the commandment of the Lord, when he shall see fit, in his wisdom. And behold they shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his most beloved, his great and eternal purpose, in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel, to the land of their inheritance, which the Lord their God hath given them, unto the fulfilling of his covenant.

We notice two things are promised in this prophetic statement: First, that the book is to go forth to persuade the Jew that Jesus is the Christ. Second, that the Father may bring about his great purpose to gather the Jews and all Israel to the land of their inheritance, which is Palestine. (Jeremiah 16: 15; Ezekiel 34: 13; 37: 21.)

In 3 Nephi 9: 69-71 the following statement was made by Jesus while he was talking to the Nephites:

And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them, and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name. Then shall their watchmen lift up their voice; and with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye. Then will the Father gather them together again, and give unto them Jerusalem for the land of their inheritance.

Three things are prophetic in their nature as found in the above quotations, that they will believe the gospel, see eye to eye, and be gathered to Jerusalem.

The Prophet Nephi made the following prediction concerning the Jews, as found in 2 Nephi 7: 12:

But behold, thus saith the Lord God: When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance.

In that statement of the prophet a time is set forth when they shall be restored to the land which God had promised to them, and it is made on condition that they believe on Jesus Christ.

Again the same prophet speaks concerning what the Lord will do for the Jews as found in 2 Nephi 12: 85, 86:

And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightful people.

In the above quotation the gathering follows their belief in Jesus Christ.

In Doctrine and Covenants 45 Christ is represented as talking to the disciples when he was with them on the Mount of Olives, and he tells them of a series of events that are to happen down to the end of time. In the seventh verse he tells of the resurrection of the saints and in the ninth verse it represents the Jews as asking him about the wounds in his hands and feet. We must not forget that this in its chronological order occurs after the resurrection of the saints. I will make no comment, but let the reader study out what it means.

The writer has observed that public speakers and writers are sometimes confused, or make confused statements, in regard to the generation in which important events will transpire preceding the coming of Christ. There are two generations mentioned by Christ when talking about the events connected with the restoration of Israel and his coming. In Doctrine and Covenants 45:4 the generation when the times of the "Gentiles come in," which was 1830, and the generation when the "times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" is another event. In the last clause of paragraph three we learn that the Jews are to be gathered in the generation in which the "times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" and in Luke 21:32 (Inspired Translation) Christ says that that generation will not pass until all be fulfilled, and he is talking about his coming. The "times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled" when Jerusalem is no longer "trodden down of the Gentiles" (Luke 21:24).

There are always two parts to any great work that the Lord has to do, the time of preparation and of the actual doing of the work. When Columbus discovered America and immigrants came over to settle up the country and our Government was finally set up, it was all preliminary to the restoration of the gospel and the gathering of his Saints to Zion. So the great work that is now going on in all the world is a step in the preparation for the restoration of Israel. The gathering of the Jews now going on in Palestine is only preliminary to what will come by and by when they accept the gospel and do the great work under the leadership of men called and inspired of God. It will then be a "marvelous work and a wonder." In 1 Nephi 3:237 we are informed when the work of the Father will commence in restoring Israel. It follows important events stated in the preceding verses.

Because that force is eternal and perpetual, one would hardly argue that the church of God was to continue. The same might be said of heat and cold; light and darkness; sound, air, etc. Man can use these forces to his great advantage, but he does not always do so. The forces that pertain to our spiritual natures are also immutable and unchangeable; but man does not always honor the conditions.—J. W. Peterson.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES—Part 18

BY J. F. MINTUN

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Many of the existing and some of the extinct church organizations grew out of the dissatisfaction of members of other organizations, and it is thought they should have a place in this series. Hence I append a brief reference to them, believing that it will be helpful to some who may wish to make a more complete canvass than could be made by giving only the history of the most prominently mentioned churches, both favorable and unfavorable, as mention has been previously made.

ASSOCIATED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

This religious association is an offshoot of the Presbyterian Church, having had its beginning through the efforts of Mr. Erskine, in Scotland, in November 17, 1733.

They accept the Westminster Confession, the larger and smaller Catechism, modifying the twenty-third chapter of the Confession of Faith which denies to civil magistrates any authority in or control over the church, as respects either doctrine or discipline, by virtue of his office.

They adhere to the literal poetic version of the Psalms in expressing their praise to God, as the only means appointed of God through which to express their songs of praise.

The cause of their secession from the Presbyterian Church was the law of patronage and the presenting of kirks and settlement of ministers in congregations against the wishes of the people, and not giving the rights to the people of choosing their own pastors.

This organization began its existence in America, through the personal efforts of Reverend Alexander Gillotley and Andrew Arnot, who were sent from Scotland to represent this association.

ASSOCIATED REFORMED CHURCH

This religious effort began with the same dissatisfaction as the Associated Presbyterian Church, differing but slightly therefrom, but sufficient to cause a few people to think there was a necessity of a separate organization.

They accept the Westminster Confession of Faith, with the larger and shorter catechisms. They differ somewhat from the Associated Presbyterian Church in church polity, and in the settlement of some minor questions relative to the division of synods there were some personal differences which caused a permanent separation.

FREEWILL BAPTISTS

This religious effort began in 1780 through the instrumentality of Elder Benjamin Randall. He was convinced when but twenty-one years of age that believers only were fit subjects of baptism, and that immersion was the only mode. He was immersed in 1775, and united with the Calvinistic Baptist Church. He was expelled from this church because of anti-Calvinistic sentiments. Other ministers with their churches withdrew from Calvinistic ideas, and by these he was ordained in 1780, and in June of that year he organized the first Free-Will Baptist Church, at New Durham, New Hampshire.

The gospel which Elder Randall preached was one of a free and full salvation; and he seemed to preach it with a holy unction, in demonstration of the Spirit and in power. He believed that men possessed minds free to will and to act, and that God's exercise of pardoning grace was always compatible with man's free volition; that the gospel invitations were to all men; that the Holy Spirit enlightens and strives with all, and in a general rather than in a partial atonement; that Christ invites all freely to come to him for life, and that God commands all men everywhere to repent. Such were the views of this man of God. Such are the Free-Will Baptist sentiments now.—History of the Religious Denominations of the United States, p. 75.

They claim their growth is from accessions from without all organizations through religious revivals rather than secessions in other denominations.

While they believe that the Holy Scriptures is the perfect rule of faith and practice, yet they have felt that it was necessary to publish a Treatise of their Faith, with tracts on various subjects, to which they refer those who are making inquiry in regard to their peculiar ideas upon religious subjects.

FREE COMMUNION BAPTISTS

This religious organization began in 1785. They claim that the churches were drifting away from the devotional spirit, and through the efforts to revive this spirit in the church by Whitefield, a revival of religious interest occurred, and those who were associated with this effort were called Separates, and were finally organized into a separate body at the date above mentioned and called the "Groton Union Conference."

The first church was organized at Werterly, Rhode Island, April 4, 1750, with Mr. Stephen Babcock as pastor. He was ordained by Elder David Sprague, a Baptist, and Mr. Solomon Pains, a Pedo-Baptist minister.

Their faith is very much like that of the Free-Will Baptists in doctrine and church polity.

OLD SCHOOL BAPTISTS

This society was organized by those who did not accept of missionary societies and such institutions as had an existence in the Baptist churches in 1832. They advocate that all such institutions except those specially commanded in the Scriptures are wrong.

SIX-PRINCIPLE BAPTISTS

They claim to have had their origin with Roger Williams, in Rhode Island, who was ordained an Episcopal Minister, but afterwards concluded that he had not yet been baptized, hence was immersed by one of his followers by the name of Ezekiel Holliman; who in turn was baptized by Williams. They advocated particular redemption, and the laying on of hands, and believe that Hebrews 6: 1-3 "contains the fundamental system of Christ's revealed plan and way of salvation to sinners."

Their church government is similar to the Baptists.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS

There seems to be no authentic records to establish the date of their origin. They claim their authority from the practice and preaching of the apostolic doctrine. They believe that there are traces of their faith through ecclesiastical history, although the people advocating that faith were known by different religious names. Their officers are pastors, deacons, and clerks. They teach that there are but two ordinances, baptism and the Lord's supper. Their pastors spend their whole time in the ministry. Their faith differs from other Baptists in respect to the Sabbath, they observing the seventh day.

GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS

They claim to observe the original seventh day as their Sabbath. They practice trine-immersion to believers only as baptism, and confirm those baptized while yet on their knees in the water after their baptism. They consider celibacy a virtue, but do not take any vows with reference to it. They do not pay any salaries to their ministers, but they are supported by voluntary contributions.

THE BIBLE CHRISTIANS

This denomination began as a special organization about 1800, Reverend William Cowherd, minister of Christ Church being the principal human instrument in its existence. Mr. Cowherd was ordained as a minister of the Church of England, then went to preach in a New Jerusalem Church, but feeling the effects of sectarian jealousy determined to build a church of his own, and support himself while preaching by practicing medicine.

He required those who became members of his church to claim to be only Bible Christians. This church became incorporated in the United States in 1830.

Members were admitted into the church by either sprinkling or immersion, but the main thought was the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which they claimed to receive.

CHRISTIAN CONNECTION

This society of religionists had several beginnings, so it is claimed, each a spontaneous one, without any knowledge of the other. One party separated from the Episcopal Methodists, December 25, 1793, to be known as Christians only, asserting as their main doctrines:

1. There was no head but Christ;
2. No creed but the Bible;
3. That sectarian names and human creeds should be abandoned, and that true piety alone be the only test of fellowship.

Another party separated from the Baptists about the same time, among whom was Doctor Abner Jones, the most prominent one, asserting almost the same belief.

Another party from the Presbyterian Church, led by Barton W. Stone and four other ministers of that church advocating the same tenets. They did not contend for uniformity in belief, yet they agreed upon a few general principles, and upon those principles the church was founded.

THE CHURCH OF GOD

This church claims to have been founded by Jesus Christ, not having had a previous existence. They claim that the name "Church of God" is the only Bible name that should be applied to a church organization.

Through the instrumentality of John Winebrenner, a noted religious work was done near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, about 1820, but in the manner in which he conducted this religious effort he was much opposed by the church of which he was a member. This church separated from the German Reformed Church, in 1825, but no special organization occurred among those who withdrew till 1830, at Harrisburg. At this organization John Winebrenner was elected speaker, and John Elliott, clerk.

They at that time adopted the following basic principles:

1. That there is but one true church, namely; the Church of God.
2. That it is the bounden duty of all God's people to belong to her, and none else.
3. That it is "lawful and right" to associate together for the purpose of cooperation in the cause of God.
4. That we agree to hold an eldership annually for this purpose, . . . and thus originated the Church of God, distinctively so-called, in the United States of America; and thus, also, originated the first eldership.

They do not accept of any creed, and are Arminians in doctrine. They practice immersion, reject infant baptism, and practice the washing of the saints' feet. They believe in the personal reign of Christ.

THE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH

This church is a branch of the National Church of Holland. The form of the church government is Presbyterian, as also the form of worship. They advocate a belief in: 1. Predestination. 2. Definite atonement. 3 and 4. Man's entire corruption and helplessness, and his conversion by God's grace alone. 5. Perseverance of the saints in grace.

They indorse the thirty-nine articles of the Episcopal Church.

They have three officers, ministers or bishops, elders, and deacons.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION

This association of religious worshipers began in 1800. They were first called Albrights, from the fact that Mr. Jacob Albright was its human founder. In 1803 Mr. Albright was elected presiding elder, confirmed by the other preachers, and ordained by the laying on of the hands. They at first met with much opposition.

Twenty-one articles of faith were adopted, among which are the following:

1. Of the Holy Trinity.—There is but one only, true and living God, an eternal being, a Spirit without a body, indivisible, infinite, mighty, wise and good, the Creator and Preserver of all things, visible and invisible.

2. Concerning the Word, or Son of God, Who Became Man.—The Son who is the Word of the Father, the eternal and true God, of one substance with the Father, took man's nature in the womb of the blessed virgin, so that both natures, the divine and the human, are perfectly and inseparably joined together in him (as in one person;) Therefore, he is Christ (the Anointed), very God and very man, even he, who suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, in order to reconcile the justice of the eternal Father with us, and to present himself a sacrifice for both our original and actual sins. . . .

5. The Sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures for our Instruction to Salvation.—The Holy Scriptures contain the decree of God, so far as it is necessary for us to know for our salvation. . . .

7. Of Original Sin.—Original sin consisteth not in the falling of Adam (as some falsely pretend;) etc. . . .

14. Of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.—. . . Baptism and the Lord's supper were not ordained of Christ that we should abuse them; but that we should duly use them.

17. Of the only Oblation of Christ, Finished upon the Cross.—The offering which was once made by Christ on the cross, is that perfect redemption, propitiation and satisfaction, for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual, so that there is no other satisfaction required but that alone.

18. Of Church Rites and Ceremonies.—It is by no means necessary that ceremonies and rites should in all places be the same, or exactly alike. . . .

Every particular church has the privilege to introduce, change, and abolish rituals and ceremonies; yet so, that all things may be done to edification.

21. Of the Last Judgment and God's Righteous Sentence of Rewards and Punishments.—We believe that Jesus Christ will come in the last day, to judge all mankind by a righteous judgment: That God will give unto the faithful, elect and godly, eternal life and happiness, everlasting rest, peace, and joy without end. But God will bid the impenitent and ungodly, to depart to the Devil and his angels, to endure everlasting damnation, punishment and pain, torment and misery. Therefore we are not to concede to the doctrine of those who maintain that devils and ungodly men will not have to suffer eternal punishment and torment.

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH

This religious movement began with Ulric Zwingli, of Switzerland, formerly a Catholic priest.

The first and most important principle of this movement as advocated in 1516, is "The Bible above all human authority, and to it alone must every appeal be made."

This church differed from the Lutheran Church at first in nothing except the single point of the Lord's supper. Zwingli advocated that the saying of Christ, "This is my body," and "This is my blood," should be understood to mean that the bread was a sign or figure of the Lord's body, and the wine of his blood, but Luther and Melancthon contended that the material body and blood was present in the bread and wine. Zwingli differed from Calvin in regard to the Lord's supper, church government, and in religious liberty.

This church believed in confirmation like the Catholic Church.

THE JEWS

The origin of this rebellious and national body is traced to the call of Abraham, although there was no organized body of people to whom was given the specific title of Jews till many years later. The grandson of Abraham, Jacob, was named Israel by the Almighty, and to him was born a son who was named Judah. The tribe of Judah was the ruling tribe at the death of Solomon, who associated with the tribe of Benjamin, and scattered members of some of the other tribes remained at Jerusalem, and they were called from that time on the house of Judah, and the people were called Jews. At times and by certain persons all Israel is termed "the Jews," and under this general title many treat this subject.

The Jews, as well as the house of Israel before the division occurred, were subject to the ten commandment covenant that was revealed to them on Mount Sinai through Moses, and that with the statutory laws and sacrifices given afterwards through Moses was the form of religion governing this people.

They claim to be the first religious body to have the Bible, the first to bear witness of God, the first people to whom God promised love and protection. They further claim that God promised that the time would never come when they should not be a people, and to whom the land of Canaan was promised for an everlasting inheritance.

They do not accept Jesus Christ as the Messiah, but yet look for the Messiah, neither do they accept the New Testament as containing the word of God, but they accept the Old Testament as containing the word of God, and it to be equally holy and infallible in all its parts.

There are three great principles as bases of the Jewish belief:

1. We believe in the existence of the Deity, the Creator of all things.

2. We believe in the existence of a revelation by the Creator of his will.

3. We believe in the existence of a just system of rewards and punishments, or a full accountability for all our acts.

The Reverend Isaac Lesser says:

But the Bible reveals to us ampler details of doctrines, in part especially applicable to us as Israelites to whom the law was first given, and partly of universal applicability. Of the latter we have generally assumed thirteen cardinal principles which are the key of our theological views. They are:

1. The belief in an Almighty Creator, who alone has called all things into being, and still continues to govern the world which he has made.

2. The belief in the absolute and perfect unity of the Creator, that he is therefore indivisible in every sense of the word, always the same, who was, is, and ever will be, unchanged as from the beginning.

3. The belief in the incorporeality of the Creator, that he is not a material being, and cannot be affected by accidents which affect material things.

4. The belief in the absolute and perfect eternity of the Creator.

5. The belief that the Creator is the sole being to whom we should pray, since there is no one who shares his powers that we should address our prayers to him.

6. The belief in the truth of all the words of the prophets.

7. The belief in the truth of the prophecy of Moses, and that he was the greatest of all the prophets and wise men who have lived before him or will come after him.

8. The belief in the identity of the law which we now have, and that it is unchanged, and the very one which was given to Moses.

9. The belief in the permanency of the law, and that there has not been, nor will there ever be, another law promulgated by the Creator.

10. The belief in the omniscience of the Creator.

11. The belief that the Creator will reward those who keep his commandments, and punish those who transgress them.

12. The belief in the coming of the King Messiah, who is to accomplish for the world and Israel all that the prophets have foretold concerning him.

13. The belief in the resurrection of the dead, when it may please the Almighty to send his Spirit to revive those who sleep in the dust.

Their authority is represented through the tribe of Levi, which tribe was set apart by the Lord for the work of the priesthood.

THE UNITED BRETHREN

This church sprang out of the Bohemian and Moravian Brethren Church. All individuals who were members of any of the Protestant churches who agreed upon the fundamental principles of Christianity and professed a desire to lead a Christian life were admitted formerly as members without renouncing their original church and creed.

They now profess a belief in the Confession of Augsburg. They make the life, merits, acts, and words, with the suffering and death of the Savior the principal theme of their doctrine. They claim the Holy Scriptures as the only source of divine revelation, yet admit that the Spirit of God continues to lead believers into other truths.

Important questions are decided by casting lots, seeking the Lord to guide them in decisions made in this way.

REFORMED METHODIST CHURCH

This people had their origin with those who withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church in Wethersfield and Readsborough, Vermont, January 16, 1814.

They became dissatisfied with the Episcopal mode of government, claiming that it restricted their rights. They presented to the Church of which they were members a manifesto, stating their grievances, and asking their removal, and declared separation if they were not removed. On the above date they held a convention and formed themselves into a church, and on February 5, 1814, adopted articles of faith and rules of church government, accepting the fundamental doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their mode of church government is purely congregational.

They advocate that faith now will result in the same blessings from God as in New Testament times.

They make prominent the belief in entire sanctification of believers in this life.

All officers in the church derive their power from the people. A number of believers may ordain elders for themselves.

They hold annual and general conferences.

They are bound to the Wesley Methodist Church by ties of sympathy, in principle and mode of church government.

TRUE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH

This denomination claims its origin with the Wesleys, and the societies originally founded, accepted and advocated that John Wesley had a right to control every minister and preacher and every member of his societies in all matters of a prudential character. John Wesley and most of the members forming the first societies were members of the Church of England, he being ordained a minister in that church.

This church had its conception in trying to secure freedom from the Episcopacy, and at a convention held May 31, 1843, for the purpose of forming a Wesleyan Methodist Church they adopted the "discipline of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in America," granting to all men their rights, and making them free and equal.

The doctrines of this denomination are: First, represented in nineteen "Articles of religion" much the same as the Evangelical Societies; and second, the following "Elementary principles":

1. A Christian Church is a society of believers in Jesus Christ, assembled in any one place for religious worship, and is of divine institution.

2. Christ is the only head of the church; and the word of God the only rule of faith and conduct.

3. No person who loves the Lord Jesus Christ, and obeys the gospel of God our Savior, ought to be deprived of church membership.

4. Every man has an inalienable right to private judgment, in matters of religion; and an equal right to express his opinion, in any way which will not violate the laws of God, or the rights of his fellow man.

5. Church trials should be conducted on gospel principles only; and no minister or member should be excommunicated except for immorality, the propagation of un-Christian doctrines, or for the neglect of duties enjoined by the word of God.

6. The pastoral or ministerial office and duties are of divine appointment, and all elders in the church of God are equal; but ministers are forbidden to lord it over God's heritage, or to have dominion over the faith of the saints.

7. The church has a right to form and enforce such rules and regulations only, as are in accordance with the Holy Scriptures, and may be necessary, or have a tendency, to carry into effect the great system of practical Christianity.

8. Whatever power may be necessary to the formation of rules and regulations is inherent in the ministers and members of the church; but so much of that power may be delegated from time to time, upon a plan of representation, as they may judge necessary and proper.

9. It is the duty of all ministers and members of the church to maintain godliness, and to oppose all moral evil.

10. It is obligatory on ministers of the gospel to be faithful in the discharge of their pastoral and ministerial duties; and it is also obligatory on the members to esteem ministers highly for their work's sake, and to render them a righteous compensation for their labors.

The great sin of the five hundred different religious communions is that each believes that it is a law unto itself, thereby shattering the spiritual universe into as many parts as there are communions and each building up itself at the expense of pulling down what Jesus came to establish. The time has come for new discoveries. The United Church is already overdue.—From the cover of The Christian Union Quarterly, for April, 1918.

I would consider music as one of the great ministers of religion. There must be some profound reason why the writers of the Bible speak so often of music as the language of heaven, why Saint John describes the song of praise which proceedeth from the throne of God and the Lamb.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

UNCOVERING BURIED CITIES

[The following interesting and important account appeared in the San Antonio (Texas) Express for April 14, 1918, copiously illustrated by photographs of objects found by Professor Niven, who is a mineralogist of considerable fame. He has been engaged in this work more or less since his first find in Mexico in 1891, at which time he discovered ruins of an immense city, hundreds of square miles in area in the state of Guerrero, Mexico.—EDITORS.]

(Archæologist's Discoveries in Excavations Now Being Made in Valley of Mexico Show How Three Great Cities, Populated by Millions Were Wiped Out in the Twinkling of an Eye, by Fire, by Water, by Seismic Disturbance—A Two-Thousand-Mile Tomb of Horror.)

The world's greatest tragedies are being unearthed at the edge of the City of Mexico. Time has flung back the curtains, the veil of centuries has been lifted—spread before us is the gruesome chronicle of horror so sudden, so vast the mind cannot grasp it. By fire, deadly gases, and, perhaps earthquake, evidently of volcanic origin, a great city was wiped out of existence in the twinkling of an eye—and this was tens of centuries before Vesuvius laid low Herculaneum and Pompeii, two infants in comparison to the hoary antiquity of this cataclysm that has been lost to history absolutely.

And then, after hundreds of years had elapsed, a new people came to the valley and saw it teeming with riches, but without a single sign of life. The forests stretched to the mountains, the jungle was the home of wild beasts far greater than those of to-day. They took possession and builded a great city in the valley, which is between two thousand and three thousand square miles in extent. And then came the deluge, a flood that buried deep, houses, temple, and market place, preserving even to the paint on the figures and walls, evidences of the life the scientists say existed thousands of years ago; two to five thousand years, say some; far longer than that, says the man to whom credit for the discoveries must go—William Niven. The truth is, science does not know; like the layman, it is appalled at the immensity of the "find."

The Valley of Mexico lies, a vast emerald oval surrounded by towering mountains. Popocatepetl, snow crowned, and its sister peak, two eternal watchtowers for the ancient gods, guard the wonderfully beautiful scene of softly-sloping, fertile country. Was it from the now presumably extinct volcanoes that the flood of death poured, or was it from some greater, more removed, cause? Did the destruction of the great city by flood give rise to the story of Atlantis? Did the lost tribes of Israel help people the valley? Who knows?

Day by day, William Niven, man of science, archæologist of note, keeps on digging. He is filling the National Museum in the City of Mexico with wonderful relics of the past. The government is countenancing the work and the plan now is to obtain a steam shovel and dig deeper, under Mr. Niven's direction. He has been conducting the work single-handed for years. Inkings of important finds near the City of Mexico have leaked out, but below he tells, exclusively for The Express, the first detailed account of discoveries of a world-wide interest, excavations that promise to change history, and which startlingly corroborates legends, supposed to be pure myths, that have come down to us from the dim, dim past:

BY WILLIAM NIVEN

HIS OWN ACCOUNT OF THE UNEARTHING OF A MYSTERY THAT MAY EXPLAIN THE LOST ATLANTIS

Since 1910 the writer has been making archæological explorations in the Valley of Mexico, by permission of the Mexican Government. Most of the excavations have been made in the old pits from where the clay has been extracted in the manufacture of adobe and firebricks.

There are thousands of these pits all over the valley, many of them from 12 to 20 feet deep and from 100 to 300 feet square, affording excellent opportunities for research at small cost. The work, which has been continued without intermission during all these years, has known that three distinct civilizations have inhabited the valley at different periods, the first meeting the fate of Pelee, the second destroyed by floods, and the third by tempest or seismic disturbances.

The civilizations have been classed by me as Aztec, Pre-Aztec, and Primitive. The artifacts of the Aztec civilization are found from three to five feet from the surface; those of the Pre-Aztec—quite similar to the San Juan Teotihuacan civilization—from seven to ten feet, and those of the Primitive from twelve to thirty feet deep. Frequently at a depth of seven to ten feet—the second layer—Aztec, Pre-Aztec, and Primitive are all mixed together, but at a depth of twelve to thirty feet only Primitive objects are found. As the latter are nearly always in a layer of volcanic ash, it would seem that the race which inhabited the valley in these remote times, was totally destroyed by some volcanic eruption. The artifacts of the Pre-Aztec and Aztec are generally amongst gravel and sand, so floods, as before stated, may account for the partial destruction of the people.

Many of the faces of the figures in the second and top layers have a strong resemblance to Egyptian, but in the first or lower layer, all are distinctly Mongolian. Until some systematic exploration on an extended scale has been accomplished, it would be difficult to estimate with any degree of certainty, the age of the three civilizations.

The Aztecs existed for some hundreds of years before the arrival of Cortes, and as Tenochtitlan (City of Mexico) was founded in the early part of the fourteenth century the objects found on the Aztec layer must be surely 500 or 600 years old, while the second and first might have been thousands of years.

Unless some rosetta stone may be discovered, the existence and fate of these different races may ever be shrouded in the deepest mystery.

In all the localities where archæological ruins abound in this country, there is probably none of such vast importance for the student and explorer as in the Valley of Mexico. These notes of my explorations during the past seven years have reference only to a portion of the valley, some ten miles square, south of Atzacapotzalco, in the villages of Santa Lucia, San Miguel, Amantla, Santiago, San Bartola, and San Jennico, but from Texcoco to Tlalapantlo more than 2,000 square miles, the same layers at the same depths contain the same objects, bearing mute testimony to the immense population of these mighty races who passed away, leaving behind them only figures of stone and clay to guide us in our studies.

Several Indians in the various towns in the Valley of Mexico, especially those at Atzacapotzalco, for several months brought me different specimens of very ancient pottery and figures, including all kinds of heads in terra cotta, made of clay and fired. Then they showed me some of the localities where these finds had been made in pits, and I began digging, after obtaining permission from the government of Mexico.

The pits, numbered by the thousands, are all over the Valley of Mexico, and from them for hundreds of years the Indians have been procuring adobe, and recently the clay used in the manufacture of bricks. Their depth runs from six feet to twenty feet. The lowest layer, or stratum, is, of course, the most interesting, as it contains a greater number of subjects, and they are better preserved than those found near the surface. This lowest layer is covered with another layer of ashes, mud, and charcoal, ranging usually from three to six feet in thickness, and overlying that is a deposit of soil similar in character to the soil of the valley. This deposit is about three feet thick. Over this layer is a cement floor, or pavement, usually about eight inches thick, and in many places there is found three and four of these floors in succession, showing that the ground must have sunk and the inhabitants were forced to place another and still another one in order to secure a foundation. On the upper pavement is a deposit of gravel from six to twelve inches thick, and then above this is found the soil of the valley ranging from three feet to fifteen feet in thickness. It would seem, from what has been found, that there were people of an unknown race living on the first floor, who were destroyed by some cataclysm, by volcanic effect, gas, or were asphyxiated by the eruption of near-by volcanoes, and buried in the mud and ashes that subsequently flowed over the valley, this acting as a preservative and accounting for the preservation of skeletons, pottery, and other objects. Then there must have elapsed a period of considerable duration for the depositing of the soil. In the lower layer of the soil are found deer horns of unusual size, elk horns, tiger teeth, javelin teeth, and skulls and bones of wild animals, showing a savage and evidently uninhabited country. These are found directly over the relics of the first race. The ashes and mud, rich in minerals, phosphates, and other chemicals, produced a luxuriant vegetation, no doubt forests and jungles, the haunts of wild beasts of great ferocity. Then a second race appeared and found a beautiful valley unpeopled. The soil, however, was very soft, and they were forced, whenever they built, to lay a pavement of cement, oftentimes with adobe bricks, under the cement layer. In this way were made the floors and the foundations for buildings.

The presence of gravel on top of all this shows distinctly that a vast flood occurred and destroyed, perhaps in the twinkling of an eye, this second people. Another period then elapsed in which the present deposit of surface soil was made, and according to that eminent authority in archæology, Professor Emil Boaz, who made excavations as low as thirty feet from the surface—I showing him where to dig—this civilization must have been as much as 2,000 years old.

MANY THOUSANDS OF YEARS

But I take issue with him in this respect. If his statement is true, we are to infer that a deposit of thirty feet in depth took 2,000 years to form. It is about 400 years since Cortes arrived in Mexico, and it is certain that no appreciable change has occurred in the topography of the country since then, as landmarks Cortes found and the historians mentioned are still here, apparently the same. Witness the famous Noche Triste, tree, under which Cortes spent such a miserable night, Montezuma's bath at Chapultepec, and others, all indicating that no deposit of more than an inch or two has formed since then. If 400 years gives but one to two inches deposit, it surely must have taken more than 2,000 years to deposit thirty feet. Figuring on a basis of one inch to every 200 years, a deposit of thirty feet, or 360 inches, would take 72,000 years to form. From this, however, must be deducted the space occupied by the objects, the pavements, etc., in the various layers, and the heavy fall of ashes, the charcoal and gravel resulting from the flood. It may be that the ruins at San Juan Teotihuacan may be 2,000 years old, for they are above ground, though many of the objects found in the first or second layer from the surface of the ground, six to eight feet down, are similar to those in San Juan Teotihuacan. The objects found at a greater depth have no resemblance whatever to the San Juan objects, and this necessarily would indicate a far greater antiquity.

Since these excavations have been made all over the Valley of Mexico, from Texcoco to Tlalapantia, each producing practically the same objects, all showing identical conditions and at different depths the same ashes, gravel, etc., it is certain that the entire valley 2,000 to 3,000 square miles in extent, was populated in the shape of a great city with, in all probability, tens of millions of inhabitants. The work before the archæologists is to ascertain the different kinds of objects, for no systematic exploration has yet been made, and the important thing is to find the connection, if any, between the races.

In the lower layer I have frequently found in a space of twenty feet, more than a dozen varieties of different forms of human figures, showing types unmistakably Egyptian, Persian, Hindustani, Chinese, all quite distinct. Where you find one object of apparent Oriental form, you will find hundreds of another distinct form. There are hundreds of that type of the unknown race, where there is one of the Oriental. The deduction follows that there may have been in this long ago a means for the Mongols to pass over the Bering Straits, which possibly was much farther south than now, and perhaps Asia and America were then one country, and these traders from the Orient came here and lived in this great city of millions in the Valley of Mexico, wearing their native costumes or dresses just as the foreigner does to-day in New York and London.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN CLAY

These objects of terra cotta, many of them painted, are usually found around the skeletons, and were evidently placed with the body of the dead master or mistress and were images made in clay and then fired, of the servants or friends or possibly members of the family of the deceased. The ancient Egyptians believed that the Ushebtiu, or little figures of stone, wood, or copper, which they placed often in such numbers in the tombs of the dead, would provide the deceased with servants and attendants to work for him in the nether world, and to fight for him against the many enemies he would there have to combat. Why not the same here? These objects from ancient Egypt are quite similar to these found in the Valley of Mexico, and the probabilities are they are true pictures of the people and not little gods, as they are usually called. Nothing is known about this vanished race, no tradition lingers about them, not even in the picture writings of the Aztecs, but, according to Mexican mythology, there was supposed to be, first, a great fire visiting the world, this being represented by the god of fire in what little the Toltecs and Aztecs have left us. Then came another period, of water, or the deluge, represented by the god of water, standing for destruction by flood. Then there was a terrible disaster, by wind and tempest. It is to be found on the great calendar stone of the Aztecs now in the National Museum in the City of Mexico, and to-day, due to these discoveries it is all borne out by this tremendous object lesson, coming to light in the Valley of Mexico.

If the period is so remote, according to this lowest layer, one of these races existed at least 5,000 years ago, and if this is so, it might explain the lost tribes of Israel. And here may have existed the fabled Atlantis, that fell into the oblivion of the waters. Who knows? Some of the figures show distinctly the nose and features of the Hebrew. The figures we are looking at are fact; there is no supposition and the pictures they suggest stagger the imagination, for the mind cannot conceive the immensity of time and tragedy.

Mexico is so rich in priceless treasures of archæology to be found nearly everywhere that interest has always been centered in the great known localities of Mitla, which are above ground with their magnificent architecture. Of Palenque and the ruins in Yucatan, where considerable work from time to time has been done many volumes have been written whereas, here right in the metropolis of Mexico is probably a greater field for research and where more exact information or data can be obtained by excavation of something tangible concerning these vanished races.

At this lowest depth you cannot excavate more than ten feet horizontally without finding human remains, and these usually appear in every conceivable position, and as they are not laid in order—though there are some exceptions where we find a round pit like a well six feet in diameter, where most of the skeletons are discovered, indicating graveyards, everything is in inextricable confusion, skeletons, pottery, objects of household use, utensils, and everything showing that death came suddenly and horribly. This is another subject of study; we are not sure they are all graves. If they were there would be from 2,000 to 3,000 miles of graveyard. But wherever we find a skeleton it is invariably surrounded by ashes. There is but one deduction—death overtook them suddenly. Though they are surrounded by ashes, the bones have not been cremated. Plainly a fire has been there but went out, leaving the bones perfect, the hot ashes having sufficient heat to consume the flesh and organs.

There is one peculiarity in the discoveries in the second layer. If I find a head I cannot find anything else in the immediate vicinity. I cannot find the body. If I find a piece of pottery broken, I cannot find the other pieces, and this shows the presence of a great body of water. At the death of the people a great flood came and moved it all, mud, ashes, charcoal, pottery, everything. Then with the rich phosphates, the water and mud, came a period of wonderful vegetation, tropical and beautiful; then came the great animals, as shown by their remains. The mud, found over and above the concrete floors, contains evidences of thatched roofs, the molding of the grass being perfect in the calcined earth. The floors or walls, in many instances, were painted red, and masses of large size are found intact with the colors still bright. All the great archæologists, like Doctor Brinton of Philadelphia, and others, have studied archæology in their own libraries, and have taken information in regard to Mexico from historians from the time of Cortes so, not being on the ground, the information they got is necessarily very incorrect. What is wanted now as I said before, is scientific investigation and excavation. I have the right from the government inspector of monuments to conduct these investigations, it being necessary for the government to confer permission, since it is prohibited by law to make investigations and send the objects found out of the country. Owners of land have also given me the privilege to make these investigations and explorations and it is granted me on the condition that the National Museum of Mexico has the right to purchase. I, of course, have the right to sell what the museum rejects, to private collectors. I have not the right, for it is distinctly against the law, to ship anything out of the country. The government is very strict in this respect.

Some of the bones show a race of people over the average of the ordinary size. Many of these prehistoric persons have been more than 6 feet in height and with a small head, the head being always smaller in proportion to the body. The heads are usually flat. They are small in circumference, compared to the height. They differ from the Carib, or flat-headed Indians, in that they are not artificially formed, flattened by compression. The majority are high compared with the circumference. The practical faculties, veneration, combativeness, self-esteem, cautiousness, are the chief characteristics of these skulls. The point of the junction of the parietal and the occipital lines are not bulged out, which would show infantile compression, but are natural, demonstrating that the skull is normal. A noted phrenologist, after studying the skulls, declared that on account of the narrowness at the base at the back, this people lacked aggressiveness, were not a fighting race, but on the contrary were peaceful. The dome-like height would show veneration. Therefore, the people were peaceful, religious, and cruel.

We don't know, of course, whether these people below really practiced the sacrificial rites of the races succeeding them. Even if the Aztecs afterwards required human sacrifices, we cannot say their predecessors in the valley did; we do know, however, that their decorative art was of a high class, and their knowledge of making pottery was better than we possess to-day—witness the fine examples in the museum.

Very, very few arrow heads are found, and they are mostly of obsidian. Occasionally deposits of spear heads are found, both of obsidian and flint, ranging in size from 3 to 30 inches in length. Bone tools, or tools, needles, knives, etc., made from bones, are plentiful, the majority evidently made for weaving, and probably used also in the manufacture of their pottery. The needles, with a hole near the point, show they knew the art of knitting. Spindle whirls, similar to those found in Troy, were found in vast numbers, and all of them have strange characters and designs, which are more highly artistic than those found in Egypt, and there are scarcely any two that are alike. Among the forms are frequently found the beetle, the monkey with human heads, flowers, stars, etc. Eagle heads are also plentiful, with curious Babylonian characters and Grecian decorations. Cylinders for the rolling of manuscripts with Babylonian designs are found, one decoration, for instance, showing a frog, another a cleverly conceived figure of a man fighting an animal. No doubt they knew the art of writing and printing, as is shown by seals which are found in quantities. They had a knowledge of printing and tattooing, or otherwise decorating their pottery. They smoked, using pipes of a very high glaze, usually fashioned in the bowl in the form of a duck with two eyes, and painted red and black. In the graves frequently are unearthed candelarias, or vessels for fire offerings for the dead, the little vents in each side showing for what purpose they were used. When a grave is opened many of these candelarias are discovered.

Beads of jade and diorite and even of clay I found with the skeletons, showing they wore them as jewelry around the neck. Occasionally small pots of red paint are found. In one case I discovered a number of miniature pots of red paint, right close to the skull, showing that their contents were used in life to paint the face. Several figures that I came across showed the tattooing. Frequently we will find a metate and pestle, usually of enormous size and surrounded by pots of different forms and sizes, and invariably we find skeletons, so that presumably where these kitchen utensils are found was a kitchen in the dwelling where the occupants met death.

The bone instruments were made from animals, the teeth being used with holes bored in them. They knew the art of making razors and knives, daggers and other utensils, and weapons from obsidian, but how they cut this glass-like material is a mystery. If we endeavor to slice it to-day, we fracture it; but whether they heated the tool, or vice versa, there is no means of determining. Anyway they produced surgical instruments, like a lancet, delicately shaped and beautifully keen.

The great difference between the two layers at the bottom is shown in the objects, one of the most distinguishing characteristics being the pottery above the concrete floors, which is much more artistic. That below is primitive in comparison, yet the people below had a glaze, though the characters are more rude in the form. The second race, that destroyed by the flood, had a more artistic conception.

PRESIDENT PROCLAIMS MAY 30 AS DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Congress of the United States, on the second day of April last, passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, it being a duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almighty God and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, to be observed by the people of the United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, His blessings on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth;

And whereas it has always been the reverent habit of the people of the United States to turn in humble appeal to Almighty God for his guidance in the affairs of their common life;

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the thirtieth day of May, a day already freighted with sacred and stimulating memories, a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, and do exhort my fellow citizens of all faiths and creeds to assemble on that day in their several places of worship and there, as well as in their homes, to pray Almighty God that he may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and purpose only those righteous acts and judgments which are in conformity with his will, beseeching him that he will give victory to our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these days of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest because it is founded upon mercy, justice, and good will.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING,

Secretary of State.

TEUTONIC FRIGHTFULNESS

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Teutonic frightfulness as practiced in France and Belgium has been made the subject of a German warning to neutral nations of the fate which they may expect if they take up arms against the central powers.

"If there are any still thinking of siding with the allies, let them take warning from the fate of others," says the warning. It is in the form of a circular, which recites the amount of booty seized in France and Belgium, the number of churches damaged and destroyed, the money wrung from the stricken inhabitants, and finally, the deliberate mistreatment of English prisoners of war.

German propagandists have flooded Spain with this document printed in Spanish, and copies have come into the hands of the State Department.

Having established its German origin, the department made public this translation:

BOOTY IS LISTED

"Besides an untold amount of war material captured on the battlefield, the Germans have taken possession of incalculable booty in France and Belgium, including:

"High-grade watches 417.

"Average watches, 5,015.

"Underwear, 18,073.

"Embroideries and women's handkerchiefs, 15,132.

"Umbrellas and parasols, 3,705.

"Silver spoons, 1,876.

"Bottles of champagne, 523,000.

"These figures show a large increase over those of the campaign against France in 1870-71.

"In Belgium, besides many art treasures, they have confiscated old paintings valued at 30,000,000 pesetas.

WRECKED CHURCHES CITED

"Due to the treachery of Cardinal Mercier and other priests, who did their utmost to stir the priests against the good-hearted German soldiers, they were forced to teach a severe lesson to the Belgian and French Catholics.

"Cathedrals destroyed, 4.

"Rendered unserviceable, 8.

"Churches destroyed, 27.

"Rendered unserviceable, 34.

"Total, 73."

In Poland also a large number of churches have been destroyed for military reasons. The figures concerning these have not yet been published.

"As a result of the stupid stubbornness of the Belgian people in continuing the struggle after their bloody and final defeat on the battle field, the German officers were forced, against their will, to impose punishments on many rich individuals and wealthy cities. This has contributed the following amounts to the German treasury.

"Punishments, 87,000,000 pesetas.

"Security, 13,000,500 pesetas.

"Reprisals, 15,750,000 pesetas.

WARNING TO NEUTRALS

"This amount includes a fine of 15,000 pesetas imposed on the Alsatian people who insist on speaking the French language and refuse to study the beautiful German language. These statistics are a most grave warning to the neutral countries.

"If there are any still thinking of siding with the allies, let them take warning from the fate of others."

In connection with the claims of the extent of territory occupied by German troops, the following footnote appears:

"When it is held that the Germans have occupied no English territory and, on the contrary, they have lost all their African colonies, amounting to some 3,000,000 square kilometers, it must be remembered that the English, according to the declaration of their ministers, are not intending to secure any extension of the British Empire; that they have entered the struggle with only the aim of helping the Belgians. That is to say, the English have practically pledged themselves to return the German colonies after the war in exchange for the evacuation and indemnification of Belgium. The Germans, therefore, are to recover all that they have lost in Africa."

It is claimed in this document that more than 50,000 British have been prisoners, and in this connection the following statement is made:

"Although to these figures the English oppose 124,806 German prisoners taken by them on the western front, it must be remembered the English treat their prisoners with notable kindness (blandura notoria), while the regime imposed on the English prisoners by the Germans is one of extreme rigor; so that the Germans with a small number of prisoners have secured a much superior moral effect. Besides, to 2,264 officers and 51,325 soldiers, must be added the several thousand English prisoners that have died in consequence of disease, scanty food and other accidents in German concentration camps."

The figures regarding English prisoners, it is explained, refer to the total prior to the recent drive in Picardy and Flanders.—Saint Louis Globe Democrat, May 9, 1918.

WAR TO STRENGTHEN CHRISTIANITY

Out of the war has grown a new movement in California that is highly significant. The Pre-Millennists, thousands strong, are proclaiming up and down the land that Jesus is coming to save the world. They prove it to their own satisfaction by New Testament prophecies, and their propaganda is fastening itself on scores of new converts daily. The effects of this are bound to be felt in the Middle West, and perhaps in the East. Los Angeles is alive with this new doctrine and the enthusiasm stirred among these middle-class members is amazing.

Their claim that Jerusalem is to be set up again as the religious center of the world and that the millennium is at our doors is an interesting sidelight on the effect of the war. The war has served to strengthen the practice of Christianity among many peoples. I see growing over Europe a disposition to put into effect the spirit of the Man of Galilee when the war is ended. War horrors have served to quicken appreciation of true Christianity.—Lincoln Steffens, in Chicago Herald, April 28, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Organizer as an Executive; Good Leadership

(Address by Mrs. Lula M. Sandy at the General Convention.)

The Woman's Auxiliary fills a unique place in the work of the church at this time. I think we might say that it has outgrown its first clothing and is ready now for better things.

The stronger any organization, the more leaders there will be needed to carry on its work, and the more need that these leaders should qualify themselves by giving the study of executive ability careful attention. Not only is this art necessary in our work but the practical need of the time is for more and better executives. The lack of leadership is to be seen everywhere.

The new constitution under which we have been working this last year, places one woman in each district in general charge over all phases of the Woman's Auxiliary work in that district. Her duties call for a great deal of leadership. As I have been out over many States this year I have found some of our organizers unable to carry on their work, through lack of training. There were some, however, who had many qualities necessary to leadership and few who knew the duties of an executive.

The need for executive ability is fundamental in all organized effort. Among the animals, even, we find that wolves have a head and are said to have a general and a staff, when they make their raids. Only this summer when I was away out in Kansas I looked from the hotel window one morning when we were having a dreadful snow storm, and saw a large drove of sheep passing the house, and in front, leading the way, was a large ram, the largest animal in the drove. It impressed me with the need of leadership, as nothing else has for a long time, for men are not so different in their needs from these animals, they all need leading. Every individual in the world must either lead or follow, and even while leading a leader must always be prepared to follow, too.

Leaders make effective group action possible. Everywhere one looks tremendous undertakings are rolled up and await the directing of a leader. The business world, the industrial world, and the economic world, all voice this cry for more and better leaders. There is always room for the man or woman of force, and he or she makes room for many others. Leaders or followers, which will we be? If we are not prepared to lead, we must be content to follow.

There are those who are destined to be leaders of the Nation, whose wisdom the multitude waits for, on whose strength they depend, and at whose call they rise above themselves and lift their part of God's big purpose for mankind a step nearer the summit. Some of these leaders are brilliant, some conspicuous, some obscure, but all valuable in their places. These are bearing the world's burdens, and steering the course of human affairs, and it is often found that the higher a leader climbs, the lonelier he is, for most of us bear our burdens alone.

The mass of people feel this need for a leader. They are waiting for him, waiting for him to come out in the open and lead them. So keen are men to be led, they are often headstrong, silly, or undiscerning, accepting any man who professes to have a message, or who moves toward some definite goal.

A leader has many things to consider as he moves along his chosen path, for the art of leading is, in itself, a great achievement. First of all, he must be a good executive, and the chief business of an executive is to organize, deputize, and supervise the work of others. This is the exact work required of our organizers. They must know how to deal with people, promote industry, prop up finance, they should have a fund of originality, know how to focalize their work, and organization must be their hobby. They should be leaders, both mentally and physically.

We talk of leadership and executive ability sometimes without understanding the basic principles of either or both. Many writers say that the basis of executive ability is "energy"—physical and mental energy. Other definitions run like this, "To be able to withstand adverse pressure," "to do large amounts of work," "overflowing the unusual, for success is linked up with energy," one writer states, while others add, "always going somewhere," "always pushing something, their powers defying fatigue," "seem to have energy incarnate, or men who rest by doing things," "human dynamos who seemed to have tapped reservoirs of power."

As an example of the human dynamo, we have the man Roosevelt, who comes under what is commonly known as the "bulldog" type—tenacious in his strength. Whether we are Democrats or Republicans, we are forced to admire the qualities of leadership found in this man. Another leader we have in Joan of Arc, the French girl who led the armies of France to victory. The French people to-day are praying that another such leader be sent them, to lead them to safety. Napoleon was another great leader, though many people do not admire him, and in our own land we have had President Lincoln, and in our own time, President Woodrow Wilson, who is so wonderfully filling the part of both an intellectual and a personal leader. Another man who has displayed unusual qualities of leadership, whom we do not like so well, is the Kaiser, who has broken all the laws of man and God in an attempt to extend the leadership of the German nation to all the other powerful nations of the world. All these leaders referred to were men of iron resolution; they had faith in themselves and a strong desire to accomplish their purposes, and a firm belief in their ability to attain their desires. These people saw a goal high above them, and determinedly reached out for it.

As I said before, a leader must have originality, must be able to focalize his work; he must know the proper use of his time, and be able to systematize his work, his own personal effort, if he is to have success.

There is only time to touch of these things briefly. Under originality we would say that new ideas are scarce, so the leader should be open to impression. He must be willing to search through the chaff to find the wheat. He must be accessible to his workers. He must keep the door of his office open, and welcome new ideas and suggestions from his subordinates, even actively working to secure these. Wise reading helps also, for, as I said before, originality is rare, while the commonplace abides with us always. Reading and comparing will help us to consider wisely, to weigh and balance things.

Focalization unifies a leader's life. The point at which two rays meet is the focus, and when we bring our work to a focus we find the standard for measuring all passing things. It gives us a firmer grip on the task in hand and helps us in adjustment. The follower hesitates on the border line of the unknown, but the leader surveys the broken arc, and constructs a bridge over which he invites all men to follow him.

The good executive never wastes time; he decides quickly—and is sometimes right.

The next qualification, the right use of our time, is of value to all of us, whether we are organizers, district presidents, secretaries, or homemakers. Most of us wake up in the morning with a calm realization of the extreme difficulty of so arranging our day as to get the most out of life possible for the twenty-four hours. It has been said by one, "Time is money." Well, usually, perhaps, if you know how; but even a great control of wealth cannot buy a minute of time. Time is different from other things we have. Its most effective use is the matter which most concerns us.

Its right use is very important. Which of us really lives twenty-four hours every day? Lives, not exists, or muddles through life? Lives in the things we do? Not many, I fear; more of us are haunted by the feeling that the years are slipping by, leaving us unable to get our lives in proper working order so as to really live. We have a sense of uneasy waiting for something to start, instead of starting something ourselves, and we excuse ourselves with the thought that we have not the time. We have a comfortable habit of letting the day take care of itself.

Let us take up, for a few minutes, the budget of one day's time. When we wake up in the morning our purse is filled with twenty-four hours of time. We receive it with glorious regularity. It is ours—a precious possession. No one can take it from us, for it is unstealable. We have, too, just as much as others have; no one receives more or less than we. Even the man of genius has no more time than we have. Edison, the wizard of the age, has no more than I. There is another thing about time—we cannot borrow of the future. We are cruelly restricted in this; we cannot waste the morrow; we can only waste the passing moment! Then, too, we must use our own, we cannot borrow from another.

Let us see how our time is employed. If we are employed in a regular business work probably eight hours a day, and we have left an eight-hour margin, out of the day allotted to us. This, of course, is a rough estimate only. Many mothers work twelve hours a day, but the average working day is eight hours at this time. Eight hours we must give to our employer, and the eight hours for sleep is necessary, we will not disturb that, but it is the eight-hour margin to which we must turn our attention in order to make a practical examination of the daily expenditure of time. It should be made profitable to us.

If this great spending department of our lives is properly managed we will have time to grow and develop into good leaders, or to pursue any other line of development God wishes.

Shall we get our spinning wheels, and see what we can spin out of the eight-hour margin that is really ours? First, we want health, then pleasure, (some would put money next) then content, respect from others, and we, who are Latter Day Saints, would add service—to others and to God. In fact we really want to spin the evolution of our own immortal souls! These things are easily said, but just how are we going to do it? If some one would devise a perfect arrangement of our day by which that haunting, unpleasant, daily disappointment over things left undone could be gotten rid of, how we would all rejoice! But, as it is, we must each make our own plans—work out our own salvation.

Briefly, some of the things that will help us are, first, to plan our day. Then, when we have it planned, the next (a little harder), follow our plan. One third of our time we must give to our work, one third to sleep, and the remainder of our opportunity, properly spent, will quicken our whole life! It will add zest to it, and increase the interest we feel in every human being and every achievement. It will give us time to study ourselves, time to train our minds, to concentrate on a given subject—to get our minds under control, for that is the first element of success. The control of the thinking machine is necessary, for without the ability to dictate to the brain its task, and to insure obedience from it, the truest life is impossible.

Happiness does not spring from the procuring of physical or mental pleasure, but from the development of reason and the adjustment of conduct to principle. We must live in the things we do if we want to feel that we are succeeding.

If the balance of our day is wrong, we have not planned it rightly. Let us examine the day again. Let us account for each hour we are not working or sleeping. Let us begin by doing a little sorting and classifying. Let us clear out the unimportant and trivial in our lives and make room for the real. Let us not attempt too much at first for we must allow for human nature, especially our own.

But let us begin to do something definitely! Once Lincoln said to one of his generals, "If you are not going to use the Army, lend it to me; I want to put it in the hands of another man." If we are not going to use the powers we have, it might be well to loan them to some one that will use them. Will we never have more time than we have now? Have we not all there is?

The first step in our mental housecleaning is to tie up in bundles the material we have collected in our minds, the next is to throw away the useless ones, just as we sort over an accumulation of papers. This will make room in our lives for better growth and development. Now let us plan our lives, fix our goals, and keep them in sight all the time. Let us believe in ourselves, and follow our plans with unwavering faith, keeping before our minds our past successes, and remembering our failure only for profit and never for discouragement.

It is something to have begun working toward a goal. A man may desire to reach London. He starts from here; he may never reach London, he may be wrecked before he gets to Chicago, or he may be shot in New York, or drowned before he sees Liverpool: at that he will not be tormented in the same way as the man who desires to reach London, yet never leaves Kansas City! It is something to have left Kansas City. Most of us have not started. We have not even taken the trouble to inquire at the railroad station about the fare to London or ascertain the time the train will leave!

The plan, the goal, a good start, and the leader is off, and with wise, systematic, personal effort, the work should move forward.

First, the leader should decide what work is to be done, then the order in which it is to be done. He must decide who shall do it, and when. He should have in mind a plan by which it may be done, the time it takes to do it, and the exact quality of the finished product.

Now the day's work is planned. Waste no time getting under way. Plan the things for to-day only and beginning with the unfinished work of yesterday. New business or immediate things come next. An executive should never do or undertake to do what can be done by a subordinate; the leader should plan, the subordinate perform. Let others work out the detail, while you stimulate and control your workers. You must give them the snap, the punch, and the vim, for their work.

As I have said before, many writers say that the basis of leadership is physical energy, for leadership means expert service, grit, manhood, the ability to be always on the go, fine snap. One writer says, "A leader does things instead of talking about them."

A leader must expect hardships, criticisms, and temptations, but the teachings of the Savior must be his guide and his trust in God will give him comfort. Specialization is an important thing, for a man must specialize if he would be more than a common laborer. When the leader encounters an obstacle he needs all of his confidence, all of his knowledge, and all his reasoning powers to help him in his climb over the obstacle.

It takes personality, poise, health, will, executive ability, and vision to be a leader, as well as a desire to have our work of the highest quality. We should be determined to surmount all obstacles in our path, as we travel the upward road toward the goal. Much will depend upon whether we live on a low, or high, level, what our standards are, and whether we place the will and the goal together, side by side, as we work for success.

The Woman's Auxiliary has its place among us. For its most efficient work we must have good leaders, qualified executives, who can reach out and get that personal touch throughout the church that is so much needed. The time has come when there is to be recognition for the women of this church, and their hands are to be freed from some of the minor tasks that have occupied them this long while.

Now how are we to tell whether or not the organizer, appointed by the executive committee, is accomplishing the work we have set her? How are we to know if she is succeeding or failing? Why, we measure a man by his work, likewise a woman. If there is a failure it is probably caused by lack of planning ahead, or overworked officers, or the leader has failed to have a standard, or set up a goal, sometimes she needs special help and it has not been given her; or it may be that she has not used her workers in the best places, perhaps they need more instruction. A general lack of knowledge is the chief cause of failure, and, above everything else, the leader must learn to master the unpleasant, instead of letting the unpleasant master her. Impossible, did you say? There should be no such word in a leader's vocabulary.

When a man is successful we know it by the result of his activity, we measure him by his methods, by his capacity to learn and by his wisdom in selecting helpers and assigning their work, and by his power to produce desired results.

The exact quality of the work accomplished, gives us the results of that year's work, and that's how we measure the organizer.

"Yes, we trust the day is breaking, joyful times are near at hand," was the way an opening song began at a little formal reception and public farewell to the four departing families whom we recently mentioned in these columns. Some one accused Brother Elbert of making the selection, with the idea that it voiced the sentiments of the departing ones, but he denied it. Brother R. V. Hopkins, in charge, said he didn't do it, even if he did select "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" at the former meeting. The guilty party is still at large, unidentified.

It was a big general meeting, in which were represented the various organizations in which these people had served so faithfully. There were cute little speeches by the heads of these organizations, in which were mixed bright anecdotes and references to the past. Brother Oscar Anderson finally was asked to make the presentation speech and he assured the audience he felt just like he had often felt in presenting diplomas to the graduating class, as president of the school board. In fact, it was much on the order, these people having faithfully studied the various books which were being presented in remembrance of our affection for them. It was a fine speech and a very appropriate situation, till some one suggested that one of the books was a Zion's Praises and that there were some nice silver spoons in the collection. There is always somebody to take the joy out of life.

We are swinging along in the Red Cross procession and incidentally absorbing the big quota of War Savings Stamps assigned us. The most of both funds was brought into headquarters by the individuals themselves, so it won't take long to get the rest.

The various religious services are moving along as usual here, the Sunday evening service being the biggest problem. It is not natural to go to evening services in the afternoon when it is still daylight, and so many do not go. Are any others having trouble with the attendance on Sunday evening? It will help when they are held outdoors if the hour is set later in the day.

The community garden is flourishing, there being about forty boys and girls enrolled in the club, under the supervision of the mayor and superintendent of schools, Max Carmichael. They have about three acres of good garden soil divided into convenient plats, and they are raising produce that will either keep or which can be canned. They purpose getting a canning outfit and putting up a lot of tomatoes. Beans figure largely in the plantings, too.

DELBERT.

What Shall We Eat?

Mythology tells us that Hygeia was the daughter of Æsculapius, the god of medicine. Being touched by the suffering of mankind, Æsculapius entered upon the great task of curing disease, which to this day seems to be an endless work and almost hopeless task due to that which Hygeia discovered, that most sickness was brought about by intemperate living, such as gorging with unwholesome food, drinking wines (alcoholics), breathing impure air, drinking impure water, and insufficient cleanliness. This is as true to-day as it was then, and is nothing more or less than carelessness and ignorance.

Hygeia was wise and a great help to her father as she "did her bit" by trying to prevent, rather than cure disease. Thus every conscientious physician tries to do, though hampered by impure food manufacture, patent medicine vendors, and charlatans.

Since ignorance and carelessness are the cause of so much distress throughout the world, it is the duty of every true American to educate his or herself in right living, so we may enjoy life more abundantly.

The past few years the biological chemists' reseaches have resulted in great and fruitful activities. When one studies the results, he may be inclined to believe that these scientific discoveries are more academic than practical. Because the human race has maintained a fair measure of health and power without scientific guidance is no reason why it is the part of wisdom to discount all that has come from the chemist's patient labor. No doubt human standards may be improved, even if mankind has survived. If this is generally true of mankind, it is certainly much more conspicuously true of ill-nourished individuals. We must consider modified habits of diet that modern life has brought about, which no one will deny in many instances have been for the worse.

The service of food is a matter of composition and quality. To study the question advantageously, we must study first, briefly, the purposes which food subserves. Some have divided these into three, viz., growth, repair, and operation. Until recently it was believed that repair was typical growth that was offset by disintegration, but now we have every reason to believe that growth is quite different from processes of maintenance. A moderate amount of the child's diet is incorporated into the increasing mass of tissues. Later, when these are on the increase, a small amount is still devoted to wear and tear. Most of our food may be described as fuel, as it serves for the operation of the mechanism. Our bodies may be likened to an automobile with its various complicated parts built from certain materials and maintained by a certain supply, but which is operated from day to day at a cost of vast quantities of fuel. It is plainly evident that in the long run the fuel may outweigh the machine.

This comparison is faulty of course, especially so since the automobile is not operated until completed, while our body is active from early embryonic life, burning fuel, setting energy free, while its construction goes steadily on, otherwise our comparison is entirely justified. To construct an automobile, it is necessary to have exactly the right material. Among fuels there are greater possibilities for substitution, just as the manufacturer of a machine calls this, that, and the other kind of materials certain names, so does the development of the human machine require a large number of distinct and specific supplies more than we realized a short time ago.

The diet must furnish material to make and maintain all the tissues, and must bear certain likeness to the body it is to nourish. The food need not be rigidly similar, for the cells are capable of transforming certain substances that are quite remote from it in their chemical nature, thus the valuable red pigment of the blood, known as hæmoglobin, may be taken from vegetable substances. This is quite contrary to what physiologists thought one hundred years ago, for they believed that our body had to obtain its necessary constituents ready formed from the plants. Diets in the past have been appraised by their fuel and protein contents. The unit of fuel value is the calorie, which primarily is a standard quantity of heat. Since one form of energy can be changed into that of another, so the calorie stands not only for heat but for work, which is certainly a great item in the dynamic output of the body. For a person doing very little physical work, the heat value of an average diet may be set down as 2,500 calories per diem. For those who do heavy labor, such as farmers, require about 3,500 calories. Maine lumbermen have been known to require 7,000.

Proteins are compounds in our foods that closely resemble the constituents in the muscles, glands, and living tissues, generally. Undoubtedly they are of very great importance for the upkeep and growth of the organs, but it has been very difficult to find out just how much it requires for these services. Most people, guided only by appetite, take from two to three ounces daily. Often I have heard people say that since the lower animals are guided by instinct, why cannot man be trusted to choose his food. This rule does not hold good with man, for man is an inventor, which causes instinct to become an uncertain counselor when in the midst of artificial conditions that lead to over consumption of food. The objection to the consumption of too much protein food may be concisely stated.

We may divide these objections into two classes; first, the peculiarities of the proteins, as they are acted upon in the alimentary canal. All types of food undergo decomposition while in the intestines, as distinguished from digestion. Probably the changes are greatest in sugar and least in the fats. Protein decomposition is very harmful, which causes the symptom known as auto intoxication, and is characterized by drowsiness, headache, susceptibility to fatigue, serious nervous disorders, anemia, and joint troubles, caused by the activities of numerous micro organisms of the intestines. Our natural defense must be the prompt absorption of the products of digestion. Therefore it is clearly important in all cases to keep down the protein of the rations to the minimum requirements of the body. There is some danger from too little protein which is marked by a general decline of vitality and resistance like those of poverty or certain ill-fed races.

Recently there has been a great deal said about cooking. There are those who advocate uncooked food and live on fruits, nuts, greens and perhaps milk. Here is another extreme teaching that has a measure of truth, for very valuable food substances may be destroyed by over heating; but do not hasten to join such a cult. However, we should eat a fair amount of raw food. Cooking, on the other hand, develops the flavor, breaks down the vegetable cell, permitting the digestion of the contents and, the best of all, destroys disease producing germs.

To recapitulate, the diet must be sufficient to satisfy the fuel requirement of the body, must furnish suitable proteins and these should be derived from numerous, rather than a few sources; not that a meal should be complex, but a variety from day to day. Fortunate are those who like a great many kinds of food. Mineral matter is a definite need. At present it seems impossible to know whether a food possesses sufficient virtue by reason of its mineral or organic composition.

Diet is of little importance unless we consider moral hygiene, which really is of greatest importance, for a healthy mind must lead to a healthy body, for man is rendered a failure without moral health. Clean thoughts and clean living are necessary, and to have these we must reject bad thoughts from our mind as we would exclude poison from our stomach. When we reject bad thoughts, we will antidote the evil, and the mind will concentrate good, beautiful, and true things. Then our actions will be those of a true human being. If we are to help others, there must be a constant desire to learn that which improves us in every sense of the word. The secret of success is doing good to others, not in order to achieve triumph over our fellows, but for the sake of doing good. This brings to my mind the patriarch of old who undoubtedly understood the situation when he wrote: "If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the Lord that healeth thee."

Observe the field, the great trees, the flowers, and the waving grain, for they live pure lives, are free from hate, envy, impatience, and moral unhealthfulness. Their pure lives only speak clean and kind words. This should teach us cheerfulness, which is a great accomplishment of every truly good person. A cheerful countenance aids the digestion, antagonizes evil thoughts and deeds. There is health and long life in clean thoughts and moral actions, for it is written: "Honor thy father and thy mother," which is followed by a promise of long life. Happiness can only come from doing good things, being temperate in thought and deed. Ignorance, idleness, slothfulness, impatience, unkindness, and untruthfulness bring on unhappiness, undermine the health no matter how regulated the diet, causing indigestion with all its accompanying ills.

The world is not so ready to part with Jesus Christ and to lose his companionship as it appears to be, for it has no one to take his place.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

COLUMBUS, NEW MEXICO, May 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: Well, here we are again. I was just wishing I could go to church at Saint Joseph to-day and hear a good sermon; and there are other reasons why I would like to be there.

The chaplain of the Twelfth Cavalry gave the enlisted men a smoke last Tuesday evening; I was not there. I have smoked cigars some, but never cigarettes, and I have stopped cigars—never had the habit but would soon have acquired one. A certain young lady induced me to quit.

I feel sure that the prayers of the Saints are doing us all good, as I feel a divine power working with me to help me along the rough pathway. We certainly appreciate all the prayers in our behalf.

I ask a continued interest in your prayers.

In gospel bonds,

SIDNEY, IOWA, May 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: I feel it a privilege and a duty to write to the Saints. I have not been permitted to meet with them as often as I would like. I am striving to the best of my ability to live up to the gospel, yet there have been great struggles to overcome the evils of the world. There is nothing in this world which brings such joy and peace to the soul as the gospel brings, when we try to serve God and our Lord Jesus Christ. I had the pleasure of being with the Saints of Tabor a week ago to partake of the emblems of the broken body and the spilled blood of our Savior. I can say I am glad I obeyed the gospel when I did.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

M. B. OLIVER.

MOCCASIN, MONTANA, May 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: It is the first time I ever contributed to the pages of our valuable paper. I feel my efforts are weak in that line and trust I may not use space that would otherwise be more profitable to the Saints.

Being "Mother's Day," and like Sister Hulmes in our last issue, my thoughts are strongly of mother to-day—her prayers and teachings. At times, little did we think how those dear lessons would come back to us in after years, or in what shape.

No greater tribute could I offer to-day to the memory of a patient, kind, and prayerful mother than to say what her life has done for me. Never having heard the gospel in all its fullness, her chief desire was that her heavenly Father would fit her for the duties of motherhood, for she felt that she had to answer to him for the little lives placed in her care.

When I mention the earliest recollections, it brings to my mind those simple prayers of childhood taught by her at the early age of three or four. The first in my mind was:

"Jesus, tender shepherd, hear me,

Bless thy little lamb to-night.

Through this day thy hand hath led me,

Keep me safe till morning light."

Yes, dear Saints, that is my earliest recollection of life and mother, her simple prayers. And no greater legacy could she have left me than her blessed memory. And oh, how often in the days since then has he led me, led me from a spiritual darkness into the bright light of the gospel some few years ago, and I feel her prayers have been answered in this, that all her loved ones have had the opportunity of hearing it. May her last words ever linger in the hearts of her children: That she was going to meet her Master, whom she loved and served, and hoped she had done her duties acceptable to him.

Let our prayer, to-day, dear Saints, be for the divine comfort of all mothers, whose hearts are rent with sorrow all over the land through this awful warfare whether they be our boys' mothers or those of some other nation.

Pray for my companion and me, that through the help of the Spirit we may break down all barriers that may stand between us and celestial glory, to endure to the end, that we may realize this is a day of sacrifice and service, and be faithful stewards. I need the prayers of the Saints for I have been negligent many times, and pray for forgiveness.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MRS. JOSEPH SLATER.

SARNIA, ONTARIO, May 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: I wish to say Sarnia is holding her own against the enemy. Brother C. M. Clifford and Brother R. D. Weaver have been holding services here since February 27. Seven have been baptized and one ordained. Brother Clifford is leaving Sarnia to-day for Bothwell, and the best wishes of the Saints of Sarnia follow him.

Brother Weaver remains a while longer. Another has given in his name for baptism. He is opposed by his wife, but is reading the Book of Mormon.

And so the great fight is going on. One by one they are leaving the ways of the world and accepting the truth.

To-night the Saints are having a reception for Brother Clifford. Brother "Carnie," as the Saints familiarly call him, has endeared himself to all both in and out of the faith, and his cheerful smile will be missed by the Saints of Sarnia. Brother Dent, president of the district, and Brother Lamont were present with us yesterday, from Chatham.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, May 23, 1918.

Editors Herald: Having tendered my resignation as general home department superintendent for the Religio because of having entered the service of our country in the Army branch, I thought it but fitting to say a parting word to the many friends who have helped us in the work.

It is with some regret that we lay down the reins of the home department work, yet we are consoled by the thought that we can enjoy the same great privilege granted to hundreds of others of the young men of the church, of performing our duty and attempting to do all we can to make this world again the place it was when our heavenly Father said it was "good to look upon."

It would indeed ill become any man who failed to grasp the opportunity offered now for real service for humanity. "Life must indeed be a tragedy for those who cannot see something better than what we now possess." And having seen that picture on futurity's screen, it behooves each to arouse and gird on the sword for God and humanity.

I earnestly trust I may continue to have the prayers of my many friends, and that you will give as great if not more cooperation and help to the new home department superintendent.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM F. SAGE.

A man can feel secure in his own strength when public opinion assails him. Any attempt to uphold or justify him is evidence that he needs help. Opposition is recognition of power.—Common Sense Sayings.

Conference Minutes

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—May 18 and 19 at Central Church, S. S. Sandy of the Stake presidency, F. M. Sheehy, and Peter Anderson presided; W. S. Brown and Roy Howry were secretaries. George Sherman recommended for ordination to office of elder; ordination provided for. Reports read from all auxiliaries and departments. Bishop's report read showing receipts of $2,184.73, balance on hand, $319.62. Nomination of T. J. Elliott as counselor, by President Tanner, was approved and ordination provided for. Appointment of F. B. Blair as bishop ratified, also appointment of William Lewis as evangelist and patriarch, and appointment of George Jenkins as missionary, as was also that of Joseph Curtis, in charge of the northeast mission. Motions to sustain the stake presidency, bishop, high council, historian, library board member, and auxiliary committee carried. Secretary and recorder referred to stake presidency and bishop; correspondent, member gospel literature board, and chorister, left in hands of stake presidency. T. J. Elliott ordained counselor. G. O. Sherman ordained to office of elder; Earnest Brace and Isaac Carver ordained to office of teacher. Preaching by T. J. Elliott and F. M. Sheehy. W. S. Brown, secretary.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Owing to the illness of Brother C. E. Jones, we have arranged with Brother L. B. Shippy to temporarily look after the work of bishop's agent for the Portland, Oregon, District.

Brother Shippy may not be able to get over the district as much as Brother Jones has, and I trust that the Saints will uphold his hands by forwarding their tithes and offerings by mail; or by paying them through the solicitors.

The needs of the work are increasing greatly this year owing to war conditions, and this will emphasize to the Saints the necessity of each one performing his part individually in order that the work of the Lord shall not suffer.

Yours very sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Minnesota, at Frazee, June 8, 1918. Lester Whiting, secretary.

North Dakota, at reunion grounds near Burlington, North Dakota, July 10, at 2 p. m. J. W. Darling, secretary, Thorne, North Dakota.

Southern Wisconsin, at Readstown, Vernon County, Wisconsin, June 29 and 30, 1918. Branch and ministerial reports in full solicited. B. C. Flint, president, 401 South Second Street, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Time of Clinton conference is changed from June 22 and 23 to June 15 and 16, at Coal Hill, Missouri. Those desiring conveyance out from Eldorado Springs should write Bert Bailey, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, Route 5. H. E. Moler, president.

A correction is made in notice sent us for conference of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. The reference to Ray, Indiana and Elder Shaub, should be changed to read: Those desiring to be met at train please notify Elder Starr Corless, Coldwater, Michigan.

Spokane, June 22, at Cœur D'Alene, Idaho. Statistical branch reports are due. Send same to Oliver Turnbull, secretary, Sagle, Idaho. All members of the priesthood should send a report to this conference one week before. S. S. Smith, president, 231 South Smith Street, Spokane, Washington.

The Illinois Central arriving in Gypsum at 3.10 will also be met. Note this to be assured of transportation from the railway station to Coalville. Coalville is two miles from the station, so this is important. C. E. Anderson, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

ON A CASH BASIS AFTER JUNE 1

To all our customers, including agents and missionaries: We desire to call your attention to the recent action of the Board of Publication, mentioned in the HERALD of May 8 to the effect that on and after June 1, 1918, the business of the publishing houses would be put on a strictly cash basis.

As manager of the Herald Publishing House, we will adhere to these instructions and would kindly ask that our customers be governed accordingly, thereby saving unnecessary correspondence and postage.

We do not believe this will work a hardship on anyone but rather will be of mutual benefit to all concerned. We must pay cash for labor and supplies, prices on both continuing to advance. It will also effect a considerable saving to the office in time and clerical work, as well as in other ways. Our subscription list, when it was put on this basis, increased rather than diminished.

The sale of books on the installment plan will also be discontinued. This will not, however, affect any contracts now out, which may be settled for as agreed.

Printing and job work, the price of which necessarily varies, will be cash upon receipt of invoice from this office, or if desired, will be sent C. O. D.

We hope and pray for the hearty cooperation of all in this important department of the church work in these perilous times.

O. W. PARKER, Manager.

Reunion Notices

It has been found that for the Spokane reunion there will be no cots available. The Army is using them. Tents 10 by 12 will cost $4 each. Anyone wishing to rent one should write to W. W. Fordham, South 238 Haven Street, Spokane, Washington, being sure to inclose price of each tent wanted. Everyone bring straw ticks. Baled straw may be obtained on the grounds. All who can should bring their own tents. There will be several good speakers, including Benjamin McGuire if possible for him to come. J. O. Hower, secretary reunion committee.

Our Departed Ones

SHIPPY.—Ira Benjamin Shippy, second son of Annis and Benjamin Shippy, was born in Oran Township, Fayette County, Iowa, November 9, 1864, and baptized by J. B. Roush. He was a man of unusually kind disposition and had scores of friends. Died near Aurora, Iowa, May 12, 1918. Funeral from Methodist church, at Hazelton, sermon by E. R. Davis, assisted by Reverend Foot of the Methodist Church. Interment in Hazelton Cemetery.

FINCH.—Elizabeth L. Finch was born February 17, 1856, at Troopsburg, New York. Baptized September 10, 1905, at Hector, Pennsylvania, by A. B. Phillips. Died April 16, 1918, at the home of her daughter Mrs. N. J. Potter, at Wellsville, New York. She leaves husband, son, daughter, sister, and brother to mourn. She was a very faithful Saint, always kind and considerate of others, and is indeed a great loss to those who knew who her best. She died firm in the faith. Services in charge of Albert Wouters, of Buffalo, New York.

VICTORY.—William Victory was born August 5, 1841, at North Burnham, Indiana. Baptized July 22, 1877. Married Elizabeth Fuel, July 27, 1904. Died at his home in Independence, Missouri, May 18, 1918. Was a faithful and earnest worker, promoting and contributing to the establishment of the Walnut Park Church. Leaves aged companion to mourn. Sermon by George Jenkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Served in the Civil War. He passed away peacefully and without a struggle, after several weeks of sickness.

WIGHT.—L. L. Wight, born in Clay County, Missouri, March 1, 1836. Came to Texas with his father, Lyman Wight, in 1846. Died at 604 Hun Stock Avenue, San Antonio, Texas, May 15, 1918. Married in Bandera County, Texas, September 6, 1856. Member of the Masonic order of Sweet Water, Texas, and Confederate veteran, having enlisted at Fort Mason in 1862, serving until close of war. Leaves 2 sons, W. M., of Sweet Water, Texas, and Henry, of Ceburn, Texas, also 3 daughters, Mrs. J. W. Minear, Mrs. W. H. Ferguson,

A PROGRAM UNDER THE NEW ARRANGEMENT

Happening to note that the printers were getting out the four-page program for the conference of the Lamoni Stake, to which we referred last week, we asked them to lift the type of one page and run it here so any who wished to do so might have a suggestion for arrangement of such a conference. We realize that this and similar propositions must all be worked out, but sometimes we fear to make a start lest we fail. If this helps, you are welcome to it:

TEACHINGS OF MENNONITES SCRUTINIZED

Near Huron, South Dakota, are several colonies of Mennonites, a sect who moved there from Germany a number of years ago to escape the oppressive military laws of that country. They speak the German language, dress peculiarly, in accordance with their interpretation of the New Testament teachings, and live apart from their neighbors in groups of seventy-five or eighty members. They have an "all things common" arrangement and make their own laws, which they assert are greater than the laws of the land. Because of their refusal to subscribe to any Government loan, and to pay income tax, as well as their opposition to all features of the present war, the State Council of Defense has been conducting an investigation, revealing their real attitude. From their German Bible they have evolved a system of belief which they assert must be followed, even though it conflicts with the laws of the United States.

TWO RELIGIO OFFICERS RESIGN

Being offered a special opportunity as wire chief in the signal division of the Army, and desiring anyway to do something personal for his country, Brother James W. Stobaugh has resigned his office as secretary of the Religio society and enlisted. He was to leave on the 27th for Little Silver, New Jersey. During the time he has served in the capacity of secretary, he has put the work of the department on a fine working basis, carrying on an immense correspondence, revising the blanks, designing such new ones as were necessary, and installing equipment for systematically caring for the increased work, all in his spare time at home. To date we have not learned whom the executive officers have appointed to succeed him. In this issue is also a letter from Brother William F. Sage, who has resigned as superintendent of the Religio home department.

President F. M. Smith and Apostle John W. Rushton left Independence for a visit to Canada in the interests of the church recently.

F. V. ELLIOTT TO GRACELAND COLLEGE

We understand that Mr. F. V. Elliott, Science Master at the Kincardine High School has been selected as Professor of Science and Mathematics in a University in the State of Iowa. Mr. Elliott has been with us for the past two years and proved a painstaking and efficient teacher and we are loath to part with him.—Kincardine (Ontario) Review. Brother Elliott was recently ordained a priest and has been the mainstay of Brother J. A. Morrison, bishop's agent of the Owen Sound District. He was the only member of the church, other than Brother Morrison, in Kincardine, and his help was much appreciated.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY GOES WEST

His health having failed him, Richard S. Salyards, jr., who recently moved from Lamoni to Independence to devote his time to his work as assistant secretary of the church, has arranged to leave for Phoenix, Arizona, with his family, in the near future.

SUCCESSFUL SERVICES IN PERRY

Brother Joseph Arber has been holding a series of preaching services in Perry, Iowa, beginning the 12th and continuing till the 29th, at which the attendance is good and on the increase, the house more than full. Some of the best people in town were in attendance. Five had already given in their names for baptism.

EDITORS OF JOURNAL OF HISTORY

The Board of Publication have had the matter under consideration and have reappointed Heman C. Smith as editor of the Journal of History, with Herbert S. Salisbury as associate editor.

GOOD GARDEN BULLETIN

If you want an interesting bulletin on "The city and suburban vegetable garden," write to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, District of Columbia, for Farmers' Bulletin 936. It is free.

SUGAR INSTEAD OF WINE

It is of interest to notice in one of the daily newspapers, The American Issue for March, 1918, the statement that the grape growers in California are going to make their grapes into sugar instead of wine. They estimate that one ton of grapes will produce 400 pounds of sugar. The crop is estimated at 400,000 tons. If all these grapes, instead of being made into wine, are converted to sugar, it would increase the supply 160,000,000 pounds.

THOSE WHO DO NOT KNOW

It is really surprising the amount of attention that is paid to those who frankly say, "I do not know." "I do not know if there is a God." "I do not know whether the church is right." "I do not know anything much about religion."

One man who knows is worth a hundred who do not know. One man who has climbed to celestial peace, who has labored earnestly upward until he has grasped the mysteries of our heavenly Father, and sees the beauty and the truth of His words, is worth a mighty army of those who can only say, "I do not know; I have not climbed; I have not strived and prayed earnestly; I have not sought. I have stayed in the ditch, and all is dark. I don't know."

The grave difficulty is men who claim to know something in some one or other department of knowledge, then infer that thereby they are better prepared to pass upon every department of knowledge. The inference is what they do not know is not worth much.

This certainly is very illogical. We have referred to it many times. The fact that a man is a good mathematician, or a great student of psychology, does not mean that he knows how to bake a pie, to roast a turkey, no, nor to build a house, or even to apply in a practical, rational way mob psychology or any other kind.

We need intelligent cooperation. There is, indeed, a moral obligation to being intelligent. To mean well is not enough. If we feed a dog "rough on rats," thinking to give him some nourishing food, the result will be just the same. To wash a wound in fetid water, though we mean well, will not prevent contamination. To run a plow through the corn, without ability to direct it, with all the good intentions in the world, will result in a poor crop.

All too long have we seen some one attempt to trace in opposition—goodness and intelligence, spirituality, and knowledge, losing sight of the fact that light and truth, or in other words, intelligence, forsaketh that Evil One. There is a moral obligation to being intelligent. It is a moral obligation to give intelligent, rational support to the work. Righteousness is needed; not only right living, but also spiritual support and cooperation.

We must have support with faith and prayer, if success is to be achieved. If the man has not been found, if the work is not being done in the right way, rest assured its end will be defeated, and the right man will eventually be found, but not among the eternal knockers, or with those who pridefully "do not know."

It is best to plan things out beforehand; to consider carefully the law and the reasons therefor. But if we fail to do this, if we move forward too hastily, by our own plans, we may rest assured that they will fail. Only the right way will finally and lastingly, succeed.

It may even be that we have the necessity of trying things first, in order that we may learn sufficient of our problems to understand the right solution, but always with most earnest prayer and devotion, seeking to learn, to know, and to do, the right thing.

We have this implicit confidence in the final triumph of the good over all, and of the right, however we may stumble in the meantime. But this does not necessarily excuse our stumbling, for we have a moral obligation to learn; a moral obligation to give of our best; a moral obligation to seek earnestly to know; a moral obligation, not only to say, but to do those things that the Father has commanded.

God is just the same to-day as formerly. His ear is not dull. His mouth is not dumb. His love for man is not abated. He loves his younger children as much as the older ones.—J. W. Peterson.

IS SAUL A PROPHET?

Rabbi Leon Harrison, published February 1, 1918, a short address: "Is Saul also among the prophets?" He comments on the fact that only distance lends distinction. We expect those near us, as a matter of fact, to be mediocre; and we feel aggrieved if they shine forth. Can they be superior who are our ordinary associates? Vanity comes into play to deny it. So men of potential powers pass us every day without recognition.

We are amazed when they develop, when they leap into fame. We are amazed because we know them so well. . . . But isn't it surprising that we should be surprised? Our surprise is a measure of our own incapacity, of our defective insight. No man, they say, is a hero to his valet. But that is why the latter is a valet. His flunky mind cannot see the hero. And how such blindness reacts, not only on ourselves, but also on those unrecognized. We sterilize the deeds of greatness. We kill them by our indifference and neglect. For there are two things that condition the arrival of the world's mighty men. One is that the stuff should actually be in them out of which the world's heroes are made. And the other is our attitude of expectation, a receptive attitude; the attitude of sympathy and vision that presages their coming, that does not cry out, either in surprise or in scorn, Is Saul also among the prophets? Why should Saul not be among the prophets? He was taller and handsomer than other men. He was braver. He was wiser. He was every inch a king. Samuel, the prophet, saw the potential king in the skin of Saul, the farmer's son. God saw this in him; but not his neighbors. If the people had had but a glimpse of his essential royalty, he would have been a king all the sooner. How many royal souls, unseen, unknown, are bereft of their heritage, and are scepterless, uncrowned!

Do we scorn them because they are humble in station? It was the lowly thorn bush that flamed with God's presence. It was the meanest of shrubs from which God's voice resounded. The spark of genius kindles where it will. Let ours be the attitude of expectation, of encouragement, to woo forth talent and capacity; to anticipate the best. We can, at the worst, only be disappointed; but we will not disappoint others. We will not fail to welcome them and appraise them; not only justly, but generously. We will await the seer and lofty spirit—the prophet of God!

This is one of our striking problems—our inability many times to recognize the God-inspired man. Carlyle has had much to say concerning it in Heroes and Hero Worship. Others have commented upon the fact, that we do not see the man who writes the great poem, composes the great symphony, preaches the great sermon, writes the wonderful theme, conducts the great reform, or does any other great work—for we look on and see only the outward man; made in like form as other men. The inspiration within is beyond our ken.

It is indeed a problem, as many of our readers object to what they call—"personalities"; to an encouragement given to our brethren in their work. We know that there are many men, thinking deeply, praying deeply, and receiving inspiration from our heavenly Father. It is not to exalt the man, that we mention their potential power, but rather to recognize the divine within them—the power of God working with them.

Lack of faith prevented even the Divine Master performing many works in Nazareth, the land from which he had come, and caused him to utter that thought, "A prophet is not without honor save in his household." It is a sad thought that those nearest and who see him most, will also hinder the most.

We do not plead for any one man, or any group of men. We do not plead for blind adoration, or human adoration, at all; we do plead that we uphold the hands of one another, and permit a man to do that work of which he is most capable. We ought to try to see the divine in each other and be ready to welcome, appraise justly the seer, the lofty spirit, the prophet of God. Nor do we refer in this only to the one who is sustained by us as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. We mean the servant of God, no matter in what office he is acting. All too often we see the defect, the physical mannerism, and fail to see that which causes to be called to office—the divine spark, the essential integrity of the man.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Question. What about Cornelius and those friends he had called together to hear the words of Peter, whom the angel told him to send for? Were those parties whom Peter preached unto, baptized in water before the Holy Ghost fell upon them? We want to know the stand the church takes on this, and if they were not baptized before then, what was the reason that the Lord poured out the Holy Ghost upon them before being baptized?

Answer. We have the record itself, in the tenth chapter of Acts, the forty-fourth to forty-eighth verses, which read as follows:

While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

From this, it appears plainly that they received the Holy Ghost and were then baptized. The objections are also explained in the vision which came to Peter. It emphasized three times that he should not call that common which God had cleansed. The Jews did not suppose that the gospel should go to the Gentiles. We see this from Peter's attitude, as set forth in the earlier part of the tenth chapter; we see it also from the attitude of the apostles and brethren in the eleventh chapter. It is shown in the eleventh chapter, fifteenth to eighteenth verses, that the brethren, and Peter himself, required this sign to show that the uncircumcised Gentiles had been accepted of God.

John baptized, indeed, with water, but they were baptized of the Holy Ghost. It was clear that they were accepted of Christ. To Christ belong both baptisms; this was a foretaste given them for proof. Afterwards they, no doubt, had hands laid upon them for the reception of the gift of the Holy Ghost. God is no respecter of persons. He is able to give to whom, and when he will. The Spirit of God is not, necessarily, restricted to those who have been baptized; but those who have taken upon them his name through the waters of baptism, are those who have the right to have hands laid upon them for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and receive the baptism of water and of the Spirit, that the Spirit of God may be with them as an abiding Comforter.

Questions. First.—In a branch of the church where the priest and teacher have died and none other ordained to these offices, there being an elder and deacon in said branch, whose duty is it to visit members who have become careless and do not attend meetings in branch? Have the members a right to visit them or just the officers of the branch?

Second.—Where a member of branch has joined another church, whose duty is it to visit said member to see whether they will or will not come back to church again?

Answers. First.—The responsibility of branch administration is primarily with the presiding elder. He has the right to officiate in all the other offices of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 5-7.) The deacon is to assist the teacher, and may also assist an elder acting in that capacity; or may be sent by the presiding elder where there is no teacher available, to labor with members who have become careless and do not attend the meetings. The officer who does not attend to these duties, would seem to be failing to honor his office and calling.

Second.—A similar answer will avail here. The general responsibility is in the presiding elder. That responsibility is not to find out whether or not they wish to belong to the church, but it is also in a brotherly way, to try to secure their reconciliation. They may be much interested in clearing the branch records. But this is purely incidental to the major duty, spiritual administration and salvation. The purpose of visiting is not primarily to find fault, but to secure reconciliation and better living. In some cases, it is wiser not to be too hasty in proceeding. Some people become lukewarm for a time, but yet are not guilty of immoral conduct and are working the church no harm. To expel them from the church would gain nothing. The thing to strive for is full reconciliation. This does not mean that the officers are justified in ignoring the case entirely. They should consider very carefully and prayerfully how such problems may be approached, and what may be done, affirmatively, to help.

It is the duty of the district president, to supervise all the work of the district, and to counsel and assist in these matters. In cases where there appears to be a failure in the proper procedure, the district president, the missionary in charge, a member of the Twelve (if there is one in the vicinity), or the First Presidency, should be appealed to. Great care should be taken in many instances in visiting members who are lukewarm, but who could readily be not only regained but become strong pillars of the work. It is the duty of the presiding elder to consider the necessities of the branch record, the secretary's work as well as the work of teachers, and to consider earnestly with as much spiritual light as he can receive, how best to administer.

Question. "What is meant by the 'law and the testimony' referred to in Isaiah 8?"

Answer. We assume that the above question refers to the following verses:

And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to hear from the dead? To the law and to the testimony; and if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8: 19, 20.

This is a matter of some supposition. It evidently refers to those who seek familiar spirits. In its broadest sense it refers to the law of God; in a narrow sense, to Israel. It doubtless refers to the law which was the Torah or the five books of Moses, and to the word of the prophets.

Evidently commentators so take it, as they give a cross reference to Luke 16: 29, 31 concerning Moses and the prophets. We could not take it, however, in a narrow sense. It would mean to-day, that concerning those who do not speak according to the word of God, as given to us, it is because there is no light in them. And especially would this be true of those who attempt to speak through familiar spirits. We, to-day, would not be justified in returning to the law of Moses for our law, as that has been fulfilled in Christ.

Hence we note John 5: 39: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." Also the 46th verse: "There is Moses who accuseth you, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me." Acts 17: 11 also conveys the same thought, referring to the Scriptures. To the Jews, it represented Moses and the prophets; to us it represents the word of God, all that he has given us; the best light of which we are capable. S. A. B.

LENGTH OF LIFE

For the past few years the editors have received monthly, Studies in Social Progress in the Gospel of the Kingdom, published by the American Institute of Social Service, New York. This periodical attempts to make practical application of Christian principles, and contains some interesting statistics. The lessons for April 7, on "The length of life—past and present," states that accurate figures are only available for a little over three hundred years. While Moses lived to be one hundred and twenty, Joshua one hundred and ten, all the rest of the millions who left Egypt, died within the forty years. Even the children that were born in Egypt never saw the promised land. Hence, the average may have been rather low. In the sixteenth century, in Geneva, the average length of life was 21.2 years. We infer that prior to the sixteenth century, it must have been not more than 20 years. Of course, there were incidental cases of individuals living much longer.

In the seventeenth century the average was 25.7 years; in the eighteenth century, 33.6 years; in the first five sixths of the nineteenth century, 39.7 years. Since then there has been marked difference in the results. The saving of infants' lives had done much to raise the general average.

At present, Sweden stands highest with an average of 50.9 years for males, and 53.6 for females; Denmark next with 50.2 and 53.2 years for the period of 1895 to 1900; France's average is 45.7 years for the men and 49.1 for women; Wales 44.1 and 47.7 years; Massachusetts is 44.1 years for men and 46.6 for women in the latter part of the nineteenth century. India, with an absence of civilization, in a modern sense, had an average of 23 years for males and 24 years for females. Modern hygiene, the elimination of epidemics, and care of children has done much to raise the general average. S. A. B.

HOW DID JESUS LOOK?

Much comment has been made at times, because of certain doubts which have been raised in regard to the appearance of Jesus of Nazareth.

It was our privilege lately, to note some of the different likenesses made of George Washington, as it happens that a very great collection is owned in the city of Saint Louis, and copies for fourteen of these pictures were printed in the Saint Louis Globe-

Democrat, for Sunday, February 10, 1918. They show such radical differences it is doubtful if one would be able to recognize him if they met him on the street. He lived within the age of writing; he lived in a comparatively recent time, and yet his appearance, whether he was short or tall, thin or stout, appears to be a matter very largely of doubt. The fourteen different pictures present about as many different characteristics as are possible. S. A. B.

COOPERATION AND ITS NEED

We again note the effort being made by The Co-operative Colonist in Nevada. They, too, have to consider the many who will give sympathy, talk about cooperation, sit on the fence and give good wishes, but who will not pitch in and help. What is needed is those who will pitch in and help to make it a success.

This is true of the rights of the people all along the line. If cooperation is to succeed, just as if Zion is to succeed, it must be because a people are willing to put it into practice and pitch in and help to make it a success. If we will not do it we may rest assured that some others will, and they will reap the benefits. S. A. B.

BOOKS OF 1917

It is rather surprising to learn from the Literary Digest for February 23, that at no time during the last seven years, has the proportion of fiction to the number of books published risen above ten per cent, and that for 1917 it was only a little over nine per cent. The total number of books published for that year was 10,060, of which 922 are fiction; 902 sociology and economics; 798 on religion and theology; science, poetry, and the drama come into the 700 class; science and the juvenile books in the 500 class; medicine, agriculture, and biography in the 400 class; general literature, military science, and philosophy number over 300 volumes; phrenology, education, business, and law, over 200; geography, 199. Over one fourth of the fiction published are reprints of older books. Sociology and economics led in the number of native writers.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

"AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?"

We invite your attention to the words of the Lord to Cain, found in Genesis 4:9: "Where is Abel thy brother?" Then note Cain's reply: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

There is a deep significance in these questions if we will examine them carefully. There is a duty that we owe to our fellow men expressed in these words which many, even of the Saints, have failed to perform. But I hope and pray that at the close of this article that the minds of those who are in divine presence may be enlightened, that you may have the knowledge of the wonderful responsibility that rests upon you as your brother's keeper.

I am aware of the fact that the most popular belief can be expressed in the following words: "Everybody for himself and the Devil for us all." But let me say that there is no one that lives entirely to himself: by our life and daily walk and conversation and dealings with the children of this world we have a great influence over them.

There is no man or woman who stands still. We are either going forward or backward, and so our lives have much to do with whether our fellow men are advancing or not.

While I believe the motto: "God helps those who help themselves," I do not believe it is all the truth. I truly believe that God intends that we should help ourselves. If we had a load of hay and wanted it put into the barn we would not sit under the shade of a tree and expect the Lord to bring it in for us. I have not forgotten the advice my mother gave me when a boy, and I believe it applies the same in the religious line: "Do not ask anyone to do something you can do for yourself." So I do not believe we should ask God to do something we can do for ourselves. But while that is conceded as true, there is a thought expressed in the text that this does not cover.

When we are called as a witness before the tribunals of the land we must swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So it is in this case; we must not only tell the truth, but the whole truth in the matter.

It seems to me that the position I shall take is not generally observed by the Saints. May God help us to be not only professors but possessors, walking worthy of the place to which God has called us. Let us wake up to the duty God has placed upon us and run with patience the race that is set before us. If you have had on the holdback straps in the past, cut them off, throw them away, because a Latter Day Saint will never need them. There are no hills for us to go down but there are some good ones to climb, so have good, strong traces ready for the pull.

To-day we are living in what is perhaps the most perilous time in the history of the world. It is the day of God's judgment, when the faith of many will be tried to the utmost, and as the Master says, "Because of iniquity the love of many shall wax cold."

The Adversary is doing all in his power to mar the peace of the Saints and draw away disciples after him. So as we behold this it is needful for us to stand in holy places, to fear God, keep his commandments, live according to the whole truth or by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, to be a united band, a united church of latter-day Israel, to work hand in hand (for where there is unity there is strength) that we may be enabled to cope with the wiles of Satan, live faithful to the end, and thus receive the crown of life.

As I behold the condition of some of God's children, those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice; how that Satan is trying them to the uttermost till they are sad, weary, and discouraged, and life seems a burden to them, oft, in the language of another, in my soul I have cried out, "How can I answer the demands made upon these sin-burdened people? How can I fill these empty lives that life may hold its fullness and best for them? In the midst of weakness how can I find the secret of true power?" In the midst of sorrow and darkness how can I fill these lives with happiness, peace, joy, and satisfaction that is lasting? But the saddest condition is to see those who are strong in the faith, evidently, be so selfish that they forget that they are their brother's keepers. Instead of throwing out the lifeline across the dark waters of human strife and helping to rescue those who are sinking in the vortex and the storm, they sit upon the banks and watch their brothers and sisters as they are sinking, and like this man Cain of old, who was a murderer, they say: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

None but those who have passed through the dark waters of human struggle and are, or have been, heartbroken, weary, and sad can know the full value of a helping hand or kind word.

If there are those known to be drifting away towards the cataract of spiritual death by reason of trials, or persecution, that you have not helped, withhold not your hand. The world never loves a miser, be he selfish with financial or spiritual help. Everybody, no matter what his life may be, loves the unselfish man or woman. We have built monuments for heroes, for unselfish men and women who have thrown themselves into the thickest of the fight to save the nation, the community, and the home.

We find our lives in losing them. The Master says: "He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it. He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." I believe that does not mean the natural life, but if we lose ourselves in the great desire to help others we will find help streaming in from every quarter to succor us in time of need. If we crucify our selfishness, our desire for personal prominence and aggrandizement in the uplifting of others, we will find to our hearts' content the truthfulness of the statement made by the Man of sorrow: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Selfishness is the crowning curse of humanity. It can never bring satisfaction, no matter what we acquire as the result of selfishness. We are bound to be dissatisfied. Paul says: "If a man also strive for mastery yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully."

Human selfishness is ever craving, coveting, grabbing, but as the day passes, the sunshine has gone and your night is starless, your life is empty and hope has given way to despair if your life is in its grasp. You may seek happiness but cannot overtake it. The shortest, yea, the only road to true happiness is to kill selfishness and make some one else happy.

The church is spiritually dead in some places because of selfishness and the lack of brotherly love, a neglect to realize that we are our brothers' keepers. Without brotherly love we may carry the name of Saint yet be as far from the qualifications as the east is from the west. Jesus says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love toward one another."

Then may God help us to show to the world that we are his disciples. It should be our shame that we rejoice when some one in the cold, dark night of life slips and falls into sin. Those who are always thinking evil of their friends are living close to danger themselves and may fall at any time. We should pity them and search out some method of helping. "Human weakness calls for pity." We are too cold to each other, too unrelenting to those who make mistakes. "Speak gently to the erring ones." We may not know how hard the fallen ones have struggled till the hour of weakness overcame.

"Let him that is without sin cast the first stone," was the answer Christ gave to those who knew no pity for one whom they had presumably helped to wreck. I do not wish to gild over or hide sin in any way, but I am here to say that the one whose honor we despoil suffers sufficiently without the addition of unnecessary regret. Hate sin but love the sinner; kill the guilt but save the guilty, is Christ's method.

With all our knowledge, faith, and ability, unless we are endowed with that wonderful love that will represent Christ the hope of glory we fail. If we have no pity we should expect none from God or man. If we have no patience we cannot expect God to be patient with us. If we are not willing to pardon offenses against ourselves and others, we should not require that God forgive us.

Kindness brightens and gladdens the disconsolate; it cheers the sorrowing, and there is something about it which induces us to give more lavishly. It costs but little yet is invaluable to the recipient. How often we neglect to brighten the lives of those around us by words and deeds of kindness. How often are we not only thoughtless but cruel to those around us till death calls the neglected ones away and we would recall the dark past but cannot. The pangs of an accusing conscience are with us for years over little things that we could easily have foregone.

Wait not till the coffin lid is nailed down to show your appreciation.

"The pathway of the living is our ever present care
Let us do our best to smooth it and to make it bright and fair;
Let us travel it with kindness and be careful as we tread;
Let us give unto the living what we'd offer to the dead."

THOMAS L. CLARK.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES---Part 19

BY J. F. MINTUN

MENNONITES

The Mennonites as a society of believers originated with Menno Simon, who was a priest in the Catholic Church, and derive their name from him. It is claimed that in reading the New Testament in 1530, Menno Simon decided that he had been deceived. He assumed the capacity of a public teacher in 1537, and was quite successful.

In 1632 eighteen Articles of Faith were adopted, prominent among which are those which express the following principles:

1. A belief in one eternal, omnipotent, and incomprehensible God—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—the Creator of all things.
2. A belief that Adam and Eve being deceived by the Devil, they disobeyed God, by which disobedience sin entered the world, and death by sin, which has been passed upon all men.
3. A belief that Christ and the atonement as well as the means of redemption was taught to Adam while yet in paradise, and they received Christ by faith, and that this promise of the Christ was renewed to our forefathers frequently.

4. That Christ came in due time as prophesied of, and tasted death, and shed his blood for every man.

5. A belief that Christ sealed the New Testament with the shedding of his blood, and commended it so highly to the apostles that it is not to be changed, neither added to nor taken from. That it contains the whole will of the Father as far as is necessary to salvation.

6. The first lesson of the New Testament of the Son of God is repentance and reformation.

7. A belief that those who are penitent believers, and have by faith, regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost been made one with God, must upon their scriptural confession of faith and reformation of life, be baptized with water. [They believe that this baptism is to be performed by pouring.]

8. A belief in a visible church of Christ. This church is to be distinguished by scriptural faith, doctrine, love, godly walk, or deportment, as also by a fruitful conversation, and observance of the true ordinances of Christ.

9. A belief that Christ ordained that officers should exist in the church, such as evangelists, pastors, and teachers, also deacons. That honorable and aged widows should be chosen deaconesses.

10. A belief in the Lord's supper.

11. A belief in washing of feet by all believers.

12. That marriage is instituted of God, and that those in the church are instructed to marry those of like faith.

13. A belief that God instituted the magistracy, and that believers should be subject thereto in all good works, to pay tribute and tax, and render that which is due.

14. A belief that Christians should not go to war, or even defend their own goods.

15. A belief that no oath should be taken even before a magistrate.

16. A belief that sinners should be excommunicated from the church, and reprov'd for their own reformation, and the purification of the church.

17. A belief that a member excommunicated should be shunned by all the members of the church, and that they should have no dealings with such one.

18. A belief that all who have died shall be awakened, quickened, and raised from the dead by the incomprehensible power of God; that some who are alive shall be quickened or changed at the sound of the last trump, and all these will be brought before the judgment seat of Christ, and the good be separated from the evil, and then every one will receive in his own body according to his own works, whether they be good or evil; the good to be taken up to be Christ's and enter into everlasting life; but the wicked will be thrust down into everlasting pains of hell, and they shall never have any prospect of hope, comfort, or redemption.

Bishops, elders or ministers, and deacons are usually chosen by lot. None receive or are given any stipulated salary for their ministrations.

This people keep no record of their number, believing that it is not acceptable to God to number their membership any more than it was for David to number Israel.

They are a very hospitable people. They are plain in their clothing, economical, and thrifty. They treat strangers very kindly without charge, and permit none of their members to become a public charge.

REFORMED MENNONITE SOCIETY

This religious movement grew out of the thought on the part of those of the Mennonites that the church drifted from its original purity and purpose, and because of this conclusion they in 1811 began the organization of another church. After much thought and delay they chose Kohn Herr to superintend this work. They adopted a modified form of the confession of the Mennonite Society.

THE NEW JERUSALEM OR NEW CHRISTIAN CHURCH

This church accepts the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, who pretended to come as the herald of the Lord's second advent in a new dispensation of doctrinal truth, and has presented what he claims to be a complete interpretation of the word of God. It is not claimed that he was inspired, but that he was illuminated from the fountain of light, that he might understand the true meaning of what was already written.

In December, 1783, a meeting was held in London by the believers in the writings of Swedenborg, for the purpose of reading, and worshiping, which from time to time was continued till 1787, when they resolved to form themselves into a society, and in May of that same year agreed upon rules to govern them.

Swedenborg was a minister in the Lutheran Communion till his death, but he claimed that his doctrine had been revealed to him from heaven. A few of the inferior clergy of the Lutheran Church with several of the laity regarded the writings of Swedenborg as a perfect rule of faith, and they proceeded to provide a new priesthood who should organize a new church. The disciples of John Wesley, who had been ministers, offered themselves, and the believers consented. They chose one by lot to perform the first ordination, and the lot fell upon Robert Hindmarsh, who was among those who first met in 1783. Accordingly ordination was performed, and a new church began, although public worship did not begin with them till 1788.

The Articles of Faith are:

1. That Jehovah God, the Creator and Preserver of heaven and earth, is love itself, and wisdom itself, or good itself and truth itself; that he is one both in essence and person, in whom, nevertheless, is the divine trinity of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, which are the essential divinity, the divine humanity, and the divine proceeding, answering to the soul, the body, and the operative energy in man; and that the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is that God.

2. That Jehovah God himself descended from heaven, as divine truth, which is the word, and took upon him human nature for the purpose of removing from man the powers of hell, and restoring to order all things in the spiritual world, and all things in the church; . . . and that all who believe in him, with the understanding, from the heart, and live accordingly, will be saved.

3. That the sacred Scriptures, or word of God, is divine truth itself; containing a spiritual sense heretofore unknown, whence it is divinely inspired and holy in every syllable; as well as a literal sense, and in which divine truth is in its fullness, its sanctity, and its power; thus that it is accommodated to the apprehension both of angels and men; that the spiritual and natural senses are united by correspondences, like soul and body, every natural expression and image answering to and including a spiritual and divine idea; and thus that the word is the medium of communication with heaven, and of conjunction with the Lord.

4. That the government of the Lord's divine love and wisdom is the divine providence; which is universal and exercised according to certain fixed laws of order, and extending to the minutest particulars of the life of all men, both of the good and of the evil; . . . and that the laws of permission are also the laws of the Divine Providence; since evil cannot be prevented without destroying the nature of man as an accountable agent; and because, also, it cannot be removed unless it be known, and cannot be known unless it appear; thus, that no evil is permitted but to prevent a greater; and all is overruled by the Lord's divine providence, for the greatest possible good.

5. That man is not life, but is only a recipient of life from the Lord, who, as he is love itself, and wisdom itself, is also life itself; which life is communicated by influx to all in the spiritual world; but is received differently by every one, according to his quality and consequent state of reception.

6. That man, during his abode in the world, is, as to his spirit in the midst between heaven and hell, acted upon by influences from both, and thus is kept in a state of spiritual equilibrium between good and evil. . . .

7. That man at this day is born into evil of all kinds, or with tendencies toward it; that, therefore, in order to his entering the kingdom of heaven, he must be regenerated or created anew; which great work is effected in a progressive manner, by the Lord alone, by charity and faith as mediums, during man's cooperation; that as all men are redeemed, all are capable of being regenerated, and consequently saved, every one according to his state; . . . whence all who die in infancy are saved, special means being provided in the other life by the Lord for that purpose.

8. That repentance is the first beginning of the church in man; and that it consists in a man's examining himself, both in regard to his deeds and his intentions, in knowing and acknowledging his sins, confessing them before the Lord, supplicating him for aid, and beginning a new life. . . .

9. That charity, faith, and good works are unitedly necessary to man's salvation. . . .

10. That baptism and the holy supper are sacraments of divine institution, and are to be permanently observed; baptism being an external medium of introduction into the church, and a sign representative of man's purification and regeneration; and the holy supper being an external medium, to those who receive it worthily, of introduction, as to spirit into heaven, and of conjunction with the Lord, of which also it is a sign and seal.

11. That immediately after death, which is only putting off of the material body, never to be resumed, man risen again in spiritual or substantial body, in which he continues to live to eternity; in heaven, if his ruling affections, and thence his life, have been good; and in hell, if his ruling affections, and thence his life, have been evil.

12. That now is the time of the second advent of the Lord, which is a coming, not in person, but in the power and glory of his holy word; that it is attended, like his first coming, with the restoration to order of all things in the spiritual world, where the wonderful divine operation, commonly expected under the name of the last judgment, has in consequence been performed; and with the preparing of the way, for the new church on the earth—the first Christian having spiritually come to its end or consummation, through evils of life and errors of doctrine, as foretold by the Lord in the gospels; and that this new or second Christian Church, which will be the crown of all churches and will stand forever, is what was representatively seen by John, when he beheld the holy city, New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN

Because of vital piety and moral restraint being at a low ebb in the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and the doctrine of the new birth but little understood, both the laity and clergy being in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, and profanity and infidelity prevailing everywhere in the South, Reverend James Mooready with others of the Presbyterians undertook a moral reformation in the church, and in time an interest was begotten in their work, and at times this interest was carried to excess.

Because of an increasing interest and a growing demand for ministers, they ordained a few young men not theologically educated, they accepting all the Confession of Faith except that relating to predestination and election, and because of these two things; viz, ordaining men without a classical education and rejecting predestination and election there was a division, and in 1802, in October, there was created a new presbytery, known as the Cumberland Presbytery, and from the place where the presbytery existed and the name it assumed the Cumberland Presbyterian Church took its name.

Those who formed the nucleus of this church were finally excised from the Presbyterian Church by the General Assembly in 1809, held at Philadelphia, and in August of that year, those who were thus excommunicated met and agreed to hold together as a presbytery, and on February 4, 1810, in Dickson County, Tennessee, the Reverend Samuel McAdams, Finis Ewing, and Samuel King, Presbyterian ministers, organized a new presbytery known as the Cumberland Presbytery, out of which, as stated before, has grown the church.

Those organizing this new presbytery did not intend to organize a new church, but were forced to do it, and from this time a rapid increase in numbers followed the preaching, so that in 1813, a synod composed of three presbyteries was formed and this may be considered as the permanent beginning of this church. At this time the Westminster Confession of Faith was modified and amended and adopted as thus changed, as the Confession of Faith of this new organization.

The principal items contained in this confession as represented by Reverend Hershel S. Porter, A. M., are:

1. They believe in what is called the doctrine of the trinity, that there are in the Godhead, three persons, coequal and eternal, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

2. That the Lord Jesus Christ is very God, and very man, possessing two distinct natures, human and divine, in one person.

3. That man was made upright, pure and free, sufficient to have stood, yet free to fall, his will not being determined by any absolute necessity, either to good or evil, but in all cases left to the exercise of a free choice.

4. That all Adam's family are totally depraved and that all come into the world under the curse of the law.

5. That the Lord Jesus Christ, by the atonement, has elected the human family to a day of trial—to a state of probation; that as Adam, in the first state of probation, represented all the human family, so Christ, the second Adam, represented all the second probation.

6. That divine influence is necessary—that a measure of the Spirit is given to every one to profit withal, that no man can obey the gospel without the aid of the Holy Spirit.

7. That justification is by faith as the instrumental, by Christ as the meritorious, and by the operation of the Holy Spirit as the efficient cause.

8. That those who are elected, or chosen heirs of glory in consequence of their voluntary obedience and faith in Christ, will persevere to eternal life—those who believe, are ordained to eternal life in consequence of that belief.

9. That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the only rule of faith and practice in all matters of religion.

10. That the Lord Jesus Christ, the King of Zion, has instituted a visible church—and that Christ is the great head and bishop of this church—and that it is composed of many different branches, having different names.

11. That water baptism and the Lord's supper, are the divinely instituted ordinances of the church.

12. That works of mercy, charity, and obedience to Christ are not meritorious to purchase salvation, but are imperiously necessary as tests and expressions of our obedience, without which none are counted worthy to receive the gift of eternal life.

13. That baptism in the Christian church has taken the place of circumcision in the Jewish church; and hence the propriety of Christian parents observing this duty in respect to their offspring.

14. That there is a divine and internal call to the sacred office of the holy ministry, and that an ample literary qualification is necessary to the discharge of its important functions.

15. That Christ, the judge of quick and dead, will, at the last day, reward the righteous, and punish the finally impenitent.

16. That there will be a resurrection of the bodies, both of the just and unjust.

17. That the Lord Jesus Christ will, after the restitution of all things, and the completion of the judgment scene, surrender the mediatorial government into the hands of the Father, and then God will be all in all.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS

This religious movement originated with the Covenanters, which originated in Scotland, England, and Ireland in 1643 by entering into a covenant, the principles of which are set out in the Church of Scotland.

This church had its beginning in 1774, in America, through the efforts of Reverend John Cuthbertson, William Linn, and Alexander Dobbin. It was disrupted in 1782, and the Associated Reformed Church formed, but in 1798 it was regularly organized again.

The most distinctive features of the faith of this people are:

Their members will not accept allegiance to any nation not acknowledging Jesus Christ, the Prince of the kings of the earth.

They claim that all nations are infidel, hence will not vote, hold office, sit on juries, or take the oath of naturalization.

The terms of communion in this church in North America are:

1. An acknowledgment of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the word of God, and the only rule of faith and manners.

2. An acknowledgment of the whole doctrine of the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Catechism, larger and smaller, are agreeable to and founded on the Scriptures.

3. An acknowledgment of the divine right of one unalterable form of church government and manner of worship—and that those are for substance justly exhibited in that form of church government and the director for worship, agreed to by the assembly of divines at Westminster, as they were received by the Church of Scotland.

4. An acknowledgment that public covenanting is an ordinance of God, to be observed by churches and nations, under the New Testament dispensation. . . .

5. An approbation of the faithful contendings of the martyrs of Jesus, and of the present Reformed Covenanted Church in Great Britain and Ireland against paganism, popery, and prelacy, and against immoral constitutions of civil governments. . . .

6. An approbation of the doctrines contained in the testimony of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in North America, in the defense of truth and opposition to error.

THE RESTORATIONISTS

Those who were instrumental in organizing this society came out of the various churches, all agreeing to the one proposition, that all men will ultimately be happy. They acknowledge the agency of man while believing in the final restoration to happiness of all. But they argue that all will be made happy because all will be willing to become subjects of Jesus Christ.

Formerly all who held to these views were called Universalists, and this term was held till 1818, when Hosea Ballou advanced the doctrine that all retribution is confined to this world, while those who held that retribution was not only for this world but continued in the next separated and met at Mendon, Massachusetts, on August 17, 1831, and formed themselves into a distinct church called Universal Restorationists.

The particular difference between this people and the Universalists relate to the subject of a future retribution. The Universalists believe that a full and perfect retribution takes place in this world, that our conduct here cannot affect our future condition, and that the moment that man exists after death he will be as pure and as happy as the angels. The Restorationists maintain that a just retribution does not take place in time; that the conscience of the sinner becomes hardened and does not increase in the severity of its reproving with the increase of guilt, that if death introduces mankind into heaven they are saved by death, and not by Christ; and if they are made happy by being raised from the dead, they are saved by physical and not by moral means, and made happy without their agency of consent; that such a sentiment weakens the motives of virtue, and gives force to the temptations of vice; that it is unreasonable in itself, and opposed to many passages of Scriptures.

If we are the best people in the world, better let people find it out for themselves by our actions, rather than by our words.—Leon A. Gould.

I have seen . . . where the bereaved had learned a great new truth in their trial and its knowledge shone out through the showers of the countenance; and those who came to mourn felt cheered and comforted instead; so should it ever be, and oft is, thank God, with Saints.—Earnest A. Webbe.

To every individual is given the choice between the philosophy of the world and the philosophy of God. One permits us to violate every law of right, with the single injunction that we must be clever and not get caught. The other instructs us to live above the law; then we will never fear any exposure or the judgments of any court on earth or in heaven.—Elbert A. Smith.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SOME WEAK POINTS IN THE CHURCH: A BRITISH SYMPOSIUM

Some time ago The New Magazine of London, England, published a symposium on "The shortcomings of the church." The Guardian of London reviewed this symposium very carefully and invited several distinguished leaders in the Anglican Church to state with utmost plainness what, to their minds, was the chief weakness of the church and what were the most needed remedies. I have been reading these articles with great interest and I wish they might be reprinted for American readers. Perhaps I can give the substance of some of them on this page. But first I should like to say a word about the symposium which called forth the articles by the Bishop of Edinburgh and others.

The greater number of letters in the symposium call for more "real religion." They mean by that a deepened, quickened religious sense, prayer, spirituality a belief in something besides economics, the sense of God in daily life. The next point receiving most attention is morality. Churchmen should be conspicuous above all others, "able to be spotted" one letter puts it, for their absolute honesty, fearless courage, good will, beneficence, love, and charity. It is not so, and this weakens the church. The third source of weakness given by many of these letters is certain scandalous things in the church itself, such as the sale of livings, the abuse of patronage, pew rents, unworthy incumbents who neglect their work, sweating of underpaid clergy—such things as these. If the church would exert any great influence on the world it must first put its own house in order, is the burden of these letters.

Turning to the contributions to The Guardian based on the above symposium, the first is from the Bishop of Edinburgh. He declares that at present the Church of England service is not attractive to the masses. He even intimates that it bores them. Shortening of the services will not help. Making them free and spontaneous, rather than liturgical, is not the solution. In the Free Churches the services are both short and free and they do not attract people any more than do the Anglican Churches. It is the lack of reality behind the liturgy not the liturgy itself, that is the matter, thinks the bishop. The first note struck in the service is humiliation, but how many people feel any real humiliation when they say "there is no health in us?" The thing is to make our confession somehow express a real feeling. To do that the sense of sin has got to be awakened in our people. They say the confession now with no sense of sin. There is no reality in it. A smug, self-satisfied soul is no good at humiliation.

The bishop then speaks of the hollowness of the worship and praise in the average church. It is formal, not partaking of reverent adoration. Of course it is a question which the bishop does not consider, whether the average Anglo-Saxon man is capable of that spiritual exaltation which is natural to the Latin, the Slav, and the Celt. It is a question whether the average audience of this race will ever look upon the praise and worship part of the service as preliminary to the sermon. But the bishop feels the lack of reverence and adoration in the worship and suggests that perhaps the sermon ought to come earlier in the service, that it might prepare the people to praise God, might quicken in them the emotions of worship. The bishop questions the advisability of the present hard and fast system of Scripture lessons and the Psalms. He would drop some services, but would emphasize the eucharist more than it is at present. But above all he would have more instruction in the church. There is not nearly enough of that. The young people should be instructed over long periods in Christianity itself and all that pertains to the service of the church, in which they take part every Sunday.

When one turns to the paper by Principal Phillips of Litchfield he finds that the trouble is not with the church, its worship, its creeds, and its ancient liturgy—it is with the clergy. And the fact that the clergy are deficient in conspicuous qualities for leadership is not their own fault, but that of the theological schools. Many of the seminaries are on a low intellectual level and make no attempt really to teach men to write and think. Neither is the student properly trained in the subjects and problems with which he will have to deal. Principal Phillips thinks that what the church needs is men, leaders, and the divinity school must make them. He says the course must be lengthened, theology must be taught in its relation to the great thought movements of the day. The minister ought to be able to discuss Mr. Wells and Sir Oliver Lodge before a congregation that is reading them. The minister should receive infinitely more training in the psychology of the soul and depths of human nature. He should understand the soul to which he is to minister. Principal Phillips does not have much to say about the training of the clergy in dealing with the great social problems, and evidently has the parish priest more in mind. One very interesting thing he does suggest—namely, that the clergy be drawn from all classes. Money should be provided so that great numbers of the clergy could be drawn from the working classes. The Anglican Church needs a more democratic ministry, he thinks. (The ministry in the Anglican Church has been largely recruited from the upper classes.)

There are other articles to which I may return in a later issue.—Frederick Lynch, in The Christian Work, May 18, 1918.

FALLACY OF POLYGAMY

Even if we admit that the militarist aim must be maintained in the world, even if we agree that it is desirable to thrust up the birth rate, if we can, it must still be said that all methods of a direct and vigorous kind, such as those now attributed to the German Government, are not calculated to achieve the desired end. It is highly probable that the marriage customs which now prevail have prevailed precisely because they were those best adapted to a production of a large, efficient progeny, so that any arbitrary interference with these customs, while it might affect the quality of the progeny—bettering it or worsening it—would only be likely to diminish the quality, on which the militarist mainly relies. Polygamic institutions, for instance, were once far more prevalent than they are now. If, however, polygamy led to a high birth rate we might have expected that the races practicing it would have overspread the earth. On the contrary, they have largely either died out or abandoned polygamy, and it would appear that they are decidedly less productive of offspring than monogamic peoples. The Negro in Africa is not supposed to be behindhand in procreative activity. But Winwood Reade noted of the polygamic tribes of equatorial Africa that there seemed to be among them fewer children than wives, while it was not until the Jews abandoned their early patriarchal polygamy that they began to cover the earth. It is the social classes that are most let alone, even in poverty and filth, which breed fastest. The proposed governmental interference with breeding would not, it is almost certain, increase the rate of reproduction, but would far more probably decrease it.—From "Eugenics in relation to the war," by Havelock Ellis, in May Physical Culture.

All things are bought with a price. Think not that God is partial, for whenever those great blessings are given sometime and somewhere the price has been paid.—Emma Burton.

Life for each of us is what we find and make our own. The best and highest which this earth contains exist only for the best and highest. If we are worthy of them they are ours.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

HOW THE RED CROSS HELPS AT HOME

The work of the Red Cross in looking after the families of the fighting men grows heavier and more complicated day by day, but the directors at the various cantonments are getting results.

A typical case was that of a young man called to the colors only a month after he was married. He was of one faith and his bride was of another, and her parents were so offended by the marriage that she could not go home to them when he went away. She could not earn her own living. The Red Cross took charge of her, got her a home with the wife of another soldier, and now is trying to get her parents to take her back home until her husband returns. If this fails, the Red Cross will still care for her, and the soldier will not need to worry. It is this work of the Home Service section that brings the Red Cross into the closest touch with the people.

Other typical instances of help extended by Home Service sections in Central Division to the families or dependents of enlisted men are as follows:

The mother of a soldier came to a chapter and said she was going to give up her home as the son no longer was keeping up the payments on it. This was before the passage of the soldiers' and sailors' rights bill. We persuaded her and her daughter to remain, made arrangements whereby the rent would keep up the payments, paid delinquent taxes and saw to it that the home was placed in the hands of a reliable real estate agent. The Government allowance will soon make her independent.

Another mother came to a chapter to inquire why she was not receiving a family allowance from her soldier son. We took the problem up with the son's commanding officer who found that the soldier had not understood that a request for the family allowance was necessary in order that his mother should receive additional pay. The papers were corrected and the allowance added to the mother's check. She was wholly dependent upon this help.

While a soldier was in France his wife gave birth to a son. She had been receiving an allotment but did not know that she was entitled to an increase after the birth of a child. We helped her to make out the necessary papers and the monthly check is larger.

EVEN TRACE BAGGAGE

The parents of a soldier asked if the personal belongings of their son could be located. On leaving for France he had sent his trunk to them but it had gone astray and was not heard of for several months. Through correspondence with the director of camp service we traced the trunk and had it delivered with valuable papers to the parents.

The wife of a soldier asked for a loan to pay the balance due on her furniture as she had received a final notice to pay or lose the furniture. We took the matter up with the firm and were able to arrange for deferred payments until such time as the wife's allowance checks should begin to come. A few weeks later she received $175 and paid the bill.

After the sinking of the transport, Tuscania, several mothers asked advice about employing a law firm in Washington to place their claims before the Government. The Red Cross explained to them that no attorney was needed and that the men were impostors.

Men incapacitated because of physical disability came for aid after being discharged from the Army. They had not been informed of the disability compensation act. They were given legal assistance, necessary medical care, and are doing well now.

National Conference of Social Workers

(Held in Kansas City, Missouri, May 15-22, 1918.)

The reconstruction work as being presented by the Government and the numerous social service organizations was the keynote of the program for the above mentioned conference. The president and secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, realizing the urgent and immediate need for a study of this important work, attended from the opening day, for the purpose of hearing the most modern and efficient methods of social service work discussed by representative men and women of the Nation.

The conference was held in Convention Hall, which was divided into four auditoriums. Sectional meetings were held in near-by churches and halls. The conference work was presented under the following divisions: 1. Children; 2. Delinquents and corrections; 3. Health; 4. Public agencies and institutions; 5. The family; 6. Industrial and economic problems; 7. The local community; 8. Mental hygiene; 9. Organization of social forces; 10. Social problems of the war and reconstruction. The speakers were from all parts of the United States, and among them were named such well-known and loved workers as Julia Lathrop, Director Federal Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia; Jane Adams of Hull House; Jane Deeter Rippin, Director Committee on Protective Work for Girls, Washington, District of Columbia; Cyrus Stimson, Field Secretary Playground and Recreation Association, New York; and over one hundred others.

The delegate list of those who were in attendance enrolled workers from almost every State in the Union. The city of Chicago registered 68 delegates, New York City 77; Ohio 82, Colorado 31, California 15, Massachusetts 38, Utah 10. Japan registered 2 delegates.

The Federal Children's Bureau has appointed the second year of the war as a Children's Year, which means: first, the safeguarding of our children morally, spiritually, and economically; second, the safeguarding of the power of the mother to care for her child in her own home. England, realizing the necessity for caring for her children in order to preserve the future of the nation, reduced the percentage of infant mortality during the second year of the war to less than in normal times, through a nation-wide campaign for a higher standard of health for babies.

While you cannot suddenly change the mode of living in a home you can begin improvements with the baby. New Zealand has the lowest percentage of infant mortality of any country, and this standard was reached through cooperation with the state and through the educational methods used.

Jane Addams said, "Mothers should not leave their home and children to work. I hope, out of all this theorizing the effort to keep the mother with her child will be successful."

Birth registration should be enforced. Public health nursing should be developed by encouraging mothers and women to train for home and community work in order to release the trained nurses for Army service.

Out of the war has grown a new respect for the hygienic and physical condition of our children and young people. The health movement has taken on a social aspect.

"A law originating in England says that a child needs the same training regardless of where he was born and whatever his geographical location. The country school must give training equal to that of the town or city school."—Julia Lathrop.

In one community the Mother Goose Rhymes have been rearranged to fit the Hoover requirements.

Laws should not emanate from social workers, but from the people. A monopoly on ideas is a dangerous thing in a community.

The war will discover many maladjustments. The community will have to devise some method of placing men where they are best fitted to work efficiently, and this can only be done by an intimate knowledge of the individual.

Churches remain individualistic; they do not socialize.

Coordination of neighborhood forces is necessary in community work, but first a desire for social betterment must be developed. Two men were fighting on the street. A woman came up and asked, "Can't something be done to stop them? Can they not be persuaded to talk it over?" The answer was, "Why, bless you, that is what started the fight." An attempt to work together in a community to a democratic end will start a scrap which must be fought out before the end is attained.

Merge all interests of a community during the war and do team work. If we stay together for three or four years we will work out the problems of social democracy. In organized community work be satisfied with nothing short of the entire community. Religious terms that will prejudice should not be used in community work. The single thing which unites all our interests now, is making a better community in which to live.

Leisure time should be productive for intelligent democracy. Low types of activities should be replaced by higher and more desirable ones.

Don't do things for the people but have activities by the people. The salvation of a community depends upon using its own forces to reconstruct itself.

In one community the mothers took down the division fences in one block and let the children run the full block, the mothers taking turns in supervising. It takes big-hearted women to do this, but we are coming to it. Girls of the neighborhood spent one hour a day in story-telling in these backyards, the principal of the school giving them credit for the work.

When we are able to inoculate the world with the spirit of peace and true brotherhood then will it become a new world indeed.

Villages with agricultural environment should have a higher moral standard. There is more opportunity for normal life there than in the city, and if the morals have become bad it is the fault of an unorganized condition rather than any inherent weakness.

A number of sessions were held for the discussion of mental hygiene for psychiatry. A course was recommended which gives understanding of mental and nervous diseases and ability to carry out doctors' directions. The necessity for this work is strongly urged in the caring for our returned soldiers. Aside from soldiers' necessities mental hygiene workers are valuable in connection with hospitals and sanitariums. Doctor Frankwood E. Williams of New York City asked: "Are the hospitals in your State prepared to care for those soldiers who return to us suffering from nervous and mental and tubercular diseases?" In a case of slight tubercular affection, the man in charge of a sanitarium may decide against placing the patient in a tubercular hospital. In six months' time the case is severe enough, and through lack of proper care at the proper time, becomes incurable. A soldier returns with nervous disease as a result of shell shock, etc., and he could rest and be cured if there was a proper place for him. We say we can do nothing, but later, when he becomes a raving maniac, crazy, incurable, then there is a place." Thus he emphasized the necessity for the study of mental hygiene and an investigation of conditions to care for such cases.

There are two forces at work as a result of the war, first, the fighting force, and, second, the army behind the lines. The great battle behind the lines is that of social living and the reconstruction of industrial and economic conditions when the war is won.

Capacities in which women are needed in war work were suggested, such as: Club organizers, Red Cross and home service workers, secretaries, recreation leaders both in war camps and for the Young Women's Christian Association, cafeteria leaders and managers, and employment managers. All these demand a certain amount of training, and women are urged to qualify for service. Information can be secured by applying to any local Y. W. C. A.

The Travelers' Aid Society is operating in all large cities and camps. This organization has a representative who meets all trains and conducts girls to safe boarding places, provides suitable work in case they are looking for it, provides good church connections, or reestablishes relations with her family in the case of some wayward runaway.

Doctor Hastings Hart of New York, former president of the National Conference of Social Work, said that the qualifications for a social worker were "to be teachable and to have the spirit of humanity."

The volunteer army of social workers will come in and supplement the work of the trained and salaried worker. Among these volunteers we find people with good mental attitude or with minds for the work. The value of social work is not all learned in schools and colleges. The question of efficiency and training, however, is an important one and the question should not only be, "Is he willing to serve," but "How well can he serve?"

Parenthood does not become constructive until a certain standard is raised and anything less than constructive parenthood is undesirable.

STANDARD IN PARENTHOOD, BY MRS. FRANK D. WATSON,

When to Begin the Care of a Baby

(This is the second of a series of weekly articles on how mothers can help in Children's Year. This one is by Mrs. Max West.)

Mothers are just beginning to realize that the better care which babies must have, if 100,000 of them are to be saved during Children's Year, should commence before the baby is born. Every year three times that number of children under five die and are lost to the country before they have lived much beyond infancy. A large part of this vast multitude of young Americans perished needlessly, because many of the deaths could have been prevented by proper and sufficient care.

At what age do most of these preventable deaths occur? What are the proven methods by which babies' lives may be saved? From the answers to these questions mothers will appreciate the special work for children which they can do during Children's Year.

The first and largest number of deaths among little babies is due to what are called the prenatal causes. This group includes the babies which were born prematurely, or too weak to survive, perhaps with some defect of the body which forbids their living, and also those who are so injured by the birth process that they cannot be saved. All of these causes of death are effective either in the period of pregnancy or at childbirth itself. The babies' lives can be saved only if their mothers have proper care at these most important periods.

The essential features of good care for expectant mothers are proper and sufficient food, rest, freedom from overtaxing forms of work and from worry, medical supervision of her general condition and prompt attention to small ailments as they arise. A prospective mother needs a light, nutritious diet of digestible foods such as she likes and her appetite demands. Fried and greasy foods, heavy puddings, and all heavy or underdone pastries, or an excess of any one article should be eliminated from her diet, as well as anything which she does not readily digest. It is also important that the expectant mother should drink a sufficient quantity of water each day.

During the last eight weeks before the baby comes the mother should as far as possible be spared all forms of heavy and taxing labor, in order that her strength may be built up in anticipation of the coming demand upon it. The baby's proper development also depends largely upon the mother's condition at this time, since the baby gains half his weight in the last eight weeks of pregnancy. The mother's ability to nurse her baby depends upon the care she has during these last weeks and immediately after confinement.

The mother should be under the care of a good doctor as long before the birth as possible in order that he may watch for and correct any untoward symptoms that may arise. It is exceedingly important that the ailments of pregnancy be dealt with in the beginning before they develop into more serious matters. At the first appearance of swollen hands and feet, or persistent headache, or pain in any part, of hemorrhage, or of spots before the eyes, a good doctor should be called.

It is much easier and far cheaper to see that mother and baby have the right kind of food and proper care during the brief period before birth than it is to undo the results of improper food and care at this decisive time. This is a need which we in this country must soon face as England and France have had to do. It is said that in Paris pregnant women had never been so well cared for as in the first months of the war.

The Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia, will send to anyone asking for it a pamphlet giving simple directions to mothers-to-be. The Bureau will upon application furnish information to associations or communities as to starting prenatal clinics or consultation centers for mothers, where the services of a good doctor are made readily available for all mothers.

The establishment of such centers is one of the ways in which communities can give their children protection. Indeed, if all the mothers in a community realize how important such clinics are for the well being of their children, and combine in forwarding efforts to establish and maintain centers where mothers can go for advice before their babies are born and to which they can take their children for expert examination they can help in work that is of vital importance to the purpose of Children's Year, to "get a square deal for children, and save 100,000 babies."

Strangism

[A sister sent in an inquiry to the church authorities regarding the claims of those who believe the teachings of James J. Strang, and they were answered some time ago by Brother R. S. Salyards in a personal letter. We asked him to save us a copy of the letter, which we have held till now, awaiting such time as we could spare the space for it. It contains much valuable information on the subject, which should be preserved, and we are glad to be of assistance to that end.—EDITORS.]

President F. M. Smith has referred to me your letter together with the pamphlets on the subject of Strangism, with request that I reply to the same. I have examined the pamphlets written by Mr. Couch, Watson, and others, in connection with former investigations of the claims of Strangism.

1. The so-called letter of appointment. The letter was printed with pen; is not the style of Joseph Smith in composition, not in his handwriting. The postmark of Nauvoo could easily have been provided or imitated. James Whitehead, secretary of Joseph Smith and who kept record of all important matters and documents, says no such letter was written to Strang. He testified that Strang was appointed to go north into Wisconsin where a stake was to be planted and over which Alpheus Cutler was to preside, J. J. Strang to be his counselor; that others were to make locations at various points, such as Lyman Wight and others. These arrangements were made in council at Nauvoo. It would seem that the Seer acted with prescience in arranging for a location in Wisconsin, for it was there the Reorganization started. Strang, however, left the Wisconsin location, and went to Beaver Island. He started up an independent leadership, which was not contemplated. He did not publish the postscript to the so-called letter, which directed that he report progress from time to time. However, the letter as published is a fraud upon its face. Charles J. Strang, son of James, accepted the idea that the postscript proved the appointment to be local in character. (See Church History, vol. 3, pp. 51, 53.) In his statement Charles J. Strang also states clearly that his father departed from original instructions and by shrewd methods set up a leadership of his own. This is in harmony with the action of his second wife and her family, who repudiated his claims and joined the Reorganization and were members thereof at Lamoni, Iowa.

2. Strang claimed he was ordained by an angel and before the so-called letter of appointment reached him. His followers claim that Joseph Smith the Seer was likewise ordained by angels to be the earthly head of the church, hence that Joseph Smith, President of the Reorganized Church was not properly ordained.

The law of God in Doctrine and Covenants, Bible, and Book of Mormon is to be examined upon the matter, as it is the basis of procedure. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16, that "no person is to be ordained to any office in this church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that church; but the presiding elders [and other leading officers] . . . may have the privilege of ordaining, where there is no branch of the church, that a vote may be called."

Paragraph 17 of the same: "Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder), bishop, high counselor, and high priest, is to be ordained by direction of a high council, or general conference."

Strang is the sole witness to the so-called ordination by an angel. He was not ordained by vote of any branch, nor by any general officer, nor by direction of a high council or General Conference. His so-called ordination was contrary to law.

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 4: "It shall not be given to anyone to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who has authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."

Strang was not ordained to act as President of the church by anyone who had authority to do so; for even an angel is not at liberty to do contrary to the law; his ordination was not known to the heads of the church. He was not regularly ordained by the heads of the church. He was not ordained by them at all. His so-called ordination was therefore irregular, unknown, and entirely illegal and of no effect.

Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2: The church is instructed here that "ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him [Joseph Smith] whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

"But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

Joseph Smith was to appoint another, should he be taken. He could not appoint anyone contrary to the provisions of the law named above; that is, any appointment made by him would be subject to action by the general church and its authorities.

Notice, too, that the one appointed was to "teach the revelations which you have received." Strang did not meet the requirements; he taught polygamy, the seventh day as the Sabbath, the law of Moses, and other things directly contrary to the revelations.

Question: If Strang was so promptly ordained by the angel, on the very day he states that Joseph Smith was killed—why has no successor to Strang been appointed in all the years since his death? Why this long lapse? Has the angel who ordained him been asleep during this long interregnum?

3. Strang was ordained a king. His Book of the Law, a copy of which is in my possession, reads—I quote but a little of what might be stated: "The king, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom and ruleth, shall write for him a copy of the Book of the Law, according to that which is before the Lord continually; and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life . . . to the end that he prolong his days in the kingdom, and of his children among the faithful. He shall execute judgment upon the people, and over the princes and rulers, and over all that sit in judgment. . . . He shall overthrow the rebellious, destroy traitors, and punish those that do wickedly. The haughty shall he make low, and the oppressor shall he tread down; those that exalt themselves shall he abase. The power of the Lord, God, he giveth to him, to rule the nations, and to execute judgments among the children of men: he shall declare the laws and commandments; exercise his dominion; and cast a shield round about the children of his people, that his dominion be not taken from him forever."—Book of the Law, pp. 177, 178.

To save time and space, and to be brief: Pages 188, 189, provides that an elder or elders are to be appointed to rule, teach, instruct according to the king's commandment; and they are to govern the town according to the same.

On page 196 the king is to appoint elders, governors, rulers, and judges, and they are to rule as he shall appoint them.

Page 293: "The day (July 8) that James, the prophet of God, was established King, and sat upon his throne, is a notable day; it shall be kept in remembrance forever. As often as this day returneth shall all the Saints assemble together. It shall be a holy convocation. They shall assemble in their temple, and in their synagogues, and in public places, to offer thank offering, an offering of praise unto God, because he has given the kingdom to the Saints. The king shall therefore offer a heifer, without blemish," etc. They were to offer it with herbs, as a sacrifice, etc.

Page 329. "The king shall appoint elders, discreet men to keep his highways, and to receive tribute of those that use them, that there may be money to make and preserve them forever. The king may also grant unto others to make highways and to receive tribute for the use of them," etc.

In Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, we read: "But verily I say unto you, that, in time, ye shall have no king nor ruler, for I will be your king and watch over you. Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people," etc.

Strang was a false prophet and a deceiver. He deliberately violated this commandment which states that in time, that is in the present before the coming of Christ, "Ye shall have no king nor ruler, for I will be your king," etc. He usurped the place of Jesus Christ, who is the king of the Saints. Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5 says, "Let no man think that he is ruler." It also says, "Be subject to the powers that be [the civil authority], until he reigns whose right it is to reign." It also says, "Let no man break the laws of the land, . . . wherefore be subject to the powers that be," as stated.

James J. Strang assumed both ecclesiastical and civil power. He became a law unto himself. He defied and rebelled against both the laws of God and of man. The law of the church provides that "all things shall be done by common consent." (See Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.)

Where is Strang and his kingdom to-day? Where his rule of "the nations"?

The Book of Mormon says: "And this land [America] shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish."—2 Nephi 7: 18-20.

Strang set himself up as a king; he appointed officers, laid tribute, punished those who disobeyed, attempted to spoil people of their goods, and he "perished," miserably perished. See Book of Law, pp. 203, 204, 331, 333, which provides that "the dominion is yours forever; ye shall smite nations with a continual stroke. . . . Ye shall break them in pieces and destroy them"; "of all the spoil which ye shall take from your enemies," etc.

The provisions of the law for the offering of a heifer by "sacrifice," by the "priest," etc., revives the law of Moses, contrary to the teachings of the three books. Jesus said: "The law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. . . . For I have come to fulfill the law; therefore, it hath an end."—Nephi 7: 5, 6. The offering of sacrifice and the observances of the seventh day by Strang are contrary to the teachings of the revelations given of God through the scripture accepted by the church in the days of the Martyr.

Why should anyone of practical sense and belief in God and morality believe in Strangism? Doctor Samuel Bennett, one of his radical followers—all of them are persistently and blindly radical—said, when asked concerning Strang, that he was in the north country marshaling the hosts of Israel. Possibly, but how did he know it? This is but one instance that a fanatical spirit has attended those who have clung so tenaciously to the Strangite theory, which is without the faintest hope of realization.

4. Strang preached and practiced polygamy. For several years he denounced it in all its forms and men were expelled from his organization for being guilty of practicing polygamy. Later he practiced it and had five wives. His followers join with the Brighamites in teaching and justifying it. They adopt the Utah theory that the Book of Mormon leaves a loophole for its practice, but which it does not, as it calls polygamy a "crime," "abomination," etc. Polygamy is strictly forbidden by the revelation given through Joseph Smith. (See Doctrine and Covenants.)

The plot of Strang, Barnes, Pierce, and Wells, published by I. F. Scott, in HERALD, December 29, 1888 (THE SAINTS' HERALD), is shown up in its completeness, in the statement of C. P. Barnes. A description is given of the manufacture of Strang's plates, the endowment, the oaths administered, the part of John C. Bennett, etc. Mr. Scott was with Strang and knew the ins and outs of the whole thing. Mr. Barnes was a banker of Burlington, Wisconsin, and recites the whole matter. It shows that the letter of appointment was gotten up by Strang, after Joseph Smith's death, and that it was the intention to make it appear that Strang was appointed to be Smith's successor. The thing is clear in its entirety in the light of this statement.

6. The testimony of James Whitehead, Bishop Miller, Lyman Wight, Brigham Young at Nauvoo, Edwin Stafford, and of others, shows that Joseph Smith appointed his son Joseph to be his successor, publicly at Nauvoo before the congregation, in Liberty Jail, also at another time.

He was appointed by his father; he was called of God direct by revelation to himself, he was ordained by authority of the church. He taught the revelations given through the Seer to the church.

A command of God is sufficient authority to ordain within the law: "Accordingly we [Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery] went and were baptized. I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood—for so we were commanded."—Joseph Smith's History, Supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 14, p. 15.

"We [Joseph and Oliver] had not been long engaged in solemn and fervent prayer [June, 1829] when the word of the Lord came to us in the chamber [of Father Whitmer], commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office," etc.—Joseph Smith's History.

The account shows that they were instructed to defer their ordinations until they had secured the sanction of their brethren and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept them as spiritual teachers or not.

On the sixth day of April, 1830, they met according to commandment and organized the church. This was done and the ordinations of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received the unanimous consent of the people. (See History of Joseph Smith.)

John the Baptist, who thus instructed them, stated that he acted "under the direction of Peter, James, and John."

In Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3 Christ speaking to the church says: "And also with Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name."

Strangites say Joseph the Seer was ordained by Peter, James, and John actually laying their hands upon them; that James J. Strang was ordained by an angel, hence his ordination was like theirs. There is no proof that Peter, James, and John laid hands upon them. To ordain means to appoint, not necessarily by laying on of hands. They ordained one another to the eldership by command of God from Jesus Christ, who (Christ), ordained them, but he used agents to do it. John the Baptist stated that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, etc., and Joseph and Oliver acted as agents of Christ in ordaining each other, by command of God.

Joseph Smith was a prophet and a revelator to the church before he was ordained by the church to be president of the high priesthood. He says: "On the 26th [April, 1832], I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as the president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th of January, 1832. The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the Bishop, Edward Partridge, in behalf of the church. The scene was solemn, impressive, and delightful."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 624.

He was ordained to the office of president of the high priesthood by high priests, January 25, 1832, by authority of a general council. Joseph Smith, his son, was likewise ordained, by authority of a General Conference, April 6, 1860. He was ordained by men who held the high priesthood in the days of the Martyr, by command of God, and by men who held the office of apostle by command of God. The apostles are to ordain and set in order all other officers in the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11, 12, 30.) They are to regulate all the affairs of the church, etc., as directed. Joseph Smith the second was ordained according to this pattern.

Strangites admit that high priests, Whitmer, Cowdery, and Harris selected and ordained the Twelve in 1835, by command of God, but claim that they were apostles and that Oliver Cowdery was one of the Presidency in thus ordaining the Twelve.

Oliver Cowdery was not a member of the First Presidency. He and David Whitmer were apostles in the sense that they were especial witnesses of the Book of Mormon. They were never in the Twelve and never exercised the functions of apostles in the Twelve. However, they ordained men to a greater office, by command of God.

Joseph Smith the second was ordained president of the high priesthood by apostles and high priests, they being ordained by command of God, and by men who held the high priesthood under the Seer.

Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church, had right to the prophetic and presidential office by right of lineage.

Brighamites and Strangites say that the office of patriarch descends by right of lineage, but not the office of president of the high priesthood.

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, . . . the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3.

This refers to the priesthood in general. We understand that any man must have the right by lineage, be called, and prove worthy, to act in any office.

In Doctrine and Covenants you will find the transmission of the holy priesthood from father to son: "Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec; who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah; and from Noah till Enoch, through the lineage of their fathers; and from Enoch to Abel, . . . who received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam, who was the first man; which priesthood continueth in the church of God in all generations, and is without beginning of days or end of years."—83: 3.

Joseph the Martyr was of the lineage of Joseph of Egypt; because of that he held the right to the office which he held, as the word teaches.

In the Book of Mormon we read: "Wherefore, it came to pass that after Amaleki had delivered up these plates into the hands of King Benjamin, he took them and put them with the other plates, which contained records which had been handed down by the kings, from generation to generation, until the days of King Benjamin; and they were handed down from King Benjamin, from generation to generation, until they have fallen into my hands."—Words of Mormon 1: 14, 15.

"And it came to pass that Alma was appointed to be the first chief judge; he being also the high priest; his father having conferred the office upon him, and having given him the charge concerning all the affairs of the church."—Page 204, old edition.

There are many such instances throughout the Book of Mormon where the father conferred the oracles upon his son; some also in the Bible.

In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18: "And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build, for the boarding of strangers, Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph and his house have place therein, from generation to generation; for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed. Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, forever and ever, saith the Lord."

The head of Joseph Smith's posterity by lineage would be his eldest son, Joseph. The testimony of James Whitehead and others cited shows that he was so designated to be his father's successor.

It is clear from the revelation just cited that Joseph's blessing was to be put "upon the head of his posterity after him." That blessing of the Seer is indicated in the commandment given to the church, in Doctrine and Covenants 19: 1, that Joseph Smith should "be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, and an apostle of Jesus Christ," etc.

We read further: "Again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

This is the blessing to Joseph Smith to occupy in his important responsibility; his seed were to continue to enjoy and administer under the same blessing; they were to be as plants of renown upon the walls of Zion, and the stranger investigating the truth was to receive counsel at the hands of those holding such administration, evidently referring to the work of the Presidency.

Joseph Smith the Seer mentions the blessing pronounced upon him by his father, the first patriarch, February 19, 1834; he says:

"My father Joseph then laid his hands upon my head and said, 'Joseph, I lay my hands upon thy head and pronounce the blessings of thy progenitors upon thee, that thou mayst hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, until the coming of the Lord: Amen.'"—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, pp. 994, 995.

Thus we have it declared that his blessing was to descend to posterity; that he might "hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven."

The exercise of the rights and privileges of this blessing would require that he be president of the high priesthood, for we read: "Hearken to the calling wherewith you are called, even to be a high priest in my church, and a counselor unto my servant Joseph Smith, jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.

The posterity of Joseph Smith, "the head of his posterity," if faithful, is entitled to the same prerogative, the same blessing, the same calling. Joseph Smith was to appoint his successor; through him "the oracles were to be given to another, even unto the church." He appointed his son Joseph Smith, he was ordained by direction of the church in General Conference. The matter is clear and plain.

Strangites quote King James' translation, Hebrews 7, to prove that the descent of office in the priesthood is without father, without mother, etc. The Inspired Translation says it is the priesthood which is without father, etc. The Doctrine and Covenants shows, as quoted, that it descends by the lineage of the father.

7. What has Strangism done? Nothing good; it has darkened counsel, brought reproach upon the faith of the church, and brought darkness and suffering and disappointment to many. It continues yet, with its feeble, expiring life to resist the truth. It has its false prophet, its polygamy, and will end in darkness and death.

8. What has the Reorganized Church under the upright presidency of Joseph Smith, son of the Prophet, done? It has made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable, preached the gospel in all the world, and redeemed Zion and her waste places, and is developing rapidly and powerfully according to the promises of God.

In your letter you ask to whom the One Mighty and Strong refers. The Reorganized Church has taken no position concerning it. However, a committee of the Reorganized Church, in joint session with the Hedrickite Church, or Church of Christ, as it is called, when considering the matter, took the position that the characteristics of the One Mighty and Strong were like unto the Master, Jesus the Christ. Many of its elders believe it refers to the coming of the Lord to the church in solemn assembly, before his second coming in glory, to prepare the church by an endowment for the accomplishment of its entire work.

I have made this reply somewhat lengthy because of your close touch with Strangism and have repeated points that they might be made plain to you. I trust the matter will be satisfactory. However, if I have failed to make any points clear, I shall be pleased to take up the matter further, on request.

Trusting that you may be confirmed in the true faith of the gospel as held by the Reorganized Church, I am,
Your brother in the gospel,
R. S. SALYARDS.

Stockton Branch

(Church on Sutter and Clay Streets)

Since last reporting, the most interesting and important item, at least to two parties, was the marriage of our Sister Mardell Squires, to Brother Carryl Holden. A very pretty wedding in the handsomely decorated rooms of the pastor's residence. We are fortunate in retaining them both in Stockton Branch. They are live workers.

Not long since Elder E. Ingham, of Oakland, paid us a visit to the Sunday school, and made a fine sermon at the church. Our Mother's Day program was helped out by the presence of Brother E. H. Tordoff of Berkeley, who rendered the musical numbers which were enjoyed very much.

On the same day that pastor as well as the branch was surprised by the arrival of Sister Kate E. Davison and daughter, Nina L., from Sherrill, New York. A few days later the branch "surprised" the newcomers in a characteristic Latter Day Saint way—details not necessary.

The church building is arising and putting on beautiful garments, the interior by a coat of beautifully blended tints on ceiling and walls. Perhaps in our next report we will talk about the outside. Our sidewalks are being renewed also.

We are expecting Ceres Sunday school to join with us in celebrating Children's Day.

The Religio social committee have a social advertised for Thursday evening, May 30. We are helping out in the city contest for the closing of the saloon.

The only other change that might be convenient to remember is the address of the pastor: 622 East Jackson Street, instead of 538 South California Street.

Hopefully laboring,

H. J. DAVISON.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, May 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: Your readers will perhaps be interested to know that we are still on the map. Elder Robinson and I have been busy and hope to hold up our end of the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Our Sunday school is very young here. In fact, we have only been running under a home class organization up to the present. But we have fifteen members to our credit and think that is not bad for a start. We have stirred up the Utah church representatives a little of late, and some of their members have been surprised and shocked to learn that they stand up for polygamy as of divine origin just as much as ever.

I send you a copy of an open letter written by one of them to their present mission president in New Zealand. Since this letter was written we have had the pleasure of leading this lady and six of her children into the waters of baptism, (for they said, "We want to be baptized right out of Brigham Young's lot in the true church"). That evening the confirmations were attended to and the Good Spirit was present. You cannot realize the value of the shop window advertisements and the old books published in the early days of the church to show the position of Joseph Smith and his coadjutors regarding the abominable doctrine of polygamy which they condemned in strongest terms. We also find Brother J. D. Stead's book, Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah

Mormonism Exposed, of great value as a reference book to meet both the Brighamites and others.

Your brother in Christ,

418 Queen Street.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE MORMON MISSION
IN NEW ZEALAND

Dear Sir: I want you to know that I am no longer a member of the Utah Mormon sect of Latter Day Saints. When I joined the church I was not told that it was only a branch of the True Latter Day Saints' Church, and also followers of Brigham Young. I have been told scores of times by the elders that it was the only organization in the world that has its apostles, seventies, evangelists, etc., and that section 132 in the Utah Mormon Doctrine and Covenants should not have been printed in that book, as it (polygamy) was right out of the church; but I am thankful to say that the Lord has shown me differently before my children grew any older. I have investigated and found that it was not Joseph Smith that preached polygamy, but Brigham Young, when he broke away from the church and took his followers into the salt land. (That is the land, and Brigham Young is the man, spoken of in Jeremiah 17: 5, 6.)

I have stood up and testified in your church what I believed in my heart to be true, and yet all your missionaries knew that you were only a branch, and yet would not undeceive us. As soon as the Lord sees fit, I intend to get baptized into the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and have the children baptized also if they so desire. We never joined the church as followers of Brigham Young and his doctrine, and I am also very thankful that it was not Joseph Smith who taught the horrible doctrine of polygamy. Just a fortnight ago the elders said that polygamy was not in the church, but one of the head men of your church not only says otherwise but stands up for the doctrine. It was not many weeks ago I heard the elders preach polygamy in the streets, and that set me investigating as I was horrified. Hoping that this letter will help to undeceive others.

(Signed.) ELIZABETH JOHNSON.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI, May 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: As my letter which I wrote from Santo Domingo was not thrown into the wastebasket I will make another attempt to let you know that I am still on the surface of the globe, and with the colors, as a good American should be.

I joined this band last Christmas day while in a garrison on the Atlantic coast, and in January left for my second trip to the West Indies. From one point of view it is better than my first trip, for I didn't have to fight my way in this time, but worse in another way, for I had much rather have gone to France. I let my sisters talk me out of volunteering, was dutiful, and this is where I landed.

And this is an awful place. The people here are infected with every kind of disease from fever to leprosy, and there is practically no place for an American marine to spend his time.

There are very few of the natives who can either read or write, so it is no wonder that they were forever having revolutions down here till the marines came in. We have them pretty well under control. Of course there is a little trouble once in a while, but it doesn't amount to much.

We are lucky in having a fine bunch of officers down here, but we do miss a chaplain, as our opportunities for attending divine worship are very few.

The Haitian Army, which is officered by American officers and men, is a really good organization considering the material they have to work with, and they have a sixty-piece band which is really good, considering how ignorant these people are as a whole.

We have only an eighteen-piece band, but the majority of the men are men who were professional musicians in civil life. No band is really better than the average marine corps band of eighteen pieces.

There are only three of us in the band who are regularly enlisted in the marine corps. The rest of them are enrolled in the marine corps reserve and came from Indianapolis, Indiana, and vicinity.

There is some very nice country around here where we can go out walking and riding and we have a very good place for swimming. Of course, it is not like the old swimming hole at home, but it answers the purpose.

Well, I know that all the men can't go across as they need men down here, so I guess we of the second regiment will have to be "fall guys" and lose out on the big fight.

Your friend and brother,

PRIVATE CECIL O. BLASDELL.

SECOND REGIMENT MARINE BAND,

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI.

CARE POSTMASTER, NEW YORK.

ROLLA, KANSAS, May 17, 1918.

Editors Herald: Since coming to this part of the country I have been kept very busy visiting and preaching. It was not my intention to come quite as early as I did. I left Independence rather abruptly because of a request to come out here to administer to my little niece who had been very ill but is some better now. I remained at Independence for a while after conference to attend to some business matters. I was not quite ready to leave when I was called away so I had to make my preparations and get away on the "double quick." When I arrived out here I was pleased to find the little girl's condition not so bad as I expected and yet she is not out of danger.

I came direct to Hugoton which is the seat of Stevens County. This place is a few miles away. This is the locality where Elder A. C. Martin has recently labored and the point from which he left for the late General Conference. He has done a good work here and is held in high esteem among the people. I fear he will find Oregon much different from this country for there is much less interest in religion than there is here. Apparently the farther one goes west the less spirituality he finds and the more interest in the "Almighty Dollar." The reason for this is the people who have gone west have gone entirely to improve their financial estate and have not developed society far enough to take interest in religion, and in this respect time makes but little difference while in other respects the country grows apace. "Commercialism" has hit the West hard, not because there is more of it than in the East but because the age of the country has not established church and other social customs strongly enough to resist its inroads.

I am near my field for I am not more than five miles from what used to be called "No Man's Land," or what would now be more properly called "The Panhandle of Oklahoma." This country which used to consist of one county, Beaver, is now divided into three, Beaver, Texas, and Cimarron. I will spend my time in these counties and the adjacent part of Kansas until my wife arrives from Australia. I am expecting her in about a month.

At this writing I am preaching at the Campaign Schoolhouse where some of my relatives live and where several of our preachers have occupied before me. Have been holding forth since last Sunday, and will continue until over next Sunday. After then I shall put in a part if not most of my time in promoting the Red Cross drive, that is, during the week of its continuance.

I have been under the necessity of shortening my sermons because of an affection of the voice caused by a severe cold I caught during the General Conference. I have had colds before but none so bad or so persistent as this. It has now been with me more than a month. During the time I was in the Independence and Kansas City Stakes I had numerous opportunities to speak but had to decline some of these invitations because of my vocal condition. However, I spoke with fair liberty at the following places: Second Independence, Walnut Park, North Liberty, Armstrong, Malvern Hill, and Bennington Heights. I was not able, for the reason stated, to do justice to myself or my themes in the speaking I did, but I enjoyed the privilege of association with old friends and the chance to make new ones. None love as Saints do nor remember so surely and kindly.

Among the Saints who have gathered to Zion we have many from Indiana, Illinois, Canada, and California, and in all these parts of the country I have done mission work in the days ago, and besides, I had the privilege of acquaintance with the earlier residents of Independence and Kansas City, as far back as twenty-three years ago when I first attended the General Conference. This reminds me that twenty-five years ago this April I began my work as a missionary. I have during that time had some very pleasant experiences. I undertook the work in the exuberance of an overwhelming zeal resulting from training in a Latter Day Saint home, and a lifetime devoted to the interests of the latter-day work. Since then my difficulties and discouragements, entirely from within the church, have been so great, that had I foreseen them I might have halted, and, perhaps, desisted.

I did think of writing personally to as many people as I could get the addresses of in my new field, Western Oklahoma and the Panhandle of Texas, but I have since decided to write to but few because of lack of time. I may write to some of the local officers and a few others where we already have promising openings, according to the reports of other missionaries. I would like to write to everybody, but time and postage will not now permit. I prefer to govern myself by the various invitations which come from Saints who have the interest to write themselves. In other words, I have adopted an old Methodist maxim: "We go not only to those who want us but to those who want us most."

My mission address is Hugoton, Kansas, care J. D. Barmore. Letters addressed there will be sure to reach me.

With hopes and prayers for a fruitful year, I am

Your brother in Christ,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

PECATONICA, ILLINOIS, May 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: Through the influence and faithfulness of one of the members of this church, I was brought to read the literature, and best of all, to search the Scriptures, to compare this work with the word. And I searched diligently for four years with the aid of the Holy Spirit. Never once did I find the least thing that failed to blend with the word.

I passed through some very trying, dark and doubtful days, times when it seemed I was stepping off a high precipice in the dark. Many influences were pulling me back and I knew not which way to turn. One time I came to the parting of the ways. To decide for or against, I hesitated too long. Satan took advantage of this hesitancy and put things into my heart that made me doubt the work.

Then the Spirit of God left me for a time and I passed through an awful Gethsemane of darkness. This true, faithful servant of our heavenly Father kept holding me up to the throne of grace in prayer. As opportunity presented itself, she would in a very quiet manner, put a word of courage in my heart. Her life also spoke because it was so pure and sincere.

Hope again sprang into my heart. I began to pray once more. One Sunday morning just as I awoke out of a sound sleep, after being in prayer during the night, there came evidence of the truth to my soul, as in a voice startlingly clear, came the words: "This is the way, walk ye in it." What more did I need to convince me of the truth of the matter?

In less than two weeks, the way was opened for my baptism. Patriarch F. G. Pitt was sent for to administer to a sister in the faith. I took advantage of the opportunity and was led into the waters of baptism by him on the afternoon of the same day.

I have had much persecution on every hand, but feel I did the right thing and have been very happy ever since. My heavenly Father has blessed me abundantly in more ways than I can mention.

Your sister in bonds of fellowship,

MABEL P. WEBSTER.

CAMP MCARTHUR, WACO, TEXAS, May 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are stationed here at camp and thought some of the Saints at Lamoni as well as others who know us would be glad to hear from one who is so far from the Saints as the writer. We are glad to know that God's Holy Spirit can go with us from our homes to the various camps where we receive training for the greater service for the Government. Service is the watchword of the day, and we are trying to prepare for greater service for the greatest King of all and whose government shall be eternal, as well as service for our Nation.

It was our privilege to attend Graceland this spring in the radio department, and we feel that our college is giving our boys a good chance to prepare for service for our country. Graceland is also giving training in Army regulations, which has been a great help to us as well as the radio telegraphy. The spiritual environment of Graceland has also prepared us more fully to meet the trials and temptations of Army life. We are looking each day for the HERALD to arrive from home so we can know how the work is progressing in the various fields and departments.

The boys in camp will read if we will get our literature before them. I hope our mothers and all relatives will send the church papers to the boys and advise them to hand them on to others because we know not "when we scatter, where the precious seed will fall." We can easily observe the necessity of letting our light shine among our fellow comrades that they may see the reality of the Saint life. The Y. M. C. A. is doing much good for the boys, but they seem to deem it more for pleasure than for the Christian part of the association.

I had the pleasure of meeting an upright, clean boy of the Methodist Church. He was relating to us how God had answered his prayer in times past. How good it did seem to hear one of his faith talk along the lines which we so much believe and teach. The boys are scarce, it seems, who really have their hearts centered on the things of God. It is our desire to lead others in the true and pure way instead of being led by others in the broad way.

This is a pretty good country, and we have good, cool nights for our rest, but our hearts and eyes turn back to the center places of Zion which we hope will soon be more fully established, and peace will soon reign supreme, and He whose right it is to reign can come to his prepared people. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may be faithful.

CHARLES LEHMAN.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS, MISSOURI, May 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am a Saint Louis boy and am trying to do my best to my God and my country. I also have two brothers in the service.

I wish the Saints to pray for us and others that need the prayers of the Saints, and also pray for my dear mother, that she may keep up her spirit during the while she has given up her three boys.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE A. WILEY.

PERRY, IOWA, May 23, 1918.

Editors Herald: We know it has been but a short time since you heard from Perry, but we are writing again because we have joyful news; it may cause others to be happy. Brother Joseph Arber has preached nearly two weeks for us. His subjects have been very interesting, and the meetings have been quite well attended. We have noticed several whom we never saw before.

These people have all expressed themselves as being pleased, those who are really seeking, recognize the importance of the message. Sunday night, however, seemed to be the crowning event of the series so far. The sermon was no better than those preceding it, but the house was nearly full, the order splendid, the subject a grand one, while people bent forward to catch every word of the portrayal of the "resurrection," a theme in which all are interested. A cloak of warmth seemed to settle down on the congregation; even the assistants took on new life. For an hour and a quarter everybody gave ear; an infidel was moved to tears and said, "I came near saying, Go on, brother, don't stop, but take two hours more and tell us the rest."

Several from the popular churches said they did not have anything like that at home, and wondered why. Brother Arber "takes" with the young and we call that a good sign always. One little girl said, "He has to preach anyway, why can't we keep him all the time?"

Mothers' Day was appropriately kept and the remarks by the subject of our sketch were all new and enjoyed by the least to the oldest.

After spending a delightful day in Des Moines, the fifth, where all of our people but one or two worshiped, we had much to think about. Brother F. M. Smith was the speaker, and his theme was selfishness; the delineation was square, fair, beneficial and patriotic, the brother who had charge of the Sunday school urged everybody to send a letter to mother and wear a flower in her memory. Many that we know of complied on Mothers' Day and it was a good suggestion.

Only one thing disturbed our peaceful enjoyment in Des Moines, and that was a man in a large automobile leaping a four-foot railing across the foot of a bridge, plunging thirty-five feet below, and landing on a river bed. The machine turned over twice, so those who saw it go said. The man was almost dead, and was hurried to a hospital about ten minutes before we drove over the same place. As there were quite a number of people looking at the wreck, we, too, got out, and saw the much broken and costly chariot of modern times.

We were in the missionary car, the fine running one owned by Charles Sheets. It has derived its name as missionary car from the fact that it goes all over town and surrounding country, if need be, and takes all those who will go to church to Fifth Street. How nice it would be for the world

To all our customers, including agents and missionaries: We desire to call your attention to the recent action of the Board of Publication, mentioned in the HERALD of May 8 to the effect that on and after June 1, 1918, the business of the publishing houses would be put on a strictly cash basis.

As manager of the Herald Publishing House, we will adhere to these instructions and would kindly ask that our customers be governed accordingly, thereby saving unnecessary correspondence and postage.

We do not believe this will work a hardship on anyone but rather will be of mutual benefit to all concerned. We must pay cash for labor and supplies, prices on both continuing to advance. It will also effect a considerable saving to the office in time and clerical work, as well as in other ways. Our subscription list, when it was put on this basis, increased rather than diminished.

The sale of books on the installment plan will also be discontinued. This will not, however, affect any contracts now out, which may be settled for as agreed.

Printing and job work, the price of which necessarily varies, will be cash upon receipt of invoice from this office, or if desired, will be sent C. O. D.

We hope and pray for the hearty cooperation of all in this important department of the church work in these perilous times.

O. W. PARKER, Manager.

all over if those who were fortunate enough to own a car, had money enough to keep it in repair and buy gasoline, would aid the lame and afflicted a part of the time by taking them to their churches, homes, or work places.

Six people have given their names for baptism Sunday. The day will be spent in the woods and a basket dinner will be in evidence, many friends of our people intend to go.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

To the Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Scattered Throughout the Scandinavian Countries; Dear Brethren and Sisters: On behalf of the whole church, as well as the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, we hereby express the sympathy which is felt for you in these distressing times of war and its concomitant sufferings.

We realize, even though your several governments have maintained neutrality, yet the strife of neighboring nations has meant scarcity of food, clothing, and other necessities, besides the suspense, anxiety, and anguish of soul which these trying experiences have inflicted upon you in common with those who are directly in the struggle.

We also feel very keenly the disappointment, which we share with you, that for the time being we are not able to send you the services of American ministers; and regret that the comfort, encouragement, and supervision, which before the war developed we could vouchsafe to some degree, is now prohibited.

We hereby express to you our earnest hope that it may please God to bring about a cessation of hostilities so that in the coming of peace for which we all pray, the good work of preaching Christ, saving souls, and building up the kingdom of God may be resumed.

Though at present we are prevented from sending to your lands the brethren, who, as missionaries, would be the pledge of our love for you and of our interest in your welfare, we send this token to assure you that "we have you in our hearts"; and hold you up to God for special remembrance.

May it please him, the Father of us all, to give you grace in this trying time and shield you from the horrors which actual participation in the strife would bring. And, hard as your present experiences may be, we feel grateful that you are spared the loss of loved ones, the destruction of homes, and devastation of the fair lands you inhabit, by the ruthless hand of this dreadful war which has gripped so many countries.

We earnestly pray that divine power may attend you, supplying abundantly your urgent needs at this time, and God grant to you all patience and wisdom to meet the very peculiar conditions which surround you. We also pray that your governments may be guided in their deliberations so as to avoid any crisis which may involve you and your compatriots in this world struggle.

As we pray for you and invoke God's special blessing upon you, so we ask you to remember us, that our struggle may soon be over and peace once again smile upon us.

On behalf of the church at large and the joint council, I am,

Your brother and fellow servant,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

President.

To the Ministry and Members of the Church in the United Kingdom and Colonies of Great Britain; Greeting: In this dark hour of our common trial, and in the moment of our most desperate struggle, we, your brethren representing the ministers and members of the church in the United States, send you our affectionate greetings.

We hereby express our deep sympathy with you in the awful sacrifices you have been called upon to make, we sorrow with you in the death of so many of your stalwart men, who, true to the glorious traditions of your great and illustrious nation, have been faithful to their trust and have given their lives to make the world a happy home for all who love justice and right. We honor the many noble fellows who have been wounded and maimed, never more to enjoy health and strength, but will carry in their bodies the marks of devotion to noble purpose and high principle.

In the terrible anguish which time and again has swept over your nation in repeated outrages in the air and water, as well as on the battle front, we share with you the feelings of indignation and deep sorrow because of the losses and sufferings endured.

To-day, while we send these heartfelt greetings to you, we are chastened by the casualty lists which are now coming to us, and filling our homes with grief as our gallant soldiers are joining with the brave men of France and Britain in paying the supreme sacrifice to secure for our children that which is the right of all.

And, as our common enemy is now, and for the last few weeks, has been making his desperate assaults upon the western lines, in the holding of which we are privileged to share with you, we earnestly pray God will make bare his arm as in the days of yore and give victory to our united armies in the championing the cause to which we are all pledged.

Very deeply have we been impressed with the heroic services of the women of our allies and express our admiration of their splendid efforts to bring the united sacrifices of all to a great and glorious triumph.

These trying times have worked great hardships upon all in many ways, and especially in the work of the churches. But we believe, that while these years of suffering and death have been hard to bear, yet the true character and the indwelling spirituality which are the fruits of our belief in Jesus Christ, have been enriched and sublimated.

We therefore seek by this letter to encourage you, and to advise that we are not indifferent to the many trials and hardships, which, as members with us of the church militant, you are called upon to endure. Nor are we neglectful of the great need there is of ministerial help being sent to you, and anxiously hope for opportunity to send help to comfort and sustain the churches and also cooperate with you in advancing the cause of the kingdom of God.

In spite of the multiplying disasters, we cannot but see in the history of the past four years especially, the fulfillment of the many prophecies contained in the books we believe to be divine, and we are greatly encouraged in this; that God has not forsaken us and will also fulfill the many promises which he has made to his children, insuring their preservation and redemption. The world's night will not endure forever, and, as of old, "joy cometh in the morning."

As an earnest of this coming favor we have noticed a decided awakening among the Saints in this land, a great desire to please God, and a stronger intention to carry out his purposes. Our recent conference was impressive because of the high spiritual tone of all the services, the splendid unity which characterized our actions, as well as the deep feeling that God is about to redeem his promises in the building up of Zion.

The time of the preparation is upon us and all are impressed with the urgent demand for a closer walk with God and a stronger devotion to him and the cause we have espoused.

As further evidence of this we note the increased determination of our brethren of the ministry to equip and prepare themselves for more efficient work by prayer and study. In the weekly letters from all over the field, we have been made to realize that the awakening is not local but general.

In the sacrifices the people are making, as shown in the substantial growth of our income through tithes, consecrations, and offerings, as well as the magnificent total of over seventy-five thousand dollars from the general Sunday school, we recognize that generally there is an increasing desire to get right with God.

During our joint council sessions, we are happy to say the spirit of unity which prevailed in our work has witnessed to the growth of our ability to appreciate the bigger problems of the whole, besides a widened and clarified vision of the important work before us. In these sessions the needs of the work in Britain, Canada, Australia, and other parts of the world have been earnestly considered and we were all agreed that, now the age limit for the army service has been increased, which means that the younger and older men will be required for service, and also that ministerial exemptions have been canceled, you will need help from us. We shall try to meet these needs as opportunity and circumstances permit.

Owing to the shortage of actual necessities we know that the remuneration to our missionary staff must be inadequate, and therefore it has been decided to authorize an increase, so that there may be no unnecessary suffering.

God grant that all may be preserved and protected until the violence of the present conflict be passed, and in his good time peace may come to the war-stricken nations, so that his kingdom may come.

Your brother and fellow servant,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 3, 1918.

The First Presidency having received the resignation of Elder Henry Sparling as president of the Southern Missouri District because of his appointment to another field of labor, notice is hereby given that they have appointed Elder A. V. Closson to act as president pro tem until the convening of the next district conference. Those concerned will please take notice. We ask that the Saints of the district give Brother Closson their hearty support.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Spring River District, Oklahoma Districts, and the Unorganized Territory of Southern Kansas and Arkansas; Greeting: It is with a goodly degree of satisfaction that I write to you to commend you for your splendid efforts and loyalty in the matter of tithes and offerings during the past conference year.

The work of the new year opens before us and as we view our work and world conditions there should be created within us a call to service, a new vision, inspiration to leave no work undone that is possible for us to perform, lest by so doing financial and moral disaster may be invited.

Never before in the history of the world has there been so great a necessity for close affiliation between God and his children as at the present time; never has there been so great a fulfillment of prophetic forecast—more especially as recorded in modern revelations—as is now proclaimed in daily occurrences.

In the past some of these revelations have taxed our understanding and our confidence, but now their literal fulfillment is so pronounced that the most incredulous must admit their potency. Just one citation will illustrate the thought. See Doctrine and Covenants 105: 9: "Behold, vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth—a day of wrath, a day of burning, a day of desolation, of weeping, of mourning, and of lamentation—and as a whirlwind it shall come upon the face of the earth, saith the Lord."

The above revelation and others, both ancient and modern, are being fulfilled daily.

Should not the solemnity of our surroundings urge us to lives of willing and godly faithfulness? Should not we exercise continual and obedient loyal service to God and his true representatives?

Never has there been so great a demand for efficient laborers, for, as the field "whitens," it broadens. Therefore the appointing powers are being tried in their endeavors to supply the urgent demand—the call—for workers. As these laborers go from home and loved ones they must feel that the necessities of life are being faithfully supplied.

We have no reason to doubt the genuine loyalty of the Saints as touching this important matter, although the demands create a continual effort upon their part. The experiences of the past give us unbounded confidence in results for the future.

Let us by our faith and our works uphold the Lord's arm. Should failure threaten us in worldly matters, let us not fail to secure that for which our heavenly Father created us—eternal life.

There are faithful agents or solicitors in all branches in the above-mentioned territories, who will receipt for tithes and offerings. Also all conference appointees are authorized to collect and receipt for tithing, or money can be sent direct to me.
 Your brother,
ELLIS SHORT, Bishop.

Volunteers!

We detest the word slacker. And why should we not, for every person is given a mission, and a slacker is one who holds back while the other person fights two battles. In the kingdom of God it is the same. The Gospel Literature Commission is calling for volunteers. It wants the names and addresses of all persons who are willing to help in the great work of extending the borders of the church by means of the printed word. There are thousands and thousands of pieces of gospel literature which should be placed in the hands of our neighbors. You turn your surplus money over to the church (if you are a real Saint), why not turn your surplus literature over to the persons outside the church? Dear Saint, the call is to you to volunteer. It is an easy matter to send a bundle of papers to some one to distribute, but the work of warning your neighbor rests on you. Your children could be engaged in no work more holy than that of passing church literature to the neighbors. Save your literature. Distribute all you can, working in harmony with your local literature board. If you have no board organize one through your branch and auxiliaries. Write to me telling the amount of literature on hand, your willingness to serve, etc. See other notice in Ensign.

For the Literature Commission,
R. W. FARRELL, Superintendent.

FROM HERE AND THERE

GOOD INTEREST IN MONTANA

Sending in the copy for a handbill, Brother J. A. Bronson, of Andes, Montana, says they have started tent meetings at Dodson and have good interest. One has asked for baptism and several others are about ready for the ordinance. He reports many more requests for preaching than can possibly be filled. He adds: "In fact, there have been more requests for preaching since conference this spring than we had all last year."

Associate Editor S. A. Burgess returned to Lamoni for a day or so recently from Saint Louis, where he has been for the past six weeks. He left soon to preach the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of nurses at the Independence Sanitarium, after which he is to return to Saint Louis for a few more weeks.

EDITOR OF SENIOR QUARTERLY LEAVES

Sister Christiana Salyards left Lamoni, Sunday, to accompany her stepson, Richard S., jr., to Phoenix, Arizona, where he is to go for his health. She expects to be with him for some time to come and will continue her work as editor of the Senior Gospel Quarterly as usual. Brother Salyards has disposed of their household goods and will continue to reside at Saint Joseph, where he is occupying as president of the Far West Stake.

GETTING LECTURE INFORMATION

Following the advice of the former members of the Lecture Board, to continue operations as usual till such time as the Coordinating Committee took action otherwise, Brother A. W. Smith, business manager of the Lecture Board, is securing information from the various lecturers as to the subjects, etc., which will be of much value in advertising locally for those who secure their services. It pays to advertise these lectures, telling the people the various reasons why they will find it of interest to attend. We know of one brother who said: "I thought it would be just a little talk for church people and didn't try to get many out. Now I'm sorry I didn't try to get the whole town to come; it would have been good for anyone." Expect much of your lecturer and you'll naturally get his best.

Iowa, a typical agricultural State, was the first to subscribe its quota of the Third Liberty Loan and was followed by Oregon, Arkansas, Kentucky, and other States in which agriculture is the leading industry.

William Adams, of Rockford, Illinois, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of self and mother. He proposes to join the church, but his mother is so prejudiced she threatens to kill herself if he does, believing it a most serious disgrace. He is afflicted with blindness, yet has received what he fully believes is divine approbation of the step. The situation that has arisen, however, is such that it worries him much and he desires the support that will come in the faith and prayers of the Saints.

All isolated Saints should get in touch with the home department work of the Sunday school and Religio. If in an organized territory, it should be through enrollment of those in charge in district or local organizations, but all others should write the superintendent of the general department for blanks and information. The superintendent of the Sunday school home department was elected at the convention in April to succeed F. F. Wipper. Her name and address are: Mrs. J. C. Schwab, 1128 South Pearl Street, Independence, Missouri. William F. Sage, superintendent of the Religio department, has recently resigned, on account of the draft, and to date his successor has not been announced.

THE STUDY OF THE GREAT WAR

The Committee on Public Information has now issued thirty-three pamphlet publications, all but three of which are distributed free, the latest of which is "The study of the great war." It is a topical outline, with extensive quotations and reading references, by Samuel B. Harding, professor of European history in Indiana University. Those who desire a copy of it, which lists the others available, should write The Committee of Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, District of Columbia.

WHERE IS YOUR HEART?

(Synopsis of a sermon delivered to the Saints at the Greenville Branch, near Lamoni, Iowa, May 12, 1918, by Elder E. D. Moore.)

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10: 27.

When the Germans began to bombard Paris with their long-range guns they are reported to have said it was intended to strike Paris as "the heart of France." To this the Parisians replied: "The heart of France is at the front."

Then there are among us thousands of mothers whose hearts are across the sea, carried there by an eager son whose khaki uniform clothes a courageous heart, made strong by maternal and national love. With the typical abandon inherited from pioneer stock he goes over the top, the biggest thought in his mind being not world democracy, but the swift remembrance of home and mother and those deeper heart interests which exalt him above ordinary fear. The French poilus are fighting like demons, for their hearthstones are about to be uprooted, and in the nature of things, their hearts are at the front.

In the dreary winter of 1914 when a handful of Canadians had been rushed to the front and it was hard to supply sufficient munitions, it is affirmed that letters from home held the line. As they huddled in their miserable, sodden dugouts in Flanders and waited out the interminable winter, a continuous line of heart messages from the home land buoyed them up and kept their sinking spirits from subsiding into despair. No man with a sinking heart makes a good warrior in any cause. The letters were simple affairs in themselves, but as a means of inspiration their effect was wonderful. The ties of love are invisible, yet they unite and hold together the family love which denotes the greatness of a nation.

ELEMENTAL LOVE

There is something about a reversion to primitive or natural situations that develops a marked unanimity of respect and regard for each other among human and other creatures.

Our modern civilization has erected barriers and established artificial lines which, when temporarily broken down, seem in their new relations to revivify and restore our elemental impulses, interesting and even wonderful in scope.

We all realize how war, one of the most elemental of man's activities and instincts, has always brought about a definite democracy while it lasted. When it ceases, man soon reverts to the old distinctions where money and social prestige spell power. Yet it is not confined to war. It is exemplified in many of our common experiences.

For instance, those who have had the interesting experience of helping to settle a "new country," will especially appreciate a phase of what we have in mind. It mattered little what one's position had previously been; the fact that he was willing to roll up his sleeves and go out where the hum of the factory was not heard and the smell of coal smoke was a curiosity, was to say that he expected to be counted as one of the folks, and he was.

The sociability of the settlers was something beyond the comprehension of the casual visitor. When Sunday came, everybody either entertained a household—sometimes more—or went "visitin'." The dwelling "shacks" were small and crowded, but no one cared, for that was the way it was at home. Good fellowship and cordiality prevailed. Hospitality demanded that every available box and board be fixed up to seat the happy aggregation at mealtime, all met on an equality.

A year or so rolled by and changes began to be apparent. Some prospered, some held their own, some grew poorer—if that were possible. Another year passed and certain families found certain others rather incompatible, and relations grew less and less cordial. Civilization's wand had passed over the community and the common brotherhood, that had been so fine at first, was dispelled and the community advanced (?) into a new social scale where everybody was too busy looking after his own interests to worry much about the troubles of his neighbor. The "colony" had become a part of the great industrial swirl where hearts of love and mutual regard cooled to hearts of stone.

THE REUNION SPIRIT

Then there is an elemental spirit about our reunions impossible to adequately describe. It is impossible for us to explain to our friends just why our annual gatherings of this type are so important and meaningful to us. They are not necessarily distinctive in their character, for people have met in camp meetings from the time of Moses down; but there is a "something" in the situation which cannot be duplicated in any other church gathering we have. There is more of a commonality to them and a greater general development of spiritual power than in most any gathering we hold. What is true of one well-managed and carefully supervised reunion is true of all others in the same class.

Is it not possible that we trace a source of the power and glory of these meetings to the fact that to a large extent we go there and meet on a practical equality? The difference in the size of the tents is inconsequential. "The best residential section" is as open to one of us as to the other. True, some may furnish a tent more elaborately than we, but most anyone can find sufficient for that purpose. And my neighbor may have a limousine standing at the rear, while I may be one of those peculiar, old-fashioned people who still know how to walk, but I hold no grudge. The advertisers have me about convinced that tires are cheaper and will travel more miles than shoe leather, so as soon as I get the chicks successfully through their chickenhood and raise sufficient extra cash, I may turn my hen house into a garage. We don't worry over such minor differences in possessions at reunions.

We are all back to the soil, close to the heart of Mother Nature. In the stillness of the throbbing night, with but a shimmering canvas between us and heaven, we hear the heart beats of the universe and respond in the spirit of the occasion. There is a common response from each of us; our hearts are melted with the fervent love which God can only bestow on a united people, so in the communications to us through his chosen servants there is a receptiveness hardly possible under any other present arrangement.

God grant that it shall be the ideal of those intrusted with the arrangements for such gatherings that nothing shall creep in to destroy this desirable brotherhood by the establishment of class distinctions of social inequality. Let our reunions continue to be a standing example of what spiritual heights may be attained when we are all of one heart and mind.

WHEN TROUBLE WELDS OUR HEARTS

Sometimes a sudden catastrophe levels the inequalities of civilization so completely that we stand in awe, overwhelmed with the results—and for the time act natural.

When the great San Francisco earthquake had shaken down and burned the homes of rich and poor alike a sudden recognition of the common brotherhood of man was established, beautiful to see. One who was there relates: "I saw a rich woman from the Saint Francis Hotel lying asleep on a doorstep with her head on a fine fur muff. A long, sable coat was thrown over her, and under one corner of it a young Japanese boy was curled fast asleep. . . . Everybody was everybody's friend, and though we were all dog-tired, there was not a word of complaint or ill-nature."

The whole city was akin, bound by the ties of need and misfortune. Men and women of all stations carried driftwood to feed fires on the beach while rich babies and poor ones alike held out their tiny hands to keep warm. In the bread lines there was no distinction.

True, in a few weeks they soon slipped back into their old animosities and petty differences, but these occasions, shown us occasionally, prove that when hearts unite, no matter what the occasion, there is real unity.

Those who care to philosophize on these situations, may reconsider our text and let their thoughts dwell on the permanency of such love; how it will bring down clouds of God's glory upon us when we all love the Lord our God with all our hearts, souls, strength, minds, and our neighbors as ourselves.

In our establishment of Zionie conditions we must needs secure this feeling of common brotherhood and make it permanent. It cannot be done except through purity of heart and the love of God.

IS COMPULSION ESSENTIAL?

God has given us every opportunity to make this change of heart easily and naturally. He found it necessary to scourge disobedient Israel, to chide and rebuke, because they would not learn.

At long distance we wonder at their contrariness and are apt to think we would do otherwise. Have we done so and are we doing so now?

Sometimes our inherent tendency to run back to the old paths reminds me of a certain thoroughbred of the Poland China family, a resident of the Grace-land College farm, that I once tried to drive across a railway crossing. After about three quarters of an hour of great exertion I had to get her across by rolling as one would a log—and when she got to her feet she dashed back and ran home like the ones that rushed into the sea in Christ's day, possessed of devils.

God's revelations to us are plain, if we will study them and seek to understand the application. It should not be necessary that we be picked up by the napes of our spiritual necks and dragged into Zion's conditions. God wants a willing people—willing not only to do, but do the right thing, and at the right time, a coordination of the heart and the head.

LOCATION OF OUR HEARTS

If God should send down a heart specialist to go over our spiritual anatomy and ascertain the condition of our organs to which we commonly attribute emotions, where would he find them? Would it be out in the barnyard with our fine horses and cattle and hogs and chickens? Would it be going up the road in a new automobile for a mere joy ride? Would it be even out in the fields, tied to flourishing crops? Would it be with any other thing legitimate of itself steal our love of God? Or, when the Devil fires his and essential, but which may become our idol and long-range shells at us, will he know where to find our hearts?

When we entered the waters of baptism and laid our hearts on the altar, we did a glorious thing. But have any of us slipped in later when we thought God wasn't looking and taken it again? Put it back, if any are guilty, and promise that your heart and all it represents, will be God's for the building up of his kingdom. If you have talents for increasing wealth, he'll then bless you an hundred fold. If you are able to reach your neighbor with the gospel message, he will open your minds as you never thought it possible. Those who have tried God have found he was true to his promises, and to give, whether it were our heart's best love or our accumulations of the abundance of the earth, or both, brings a joy prophetic of the heavenly.

Incidentally, we have been warned, let us warn our neighbors. A real test of what we have been learning in our many years of Sunday schooling and Religio going is to try to tell it to some one. Of course we won't know everything we should—none of us do. But I pray you may never do as a young sister admitted in our Religio class years ago that she had done. It was substantially this: "When I was out last summer where there were no Saints, they asked me about religion, but I didn't dare tell them that I belonged to this church. If I had, they would have wanted me to tell them what I believed and all about it, but I couldn't, so I didn't tell them at all. Yes, I have gone to Sunday school and Religio all my life, and father and mother have been prominent in church work, but whenever any question came up I always referred them to father or sent them over to the Herald Office."

You who are without sin may now cast the first stone. If you have gone to school all these years you should have made some progress. You won't know how much till you try it out on somebody. You have been warned; warn your neighbor. If your heart is in the right place and working, you'll find it a wonderful experience. Naturally you will make some mistakes and have to admit that there are things you don't know. But when you find a mortal that doesn't, he'll be in a museum somewhere and people paying a dime each to see him.

THE SIFTING TIME

We must recognize that a sifting time is upon us, a time when there will be some sort of a separation. Now we may not be able to forecast just what that process will consist of, but most any kind of a sieve we can think of requires a shaking to effect the separation. We certainly should try to be big enough that we won't be among those sifted out. If we are big enough spiritually and mentally, if our hearts have expanded as they should in our process of development, no amount of shaking will force us through the meshes of the sieve and out into the cold world.

God may take more drastic measures to effect the changes imminent. We may need it. The sleepiness may have to be shaken from us. Sometimes there are individuals on whom a little force works nicely. This incident is recalled, illustrative of the point:

A certain church committee was in session, discussing the need of repairing the church building. They finally agreed on certain things and the old deacon had put down his name for a small amount. The others did likewise, only more liberally, and were about to adjourn, when suddenly a large piece of plaster from the ceiling fell squarely on the head of the deacon. Shaking the dust from his clothing, he brusquely announced: "I'll give ten dollars to help fix that ceiling." The elder in the corner fervently breathed: "Hit him again, Lord."

Likely there are none in this audience who need just that kind of an awakening, but if there are, no doubt it will come.

WITH OUR WHOLE HEART

Three years ago we were all quite sure we had done all we could for the church, in a financial way. At least one might so understand us by the results we had attained. Since that time we have given and loaned to the Government and war organizations a sum which we may safely say is greater than the total we had given to the church in the previous ten years—and we are still at it. So long as there is a need, we will continue to be loyal and sacrificing in this regard. The war has hit us again and again, and taught us lessons of economy and frugality we should have learned years ago. Truly we learn by the things we suffer.

Our hearts were touched by the overwhelming catastrophe which had come on the world and we responded to the call of the bishopric for a big Christmas offering. It was suddenly raised from the usual $12,000 or thereabouts to over $75,000 in one year, while in addition to that the tithes and offerings were ninety per cent greater than the previous year, the previous year being a good one.

Just why the difference? Weren't our heads converted before, sufficiently that we knew it required sacrifice to carry on the work? Certainly, we believed all that, but we didn't really get to work till a combination of circumstances, none of them to be minimized, converted our hearts. Is there any other solution?

"WITHOUT RESTRICTIONS"

Field Secretary Crowley of the Central Division of the Red Cross was in Lamoni some time ago and told us a number of interesting facts concerning that organization, and gave us some good advice.

One of his special requests we thought very good and want you to attach it to your everyday experiences. It was simply this: When you knit a sweater or a pair of socks—or anything else for that matter—and send it to headquarters with the information that it is for a certain individual or to be used in a certain manner, you do greatly handicap the efficiency of the organization. What we need is work done well and turned in without restrictions, trusting the organization to do the most possible good with it. The Red Cross workers will endeavor to be true to the trust.

When we lay our hearts on the altar and have them covered with restrictions, they may be passed by as worthless. When we offer our time to the Lord—that is, if he doesn't require it when we are busy—he may not call on us.

Why not wholeheartedly give ourselves and what we hope to be to the building up of the kingdom of God on earth, allowing all else to be secondary? It is practicable. Headquarters on earth is much handicapped because we cover all too many of our consecration offers with detailed restrictions. God in heaven has told us if we will not give our little in return for eternal life he will of necessity have to raise up those who will.

HEARTS SO COLD THEY BREAK

An acquaintance of ours tells us that when the thermometer creeps below zero and seems inclined to shiver still farther down, they begin to be apprehensive in the big telegraph offices. Trouble is brewing. At about fifteen below zero the wires begin to break and they must call out men into the cold of winter to bridge the gap. He may have to call stations over thousands of miles to reach the other side and exactly locate and repair the trouble. Cold wires are a nightmare to the wire chiefs.

We can imagine the angels of God weeping with anguish at the stony frigidity in the hearts of some who have grown cold and indifferent to God's work. As they are sent out to touch the hearts of his people with the holy fire of his Spirit, it must be with great sorrow that they find some grown so cold they have broken relations with the source of light and intelligent inspiration. And oh, the trouble occasioned the wire chiefs and repair men on earth who try to keep up the lines! Who of us have not known hearts to grow sick and almost faint from trying so hard to warm hearts that were cold? May the Lord deliver us from blue-cold indifference more dangerous than concentrated icebergs.

Stir up, Saints; be aggressive and alert. Let our hearts swell with gratitude to God for all his manifestations to us. Let us break off relations with all that hinders and holds us back. E. D. MOORE.

BACKBITING

In Doctrine and Covenants 17:11 it is stated that the teacher shall see that there is no backbiting in the church. The construction placed upon this term by Doctor Harrison, as set forth in the SAINTS' HERALD for May 22 is novel and interesting. He compares the slanderer to vermin that get between one's shoulders and bite, a crude Anglo Saxon term which is rather significant in its construction.

As Doctor Harrison points out, people are normally interested in biography and in the living facts concerning others. To our mind it is proper and natural that people should be interested and should discuss what their leaders are doing. An attempt to forbid them to do so would be against natural development and natural processes. They are interested in what their officers or representatives do because it so closely concerns them.

A proper criticism is justified, but what is a proper criticism? Can it be anything else than a fair effort to learn the facts and to base our remarks thereon, to say nothing until we know what we are talking about; to bear all things and to be patient with all things and be slow to infer wrongdoing if any?

This which applies to those who lead, should also be applied by us to one another. We should seek to build up and uphold those who have gone before, to avoid faultfinding concerning those who are absent, and where we find a wrong, to proceed to the best way to correct it by taking it up with the parties themselves. Criticism is beneficial, when its whole purpose is helpful and makes for better work; and when it is given where and when it will have the best hope of producing good results. But it is harmful when scattered promiscuously, and especially to those who are not concerned.

POINTS FOR WRITERS AND SPEAKERS

In a recent little booklet issued on behalf of the American Multigraph Sales Company we note some ten points on letter writing which might well be applied to the writing of articles, or, for that matter, the preaching of a sermon. We will summarize briefly.

First, know what you are going to write about. Say something pertinent, not impertinent—say something relevant, not irrelevant. Too may merely make conversation and do not say anything. Arrange your talking points in a natural sequence, and then drive them home.

Second, get the viewpoint of the recipient. You are not writing to yourself, so try to speak the other man's language and lead his life. You wouldn't send an article on a mechanical invention to a musical journal. Make your writings appropriate to your audience.

Third, tell your story clearly, briefly, and convincingly. Use simple language; avoid long, confusing, involved sentences. Be brief. If your story is a long one don't try to tell all you know at once. Give reasons and convictions, not mere guess work.

Fourth, do not spend your time telling how big your factory is, or you are; write something about the other fellow and take a real interest in him. Consider how you can help him to a better understanding. Don't try to knock him out, try to win him and help him. Be modest.

Fifth, avoid extravagant phrases, meaningless terms and so-called clever or fancy writing. Do not try to be cute or fresh; be business-like rather than funny. It's all right to use a little humor or wit, but even these can be overdone; make every sentence have a meaning, a straight fact, don't try to choke the other fellow with the lexicon you have swallowed.

Sixth, know when to stop. Very few know how to say their say and quit. One is so apt to become enthused that he goes on and elaborates on his argument when his statement would be more convincing without explanation. The strongest letter, tract, or article is one that says a few things but says them well and leaves some room for the recipient's imagination. After the climax of your letter or sermon, after the closing argument, cut it short. If you ramble on you invite a "pulling of watches," a regular scene in some church congregations after the preacher has closed and begun all over again. Many good articles are written hastily, many sermons are preached extemporaneously. Their success is due to the fact that they have said just enough and then quit.

Seventh, don't revise too much. You will take the life out of your article. You want a virile, convincing statement; the best letters or articles are those that come as the result of certain thoughts that come to the writer or as an inspiration. When tampered with by some one else they lose individuality and become confusing. If two men came to sell you something you'd be muddled up; they would mix things until no definite reason why remained with you. It may be just the same way with an article written by more than one man. Don't try to revise until there is nothing left but a blue pencil mark.

Eighth, make your appeal personal, not like a form set for thousands. There is a way of saying certain dry things in a very pungent way; words properly and forcefully used, help. You are not delivering an abstraction but are trying to get some one's attention and to accomplish a definite purpose.

Ninth, be sincere, honest, and straightforward.

Tenth, use good common sense. You have a fund of it; it's yours, use it. Don't let your enthusiasm run away with you, but use your common sense.

ANNUAL SAVINGS

We note in the Literary Digest for February 23, an estimate made by Charles H. Sabin, president of the Guaranty Trust Company, that the savings of the people of this country are about 5 billion to 6 billion dollars a year. In 1917 this amount was exceeded—14 billion was saved.

Properly speaking this should be reduced to normal terms and allowance made for higher prices. It is what we have saved and not the value of it, that we count in the long run. By the simple process of doubling prices and using the same quantity it would mean a gross income would be doubled in money value, expenses doubled, and savings would also have been doubled. Yet, there was a real gain for 1917. A call is made for increased production, especially of that which is essential, during the year 1918, and for a rational saving of waste.

FUTURE REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

In considering the joint subject of life in the present world and the future state of man, we find that the first great error that has been made by most of the churches of men is that of ascribing to God the purpose and intention of punishing all sinners, those of every degree, with the same complete and endless punishment. It is the error of teaching that all those who do not unite with some approved and acceptable church will be sentenced and doomed to eternal woe, both those who have done a small amount of actual sin and those who have done much evil, even all those who do not make a change before death.

JUDGED ACCORDING TO WORKS

While we are fully willing to admit that there will be a great loss of benefits and blessings which might have been gained, even an eternal loss to all those who neglect their opportunities in this life, and that their failure to do what they might have done in earth's probationary state, will be sad, for the reason that opportunities neglected here cannot be fully regained in the next world, yet in the word of God we do not find that it is his purpose and intention to condemn anyone by the words and deeds of some other person or persons. We read instead that he will judge every man according to his own deeds. Instead of putting all sinners into one great body and sentencing all alike to the same punishment we learn from the following scriptures that all people will receive both rewards and punishments according to their own individual merits or demerits:

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matthew 16: 27.

Who will render to every man according to his deeds.—Romans 2: 6.

For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that everyone may receive a reward of the deeds done in the body; things according to what he hath done, whether good or bad.—2 Corinthians 5: 10, I. T.

And I will give to every one of you according to your works.—Revelation 2: 23.

And my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.—Revelation 22: 12.

It is not so much a question of probation after death, or of opportunity for conversion hereafter, as it is of the idea and fact of God's justice in his dealing with humanity, in accordance with that other fact that there is such a wide difference between the sins of one man and the sins of another, or between many classes of sinners that have lived or do live on the earth. This fact of different degrees of guilt has ever been acknowledged and taken into account by the wisest and best men of all nations enacting laws by which degrees of judgment are affixed in order that every person may be justly dealt with, that each person may receive exactly what is his due in the line of punishment and correction for his transgressions, and not be condemned to pay or to suffer more than he should.

Among all nations this subject of proper and exact justice to every individual has been realized as a matter of great importance. Even among the half-civilized nations and barbarian tribes a very strong idea of justice has been found to exist. Therefore we may well believe that this universal feeling and demand for exact justice had its origin in the divine Being himself, and that he planted it in the hearts of those whom he created after his own likeness throughout the world.

DEGREES IN PUNISHMENT

That there will be different degrees of condemnation and differences in punishment is made plain by the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ himself, as found in the following scriptures:

And that servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes.—Luke 12: 47, 48.

And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.—Matthew 10: 14, 15.

Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee.—Matthew 11: 21-24.

Also Paul wrote in Romans 4: 15 that "where no law is there is no transgression," which can mean nothing else than that those who have had no opportunity to hear or know of Christ and his gospel, that such will not be judged or condemned by the law they never heard about or had opportunity to know of. In Romans 5: 13 Paul wrote, "Sin is not imputed to those who have no law." Further, he wrote to the Roman saints as follows:

For there is no respect of persons with God. For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law. . . . For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves.—Romans 2: 11-14.

The idea here is that God does not respect one person above another but he respects justice, equity, and truth. And those sinning outside the law, where the law is not known or heard by them, shall "perish," that is, suffer in or by the law of nature, and not by condemnation of a law they did not know about. When their conscience, the inner monitor or teacher, guides them, not having any statutory law of God or man to give heed to, then they "are a law unto themselves," as Paul states. But those who live when and where the law is taught have no excuse from being judged under it. It appears that this ought to be plain enough to convince anybody that every fact that concerns perfect justice will be considered in the day when the just and impartial judgment of God shall prevail.

Again, Paul mentions that the fact of ignorance has its influence in the dealings of God with mankind. He says:

And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent.—Acts 17: 30.

Therefore as the opportunities for hearing or knowing the will of God vary, so will the justice of God fit the correct penalty or punishment for every individual, as already quoted from Luke 12: 47, 48 and Matthew 10: 14, 15.

From the time of the great apostasy that occurred in the early centuries of the Christian era, as described by Mosheim and other church historians, from that time of loss of divine inspiration, the creeds of the different religions were framed and written by men who did not see how they were misrepresenting the Lord, or what gross injustice they ascribed to him by teaching that he condemns good men and women of all generations to lose everything because they did not understand, or they lived in a time when the gospel in its fullness was not preached. Having missed the great or supreme reward there is no hope for them, such teachers say. Many affirm only the two places or conditions, heaven and hell, either a state of indescribable glory or a condition of unspeakable woe and eternal misery, eternal woe even for those who were mild and gentle, and who were obedient to the best laws they heard at the time they lived.

Concerning the character and attributes of God we read in Psalm 89: 14 that "justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face." Therefore we can be sure that not only will judgment be administered and exact justice be enacted, but also mercy and truth will have their voice and their source. Exact truth will prevail and we all know that truth is everything in a case of judgment and justice, even to have the very facts which need to be known on every point involved. By the Lord's own description of himself and his purposes everyone can see that all of his dealings will be with mercy toward both the ignorant and the sorrowful sinner.

"PRISONERS OF HOPE"

In the old-time creeds invented by men the perpetual or everlasting punishment theory contained no mercy whatever, even for the ignorant, the mentally incompetent, the so-called heathen, or those prevented by many causes from hearing and obeying complete gospel truth. The word in Isaiah 60: 2 was fulfilled indeed: "For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." In that dark day of apostasy the actual justice of God was lost sight of, and his mercy was obliterated, both were overwhelmed in the great flood of superstition, pagan mysticism, and by the inventions of men who sought many ways to walk in. This came to pass after the "falling away" spoken of by Paul in 2 Thessalonians 2: 3, Acts 20: 29, and 2 Timothy 4: 3; also in Isaiah 24: 5, and by Christ in John 12: 35.

When we consider the consequent darkness and ignorance found among all nations it is no wonder the people have not known even what is in the open Bible. In Isaiah 25: 7 the Lord calls the darkness "the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations." Also many people in their ignorance have been perverse and willful; yet whenever they repent they will become objects of mercy, to the degree they may be found worthy. Take the instance spoken of in Proverbs as follows:

And thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed, and say, How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof; and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me!—Proverbs 5: 11-13.

We may well believe that such repentant and sorrowful ones in the prison are included among those to whom the Lord spoke by the prophet, saying, "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope." Although they are in the prison prepared for them yet they are "prisoners of hope." The above words are found in the scriptures about Christ and his work on the earth and in the prison house. We read as follows:

And his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth. As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee.—Zechariah 9: 10-12.

That is why they are "prisoners of hope," because the covenant of Christ, sealed and ratified by his last great sacrifice, when he said, "It is finished," included the prisoners in the pit or prison house. The following passages show this fact:

He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.—Isaiah 61: 1.

And I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, show yourselves.—Ibid., 49: 8, 9.

To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.—Ibid., 42: 7.

And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days they shall be visited.—Ibid., 24: 22.

It was stated by Luke in 4: 18 that when Christ was upon earth he declared that a part of his work was to "preach deliverance to the captives" and to "set at liberty" those who needed it. The Savior read it to the assembled Jews from Isaiah 61: 1. Certainly no one with less power than he had and still has can accomplish the things prophesied in these last four statements from Isaiah and that of Zechariah 9: 10-12. All these five scriptures show plainly that he is to proclaim "liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison," that he is to say to the prisoners, "go forth," that he is to "bring out the prisoners from the prison house." The promise in Isaiah 24: 22 was that "they shall be visited," and, without a doubt this was fulfilled when Christ visited them, as related by Peter in his epistle. He stated that Christ suffered "that he might bring us to God," and then wrote, "For which cause also, he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3: 19, Inspired Translation. He did so because he wanted to bring them to God, so far as could be done in behalf of those who did not receive the gospel in this life and who cannot be given the greatest reward. But such as is due them they will receive from the Lord. And Peter said further about the gospel to the prisoners:

Because of this is the gospel preached to them who are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live in the spirit according to the will of God.—1 Peter 4: 6, I. T.

He does not say that it was preached to them while they were alive but is preached to them who are dead. And they are to be judged "according to," in like manner as men in the flesh are judged, even with justice and equity, and in truth and mercy.

But they are not given the same reward that will be given to those who were obedient in this world and who have suffered reproach and persecution, and some of them death; because the gospel was always unpopular whenever preached in the world.

THE ADVERSARY'S PART

The great adversary of God, of Christ, and of man, is Satan, even he who has "the power of death." Christ and the apostles called him "the adversary." In 1 Peter 5: 8 that apostle said, "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." Also Paul wrote to Timothy concerning a certain matter to "give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully." Paul wrote elsewhere of how "Satan hindered" and how Satan buffeted him. In Revelation 2: 9, 13, 24, and 3: 9, the word of the Lord speaks of Satan's power, and depths, and influence. Therefore in warning his disciples not to be in debt to Satan, not to owe him anything, but to pay him off and be free from him, he exhorts them as follows:

Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way with him; lest at any time thine adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, until thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.—Matthew 5: 27, 28, I. T.

Having the "power of death" Satan can remove the sinner from his world and present him to the judge on high; and, claiming him as having served him, he can ask that he be sent to prison. And there he must stay until the "uttermost farthing" is paid. Christ said, "Ye are his servants to whom ye yield yourselves as servants to obey," and so all whom Satan can make a case against must go with him and take his wages. In Revelation it is written as follows:

For the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.—Revelation 12: 10, I. T.

He accuses all he can and lays claim to them as being his, and if possible to make a case against them he takes them with him to his abode. But I do not believe that Satan has the power or privilege to remove people from the earth "at any time he chooses," or whenever he wants to do so. If he had such power then he could thereby interfere with God's purposes regarding individuals and the whole race. Nevertheless I am sure that Satan has had a large degree of power to afflict man and to inflict death ever since the beginning of the disobedience in Eden, which disobedience resulted in death, even as the Lord foretold would be the case. Satan is still the great adversary of man. Therefore the Savior warned his people to avoid entanglement with him, and if such existed that they ought to come to a settlement "while thou art in the way with him," that is, while they lived on earth or before death came, because after death they cannot repent and thereby change conditions as they can while they are in this life. Satan is yet unbound and has great power to punish man.

The Lord permitted Satan to afflict Job, but he prevented him from taking Job's life at that time. In Job 1: 12 the Lord said to Satan, "All that he hath is in thy power, only upon himself put not forth thy hand." In Job 2: 6 it reads: "And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life." Plainly then, Satan could have killed Job had not the Lord forbidden it. He had power to do it, but as the Lord is over all mankind, and, until his purpose by their living is accomplished, will not permit Satan to kill them, though Satan may distress and afflict them, as he did Job. Perhaps when we arrive on the other side we may learn that the Lord protected us on many occasions when otherwise we would have perished. The great conflict between God and Satan continues and will do so until Christ is victorious and Satan is imprisoned. And when the time comes for us to go we must die, and when the sinner is no longer held in life by the Lord, then Satan will bring death upon him and will claim the disobedient spirit and send it to the prison house. And such cannot come out until they have paid the "uttermost farthing," as already quoted. In one sense sinners receive wages from Satan, but in another sense they owe Satan. Having begun to serve him in sin he will not let them off easily. God says, "Break off from your sins by righteousness." They who serve Satan will have a task to "break off," or become free from him. He claims their allegiance still no matter if they do wish to leave him and to quit his service.

OVERTHROW OF SATAN

Another thing that the religious world has not comprehended is that the Lord Jesus Christ will fully succeed in entirely overthrowing Satan, sin, and death, and putting an end to the punishments by Satan, even taking away all his power to afflict and distress man on earth and the spirit of man in the prison. His dominion will be finished and will exist no more. This fact is summed up by Paul in Hebrews 2: 14, where he says that Christ came to "destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil." The great work of God and of Christ is to put an end to Satan's dominion over the inhabitants of the earth, to break his dreadful hold upon the nations, and to take away the power by which he causes the rulers of kingdoms and the people themselves to make war upon and to oppress each other. Whenever this overthrow is accomplished, then all lands and nations of earth will come under the mild reign and happy government of the "Prince of peace." Then the Lord Jesus Christ will truly and fully become the Savior of the world. And, whether they come forth in the first resurrection or in the second resurrection, all people will receive from God and Christ the full measure of reward that shall be due each for whatever good he or she shall have performed in their mortal lives.

THE RESURRECTION

For, after Satan has given to evildoers their wages in the prison house and the prison is no more, after his overthrow by the Son of God, then all mankind will become recipients of the mercies of the Lord. Those not able to come up in the first resurrection will have place in the second resurrection and obtain the glory of the moon or of the stars, excepting those who have committed the unpardonable sin, even the sin against the Holy Ghost. That sin will be explained before the close of this article. According to the plan of salvation the great adversary must be overcome and Satan be bound and cast into prison before either resurrection takes place, as stated in Revelation 20: 2, 3. In that chapter it is written that at the beginning of the thousand years comes the first resurrection, or the rising of the people who are called "blessed and holy"; and at the end of it those who are included in these words, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." The spirits of all men will continue to live "whether in the body or out of the body," either in the paradise of God, or in the prison, or in some other intermediate place where they are instructed and "the gospel preached to them." Those who believe and accept it will obtain the glory of the moon. Those who do not accept it will enter into the equivalent of the star glory, even according to the degree of good they have done. Because of sin came the separation of the spirit and the body, but through Christ's power, as manifested in his own resurrection, is brought to pass the resurrection of every human being. He said, "all who are in their graves" shall come forth.

Notwithstanding the great fact of the universal resurrection, so plainly declared in the Scriptures, and the promise of the giving of literal bodies to all men, yet this great truth is not understood nor believed in by a multitude of professed worshipers of God, nor even by many who claim to be followers of the Savior, notwithstanding the promise that every soul will at least obtain that much by Christ's redeeming work. "As in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." All will be made free from death and from Satan's power, even though they may do such few good deeds on earth that their reward will be small. However the Lord said that whosoever shall give even "a cup of cold water" to one of his little ones "he shall in no wise lose his reward," (Matthew 10: 42) and that those who will invite "the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind" to the feasts they spread shall be recompensed. Thus all good deeds are of value in the sight of the great judge.

As to the resurrection the Savior said (John 5: 28, 29, I. T.) that "the hour is coming in which all who are in the grave shall hear his voice and shall come forth." Contradicting this promise and in opposition to other scriptures many learned and eloquent preachers in the world have stood in strong unbelief against the God-given truth of the resurrection, without which fulfillment the suffering and death of Christ would have been of no value whatever, except in his influence as any other good man who did the same work of love and kind deeds. Theodore Parker, one of the most popular ministers of the near past, said a few years ago,

I find no satisfactory evidence that Christ taught the resurrection of the body. In fact that whole doctrine seems absurd and impossible. . . . The future life will only be man's spirit conscious and immortal.

Another noted man, Lyman Abbott, wrote in the New York Outlook, saying:

Death is the dropping of the body into the grave. The resurrection is the springing up of the spirit from the body. The body mingles with the dust and comes forth no more except in grass and flowers. In Christ's case the spirit returned long enough to give his disciples a demonstration that he was not dead. . . . There is nothing extraordinary in the resurrection of Christ. . . . His resurrection was only an extraordinary proof of an ordinary event. . . . Every death is a resurrection.

A Chicago minister, Mr. Pulsford, said a few years ago:

I don't believe in the resurrection. It is wiser to say I cannot. . . . It is a fiction invented by man. . . . It has nothing to do with religion. . . . I see no ground for asserting or thinking that Jesus was buried and afterwards resumed his body, ate and drank with the disciples and then sailed into the sky.

Thus do those men make complete denial of the plain teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of the prophets and apostles. I here cite the reader to a few Bible proofs that plainly teach the literal resurrection of the dead, namely: John 5: 25-29; John 11: 23-25; Acts 24: 15; 1 Corinthians 15: 13-54; 1 Thessalonians 4: 16; Revelation 20: 5, 6, 12; Isaiah 26: 19; Ezekiel 37: 12-14; Hosea 13: 14. And Paul wrote in Philippians 3: 21 that Christ will "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Paul saw the brightness that enveloped Christ and he said that it was "above the brightness of the sun" at noonday (Acts 26: 13). Also in John's vision (Revelation 1: 16) he saw that the Lord's face was "as the sun shining in his strength." No doubt his people will receive of the same glory, as promised by him in Matthew 13: 45, I. T., as follows:

Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

DIFFERENT GLORIES

In 1 Corinthians 15: 41 Paul mentions the different glories that will be in the resurrected state, the glory of the sun, the glory of the moon, and that of the stars, and in the latter there will be differences according to their degrees of worthiness, even "as one star differeth from another star in glory." All who pass into the glory of the sun must be equal in virtue, in purity, and in other good ways. Christ said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed" (Matthew 5: 20) "ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." They may be poor, illiterate, despised, and looked upon with contempt, in this world, even as poor Lazarus, but in the resurrection the great judge will give to each one according to his integrity, faithfulness, and the value of the work he has done.

However, the full glory of the sun will not be entered into by any of them until the old earth with its millennial peace and its partial glory passes away, not until John's vision comes true, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. . . . And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did enlighten it."

THE MILLENNIUM

The thousand-year millennium will be the school to prepare even the best people of earth for the real and final reward, and without that graduating school probably no one will be qualified for the actual celestial glory that shall follow.

Those of Christ's true disciples who prove faithful and worthy will be raised at his coming and will reign with him a thousand years. See 1 Thessalonians 4: 16; Revelations 20: 5, 6; 1: 7; 5: 10. The rest of the dead, who do not rise "until the thousand years are finished," those who are not "blessed and holy" enough to "have part in the first resurrection," many of these will find their names in "the book of life" because they have accepted Christ and the gospel in the prison house. Also many who have never heard the gospel on earth and had no opportunity, therefore being "without law," they will not be condemned by a law they never heard. Nor can they be rewarded or exalted by a law they never obeyed, but will have place in the resurrection according to the eternal justice and mercy of God. He will give to all such "according to their deeds," not according to their gospel faith and gospel works, such as he gave to those who toiled and suffered for the gospel's sake while on earth. Those doing the most good deeds will receive the glory of the moon. The Lord recognizes every good work performed, and where men do not merit the greater reward he gives what is just and right. Some will have only as the light of the dimmest star you can see in the heavens, and because they refused to have more. While on earth they were like rebellious children.

According to the Scriptures Christ's Spirit went down to hell to conquer Satan in his home. In that way he accomplished what he came to do. Here is his song of triumph after he rose from the dead:

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death. —Revelation 1: 18.

As we have already seen, a portion of Christ's great work was to visit hell, the prison house. There he obtained the keys and can release to better things those who accept his salvation. Additional scriptures that make plainer his going there are Psalm 16: 10, Acts 2: 31, and Ephesians 4: 9. Because Satan knew what was coming he tried to turn Christ aside by offering him temporal glory and honor in place of the suffering on the cross following a life of weakness, humiliation, and persecution. His temptation is shown in Matthew 4: 1-12. For while he was in the mortal body he was subject to temptation as other men are. But in Revelation 3: 21 he said that he overcame them and was then with his Father on the throne.

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST

As to the sin against the Holy Ghost, it can only be committed by those who have received an actual knowledge of the existence of God and of Christ, through the revelation of the Holy Spirit to them. Among the world's churches the common idea is that the sin against the Holy Ghost is ascribing to Satanic power the miracles that Christ wrought, thereby denying that God wrought them. But anyone, saint, professed Christian, or sinner, has the power to say such words, whereas Paul and Peter both make plain that only those who have in truth and in deed been Christ's disciples, those who have known the truth by the revelation of God's Spirit can by any possibility commit the sin against the Holy Ghost. Read as follows:

For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again unto repentance.—Hebrews 6: 4-6, I. T.

For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins.—Hebrews 10: 26.

For if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.—2 Peter 2: 20.

The words of Christ in Matthew 12: 31, 32, 43-45, evidently refer to the same denial of the Holy Ghost after having received it, and whoever does this he said, "It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." By the New Testament it is plain that the gift of the Holy Ghost as anciently received and enjoyed was a very different gift and power from that which is supposed to be its work to-day. Anciently those who turned away and denied having received from God what Paul calls "the knowledge of the truth," and Peter speaks of as "the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," even they sinned against the revelation from heaven that was given them by the Holy Ghost, and thus the heavenly messenger and gift was made a liar, and for this there was no forgiveness nor restoration. If they "shall fall away" they cannot be "renewed." I do not know words that can make plainer the nature of this great sin. By the mercy of God, and through the atonement of Christ, all other sins may be forgiven "in this world or in the world to come," upon their confessive sorrow for their sin and having a state of mind and heart acceptable to God, though such can obtain only the "glory of the moon," and those who do not want that will enter into the brightness of the star glory, according to their merits.

As for the Holy Spirit being given to-day to guide good men and women, we believe that a portion of heavenly light does instruct those who seek for it and ask for guidance from heaven. Such are being led toward truth and into truth, if they really want truth; and as they continue to receive and accept it they will come to realize that the creeds of men are in vain, and they will be among those whom Jeremiah speaks of in 16: 19, where he prophesied that they will say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit." Such will give heed to the fullness of truth when "the veil of covering" is taken away. H. A. STEBBINS.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES—Part 20

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

As a result of a careful examination of the authentic records of the above-named religious organization we gather the following which we give in a condensed form:

In the year 1820 there was a great revival of religion in many parts of the United States, and near the village of Manchester, New York, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, and the Methodists were holding a union service that resulted in interesting many to lead a better life, and among other families was that of Joseph Smith, in which family was a boy by the name of Joseph, about fourteen years of age, who became deeply interested. He concluded that he would unite with some church, but did not know which one, as all claimed to be right. He says that he was somewhat partial towards the Methodist Church, although several of the family had accepted the claims of the Presbyterian Church. He was not satisfied, so he writes, which one of the churches God approved, having concluded that all could not be right. The advice of all these churches was to take the Bible as a guide, so he concluded that he was safe in doing so, and claims that while he was reading the Scriptures, he came to the fifth verse of the first chapter of James, and in it found what to him seemed the solution of the question that had arisen in his mind, how he was to determine which of the churches was the one he should join. He accordingly went to God in prayer.

As a result of this conclusion he claims that while praying he saw a vision, in which were shown two personages, one claiming to be the Father and the other the Son of God. He says that the personage claiming to be the Father pointed him to the Son, and told him to hear him in answer to his prayer to know which church was right. He says that the Son told him to join none of the existing churches, especially the ones he had heard represented, and had in mind, giving as a reason for this advice that they were all of them wrong; but to be humble and God would answer his prayer.

Time passed, but no complete answer to his prayer. He claims that he had drifted into worldly ways, and on September of 1823 was considering his condition before God after retiring for the night. He claims that while in this attitude of mind a personage surrounded with a beautiful light, claiming to be a messenger sent of God, appeared to him and spent nearly the entire night giving him instruction in reference to the history of the past and the conditions of the present, and what God was about to do, and he was instructed what he must do to be an instrument in the hands of God to assist in reestablishing the church on the earth as it existed in New Testament times.

This religious society was organized April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York, with six members. The authority to baptize they claim to have received in this wise: A personage appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery while in prayer in regard to this question of baptism, claiming to be John the Baptist again sent from God. That he was sent to confer upon them the authority to baptize, which authority he claimed was the priesthood of Aaron, and he commanded them to baptize each other. The history says that Oliver Cowdery was baptized by Joseph Smith, and Joseph Smith was then baptized by Oliver Cowdery.

The membership were called Saints, and the title of the church at the first was "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," but because of a partial disorganization and a reorganization the incorporate title now is, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

At the death of Joseph Smith the office of president of the church became vacant. Because of the transgression of Brigham Young and many of the leading officials it is claimed that their offices were made vacant. Several claimed to occupy the offices made vacant by the deaths of Joseph Smith and his counselor, Hyrum Smith, but it appears as a matter of history that Joseph Smith before his death had anointed his eldest son, Joseph, to be his successor, and this church claims that since 1860 he so occupied till his death, which occurred in 1914, since which time his eldest living son, Frederick M., has occupied.

From their authorized works we extract the following which will give the reader possession of the authentic history of this people relative to their claims:

ORIGIN OF CHURCH

The chief instrument in the hands of God in the founding of this church [The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints] was Joseph Smith, jr.—Presidency and Priesthood, p. 193.

I was born in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five, on the twenty-third day of December, in the town of Sharon, Windsor County, State of Vermont. . . .

Sometime in the second year after our removal to Manchester, there was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. . . .

I was at this time in my fifteenth year. . . .

During this time of great excitement my mind was called up to serious reflection and great uneasiness. . . .

While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." . . . At length I came to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs; that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to "ask of God." . . .

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. . . . I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong. . . .

During the space of time which intervened between the time I had the vision, and the year eighteen hundred and twenty-three, . . . I was left to all kinds of temptations, . . . In consequence of these things I often felt condemned for my weakness and imperfections; when on the evening of the above-mentioned twenty-first of September, after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to Almighty God for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know my state and standing before him. . . .

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God I discovered a light appearing in the room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside. . . .

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, . . . That God had a work for me to do.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 6-12.

We [Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith] still continued the work of translation [the translation of some plates that claimed to be found by Joseph Smith] when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 34-36.

We now became anxious to have that promise realized to us, which the angel that conferred upon us the Aaronic priesthood had given us; viz, that provided we continued faithful we should also have the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds the authority of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We had for some time made this matter a subject of humble prayer. . . . We had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office, and then to ordain others as it should be made known unto us, from time to time.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 915.

I was also present with Joseph when the higher or Melchisedec priesthood was conferred by the holy angel from on high. This priesthood was then conferred on each other, by the will and commandment of God.—Oliver Cowdery, in Myths of the Mormons, p. 80.

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, it being regularly organized and established agreeable to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.

Those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

BOOKS ACCEPTED AS STANDARD

That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—General Conference Resolutions, p. 3, No. 6.

That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising; or which may arise in this Church of Christ.—General Conference Resolutions, p. 48, No. 215.

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

CHURCH OFFICIALS

In process of time, the church was fully organized, by the appointment and ordination of men to the several offices of the priesthood, . . . with:

1. A chief apostle and high priest, with two associate counselors.
2. A quorum of twelve apostles.
3. Seventy elders.
4. Elders. 5. Bishops. 6. Priests. 7. Teachers. 8. Deacons.
9. High priests, evangelists, and pastors, in their proper places and order.—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 225, 226.

GOD

We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.—Epitome of Faith.

Know ye not that there are more nations than one? Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word unto the children of men, yea, even upon all the nations of the earth."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12: 56, 57.

By these things we know that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God, the framer of heaven and earth and all things which are in them, and that he created man male and female; after his own image and in his own likeness created he them, and gave unto them commandments that they should love and serve him the only living and true God, and that he should be the only being whom they should worship.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

JESUS CHRIST

Yea, verily I say unto you, If ye will come unto me, ye shall have eternal life. Behold, my arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me. Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name.—Book of Mormon, 3 Nephi 4: 42-45.

Wherefore the Almighty God gave his only begotten Son, as it was written in those scriptures which have been given of him; he suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them; he was crucified, died, and rose again the third day; and ascended into heaven to sit down on the right hand of the Father, . . . that as many as would believe and be baptized, in his holy name, and endure in faith to the end, should be saved. . . . And we know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5, 6.

HOLY GHOST

Verily, verily I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me, believeth in the Father also; and unto him will the Father bear record of me; for he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost; and thus will the Father bear record of me; and the Holy Ghost will bear record unto him of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost, are one.—Book of Mormon, 3 Nephi 5: 36-38.

Ask the Father in my name, in faith believing that you shall receive, and you shall have the Holy Ghost which manifesteth all things, which is expedient unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4.

GOSPEL OF CHRIST

We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

We believe that these ordinances are:

- (1st). Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ.
- (2d). Repentance.
- (3d). Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins.
- (4th). Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.
- (5th). We believe in the resurrection of the body; that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired.
- (6th). We believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished, according to the degree of good, or evil, they shall have done.—Epitome of Faith.

MARRIAGE

We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman—except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression.

We believe that the doctrines of a plurality and a community of wives are heresies, and are opposed to the law of God.—Epitome of Faith.

Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

WHO SHALL MINISTER

We believe that a man must be called of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority, to entitle him to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof.—Epitome of Faith.

SCRIPTURES

We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly. We believe that the canon of scripture is not full, but that God, by his Spirit, will continue to reveal his word to man until the end of time.—Epitome of Faith.

And this is the ensample unto them, that they shall speak as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, shall be scripture; shall be the will of the Lord; shall be the mind of the Lord; shall be the word of the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 1.

We believe that in all matters of controversy upon the duty of man toward God, and in reference to preparation and fitness for the world to come, the word of God should be decisive and the end of dispute; and that when God directs, man should obey.—Epitome of Faith.

SOCIAL AND NATIONAL LIFE

We believe that the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, county, and state, and consequently better fitted for the change which cometh at death.

We believe that men should worship God in "spirit and in truth"; and that such worship does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land.

We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.—Epitome of Faith.

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

MORAL LAWS OF THE CHURCH

And, again, the Lord God hath commanded that men should not murder; that they should not lie; that they should not steal; that they should not take the name of the Lord their God in vain; that they should not envy; that they should not have malice; that they should not contend one with another; that they should not commit whoredoms; and that they should do none of these things; for whoso doeth them shall perish; for none of these iniquities come of the Lord; for he doeth that which is good among the children of men.—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11: 110, 111.

And now, behold, I speak unto the church. Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come.

Thou shalt not steal. . . . Thou shalt not lie. . . . Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit. . . . Thou shalt not commit adultery, . . . Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6, 7.

LORD'S DAY

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High. . . .

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 3.

The saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments.—Ibid., 119: 7.

LORD'S SUPPER

It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus; and the elder or priest shall administer it.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22.

TITHING

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion. . . .

And this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.

SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST

For, behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice; and their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, forever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 6.

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

From their records we learn that this religious body believes in an appointed place on this continent of America for his saints to gather, as well as to believe that ancient Israel will gather to the land of Judea before the Lord shall come the second time.

They believe that 1 Peter 4: 6 teaches that those who do not hear the gospel in this life will hear it in the prison house.

They are believers that tobacco and strong drinks are injurious to the physical system, and are forbidden of the Lord.

They believe that they are the only church that is accepted as a church with God, and for this reason they refuse to accept of the authority of any other minister to administer in the ordinances of God. Those who have been baptized by other ministers are required to be baptized by one who has authority in this church to be accepted as members therein.

As a fitting conclusion to this chapter we add what has become a matter of history, founded upon the decision of two of the United States judges, and believe it but just that this addition should be made.

COURT DECISIONS

That the said plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a religious society, founded and organized upon the same doctrines and tenets, and having the same organization, as the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, by Joseph Smith, and was organized pursuant to the constitution, laws and usages of said original church. . . .

And the court do further find that the plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property.—Judge L. S. Sherman in Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, February, 1880.

Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter forever at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith its founder was killed. . . .

The only authorized and recognized books of doctrine and laws for the government of the church from 1830 to 1844 were the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. . . .

A considerable number of the officers and members of the church at Nauvoo did not ally themselves with any of the factions, and wherever they were they held on to the faith, refused to follow Brigham Young to Utah, and ever repudiated the doctrine of polygamy, which was the great rock of offense on which the church split after the death of Joseph Smith.

In 1852 the scattered fragments of the church, the remnants of those who held to the fortunes of the present Joseph Smith, son of the so-called "martyr," gathered together sufficiently for a nucleus of organization. They took the name of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and avowed their allegiance to the teachings of the ancient church; and their epitome of faith adopted, while containing differences in phraseology, in its essentials is but a reproduction of that of the church as it existed from 1830 to 1844.—Judge John F. Philips, of the United States Circuit Court, in the Temple Lot Suit, 1894.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

HOW AND WHAT TO READ

[The following interesting observations are by Robert E. Speer, in his department in The Sunday School Times.—EDITORS.]

"I went to see him at once," says Lord Morley, of a visit to Mr. Gladstone in his old age. "It was a Sunday afternoon. There the old fellow was, doing what old fellows have done for long ages on a Sunday afternoon, reading a big Bible." That is the best of all reading. No man is a well-read man in English literature, unless he has read often and carefully in the Bible.

Mr. Charles A. Dana was in his day the ablest and most brilliant newspaper editor in America, and this is what he said about Bible reading as an essential part of the education of any man who was to write or to speak English:

"There are some books that are absolutely indispensable to the kind of education that we are contemplating, and to the profession (editorial) that we are considering; and of all these the most indispensable, the most useful, the one whose knowledge is most effective, is the Bible. There is no book from which more valuable lessons can be learned. I am considering it now not as a religious book, but as a manual of utility, of professional preparation, and professional use for a journalist. There is, perhaps, no book whose style is so suggestive and more instructive, from which you learn more directly that sublime simplicity which never exaggerates, which recounts the greatest event with solemnity, of course, but without sentimentality or affectations, none which you open with such confidence and lay down with such reverence; there is no book like the Bible. When you get into a controversy and want exactly the right answer, when you are looking for an expression, what is it that sets up the right principle for you, which pleads for a cause, so much as the right passage of Holy Scripture?"

And all our other reading should be as nearly as possible on the level of the Bible. The deadly foe to such reading is the newspaper and the magazine. It need not be so if we will be stiff enough in selection and rejection of the material which pours out in the periodicals.

Contrast with the mass of ephemeral things which most of us read the picture of true reading in a biography like William Morris' or personal recollections like Morley's. With Morley it was English or Latin or Greek or French or Italian or German indifferently. All this literature was open to him. All the more ought those of us who must stay in the English field alone be discriminating to make up by the best selections there for our want of knowledge in other tongues.

It helps a great deal to hold fast what we read if we will own the books and mark them. In old libraries we often find books whose owners had written in the fly-leaves the passages which most impressed them, and often also an analysis of what they had read. To pick out the best bits and to talk about them is a good way to hold them in memory. It is said slurringly of some people that their conversation always shows what books they have read last. There are worse faults.

The best and pleasantest of all reading is biography. The Bible itself is a collection of biographies, stories of men and women, some heroic, some commonplace, some true, some disloyal. They were men and women of flesh and blood, of like passions with us. And their stories are told for our good. Outside of the Bible there are thousands of good biographies.

Some rest is selfish and indolent rest, but reading which is neither selfish nor indolent is the best of all rest. What pleasure can equal it? And out of it what profit comes for the reader and from him!

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

From Our Leader of Boys

We are in receipt of a letter from Brother McDowell, who, as you know, was appointed by the Presidency to take charge of the matter of boys' organizations throughout the church. He is not neglectful of the work intrusted to him, although enthusiastic and impatient workers might think so, provided they were unacquainted with Brother McDowell and thus cannot appreciate the fine consecration of the man. He is undertaking this work with a full sense of the responsibility of his position, and with a clear understanding of the importance of the task and its bearing upon every phase of our church life. It is because he has seen the need of definite work with boys, and has had a vision of what it might be, that he consented to take it up in addition to his already full curriculum of study and labor for the year. While, of necessity, the work will move slowly at first, we believe that it will develop safely and surely, and as it enlarges and enters upon its rightful field we will have cause to rejoice that one so capable, so trained and efficient, so devoted to the young and their interests, has answered, "Here am I, Lord!" when called to be the light-bearer on this neglected highway. Read the extracts from his letter, write to him in query or suggestion, lend a willing hand and heart to his support, and, all together, pull for a successful outcome of the movement.

A. A.

"... Through the kindness of the Religio president, I have been able to mail to all Religio district officers a circular letter, asking for their cooperation in securing the names of leaders, and openings for organizations. As soon as I receive such, I will prepare and send out another letter containing more detailed information relative to the method of organizing a troop of the scouts, etc.

"I was fortunate enough last week to meet one of the leading men of the Boy Scout movement. He happened to be here in connection with the organization of the special course for scoutmasters, which course will be given here in connection with our summer school. It is said this will be one of the finest things in the country. Of course I expect to take this in, if I possibly can. It will be a two weeks' course, and will include actual participation in scout activities.

"I had a fine conference with this gentleman, and felt quite encouraged over the result. It seems that another church has been considering something of the same plan as we have in mind. One of their leaders, in connection with Boy Scout officers, prepared a circular which they expect to publish soon, entitled 'The boy scout and the church.' Permission was given me to use this manuscript as completely as I desired, making such alterations as I thought necessary in preparing material for a similar circular for us. I have already prepared such an article, and am mailing it to this gentleman in New York for his approval before having it printed.

"Best of all, this gentleman wishes to grant me a commission as Special National Field Commissioner for our church. This will give some backing to our work, and serve to connect it up with the general organization.

"Although I expect to be here most of the summer, I have consented to take charge of the young people's activities for the Logan and the Lamoni reunions. I hope to be able to work out some general plans for reunion activities for the young, which plans are very much needed.

"It is needless for me to explain to you how tied-up I have been with my school work here, which has prevented me from doing more than this for the boys' movement. It will require all the energy I can muster for me to finish my thesis, and to get ready for my doctor's examination before August. Every minute I spend on the boy work before then has to be sacrificed from school work, so you can see that I am in a tight place right now. I am not complaining, however, and I am grateful for all the fine support our people are giving me, and the interest and patience they are showing in regard to the solving of this problem.

"Your brother in Christ,

Reunion Child Welfare Exhibits

Our Auxiliary president, Sister Krahl, writes us that arrangements have been made for a child welfare exhibit for use at reunions which, she says, is not only educational, but beautiful and artistic as well, being designed especially for the present "children's year" campaign fostered by the Government. She feels that it is our patriotic duty to fall in line with other organizations in carrying out the wishes of President Wilson. She adds: "It seems to me, however, that we have 'been in line' some twenty years or more, trying to get the mothers to give attention to these important matters. It sometimes takes a calamity before people will really wake up!"

If you are interested—and of course you are—in securing the advantages and enthusiasm this exhibit will add to your reunion plans, do not postpone your writing to Sister William Madison about it. Her address is 1015 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri. She will be glad to help you in every detail possible, to make your auxiliary work a success.

Approval

Reading the splendid articles appearing in the HERALD written by our sisters, I am made to thank God for the very evident awakening among them, and its expression in so able a manner.

True it is that many conditions have existed in the homes of our people, as well as those of the world, which have not been worthy ones. There have been too many selfish desires gratified at the expense of the work of God. The so-called love of the parents towards the children intrusted to them has taken on the form of indulgence, not love. Jesus Christ loves mankind, but aims at the very root of sin, and his law becomes a law of correction and not indulgence.

I hope that we may have many such helpful articles, that the thoughts they carry may be repeated often enough that they may, as has been suggested, eventually wear a "rut" or groove in the mind and memory of every truth-loving child of God. Then the fathers and mothers and children will have learned that to neglect the duties imposed upon them by our Creator, will mean a miserable failure. High ideals can only be reached by a persistent endeavor on the part of individuals to carry into effect the full and complete law of God, which is the law of life.

My soul glories in the fact that there are those who are capable and willing to stand upon the side of God and right, and who dare to express their convictions regarding these things. Those who are called to be coworkers with God and his Christ in the redemption of the human family, cannot afford to be heedless or neglectful. Parenthood is a blessed state if the satisfying power of God's Spirit shall attend those who are intrusted with so great and high a calling.

May God inspire the minds, speed the pens, and endow with grace those who are striving to stimulate to greater activity those who have been delinquent, that the good work begun may go speedily on to a successful finish.

"I saw the mountains stand
 Silent, wonderful, and grand;
 Looking out across the land,
 When the golden light was falling on distant dome and spire;
 And I heard a low Voice calling, 'Come up higher!'
 Come up higher from the lowland and the mire,
 From the mist of earth desire,
 From the vain pursuit of pelf,
 From the attitude of self,
 Come up higher! Come up higher."

A. E. STONE.

Many men fail to get anywhere because they have the idea that they were ticketed for the station they have never reached. This is a great mistake. There are no stopping places along the way of life. A man may go back, or he may go forward, but from the cradle to the grave he must keep going.—Common Sense Sayings.

How Are You Feeding Your Babies?

(The third of a series of weekly articles on how mothers can help in children's year, by Mrs. Max West.)

Good food and right methods of feeding will play a very important part in the success of the campaign to save the lives of 100,000 babies during the Children's Year, begun on April 6 by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor at Washington, working through the Woman's Committee of the State Councils of National Defense. As soon as the baby is born his food becomes a matter of paramount importance, most of all to himself, as he loses no time in telling everyone about. Happy that baby who is supplied with breast milk, which is the best food for a baby throughout the greater part of the first year of life. The seriousness of depriving a baby of its natural food is shown very tragically in the fact that in 1915 in the registration area of the United States, 32,000 babies died in the first year of life from diseases of the stomach and intestines. This vast army of babies—enough to make up the entire population of a respectably large city—died chiefly, without doubt, from bad food, meaning partly dirty milk, and entirely unsuitable table foods, but also and probably largely from the substitution at too early an age of other food for breast milk. It is plain, therefore, that a great many of these babies died needlessly, because in the first place many mothers who did not, could have nursed their babies if they had had the right kind of care and advice, and many could have nursed them longer if they had understood the necessity.

The younger the baby the greater the necessity of breast milk, if that baby is to live and grow into health. A recent investigation made by the Children's Bureau shows that of certain babies who had been exclusively breast-fed during the first six months of life, only a little more than two per cent died during the first year of life, while the proportion of babies dying who had been artificially fed during the same period was about six times as great. It is plain that, as has been often said, "every mouthful of breast milk is important to the baby," and that in the first six months it is the principal safeguard of life.

The Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia, has published a small pamphlet called Infant Care which it will be glad to send free to anyone who asks for it. Many mothers who now wean their babies too early could keep up the breast milk longer, and many who do not nurse at all could do so if they had better care, better food, and, often, better advice. Much depends upon proper care of the mother before the baby is born, and especially at the time of the baby's birth. After she is up and about the greatest pains must be taken to insure the permanence and sufficiency of her milk by careful attention to her food, but more especially to her general hygiene. The nervous mechanism which regulates the mammary glands is so sensitive that the unhappy, overworked, sick, or worried mother is very likely to have a depleted milk supply, but in many cases upon the removal of these conditions the milk returns and all goes well. In some cases milk may be restored under skillful management even after it has apparently disappeared. It is wise, therefore, to make sure that every means to conserve the supply has been tried before subjecting the baby to the risk involved in artificial feeding, especially in the first three months of his life.

The protection which mothers give their babies by breast-feeding is often denied the children of mothers who are forced to leave them to go out to work. A study made by the Children's Bureau of the work of mothers during the first year of the baby's life shows that babies of women who go out to work die at more than twice the rate of babies whose mothers can stay at home and care for them. As a part of the work of Children's Year, communities are urged to guard mothers so far as possible from the necessity of going into industry and thus depriving the babies of that care and food which is essential to their welfare, even to life itself.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Hour of God's Judgment Has Come

If I mistake not the signs of the times, we, as nations and kingdoms of this world, and of their present and past conditions are on their last "go round." A new condition of things is soon to be ushered in, and the great changes of affairs will soon be on. In Revelation 14: 6 we find this language:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

In verse 7 the angel is reported to have said: "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." In this verse the heading for this letter is found.

But one thing I wish to say in regard to their testimonies, or any other testimonies that were uttered by men nineteen hundred years ago; if that is all we have to draw on as Christians, we are of all men most miserable, and have no more than others claim.

"But, oh," say many, "is not the Bible our guide and our only source of information?" This was once said to me, in substance, by an elder after I had finished a discourse. My answer to him was as here stated.

Christ, it is said, once stated to a class of unbelievers, Search the scriptures. For what? The needed information, of course. Who was to do this? The inquiring ones, of course. But to the believer he said, I will send another comforter that shall abide with you forever and he, the Spirit of truth, when he has come will guide you into all truth, and show you the things to come.

This I know and teach, and it should be the testimony of every servant of God going forth with the message that God has given us, even the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and admonish the people as the Master did and as the apostles and others did, to search the Scriptures and find out whether or not they testify of us and our message. Then, and in no other way, can we testify to the things that are now before us.

It is true that the things which John saw were figurative, many of them. The angel was not to do the preaching of the gospel that he was to bring, but would deliver it into the hands of man, which he did. Joseph Smith was the man of God's choice, under whom the angel was laboring, and in the year 1830, the sixth day of April, the way was open for this angelic message to go forth to the nations of the earth, and to every kindred and people.

But at this point, let us remember that the angel's message was of a twofold nature, the preaching of the gospel in all the world, and the pouring out of God's judgment upon the wicked. This judgment also began with the going forth of the gospel in 1830. The gospel was to be preached by the servants of God whom he shall call. These servants will hold aloft the white flag of peace in obedience to the gospel unto all men, whosoever will, and when they have fought the fight and have finished their course, their warfare is over.

Then who will he call to administer the awful judgment that was to come upon the world in connection with the preaching of the gospel? No doubt there is, and has been, much speculation in regard to this. The servants of God are men called of God to administer the gospel law, which is a spiritual law, that perfect law of liberty, which binds all men who obey it together in cords of love that cannot be broken by any earthly things. But oh, how the shadows change when we see the law of justice and judgment poured out upon the wicked, who have refused to salute the white flag of peace! In the last days, Joel and others tell us that God would pour out his Spirit on all flesh, and their sons and daughters and old men and young men would be used in God's hands in accomplishing a great work. And upon his servants and handmaidens would he pour out his Spirit and they should be used in accomplishing a great work.

We as servants have enlisted in the army of the Lord, and since 1830 have warned the world to flee from the wrath of God which would come on the ungodly.

In James 4: 7 we read: "Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you." How easy this might have been done by obeying the gospel of Christ. How many lives might have been saved! Friend, the day of grace will soon be passed, if not already at hand, when the Spirit of God will cease to strive with man.

But the work of the Lord cannot fail. Satan must go. The earth must be prepared for the coming of Christ. John tells us that a mighty angel would come down from heaven with a great chain in his hands, and would lay hold on the old serpent and bind him a thousand years and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up and set a seal on him, and that he would have no power to tempt the nations any more, till the thousand years shall be finished.

We find in Revelation 20 that John says the Devil will be chained. What a contrast between these two statements of James and John, who said, "Resist the Devil, and he will flee." John's inference is that he will make great resistance, and, if you will have it, the forcing, or compelling time is on.

The great world war will accomplish the work. Our chief executive, President Wilson, is the man of the day, and by his efforts and great foresight he will yet accomplish the task. The world must bow to the flag of peace, and that at the expense of the greatest war the world has ever known.

The Devil was driven from heaven at the expense of a great war and so will he be driven from the earth the same way. Why should this be true? Because he has had a following in both places who are not willing to resist him that he might flee. Therefore the world must submit to the desolation of war that peace may reign, which will bring about a reconstruction of all, which will fit the world for the coming of Christ to reign.

Then what a cause to fight for! What a cause to die for! Then let us stand by the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of peace. May the blessing of God rest upon those who long to see the work accomplished.

PARIS, TEXAS, Route 1.

Yours for truth,

G. N. Cox.

I would that I could picture to you the joy of the thought that I was to see my John again at some future date, just as if he had simply gone on a long journey, and was waiting for his mother and me to come to him. In the joy created by that picture I was able to assuage some of my pain and distress, and return to an almost normal state of mind.—Harry Lauder.

Observations

If patent medicine advertisements are true, few need to be sick. Even of a prominently advertised cough drop it says: "Take one on retiring and enjoy a good night's rest." We have noted that recently two leading patent medicine proprietors died at winter resorts.

In an early ministerial experience we would get excited over some event and go to one of our old "wheel-horse" missionaries and tell him. His comments generally consisted of, "That so?" We wondered why he said no more, but have since learned that age and experience beget wisdom (generally).

"Practice what you preach" is not always done. To give advice is easy—to do as you advise may not be quite so easy—and illustrated as follows:

We knew a lady, who on visiting the sick, or learning of any misfortune would be sure to say, "Well, we must take what comes; no use to fuss about it." But if she had a cold, or headache, or broke a dish, or eggs "went down," the whole family were "set on edge." And woe to the friend who called! We also remember a brother who held our hat as we preached. After the sermon he criticized us feelingly for preaching seventy minutes, and for the violent gestures we used. We "acknowledged the corm" and told him these were faults we hoped to overcome. That evening he preached—we held his hat eighty-five minutes, and saw him pound the holy pulpit Bible in an unholy way, for he did violence to the printed word. At the close we said to him, "I don't mind your getting even, but you beat me some."

When a boy of eleven years, we lay seven months with a terrible affliction, necrosis, (dead bone) of the entire left humerus (upper bone of arm). A good old brother called often, he in parting would say, "Well, Alma, keep a stiff upper lip." The first time he said it, we wondered at his meaning. We stiffened our lip, found it was hard to talk plainly, so concluded he meant murmur not, be brave. A year later he was taken with inflammatory rheumatism. We went to see him. We found him leaning against the wall, yelling, moaning, groaning, and though we loved him, sympathized deeply, we had to hold our tongue to keep from saying, "Keep a stiff upper lip, Uncle Jim."

"Encouraging a young preacher" was very much pronounced in my first sermon away from our home branch. I was invited to one of the largest branches in western Iowa, and before I gave it second thought, said "Yes." Then there followed days of sweating, and if fervent desire constitutes prayer, then I prayed for some calamity to happen to prevent my going. But Sunday morning was unusually fair, the horse was well, mother happy and anxious to speed me on.

I arrived in due time; full house; shaky preacher. I scarcely heard choir or prayer, but the announcement, "Brother Alma will be our speaker," sounded very loud and solemn. I arose, read a verse, "my eyes rested" on the sympathetic face of a stranger lady to my right. I said a few words haltingly. She nodded. I said a few more words, and another nod was given me. I began to talk faster, nods more frequent. Soon the tears were coursing her cheeks, and the preacher's enthusiasm grew apace, and the pace was maintained by spur of nods and tears, until the speaker began to get hoarse. The lady proved to be a visitor from a large city, was estranged from the church, came that morning, said she feasted on "manna from heaven," and would not forget that that sermon was meant for her. The preacher believed it, for as far as he knew there was only one in the congregation, and he preached to that one.

When a member congratulates you on a sermon it may be well to take it modestly. We knew of one man who got credit for being very much interested because of his nods which were due to a physical ailment. We knew of another case when a brother felt good because he moved a stranger to tears, but his tears were due to stoppage of the lachrymal duct. We remember very well a little feeling of satisfaction that came to us, when a dear old brother would come up, grasp us by the hand with a fervent "God bless you, that was the best I ever heard." I learned in time that the last sermon he heard was always the best; in the fervency of his soul he was honest, meant it. But it tended to put a little glow into many a new or young preacher's experience. And still we are many of us like this old brother. When we say it's the "best we ever ate," best prayer meeting, or reunion, or conference, it is probably only because it is best remembered, and satisfaction of it lingers still.

Mistreatment of Foreigners

At present, as we are all aware, and more or less have even experienced, there is a strange feeling among the people of Canada and the United States towards foreigners to-day.

Herewith I would like to give you some of my experiences with the hate and blindness among the human race of to-day; and I am sorry to say, there are those among these blind who have received the greater light of the world, the knowledge of the restored gospel in these latter days. I gave in applications to several firms for a position as mechanical draftsman, and after receiving an answer, I went there personally. The conversation generally ran as follows:

"Are you able to do this work?"

"Yes, sir."

"What is your experience?"

"So and so."

"Quite well. Then you will be able to do the work all right. Have you any letters of recommendation?"

"Yes, sir, here are some."

"Good. Where have you been before that time?"

"In Germany, sir."

"What? In Germany? Well, I am sorry; that is all I can do for you."

So I tried several places but all with the same result. At last I tried to work as laborer in mechanical shops. But as soon as it was known that I was a German, out I went. How any person, with such experiences, trying to do right, would feel, you might all know.

Now, dear reader, you might feel sorry for me, but do not do so. Feel sorry for the other ones with their narrow-mindedness. My letters of recommendation have shown them exactly where I have been and what I have done since 1904, so that there was no need of fear whatever. I felt like saying something many times but while speaking may be silver, silence is gold. Do you think just because I was born in Germany, that that makes me a thief and a robber?

My ability and my character remain the same, no matter where I am or where I come from. God gives everyone a clean and pure heart when he comes into the world with nothing but life.

Not long ago, I talked with one of the most educated men here in town, a director of a high school, about the matter. Among other things, I told him that I thought if people would do more thinking than talking, then they would not blame me for being born in Germany. I assured him that if I had had the privilege of choosing my parents they would have been nothing less than millionaires. I am certain that if people would use their thinking powers more, a talent which God gave to every human creature, there would be many troubles avoided.

The main cause which brought me to Canada was the English Government, which distributed through all Germany pamphlets and magazines describing the wonderful country of Canada, and inviting everybody to come here, to make himself a home on one of their free homesteads. To this call and invitation many have responded, and I was one of them. The most of the immigrants have built nice homes, have cultivated the soil, and the country has been prosperous. But now this monster of war, whose foundation is the vice and sinfulness of the human family, and the capital which has been gathered up into the hands of the few in enormous quantities, makes their lives most miserable. To-day, a German is thought to be behind every incidental occurrence of evil.

Now, everyone knows that these conditions exist in the United States and Canada. It surely makes it hard for everyone, unfortunately born in Germany or Austria, Latter Day Saint or not. We as Latter Day Saints believe in the unity of the people, and long for the day when we shall be all as one. But what do you think will come from the stories such as "One night's work," which I read in the Autumn Leaves? I think no good can come from them, considering the conditions as they are at present.

Should not we, as Saints, avoid everything that might cause contention among the people? Instead of pouring out the healing balm of peace and unity, we are pouring oil into the flame, which the sensational stories of newspaper talk have kindled.

Praying always for the unity of God's children and the advancement of the great work we are engaged in, I am,

Your brother,

F. BONN.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.

A Full Compliance With the Law

The Lord said to the church in November, 1831, "In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly." (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.) This revelation was given over eighty years ago and yet we have not complied with it. That which we Saints find in the gospel as contained in the Bible we tell the world they must not only believe, but obey.

If this is true of the world, it is certainly true of us, the covenant people of the Lord. The Doctrine and Covenants is not binding on the world, but it is on us who know it is given of God. One may say, "Oh, yes, Spurlock is quite ready for equality in the church as he has nothing to give." True! But I have given thirteen years of missionary service to this church, when many times I did not know where the next meal was coming from, where I would stay over night, was threatened with mob violences and maltreated in many other ways. But suppose I had given nothing for this work, that would not change the law or commandments of Christ, who said, "I the Lord am bound when you do whatsoever I command you, otherwise ye have no promise." If we receive so many blessings from the Lord when we keep the commandments in part, what would we receive if we kept them in full? I only urge a full compliance with the law of Christ. When fully complied with, it will not only benefit the poor, but the rich also. They, without us, cannot be made perfect.

The rich and poor are like the mountain and the valley. There must be a leveling up, the mountains must be thrown down that the valleys may be elevated. The rich in the world are now being compelled by war and bloodshed to give up their wealth and thus they are by judgment being humbled. How foolish it is to have to be compelled to be humbled.

The Book of Mormon says we should not wait to be compelled to be humbled, but that we should humble ourselves because of the word. Because of the word! Yes, that's it, and the word says in your temporal things you shall be equal and that not grudgingly. How is it to be done? Why, by giving our tithing and surplus into the storehouse of the Lord as the Lord plainly directs. Thus stewardships may be appointed and equality in temporal things brought about. One may say the Bishop is not ready to appoint stewardships as yet. Perhaps not. How can he do it if we, the Saints, are not ready?

If we are ready, let us show it that the Bishop may act accordingly. One may say that times are too hard now to do this. Are times too hard to obey the law of Christ? Not so. Times were hard when the poor widow (as mentioned in the Bible) was picking up sticks to bake her last bread that she and her son might eat and die, but when the prophet of God asked for a portion of it, his request was granted, hence she did not die, but was blessed with plenty. So shall we, the Saints of latter days, be blessed even abundantly, both in time and eternity, if we comply with the law of Christ in full.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, May 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: Having recently returned home from my first missionary trip of any length, with my companion, Elder J. L. Mortimer, felt a few words concerning the same might be of interest to some.

I would say first that I expect to accompany my companion whenever I can, and trust my efforts to be of assistance may have the Master's blessing, for the work is dear to me. We left home March 23, stopping in Shelburne for a few days. On March 26 Elder Mortimer solemnized the marriage of his youngest son, John W., to Martha, youngest daughter of Elder Martin Snell, president of the branch. Before leaving Shelburne Elder Mortimer held two meetings, where good interest was shown. He was requested to return, which he will now be able to do as his mission is in the Owen Sound District for this year.

We left for Hamilton March 30, where Elder Mortimer was in charge during the absence of Elder J. W. Davis to the General Conference. Our stay in Hamilton was one which we will always look back upon with much pleasure. We tried to visit each family, but in some instances called several times at some home but found no one there.

We found the Saints of Hamilton alert to the possibilities of good, earnest work in their midst. The services were well attended, notwithstanding considerable sickness in the branch while there. One of the most active workers, Brother Samuel Gould, was called to the service of his country. We have just learned that Brother Gould is now on his way overseas. He will be much missed both in the church and in the home.

I find my subscription to the HERALD has expired and renew it now, as we always look forward to its weekly visits, and read it with interest.

We were much impressed with the address of President

ON A CASH BASIS AFTER JUNE 1

To all our customers, including agents and missionaries: We desire to call your attention to the recent action of the Board of Publication, mentioned in the HERALD of May 8 to the effect that on and after June 1, 1918, the business of the publishing houses would be put on a strictly cash basis.

As manager of the Herald Publishing House, we will adhere to these instructions and would kindly ask that our customers be governed accordingly, thereby saving unnecessary correspondence and postage.

We do not believe this will work a hardship on anyone but rather will be of mutual benefit to all concerned. We must pay cash for labor and supplies, prices on both continuing to advance. It will also effect a considerable saving to the office in time and clerical work, as well as in other ways. Our subscription list, when it was put on this basis, increased rather than diminished.

The sale of books on the installment plan will also be discontinued. This will not, however, affect any contracts now out, which may be settled for as agreed.

Printing and job work, the price of which necessarily varies, will be cash upon receipt of invoice from this office, or if desired, will be sent C. O. D.

We hope and pray for the hearty cooperation of all in this important department of the church work in these perilous times.

President.

The Bishopric

NOTICE OF FIELDS OF LABOR

Bishop E. L. Kelley will act as traveling bishop in the following territory during the present conference year: Northern Iowa, North Dakota, Minnesota, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Eastern Washington.

Bishop Richard Bullard is appointed to labor as traveling bishop in Utah, Colorado, Oregon, and California.

Bishop J. A. Becker will serve as bishop of the following districts until further notice: Kirtland, Southern Ohio, and Pittsburgh. He will also labor as traveling bishop in the Youngstown and Sharon, Northwestern Ohio, and Wheeling districts. The bishop's agents in these three last named districts will continue to report as heretofore to the Presiding Bishop, and cooperate with the traveling bishop in his work of educating the Saints in the temporal law.

Fraternally,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

New York District: In publishing the notice of the appointment of Brother L. H. Lewis, as bishop's agent to the above district, through a typographical error, the name appeared J. H. Lewis instead of L. H. Lewis. The Saints will kindly note this correction so that funds mailed to Brother Lewis may reach him.
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Book Reviews

WITH GOD AND THE COLORS.—By Mrs. Leila Atwood Foust, published by The Vir Publishing Company, 200-214 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, price 50 cents net. An inspiring, devotional book for the mothers of the boys in the service. The author, with the wonderful spiritual endowment of a Frances Ridley Havergal, voices what is deep down in many a mother's soul who, like herself, has a boy at the front fighting for the world's freedom and liberty. It cannot fail to inspire, strengthen and deepen the devotional life of the mothers of our sailor and soldier boys. With specially designed cover and fleur-de-lis border printed in khaki color.

Our Departed Ones

CONNELLEY.—Lazora Neola Connelley was born January 20, 1892, at Springfield, Illinois; died May 26, 1918, at Salida, Colorado. United with the church at Rock Island, Illinois, August 13, 1916. Later transferred membership to Kansas City Branch. To mourn their loss is a husband, father, mother, aunt, and other relatives. Services at Central Church at Kansas City, Missouri, burial at Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

KALSTRUP.—Christian Kalstrup was born in Aalborg, Denmark, May 18, 1860. He came to America in 1894. Died at his home near Bedison, Missouri, April 23, 1918. Funeral sermon by Peter Anderson. Interment in the Swinford Cemetery. Brother Kalstrup leaves wife, 3 sons, 3 brothers, 3 sisters, and many friends to mourn his departure.

MCKEE.—Essie M. Starkey was born December 28, 1854, in Sonoma County, California. Married Richard Y. McKee September 10, 1874, at San Lucas, California. Died at Monterey, California, May 26, 1918. Mother of Thomas, Louis, and Robert McKee, and Mrs. Jacob Westfall and Mrs. Charles Cooper. Lived a consistent life with the gospel; was a true Saint. Funeral sermon by C. A. Parkin.

WHITING.—Oval Hale Whiting was born January 11, 1916. The home of Brother and Sister Berch Whiting was made glad by the advent of such a sweet, pure, innocent, little sunbeam, whose tiny light sent forth its rays to gladden their hearts until he was called to a fairer land on May 16, 1918. Funeral services from the home, Independence, Missouri, sermon by James F. Keir.

YOUNG.—James Alburn Garrison Young was born January 25, 1908, at Horace, Kansas; died May 21, 1918, at place of birth. He was a member of the church and both lovable and loving in disposition. His mother having passed on before him to her reward while he was in his infancy, will await his coming with joy. He was taken by his mother's parents and reared until his death from inflammatory rheumatism and heart failure, his sickness only lasting three days. Laid to rest in the cemetery at Horace.

MACKAY.—George Martin B. Mackay, born August 3, 1857, at Bristol, Gloucestershire, England, died February 9, 1918, after a brief but painful illness at the Royal Infirmary, Gloucester, England. Baptized March 29, 1892, being a member of the late Sydney Branch. Ordained teacher October 6, 1895, laboring in the Sydney Branch and afterward with the Gloucester Branch from its organization, July, 1909, until his death. Funeral services in charge of E. J. Trapp, who also preached the sermon. Interment in the Gloucester Cemetery.

HOUGAS.—Mary E. Hougas died May 28, 1918, near Henderson, Iowa. Born in Stark County, Illinois, in 1849. Married Daniel Hougas October 17, 1857, and they settled on the place which was ever after their home and where her husband died in 1912. Four children were born to this union: Almon D. and Thomas A., of Henderson; Blanche I. Andrews, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Bertha E. Pitt, deceased. Baptized in early days of Reorganized Church, and was an active and dependable member. Funeral from Farm Creek Church, May 30, conducted by Heman C. Smith.

LYKE.—Mary D. Lyke, for years a resident of Boyne City, Michigan, passed away May 24, 1918, after an illness of nearly three years. Born July 16, 1837, at Rochester, New York. Baptized January 16, 1894, at Boyne City, Michigan, by G. D. Washburn. Was a faithful Saint; her kind ministrations will be remembered. Two children survive her: Mrs. J. C. Goodman, and Byron Lyke, besides grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Funeral services at Saints' church. Sermon by C. N. Burtch, assisted by R. D. Davis.

handicap of not fully appreciating and evaluating our special problems and needs, and necessarily cannot and do not pay attention to their solution.

We have a well-trained faculty adequate in number and preparation to accomplish these ends. Our facilities and equipment in the way of library and laboratory are standard and fully meet all requirements laid down by those officials having to pass upon such matters.

Recognizing that there are some teachers in some other schools of deservedly greater reputation, we believe that our devotion to our particular field fully offsets this apparent disadvantage, particularly as the problem of instruction with our students is the pedagogical one of inducing them to study diligently and developing in them well-settled habits of study.

Moreover, the young people who will become active in different lines of church work may form here an acquaintance with a large number of the leaders in all the departments of church work, thus enabling them to have personal contact with the men who are going to be instrumental in developing the policies and activities of the church for many years. Among the lecturers in the regular Graceland faculty for next year will be President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, S. A. Burgess, Walter W. Smith, G. Leonard Harrington, Augustine Dwyer, and several others, each delivering a series of special lectures on subjects of great value and interest to the entire student body.

There is another aspect to this question. We believe that the young people of the church gain by coming here; at the same time it is quite clear that the church usually suffers loss by their going elsewhere, not only financial loss, but loss in many other ways. Experience shows that a per-

FROM HERE AND THERE

WHY ATTEND GRACELAND?

Why should young people be induced to attend Graceland College rather than some other good school?

We believe that by devoting our time to the special needs of young men and women who expect to be active in the interests of the church in some capacity or other we can offset any apparent advantage a student may gain by going to any of the more widely known schools, which are under the centage of the college men who go elsewhere for their college work before they are thoroughly grounded in the things which they can secure here during the early years of their college course are lost, some of them permanently, to the activities of the church. Experience on the other hand shows that a large percentage of those who take all the work they can possibly secure here are so thoroughly impregnated with the spirit and genius of this work that they may with safety continue their work in higher institutions of learning.

In the first case the church is drained of many of her most able sons. In almost every case an equally good or even better career would be found within the folds of the church. Will not Graceland be serving the interests of the church by inducing these young people to train thoroughly for home service?

The church has provided here an educational institution of the very first rank among junior colleges of the country. Her faculty, buildings, equipment, library, laboratories all meet the most exacting requirements, have been passed upon by the inspecting officials of the Government and she is fully standardized and officially accredited.

It is found that the high standing of this school is less known to the membership of the church than it is in professional circles of the world. The president of the college was told some time ago after an address which he made on education that it was one of the best defenses of Graceland College ever given. It should be known that Graceland needs no defense among the educational institutions of the world. It stands on its own feet, is accepted by them at par value, is fully standardized and officially accredited. As an evidence of this standing her intercollegiate activities of the past year may be cited. In the two college debates held, one with a college in Iowa, the other with a college in Missouri, the same question was debated in both contests. In one debate Graceland had the affirmative; in the other debate Graceland upheld the negative, and won in both debates, thus defeating both colleges on different sides of the same question.

On the athletic field Graceland was defeated but once in football and once in basket ball, playing as she did colleges in Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas.

In the annual declamatory contest Graceland secured second place in a contest with eleven institutions represented.

The high grade of her annual oratorical contest has been evidenced at the past two General Conferences and it speaks for itself as one of the college activities of a worth while nature.

As has been its policy in the past, so it will continue to be, not to undertake too much, but to do well whatever is undertaken, believing that the policy of thoroughness and of intensive effort will spell a progress which would be impossible if its energy were scattered over too wide a field. Graceland has a very definite mission of usefulness and it prefers to do its work so well that it will continue to deserve a constantly widening field of opportunity.

The new college year opens September 5. Parents of young people who should be interested and young people themselves are invited to write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for a free catalogue, fully explaining all of the work of the different departments of the college.

The Des Moines district conference, held May 31 and June 1 and 2, including the conventions, is reported as a success, the peaceful presence of the Holy Spirit being present from opening to the close. At the Sunday sacramental service the voice of inspiration spoke very encouragingly to the Saints, particularly admonishing them to come to unity and make progress, and further giving promises of even greater blessings than hitherto enjoyed. Another very pleasing feature was the unanimous passing of a resolution heartily indorsing the matter passed at the late General Conference on coordination. Our correspondent quotes President Salisbury as saying: "Do little things in a big way," which it seems all are seeking to do.

The Free Press, of London, Ontario, comments at length on the occasion of the unfurling of the service flag at the London Branch on the evening of the 4th. Some striking patriotic utterances from the speeches of Elders William Fligg, J. Shields, and J. R. Grice, of Detroit, were quoted. There was an excellent musical program and 21 maple leaves were attached for as many members of the branch and auxiliaries in the service.

Brother J. F. Mintun says he has been holding street meetings in Toledo with better interest than last year. He has moved, and his new address is 1012 Waverly Avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

"A CHURCH CASE"

A very pleasant Church Case came before the First Presidency, Sunday, June 2, when Arthur B. Church and Cicely I. Case were united in marriage at Lamoni, President Elbert A. Smith officiating. Brother Church is instructor in wireless telegraphy at Graceland College. The bride is a daughter of Elder Hubert Case, and was born in the South Sea Island Mission. Both bride and groom are of old-line Latter Day Saint stock, in each instance the parents and grandparents on both sides of the family being church members.

KEEP UP YOUR LIBRARY WORK

Until such time as a change is made by the action of the coordinating committee, the General Library Commission will continue work as usual, with the same secretary of the commission as last year, to look after the special interests of the district workers. Brother Vernon A. Reese, of Chicago, launched out last year and did a good work, and so far as his time will allow, will continue to do this year. Please note that his address has been changed, and now is 919 North Kedvale Avenue.

We learn that in addition to other sudden changes in the plans of James W. Stobaugh, recently resigned secretary of the Religio Society, he took unto himself a wife. Her name was Bernice McChristy, of Englewood, in the Kansas City Stake. His address at present is Thirteenth Service Company, Camp Alfred Vail, Little Silver, New Jersey.

GETTING ATTENDANCE AT SERVICES

We have recently mentioned the services in Perry, Iowa, where Brother Arber has been preaching. Three heads of families were baptized, people who had not hitherto been affiliated with any of the Saints. It will be of interest to note that to get attendance they had a nice invitation card printed, with the epitome of the faith on the back, which they handed out in a house to house canvass along with a tract called "Why I became a Latter Day Saint." They were given "where wisdom directed," the pastor reports. The editor of the Perry Daily Chief was very courteous and opened his columns to a synopsis of the sermon each day. This combination of publicity methods, coupled with good sermons and a good reputation in the community by the Saints, is irresistible. We sometimes wonder whether or not we will escape condemnation if we do less in each community where it is possible.

LOYALTY TO GOD AND OUR NATION

(Sermon by President Frederick M. Smith, delivered at Independence, Missouri, September 23, 1917, at the Stone Church.)

It is with a mixture of pleasure and a feeling of diffidence that I attempt to address this splendid audience this morning. I appreciate the occasion which has called us together. I deplore the fact that because of lack of preparedness we do not, to-day, have a building which is adequate for an occasion of this kind.

It is perhaps well, this morning, that we shall pause amidst the excitement of the times for a brief survey of some of the conditions existing in and without the church. Nationally, in contemplating the conditions at large, our first attention is centered upon the great European war, which has become the world war; and as nation after nation is drawn into the vortex, we wonder where it will stop. The bulk of the civilized nations of the world to-day are engaged in the conflict, their resources and their manpower being thrown on one side or the other, and the rapidity with which still other nations are being drawn into the conflict raises the question, When will it stop, or will it stop before the whole world is engaged?

So rapidly have the horrors increased, and so stupendous has been the demonstration of brutality which has developed that to-day we are passive at the announcement of things which a few years ago would have caused the intensest horror. You remember that when the Titanic met its fate and was sunk by an iceberg the whole world was shocked at the loss of life; and yet perhaps most of you last night read the news of the sinking of five of our boats with scarcely more than a ripple of excitement. You may have been stirred a little bit to anger at the existence of a militarism which has developed a brutality that a few years ago would have seemed impossible.

DISLOYALTY

Our country has, in spite of the efforts of our statesmen to keep us out of the war, become involved, and there have been uncovered within the last few weeks evidences of the intrigue which has spread over the world that have astonished us perhaps beyond measure. The revelations which have come from the State Department within the last few days as to the extent of the intrigue in which a certain government has attempted to involve the world in the promotion of its own selfish interest, has astonished us by its extent and cunning. And there is one aspect of that intrigue which I wish to emphasize. Such intrigue could never have become possible except for one great thing, that is disloyalty; and the fact that a nation can be shattered, and another nation can threaten the very existence of some of the most stable nations in the world because of the existence of disloyalty in the ranks of the nations which it is attempting to disintegrate should in my opinion, be a great warning to us this morning.

We had the pleasure a few years ago of attending what would now appear to be a farce, the Second National Peace Congress held in Chicago. There I heard Count Von Bernstoff deliver a lecture in the interests of peace. He spoke rather as one of a number of speakers of the meetings supposed to be in the interests of peace. His speech was well received, apparently, but I was astonished, and became a little suspicious myself because there was no comment made in any of the papers or by subsequent speakers at the conference at the subtlety of the count's paper and speech, for whether it were by intuition or by blundering on the fact, I became sure there was an undertone there that threatened the peace of the world rather than to promote its interests; and I remember distinctly of coming home and commenting to the members of my family on the subtlety of that paper, and I became convinced then that the ruler he represented at that time had not the slightest intention of ever disarming his nation, although the question of disarmament was up and under discussion at the time he spoke.

If I were wishing to undermine an institution which I believed to be the work of God, I should ask no finer opportunity than to become aware that disloyalty existed in the ranks of the people who called themselves the people of God. Disloyalty is the golden opportunity that evildoers and Satan have for destroying any institution that they wish to undermine. Loyalty. We are sometimes prone to think of loyalty only on the field of battle, and sometimes associated in parallel terms with patriotism. Patriotism is love of country, and should be accompanied by loyalty, but the man with the disloyalty in his soul is not a man who will write his name anywhere in the accomplishment of anything which will be of benefit to humanity. There is not a time in a man's or woman's life when loyalty can be put aside and become absent from his characteristics and individuality. From the time as an infant he becomes aware of the fact that there is one house on the street that is his, to which he always has ingress, and to which he can flee for safety, until the clods shall fall upon his coffin he is not without opportunity of being loyal, or having the opportunity of becoming loyal, to some institution or other.

LOYALTY DEMANDED OF ALL PHASES OF LIFE

Loyalty to the home is absolutely demanded, I care not what the conditions may be. There may be dissatisfaction with the conditions that do exist; there may be a desire that things be very much better; he may see the failings of his brothers and sisters; may see the shortcomings of his father and mother, but the man who will not obey the sentiment of loyalty, or from the sentiment of loyalty defend his family when need for defense exists, is not a true man. And that is true also outside of the home: we must be loyal to the community. The real boy stands up for his street and thinks it just a little better than any other street in town, that his gang is just a little better than any other gang. Loyalty to that gang will cause him to fight shoulder to shoulder with those boys to the overcoming of another gang if he thinks there is danger to their interests. The boy who goes into the community school thinks his school is the best in town and his fellow athletes just a little bit the best, and will never give up until they have been convinced on a fair, square fight or field of battle, whether athletic or the mere throwing of stones, that the other fellows have got it on him. And that same loyalty to the school that is demanded of the schoolboy, that engenders the proper esprit de corps among the school boys, is demanded of us in other ways. Let the school boys of this town be entered in other school contests and you will find a spirit of loyalty to their institutions that will cause them to fight the fellows from the other school, and let some out-of-town boy attempt to come in, and you will find that same spirit of loyalty causing these boys to stand shoulder to shoulder and attempt to vanquish the boys who have come within their province, and this contest, too, is all right. The same loyalty that causes us to give allegiance to our school is also demanded of us when it comes to supporting the institutions of our choice in other things. You remember that David expressed the sentiment when he said that when the time came that he could not sing of Jerusalem as above all the things and treasures then he hoped his tongue might cleave to the roof of his mouth. That was an expression of community loyalty which placed Jerusalem above all other cities of the world because it was his city. Every man and woman should have the same kind of loyalty for the community of which he is a part, and loyalty shall demand that he will stand for the promotion of the institutions of which he is a part.

LOYAL CITIZENSHIP

Carried further it is but an easy step to see how this loyalty of town must be carried in loyalty to State, and in turn to Nation. Now, so far as we as a people are concerned—and I presume I am speaking almost exclusively this morning to a congregation of Latter Day Saints—I do not see how it is possible for any loyal Latter Day Saint of the United States to be other than an enthusiastic and loyal citizen of the United States, I mean if he is a native-born or naturalized citizen, for we take the position occupied by no other people, that God directly interposed in the affairs of humanity to establish this Government; that he inspired the men who wrote this Constitution, that there might be written therein those things that would promote the principles of liberty and justice and promote the welfare of the institution that he expected to found among mankind and which would tend toward the great consummation. And if this be true how, in the name of Divinity, can we do anything else than say, My all is on the altar; take what is necessary to maintain the institution that later on became the United States of America; and hence, in the hour that this Constitution is threatened, and at the time when there are dangers confronting us from without, and especially in the hour when we have entered the lists in the interests of humanity and extremity of the nations or people of the world, I do not think we can do anything else than say to our Nation's leader, and to those who are associated with him, when our services are needed they will be given. I may even go farther and say we ought not to wait until they are demanded. I know I have been criticized, perhaps in some quarters severely, for the attitude I have taken in regard to the war, but it has been taken conscientiously, and have yet to be shown I am wrong unless perhaps I did not go far enough in urging support to the Nation, but the criticism offered along this direction prevented my doing what I felt should have been done, and I do not know just to what extent I will be held under condemnation for it. I felt at first that as Latter Day Saints we should have had at least a Latter Day Saint battalion where the officers and men would have been of our faith, rather than have our boys scattered and separated and under the authority of men who do not believe as we do, and where there could not be the freest exercise of church privileges. We should have anticipated exactly what did happen and organized our own battalion with our own men as officers.

As it is we look out over the situation to-day and we are horrified at the extent of it all. A nation which was considered one of the most powerful in the world goes to pieces in a day. It is reorganized and goes to pieces again, and will remain unstable until there can be created somewhere within the limits of that great Russian nation a feeling of loyalty which will promote a basis for solidarity. And these same conditions of uncertainty are existing here to-day and manifested by almost every report, and especially every new revelation from the State Department of the extent of this uncertainty through intrigue going on.

What is our part in the war? Well, as you know, some half million United States men have been called to the Colors. Some ten millions have registered for military service, and I will venture the prediction, my fellow Latter Day Saints, that you will not see the end of this war until at least three million of our soldiers are on foreign shores, and I think we will be lucky if, as a nation, we have to send only three million boys to the front.

THE POSSIBLE OUTCOME OF WORLD CONDITIONS

What is the outcome? Who knows? It is apparent to anyone studying the situation, who has followed the war in its development from the first, that there is only one outcome, and that is for the central powers to be whipped to their knees. And is it settled then? Can you imagine a dozen trained athletes who have been developed in all of the arts of war, trained to the minute, stripped to the waist, standing in a body in a ring trying to settle a question by mental processes or discussion? The selfishness of each person comes to the front in the small matters of life; then picture what will happen when the selfishness of one of these trained athletes is touched upon and you will readily see exactly that which is in danger of happening when Germany is whipped to her knees or destroyed; and Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey have been compelled to capitulate, because every nation in the world will by that time have a trained army, their resources of the best, and equipped to the fullest extent. Then, in the efforts to redistribute geographical boundary lines of nations, and settle perplexing diplomatic questions, if under the inspiration of the Lord there are statesmen in all the countries met together who make no mistakes we might be safe, but the slightest diplomatic blunder is liable to replunge the whole world in a war worse than what we have now.

This is as I see it. Am I too pessimistic? Or am I not justified in drawing such a picture, and if I am, well, then, there's something in it for us.

PROBLEMS BEFORE THE CHURCH

What is the condition in the church? What kind of loyalty is demanded to-day in the church? If I read the signs of the times, this church is about to enter upon one of its greatest constructive periods in its existence, when we are expected to put into effect the things we have been teaching theoretically year after year. Revolution in some things, readjustment along some lines, in some directions it will demand on the part of the people a loyalty that they never manifested before. That is what is demanded.

What is the loyalty in existence in the church to-day? Ask yourself the question, and go to your officers and find out how their hands are being supported. When the leaders of this church attempt to make a forward movement, one of the first things they have to do is to begin a campaign of education in order to get the loyalty that should be there at first. I know that we preach about representative government and its grandeur, but do you know that we have had presented to us time and again and received certain principles of what is understood as representative government, and other essentials we let go with scarcely a mention, and we speak of the responsibility that falls upon those chosen to represent us; how they are compelled to act in the interests of the people; how the interests of the people must be conserved, and how they are to do nothing that does not conserve the interests of the people; but while it is true that representative government demands that there shall be loyalty on the part of the representatives of the people, it is equally true that the same spirit of loyalty is demanded from the people they represent. There should be loyalty on the part of the represented to the representatives and it is the utmost folly for you to select representatives to carry on your work and then refuse to give them the loyalty that will afford them an intelligent following. I mean that where we have leaders who are expected to wait until they who are following know all about some of the plans and policy and details of the work that the representatives are trying to do, we will make slow progress. We have had held out to us that Jesus is the great example, and I have heard leaders of this church, if you please, men of high position, who have attempted to warn the people against the leaders of the church, and have referred to the time Jesus, walking to a certain place; took his disciples and by a process of development, opened their understanding, and the theory is given that any leader who fails to "open the understanding" of his followers, is failing to lead as he would.

We will admit that there were times when Jesus, as a leader, was compelled to act as a quiet, persuasive educator, and there are times also when any man representing a people, or acting in the capacity of a leader, will be compelled to officiate as a teacher, and I believe he will use all the moral suasion at his command and to every extent that lies within his power will try to lift his people up, carry them up, push them up. But follow the life of Jesus, and you will see that there were times when he rose in the majesty of his power and commanded his people. Speaking to his disciples the demand is that they go into all the world and preach the gospel and the signs will follow. He did not say to his disciples, I think the time is quite near that you might be able to go into all the world and preach the gospel and all those who hear you would discover that they would thereby be saved from great misfortune; but he said, Go, and the signs shall follow. I can see him at times on his bended knees agonizing with the Father to intercede in behalf of the afflicted one; but there were other times when, sure of his ground, and filled with his great, divine faith, he would occupy a position little appreciated, perhaps, by those who were observing him, when he said to the sick, Arise, take up your bed and walk. He didn't say, "I believe you can get up if you want to." Then we find Jesus in a double role, that of a persuading teacher who is attempting to use all the arts at his command to bring his people on to higher grounds. At other times he was compelled to challenge opposition by assuming the role of a commander or leader. He knew what he was doing and therefore issued his commands. Hence there will be times with those whom you have asked to serve you as your leaders and representatives when they will use all the moral suasion possible; there will be other times, when, acting in the purview of their office, they will be able to say to you, "Do this," and out of loyalty to the institution and to the Christ you will be compelled to follow if you are going to be where you should. That may be drastic, but I believe it is sound.

TRIALS WILL BE OURS—BUT WILL REFINE US

The conditions existing in the church to-day are those of trial. Perhaps never in the history of the institution are people being tried as now. I do not know that I would have it to be otherwise if I could. Of course it would be easier, much better, if we could feel that things were always just right. We wish business men were always making money in the easiest possible way; that the health of our congregations was all that could be desired; that ministrations to the sick were always followed by immediate recovery; that none of the priesthood's feet were being entangled in the meshes of temptation and that none were falling down and out. That the membership were so circumspect that they did not need an elders' court. I do not know that that would even be best for the people if it should be, for through the fires of trial we hope for the refining influence that will make the people a tried people, that God said he would have. Hence, instead of trying to have these trials removed, lessened, mollified, we are likely to see them augmented, until through these forces of refinement there can be developed a class of leaders and followers who are capable of following any course that the Lord intends we should follow. We of course exercise our rights under the law when, under certain conditions, and in a proper way, we choose those to whom we shall look as leaders. Then if these men go to the law and there find their general duties outlined, and following the outline of the instructions there given them, on their knees, in their chambers, on their feet, by their work-benches and in the activities that come to them as churchmen, they will be entitled to, and as sure as God lives, will receive instruction and light in their duties that will be denied to some who do not follow them in all their development; and hence in the progression of their work the time will come when because of the hours of close walk with God, developed along the lines of duty outlined in their work they will be able to see the situation, and to do their work under the divine guidance of God.

A NEW LOYALTY DEMANDED OF PEOPLE OF GOD

The work is onward. All the signs point to it. Even the terrible conditions of uncertainty that exist in some quarters of the church indicate that we are breaking new ground, going onward at a pace that is bound to leave some behind, and in the consummation of that work, and in that period that we have looked forward to and believe is now here which we designate at the hastening time, this uncertainty will be intensified and increased, and demand from our people a loyalty, if you please, an intelligent loyalty, that shall give to the leaders that you have asked to represent you a backing and support that will push this work forward as it never has in the past. That is the demand. What is the answer? Will they receive such loyalty; have that support? The question is not put to you that you may ask your neighbor but it is for you to answer. May there come from you and all others an answer that shall mean the controlling of the evil impulses and a speeding of the work that shall carry us infinitely farther than we have so far come toward becoming a light to the world, and make for a condition that the world has long been waiting for, a readjustment of our present lives that shall cause us to be recognized, the world over, as the people of God.

R. C. EVANS LEAVES THE CHURCH

It having become apparent that things were not moving aright in the Toronto Branch, the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric last spring discussed the situation and decided that some kind of a change was necessary. It was decided that after conference a committee representing the council should visit Toronto, investigate, and take such actions as might be necessary. The committee went to Toronto the latter part of May.

It is not feasible to go into details of what was found further than to say that the committee (Brethren F. M. Smith, B. R. McGuire, and J. W. Rushton) soon found evidences of several departures from customary procedure and methods, and that Brother Evans had been manifesting evidences of disaffection from the church and bitterness towards its leading officials.

On such opportunities as presented themselves the visiting brethren preached, and addressed meetings of the priesthood, setting out as well as they could under the circumstances some of the beliefs and customs of the church. To these sermons and addresses Brother Evans felt disposed to reply, in his sermons, and speeches in the priesthood meetings. On Sunday night, June 2, he preached, and spoke for more than an hour, making a bitter attack on the church and particularly on some of the leading officials, and displayed such a bitterness and antagonism, that only one course was left open to the committee, and that was to place him under official silence. This course was determined upon, announcement to be made the following Wednesday night at the prayer meeting. On Monday night, the 3d, a priesthood meeting was held, the undersigned in charge. At the opening R. C. Evans asked permission to read a letter addressed to President F. M. Smith. The request granted, he read the following:

51 Ozark Crescent TORONTO ONT June 3rd 1918

President F. M. Smith

Toronto Ont.

After prayerful consideration, and long and carefull meditation, I have concluded to tender to you my resignation as a member of the church over which you preside, This will take with it my possition as Bishop of the Toronto District,

I have reached this decision, because I can no longer endorse many of your ruleings, and the many changes you have caused to be made in the faith and practice of the church, I do not believe in much that you and those over whome you exert a strange influence, have brought into prominence,

I have had grave doubts for some time, about some things that I formerly thought I had a correct understanding, But now that the true facts are being brought out, I cannot endorse them,

I believe that you are leading the people away from the truth as found in the word of God, and I have heretofor told you that I would not follow where you lead, So have decided to put a stop to the matter by tendering my resignation,

I believe the gospel, and shall preach it as I understand it, and shall still hope for the mercy of God to be extended to me, as is promised to all who have faith in the mission of Christ,

There is much in your conduct and teaching that I cannot endorse, and am persauded that it is best that I withdraw from the organization over which you preside,

Having been so unjustly treated by you, during the years that are past at different times, I have thought to try and settle matters tuching branch rights, as expressed in our branch papers to you, But having recieved such unfair treatment at your hands during the meetings we have had in this city, That I have concluded to refuse to be further humilaited,

All I ask as a parting request, is that I be permitted to address the people, for whome I have labored so long, on next sunday evening at church service

Farewell

R. C. EVANS

After reading the letter and handing it to the one in charge of the meeting, he withdrew, another member of the priesthood withdrawing with him.

In the priesthood meetings previously held, R. C. Evans had participated, speaking frequently, "in reply," at one meeting speaking sixteen or seventeen times, many times more than any other one.

On Wednesday night, June 5, the undersigned was by the branch president, Brother A. F. McLean, asked to take charge of the meeting. Perhaps between 500 and 600 persons were present. A suppressed excitement bore evidence that some movement was on foot. At the opening of the meeting the following was read by the undersigned:

TORONTO, ONTARIO, June 5, 1918.

R. C. EVANS,

Toronto, Ont.

Dear Brother: Your written notification of withdrawal from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and your resignation of official position therein is in my hands, and as verbally stated when you handed the document to me on the 3d instant, I officially accept your withdrawal from membership and your official resignation subject to such procedure as may be necessary.

You are instructed to surrender to me officially all licenses

PULPIT DEPARTMENT AND MANNERISMS

(Read in Ministerial Conferences in Massachusetts, and New York and Philadelphia Districts.)

MESSAGE

The first important step in pulpit work is to have a message to deliver to the people.

The next is to be fully converted to the importance and divinity of that message.

Next, you should become very familiar with the different topics under discussion: its proofs; strong points, and weak places if there be any: also the objections raised by those opposed to it. With all this you will need the Holy Spirit to inspire your mind and give power to your speech, without it, no matter how good your mannerism may be, your pulpit work will be lifeless and flat; with the Spirit's help your message will stand out clear and many of the little errors and mannerisms will be overlooked.

READING

Reading in the pulpit must be done with considerable care or it will prove to be a factor destructive to the interest of the audience. Especially is this true where the preacher is a poor reader, and unfortunately very few are good readers. Watch closely and you will be surprised how few can read aloud in an intelligent and interesting style. This is one of the great faults in the present system of education. You should become so familiar with your subject that you can tell what the proofs are and where to find them if necessary. Experience has taught me that where I am able to tell what has been written and where to find it, so those who wanted to look it up could do so, I have been able to hold their attention better than when I have tried to read it. It is common to find good talkers who are not good readers, and this must be taken into account in pulpit work.

IMPORTANCE

Importance is a very necessary feature of pulpit work and it should be remembered that it is the subject under consideration that should be the important thing and not the speaker. The speaker should seek to keep himself in the background as much as possible, for his message is the thing that the people want and the only thing that can do them good. One should not seek to emphasize and bolster up his message on the wreckage of the faith of others that he has torn down, but build up your own structure and demonstrate its strength by an affirmative argument, that will withstand all efforts to pull it down. Then you will not need to tear down others, but they will see the better way and be ready to accept your invitation to walk in it. We sometimes see speakers who disgust their audience by the too evident egotism and self-importance until they defeat the very purpose of the gathering and neither they nor their message are received, and then they wonder why they cannot get a hearing. Due respect for the feelings of others should always be observed along with a proper dignity becoming to one standing in the pulpit to represent the great gospel of Christ, the most important message ever given to man to carry to his fellows.

SELF CONTROL

This feature of pulpit work is one of the essentials to success, and anyone who would enter pulpit work should study to acquire it. I know what it is to get up under embarrassment so great I can hardly keep my teeth from chattering and my knees from knocking together and my voice from being so shaky I could hardly speak, but I had to learn to control all these until some have said I wish I could get up without all these things like you. They did not realize the tumult that was raging within. Again, one must keep cool under some of the trying things that occur while talking. A crying baby is annoying, but don't let it lead your thoughts from the subject, no matter how much you would like to read the parents a lecture. Young people may whisper and giggle some, but don't let them know that they are annoying you, or let it disturb your line of argument. Some one may take sick and have to be carried out. You learn to keep cool and outwardly undisturbed, and in this way you will be able to keep your audience quiet and hold their interest and attention. Don't become so excited in talking that you lose control of yourself as well as the audience; for when we are excited we cannot use our mental powers to the best advantage, nor are we apt to heed the promptings of the Spirit as we should, and thus we lose some of the best points we had to present. We need to be at our best in the pulpit and it is worth our effort to keep ourselves under control mentally, physically, and spiritually, that we may give the best service possible.

GESTURES

In gestures seek to be natural and graceful as possible. It is often distressing to see a speaker make wild gestures and crazy antics in an effort to attract attention, seemingly thinking it smart, or necessary to make him popular. Don't do it! Again we see some who have had a smattering of training but not enough to make him at ease with it, whose gestures are so stiff and unnatural as to be painful to his hearers and in many cases take their mind away from what he is saying. One must cultivate the faculty of being at ease in the pulpit and in this you will find self-control to be very beneficial.

Billy Sunday can perform like a baseball player on the platform and get along all right. But some other man may try some such antics and make a regular monkey show of himself. So be yourself whatever you do and don't try to act like some one else, no matter how much you may admire his style. For rest assured some one will discover that you are trying to mimic your ideal and that will let you down in their estimation. Don't pound your Bible till you make such a noise that your audience can't hear what you say. Instead of emphasizing you drowned what you did say. Don't chase around in an undignified manner, nor stand like a statue, but act like you felt at home and could move around a little with ease and grace.

SPEECH

Speech should be studied carefully. It is important that we speak clearly and plainly so that all can hear and understand, even the children. This will call for simple language, but this will not interfere with the use of good grammar in any sense of the word. Good grammar should be sought by all means. Never talk too fast, lest you fail to enunciate clearly. It is hard for some to follow, when one talks too fast.

Avoid speaking in a very low tone and then running up to a very high key and dropping suddenly back to the low tone. With some of your hearers this will break the connection, as they won't hear the lower tones. Neither should we speak in one tone of voice that will become very monotonous. Seek to give some variation to your voice, so that it will give emphasis and force as well as expression.

Avoid using big words and then telling your audience what you mean. It is bad taste, at least give your audience credit with having intelligence enough to understand the big words or don't use them. Don't use slang phrases in preaching. I know it is hard to avoid all of them nowadays, when they are so common and in use so much in the daily conversation. But we can avoid the coarse, rough, and vulgar ones at least. Avoid the use of words or phrases in repetition until they become tiresome and annoying. For instance the expression "we find" used by one brother I was told, over one hundred times in one hour's talk. I remember hearing a brother pray once, who used the expression "our Father" sixty-seven times in one ten-minute prayer, a brother sitting by me kept count. The real sense of the prayer was ruined.

Don't put your head down till you muffle your voice, nor turn round with your back to the audience. Those on the platform are nearer you than those in the audience and will hear you, if you don't turn around and look at them. Don't try to be funny or witty while in the pulpit, for God has warned us to avoid lightness of speech while standing to declare the word. (See Doctrine and Covenants 119.)

STORIES

There is nothing we have criticised the sectarian world in more, outside of the doctrinal points, than telling stories. I would not be so extreme as to say that we should not tell any stories; but they should be told to make a point or to emphasize a point, and they should be clean. If you have an experience it may be very interesting and act as a proof that will fix the point in the minds of the hearers as nothing else would. Again we should not indulge in stories to create a laugh that does not add anything to the thought being advanced, nor those which tend to vulgarity or those which use the name of the Deity. Section 119, Doctrine and Covenants, has something to say on this. I have found that we can often put our sermons in the form of true stories and make them intensely interesting. Nevertheless too much story-telling is inclined to spoil the sermon, especially is this so, if the speaker is not naturally gifted in this line.

SCOLDING

Scolding becomes a habit, and for a preacher to get into this habit is unfortunate, to say the least. It will surely have the effect to decrease his influence for good, and if persisted in will limit his sphere of activity. There are times when a little scolding by those whose authority and responsibility may require them to do it is proper. But even this should be done carefully and we should be sure the ones who need the scolding are present. Too often the scolding is given to those who do not need it, and the ones who should have it, know nothing about it.

APPEARANCE

Under this head cleanliness is first. Our face and hands should be clean. Finger nails should be clean and not show a sign of mourning. Our clothing should be clean and neat. This does not mean that we must have a long-tailed coat and expensive clothes, but they can be brushed up and pressed and our linen can be clean, our neckties nicely tied and in proper place, our shoes cleaned and polished. We should be clean in speech, clean in thought, modest in demeanor, dress plainly and free from all ornamentation or jewelry. Avoid freakish dress, or loud and flashy clothes, that as ministers for Christ we may approve ourselves to him and be an example to those to whom we minister. These may seem to be unnecessary, but if you will look at section 42: 12, 85: 38, 119: 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants you will find that they were so necessary that the Lord gave instruction in regard to them. I can recall several instances where I have seen ministers of this Reorganized Church go into the pulpit when it made me feel a blush of shame because of their appearance, but I am glad to say that we don't have so much of it as we used to have. We should not get the idea that neatness and cleanliness are indications of the pride that is condemned by the Lord, but I think we should have pride enough in the cause of Christ to want to be a credit to it, and do everything we can to manifest our respect for the sacred office we hold and command the respect of those to whom we minister. In other words we should seek to become efficient ministers in the fullest sense of the term. Again I appeal to Doctrine and Covenants 119: 2.

I have presented some of the things that have come to my mind that may suggest lines of thought that can be developed and the details brought out in your discussions.

I did not deem it necessary to mention tobacco or drink, for in my opinion no minister of Christ should need anything by way of reminder in regard to these.

Ever praying that God may abundantly bless you in all your efforts to qualify as ministers for him and that you may become workmen that need not to be ashamed, I am your brother and colaborer.

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

HOW MUCH TITHING HAVE I PAID?

Whether it has been little or much, it involves the keeping of a proper record of it upon the books of the Presiding Bishop. There are very few I am sure, that fully realize the difficulties that confront us in keeping a correct record of the tithing paid.

We spend considerable money each year for clerical help in posting our tithing, and we are anxious that the work shall be correctly executed. Errors cause added expense and annoyance, necessitating at times considerable correspondence.

Our tithing records are kept according to provinces and States, for example, if all your tithing has been paid to agents in California, the account would be found in our California ledger; but if you had paid some in Florida and Wisconsin we would have three accounts with you, one in the ledger of each

State, and in asking the above question we should be advised as to where you resided when payments were made as we have no way of telling when Saints change their location. If your statement happens to be incorrect, do not blame our office; the fault may belong elsewhere. For instance, Brother Lyle Marion Kass pays his first tithing and gets his receipt.

The next time it reaches us.....Lyle Kass
 AgainL. M. Kass
 AgainMarion Kass
 AgainL. Marion Kass

Then Brother Careless Agent adds to our perplexity by misspelling the name and we have

Lyle Cass
 Marion Cass
 L. M. Cass
 L. Marion Cass
 M. Cass

The result is that we might have nine accounts for the same individual, as the clerks who do the posting have no way of knowing whether they are the same person or not. Hence if you called for a statement you would receive a transcript of our record according to the manner in which you signed your request.

Insist upon having your tithing receipts made correctly, always giving the first name in full, do not give initials only.

Do not say to our agents, "Never mind a receipt." He must make one in order to have his record complete and we prefer to have him deliver the same to you. It will serve to avoid mistakes and misunderstandings.

Keep all your tithing receipts for future reference, as you will find them a source of interest.

Soliciting your cooperation in carrying out the above suggestions.

I am your fellow servant,
 BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
 Presiding Bishop.

The first principle of the gospel of Satan is secrecy; the second principle is transformation to counterfeit the works or principles of God.—Jerome E. Page.

Do not make fun of New Year's resolutions. The man who buries his pipe at the New Year is not foolish, he is foolish when he digs it up a week later.—Elbert A. Smith.

If we could all be more prayerful, and remove the beams from our own eyes, then our vision would be so much clearer; and notes, if there be any in our brothers' eyes be not nearly so annoying.—A. M. S.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A "GOOD KILLING" NEEDED

A correspondent of one of the prominent clerical papers of America ends a recent contribution with the pathetic wail, "Why don't the seminaries kill the clerical voice?"

We sympathize with the brother's murderous designs, albeit of a peaceful disposition ourselves. Nothing is more calculated to arouse the desire to slay without mercy and spare not, even in the peaceful precincts of the sanctuary, than to be obliged to listen to the "clerical voice" in full and undisputed sway of a two hours' service. The squeak of a bagpipe, the rasping of a saw, the diabolical hum which arises when the dentist begins to set in motion his engines of torture, even the wail of a cracked phonograph or the lugubrious "katzenjammer," are all divinest harmony compared with the clerical monotone. Why do not the "seminaries" kill it? Because, brother, the thing is a product of the "seminaries." It assorts well with most of the other mummery which the theological seminary exists to perpetrate. The whole "clerical" idea, the abstraction of the prophet from the people, the exaltation of the servant over those he is commissioned to serve, is calculated to induce sham and cant on the part of the ministry. The "clerical voice" needs a "good killing," but it is, after all, a symptom rather than a disease in itself.—The Christian Standard.

SEVENTEEN CHAPLAINS IN THE FURNACE

[The Christian Work prints each week a review of some striking book, of special interest to professors of religion. The following will be enlightening as a few opinions on war and religion.—EDITORS.]

Seventeen temporary Church of England chaplains have produced a book entitled The Church in the Furnace, and it is edited by Reverend F. B. Macnutt, senior chaplain to the forces and Canon of Southwark (Macmillan). It is dedicated to sixteen chaplains who have been killed in action, to six who have died of wounds, and to six others who have died on active service.

Canon Macnutt, in his editorial foreword, says: "The church is in the furnace. We have felt the scorching of the purgatorial fires, and we chaplains not least, who have moved where the flames are hottest, and have seen the pure metal dropping apart from the dross. . . . There are many who have felt during three years of war that only imagery like that of Patmos can express the trials and experiences through which they are passing. That is the feeling which inspires the title of this book.

ONE THING CERTAIN

"These essays, by clergy of the Church of England who are serving the armies abroad, are the expressions of thoughts which have come to us, under the intense stress and strain of active service, about the life and the work of the church as we left it when we embarked for the front and as we see it now from afar.

"We came out dimly expecting that our religion would pass through a fierce ordeal, and actual contact with warfare has not belied our expectancy. The test has been sterner than any of us can have foreseen. The results we can scarcely formulate yet as we look forward to returning to the old surroundings. But one thing is certain: we can never again be content with much that we accepted as quite natural in those far-away days before we came out here. We have seen visions and dreamed dreams, and to forget them or to refuse to act upon them would be treachery to the church we love."

AN AWAKENING

Mr. Macnutt explains how some words of William James came to him by Ypres, and "were to me then, and ever since have been, like the pulling up of the blind in a dark house."

"One autumn up at Ypres in 1915, after one of those poignant days which come to all chaplains in the line, when I had buried four officers of the battalion I loved best, the post brought me my copy of a weekly journal. I sat outside my tent, dumb, till turning over the pages I came across a passage from William James.

"'One hears,' he says, 'of the mechanical equivalent of heat. What we now need to discover in the social realm is the moral equivalent of war; something heroic that will spread to men as universally as war does, and yet will be as compatible with their spiritual selves as war has proved itself to be incompatible.'

MORE HEROES THAN SAINTS

"Let no one think that we padres have come to believe in the B. E. F. as a short cut to sanctity. There is another side to the picture, and it is not bright. A man is not a saint because he proves himself to be a hero; and there are many more heroes than saints in the army by very long way. But every hero has at least some of the stuff whereof God fashions his saints, when it yields itself to the shaping. And, for all their faults, many of these men are so much nearer sainthood than the many members of the church who have failed to take its impress and yet mistake themselves for the finished product."

WHY THEY FAIL

Mr. Macnutt says that "most of us agree completely about the main causes that lie behind the Church's failure to win British manhood," and first he puts "our faint-heartedness in face of the power of the foe whom we are fighting." He contrasts the British soldier going up to an attack with an unexpressed romance in his mind, "of a fabric and a pattern fit to be hung in the palaces of memory for all the generations that are to come"—and then over against that he sets "the conventionalism of our church life and the drab absorption in petty activities and trivialities which we have hung up as our ideals of service in the temple of God. . . . We have been established into inertia and inanity; and what wonder that we do not win the hearts of men, who respond and find themselves only when you make a great demand upon them to give their all for what they feel to be well worth it? We fail because we pitch our appeal too low. We make it easy to be a churchman, and men answer that it is not worth while."

NOTHING MORAL

Reverend F. R. Barry, M. A., D. S. O., another senior chaplain, says:

"I think we see how lamentably inadequate is the traditional idea of God. If one learns anything in this life, it is the difference between good and evil. And the weakness of the current theism is that it is not moral. That is what lies at the back of so much scepticism.

"Many officers express this feeling in such remarks as 'I should feel a hypocrite if I ever went to church again.' 'If God' (said another) 'ever governed Europe, he certainly does not any longer now.' And their impression is that Christianity has no real answer for these times. . . . But surely there is here true cause for hope. For what we really find in such an attitude is something very far from sceptical. It is the triumph of the moral sense over an invertebrate theology which left no room for ethical distinctions.

"Certainly a God whose providence 'ordained' the present situation would not be one whom we honestly could worship. It would be our duty to defy his will. But is there any reason to think he did?"

Mr. Barry concludes that "unless we can really manage to get into touch with the average manhood of our nation, I see very little moral hope for England. The one thing needful for us is a new spirit—the rushing mighty wind of a new enthusiasm."

WHERE ARE THE MEN?

But how are you going to get the men with that new spirit which involves, among other things, an entirely new vocabulary of entirely honest words, used in an entirely honest way for entirely honest ends?

Reverend Neville Talbot, M. C., M. A., and an assistant chaplain-general, discusses the "Training of the clergy," and says:

"A church can hardly rise above the spiritual level of its professional representatives. . . . With the mass of men in things religious a vast deal depends on what the parson is. There is among laymen a preliminary aversion from the clergy as a class which the chaplains had to overcome. The war has seen it overcome in some measure by devotion, by gallantry, and by methods less certainly reputable, such as 'holy grocery.'

"The fortunes of the church after the war are going to be vitally bound up with the passing into her ministry of men who have borne arms. If they come from all ranks they will constitute an epoch in the history of a church which has hitherto had but a mainly 'upper class' ministry. The archbishops have put a letter into the hands of chaplains to the forces inviting officers and men to consider the claims of the ministry, and assuring them of the intention of the church to see them through the necessary training.

"Visions arise of a great band of men arising to reinforce the ranks of the ministry—men of tested and grateful faith, graduates in a school of grim reality, experts in knowledge of fellowship, converts to discipline. . . . They might be a bridge over the gulf of misunderstanding which divides clergy from laity."

Reverend James O. Hannay ("G. A. Birmingham") admits that "we have been teaching true and important things in such a way as to leave men with the impression that they do not matter. Partly this is because they have not mattered nearly enough to us, the teachers."

Reverend R. E. Kirk, M. A., another chaplain, speaking of "When the priests come home," says:

"There are brigadiers in France who refer almost every question affecting the well-being of the men to their chaplains for counsel and advice; when the character of the priesthood has so developed that county councils and committees do the same by the clergy at home, the Church of England can be certain that her ministry has absorbed the lessons learned by the chaplains at the front."

It seems that the most impressive and effective lessons that came to humanity, and especially to the people of God, are those that come through suffering. . . . After we have grown up, there are many lessons we will not learn, only by this same process.—H. E. Moler.

FRATERNALISM VERSUS PATERNALISM

The policy that has prepared Henry Ford for war, the policy that gives him peace and order in his factories, keeps the labor turnover to a minimum and fills his heterogeneous forces with an ambition to achieve while labor turmoil and discontent prevail in many other plants, is to be described from his point of view as fraternalistic rather than paternalistic.

The distinction is not easy to make, but the head of the educational department, which is the designation of the office that strives to deal with the employees as human beings rather than as mere parts of a productive machine, puts it this way:

"The paternalistic scheme for the adjustment of relations between employers and employees is usually some form of spending money on the employees. The Ford fraternalistic scheme is to spend profits through employees."

Ford feels that men who give their lives to the creation of a profitable business are entitled to share in the profits, the same as men who give their capital to it. Some benevolent employers seek to help their people by building clubhouses and planning housing schemes. Ford holds that it is wiser to give the profits directly to the men in the form of cash. Men seem to resent having things done for them. If there is uplifting to be done they prefer to do the uplifting themselves. That is the reason some social engineering schemes that do great credit to the men who conceive them come to grief. So Ford turns enormous profits over to his people. Having provided them with the means of improving their status, he then insists that they do so. In the long run the penalty for failing to use Ford profits for self-uplifting is separation from them.

Through his educational department he advises and suggests how improvement can be made. Sometimes the work of this department even involves the sanitary improvement and general physical betterment of a whole section of the city, but through the regular civic channels. For instance, it was found that the sewerage and drainage of a district in which many Ford employees lived was defective. The educational department took the initiative and started the regular municipal machinery going to bring about the desired improvement. The Ford men were shown how to obtain the enjoyment of their rights as citizens and taxpayers.

So, in the intimate matters of household cleanliness and order, personal habits and standards of living the idea is to suggest better things and arouse an inspiration for them. Here is an illustration. A family enjoying a good income from Ford wages and profits may be living in squalor and disorder from force of habit and lack of knowledge. An agent of the education department calls and shows the housewife photographs of interiors of the homes of people who have no larger income. Suggestions are tactfully given as to what to buy and what to do to make her home as neat and cheerful. From ignorance or excessive economy the children may be poorly dressed and ill-fed. The investigator considerably explains what this neglect may mean to the children. He appeals to the motherly instinct and suggests how to take better care of the children.

The doing of such a work involves a survey of the whole personnel of the company and necessitates a rather intimate investigation of the affairs of each employee. Probably there is a natural tendency to resent this domestic probing. To those who object to giving the required information the whole Ford theory of relations between the company and its employees is patiently explained. They are receiving profits and in return are expected to give the best in them to the company. Not only that, but the company desires to help them to give their best. To do that it must know how matters stand. On the other hand, the men are given to understand that they have the right to know how the company is managing its affairs. Now, when you make a talk like that to your men and are backing it up with $16,000,000 of distributed profits a year you appear to be a rather reasonable sort of being.

The Ford personnel statistics are replete with intensely interesting facts. When the profit sharing scheme was started the average Ford employee bank deposit was $75.20; now it is $223.39. Then the average life insurance policy was $186; now it is $572. The amount invested in owned homes is three times as great and in homes purchased on contract four times as great. The number of employees owning homes has nearly doubled and the number buying them has nearly trebled.

Some interesting classifications are made according to nationality and religion. Taking into consideration money in bank and invested in homes and lots, the Germans lead. Considering cash savings only, the Armenians are away in front. The Americans are not strong in savings, but lead in life insurance and in buying homes and giving mortgages back. The Jews, strangely enough, are far down the list in almost every item that indicates thrift. They save a little more cash than the Americans, but in that the Armenians leave them and all the other races far in the rear. In respect to religion the Mahometans seem to be the thriftiest, next the Greek Catholics, and then the Roman Catholics. It is apparent that one reason why the Americans do not show up better in savings and home-owning is that they live better. Out of 16,547 American employees only forty-two have homes in bad condition and only six of them live in bad neighborhoods. About 3,600 employees own their own automobiles.

So, Ford finds himself with a fit and efficient army, of excellent morale and trained to the minute for his part in fighting the war by industry.—Theodore M. Knaffen, in New York Tribune.

WAR'S EFFECT ON COLLEGE ENROLLMENT

Inquiry made by the United States Bureau of Education as to the effect of the war on student enrollment in colleges and universities has brought forth some interesting figures. While the questionnaire was not answered by all the institutions to which it was sent, and while in some cases the replies were imperfectly and inaccurately prepared, certain facts seem to have been established. These are that, as might have been expected, the two upper classes in the higher educational establishments show the greatest loss in men; and that the colleges of liberal arts have not suffered as heavily as the technical and professional schools, a fact doubtless due to the greater maturity in most of the latter institutions and to the immediate demand by the Army for men trained in specific callings. But a notable exception to this rule is found in the medical colleges, where the order of the war department allowing such students to finish their courses is reflected in a gain, as opposed to losses everywhere else. A corresponding order applying to engineering students was unfortunately issued too late to influence the enrollment in the fall of 1917, and in this instance a serious loss of more than 18 per cent is noted.

It is evident that the war has deterred many high school graduates from entering colleges at present, while most of the freshmen already in college decided to remain until called, since the sophomore class shows the smallest loss of all. The total loss in men in the liberal arts institutions aggregates about one fifth of the male student body, the number of women shows a small increase, and the net loss of the entire student body is nearly 11 per cent, as compared with the annual increase of 5 per cent to be expected in normal times.—Deseret Evening News, May 22, 1918.

To-day is ours; to-morrow, with all its hopes, its sorrows, its joys, may not be ours. The present is filled with opportunities and can be used as we will; the past is otherwise. . . . The past cannot be recalled, the future may not come; the only time is now.—Nettie I. Heavener.

WAR-TIME RELIGION AMONG SOLDIERS

"You won't get a Tommy to admit that he says his prayers, but he may admit that he prays in his heart, and that he believes in this kind of prayer," said the Reverend Captain Spencer, who for the last three years has been chaplain at the front and in some of the base hospitals of England. "There are times when the boys suffer from acute loneliness, and it is then, perhaps, that prayer and the thought of God offer the greatest consolation to them. I remember one case especially of a man at the base hospital at Brighton. I found him one night away from the others. 'Good-night, sir,' he said, and I stopped to ask him what he was doing there by himself. He replied, 'I wanted to get out under the stars and be alone with my God.'

"This man had been a taxi driver in India. His four brothers and his mother were alive when the war broke out. All four brothers enlisted, and two were killed before his eyes in the artillery. He himself was wounded, but was patched up and sent back to the front. On this occasion his two other brothers were killed and he himself was badly wounded. Both his legs had to be amputated, and he had a terrible shoulder wound. A little later his mother, his only surviving relative, was instantly killed in an air raid over London. When I found him he was wondering what use he was in the world—and he wanted to be alone with his God.

"The religion that appeals to our boys," continued Mr. Spencer, "is the religion of the heart. They do not care to listen to sermons, I preached only one or two sermons all the time I was there. The chaplain makes his most effectual appeal through the individual—through five minutes' talk with one lad, and five minutes' talk with another. The tendency at the front is toward the breaking down of all denominational barriers. On the occasion of the memorial service of the death of Kitchener there were Catholics and Protestants of all denominations present—and the division between Catholics and Protestants, usually emphasized by the church parades, was done away with. . . ."—H. M. R. in Toronto World.

It is a true instinct that leads us to judge men themselves by their judgment of others. We make known the thinker with the thought, the critic with the criticism. We mix ourselves with our paint, our song, our opinions. We are sketching unconsciously our own portraits as we outline our neighbor's character in words. If we impugn his motives, 'tis because our own are questionable.—Rabbi Leon Harrison.

Choir Expenses; Who Shall Pay Them?

"I don't care! It looks to me like this: if members of the choir go ahead and give their time and talents, and work faithfully practicing the anthems and taking charge of the singing, they shouldn't have to go down into their own pockets for the money to pay for the music they sing. It don't seem fair."

The above was uttered in the course of a rather animated argument between two sisters in the church, on the subject of who should pay for the music the choir used. It was given in reply to the somewhat uncharitable statement that since the choir was permitted to sing in the church, and was given the most prominent seats in the house of God, that, therefore, they should pay for their honorable privilege by furnishing not only their services, but the music from which they sang, as well.

Such argument, if applied all the way down the line of the church's service, would dictate that the leading ministers of the church, who are giving their entire time to the work of the church, content themselves with the glory and honor they received in their exalted stations, as a proper remuneration for their services, and not look to the church to support them; that the presidency of the church should board, clothe and "find" themselves, and possibly pay a reasonably handsome sum for the privileges they enjoy in the highest offices of the church.

The problem of how the choir's expenses should be borne is a mooted one in many places, having its supporters on both sides of the question. In some branches the choirs are cheerfully bearing their own expenses; in others their expenses are paid out of the funds of the branch; while in some branches entertainments, socials, ice cream or oyster suppers, and all the other questionable means of raising money are resorted to to defray the choir's financial needs.

We cannot attempt to define an invariable rule to fit all cases. In some branches it may be well for the choirs to foot their own bills; in others, the branches should bear these expenses in common with the other branch expenses, as they are the direct beneficiaries of the choir's services. In some branches, where a just and efficient system of assessment and collection for branch expenses has not been installed, it may be well for the choirs to cheerfully pay their own bills and wait until the branches have developed proper systems. Such a plan, however, has the objection that it requires the few who serve in the choir to bear such burden in addition to their regular portion of the expenses of the branch. Also, while this method has the advantage of affording a certain few faithful ones an added opportunity to further consecrate of their means to the maintenance of the Lord's work, it has the marked disadvantage of being unsystematic and unbusinesslike. Furthermore, it is hardly in harmony with the spirit of the financial system of the church.

It seems to the writer that the money paid for the music used by the choir in the service of the branch rightfully should be classed as legitimate branch expenses and as such should be borne by the branch as a whole rather than by the few constituting the choir.

Another reason that we feel is actually pertinent why the branch should bear the choir's expenses, involves the principle of appreciation. We do not usually appreciate as we should that which costs us nothing. We cannot help but believe that some branches would appreciate the efforts of their choirs a little more if they bore their rightful share of the burden of choir expense. Incidentally, these choirs might serve with a little more zest and relish if the branches were in this way cooperating with them.

Music and Religion

(Why the Church Organist Affects the Size of the Congregation. Powerful Influence of Music Recognized by Reverend Billy Sunday.)

Reverend Billy Sunday appreciates as few people do to what an extent music and religion are interrelated. The majority take it for granted that they go to church in order to hear the gospel proclaimed. Yet ask an average church-goer to give you the cause of the popularity of his church and he will without thinking say, "We have such a fine choir," or "Our organist is one of the best in the city." Should you accuse him of not being a true believer and of going to the services merely to satisfy his desire to hear good music he would wax highly indignant. Give him the time, however, for calmer judgment and closer introspection and, working on the assumption that he is honest, he will agree with you that his reputation for regular attendance would greatly suffer in the event that the musical end of the program was omitted.

MUSIC IS RELIGION

There is nothing derogatory or sacrilegious in this. Music is religion. Those who have most felt the power of the sublime and the unknown have created it. Those who have most deeply sympathized with their fellow mortals and most greatly appreciated the wonders of the universe have given us our songs. If religion means understanding and giving that which will make life happier and more beautiful, then our composers stand as high in godly favor as any of the saints in the calendar. The most confirmed atheist or agnostic cannot but bare his head in reverence to the power that inspired such music as Gounod's "Ave Maria," or Handel's "Largo." Both are the expression of belief in the omnipotence of some supreme power that goes beyond argument or discussion of any sort. Words are frail tools against the conviction that arises out of the beauty of their melody.

The churches appreciate this, unconsciously though it be. They vie with each other in the perfection of their choirs, in the talent of their soloists and the size of their organs. One reads the announcement of the giving of a certain cantata before one gets the name of the preacher or the text of his sermon. Enter any place of worship that is usually well filled and the fact that the music of that congregation is good may be taken for granted.

It is altogether fitting and proper that this should be so. There is nothing which brings peace and quiet to the human heart so much as the swell of an organ, or the glory of a human voice, or number of voices raised in clear harmony—nothing, except perhaps a walk in the fields with Nature humming softly. And here again it is song, the song of growing things and chirping birds, that restores one's frame of mind to a state of rest. It is this semisomnolent state, this receptive attitude that is most favorable to the conviction that something beyond human comprehension exists. It is here that the preacher plays his most important part. There is an openness of mind for belief in something supernatural and all-encompassing. He takes advantage of this and offers what he considers the answer to the desire for understanding.

MUSIC AND THE REVEREND BILLY SUNDAY

Nobody better appreciates the part that music plays in religion than the popular Reverend Billy Sunday. He would no sooner think of entering a city which to his mind is in need of salvation without a carefully trained choir, than he would for a moment harbor the thought that all who hit the sawdust trail under his sacred guidance would not enter the haven of the blessed. Only with him the tenor of the music is not conducive to rest and peace. Knowing the power of the warbled note he trains his fellow workers in the singing of those songs which will most rouse the spirit to a state of appreciation of what the future has in store. It is the singing of music that urges on to renewed efforts in gaining the glory of the life to come. One doesn't know whether his is the religion that Brahms or Handel or Gounod felt when they were inspired to sing their songs of praise, but one is forced to believe that the two, music and religion, be they within the doors of a church or tabernacle or out in the vastness of the earth and the sky, follow as closely upon the heels of one another as night follows upon day.

Musical History Repeats Itself

(Innovations Arouse Prejudice To-day Just as They Did a Century Ago.)

Even at this late day in the history of phonograph and player-piano music, we occasionally hear folks objecting to what is called automatic and semiautomatic instruments on one score or another.

"They make music too easy for young people," it is said. "Keep them from their grind at piano or violin or vocal lessons; make them think there is little use in working hard for something that can be bought in perforated rolls or small black discs."

It is interesting in this connection, to look back a few hundred years to the beginnings of musical America.

When in the early sixteen hundreds, preachers here and there began to advocate the introduction of new songs into the churches, and thus thaw out the Puritan ice which had encrusted all forms of musical expression and reduced the stream to a tiny trickle of stereotyped psalm tunes, people began to object quite stormily.

Song singing was a "new way." Other music was almost an unknown "tongue" to most of the people. There were too many tunes to be learned. No one could learn them all. Songs might open the door to instruments, and instruments were the work of the Devil for the seduction of mankind. The forefathers of the people had got into heaven on the wings of the orthodox psalm tunes, therefore there was no need for other music than that.

A long hard fight was started against the icebergs of prejudice. Point by point was won by the lovers of music (new men from across the sea). Finally the organ was admitted to some of the more daring churches, and the list of tunes increased from five or six to a dozen or more, here and there!

There seems to be a pronounced demand for music among the masses—and anything which aids in bringing music to the people must of necessity find a permanent place in our lives.

The skeptical had best pass judgment slowly.
Even musical history is repeating itself.

Honors for the Independence Choir

The Independence choir was again honored in the musical affairs of Kansas City by an invitation to sing at the big May festival of the Community Chorus of Greater Kansas City, given at Convention Hall in conjunction with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. This immense chorus, which numbered nearly fifteen hundred voices, under the direction of Mr. John R. Jones, rendered with great credit some very fine, inspiring choral works, accompanied by the magnificent orchestra of seventy pieces. The Independence choir was given a prominent position in the work of this chorus, and received some favorable mention in the newspaper announcements and comments concerning the festival.

Director Jones was so pleased with the work of our choir that he made a special visit to Independence, being present at its regular rehearsal, May 9, at which he thanked them in person for their services. The evening was spent enjoyably, the choir singing several anthems for him, and then all repaired to the dining hall, where refreshments were served by the ladies of the choir; after which Mr. Jones sang for the choir several Welsh songs and led the two hundred voices of the choir in some of the songs used in the Army service. Mr. Jones had previously received appointment as song leader in the Army service, and expected to leave shortly for one of the cantonments for his duties.

Again, Thursday evening, May 16, witnessed the dedication of the beautiful new William Chrisman high school building at Independence, just completed at a cost of about $125,000 for building and equipment. This magnificent structure is one of the most modern and well-equipped high school buildings in the State, and now stands as a monument to the beauty of Independence.

The ceremonies of dedication consisted of addresses by some of the prominent citizens of Independence. With one exception the musical numbers of the occasion were all furnished by a picked chorus of sixty voices from the "Stone Church Choir," under the leadership of its chorister, Sister George H. Hulmes.

One sacred and three secular choruses were rendered by this chorus in a manner to maintain the high standard of excellence and reputation borne by our Independence choir.

A. H. M.

Now the organ with which this supernal world is known is called faith, the evidence of things not seen, if not their very substance and reality. Into such forms the mighty energy of man's soul unfolds through the ages, so that there will always be a sense in which the divine is the noblest creation of the soul of man, because to accept a belief and to make or to create it are only different degrees of the same energy. This idealization of another world and the development of a life here that consists of otherworld conduct, such as forms of worship, are of a realm of existence that supplements and is the counterpart of this, especially if it is one of which all the ordinary content of experience seems a promise and potency. This explains why such beliefs lie so close and warm about the human heart, and why they are often so clung to against evidence and even against interest. It is because they are necessary for the totalization of the soul and exactly fit the imagination that is the totalizing faculty by which man transcends his own limitations of time, space, and personality toward the dimensions of the race, thereby becoming a citizen of the universe which is henceforth no longer a chaos but a cosmos.—G. Stanley Hall in Jesus, the Christ.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON 5020 Cal. St., Omaha, Nebr.

Woman's Auxiliary Work for Reunions

The executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary announces that it is prepared to render assistance at reunions where it is desired to have Woman's Auxiliary work represented. Programs and outlines have been arranged and are in charge of Mrs. William Madison, 1015 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Anyone wishing the use of these helps may write to Mrs. Madison for them and they will be received promptly.

We feel quite sure you will be pleased with the effort that has been made this year to give you something definite in the way of reunion program work, and yet we are leaving a part of the program, with some suggestions, for local forces to work out, in order that they may develop along this line for work another year.

The program consists of a presentation of the four departments of our work, emphasizing as special features, Red Cross work and food conservation, a beautiful and educational panel exhibit on healthy babies and the prevention of tuberculosis, attractive programs for children's meetings and storytelling and handwork for those of kindergarten age.

Should you desire the assistance of any of the field workers (who are the general officers, supervisors and editor) please communicate with the president, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri. Expenses of field worker incident to traveling and while attending the reunion must be met by the reunion sending for her, or if two or three reunions occur near the same time and are in close proximity, the expense may be shared by each desiring such services.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL, President.

The Awakened Woman

(Address by Sister Audentia Anderson, Independence, April 9, 1918.)

It is indeed a pleasure for me to appear before this audience, as a representative of the woman's organization of the church. I have greatly enjoyed the address of my predecessor on the evening's program, and appreciate the courtesy shown by him in giving the woman the last word. I might have used the word courage in that connection, were it not that an old adage comes to mind: "He who fights, and runs away, lives to fight another day!" (This, because Brother Williams left after his address, to fill another appointment.)

For the first time in the history of this church, a representation of its women has been called, informally, into a session of the Joint Council, to lay before that august body a delineation of the aims and purposes of that portion of the church membership which is included in the Woman's Auxiliary.

This should be regarded as an epoch-marking action, for it shows recognition on the part of the church administration, of the fact that women are to have an important and clearly-defined work to do, in carrying out the policies of this church organization.

When the Woman's Auxiliary brought out its Year Book, two years ago, several of the leading men of the church gave it support in the way of specific, printed indorsements. Among these was the encouraging and optimistic message from President Frederick M. Smith, who said in regard to our work: "There is promise of determining the coefficient of woman's influence in terms of living usefulness in our church work." He bade the auxiliary Godspeed, in its "appointed task," hoping that the closer coordination of its work through organization, would permit it to enter and occupy fields of widened activity.

Some one has argued that if God had intended woman to rule the man, he would have formed the first one from the brain of the first man; or if she were to serve, she would have been formed from the feet of her master; but, since she was taken from the side, it can be inferred that she was to be an equal, a counterpart, a complement, of the being to whom she was to be a "helpmeet." However significant this reasoning may appear by such argument, history shows us that woman has not always been recognized in the role of an equal. The more primitive races regarded her as a beast of burden, one whose joy should be to till the ground, to dig and delve, to fetch and carry, to bear children, rear, and bury them. Farther on, we see her a possession—something to barter or exchange. In old-time halls of luxury or power we see her a toy, a plaything, which must amuse and interest, if she would remain in favor.

STRUGGLE TOWARDS LIGHT

Her emancipation came slowly. As man advanced in the realm of thought and intellectual power, he came to regard with truer vision the creature at his side. True to her nature of complement and helpmeet, we find her as cook to the hunter, nurse to the warrior, and inspiration and encouragement to the explorer, the philosopher, or the pioneer in any line of the eternal search for truth. Through the strength of her great desire to be what God ordained, woman has managed, against discouraging odds and with some degree of success, to keep step with her mate, in his struggle towards light. Timidly at first, she tried her powers as writer, thinker, artist; emboldened by success she has ventured to knock at every door. Few avenues of knowledge or endeavor to-day but have been pressed by her eager feet, no matter how the conceptions of a previous age have attempted to keep those paths sacred to masculine thoroughfare. Her achievements have been many, and her triumphs not a few. She has recognized her birthright, and has been encouraged to strike out boldly, to hew for herself a path of individuality—to establish a place in the busy world for herself, more in keeping with the God-given powers she possesses, than that which has been accorded her in the past.

PENDULUM TOO FAR

But the pendulum swung, at first, too far! In lands of ease and culture, we find women who have abused the privileges that have been won. They have forgotten to be industrious, leaving the joys of toil to others. They have shunned responsibility, leaving that of home and children to the care of servants. They became but pampered pets, luxurious creatures, too indolent to care much about anything but adornment, and personal ease and comfort. Many fine men have lost heart because of these conditions in their homes, and some have voluntarily given up the struggle to provide for the extravagant demands of wife and daughters.

BALANCE WILL COME

God wills that law will operate to eradicate evils and mistakes, and so the balance will be struck, and out of the extremes, and the disturbances, there will emerge a saner course of life for us all. The present war will, no doubt, prove to be an effectual instrument in the hands of God, for bringing about this readjustment. It will, indeed, be the blessing in disguise which will strike the scales from the eyes of mankind.

The women of England, a few years ago, brought upon themselves the contempt of the world, because of the extreme measures they adopted in the hope of obtaining political suffrage. Burning, devastating, and destroying, they marched through the streets, in a mad abandonment to mere physical force.

Then came the war, and to-day sees these women in the fields, in the shops, in the offices, everywhere, in an earnest concentration of righteous purpose which has won for them the respect and admiration of every thoughtful person in the world. Through the sacrifices they are making, the hardships they are enduring, and the personal toil they are performing, they are winning for themselves a place in the nation they love which would never have been granted them by their former methods of violence.

The Russian "Battalion of Death" has taken from the opposer to woman suffrage his last pet argument, viz: that women should not vote, because they cannot fight. The fact of these women fighting in the trenches exactly as men do, under the same distress and discomfort, because of the cowardly flight of their masculine defenders, should bring the sting of shame to every man who has offered such an argument.

A lecturer recently said that he could not even think of the French women without a sob in his throat. The things they are bearing, the hard work they are doing, the bravery and courage they are exhibiting at all times and under all conditions, would wring tears from a heart of stone. He added, "And when the United States is at war, as France is at war—meaning every man, woman, and child in the Nation—then the war will be won, and not before!"

THE COUNTRY'S CALL

An Irish war lecturer recently drew a most realistic picture of the call of our Nation to its various units. He pictured a pleasant home, a typical, American home, with a mother at the mending, a father with the evening paper, and the young folks gathered about the piano, or listening to the Victrola. Suddenly, a knock comes upon the door! Uncle Sam enters.

"Young man, I need you!"

The young man rises, with white, set face; he grips his father's hand, embraces his weeping mother, kisses his sister, touches his lips to the brown head of his sweetheart as he whispers words of faithful love, and goes steadily out, with the "uncle" who needs him.

Another evening. Another knock upon the door. Uncle Sam again enters the cottage home, and says to the father:

"I need you!"

And the father buys with lavish hand, the Liberty Bonds, the War Savings Stamps, subscribes to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A.—everywhere and every time his support is needed.

Again Uncle Sam calls at the cottage door:

"Mother, I need you! Help me send food to our people 'over there.'"

And the mother, true patriot that she is, studies as she never has before, that she might nourish her own family well, and at the same time spare all she possibly can of the special food needed for the boys abroad.

Again the same call comes:

"Daughters, sweethearts, I need your services, in the mills, at the desks, in the factories and the fields. Will you come?"

So the awakening goes on, and the whole family is losing itself in the service of others. Did not some One say, "Verily, he who would save his life shall lose it, but he who would lay down his life for a friend, will find it"?

THE CALL OF THE CHURCH

An interesting picture, and an impressive one, but is not God knocking at our doors also? Is he not saying to our young men, "I need you; these grey-haired men, who will soon be laying down the active weapons of this warfare against evil, must relinquish them into the hands of the strong, virile youth of this church, who must be able to carry its life-saving principles forth to a darkened world. Will you be a standard-bearer?"

He is calling to the father, to all the wage-earners:

"I need you. In tithes and offerings, and consecrations, and surplus, I need your help and support, that these others may be cared for. Will you give it freely?"

To the women he is calling:

"I need you, to serve in your homes, to minister to those who need, to raise high the banners of purity and truth, to use your talents in my service, to bring up my children in knowledge and power. Will you come?"

NEED FOR ORGANIZATION

Thus it came about that the awakening woman, in hearing the call of her divine Master, and in the desire to heed that call, felt the need of drawing nearer to her sister, that together they could counsel, together they could plan, and study, and together carry out many plans impossible for any singly or alone. So we find them uniting in prayer; who cannot remember the Prayer Unions of a decade ago, which found our women upon their knees, "met together as touching one thing," that "there the Master could be also"?

Branching out, and extending their services, they organized the "Daughters of Zion," through which so many of our finest women found expression. There is little need to name them, for their names are household words among the Saints, and the things they stood for—clean living at home and abroad—have had great influence upon the church and its members.

Later, followed the more definitely named organization known as the "Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service," which was abbreviated a few years ago to simply "Woman's Auxiliary."

NAUVOO SOCIETY

Speaking of organizations, there has recently come into our hands a copy of a portion of the record of the minutes of a meeting in Nauvoo where the women of the early church were organized into a society for relief and service. President Joseph Smith, John Taylor, and Willard Richards, of the priesthood were present, and helped them organize. The minutes are dated "Nauvoo Lodge Room, March 17, 1842." An effort was first made to ascertain if all the "females" present were considered qualified for full fellowship, and twenty-six names were thus indorsed. Joseph Smith addressed the meeting, in explanation of the object of organizing. He said that the society of sisters would "provoke the brethren to good works, would look to the wants of the poor, search after objects of charity, administer to their wants, correct the morals and strengthen the virtues of the community, and spare the elders the trouble of rebuking, that they may give their time to other duties, such as public teaching, etc."

He advised an organization as a means to more efficient work along these lines, and suggested that a presiding officer be chosen, with two counselors to assist her in the duties of her office. He suggested the name of Emma Hale Smith, his wife, for president of the society, and read the revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants, which had been given to her. He stated that she had been ordained at the time the word was given, to expound the Scriptures to all, and to teach the female part of the community. He added that others might attain to the same blessing, and read the first verse of the second epistle of John, to show that respect was given in apostolic days to the work of women.

He gave advice to the sisters how to govern themselves in the meetings, and urged them to charity and good will to each other. "Do not injure the character of anyone. If members should conduct themselves improperly, deal with them, and keep all your doings within your own bosoms, holding all character sacred." He concluded by offering five dollars in gold as the beginning of funds for the institution. The society was called the "Nauvoo Female Relief Society," and officers were duly elected. President Emma Smith spoke upon the objects of the society, its duties to others, and to its members. She said they should seek out and relieve the distressed, and that all should be ambitious to do much good; that they should deal frankly with each other, and watch over the morals, and be very careful of the character of the members of the institution.

It was interesting to note that a debate on the words "relief" and "benevolent" fills quite a large space in the minutes. Our students of sociology will appreciate this fact, as it is fundamental, in the modern methods of charity work, to have a clear understanding of what is the wisest and best relief, and what constitutes real benevolence. A man helped to his feet—helped to help himself—is more truly helped than one who receives a shower of gold.

The claim has been made that this society which has just been referred to was America's first woman's organization. We do find that it antedated the well-known "Sorosis Club" of New York, which has been termed the "Mother of Clubs," but we also find that several groups were formed earlier. They were mostly of a literary nature, however, so that we might readily concede the Nauvoo Relief Society to have been the first one organized with charitable objects in view.

OUR PRESENT ORGANIZATION

To-day, the women's organization in the church is entering a new and broadened field of activity, its work assuming definite and specific outline. No longer are we considered just a group of women gathered to sew and chatter, but we find our brethren are learning that our efforts are reaching deeper into the fundamentals of life than they knew. One of our apostles has said: "If society is but the aggregation of homes, then a good society, in the last analysis, depends upon the development of good and efficient mothers who can, and will, approach the problems of sociology at their very roots, as no man has, or can."

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT

We stress the educational in our work. This, because we feel it to be fundamental. To fill her place completely in life, a woman needs to be informed as to all the needs about her, all the phases of those needs, and all the processes of their adjustment and improvement. Ignorance is the sin of the world, and causes the wrecks strewn so thickly along life's highway. Given mothers of one hundred per cent efficiency, how long would it take to banish darkness from the world? The Nation is demanding something approaching that efficiency from its men; should it not be justified in expecting similar value from its women? Can we give that value if we are content to be poorly equipped for the demands made upon us?

The Government is spending vast sums of money for the educational equipment of the men from whom they expect special service. Many of our boys in khaki are studying with a devotion and a concentration hitherto unknown to them. One of our Latter Day Saint boys, passing through our city at the Christmas time, told us that in three months just prior, he had made himself acquainted with the contents of about forty books, so that, in examination, he had ranked third. The lieutenantcy he received seemed to him but preliminary, for in response to the question, "Do you expect to become a captain?" he replied, "How can I help it, if I continue to study? and I surely expect to do that!"

That is the spirit which wins, and it is the spirit which should animate every Latter Day Saint woman. The sleeping time is over! Failures all along the way warn us that no makeshift methods will do in the future. We have serious business at hand. To be a qualified woman in these days means an equipment along almost every line of advancement. A home maker should know sanitation, drainage, food values, psychology, philosophy—and the long train! How else can she understand her family and its real needs, and minister properly thereto, mentally, morally, and spiritually, as well as physically?

And just now, too, is the extreme necessity that we acquaint ourselves with that "bit" the Government is asking at our hands. We must inform ourselves that we may render intelligent service. Of what use is a declaration of patriotism, if we do not patriotic deeds! Loyalty does not mean just flying the colors, nor standing up when the band plays national airs, but more efficiently and more truly shown in the patriotic table, and the Liberty Bonds in the pocket! Listen!

"A woman's size job has appeared out of this world of chaos! If only our soldiers and the allies could eat munitions and ships! How simple this food problem would be for the housewife! Her responsibilities would cease with settling back and exclaiming, 'Well, why doesn't the munition manufacturers make more munitions?' or 'Gracious me, don't they know we need more ships!' But this food saving problem is mainly a woman's job, because ninety per cent of the food purchased in this country is purchased by women. This means that the women of this Nation must shoulder ninety per cent of the responsibility of saving food.

"Thousands of tons of produce were saved last summer and are being saved to-day, because of the patriotic cooperation of housekeepers all over the land; but we must save still more. The outside demands on our national larder are increasing every day, as the shadow of starvation grows darker on the sky-line of our Europeans associated in this war.

"You can travel in Poland for hundreds of miles to-day, and not see a child under seven years of age. Where have they all gone? They have starved to death! You can see their skeletons lying along the roadside, some of them still in the little wicker baskets in which their frantic mothers carried them when they were driven from their homes by the Germans.

"Belgium to-day is existing on half rations, and has to depend almost entirely on the Commission for Relief in Belgium to give them food. A traveler, recently returned from France, said that the women and children were especially suffering from hunger now, because they were giving up a part of their daily rations of food to the men, who must have strength for their work in the factories and mines at home, and in the trenches at the front.

"A British soldier returning from Armenia, reports that he found little children in that crucified country, who for days had had nothing to eat but melon rinds that the Turkish soldiers threw them in derision when they begged for food. Hundreds of men, women, and children are dying in Rumania, too, with but one cry on their lips, 'Food! Food!' "It is the same cry echoed all over the world.

"'Food! Food! Give us food!' But because they can eat and live by no other means than food, it is a woman-size job to feed them!"

Change of Address

This week your editor removes to a new home at 5020 California Street, Omaha. Please take notice of this change of address, and send on without delay that helpful article you have been preparing for our columns.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Temple Chimes

This historic point is yet on the map with its ecclesiastical interest, and seems fully alive to the thrilling mutations of the twentieth century. Paved roads of brick and concrete lend a metropolitan air to all the surroundings, and bring streams of visitors to the temple. The traffic over these roads remind one of the congested streets of a city's business district, sometimes.

The temple is an object of grandeur and wonder to all. The interior polish of pure white enamel to the woodwork, and ivory to the walls, evoke exclamations of praise from the lips of many.

We have visitors from all parts of the world who manifest sympathy and interest. In scanning the registrar, names of persons appear from the Isle of Ceylon, India, Italy, Germany, China, Manchuria, Bulgaria, Korea, Kamchatka, Russia, and the isles of the seas. Indeed, one remembers the prophecy uttered in the vision of Joseph the Seer in this building, April 3, 1836, wherein the Lord said, "The fame of this house shall spread to foreign lands; and this is the beginning of the blessing which shall be poured out upon the heads of my people."

The burden of explanation, so far, to the minds of visitors, is to disillusion them as to an unbroken chain from Kirtland to Salt Lake City. Also, they are quite impressed with the idea that the people who built this temple were representative of the Down-East culture, and Puritanism of the New England States, and were an intelligent, devoted, and sacrificing people, as this building attests, and in migrating to Missouri and Illinois, they came in contact with the frontier, or cowboy element, and as freeholders, they differed in both politics and religion from slaveholders, and hence the clash, and the basis of the persecution.

We conducted Mr. F. E. Clerk, of Cleveland, with his friends, through the temple last week, and on being informed that Frederick M. Smith presides over the Reorganized Church, he replied, "What! My college chum at Clark University?" And when registering in the office, he looked up and saw President F. M. Smith's photo and turned to his friends and said: "There is the greatest intellectuality I ever met."

A party of twelve men, jolly, bright, and elite were present yesterday in the afternoon. When explaining the photos a fine elderly man lingered in the office and said, "So that is Emma Smith? She must have been a remarkable woman who gave birth to such noble looking men." Ah, the world do move!

Services at the temple are of good order we think. We gave a lecture on music Monday evening, and have in view the organization of a choral society. The orchestra does very nice work for the congregation. The hotel also has a new dress, a summer costume. The work is reaching out—appointments out on the borders. "Watch there! Watch!" is the slogan.

Hopefully,

Toronto, Canada, Items

Sunday, June 9, was an enjoyable day in the Toronto Church. Despite a steady downpour of rain, the attendance far exceeded our expectation. The priesthood prayer service convened at 9 a. m. Several fervent and spiritual prayers were offered. Those present seemed of one heart and mind.

The morning prayer meeting began at 9.30. I have attended many prayer meetings of the church under widely different conditions, but at no time in my experience in the church have I sensed more spiritual freedom or been in closer touch with the Source of spiritual help or enjoyed more mutual comradeship in service. The meeting was in charge of Brother Benjamin R. McGuire. His opening address was the keynote of the entire service. The advice and counsel of Brethren Rushton, Russell, Pitt, and others was timely. A number of the Saints bore strong testimonies of the power of God to bless and aid. Brother Archibald McLean, the branch president, spoke very feelingly of his long association with the church, and related some of the marked spiritual experiences received within the church.

The one sentiment running throughout the service was loyalty to God, the church, and her institutions.

Brother Rushton was the speaker at the morning service, his theme, "The essentials of religion." It was a masterly and feeling address appealing to the heart as well as the mind. It was well received.

At 3 p. m. the Sunday school convened. This being the date set for the election of officers, at the close of the study hour a complete set of officers was elected. Brother Leslie Prentiss was elected superintendent and Charles McLean, secretary.

The evening preaching was by the undersigned. The subject was, "The power of God unto salvation." It was the purpose to show that as love for man was the dominant purpose of God, therefore love for God should be the impelling motive in man.

Services were announced for the week as follows: Tuesday and Thursday evenings, preaching; Wednesday, prayer service; Friday, Religio. Brother McGuire will be the speaker Tuesday evening.

There is an exceptionally fine class of people here in Toronto and the prospects for church extension and propaganda are encouraging.

Brother F. G. Pitt and wife have been here for some time and are doing excellent work.

Sincerely, your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

Coordination in the Lamoni Stake

The readers of the HERALD will no doubt be interested in a few of the details about the recent Lamoni Stake conference, at Chariton, Iowa, June 6 to 9, which was advertised as a coordinated affair, putting into effect some of the principles involved in the recently adopted plan.

The first meeting was a preaching service on Thursday evening, Acting Stake President R. V. Hopkins occupying the pulpit. There was a fairly good attendance at this meeting, and a goodly number arrived by train a little too late for that meeting, but in plenty of time to be there for the first prayer meeting, at nine a. m. the next day. This was in charge of J. A. Gunsolley and one of the stake auxiliary officers, both selected by the president of the stake. It was a good meeting.

The auxiliary meeting that followed was in charge of the vice president of both the Sunday school and Religio organizations, while the explanation of the new situation was presented by J. F. Garver, president of the stake. It was at this meeting that the conference empowered the stake presidency to have charge of the conference and make the usual arrangements for speakers, etc.

The credential committee previously appointed brought in a complete list of the delegations reported and along with them recommendations that these and all subsequent conventions of the stake be mass conventions. Their recommendations were adopted without opposition, so hereafter there will be no need of electing delegates for either Sunday school or Religio stake conventions. All who are members of a local auxiliary organization in the stake will have all the privileges of voice and vote. This was not possible until the recent General Sunday School Convention revised the constitution, but now any district can do it by sending a properly elected delegation to the convention.

A resolution was presented which recited that while we were favorable to the new coordination plan, it seemed necessary to go a step farther and agree on a stake coordinating committee who should nominate all subordinate officers as is provided for in the general organizations. It was proposed that this committee should be: The stake president, stake bishop, superintendent of the Sunday school department, president of the Religio department, and organizer of the stake Woman's Auxiliary. This was moving pretty fast, some thought, since the general coordinating committee had not met to decide on any of these things, so the conservative element prevailed by indorsing coordination but referring the proposition to the heads of the departments for consideration and report at the next convention (presumably sometime in October).

The stake presidency had been asked by the joint executive committee of the three auxiliaries to nominate a stake president of the Religio to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of C. I. Carpenter. They did so by presenting the name of Frank McDonald. A member on the floor put in another nomination, which was entertained without objection, but the vote was almost unanimous for the administration's nominee.

The social side was not neglected, either in discussion or practical effort. Some of the young men in charge of that work locally and in the stake, organized two events for the young folks especially. They were well attended and fairly successful, but showed lack of organization and unified action. We have so few of these things it is no wonder we all feel like cats in a strange garret if we happen to attend. If the Religio properly functions under the new plan, which provides that its primary aim be social and recreational, there should be a marked change in our general attitude toward the features arranged for the young people. The round table discussion on this divulged the deep feeling many have on the subject, one brother wishing Uncle Sam would take it up and provide recreational advantages by taxation and draft if necessary. At the rate we are doing it now, something like that will have to be done.

Brother Garver, whose strength has not returned fully, but who rallies and forcibly expresses himself when occasion demands, reiterated a statement he had made at another meeting, that among the many big problems before the church, he believed the solution of the boy and girl problem to be the biggest. Not merely the dealing with the youth, but studying and affecting the home conditions which gave that youth his inclinations and habits.

The sacrament service on Sunday was a grand outpouring of God's Spirit, in tongues and prophecy, the Saints having come in fasting and prayer. The messages were especially applicable to the people present, as they represented the stake, there being considerable commendation as well as exhortation.

Charles B. Woodstock was ordained president of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Elders, succeeding C. I. Carpenter. E. D. Moore was set apart as one of his counselors, and Oscar Anderson, unable to be present, will be the other.

The symposium on Sunday afternoon was a wonderful meeting. Brethren Garver and A. Carmichael spoke on "the imminence of Zion," as reflected in the late General Conference. It was a straight-out presentation of the demands of the times that the spiritual and temporal problems might be solved. It was a most practical presentation, so powerfully given that one old brother who has been in the church over half a century was heard to say: "That was the plainest I ever heard it presented."

The Saints at Chariton have a nice new church building, with some debt remaining on it. Its location is not the prettiest we have seen, but they look forward to the time in the near future when the combination frog pond and dump heap on the next block will be made by the city into a public park. It being the usual time for receiving contributions on the debt, the visiting Saints put in a generous offering, which was much appreciated by the local membership.

There must have been nearly one hundred and fifty visiting Saints on Sunday, which taxed the accommodations of the hosts. The time must come when they will finish their large basement and serve meals at the church, charging a nominal price. This is no more than fair, and will allow the local sisters to attend the meetings.

The unmentioned features were about as one finds at other conferences and we need not take the space to enumerate nor comment on them. It was a good conference, with some new and acceptable features in arrangement. We predict much success for coordination if the Saints will lay aside all petty jealousies and each seek the best good of all concerned.

DELBERT.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, May 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a line from this war-shrouded land to let you know that we are still keeping the gospel flag flying in Gloucester. In spite of the trials of these days with sadness on every hand, and the visible tokens of warfare as shown along every street by the broken warriors of Britain, we Saints have not lost faith in the latter-day work. Under the capable leadership of Elder E. J. Trapp, who has piloted this branch for many years now, we are maintaining our cause in this city. Associated with him are Brethren A. P. Sims and J. H. Smith as teachers. Brother Smith was ordained March 3 and has already proved a source of strength to the local priesthood.

Brethren P. Miles and E. Meadows, with Brother I. Jones, who is laboring at Malvern, our three deacons, complete the membership of the priesthood who are still permitted to labor among us. We mourn the separation of Brother Tom Trapp, Deacon W. Stokes, and also Brethren A. Long, Stamer, and W. Harris, as soldiers. No one can realize more than our branch president what a loss we sustained when Elder Trapp was taken from us.

All our brethren have been to France. They have been preserved wonderfully. Brother W. Harris was "gassed" about an hour before the Germans made their great offensive in March and he is now in this country recovering. Brother Stamer returned sick from France a considerable time ago, and is still in this country fully recovered.

We sadly mourn the loss of our Brother G. M. B. Mackay, who labored as teacher from the organization of the branch on July 4, 1909, until his death in February last. He was of a kindly disposition and ever doing something for the comfort of the Saints both spiritually and temporally. These were the marked traits of his character. We sadly miss him.

We have a membership now of fifty-five, being now at a standstill as regards membership, but we have been told that there are many here who will accept of this gospel. May we remain faithful that these shall be gathered in.

We have a normal class jointly directed by Brethren E. J. Trapp and J. Harris, also a Sunday school of about thirty members with Brother J. Harris as superintendent, and also Zion's Religio with myself as president. We are all just anxious to hear the first news of General Conference. We also note the continued progress of the church in things spiritual, and trust that the Saints of Gloucester Branch will work and pray for the day when the posterity of Enoch shall embrace the truth and look upward. Then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness, and the earth shall tremble with joy; and the general assembly of the church of the firstborn shall come down out of heaven and possess the earth, and shall have place until the end comes.

Yours in gospel bonds,

R. P. SIMS.

LEEDS, ENGLAND, May 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are still pressing on, in spite of war conditions which have sadly depleted our ranks of coming elders and other officers. We are greatly blessed in having a valiant man for the truth to help us, Elder Abel Hall, of Manchester. Under his untiring care and ministrations, we feel that it is good to be a Saint in latter days.

As you know part of the awful conditions we are passing through, you will feel sad to learn how hard it is for a Saint to stand by his principles, namely, war is sin, and the gospel of Christ teaches us that to love our brother is one of the great truths that we have to carry out as Saints. And we are often branded as pro-Germans and traitors. But we are thankful that at every opportunity we put before the people the pure gospel of our Lord, for we realize that the coming of the Lord is at hand, and it is our duty to be up and doing.

We have had two deaths in one week, Sister Chapman, a sister of Sister Booker, who resides near church headquarters in America. She had a long, painful illness, patiently borne as becomes a true Saint, and died peacefully April 27. We laid her to rest on the Wednesday following. Elder Thomas Taylor officiated at the interment. She leaves behind her a faithful daughter, who has ministered to her mother's wants without a murmur, and a son who is in France with the Canadian troops.

It was one painful duty to commit to Mother Earth on Sunday, May 5, the remains of the teacher of the branch, Brother Henry Warren, whom any of the Leeds Saints, now in America, will remember as an ardent worker, and who has still held fast to the rod of iron through good and evil report. His earnest prayer was that although he preached to others, he might not become a castaway. We held an impressive service in the church, presided over by Abel Hall, who by his beautiful and sympathetic reading of the burial service impressed those who were present.

We have formed a Religio, which meets every Monday evening, and the interest is maintained. We have the Book of Mormon lectures which are helpful to us, and we have socials every month.

I am glad to see the spirit of love and fellowship which is with us now. Truly the Lord has blessed us, as our branch has wonderfully revived again after a long period of dark days, and lack of interest. He knew that a few were faithful, and he sent along a worthy young brother to be an instrument in his hands to comfort and to cheer us, and I am confident that we shall benefit thereby, both mentally and spiritually.

Our fellow members at Bradford are worthy of mention as they are faithful, one and all, and are true friends to this branch, entertaining our ministers with a lavish hand. All blessings to them always.

I do not wish to take up any more of your valuable space, dear editor, as your paper is crowded with splendid and helpful articles. Our good wishes to Brother Rushton and wife, also all who knew us here. May we all be found faithful at the last call, when all wars shall cease and sorrow and pain be done away. Pray for us in the time of great stress, and that the rulers are made to realize that war is hell, and see that the only way is God's eternal gospel of love, and do "unto thy neighbor as thou wouldst have him do unto thee."

Yours in gospel bonds,

LOUISE PRIESTLEY.

SHAWNEE, OKLAHOMA, May 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: I was indeed glad to have the privilege of attending the late General Conference; to meet so many old-time friends, to enjoy the wonderful prayer and testimony meetings, and listen to the wonderful words of life given by inspiration through those who are called, chosen, and faithful.

I felt a desire to bear my testimony but there were so many with the same desire I gave way to others. I felt edified, instructed, and encouraged because of the things I was privileged to hear from so many, both old and young.

I have been identified with this church for forty years and feel that there has been a continual revelation of the mind and will of my heavenly Father through those who have been chosen to lead and instruct along intellectual and spiritual lines.

To me the church literature is a table spread with richer and more nourishing viands than is afforded anywhere else in all the world.

I was pleased to be at the meetings where the ways and means to raise money for the Christmas offerings were discussed. The children are taught to "gather up the fragments," to practice economy and self-denial in many ways, which is sure to result in good to the children themselves, to the church as such, and to mankind in general. But to some of us older ones who were tutored under primitive Methodists, taught that economy and plainness were virtues, extravagance and excessive adornments were sinful, it appears that some of the grown-up children of our time, even in the church, could dispense with unnecessary ornamentation and thus (putting all together) materially assist in swelling the funds so much needed and for which so many are diligently working.

The instruction of Paul to the saints was to let their adorning be of the mind, not the putting on of gold or pearls. In these times of distress of nations, of hunger and starvation in different parts of the world, it seems that all should be consistent with former- as well as latter-day revelation.

If Congress should pass laws and the President of the United States should make a proclamation that every individual would be permitted to have and wear all the jewelry he desired, same to be paid for out of the United States treasury, people would hang so much of it in their ears, their hair, on their hands, and in their clothing that it would not any more be a mark of prosperity or aristocracy, so those who desire to have that which masses cannot afford—"that which is above another"—would find no satisfaction in such adornments and they, save the wedding ring and a useful timepiece, would go out of style. Doesn't it seem childish to seek to improve our personal appearance by putting on expensive trinkets or gilded toys, especially hanging in our ears? This same apostle exhorts us to put away childish things.

I hope that the spirit of true sacrifice and consistency will characterize all those who desire to see the right prevail; and above all, Zion redeemed. I hope that each may find the place in which he can labor to the best advantage to accomplish the work intrusted to all; that each may do not only his bit but do his share.

It makes me feel sad to think that we have no branch in this beautiful little city, but we are trying to tell the story of the angel's message among our neighbors and friends, and trying to make it effective by example as well.

With faith, hope, and charity I am striving to enter in at the straight gate.

MRS. H. A. CRAWLEY.

R. C. EVANS LEAVES CHURCH and certificates authorizing you to officiate in the priesthood of the church, and to make full accounting and transfer of such trust funds and properties as you may hold by reason of the general or local official positions you may have held in the church which are necessarily affected by such official resignation and withdrawal from the church.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

We then stated that in all probability the Toronto Saints would individually have to decide whether they would remain with the church or follow R. C. Evans out. We then introduced Brother J. W. Rushton, who in a careful, logical way discussed some of the things which had apparently been disturbing the branch. Following his address Brother A. F. McLean made a statement, saying that while he had loved Brother Evans and had worked faithfully with him, the step taken by R. C. Evans had brought them to the parting of the ways, and that he chose to remain loyal to the church in which his religious experiences had been so rich. He then stated that the withdrawal of R. C. Evans from the church had removed Brother Evans from those available to speak on Sunday, and that he as branch president would ask President Smith to appoint and announce speakers for the following Sunday. We then arose to make some announcements, and immediately some of Brother Evan's followers tried to introduce some resolutions. We refused to entertain any resolutions, and pandemonium broke loose. They would not listen to announcements, but shouted, shook their fists at the chairman, hissed, etc. Brother Evans arose to go out, and this seemed a signal to his followers, for some three or four hundred arose and started out, shouting and calling. Brother Evans mounted a seat to make a speech and called for his followers to meet on the lawn at a near-by home, and in a few minutes his followers withdrew. We called the remaining ones to order, and made announcements for the following Sunday and dismissed them, advising them to go quietly home.

We were informed by Brother F. G. Pitt (who went to R. C. Evans's called meeting) that Brother Evans and his followers met at the place appointed where he spoke for some time, bitterly denouncing the church and Joseph Smith, the Martyr, attacking the Doctrine and Covenants, and further continuing his tirade on the church officials. He also announced that he would in due time organize his church.

While we are grieved to thus see one fall who has so long worked for the church, we cannot but recognize the fulfillment of prophecy, that in the last days even those thought strong in the faith should fall and go out of the church. The sad story admonishes us that God is hastening his work, that the forces are at work which will sift out those who are not wholeheartedly consecrated to the cause. The many friends of Brother Evans will grieve to see this end of his long record in church work; but they should be admonished that God's work depends on no man, that it will go on though many fall.

Brother T. W. Williams is in Toronto, working with Brethren McGuire and Rushton, and Brethren Williams and F. G. Pitt will remain there for as much of the conference year as is necessary, reconstructing and rehabilitating the work as they can under God's blessing.

As can well be imagined, the Toronto Saints are greatly disturbed. We were grieved to see how greatly they had been misinformed on the work of the church and its progress. May God's blessing attach, and great good to his cause and church come out of all the trouble, and that peace and happiness may come to those now distressed over the situation. We believe many following Brother Evans will soon see the error of their ways and return to the church.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

By action of the First Presidency and members of the Quorum of Twelve present in Independence, in joint council, the following brethren of the ministry were appointed to fields of labor as shown for the present conference year:

Burr, A. E., Northern Michigan District. M.

Chambers, R. C., Central Idaho. L.

Irwin, Charles E., Northeastern Illinois District. M.

Rich, Calvin, New York and Philadelphia District, Brooklyn objective. L.

Wipper, Frank F., Central Oklahoma District. M.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 8, 1918.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern California District, Greeting: Owing to the transfer of Brother G. E. Harrington and T. W. Williams who have been the district president and vice president respectively, the district has been left without these officers, we have requested Brother George Wixom to take charge of the district affairs and fill the place left vacant by Brother Harrington. Therefore all matters referring to the district will be in the care of Brother Wixom, who will act as district president until the conference and reunion in August, when the election of officers will take place as usual.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

TORONTO, CANADA, June 4, 1918.

The Bishopric

To the Scattered Saints of Northwestern Texas: Brother S. W. Simmons, who has been acting as Bishop's agent for the Northwestern Texas Territory, having been sent this year to the Central Texas District, we deem it unnecessary to appoint an agent in his place, inasmuch as there are no branches in this section. We recommend that the Saints forward their tithes and offerings direct to the Presiding Bishop.

We appreciate the contributions of the Saints in this section in the past and trust that the same loyalty to the Lord's work may be manifest in the future. As the Lord prospers us in temporal things may we be willing to impart that portion which he has indicated for the forwarding of his work and for the care of the poor.

Yours in gospel bonds,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

The Saints of the Toronto District will please take notice that Richard C. Evans has withdrawn from membership in the church and resigned as bishop of the Toronto District. Brother A. F. McLean of 48 Fern Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, has been appointed, and until further notice will act as bishop's agent for the Toronto District.

We cheerfully commend Brother McLean to the Saints of the Toronto District and solicit for him your confidence and prayers as well as your financial support.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

FROM HERE AND THERE

CALL FOR ARMY CHAPLAINS

An urgent call has come from the Red Cross to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for twenty-five chaplains to be recommended at once for service in France. The Reverend Clyde F. Armitage, secretary of the Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, reports that the Red Cross has asked, also, that the Federal Council recommend twenty-five chaplains every month.

Experienced ministers of ability are desired. They must be loyal American citizens above the draft age. If a man has a German name, or if either of his parents or grandparents was born in a country with which we are now at war he need not apply, for the Red Cross will not be able to secure passports for him in this service, Mr. Armitage stated. Further, all applicants must pass a physical examination and be willing to serve for at least one year. As no salaries are paid, allowance being made only for transportation, equipment, and monthly expenses, friends or the denominational war com-

WHAT MAGAZINE FOR THE BOY?

Many parents find it difficult to select good reading for their growing boys. It is soon ascertained that the youngsters don't necessarily like the reading matter that appeals to the grown-ups. They want action, lots of it, in which boys take a prominent part. They are willing to learn all the good lessons offered, provided they are put into the lives of the story characters. There is one especially fine monthly we can recommend for boys—The American Boy. It costs a dollar and a half a year and seems to live up to the publishers' statement: "The biggest, brightest, best magazine for boys in all the world." The June number has eight stories, three of them about baseball, and in addition has twenty-two other features.

When you buy War Savings Stamps you do not give your money, you loan it at 4 per cent. compounded quarterly. You help your Government, but you help yourselves even more.

RELIGION NECESSARY IN CHILD TRAINING

"In a conversation recently with a superintendent of the schools in one city, he said he was convinced, after handling many children for years, that good government, good schools and homes, cannot be realized without the principles of religion. The sooner this conviction becomes general, the sooner the improvement. And the nearer we approach to true religion, the more marked the improvement."—G. R. Wells, in July Autumn Leaves, Sunday school department.

Brother George Elson, of Wayne, Nebraska, has had an operation but does not expect to recover his health. He asks the prayers of the Saints that he may pass his change with his mind undistracted, with wisdom given those in charge.

BLUE STEPPING STONES

We've just been reading the Blue Stepping Stones recently issued, in which we learn the details of our big drive the past year. It is an inspiring thing to realize that when we begin to awaken we can do things. And it is most commendable to note the many schools that have been content to report the total of the offering for the school rather than take costly space for publication of each name and amount. When it is recalled that it costs about six cents a line for each name printed, it means a considerable amount saved to the church by the simpler method of reporting. Of course those not in schools or home classes must remit to the Bishop or some of his agents, and this has always been reported in alphabetical form under the name of the States. In the previous issue nearly forty per cent omitted the names of the contributors, while the most of them left out as well the names of the departments and classes. This year about 68 per cent reported the names of the schools only, about 25 per cent with name of school and departments in it, and only about 6 per cent reported the names of the pupils contributing. That is quite a change in two years, when almost all the schools reported in full.

Elder Daniel Macgregor has left home for his mission field in the Lamoni Stake, expecting to reach it in time for the stake reunion, to be held July 31 to August 11. They sold their homestead but leased a corner of it and are building a cottage on it, intending to make it their home. The home address is the same as it has been: Oyen, Alberta.

The Lamoni Steam Laundry is looking for a man to work in their dry cleaning department. Address the company at Lamoni for details.

All the families have moved whose work was changed so they were required to take up residence in Independence. Just prior to his departure, about thirty young people clubbed together and purchased Brother Elbert A. Smith a fine leather rocker and presented it to him with a serenade. He reports that they are getting settled, their car going through in record time. The new rocker affords much comfort when he has a minute to enjoy it.

All soldiers of our faith assigned to the barracks at Columbus, Ohio, are cordially invited to attend the meetings of the first branch. The church building is located at Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue. To reach the church, take a Summit Street car north to the end of the line; walk back to Tompkins Street and go west about three blocks. The street car crosses Tompkins Street, but on account of a skip-stop system, the car does not stop there. You can also reach the church by taking a High Street car north and getting off at Blake Avenue, then walk north one block and east about four blocks to the top of the hill. Any further information may be had by telephoning to Elder C. W. Clark, 58 East Blake Avenue, Bell North 7339. The hours of service are: Sunday school 9.45 a. m.; prayer service, 11 a. m.; Religio 6 p. m.; preaching, 7.30 p. m.; midweek prayer service Wednesday evenings, 7.30 p. m.

Elder H. N. Pierce recently organized a Sunday school at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, with W. H. Kemple, of 715 Sherman Avenue, as superintendent. There are 18 Saints and about 15 children. For the present they will hold meetings in a private house. Brother Pierce has been holding meetings there three weeks and has some about ready for baptism and who want their children in our Sunday school.

The philosophy of the War Savings Stamps is save, save save.

"One of the best articles I ever read was 'Am I my brother's keeper,' in the Herald for June 5. I thank my heavenly Father for such a help."—Mrs. M. A. Stanley, Andover, Missouri.

CHANGES IN OFFICES AT HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

When the Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, moved out and took his equipment to Independence, he vacated one of the largest office rooms in the building. Since that time a general move has been effected, some of the crowded departments taking the room and arranging for a convenient use of the adjoining rooms. Brother Elbert and Brother S. A. Burgess both had desks in the same room. The former's desk will be used by the First Presidency when in Lamoni, at conference time and at other times. At present the upper floor of the building is occupied by or with arrangements for the Church Historian, Presiding Evangelist, Presiding Bishopric, First Presidency, HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Stepping Stones, and Zion's Hope editors, church library, copy editor and proof readers, superintendent of General Sunday School Association, Church Secretary, stake presidency, stake bishopric and manager of the Board of Publication. There is a commodious fireproof vault for valuable records, including a copy of each patriarchal blessing issued.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Have you ever noticed that the average human countenance in repose is very likely to have a look of sadness? That is because nearly every human countenance is a mask for tragedy.

Every man at some point in his experience has been a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. The lines are in his face and when he falls into a quiet and especially into a reminiscent mood they appear for those to see who have seeing eyes.

This must continue until the day dawns of which John wrote: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

Some minds seem most impressed by the thought that during the millennium we can keep our lions in the sheep lot and feed the bear at the straw stack. But the changes that must take place in human nature are just as stupendous and should demand most of our attention.

The prophets boldly sketched millennial conditions. They did not see many things. Or if they saw they were silent. And when we try to fill in the picture our work does not always blend with theirs. At best it is speculative and may or may not be correct. There are enough things that we know and must do along practical lines to occupy most of our attention.

It is a good thing to get to work constructively. There is less temptation to become mere obstructionists. And it is a good thing to get into the other man's shoes once in a while.

A certain brother who had been something of a problem to his branch president was given charge of a small mission in the city. Presently he came back to his pastor and said frankly: "Some of those people in my mission will not do a thing that I want them to. They find fault with everything and try to defeat every measure that I propose. In fact, I see now, that they act just like I have always acted toward you."

General Ludendorff, Germany's spokesman, as yet unrepudiated, says:

War is not any more a war of armies, but a struggle of nations against nations. All the means used to weaken an enemy nation become legitimate—by killing women and children, for example, one destroys the future mothers and eventual defenders of the country.

It is recorded to the credit of some of our wild American savages, the tribes of the Blackfeet, for instance, that they had standing tribal laws against killing women and children. They were quite innocent of "kultur." The Literary Digest for June 1, quotes Private Jess Fixon, full-blooded Cherokee, of the 142d Infantry Regiment, concerning the Kaiser, as follows: "He kill um papoose and kill um squaw, so me, Jess Fixon, will find this Kaiser and stick um bayonet clear through. Ugh!"

It is written that at a certain time many of the disciples turned back and followed Jesus no more. At first glance it might seem that their backsliding came suddenly. But we have a theory that in every individual case there had been a gradual, perhaps a long-continued process of disaffection. They were looking for something to offend. At the first test of their faith they failed. They were already in the dark. And the first thing that came as a shock to them caused them to fall.

Selfishness, egotism, grouchiness, skepticism, jealousy, undermine a man gradually. Their inroads do not always appear on the surface. But there is a moral lapse into spiritual darkness and weakness. Finally something unexpected happens. Then the man "follows no more after Jesus." The church thinks that he fell away suddenly, but he did not. For a long time he prepared his own fall. He thinks that the church has gone wrong. But it has not. The paths have diverged to a point where he can no longer keep one foot in each, so he takes the by-path of his own choosing.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT

It is fundamental that we should expect from our missionaries the spirit of devotion and of self-sacrifice, and that we should expect this devotion, also, upon the part of their families. But it does not seem to us primary, that we should insist that the missionaries' families should be the poorest of the poor. This does not make for efficiency or justice, nor for the good of the church.

We should expect the men who devote their whole time to church service, and whose expense is therefore met from the coffers of the church, that they should consider the money in their hands as holy, consecrated, set aside for a special purpose, and that they should exercise great care in its use.

But we have the right to ask of every member that the means in his hands, however acquired, be considered as a stewardship and in trust; and that he and his family exercise the utmost care in the use of these funds, so that his effort and his means are devoted for the best good of the common cause, and to assist in the work of the church.

There is too often a spirit of criticism when some missionary secures a good home. A right inquiry would show in many cases that he had inherited the money, or that his wife had inherited it, and that he had shown good judgment in its use. Certainly, we should not find fault until we know the facts. Then has not a missionary a right to a good home, as well as a banker, grocer, farmer, or professional man?

It has come under the observation of the writer of this editorial that our missionaries' families have often made sacrifices which should shame the church, and sacrifices unknown to their own immediate families, that is, to brothers and sisters, father and mother; and, to a certain extent, even to those who live under the same roof—their children and companion. Especially is it true that many a missionary's wife has made such self-denial to assist in the onward progress of the truth. This is well to a certain extent; but it is not well that these sacrifices should be carried to the point where it means a loss of physical efficiency; where it means a loss of time, energy, and results.

We have noted with great interest the sacrifices made by some of the earlier missionaries, who, when they went to England, traveled in the steerage, ate what they could get, and sent their means to their families. This seems splendid devotion, but as we have read the history further, we have been struck time and again, how often these men, after they reached their mission, were sick. Again and again is it set forth that for three to six months, and sometimes longer, they were not capable of service and could do very little because of their sickness. And this sickness often seems to have been connected with personal abuse, that is, sacrifice carried to the point where it meant a loss of real efficiency.

We see this in a business sense. A man who is taking a long trip on a piece of important business, expecting to be there one or two days, will, with the added expense of a sleeper add very slightly to the expense; while to remain awake in a coach means very many times more than the expense of the whole trip, including railroad, hotels, sleeper, and everything, in the importance of the business which he is transacting. So he finds it worth while, on certain important business, and a real economy, to stop at a good hotel, because thereby he can help the work in which he is engaged, the better.

Applying this to the church, it is certain that judgment must be used. But there are undoubtedly occasions when it is worse than parsimony, when it is real waste, for a man on important business for the church, to attempt to economize in these minor ways. He should economize, but his economy should be true saving and such as will help advance the mission on which he is sent.

Now we are clearly aware of the difficulty involved. Care must be exercised. But can we not have some confidence in our own men and confidence in one another? And can we not, men of the ministry, we who are working for the church, consider very carefully every expenditure and how we can secure the utmost possible good for every dollar of church money paid out? We should do this, but parsimony is not economy nor real saving.

We have seen that in the case of Brother Elbert A. Smith. We have seen that in the case of others of our men. In too many cases the real cause lying back of it all will be found to be expressed in these terms: A lack of proper support to them in their important work.

Naturally, we expect the leading officers of the church to set an example. It touches us to see one of them picking out his own letters upon a typewriter, as showing his devotion, but as a matter of practical reason, we must question the wisdom of it. If a man is not worth more to us than as a stenographer, there is some mistake in putting him in one of the leading fifty places in the church. We do not mean that he should be set free to give his time to rest and pleasure; it means he should be set free to better devote his efforts to the cause of the church.

For the missionary who goes into the field there is much to be said for the going without purse and scrip; and that those for whom and among whom they labor should support them and give them meat. This was a common practice in warm countries of the East, and among Oriental people the great teacher is rather expected to beg his way, especially, if he is a religious teacher.

A query may be raised in regard to its practice in this time and age. But if that query is raised it is not raised on behalf of the individual. The question is, how best can we forward the cause intrusted to all of us? That is the prime criterion.

S. A. B.

COLLECTIONS AND BAZAARS

Some question has arisen in regard to taking collections at auxiliary socials or entertainments and of the advisability of holding bazaars. Should collections ever be taken?

We do not recall any direct commandment one way or another upon this topic, except that on the Lord's day we should bring our oblations to his altar, and our sacraments. (See Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.) There is much to be said in favor of making such an offering, at least at our sacrament service, directly to the Bishop, for the use of the church.

As to taking up collections at other services, there is some difference of opinion. In many places there appears to be serious objection to doing so, as the membership prefer to provide for the necessary expenditures by subscriptions privately given. On the other hand, especially in the city churches, there are many who desire to contribute and who have not thus an opportunity; some even are unwilling to attend, if they have not such an opportunity. Contributing in part to the collection they feel free to come when they choose.

In general, it would appear better to provide for all regular and special requirements by donations privately. But where circumstances appear to justify it in our church buildings or missions, opportunity should be offered by way of collection, made in such a way that those who desire to contribute may do so, and those who are not able to contribute may still feel their perfect welcome—because there are doubtless some instances in which the manner of collection causes those who are not able to contribute to feel that they cannot come. It is a matter of broad consideration and Christian courtesy.

The objections to bazaars are numerous, for one thing, as a rule, they hardly pay for the effort put forth, unless prices are inflated; there is often something nearly approaching a holdup to secure donations from those not normally interested—from storekeepers and others who feel they must contribute in order to hold trade. There is then an enforced selling for the "good of the cause."

If one or many desire to make articles or raise garden stuff and sell it for what it is rightfully worth on its merits, and then turn the proceeds in, afterwards, as a freewill offering, there can be no reasonable objection. But when one comes selling candy for Christmas offerings, for the Red Cross or other charitable purposes distinctly declared, it carries with it the inference that one ought to buy for the good of the cause, whether he happens to want the article or not, or whether the price is fair or not. His contribution should be full, free, and direct.

It is only just to add that so far as we have observed, bazaars or sales by our people have been fairly priced. There doubtless have been, however, the sale of articles not according to needs and use, but for the good of the cause. In such a case, it becomes a question as to who is giving the donation, the person or organization which turns over the funds, or the individual who buys.

The same objection might be raised in regard to an entertainment. It becomes at times very much of an evil, the persistence with which one entertainment after another is given for the good of some cause. We have noted instances where for months there has been an average of one such entertainment each week for which one really must purchase tickets because of the purpose for which the entertainment is given.

There is much that can be said, however, in favor of such procedure; in a community where the people desire to get together for social purposes and also make a contribution to a good cause, but almost invariably it exceeds these limitations. It would seem the ideal way for each one to contribute directly what he is able to give, and have an entertainment and social event free of the commercial element.

It can readily be seen that there can be very little, if any, objection to the making of articles and selling them for fair value, or of those who are competent preparing a suitable entertainment and charging admission, either by the sale of tickets or by means of a collection previously announced, so that no one will be embarrassed by not being duly prepared. Then, after the event, those concerned donate all or any part of the proceeds to such good use as they see fit.

But there is much also to be said in a close community of expenses being met by voluntary contribution and entertainments and socials being free, so that attendance will depend upon enjoyment and interest and not alone upon financial ability.

We have known of instances where a free entertainment has been given and then ice cream or other such light refreshment sold at a reasonable charge, so that those who desire to partake may do so and feel that they are paying their own way. Properly managed, and not as a means of raising money, it may be made much of a social success.

We are living in a time when many demands are being made upon us for funds, and most of them over determined. It is a condition which requires much wisdom in the handling, not as an ideal condition, but as we find matters confronting us at the present time.

We have heard some object strenuously to the term "passing the hat," and yet the facts are that for good causes we can see about us that very thing being done, and most assiduously. The changing of the name would not change the fact.

For the church, the ideal way would be for each one to contribute of his means as able. As matters confront us at present, at times wisdom is justified of her children.

THE RECENT CONFERENCE

It is noteworthy that often we can get a more just judgment of an event, when it is well past. This thought causes us to return again to the late conference.

Many comments have been and are being made, but with a seeming unanimity of those who attended, that it was one of the best ever held, and that its after effects are good and very good, as the results become more apparent.

Its principal features have already been set forth. The unity of spirit and action of the leading officers and quorums justifies the action taken a year earlier in regard to the Quorum of Twelve. But this unity has included the bishopric, the high council, the stake presidents, and others.

The Presidency, Twelve, and seventies also held some interesting post-conference sessions. The Order of Bishops and the joint council agreed on definitions of inheritance, stewardship, and consecration. Some outside their number may be dissatisfied, though we have heard of none such. But this body of men felt a unity of purpose that was to them decidedly an inspiration.

The working basis for agreement with the Church of Christ and the coordination committee are works which are epoch making.

There have been a few objections—largely local—but as a rule based on conclusions by those not present.

An auxiliary society (as designated in the past) objects these are not departments of church work; while another objects because they are not entirely abolished. Both urge that only the priesthood quorums belong to our work. But they draw diverse conclusions, as one argues that those organizations should be with but not of the church, auxiliaries, but not departments of church work; the other urges they should all be abolished and heard of no more.

The homes, Sanitarium, college, and publishing house have been from the first operated as parts of the church work—de facto departments. Is not the religious training of the youth and child, and their proper care and recreation part of the work of the church? Is not the work of the women part of the work of the church? The very question appears to answer itself.

These departments do not hinder or limit the work of the priesthood. The objection is founded on a misunderstanding of the purpose of the closer affiliation.

The report of the First Presidency shows marked progress and the eve of greater advancement. We have not yet reached the high standard we may. But marked progress is being made for the better advancement of the work of God.

The report of the Bishop shows the debt greatly reduced, and decided steps taken in the establishment of storehouses.

Those who are in touch with the work feel the deep spiritual power, without which we shall fail.

Much remains to be done. Righteousness is the one essential. We must do the will of God. But to do it we must first know it. To know it we must study earnestly the word of God. Not only must we read, but seek to understand, and understanding, do. Why should we seek or desire further divine direction, until we know and do that which we have received?

The recent conference and conventions mark a closer unity, a better understanding, and so mark progress. Many of those who attended found the high standard of spirituality that is our privilege, and so hope for greater progress this year, preparing also for our meeting next spring and for the work then before us for the next ensuing year.

The Lord is at the helm. His work shall be fulfilled.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

PATRIOTISM AND RELIGION

As a preface to this article, let it be said that in the desire to keep the laws of Christ many fierce contentions have arisen and singular views been stated from the pulpit as to the attitude one should assume in this present crisis. Under this statement of fact, opportunity is sought to present some of the reasons why it appears that religion does not destroy patriotism, and why it is not opposed to the preservation and safety of human life and opportunity.

We believe life to be a privilege. We believe attached to it is a higher purpose and value than a ruthless destruction. We believe religion creative of the ends—mercy, justice, and safety. We believe no desperado has any privilege at large, and that if he cannot be subdued by peaceable means, then by force, and that in such subduing it is not the duty of any citizen or officer to give his life if he can save it. We believe no law-abiding citizen is called upon in the name of religion to suffer the outrages of any desperate character, neither in the same sacred name permit it to be inflicted upon others, whom not only duty but honor demands to protect.

We believe life, honor, and virtue sacred. We believe religion to be evolutionary, and necessarily slow in its processes; that it is a means to an end (when the millennial period will come) and that it is the perpetuation of the races in the uplift of individual and collective life; that it is creative of the means, the opportunity, and the privilege to live, and not destructive of them.

Opportunity and means to cultivate the graces of heaven are essential. No man walks from the earth to the divine without the means and opportunity, and no nation has risen from feudalism and despotism, save through evolutionary processes and human sacrifices.

If there be such a thing as patriotism in reality, and if liberty is a part of that thing, and if that be the quality all have sung in song and poetry, and inscribed forever in history; if that be the dream of the ancient prophets and the promise of the Christ; if that be the one thing which has kindled the fires at the altar of the soul, the question which must now be answered is, does religion destroy this soul quality, what will it do and how will it act in the hour of the Nation's peril?

Is patriotism nothing more than a sentiment to be loved and boasted of in the name of Liberty over the moss-grown graves of those who have purchased it at their sacrifice and blood? Is it something ruthlessly discarded when country is in peril? If that be true, our dear Constitution is an empty thing, the fathers were mistaken and the praise of Washington and Jefferson and the soldiery of 1776 and all the things we have cherished through the generations in their honored memory, all are a hollow mockery out of the stupidity of our delusions and our democracy is a deception.

Was it a very glorious thing when the ancestors carved it from the mountain to stabilize the institutions of human liberty, to inspire within the bosom the thought of sovereignty, and is it now an odious thing, something to be shunned? If liberty be a prize, does its sacred keeping rest more urgently upon one individual than another, and on what ground?

Liberty that is the boon of any son who so loves it as to defend it, is the same liberty that every son, regardless of occupation, profession, locality, or religious cult, has his being, and eats and sleeps and rises up and walks about, has his nationality and his safety.

If, therefore, there is such thing as patriotism, it justly claims the respect and support of every benefactor and belongs to every class and clan, and, like honor, is more than an empty sentiment. There are those seemingly holding to the view that there is no provocation where man should lift the hand against another. Is this true? The principal point of difference is whether an individual or a nation is justified in the preservation of life. This law is as old as the universe. It is instinctive and inherent. Has it been wrong till now?

It is not that we disregard the teachings of the Prince of peace. God forbid. It is the only hope, but we adhere to the idea that after all, man is the instrument by which and through which God incessantly works. Hence, God is mindful of him and visits him. It is not that we labor to justify the opinion on any other ground than that it is correct under the workable laws of consistency. If there is anything workable and consistent, it ought to be found in the teachings of the Prince of peace.

We shall, therefore, inquire if the country has taken the honorable course, and if so, whose duty, unpleasant though it may be, it is more than another's to defend it. With a formidable foe to the free institutions of the races mercilessly striking at the vitals of democracy upon every hand and at every opportunity, and conscripting every man and boy to that ruthless purpose, the world stands amazed and distressed at the boldness of this project. The world shudders at the horrors of cruelty hitherto unheard of, even in the darkest ages of the past.

What is America going to do in the face of all the duplicity, deception, intrigue, covenant breaking, and murderous determination to destroy any and all who dare oppose in the name of mercy, humanity, and justice? This destroyer knows no restraint, no honor, no pity, no quarter, but murders, ravages, burns, and tortures wherever his military power pushes the conquest of steel, and this upon the principle that the sword is more than reason, and that military power is in justification of all things.

Is there any point of contact where democracy and religion merge into one pact and harmonious purpose to the benefit and uplift of the race of man? Democracy means the right to live, and is the sequence of religion. Does religion destroy or tamely permit to be destroyed, that which it has created? The elements of war were well understood by the Master. He well knew it was a contention between two or more persons or factions, and put the law of restraint upon the aggressor to prevent these things. It must needs be that offenses come, but woe unto him by whom they come. It may be suggested by some that this woe has reference to the future, but I believe man gets here a recompense for what he does. The future will take care of itself.

The principles of mercy and justice are peculiarly God's. Can we agree that it is mercy for so-called civilized and Christian nations to look on with indifference at the horrible slaughter now going on, and is it justice that any peace-loving nation should be thus destroyed? If true that democratic governments derive their powers from the people, that is the best the people can devise and contribute, and the veneration of that people, the love of their country, their devotion to their institutions, the pursuit of happiness, life, and liberty, these constitute what we call patriotism.

Is it religious or irreligious to venerate these things? Must we in its holy name repudiate them, and if so, for what benefit? It is plainly the purpose of the opposing forces to destroy democracy. In the face of the hideous crimes and the superhuman and inhuman effort made to do this thing, there are those who say that they cannot lift a hand because it is against the teachings of the Christ. Certainly he did not teach it as an occupation, profession, or the arm of peace and safety, but to withhold in self-defense from a destruction abets the crime, and therefore criminal in itself. Paul keenly felt the sting of his participation in the stoning of Stephen.

After the wind-up scenes on the earth in the eighteenth chapter of Revelation is found the instruction to reward her even as she has rewarded you, double unto her double according to her works and in the cup which she has filled, fill unto her double, and that her plagues will come in a day, death, mourning, and famine, and all this for the reason as stated, her sins had reached into heaven.

God forbid that we should intimate that Jesus came as any other than the Prince of peace. That is what America fought for in 1776. That is what she has since stood for. It is what she stands for to-day, and it is what she shall stand for after this conflict is over and the sword is crumbled to rust. Then shall America be made a safe dwelling place for the weak as well as the strong. The Messiah was the bud of hope and Israel's vision of peace, and the Christ the beautiful blown flower of rest from the pursuits of war.

The elements which precipitate contentions were well understood by the Prince of peace. Therefore, the law of self-restraint was put upon the aggressor, and all aggressors and all offenders are always enjoined by that law to do unto others as they would have them do to them. The divine law teaches moderation and patience, and it is admirable that in its operation a man may be reviled, abused, etc., and bear it patiently, but there is even an end to that. When we are commanded to be patient and to love and to pray for our enemies, and to do unto others, etc., surely it contemplates a conscious faculty to do these things, and not the tame submission to some ruffian to take life, after which there is no conscious faculty.

The question naturally arises, How far will love, the rock of the Christian philosophy, go for principle? Christianity is a code of principles. If a man says he loves the flag of his country, can he desert it? Can religion be charged with the dissipation of that love in a crisis? If a man says he loves his wife and child, and a brute of a man outrage them, will religion dissipate that love and lay the objects of his love open to exposure, and permit a brute of a man to put asunder what God has joined together? If a man love his neighbor as the scripture enjoins, and a maniac of a murderer attack that man and his family to murder and destroy, will religion at this critical juncture dissipate that love and allow the neighbor to be destroyed?

We find the Prince of peace using force to evict the money changers from the temple, and a murderer is more than a common trespasser.

Again, it is written, He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity. Is he going voluntarily? If not he will have to be captured. An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was the summary punishment of the Mosaic law, and the imperfect foundation upon which it was laid.

Jesus called attention to the essence of that law, and taught that man should not resist evil. Evil and murder are not synonymous terms, and mean different offenses.

Evil covers a multitude of abuses and offenses. Murder is specific. Nothing is here said against a man defending his life or the protection of his family. The Mosaic law went straight to the crime of murder and said that a man should not kill. There has been no change in that law under the Christian idea, save that the law of Christ has endeavored to destroy the criminal germ in the offender's heart and make him a safe and peaceable citizen.

The law, thou shalt not steal, was not directed against the man who lost his goods. The law, thou shalt not bear false witness, was not against the one lied about, and so the law, thou shalt not kill, was directed against the offender and the aggressor, the perpetrator of the crime.

There is punishment for theft, there is punishment for libel. To permit crime to go unrebuked and unchecked is nothing short of abetting in the commission of it. Take the germ to steal from the heart, and the germ to lie from the heart, and the germ to kill from the heart, and these offenses will not occur. There is no basic principle in religion to be established by permitting crime to go scot free. The condoning of crime makes its commission the easier.

We find in the observation of the divine law that if smitten on one cheek, turn the other, if compelled to go one mile, go twain, so that we can be abused, offended, and even cursed and bear it patiently, and love to become the benefactor of the one offending, and even pray for such. Yes, this is all possible under this category of offenses, yet we find there is a limit of endurance even to these minor abuses.

Our Government and our flag have been assailed. The things they stand for are threatened. Our citizens, our friends, and our relatives have been murdered. The murderer will not voluntarily go to jail and leave us at peace. All peaceful, lawful, and courteous entreaties and prayers for a cessation of these outrages have failed, and the offender is still at large. All efforts to carry out the scriptural commands have fallen on deaf ears and a frozen heart.

It is written, he that killeth with the sword shall be killed with the same instrument, and singularly it states that here is the patience of the saints. It must be the assurance and promise that is here meant. This terrible beast which fought in heaven with Michael and his angels was cast out by Michael and his angels. Here it will be noted that salvation and the strength of the kingdom of God came after this war in heaven and this trouble maker had been cast out.

If there be any excuse for a war in heaven, and force of ejection, possibly there may be for war in the earth. So this terror in heaven, after he was cast out for his terrorism, went abroad to make war and distress upon the remnant of the woman's seed. To do this he gave power to a beast seen rising from the sea, a composite of a leopard, a lion, and a bear. This terrible composite thing opened its mouth in blasphemy against God and it was given him to make war on the saints, and all that dwell on the earth shall worship him whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life.

I take it that all shall worship this regime and gave assent and comfort to it, save those whose names are written in the Lamb's books of life, and are opposed to the regime. A slothful opposition assists the thing opposed.

Was this condition of sin, and all the atrocities growing from it to continue forever? No, it was to have an end in 1260 years, and here it is stated is the patience of the saints, and very likely their hope. The millennium presages that this trouble maker will be in utter subjection for one thousand years, then loosed again for a little season. Will it be said that those who now, through love and patriotism for country, oppose his murder, rapine, and destruction are his worshipers?

The arm of the righteous is terrible, and after a duration of twelve hundred and sixty years of this terrorism and sin there is to be a change. He was to be led into captivity, and to be led must be by some superior force, and this force growing out of an opposition to his regime. Will God, therefore, raise up a strong nation to strike off the fetters of murderous persecution, or shall these atrocious crimes continue and the way be made the easier for the Devil to accomplish his designs through passiveness and indifference to them?

In 1776 the Declaration of Rights stated to the civilized nations the high motive impelling the forefathers. The child of liberty and democracy was born, but it came in much travail and blood. But it was born. Its feeble life was threatened. The red dragon of imperialism stood before it to destroy it. Its life has oftentimes been endangered. But it lived, and how? When all else failed, he who took up the sword against this child, perished by it, and by men in whose veins coursed the rich red blood of patriotism that the homes of freemen might not be desolated.

The child grew to manhood. In the prime of its strength and assurance to all liberty-loving people, it has been attacked most viciously. In righteous indignation the lovers of liberty resent these attacks, and our Government has stated to the world clear and above board the high purposes we are now engaged to accomplish.

The enemy has assassinated our kindred; has denied the right to go where the laws of nations grant free and harmless passage; has ruthlessly broken all pledges with all peoples opposing him; has been foully mixed with intrigue, infidelity, and cunning, a duplicity that defies a parallel, and yet in the face of all this, without motive of indemnity and reprisals or territorial extension, we seek only to defend the vital principles of honor and justice, the principles of democracy, the cause of humanity, and the privilege to live without the permission of a Prussian soldier. Where is a nobler assertion than these divine and inherent rights.

Does religion merely love to sorrow over the ruins of bleeding and wrecked humanity, to hear its shrieks and cries and bind up its wounds? Does it only hover around the doleful wastes of ruined cities and desolated homes and broken empires? Does religion only exist to commiserate the miseries of an assaulted people? Is religion only a mythical something which prays for God's benediction over the graves of war's tragedy?

Does religion exist only upon the hypothesis of inhuman brutalities and murder as a prerequisite to excite its saving graces? Does religion set up its throne and build its kingdom, its glory, its might, its safety, upon the ashes of these misfortunes? It cannot be. God nourished the infant child, and raised up such men as Washington, Jefferson, and the countless number of unknown patriots to defend it, and in these processes and out of these struggles, the ensign has been lifted to the nations. Was this a contribution to the world? Do we dare assert these motives wrong? Do we repudiate that building? Cherishing the principles that all men ought to be free, another war was fought to break the chains of the black man. Was this wrong?

Was the great Lincoln deceived when his Christian heart ached and bled for the wrongs upon this race? If the emancipation of peoples from lords and kings who would use them as pawns in furtherance of selfish ends marks any progress of the world, was it wrong in 1776 to cast the oppressor from among us, and was it wrong in 1860 to lift the negro from the status of the slave?

This is not a war by choice, not a war by occupation, not a war by profession, not a war of conquest, not a war to destroy, but a measure to save. God witness that it is so. America, the nation of peace, once, twice, thrice, yea, many times smote upon the cheek, and gone twain mile in patience, has plead and reasoned and importuned, has prayed and entreated and postponed, yet a heart frozen to these things, a heart frigid to the rights of humanity and numbed to the honor of pledges, a heart steeled to commit the horrors of horror, in answer to these things has sent to the bottom of the sea our neighbors and our relatives. O, God, how long!

The indulgence of Christianity has most patiently borne these indignities, yes, perhaps too long, and now declares the righteous purposes of free America. It seems to me this is the duty of religion. I cannot imagine it makes imbeciles of us. I cannot imagine that in the last extremity it restrains the defense of home and fireside, and loved ones, and the nation's honor and peril.

The Prince of peace told his disciples that he who had no sword, sell his garment and buy one. When Peter smote off the ear of the high priest's servant, the Lord healed the damage and ordered the sword sheathed. Put thy sword in his place, for he that taketh the sword shall perish by it, or he that lives by the sword, as it is also rendered, shall perish by it. To live by it is to continue by it.

I take it the Lord meant just what he said. We stand to-day in the presence of its fulfillment. Prussianism has placed its trust in the sword. Has lived under its protection. The arts of war have been cultivated and made a part of its national life. Has America done such? Has England done such? Has France done such? Prussianism has enforced a disciplined soldiery by profession. The huge gun factories, the huge munitions plants, all of these are mute witnesses of the cast and cult the Savior meant. God grant that in the drunken moment of this power the frenzied mind of militarism has made the fatal miscalculation and that we shall rise in hope in the promise and assurance of the Lord of lords and the King of kings, that he who liveth by the sword shall perish by it.

Who knows but Michael is still the great commander, and that the legions the Savior could call are soldiers for humanity. May we not indulge the hope that we see the passing away of these war trappings in the slow evolution of the processes? and that when the sword is cankered with rust, the oncoming generations may know that determination for principle is mightier than the sword.

GEORGE REEVES.

If it were possible to speak with the dialect of angels, while destitute of charity, it would profit us nothing. Should we attain the highest position in the science of literature; and, like the philanthropist of the ages past, bestow of our goods for the benefit of the poor, if charity be absent, we would be found like tinkling brass, an empty sound.—M. R. Scott, sr.

CHARACTER BUILDING--Part 3

BY WARDELL CHRISTY

THE TRUTH ABOUT NARCOTICS

You, no doubt, have heard some defender of the use of tea, coffee, and other narcotics quote with solemn sobriety the statement of the Savior as found in Matthew 15: 11, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man," and then make a few sarcastic remarks about the "crank," the "extremist," and the "hobbyist," and concludes he has made an invincible argument in favor of the indulgence in these stimulants. There is one trouble with this text and its application when made to do duty in defense of the use of narcotics, and that is that it is very likely to kick back with more force than it shoots forward.

It is taught in physics that the kick of a gun exactly equals the projectile force of the bullet. That is to say, the gun shoots both ways with equal force. It is just so with misapplied scripture, and their backward kick is even worse than the other. Intemperance in eating makes dyspeptics. Intemperance in drinking makes drunkards. Some day it may be thought to be about as wicked to be a dyspeptic as to be a drunkard. But if it be true that it is not what goes into the mouth that defiles a man, then the man who is a glutton is not sinning; the drunkard who soaks himself with the liquid fire and comes home and abuses his wife and children has not defiled himself with drink. It is only the fact that he lost his head that constitutes the sin; because, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man." I am convinced that it is not only possible but a truth, that one may defile one's body and greatly deplete mental and spiritual efficiency by improper indulgence.

Daniel and his associates so understood the matter. "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank; therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself." He refused to eat the meats and drink the intoxicating wines of the king's table, but chose rather the wholesome grains to eat, and the pure water to drink, the result of which is known to every Bible student in the land.

Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, Azariah, and Joseph are the type of men that are called real men.

Abraham Lincoln said: "If it is a crime to make a counterfeit dollar, it is ten thousand times a worse crime to make a counterfeit man," and the world is so abundantly afflicted at this time with the counterfeit, that the "good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net." What is the cause? Is it not in the making of the man? Is there some evil practice or habit that has destroyed the finer, better faculties? Is there something wrong with our manner of living? Let us see what the best students and scientists of the times have to say upon this all-important matter. Coombe, in his work, The Constitution of Man, says: "Every function of the mind and body is instituted by the Creator; each has a legitimate sphere of activity; but all may be abused; and it is impossible regularly to avoid abuse of them, except by being instructed in their nature, objects, and relations."

The source of all our sufferings, the greatest of all our enemies, is our ignorance. May God help us to see the light and cleave to the truth.

"Is there no such phenomenon on earth as a human being existing in full possession of organic vigor, from birth till advanced age when the organized system is fairly worn out?" That numberless examples of this kind have occurred, no one can deny, and they demonstrate that the corporeal frame of man is so constituted as to admit the possibility of his enjoying organic health and vigor during the period of a long life. In the life of Captain Cook we read:

One circumstance peculiarly worthy of notice is the perfect and uninterrupted health of the inhabitants of New Zealand. In all visits made to their towns where old and young men and women crowded about our voyagers, they never observed a single person who appeared to have any bodily complaint; nor among the members that were seen naked, was once perceived the slightest eruption upon the skin, or the least mark which indicated that such eruption had formerly existed.

Another proof of health of these people is the facility with which the wounds they at any time receive are healed. In the man who had been shot with the musket ball through the fleshy part of his arm, the wound seemed to be so well digested, and in so fair a way of being perfectly healed, that if Mr. Cook had not known that no application had been made to it, he declared that he should certainly have inquired, with a very interested curiosity, after the vulnerary herbs and surgical art of the country.

An additional evidence of the human natures being untainted with disease in New Zealand, is the great number of old men with whom it abounds. Many of them, by the loss of their hair and teeth, appeared to be very ancient, and yet none of them were decrepit. Although they were not equal to the young men in physical strength, they did not come in the least behind them with regard to cheerfulness and vivacity. Water, as far as our navigators could discover, is the universal and only liquor known to the New Zealanders. (It is greatly to be wished that their happiness in this respect may never be destroyed by such a connection with the European nations, as shall introduce that fondness for spirituous liquors which has been so fatal to the Indians of North America.)—Kippis' Life of Captain Cook, Dublin, 1788, p. 100.

These are interesting facts, and when compared with the conditions of the present time one is compelled to admit that something is radically wrong, and is there not great fault with our manner of living, eating, drinking, and sleeping? Doctor Henry T. Spaller asserts there are three million persons constantly sick in this country, a loss annually to our Nation of over three billion dollars. How about stopping some of this waste and giving a little more thought to the conservation of our health, along with this propaganda of food conservation that is going on?

This three billions of annual loss applies only to actual sickness. But good health is more than merely the absence of sickness. One may not be sick and still be only partly efficient. The moral, spiritual, mental, and physical mediocrity that exists in the church to-day is an occasion for concern. With all our boasted spiritual blessings and gifts of the Holy Ghost, which do exist beyond that enjoyed by any other religious sect, yet they do not abound as in the days of the apostles, and the men of the world are becoming more calloused and more difficult to interest in spiritual things every day.

The boy is the greatest asset of the church and Nation, and I believe that a greater percentage of the boys of the world are unreligious and indifferent to spiritual influences than at any time in the world's history. Good health is one hundred per cent physical efficiency. One hundred per cent physical efficiency means one hundred per cent pure soil for the sowing of gospel seed that will spring up into spiritual and moral fruitage. When in good health, the mere fact of being alive is happiness. Work and activity stand for joy.

It has been computed that the average individual of the United States loses between ten and eleven days each year through preventable sickness. The number of preventable deaths is estimated at seven hundred thousand annually, and, measured in dollars, the economic loss through preventable sickness and death, at the most conservative estimate, exceeds one and a half billions. Minor disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys, nerves, heart, etc., are far more common than most people realize. They must not be considered trivial, because eventually they lead to serious sickness. Practically all of the minor disorders are avoidable.

Our common American nervousness is usually due to the use of narcotics, living at too fast a pace, worry, or the neglect of proper rest, and is often an unsuspected and dangerous forerunner of troubles of the gravest sort. I am sure the Lord spoke well the needs of the people when he said we should be careful in what we eat, in what we drink, in how we dress, in how we sleep, all of which would be conducive to a sound body and a spiritual life.

Four hundred years ago, coffee as a beverage was practically unknown in the civilized portion of the world. When first introduced it was dispensed as a drug. Later houses were established where the decoction made from the coffee bean was sold. These places after a while, became a public nuisance. Many persons became so addicted to this beverage that they spent most of their time loitering about these resorts. A strong public sentiment was created against them, and eventually laws were enacted to close them up. Among the upper classes—those who could afford it—coffee continued to be used, because of its stimulating properties. The poor could not afford the beverage, for at that time coffee sold at from twelve to twenty dollars a pound. A laborer received not more than fifteen to twenty-five cents for a day's work. The use of coffee has enormously increased, especially during the last fifty years. It is no more regarded as a drug, but in many homes as an essential at every meal. Men, women, and children regard it as necessary to robust health and fitness. At present, about 2,500,000,000 pounds are consumed annually. In the United States alone about 1,000,000,000 pounds are consumed yearly—about one third of the world's coffee crop. (And did you know that the United States is first among the nations of the earth, if statistics are to be relied upon, in the use of all drugs? We spend $500,000,000 annually on drugs and medicines. We are a nation of drug fiends. We do not know how to live. We are not good animals.)

This means an annual consumption of about ten pounds per capita. If we figure one hundred cups to the pound (and this would be what the old coffee toper would call a good strength if well brewed), every person in the United States is drinking one thousand seven hundred grains of deadly poison, and three thousand two hundred forty grains of tannic acid every year in coffee, and about an equal amount in the tea that they drink. There is scarcely any difference between the two concoctions so far as poisons and tannic acid are concerned, tea containing a little less. In no other country, with the exception of Holland, is there as much coffee consumed per capita as in the United States. A lady who has had extended experience in serving coffee gave me the estimates of the number of cups one pound of coffee would brew, and when I told her the amount of poison and tannic acid she was drinking each year, her answer was, "Well, I would rather have a few days less of life and enjoy my coffee." If that were all that it did, it would not be so bad, but it not only shortens life but destroys to an extent the finer cells of the brain that are the seat of love and spirituality.

To transport the quantity of coffee berries annually used would require a freight train one hundred miles in length. This is by far the most widespread drug addiction we have in this country, and it is a drug addiction. The country is full of coffee addicts who can no more get along without their cup of coffee than can the drunkard without his accustomed glass of whisky.

We are informed by the Journal of Inebriety, that in Paris coffee inebriates are regarded as the most hopeless cases for hospital treatment. The brain and nerve degeneration is so extensive that dementia and insanity is the rule and recovery the exception. Women, it seems, are the chief sufferers from caffeinism, on account of their more delicate nervous organism. While men resort to alcohol, women resort to coffee and tea. A prominent member of the Norwegian temperance society is said to have developed cafemania and insanity caused wholly by the drinking of coffee. The abuse of coffee, it seems, was carried to such an extent in Norway that anticoffee societies were organized for the purpose of combating the evil. The Danish Government found it necessary actually to prohibit the sale of coffee to the inhabitants of its Greenland colonies because women became so generally addicted to its use. The complaint was that "women robbed their husbands to ruin to obtain that bean, to drink its decoction in incredible excess, during the absence of the men upon their fishing voyages." Coffee is not a food. It is taken solely because of its stimulating properties. Under its influence the brain is more active. This activity, however, is not normal. It removes the belt from the governor of the living engine and permits the mental machinery to run at random, with nothing to control it.

It is quite similar in its effect in this respect, to cocaine. Brain fag may be both the cause and the effect of the use of coffee. When there is brain fag, the wisest thing to do is to heed the admonition of nature, and permit the depleted brain cells the rest they need to become recharged with energy granules. The cup of coffee at this point merely squeezes out of the depleted brain cells a few of the remaining energy granules. It leaves them in a worse condition. The continuous brain spur given in this way, ultimately results in deterioration of the brain cells, and finally in a wrecked nervous system. Not a few of its ardent devotees close their career in asylums for the insane.

Coffee imparts neither energy nor strength. It merely pulls down the signals nature wisely erected, indicating the need of recuperation. It allows its victims to pass and unwarned. The roads that lead to physical destruction are wide, and the masses still go in thereat. The continuous use of caffein results in organic changes in the brain, the blood vessels, the heart, and various glands of the body. These conditions are rapidly increasing. Many of the popular beverages sold at soda fountains contain caffein.

Children and women become addicted to the use of them, not knowing the injury which results. There are many coca-cola fiends among office women. I know of women who use from ten to fifteen glasses of coca-cola daily. They cannot keep up, they say, without it.

Doctor Dixon, commissioner of health for the State of Pennsylvania, says:

Neither coffee nor tea is to be considered a food. Both are stimulants, and it is this which is responsible for their popularity. As with all other stimulants, there is a continual tendency to overindulgence, because a moderate allowance after a time fails to give the necessary incitement to the nervous system. While the mind is often stimulated to good work for a short time by coffee or tea, any stimulus which they give is transitory, for there is a period of depression following the use of all stimulants. Experiments have shown that overindulgence in both has a tendency, in the long run, to dull the working of the mind.

Doctor Harvey W. Wiley, former chief of Chemistry Bureau in the United States, says:

This country is full of tea and coffee drunkards. The most common drug in this country is caffein. Your children, innocent of any knowledge of its deleterious effects, consume it freely. They do this to their great physical and mental detriment. Coffee drunkenness is a commoner failing than the whisky habit. This misuse of caffein as a stimulant and as a beverage is more prevalent than the use of alcohol. Caffein has a direct tendency to create Bright's disease. Caffein is the essential alkaloid of coffee, as theine is of tea. Both are dangerous and detrimental drugs.

These are startling facts and should be the means of converting every preacher in the land to the total abstinence standard, and make every pulpit a living trumpet of warning to the membership and children of the church and of the world. The statement that "This misuse of caffein as a stimulant and as a beverage is more prevalent than the use of alcohol" is true, and the startling feature of the fact is that it is so universally fed to the children by innocent, yet ignorant parents.

The Texas State Board of Health, after careful investigation of nervousness and stupidity among school children, brought in the following report:

Children who drink coffee for breakfast come to school exhilarated. They work strenuously in the morning, and are overflowing with energy and vitality; but they do not last under the school routine. They become fatigued more quickly than the other pupils; and by the close of the afternoon they are exhausted to the point of stupidity. They are nervous, and therefore unstable in their deportment.

The number of children using these beverages is astounding, so much so as to concern the educators all over the land. Professor M. V. O'Shea, of the Wisconsin University, in speaking of the effect of caffein upon school children, says:

Investigations recently made in a large high school showed that eighty-three per cent of the pupils use tea or coffee, or both, habitually. Some said they could not eat a meal

"without something to drink." [Let me insert here, that this must be the reason why the Lord said to the church, "use barley for mild drinks," so many have been educated to think that a flavored drink is essential, so he provided a pleasant and harmless grain to be used.—W. C.] Many of them confessed that they were restless in their sleep, and a few said that they could hardly get any sleep at all at nights. They thought their trouble was due to their having too much to do at school. They are constantly overstimulated by the alkaloids in tea, coffee, and cocoa, and consequently are in no condition to do thoroughly good work in school. Moreover, they are high-strung and irritable. When I see a mother punish a nervous, sleepless, irritable child, and know that she is feeding it drugs at every meal to produce the very results she is trying to "beat" out of her child, I am compelled to take a walk to prevent saying something cutting, at least. If your children are drinking tea and coffee regularly, they are simply building up barriers in their paths.

Now when a child forms one drug habit, is it not liable later to take up with another, and still another? There is in their restless little bodies a continual craving for stimulation. It is a short step from coffee to the cigarette and sometimes then to heroin or cocaine. Doctor Buck says:

The nervousness and peevishness of our times are chiefly attributable to tea and coffee. Fine ladies addicted to the use of strong coffee have a characteristic temper, which I might describe as a mania for acting the persecuted saint.

This result is so manifested with the users of narcotics in every walk of life. The cigarette fiend, the tobacco addict, is terribly offended and persecuted when the preacher gets on to his narcotic corns, and he would like to have him dismissed at once, but failing to possess the power, he resorts to the plea of, unwise attack, antagonizing the users (and all this, shall I call it camouflage?), if not, we can at least say this is the most convenient "bush" for a guilty conscience.

There can be no question but that the nervousness produced by caffeine makes a demand, in time, for other narcotics which can be more conveniently employed, and thus this habit leads to various other drug addictions.

Doctor Evans, in speaking of this, says:

Drug habits are more or less interchangeable. When a person has one drug habit, he is prone to pick up another. It is a rule that a person with one drug habit is addicted to the use of more than one drug. A fiend will drop one habit and pick up another. The craving for tea and that for whisky, the hunger for the cigarette and that for a dose of morphine, are of the same kind. Each comes of inborn willingness to cheat in playing the game of life. As a result, let us say, of overwork, a person is nervous. If he is perfectly poised, he will hold himself in hand by exercise of will power until he can recuperate through rest. If he is not thoroughly balanced, he will soothe his nerves by smoking a cigarette, a pipe, a cigar, or drinking a cup of coffee or tea. One cigarette leads to another.

Some are surprised to learn that women are taking up with the cigarette. I am not. Knowing how intimately the use of coffee stands related to the use of the cigarette, I am surprised that cigarette smoking is not more prevalent among women than it is. Coffee drinking paves the way for the cigarette addiction. Among men, nearly all heavy coffee drinkers are also heavy smokers. There are very few exceptions. Let the public prejudice against the cigarette be removed, and this practice will spread with surprising rapidity among American women. Especially will this be the case as the use of the beverage becomes more common.

Coffee, if taken at all, should be properly dispensed by druggists, the same as other habit-forming drugs, and only when advised by a physician. There is no up-to-date physician to-day who does not recognize coffee as a dangerous drug for children to use, and who is ignorant of its influence upon the human body when used continuously as a beverage. It is withheld from nervous and insane subjects. Prevention is better than cure.

I have undoubtedly given enough damaging evidence against this monstrous enemy of the church and the world at large to drive some of its ardent admirers mad, but I hope you will not turn your besom of wrath upon the writer, for I am doing you no injury, but turn it upon the real enemy, tea, coffee, tobacco, whisky, and other drugs, and we will drive them out of the home, out of the church, and eventually out of the land, back to where they belong.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

JEWS AND THE OPPRESSED OF THEIR RACE

Many Jews in America had little reason to sympathize with England, France, Italy, and Russia at the outbreak of the war against the Teutonic powers. The memory of hideous wrongs suffered at the hand of Von Plehve and other tools of an autocratic Russian government were too recent. It was true Prussian autocracy had plunged the world into war for political reasons best known to itself, but it was equally true that England, France, and later, Italy, had leagued themselves with a more arrogant and malignant autocracy—imperial Russia—to thwart the Prussian overlords. A Jew could not see many good reasons why he should lend support to a cause which, if successful, meant only the further aggrandizement of a brutal and cynical European power that had, for centuries, been the chief oppressor of the Semitic race.

But with the coming of the Russian Revolution and the granting of equal rights to the Jews in Russia, followed by the entrance of the land of their adoption into the war against Prussianism, all was changed. The American Jew, with the enthusiasm of his race for justice and equal rights for all, cast in his lot unreservedly with the allies and contributed his sons and his money to the cause of democracy.

The Jew has the reputation of knowing a good thing when he sees it. The Jews in America know that this Government has given them what they long had sought in vain in almost every European country—absolute freedom to live their own lives in their own way, and to pursue without restriction the art of peace, unmolested by hampering, much less oppressive legislation, directed at them as a race.

In America the Jews have prospered as in no other country, possibly excepting England, and nowhere have they been given the complete confidence of their neighbors, and their esteem and trust, as they have here in the United States. Disraeli rose high in the councils of the British Empire, as have others of his people since. Here in America, Jews have been given even more substantial proofs of public esteem and confidence. Only a year ago was Louis Brandeis elevated to the supreme bench. To-day Julius Rosenwald, known not only at home but abroad for his remarkable business acumen and his munificent charities, handles weekly for the Government millions of dollars of public funds, at his own discretion, and no man questions his absolute integrity.

Instances of this kind could be multiplied, and they, in a measure, explain the enthusiasm of the Jewish people here for the cause of democracy in this world war. The Jews are only repaying, with their customary prodigality, the friendship shown them by a liberal government.

But back of all this lies a deeper and a nobler feeling, an aroused sense of indignation against an autocratic power that ruthlessly plunged the world into war to gratify selfish political ambitions—an autocratic power that to-day is carrying into the conquered portions of Russia a deeper distress and a more acute suffering than the Jewish people were forced to bear under the rule of the czar and his creatures.

The condition of the Jews in Poland was pitiful three and a half years ago; to-day it is frightful. The martyrdom of almost an entire nation was never before in the history of the world worked out under such heart-rending circumstances and so brutally and with such cynicism.

The Jews in America want this stopped, and, as they have so often before come to the succor of the oppressed with their sympathy and their goods, they now are responding magnificently, from the least to the greatest, with their blood and their money. Jews purchased liberally in the three Liberty Loan campaigns, besides devoting their time and energies to the successful flotation of these loans.

Better to hear, and pass in silence, than to hear, resent, and make trouble for himself and others.—Joseph Smith.

The Weaver

"This morn I will weave my web," she said,
As she stood by her loom in the rosy light,
And her young eyes hopefully glad and clear
Followed after the swallow's flight.
As soon as the day's first tasks are done,
"While yet I am fresh and strong," she said,
"I will hasten to weave my beautiful web, Whose pattern is known to none but me."

"I will weave it fair, and I will weave it fine,
And ah! how the colors will glow," she said.
"So fadeless and strong will I weave my web,
That perhaps it will live when I am dead."
But the morning hours sped on apace,
The air grew sweet with the breath of June,
And young Love hid by the waiting loom,
Tangled her threads as she hummed a tune.

"Ah, life is so rich and full," she said,
"And morn is short though the day is long,
This noon I will weave my beautiful web,
I will weave it faithfully, fine and strong."
But the sun rose high in the cloudless sky,
The burden and heat of the day she bore,
And hither and thither she came and went,
And the loom stood still as it stood before.

"And now I will weave my web," she said,
As she turned to her loom ere the set of sun,
And laid her hand on the shining threads
To set them in order one by one.
But hand was tired and heart was weak—
"I am not so strong as I was," sighed she,
"And the pattern is blurred and the colors rare,
Are not so fine or so fair to see."

"I must wait, I think, till another morn,
I must go to my rest with my work undone,
It is growing too dark to weave," she said,
As lower and lower sank the sun.
She dropped the shuttle, the loom stood still,
The weaver slept in the twilight gray,
Dear heart, will she weave her beautiful web,
In the golden light of another day?

Heaven Is Not Far

So far removed, so far away,
I sense the parting and its greatest pain,
I stretch my empty hands to reach
And draw them empty to my side again.

Gone! All I had—my constant friend,
Where shall I turn to reach again the hand
That led me upward through the way of life,
Since she has left me for that far-off land?

Ah, little girl, the land is not so far away,
And she who loved you shall be nearer than you know,

For heaven is not far, if you will make it near.
Still can she help you as you onward go.

Yet can she touch your life and lead you upward still
If you but cling and closer, closer lean
To Him, who out of love divine, we know not why,
Took back your "all and all" in death serene.

MARCELLA SCHENCK.

We Shall Know Each Other Better

We shall know each other better,
You have often heard them say,
In the dim and distant future
When the mists have rolled away.

Don't you think it would be better,
Ere such a picture we have painted,
To greet our fellows as they pass
And try to get acquainted?

Don't offend or hurt their feelings
'Cause they don't think just like you,
For the eyes through which they're looking
Have a different point of view.

If you'll only try a little
Maybe you will understand,
You will feel more kindly toward them
And will lend a helping hand.

If we'll practice altruism,
Spread its teachings day by day,
Life's weary game will be worth playing
There'll be no mists to roll away.

J. W. ALDRIDGE.

So Easy

So easy to say what another should do,
So easy to settle his cares,
So easy to tell him what road to pursue,
And dispose of the burdens he bears.
It is easy to bid him be brave and be strong,
And to make all his shortcomings known;
But, oh, it's so hard when the care and the wrong
And the dangers we face are our own.

It is easy to stand in the other man's place
When our comforts of life are assured,
And the sting of the rain beating sharp in his face
By him must be bravely endured.
It is easy to tell him the path he should take,
And bid him to laugh at his care;
But oh, it's so hard when it's our hearts that ache
And we have the burdens to bear.

We all know the things that another should do,
His faults are like books on our shelves;
We can ponder them over and read and review,
But we haven't a book on ourselves.
We can settle the other man's troubles each day,
His griefs we can calmly discuss;
It is easy to sweep all his troubles away,
But we can't do the same thing for us.

The need of another it's easy to see
When our own wants are all satisfied,
And bold and courageous it's easy to be
When it isn't our souls that are tried.
But oh, it's so hard when we're stumbling along
To keep ourselves steadfast and true;
It is easy to tell some one else to be strong,
It's easier to talk than to do.
—Edgar A. Guest, in Detroit Free Press.

What I Can and Cannot Do

I cannot stay the course of time,
For o'er my head 'twill ever fly,
Still I am given rights divine,
That even time cannot destroy;
Kind deeds and words which never die
I'm privileged to do and say,
And these while time is fleeting by
I want to scatter by the way.

I cannot stop the orb of day
From rising in the east,
Dispelling darkness from my way,
Till he sets in the west;
But in the course I daily run,
By loving-kindness I can show,
That I can be a little sun,
To lighten some dark lives I know.

I cannot still the tempest's blast,
Which sweeps along with mighty force,
To spread destruction in its path,
And leaving ruin in its course;
But by the grace of God I may
My spirit govern and control,
And prove to all from day to day,
God's Spirit's power o'er my soul.

The onward rushing of the tide,
E'en for a moment I can't stay,
Spread on the beach both far and wide,
Till ebb time comes, the floods hold sway;
But rising passions in my soul,
Struggling the mastery to gain,
Through power divine I must control,
And ebb them from my life again.

I cannot stop temptations
Which sometimes try me sore,
They come 'gainst my volition
And manifest their power;
But I can resist the Devil,
And 'tis written he will flee,
And from the power of evil,
Christ Jesus makes me free.

Oh! tell me, what a Savior
Hath God the Father given,
Truly no greater favor
Can e'er be had from heaven;
And to all who will receive him,
His "well beloved Son,"
To them the power is given,
His children to become.

If children then, then heirs we'll be,
 Joint heirs with Christ the Lord,
 Oh! what a blessed company,
 Is set forth in God's Word;
 And while I cannot stop the tide,
 The tempest wild, the rays of light,
 In Christ the Lord I may abide,
 And I can walk with him in white.

MY PRAYER

And this my prayer shall ever be,
 That God in mercy, love, and power,
 Protect his Saints on land and sea,
 In every tempting, trying hour.

PHILEMON PEMENT.

The Aftermath

No more shall the war cry sever,
 Nor the fields of France be red;
 For the sword has been turned to plowshares,
 And wheat has been planted for bread.

No more shall womanhood crouch in fear,
 At the sound of approaching feet,
 Nor her robes of virtue be cast aside
 As fiend and angel meet.

No more shall the wail of an infant,
 Nailed to a peasant's door,
 Mingle its moans with the cannon,
 As it echoes along our shore.

No more shall a mother's face grow pale,
 As she scans the list of dead,
 But her heart shall sing a song of praise,
 How it pillowed a hero's head.

No more will the slacker show his face,
 Nor walk the streets of fame,
 But he'll drink to the dregs of a bitter cup,
 That heralds a coward's shame.

No more shall the hand of oppression
 Bow to a kaiser's call,
 For the time has come when kings and thrones
 At the feet of Democracy fall.

EFFIE AMES VAN FLEET.

Instead of peace, I was to participate in war; instead of the sweetness of home, I was to become a wanderer on the face of the earth; but I have felt that a great promotion came to me when I was counted worthy to be a worker in the organized crusade for "God and Home and Native Land."
 —Frances Willard.

Avail yourself of every opportunity for personal qualification. Be ready for the highest position in your chosen calling. If you do not like your calling, get out of it, even though you are in the highest position it can offer, and take the lowest position in a calling for which you have an affinity. This is honest. It is dishonest to cheat your God-given faculties by submerging them under a round of activity that does not develop the best that is in you.—Common Sense Sayings.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON (5026 Cal. St., Omaha, Nebr.)

The Awakened Woman

(Concluding portion of Sister Anderson's address at Independence, Missouri.)

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE

Activities for uplift and betterment of home and community are but an outgrowth of the light which comes to a woman through proper directing of her thought and study. Turn a woman's attention from the silly things of vanity and society, to an appreciation of those eternal in their valuation, and with that turning comes the desire to carry the beacon into other homes, to other women. Let a woman see the beauty of a well-ordered home for herself and family, will she not at once desire to help her neighbor get the same vision? The civic improvement clubs, the gardening clubs, the home economics, and child-welfare groups, which have for their object the doing of things which will purify the environment for themselves, their children, or their community, are only a part of the workings of our Home and Child Welfare department. A woman by herself can perhaps do little to improve the morals of the nearest picture show, or the sanitary conditions of the corner grocery but a group of women patrons of these places can, and that very easily. When a woman calls upon a grocer and requests him, in the name of an organized group of his patrons, to clean up his store, screen his food, and otherwise observe the laws of health and sanitation, he will quickly "sit up and take notice!" These things are right, and all of us should know that we are being properly shielded from disease at these sources of our food supply.

RELIEF AND SERVICE

In this department those tender impulses which have marked woman's character from the beginnings of history find expression. The spirit which causes one to go out from a home of comfort into one where want, illness, or discouragement reigns, there to minister in love and sympathy, is but a reflection of the divine impulse which found expression on the shores of Galilee. The field is broad; it includes, as we interpret the work of the department, service in whatever capacity. It means that service which is required by our Government as well as our God. The woman who toils in the workroom of the Red Cross, or who ministers in the home, who works in the branch, the choir, the aid society, or who, finding want anywhere, enlists others to help relieve it—all these are active in this most useful branch of our auxiliary work. No woman can find excuse for not being enlisted in this department, for it is the one which calls into action her most distinctly feminine characteristics of heart and mind. It is upon this department which so many branches have leaned in the past, where the woman raised money for a church lot, to build a church, or to furnish one in comfort and cleanliness. It is in this department that women meet to quilt, or mend, or carry baskets to the needy; where they place flowers upon the pulpit as a beauty offering to the Lord who meets us there, or puts them upon the table by the bed of suffering, to express love, and kindly thought, and prayer. This is the oldest of our departments, for the "aid" society existed before the other possibilities materialized.

THE YOUNG WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT

In the young woman's department is our hope for the future. In the past, women have been thought, too frequently, to be endowed by some mysterious power, with intelligence enough to care for a home, to bear and rear a family, without any previous preparation on her part for such work. Most women knew little or nothing of the principles of successful home making when they married, and still less of the care of children until that duty came to them. In the past, the criterion of a woman's success as a cook, was whether or not John was pleased. If he praised her pudding she was radiant; if he scowled, she went off and cried! If her child refused porridge, she gave it cake; if she thought cream would add to John's delight in his coffee, she did not hesitate to skim it from the baby's milk! To-day she awakes with a start to a knowledge of the fact that John can spare the cream a hundred times better than the baby, or that the money she has been spending upon the family table, could be cut in half with twice the benefit! She gasps at the problems which confront her, but, being of the sort that is not awakened in vain, she is joining with her neighbor in a determined attempt to study out these questions, and—just here is where this young woman's department is justified—she is determined also that her daughter shall be better qualified for home making than she ever was! She is placing before the young women of the church to-day, the many opportunities she herself lacked, to become better acquainted with the vital things of life, and to estimate at a truer value the things about her. Too many girls have failed in the past because of getting their values twisted; they esteemed the light and passing trivialities to be essential to happiness—and awoke to sorrow!

THESE MODERN TIMES

It has, in some quarters, become the custom to decry the "tendency of the times." In many ways, it is to be deplored, for we have lost much of the simplicity of bygone days. We are no longer content with the homely joys which once delighted. Where now do we find the home circles intact of evenings after the children have grown? Where do we find, frequently, the gathering about the piano, and the old-fashioned singing together? If they sing, is it not ragtime?

But, while we deplore the loss of the good old fashions, the quiet reading aloud under the evening lamp, or the enjoyment of popping corn or making taffy—all together—must we not rejoice at the loss of some that were not so good? There were old-fashioned errors, you know. One of these was a false modesty which prevented a mother frankly explaining the mysteries of the laws of life to her daughter—as many a woman in ill health to-day can testify! Old-fashioned standards, twisted and distorted, had it that a boy must "sow his wild oats." And the old-fashioned father, aware of the pit, kept silence, when it was anything but "golden"! Many a boy fell headlong, when light (intelligence) would have saved him!

As a child, I remember walking home from church on dark nights, with one of the family carrying a lantern to light the way. That was before the days of the great electric ways with which we are now so familiar. When a particularly deep hole was reached in the path, or a particularly slippery place, how carefully would the lantern-bearer throw the light upon the dangerous spot, that none might fall unaware! Would to God the lantern-bearers in the moral world were as solicitous! What was a tumble in the mud, that could be washed off from clothing or skin, to a wallowing in moral slime which can neither be cleansed from the mind or the body?

Modern ways are better. We are learning that it is practically impossible to cleanse the environment from all impurity, therefore we must teach the children to walk therein with impunity, with clear eyes open to evil and danger, and spirits so high that they will deliberately and unfalteringly choose the good and the pure. We should awaken in a child an unerring appreciation of right values; show him the joy of life, even while we warn him of its unsightly sores! We should not fill the mind of a child with dread and apprehension to the exclusion of faith and joy; he should be imbued with a strong confidence in the triumph of good, the tendency to which none of us can ultimately escape. If a child goes out from our home and our care—and go he will, sooner or later—unprepared to withstand the onslaughts of evil and unfit to take his place among the strong ones of the earth, efficient citizens of a noble republic (either earthly or heavenly), then we have failed as parents, whether we are in homes of ease or poverty. If the inmates of our homes are not able to find there the joy and peace of body, mind, and spirit which are essential to best endeavor on their part, we are failures as mothers and home makers. If the community or the State is unable to count upon us as staunch supporters in every good movement, we are failures as citizens, and if we do not live near to the Source of our strength and life, if we fail to make our friendship with God, we are failures as citizens of that spiritual realm to which we are all drifting with swiftness and certainty.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

If the signs of the times count for anything at all, we surely must be careful to stand in holy places continually. If the beautiful things we have planned and talked about so long are really practicable, and a Zion is to be established in the latter days by this church, we are on the verge of doing things, not talking and dreaming them only! Character forming has been going on all these years, by loving and serving, and by living the laws of the church as we were able to understand them, paying what we owe to God, being liberal in good ways with what we might use for ourselves, giving of our time, our talents, and our means for the furtherance of this beautiful ideal, being patient in affliction, charitable to all, and in every way glorifying the great cause we love! Thus, unconsciously we have been shaping our lives into some small semblance of the self-effacing Example!

All this molding is now to be put to the test, and bear fruit in startling ways, if our hope is not vain! We should be greatly encouraged; we should lift our faces high to that of our divine Leader, and draw comfort and sustaining courage therefrom! Old prejudices, old hurts and grievances, should vanish as the dews of the night before the warming sun of unity and love! We should see behind a brother's action, his better thought and intent. We should feel his desire to be of help, to offer his "bit" to the cause! We should leave off our bickerings, our fault-findings, our cold criticisms; we should be alert to the workings of love in our breasts—that love which characterized the saints of old, and which does exist in our souls to-day, for one another! We have been blind to these eternal influences; we have looked upon the outward, and felt ill at ease, because we could not understand our brother. Let us see, now, that the light and love of God, which has come to dwell in our hearts, is pointing out to us the beauty, the real sweetness, and the wholesomeness of each other's characters. Let us not stint our praise and encouragements; life is hard at best, and coldly cruel when we are misunderstood.

THIS TERRIBLE WAR

This fearful war is breaking down many false ideas which have dominated in the past to our hurt. Even as Moses broke to pieces the golden image the benighted Israelites had fashioned, and by so doing led them to truer conceptions, so are many self-made gods to-day being crushed beneath the law of common necessity. Side by side in the camp, on the march, in the trenches, at their books, are working the young men from the office, and the farm, the stage, and the pulpit. Soft hands and horny ones are grasping the implements of war, and are finding thereby a common heritage, a common brotherhood.

In the Red Cross rooms white hands toil close to roughened ones, in a common love and sorrow. The "self" idea is vanishing before the great leveler of a common need. Professional men bend their skill, their means, and their labor to the common good; we are breaking through the crust of self-interest, to find suddenly that our brother's good has become our own! Did not Christ live to demonstrate this very truth? Mothers are kissing their soldier boys good-by, and across the gulf of old-time customs and conventions, are clasping understanding hands with each other. The Nation is on its knees—is seeking and finding its God! Where? In the common service to the common brotherhood of the race! Can we say that the Guide of the Universe is not in this war, when already we see results such as these?

It is a spiritual conflict, if ever there was one. Victory will perch upon the banner of those hosts which keep their spirits high, which are most closely attuned to divine principles, and which are upon the planes of the best and truest valuations! Old things are to vanish before the better ones ahead. Greed and grinding will give way to unity of effort and purpose, and out of the chaos will come spiritual perceptions and spiritual life!

THE AWAKENED WOMAN

The awakened woman is trimming her lamp, and filling it with the oil of glad service. She is realizing that in her home is to be found a field of activity and enjoyment as wide as heaven itself. In it there is inspiration for all that is best and noblest in her nature, and no phase of her work there is insignificant in the sight of the Creator. She is learning, too, that her "home" is not bounded by the former narrow confines, but includes whatever realm she can occupy to the good of others.

Old things of trivial nature do not satisfy her cravings now; she must "be about her Father's business," filling, to the best of her powers, that nook which is hers. She feels the spirit of cooperative life flowing through her, and finds in the activities of her sisters, constant inspiration to better effort. She strives to so order her heart, her home, and her heritage of body, mind, and spirit, that none may come within the radius of her influence without feeling that it has its source with the true Spirit of the Universe. She wonderingly senses that the corner in which she is called to labor, is in truth, as wide as space, one from which heavenly influences should flow to the uttermost bounds of creation.

She is upon her knees in humility; she is at her books, lectures, wherever she can imbibe useful knowledge, not forgetting the greatest of all books, the book of life, which is open for her profitable study every day, in the persons of her family or neighbors.

May God help every Latter Day Saint woman to yearn after her birthright of light and guidance! May he direct her in every real effort for improvement of herself or her home, and enable her to see the peculiar and important part she has to play in the work of establishing the Lord's Zion here upon earth!

"Take the Loan"

(Verse written by Edward Everett Hale in 1861 and found by his son, Professor Hale.)

The poem, "Take the loan," which was written by Edward Everett Hale in May, 1861, is herewith republished by request. It was set to music and sung through the country in the fall of '61. It was found by Professor Edward Everett Hale of Union College in his father's Civil War diary. Here is the poem:

Come, freemen of the land,
Come meet the great demand,
True heart and open hand—
Take the loan.
For the hope the prophets saw,
For the swords your brothers draw,
For liberty and law,
Take the loan.

Ye ladies of the land,
As ye love the galland band,
Who have drawn a soldier's brand,
Take the loan.
Who would bring them what she could,
Who would give the soldiers food,
Who would stanch her brother's blood,
Take the loan.

All who saw our hosts pass by,
All who joined the parting cry,
When we bade them do or die,
Take the loan.
As ye wished their triumph then,
As ye hope to meet again,
And to meet their gaze like men,
Take the loan.

Who would press the great appeal,
Of our ranks of serried steel,
Put your shoulder to the wheel,
Take the loan.
That our prayers in truth may rise,
Which we press with streaming eyes,
On the Lord of earth and skies,
Take the loan.

What a lot of time we waste wondering about things that are none of our business and worrying about things that never happen!—Youth's Companion.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

April a Month of Important Events

I just picked up a history of the present world war entitled America and the Great War for Humanity and Freedom, written by Willis Fletcher Johnson, A. M., L. H. D. The first chapter is opened by a statement that seems quite significant, in view of the fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ was organized in the month of April. The statement is:

"It was April, the most famous month in history. It was in April, 1135, that the Norsemen discovered Greenland on their way to the pre-Columbian discovery of America, and it was in April, 1492, that Columbus was called to the Spanish Court and was commissioned to sail upon his epoch-making voyage. It was in that same month, the 'Month of openings,' that Ponce de Leon landed in Florida; that Cortes began the conquest of Mexico; that the Virginia colony was chartered; that Henry Hudson began the voyage in which he discovered the river which bears his name; that the Plymouth Pilgrims received their patent; that La Salle took possession of the Mississippi Valley for France; that the French and Indian War was begun; that taxation of the Colonies by Parliament without their representation was first proposed.

"It was in April that our Revolution began at Lexington, Concord, and Boston; that the American Navy took its first prize in war; that Lafayette landed on our shores; that Arnold began his treason; that the first American man-of-war was built; that the British Government sent peace commissioners to meet our own; that George III ratified the treaty of peace with America, and that the ending of the War for Independence was proclaimed.

"It was in April that Washington designed the Stars and Stripes, and that the flag in its present form was first displayed. It was in April that Washington was elected and inaugurated President; that Louisiana was purchased; that the United States mint was established; that the Mexican War was begun, and ended; that the Spanish War was begun and that the treaty of peace at its end was proclaimed. It was in April that Putnam, Jefferson, Monroe, Clay, and Grant were born, and that Lincoln suffered martyrdom. . . . At eleven minutes after one o'clock on the afternoon of April 6—Good Friday—the President affixed his signature to the resolution, and that moment marked the official entrance of the United States into the World War."

It might well be added that it was in April that the first conference of the church met and organized under divine direction in the last dispensation preceding Christ's second coming; that his people organized to wage the last great struggle in establishing truth and overcoming error.

Sincerely,

J. A. BRONSON.

Toronto Branch Items

I am agreeably surprised. The people of Canada are little different from the people of the United States. Saint Paul was right when he said, "God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." True Latter Day Saints have much in common. The Spirit of Christ is a world-wide solvent. It breaks down racial prejudices, obliterates imaginary boundary lines, and reveals a common brotherhood.

There is a splendid group of Saints left in Toronto. These Saints are consecrated and devoted to the church. They are working for the glory of God. They are determined that no man shall lead them from Christ; that no spirit shall lure them from the strait and narrow way.

Our meetings are fairly well attended. We have about two hundred active church members. The attendance at the services during the past two weeks was about as follows: Sunday school, 120; Religio, 75; prayer services, 150; Sunday morning preaching, 200; evening preaching, 300.

There were sixteen applications for membership at the last session of the Religio. The Sunday school secretary's report last Sunday showed an increased attendance of nine over the previous week. The attendance at the church services is increasing.

The prayer services are far above the ordinary. The spirit of amity and good will is contagious. On every hand we hear remarks like these; "We have not had such meetings for years"; "My heart is full to overflowing"; "I never felt the Spirit of God in such power"; "Surely God is with us, for our meetings are now so harmonious and peaceful"; "God has witnessed to me that the church is right"; "I thank God that he has kept me in the faith"; "My eyes have been opened"; "I want to unselfishly consecrate my services to the upbuilding of this church."

The Sunday school selected officers last Sunday to serve for the ensuing six months as follows: Superintendent, Leslie Prentiss; assistant superintendent, Martha Forrest; secretary, Charles A. McLean; assistant secretary, Lois Bryan; treasurer, Bessie Wilson; chorister, Emily Shaw; assistant chorister, Thomas Seaton; pianist, Vera Clark; assistant pianist, Ruth McLean; librarian, Thomas Hay, janitor, Alexander Forrest.

July 1 is a legal holiday throughout Canada. It is called Dominion Day. The Toronto Sunday school will hold a picnic on this day at Hyde Park. The Davisville and Humber Bay Sunday schools have been invited to cooperate. It is proposed to make this a "get-together" picnic for all the Saints of Toronto and environs.

Early in the year it was decided to hold the Toronto Branch reunion beginning July 27. Owing to the exigencies which have arisen and the industrial and economic embargo which is the necessary concomitant of war it has been decided to first ascertain the number which will probably attend before going ahead with our preparations. If the Saints and friends who desire to attend will please notify the undersigned by immediate post it will be appreciated.

Brethren Benjamin McGuire and John W. Rushton who have been with us for a few weeks left recently for New York. Brother McGuire will return to Independence, Missouri, and Brother Rushton will return to Toronto about the first of July and remain for two weeks and then on to California.

Brother and Sister Frederick M. Smith have left for Philadelphia and Washington, District of Columbia.

Brother R. C. Russell was a recent visitor. He is still weak from his siege of pneumonia, but is convalescent. Apparently he has lost none of his "Irish brogue" and "mither wit." From close inspection, I am convinced that he is not yet ready to die.

The Toronto branch officers are industrious and vigilant. Brother Archibald McLean has acquitted himself as a branch president in an admirable and creditable manner under the most trying circumstances. I am sure it will be a pleasure to work with him.

The brethren at Guelph have decided to hold an all-day rally meeting and have invited Brethren F. G. Pitt, John W.

Rushton and T. W. Williams to be speakers. This meeting will be held on Sunday, June 30. There is no branch at this point, but the few Saints residing there are determined to make one supreme effort to establish the work and, if possible, organize a branch. Brother D. B. Perkins, president of the Owen Sound District, and Fred J. Furness of Hespelar are arranging the meetings.

Brethren "Jack" Whitehead and Fred Long filled appointments at Cooksville and Beeton yesterday. At the latter point four were baptized. These brethren were accompanied in their work by Harry Alexander and "Joe" Williams.

The weather so far is ideal—a la California. Brother "Ed" Law, a stanch Latter Day Saint, has opened his home to "ye elders." The hospitality of himself and family is proverbial.

This is registration week in Canada. Every person over sixteen years of age, male or female, resident or visitor, must register. The purpose of the registration is to supply the government with the necessary information as to the availability of men and women for industrial service.

The Woman's Auxiliary has elected the following officials for the ensuing six months: President, Effie Seaton; vice president, Mary Wilson; secretary, Alice McLean; treasurer, Margaret Crowley. It is the desire of the local organization to be affiliated with the general church Auxiliary.

The officers of the Religio elected for the ensuing six months are: President, M. J. Crowley; vice president, Harry Alexander; secretary, Sister Monny Forrest; assistant secretary, Edith McGuire; librarian, Alexander Forrest; organist, Vera Clark; assistant organist, Ruth McLean; janitor, Thomas Hay; critic, T. W. Williams; home class superintendent, Frank Clifton.

The following resolution was unanimously passed by the Religio:

"Resolved, That we rescind the former action of this body relating to a rejection of the measures adopted by the general association and that we herewith express our confidence in and accord with the parent body."

The Sunday school yesterday passed by unanimous vote the following resolution:

"Whereas, Our former action relating to the Coordinating Committee's report was based on a misunderstanding and misapplication of said report, therefore be it

"Resolved that we rescind our action and herewith express ourselves as being in accord with the action of the Sunday School Convention and the General Conference."

Sunday is a busy day in Toronto. Priesthood prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; branch prayer meeting at 9.30 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m.; Sunday school at 3 p. m.; preaching at 7 p. m.

The preaching Sunday morning was by Brother F. G. Pitt; his theme, "Try the Spirits." It was a practical, plain exegesis and particularly appropriate. A wayfaring man, if not a fool, could understand and apply. It was well received.

T. W. Williams was the evening speaker; his theme, "Following Jesus. Why? How?"

My present address is Hillsdale Avenue, Toronto, Canada.

Sincerely, your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

Organization of Branch at Bates City

The organization of a branch at Bates City was effected on Sunday, June 9, 1918. This is the fifth branch organized in the Holden Stake since its organization. Bates City is located just over the boundary from Jackson County in Lafayette County, and is surrounded by a good farming country. A few years ago Brother Edmund Ford and family, formerly of Mallard, Iowa, located there and established themselves on farms surrounding the town, and they have been a stay to the work. Through the efforts of the few Saints there and those of the ministry working in the old Independence Stake they have succeeded in building a church, which has been paid for and dedicated. There are at present about thirty Saints living in the vicinity of this branch, some fine church workers, and a number of prospectives.

About twenty Saints drove over from Holden, and Bishop Ellis Short and Ellis, jr., from Independence, to be present at the organization. The regular Sunday school session was held in the morning, Brother Frank E. Ford, the superintendent, having charge. Brother Isaac M. Ross, assistant superintendent of the Sunday school association of the stake, addressed the school at the close. At eleven o'clock Brother F. A. McWethy, of the stake presidency, and Bishop Ellis Short gave very interesting addresses. At the noon hour all of the Saints assembled on the lawn of Brother Edmund Ford, where dinner was served.

At two o'clock the Saints met for organization, with the stake presidency in charge. Previous to taking up the business connected with organization about half an hour was spent in prayer service which was attended by the good Spirit. The name of Brother Frank E. Ford was presented by the stake presidency for ordination to the office of elder, the presidency stating that they had received very clear direction that the brother was entitled to that office and should be ordained. This was attested to by a number of the eldership. Brother Ford expressed himself as not being ready to accept at the present time. In harmony with his statement further consideration was deferred. Upon nomination of the stake presidency Edmund Ford was chosen president of the branch. Sister Frank E. Ford was chosen secretary; James Ford, treasurer; Lissie Snodgrass, member of library board; Wesley Ballinger, member of gospel literature board; Frank E. Ford, agent for the bishop, and chorister; Minnie Harp, organist.

Brother Davis of Oklahoma and Brother Esgar of Independence have recently purchased farms here and their arrival is looked forward to with pleasure by the Bates City Saints. Brother Davis occupies the office of elder and Brother Esgar the office of deacon, and we anticipate they will be of assistance to the work when they are fully located.

We feel that we should not close this report without referring to the manner in which Brother Ford responded to the call to move in and occupy. He was formerly president of the branch at Mallard, Iowa. About thirteen years ago he with his family left there and located at Bates City with the thought in mind that he had permanently settled with his family in harmony with the direction. As the years went by, with added age he was forced to give up the activities of the farm, and moved into town. In connection with the family he now owns about nine hundred acres of land in the region where the Lord said his Saints should purchase. There are many families who could have done likewise, but have had a deaf ear to the word which was given so long ago. The call to move in and occupy in harmony with the commandments, is as binding on the church to-day as the day when it was given. There will undoubtedly be slothful servants along this line as well as along other lines. There is only one thing the Lord has told his people to buy, and that is "the land." The land will abide while oil stocks may evaporate and other ventures fail and bring disappointment.

May the Bates City Branch prove a valuable factor in bringing about Zion's redemption.

"We live and learn, but those who live the fastest don't always learn the most."

Lamoni, Iowa

The Children's Day exercises were largely attended and excellently carried out, they having both the morning and evening service on June 16. A goodly number attend from neary-by branches on these occasions, and when the children of these are given a service, it is customary for a number from Lamoni to attend.

One of the features of the morning program was the presentation to G. R. Wells of a neat sum of money from his former associates and friends in Sunday school work in the Northern New South Wales District of Australia. They sent it for his birthday as a token that they had not forgotten the days of his ministrations among them.

In recognition of the fact that J. W. Wight regularly attends the young people's prayer meetings and becomes a much appreciated part of them, about twenty young people made up a rather informal aggregation and left for his home following the union prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, the 19th. They sang songs in the deepening twilight and one of their number made a brief speech in which the appreciation of the young people of his support in attending their meetings was expressed. It was only a little thing, but it is typical of the spirit of love and unity which should actuate all engaged in the great gospel work.

The evening preaching services are to be held in Central Park, likely till reunion time at least, which will without doubt increase the attendance and interest. Considerable interest is manifested in the meetings held in the outlying places.

DELBERT.

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN, June 1, 1918.

Editor's Herald: It has been a long time since we have written anything through the HERALD as to our whereabouts or what we are doing, and perhaps some of the Saints with whom we have labored are wondering what has become of us.

Last year we were appointed to labor in the London (Canada) District, and while there we visited the following places: Waterford, Simcoe, London, Rostock, Stratford, Saint Marys, Saint Thomas, Corinth, Thamesford, Kintore, Vanessa, and Hamilton.

Simcoe, Kintore, and Thamesford were new openings. While at each of these places we were kindly cared for by the brethren living there. We cannot forget how Brother Skelton, of Kintore, fed us on sweet cream and cheese from his cheese factory, and the whole wheat gems baked by Sister Jenkins of Thamesford. We must also mention the hospitality of Brother Ferris of Simcoe, who has lately been ordained to the office of priest to look after the flock of about eighteen members there; and others of that place such as Brother Clayton and Brother Garvey were very hospitable. Also others whom we do not mention.

Hamilton is in Toronto District, but by request of Brother Davis (city missionary), and consent of the presidency, we left our district and labored among the Saints of that place for three weeks, and can say in brief that we enjoyed every hour of our stay and made many acquaintances, finding some fine Saints there.

The other places are only mentioned incidentally, but that does not infer that they are of less importance or that they do not find a place in our memory as prominent as the others, because they contain a goodly number of earnest, devoted Saints, whom we will not soon forget. We would like to mention some of the places where the young people are doing a good work, but space forbids.

Through the kindness (more plainly manifest by acts than by words) of the Saints, it was made possible for us to attend General Conference, which we thoroughly enjoyed and which will help us in the year's work before us.

About half of our year in London District we labored with Elder B. H. Doty, who was a fine traveling companion and one who has done a good work in the district in the past two years; we pray for his success this year.

The appointing powers gave us Chatham District for this conference year and at the announcement a pleased look crept over "Joe's" face, for in nearly two years of labor in that district we have learned to love the people, and perhaps more especially it was there that we obtained our first missionary experience.

Since conference we have labored at my home branch (Coleman) but we are now in Saginaw for a week, then we return to Coleman to attend the two-day meeting on June 8 and 9, from which place we will leave for Canada on the 10th.

We trust that this conference year may make a good record for the cause we love and that we may live nearer to the Master of men as we see the day approaching.

Your coloborer in Christ,

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN.

JOSEPH H. YAGER.

OGDEN, KANSAS, May 30, 1918.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part might be of interest. I have worked here at Camp Funston and Fort Riley since last July, and helped build this great city of Funston, have met many of our boys here who are serving the colors, and striving for liberty and justice that it might rule the world over.

Sunday school was organized last fall, and meetings being held in one of the Y. M. C. A. buildings in camp, and many happy hours were spent together in Sunday school, prayer meetings, and preaching services. Most of the preaching was done by Brethren Gold and Lockling, at Army City, a new town, built just outside of camp.

A very devout man, having a gospel tent there, gave the Saints privilege to use it, which is greatly appreciated by all, and I am sure this good man will be greatly rewarded for his kindness to us. We can see that the leaven is working, and some are near the kingdom.

We trust that this devout man, Mr. Ramsey, and others will soon come into the ark of safety. We need your prayers in regard to the work here.

Most of the boys have left the camp the last ten days. Some are preparing to leave at once, for service overseas. The inclosed photo was taken one Sunday evening after preaching service, and prior to the boys leaving camp for France. [It will likely appear in the Autumn Leaves ere long.—EDITORS.]

I have heard that the brethren have been greatly strengthened by their associations with each other, and feel better prepared to overcome the many temptations that come in army life.

The boys have sent sixty dollars as Christmas offering for their Sunday school. If there are any Saints in camp they are heartily invited to attend the meetings in the gospel tent at Army City. Also tell your friends to come; all are welcome, and the writer will do all in his power to help you, and it will also be a comfort and strength to me, as I delight to meet with the Saints.

Ever struggling for the redemption of Zion, and to establish his righteousness, I beg to remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOHN G. CLARK.

OGDEN, KANSAS, Care Mr. T. P. Shumate

TANGO, MONTANA, May 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: Sister M. J. Floyd, of Jerusalem, was permitted to visit the General Conference at Independence, this year, and enjoyed every moment of the time while conference was in session. What struck her most forcibly were the first and last days.

The first meeting she was in the gallery. When all those clean heads bowed in prayer, she thought how beautiful all those consecrated men of God bowed in prayer. What a pleasing sight it must be to God too, who, she felt, was looking down.

Of course every meeting was enjoyable, whether business, preaching, or prayer meeting, but the last day, when that long list of workers in the vineyard was read off, to hear them answer the call! It surely was grand to think in this selfish world such an army of workers were to be found ready to serve their heavenly Father without price or salary, just hoping to earn a reward in the hereafter, or millennium.

MARY J. FLOYD.

CAMP PERRY, GREAT LAKES, ILLINOIS, June 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: I know of no better way to make my location known to my acquaintances in the church than through the HERALD. This is also a general invitation for those who care to write to me, especially to my old Graceland friends. Our company is still in detention, consequently our liberty is restricted and, together with other things that all rookies have to put up with at the start, we are probably passing through our bluest period. But considering our circumstances, I am glad to be here, and like it better since new conditions are adjusting themselves.

We are worked hard and are occupied nearly every minute. The Navy is a good place to learn obedience, cleanliness, and neatness. We have this afternoon off. Most of the boys are washing clothes. All seem to be quite well satisfied, but of course the Navy, as other institutions, has its "howlers." Naturally I miss church privileges, but not so much as some might think. I am trying to live my religion, and it matters not where I may be, I can still read or at least think over my experiences and teachings in the church, and receive strength and comfort. There is a big difference in the habits of the men here and at dear old Graceland.

Mail addressed as below will probably reach me, for several weeks at least, but do not think it will be very long before they transfer me elsewhere.

Sincerely,

ALLEN TRACHSEL.

NOWATA, OKLAHOMA, June 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Nowata Branch is progressing nicely under the presidency of Elder A. C. Silvers. While we regretted to part with our former president, Elder Roy S. Budd, and his wife, we welcome our new presiding officer and look forward to a fruitful year in the Master's work in this locality.

We are now busy making preparation for the dedication of our church, which will take place June 23. Bishop James F. Keir is to give the address and Elder Lee Quick will offer the dedicatory prayer. Elder Quick was the first to open the work in this vicinity. We therefore invited him to come and hold a week's meeting previous to the dedication.

Our branch has grown to a membership of sixty-seven and we are becoming more fully organized in every department of the work. Brother Silvers is working hard to teach us how to carry on the work more perfectly. We are anxious to become strong spiritually that we may be able to enjoy the gifts and blessings of the gospel of Christ.

MRS. W. T. HAYWORTH, Clerk.

HITEMAN, IOWA, June 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: I feel it a privilege to write a line to your pages. Can say I am very proud over my field. Surely enjoyed my work in western Iowa where I labored for ten years among that dear people. It was hard for me to give up my work there, as it seemed so much like home.

However, I am in love with my work in this field, that is, Lamoni Stake. Just closed a fine meeting at Creston. Occupied the Congregational Church. Baptized five. A fine band of Saints are there, of a high type. They have a Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m., in a very cozy hall, and prayer services Wednesday night in their homes.

Brother George Hall has oversight of the work there. He is a worthy man, who loves the work. They gave me comforts of their lovely home while I stayed there. I feel very much impressed with the outlook there.

Creston is a beautiful city, and lovely country about. I came from there to this place, and met with many dear people here, who love this wonderful work. I have enjoyed my work here, God has been with us, and we have baptized ten so far. The weather has been much against us. It has rained almost every night about church time since I came. I have made my home with Brother Thomas Williams and family. They are fine people, so I am very happy in my work. I shall attend the conference at Chariton, June 7 and 8.

I hope to do more this year than any year previous. So may God grant our wishes and bless and prosper all.

Sincerely,

W. E. HADEN.

BARRYTON, MICHIGAN, June 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: I see the question asked in the HERALD for May 28, "What shall the editors do?" Now I suppose this question is open to all Saints and it is said what is everybody's business is nobody's business, so I take it as my business to give you my view of the matter for your consideration.

If an article is not in shape for publication, drop it, unless it be of great importance to the body at large, then ask the sender to either put it in shape or get some one else to do so. Your time is valuable, and even then, if he writes an offensive reply, drop it altogether, or use the blue pencil wisely.

Nearly always, I consider it best to reject such letters as are not properly written or of sufficient importance. I have noticed lately more especially how cunning the Devil is in getting our brethren into discussions over some question of little or no importance and continue for long intervals with each party more determined that the other is wrong than when first begun. Then, too, I have had good articles in some of the HERALDS that I would like to pass on to others, but there were other articles in the paper that were incorrect, probably written by some one of another faith, but given room in our valuable paper, which caused me to withhold the truth, in order not to have nonmembers think this is our view and condemn us for writing such stuff.

Just recently I read a lengthy article about Joseph Smith's alleged miracle of walking on the water. Now to me, it was almost, if not altogether, folly to answer such a charge. But I will admit to some it might be of great importance. However, I think the time is here when articles opposed to our faith be cast into the wastebasket or else a correct view of our doctrine be submitted side by side with the incorrect one, denouncing the wrong view or statement

I agree with one brother who said the Quarterlies give too much sayings and teachings of our opponents or of other faiths inasmuch that they lead strangers to think that is our faith. Give us clean, truthful, correct views, and doctrine of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. And I think it would be wise for each one of the HERALDS and Ensigns to contain good articles on some of the questions of our faith that we are divided upon, namely, perfection, children in the millennium, sanctification, unpardonable sin, different glories, baptism for the dead, occupations in the prison house, and many more that could be written upon by some one of the First Presidency or apostles of some of the most spiritual men in the church.

For my part, I would like to know how the church teaches these questions and get something into my head that is lasting. Spend your time in teaching truth, rather than opposing falsehood. I imagine it is the Devil's business to hinder the truth. Now these are my views and they are offered to you for your consideration, hoping we all have enough interest in the redemption of Zion to offer suggestions we think will be of interest and benefit to the body, the church.

Yours for the building up of truth and Zion,
ANDREW WALTERS.

Conference Minutes

NAUVOO.—At Fort Madison, Iowa, June 15 and 16. Officers elected: president, Arthur Allen; associate presidents, James McKiernan and D. J. Williams; secretary, W. H. Gunn; treasurer, George P. Lambert; member library board, Joseph H. Reed; member gospel literature board, D. J. Williams; chorister, D. J. Williams. Ordination of August Lee, of Burlington, Iowa, to office of deacon. Plans adopted for the purchase of an automobile for missionary purposes in this district. Next conference with Rock Creek Branch, near Ferris, Illinois, October 12 and 13. Apostle J. A. Gillen was present and his advice and preaching were appreciated by all. W. H. Gunn, secretary, 3014 Seneca Street, Fort Madison, Iowa.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—With Mission Branch, June 8, 1918, J. O. Dutton, R. N. Burwell, and W. L. Christy, presiding. Statistical reports: Central Chicago, 232; Mission, 109; Deselm, 77; Rockford, 13; Belvidere, 42; Plano, 174; First Chicago, 227; Sandwich, 70; DeKalb, 55; West Pullman, 60; Piper City, 35. Total membership in district, 1,094, priesthood, 91. Forty-one of priesthood reports read. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, $2,983.47; balance $244.93. Moved and carried that hereafter a summarized report of ministerial reports be read instead of individual reports, also summarized report of bishop's agent. Treasurer's report: Receipts, $30.22; on hand, $12.37. Graceland College student loan fund reports $80 on hand. Motion to hold reunion in 1918 lost. Officers sustained. Margaret Wickes recommended to general chorister for district chorister. Next conference at Plano, Illinois, in December at call of district president. Preaching by L. O. Wildermuth, R. N. Burwell, W. A. McDowell, and W. L. Christy. F. E. Bone, secretary.

DES MOINES.—At Rhodes, Iowa, June 1 and 2, preceded by the Sunday school and Religio conventions May 31. On the night of May 30, a patriotic program was rendered, which included a splendid address by District President O. Salisbury. Statistical reports from branches showed a small increase in membership. Election of officers: president, O. Salisbury; secretary, Bessy Laughlin; member of library board, Roy Cheville; member auditing committee, Vern Deskin; member gospel literature board, Robert J. Parthing; district chorister, John Salisbury; Bishop E. O. Clark and his counselor, Henry Castings, were sustained. Henry Castings and Charles Nirk were selected as counselors to district president. The following was passed by unanimous vote: Resolved that we, members of the Des Moines District, heartily indorse the action of the General Conference relative to the matter of coordination. Next conference in October at Perry, Iowa. Preaching was by C. Malcor, A. E. Warr, and Joseph Arber. Bessy Laughlin, secretary.

FREMONT.—Near Thurman, Iowa, at 2.30 June 1, 1918. Paul M. Hanson was chosen to assist the district presidency in presiding. Statistical reports; Thurman 196; Tabor 66; Henderson 78; Shenandoah 106; Hamburg 59; Bartlett 50; Glenwood 76. No report from Riverton. Ministry reporting; J. B. Wildermuth, T. A. Hougas, J. W. Dunagan, N. L. Mortimore, C. M. Roberts, M. M. Case, John Huston, C. W. Forney, Ward A. Hougas, Roy E. Barber, William Kuykendall, Roy J. Dunsdon, William Eyler, G. Fred Skank. Glenwood petitioned for next conference, which was referred to the presidency with power to act. By motion a collection was taken to replenish treasury. The collection totaled $8.40. Motion that branches take a collection for district tent work prevailed. The action of the coordinating committee was ratified but further action was deferred until next conference. T. A. Hougas was elected district president and chose N. L. Mortimore for his associate. C. W. Forney was elected secretary and sustained as bishop's agent. A priesthood meeting was held. Preaching by Paul M. Hanson, and J. B. Wildermuth. A vote of thanks was taken for the hospitality of the local Saints. Adjourned to meet at the call of the presidency. C. W. Forney, secretary.

WESTERN WALES.—At the Anchor Coffee Rooms, Neath, May 18 and 19. W. H. Greenwood and Thomas Jones were in charge, with H. Ellis secretary pro tem. Reports from district officers read: Thomas Jones, president; T. J. Picton, secretary; and J. Phillips, treasurer. Bishop May's statement for the district showed receipts of £45, 11s, 5d, an increase over the previous year of £13, 3s, 5d. David Lewis and D. Roberts audited the account and reported it correct. Elders reporting: Edward Williams, David Lewis, John Pughsley, John G. Jenkins, Thomas J. Picton, David Thomas, and Henry Ellis. After some discussion the present dates for holding the annual conference were retained, i. e., Whitsuntide. District president called attention to the fact that upon the general church record there was no Gilfach-Goch Branch. It was resolved that the date of change from Porth to Gilfach-Goch be sent to the district secretary, from the secretary of the latter-named branch, to be forwarded in due course of time to the general Church Recorder. Priesthood meeting, preaching services, and sacrament services were held. An announcement and appeal was made to the members of the Seventh Quorum of Elders by one of the counselors, J. G. Jenkins, relating to the action expected to obtain at the mission conference regarding tobacco users. Election of officers resulted: Thomas Jones, president; David Lewis, vice president; John Phillips, secretary; Walter Rogers, treasurer. It was felt that each of the ministry can see the need of a better working basis for the future of the work, and while the conference might have had a greater spiritual blessing, the business conduct was an index to a move forward. Adjourned to meet at Gilfach-Goch, time to be determined by the district officers. Thomas Jones, president; John Phillips, secretary.

Convention Minutes

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Sunday school, at Mission Branch, near Marseilles, Illinois, June 17, 1918. After routine work, motion to change permanently from delegate to mass convention prevailed. George Kerr elected member of gospel literature board; Sister C. B. Hartshorn, cradle roll superintendent. Motion carried that district president be associated with district superintendent in advancing Christmas offering for 1918. Motion to appoint one from the Sunday school to take up the coordinating idea with Religio and conference. Adjourned to meet the Friday preceding district conference, at call of superintendent. LaJune Howard, secretary.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: Tithes are coming slowly just now and I thought some might be confused as to where to send them. Send them to me. Let us all make a long pull and a strong pull, to build up Zion, to do our part. We all had to have a pass to get into the business sessions of the conference, and we will have to have one to get into Zion. That pass will be "having done our part." "He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack." "He who sowed sparingly reaped sparingly." When the door is shut, it's too late "to buy oil." Let us work while it is to-day, for the night cometh wherein no man can work. Let us "be cheerful in our warfare," enter into all activities as sons and daughters of God, that we may be sure we get our pass. C. A. PARKIN.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 579 Fifth Avenue.

Conference Notices

Saskatchewan, at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, July 12 to 14. A division of district was granted us at General Conference, so on July 12 matters concerning the north district, with election of officers will be discussed. Election of officers for south district July 13. T. J. Jordan, president; Bertha Cornish, secretary, Senlac, Saskatchewan.

Seattle and British Columbia at Bellingham, Washington, from August 2 to 11. For information pertaining to accommodations and the renting of tents, etc., correspond with George R. Brundage, 1252 Elk Street, Bellingham, Washington. All may feel assured that costs will not exceed the actual expenses accruing. Conference August 6, 2 p. m., and auxiliaries afternoons of the 7th and 8th, respectively. It is hoped that all who possibly can, will come prepared to take part in a program which will probably be rendered some evening as soon as a goodly number have arrived. All having performed ministerial work within the district, other than in the capacity of a branch officer, will please report direct to the undersigned immediately after June 30, for the six months ending on said date. Branch clerks will receive blanks for their statistical reports for the same period. It is expected some of the traveling ministry will be in attendance, and hoped all will make special efforts to spend an enjoyable time. Frederick W. Holman, district secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle Washington.

Convention Notices

Saskatchewan, at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, July 11, at 10 a. m. Have all reports in hands of secretary not later than July 5. Jennie Neill, secretary, Weyburn, Saskatchewan.

Our Departed Ones

GEER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 1, 1918, Ambrose C. Geer died. Born in New London, Connecticut, in 1852. Baptized October 5, 1888, at Providence, Rhode Island. Eccentric and peculiar, but honest and truthful, also a lover of the gospel. Died at Saints' Home, sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by S. D. Shippy.

SNOW.—Charles L. Snow, born in Henderson County, Tennessee, December 22, 1855. Baptized July 17, 1887, by W. H. Griffin. Ordained priest August 17, 1890; ordained elder in 1893; seventy, in 1897. Died at his home near Knobnoster, Missouri, April 25, 1918. Services at Stone Church in Independence, Missouri, sermon by T. C. Kelley. Wife, 2 sons, one daughter, and many other relatives and friends, mourn their loss.

BRIGHAM.—Charlotte Emily Brigham died at her home June 6, 1918, at Niagara Falls, Ontario. Was of gentle and peaceful nature; loved by all around her. Was patient during trials. Funeral sermon at the church by William Place, assisted by A. D. Angus.

YARRINGTON.—Mary C. Yarrington, wife of Brother C. J. Yarrington, died at Albany, Missouri, June 14, 1918. She was the mother of nine children. Seven survive her. One a soldier in France, and 3 others married. The 6 with their father came with the body to Lamoni where services were held in charge of Columbus Scott, sermon by H. A. Stebbins. She was a devoted and faithful wife and mother.

FROM HERE AND THERE

AT NAUVOO

A Rustler reporter visited the old Joseph Smith property and inspected the work going on in that part of the city. The old Mansion House looks swell since it has undergone all the improvements; it has also been nicely painted and looks like a new building. The Joseph Smith home is now undergoing some fine improvements, and when it is completed, will be a credit to the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. Work on the new Mansion House has not yet been all completed; it, too, will undergo a great change. J. W. Layton and wife are the caretakers of the property; we met Mr. Layton Sunday and found him to be a very pleasant gentleman. As soon as he completes the improvements, he wants the Nauvoo people to call and inspect the work. He will have the lots cleaned and everything placed in fine condition. While there we met Mr. Millikin of near Hamilton. Several years ago there was a postoffice called Millikin, which received its name from the above gentleman; he married a sister of the martyred prophet, Joseph Smith. He informed us that he saw the Mormon temple here burn, and remembers the night distinctly.—Nauvoo Rustler, June 18, 1918.

RELIGIO WILL LOAN YOU MONEY TO GO TO COLLEGE

The Zion's Religio-Literary Society has on hand over $900 in the students' loan fund which they will be glad to have worthy students use without interest on notes approved by the President of Graceland College. The maximum amount to be loaned to any student is $60 a year. Write to G. N. Briggs, president of Graceland, or to G. S. Trowbridge, president of the Religio, about the matter, giving all the particulars possible about yourself and your desires. There is an insistent demand in all lines for better trained workers; the Government and every industry giving preference to those who have general and special schooling. A goodly number of our successful young people have taken advantage of the Religio's generous offer. We would like to see the entire fund loaned this year.

CHURCH RECORDER'S OFFICE NOW IN INDEPENDENCE

We have a letter from Elder C. I. Carpenter, in which he tells us they are doing business in the capacity of Church Recorder at the general church office building in Independence. Mail for that department should be addressed to Brother Carpenter at 410 North Grand Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

"ONE CHURCH OR MANY?"

The Daily Plain Dealer, of Creston, Iowa, recently contained a rather full synopsis of an excellent sermon by Elder George B. Hall, our pastor there. It is pleasing to note the liberality of the press where our people live up to their beliefs as the Saints at Creston seek to do. It is hard for any fair-minded editor to refuse a well-written contribution of this kind, and we would like to see more of our men present the vital issues of religion in this manner. It is not difficult and it is not essential that a shorthand reporter be available.

A certain sister sends in a request that the Saints unite with her in fasting and prayer that her husband be enabled to overcome the tobacco habit. It is not necessary to give her name, under the circumstances.

KIRTLAND MISSION BELLS STILL RINGING

We have the second number of this district periodical, put out under difficulties appreciated only by printers. But it contains good material and should do much good by carrying to the local Saints and investigators little items of special interest to them, but not always of sufficient importance to justify wide circulation. The district has voted to apportion the expenses among the branches.

CHURCH RESPONDS TO CALL OF PRESIDENT WILSON

A year ago the President and other federal authorities urged the young people of the country to enter college in increasing numbers in order more fully to prepare themselves to render valuable service to the Government in this, the greatest crisis in its history. The response to this call was most gratifying from members of the church, as the attendance at her one institution of higher learning, Graceland College, was a twenty-five per cent increase over the previous year, and the college is in receipt of a letter from the Headquarters Central Department in which the college is "commended for its activity in this very important and very patriotic work."

Again the Government is making a more urgent call than before, and Graceland is in receipt of a letter from the Government containing a statement of "Government policies involving the schools in war time," from which the following paragraph is quoted:

"Boys and girls should be urged, as a patriotic duty, to remain in school to the completion of the high school course, and in increasing numbers to enter upon college and university courses, especially in technical and scientific lines, and normal courses, to meet the great need for trained men and women."

Graceland College is fully standardized and officially accredited and offers the necessary courses in preparation for technical and scientific professions. State Teachers' Certificates are granted to her graduates.

The question now is, How are we going to respond to this additional call from the Government? Our President says it is our "patriotic duty" to enter upon these technical, scientific, and teacher training courses to "meet the great need for trained men and women." Will Graceland respond with a twenty-five per cent increase as she did last year? The indications are that she will. Reservations are being made rapidly in both dormitories, and correspondence with respect to next year's work is heavier than ever.

The college year opens September 5, 1918. Write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for free catalogue and full information relative to the courses for next year and Graceland's plans to meet the call of President Wilson.

COMMON CONSENT

It is one of the surprising things of the present day to note how often is the objection made to some recommendation of common consent, that it violates the law, or that it makes for one-man power. It is raised in conventions and conference. It is urged against a branch president or the stake president, despite the fact that the latter has two counselors. It is raised so often that it is really unfortunate, for if a real occasion arise, the people will become tired of hearing the cry of "wolf" so often.

But let us examine the facts. Democracy is a government by the people, regardless of what particular form it may take. We published in the General Interest department, a rather clear definition by Doctor Lyman Abbott. This is rather more than a definition. It is an exposition of the great underlying principles.

The choosing of the able man, and giving him responsibility and power, may not be pure democracy. Yet it is plainly set forth in the books of the church.

How often do we lose sight of the fact that the Master spoke continuously of the kingdom of heaven. We have one who rules over us, even the Lord Jesus Christ. We have also a royal priesthood; a nation of kings and priests. The Master promised to him who was faithful that he should be given to rule over many cities.

In the church the priesthood are not elected by popular vote. The call of the fit man must come from our heavenly Father. In the case of the Aaronic priesthood and of the elder, the call comes through the local officer and is presented and accepted by the branch. There is no ordination without this acceptance. This is common consent. Unless there is such common consent, the ordination should not take place. This is true of the Presidency of the church; (Doctrine and Covenants 17:16; Supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 14, p. 20); it is true of every officer of the church; that no man should be ordained to any office of the church, where there is an organized branch of the same, without the consent of that body. (Doctrine and Covenants.) In fact all things should be done by common consent. (Doctrine and Covenants 25:1; 101:12, 13.)

By General Conference resolution number 646 it is now required, and has been for some years, that the consent of the Melchisedec priesthood shall be secured; also by General Conference resolution number 312 that for the ordination of an elder, the consent of the district or stake conference, or of the missionary in charge, must first be secured. Many districts have extended this rule to include calls to the Aaronic priesthood, thus giving to common consent the double check of the branch and of the district conference, where objection may be raised before the ordination takes place, as well as the third check of the priesthood.

In the case of the seventy, the call comes through the seven presidents of seventy. It must then be accepted by the quorums of seventy, and then by the General Conference, which represents the whole church and thereby secures common consent.

In the case of a high priest, bishop, patriarch or evangelical minister, the high council, a member of the Quorum of Twelve, or the First Presidency, the call comes through the First Presidency. In the case of the latter two—a member of the Quorum of Twelve or President of the high priesthood—it is given as a revelation, presented to, and adopted by the quorums and then by the church as such. In the case of the other officers, the name is presented by the presidency as the voice of inspiration and is concurred in by the body assembled in General Conference. In the case of evangelical minister, the call comes through the Quorum of Twelve and is in like manner presented for the concurrence of the general body assembled in General Conference. In most cases, the call is presented, not only to the General Conference, but it is also presented to certain quorums, as the call of a high priest is presented to the joint council and then to the quorum of high priests, for approval, before it is presented to the General Conference.

Common consent is also secured by the annual vote to sustain the general officers of the church, beginning with the First Presidency. Common consent has also been secured in the past in the various branches in the sustaining of the Aaronic priesthood. In the past, so far as we have observed, the elders have not been sustained in the branch or district conference, but are sustained, as a body, by the General Conference.

We would respectfully suggest, that not only the Aaronic priesthood, but also the Melchisedec priesthood should be presented from time to time to the local body, and sustained. If there is any objection or reason why any member of the priesthood should not be sustained, opportunity should be given for objections to be set forth and proper action taken.

It would seem that this right to sustain or not sustain is in addition to the right to prefer charges and have any officer tried before the proper court. The church has refused, in the past, to sustain certain men, and yet has failed to prefer definite charges.

Modern practice has found, in many organizations, great advantage in securing a nominating committee, as it secures a seasonable change of officers and usually secures more efficient officers than a free and open nomination without previous suggestion. This has recently been discovered to be an advantage by the world. But it has been set out in the divine law long ago, and provided for by designating certain officers through whom calls should come, and with the great factor of divine direction determining.

We would respectfully submit, therefore, that the naming of men for the stake presidency (or the stake high council), and the sustaining of these men as a stake presidency, including the presidency of the largest branch, is not a taking away of the right of common consent. It is the securing of competent men in a rational, lawful way.

A district or stake has very little to say as to whom shall be sent to them of the missionary force, or whether any member of the joint council shall visit them or not. But these general officers are sustained by the General Conference.

In the case of the stake presidency, the body has the right, in stake conference, to sustain or refuse to sustain. They also have the right, in a meeting of the largest congregation or central branch, to do the same.

So also, it has been found with the auxiliaries, as they have grown so large in size that it is advisable to consult the appointing powers before electing a man to the chief or presiding position in the various departments of work.

A carefully considered nomination is by no means an infringement of the divinely given right of common consent, nor is it an infringement of our democracy. It is really curious to note how many matters are, in recent years, referred to the executive committee or the executive council, of the auxiliaries, with power to act; and how many matters are referred in the General Conference to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, with power to act. This vote, however, gives opportunity for popular consideration and so permits of common consent.

It is probably only economy of time and convenience which causes the chair to be so widely empowered at the opening of our conventions and conferences, to arrange all meetings and appoint all subsidiary officers. But it certainly does show a marked saving of time, without any inconvenience.

It is right that we should be jealous of our rights as a people, and that we should protect the common right, and that we should not permit the domination of any man or set of men in any wrongful way. But is it right to be continually critical of our brethren, and questioning their motive?

Again we suggest that in the criminal law every man is assumed to be innocent until proven guilty. And in our parliamentary body we are not justified in assuming every man guilty until proven innocent. There is always a possibility of wrongdoing, but there is always a way to correct the wrong when it occurs.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

A blind rattlesnake strikes at every passer-by—just for luck. A professional scandalmonger is of the same breed, and knows no mercy or justice.

A spineless cactus is a redeemed cactus. Burbank laid hands on it and converted it. If he could do that for the outlaw of the plant world, what can God not do for man?

Paul had a good idea when he said that a man who was an heretic should be left alone after the third or fourth admonition. A lot of breath is wasted arguing with men whose minds are already permanently made up.

Bishop Siegfried's little boy had the "German measles." He didn't like the measles, but he had a greater prejudice against the name. So he suggested that the family call them the "Red Cross measles."

This indicates about how popular the "made in Germany" trademark will be with the next generation.

A caustic writer on American traits recently reported that at a dinner "where the guests represented thirty million dollars the conversation was not worth thirty cents." He did not state what portion of the last named should be credited to him.

When Fate was looking about for a man to occupy the President's chair during the great war, the Rough Rider snapped his fingers and made diverse signs and grimaces to attract her attention. But she passed him by and hit upon the School-master. And to this day Teddy has not recovered from his surprise and resentment.

John Garver comments on the fact that when Joseph Smith selected Independence as the central gathering place, as the center of the institution he intended to build, it was on the "ragged edge" of civilization, or as John says, "the ragged edge of nothing"; but now it is the center of our operations in the United States, from ocean to ocean and from north to south. Here is evidence of more than human inspiration. God did the selecting.

We were talking with a nurse recently. She was telling us of her experience with patients, especially those who found it difficult to go to sleep. She said, "I just arranged them comfortably and talked to them a little while, and they would go sound asleep." Having so often had a similar experience while preaching, we concluded that nurses and preachers have something in common.

The London Times has published a letter from the mayor of Exeter stating that city would observe on July Fourth a day "of solemn thanksgiving and prayer." That Englishmen should now in such a striking manner celebrate America's independence day is a matter for mutual congratulation. The courage of Washington and the prophetic faith of old Ben Franklin have been more than justified by the unfolding of events.

John the Baptist said of Jesus, "He must increase but I must decrease." It took rare insight for John to perceive a fact so intimately concerning himself. And it took rare courage to state that fact. Had he repressed it and attempted to build himself up he would now be remembered with contempt. Humility saved John. At that time all the country was agog with the news of him. His head might well have been turned. To-day he is mentioned only in connection with Jesus. But that in itself is distinction enough.

Jesus died because he loved. It is not evident that Jesus hated any living man. He loved all men. Yet he was dominated by both hate and love. It is all summarized in the statement that he loved righteousness and hated iniquity. Toward these two abstract yet potent principles he was not neutral. One he loved with all his being. The other he hated with equal intensity. But for men he had only love and service.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE SABBATH DAY

Our fathers were wont to emphasize the importance of this day as a day of worship and of rest. To-day it is too often ignored. This is true rather of our western cities than in the East; it is more true of continental Europe than of Great Britain.

As to the formal aspects of what day to honor, there appears nothing worthy the name of proof that the day now called Saturday (Saturn's day) was honored by Adam or the patriarch. There is some evidence of Friday being celebrated as a holy day in Egypt, and many trace the week back to Egypt. Others point out that in Babylon a seven-day week was observed.

There appears to be a consensus of opinion that the Sabbath was on Saturday the year our Lord was crucified and that he rose on the day now called Sunday (the day of the Sun in Teutonic languages), or the Lord's day (in Greek, Latin, and Romance languages).

It is a matter of serious doubt whether the Jewish Sabbath before Christ fell always on the day now called Saturday. In recent centuries the Jews have observed Saturday. Since Moses they have observed a seven-day week, and a seventh day of rest after six days' labor, and have written this idea into much of the Old Testament. A discussion of this theme has been made by others in these columns and more may yet be written, so we shall not now enter further into the consideration of the Jewish Sabbath, its origin, conditions, and scope.

It is clear from the New Testament and from ancient records that the early Christian church observed the day of the Lord's resurrection (John 20: 1, 19, 26; Acts 2: 1 et seq.; 20: 7; 1 Corinthians 16: 1-3; Hebrews 4: 1-10, etc.). And this observance by the apostles has continued in the Christian church to this day.

For our direction there has also been given the following:

And the Spirit saith further: Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord, the church is admonished that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as the day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. But not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

Also section 59 was given August 7, 1831, which was on Sunday. This is of importance because of the last clause of paragraph 2, "on THIS, the Lord's day."

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

For us, then, the question is fully answered as to what day to keep.

The above quotation also instructs how it should be kept, "rest from labors—pay thy devotions to the Lord—nevertheless, thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days."

The value and merit of a day of rest was pointed out a year ago in these columns. Doctor Cowles, lecturing on psychiatry (or insanity), emphasized that each day a certain amount of energy is used up; a good night's rest restores a large part, but not all. But Sunday as a day of rest completes the restoration, so a man starts out renewed (recreated) Monday morning. If there is no such period of rest, the supply of energy decreases little by little, as each morning finds itself with less than the preceding morning, till an average of about eighty per cent is reached, and then nervousness appears.

If continued without proper rest, nervousness becomes a chronic neurosis, and decline may be even more rapid to sixty per cent where melancholia sets in. There will be spells up and down, but the scale may continue still to decline.

Rest is essential. A day of rest is best. Where effort for a time is necessary, it should be followed by a longer period of rest and absence from exciting or depressing factors.

It is not surprising to find the divine plan confirmed by the best of human thought. That plan is safest when it is still beyond our thought, even though we do not yet know the reason why. If we continue in the right way the reason will become plain when we are able to understand. It was true when we did not understand the reason. Though we do not understand, yet it is true.

Next, we should "offer our vows in righteousness upon all days and at all times," "pray without ceasing." But this should be a day of special devotion to the Most High, to offer our oblations and sacraments unto him.

Recreation may be largely secured by a change of activity. Recreation is a rebuilding. There is a need at times of rest, and a need of fresh air. The day and its decorum should always be observed. But to-day many of us go, of necessity, more than a Sabbath day's journey to attend services; the ministry go much further to administer to the sick or to hold mission services. It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath. (Luke 6: 1-9.)

In many places there are no afternoon services, but several are held in the forenoon and two in the evenings. This is true in certain large cities.

In these places many of the young people, as well as those older in years, have to work early and late during the week. The question is sometimes raised of their walking in the park or going for a ride when there are no services to attend. Some places they have mission work which gives an outing. But the opinion of the writer is that it not only is not wrong, but it is very right for people to get out to quiet recreation, in harmony with the day, when it does not interfere with their proper attendance at church services and does not bring association which prevents a later enjoyment of the service.

But deeper than this there is the fact that religious service, properly accepted, is reviving; that it is recreational; that as the psychologists would express it, it calls forth the higher powers of man—is "erethic" and brings added strength. In other words, that as this day as a day of rest is beneficial to man, and re-creational, so is this day as a day of devotion also beneficial even in a physical sense, but in a fuller sense it is recreational in a spiritual and mental sense, and so makes for continued sanity.

Proper decorum should be our rule every day and everywhere. But on this day a special effort is becoming to avoid the unseemly; yet in a fuller sense its great purpose is the right, deep, spiritual worship of God, respect to the house of God, and good to man. Truly "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." (Mark 2: 27.)

THE LAW AND THE COVENANTS--Part 1

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

PREFACE

The above is the title of a late work by one R. A. Underwood, on the "Ten commandments" of Exodus, chapter twenty, being an effort to show the fallacy of the position that the obligations of the moral law are not binding upon Christians. Second, the relation of the old and new covenants to the law and the gospel; third, their object; fourth, duration, when and with whom made; and fifth, of what the old and new covenants consist.

These state the full purposes of the writer of the work, as found in the preface, that it may be before us in the examination we may make of the validity of the author's position.

Further, the writer quotes profusely from those "pioneer" writers of "The Seventh-day Adventist denomination," such as Mrs. E. G. White, J. N. Andrews, M. Smith, and J. H. Wagoner.

The author further states that this pamphlet is a synopsis of Bible studies given at the Northern Union Conference held in Minneapolis, March 5-15, 1908, and is published at the solicitation of the delegates to said conference, and others. Surely this leads us to accept this pamphlet as containing the latest and best offered on the subject treated.

It is our purpose to treat briefly on the questions: Is "the ten commandment law" still binding on God's children as a religious guide? Was that law a part of the code of laws given to ancient Israel at Sinai? And is it a part of the gospel?

THE OLD COVENANT

The Lord had given by an everlasting covenant (Psalm 105: 10) the land of Canaan, extending from the mouth of the Nile River to the Lebanon mountains, north and south; and from the Mediterranean Sea, on the west, to the River Euphrates, on the east (Genesis 15: 18, 19; Deuteronomy 11: 23, 24), to Abraham and his seed.

A covenant was made with Israel by Jehovah, including the code of law to constitute them a nation, "a kingdom of priests," unto him, through Moses, who was chosen the mediator. We read thus:

Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.—Exodus 19: 5, 6.

This covenant with Israel was about four hundred and thirty years after the land was covenanted to Abraham (Exodus 12: 2 and 40; Galatians 3: 17).

Israel a holy nation? Above all others nations to the Lord? A kingdom of priests? No other nation was so chosen and dealt with. No other nation has ever been called upon by Jehovah, as a nation; selected from among all the nations of the whole earth, as Israel was; to enter into covenant with the Lord, and to receive "statutes" and "judgments," a law constituting them a nation and a people of the Lord; as was Israel. Proof:

And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? . . . Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, when the Lord said unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children. And ye came near and stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness. And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only he heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it.—Deuteronomy 4: 8-14.

Here Moses tells Israel that the ten commandments are the covenant God made with Israel, including, no doubt, the statutes and the judgments that God gave to Israel at that time.

What other nation, therefore, ever received their national law or code of law, direct from God as did Israel at Sinai? "From his right hand went a fiery law for them." "Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob." (Deuteronomy 33: 2, 4). "He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them, Praise ye the Lord."—Psalm 147: 19, 20.

Moreover, the law as a whole, statutes, commands, and judgments, the entire code, was a righteous law. (Deuteronomy 4: 8.) "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." (Amos 3: 2.)

The law was never divided by Bible writers, nor by our Lord, into two distinct laws; one being called the "ceremonial," and the other "moral." This has been done by uninspired men, but not by the word of God. With him there was no partiality to be shown in Israel, as between law and commandment, statutes and judgments. "Ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the Lord, and so wrath come upon you, and upon your brethren; this do, and ye shall not trespass." (2 Chronicles 19: 10.) It was trespass against God to be partial with the law. By the law, if faithfully kept, Israel could be organized into a kingdom of priests, a semi-religious government, a union of church and state. Nothing in the covenant or ten commandments forbids it, or is contrary thereto.

The ten commandments are but a brief part of the code, but are the basis or constitution of it. They are found, therefore, after they had been spoken by the voice of God amidst the thunderous quaking of Mount Sinai; and the people heard and feared and entreated that Moses let the Lord speak his will to him, lest they die. Moses went into the mount with the people's agreement to do all that the Lord said they should do, and they would be obedient.

The law given was written in a book, including the decalogue, and the arrangements were made to consummate the covenant. (See Exodus, chapters 19 to 24.)

THE COVENANT MADE

And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel. And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words.—Exodus 24: 3-9.

Paul says concerning this event:

For when Moses had spoken every precept to all people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament [covenant] which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry.—Hebrews 9: 19-21.

According to this statement of Paul, the book, containing all the precepts of the Lord, was sprinkled as well as the altar, the place of their offerings, and the people. Another fact to be observed by the careful student, is before the covenant was consummated between Jehovah and Israel, some of the ten commandments are developed in their character as law, as among the judgments to be recorded in the book of the law or covenant. As examples: "Thou shalt not kill." "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death." "And he that curseth his father, or his mother, shall surely be put to death." (Exodus 21: 12, 17.)

Again, by way of showing that strict justice shall be meted out to transgressors under that law: "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe." (Exodus 21: 24, 25.)

And further, in defining the penalties of the law given before the covenant at Sinai was made, note carefully Exodus 20: 4, 5, and then read the following: "He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed." (Exodus 22: 20.) Again:

Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed. And in all things that I have said unto you be circumspect: and make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.—Exodus 23: 12, 13.

These examples show conclusively that the ten commandment law is the basis on which the foregoing enactments of the law had been written by Moses, soon after God uttered them with his own voice, before the covenant with Israel was made.

On page 9 of the work we are here reviewing, the author says: "This book of the law is the same as the book of the covenant," and quotes Exodus 24: 4, 7, 8; 2 Kings 23: 2, 3; and Deuteronomy 29: 18-25 as evidence. And to this we fully agree, for in Exodus 34, over forty days after the covenant at Sinai was made, we read that God said, speaking of that covenant including the ten commandments:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.—Exodus 34: 27, 28.

"For after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." This covenant had been made prior to the time here indicated when God bade Moses to write the "words" on the tables of stone, forty days before Moses went up into the mount.

Covenant: A mutual consent or agreement of two or more persons, to do or forbear some act or thing; a contract, stipulation. A writing containing the terms of agreement or contract between parties; or the clause of agreement in a deed containing a covenant.—Webster.

"After," or according to the "tenor" of these words; the ten commandments.

TEN COMMANDMENTS PART OF COVENANT MADE AT SINAI

A law of the Hebrew language was, when referring to subjects of law, or institutions, to refer to a part as the whole, or refer to the whole as a part. And the same is true sometimes in the English language, as instance:

"And cry repentance unto a crooked and perverse generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 33: 1).

"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 4).

Now it is evident that the word repentance as here used refers to the gospel plan, the entire gospel.

Again, Jesus says, "Preach the gospel." (Mark 16: 15.) The word gospel as here used evidently refers to all the principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, as see Hebrews 5: 12 and 6: 1, 2.

Again Jesus says: "And I know that his commandment is life everlasting." (John 12: 50.) But we are not justified in forming the conclusion from this statement that we are saved by keeping just one of his commandments, but are to obey "all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matthew 28: 20.)

The word commandment, as used above is intended to include all gospel commandments. This rule is noted by all students of language.

As illustrative of this truism, note the following:

Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant.—Exodus 31: 16.

Here the fourth one of the ten commandments is called a covenant. A part of the covenant is put for the whole, in name. But again Moses rehearses:

And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.—Deuteronomy 4: 12, 13.

Here the "ten commandments," which God spoke with his own voice, from Mount Sinai in the audible hearing of Israel, is called by Moses "his covenant" with them. But the decalogue is not all of the covenant, but surely is part of it.

An enactment found in the book following the decalogue reads:

If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing. If he came in by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.—Exodus 21: 2, 3.

Now this one enactment is called by the Lord "a covenant." We read:

Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, At the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother a Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.—Jeremiah 34: 13, 14.

That the ten commandment law was a principal part of the "covenant" God made with the children of Israel at Horeb, is true as the Bible is true. Let us read:

And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. The Lord talked with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire, (I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to show you the word of the Lord: for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount,) saying I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt have none other gods before me.—Deuteronomy 5: 1-7.

Moses then continues to reiterate the ten commandments in full in that chapter. After forbidding idolatry under penalty to be visited on fathers and children, proceeds to state the fourth commandment thus:

Keep the sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.—Deuteronomy 5: 12-15.

Since God made not this covenant with their fathers, he did not command them to keep the seventh day sabbath. Law is a rule of action, and is designed to enforce order and peace always, also to organize governments, build them up and punish the lawbreaker.

The reason assigned by the Lord for requiring Israel to observe the seventh-day-rest-sabbath, was assigned by himself thus:

And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.—Exodus 20: 1, 2.

Through a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.—Deuteronomy 5: 15.

Since God made no covenant with any man or nation enjoining the seventh day of the week as a sabbath or rest day save Israel at Sinai, either before, or since, is any man or nation under any obligation to observe it as such?

By what covenant or command? Where? When? For all the foregoing reasons assigned, the fourth commandment, and all the ten, are a part of the national code of law given to Israel by covenant, and any one of its statutes or judgments are equally binding, as a religious law or guide. All equally adopted to this "kingdom of priests" or theocracy.

One command or statute of that covenant or law has no supremacy over another. All its statutes, judgments, laws, commands, and ceremonies were equally adopted to the government of Israel. All are in the book of the covenant, or the book of the law, and when all were deposited in the ark; it was called "the ark of the covenant." (See Deuteronomy 31: 26.)

And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee.—Deuteronomy 31: 24-26.

Thus we learn that besides being written in the book of the law, as part of the covenant, the ten commandments were written on two tables of stone and they were put in the ark of the covenant of the Lord.

The foregoing is sufficient to show plainly just what the covenant made with Israel, in part and as a whole, was.

"OPERAE PRESTIUM EST"

It is worth while that we give thoughtful attention to some of the problems with which we are confronted at the present time. It was no less of a one than Jesus of Nazareth who said to the self-complacent, self-righteous Pharisees of his day: "Ye can discern the face of the skies, but you cannot discern the signs of the times."

PHARISAICAL BLINDNESS

No doubt we have all read this scripture a great many times, but the query that persistently arises in the mind of the writer is: Have we properly understood its application, and hence able to profit by it? Or are we disposed to misunderstand and hence misapply it, and thereby injure not only ourselves, but also injure others by such misapplication? Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless a fact, that it is very difficult for any people to properly understand the signs of the times. To be plain spoken about it, we are so prone to see everything but that which is most important to us. We are generally able to speak quite freely of the mistakes of others, and of the blindness of the primitive Pharisees, but we are very slow about discerning our own errors, and piercing our own blindness concerning the vital elements of life.

The Pharisee is the man who can see errors in everybody but himself; and you may rest assured that all the Pharisees did not pass away with the first century of Christianity. There are many modern Pharisees. There are still a few of us who, whether we know it or not, hold very tenaciously to the philosophy of the Quaker who said to his good wife: "The whole world is queer but thee and me, and thee is a little queer sometimes." That is to say, it is easier for mortals to find fault with others and condemn them than it is to discover and correct the faults within themselves.

LOOK FORWARD

And again I repeat, it is well that we give thoughtful consideration to some of the problems that confront us in life. You know there are two prevalent weaknesses in human nature; one is the tending to dwell almost exclusively in the past, and the other is to dwell always in the future. It will be very readily observed that the individual who dwells either in the memories and traditions of the past, or in the possibilities of the future, is unable to rightly discern the signs of the present time. It is, however, true that the future must be an outgrowth, a child, so to speak, of the present, just as the present is an outgrowth of the past, but this does not warrant us in living in either the past or the future. It is therefore obvious to the thinking mind that our social, our economic, our ethical, and our religious philosophies should be expressed and thought of in present tense living rather than in past memories or future mysteries.

Jesus, in speaking to his apostles, sought to make this idea clear to their minds when he said to them: "Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." What does this scripture say to you? Have you considered it as you should have done, think you? To me, Jesus is simply saying to his followers: You need not delay by reason of your tendency to dwell in the future, because if you will receive it the time is now; not four months hence, when you should apply yourselves; so you must work in the present and not seek to live merely in the expectation of the future. In fact, this was the tenor of his entire message to the children of men, for when he returned from his fasting in the wilderness, he said: "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, repent ye and believe the gospel." Later in his ministry: "Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh wherein no man can work."

THE TIME IS AT HAND

I wish to have you observe carefully the words of Jesus when he says the time is at hand, not in the future, and not in the past. Saint Paul also emphasized this thought when he says: "Behold now is the day of salvation." You will notice that the verb is in the present tense in each case. I can live only once, and that once is now; for if I fail to live now the chances are very uncertain that I shall live at all. If, however, I live now, and live as I should the chances are very good that I shall continue to live. I believe, therefore, that if we would quit singing, "This world will be blessed by and by," and begin to sing, "I will help to bless this world here and now," it would have a very wholesome effect upon our lives.

Christian people have quite generally had a misconception of Christianity. With all good intentions they have believed that the Christian religion is intended only to prepare men for the future, and so concerned have they been about the future, that, in a large measure, they have lost sight of the only means of preparing themselves for the future, which is living in the present.

UNCHANGEABILITY

Right here I wish to speak of one other matter, and I trust I may not be misunderstood, misjudged, or have my message in this matter too hastily set aside, because it involves a matter of grave importance. It is this: we speak of God being unchangeable, which is very true; we speak also of the gospel being unchangeable, which is also true; but do we do justice to that truth in our interpretation of the matter therein involved? Do we make our interpretation of it large enough to cover the truth or are we apt to narrow it down to our traditional ideas? For example, a little boy in the sixth grade of the grammar school said to his father: "Papa, I know as much about grammar now as you do." His father said to him, "Very well, my son, will you tell me what a compound-complex sentence is?" And the little lad answered, "Well, I haven't had that yet."

The thought I wish to convey is simply that we grasp in part the requirements of the gospel teaching; we understand in part its possibilities, and we are therefore too prone to say that our understanding of it is the whole truth, and if anyone else sees in it something that is not included in our interpretation, it must necessarily be a gross error. It is error to us because it is outside of the limited interpretation we have placed upon the gospel of Christ.

When a brother advances a thought that is new to us we are too prone to say, "Well, the gospel is unchangeable, and that idea is therefore false, and because I never heard it taught before, it is an innovation." The difficulty is, I am like the little boy who thought he knew as much about grammar as his father; I haven't had that yet. Very well, then, it is worth while to give a broader interpretation to the term gospel than we have been sometimes wont to do.

The facts are that God doesn't change, nor does the gospel change, but I must necessarily pass through a process of successive changes if I am to adjust myself to the requirements of the gospel, and unfold and develop my life thereby until I grow into the stature and fullness of Christ.

Brother, sister, friend, we have a long journey, so to speak, before we reach that condition, and what is our general tendency? Are we daily unfolding and growing into a knowledge of the truth, or are we trying to narrow the truth down so as to have it fit our traditional ideas? It is proper that we should change and change radically in some things, that thereby we might approach a little nearer to the standard of divine truth than we are at the present time. All of truth that we have discovered and all of virtue that we have acquired should be retained and we should enlarge our lives thereby; but we should not fail therewith daily and hourly to eliminate our errors as they are discovered, and to take on and acquire the truth until we are so enraptured by it that we become the truth. To me, this is the only process by which we are or shall be able to approach unto God.

BEGINNING TO OBEY THE GOSPEL

We frequently hear people as they testify in prayer meeting, speak of the time when they obeyed the gospel, and whether they are aware of it or not they are nevertheless interpreting the gospel in past tense rather than in present tense terms. Such a one evidently intends to speak of the time when he joined the church. He has the terms church and gospel confused, and uses them as being synonymous. This is a grave error, and it will be well to give it a little consideration. I may properly speak of the time when I joined the church, but I cannot properly speak of having obeyed the gospel until I have reached the stature and fullness of Christ. I may, however, very properly speak of the time when I began to obey the gospel. There is a vast difference between having obeyed the gospel, and having begun to obey the gospel.

I trust I may not be misunderstood when I say that it is simply a confusion of terms when people speak of the time when they obeyed the gospel. I simply began to obey the gospel when I joined the church; I didn't obey it.

You will readily observe, I trust, that the crux of the whole matter rests in the fact that the gospel is something to be lived daily and hourly, as long as we are in the world, and not something to be put on by the mere observance of certain outward ordinances. It is true that the outward ordinances are a part of the gospel, but they are, at best, only a very small part of it. For me to say that I have obeyed the gospel is for me to say that I have done all that is needful, and I will therefore sit down with folded hands and rest in "carnal security." Note the tense of the verb in the foregoing sentence and see if it does not give you a new vision; for there can be no wholesome growth and unfolding in the life of the individual who understands and speaks of the gospel only in past tense terms.

How much better, therefore, it would be for me to say, "When I am obeying the gospel," than to say, "When I obeyed the gospel." The first is a present activity, the latter is only a past memory. I may very properly speak of having begun to obey the gospel at the time I observed the requirements of the outward ordinances, but it is very improper for me to speak of having obeyed the gospel until I have become obedient to all its requirements, and have by reason thereof grown into a life and character that approximates closely that of the Son of God.

The individual who says he has not changed his mind in the least for the last ten years, admits by that very confession that he has not grown a particle in all that time, and is therefore nothing more than a fossil. Whereas the man who is constantly changing his life is growing, that is, if he has the proper vision and the proper idea before him. When I view the matter from this angle, I am able to understand the philosophy of Solomon when he says, "A wise man changes oft, but a fool never."

"OPERAE PRETIUM EST"—IT IS WORTH WHILE

It is worth while, always, for me to break away from the traditions of the past if by that means I may be able to conserve and develop the best interests of the present hour; if by that process I might discern the signs of the times, and by means of that discernment assist in leading my fellow creatures into the present sunlight of God's love.

Let men resolve that "I" will be the best and do the best now, and the great problem of life will be solved; old things will have passed away and all things will have become new. This is the beautiful vision that enraptured all the seers of the past, and this is the priceless garment that must clothe all the sons of God in the present hour. Yes, brother, it is worth while; will you not therefore bestir yourself and make every effort possible for the bringing in of the reign of Messiah? J. E. VANDERWOOD.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

DISAPPOINTMENT OVER SUNDAY'S CONVERTS

When on May 19 Billy Sunday closed a ten weeks' campaign for souls in the big tabernacle at Chicago Avenue and the lake the final record was: Number of trail hitters, 49,165; expenses of the campaign, $135,000; number of cooperating churches, 424. The result of the campaign in additions to Chicago churches, it is estimated by the various pastors, will not exceed 1,000.

Billy's farewell utterance was: "I've done my duty. Like a physician after he hands the new baby over to the mother and the nurse, takes his departure, so I commit these new converts to the churches, and I go on my way to other fields."

"TRAGEDY," SAYS PASTOR

The Reverend S. J. Skevington, pastor of the Belden Avenue Baptist Church, one of the most active of the cooperating churches, described the trail hitting results as a "tragedy."

"I received about sixty cards signed by those who had hit the trail," said Doctor Skevington. "Eighty-five per cent were members of my church. Six per cent could not be found, either because the name or the address was incorrectly reported. Four per cent seem to give no promise of further interest. Five per cent might be called available material. I have thus far received four into membership, all boys from my Sunday school. I think the trail hitting in itself was a tragedy, but I am looking forward to the fall and winter work in the church hopefully."

"FATAL ERROR"—THOMAS

The Reverend J. S. Ladd Thomas, pastor of the Austin Methodist Episcopal Church, chairman of the Billy Sunday campaign, said he received 169 cards.

"Of the 169 card signers ninety-six were members of my church," he said. "Seventy-three were reported as nonmembers. I received on a recent Sunday eighty-four members into the church, sixteen of them trail hitters. Of the sixteen several were members of other churches who brought their church letters, and the others were from my Sunday school. I only count one man uniting with the church who was not already in some way connected with the church.

"Last year at this same time I received 128 members into the church after a series of meetings led by myself. I commend heartily the work done among the business women downtown and in building up the men's Bible classes, both of which give promise of permanence, but I think it is a fatal error for the church to depend upon special preachers rather than upon the house to house system, as we are now preparing for in Austin."

FINDS THREE CONVERTS

Doctor Johnston Myers, pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, Twenty-third Street and Michigan Avenue, who was chairman of the personal work committee in the Billy Sunday campaign, said he had found three persons whose conversion could be traced to the Billy Sunday meetings.

"I received 175 cards," he said. "All were professed Christians and many of them my leading and best church members. While our church members said they were benefited, I felt, as a whole, we lost ground because of the closing of our church."

The Reverend Norman B. Henderson, pastor of the Irving Park Baptist Church, said he had received thirty cards, two thirds of them church members and only one addition to the church.

NOT A MEMBER

The Reverend A. S. Haskins, pastor of the Irving Park Methodist Episcopal Church, said he received eighty cards and not a church member was gained.

"Nine tenths," he said, "were already church members, and the other one tenth yielded no results. I could have done better without the meetings, because I depended on them to accomplish certain results which were not accomplished."

More favorable reports were received from the Reverend J. L. Anderson, pastor of the Sheridan Road Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Reverend Henry Hepburn, pastor of the Buena Memorial Presbyterian Church. Mr. Anderson said he had received fifty new members, about two thirds of whom he attributed to the Sunday campaign. He said he expected to receive about fifty more. Doctor Hepburn said he received five members out of 125 cards, but he thought he would receive twenty to twenty-five more.

TWELVE NEW ONES

The Reverend Paul Allen, North Shore Congregational Church, one of the nearest to the Sunday tabernacle and one of the most active of the cooperating churches, said he received seventy cards and out of the list twelve new people.

Favorable reports on the success of the Bible class movement in connection with the campaign were made by Mr. Allen and the Reverend F. W. Barnum of the Oakland Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Reverend W. C. Covert, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Forty-first Street and Grand Boulevard, said of the 142 cards received, about three quarters were already church members and only one man united with the church who could be directly traceable to the tabernacle meeting.—W. B. Norton, in Chicago Tribune, June 24, 1918.

OTHER QUAKERS

Not all Quakers wish to be included in ranks of faith expressed by the Philadelphia meeting whose pronouncement on the war was quoted in our issue of May 11. There is a distinct difference professed by the New York head of the Friends' School in both boroughs. So also is the divergence seen in Baltimore from which comes to us a personal letter after our earlier article. The writer of this declares that "the young Quaker of the present day is so true to his inheritance—that of being allowed to act as his conscience dictates—that there are already many in the service, and that, too, with the fervent cooperation of their Quaker parents." The writer, a lady, adds:

When one of these young Friends—now a trusted officer in the American infantry, who enlisted before war was declared by our Government—was challenged by a Quaker friend, he promptly replied: "I am showing my regard for my Quaker ancestry and training in the fact that I cannot and will not allow war to stalk upon the earth unchecked. It is my personal responsibility. Only by meeting the Devil face to face can one hope to crush him."

These sentiments are voiced by many Friends, who are too busy helping to uphold the cause of humanity (which is the cause of Christ) to attend meetings for useless talk.

Mr. Carver, who sets forth in the Brooklyn Eagle what the Quaker youth is being taught about the war, says:

First and last, let us have no compromise or suggestion of compromise as to the justice of the American cause—no admixture of false pacifism in relation to one of the few absolutely just and unavoidable wars that the world has ever seen, unmarred by fanaticism, mistaken hatred, or lust of gain. Let us permit no confusion of ideas between the old-time war of aggression or revenge, and this present war of unselfish sacrifice to save humanity from the reign of the beast.

In his recommendations for teaching the war to children of the Friends' School we see none of the sympathetic aloofness which the Philadelphia meeting felt was the proper Quaker attitude. Mr. Carver writes:

I would treat the war, then, in the primary grades in a manner not unlike that which a careful parent takes toward the little child in the event of a death in the family—avoiding so far as may be the elements of sorrow and horror, and emphasizing strongly the need for loving thoughtfulness toward those in grief. For the spirit of consecration—no matter if the word itself is foreign to the childish vocabulary—the spirit of consecration is not foreign to the spirit of the child, and loving thoughtfulness can be made to grow abundantly in very little children. This only should the world-war mean to them.

In the intermediate grades a distinctly new element enters into the situation. Geography is for many the favorite study.

Facts are a delight. The spirit of adventure has hold upon the boy and even upon the girl. The live youngster cannot be kept from the newspaper, nor should he be. Wise supervision is what he needs. He is certain to follow the campaigns on every front, and to trace the forward movement of every battle line. . . .

The pupil in the grades, then, is strong on the practical side of the war, and what we offer him must be planned accordingly.

On the ethical and emotional sides the grade pupil is in a transition stage. Those elements that we have mentioned as belonging to primary school-teaching must not be lost sight of in the grades; they will need, of course, less minute elaboration. To sensitive souls there is still the danger of shock from details of horrors. Let us diligently keep away from what is morbid.

The glamor of war, if the pupils feel it, will not be the glamor of the dress parade, as it used to be. Boys and girls of the grades are not too young to realize what it means for men to go forth and give "the last full measure of devotion."

For the boys and girls of the high school there must be conference as with adults:

Their knowledge of Europe henceforth must be clearer and more mature than it has been. They must understand both Prussianism and the spirit of Europe that is at death-grips with Prussianism. Particularly must they be in sympathetic touch with the habits, the institutions, and the national hopes of our great allies. Only so can they appreciate America's place in this struggle and in the world's future. No standing aloof in times like these!

With this touch, this perception, they will be roused to comprehend the titanic struggle as a conflict in which there can be no compromise; a war for ideals that are worth all they cost, no matter how much that may be, ideals the overthrow of which means return to savagery.

PASTOR RUSSELL'S FOLLOWERS

[Many have written us about the position taken by the Bible Students' Association. It is with regret we read the following extract from the Saint Louis Daily Globe-Democrat of June 22]:

Joseph F. Rutherford, successor of "Pastor" Russell as head of the International Bible Students' Association, and six of his associates were to-day sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment for conspiracy to violate the espionage law.

The others sentenced are: William E. Van Amburgh, treasurer of the Watch Tower and Bible Tract Society; Robert J. Martin, auditor of the society; Fred H. Robinson, personal representative of Rutherford; A. Hugh McMillan, superintendent of the Bethel Home, domicile of many members of the organization; George H. Fisher and Clayton J. Woodworth, joint authors of The Finished Mystery, and directors of the International Association.

Sentencing of Giovanni De Cecca, another defendant convicted, was deferred for two months pending an investigation into his past career, suggested by the court.

The sentences of twenty years are concurrent sentences of twenty years on each of four counts on which the defendants were convicted.

Twenty years on each count is the extreme penalty, and Federal Judge Howe, who imposed the punishment, denied all motions for setting aside the verdict, staying sentence, or liberating the defendants on bail pending an appeal. Counsel for the defendants announced their intention to appeal at once to the Circuit Court.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON 5020 Cal. St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Government's Relief Work

Of late there has been a great impetus given organized relief work by our Government, which has added to its duties now that of caring for the families of the "boys" who have been called to the colors. The lives of men on earth are so interwoven that it has been found to be impossible to isolate their interests. What affects one, or a group, is seen to affect the whole population of a country, and while, in many instances, the taking of this or that unit from the avenues of production and placing him upon the soldiers' list, might not have had a direct bearing upon any, it has the indirect effect, at least, of causing some to be nearer the line of dependence. The income of a son might not have been the only one in a struggling family, but it had lightened the load for the others.

As the leaders in our Nation have access to expert advice, and are placed where they have long observed causes and effects, and spent considerable time and money in collecting information and surveys, it can be fairly well conceded that their methods of relief may be classed as authoritative; and since our church has always stood for, and applied many of the underlying principles of relief, and of late years, we women have undertaken to assume some of the practical portions of that work, we feel that a study of the methods adopted by our Government at this time might be in order.

Thus we asked our young sister, Lovita Andrews, to outline for the readers of the column, the work which is undertaken by the "Civilian Relief and Home Service" of our Government. This she has most promptly and efficiently done, in a series of three short articles, which will be valuable to our workers both for reading, and for suggestions and reference, when later they, as we most earnestly hope they will, throw themselves more energetically into this part of our auxiliary work. It is desirable and necessary if we would avoid misunderstanding and overlapping of interests, that all work of this sort which is attempted by our women, should be done with a proper counseling with the church officers of their section or branch. We are to be helpers, and not hinderers; we must supplement the work of those placed in authority over the affairs of the church membership, and should always consult with and be willing to be directed by those officers.

Civilian Relief and Home Service.—No. 1

ORGANIZATION

All the work of the chapter which is for benefit of civilians belongs to its committee on civilian relief.

This includes assistance to those in need because of disaster. Fortunately this is not the constant responsibility of any chapter and will never be imposed upon many of them. A Manual of Disaster Relief is being written which will deal with this duty of the civilian relief committee, as this manual deals with home service.

The work of home service should be concentrated within the home service section of the civilian relief committee. Unless there is other civilian relief work to do, the civilian relief committee and the home service section may be identical in membership and the latter title used in the conduct of all work for the families of soldiers and sailors. It is desirable to use the name—home service section—as a means of identifying the purpose and duties of this part of the chapter's organization, and as a means of allaying the opposition which may be created by any title including the word relief.

When it is desirable to organize the home service section as a subordinate part of the civilian relief committee, it is usually better that the most active members of the civilian relief committee should be the nucleus of the membership of the home service section. Not all the members of the civilian relief committee need belong to the home service section, nor do all the members of the latter need to belong to the former. It is important, however, that the leading members of the home service section should belong to the civilian relief committee.

As a matter of practice, many chapters have organized only the one committee which, concerning home service matters, acts in the name of the home service section, and which is ready to act as the civilian relief committee at any time that other distinctly civilian relief matters arise.

The home service section should have a membership as representative as possible of the various local interests—business, professional, church, and social work.

DUTIES OF THE SECTION

The home service section should be responsible (through the civilian relief committee, when such different committees exist) to the officers of the chapter for the proper conduct of its work for the families under its care. It should decide matters of policy as to its own work; it should prepare and submit the budget required for carrying on the section's activities; it should have charge of the employment of the clerical and visiting staff of the section, the enlistment of volunteers, the organization of the office system, and the making of required reports to the chapter, and to the division director of civilian relief at the division headquarters.

The primary responsibilities of the home service section is the service which families of soldiers and sailors may need. In small communities this may be dealt with in its own meetings. Where the work is considerable a consultation committee should be appointed.

The section should have a chairman and a secretary. This chairman may well be the chairman of the committee on civilian relief. The secretary should be chosen with special reference to his or her ability to direct the work of the section of which this officer would be the executive.

The responsibility for raising funds for home service rests with the finance committee of the chapter. The finance committee may find it desirable, at times, to seek special contributions from the public for this branch of chapter work.

THE CONSULTATION COMMITTEE

The home service section may choose a consultation committee. This committee should include the persons engaged locally in public health work and in social service and having special experience and knowledge of local social conditions. It is important that, if possible, there should be upon this committee some one familiar with military and naval affairs, able to advise the section about how to proceed in verifying the fact of a man's enlistment, and about the proper military or naval authority to whom to submit facts regarding the dependency of an enlisted man's family when this may be necessary.

There should be also upon the consultation committee a lawyer ready to instruct the workers about the municipal and state offices from which copies of documents, such as marriage certificates, birth records, will, court records of divorce proceeding, and the like, can be obtained.

The principal function of the consultation committee should be to consider the difficult problems arising in the work with individual families. In any such discussion of family difficulties at committee meetings—discussion made necessary by some question of policy involved—it is urged that the name and identity of the family be suppressed. The affairs of the families under the care of the Red Cross should be regarded as strictly confidential and should not be repeated as gossip. In every way possible the families should be protected from annoying publicity.

The consultation committee should facilitate cooperation between the Red Cross and the agencies and persons regularly engaged in family work.

This committee is subordinate to the home service section, and the section decides upon questions of general policy. The consultation committee decides upon the application of these policies in specific instances.

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

The secretary of the home service section should be its executive and should direct the work with families. It is desirable that this person, whether salaried or unsalaried, should have experience, training, and aptitude for social work. Wherever the number of families to be helped is likely to exceed one hundred, the secretary should give his or her whole time to the work. It is probable that in most places it will not be possible to find such a qualified secretary, able to give his or her service without pay. Money thus spent will bring better results than an equal amount given in relief without the service of one well qualified to direct such expenditures.

In smaller cities there may be only two agencies to which the section can turn for such a secretary. One of these is likely to be a health and nursing agency, employing a nurse whose advice will be invaluable on the health side. The other will usually be an agency engaged in work with families, employing a social worker whose experience in helping individuals and in community activity will be quite as serviceable in the new task as it has been in his regular work. Such a social worker knows existing community resources and how to make the most of them, and knows what it is reasonable to expect of people and what it is not. He, or more often she, is accustomed to getting a great deal of work done in an orderly and thorough way, and knows how to help volunteers to use their time to the best advantage to the families whom they would serve.

HOME SERVICE VOLUNTEERS

Some of these volunteers will be able to give their whole time to the work. Many who have had the advantage of training in social service are coming forward with the gift of their whole time. They make excellent leaders of other volunteers.

That home service section in which the volunteers are drawn from no one group in the community, but in which people of different ages, different religions, different incomes, different occupations, and different amounts of leisure are utilized, will be most successful. Soldiers' wives will some of them have more leisure than usual, some will have less, but many of them will be drawn by a strong natural interest to this work. Some stenographers have persuaded their employers to let them give a stated half day or two half days a week to the office or field work of home service. Teachers are coming forward, some of them giving their whole summer vacation.

PREPAREDNESS

Each chapter should have a home service section, no matter how few men have entered the service from its territory and no matter how self-sufficient their families may appear to be. By no other means can the responsibility for home service be fixed. Without a group charged with this responsibility, there will be soldiers' children dropping out of school, and others deprived of timely medical treatment; there will be soldiers' wives wheedled out of their income by shrewd agents or cheated out of it by fakirs; and there will be soldiers' homes broken up during their absence by temptation or misfortune of one kind or another which the strong will and informed mind of a friend at hand might have overcome. There is a real task for helpful friendship in every community from which soldiers have gone, and from which more must go. Ten families have just as much right to home service as have one hundred families. It is not the volume but the character of the work that counts. Red Cross preparedness for home service must be commensurate with that of the Nation for military success.

(Authority for above, as well as two succeeding papers on this subject, was obtained from booklet on Home Service, prepared by Karl de Schweinitz, of the staff of the New York Charity Organization Society, and from Bill No. 90, drafted by Julian W. Mack. My practical experience in this work has been with the Omaha branch of civilian relief and home service.)

American Mothers, Will You Help "Hold The Line"?

THE QUESTION UNCLE SAM IS ASKING OF LOYAL AMERICAN WOMEN

(This is the fourth of a series of weekly articles on how mothers can help children's year, by Mrs. Max West.)

Back of that hotly contested battle line in Flanders and Belgium, which marks the stand of liberty against despotism; back of the splendid stanchness of the battle cry, "ils ne passeront pas!" to which the United States has sent and is sending such ringing response, stands another fighting line, hardly less important to the safety of civilization. This line is held by American mothers. Thousands of them have sent their sons to France, and thousands more will send theirs before this bitter fight is over. But in this "second line of defense," as it has been called, stand many mothers whose sons and daughters will be given to the service of the United States in the years to come in no less patriotic sense than those are given who now go forth to war. For at the close of this war and for generations to come the progress of civilization will depend upon the kind of men and women who are ready to take up its battles.

The young American mother must begin to-day to lay the foundation of perfect health, upon which the highest degree of physical and mental efficiency is built. To direct and manage the food and care of young children so intelligently that every child will have the best possible start toward such a life is the big, patriotic task which the Nation is asking of young American mothers, and it is one which will bring immeasurable reward in the years to come if it is well done now.

Many thousands of young children in this country are suffering from the lack of such intelligent care, particularly from poor food and improper methods of feeding. A recent article in this series has called attention to the great importance of proper feeding in the first year of life, more especially to the great need of breast-feeding. But throughout infancy and childhood the food must still be carefully selected if children are to thrive. A great many mothers boast, smilingly, "Oh, my baby eats everything we have on the table!" as if that were something to be proud of. They fail to realize that the digestive machinery of a young child is no more capable of dealing with all the foods which an adult may eat than are their muscles and brain capable of doing the work of a grown person. This dangerous idea, which is widespread, is without doubt partially responsible for much weakness, illness, and imperfect development of the growing child's body.

To help mothers select and manage the diet in such a way that the child will secure all the elements necessary for healthy growth, and to suggest many details of the routine care of the normal child, the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia, will soon publish a simple bulletin on the care of the child of the preschool age, which any mother may have, without charge, by addressing the bureau. One practical point for mothers to remember is that milk is essential in the diet of young children, and that for them there is no other food of equal digestibility and availability that will take its place.

At the present moment a wide effort is being made throughout the United States to learn whether our young children are above or below par in physical health, by weighing and measuring those under six years of age. These measurements will be compared with average heights and weights for children of each age group. The attention of parents will thus be called to the needs of children who are noticeably below the average.

Parents desiring to have their children weighed and measured may secure information regarding the national test by addressing the nearest chairman of the woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, or the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Economy Club

Families and individuals of various stations in life are learning how to reduce the high cost of living by forming clubs for the purpose of obtaining wholesale prices, and purchasing goods at a distance wherever the prices are lowest. There are said to be hundreds of such clubs in New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other large industrial centers, and many more scattered throughout the country; some of the largest clubs employing clerks either permanently or specified portions of the time, and saving in some instances nearly twenty-five per cent after incidental expenses are paid.

These clubs are composed of bank, office, department store, and factory employees, as well as of more wealthy persons, who do not disdain the large percentage saved by this plan. The number composing the clubs may vary from a few individuals to over two hundred, and in a few instances more than three hundred are reported to have joined. Their purchases include meats, groceries, vegetables, eggs, butter, milk, coal, wood, dry goods, clothing, and a variety of other articles; in fact, anything for which there is sufficient demand to secure a reduction in price for the quantity ordered. The average saving probably amounts to fifteen or twenty per cent, though a few save more and others less than that amount, depending upon the variety and kind of purchases made. Besides a saving in money, however, better goods are in many cases obtained from dealers who are anxious to retain customers ordering in large quantities. Sometimes the producer may get as good or even better prices, by sending the freshest and best goods possible, and still save the consumer a substantial sum of money and considerable time as well.

The profits of the middlemen are to some extent indicated by the fact that firms employ many clerks and other employees to handle the business of various departments, while their expenses do not prevent them from accumulating large fortunes by this means. It is claimed that some firms pay large salaries to a considerable number of buying agents alone, such salaries in some instances having been more than twenty thousand dollars. These firms take advantage of the fact that many individuals will not spend the exertion necessary to save for themselves, preferring to pay out their money in the easiest way even when the family income is hardly sufficient for their comfortable maintenance. This lack of energy keeps them in poverty, perhaps, until failing powers and old age bring them to the poor house; but if they would be guided by discretion in early life they might possess a comfortable competence in later years by saving a little of the profits that make others rich.

The amount that can be saved in an average family may be approximately realized by the fact that the clubs of one minor city saved over seven thousand dollars on butter imports alone, the saving on each pound being only six cents. Even at a saving of six cents a pound an ordinary family that uses three pounds of butter each week would save more than nine dollars during one year on this item, and many articles may be purchased at a much greater saving. By methods of this kind a family can save enough to change penury into sufficiency, and forced economies into abundance, when the system has become thoroughly operative. Until the methods of the club are thoroughly systematized each member can help to ascertain where goods may be bought to the best advantage. The work will become a pleasure to the members, aside from the savings secured, as it enables them to meet at stated times and enjoy the social advantages that naturally accrue, while it develops the business acumen so commonly needed by the household economist. Why should it be said that "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light"? A little persistent effort and cooperation will bring results that will amount to a pocketbook revelation of a very pleasing character.

"Damnation" Banned

"Convocation of Canterbury, meeting at Church House, Westminster, has been exercised over damnation—not the subject, but the word, which figures with painful frequency in translations of the gospels and in the English Prayer Book. Old as is its authority, there are people, clerical and lay, who object to the use. It is its appearance in the prayer book that has made the subject a living issue. Lower House of Convocation has offered proposals for revision of the prayer book, and the dean of Christ-church informed his clerical colleagues yesterday that 'they had been searching for a substitute in various places.'

"Both houses were at one that damnation should go. The lower house suggested condemnation as more fitting to modern ears. The upper house, not less sensitive, proposed instead to have judgment. Before convocation separated yesterday both houses had agreed to judgment, and that word is to take the place of the offender in many places in the revised prayer book."—London Daily Telegraph, May 2, 1918.

The word damnation appears no less than eleven times in the authorized version of the New Testament, damned three times, damnable once. The translators could not, according to their religious traditions, see any difference in the degrees of punishments, therefore the sameness of its use. The Inspired Translation modifies its use according to the degree of punishment attached to the subject in consideration.

Thus once more we see that the inspiration of the young prophet was eighty-six years ahead of the wisest of the wise of our time.

Time, like God himself, is a great arbitrator and an adjudger. Truth is like the stars, they may be hid for a time by the smoke of the straw, but they will shine, and will yet reappear.

Minnesota Reunion

Our Minnesota reunion has passed, and all have returned home to attend to the busy affairs that are a part of everyday life, yet with renewed strength and new life, as our meetings were of a high spiritual order, especially the prayer meetings.

The bulk of the preaching fell upon the following brethren: J. E. Wildermuth, W. E. Shakespeare, Thomas Leach, H. M. Curtis, and Lester Whiting. The sermons from these men were uplifting, encouraging, and many of those not of the church were well pleased with what they heard. The rest of the priesthood assisted and took charge of the various other services, and the condition of brotherly love and cooperation which marked the entire reunion was enough to repay one for any effort made.

In our prayer meetings the spirit of meekness and humility of soul pervaded every session. Beautiful prayers were offered by many, and testimonies will never be forgotten, I am sure. Such experiences as were related in these meetings were enough to cause the downhearted to take a second lease on life, and forget past misfortunes. We enjoyed the gift of prophecy in several of these prayer services, Sister M. D. Graham, from Burlington, North Dakota, was the one through whom the Lord sent those inspiring messages. Some received answer to their prayers and went home greatly encouraged, and we were commended for our efforts, unity, and humility.

The Sunday school work was ably handled by Brother H. M. Curtis, and we realize that in him Minnesota District has one of the best district superintendents it ever had. Many advanced methods were advised that have to do with the success of the Sunday school, and there were many others that said and wrote things of interest, which we do not wish to forget.

Of the Religio we might say the same as we did of the Sunday school, only that it was in charge of Sister Graham, the district president not being able to attend, but the efforts of all in this department of the church work was educational to say the least.

The Woman's Auxiliary was well represented by Sister Graham, who responded to the many calls for assistance. We feel to make special mention of the noble efforts of this sister, and in the Woman's Auxiliary work many were edified and enlightened with her efficient instruction. The social purity work, which was for women and girls only, was appreciated by all who attended, and many expressed themselves as well pleased.

We had regular song services each evening before services, which attracted the attention of those living within ear shot of our tent, and some who were quite talented joined us in singing, also rendering some beautiful solos. Some said, "We heard your singing away up town," and complimented us. The key to our success was unity.

On the last Friday of the reunion, we had a picnic at Wimer Lake, in which all had a good time. Lunch was served, games and other recreational features were provided for. Seven autos conveyed the people from the reunion tent to the picnic grounds.

After this pleasant afternoon, we all returned to the tent, and were favored with an excellent musical and literary program, in which outside talent figured very prominently, and we had the promise of the assistance of the Methodist choir, but, unfortunately at the last moment they declined, their reasons for doing so are not known.

Following this, a lecture on the Red Cross work was given by the writer, in which the newly purchased stereopticon machine of the Minneapolis Religio was a gratifying feature. The lecture and slides were obtained from the Minneapolis Public Library. We visited the president of the Frazee chapter of the Red Cross and obtained her consent, which was heartily given, and a representative sent to assist in taking up the contribution at the close of the lecture. One of our sisters in her Red Cross uniform was also appointed to take part in this work, her name being Sister P. M. Martin, who is well known to all our district. The collection resulted in $22.50.

Two fine young men were inducted into the kingdom, Brother Fay W. Kenyon, of Fordville, North Dakota, and another young man well known around Clitherall, whose name we forget. The sick were healed at this reunion, and in the homes of outside people.

Next time we meet at Minneapolis for our fall conference, the last Saturday in November, the Sunday school and Religio conventions meeting on the Friday just before conference.

The reunion for next year has been decided upon, the date to be decided later, but the place chosen by the recent conference was Clitherall, and our anticipations for another successful time is in evidence in the hearts of all, I am sure.

I should like to here express the thanks of all who attended our late reunion at Frazee, for the courtesies and hospitality shown us by the Frazee Saints. We had a number of visitors from the North Dakota District also, and we enjoyed their association indeed.

Wishing all a successful year, I desire to remain,
Respectfully,

E. H. BENNETT.

Toronto Branch Notes

Niagara! Neither pen, tongue, brush, nor chisel can portray thy beauty, measure thy power, or describe thy majesty! Four times in my life has my soul communed with God. Once on the mountain top; once by the seashore; once on the desert; and now, Niagara!

Brother John W. Rushton who has been in New York for a time returned to Toronto on Friday, Brother Joe Williams and the writer meeting him at Niagara Falls. Together we visited Brother Place who took us to view their cozy and well located chapel. We made the trip through a drenching rain.

The attendance at church continues about as formerly reported. Held a very interesting priesthood meeting on Thursday evening. Most of the priesthood remain loyal to the church. We suggested the adoption of a definite plan of action, providing for the using of all members of the priesthood, districting the city, systematizing visiting and general team work. Our program was enthusiastically indorsed.

The Sunday school and Religio are both moving along nicely and prospects are very encouraging. In accord with the wishes of the general organizations I have appointed Brother J. T. Whitehead, 48 Euclid Avenue, Toronto, as superintendent of the Toronto District Sunday School Association, and Fred Long, 29 Bellwoods Avenue, Toronto, as president of the Toronto District Zion's Religio-Literary Society. Those interested please note.

Sunday was a busy day. The priesthood prayer service at 9 a. m. was addressed by Brother Rushton. Branch prayer service at 9.30 a. m., in charge of T. W. Williams and John W. Rushton. Preaching at 11 a. m. by T. W. Williams, subject, "Prayer, its function and purpose." A group of the ministry, under the direction of Brethren Fred Long and Jack Whitehead, took autos and drove about twenty-five miles to the home of Brother Farr at Woodridge. A goodly number of the Saints from the surrounding country to a distance of thirty-five miles had gathered. Arrangement was made for an outdoor meeting. Brother Rushton was the afternoon speaker at two o'clock. The people were all attention. "The mission of Jesus and our relation to that mission" was the theme. The speaker sounded the depths of loyalty, of faith, and of service.

Immediately at the close of the service, Brother Rushton, accompanied by some members of the priesthood, returned to Toronto for the evening service. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in social intercourse. I took a long stroll through the Canadian "bush." We would call it "woods" in the United States. The scenery is beautiful at this time of the year.

At five o'clock lunch was served. One thing I have discovered. In Canada they have "meals at all hours." We have our regular "three meals" a day and sandwiched between these a lunch whenever any member of the family desires it. As a result most of our time is engaged in eating. Canadians are good liver. Haven't had the heart to talk "conservation" as yet.

Brother Williams was the evening speaker. The services were held in the house as the weather was too cold for outside service. Brother Williams's subject was, "The gospel, the power of God unto salvation." The subject of Brother Rushton's sermon in Toronto was, "The baptism of honor."

Meetings are announced for the week as follows: Tuesday night, T. W. Williams; Wednesday, J. W. Rushton; Thursday, Brother Williams; Religio on Friday night.

One can hardly realize that you are having warm weather in the States. A letter from California reports 117 degrees in the shade, Omaha 105, whilst here in Toronto it is so cold that we are wearing overcoats and have need of fire morning and evening.

I have seen more babies in arms and more baby carriages in Toronto during the last three weeks that I witnessed in California during the entire year. Evidently the term race suicide is unknown here.

Sincerely, your brother in Christ,
THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, May 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am sending my subscription to HERALD and Unity, for which find inclosed the money order.

I can only indorse the testimony of all the writers to the HERALD by saying that I appreciate reading them from beginning to end. They are not long in my possession before they are disrobed of their wrappers. Then what food for thought is inclosed therein! I always admire the editorials, but the ones who pen them, I admire the more, for their straightforwardness and the clear understanding one receives from the product of their brains inspired by Almighty God. What a proud people we should be to have such noble men at the head of affairs in the church.

We are still holding forth here in Dunedin and doing what we can to spread truth abroad. This war gives one not much encouragement but we look forward to a better and brighter day. The priest in our branch appeared before the medical officers last Wednesday, and has to go into camp when called upon. We are all hoping that that will never be, as our number is small enough at present. It is hard to get the people here to realize the greatness of the message we have. They are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

I had a beautiful dream one night prior to receiving The Unity with the questions in regard to blessing articles for the healing of the sick. Here it is:

My wife and I were in a room together when a tall lady dressed in black came in with a bunch of flowers in her hand. We were both surprised to see her coming into the room, but she soon informed us that she had heard we believed in healing the sick, and she had brought the bunch of flowers to be blessed so that she could take them to her sick child and have him healed. I immediately asked her if she believed in the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick and she said, Yes. I then said to her, "Why not have the genuine article instead of the blessed bunch of flowers?" I told her I would get an elder to come and administer to her child and she was so overjoyed at the suggestion that we went to find Brother Hall, and it was while on our way that I awoke. I was so impressed with the dream that I related it to my wife, and imagine my surprise when this same question was traveling over the waters to me in The Unity.

I must say that we have been blessed in many instances through calling in the elder to administer to our sick ones. At the present writing our only girl is very ill with a severe attack of tonsilitis. We have had her administered to, and trust in God to raise her up to her usual health again. He has heard our prayers in behalf of one sister who was ordered to the sanitarium and we are thankful to say she is back in our midst enjoying the associations of the Saints. Brother and Sister Savage and Brother Robinson and wife are up in Auckland and are meeting with success. I have just received seven certificates of baptism, all one family who belonged to the Utah church, and we pray that many more will be led into the true fold.

We have had no news of the conference so far, but are anxiously waiting to learn of the good spiritual times you lucky Saints over there enjoy. We are all pleased to learn of the advancement the work in Lamoni is making regarding the flour mill and laundry, etc., and feel sure that it is a step in the right direction.

I will close with best wishes from the Saints in Dunedin for the advancement of the work and trust that we will all do our part in the building up of Zion.

I remain, in gospel bonds,

J. C. BRADLEY.

RENTON, WASHINGTON, June 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: To-day is the eleventh anniversary of my baptism into the church by S. P. Cox, in Skookumchuck River, Centralia, Washington. A number of times I have been asked by Saints why I have never written to the letter department of THE HERALD; and now for the first time in my eleven years of experience in the church I find myself isolated from the Saints—meaning the Centralia Branch—and therefore disposed to write. This anniversary, coupled with the relaxation from activities I enjoyed in the branch, tends to a reminiscent mood.

My spiritual birth and the annual recurrence of its anniversary means more to me than the date of my physical birth. The day of our baptism (for Sister Bertha Wells and Brother G. R. Kerstetter accompanied me) was a warm and beautiful day in June; and "what is so rare as a day in June?" On that day the whole course of my life was changed; my destiny could not remain the same. As I stood trembling beside the elder whose hand was solemnly pointed heavenward for a moment, it seemed good to know that his arms were strong enough to bring me back safe from my watery grave. A moment later I came, dripping wet, back to the little band of Saints on the bank, a newborn child in the kingdom of God.

An hour or so later, we met in prayer meeting at Brother Kerstetter's home, and were confirmed. I hope I shall never forget the sacredness, the heavenly peace, the purest of joy, the divine touch that I experienced upon that occasion. I drank in every word of the testimonies of those faithful old Saints; Brethren S. Crum, Willard Wells, and Sister Mira Stainton. Then came the confirmation and the prophecy that I should some day enter the ministry and become a polished shaft in God's hand. I didn't like that. I wanted to be a devoted and righteous Saint; but I didn't want to advertise my faith as I knew a preacher must. I was a young man of eighteen and one half years, in high school, with ardent ambitions for a brilliant future. Whether I could have fulfilled them or not is another question.

But what joy I felt in those days in my newfound faith. It was my faith because I had found it, I had closely examined it, and found it to be Biblical, "The old, old path, made strangely new," the religion my soul had cried out for in the darkness of atheistic despair—I had not followed meekly in the footsteps of pious parents. There was an indescribable charm in the history of Joseph Smith and his progenitors and of the founding of the church; I read every church book on doctrine or history I could buy or borrow, and there was a pleasure and delightful newness in all those golden days I can never describe. It had taken six months to convert me to the gospel, therefore I logically reasoned that in six months more my folks would be rejoicing with me in the restoration.

I came home alone from those wonderful experiences of the day. I was alone with my mother when she said that night: "You are one with us so far as the family is concerned, but so far as your religion is concerned, you cannot be one with us, we will have nothing to do with you." Where was the sweet Spirit that made me so strong that day? I was alone that night as I dampened my pillow with tears till I slept. I was alone so far as any earthly relative or friend was concerned, but I am sure that the tender hands of angels touched me while I slept and gave me the strength to press on, which I did not possess. But I would not exchange the experiences of those times for the experiences of any Saints whose parents made the way easy before them; because their purging and strengthening effect can be had in no other way.

Since my baptism, a brother and sister of mine have entered the church, and my brother and I have been honored with the heavenly calling. I have been active in branch work since its organization on February 5, 1911, until April 24, last, when wife and I were forced to leave Centralia in search of employment with better pay, for Uncle Sam pays his rural carriers a mere pittance. In Renton here I am seeking light and guidance on how best to let the gospel light shine and bring some into the fold. We live in a little tent so cannot start a Sunday school, and I am inexperienced in the missionary work of the isolated, but it is my earnest ambition to fulfill my whole duty as a Saint and realize the promises made to me.

Yours fraternally,

LEONARD S. RHODES.

PORTLAND, OREGON, June 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: I certainly enjoy reading your lines of encouragements, and the light I receive is no small amount.

We have a fairly good branch here in Portland. Some good spiritual manifestations have been given of late. It shows God has his all-seeing eyes on his children at all times. I was just reading an article in the HERALD about writing our thoughts to the church papers, and it is surely a good one, or at least I think so. It is regarding the way we should use our punctuation and grammar. It states some get offended and use harsh words, but with me it is different. I am very much pleased to note the interest our good editors take in their work. They show plainly that they want the work done right. I am sure I would not think of saying anything in the church papers if I could not have the words and punctuation adjusted. I feel safe to say, "He knows."

I am not disposed to mention what little I have done for this great church, but I love to tell Saint and sinner what great blessings God has bestowed on my wife, baby, and myself. While I am here writing in my rude and rough manner, I feel very grateful to my heavenly Father for this beautiful sunshine, and green lawn with such beautiful roses and other flowers, and the greatest blessing of all is our health and his loving Spirit that we surely enjoy. Some day I am going to write my experience before I came into the church. I won't take up any more space to-day. Let us be faithful.

Don't argue or find any more fault; let us do our part. That is all God requires of us. May God be with us all in my prayer in Christ's name.

CHARLES F. MURRAY.

41 East Twenty-eighth Street.

LINVILLE, ARKANSAS, June 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am now in my field of labor. I am entering into my year's work under some disadvantages over which no man has control. I have had some fine meetings since General Conference. Baptized some five people, and I know this morning while writing these few lines that the Lord's work will triumph. I have heard and seen too much in this great latter-day work to believe otherwise.

Yes, there is no dimness in the vision of the prophets concerning God's everlasting kingdom. The word of God is pledged that the power of Satan shall be broken, death is to be destroyed. The earth shall be redeemed, the stains of sin shall be effaced from the abodes of men. All prophecy is burdened with this pledge of a future triumph, so complete that nothing can be desired to be added to it, and the last prayer of the Bible is for the speedy coming of the Lord to assume his kingdom, and to complete his work.

In the midst of wars and rumors of wars, of national changes and the uncertainty which attends all human planning, this kingdom is the refuge of faith and the hope of man, wearied as we may be with the rising and falling, the waxing and waning, the uplifting and the destroying, which are the successive developments of man's wisdom and power. We may give glory to God that we stand near a throne that can shelter us always and belong to a kingdom that cannot be moved.

Dear Saints, let us look beyond the dark cloud that has come to destroy Babylon and to let us know that the coming of our Savior is near at hand. So may God bless his work in all parts of the earth this year.

I am still bishop's agent for my field of labor. The Saints did well in this country last year in tithes and offerings. May they be blessed with God's Holy Spirit, and with health and strength and the necessities of life, that they may do all that God requires at their hands. My address for the next three weeks will be Dale, Arkansas. I will be glad to hear from any Saints in Arkansas or Louisiana who want preaching done in their vicinity.

My home address is Wilburton, Oklahoma.

E. A. ERWIN.

LINCOLN, MISSOURI, June 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are isolated, just two families of Saints here: R. H. Beebe and ourselves. We find much pleasure in reading the inspiring sermons and letters found in the HERALD. I have been in the church nine years and never desire to go back in the world, but do desire to advance in the Lord's work.

Our doors are open, and we are anxious for some elder to make us a visit and open the work here. There has been some preaching done here, but not right in the neighborhood.

We would be pleased to have some Saints wanting to locate on farms settle here. Ever praying for the advancement of God's work that we love and esteem,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. W. W. SNELL.

PALMS, MICHIGAN, June 11, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD and Ensign ever since I embraced the gospel, and I esteem them very highly.

It is now almost three years since I first heard and embraced the angel's message. It was under the preaching of Elder O. J. Hawn, at Carsonville, in 1915, that I was converted to the latter-day work; prior to this time I engaged in most all of the pleasures of the world, and had what I then termed "a good time." But since rendering obedience to the divine plan of God, I have often said that I would not exchange the blessings and enjoyment received in one hour of a good prayer meeting, for all the enjoyment I ever had in the world.

One year from the day I was baptized, I was ordained a priest, and, being commissioned by the Spirit through one of the Lord's servants, to devote my time to the preaching of the gospel, I immediately began devoting my entire time to the work of the Lord. About seven months later I was ordained under the hands of Elders William Grice, J. F. Curtis, and S. W. L. Scott, to the office of elder; I then accepted a General Conference appointment, under which I have been laboring ever since. While it truly required a sacrifice for me to leave my business opportunity and take up the missionary work, I do not feel that the sacrifice has been too great, for I know our reward is sure by and by; therefore I want to continue to work in the interest of the work of the Lord.

When I embraced the gospel I had little or no knowledge of the word of God, and for this reason I found the HERALD and Ensign not only a source of comfort and strength to me, but also a fountain of education, at which I drank each week. I feel that no Latter Day Saint can afford to be without them, and may the time speedily come when they will be found in the home of every Saint. I do not think that anyone can find an excuse that would be legitimate in its character for not taking them, as the price is within the reach of all.

About four weeks ago I came here, to what is known as the Union Branch, to hold a series of meetings. For two weeks the meetings were very successful; had an attendance of from seventy-five to two hundred every evening, but the Monday of the third week I took sick. Not thinking there was anything seriously wrong with me, I preached that night, but Tuesday I was worse, and had to consult a physician, and he at first called it stomach trouble and a nervous breakdown from too much preaching, but the next day proved that the doctor was mistaken, as I broke out with the small-pox. I then was quarantined at the home of Brother William Innis for two weeks, at which place I am at this writing.

During my time I have had several afflictions, but this one is the worst of them. For a few days the Saints here where I am staying had little or no hopes of me getting better; but God in his transcending love saw fit to spare my life, and I am now on the road to health and strength again.

I shall never forget the kindness shown toward me by Brother and Sister Innis while I was sick with that dreadful malady, and I trust that God may bless them spiritually, physically, and temporally, for their hospitality.

There also were many others who did acts of kindness by sending me dainties to eat, which was very acceptable, as my appetite was not very good. Among them was Mrs. Bootz, a German Lutheran lady, who, previous to my coming here, had never heard the gospel preached; but during the two weeks of meetings that I held before I took sick, she came out and became very interested.

There is much gospel work to be done in Eastern Michigan District. I am continually receiving letters from the various parts of the district, requesting me to come and hold a series of meetings, many more than I have time and opportunity to fill. May the Lord send us more laborers.

We have two brethren in the district working locally this year, devoting their whole time to the work, and we trust that God may bless their labors, so that they may receive encouragement to continue on in the gospel work. Their names are Richard Kinney and Kenneth Green. Saints of Eastern Michigan please take notice and lend them your support.

Our district conference is to be held June 22 and 23, at Flint, at which I anticipate a shifting of the missionary force of Eastern Michigan, as the district is to be divided according to General Conference arrangement. But wherever we may be appointed to labor, may we all work with a single eye to the glory of God, that the honest in heart may be gathered into the fold of Christ, and the Saints brought to the condition that Zion may be redeemed.

Your brother and humble servant in the one faith,

THOMAS L. CLARK.

MANSFIELD, WASHINGTON, June 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: Thinking the Saints might want to hear from this part of God's vineyard, I thought I would write a few lines.

On February 27, 1916, my wife and I were baptized and confirmed by Elder J. A. Bronson. I attended the conference and reunion of the Spokane District held at Sawyer, Idaho, the last of June and the first of July. While there the Lord saw fit to call me to the priesthood through the one who baptized me, and I was ordained to the office of elder under the hands of Apostle Peter Anderson and Elder J. A. Bronson. In November, 1916, I was elected president of the Mansfield Branch, and then began to preach the gospel in my weak way, and continued preaching when time and opportunity offered until General Conference this year.

I then sent in an application for a mission, and was given my home district. Since then in the missionary work I have been made both to rejoice and to lament. When I go among the Saints and find them cold and indifferent, taking no interest in the church work, and when we go to our sacrament meetings and see no spiritual manifestations I wonder what is the reason. Is it not because we are not worthy? Is it because we are taken up with the affairs of this world, and do not give ear to the voice of our Lord, wherein he has said, "Shun all appearance of evil"? I fear it is.

It makes my heart ache when I hear of the Saints partaking of the ways of the world, in fashion and worldly pleasures; oh, that it were not so! And if the priesthood could be as Paul: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Corinthians 2: 1-5.)

But as I said before, I have been made to rejoice since coming into the church. We have been blessed many times in cases of sickness, and now I wish to relate an instance that took place last night, which has caused me to write this letter.

Elder R. Newby, one of our missionaries in this district, and I drove out to a schoolhouse about fourteen miles from home to preach at eight o'clock in the evening. It was near unto midnight when we reached home and I found my wife very sick, having been poisoned by some of the food she had eaten. Her hands and feet were cramping and her stomach was swollen very badly, and the cold sweat was standing out all over her. We proceeded at once to administer to her, and before we had taken our hands off her head the cramping had stopped and the swelling had also gone out of her stomach. She is not able to be up all the time yet, but she is fast improving.

We are glad to know that the Lord is still watching over his people, and is willing to answer our prayers when we will comply with his laws.

Elder Newby and I have been laboring together since General Conference, trying to keep God's law, where he tells us to go two by two, declaring his word like unto angels of God.

Asking the prayers of all the Saints, I remain,

Your colaborer in the gospel,

PEARL REED.

SAINT MARYS, ONTARIO, June 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: I came to Saint Marys direct from Lamoni and am preaching nightly six miles in the country where I made a new opening last winter. The interest is still good.

The Adventists were holding a meeting when I arrived. I went to hear their preacher two nights, as I was informed that he was one of their heavyweights. Then, too, they had expressed a wish before my arrival that I was here so their man could meet me. But for some reason he was shy, and his people didn't even make me acquainted with him. He was very careful about how he expressed himself, but the last night, when I was not there, he told them that if anyone came around and contradicted what he said relative to the Sabbath he would be back. He will likely have occasion to return, if he meant what he said.

He made it plain to us all that he was an educated man, having finished a course in homiletics under a professor. My first impression was that he was a man-made preacher, and he confirmed my suspicion before he talked very long. There is no need of a divine "call" now. Anyone can preach who has been properly trained by competent instructors, so it was said.

No wonder the world is being devastated by the fires of a terrible war. Infidelity has seized the reins of ecclesiastical government, and the word of God is superceded by the traditions of men. Nephi was right when he said they would "preach up unto themselves, their own wisdom, and their own learning." The Book of Mormon, with its unmeasured wealth of timely advice, looms up big in these days of doubt and disaster.

But how many of us are reading it? How many of us know that it clearly, definitely, and accurately points out the present world-crisis, with the causes leading thereto? That our own measurement is recorded with an uncanny precision? Not satisfied with the divine arrangement, the Christians have refashioned the house of the Lord until, like the Kaiser's prize cup, it is mostly pewter, with a deceptive veneer which has been shot away, revealing the cheap substitute, valuable only as junk. They were blinded by the glittering polished surface concealing the worthless alloy.

How strange it is that the same flimsy "polish" has such a magnetic attraction for us! Is there not a lesson for us in the dire calamity that has overtaken the world? Can we not analyze the situation with profit to ourselves? Will our anchor hold? Shall we continue to rely on the chain of truth? Or will we exchange it for a rope of error?

But shades of psychology! I didn't expect to preach when I sat down to write. But being a preacher, it appears to be my first duty. With your pardon, brother editor, I will desist, but let me say in closing that I am still in the faith, and hopeful of a glorious triumph for the cause we serve. But if the "suckers" continue to menace the life of the tree, we will soon have to apply the pruning hook.

Yours ready for the task,

E. E. LONG.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, June 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few items to let you know our whereabouts. Brother P. M. Hanson and I came to the tricity the first part of June, and have been busy all the time since. We attended the district conference at Kewanee, Illinois, June 8 and 9, and were very much pleased to meet with the Saints of that district.

W. E. Peak is the district president and Elder Curtis the missionary. They seem to have their work in good shape, and have a fine lot of Saints to help them. We then returned to these cities and have helped in the good work.

Brother Hanson left here a few days ago for other parts. He and Brother William Sparling, president of the Eastern Iowa District, expected to stop at Waterloo to organize a branch. Then Brother Hanson would go on to the western part of the State.

There are three cities here together and we have a church and branch in each. Through the devoted effort of Doctor Asay they have a nice seven-thousand-dollar church at Rock Island, Illinois. This is just across the Mississippi from Davenport. Of course Doctor Asay did not do it all, but he was the principal one to make it a success. The good Saints and friends there have stood by him, and they will soon have it ready for dedication.

The branch at Davenport is at present meeting in a hall, and are building a church; when completed it will be about as large and as good as the one in Rock Island.

I think the work in these cities is in a better condition now than it has been for some years. Prospects seem very good. I go from here to-morrow to Clinton, Iowa, to attend the district conference. Brother Sparling is the president.

Plenty of rain and fine prospects for crops here.

Yours sincerely,

W. M. AYLOR.

FORT MADISON, IOWA, June 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: At the June convention of the Sunday school and Religio of the Nauvoo District June 14, we were favored with the presence of Brother Arthur W. Smith of the Lecture Board. He gave two illustrated lectures on Mexico and Ancient America at this place during the convention and conference. From here he went to Burlington to give two lectures. They were very interesting and instructive—as has been the case with other lectures by members of the lecture board. We hope the work of this board can be enlarged.

The district banner which is awarded each convention to the local sending the largest representation was given to the Rock Creek school.

Things moving along nicely at present here, although war conditions are felt here as well as elsewhere. Six of our Sunday school boys have already enlisted in the service of the United States. Next conference at Rock Creek. I recently had the pleasure of baptizing three persons into the church.

W. H. GUNN.

ELSNORE, UTAH, June 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have contributed anything to the columns of our valuable church paper, so will make an effort to respond. The past year has shown some progress in church work in this district and, while we do not congratulate ourselves that we have done all that we could have done, we feel grateful for the advancement made. Under the peculiar conditions prevailing here in the valleys of the mountains we naturally do not expect the advancement to be made that we see in some of the central stakes or districts. Under the trying circumstances in which our representatives work, we are at least gratified in being able to report progress.

Since the first of January we have baptized about thirty-five people in the district. While many of these are the result of the labors of others in the years of the past, we are glad the missionaries have been able to water the seed already sown. Credit must be given to Elders C. N. Heading and Willard Parkes for the greater number of these baptisms. Several more are near the fold and we hope to see an ingathering of these in the near future.

There is a growing spirit of liberality here among the dominant church membership. In conversation with some of the sons of the leading men of that church we notice a disposition to be fair, and a willingness to discuss some of the differences in a dispassionate manner. We believe we can see the day dawning when priestcraft will be swept away and men will feel a freedom that they have not felt in the history of the past. If we expect to do any good here in the valleys of the mountains we need to exhibit a spirit of kindness that will convince these people that we are here as their friends, and not to simply antagonize them as to their religious belief. The spirit of moderation is a dominant factor in reaching any people, and the Mormons are no exception to that rule. The methods employed by some in the past are not the methods we should employ to-day. New propositions are constantly confronting us, and we trust divine wisdom will be given that we may be able to meet these problems in a way that will work for good among mankind. From my experience here in Utah I have been convinced we must not be possessed with a spirit of hatred against those who have been led astray. That kind of spirit will not only fail in reaching the people, but it will disqualify those who allow it to dominate their work.

We are pleased to report that many of our branches are showing an advancement in spirituality. This is largely the result of faithful labor done by those in charge. Some of our local men are responding nobly to the call which has come to them and we hope to see good results from their labors. Our aspiration is to see every ordained man in this district at his post of duty, but this may never be realized.

At the present time, in company with Brother B. L. McKim, I am making a missionary tour of the southern part of the State. The missionary auto is being brought into use and it will enable us to reach some sections of the State which we otherwise could not visit. We are preaching on the street of a small town near, called Monroe. The attendance has been fair and the interest is good. We have already been here two weeks tracting and preaching and we feel the interest will justify our continuing for a short time at least.

It is a pleasure to visit some of our isolated Saints and find them still holding on to the "rod of iron" and firm in the faith of the restored gospel. Special mention should be made of the family of Brother and Sister Lorensen of this place. They have stood firm for many years and even their neighbors have learned to respect them, even though they have been bitterly opposed to them religiously. Many of our early missionaries can testify of their love for the gospel and how they cared for the representatives of truth in the years of the past. Their home has always been a stopping place for the missionaries. Others have also done much in caring for those who have labored in this field.

We expect to continue farther south and may not get back to Salt Lake City before the latter part of August. We would be glad to remain here for a considerable period of time but duties along pastoral lines make it necessary for us to return as soon as possible.

We could relate many valuable experiences here in connection with our work but space will not permit. In conversation with one of the leading officials of the dominant church a short time ago he made a very important statement, relative to the selection of the president of their church, in which he stated he had "often wished God would tell their church just who he wanted for the head of the church, but he does not, and so we do the next best and do our own choosing." I have not given his statement verbatim but rather the thought as he expressed it. This same person said that as a church they were not a religious body, but rather engaged in commercialism.

With a prayer that the work may move on and the honest in heart be gathered out for the coming of the Lord,

I am hopefully in the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Mission address 336 South Fourth East Street, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, June 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: We were especially glad to welcome back Brother D. J. Williams as pastor for another year. The activities of himself, wife, and daughter are thoroughly appreciated, and we can but hope and pray that the feeling and activity now existing in the branch may be continued.

Opportunity was afforded for some publicity during the week of May 19, when three lectures were delivered in the city by Mr. Vernon J. Danielson, ex-Mormon high priest, who is with the National Reform Association, lecturing on Mormonism from the inside. He is fair in differentiating between the two organizations when questioned following the lecture, and those of our people who met him found pleasure in the acquaintance.

Five of our young men are now in the service, and others may follow soon. A service flag is to be dedicated Sunday, June 30.

A number of representatives from Burlington attended the district conventions and conference at Fort Madison, Iowa, June 14 to 16. A new departure was attempted in convention work, devoting the three sessions on Friday to programs. The plan proved quite successful this time, and the time was used to good advantage. We were especially fortunate in having with us Brother Arthur W. Smith, of Saint Louis, who gave his illustrated lecture on Mexico, ancient and modern, Friday and Saturday evenings. He also gave helpful contributions in suggestions on Sunday school and Religio work at the morning and afternoon sessions, and injected some more enthusiasm on the Christmas offering Sunday morning. We are assured that our workers feel well repaid thus far for availing themselves of the services of the lecture board.

We were pleasantly surprised to have Brother J. A. Gillen with us for the conference sessions Saturday and Sunday. He presided over the conference in conjunction with the district presidency, and submitted the recommendation of the joint council, for Brother Arthur Allen as district president, thus releasing Brother D. J. Williams and enabling him to concentrate on his work in Burlington, which he has found may easily occupy his time to the utmost.

Brother Allen is at present with Brother and Sister Layton, who are stationed in Nauvoo. He hopes, however, when improvements are completed there, to make a thorough canvass of the district.

Brother Gillen spoke Sunday morning and evening at the conference services, and officiated in the ordination of Brother August Lee of Burlington, to the office of deacon.

The lectures on Mexico by A. W. Smith were repeated in Burlington Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, June 18 and 19, where they met with equally enthusiastic reception. A number of nonmembers were in attendance, from whom subsequent inquiries indicated interest aroused. Local workers have also expressed themselves as still aglow with enthusiasm after Brother Smith's talks to officers and teachers, preceding his two lectures.

A meeting of officers and teachers is called this week, with a view to carrying out some of the suggestions offered.

The Sunday school was on "dress parade" Sunday, June 23, in a patriotic Children's Day service, which was exceptionally well rendered. Brother Truman Ziegenhorn, on leave from Camp Dodge, added the finishing touch, in his uniform. He gave an added touch of patriotism to the services of the day in a short talk to the Religio in the evening.

We are advised of the death of our aged brother, W. O. Schweers, Monday, June 24, resulting from intestinal cancer. His sons, Brethren Fred, Henry, and Loren, are expected from Independence to attend the funeral.

CORRESPONDENT.

The heroism of private life, the slow, unchronicled martyrdoms of the heart, who shall remember? Greater than knightly dragon slayers of old, is the man who overcomes an unholy passion, sets his foot upon it, and stands serene and strong in virtue.—Grace Greenwood.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Coalville, Iowa, June 8 and 9, in charge of District President J. L. Butterworth and Apostle J. A. Gillen. Branches reporting: Cherokee, 126; Coalville, 87; Mallard, 62; Deloit, 254; Dow City, 153; Harlan, 74; Lanesboro, 47; Denison Mission, 67. Power was granted the district presidency to perfect a branch organization at Denison. Report of bishop's agent for past quarter: On hand February 9, $259.01; receipts for 4 months, $3,509.93; on hand $393.54. On recommendation of the district treasurer, $100.00 will be raised for the treasury as "working capital" in prosecuting missionary work in the district. Under the direction of C. E. Anderson, a directory will be compiled containing the names, addresses, and occupations of all members of the district, designating all members of the priesthood and auxiliary officers, together with all branch organizations and their locations. Orris Salisbury was ordained to the office of deacon. Following officers were elected for the coming year: district president, J. L. Butterworth; first counselor, C. E. Anderson; second counselor, E. R. Butterworth; secretary, Wave Cross; treasurer, C. E. Anderson; chorister, James Pearsall; assistants, Vinnie Hatch and Eunice Dobson; member library board, Virgil Butterworth. C. E. Anderson was sustained as bishop's agent and F. R. Schafer, district historian. Time and place of next conference left in hands of district presidency. District reunion at Dow City, Iowa, August 16 to 25, inclusive. Wave Cross, secretary, address until August 10, Des Moines College, Des Moines, Iowa.

LAMONI STAKE.—Chariton, Iowa, June 6 to 9, inclusive. The stake and its auxiliaries met under the spirit of the action of the late General Conventions and Conference on coordination. The conference being organized in the regular way, presided over by the stake presidency, the auxiliary having each due portion of time as per previously arranged program. The conference and conventions voted favorably for coordinating the work of the stake, the heads of the several departments together with the stake president being appointed a committee to consider the proposition and report to the next stake conference. The resignation of C. I. Carpenter as stake secretary and recorder made necessary by his removal to Independence, Missouri, was accepted, and Amy Vredenburg was selected to succeed him in both offices. C. I. Carpenter resigned as president of the Stake Religio and Sister C. I. Carpenter as secretary of this association. To succeed C. I. Carpenter, Frank McDonald was selected, and to succeed Sister Carpenter, Maurice DeLong. Marcella Schenck resigned as stake Religio historian, Tessie Morgan being selected to succeed her. W. E. Prall was selected to succeed C. I. Carpenter as stake auditor. C. I. Carpenter having resigned as president of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Elders, and the quorum having selected C. B. Woodstock to succeed him, and he having selected Oscar Anderson and E. D. Moore as counselors, the action of the quorum as reported was approved. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the stake presidency. Harmony prevailed and the Spirit of the Lord was present in abundance. Amy Vredenburg, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

OPPORTUNITY AGAIN AT YOUR DOOR

The Board of Publication has a plan by which some young man or young woman may win a scholarship to Graceland College, which can be used for the coming year, or for any succeeding year within a reasonable length of time. The contest will open at once and will be closed September 1, 1918.

A postal card to the Advertising Manager of the Board of Publication, R. J. Lambert, care of Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, will bring full particulars of this attractive proposition to your address.

HOLDEN STAKE.—At Warrensburg, Missouri, June 15 and 16, with stake presidency in charge, who with Peter Anderson were chosen to preside. Reports from stake presidency, stake bishop, high priests, quorums of elders and priests, woman's department, Religio and Sunday school departments, and reunion committee. Bishop's report shows total receipts of tithes, offerings, and consecrations for last five months to be $4,390.53, also that a number of our soldier boys are contributing regularly to the church. Resolution passed discontinuing the delegate system of representation for our stake conferences. The plan of coordination of church and auxiliary interests passed by General Conference was, insofar as it may be applied to stake work, adopted by Holden Stake conference and auxiliaries. John A. Miller was ordained elder in harmony with action of conference. Harold G. Thayer was recommended for ordination to office of elder. Recommendation accepted and ordination ordered provided for. There being no reunion planned for Clinton, Missouri, District, a special invitation was extended to them to attend the Holden Stake reunion. R. A. Lloyd conducted several interesting workers' meetings. His advice and instruction were much appreciated. Sunday evening was occupied with appropriate program for dedication of our Warrensburg Service Flag. Adjourned to meet with Post Oak, Missouri, Branch. Mrs. A. M. Fender, secretary.

CLINTON.—At Coal Hill, Missouri, June 15 and 16, 1918. Session at 10 a. m. called by H. E. Moler. F. M. Sheehy was chosen to preside with the district presidency assisting. Reports of district officers, of missionary force, and statistical reports of branches were read. Invitation from Holden Stake asking Clinton District to meet with them in their reunion was read and accepted. Session at 1.30 opened with Brother Sheehy in the chair. Sister Kearney's report of Woman's Auxiliary work read. Election of officers: president, H. E. Moler; first vice president, W. H. Lowe; second vice president, S. C. Williams; secretary and treasurer, Zora Lowe; district recorder, Lucy Silvers; member library board, Susie Hartley. W. E. Reynolds, bishop's agent, and Lucy Silvers, local historian, were sustained. Report of Red Cross Committee read and approved and committee continued. Motion to abandon the delegate system was referred to our next conference.

Knowlton, 914 West Forty-sixth Street, Los Angeles, California.

General Religio Officers Appointed

James W. Stobaugh, general secretary of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and William F. Sage, general superintendent of the home department, both having answered the call of the Government to defend the cause of freedom, which necessitated resignation from their positions in the Religio, announcement is hereby made of the following appointments by the general executive committee of the Religio to fill these vacancies: Miss Donnie Lehman, Cameron, Missouri, general secretary; Mrs. Zella Harder, 716 Root Street, Flint, Michigan, general superintendent of the home department. Hearty cooperation of all Religio workers is earnestly requested to assist these new officers.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE, General Superintendent.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Omaha World-Herald of recent date pictures Brother Donald Maule and his two great-great-granddaughters, Margery and Ruth Stucker. He was recently given a surprise in commemoration of his ninety-seventh birthday. There were present four of his children, seven grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. He was born in Scotland and was one of the earliest settlers near Magnolia, in Harrison County, Iowa. He attributes his long life to good habits, avoidance of worry, being contented, and having something of interest to do, and being thankful for the blessing of life. He is reported by the World-Herald correspondent as standing as straight as an arrow and looking after his business affairs as well as a man of sixty.

DOCTOR HARRINGTON IN THE SERVICE

Doctor G. Leonard Harrington left Independence June 29 for Palo Alto, California, where he enters the medical service of the United States Army on the call of the Government. Doctor W. E. Harrington will have charge of the Sanitarium as physician in charge during his absence. Mark H. Siegfried is general superintendent of the institution and R. H. Loosemore, formerly of Kansas City, is business manager. All of the graduate nurses of the institution, excepting those entering special work, are reported as entering the Red Cross service.

A CHILD OF BUNKER HILL

On June 17 Sister Abbie Horton, who for years acted as correspondent for the HERALD, hoisted the flag at her door and celebrated the Battle of Bunker hill in 1775. Sister Horton as a child played around this memorable spot and listened to the stories of the men who had been inspired by patriotic motives to give their all for the cause of freedom. She heard Garrison, Phillips, Lucy Stone, Mary Livermore, and other silver-tongued orators, and later read with intense interest the enunciations of such men as Emerson and Theodore Parker, all leading to the war for freedom of slaves. With a useful life of eighty years to her credit and such memories as these, we feel that Sister Horton has much reason for historic reminiscences. She is still an alert member in the audiences at Independence, always seeking to keep abreast of the times.

The Latter Day Saints are still at work improving their properties in the First ward. The south and east fronts of the "Old Homestead" will be left as they originally were, showing their hewn logs. This building is 80 years old and yet substantial. It is to be held as a real relic, where once lived the prophet and his parents. The grounds will be improved, and the monument in memory of Joseph Smith will be erected in the near future. These places will be of historic interest to everybody.—The Nauvoo Independent, June 22, 1918.

JEWS SEEK HOLY LAND

PITTSBURGH, June 25.—That the present Jewish Legion of 8,000 men, now fighting with the British for the complete conquest of Palestine, is but the nucleus of a force ten times as great which will form the national standing army of the coming Jewish republic, was one of the most important points developed to-day during a session of the Zionist convention here. Every Jew who has enlisted in the legion from the United States has pledged to remain in Palestine for the remainder of his life, according to Dr. A. A. Newman of Philadelphia.

Major Brooman-White, chief of the British recruiting officers in this country, told the Zionists he had learned unofficially that more than 50,000 American Jews are now in Egypt on the way to join the legion already with General Allenby in the Holy Land.—Ohio State Journal, June 26, 1918.

"Please let me say to any of the missionaries and others interested that my address during July will be Paris, Tennessee. Statistical reports should be sent promptly; please do not delay. Any information as to the work in any part of the mission will be appreciated. Yours in gospel bonds, T. C. Kelley, in charge."

TWO PATRIARCHS PASS AWAY

By letter from Elder Haworth to Apostle Paul Hanson we learn that Patriarch J. W. Barkus of Australia passed away Sunday, May 12, from blood poison, following an operation for a carbuncle. The aged Patriarch Henry Kemp passed away in Independence, at the Sanitarium, June 28, after a long illness. Elder Kemp was born in London, England, in 1830, and had served the church for a half century. The funeral sermon was by Elder Joseph Luff, Sunday, June 30.

As chorister, I wish to thank the Saints and friends of the Eastern Iowa District for their prompt assistance at our Clinton conference. We appreciate the effort on the part of all, but especially those who have had no opportunity to practice with us, and those who so kindly assisted who are not as yet united with us.—Cora B. Hart, chorister, 1416 Harrison Street, Davenport, Iowa.

WASHINGTON, D. C., OFFERS PRAYERS FOR VICTORY AND PEACE EVERY DAY AT NOON

The people of Washington, District of Columbia, observe 12 o'clock each day as a special time to offer prayers for victory and peace. A committee, so formed as to be representative of all the people without regard to religious denominations, creed, sect, or race, promoted this observance, according to John G. Capers, chairman of the committee.

The President has authorized the heads of all Government departments to sanction this observance through their chief clerks. The Secretary of War permitted a signal for the ringing of the bells to be fired from the top of an office building. The District Commissioners issued a statement giving their sanction to the observance. "This sanction carried authorization through the Public Utilities Commission for the observance of the movement by street cars and traffic, which stops on specified days, during the time of prayer," said Mr. Capers.

Posters similar to those of the Liberty loan drives and the Red Cross campaigns have been made and will be hung in all the churches, Sunday schools, clubs, hotels lobbies, banks, and restaurants. "Give a moment to God" is the suggestive phrase of the posters. These posters call the attention of the public to the necessity of prayer for the success of our allies and an enduring peace.

MILK—THE BEST FOOD WE HAVE

Give your children milk. A quart a day for every child, if possible, a pint without fail. Plenty of milk will help give all your children, big and little, the chance for health they ought to have. Buy more milk and less meat and your family will be better fed.

Milk helps your children to grow. Besides well-known food substances it has something special which they must have to grow. Your children can get a little of this from other foods, but not enough. Give your boys and girls milk for their chance to grow.—United States Food Leaflet No. 11.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

The Master said: "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

This is a striking simile, as one who has plowed the field will understand. A stake is set up at the further side of a field, the plow is struck into the soil, and then the driver must keep his eyes on the mark toward which his course is set.

A crook in the first furrow will show in all the later furrows. If the driver looks to the right or to the left the team will swerve from its course. If he looks backward he cannot go straight.

The furrow behind him will take care of itself. His business is to look at the goal and press forward. If he makes straight furrows they will show for a long time and be an evidence that he is a skilled and careful workman. If he makes crooked furrows they will show for just as long a time and be as marked an evidence to the contrary.

They will show even after the grain has been sown, perhaps after it has been harvested. They may show until the field is all plowed over again. Such a hard matter is it to undo bad work.

It is much the same way in the church. Each one must have something to aim at—a fixed goal. If Jesus sets the goal, well and good. If our own ambitions fix the mark, disaster will follow. If the mark is changed each day, or at every passing whim, or at any whim, the result will be distressing.

If we look backward at the things left behind we will take a rainbow course and will not prove worthy of the kingdom of God. Our crooked work will show after the seed has been sown and after the harvest has been reaped. It may show even after we have done our first works over—if we are permitted to do so.

Our eyes are put in the front of our heads. It is not intended that we shall look back too much. We must not keep our eyes on "the good old times" of the past so much that we fail to see the good new times of the present.

When one is looking back too much to the time when "the church had more blessings than now," when "the elders had more power," and when the "Saints were more sociable," and all was very lovely (in the shades of memory), he is not likely to see the work that he might be doing right now, so he proves unworthy of the kingdom.

The man who looks back with regret at the foolish things of the world that he has put away will not go forward very long. The same is true of the man who looks back with regret to the time when his own will was supreme and resents the control of the higher will and the laws of the church.

Once in a while we see one turn back; by his own confession not worthy of the kingdom. What does he gain? Watch the lives of those who have done so. Is their course ever upward? Is it ever happy?

One may be happy before he ever hears of this work—never, after he has loved it and deserted it. Never after he has proved untrue to God and the church and the friends who have fondly trusted him.

Let us then keep our eyes on the goal and strike a straight, true furrow in the sight of all men.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

PARTNERSHIP WITH GOD

This is indeed a great subject but one which is apparently often misunderstood. We have noted recently several instances of this. One article relates: A man planted his corn in the spring and then spent the whole summer going to camp meetings, saying he had left his crops in the hands of the Lord. When he came back he found a good crop of weeds; so fine a crop that it took years before they could all be killed off.

The Lord has given us natural laws and he expects us to observe them. He does not expect us to plant a crop and then tell him to take care of it, and go off and leave it alone. If it were for our own best good, we doubtless would be thus protected; but since it is not for our best good and development he does not do it so.

We find instances recorded in history where crops have been miraculously cared for, because the man was not idle, but earnestly engaged in a good work under divine command, so the Lord provided for him. This we can reasonably expect through our faith. So, if it is necessary to cross a river, or do anything else, seemingly beyond human power, if the necessity is sufficiently great, we may with confidence call upon divine aid. But it is written of old, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." The gifts of the Spirit, the gifts of God to us are not simply a means of permitting us to live in idleness or to dodge our just responsibilities.

A second instance refers to those who would trust in the Lord when it came to a matter of providing for our loved ones. It was inferred that we should go to the asylums of the land, the homes for the insane, to find how the Lord provides. But the speaker, for his part, preferred to make his own provision rather than to leave the Lord to provide for them—in the charitable institutions, the children's homes, and the insane asylum.

This last seems to us to be decidedly unjust, as that is by no means divine provision, and we would challenge directly how far a lack of life insurance, for example, has ever sent anyone to an insane asylum. One should make provision for his own, so far as is humanly possible. He who does not provide for his own, those of his own household, we are told, is worse than an infidel.

But the world's way, though good, is not the only way of provision. Earnestly laboring, means are provided within the church by which the widow and the orphan may properly be cared for, so we may work together as one common body.

We have known business men using no business principles, because they are on the Lord's work or had a good purpose in view. It seems to us, that of necessity, such a case must fail. How could it be otherwise? As, unless this is true, it would seem as if the Lord himself were encouraging such impropriety and carelessness. And it has meant more than that sometimes—it has meant gross injustice to others and a failure to follow out just and honest principles in dealing with our fellow men.

The principles of modern bookkeeping, of safe administration, of avoiding large debts greater than we can safely carry, are founded upon principles of justice and integrity, both to our creditors and to those associated with us.

Every once in a while one finds an instance that reminds one of the story of the colored man who put a notice in the paper! "I and my wife has dissolved partnership. All who owe the firm see me. All who the firm owes please see my wife."

That is the plan with altogether too many. We are willing to look after the assets, if the Lord will look after the liabilities. But such is not our calling as partners with God. With him the profit is to be the salvation of our souls—the development of a sense of responsibility and ability for his work. Is it not probable that Zion is to be saved, because it develops a competent, worthy people; wise servants, harmless as doves, ready to deal justly one with another, and who are qualified for the work which they have severally undertaken?

We are glad to say that we believe that any such ideas as those criticized above have a very limited application. But there is a need of appreciation of the splendid possibilities involved in this partnership with God, especially as a means of learning how to conduct business on Divine principles.

Our heavenly Father expects us to do our share, not that he is not able to do it all, for he is, but for our own sake he desires that we should share in the labor that we may share in his glory. So he has left it that we may do much good of ourselves; and he has left it that we must, in assuming greater responsibility, carry out the highest principles of personal integrity.

This is a day of specialism, when men give themselves, body and soul, to their chosen work. It is well-nigh impossible to excel in any of the fields of achievement, without giving themselves a living sacrifice to their chosen profession; and the indications are that the race will be more acute in the future than it is at present.—John Clarkson.

CHURCH ARCHITECT

The action of the recent General Conference in providing for a church architect and that no building be bought, sold, or rented without consultation with the Presiding Bishop, has given rise to some comment.

Many times has it happened that services could only be held in some hall, poorly located and very unsatisfactory, or there has been no place to meet. The problem has been to get a place at all.

In many a rural town or country district, land has been generously donated, or secured to good advantage, lumber and time donated; the missionary often a leading spirit, taking off his coat and helping right along, if not taking charge. Many of these buildings have been as well located as circumstances permitted, and many of them well built and of neat, simple design.

Much credit is due for the devoted effort which has made these buildings possible.

But, on the other hand, many church buildings have been very poorly located, hidden in some out-of-the-way spot, and amid unsatisfactory surroundings. Many of the members may have palatial homes, well located, but their church edifice is quite the reverse.

Many buildings are without a line of beauty, while others are a medley. We saw plans once for a fairly large church involving over ten different systems of architecture. It had some thirty different windows and no two alike.

A church architect would prevent this and make possible a good general design. And this may be true also of the small country church as well as the larger churches of the stakes.

By having an architect it is also possible, in time, to develop and establish a distinctive style of church edifices for our own use.

Where good work has been done in the past, such work will be consolidated and extended. Where poor work and poor choice has been shown in the past, the new plan means decided gain. S. A. B.

THE T. W. WILLIAMS ADDRESS IN ARENA

The Arena editors inform us that they are just in receipt of manuscript of Vice President T. W. Williams's address at the General Religio Convention, and that it will appear in the August Autumn Leaves, due about July 30.

We feel we owe this much by way of apology for a seeming attack upon it which inadvertently we admitted to our columns. It will be seen that this was an address, not a resolution of the convention. And as an address it sets forth a few basic principles of the gospel.

That restraint is sometimes necessary is shown in the "prison house" and in the Mosaic law and is conceded in this address. But that is not the ideal method of teaching. The gospel is affirmative; learn to do good, not simply avoid evil. The latter is necessary, but real development belongs to the part of learning to do right.

A long face is not an attribute of righteousness. Recreation and work cheerfully done is the best for young people's spiritual growth. The reunion season is upon us. In some places the whole time is taken with services every day. Six services, or more, are held—no time given for recreation—yet we wonder why they are not more spiritual. We forget cleanliness is next to godliness. Health and life are essential to our best service.

At other reunions the forenoon is given over to three or four services, prayer, educational, preaching, etc; the afternoon is given to recreation, except on Sunday, when an afternoon service is held. Then preaching again is given at night. The result is good prayer meetings. The young people voluntarily arrange sunrise prayer services and come fasting. They go to every service to make it a success. Such a course is rational and spiritual.

We want discipline of our youth; yes, and of those older in years, but not with a stick or purely arbitrary methods. The objection to the old methods based solely on forced restraint and corporal punishment is that they do not produce the results.

Real discipline, real spiritual development, real regard for the Sabbath day and the life of the work is the desideratum; not simply a demonstration of parental or scholastic authority and power. Growing out of that we will have respect for parents and all right authority.

The address by Brother Williams is well worth reading. S. A. B.

CONCILIATION PROCEDURE

The Journal of the American Judicature Society for June, 1918, (vol. 2, no. 1) is devoted to conciliation and informal procedure, especially the former.

Informal procedure is a method for disposing of small claims by summary trial before a judge, who dispenses with needless etiquette, but makes an early finding and enters judgment.

It is part of the movement for better courts for the small claimant, as shown by the organization of municipal courts in many of the large cities of this country. The municipal court dispenses with the justice of peace court in cities and gives competent lawyers as judges.

As to conciliation, the opening editorial states:

Conciliation procedure involves submission of a controversy by the parties in person, and without attorneys, to a special tribunal or commission; the hearing is private and procedure is entirely informal; the parties tell their stories and the conciliation judge or commissioner advises them of their respective rights and urges them to agree upon an equitable settlement; if an agreement is made it is entered as a judgment; except in disputes of an exceptional nature no claimant will be permitted to begin an action in a court of law until he has received a certificate showing that there has been an attempt at conciliation. Such procedure is adapted to controversies involving large amounts as well as small.

Conciliation procedure had its origin over a century ago in Norway and Denmark. It met with immediate success, and remains to-day, after numerous political and social changes, the cornerstone of the structure of judicial procedure in both nations and a cherished social institution.

The North Dakota legislature in 1893 endeavored to transplant the system to American soil, but the experiment was crude and the result abortive. The act permitted a party to send another to represent him at a hearing. This was a fatal defect. It also required the conciliation commissioners to function within a regular justice of the peace court. This subjected the plan to the competition of a horde of petty politicians entrenched in an office which was dependent upon fees. It was absurd to subject conciliation procedure to the influence of officials who made their living through adversary litigation, and who were closely affiliated with the pettifogging element of the legal profession. In 1895 the statute was amended so that the consent of both parties was requisite before the conciliators could be called in, and that put an end to its limited usefulness.

Then came a long period during which the evils of expensive procedure were linked with the faulty organization of our inferior courts and the situation grew steadily worse for small claimants throughout the land. The creation of the "organized" municipal court, related in the Journal for February, 1918, furnished at last a favorable environment for experiment, and in March, 1913, the municipal court of Cleveland opened a branch for the summary adjudication of claims involving not more than $35. This branch was named the conciliation branch court.

It was not, in fact, a court at all. A judge was assigned to act as mediator in these small cases and to effect a settlement in an extra-judicial way. The branch had no compulsory process and its judgments rested wholly upon agreement of the parties. But it filled the bill perfectly within the scope intended. Defendants always appear in response to notice. The proceedings are private. An agreement is always reached. There are no appeals.

The small claim branch of the municipal court of Chicago, in March, 1915, made a distinction between conciliation and informal procedure. The jurisdictional limit which was at first $35, has been increased three times until now it is $200. The court disposes of over twenty-five thousand cases each year.

The municipal court of Minneapolis has also established a conciliation court, with a jurisdictional limit of $1,000. If the claim is less than $50, and the parties fail to agree, the judge forthwith renders judgment.

The municipal court of New York has likewise worked out rules of conciliation and arbitration.

Some interesting cases are cited. But the points of marked interest for us are, that the hearing is private, the judge or commissioner tries hard to secure a settlement, and that in many instances this effort must precede action in court. In Norway no action can be brought except the case comes up from the court of conciliation, with certificate that an effort has been made officially by the parties for a conciliation.

This copies closely the purpose of the teacher's visit with the parties in an effort to settle all private difficulties in the church before a court is called.

Another point is that small cases are settled by the court, even if the parties do not agree.

Everyone has the right to a fair hearing, but no one has a right to keep a matter agitated. It is the duty of the parties and a conciliation court, to try to agree to a settlement and to dispose of the points of difference. It is no less so in an elders' court.

Cases of minor importance are tried before elders' courts and bishops' courts, and then to the High Council, which should have been settled long before the first court sat. Fortunately there are but few such cases. There should be none. Needless litigation should be eliminated.

MAGAZINE NUMBER NEXT WEEK

We are now working on the material for a fine magazine number of the HERALD on the Society Island Mission, which will be issued next week. It will be full of interesting information and contain a large number of pictures from recent photographs. Brother Clyde F. Ellis has been securing the material for this number for some time and deserves much credit for his success. Extra copies should be ordered early at five cents each. Every person who has labored in the islands, or who has had relatives there on missionary duty, should get a number of extra copies, as they will be in great demand.

It seems to me a great truth that human beings cannot stand on selfishness, mechanical utilities, economies, and law courts; that if there be not a religious element in the relations of men, such relations are miserable and doomed to ruin.—Carlyle.

PROBATION AFTER DEATH

The question, "What is there to be gained by preaching probation after death, and that hell is not a place of literal fire?" is often asked, especially by those not of the church, and occasionally, by one of the church. And with the question the argument is made that to teach that there is still opportunity for repentance after death is very apt to encourage procrastination. By the way, a similar question and statement was made in The Unity a while back. The question is a fair one and we accept the challenge.

Were we to answer the question very briefly, in fact it could be answered in one sentence, we would say; the literal, eternal hell fire, and damnation doctrine take from God some of his attributes, without which he could no longer be God; and is altogether inconsistent with all else in the gospel.

But to consider the matter more in detail and to prove the above assertion we offer the following: First, God is charged with being brutal, worse than inhuman, an eternal grudge holder, etc. The God of that doctrine, were there such a God, has kindled a fire for the express purpose of inflicting pain upon those whom he created; not that he intends it to do any good, but just to satisfy his hurt feelings. He does not intend to dispose of any so far as their existence is concerned; far from that, but after having given them anywhere from six or eight years to eighty or ninety years of probation in this life, in which to accept the gospel of repentance (I presume the length of time given depends on how much he happens to like each one), he removes them from under his most holy love and puts them beneath the pressure of his awful hate! And we must remember that he does not intend to annihilate them. That would be much too mild a treatment to appease his anger; but he wants to burn them and make them howl, twist, scream, and suffer, not for five or ten minutes, not for one year or one hundred years or one hundred times one hundred years, but forever, worlds without end! He would not permit them to repent, even though they begged him. No, he is angry; mad with a rage that, were we to indulge in, would of itself invite his indignation upon us and prepare us for the pit! Such is a minute word picture drawn by some of God!

We resent the charge, and picture to the world a God of love, a God of justice, and eternally so. I am glad that most of us have too high a conception of fatherhood to allow such a slander to be directed at "our Father, who art in heaven" without protesting. We who have seen and learned of him consider him an ideal Father in every respect. Were a father of the flesh even to take a red-hot poker and burn out the eyes of his children because he was angry with them, knowing it could do them no good, he would be looked upon as insane. And does not the Bible say, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Is it not true that no matter how wicked a father might be, he simply could not do such a thing if he possessed sanity of mind? Should some one tell that my father in the flesh actually got so angry at times that he inflicted the pains of fire upon his children, and it was a lie, think you I would not deny it for him and in a just indignation challenge the allegation? My father loves his children and is kind to us and as such a father I shall hold him before the world.

The attributes of the God of heaven are, first, and above all else, love, justice, holiness, and he is eternal, immutable, and omniscient. He is "our Father"; ever forgiving; far-reaching; and wills that "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord" (Psalm 22: 27); insomuch that he "will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." (1 Timothy 2: 4.) So "in due time Christ died for the ungodly," and to him (Christ) God gave "the keys of hell" (Revelation 1: 18), with which he "opened the prison to them that were bound," (Isaiah 61: 1), to whom he carried the "glad tidings of great joy." That those prisoners were the spirits of those who had been disobedient and that God loved them and felt after them there is no question in the light of the following scriptures:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing.—1 Peter 3: 18-20.

Be it noticed that Peter thought it not unwise to write that after Christ was put to death in the flesh (crucified) he went to the spirits in prison who had been disobedient, and that, too, away back in the days of Noah, and that he preached the gospel to them.

For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh but live according to God in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

The prophet Zechariah, who, as other men of old, spoke as he was moved upon by the Holy Ghost, said:

* As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope.—Zechariah 9: 11, 12.

We wonder if those who think it unwise to teach that the "prisoners in the pit wherein is no water" are "prisoners of hope," and have the gospel preached to them, mean to hush up the former-day advocates as well as the latter-day ones.

The apostle John, realizing that literal, eternal, hell fire doctrine was a perfectly good scheme when it comes to scaring folks to the bench, and all of that, stated boldly and plainly: "Death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them," and that after they had delivered up the dead, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire" (Revelation 20: 13, 14), or destroyed. There are three things for us to notice in this teaching from John: first, he considered it best to teach the truth regardless of the far-reaching schemes of men about hell. Secondly, hell is not eternal, for it is to deliver up its dead. Thirdly, hell is not the lake of fire but is to be cast into the lake of fire after delivering up its dead. I wonder if the "ban" is to be put on him, too.

Much more might be written to offset that miserable doctrine but we trust that enough has already been stated.

Now just one or two things about as to whether or not it is wise to preach the truth about this matter. We are told that to do so might encourage some to wait till they get in hell to repent, etc., while frightening them will bring them to their senses. To be sure hell is to be dreaded and avoided! All the known laws to man tell us that the transgression of law is sure to bring disappointment. If we transgress the laws God has given for the care of our souls we suffer for it, here and hereafter. Sin is to be avoided, for it can bring us no good. There is nothing so dreadful as the results of sin. But does that mean that to top it all off God will turn against us some day? It seems to me that the proper question would be: "What good can come from preaching anything but the truth?" A soul can never be shriveled into small enough a coward to sneak into heaven; might in righteousness is the saving gospel! We want men, great men, real men, brave men, and righteousness is the only thing that can make such men; and righteousness is a result of grace, not fear of hell.

The hell-fire-and-damnation doctrine has never saved a soul, after all, but it has made many, many skeptics and taken men from God, while the doctrine of God's eternal love has reached and saved hundreds and thousands. "Which should we preach?" did some one ask?

Ingersoll preached more truth alone in his statement, "Do right because it's right to do right" than all the advocates in all ages of "Do right, because if you don't you'll be eternally damned the second death separates your body and spirit, be it sooner or later."

A minister said to me one time after a three-hour visit on that subject: "Yes, it seems that you are right, so let's go home, get our families and enjoy ourselves like others do; what's the use of doing right any more? We can be saved in hell! Why not have a good time here?" I answered him something like this: "Really, I love the Lord, and it makes me feel bad to see others do wickedly, and even though they were to be burned for it the fire would not hurt me, but I hate sin! And the only real joy I have ever had, real joy, has been in doing right! So I do not care to live a wicked life, thank you, I am quite happy serving God. And had you ever been truly converted you, too, would hate sin and love righteousness!"

"Yes, yes," he said hurriedly, "I did not really mean that, and I apologize. I said that in the heat of the argument." Poor fellow, he never cooled off enough to change his mind so far as I know.

Again we say, God is not that awful God! He is good and kind to all everywhere and at all times. Hell is a place of confinement for the disobedient, but instead of its being a place of literal fire and torment it is a place where the gospel is preached and those who will are called "prisoners of hope."

And in closing we wish to repeat that no one wants to go to hell any more than one would want to go to prison here, notwithstanding they may come out again sometime; it is to be feared. The consequences of transgression are awful in their very nature, be it here or hereafter, and to be avoided. The results of righteousness should be the incentive for all good deeds. God should be presented to the world as the loving Father that he is. And his children should be instructed to build upon the great eternal principle, love, which alone can build our character—salvation.

J. A. BRONSON.

The progress of the church is, and has been, hindered because individuals have thought their wisdom or the wisdom of their associates sufficient to settle perplexing questions without the aid of inspiration. In proportion as such individuals are numerous the church is vitiated and inevitably tends toward apostasy. In proportion as the individuals who are in touch with God are numerous, the church is enlivened and enriched, and its progress toward final triumph is assured.—Elbert A. Smith.

THE LAW AND THE COVENANTS--Part 2

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

THE COVENANT MADE WITH ISRAEL AT SINAI SUPERSEDED BY THE GOSPEL

On this topic we will say but little, as the Christian world in general are agreed. The law, or covenant made with Israel, was a "schoolmaster" to prepare them for a covenant wholly religious, a system of worship set forth in the gospel of Jesus Christ (Galatians 3: 24). A covenant extending unto them, not only prosperity in earthly things in this life, but to lead them to their Messiah, who has opened up to them the way of eternal life and never-ending glory!

The ancient kingdom of Israel in all its provisions was but typical of the glorious kingdom of the coming Messiah, who, when he first came, was to "be cut off," crucified "but not for himself." It was unto him "the gathering of the people" was to be. (See Daniel 9: 26, Genesis 49: 10.) It was of him that David hopefully sang,

Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.—Psalm 2: 6-12.

It is through this "Son" that the God of Israel brings the new covenant into operation with Israel, as their Mediator, Savior, and King. He is the heir to David's throne in its restoration by the new covenant with Israel. "Israel," listen to the testimony of thy standard of evidence!

Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: the scepter of thy kingdom is a right scepter. Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.—Psalm 45: 6, 7.

Who is this whom God anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows? Let the standard of evidence answer:

He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the Rock of my salvation. Also I will make him my firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. . . . My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.—Psalm 89: 26-37.

This is a covenant not to be broken nor altered. The leading character in this prophecy of David was to recognize God as his Father, and be the Father's "first born," and when coronated, was, or is to be, "higher than the kings of the earth."

Again, the prophet Isaiah, in his inspired testimony, after describing the Savior's humble itinerary among men, his first mission, says:

He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law. Thus saith God the Lord, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein: I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house. I am the Lord; that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images. Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.—Isaiah 42: 4-9.

By these statements of the Lord, with the first advent of his Son, our Savior, the new covenant is offered to Israel and the world of mankind, and, unless "the former" covenant with Israel is "come to pass," been fulfilled, two covenants or wills of God are binding at the same time. All this providing the prophet Moses made no mistake in calling the ten commandments the covenant God made with Israel at Horeb (Deuteronomy 5: 2, 3), when "out of heaven he made thee [Israel] to hear his voice" (Deuteronomy 4: 36). Nor was that covenant made with their fathers, but with Israel brought out of Egypt then.

ISRAEL'S SALVATION YET FUTURE

Although the house of Judah refused to accept the everlasting covenant and its consequent salvation when offered to them by the Savior, but as a house, or government, went into desolation, "captivity," broken off from the tame olive tree, counted "unworthy of eternal life" (see Matthew 23: 37; Luke 21: 23, 24; Acts 13: 38-47; Romans 11: 25-28), yet the time is near at hand when they will see the hand of the Lord, their blindness of heart will be removed, and they will be brought into the "everlasting covenant," or gospel they once rejected (Revelation 14: 6, 7; Matthew 24: 3-14; Hebrews 11: 25, 26), when "the times of the Gentiles" are "fulfilled," or "the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." (Luke 21: 24; Hebrews 11: 25.) But to try to convert the two houses of Israel until Paul's "until" expires, would be to prove Paul a false prophet!

The conclusions of the apostle Paul, in Romans 11, are confirmed by the sacred word of prophecy relative to Israel's salvation, at the ending of the Gentile times, under the everlasting covenant, the gospel restored. (Revelation 14: 6, 7; Matthew 24: 14; Acts 3: 21.)

It is to be a time near the end of the world, and when previous eras have grown old. Hark!

Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure: Calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my counsel from a far country: yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it. Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted, that are far from righteousness: I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.—Isaiah 46: 9-13.

This language is addressed to the "house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel." How undeniably positive is the above from the prophet Isaiah! Says God, "I will do all my pleasure." Who that believes in God will deny this, or say Israel, literal Israel, will not be brought into the gospel in God's due time, wherein God's righteousness is revealed, "brought near," to Israel?

Israel has been in captivity now since 720 B. C., and their land placed in possession of the people of Babylon, by the king of Assyria (2 Kings 17: 21-23), nor have they ever returned from this captivity. The house of Judah was desolated about A. D. 72, after a seven years' war and invasion by the Romans, Vespasian being emperor. (See Wilson's Outlines of History, pp. 197-199. See also Josephus, the Jewish general at the time, and also historian later.) But the long, severe captivity of the Hebrews among the Gentile nations is now terminating, through their becoming citizens, franchise being restored to them in a number of countries of Europe and America. And all this as the "fullness" of the "Gentile times" are closing.

JACOB'S TIME OF TROUBLE BEFORE HIS FINAL RESTORATION

It would appear that at the time of this writing, during the time of this, the world's greatest war, Jacob's concluding time of trouble is on. No less than six millions of Abraham's descendants are in its realm, suffering its tortures, partaking of its desolations, and crying to Israel's God for relief. Shall they cry in vain? Shall they perish? Shall all the promises made to them through the prophets of olden times fail to be realized? Is their hope lost forever? Note what the prophet Jeremiah says, when he prophesies of their final recovery, gathering, restoration, and salvation. He is commanded to place it on record, and the time of its fulfillment is plainly indicated. Let us hear and note it.

The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Thus speaketh the Lord God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book. For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord; and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel, and concerning Judah. For thus saith the Lord; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness? Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble. But he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him. But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.—Jeremiah 30: 1-10.

The fulfillment of this prophecy is in or during the time that "a voice of trembling, a voice of fear, and not of peace" rings among the nations. Jeremiah being an Israelitish prophet, keeps his eye on the condition of his captive people at the time indicated. At the time referred to a highly surprising disappointment seizes the nations, as seen and described in verses six and twenty-three, as a continuing whirlwind" rages among them, and human passion rages throughout the world, even the "distress of nations with perplexity," as Gentile times close. (See Luke 21: 25.) The angel conversing with Daniel (Daniel 12: 1) confirms this conclusion.

Isaiah was not alone as he views with prophetic eye Israel's salvation coming out of Zion, when they accept the new covenant, the gospel as once offered to them. David, also, the sweet singer of Israel, when viewing and portraying latter-day events as related to Israel, exclaims:

Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.—Psalm 14: 7.

It was doubtless to these and many like prophecies that the apostle Paul referred when discussing "the fall and rising again of many in Israel," in giving the conclusion to his famous argument on this subject, saying to Gentile saints:

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 25-27.

As we read and contemplate this great latter-day work of God, the sending of "the everlasting covenant" to the descendants of his friend, Abraham (Isaiah 41: 8; James 2: 23), we, too, exclaim:

O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments; and his ways past finding out; For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen.—Romans 11: 33-36.

THE DOUBT REMOVED

Shall the literal descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel be forever rejected, and remain outcasts from the favor of God, and remain in banishment from the land covenanted to them, because they rejected the Messiah and the gospel, when he was here? Many entertain the belief that they will never as a people be brought to see the promises of their return and conversion to the Christ fulfilled. But when "the veil shall be taken from their minds," in reading as though still binding as law, now, the old covenant, they will see in Jesus of Nazareth their Savior and their Redeemer.

A statement or two just here will be of interest to the Bible believer.

But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend. Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away. Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish.—Isaiah 41: 8-11.

But again on this point:

Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; even everyone that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.—Isaiah 43: 5-7.

These two statements are attested by the God of Israel to them in his own name, to gather them from the four quarters of the earth. This has not been done since the house of Judah was sent from the land that God gave them by covenant to "a thousand generations" (thirty-one thousand years at least). (Psalm 105: 8-11.) Sent them away by the Roman army, A. D., 65-72.

Now let us consider the word of the Lord further at this point.

And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me. Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people that they should be no more a nation before them.—Jeremiah 33: 19-24.

This prophecy has been fulfilled, and this cry made almost from the time of our Savior's first visit to earth. But when God unites these two families, Israel and Judah (see Ezekiel 37: 22, 23, 26), when in the last days God makes with them the everlasting covenant in the land given to their fathers, this will no longer be said. God has placed salvation in Zion, the church, for his people, the seed of Jacob, his chosen.

Let us further quote:

Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take away any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.—Jeremiah 33: 25, 26.

When Israel comes into the "new covenant," "the everlasting covenant," and its consequent salvation, the covenant that embraces the perfect law of the Lord by which the soul is converted to the Lord and his righteousness, they will be able to see that the covenant made with their fathers at Horeb, or Mount Sinai, will govern them no more as a religious guide, will be no longer binding, for there is no eternal salvation attained by it. So the word of God teaches.

Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall that be done any more. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.—Jeremiah 3: 14-18.

It will be noted that the prophetic citations, mostly under the topic, "Israel's salvation," associate the house of Israel and the house of Judah. This has never been done yet. Has not yet been fulfilled. And the last one quoted declares that "the ark of the covenant" shall not be visited, nor remembered!

And for the best of all reasons, the law, covenant, the gospel will be inscribed on the tablets of the hearts of the redeemed by the everlasting covenant. This both prophecy and New Testament truth testify to. Let us read:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord; but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.—Jeremiah 31: 31-34.

Let us note, further, that verses 35-38 confirm in an incontrovertible manner the position herein taken on Israel's "latter-day" salvation through Christ.

Note secondly, that when God made the covenant with Israel at Sinai, he included as the constitution or basis of that covenant the ten commandments, and after he wrote them and gave them to Moses, he told Moses to teach them to Israel. The Lord says, "For after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." The word tenor signifies "according to, to the course of," or as we say, "not deviating from in any sense." (Deuteronomy 4: 13-23; 5: 2, 3-17; Exodus 34: 27, 28.) After the tenor of these words includes the seventh-day sabbath, to be observed by Israel, "for a perpetual covenant." (See Exodus 31: 12-17.) And "a sign" between God "and the children of Israel." It was holy unto Israel.

In connection with the foregoing, let us note the "new covenant" God was to make with the two houses, is "not according to the covenant" made with their fathers! (Jeremiah 31: 32.) If it includes the ten commandments, it is not only in accord with but is the same thing reenacted! A very graphic subterfuge this.

God is not so much interested in seeing a few individuals rise to extremely high altitudes of inspiration and spiritual development, as he is in seeing the great body of the church rise to as high an average level as it is possible for them to reach.—Elbert A. Smith.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

PATRIOTISM DOES NOT JUSTIFY A MOB?

The executive committee of the American Bar Association has addressed a letter to all members of that association concerning the occasional outbreak of lawlessness on the part of those who claim patriotic motives.

It is not the part of citizens to take the law into their own hands and execute judgment. Such methods do not help, but rather hinder real patriotic service.

As citizens it has been our duty, not only to support the Government directly in service, in economy, in subscriptions to Liberty Bonds, and to War Savings Stamps, and donations to the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A., but it has also become the duty of the lawyers especially, to assist the different departments of the Government in securing the custody of alien property held in this country, and of the property of aliens.

But it is not the duty or privilege of individuals to attempt to execute judgment. Such lynch law is in fact, manslaughter, if not murder, and should be punished accordingly.

It is the duty of the bench and bar to see that such cases are prosecuted rigorously. It is the duty of citizens called to jury service to see that the law is upheld. But first of all to prevent such wrongs, if possible. Mob violence is not justified by patriotic motives.

The letter from the executive committee follows:

To the Members of the American Bar Association: This is the time above all times for the United States to give a notable example of lawfulness and order even under extreme provocation; a time when our people aroused as they never have been aroused before by examples of injustice, lawlessness and perversion of all proper rules of conduct on the part of the enemy nation, should make certain that there be no examples in our country of that lawlessness which we so bitterly and justly resent in the enemy. Furthermore, this is a consideration which appeals with irresistible force to those who, like our members, are sworn to uphold the law at all times and in all circumstances. Lynchings, destruction of property, and deprivation of civic rights in any respects by citizens of this country when dealing with those who are in sympathy with the enemy, are particularly lamentable in the midst of a war waged as far as the United States is concerned for the sole purpose of establishing right and justice and the determination of human interests by proper judicial proceedings rather than by force.

The claim has been made, apparently without any clear justification, that adequate measures have not been taken to prevent espionage, sabotage and hostile activities by enemy aliens. Such claims have been made not only in public addresses, but also in the newspaper press, and have been the subject of editorial comment. Such charges have not taken into account the far-reaching and thoroughgoing efforts made by the department of justice not only to prevent enemy activities within our own borders, but to detect and punish them when they have taken place; nor have they taken into account the lack of statutory power to combat these activities. The most important consideration is that such criticism and fault-finding cannot but lead to lawlessness within our own borders. The inclination which is induced by such claims is an inclination on the part of those who are thereby moved, to take the law into their own hands. There have been demonstrations of this in two or three of our commonwealths.

The American Bar Association, since the declaration of war by the United States, has been serving the Federal Government in many ways, and has thereby secured high appreciation in official quarters. Members of the association have been called upon by the Government to act in legal advisory capacities in connection with the provisions of the Selective Service Act, and in other positions of trust and responsibility to meet the needs of the peculiar situations created by the state of war, and to all these calls the membership has responded promptly and gladly.

There is a further service, and one of paramount importance, which the membership of the association can now perform:

You are urged to exercise your influence and power affirmatively and by all such means as may be at your command to accomplish the maintenance of law and order. In this way the association may perform a service higher than those which it has yet performed, although they have been large, and in this way will the just measure of cooperation with the Federal Government in its arduous task be furnished. We ask accordingly for your earnest and continuous support in this course, and to that end will thank you for such suggestions as you are willing to make for the guidance of the association in the accomplishment of this purpose.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

THE GOSPEL OF BRUTE FORCE

I will, in my next address, complete the present simple exposition by speaking of Nietzsche's "Gospel of Brute Force," analyzed and applied to our own times.

It will reveal to us some tragical discrepancies. It will make us understand how one, himself a man of extraordinary power, a man of genius, could have composed unethical ethics, a moral justification of the massacre of the Innocents, a glorification of might masquerading as right, the philosophy of top-syturvydom.

Perhaps as a German he anticipated the imperial gospel of the mailed fist by his national war lord. Perhaps looking upon the insolent tyranny of swollen and powerful enterprise even in ostensibly free countries he offered his philosophical reflections as a solace to some Overmen in the compulsory isolation that should and will await them. Perhaps the frightful hypocrisy of many contemporary chieftains, of men muttering beatitudes and working deviltries, may have moved him to a Philosophy of the Real, systematizing the worst while ignoring the best in the extant human heart. Perhaps intoxicated by a science that still halts at the cockcrow of its revelations he forgot that a stern morality in accordance with Nature must include humanity also as a part of that common Nature, and its unanimous voice and instinct as an element of the cosmic processes.

And then as we go on, we can demonstrate as against the perverted ethics of this strange juggler with ancient sanctities that there is one imperishable code of an ancient race that does not exalt or command pity without justice; not maudlin sympathy but social righteousness; whose morality is virile and aggressive; whose aspirations are for a time of which the Hebrew Prophets have so grandly spoken, when the feeble shall not perish but have power by the very tokens of service, when they shall beat their "plowshares into spears and their pruning hooks into swords, and the weak shall say, 'I am strong.'"—From the Temple Israel Pulpit, discourse by Rabbi Leon Harrison.
