HALF HOURS WITH CELEBRITIES

I. FATHER TIME

As I sat in my study one winter evening I fancied that I heard a knocking at the door. I opened the door but saw no one. A fine, sharp sleet drove against my face, almost cutting the skin, and a whirl of dead leaves crossed the porch, borne on the wind.

I resumed my work, only to be called to the door again by another knock. The results were the same as before. As I stood in the doorway, wondering what it was that had deceived me into supposing that some one had knocked, I noticed the dark clouds scudding across the face of the moon. The town bell rang the curfew, attracting my attention to the passing of Time. Then it was that I imagined I perceived some one standing in the shadows, close at my very hand.

He was old and bent, and the wind tossed his long gray beard and snow-white locks to and fro, and tugged at his loose, flowing robe. He seemed so much a part of the elements that at first I could with difficulty discern him, even after my attention had been attracted directly to him. I could readily understand how he might pass and repass and knock at many doors and yet remain unnoticed.

In answer to my invitation, he entered, leaning his staff against my desk. In one hand he carried an hourglass, which he reversed to mark the passage of time. I noticed with fascinated awe that while the flow of the sand grains was steady and inexorable, they pulsated constantly, as though driven by a beating heart. I thought, Perhaps the saying is true that Time is measured by human heart throbs, and not by the passage of suns and moons.

The old gentleman carried with him a long, keen scythe, the snath of which rested across his arm as he stood and talked to me. Noticing my close and troubled scrutiny he said, "You have heard of Old Father Time and the scythe with which he reaps the ripened grain and the bending flowers. Well, this is the famous instrument. My harvest field is the world. I reap the lives of men and women, the young and the old, as the Lord of the harvest may direct."

He ran his hand along the edge of his blade, as though to test its keenness, but when I essayed to do the same he stayed my hand, "Not so fast, my son," he cautioned; "you will feel its edge soon enough." Then he continued, "It is an all-compelling instrument, and is still sharp and true, though there are some nicks in it. I have had to use it on some hard old customers; yet it has always prevailed, soon or late.

"Old Methuselah evaded me for a long time, and in those days I delighted to spare men, because they walked with God and used well the years that were loaned them; yet even a Methuselah finally reached the sunset of life. Old Ponce de Leon tramped through the forests of the New World in search of the fabled Fountain of Youth, that would enable him to defy my behests; but all the time, unseen, I followed in his footsteps, and cut him down earlier because of his folly in not using his days in good works, instead of vainly trying to insure himself of days yet unsunned."

As the old man prepared to leave, filled with a new reverence for the priceless value of Time, I seized him by the robe and implored him to wait:

"I cannot," he replied. "Time and tide wait for no man. The tide follows the moon, and I follow the behests of God, and must go on and on working my changes in the world until eternity shall dawn."

"But at least give me your blessing," I implored. "You shall have my blessing," he answered, "on the one condition that you live for it, and it will come to you day by day as you are worthy of it; and even when I shall have an end, it shall continue with you throughout eternity."

So my guest departed, as he had come, merging into the storm and the elements. And presently I heard the bells ringing in the new year. A new year for you and me! A new year for the world! What awful work of death and destruction may it not see? A new year for the church! Will it be a year of construction and salvation?

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

It is easy to find fault—but no real man picks out all the easy jobs in life.

About the time a man gets into darkness or transgression up to his ears he concludes that the church is all wrong and the members in a bad way.

The children of Europe come to dinner now at the first call—when there is any dinner. Yet the mothers of Europe are no happier than when it took three calls and a switch.

Giving seems to be a progressive habit. How hard Sister Walker used to work to bring the Christmas offering from the whole church up to one thousand dollars! And now the Lamoni Sunday school alone gives over two thousand dollars.

That statement about gathering to Zion with songs of joy must be to some extent figurative. Those of us who never have learned to sing very much will not try to make it too literal. There is bound to be sufficient discord at best.

When you preach it is permissible to give your hearers palpitation of the heart, but do not, oh, do not give them concussion of the brain.

Very long sermons are very likely to be very thin. They are like Farmer Saveall's cider. Farmer Saveall boasted one season that he had made fifteen barrels of cider. A candid neighbor took a sip of the liquid and remarked, "It's a pity that you hadn't another apple; you might 'a made another bar'l."

The habit of using slang in the pulpit often comes from reading after or listening to men of the Billy Sunday type. And it is a habit, and one that needs to be held rather well in hand.

An occasional slang phrase, if not too "racy," may add a certain piquancy to a sermon. But the man whose every sentence is loaded with it ruins his effort. A dash of pepper may be tolerated, but no one who is not abnormal wishes to dine on pepper.

Jesus had a divine love for an honest man. But he had a very human detestation for the hypocrite.

The leading question that I ask about a man is this, Is he sincere? If he rings true I can overlook many mistakes and peculiarities and forgive many personal affronts. But if he sounds hollow, if I detect a note of pretense and disloyalty, I feel that it would be a betrayal of common sense and a perversion of charity to trust him very far.

Jesus mentions the fact that men's hearts shall fail them with fear for looking upon the things coming on the earth in the last days. How true it is. And even more dreadful possibilities hang over the nations, just behind the shadows. Every nation not already devastated looks with fear upon the possibility of armed invasion. Every nation is in dread of famine. Over every nation hangs the threat of universal compulsory military service, with the citizenry crushed beneath a weight of armament and taxes. Every nation not already torn with revolution fears that most dreadful possibility of revolution, with civil war. That which has come upon Mexico and Russia may come upon much more powerful and enlightened nations. A man's sword against his own neighbor, is the foreboding contained in the revelation.

Now gleams the sword. Now rolls the drum. Insistent shrills the martial fife. Wars and rumors of wars must come,—disaster, sickness, storm, and strife. There is no hope? Not so, not so! The work of God must still go on. The shadows thicken as they go, and it is darkest ere the dawn. The humble ones earth bears may groan beneath the weight of present wrong. He comes to claim them as his own, whose birth we celebrate with song. This wintertime, this time of frost, the heart is warm, the spirit yearns; we shall not perish or be lost. The distant stars say, "Christ returns."

Collier's for December 22 states that one of the largest insurance companies in the country offers to insure the United States Army, or any man in it, for five per cent over the rate given civilians in times of peace. This is an estimate of the additional risk. The same magazine also states that a little over one per cent was lost by the French in the last six months of 1916.

SEERS

In answer to further question concerning the relation between a seer and the use of the Urim and Thummim and the right of the president of the high priesthood to be called a seer, Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, has submitted the following:

"In compliance with your request I herewith give my theory of the purpose of this instrument. It is to meet emergencies which do and have occurred many times in the history of the people of God in all ages, when there is no man available who is a seer by virtue of calling, office, and ordination.

"Anyone having this instrument may by its use translate languages, and reveal things which cannot be known by ordinary means. (See Book of Mormon, Authorized Edition; Mosiah 12: 15-21; Doctrine and Covenants 3: 1.)

"Where a man is seer by virtue of his office, this instrument is not necessary in order to his becoming a seer. In Joseph Smith's early experience he worked by the use of this instrument, both in translating and receiving revelation; but when he became a seer ex officio, we seldom, if ever, hear of his using the Urim and Thummim, though perhaps the right to use it was not taken from him.

"I think it is necessary to receive divine appointment in order to receive or even to view the Urim and Thummim. (Doctrine and Covenants 15:1.) But to one appointed and ordained as prophet, seer, and revelator, the power to translate, interpret, and receive revelation comes ex officio and not necessarily by use of this instrument."

We note also an interesting discussion of this topic by President Elbert A. Smith, in volume 59, page 1041 of the SAINTS' HERALD. He refers to Church History, volume 1, page 13. "The possession of these stones [Urim and Thummim] was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God has prepared them for the purpose of translating the book," and points out that this could not be exclusive, for if the latter clause was considered to be controlling, it would preclude the use for anything else except the translation of this book.

It is not said that no one else could be a seer. Graduation from a homeopathic school of medicine and possession of a license constitutes one a physician, but that does not say that a man must graduate from a homeopathic school in order to be a physician.

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29-39 shows that there were two seers in the church at the same time, and neither possessed the Urim and Thummim.

Section 104: 42 again repeats the fact that the president of the high priesthood is to be a seer, so we learn as has already been pointed out, our late President Joseph Smith was chosen as a prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ, and the successor of his father.

"SIGNS OF THE TIMES"

In The Signs of the Times Magazine for November, 1917, on page 12 there appears an article, "Mormonism in the witness chair," by Daniel Alonzo Parsons. The picture of Joseph F. Smith, the present head of the church of Utah, appears over the caption, "The founder and first president of the church." The article gives several of the peculiar doctrines of the Utah church as if they applied to the original church.

Some one had the kindness to send us this magazine, and we at once wrote Mr. Parsons, calling this matter to his attention, as we believed it to be no doubt an oversight as therein printed. We are pleased to say for the benefit of those who may be concerned, that we received in reply from him the following very courteous letter:

Your kind letter of November 10 was forwarded to me by our publishing house, the Pacific Press. I thank you for the suggestion that you have made concerning certain articles now running through one of our periodicals on Mormonism.

When the Pacific Press sent me the advance sheet of article number one and I saw the picture of Joseph Smith, president of the Brighamites, and underneath his name the statement to which you refer, I was distressed in mind and stirred in spirit. I telegraphed to California to correct the error, but it was too late.

Of course, Mr. Burgess, I am well aware that your branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has no sympathy with many of the doctrines, ideas, and twaddle of the Utahites, and my articles are not directed at your church, but as you will learn from my third essay, it is decidedly against the bloodthirsty tenets of Brighamism.

I frequently enjoyed reading to them certain passages in their Doctrine and Covenants, wherein Joseph Smith enjoins the teaching of the Inspired Translation of the Bible and makes the bold statement that the manuscript would be kept in safety, then urging them to tell why they do not teach the inspired edition, and how it could be kept in safety if from its completion to the present moment the manuscript has been kept in the homes of those known as the bitterest enemies to them.

Thanking you for your kind letter and the spirit in which it is written, I remain

Yours respectfully,

D. A. PARSONS.

THE SAINT LOUIS CHURCH

We note by clipping from the Saint Louis Times of November 20, that the Utah church has recently secured a chapel in the city of Saint Louis. A three-column cut is printed in this paper, together with twenty-one lines of reading matter, but brief as is this additional statement, it still contains some inaccuracies.

Possibly it is true that the Utah church continued a mission there for only about twenty years, but those better acquainted with the history of Saint Louis are well aware that from the initial effort made by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1830 there have been continual services held in that city. Besides, the organization there rather gained in strength up to the time of the death of Joseph Smith, the Martyr.

Thereafter, until the time of the Civil War, there were literally thousands in the vicinity. Some of these became affiliated with the church of Brigham Young, and so were rebaptized. When the Civil War broke out, most of these departed for Utah.

After the war, they maintained an intermittent mission in various halls until about twenty years ago, when Brigham H. Roberts came to Saint Louis and was instrumental in instituting a new mission which it appears has continued ever since.

But this ignores the very vital feature that a large number did not affiliate themselves with the Utah church, but continued to reside in Saint Louis, awaiting the coming of the proper leader. On February 7, 1864, they reorganized under this leadership, as members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This organization has been uniformly held by the courts to be the true successor of the original church established in 1830.

This reorganized branch has continued ever since in the city of Saint Louis, holding for a number of years, a chapel on Elliott Avenue, and then from 1900 until the present year, a stone church or chapel at Glasgow and Dickson Streets. This latter building has recently been sold to the Jews.

There was another congregation out on Manchester Avenue, but now meeting on Billon Street, which has been in continued existence since it was first organized about 1868.

Another congregation has enjoyed an intermittent existence at Gravois, now called Oak Hill, south of Tower Grove Park. Many of this branch, with other members, have been recently reorganized into a congregation in Southampton.

There are several other congregations in the vicinity of Saint Louis, many of which are of recent date, but others of which have a continued existence for forty or fifty years. In fact, the membership in the vicinity of Saint Louis exceeds one thousand.

The principal congregation is now meeting in Recital Hall at the Odern on Grand Avenue, preparatory to rebuilding in the near future in the western part of the city.

Briefly, there were many members among Saint Louis in 1831-64. After the death of Joseph Smith in 1844 the number greatly increased, though many were not-organized. In 1864 a number who accepted

Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, as the proper leader, reorganized and have had continual existence as a congregation ever since. Several other congregations were organized shortly afterwards, so that since 1870 there has never been less than seven congregations in that district.

FUND FOR THE JEWISH SUFFERERS

Along with the capture of Jerusalem by the British, goes the drive being made in New York City for five billion to complete the ten billion dollars for the relief of afflicted Jews. At the time of this writing it would appear that the amount will be raised. (Later we learn it was more than raised.)

The sufferings of the Jews are intense, especially of those in the Holy Land. Much relief is needed, also, in Syria and Armenia. Again there comes the request for close to thirty million dollars for the relief of the Armenian suffering. Many of them have escaped from that country, but still are starving. Many have been killed; but those who remain, both in Armenia and Syria, or those who formerly have escaped, are in very dire need. The committee assures us that they are able to provide for them if the means are given, and that every cent goes for their relief. They state that three billion are suffering, starving. What they ask does not amount to ten cents a day, barely sufficient to keep body and soul together. To those who are able to help, this great need will necessarily appeal.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Duties of Branch Officers

Several weeks ago we sent to Elder W. A. Sinclair, president of the eastern quorum of elders, a copy of "Duties of branch officers," by President Elbert A. Smith, for use in connection with the Massachusetts District Ministerial Conference. We concur very heartily in Doctor Sinclair's suggestion, that this leaflet should be much more freely used. Each of the officers is taken up in turn and his duty considered; first, the branch president, then the priest and teacher, and finally the deacon. There have been some excellent editorials in the HERALD during the past sixty years on this topic; President Smith has attempted to take the best of each of them and place the whole within the limits of a small leaflet. The tract is unusually detailed in connection with the duties of the deacon, and includes his right and duty to keep order. This leaflet may be secured from either the Herald Office or Ensign Publishing House for five cents each, and should be in the hands of every member of the priesthood.

TWO GREAT LIVES--A CONTRAST--Part 2

(Summary of a sermon by Elder R. D. Weaver. Reported by Sister Ivan Pritchard.)

Now let us look at the other side. Solomon started right and he ended up wrong. He began aright, but, oh his end—in agonizing accents he exclaims, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." Do you want to choose that side?

Let us follow the other man's life. Here is a man born in a good home amid luxury. A home of Pharisees. This young man's parents look at him in admiration and love. They look at this young man and their heartstrings were entwined around him. He was a brilliant boy. They said: "We will send him to school to Jerusalem to Gamaliel, and we will have him taught the law and doctrine of the Pharisees and he will come back and he will gladden our hearts."

Well, he goes down there and I presume that he is like most of the boys. He makes mistakes. He does things that he should not do. He falls into bad company and he does things probably that are very sinful. But he afterwards sees the folly of it. He sets himself to work and he studies diligently and a few years pass by. He returns to the old home. Dear old dad runs out to meet him and puts his arm around his strong son and says: "My boy, we welcome you back to the dear old home."

I see him as he goes to the temple and takes his place in the Sanhedrin and possibly occupies in the annals of fame so far as that is concerned. He becomes versed in what is known as the doctrine of the Pharisees. He becomes so zealous, so taken up with it, that he feels any one who does not worship God in his way is entirely wrong.

One day as he is walking homeward from the temple he sees in the market square a young man about his own age. The young man is telling a story. The people are listening spellbound and the face of the young man is aglow with the glory of God. It shines from his visage. Paul draws near. He listens while this young man waxes eloquent and he tells the story of the Messiah or Christ, the King of Israel that was to sit upon David's throne. He then points these prophecies towards that Galilean whom they had taken and nailed to the cross. When he reaches this point in his discourse I see Paul look around for his helpers. He calls the young men to him and says: "We will stone him to death. He is preaching Christ and we will put him to death."

I see him as they carry him off the platform, drag him to the gates of the city. They pick up those cruel stones and hurl them with force and vengeance. I see him as the cruel stones bruise him. He sinks upon his knees. Paul is breathing out threatenings and slaughter. He is mad.

I see Stephen as they throw those stones at him. His face takes on a heavenly appearance. His eyes look up to God and that wonderful vision unfolds to his dying gaze. Paul does not see it but he sees the reverence and awe over the face of that man as he looks up and sees Jesus Christ sitting at the right hand of God. With the words: Father, unto thee I commend my spirit, Lord Jesus receive my spirit, Stephen dies.

Paul looks at the scene. Even in death there is a heavenly look stamped upon the brow and face of that dead martyr and Paul may well wonder what produced the change, for the glory of God is revealed in the face of the dying man.

I see Paul as he leaves that city going to Damascus. I see him as he goes on his way and ever and anon his mind refers to that dying scene of the martyr. That death scene! He lingers over it. He tries to drive it from his mind. He goes on his way, but it rises again. Again he drives it from him, and goes on his way until he nears the city. But once again it comes up and confronts him and as he goes over the scene of the dying martyr and he says: "My God, can it be that Stephen is right and I wrong?"

Just then the light of divine beauty in all its effulgence and glory lights up the scene and Paul is stricken down with that wondrous light from the throne of God. God was preparing him to receive that message which came on his way to Damascus. Now he goes down upon his knees, calls on the Lord while the light shines round him and he hears the voice saying unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Saul answers, "Who art thou, Lord?"

Every hope was gone. He knew the doctrine of the Pharisees was worthless. Every hope is blasted. "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" and Jesus replies: "Arise, and go into Damascus and there it will be told thee what thou must do." The light has blinded Paul and his friends lead him by the hand.

Historians say that he prayed there for three and a half days. I believe that true repentance was in evidence. I see him as the great scalding tears run down his face and he says: "My God, my God, I have persecuted unto death thy servant. I am not even worthy to be noticed of thee." Though he prays in agony of mind there seems to be no answering call from heaven for a time. He is being tried. He is sorry for the past. He is doing everything that he can to make restitution.

People tell you they got converted in a moment's time. They kneel down and ask Christ to forgive their sins and they are forgiven. He prayed for three and a half days, but they were not forgiven yet.

Finally the servant is spoken to by the Great One above. The Lord speaks to one named Ananias, "Inquire for one called Saul of Tarsus, for he prayeth." But Ananias had heard of the evil works of Saul and was frightened until the Lord reassured him. He came unto Saul and putting his hands upon him he said, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared to thee on the way as thou camest, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." He was giving him the very commandment that God gives to us to-day, "Arise and be baptized, calling on the name of the Lord." Paul arose and was baptized.

In telling the story afterwards he said:

Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

Yes, in following Jesus, I put off the old man and put on the new. The old man was crucified and buried in the liquid grave and the sins of my life were washed away in the cleansing flood, and I rose to walk in newness of life. It is a beautiful story.

I see him as he returns to his home. He goes to the temple. They open their arms to receive him and he says, "Just a moment. I have accepted Christ," and they drive him away. He is ostracized. The name of Christ had no place among those who occupied in the temple.

The Bible says, When your father and mother forsake you, then the Lord will take you up.

I see him as he leaves the old home and I hear him singing:

I have given up all for Jesus.

This vain world is naught to me.

All its pleasures are forsaken

When I think of Calvary.

Though the dearest friends forsake me,

And the world on me grows cold,

I've a friend that will stand by me

When the pearly gates unfold.

Life's morn will soon be waning

And its evening bells be tolled,

But my heart will know no sorrow,

When the pearly gates unfold.

He bids good-bye to the scenes that he had cherished and loved and he goes out in the world to tell the unpopular philosophy known as the gospel of Jesus Christ. I see him one time when he is telling the story of God's love. They strip him of his garments, they place him fast to a post and they lacerate his body with cruel lash. Three different times in his experience he received forty stripes save one upon his bare flesh.

I see him on the bounding deep, with the waves rolling mountain high, and all the people of the ship are beside themselves with fear. After twenty-one days of fasting the angel of God draws nigh.

If you ever wear the robe of righteousness and the crown of light, let me tell you, you will have some trials in your life. If you ever climb the heights of glory you will have your cross to bear and your Calvary to climb.

I see him, finally, when he arrives at Rome. He has given up all he had in life. He is heartbroken at times, naked and oftentimes hungry; and many times, like Christ, he didn't have a place to lay his head. For two years he tells the gospel story here. After all this, after he becomes the offscouring of the earth, I see them take him captive, lead him away to prison and put him in a narrow cell where daylight streams in only in a few little places between the stones. He knows that on the morrow he must pay the penalty for having done the will of God.

He knows that he is going to suffer martyrdom. He has no fear. He seizes the pen and writes to his friend Timothy: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing."

Friends, I ask you to-night, in conclusion, which of these two lives that I have pictured before you, would you rather have lived? You are the judge, not I. I am going to tell you something: If you have wealth, honor, fame, and every comfort in this life, and do not your duty, let me tell you, you will not have it in its fullness in the life to come.

There are people in this church who have every luxury that money can buy, but they wouldn't pay one cent tithing if God Almighty stood in the door and told them to do it. There are others, my friends, who would pass their needy brother on the street, see him clothed in rags while they are clothed in broadcloth and they wouldn't lend him a helping hand. The book says, If you see your brother in need and shut up the bowels of your compassion against him, the love of God is not in your soul.

Is Solomon's experience going to be yours? Are you going to have the choicest things that money can buy, the pleasures of the world, and then at last stand at the door of death and look back over the course you have pursued and say with Solomon: "All is vanity, I cannot take it with me to the world beyond. My gold is cankered. The beautiful things of life have faded away. All is vanity and vexation of spirit"?

Or are you going to sing with Paul: "I have given up all for Jesus. This vain world is naught to me?" Are you going to make yourself poor in this world's goods? Jesus Christ says, Sell what thou hast and give to the poor and purchase for yourself a place in the kingdom of God.

Let us unloose the latchstrings of our purses and let us put them into the treasury of God that there may be meat in his house. Then when the bursting clouds reveal our Savior to our sight we will be able to meet him with joy and not with grief.

May God help us to make a wise choice. May we all live so that when our time has come we will be able to say, "All is peace; all is rest; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

THE ART OF TEACHING

[The following was read at a Sunday school institute in the British Mission and by request of those in charge was submitted to the HERALD. We are glad to pass it along to our readers.—EDITORS.]

I have been asked to speak to you to-day on the "Art of teaching" and I want to tell you right away, that in my opinion it is impossible for me to pass on to you that art. Good and successful teaching is a matter of personality—of individuality, and a teacher is as much an artist as any poet, printer, or writer that ever lived. Therefore I firmly believe that as in the case of these geniuses, so in the case of teachers, the best teachers are born and not made.

Consequently, although I have read many books on pedagogy, I have not yet discovered the "art of teaching."

Yet in no way despair! For there are valuable hints, suggestions, advice, methods to be learned. I am going to endeavor to pass on to you some of the laws of the science of teaching; laws that have been culled from the works of some of the greatest educationalists that the world has produced, and methods taken from the writings of specialists who have given their lives to the study of psychology and pedagogy.

They should in no way be a burden or restraint upon you—neither should you transgress them—but within these laws let your own individuality flow, expand, develop. Take them to yourself, learn them, ponder over them, assimilate them, make them part of yourself, permeate them with your own personality and you will then have built up for yourself a firm and sure art that will be of inestimable value to you and your pupils.

First of all, I want to take one or two points of vital importance to the teacher, which should be thought of before any teaching proper can be begun.

In the first place, know your subject. At the first glance this remark seems unnecessary, but practically, it is by no means so. Each one of us has a store of hazy, indefinite knowledge on many subjects—but this is by no means good enough for teaching purposes. Every lesson as it comes must be carefully, thoughtfully, thoroughly planned. This preparation will not always be easy—in every case it will take time, and when the subject does not particularly appeal to our fancy it will be irksome. Yet never by any chance shirk it. The most distasteful subject can by constant association become palatable to you.

I remember that once upon a time I detested Euclid—couldn't do it—couldn't understand it—thoroughly disliked it, but it was necessary for me to pass an examination in that subject, so I just had to grind for all I was worth, and finally there came a time when Euclid was no longer a nightmare to me—in fact to work out a problem in Euclid was rather a pleasure.

And so it is with everything else. The feeling that something has been "attempted, something done," brings a thrill of pleasure, and the knowledge that we have conquered is in itself a reward. Let me reiterate it then: learn your subject.

The second point of vital importance to the teacher is that he should know his children. We must remember that no two individuals the wide world over are exactly alike. As teachers we are rather apt to regard children as a whole—a species—merely as vessels into which we may pour our facts. This is absolutely and entirely erroneous.

Children differ in many ways—in mind, perception, memory, comprehension, industry, and various other mental abilities. Remember that what is industry in one child is indolence in another, and what constitutes a great effort for one is just child's play in another.

Learn then the true mental capacity of your child and never require too much from him, or the constant strain of reaching for things too far beyond his power of attainment will dishearten him. On the other hand don't be satisfied with too little—study his mental processes—the workings of his mind, and gently force him to give his very best.

Children also differ in temperament; some are timid, some forward, some harsh, others tender, some cunning and artful, and others open and sincere.

Surely then we realize that it is at best but poor policy to treat all children alike. It is of vital importance to study the character of the child, to learn the salient points in his disposition, and let your attitude towards him always be determined by that disposition.

Just in passing there is a point of method that I would like to give you here. Always endeavor to work from the affirmative standpoint rather than the negative. Let the children afflicted with a tendency towards lying feel that you know he will tell you the truth and he will. Give the selfish children abundant opportunities of acting unselfishly. Put on his honor the child of "sneaky" tendencies. Find the admirable spot in your boy's character, respect him for it, and make him respect himself. Grasp it and cling to it and make it the "Open sesame" to higher, better things. By all means study the children's character.

The third point that I wish to take in connection with the children is really a psychological one. But don't be alarmed at that! Psychology is merely the study of the processes of the mind, and a more fascinating, absorbing science was never discovered. Shakespeare says: "There is a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood leads on to fortune," and this is equally true of children. We all realize that the child of twelve is quite a different being from what he was at five, yet few people know just what stages of development that child has passed through in order to reach his present stage.

Now on this subject psychologists and educationists have elaborated a very definite theory known as the doctrine of the culture stages. Unfortunately I shall not be able to go into this part of my subject very minutely—time does not allow of it—but it will be sufficient if I say that through a study of this doctrine we find that in his development the child passes through some very clearly defined stages. The normal child has a passion for fairy tales at about the age of six or eight; the passion for forming gangs, bands of playfellows, shows itself at about thirteen. In later teens is developed a devotion to high ideals and in this period many conversions are made and resolutions to become missionaries, doctors, explorers, scientists, etc., are formed. And so on.

This principle of stages of development is likely to prove itself very helpful in educational work. In planning your lessons don't give a child hard facts when he is only capable of assimilating fairy stories; and on the other hand, don't feed a youth on fairy stories when his stage of development demands practical facts. Recognize, then, the stage of development attained by your child and treat him accordingly. Realize that his growth demands such and such a thing now and give it him; take the tide of his enthusiasm at the flood and it will surely lead on to fortune.

Now before I touch on any method of teaching, I want to be sure that I have left clearly and definitely in your minds these two great principles of teaching.

1. Know your subject: About ten times as much as you need to teach.

2. Know your child: a. His mental capacity. b. His character. c. His stage of development.

So much then for general principles.

Having become thoroughly acquainted with the subject to be taught and having studied the capacity, needs, and attainment of your child, the next thing to think about is, "How may I best present the subject matter to him?"

Choose out from the whole subject a section suited to the development of the child. Subdivide this into smaller divisions, each of which will form the subject for a lesson or series of lessons. See that although each lesson is complete in itself, it yet bears a strong relationship to the whole scheme.

Now to be successful, every minute of the lesson time must be occupied. Not necessarily by the teacher. Oh, dear, no! Let the child do a fair share of the work: it will be better for him—but every minute must yield a sixty-second result.

To obtain this one hundred per cent return, very careful preparation of every point, from the moment the teacher stands before her class until she has absolutely finished, is necessary—preparation not only of the subject matter but of the best way to present it to the child and how we may teach that child to apply the knowledge gained from this particular lesson to other lessons and life in general. The highest authorities on education agree that by far the best method of preparation is that doctrine known as the "Five formal steps." There is nothing here that is profound or novel or new in any way; any apparent novelty is in the form and the systematic presentation of the doctrine. It is merely your own knowledge systematized. In their most modern form the five formal steps are these:

1. Preparation.
2. Presentation.
3. Association.
4. Formulation.
5. Application.

Now we will take them in detail: Preparation. The first point with regard to this is that by this preparation I mean that of the pupil's mind, not of the teacher. This is really the introductory—think out under this heading everything of a preliminary character bearing directly upon the subject of your lesson that will create the atmosphere necessary to your lesson.

If you are going to teach a desert story, in a few well-chosen graphic sentences make the children feel the power of the great, wide, breathless open spaces, the eternal blue of the sky and the everlasting blaze of the sun-scorched sand stretching on and on and on until at last the heaven and earth meet, while over all hangs the profound stillness.

If your lesson is to be a review, here and now at the outset, plan to grip the attention of the children and rouse their intelligence and a quick, eager, responsive lesson is the result.

The danger to be avoided here is that of allowing this preliminary step to occupy too much time.

In the second step, presentation, the teacher brings forward the new material, whatever it may be; possibly it is a story, maybe geographical or historical facts, etc. In thinking out this part of the lesson decide on the incidents which need most emphasis; and in presenting the matter, accent just those important points which you wish to be most firmly impressed on the mind. Don't try to crowd too much into one lesson: select those points which bear the strongest relationship to previous and succeeding lessons. In this stage present the new idea, the whole new idea and nothing but the new idea.

The third step, association, passes from the consideration of this one particular isolated piece of knowledge to its relationship to others. The best way to make this step is by conversation between teacher and pupil. Ask and answer questions, discuss the new idea presented in this lesson, compare and contrast it with ideas previously possessed by the mind. Often by this mere interchange of talk, difficulties are cleared away and meanings become manifest without any formal teaching.

This leads us then to the fourth step, formulation. The work of this step is to make use of what has been made clear and plain in step three. The pupil has now been presented with new ideas: He has assimilated them, i. e., associated them with other knowledge possessed by him; and now in this step we want him to attempt to deduce some law, or formulate some generalization on the subject of his lesson.

The fifth step, application, speaks for itself. Here the pupil is required to apply his new knowledge or the definition he has just made from this individual lesson, to things in general. In Sunday school work the application of a lesson should mean that its generalized or formulated teaching is brought to bear on the pupil's life. However well the first four steps may be made, if they lead to nothing practical they must be regarded as a failure from the Sunday school point of view. Hence the extreme importance of this last point, application.

Such then is the doctrine of the five formal steps, a plan which undoubtedly provides the teacher with the most logical scheme for a lesson or series of lessons that has ever been set forth in the history of the world. Each step leads up to and develops into the next in a perfectly scientific manner—having no breaks or gaps to be bridged over.

I have given you now a few of the laws of the science of teaching—there are many others but I have no desire to bore you unnecessarily. Weave these few into your life, vitalize them with your own experiences and give the whole, the best that is in you to your children, and your work will not only be successful, it will be a joy to you. You will feel yourself "a workman that need not be ashamed," a member of one of the noblest professions in existence—one of the fraternity that has embraced and continues to embrace some of the grandest hearts and lives; and incidentally you will have built up for yourself "The art of teaching."

In conclusion, I would just like to read you this note. It was written by quite a secular teacher, but it has been of great assistance to me and maybe you will like to hear it.

"No inspector that you have ever known can accurately gauge the best work that you can do. He may notice something in the atmosphere that tells of lofty effort, and he may place on record that the tone of your school or class is admirable, but his inspectorial balance is too clumsy altogether to appraise your real work at its proper value. Only the eternal balances can measure that, though you may often receive part of your guerdon in the loving grasp of a little child's hand or the tender esteem of an old pupil. The girl whom you have helped to grow into beautiful womanhood, or whom, maybe, you have saved from evil tendencies, is a source of abiding joy which brightens your life and makes your work worth doing. Every moment of your school life you are ringing some bell in the far away and if you are in earnest you are building better than you know."

If this be true of secular teaching what couldn't be said of Sunday school work?

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE WORLD AFTER THE WAR

[In the Chicago Herald for December 17 there appeared a masterly editorial, covering the whole of one page, "The world after the war." Much comment is being made in all quarters on the present peace movement, being largely promoted by the money classes to prevent democracy, in order to hold the land. Our space permits us to publish only a few extracts. It tends to show the way the wind is blowing and the way the world is moving. This is not a socialistic program. The editorial policy has been rather strongly individualistic, but it is a movement towards a better condition for the individual and for society, an advance in thought, scarcely possible five, let alone ten years ago.—EDITORIAL.]

War is the dreadful antechamber through which the peoples are to enter "new heavens and a new earth." Long centuries ago Isaiah saw the vision of the time when of men it might be said "they shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat."

The men in the trenches, the men and women working in munitions factories at home in all war stricken lands, the men and women in all conditions of life, too, are thinking of what is to be when the war is ended—of what must be. Only last week Lloyd George in the House of Commons declared that "we are laying the foundation of the bridge that will carry us into a new world." In an interview a day or two before Viscount Northcliffe gave blunt details of this new earth from the British soldier's standpoint. And the main feature was land, a home, a real stake in the country.

As Viscount Northcliffe said in that interview—one of the most significant since this war began—the old England is gone. The great ducal and baronial estates are doomed at the end of the war. They will be made into little farms and homes for the returning soldiers, who, having fought for their native land, are going to demand it. It has been aptly said that "restoration is always a revolution." That is emphatically what restoration of the lands now devoted to cultivation to the old purposes of pleasure and maintaining dignity would mean.

More things have been plowed up in England since this war began than turf. The turning furrow has covered a great part of the old regime. Years ago, with the industrial revolution's advent and success, the landed nobility shared its eminence with the new industrial nobility. After this war it, and the industrial nobility, for that matter, will share privileges with the new nobility that will return, knights from a nobler vigil and by the imposition of a mightier sword than made the privileged few of old.

Will this be socialism? Yes, in the larger sense.

No, in the Marxian sense. The small landholder always has been, always will be, the despair of the orthodox socialist with his theories of control, his basic idea that private ownership of such an essential means of production means robbery. Lenin understood this when he expressed his fear that the peasants, even with their small land holdings, might be adverse to the proletarian socialistic program. The anarchist Prince Kropotkin understood it, when he adduced the situation as to small holdings as evidence that the socialistic theory that industry was constantly being concentrated into greater and greater units, thus leading logically and easily to final expropriation of the proprietors, did not necessarily obtain in the agricultural field. The farmer, even when he does not know it, is incurably individualistic. Land hunger is an expression of individualism, of the desire for private property at least in some means of production. The soldiers who return to claim what they have long so greatly prized will hardly surrender it to any theory.

The governments of all nations will play a greater part in the life of the peoples than before the war. Old theories have been discarded in the stress and struggle of war and they will not be restored. Laissez-faire is in its last gasp. Business no longer demands to be "let alone." It merely insists on being treated justly and with clear understanding of its problems. Government control: but not government ownership. If governments have laid stern hands on the profiteers in war time, they will have to do it when peace comes. It will be the settled policy of the nations. Investigations, public indignation, will not serve the purpose. Results count and they will be demanded. The necessities of life are going to be the object of more and more governmental attention; and the willingness to exercise the whole power of the government will know no abatement. It is all in getting used to things; and some of the things we and others are getting used to now in the way of direct and effective government action, as opposed to old methods of circumlocution and delay, will not be forgotten.

Governments will pay more attention to the business needs of their nations. They will have to, as a correlative of their other forms of activity. They will do what they can to help export trade by sweeping away foolish restrictions which hamper it. Neither protection nor free trade will be the fetich it once was; practicality and eclecticism will be the word. They will exert themselves more and more to prevent interruptions in production due to labor unrest and other causes. They will recognize more and more that the exercise of great power with regard to industry means the assumption of a corresponding responsibility.

Lessons burned into the national conscience in the crucible of war have a permanency that is not easily erased. They will abide and bear fruit.

Health, ultimately, will be an assured possession of the human race. It will be a governmental obligation. Nevermore will governments be permitted to allow millions of people to live half lives handicapped by preventable diseases, condemned to senseless inefficiency.

At no distant date, from the moment the babe is born, nay in the long months before birth, care will be given the mother and the child. Science will be put at the disposal of all. Diseases will be prevented before they have occurred.

The same care which now surrounds armies in the field will be extended to the entire nations. But the care for health will not be limited to negative measures.

Work will be so ordered, recreation will be so interspersed, living will be so planned that the largest number of people possible will enjoy the exultant pleasures of being thoroughly alive and vigorous. The new democracies require strong citizens. Health is an object of the coming state.

Words of Gratitude and Encouragement

(Written January 2, 1917.)

We thank thee, Lord of heaven above,
 For words of gladness, words of love,
 Sent forth all drooping hearts to cheer
 And welcome in the newborn year.
 While in the past we all may trace
 Thy boundless goodness and thy grace,
 Help us to look with hope and cheer
 For blessings through the dawning year,
 And looking, each perform his part
 To cleanse the garden of the heart
 And every doubt and fear dispel,
 Believing thou doest all things well.
 Thy promise stands, nor once forgot
 "For thou art God and changeth not."
 "That he who seeks shall surely find Thou art a gracious God and kind,"
 Thy hand outstretched to aid and bless
 In times of trial and distress.
 But we thy creatures oft do err
 And at thy providence demur
 Because of our shortsightedness
 When thou hast only sought to bless.
 For when Time's ravages have wrought
 Its changes on our mortal past,
 Our mental powers begin to wane,
 Unfitting us for arduous strain
 On the grim battle field of life
 On which we've waged a holy strife,
 And still our part would gladly bear
 And help the way for Christ prepare.

The cunning foe would fain destroy
 Our hopes and rob us of our joy,
 And make us feel we are disgraced
 When younger men must take our place.
 Yet God we know doest all things well,
 And nothing can his love excel.
 And he who called us to the task
 Knows our desires from first to last,
 Will not ignore the good we've done
 Bearing the banner of his Son
 In face of hell's invading host
 Nor sitting down to count the cost
 Of worldly honors or applause;
 But loving more truth's sacred cause
 Their lives to God did consecrate,
 Content to labor and to wait
 The just reward of all their toil
 Where Satan's host cannot despoil.
 Or rob them of the priceless boon
 Secured through Jesus Christ the Son.
 But God's great purpose must not wait;
 Upon it hangs a lost world's fate.
 Hence Zion's banks compact must stand
 To meet the foe on every hand.
 Her young men and her maidens too,
 Each for the work that each may do,
 Must gird their armor on and stand
 For God and truth in every land,
 While they who bore the brunt before
 God's blessing on your work implore
 And in your great success rejoice
 With all who make the Lord their choice.

CHARLES DERRY.

"Hope"

(Tune: "Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory.")

Some glad day, when God's own people,
 Shall in Zion City dwell,
 We shall join in glad hosannas,
 And ne'er more shall say farewell.

Chorus:

Farewell no more God's chosen people,
 Favored seed of Israel's race,
 Let us sing for joy and gladness,
 Praise the Lord for saving grace.

There are those whose hearts are troubled;
 There are those whose hearts are sad.
 But when Jesus comes to meet them,
 They'll rejoice with feelings glad.

Though your sons be taken, mothers,
 Trust in God; his love is true,
 And when earth's great trials are over,
 He will bring them back to you.

Note the world's in wild commotion,
 Perils rage in every land.
 But these things all go to show us,
 A great day is near at hand.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Happy New Year!

With the joy and the cheer of the holiday time, there come to the thoughtful many serious reflections. The opening of a new record, the turning into a new street, the beginning of a fresh journey, the tacking up of new resolutions, all are of a nature to make one sense the frailty of human nature, and the divinity of its aspirations.

For the women of the church, we are wishing a broader vision, a clearer view, a more definite impression and understanding, of their place in life, in the church, and in the world's work. The meanings of life are obscured to the most studious among us, but are truly opaque to the heedless. What can be done by thoughtful observation and the deductions justified by the experiences of the past, to open the eyes of our members to the peculiar task that confronts us as a church organization should become to each of us a sacred duty. If God needs us for educational purposes—and what was the message of Christ if not that?—can we hope to help if we sleep upon our opportunities to qualify for that work?

So we are wishing for us all a deeper insight into our work, and with it a greater joy in service. The ability to do, coupled with the desire! Is not this the supreme test of a Christian—or, in other words, a follower of the Christ?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

A Leader for Our Boys' Organization

We were very much gratified at the announcement from the First Presidency of the church, made in the HERALD for December 12, to the effect that Brother Floyd McDowell has consented to take the leadership of the Boys' Movement, with the direct and immediate responsibility of outlining a plan for coordinating the efforts along this line, this plan to be presented to the next General Conference for action. This seems to us to be the beginning of new and wonderful things for the young of our church, who have, in the past, been left too much to themselves so far as their diversions and the use of their spare time is concerned. Brother McDowell is pre-eminently qualified for this work, having been a student especially interested along the lines of understanding the young, and their needs, and their adaptability or inadaptability to what has been offered to them in the past.

The members of the committee appointed last conference at the special meeting called to consider this boy question, and that owing to the great distance from each other, it was practically impossible to counsel, study, examine and decide upon this important matter intrusted to them, with any degree of satisfaction to themselves. An appeal, therefore, was made to President Smith, with this very gratifying result, and we sincerely trust that all those interested in this work—those who have written the committee of their hopes, desires and visions for the boys and young men of the church—will take notice of this appointment, and communicate with Brother McDowell at once, giving him the benefit of their ideas, suggestions or experience. His address is 331 North Gilbert Street, Iowa City, Iowa.

Of course I know that it is better to build a cathedral than to make a boot; but I think it better actually to make a boot than only to dream about building a cathedral.—Ellen Thornycroft Fowler.

Bible Research

(Sister Anderson: This article was written by Sister Pointer, who has charge of the Bible Research, Archæology, and Comparative Religions departments. We think it might serve as an impetus for study along those lines. Sister Pointer is conducting a class in Independence and will carry on extension work in these subjects, as we are doing in other lines of study.

DORA L. GLINES,

Supervisor Educational Bureau.)

There is no topic of modern times that has caused so much, or such deep-rooted controversy as that of fiat and evolution. For hundreds of years man's misconception of the Hebrew Scriptures has caused him to believe that the earth was created in six days, of twenty-four hours each, and that it was created out of nothing.

Many of the so-called heathen nations held the idea that the earth was formed out of existing matter, but if there was any attention at all paid to their belief it was considered only a pagan notion entirely unworthy of Christianity.

The All-seeing One, knowing that all things would be shaken that could be, saw fit to reveal to his covenant people in the latter days the story of the six days of creation, as it had formerly been revealed to Moses, reaffirming that God spake and it was so, but not that it was magically or instantaneously so.

The revealments of science in the latter half of the nineteenth century made the old, time-worn theory untenable; and fight as hard as they might, the devotees of fiat were forced to yield, and for a time it seemed that the whole religious system would be up-rooted. This, of course, caused profound research on both sides, and many valuable truths have been brought to light.

Among them, that the Hebrew word yom or day, which is universally employed in that language to express natural day as measured by a revolution of the earth on its axis, was also used figuratively in Hebrew literature, meaning "a period of duration."

Geologists tell us that there is recorded in the earth's crust four great evolutionary or formative periods, the first being solid rock and without any life-form. Compare this with Genesis 1: 3, 4, and find that "In the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest. And the earth was without form, and void." This with the dividing the light from the darkness constituted the "first day." Also the first day or period of time in geology, known as the Archæan of Eozoic.

The second day as recorded in Genesis was the dividing "the great waters under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament." This naturally would not be recorded in the earth's crust.

In the third day of Genesis, the grass, herbs, and trees were created. This is abundantly testified of in the second geological period, for the vast coal beds, from which the principal fuel supply of the world comes to-day, are composed of the vegetation of this age. Clood says there was an abundance of vegetable remains. "Not only do we find huge tree-like plants of which our club-mosses and ferns are pigmy representatives, but true trees as proven by the concentric rings in their trunks." The scientific name for this division is Primary of Paleozoic.

The sun, moon and stars were set in the firmament of heaven on the fourth day, which fact would hardly be recorded in the earth's crust.

"And I, God, said, let the waters bring forth abundantly, the moving creature that hath life, and the fowl which may fly above the earth, in the open firmament of heaven." This is the fifth creative era of the divine record and in geology is the third, the Secondary or Mesozoic. Le Conte, in his Elements of Geology, says, "There was evidently extraordinary abundance and variety of life in the Silurian. These early seas literally swarmed with living beings. Over ten thousand species have been described and these must be regarded as only a part of the actual fauna of the age. In spite of every allowance the suddenness of the appearance of the first fauna is extraordinary." "A certain horizon and without break by unconformity and therefore without notable loss of record, fishes appear in great numbers and variety. It looks as if they came without progenitors."

The Bible's record for the sixth day is the creation of man and the animals of the earth. The fact is also recorded (Inspired Translation) that man was the first flesh upon the earth. This corresponds to the fourth great division in geology. And both agree that man and the great mammals were contemporaneous. For a time it was thought man was a much later creation, but since his remains have been found together with these of the great mammals in many thousand instances, it can no longer be gainsaid that man was at least as early as any flesh upon the earth. The Territory of Cenozoic period.

The two great books are open to the vision of the nineteenth century. The Book of Revelation, in which the words of God are recorded by inspired men and the wonderful Book of Nature, in which the doings of God are laid in the solid rock, by his own hand. The one testified of the other. And those who seek to educate themselves therein, by study and by prayer will find a source of never-ending delight.

Practical Hints on Home Nursing

MEASLES

The outbreak is rather sudden, usually without any warning symptoms, and is marked by sudden rise of temperature, sneezing, cold in the head and hoarseness; there is a severe cough which is apt to be loose, intolerance of light and inflamed and watery eyes. Diarrhoea is not uncommon at some stage of the attack. The incubation period is from seven to ten days. The rash usually appears on the third or fifth day, first on the face and then spreads rapidly over the whole body. The rash consists of dark red or even faintly brownish-red spots varying in size from a mere spot to one half the size of a pea, they are slightly raised and closely ranged over the skin; sometimes touching at their borders but usually separated by a narrow extent of nearly normal skin. The face and backs of hands are sometimes much swollen, and itching and burning often accompany the rash. This eruption, or rash, reaches its height in 36 or 48 hours, and after two or three days rapidly fades. The catarrhal symptoms decline with the fading of the rash.

It is well to know that the peeling of measles is different from the peeling of scarlet fever, in the former the scales are much finer. Even in mild cases the patient should be kept in bed until the rash is faded and the peeling, or desquamation, is over. Pneumonia is a frequent complication of measles and for this reason extra care should be taken to protect the patient from drafts and other risks. When the patient begins to feel like eating a generous diet of nourishing but not rich food should be given. Milk, broths, cereals, toast, eggs, custards and other light foods may be given. The room should be kept slightly darkened but not absolutely so. The eyes, nose, and mouth should be bathed frequently with lukewarm water to which has been added a little borax or witch hazel or even common baking soda. The edges of the eyelids should be slightly smeared once or twice a day with cold cream, vaseline or olive oil. The nose should be sprayed and the throat gargled or sprayed using solution given in scarlet fever.

A very common symptom, especially in young children, is pain across the upper part of the abdomen caused by the excessive use of the abdominal muscles in the act of coughing. A soft towel placed around this part of the body and pinned quite tightly helps to relieve the strain. A mustard plaster to the front of neck and chest relieves the cough wonderfully. (Be sure to rub neck and chest well with vaseline, lard, or olive oil before applying the plaster, to prevent blistering.)

The temperature may be reduced by bathing with olive oil, care being taken not to allow the body to be exposed and chilled. Soft rags should be used for the nose and mouth discharge and disposed of as in scarlet fever. Watch for discharge from the ears; if there should be any do not attempt to treat it without the advice of a physician.

Many persons think that measles is a mild and harmless disease, but this is not so. It is one of the respiratory diseases and may lay the foundation for tuberculosis. In the city of Providence in January, 1916, there were more deaths from measles alone than from any other disease. Children who have had measles are usually very susceptible to bronchitis. The same precautions that are used to prevent the spreading of scarlet fever should be used in measles.

A "Home Credits" System

My five children are not very bad, but it is the little weeds which do the damage when grown—quarreling, tale-bearing, selfishness, a habit of slighting work, and such things as I know ought not to be. I talked to them, prayed with them and for them (the oldest is eleven), and sometimes I punished; but all this seemed to have little effect, so I took this idea from the home credits they have in school.

We cut little cards, one half by one and one half inches, from pasteboard, and call them "merit-cards." Every time they do their tasks perfectly—get up without being called, win a victory over temptation, retire at the proper time, when the little ones wash their hands and faces before meals without being told; in fact, for almost everything they do well—I give them one merit-card. Each morning they tell me what they did the day before, and receive cards accordingly.

When a child has fifty cards, I give him some little thing—a child is so easy to please. Last week I made little spelling-tablets, and tied each with baby ribbon. When they have five of these tokens, I give them something a little nicer. The cards go back in the glass in the cupboard to be used again. I expect to give pencils, school-tablets, marbles, etc., and for later presents something a little better, till, for one thousand merits, a still nicer gift is received.

This whole plan takes very little time and study, nothing compared with the rest and peace it brings into the home. On Sunday the children do not work for merits, but show mamma they can be good and kind one day in each week because they love her and because it is right. This keeps their minds from the cares of life on God's holy day.—Advent Review.

To the Mothers of To-day

From time to time we read articles concerning the mothers and the homes. Too much of a helpful nature cannot be said of the work that lies before the mothers of to-day. Many of them, burdened with home cares, often realize that they are not often seen in the church, and chafe at confinement, longing to be out in the world "to do something really great." They forget that they are, in truth, doing already, in the faithful discharge of home duties, the greatest work that could be offered to God or man. "The hand that rocks the cradle, rules the world."

Our young men are being called to the colors of their countries, and only the best are desired. When they are gone, others will be needed to step into the vacant places. Are we not helping, as we train, nourish, and develop these small sons of ours? And, when we guide, teach, direct, and train these young girls to prepare them for their tasks in life, are we not helping the great world? For these high aims, as well as others equally noble, was the Woman's Auxiliary organized, and we should all be thankful for it, and for the band of devoted women who are giving their time and talents for the benefit of womankind about them. Are we doing our "bit," to help them accomplish good, or are we stumbling-blocks and hindrances?

Our president, Sister Sandy, has asked our "aid" societies to change their names to "Relief and Service" Departments. What a grand opportunity to do good is conjured up by even the very name? Let us have fewer "social" times, taking up, rather, some line of study, (such of Forbush's Child Study, as Sister Sandy suggests,) and thus developing ourselves for better work in the lines intrusted to us. Let us be active, too, in the "relief" feature. The Red Cross needs so much work that can best be done by woman's fingers. Can we not knit? Accurate instructions for all their work can be obtained from the Red Cross auxiliaries, located everywhere, and all of us should feel justified in doing all we can for our soldier boys, whether at the front, or in the camps. This work, too, becomes a medium through which we can establish close associations with "outsiders," women who have hearts as warm, and devotion as acceptable as ours. The unity of women is thus demonstrated in this war work, as well as the unity of our men. Becoming friendly with them, through means of the Red Cross, we may find golden opportunities to tell others the good story of the gospel, in the tactful and welcome way we should be prepared to give it. It sounds good to everyone now, to speak hopefully of the time when there shall be no more war, when all people shall be united under the banner of the King of kings.

Speaking of soldiers, I am reminded of an experience I had last spring, shortly after our Bishop McGuire's address to the Woman's Auxiliary convention had been published. We had been discussing it, and each sister had her own idea about it, some thinking it no harm to have the women's societies working to earn money for the church. Some wondered if Brother McGuire were not a bit radical (some men are, you know, when it comes to a woman going outside the four walls of her home), and I had about concluded that our old methods were all right. I picked up a Zion's Praises, and turning the leaves, came to "Hark! Listen to the trumpeters." I sang it over once, but it had no special meaning. Later, coming to it again, I sang it once more and this time it had a thrilling meaning for me!

"Hark! Listen to the trumpeters,
They sound for volunteers,
Commissioned by the King of kings,
Behold the officers."

In a flash I saw the joint council, composed of First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric! They seemed to me to be dressed in white!

"Their armor clean, and glistening bright,
With courage bold they stand,
Enlisting soldiers for their King,
Soldiers for Zion's land!"

And the second verse—how pregnant with meaning:

"Their King is Christ, their armor truth,
The word of God their sword,
Their shield the power of mighty faith,
Their general is the Lord!
It sets my heart all in a flame
A soldier brave to be;
I will enlist, gird on my arms,
And fight for liberty!"

Surely it is a grand army we can enlist in, and we should heed the commands of our officers!

Woman's first duty is in the home and the school, where most of the time of the children is spent. These are their formative years—the important years, and no service could be greater to God, the church, and the Nation, than for women to wisely use these years of opportunity.

A poet has beautifully expressed great truth in the following:

"Sometimes I am tempted to murmur that life is flitting away,
With only its round of trifles filling each busy day;
Dusting nooks and corners, and making the house look fair,
And patiently taking upon me, the burden of woman's care,
Setting the dear home table; clearing the meal away;
And going on little errands in the twilight of the day;
One day is just like another—sewing and mending well
Little jackets and trousers so neatly that none can tell Where are the seams and joinings—Ah, the seamy side of life
That is kept out of sight by the magic of many a mother and wife!
But oft when I'm tempted to murmur that life is flitting away
With only its round of trifles filling each busy day,
It comes to my spirit sweetly, like the voice of a thought divine
'You are living, toiling, for love's sake, and the loving should never repine;
You are guiding the little footsteps in the way they ought to walk,
You are speaking words for Jesus in the midst of your household talk,
Living your life for love's sake, till the homely cares grow sweet,
And sacred the self-denial, that is laid at the Master's feet!'"

May the Woman's Auxiliary continue to grow until every woman in the church senses its importance, and every mother of to-day understands more clearly her duties and her privileges!

The Executive Committee Concerning Red Cross Work

Since the question of Red Cross work has been raised, it is the opinion of the members of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary:

That this work is very important, and quite necessary to be done. We advise that, wherever our members find it possible, they should assist our Government in this work. There doubtless are many throughout the church who feel that they have time which they can devote to Red Cross work.

We wish to add further, that in our doing, we should not neglect other vital features of our work; study of such subjects as will serve to fit us for more efficient service to those who look to us for care and training now, and will do so in the years to come.

Respectfully submitted,

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Australian Conditions Unfavorable

The work in this field is progressing slowly onward, but many obstacles are met as a result of this war. Our late Victoria conference was a success.

The last season has not been prolific in baptisms, but the work has been done and the workers are zealous, so we confidently look for future reaping.

Financial stringency is one of the deterring factors, the cost of living absorbing the whole income of most workers. Industrial strife, as well as war, is rampant, and recently bordered on revolution, but the authorities now seem to have the situation well in hand. Railway, tramway (in New South Wales), wharf laborers, coal miners, and seamen (in Victoria and New South Wales) have all been out on strike, and the seamen have not yet returned. Industries depending upon gas and electricity for motive power have been partially stopped with the consequent unemployment and misery.

Living is forty per cent dearer than in prewar days, with clothing on a par. Rent is also high. This makes the elder's wife's allowance look much smaller, any advance made not being commensurate with the advanced cost of everything.

The Saints have been wonderfully blessed in the past, that very little, if any, unemployment has fallen to them. The decrease of shipping, through submarine ravages, is vitally affecting Australia. Great stacks of grain and other produce paid for by England lie at port awaiting shipment, and the new harvest, anticipated to be good, is coming in on top of it. Money promises to be very scarce if these conditions continue, as markets for our surplus product are cut off. This glut at home does not reduce prices for us, as we have a wheat board which has fixed European values. To add to our troubles came a plague of mice which caused great havoc to grain and in the homes of farmers. Devices for killing mice have destroyed some of them and the plague seems to be abating. Workmen contracted disease by handling the bags made filthy by the rodents.

Seemingly, perilous times have come to-day and the world's great trouble preceding the coming of Christ, as outlined in the Messiah's utterance, is beginning to manifest itself. The world seems to be in a condition of transition, old things passing away and a new era dawning. Will the ideals of Zion be realized? Will the social changes prepare the world for the acceptance of our message? Will God powerfully use his "small people" in the regeneration of society? May we look forward for powerful intervention of Deity to vindicate the right and set up his kingdom? The promises say "Yes," but we humanly ask, "When?" The world's horizon is dark; ominous clouds hover over our heads. Will they break in blessing? There is nothing better in this world than the hope of the gospel and may we be kept true to it and be instrumental in assisting in the preparing of a people to meet him at his appearing and kingdom is the prayer of your brother.

Church Should Be Loyal

I have been a reader of your valuable paper for about twenty-four years, and during that time have learned many valuable truths and have also been strengthened in my faith. I am also pleased with the HERALD in the broad views it takes in most of the great questions that are now before the world and especially so in the stand it takes in the war question. Of all the people in this world, we as a church should loyally stand by this Nation, as we learn from the three standard books that God raised this Nation up for a specific purpose of destroying autocracy or the underlying principles thereof, which is that a man is born and rules by divine authority both in the church and in the state.

This is the principle that has been the foundation of monarchical form of government since the day of Nebuchadnezzar, and which the stone kingdom or democracy should destroy.

For fear that some might claim that this is a theory of mine, I will draw your attention to this fact, that about the same time that Daniel interpreted Nebuchadnezzar's dream, he also spoke through Nephi on this hemisphere, as we read in Nephi 3: 147-156, 176, also 2 Nephi 7: 17-20. In reading this you will find that it was by the power of God and his direction that they were established here upon this hemisphere and that no nation should prosper in fighting against this land, and finally Christ should be king.

This shows that God would raise up and bless the nations upon this choice land that should be a land of liberty to the Gentiles.

Now I draw your attention to the latter-day revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 65; 98: 10; 95: 2. All these show conclusively that he would raise up a nation in the last days upon different principles, or the principles of freedom, which is the principle of democracy. It has permeated the world until to-day all nations are crying out for democracy, which they will sooner or later be blessed with. From the beginning of the latter-day dispensation, we as a church have proclaimed the gospel which also is the law of liberty, and also the restoration of the children of Israel.

This restoration will be accomplished at the end of the war, as all evidence indicates, and then also shall be fulfilled the saying of Jesus Christ, when he predicted his second coming. After he had told of the destructive war he says: "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations."

When the infinite purpose of God has been accomplished through democracy in liberating the nations, then the gospel will roll forth as the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth until it has filled the whole earth. By these means will a people be prepared for the full establishment of the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ. The Spirit of God indicates through the leading men of the church that before us lies great opportunities of accomplishing the purpose of God for the salvation of the human race.

So let us all consecrate ourselves so we will be ready for the great opportunities that God is extending to us now.

Respectfully yours,

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

CHARLES LUNDEEN.

What Comes After This Life

When all things in this life fail we must turn to the Bible and its teachings for comfort. Christ has said that the gospel was so simple that a wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein.

Take the Lord's prayer, do many understand it? We pray, Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Are many of us looking for Christ to come to rule this earth and to set up his kingdom? Very few, possibly, compared with the number of people there are on this earth. Still if they would study the Bible and seek with honest heart for light from on high, the veil would be lifted. They would understand the Bible more clearly and be able to see that we are living in the last days and that Christ will soon be here to set up his kingdom and rule this earth.

In Acts, chapter 17, we are told by Paul that noble men and women searched the Scriptures, also that they should seek the Lord if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. James 1 tells us if we lack wisdom to ask of God.

If a man die shall he live again? Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians, chapter 15, says: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. . . . Awake to righteousness and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame. But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body shall they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. . . . But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."

If we are obedient to the perfect law that Christ has laid down, so we will be worthy of a perfect body, a body celestial and worthy of gaining the first glory. If we do not obey the perfect law we will be only worthy of a lesser glory. This body cannot inherit the kingdom of God. We shall not all sleep but we shall be changed, at the last trump, in the twinkling of an eye, for this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. Then shall be brought to pass the saying that death is swallowed up in victory.

A Letter From the Manitoulin

I suppose there are some readers of our valuable little paper who often heard of the great Manitoulin Island, but who have never had the pleasure of visiting the land, so I thought that maybe some would like to catch a glimpse of it even by reading. So I will try to explain something about it.

I arrived here the first of June and have spent the summer here and as I have traveled extensively, I am in a position to say that the great Manitoulin Island in the summer is one of the most picturesque places one can find in many a day's travel. It is the largest island in fresh water. It is about one hundred miles long and forty miles wide. There are about one hundred small lakes through the island, beside the rapidly flowing rivers, high hills and rocks, handsome groves and many beautiful waterfalls. It truly takes a grand journey over the roads through the woods and around the lakes to really get the full beauty of the island.

Our largest town is Little Current, where the train runs in from the main shore. So we have train as well as boat service here.

In the summer there are fruits of various kinds growing wild, which, when gathered and preserved, are far above the tame fruits.

There are also deer, bears, and other smaller animals to be found here.

Well, I guess I have told you all about the island. I will now try to tell you of some of the people who live here. The Lamanites, or Indians, have their reservations here and some are very wealthy. They have churches and schools which truly are a credit to them.

There are also many different churches of the white people, and among them, we are proud to say, is the Latter Day Saint Church. The Saints have a nice church at Lake Manitou, and one under construction at the Slash and still another to be built at Mindimaya in the spring. So, dear readers, you see that even in this place the honest in heart are being gathered in, and we believe here are many more yet to come.

The winter here is very severe and there are days when it is impossible to get out and that will retard the work for a while. But God rules the winter as well as the summer and he knows all things.

We have truly been blessed since coming here. We have led eighteen honest souls into the waters of baptism, into the fold of God, and we feel truly repaid for our summer's work. We are looking forward to doing all we can this winter for from day to day it comes more forceably to us that we are in the day of God's judgments and that the harvest is ripe and that the laborers are few.

We have held several all-day meetings here with good interest manifest and we had one two-day meeting at Sandfield. About three hundred were there and out of that number about two hundred were nonmembers, and it was a decided success. Among the speakers were Elders W. D. Ellis, Grant St. John, and E. Aelicks, and a most enjoyable time was spent by all.

We thought of the time when we will be permitted, if faithful, to meet and not have to part again. We are your co-laborers.

Ever praying for the success of the work,

E. M. ORTON.

NORTH WALES, November 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am still in the old track and the work is quite revived in some points of the Western Wales District. There have been baptisms at Aberaman; several at Gilfach-Goch, several at Neath and one at Pembroke, the first in that section with the Reorganization.

We had some novel experiences there one week-end toward the last of September. Quite a nice company came out to the crossroads in the little village of Bosherton one Sunday afternoon. They brought their own chairs and that amused me considerably. Brother Walter Rogers, who received the message at Pontyates, and who was anxious for me to preach in his native place, was my scout and he did well.

We had a nice audience for several nights at the home of Brother John Rodgers, who was baptized while I was there. We hope there are others to follow.

One man who attended the open-air meeting was the sexton for the church. He showed me around the quaint old church, saying, "I shall be up to your service at Mr. Rogers' as soon as I have lighted the lamps and rung the people to church." And soon he came out of the church after performing his duties.

About fifteen went to the church and about forty to our meeting. We expect more to follow Brother Rogers into the fold. He is a man much respected, whose word and testimony will count. Brother Walter bore his testimony in the open air with good effect after my talk.

We have a good foundation laid there and feel that the Lord has a people in that section of the country.

We hope to see soon the end of this world war. Many of the brethren are called to the conflict of the world and some have fallen. Others have been preserved marvelously. May the end of it soon come into view.

I am as ever yours in the conflict,

THOMAS JONES.

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, MINNESOTA, December 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: This is a lonely place up here on the banks of Rainy River, with Fort Francis on the opposite bank in Canada. There are no Saints here, or at least I have not seen any, but there are all kinds of churches. I have gone to the Baptist Church since I came here, but it has not the old gospel ring to it as the Saints have. I believe that the other churches are beginning to see their condition as one person in the Christian Endeavor, last Sunday night, said he thought that the time was not far hence when Christ would come. He did not say to fulfill his ministry, but to judge the earth. Asking an interest in your prayers that I might hold to the rod of iron and ever fight for the gospel,

Yours in gospel bonds,

W. W. TUTTY.

HENRIETTA, MISSOURI, December 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are glad to scan your pages of good news each week. We think the address to the priesthood in last HERALD by the President of the church worth fully the price of the HERALD for one year.

We can report the majority of the Saints in this part of the stake as gradually moving forward, both in Sunday school and church work and on the Christmas offering as well.

Brother Okerlind and I are laboring together for the present. Attendance and interest fair, roads and weather fine.

I long to see Zion established and the church put on her beautiful garments, so that her power may be felt for greater good in the world.

Hopefully,

D. E. TUCKER.

DUBOIS, IDAHO, December 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I wrote to our most valuable paper to bear my testimony to this glorious work.

Being isolated from church privileges, and having been for nearly three years, I truly can sympathize with those of like situation.

Oh! how we long for the redemption of Zion, when we can move to Zion, or to the "regions round about," with the songs of everlasting joy and peace. Dear beloved Saints, let us hasten that glorious day by living the life which was exemplified in Christ Jesus. We can if we will. The redemption of Zion can only be brought about by the living of a pure and spotless life, which life will be filled with love in helping all we can in a material way for the purchasing of lands, and for relieving the depressed conditions of the poor, and all those who are worthy of our help. We could even pay the church debt in a day, and much more, if our love for obeying the commands of God was free from selfishness. O selfishness! thou enemy to the progress of truth and right! How long wilt thou afflict this people!

How often do we not say we know this to be the true church of God, and that we love it, oh how we love it; and yet at the same time seek to satisfy our own selfish nature by withholding our moneys and even our talented capacities from the good of the church. Let us instantly turn aside from the enticements of the Evil One, and work together with consecrated efforts toward the redemption of Zion. We can do wonders when we cooperate and concentrate our talents and our efforts toward the cause we love.

The signs of the times truly presage the near approach of Christ to earth again, therefore let us merit our love for the work, that we may not be found wanting when tempests, famine, earthquakes and other immediate signs of his coming overtake us.

I know this is the true church of God, my testimony is strong, and it grows stronger according to my diligence in observing the gospel law. The law of God is plain, that those who seek diligently for the truth need not err therein.

I belong to the Salt Lake City Branch of our church, but have not had the opportunity to visit the Saints there for these three years. May God prosper his people everywhere, and may we all forget self and remember to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

Asking an interest in the prayers of the faithful.

Your brother in bonds,

C. O. A. PETERSON.

Care of Denning and Clark.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, December 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: This being a mutual work and yours so much different than mine, I presume you will not think it strange if I write and tell you of the success of the work in this place and tell you that your work is appreciated and we are trying to encourage the people to patronize the house for Christmas gifts, at least the book agent is doing this.

We are all on the home stretch for this year and hope none of our forces will be lost.

We wish to speak a few words of commendation of the work that our city missionary, J. R. Grice, is doing and also of his work since his appointment among us, one year ago last April. We have been able by his help and that of our pastor, J. R. Grant, and the local brethren as well as the membership in general to enlarge the work so that it became necessary to organize four other branches in the city, all of which are doing nicely. They are presided over by able men: Elder J. A. Grant at number one; Elder William F. Smith at number two; Elder Frederick Simpkins at number three; Elder Edward I. Yoder at number four and Elder Henry Williams at Highland Park. At present the Highland Park Saints have leased a hall for six months and Elder Grice is holding forth there every Sunday afternoon to fair crowds. He is well liked by all who know him and makes friends with all who wish to be friendly and so we consider ourselves fortunate in having such a man in our midst, and the church can well be proud of him as our representative; he is a booster for the various institutions of the church and those of the world who have for the motto, "God speed the right."

We have not said very much this year in the columns of the HERALD but we have been busy, and we wish to say that even though we have organized four branches we still have a membership at the first branch of four hundred and ninety-seven, and going up.

Wishing and working for the success of the work I am your brother and coworker, 833 Ferry Park Avenue.

JAMES D. GAULT.

RIDGEWAY, COLORADO, December 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: Because of the love we have for the work is the reason we are in it, but because we feel our inability to write as well as some others is the reason you do not hear more often from many of us. When a person begins to speak in public, he has stagefright, and some of us do not get over it very soon. It is the same way in writing. I know there are many people that would like to write to the church papers, but because of a feeling of incompetency they do not do it.

I notice in regard to the subject of education that there is a tendency on the part of some to misinterpret what has been said by those who have spoken in favor of it. I have failed to see anything in the HERALD or the Ensign, by those we look upon as leaders, that seemed to hold out the idea that we were to depend first upon the education we received from some college or other institution of learning. The Holy Spirit has always been placed first, the other secondary. But because those whom God hath chosen to be our leaders, and whom we have sustained as such, teach us the law upon this subject, we find some afraid we are going to depend upon their own wisdom. The word of God to us is: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.) "Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth, things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass, things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) The question for us to decide is: Are we going to uphold those who teach us these things, or are we going to try to do all we can against their teaching?

There is another thing that it seems to me we need to be very careful about, and that is, our expressions in regard to the war. We are an international church. No matter what country we may be in we are supposed to honor the laws of the land. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.)

The work in this district is advancing along all lines, although we have not gained as many by baptism as usual, yet we feel the Lord has been with us. The Christmas offering, with what has gone in direct to the Bishop to be applied on the church debt will no doubt be more than ten times what was sent in last year. If all districts do as well throughout the church, there is going to be a time of rejoicing for us as a people. The Saints are waking up to realize their responsibilities as members of the church of Christ.

May the Spirit of God rest upon his people is the prayer of AMOS T. HIGDON.

SILVERTON, OREGON, November 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: Last Wednesday, November 21, I concluded a series of eleven services at the Evergreen Schoolhouse which is two miles from town. The last four meetings were stereopticon lectures. Had a fair interest and attendance. The locality has been much prejudiced, so I was not looking for much. I found conditions better than I anticipated. Last Sunday, the twenty-fifth, I spoke in town. Am now speaking at a logging camp thirty miles out.

In bonds,
A. C. BARMORE.

LAWNDALE, OHIO, December 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a line. Was assigned to the Pittsburgh District for the present year. Hustled and put out my garden, so as to get into my field early, expecting to put in a good year's work for the Master. On my first trip in my field, I contracted a skin disease and have been obliged to remain at home ever since. But I have not been idle much of the time. I assisted Brother Anderson with his tent meetings at Kenmore until he was called home, because of his wife's sickness, who had to undergo an operation at the Sanitarium.

The writer continued the tent meetings as long as the weather would permit. Also distributed tracts and papers. And have been visiting the homes of some that became interested during the tent meetings.

I saw the doctor yesterday. He thought that if I would be good I could leave home in a few days.

Still in the faith,

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, December 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: The San Jose Branch is still among the living and trying to hold up the banner of Immanuel. Branch, Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary are holding regular meetings, and much of the Spirit of the Master is enjoyed, and peace and harmony prevails.

We had a very enjoyable Thanksgiving service in our little church here, on the day set apart by the President for that purpose. After the song service and opening prayer, the pastor read the 151st Psalm, which he wrote by the aid of the Spirit, and is entitled, "A Psalm of Thanksgiving" and was written for the occasion. It was as follows:

Give thanks unto the Lord, oh ye Saints of the Most High God; for his mercy endureth forever. Praise his holy name, for all his loving-kindness and tender mercies and blessings; because he hath looked down from his holy habitation, and hath had compassion upon the children of men.

Because they had forsaken him, "The Fountain of Living Waters," darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people; they walked, every man in his own way, for there was no servant of God to lead them.

Where there is no vision, the people perish; and they were as the blind leading the blind; for there was no revelation from God.

In the anguish of their hearts they cried unto the Lord their God, and he heard their prayers, and hath had respect unto their supplications. Yea, he hath sent forth his angels from the courts of glory, and hath established his kingdom, and renewed his covenant, which he made with his servants of old.

He hath led his people out of darkness, into the light and liberty of the truth; he hath made the crooked paths straight; he hath caused the light to shine upon their pathway; he hath caused the water of life to flow freely; he hath covenanted to establish Zion; he hath made a proclamation to all the nations of the earth; he hath set up an ensign to the people, and hath sent forth his servants to proclaim the great day of salvation.

Therefore bring forth the harp and the organ, and the stringed instruments, and the instruments of brass, and make melody unto the Lord, and praise his holy name.

Let all the young men and maidens mingle their voices in songs of praise and thanksgiving unto the Most High. And let not the aged forget the gladness of their youth, but sing aloud unto the Lord, and extol the name of him who hath made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water, and inclineth his ear unto the supplications of his Saints.

Glory and honor, and thanksgiving and praise, be unto his holy name forevermore. Amen.

After a few brief remarks by the president, and vice president of the branch, the congregation was given opportunity to bear thanksgiving testimonies, which was taken advantage of by the Saints, nearly everyone present taking part in the meeting. The Spirit of the Master was present, and the Saints felt that they had not met together in vain.

On the sixth of November the Saints did their "bit" toward voting the saloons out of San Jose. They go out on January 1, 1918, and we hope that they will have a vacation until the end of eternity, and then some.

The Woman's Auxiliary, along with many other good things that they are doing, are doing their part in raising funds to pay off the debt that is on our little church. They have just closed a bazaar, which has been very successful, and they are rejoicing over their success, and thanking the Lord for blessing their efforts, which they asked him to do, before they started their bazaar. They took in over eighty dollars and the major part of this was from nonmembers. One of the merchants of uptown district, let them have the use of a store building, free, in one of the very best locations in the city. They held their sale three days, with the above result. If I am correctly informed, they were out only one dollar for expenses. They have informed me that on next Monday they will have one hundred and fifty dollars to turn over to the building committee. God bless the Woman's Auxiliary, not only for what they are doing in a financial way, but more especially for the good that they are doing in the home, and along other lines.

On Sunday, the 2d inst., it was the Saints' lot to enjoy one of the most spiritual sacrament services that has been held for some time. There was a goodly number of the more faithful Saints present, and the Spirit of the Master was manifest in spiritual gifts, namely: Singing in tongues, and the interpretation; and prophecy and exhortation by the Spirit. Doubts and fears were dispelled, and the Saints encouraged to onward and upward progress.

On Friday, November 30, the Religio held a free social at the home of Sister Minnie Bates, the Religio president, when a very enjoyable time was had; both old and young, entering into the activities of the evening. During the evening, light refreshments were served, which disappeared before the hungry host like the frost before the morning sun.

To-night, Wednesday, we hold our regular midweek prayer-meeting; and away out here on the western shores of California, there are some of the Saints at least that have read the request of the sister in Rochester, New York, who is afflicted with cancer, and are paying heed to the request that has been made in her behalf, and are fasting and praying on this day set apart, that if it be the Lord's will, she may be spared to her family; but she is not the only one that is being remembered, there are others that appreciate our prayers.

Our motto is "Onward and upward"; and our slogan is, "Observe the whole law of liberty."

Sincerely yours for service,

615 Spencer Avenue.

C. W. HAWKINS.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO, December 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have just returned home from Sault Ste Marie, where I have put in two and a half months service for the church. When I began my labor there, the interest had waned, but after some few weeks of careful work, the interest began to pick up and instead of ten or twelve for an audience to greet the speaker, we had thirty and forty-five before we conducted our services there on November 23. I did all I could for the work on both sides of the Soo River, viz, Soo, Michigan, Soo, Ontario, after Brother David Burch left who had been in charge of the work on both sides of the river for some time.

I had but a short acquaintance with this brother, and his affable wife, Sister Burch, as they left for the South shortly after my arrival, but believe them to be ardent and zealous workers, and had accomplished much good.

I was nobly assisted by the branch officers and members in my work. I also had a short visit from the district president, the stalwart Elder D. B. Perkins of Clavering, Ontario, who rendered aid to the progress of the work, rendering his service on both sides of the river. He is a man that takes well with the people.

On October 7, at Stulton, Ontario, my nephew, Albert Tomlinson, was called and ordained to the office of priest, under the hands of the writer and Elders Perkins and Brown. Elder Perkins was also spoken to by the Spirit revealing important matter which gave him great comfort. Albert Tomlinson was told in his ordination if faithful he would yet occupy in the office and calling of his father, Elder John A. Tomlinson, now residing at Senlac, Saskatchewan, and who we might say is the father of the Stulton Branch, and acted as president for many years.

On November 12 we had another visitor from Gaylord, Michigan, Elder Arthur Starks. I did not have the privilege of hearing this brother preach, but we rejoiced together under the wonderful outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, in the home of our worthy Brother and Sister James Ferguson, Easterly Street, Soo, Michigan. This brother was called to be a colaborer with God, ordained later to the office of priest, and made president of the newly organized branch there. We look for good results from him. We often think of him and his affable wife, who have many times befriended the servants of the Lord by their hospitality and glad shake of the hand. One always feels at home with Brother and Sister Ferguson, and when you leave this brother he presses a few dollars in the hand to cheer you on your way. May the dear Lord remember their kind deeds, and supply them with the precious things of earth and heaven, is my prayer and wish.

There were four baptisms and one marriage, and a branch organized on the Michigan side by Elder Starks. The prospects look brighter for the work on both sides of the river. The work will be cared for by Elder Orton.

During the latter part of October I took a run up to Port Arthur, where I opened up the work last fall, and gave the Saints there two week's labor.

I left Sunday evening October 28, and landed at the Soo, the following day and resumed my work there until November 23. Baptized one, the head of a family, and married a couple.

On my arrival home after four month's absence, I found all well, but received the sad news of my baby girl's husband's death. So far as we can learn he was murdered by the Germans when he was sleeping. He was the doctor's first aid in the medical corps, went over the sea, July, 1915, with the 123d Battalion from Toronto. He leaves a wife and three small children to mourn his demise.

Oh, when shall the nations be humbled and the purposes of the Lord be obtained, and the Prince of peace come and reign? when the nations will beat their spears into pruning hooks, and their swords into plowshares, and there will be no more war? O, God, hasten that glad day.

Yours sincerely,

S. TOMLINSON.

MIDLAND, MICHIGAN, December 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write you concerning the work done here in Midland. About five years ago, I came to this city and opened up the work. The first year I baptized three or four and then went back to other parts of the district. The next season I came back again and baptized a few more, but it seemed so hard to get the work started. Discouragements were had each time and I would come back and find the work seemingly thrown away. I sometimes said to myself, "What is the use of my coming here to preach and then going away and letting the work die out again?" For there was no shepherd to care for the flock.

Finally we came to the conclusion to fast and pray that God would send a shepherd to the flock, and shortly afterwards Brother Ambrose Dewolfe came and built up the work in starting a Sunday school, and things began to look more bright.

After a while Brother Dewolfe moved away and things seemed to fall back again. In the course of time, a few Saints moved in from other parts and began to sustain the work, but it was so hard to get a building to worship in, that the Saints were again discouraged, as they had to vacate the building which they had rented for about a year. Then they began to hold prayer meetings and Sunday school in private houses. At last they got the little town hall, but this was a very disagreeable place, for the town people, when they held their meetings, would spit tobacco juice on the floor, and leave it in a bad condition in which to worship. Finally I came there again last June to hold tent meetings. But I will state that my spirit was not buoyed up by great calculations of success, for the discouragements of the past had their weight.

I had been shown that there was a work to be done, but I came to the conclusion that some one else would do it, not I. So we set to work with these feelings. Brother Willard Shotwell, of Tawas, a very promising, energetic young man, came to assist in the work. We sat up in the tent in the most convenient place and began our services. To our surprise, we had a full house. The Spirit of the Master was with us, and with the faithful assistance that the Saints gave, interest began to increase.

I think there were three or four different ministers who came to hear, and sometimes we would talk until one o'clock. They were very friendly at first, but as time went on they were not so friendly, as we showed them that they were acting without authority and all they were representing was a reformation brought about by Martin Luther, John Wesley, and his brother Charles, John Calvin, and others.

We showed them the work of restoration brought about through the hand of Joseph Smith, how he received angelic ordination and God spoke again from heaven, that the church was again established with apostles, prophets, evangelists and teachers, and that men must have faith in God as they did in the days of our Savior, that the sick could be healed, there would be prophecy, gift of tongues, interpretation of them. We told them that people should repent of their sins and have the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, that there should be in the church the ordinance of blessing little children, also that God would call his ministry by direct revelation.

When they heard all of these things, they were not so friendly, but went from house to house telling the people to beware of us for we were nothing but the Mormons from Utah. Our lights were attached to one of the neighboring houses, and one of these ministers even went so far as to try to get these people, who had so kindly assisted us by furnishing the electricity, to turn out the lights and leave us in the dark. Jesus said, "By their fruits shall ye know them" and "Men do not gather grapes of thorns." Their leaven did not work, for the Father is at the head of this latter-day work. The Saints were fasting and praying that honest souls might be brought into the fold.

The people who furnished us the electric light came into the true church, for we furnished them that spiritual light of this glorious gospel and they are now rejoicing in the true faith.

After we had been holding meetings for about two weeks, Brother Ernest Burt came and also assisted in the work. We held forth until nearly thirty were baptized, most of them ranging from fourteen to thirty-five years of age.

The question then came up about building a church. As we were in sore need of a place of worship, we sought the counsel of the Lord, for I would not undertake the task until I knew he would approve of it. One night in a dream I saw the church in process of construction on the very spot where it now stands. I was busy pounding nails in the studding.

I wondered how we could get the lot, as it had been refused us, and I wondered where the money to build would come from. I then saw myself walking along a straight and narrow way. I came to a place where I picked up a handful of money and I kept walking and picking up money until my pockets were filled.

I then awoke from my dream, knowing I had received a manifestation, but still wondering how we could get that lot for the building, which I had seen in my dream. We again fasted and prayed and to our surprise there came a telephone message saying that we could have the lot. It was finally purchased at half price. Then I started out with a paper to get people to subscribe money for the building. I received one dollar from the first, second, and third persons, and then it began to come in larger amounts until we had almost enough to build. The work was mostly donated by the brethren who assisted faithfully after their day's work was done.

This was Brother Shotwell's first experience in the field, and he, being a school-teacher, had hands that were soft and tender, but he truly "Shotwell" the shingle nails into those shingles. The sun would beat down until the sweat would drop from his brow, but he was always the same cheerful fellow, and expressed himself this fall, when returning to school, as being pleased with the experiences obtained through service. Next summer when your vacation comes, come again, Brother Shotwell, and we will build some more churches.

He also expressed himself as having had some trials during the summer, but our heavenly Father must have a tried people, and for his sacrifice there will be stars added to his crown.

Within about thirty or forty days the church was finished, and the Saints are now occupying with comfort.

This fall Brother Curtis and Brother Burt came and organized a branch, with a full set of officers, and I believe that a wise choice of them was made. A spirit of unity was felt.

We have a large Sunday school, and they are trying to make the Christmas offering as large as possible. We also have a Religio and a ladies' aid. They are trying to do what they can to advance the cause. We have now a branch with about sixty members. We hope and trust that unity will prevail, and all try to carry on the work. The clouds of discouragement of the past are rolled away.

And now I leave for other parts to help build up God's work in other places, leaving the care of this little flock to these branch officers. The work of the seventy is to hunt the honest in heart from the holes in the rocks if need be. I love the work I am engaged in, and I hope to spend my life in the service of my Master, in inviting all to come to him whose providence never fails. My face is set Zionward and I hope to live to see the Savior come to his people. About a year ago, I heard a voice saying, "You shall not depart this life until you see Christ coming in the clouds of heaven." I felt the power of the Spirit at the time and while I write I feel again the manifestation. I have had my trials as well as the rest of my brethren. I have a wife and four children who are dear to me, and it is hard to be away from them so much, but I know my Father will care for them if I am faithful in performing his labor of love. God has been wonderfully good to me and I have been blessed in convincing the honest in heart of the truth of his gospel. I have almost reached the three hundredth mark in baptisms in the past six years of my ministry. I have been persecuted in places, "rotton-egged," cast out of schoolhouses, and from other places where I have tried to tell the gospel story.

Our Father has blessed me much in the gift of healing. Twice, two were restored who had drunk deadly poison, and many have been raised from beds of sickness in a marvelous way. Men and women have a right to the blessings of heaven if faithful in keeping up their life insurance policy, the assessments being their tithes and offerings. This is the only policy I am trying to hold and the only one that will benefit me after the death of the mortal body. I have faith in the principles of this church that if faithful we shall be cared for and also our offspring.

Now is the time, dear brethren, to devote our time to right living, fasting and prayer, and also the sacrifice of our temporal means for the redemption of Zion. If we live in the gay world, we shall suffer loss. Saints who are enjoying the spirit of this work will not take up with the pleasures of this world but will devote their time and talent for the benefit of their fellow men.

May God help us to live better, to seek more to obtain unity, to uphold the ministry, by the prayer of faith, that the work be not burdened by murmuring and complaining because we think all ought to be done our way.

We as a whole need more faith, more power, and more strength, and we can only obtain it by living the life we claim to be representing. But "He who thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." The frost of an autumn night may blight the sweetest flower.

God wants men and women whom he can depend upon, for he has given to us a religion of faith, by which we must live every day if we expect to reap the fruits.

Ever praying for the redemption of God's people,
SAMUEL PENDLETON.

TOLEDO, OHIO, December 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are rather few in number, but are still awake to our duties and by all helping make our work lighter.

A marked social and spiritual improvement has been noticed in our branch within the last two months. Brother and Sister Mintun have been with us since October 1, and their entire time and ability is being used in the interest of the work here. Special work is also being done by the priesthood to reclaim the inactive members and those in transgression.

It is sad to know that some will not accept the offers of mercy and have permitted themselves to be cast out of the church.

Brother William Keill has been called and is ordained a teacher. He gladly accepted the duties of this office and said to the tobacco habit, "I have no more use for you."

The sisters have been working almost day and night to help pay our debt by giving suppers, and have just raised a good sum from our Christmas bazaar, October 15, everything donated, making all profits clear. The choir is making excellent progress under the direction of local talent.

The Sunday school has set the amount of their Christmas offering at fifty dollars, but there are so many other pressing needs that it makes the raising of this amount more of a burden than it would be if there were no other church obligations to be met at this time. Interest in the Sunday school is increasing, especially among the younger people.

Thanksgiving services were held at the church, and the power of God then felt will be a spiritual help long to be remembered. Our president is raising the standard of life high, and laboring hard to prepare a people worthy of an acceptance in Zion. He is trying to establish pure religion both by example and precept.

Several marvelous cases of healing have been had of late; our aged Brother Cairns has been very sick but has received relief to some extent.

The voice of God has been heard through the gift of wisdom and prophecy, in which reproof and correction have been given, and words of encouragement have been received also.

Brother Netter, of Independence, has spent the summer with us, being here to settle an estate.

Sister Sarah Rodgers, superintendent of nurses at Independence Sanitarium, spent Saturday night and Sunday at our president's home and worshiped with us. She is taking post-graduate course in nurses training at Detroit.

Our Departed Ones

BROWN.—Joseph Monroe Brown was born February 22, 1877, at Borden, Indiana. Baptized November 4, 1892, by J. M. Scott. Died November 23, 1917, at Independence, Missouri. One brother, Alma Brown, survives, and a large number of relatives. Funeral conducted by George Jenkins, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

NORTHEY.—Rosanna Northey died at the home of her daughter, Fenelon Falls, Ontario, on December 18, 1917, at the age of 86 years, 6 months. Sister Northey was baptized over twenty years ago by John Shields, and leaves 5 sons, 1 daughter, and a number of grandchildren. Funeral sermon by David Pycok, assisted by Methodist and Presbyterian preachers.

ACKLEY.—Martin Ackley was born February 22, 1844, near Cleveland, Ohio. At the age of 15 he moved with his parents to Iowa, and in that State and the State of Missouri he lived the most of his life. Married Helen Nobles December 10, 1864. To them were born 7 children, 2 of whom preceded their father in death. Baptized January 24, 1887. He was an old soldier, serving 3 years and 3 months in the Army, belonging to the twenty-first Iowa Company. Died December 1, 1917, near Allendale, Missouri.

PARKER.—Hiram Parker was born at Ulseby, Lancashire, England, October 31, 1831. Baptized August 1, 1875. Married Sarah Ann Brown Selley, March 9, 1862. To this union were born 9 children, 2 boys and 7 girls. Baptized August 1, 1975. Died December 12, 1917, at Atchison, Kansas. Those surviving are: Mrs. Anna Ethridge, Atchison, Kansas; Mrs. Emma Williams, Mrs. Addie Sumner, Hiram Parker, Whiting, Kansas, 23 grandchildren, and 10 great-grandchildren. Funeral conducted by George Jenkins, Netawaka, Kansas.

CAMPBELL.—Esther M. Campbell was born in Indiana, June 5, 1844. Married William B. Martin, December 20, 1868. Baptized over 60 years ago by E. C. Briggs. She has lived an exemplary life of a true Saint, greatly aiding in church and Sunday school work. Died at her home near Woodbine, Iowa, November 5, 1917, of heart trouble and pneumonia. Leaves husband, 3 children, 2 sisters, 2 grandsons, and other relatives. Funeral services at the Saints' church in Woodbine, in charge of S. B. Kibler. Sermon by Fred A. Fry. Interment in Keg Creek Cemetery.

CURTIS.—William Noah, born Noble County, Ohio, June 29, 1851, died at his home, Lucas County, Iowa, November 8, 1917, of pneumonia. At six years he accompanied his parents to Lucas County, where he spent nearly all his life on a farm near the home place. Married Mary J. Marker, March 1, 1874. To them were born Blanche Eubanks, Clark and May. These with wife, seven grandchildren, many kinsmen and friends survive. Mr. Curtis was not a member of the church, though was a friend of the cause, his home being open to the elders. Sermon at the home by J. F. Garver, assisted by R. J. Lambert, interment in Graceland Cemetery.

SWAIN.—Elizabeth R. Swain was born November 10, 1844, in Niagara County, New York. Married Seymour Snyder in 1866. To this union were born five children. One son, Harry, departed this life in 1901. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for thirty years, but of recent years has been identified with the Saints' church. Died at Coldwater, Michigan, December 1, 1917. She leaves to mourn 4 children, Mrs. G. B. Turner, Ypsilanti; Mrs. Arthur Lyon, Coldwater; J. H. Snyder, Lansing; Morton Snyder, Wheaton, Illinois, also 3 brothers. Funeral was conducted from the home of her daughter, December 4, S. W. L. Scott officiating. Interment in Oak Grove Cemetery.

TORNQUIST.—Gertrude Richardson, born at Allerton, Iowa, August 21, 1870, died at Ottumwa, Iowa, November 7, 1917, following an operation for abscess. In young womanhood she married Henry Luke, deceased at Hiteman, Iowa, March 29, 1911. On December 23, 1916, she married John Tornquist, at Ottumwa, Iowa, where she resided till her death. There survive her, husband, two children, Mrs. Esther Jenkins, Hiteman Iowa, Herbert, Marlene, Missouri, two grandchildren, other relatives and friends. Uniting with the church September 28, 1908, Sister Tornquist lived true to the covenant she made with Christ in baptism. Sermon at the home by J. F. Garver, assisted by William Wilson, interment at Ottumwa.

KINSEY.—L. T. Kinsey was born in Yreka, Siskiyou County, California, in 1852. Was twice county treasurer and once county clerk, and from 1892 to 1894 was mayor of the city of Eureka. Previous to this he had served as councilman from the first ward. For many years was active in banking and stock raising, having been one of the first stockholders of the Bank of Eureka and the Savings Bank of Humboldt County. He filled both the positions of cashier and assistant cashier at different times and at one time was vice president of the two. His later years were devoted to stock raising. Died at his home in Eureka, December 8, 1917, following an illness of less than two days. No minister of our faith being available, Reverend Charles E. Farrar, of the Episcopalian Church, preached the sermon, under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

NOTE THIS ABOUT BROOKLYN CHURCH

Brother Wardell Christy writes one of the brethren in Lamoni how difficult it is to look up all the various boys who may be stationed near New York City. One trip recently taken cost about ten dollars, counting in the repair expenses. It would cost about fifty dollars a month to make all the calls sent his way. He desires to have all of them visit the church or parsonage. Please note the correct address of each: The church is located at the corner of Park Place and Schenectady Avenue, Brooklyn, New York. The parsonage where Brother Christy lives, is 1312 Park Place, Brooklyn. If it is desired that he call on any of the lads sent there, give full address, and do not expect him to spend a day to make the trip unless his car fare is included. Having all the information necessary, he might see your son on another trip. Perhaps most of us do not realize the size of our greatest city and its mighty suburbs.

A letter from Robert T. Brown, informs us that Brethren Ellis and Christensen are doing a good work, and the sisters

The Advertising Manager Says:

I've just been looking over the subscription lists, finding out who receive the church papers—and incidentally, about some who do not.

While I was getting the most joy out of the fact that the lists were fairly large and gradually increasing, the subscription clerk handed me some neat little rolls of paper. I wish she hadn't, but they had to come. As I unrolled these and found name after name who had allowed their subscriptions to expire with the closing numbers of the year, it gave me a sinking sensation at the heart.

Of course many of these will renew; but, how many? How would you like to see your best friends and associates desert you for a few paltry cents?

It only costs 12½ cents a month to have the HERALD come to your home. Surely you wouldn't put up that amount against its loss!

For only 8½ cents a month—think of it, about 2 cents a week—the Ensign will be sent to your door; or the Autumn Leaves; or the Journal of History.

Half that amount, a cent a week, will get you the Stepping Stones, with its excellent stories and character building articles; while the Hope for the little children, is less yet.

Unity, for the priesthood, costs about a half cent a week. Does it come to all the members of the priesthood you know? If not, why shouldn't it?

You could save us a lot of heartaches and assure yourself that you will not lose out concerning the progress of the church if you would renew your present expiring subscriptions and be sure you are not missing something you need in the others. We'll be glad to send you sample copies if you like. Send your orders to the nearest house, Herald Office or Ensign Office.

Watchfully yours,

are by no means behind them. Brother Brown and his wife are battling with the language and the mosquitoes, and they are not certain yet which will win. He has managed to bear his testimony in Tahiti after only a few months' experience.

A very successful Christmas service was held in Omaha on the 23d. A fine Christmas program was had, with a seasonable sermon by the city missionary, Elder Hubert Case. The subject was, "The Babe of Bethlehem soon coming as king of the world." It had been well advertised, and a packed house was the result. The recent capture of Jerusalem was featured, with the fulfillment of prophecy in these latter days. Six are to be baptized there soon.

DECEMBER LEAVES GONE AGAIN

A second edition of the Autumn Leaves for December was printed to supply the unusual demand, but they are all gone again. Other publications do not attempt to supply back numbers—which they become after mailing date—but the expense was gone to, to keep everybody good-natured. In spite of this the supply is exhausted. The January number is being printed now and a big demand is expected for it. Get your subscriptions in early. A dollar a year, or fifty cents for six months. The first of the "Special Dozen" stories is a fine one, by H. J. Davison.

We have an obituary notice concerning the demise of Rachel Barnhouse, widow of the late Samuel Bennington, but it lacks several essential items. Will the sender please furnish his name and address, as we have neither and must get the information in this manner.

THE NEW PREACHING NOTICES

Some call attention to the fact that in our issue of three weeks ago the preaching notice and the explanation of the prices, etc., were widely separated in the same issue. This is true, and we hope if you did not read the two together, you will do so now. The notices are an excellent aid in many cases, and at the price of 50 cents per 100 make cheap advertising. No. E545.

C. Ed. Miller has been over at Hilo, Hawaii, visiting and working with Brother M. A. McConley. He has been preparing some very interesting material for our Hawaiian number of the HERALD, to appear ere long.

LAMONI STEAM LAUNDRY

The new building for the Lamoni Steam Laundry is finished and the business will soon be in operation under the management of Brethren A. E. Stoff and R. J. Wildey on a stewardship basis. The machinery is all in and rapidly being installed. They expect to be ready for work by about January 7. They will do all kinds of laundry work, and have added an up-to-date dry cleaning department to the original plan, which will be conducted by a competent man.

BROTHER M'DOWELL'S ADDRESS CHANGED

Recently we had a notice that F. M. McDowell had been appointed to have charge of the Boy Movement in the church. Since then, his address has been changed to 18 South Van Buren Street, Iowa City, Iowa. Please note this in your correspondence directed his way.

Brother E. D. Moore reports a pleasant lecture trip recently completed through the Des Moines District. He visited seven branches, lecturing on interesting phases of the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary. He held in addition, several officers' and teachers' meetings, taught a Religio class—without a Quarterly in hand, as he so strenuously advocates—and preached once. While he does not expect to find time to get out any more this winter, he is enthusiastic over the plan and urges that every district try to secure the services of some of those who are available for this line of work. Write early to the manager of the lecture board, A. W. Smith, Federal Reserve Bank Building, Saint Louis, Missouri. The Des Moines District hopes to have at least four of these if possible.

Sister Anna Paris, of Cloverdale, British Columbia, requests that some of the Detroit Saints call on her daughter, Mrs. William Hoult, who lives at 20 Genesee Apartments, 163 Alexandria Avenue West. She is not a member of the church but would welcome any of the Saints.

Some one wants the street and house number of Sister Ruth Reeves, of Webster Groves, Missouri, published. She may send it to us.

Bishop B. R. McGuire preached in San Francisco on the evening of the 18th to a large and appreciative audience. He left for Salt Lake City on the 19th, on his way home to Independence.

The Lamoni Sunday school held a Christmas entertainment on Christmas Eve, giving an excellent program by the children. An offering was taken for the beginner and primary departments, totaling over twenty-nine dollars for their Christmas offering. These two departments, with the junior and intermediate, had previously voted to give the five dollars voted each, with which to purchase Christmas treats, as an addition to their offering. The superintendent announced that nearly $2,100 had been received, and the amount would be more than that before being sent in. This means about $3 per member, for the enrollment.

HALF HOURS WITH CELEBRITIES

II. DOMINIE TRADITION

There had been an evening lecture in the high school building. I loitered in my seat, watching the audience disperse. They went out chatting gayly—all the students, followed by the pedagogues, until only the janitor was left.

I yawned and prepared to go, but just then my attention was attracted to an old gentleman who seemed to materialize from the shadowy corners of the room and came down the aisle, evidently with the intent to address me.

He was old and gray, with stooped figure, yet with a venerable dignity that seemed to indicate that for many, many years he had commanded the utmost respect.

He chuckled to himself as he approached, and said, "Did you hear the young professor run on to-night? These young pedagogues amuse me. But I should not laugh, for I taught them all, and their fathers before them."

Seeing my look of surprise, he went on, "I am one of the oldest teachers on earth. Just as soon as the sons of Adam got a little way from God, I established a school, and every man from that day to this has been under my tutelage. All of them have stood at my desk, though, bless you, they may not have known it."

"You must have had many strange experiences," I ventured, as my visitor seemed to lapse into an abstracted, reminiscent mood.

"Yes," he answered. "I have taught many strange people—dusky Egyptians, stern Romans, poetic Greeks, visionary Jews, aspiring Japanese, obstinate Englishmen, inquisitive Yankees. All of them come under the rod of Dominie Tradition."

"I suppose you have had some trouble in matters of discipline," I inquired.

"A great deal," he answered, carelessly. "But I have many methods of dealing with the refractory. Many a great man have I ferruled soundly. I made Galileo get right down on his knees and admit that the earth was flat and stationary."

He paused to frown darkly, and added, "But the rascal got up and slipped to his seat, whispering, 'And yet it moves.'" His smile returned, however, and he went on, "But that is all right now, for it has become traditional that the earth revolves, and I teach it myself now."

"I have had trouble with religious students also. Most of the reformers in religion, as in politics and science, were quite unruly. But I trounced them all severely in their turn. And now that their heresies are become orthodox I trounce those who differ from them. Each new age has its rebels for me to discipline. They eternally ask, Why? No wonder I look so old. Young people make Tradition look old."

This frank confession irritated me, and I cried: "You but confirm my previous opinion of you. You are the enemy of progress in every age. It was you who caused the Jewish slaves to turn against Moses, their deliverer."

"Possibly so," the reverend Dominie admitted.

"And it was you who centuries later caused the Jews to revere Moses and reject Jesus."

"Very likely," replied my new friend, swelling with pride.

"It is you," I went on heatedly, "Who perpetuate every falsehood. It is you who maintain the tyranny of the dead over the living. It is you who slay the prophets in every generation and later build their tombs."

"Not so fast, my son," interposed the Dominie coolly. "You must remember also that I carry down from father to son every truth that persists. Granted, I hate new things and love old things. But still credit me with teaching truth as impartially as I teach error—if it is only old enough to be respectable. It was I who preserved the Christian doctrines before Bibles were printed. And in every home where ideals of honesty and temperance and industry are upheld I make them traditional and carry them down from generation to generation. I teach what the fathers want me to teach. Don't blame me for their sins."

Somewhat mollified, I quieted down, but made bold to ask, "But why do you not teach all truth? Then might you become a great blessing to man, and your school be the greatest as well as the largest school in the world."

The old man shrugged his shoulders and replied, "That is because I have no conscience and no judgment. I am memory. I am tradition only. I am a teacher. That which I receive from the fathers I teach, whether of good or of bad. If you are finicky about ethics see that you give me only truth and morality for your children. For I will teach your children's children after you, just as I taught your great-grandfathers before you, back to Adam."

"You are of the past," I asserted. "Paul declared that he would forget things past and press forward toward the mark of the prize of his high calling."

"Paul!" cried the old gentleman. "Yes; Paul was the great breaker of traditions. He turned from circumcision to Christian baptism; from the school of Gamaliel to the feet of Jesus. Don't quote Paul to me."

"But Paul was a dominant man in his age," I persisted. "Nicodemus is all but forgotten. But Paul lives forever. I will follow Paul's advice."

But my friend laughed. "Paul's advice is tradition—you are learning," and as I arose to go, he caught me by the sleeve: "Come with me!" he said.

The walls of the school building seemed to fade away and I looked with surprise into a dim country toward which my preceptor was attempting to drag me. I saw dim candle lights, and many old men, and great stacks of musty volumes, and dusty shrines and idols where the ancients worshiped, and old cathedrals, and tombs, and priests and kings in robes; and I heard incantations and mummery of prayers, and many voices repeating by rote the words of the long-ago dead.

"It is the past," I murmured. "The land of yesterday."

"Yes," my guide answered, "and I lead you to it. Come with me. Here is buried the wisdom and the folly of all past ages."

But I resisted the inner promptings that urged me to obey my ancient monitor. Turning squarely from him I looked in the opposite direction. There I saw another dim country. But it had the twilight of sunrise rather than that of the sunset.

And I saw many lights, like morning stars. And there were domes of temples yet to be erected. And I heard voices singing hymns, and saw many preachers of righteousness and truth; and a figure that typified my ideal of faith. And there were books here, too, and schools, and builders, and many young men and women marching. And all pressed forward. For this was the land of the future."

I wrenched myself from the grasp of my ancient companion and said, "I will not go with you. Nor will I accept you as a teacher. I will consider you only as a servant. Bring me what truth you have from the past, that I may carry it with me into the future. But bring me none of its errors and follies. A Christian must have brain and conscience and heart as well as memory. And he must walk with Jesus, who ever presses forward and carries with him all truth."

Then dimly I heard the sound of footsteps. And I awoke to find the janitor of the school building laughing at me. "You have been asleep, sir," he said. "All the others have gone and left you and it is time to lock the building."

I arose to go, feeling rather foolish; but even so I could not refrain from looking about to see if I could discover anywhere in the school building the reverend form of Dominie Tradition.

I am sure if you look about you, in time you will detect this venerable preceptor conducting his classes, in the church, as well as in the school, among the elders, in society, everywhere. If you come under his tutelage, learn to discriminate, for he does not; and invoke the guidance of a higher instructor who is pledged to guide you into all truth.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

"If ye are not one," says Jesus, "ye are not mine."

A little boy was singing at his play: "I love daddy and daddy loves me, and that's the reason we always agree." Come to think about it, that is the only sure basis for permanent agreement.

But this might do for a dirge to sing over the average dead and disrupted branch: "I didn't like Jones and Jones didn't like me, and that was the reason we never could agree."

It is terrible to work a long time for a certain thing and then find that you cannot enjoy it. Our attention has been called to the case of Mr. Fiddle. He took a course in theology and finally graduated as doctor of divinity. And then, alas, he found that he took no pleasure at all in signing his name, Reverend Fiddle, D. D.

The Twentieth Century New Testament has a significant version of Luke 2: 14. The angels are made to say: "Glory to God on high, and on earth peace among men in whom he finds pleasure." The wish for peace is not made toward all men in general, but only toward those in whom God finds pleasure.

Sam Jones used to tell about two men who were turned back at the pearly gates. Sorrowing they went away. But as they did so they met a cripple. Each man got under the cripple's arm, one on either side, and agreed to help him as far as the gate. When they got there Peter threw the gates wide open and said to the cripple, "Come in and bring your crutches with you." That was a good way to get in, after all.

THE WORK OF ELDERS SHEEHY AND BUTTERWORTH

To the Church; Greeting: In a recent notice which I published regarding the work of the members of the Twelve, names of two members of that quorum were not mentioned. My attention has recently been called to this fact by a silly rumor which has reached me. The rumor assigned reasons for this failure to mention these names. We therefore take time and space to set at rest these rumors by saying that we did not mention the names of Brethren C. A. Butterworth and F. M. Sheehy because their work was not changed in any way as a result of the last council work. Brother Butterworth remains in charge of the work in Australia, and he will continue as in the past, to give to the interest of the church such attention as strength and opportunity permit.

To Brother Sheehy has been assigned by us the task of doing research work in American archæology. This we did after the post conference councils, and because we saw no necessity to change his work did not mention his name in our recent notice. Brother Sheehy's time and talents have always been at the disposal of the church, and when in position to do so has cheerfully responded to our requests for special work. We have found him an able defender of the work and a wise counselor, and we have reasons to believe that his work in archæology will be valuable to the church. Within recent years there has been a splendid development in the field of American archæology, and we are convinced that it is well that some one versed in such study shall be assigned to the task of keeping in touch with these developments; and because of his past experiences and study on this line, Brother Sheehy was and is the logical minister for this appointment. We feel sure his work will justify the assignment.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

USURY

Q. "Deuteronomy 23: 19: 'Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother.' In reading of the overthrow of the Greeks by the Saracens I read that one of the ancient advisers of the king attributed their defeat to national disobedience of this command. It you want to dwell in safety, is it out of date to boom Leviticus 25 and 18; or do you think it safer not to boom it?"

As a matter of historic fact, the Greeks in Greece did not become subject to the Saracen Turks. The Greek cities in Asia Minor probably did fall, as did the Holy Land. Greece proper, and Constantinople were taken by the Ottoman Turks about the middle of the fifteenth century A. D.

It is a matter of interest that in several works, particularly one entitled The Nemesis of the Nations, by Patterson, if memory serves us right, the idea is set forth that each of the nations of antiquity fell, when luxury caused a few to exalt themselves over their brethren and the common people were crushed and became slaves. It is a matter of historic fact that Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, each fell in turn when it went after iniquity, worshiped the powers of darkness, oppressed the poor in their wages, so that while a few dwelt in extreme luxury the common people became slaves.

According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it; for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee. Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God; for I am the Lord your God. Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety. And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.—Leviticus 25: 16-19, Inspired Version.

In our humble judgment it is a time to emphasize this passage, and others like it. It is a time to preach repentance, and the commandments of God. The eighteenth verse particularly says, "Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety."

We think it is a time that we should preach repentance, and the commandments of God. We should preach it to the world, we should preach it to the church, seek to study and to understand and keep more perfectly the law of God, avoid iniquity, and deal justly one with another. In our judgment it is the one thing that needs to be preached more than anything else, personal righteousness, and keeping the commandments of God, his statutes and his judgments that we may dwell in the land in safety.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

How to Report Your Christmas Offering

Brother A. W. Smith, who has been working so hard during the year to enthuse the schools with the possibilities of a great offering, urges that we now save nearly $800 by not printing in full all the names of the contributors. He suggests that the names of classes and individuals be posted in the schools where all are well known, but that the name of the school and the amount given be sent to the Bishop for publication in the Blue Stepping Stones. As has been previously mentioned, it cost about $800 to print the list last year, while a little cooperation may easily save most of this to the church, in addition to much valuable time in the office of the Bishopric and at the publishing house.

"Sandhedens Banner"

The Sandhedens Banner is to resume publication with the January number. It was suspended with the September, 1916, number, on account of Brother Peter Muceus leaving the Scandinavian Mission. He and Brother Peter Anderson will continue to edit this church paper, printed in the Norwegian language, for the special needs of the mission. It is a sixteen-page monthly, sells at fifty cents a year, and will hereafter be published at this office. Those who are already subscribers will continue to receive the publication, while those who are not, but are interested in that mission, should subscribe. Send orders to this office, and matter intended for publication to Peter Muceus, Lamoni, Iowa.

"The Des Moines District Dispatch"

The Des Moines District has begun the publication of a four-page monthly with the above title. The editor is the district president, Elder O. Salisbury, with D. T. Williams associate, and R. J. Farthing, publisher. There is no subscription price, it being sent free to all members of the district. In the editorial greeting we note this: "It is our desire to reach every member whose name is on our district record. If you know of any member of the church who does not receive The Dispatch, you will confer a favor on them and us by sending us the name and address. We hope to arouse a greater interest among our members and keep them in closer touch with what it taking place in the district." It should do a great deal of good and is a very neat little publication, the first issue con-

"The Messenger"

Brother R. W. Farrell, of Providence, Rhode Island, continues to issue The Messenger, a four-page publication he has been sending out. It features, in the current number, eight sermons by Brother Ward L. Christy, of Brooklyn, from December 9 to 12. We quote:

When studying psychology under the efficient instruction of Professor Colvin, I submitted to him the following question: "If all rational punishment is inflicted to reform or reclaim the guilty person, then must not God's punishments be for the same purpose? And would not this fact disprove the theory of endless torment?" His answer did not surprise me. It was—"I did not know that anybody in these days believes in endless punishment."

The editor makes from the situation that he wonders if any still believe that the Reorganized Church has fellowship with the organization in Utah, and quotes from the Congressional Record and the North American Review.

Christmas Offe-RING

Who put the ring in Christmas offering?

I'll tell you! Thousands of Sunday school pupils, who have the "I can and I will" spirit the same as this aged sister, from whose letter we quote.

Dear Sir and Brother: Inclosed find money order for seven dollars which is my Christmas offering. I am sorry that it is not more. I was eighty years old the third of last October and live with my daughter and her husband. They have a Mr. — rooming here. He was not pleased with his washing and I said, "I will do it for you." That is how I earned my Christmas offering.

Who can justly hold back and say, "I can do nothing"?

Let everyone who has helped this year, find some who have not, and persuade them to "do their bit." Begin to-day on your 1918 offering.

February 18 to November 30	$ 6,747.23
December	20,129.23
January 1 to 5	16,322.52
Total	$43,198.98

All schools that have not sent in their 1917 Christmas offering should send them at once to this office.

Yours sincerely,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE NEW YEAR

We now begin the work of a New Year. With our power for good expanded by tasks performed and encouraged by the progress made, we can more efficiently press forward to greater achievements in 1918.

We have been made happy by the universal expression of confidence in ultimate triumph of the Master's cause as reflected in the devoted efforts put forth by the membership of the Sunday school to increase the Christmas offering.

It seems, from the statements which we hear every day, that the accomplishment of 1917 has furnished zest for a greater effort in 1918. Some have thought that the interest taken in the Christmas offering would deflect from the tithing receipts, but the facts prove to the contrary. The spirit extolled by our Lord, in the statement, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," has apparently been enjoyed in an increased measure by the Saints throughout the church.

The financial report for the year 1917 will show more than a fifty per cent increase in tithings and offerings over the year 1916. While we are pleased that the burden of debt will soon be lifted, the Saints have added cause for rejoicing as the noble consecration thus revealed, brings nearer the redemption of Zion.

The New Year holds in store for us many problems to be solved, and much constructive work to be performed. With an unwavering faith in the principles of truth, and specially in the light of their more earnest devotion to God in the observance of his law, the participation of the Saints in the realization of the hope of the gospel becomes more propitious.

We know our heavenly Father will bless his obedient children and we are assured that the Saints everywhere will strive to do their part. The bishopric (general and local) are grateful for the hearty support which you have given them. Trusting in Him from whence cometh our strength, we will try to merit your confidence in our future efforts to conserve and advance the Master's work, in which we are happy to be engaged as

Your colaborer,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

While we are considering when to begin, it is often too late to act.—Quintilian.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 11

BY J. F. MINTUN

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

It can be truthfully stated that with the efforts of John Wesley and his associates a reformation began within the Church of England that represented more nearly, in many respects, the work of New Testament times than any of the reformers that had preceded him, and was the means of awakening in many a desire for the work of God in its fullness and purity.

The history of this work is so clearly outlined by representatives of that faith as printed in the Discipline, that I believe it best to let them give it in their own language, asking the reader to notice particularly their claims to its origin, and what of divinity is claimed by those through whom this work began.

To the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

Dearly Beloved Brethren: We think it expedient to give you a brief account of the rise of Methodism, both in Europe and America. "In 1729, two young men, in England, reading the Bible, saw they could not be saved without holiness: followed after it, and invited others so to do. In 1737, they say likewise, that men are justified before they are sanctified: but still holiness was their object. God then thrust them out to raise a holy people."

In the year 1766, Philip Embury, a local preacher of our society, from Ireland, began to preach in the city of New York, and formed a society of his own countrymen and citizens: and the same year, Thomas Webb preached in a hired room near the barracks. About the same time, Robert Strawbridge, a local preacher from Ireland, settled in Frederic County, in the State of Maryland, and, preaching there, formed some societies. The first Methodist church was built in New York in 1768 or 1769; and in 1769 Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmor came to New York; who were the first regular Methodist preachers on the continent. In the latter end of the year 1771, Francis Asbury and Richard Wright, of the same order, came over.

We believe that God's design in raising up the preachers called Methodists in America, was to reform the continent, and spread scripture holiness over these lands. . . .

We esteem it our duty and privilege most earnestly to recommend to you, as members of our church, our form of discipline, which has been founded on the experience of a long series of years; as also on the observations and remarks we have made on ancient and modern churches.

We wish to see this little publication in the house of every Methodist; and the more so, as it contains the articles of religion maintained more or less, in part or in whole, by every reformed church in the world. . . .

Beverly Waugh, Thomas Morris, Edmund S. Janes, Levi Scott, Matthew Simpson, Osmon C. Baker, Edward R. Ames.—Methodist Episcopal Discipline, pp. 3-6, 1856.

We further quote from this same Discipline, pages 13 and 14, upon this same subject of the origin of the Methodist Church;

The preachers and members of our society in general, being convinced that there was a great deficiency of vital religion in the Church of England in America, and being in many places destitute of the Christian sacraments, as several of the clergy had forsaken their churches, requested the late Reverend John Wesley to take such measures, in his wisdom and prudence, as would afford them suitable relief in their distress.

In consequence of this, our venerable friend, who, under God, had been the father of the great revival of religion now extending over the earth, by the means of the Methodists, determined to ordain ministers for America; and for this purpose, in the year 1784, sent over three regularly ordained clergy; but preferring the episcopal mode of church government to any other, he solemnly set apart, by the imposition of his hands and prayer, one of them, namely, Thomas Coke, doctor of civil law, late of Jesus College, in the University of Oxford, and a presbyter of the Church of England, for the Episcopal Office; and having delivered to him letters of episcopal orders, commissioned and directed him to set apart Francis Asbury, then general assistant of the Methodist Society in America, for the same episcopal office; he, the said Francis Asbury, was solemnly set apart for the said episcopal office by prayer, and the imposition of the hands of the said Thomas Coke, other regularly ordained ministers assisting in the sacred ceremony. At which time the General Conference, held at Baltimore, did unanimously receive the said Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury as their bishops, being fully satisfied of the validity of their Episcopal ordination.

Without being authorized by the church of which he was a member or commanded by the Lord to set apart Thomas Coke for the episcopal order, or to authorize him to appoint Francis Asbury to be ordained to the same position, we have it in John Wesley's own language how he came to do what he did, and we now copy in full the certificate he gives of this transaction, so that the reader may have the merit of it.

To all to whom these presents shall come, John Wesley, late fellow of Lincoln College, in Oxford, presbyter of the Church of England, sendeth greeting:

Whereas, many of the people in the southern province of North America, who desire to continue under our care, and still adhere to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England, are greatly distressed for want of ministers to administer the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, according to the usage of the same church; and whereas, there does not appear to be any other way of supplying them with ministers.

Know all men, that I, John Wesley, think myself to be providentially called at this time to set apart some person for the work of the ministry in America. And, therefore, under the protection of almighty God and with an eye single to his glory, I have this day set apart as a superintendent, by the imposition of my hands and prayer (being assisted by other ordained ministers) Thomas Coke, doctor of civil law, a presbyter of the Church of England, and a man whom I judge to be well qualified for that great work. And I do hereby recommend him to all whom it may concern, as a fit person to preside over the flock of Christ. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four.

JOHN WESLEY.

The Church of England had received its authority to minister from dissatisfaction with the Catholic Church, of which it was formerly a part, and through that church, as represented by Henry VIII and Bishop Cranmer, one claiming to be head over the temporal concerns of the church and the other set apart by him to be the ecclesiastical head of the church existing in England; and without any other authority except the authority that grew out of dissatisfaction with the church of which both were formerly members and representatives, withdrew from the mother church and established one of their own. Now John Wesley, a minister of the Church of England, without their consent or authority, proceeds to call, upon his own judgment, and ordain to an office that he himself did not hold, even in the Church of England, others to whom is to be credited the source of authority for the Methodist Church in America to-day. It is for the reader to determine whether this is according to the divine plan as taught in the Holy Scriptures. We give the facts, leaving the reader under the responsibility to answer to God for their conclusions when they have finished the consideration of this book.

FAITH OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

The faith of this church was derived by adopting, in a greater or less changed form, twenty-five of the thirty-nine articles of the faith of the Church of England. These omissions and changes were made without the authority or consent of the church whose property they were. That the reader may have the privilege of comparing them with what they were formerly, and with the Scriptures, we quote them in full:

1. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts, of infinite power, wisdom and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things, visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead, there are three persons, of one substance, power and eternity: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

2. The Son, who is the word of the Father, the very and eternal God, of one substance with the Father, took man's nature in the womb of the blessed virgin; so that two whole and perfect natures, that is to say, the Godhead and manhood, were joined together in one person, never to be divided, whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men.

3. Christ did truly rise again from the dead, and took again his body, with all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature, wherewith he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth until he return to judge all men at the last day.

4. The Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, is of one substance, majesty, and glory, with the Father and the Son, very and eternal God.

5. The Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. In the name of the Holy Scriptures, we do understand those canonical books of the Old and

New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the church.

[Then follows the names of the books in the Old Testament as found in the King James Translation.—AUTHOR.]

All the books of the New Testament, as they are commonly received, we do receive and account canonical.

6. The Old Testament is not contrary to the New; for both in the Old and New Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man. Wherefore they are not to be heard who feign that the old fathers did look only for transitory promises. Although the law given from God by Moses, as touching ceremonies and rites, doth not bind Christians, nor ought the civil precepts thereof of necessity be received in any commonwealth; yet, notwithstanding, no Christian whatsoever is free from the obedience of the commandments which are called moral.

7. Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam, (as the Pelagians do vainly talk,) but it is the corruption of the nature of man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually.

8. The condition of man after the fall of Adam is such, that he cannot turn and prepare himself by his own natural strength and works, to faith, and calling upon God; wherefore we have no power to do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing us, that we may have a good will, and working with us, when we have that good will.

9. We are accounted righteous before God, only for the merits of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ by faith, and not for our own works or deservings: Wherefore, that we are justified by faith only, is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort.

10. Although good works, which are the fruits of faith, and follow after justification, cannot put away sins, and endure the severity of God's judgments; yet are they pleasing and acceptable to God in Christ, and spring out of a true and lively faith, insomuch that by them a lively faith may be as evidently known as a tree is discerned by its fruit.

11. Voluntary works,—besides, over, and above God's commandments—which are called works of supererogation, cannot be taught without arrogancy and impiety. For by them men do declare that they do not only render unto God as much as they are bound to do, but that they do more for his sake than of bounden duty is required; whereas, Christ saith plainly, when we have done all that is commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants.

12. Not every sin willfully committed after justification is the sin against the Holy Ghost, and unpardonable. Wherefore, the grant of repentance is not to be denied to such as fall into sin after justification; after we have received the Holy Ghost, we may depart from grace given, and fall into sin, by the grace of God, rise again and mend our lives. And therefore, they are to be condemned who say they can no more sin as long as they live here; or deny the place of forgiveness to such as truly repent.

13. The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments are duly administered, according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that are of necessity requisite to the same.

14. The Romish doctrine concerning purgatory, pardon, worshiping and adoration, as well of images as of relics, and also invocation of saints, is a fond thing, vainly invented, and grounded upon no warrant of scripture, but repugnant to the word of God.

15. It is a thing plainly repugnant to the word of God, and the custom of the primitive church, to have public prayer in the church, or to minister the sacraments, in a tongue not understood by the people.

16. Sacraments ordained of Christ, are not only badges or tokens of Christian men's profession, but rather they are certain signs of grace, and God's will towards us, and doth not only quicken, but also strengthen and confirm our faith in him.

There are two sacraments, ordained of Christ our Lord in the gospel; that is to say, baptism, and the supper of the Lord.

Those five commonly called sacraments, that is to say, confirmation, penance, orders, matrimony, and extreme unction, are not to be counted for sacraments of the gospel, being such as have partly grown out of the corrupt following of the apostles; and partly are states allowed in the Scriptures, but yet have not the like nature of baptism and the Lord's supper, because they have not any visible sign or ceremony ordained of God.

The sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about; but that we should duly use them. And in such only as worthily receive the same, they have a wholesome effect or operation; but they that receive them unworthily, purchase to themselves condemnation, as Saint Paul saith, 1 Corinthians 11: 29.

17. Baptism is not only a sign of profession, and mark of difference, whereby Christians are distinguished from others that are not baptized; but it is also a sign of regeneration, or the new birth. The baptism of young children is to be retained in the church.

18. The supper of the Lord is not only a sign of the love that Christians ought to have among themselves one to another, but rather is a sacrament of our redemption by Christ's death; insomuch that, to such as rightly, worthily, and with faith receive the same, the bread which we break is a partaking of the body of Christ; and likewise the cup of blessing is a partaking of the blood of Christ.

Transubstantiation, or the change of the substance of bread and wine in the supper of our Lord, cannot be proved by the holy writ, but is repugnant to the plain words of scripture, overthroweth the nature of a sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.

The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the supper, only after a heavenly and spiritual manner. And the means whereby the body of Christ is received and eaten in the supper, is faith. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped.

19. The cup of the Lord is not to be denied to the lay people; for both parts of the Lord's supper, by Christ's ordinance and commandment, ought to be administered to all Christians alike.

20. The offering of Christ, once made, is that perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin but that alone. Wherefore the sacrifice of masses, in which it is commonly said that the priest doth offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, is a blasphemous fable, and dangerous deceit.

21. The ministers of Christ are not commanded by God's law either to vow the estate of single life, or to abstain from marriage; therefore it is lawful for them, as for all other Christians, to marry at their own discretion, as they may judge the same to best serve to godliness.

22. It is not necessary that rites and ceremonies should in all places be the same, or exactly alike; for they have been always different, and may be changed according to the diversity of countries, times, and men's manners, so that nothing be ordained against God's word. Whosoever, through his private judgment, willingly and purposely doth openly break the rites and ceremonies of the church to which he belongs, which are not repugnant to the word of God, and are ordained by common authority, ought to be rebuked openly, that others may fear to do the like; as one that offendeth against the common order of the church, and woundeth the consciences of weak brethren. Every particular church may ordain, change, or abolish rites and ceremonies, so that all things may be done to edification.

23. The president, the congress, the general assemblies, the governors, and the councils of state, as the delegates of the people, are the rulers of the United States of America, according to the division of power made to them by the Constitution of the United States, and by the constitutions of their respective States. And the said States are a sovereign and independent Nation, and ought not to be subject to any foreign jurisdiction.

24. The riches and goods of Christians are not common, as touching the right, title, and possession of the same, as some do solemnly boast. Notwithstanding, every man ought, of such things as he possesseth, liberally to give alms to the poor, according to his ability.

25. As we confess that vain and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ and James his apostle; so we judge that the Christian religion doth not prohibit, but that a man may swear when the magistrate requireth, in a cause of faith and charity, so it be done according to the prophet's teaching, in justice, judgment, and truth.—Methodist Episcopal Discipline, pp. 15-25.

This church grew out of societies which were first formed composed of "a company of men having a form and seeking the power of godliness, united in order to pray together, to receive the word of exhortation, and to watch over one another in love, that they may help each other to work out their salvation." (Discipline, p. 26.)

These societies were divided into classes, consisting of about twelve persons, having a leader who is to visit each member of his class once a week to revive them and receive what they may have to give for the "preachers, church, and poor," and to pay over to the stewards once a week what they have received, and inform the minister of any who are sick or disorderly.

Those who were received into these societies must have a desire to flee from the wrath to come, to do no harm, not to swear, to keep sacred the day of the Lord, to avoid drunkenness; must neither buy nor sell spirituous liquors except in extreme necessity, must oppose slavery, must avoid fighting, quarreling, brawling, and should not go to law with a brother; should not take unlawful interest, or speak evil of rulers or ministers, should observe the "golden rule," should not wear gold or costly apparel, should avoid singing or reading that which does not tend to the love of God, must not buy or borrow without the probability of paying, and should be merciful and do good to all, especially those of the faith.

From these societies those who are to be received into the church must be recommended by a leader, "with whom they have met at least six months on trial, and have been baptized," and shall prove to the minister in charge that their faith is correct, and they are willing to observe the church rules. All children are considered worthy of baptism.

Baptism is administered either by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion, the person to be baptized or having a young child to be baptized making the choice of which form should be used. They believe that adults who are baptized "receive a remission of their sins by spiritual regeneration." (Discipline, p. 107.) Such ones must renounce the Devil and all his work, acknowledge belief in God, in Jesus Christ, in the Holy Ghost, the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body, and everlasting life after death. (See Discipline, p. 110.) The formula used in baptizing after calling the person by name is, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." (Ibid., p. 112.) They use as scriptural evidence for the baptizing of young children, Mark 10:13, and elsewhere in the Scripture where reference is made to Christ blessing little children.

They hold quarterly, annual, and general conferences.

The officers of the church are, bishops, elders, deacons, local preachers, exhorters, trustees, stewards, and leaders. The bishops are elected by the general conferences, and are ordained by the laying on of hands of at least one bishop and two elders; but in case there is no bishop present, the one elected may be ordained by three elders. Elders are divided into two classes, presiding elders, who are chosen by the bishops, and traveling elders, who are elected by the annual conference, both of which has authority to baptize, administer the Lord's supper, and perform the marriage ceremony. In order for one to be qualified for the office of elder he must have exercised the office of traveling deacon for two years. Ministers of other churches are received and authorized to act without election or ordination, by taking the ordination vow, giving evidence they are in agreement with the church in "doctrine, discipline, government and usage."

The manner of determining whether one is called of God is, they must answer affirmatively that they "know God as a pardoning God, that they have the love of God abiding in them, that they desire nothing but God," that they are holy in all manner of conversation, they must prove that they have gifts for the ministry, have a right judgment in the things of God, that they have a just conception of salvation by faith, and that they have been given a degree of utterance; they must speak justly, readily, and clearly, and they must have brought forth fruit by having convinced some of sin, and converted some to God by their preaching before they are ordained.

After the time given when John Wesley began the work we have been considering, about nine years, or on February 3, 1738, he acknowledges his unconverted state in the following striking language:

I went to America to convert the Indians; but oh, who shall convert me! Who is this that will deliver me from this evil heart of unbelief? . . . It is over two years since I left my own country to teach the Georgian Indians the nature of Christianity; but what have I learned myself in the meantime? Why (what I least of all suspected), that I, who went to America to convert others, was never converted myself. I am not mad though I thus speak, but I speak the words of truth and soberness.—Richard Watson's History of J. Wesley, pp. 46, 56.

Mr. Wesley also acknowledges about the same time that he had no authority to preach except that received from the Episcopal Church, in the following plain language:

When their champion (Mr. Nash) appeared, coming close to me, asked by what authority I did these things, I replied, "By the authority of Jesus Christ, conveyed to me by the (now) Archbishop of Canterbury, when he laid his hands upon me and said, 'Take thou authority to preach the gospel.'"—Ibid., p. 75.

Taking these evidences produced by representative men and books of the church, of this church as correct, we conclude that those who were instrumental in its origin were self-acknowledged, unconverted persons, and had no other authority than that received through the Roman Catholic Church, through Bishop Cranmer, and the church has no other authority now than this authority from Bishop Cranmer conferred upon John Wesley, and transmitted by him to others whom he ordained while he says he was in an unconverted condition. Is this the authority that should be possessed by those who under God bring into existence, the Church of Jesus Christ, and does this church represent the church of New Testament times in its organization and faith?

All other Methodist churches claim a common origin. The Wesleyan Methodist Church claims to be the original church, growing out of the work of the Wesleys and Whitfield. Mr. Whitfield, after his visit to America, espoused the faith of Calvin, while John Wesley adhered to the Arminian ideas; hence there was a division here, known as the Calvinistic Methodists, and the Wesleyan Methodists, or Arminian Methodists.

There is the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a division from the Methodist Episcopal Church by reason of the southern Methodists espousing the cause of slavery.

The Reformed Methodist Church is congregational in its church government. They formerly believed a minister, after being chosen by the people, might be ordained by the lay members, but their ideas and practices in this regard are now changed.

The Methodist Protestant Church rejected the Episcopacy, and each congregation was independent. They claimed Jesus Christ as their only head, and the word of God as the only rule of faith and practice, yet the doctrines taught, the mode of worship, and their usages were common with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

While there are a number of other division of the Methodists, yet they all have a common faith, but differ slightly in church government, and what is said about the authority of the one can be said of the others, for they all claim a common origin.

"AND GROSS DARKNESS THE PEOPLE"

"At evening time it shall be light."

October 31, 1917, was the fourth centenary of an important event in the religious world, an event that on this anniversary was especially celebrated by a well-known Protestant denomination, the Lutherans. There were thankful gatherings of that people in various lands, the United States included. Many memorial sermons were preached, and a few were published. Among them there appeared in a popular and liberal religious weekly a sermon written by a follower of Martin Luther, the great reformer of four hundred years ago.

Certainly Luther was a great man in the true sense of the word, one who tried to step out of the world-wide religious darkness of that period and who instituted and accomplished, or set in motion, certain reforms which helped prepare the way for the greater light and greater liberty that was to follow from that time down to our own day, when the great culmination in God's purposes seems to be at hand, or not far away, even Christ's coming and kingdom.

I believe we may say that Martin Luther did all that was possible for one man to do at that period and under the conditions that prevailed in his time, after the centuries of great darkness that had indeed covered the earth. Not only by nature's endowment and by his education did he have uncommon ability, also mental power and forcefulness, but added to these he possessed wisdom, comprehension, and strength of purpose to use his mind and intelligence in the right direction, or according to the light given him by God.

In his youth he was noted for his uprightness and his love of truth, and for his firmness of character.

Also the historians say he was generous and noble in his disposition and that he was always fearless in advocating honesty, morality, and whatever was for the benefit of humanity, and later especially so when he stood for that which he believed was the gospel of the Lord, as partially understood by him after finding and reading a copy of the Bible when he was about twenty-two years old, in 1505.

A Bible was a scarce article in those times, they were only seen by the priests and monks. After reading the words of prophets and of Christ and his apostles, his heart was filled with great anxiety about sin and the punishment sure to follow at some time. This anxiety continued until he accepted the idea from another monk in the convent where they were, that "sins are forgiven to all by God's grace, through faith in Christ as the Savior." And in believing that he became satisfied and found rest without further questioning of God or man. His views about the church at Rome are stated to have been as follows: "Although he saw in Rome the depravity and vices of the Roman Catholic clergy, yet he never doubted either the authority of the pope or the doctrines of the church."

Consequently, in 1507, he was willing to be ordained a priest, and in 1508 he was chosen as the professor of philosophy in the Wittenberg University; also in 1512 he took the degree of doctor of divinity. But it is said that in all his preaching he condemned every form of sin and vice, both that among the rich and the great, as well as that among the poor and the lowly, and his vigorous and eloquent sermons and appeals for righteousness attracted large congregations. And even when the notorious Tetzl came announcing for sale all kinds of indulgences, "not only for sins they had committed but also for sins they would like to commit," as history states was consented to by Pope Leo X, in order to obtain money to build what is known as Saint Peter's church in Rome. Luther openly proclaimed against the dreadful doctrine with great force, declaring that even the pope had no authority to permit people to commit sin. Finally he became so indignant that on October 31, 1517, he wrote out and nailed to the church door in Wittenberg his celebrated ninety-five propositions against the evils being taught and permitted by the pope and by many priests in the church.

Thenceforth Luther bravely and unflinchingly faced persecution and danger for the sake of his convictions, believing that it was God's will, and for the sake of the people whom he would rescue from lamentable error and from awful depravity. He would not swerve, even in the least degree, from what he believed was right, or from preaching in strong terms that which he understood was essential that people might be saved from their sins.

One needs but to read a small part of the history of Luther's life and experiences to become an admirer of the motives and purposes that actuated his course, and of the grand traits of his character, so manifesting a good heart and a brave soul. Probably very few of the men and women who suffered martyrdom at an earlier time demonstrated greater courage, or showed more willingness to suffer a martyr's death than he did.

Had he lived when the fullness of the gospel was restored from heaven, with its complete ordinances, it is quite reasonable to believe that he might have accepted the whole truth with gladness, and would have joyfully endured "the reproach of Christ" more completely, even the scorn of the world, which the Savior declared must be suffered by all who should stand fast for the fullness of eternal truth.

But Luther's work and heroism were needed in the day when he came, at a time when, in the providence of God, the first rays of light were to penetrate a little into the dense darkness of the world, preparing the way in the hearts of people among the nations for the greater light of the next and succeeding centuries. And if known to God that Luther would accept the fullness when it should come, then we have reason to believe that he is justified and will enter into reward when Christ shall come to bless the martyrs of all ages and nations. At least we are assured that Martin Luther and others who did all that they knew how to do in behalf of righteousness and truth, and for the happiness and freedom of mankind, will receive abundantly at the hands of a just God, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, who is declared by Paul as being "the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe."

The day had not yet come when the complete gospel, and the authority from heaven to administer in its ordinances, should be restored, and only thereby could the sins of men be remitted in the legal way, that way preached by John the Baptist, and by Peter on Pentecost.

Therefore it must be had again, sometime. In the wisdom and foreknowledge of God, four hundred years ago was not the time to restore the greater things. The second coming of Christ was not then at hand and the Savior had said that one of the signs of his nearness would be the preaching of the gospel "as a witness" of its approach. The continent which was, by the will of God, to be the special land of civil and religious liberty, the land upon which eternal truth could prosper best, or even succeed at all, had not then been peopled by those from Europe who sought "freedom to worship God" by crossing the wild Atlantic to find new homes in a strange land.

It was a hundred years after Luther's struggle for a clean church and for religious liberty before the pilgrim band fled from similar persecution in England to the new world and breathed the air of freedom.

It appears that in the Reformation the people were only prepared to receive a part of heaven's truth, therefore they were only able to obtain a limited degree of the Holy Spirit and not that amount of it that would have guided them "into all truth" (John 16:13), which the Savior promised to all those who received and obeyed the fullness of the gospel, whenever it was in the world. The part that Luther and others in those days longed for was especially that they be permitted to read and interpret the Bible for themselves, that not the priests only, but also the common people, might be privileged to see for themselves, what the book contained of God's commandments and promises to mankind, such as came through the prophets and apostles; and especially what the Son of God himself had said about sin and the way of salvation.

That was the chief thing, indeed more than all else they sought in the Reformation, as it grew, the privilege to read the Scriptures and to interpret for themselves, and liberty to worship God "according to the dictates of their own conscience," or as they might be enlightened and made able to understand what was intended by the Lord for them to do. For centuries the people had supposed that the church of Rome was the true church of God, and the only church for man, and they believed it held the whole truth of God and the true priesthood authority, only that some had gone into gross errors of teaching and of conduct.

Now I quote from the published sermon mentioned in the first paragraph of this article. As the minister himself wrote the sermon for publication probably the wording is as he intended. He wrote as follows:

In opposition to Rome, Luther proclaimed this to be the true content of Christ's gospel, namely:

Christ, as mankind's mediator, has fulfilled all the law of God in mankind's stead; likewise, has made atonement for all the sins of all the world; likewise, has vanquished all the powers of sin, death and hell. Thus he has gained for all the world, as a free gift of grace, liberty from all the law of God, from all the guilt and penalty of sin, and from the dominion of sin. Coming to faith in Christ, man is at once justified of God, reconciled to him, restored to all the rights and privileges of divine kinship, and hence to the heritage of eternal life. There is nothing left for the believer in Christ to earn; all is already his through God's free grace in Christ. Yet with faith in Christ, is also given to man freedom from power of sin. . . .

There is no doubt that Luther's doctrine is the very truth taught in Christ's gospel. What clearer statement and more convincing proof for the truth of Luther's fundamental teaching as to the soul liberty secured by Christ for all the world could one desire than is given in these words of the Christ:

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Or in these words of his great apostle Paul, "To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." . . .

What clearer statement than these words of John could be desired in proof of the truth that Christ has delivered us from the guilt and penalty of even our actual sins: "If anyone sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. . . ."

Is it not, from these passages of Holy Writ, shown beyond all dispute that Luther did indeed restore the pure gospel teaching, and that the liberty wrought by Christ for all the world, and into the possession of which all sinners enter by faith, is the restoration of all the rights and privileges of divine kinship and the restoration of the true child mind? By faith in Christ, through the unmerited grace of God, we all become, as Peter declares, royal priests of God, and in the words of John, kings and priests. Princes and princesses of the Lord Most High are we by faith in Christ. Can there be any question then of our having direct, immediate access to our God, or of our being possessed of all the rights and powers secured by Christ for his church.

If that minister's interpretation of the great reformer's views, and the construction he puts upon some of the texts he quotes, are as Luther held and believed, then how much he fell short in his efforts to understand the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ and those of his disciples who wrote the New Testament epistles, and also were inspired to preach exactly what men must do to be saved in God's kingdom. From the first words here quoted it appears that this minister makes no distinction between the Mosaic law, which had an end in Christ, and the other laws of God, even the gospel law which are for all people to obey, not for any to simply believe that Christ came to save mankind without any obedience to laws or ordinances on their part. He does not define any difference.

He affirms that the Savior "vanquished all the powers of sin, death, and hell," and gained "liberty from all the law of God, from all the penalty of sin, and from the dominion of sin." Instead of that, the Scriptures make it plain that Satan, sin, and death are not yet overthrown, and that Christ is still working and will work until the great fact of Satan's overthrow is accomplished, and he is bound for a thousand years and put in prison. Paul states that Christ "must reign," that is, rule or control, "till he has put all enemies under his feet." Satan will not be overcome until at or near the beginning of the millennium or seventh thousand years (Revelation 20:1-3), and the final enemy, death, will not be destroyed until the end of the millennium. The first resurrection takes place when Christ comes (1 Thessalonians 4:16), but "the rest of the dead" will not be liberated from death's power until as stated by Paul and John.

Therefore Christ has not yet "vanquished all the powers of sin, death and hell," as the minister states he has, and the living Saints are still subject to the powers of Satan, sin, and death, until Christ shall come and bind Satan, and release the Saints from death for the thousand year's reign. During the millennium the children of mortal Saints who become obedient to God's laws, those who are really his people, will not die, but they will be "changed" at maturity, or when one hundred years old, according to Isaiah 65:20. They will become immortal, but the outside nations will continue to be subject to death. "Until the thousand years are finished" death will have power over all who are not protected and preserved by God's fatherly care. See Doctrine and Covenants 63:13 and 98:5 on these points.

In the same mistaken manner the minister wrote that mankind obtained "liberty from all the law of God, from all the guilt and penalty of sin, and from the dominion of sin." Taken in one sense a part of this is true, but in the main it is very misleading as it reads. For as long as man remains mortal, whether he continues an actual sinner or by obedience to the gospel law he becomes a child of God, in either case, he suffers from "the dominion of sin." In his mortal body he is paying the penalty for both Adam's transgression and his own, till Christ's redemption has effect in the first resurrection.

Also it is not Christ's teaching that man is already "restored to all the rights and privileges of divine kinship," or that "there is nothing left for the believer in Christ to earn." Because the whole record of Christ and his prophets and disciples makes plain that all the reward that man is promised he must earn by a continual service in keeping God's commandments as a true soldier of Jesus Christ. He is making the race in anticipation of the eternal life he hopes for. It is written, "He that endureth to the end the same shall be saved."

Yet the assertion is made that "there is no doubt that Luther's doctrine is the very truth taught in Christ's gospel." By this and the previous ideas we can see how fully the gloom of the Dark Ages continues to our time. In the Reformation days there was a good change to religious liberty and to better times, as wrought out through the zeal, the sufferings, or the martyrdom of John Huss, Zwingli, Melancthon, Luther, Calvin, and other brave souls. But much darkness still remains with all, particularly with those who have established their creeds and articles, and who do not study the Scriptures enough, and are unable or unwilling to see that the complete doctrines and ordinances taught by John the Baptist, and by Christ, and by the other ministry were not adopted, nor practiced, nor taught by any of those reformers, nor by the reformers who came later, such as Cranmer, Knox, and Wesley.

For after faith in God, (to a degree,) and repentance, (a sorrow for sin), they did not go on to advocate or to reap the rewards of a higher faith and of a ceasing to war, and to kill, and to do other evil, neither to practice the well-known gospel doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins, as taught and administered by John the Baptist and Christ, by Peter and by Philip, and by others whom God sent, to do his work on earth.

Nor did Martin Luther or any other of the reformers teach or practice the doctrine of Christ as to the laying on of hands for the conferring of the Holy Spirit. Neither did any of them speak of the necessity that men should have direct authority from heaven in order to officiate for God and for Christ in gospel work, yet Jesus said, "Neither came I of myself, but he sent me." God's will is that all his ministers shall be appointed by him, each individual so.

Neither did the reformers teach that the Holy Spirit is the real source of power to God's servants in all ages, or that divine revelation was intended to abide with God's people as their instructor, revealer and guide forever, as taught by Christ in John 14:26, 15:26, and 16:13. Not merely faith accompanied by good deeds will bring eternal life, as that minister appears to believe.

Further, he quotes 1 John 2:1, reading, "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father," as if it means all men everywhere of every degree and kind. He fails to notice that John wrote solely to the Saints and not to the world. He spoke to those who had already received and obeyed the gospel, to those who had been baptized for the remission of sins. Such had no need of rebaptism, but if they sinned and repented they were entitled to forgiveness as members of Christ's family, as his brethren.

Many other people have made the same error in applying that text to everybody, but the Savior made a wide distinction between those whom he called "brethren," and those outside of his church. In his prayer to the Father he said, "They are not of the world even as I am not of the world." It is a vain thought to believe that anybody and everybody can enter where Christ dwells simply by his intercession, no matter what their sins have been, or without their becoming citizens of the kingdom of God, through the divinely appointed ordinances.

But some may say that John added that Christ is the propitiation "for the sins of the whole world," therefore everybody is included equally in Christ being their advocate. We admit that by Christ's power every soul will have part in the resurrection, for as Paul wrote to Timothy, Christ "is the Savior of all men," yet he adds the words, "specially of those that believe," showing that there will be a difference. This also agrees with Paul's letter to the Corinthians, that "in Christ shall all be made alive," to which he adds, "But every man in his own order." The atonement of Christ cannot destroy the justice of God which provides that "every one" shall receive "according to what he hath done." "Those that believe" are those who also obey and work righteousness according to God's word.

Also a wrong idea has been gained about James 1: 27, which reads, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

Many people have likewise applied this text as meaning that all that is necessary for anybody to do in order to find favor with God is to be good and kind to the destitute and the sorrowing. They have supposed that a complete salvation will be had. But this word by James was also written solely to the Saints, those he addresses as "brethren." Evidently he did not at all include those who had not accepted Christ and yielded obedience to the gospel ordinances. To his disciples the Savior said, "All ye are brethren," and in scores of places in the epistles and in Acts they were denominated as "the brethren," and all the epistles are written to them and are not applicable to the world's people, only in places where specified.

Other statements by the minister might be mentioned, but it is not needful to do so. Greater light will soon come into the world and will dispel all the darkness. At the close of the world's long day, of six thousand years, or at the "evening time," the light of God will illuminate the whole world for a thousand years. Then will the Son of God govern his people in equity and love and rule over all nations with justice and righteousness. And the pure gospel will be taught to all people, with no chance for mistakes, misunderstanding, deviation, or falsehood. All who really love truth will have full opportunity to obey "and none shall make them afraid."

"In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Psalm 72: 7, 8.

"For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also and him that hath no helper."—Psalm 72: 12.

"His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed."—Psalm 72: 17.

AMANAITES APPEAL FOR DRAFT RELIEF

Communitic villages of Iowa County are faring badly under the new selective draft regulations. Appeals for relief have been sent to Adjutant General Guy E. Logan, who in turn has passed the appeals on to Provost Marshal General Crowder.

According to the communistic plan as used by the Amanaites of Iowa County there are no dependents. Men of military age are for the same reason prevented from listing themselves on the selective draft service questionnaires as having dependents.

Adjutant General Logan said in examining a number of the questionnaires which were sent to him that those men who made no claim of dependency will be classed in division No. 1. and will be among the first to be drawn for military service.

MAKES CLEAN SWEEP

It is explained that through such a procedure the best of the community's young men, those upon whom the majority of community is dependent for the production of wealth, will be drawn first. The new regulations threaten to bereave the communitarians of all of their men of military age regardless of the conditions or number in their families.

During the first draft period the Amanaites were partially relieved from the dependency clause in that their men of military age were drawn in rotation, or by lot, rather than on a dependency basis.

In both the first period and in the second the Amanaites have entered a claim for exemption for religious reasons. The creed of the church is opposed to any form of military life.

Despite the exemption claim the Amanaites were drawn for service through a special ruling of the provost marshal.

CAME TO ESCAPE ARMY DUTY

Adjutant General Logan said that the question of what was to be done to relieve the situation at Amana, Iowa, was of such a nature that he would not attempt to rule upon it. He has asked that the provost marshal give an opinion.

The Amanaites emigrated to America from Germany. One of the principal reasons for their coming to America was to escape military service.

The communistic plan as followed in Iowa County is said to be one of the strongest in the United States. The work of the community is done in common and all of the proceeds from the sale of produce is placed in a common fund.

The principal occupation of the inhabitants of Amana and a few other villages in the vicinity of the principal city is that of farming. A flour mill and a few other industries have been established by the Amanaites. It has been reported that the society has several thousand of dollars deposited in the banks of New York City.

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.—Franklin.

The Amanaites strive for simplicity in dress and in living. Automobiles are under the ban.

During the past several years the young people of Amana have been inclined to form alliances with persons outside of the villages.—Des Moines Register, December 27, 1917.

Should the Choir Be Organized--Part 2

We closed part one of this article, in the December number of The Staff, with our promise to consider in part two some plans or suggestions for organizing choirs. We now take up this feature of the subject, hoping that we may do so to the material benefit of all who are in need of help in that line.

First, let us affirm that whatever plans or suggestions we may offer are derived from both experience and observation. But we have very material confidence in these plans and suggestions, believing that they are more than mere theory: that they will be found practicable and feasible. However, our readers must bear this in mind: these plans and suggestions are general in their character and can hardly be expected to fit every individual case. The principles involved in them must be extracted, and intelligently modified to suit the requirements of each case concerned. With this understanding we can therefore proceed at once to a concrete analysis of the subject.

We are confident that there exists over the church situations like this: a branch, of fair size and strength, possessed of a chorister and a choir of average ability, said choir having no systematized organization, and producing but little worthy of note in the way of a finished product. We believe this situation is so common that we shall take it as a type upon which to base our arguments. Therefore, what can this branch do to bring the choir arm of its service up to proper efficiency?

Every branch should be the architect and builder of its own choir. In too many branches the work of designing, constructing, and directing the choir is left to the care of those who largely take such work upon themselves, the branch paying but little attention to what is going on. The result is that the branch, having had no voice in the design or part in the continuance of the choir, feels but little interest in the work. In all cases the branch should be the parent of its child, the master of the body which serves it.

The chief factor in the successful development, growth or maintenance of a choir is the chorister; therefore every branch should look well to its chorister, and see that the person holding this office is the best that can be possibly secured, so far as qualifications or ability are concerned. Yet how few branches really do this. So often do we find choristers chosen from various reasons, such a pleasing voice; a winning personality; a "political pull"; anything except the rare qualification of leadership. So, we repeat, let every branch look well to its chorister.

The chorister should always be chosen by the branch for the reason that the choir over which he is to preside is a servant of the branch and the branch should have this jurisdiction over its servant. Incidentally, the interest of the branch in the choir and its work will be materially increased if it retains this feature of its control. It may be argued that the branch, composed in its larger sense of those who do not understand choir work, its needs, and who is best qualified to care for the choir properly, is very likely to select some one, for some of the many reasons previously stated, who is unfitted for the work, or is not liked by the choir members. This can most easily be overcome by giving the choir the privilege of placing before the branch its recommendation of such a party as it deems suitable and acceptable. It is hardly likely that a branch would refuse to indorse such recommendation, coming from the lips of a faithful servant, unless the individual so recommended was not a proper person to occupy the place.

What other officers should the choir have? As few as possible, consistent with the work to be done. A multiplicity of officers invariably is harmful. They "get into each other's way" and almost invariably get jealous of each other because of fancied encroachments of individual prerogatives. The chorister should be privileged to choose his assistant, that his work may be unhampered. Next in importance comes the organist (or pianist, if a piano is used), who is sometimes selected by the branch and sometimes by the choir. If the branch selects, the choir should have the privilege of recommending some one whom they deem competent. But here again should great care be exercised, for a good accompanist is of untold value to the work of a choir, and every choir should see to it that it has one. The organist (or pianist) should also be allowed to choose his assistant, if one is needed. Next, if the choir is given to transacting a deal of business (some choirs are obsessed with the idea that they are not prospering unless they frequently indulge in lengthy "pow wows") a secretary may be chosen; and if a fund is maintained for definite purposes, a treasurer also. If the library (the supply of music used by the choir is properly given this term) is too large for the individual members to each carry his portion back and forth, or for the chorister to oversee without undue inconvenience, then a librarian may be selected. With the exception of the chorister and the possible exception of the organist (or pianist) all other officers should be left to the choir for selection.

The foregoing are about all the officers that any choir, even a large choir, will likely need. We urge that no choir make the mistake of creating offices before they are needed. In so doing they merely heap to themselves trouble against a day of future reckoning.

What by-laws or "rules" should be had? Here we most earnestly raise a warning voice. Beware of rules that prescribe the conduct and operation of the choir members and their work. Let us again repeat that the only object for the existence of a choir in this church is that it may do the service of the church and thereby build up God's kingdom. Therefore if choir members realize the sacredness of the work they engage in and give to it consecrated hearts they will not need elaborated rules to guide their conduct and work. We are firmly convinced that a multiplicity of rules will eventually work harm to any choir. It is but another instance where "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." (2 Corinthians 3: 6.) In all cases, if rules are deemed to be necessary, they should grow out of the choir's experience rather than precede it. Incidentally we may observe that the law of the church in dealing with offenses is amply sufficient to care for much of the wrongs in a choir. Many choirs have failed to prosper and many have been disrupted entirely, because they chose to deal with their offenses in their own carnal way instead of in the way that God has prescribed.

Who shall be members of the choir? God graciously instructed his church concerning the song service and said,

"Let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.) This is but God's way of saying that those who are endowed with talents and who feel the monitions of the Spirit in the form of a concrete desire to sing, should enlist themselves in the service of song. God "calls" people to this service as well as to other departments of his work, but how often do we fail to hear his call. It is therefore the duty of everyone who has been endowed with the gift to sing to use it in God's service, constantly and unselfishly. It is a service that calls not only for members to fill ranks but for members who will render service that is consistent, regular and consecrated. If otherwise it cannot be "wholly acceptable" to God.

Who shall choose the choir members? The chorister, who, on account of his position, is responsible to the branch for results, should have an effectual voice in this work, either himself or in conjunction with assistants of qualified judgment. But, as Kipling says, "That is another story," and we will consider it in a future article.

In conclusion let us say that the choir and its work are important before God and must be honored and performed before him in true singleness of heart. To this end let all the work of designing; constructing, organizing and directing the choir, as well as serving within its ranks, be done from a desire to observe the spirit of the work, which "giveth life," rather than a mere performance of "the letter," which inevitably kills.

From the Society Islands

A letter from Brother Alva H. Christensen, at Papeete, Tahiti, who is one of the church's missionaries to the Society Islands, states that during the last year musical matters have progressed in his mission. He had ordered a set of fourteen band instruments and they were expected to arrive on the next steamer. He reports that the native boys had been at work and had made excellent progress and that great interest had been shown in the work. It is expected that some young people would be interested in the church and its work through the medium of this musical development.

We feel that this movement will result in real good in that mission. In fact wherever musical development is made an adjunct to church work the result is always to attract some to the work of the church. Also, it is known that the natives of the Society Islands, as well as others of the islands of the Pacific, are intensely musical by nature, their hearts responding to melody in a marked degree.

Independence Choir Sings "The Messiah"

The "Stone Church Choir" gave its second annual rendition of Handel's masterpiece oratorio, "The Messiah," on the evening of December 27. The large chorus of one hundred and forty voices was massed in front of the organ, and was accompanied by the organ and two grand pianos. Sister George H. Hulmes directed the oratorio, and the soloists for the occasion were: Sister W. N. Robinson, soprano; Mrs. Esther Darnell, of Kansas City, contralto, Brother Richard C. Smith, tenor, Brother Paul N. Craig, bass. The accompanists were: Sister Ruth McMullin and Brother Robert Miller, piano, and Sister Amy Winning, organ. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, a goodly sized crowd was present, and the rendition of the oratorio was successful and highly enjoyed by all.

It's all right to take things easy, provided they don't belong to some one else.

Hats Off

A COMEDY IN THREE ACTS

Characters:

Sister Paischens, Chorister of the ——— choir, "Somewhere in the church."

Sisters Hinote, Metso and Contra, independent (and impudent) members of the choir.

Brother Wise, Presiding elder of the branch.

The congregation.

ACT I

It was a beautiful, moonlit night. The choir of the ——— branch, "somewhere in the church," had about concluded its regular weekly rehearsal. The hymns for the following Sunday services had been "gone over" and the finishing touches carefully bestowed upon the "brand new" anthem to be rendered next Sabbath morning. The choir members were already astir in that preliminary stage of bustle usually coincident with their dispersing, when Sister Paischens addressed them briefly in the following vein:

"I have decided to ask that beginning next Sunday morning the ladies of the choir leave their hats and wraps in the choir anteroom before marching to their places, and render their part of the services without those articles of apparel. When I visited the branch at ——— the choir there observed this custom and I was greatly impressed with the added dignity of its appearance; and I could not help but feel that its service was the more spiritual in consequence. So I have resolved to introduce the same practice into our choir, for I feel that it would impart the same dignity and grace to our service. We will arrange to have suitable hooks provided in the choir anteroom on which you can hang your things; and let us make the start of this worthy practice next Sunday. That is all; good-night."

ACT II

Sunday morning dawned bright and clear, with just enough frost in the air to make the wearing of outer wraps desirable, and to impel the wearer of an attractive hat to hold her head the more erect. The late October weather fairly made one want to go to church, and so the Saints of that branch were "faithful" that morning. The Sunday school has closed its session and the consequent bustle and confusion of dismissal had subsided into the droning hum usually preceding church service. The choir was assembling in its anteroom, those there having already hung their hats and wraps upon the hooks that had been provided. Sister Paischens, the chorister, was concluding details for the service and expectantly awaiting the arrival of some much-desired members. Five minutes before the service had been set as the time for them to file into their places in the choir, and but thirty seconds remained until that time should be up. Sister Hinote, the leading soprano; Sister Metso, a muchly desired support; and Sister Contra, the principal alto, were not yet there and that anthem, upon which so much labor and pains had been lavished, simply could not be sung without them. The five minutes before service came; then four minutes; three minutes; two minutes; and then the anxious query of Brother Wise, the presiding elder, compelled them to no longer defer taking their places for the service. An additional hymn was hastily selected and substituted for the anthem, and the service proceeded in usual form. Sister Paischens received great comfort (?) from witnessing the three absent singers placidly seated in the congregation, the head of each one tilted at an unmistakably independent (and impudent) angle.

ACT III

The sermon of the morning had been delivered; the last hymn sung; the benediction a thing of the past; and the congregation was slowly filing out. Brother Wise was shaking the many hands of friendly greeting, when he was confronted by a group of three women, composed of the three choir members who had that morning favored the congregation with their presence rather than the choir with their services. "Brother Wise," said Sister Hinote, who had constituted herself spokesman for the group, "we want to bring a matter to your attention. Sister Paischens, the chorister, last Thursday night introduced a plan into the choir that we don't approve of. She requests that hereafter the ladies of the choir leave their hats and wraps in the choir anteroom and sit in the choir seats and sing the hymns and anthems with bare heads, just like the men do. Who ever heard of such a notion? You know the Scriptures expressly forbid women to pray in the church with uncovered heads, and we don't think it is any better for a woman to sing with her head uncovered. So we have made up our minds that if this rule is enforced we will not sing in the choir any longer."

At the conclusion of Sister Hinote's statement, Brother Wise seemed to be thinking deeply, although a gleam of amusement could be plainly seen in his eyes. Finally he spoke: "Sisters, I am glad you have referred this question to me, for I believe I can settle it to your complete satisfaction. But first let us see why the Scriptures forbade women to pray in the churches with uncovered heads. The Apostle Paul is the only writer of the Christian dispensation who discourses upon the matter, and his instructions regarding it are found in the eleventh chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians. But we must understand that Paul, who is believed to have had rather cynical views concerning the privileges and place of women, wrote with regard to the peculiar customs of his time. Then it was required that a woman attend public worship with her head covered, said covering of her head being as a sign of her submission to her husband. Do you sisters (here the twinkle in his eyes grew more intense) desire to wear your hats for this same reason? Besides, if we honor Paul's counsel regarding women in one particular, should we not also honor it in others? In the fourteenth chapter of that same epistle, the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth verses, he says: 'Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; . . . And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.' Would you women consent to a rule compelling you to keep silent in all our church functions? That would not only prohibit you from taking part in even a prayer and testimony meeting, or from singing in the choir, but would prevent much of the service that you as women can so effectually render. Also, (and here the twinkle in his eyes descended into an unmistakable smile) would you not rebel if you were required, every time you wanted information, to wait until you reached home to ask your husbands? So you see that Paul's teachings, entirely proper for his times, are hardly applicable now.

"However, I think Sister Paischens acted from a sincere desire to better the service of the choir; and personally I am in hearty sympathy with her ideas and efforts. I believe that if the sisters of our choir will adopt her recommendation it will result in not only bettering the appearance of the choir in the services, but in a more spiritual rendition of those services as well. It is an undeniable fact that the modern feminine hat is too often a medium for the display of style and fashion. The sister who sings in the choir will naturally feel that, as she is in so conspicuous a position, she must have a headdress that is a little better than the ordinary. Conversely, the sister who cannot afford the better piece of millinery or apparel, will naturally feel that she cannot maintain a proper standard in the choir, and the church will consequently be deprived of her services. The spirit of the instructions given to us by the Lord, regarding the simplicity of our apparel, has a very proper application to our choir work, I believe. Choir members cannot dress in unduly gay attire without detracting from the spiritual character of their work. Many modern churches are realizing this, and where large chorus choirs are employed, are requiring the lady members to doff both hats and wraps before engaging in the service, and to dress in modest apparel. Should we as a church be less zealous? Hence, I really feel that Sister Paischens' order, if heeded, will conduce to a more spiritual service."

EPILOGUE

The following Sabbath day dawned just as clear and bright as its predecessor, and the "faithful" were out in large numbers. A full choir, with "hats off" rendered the new anthem in a manner to elicit much flattering comment. Some of the congregation were heard to remark that they had never heard the choir sing so well or with so much feeling. The gratified gleam in the orbs of Brother Wise found ample expression in the helpful and spiritual sermon of the hour. As for the hooks in the choir anteroom—they were too busy in their duties of sustaining the burden of hats and wraps to express themselves.

DIPHTHERIA

The attack begins with soreness, pain, or swelling of the throat, headache, backache, and sometimes chills. There is fever, loss of appetite, and restlessness. In the early stages, the tonsils and surrounding parts are red and swollen. One or more grayish-white patches, firmly attached to the throat, may be seen. In the milder cases they are usually confined to one tonsil; in severe cases, they extend rapidly.

The "incubation" period rarely exceeds five days. Many cases of diphtheria are mild, ending in recovery in the course of a week or ten days. The terribly fatal nature of severe cases is well known.

The patient, even in mild cases, must be isolated, and no one but the one who is caring for him should be allowed in the room. While the manner of infection is different from that of the other contagious diseases treated in former articles, the same precautions should be used to prevent the spread of diphtheria.

The diet must be, necessarily, liquid, until the throat is able to bear the passage of solid food. A characteristic of diphtheria is the tendency to prostration, hence the importance of a generous and nutritious liquid diet from the beginning of the disease. Give milk, malted milk, broths, egg-nogs, etc., at regular intervals.

The throat should be sprayed or gargled every two or three hours, with an antiseptic solution, such as hydrogen peroxide, boric acid, or listerine. Many other solutions are used, but the three given above are to be found in nearly every home, and may be used by the mother who is many miles from a physician or drug store.

A word concerning antitoxin. Many people object to it on the grounds that it causes paralysis. It is not the antitoxin that causes paralysis, but that condition is a result of the disease itself. Many patients who have had large doses of antitoxin have had no paralysis whatever, while many who have had no antitoxin have been so afflicted as to be unable to feed themselves. Dr. J. C. Wilson says, "Patients convalescent from diphtheria are liable to palsies. This nervous affection may appear within a day or two after the throat trouble passes away, or not for a fortnight or more. It may follow mild as well as severe cases. It most commonly affects the palate, and leads to impairment in the act of swallowing, fluids being regurgitated through the nose."

As in all contagious diseases, soft rags should be used instead of handkerchiefs. These should be wrapped in paper and burned as soon as used. Soiled clothing should also be cared for, as mentioned in the paper on scarlet fever. The patient should have a shampoo and bath also as in scarlet fever, before being allowed to mingle with the family.

Diphtheria is a most treacherous disease. Even the light cases must be well cared for. The heart is apt to be affected, hence the importance of keeping the patient quiet, in bed. Normal strength may not return for weeks, or even months, after the attack.

Some Oriole Twitters

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA,

"About twenty-five of our Orioles in Scranton gave a program two weeks ago for the Christmas offering fund. I wish you might have been here and heard the program. It was fine indeed. I surely am proud of our girls. We advertised it well in our newspapers and did not have seating room enough for the crowd."

(Sister Lentell will be glad to give details of their program, I am sure.—MRS. GARDNER.)

WRAY, COLORADO

"Early in the fall we Orioles gave a pie social for which we netted ten dollars for Christmas offering. About the middle of this month we gave a box supper. We had a nice crowd and everyone was ready and willing to help us with our offering. We received forty-five dollars and we were certainly a proud circle of Orioles when we sent in our check for fifty dollars."

MRS. V. E. WILLIS.

WASHINGTON, MISSOURI

"We are thinking of taking up the study of Spanish in our circle. Also, working for a bazaar, having pledged ourselves to raise ten dollars or more for Christmas offering."

MRS. G. A. WILLIS.

CAMERON, MISSOURI

"Two of our boys told my mother that they did not think it was fair for the girls to have such a nice time with the Orioles and for the boys to have nothing to do. So we have been thinking of having a junior choir. We will invite the boys to a meeting Sunday afternoon and organize a choir and make it a rule to have the boys attend an Oriole meeting now and then, when we have anything extra going on."

"These and Those"

A NEW AUXILIARY IN CALIFORNIA

Sister Cleda Simpson, organizer for the Northern California District, reports the organization of an auxiliary local at Stockton, with Mrs. J. F. Mallory, as president, Mrs. Mina Williams as vice president, and Mrs. S. T. Bluett for secretary and treasurer. They are planning to form a study class, and are enthusiastic over their affiliation with the general woman's movement of the church. Sister Simpson reports a call from Chico, also, and we may hear soon of the crystallization of their desires into an active local there. Sister Simpson has felt very markedly the power of the Spirit in connection with her efforts among the women, and feels that God is pleased with what we are striving in humility to accomplish. Greater things are ahead for us, dear sisters, if only we put ourselves in touch, get the spirit of preparation and service, and permit ourselves to experience the uplift of true and consecrated devotion to a worthy cause.

AN INTERESTED MISSIONARY

Brother James W. Davis, or "Jimmy," as his friends call him, writes from Hamilton, Ontario, of the rich field he has encountered in that place, for work among the women. They are "ready for organization," for a uniting of their efforts and a "connecting up" with the main association. The Canadians are never known to do things by halves, and we may confidently expect to hear, before long, of some very interesting activities among them in these regions concerning which Brother Davis and his capable wife are planning.

OUR WORKERS AT COUNCIL BLUFFS

The sisters of the Council Bluffs Branch have had one of the most practical and energetic societies we have known. Their organization has been without "red tape," but one which has worked many real wonders in various channels of activity. The sisters have felt, for some time, however, that they were missing that peculiar incentive and encouragement which comes from identifying their interests with those of the sisters in other regions, of branching out, and becoming one of the solid units among the working feminine forces of the church at large. So they called a mass meeting for Sunday, December 16, at which time a short but inspirational program of music and reading was followed by a talk by Sister Audentia Anderson on the object and benefit of uniting with the general organization of women. Her remarks seemed to meet the approval of the attentive listeners, and upon invitation from her, they freely asked questions in regard to the practical workings of the auxiliary.

The result of this meeting was the appointment of a committee to draft a constitution and by-laws to present at their annual business meeting in January, looking towards a move to affiliate then. This committee is composed of the superintendents of their three active departments, the relief and service, the educational, and the young woman's. We will doubtless soon have the good news that these efficient workers have lined themselves up with the rest of us, and have formed a unit willing and ready to say, "Here am I, send me!" Entering in upon the wider and more versatile branches of work in the church peculiarly devolving upon women, the church officers of the branch will find, as time justifies the step, that they have at hand, an organized body of helpers, ready and efficient, upon which they can depend whenever its services are required.

Personal Hygiene

(The following paper came to us unsigned, but we think it was one of several sent us from a convention in Ontario somewhere. It is brief, and to the point, and very welcome because of its wholesome suggestions. (A. A.)

It might be in order at the commencement to consider for a few moments, the meaning of these words.

Hygiene according to the encyclopedia, is the art or science of maintaining health through cleanliness of mind and body, to be wise in thought, action and habit, thereby obtaining the greatest of all gifts, a clean mind and a clean body.

Probably the most important part of the subject is the problem of duties.

To eat only these things that have a real good value, thereby properly nourishing the body, fitting it to repel the attacks of disease. No mind, however brilliant, can perform its best functions when its house is polluted with the wastes and poisons of nutrition. Among these foods we might name vegetables, eggs, cocoa, meat in season, butter, bread, milk, tapioca, rice, fish, sugar and oatmeal and good long drinks of fresh cold water.

It is important also that the blood may be properly purified as it passes through the lungs. To accomplish this a person should practice deep breathing, that is to fill the lungs as full as possible by long steady breaths of pure, fresh air.

The skin, as it is well known, contains millions of tiny pores whose duty it is to exhale the poisons and to inhale fresh air. If these be clogged it is plainly apparent that they cannot perform their intended function, therefore it is necessary that the entire surface of the body should receive its daily bath.

To develop the mind it should be occupied with things that can develop it. Fifteen minutes reading daily of good serious literature will do more to develop the mind in a proper channel than all the cheap amusement in the world. Thomas A. Edison says, "Tell me what you read, and I will tell you what you are."

The rules of health are simple, fresh air, sunshine, good food and exercise. The rules for mind development are the same: Sunshine, proper food and exercise. If these be observed they will make one's life happy, death more remote and the world a better place in which to live.

Bishop McGuire in Southern California

Bishop McGuire's trip through Southern California proved an ovation. From the time he landed in Colton on December 11, until he left for San Francisco on the night of the 16th, he led a strenuous life. Everywhere he went the people were heard to say, "Bishop McGuire is all right, all right."

Necessarily conditions were somewhat embarrassing. This was the Bishop's first trip to the west coast. The people did not know him. He had not "spread himself" over many pages of our church publications thus far, hence our knowledge of the man was limited—a bit hazy.

Have you ever met men who, by the very strength of their own personality, win their way into your confidence almost with a handshake; who in one moment disarm all queries of loyalty or integrity; who dispel in one frank look all your self-erected walls of reserve and, like a gentle, warm, spring breeze open up your very soul with a call to life and comradeship?

Bishop McGuire is that kind of a man. He commands the love of every good man. He inspires respect in every man, good or bad. Even our cynics could find no fault in him. Our proverbial crank remarked, "I have heard men who were greater orators, but I never met a man in my life who impressed me more with his sincerity than Brother McGuire." Poor innocent! He did not know that this very quality is the soul of eloquence! Well, to the story.

Brother Robert T. Cooper, our bishop's agent for Southern California, furnished a touring car and volunteered his services as chauffeur and, in company with John W. Rushton, representative of the Presidency on the Pacific Coast, George H. Harrington, president of the Southern California District, and Thomas W. Williams, associate president, motored from Los Angeles to Colton, a distance of sixty-five miles stopping en route to inspect the new church building at Ontario. The Saints in this town are to be commended. They have a modern building capable of seating a hundred and fifty persons.

We "suppered" at San Bernardino then drove over to Colton to meet the Sunset Limited and Brother McGuire. Train nearly three hours late. Arrived at 9.15. Formalities over, Brother McGuire crowded into the tonneau and we were soon "placed" for the night.

Wednesday, up bright and early. The day was spent in visiting members of the church at Redlands, Riverside and San Bernardino. Incidentally we took in various points of interest. Smiley Heights, Redland's star attraction, has lost none of its charm and beauty.

The general tendency of all Easterners is to contrast the West with the East—California with Missouri! May the Saints forgive them! Not so with Brother McGuire. He was unstinted in his praise of this land of sunshine and flowers. All day he inhaled the pure ozone, reveled in the ever-changing landscape, and went into ecstasy over the surpassing and diversified verdure of hill and dale. Once in a while we would see Greene in his eye and he would exclaim, "This is exquisite. There is only one place in all the world that approaches it: the rock-ribbed coast of Maine!" Suffice to say the Greene of Maine is a different kind of green to that found in California.

In the evening Brother McGuire was greeted with a representative audience at the San Bernardino church. He was somewhat constrained, but his remarks were well received. Brother Wise, a veteran in the cause remarked, "I'll stand by the Bishop. He didn't tell me anything new. He teaches the very things we pioneers of the church heard before he was born"—a great tribute.

Thursday we were routed out at six o'clock and by eight were on our way to San Diego, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. We traversed part of the Orange Belt, then crossing a slight eminence, we were on the virgin desert. The contrast between what was and what is was striking.

God made the climate of this glorious land, he stored the water in the everlasting hills, he supplied the fertility of the soil—man has done the rest. The water has been carried to the land through the most elaborate irrigation system the world has ever known. The planting of the orange, lemon, grapefruit, grape, guavas, loquots, berries, fruits of all kinds, deciduous and perennial, has converted the desert into "a veritable paradise." These last words just slipped from the lips of Brother McGuire.

En route we called on Brother and Sister Journegan at Oceanside. Our brother and sister are not blessed with an abundance of this world's goods; but the yard, the house, everything bespoke thrift and cleanliness.

At San Diego we "spruced up," had an excellent dinner in a typical California cafeteria—the only place to get satisfactory service, by waiting on yourself. I wonder why these staid, conservative, middle westerners always ape the East! A tip to you: if you wish to get pointers, come west, young man!

At 7.30 we were at the church—a residence converted into a church building. The meeting was in charge of Brother Rushton. Brother McGuire was the speaker. He was at his best. The two-day trip in God's own country had done its work. His face beaming with a great light, his mind without a care, his soul overflowing with love for everybody, he told those plain people about the many things already accomplished in Zion. He led their minds in the fields of prophecy, and "showed them things to come." It was a heart-to-heart talk, no furbelows, no pyrotechnics. Just a simple story straight from the heart. It went home. The people of San Diego had a new vision. Hope sprang up in their breasts. They "warmed up" to the divine plan as it was unfolded to them by this "practical business man."

The writer was asked to say something. We could only express our accord and briefly relate some experiences which have culminated in a complete surrender to the divine demands—a reconsecration of body, soul, and spirit to the furtherance of the latter-day evangel. The barriers are all burned away!

Brother Rushton, in his inimitable way, delivered one of his classic, epigrammatical addresses, full of truth and pregnant with prophecy. Brother Cooper, not one whit behind his predecessors for zeal and service, followed. He reviewed the various progressive steps taken in the district, together with the experiences of the San Diego Saints, and urged the people to diligence and service.

A business meeting followed. Brother Harrington resigned as the pastor and Brother Levi Hemmingway was selected to take his place. Brother Weatherby, a bright, young man, was called and ordained to the office of priest. The standbys here are Sister Elizabeth Pickles, Brother and Sister Salter, Brother Hemmingway, the Rulan family, Brother and Sister Hollenbeck and family. The meeting broke up with the Spirit of God beaming in every face. The hearty handshake bespoke comradeship and love.

The next morning, (Friday) we visited with Mrs. Pitt and daughters, an estimable family. These people are lifelong friends of Brother McGuire. They consider "Ben" one of their very own. After dinner, I gently asked the hostess if she wished to adopt another one. I am still waiting her answer! By the way, these people are English. Brother Rushton remarked they "were the best ever."

We left San Diego at one o'clock for Los Angeles, a distance of one hundred and thirty-five miles. Came past Brother Crick's home at La Jolla—nobody home—little wonder—no occasion for people to stay indoors in California except at nights, and a blanket on the sand would not be unpleasant even then.

Reached Santa Ana at 6.30. There were no pro-Germans in the crowd, so we ordered five oyster stews. Again the Bishop was game. He remarked that these bivalves were equal to Baltimore's best! Who could not love a guest like that! The other members of the group held mental reservations. We could not bring ourselves to tell the Bishop that all our oysters came from the East—we loved our country too well for that! It would have been cruel to disillusion so gracious a guest.

We called on Sister Burton. If the Angel Gabriel has as much difficulty in making our sister understand as did the Bishop she will be late for the great reunion. Sister Burton, though quite deaf, has an exceptional mind, a keen intellect. Her eyes are her ears. She is a monument of fidelity and heroic loyalty to the truth.

A new start, now for Garden Grove, a new experience—California fog. Have often wondered why Brother Rushton is so in love with California. Now I know; the fogs remind him so much of "dear old Lunnon." There is this difference—the California fogs are a diversion. They are the regular bill of fare "over there—over there." We visited Brother and Sister Penfold and Brother Nathaniel Carmichael and family; then a plunge into the fog again. Brother Cooper is a master hand at the lines. He simply holds a loose rein, plunges ahead and permits the nag to pick her way. It was lucky for us that there were no speed cops abroad.

Brother Rushton and the writer had been away from our families nearly four days, so we parted company on reaching Long Beach; Brethren McGuire and Cooper to meet a group of the Long Beach Saints, while Rushton and I took car for home.

Sunday was a district affair—the place of meeting, Los Angeles. Saints from Santa Ana, Garden Grove, Anaheim, Altadena, Pomona, Ontario, and San Bernardino were present.

Our pews were all filled; we used every available chair.

God must have been with Brother McGuire Sunday morning. I know now that men can be raised from the dead. I saw people, who to my knowledge had been dead for years, come to life. The blind had their eyes opened. The deaf heard. It was a great meeting. Brother McGuire in a quiet, dignified manner unfolded the purpose of the general bishopric. He placed his program on the table, face up. He kept nothing back. The Lord wrought mightily with the people. Some of those who have been loud in their acclaim that the "gospel's free," and have ever been loyal to their creed, were converted. They are now going to do something for themselves by doing something for others.

A well-apportioned luncheon was provided by the Los Angeles Women's Auxiliary. Everyone sat down, was filled, and after all were satisfied we gathered up several baskets full for the evening meal.

At two o'clock a symposium; George E. Harrington, Bishop McGuire, and John W. Rushton, speakers; T. W. Williams presiding. Brother McGuire enlarged on his morning discourse. Brother Harrington gave an excellent address on the "Duty of parents to their children." Brother Rushton—well, I haven't the vocabulary to do justice to his effort. I am sure it was all right, for I overheard one woman, who boasts that she "quit school at ten," remark that "she understood every word, and followed him in his every thought." Well, I "quit school at eleven," I heard every word; I weighed every thought; and I know that the speaker drank deeply at the fountain of truth, and the spring from which he drew the water of life was higher up the mountain side than I had ever ventured before. We forgot the faucet, the lead pipe, and the river sands, as we quenched our thirst with this pure water fresh from the fount of God.

At 3.30 all the priesthood of the district met together with Brother McGuire as speaker. I do not know whether Brother McGuire is a literal descendant of Aaron or not—maybe not—but the mantle of Aaron was upon him as he unfolded the work, the character and the possibilities of the priesthood so that every individual member in the room felt ashamed of his ministerial delinquencies. How blessed indeed it is for the men of God to dwell together in love! The ministers of the church in Southern California are united. They are doing team work.

A hurried ride to the pastor's home for dinner with Brethren Harrington, Rushton and McGuire, and at 7.30 Brother McGuire was the speaker. He gave us a gospel sermon directed to Saint and sinner. His text was, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." A good sermon; wholesome truths so clearly put that a child could understand. A half hour spent in greetings, felicitations, and good-bys; a run down to the depot with Brethren McGuire and Rushton tucked away for the night in a "tourist" en route to San Francisco and we start for home at "the end of a perfect day."

Well wishes of Southern California Saints go with you, Brother McGuire. We know that God has called you to this work. We pledge you our faith and support. It will be unalloyed joy to work with you in carrying out your plans for the establishment of Zion and the redemption of the pure in heart.

Sincerely your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

Lamoni Developments

The recent annual business meeting held in Lamoni for the branch, adopted two important documents, which we are pleased to submit in full. The resident membership of Lamoni is about twelve hundred, and the report of the presiding priest showed that there are in the incorporate limits a total of 343 families, of which 305 had been visited by the priests, 67 of them twice.

The size of the branch emphasizes the wisdom of the move indicated in the following document, which establishes a system like the one put into effect in Independence not long since. It was indorsed by the branch by an enthusiastic vote and will no doubt soon be put into operation. It reads as follows:

"In view of the present and prospective number of Saints in Lamoni; in view of the conditions incident to the gathering which is upon us, and the corresponding need of the greatest degree of efficiency possible in the work of leadership in the development of our people; and in consideration of the present and apparent inadequacy of the methods heretofore used under the old system of branch work for the task before us, we are of the opinion that the time has come for a fuller organization in Lamoni of our forces for this important and imperative work.

"We therefore recommend:

"1. That in addition to the present system of appointment under which a priest, teacher, and deacon labor in each of the districts of the branch, one of the Melchisedec priesthood be also appointed to labor in each district.

2. That the priest, teacher, and deacon in each district labor under the immediate direction of the elder appointed to each district.

"3. That all these appointments be made by the branch presidency, said presidency to have the immediate direction of the elders in the various districts, and the general supervision and direction of the men and work in all districts.

"4. That this organization be placed at the disposal of the stake bishopric for utilization in the temporal department so far as practicable.

"It will be understood that the presiding priest, teacher, and deacon as appointed will continue to occupy in the council of the branch as heretofore, each having his part in the direction of the work of his department in this manner, and co-operating under his appointment in the responsibility and ordering of the cause."

The local church has plenty of coal to run till summer, but in order to cooperate with the nation in its hour of need, as outlined in the following, there was a hearty concurrence in the proposal to dispense with some of the services at the church and hold them elsewhere during the winter. The document reads:

"In our opinion it would be well to dispense with week night services at the Lamoni church during the present winter, so far as practicable, and for the following reasons:

"1. The coal saved could be used as needed in supplying poor and other families not otherwise able to secure fuel.

"2. The moral effect (since the church should lead in example in every way) would be wholesome in pointing to economy and conservation in this time of national stress and need.

"We further recommend, that in case this suggestion carries, closing the church on week nights for the term indicated, four ward prayer services be provided to be held weekly in private houses. This would care amply for the prayer services and in our opinion would bring greater good through a large attendance and more compact meetings.

"Other church activities when and where necessary could be provided for through other means, and in our opinion in a manner not to detract from the interest, nor to hamper the work to any perceptible degree."

The work is onward with us; a definite though quiet progress being made which will bear abundant fruitage some day. We have some things to try our patience, but have faith that the work will triumph.

There have been no serious epidemics of sickness so far, and though there is inconvenience from lack of coal, there seems to have been no actual suffering. Those who desire may obtain plenty of wood.

Perhaps you have heard that Lamoni Sunday school raised its share in the Christmas offering, a total of $2,106 to date—about three dollars per member. There are already in progress plans for a greater offering next year. We have learned we can do things when we try. We'll keep trying.

A Vision of God's Power in Operation

(A spiritual communication given Sister Mary E. Gillin, of Peoria, Illinois.)

Brother William Norris had asked the Saints to come fasting and praying for the sick of this branch. A larger number than usual was present and a spiritual meeting was had, throughout.

As a number testified of "knowledge" of the truth of the work, I felt the Spirit's gentle influence, like a soft white cloud, settling upon me. A brother (who had lately attended a large revival meeting held by the churches of this city, and in which the best talent both in music and speakers was employed) spoke so earnestly of how he had wished that we might be able to reach the thousands as did they, and have men qualified to occupy, singers, etc., and then another told of his peculiar weakness and asked help to overcome, I felt the burden of the word of the Lord to be spoken.

Visioned before my spirit's eye clearly I saw an angel with half-averted head, busily writing down each testimony as was given, and not alone that were uttered, but the righteous desires that burned in the hearts of some of those present who had not arisen to their feet, were also recorded by the angel. These were commended, as well as those who had spoken. I was very conscious that not alone our words were recorded, but at least sometimes, the heart's desires ascend unto God as "testimonies" to be written in the "Book of remembrance."

Further on, the word was given that, "The desires of those who yearn to carry this, my gospel unto the world, are pleasing in my sight." "Be ye not troubled, for the time is near at hand when my gospel, the gospel of the Son of God, shall be proclaimed unto every nation, tongue, and people, and walls shall not shut in the sound thereof. My servants shall go forth clothed with power from on high."

As these words were slowly given and delivered, at the same time I saw as from a long distance, a plain with cities, covered with a mist of darkness, similar to a thick fog which had no wetness, only darkness; yet it seemed to be composed of particles of darkness, like a fog is of particles of moisture. On the outskirts (at the northwestern corner) appeared two men, walking close together. They were clothed in long, loose garments which looked alike, but one was taller than the other. As they approached and entered the city, there went from before them a light, or rather like two lights on an automobile, only much more far-reaching. And as they proceeded to pass through the city, going east, that light penetrated every nook and corner of the city, and all were made aware of their presence and the message which they brought.

The darkness rolled up in a roll, but remained near the ground, simply rolled back before them till they came near the center of the city, and it then seemed as a thing alive, and from its rolling edges there came dark forms to contend with the men; but they were in no way concerned about it. Only the light grew so intensely bright that it was blinding, and these dark forms melted from before its rays, as mist before the noonday sun.

And then I was made to sense what made these message bearers so powerful; for I saw, as if in a by-play, a number of workers, in shop, field, desk; each man busily engaged in his own particular job, but he heard a call from above (I did not hear), and each left his task, dropping the hammer, the saw—the plow was left as well as the desk—and as each was ready there descended one of these loose fitting, outer cloaks, or garments, such as these other men had worn, and then all were very similar in appearance. All seemed to be concerned only with the message which they had to proclaim. I plainly saw these garments coming down from above and enveloping these men before they started, and I was much impressed that they went together in groups of two, walking close together.

These words were given: "The powers of darkness shall flee before them, but some will turn and contend, but they shall be overcome. The nations of the earth shall hear the message. It shall not be declared in the power of man's wisdom. Yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, even as I have declared oft before, I have chosen those whom men term weak, even the weak things of the earth; and when these men are humble, filled with love, and diligent in service, I will clothe them with my Spirit as with a garment, and they shall become mighty in my hands, even to the confounding of the wise among men.

"So, stay your hearts and know that my work will be accomplished in mine own due time. Many in this room will live to see the gospel preached to the nations of the earth."

There was considerable more, but referred more particularly to ourselves. But vision and words made plain to me that this last warning will be done by men chosen from the common walks of life and who, by meeting the requirements, will be clothed with power from on high. They will go by twos. Angels shall go before and prepare the way. Destruction shall follow after. And all the combined wisdom of this earth will not be sufficient to in any way frustrate the deliverance of the message that these humble men shall carry.

the system; it will help along the work for 1918. Make January and February banner months. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid; how much more will our gospel work shine if its members hold it up before the eyes of the people. Let the tracts and papers help you to advertise the kingdom of God. It is our duty.

The Call of the Wild

Recently we ran across a copy of London's Call of the Wild in the Macmillan Pocket Class edition for 25 cents. It was such a convenient little book that we slipped it into a pocket and between times read the story, appreciating not only the author's thrilling account but the valuable introduction, and comprehensive notes. That is typical of this edition of books, and they bring us a goodly selection of subjects by authors in many fields.

Our Departed Ones

CARPENTER.—Nettie M. Carpenter, was born December 7, 1897, at Westwood, Antrin County, Michigan. Was baptized August 14, 1910, by M. A. Harper. Died at her mother's home in East Jordan, Michigan, December 11, 1917, after an illness of a few months. She leaves, husband, one child, father, mother, sister, and one brother to mourn. Funeral services at East Jordan, sermon by C. N. Burtch, assisted by R. D. Davis. Interment in the city cemetery.

THOMPSON.—George Madison Thompson was born December 6, 1854, at Holden, Missouri. Married Miss Eliza McWhirt, July 19, 1884. To this union were born 5 children, 4 sons and one daughter, the latter dying in infancy. There remain the wife, 4 sons and 5 grandchildren, one brother, 2 sisters and a host of friends to mourn. Baptized December 18, 1917; this had always been the church of his choice.

Died at Council Grove, Kansas, December 20, 1917. Was loved by all who knew him. Funeral from the home, sermon by J. D. Shower. Interment in Green Wood Cemetery, Council Grove, Kansas.

GRIFFITH.—Mrs. Mary B. Taylor was born June 1, 1841, at Churchville, New York. Married Joseph C. Griffith, October 11, 1860. To this union were born 7 children, 5 sons and 2 daughters. Two sons died in infancy. Three sons, 2 daughters, 14 grandchildren, 14 great-grandchildren and a host of friends remain to mourn. Brother Griffith preceded his companion to the beyond some 9 years ago. She was baptized April 8, 1898. Died December 6, 1917. Sermon by J. D. Shower, interment in Poplar Grove Cemetery, Belleville, Kansas.

WREN.—Mrs. Elizabeth Wren, born January 11, 1838, at Maidstone, England. Married Thomas R. Wren September 21, 1859, whose death occurred July 6, 1913. Nine children were born to this union. Baptized by T. W. Smith in 1874. Died December 17, 1917, at Middletown, Ohio. Funeral in charge of J. G. Halb.

HILL.—William Henry Hill was born April 17, 1881. Was baptized December, 1895, by J. L. Goodrich. Died November 20, 1917, at Harrisonburg, Virginia, after a two-weeks' sickness of pneumonia fever. He was the son of John and Mary Hill, of Linville, Virginia. Funeral held at the Dunkard church, at Linville, Virginia. Sermon by William Quick.

Help Wanted

The following positions are waiting for the right people. Those who have the suggested qualifications or have reason to believe they can soon acquire them, should correspond with or see the signers of the advertisements herewith listed:

Proof Reader

An experienced proof reader for our proof department. Give references. Address, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Advertising Manager

A capable man or woman to fill the position of advertising manager of the Board of Publication. Must be a Latter Day Saint. A steady job for the right person. Give references. Address Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Office Man

A first-class, all-around office man. Must be a good stenographer and typist, a member of the church and willing to work on stewardship basis. Would prefer one not subject to military duty. A steady and congenial position for the right person. Give references. Address Lamoni Stake Bishopric, Lamoni, Iowa.

Big Drive On---

FOR A GREATER CHRISTMAS OFFERING NEXT YEAR

While at this writing we don't know the exact amount of the big Christmas offering raised this year, we all know it is far in excess of any total we have hitherto raised. From all directions unexpected amounts are bombarding the Presiding Bishopric and we all feel fine over it.

NOW FOR NEXT YEAR

Right now, before another day goes by, let us plan to do much better this year, and make the old church debt only a memory. No need of taking three years for it, when one big pull will do it by next Christmas.

LET US ALSO HELP

During October and November of last year we gave a discount of ten per cent for the Christmas offering on all new subscriptions to the church publications and those who took hold of it found it a great help. Brother Matthew W. Liston, of Flint, Michigan, found it easy to get the $6.97 we allowed him, while Sister Leroy Colbert of Chetek, Wisconsin, retained $4.96 on orders she sent in. There are a number of others who retained nice amounts, and at the same time did an excellent service to all concerned.

E. D. MOORE, Advertising Manager

LAMONI, IOWA

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
LAMONI, IOWA.

BEGIN RIGHT AWAY

We all read the most during the winter months. Get organized right away; talk it over with the branch president, the leaders in the Sunday school and Religio, and agree as to how it shall be handled, then go to work. Possibly some missionary in the community would enjoy this opportunity—anyway, see that it is done soon and do not rest till every family of Saints has one or more of the church publications in the home. Sample copies will be sent direct to any names and addresses you indicate.

HOW TO DO IT

When you are ready to send in your order, just take out ten per cent of the total of all new subscriptions to the publications, put it into the Christmas offering fund, preferably of the Sunday school in the community, and send the balance to the nearest publishing house listed below. That is the only restriction—it must be given to the Christmas offering fund. If we can help you personally in the campaign, it will be a pleasure to do so.

ENSIGN PUBLISHING HOUSE, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

A letter from Hubert T. Weston, in the service in France, in the Canadian forces, tells of the death of one of our lads, though he and another brother had been rather remarkably spared. A recent order gives them the privilege of writing to the United States as well as to home lands, postage free.

SAINT LOUIS SAVES FIFTY DOLLARS

By dispensing with their usual Christmas entertainment and by giving certificates instead of prizes for attendance, giving the money to the church instead of for treats, the Saint Louis Sunday school saved for the church Christmas offering about fifty dollars. They had an excellent cantata on Christmas Eve.

Bevier and Kansas City Central, Missouri, were rather unfortunate in choosing very cold and disagreeable weather for the lectures delivered by Brother Albert Carmichael. Those who braved the storm and cold report that they very much enjoyed the lectures, and regret that weather conditions kept many away. They are looking forward to having Brother Carmichael return at some future date.

A PERSONAL LOSS

All too many branches with a goodly number of members take only a very few of the church publications. It seems to us that this is a real, personal loss to the ones who are not in touch with what the church is doing. How can we know how the laws of the church are being put into operation without keeping in touch with the church through its publications? Let us send a sample copy of any of the papers to some of your friends who do not subscribe. We'll be glad to do it. Send their names to the Advertising Manager, this office.

Any Saints living in or near Emporia, Kansas, are invited to call on a sister at 327 Rusal Street. Her name is Mrs. Lena Weaver.

Augustine Dwyer is conducting his second series of lectures at Knobnoster, Missouri, using stereopticon pictures. Brother W. S. Macrae says the big church is jammed full before the hour for the lectures to begin, the interest increasing.

HELP FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS

Every little while some consecrated, knowledge-hungry, superintendent of a Sunday school writes in for information as to what publication or book will help in his special work. The first thing to do is to subscribe for the Autumn Leaves, which has a Sunday school department each month, with just the material he needs, though not so extensive as might be desired. The Exponent was not well patronized and the Autumn Leaves is trying to carry this as the best possible substitute for an exclusive Sunday school publication. G. R. Wells as general superintendent gets in touch with a number of interesting developments and they are told here in a brief way for your profit.

Saints living in or near Craigville, Alberta, should visit Mrs. H. Lee. She is acquainted with our work and quite interested. Her husband is in the livery business there.

S. A. Burgess, associate editor of the HERALD, accompanied by his wife, visited home folks in Saint Louis during the holidays. They returned via Macon and Bevier, Missouri, lecturing at all three places.

Brother A. H. Christensen reports to The Staff that they were expecting fourteen band instruments for use by the native boys. That ought to be an interesting band.

WAR AND WIRELESS

Graceland College has gotten out a fine little two-color booklet explaining in detail the wireless course they offer, which gives professional training for Government and commercial service. A very good response is being had, and by the time this reaches our readers there will still be about two weeks left in which to enroll. Those who have not investigated but are interested, should get busy right away.

HEMAN C. SMITH BILLED FOR LECTURE TRIP

Arrangements have been completed whereby Church Historian Heman C. Smith is to visit the Des Moines District and deliver illustrated lectures on church history. He carries his own lantern and has a good collection of colored slides, which, put with his vast fund of historical knowledge makes a fine combination. The dates are Des Moines, 21st; Knoxville, 22d; Runnells, 23d; Rhodes, 24th; Nevada, 25th; Boone, 26th; Perry, 27th.

The Independence Mount Zion Sunday school at the Stone Church, formally turned over $2,100 to the Christmas offering fund, about three times what it was last year.

The Sunday school at Beloit, Wisconsin, is alive and progressing. Brother Carl Johnson reports it, saying that they did not give out candy nor have a tree this year, observing the spirit of sacrifice in the land, and doing their part in the Christmas offering.

Elder U. W. Greene recently visited Seattle and in company with Brother J. M. Terry dined with Brother H. R. Tabbut, who was born at Joppa, of parents who were with the G. J. Adams colony. Brother W. M. Aylor went north to Bellingham, etc.

The little branch at Ava, Illinois, reports that it has grown to forty-five members, and that they have a nice little church building. They are conducting a mission near by, with good results.

CHURCH LITERATURE WANTED

Those who have church literature, such as tracts, Autumn Leaves, HERALD, or Ensigns and want them in use, might send them to our faithful brother and his wife whose writings we have often seen in the church publications: Frederick Roos, Vollmer, 48 Drahtzugstrasse, Basel, Switzerland. The transportation charges should be paid in advance.

FINE WORK FOR THE PUBLICATIONS

Brethren D. T. Williams and R. J. Farthing went out a few hours on several afternoons and visited the Saints in the interests of the church periodicals. The Des Moines list was a typical one, but like other places, there were a goodly number of members who had their names on the church records but not on the subscription lists. The result at this writing, is $46.60 in subscriptions, mostly new.

Elder E. E. Long, recently called to his home in Lamoni on account of illness, returned to his mission in Northwest Ohio on the 8th. He has appointments waiting for him at Saint Marys, in an Adventist neighborhood.

In accordance with the new plan for division of ministerial labor in Lamoni, the appointments for districts were made on Sunday, the 6th, and a number are reported as already done. The four ward cottage praying official work also announced for the winter season. er meetings are

GOOD OR CLEVER; OR BOTH

It is a curious thing, as was pointed out in Hibbert's Journal, two years ago, that, contrary to other races, the English-speaking races have attempted to draw a distinction between intelligence and morality. The folk stories of the Latin nation, or even of the Germans, make the Devil a personage to be fooled. They do not always make him out to be any smarter than a man, and sometimes not near so smart. But Milton's Paradise Lost makes Lucifer a giant in intellect and of brilliant power.

This is a masterpiece of literature, but the same thought runs through fiction and poetry. The villain is clever, shrewd, and scheming; the hero is good and in continual trouble until the last chapter or the last scene, when suddenly divine providence intervenes and saves him. As the article in Hibbert's Journal shows, logically divine providence would have to follow him around and keep him out of trouble through his life. The thought is carried out quite thoroughly that it were better to be good than clever.

So this disposition within the church is by no means unique. Other modern Christian societies show a similar reaction as we note from criticism in their church publications.

The educated or learned man is evidently put at a discount, especially the one who has studied modern German thought. And we have noted the comment that many a young man has given up a good charge to make better preparation in one of the secular universities, only to find upon his return that he had to accept an inferior pastorate.

This is probably true only in part. Yet we note again and again in the correspondence coming to this office, the assumption that too much attention is given to the intellectual, and an effort made to draw a line of distinction between the man-taught and the Spirit-taught men. No man can assist in this work unless he is taught of the Spirit of God. No man can do what he should do unless he humbly seeks divine guidance. No man can assist in this work unless he is humble and full of love. There is, then, no such distinction to be made.

Some unlettered men are man-taught. Some have been taught by the Spirit of God. Some of the most widely read men we have have been taught of God. That is essential. But it is equally essential if we are to make progress that some, at least, of the priesthood push out energetically into new fields. We have something more to do than to preach and baptize people. We have the sociologic, economic—yes, and the great spiritual questions yet to be answered.

It is significant, as we look over the priesthood, to note that while several have attended Graceland College at some time or another and taken work, very few could be considered widely educated, if by that term we are to understand school or college work. One man in the Presidency has received a liberal education in the schools, colleges, and universities of the land; yet he emphasizes that education is merely the development of the man. It is not to be determined by school work alone. Another man in the Presidency, we are informed, did not finish grammar school; yet who will dare to say he is not an educated and a learned man, prepared, so far as is humanly possible, for the duties of his office, and also touched by the divine fire.

In the Quorum of Twelve we are not advised if any of them have taken collegiate work. A few of them have probably finished high school, but some of those who stand the frankest for educational work have not progressed that far. The same may be said of the Seven Presidents of the Seventies, of the Presiding Patriarch, of the president of the high priest's quorum, and of the presidents of the various stakes. Not one of these men, so far as we have been advised, in their regular school work finished more than high school. In fact, we are not informed that any one of the stake presidents holds a high school diploma.

From what we have noted of the biography of Bishop McGuire, he may have finished grammar school and later attended a law school. As to Bishop Keir, we are not informed, but reports from Chicago as to his habits of study would seem to indicate that he has made his preparation when and where opportunity has offered, reading and studying when he had a chance.

Now, it is true that many of these men are widely read and are close students of human nature. In fact, there is not a man in the missionary field who is doing his duty who does not study his Bible, who does not study good books to show himself approved. But if education is to be a matter of schooling, and upon that is to rest preferment, we do not seem to be in much danger in the church. In fact, as the assistant editor remarked, "Why, Fred M. and a few of you fellows deserve especial credit for getting ahead at all under such a handicap."

In presenting the General Conference items we necessarily emphasized this question of preparation because it was made so prominent in the work of the conference, and our purpose was to set forth the news and state what actually took place. A great deal of emphasis was made that each man should excel in something—that there should be some one thing that he can do better than others. That is still the note of appeal from the stakes. In fact that emphasis is growing stronger as a necessity for Zion.

Now, of course, this might be placed on a plane to exclude everybody, but it has not been and will not be. A remark made by one of the joint council in connection with the appointments is significant. He said in substance that many people had objected to their appointing certain men and omitting certain other men from the list. He said, "Of course, Brother H. (which is not his initial) is better fitted all around for work here in Lamoni and some other places than is Brother G. But we can send Brother G. to such and such a place, where he will do a good work, and Brother H. would not do at all." He went over in this way several names voluntarily, pointing out the especial fitness of certain men for their special field of service. We ought not to think that those men not appointed are thereby decreed to be generally unfit. Such is not the case. Nor should we lay them upon the shelf. For various reasons they were not considered available for ministerial appointment, and some were considered to be more available in other departments of work. But we ought to try to utilize our efforts to the best of our ability, and we should try to utilize these men wherever possible. The fact that a man is left at home in Independence or Lamoni may signify that they thought he can do a better work there than elsewhere in the field. Let him do so and his just wants and needs should be met.

Now the question is raised, May we not pay too much attention to the purely intellectual aspect? Certainly we may, just as we may pay too much attention to the physical aspect.

"Do you not think that some are paying too much attention to the intellectual alone?" Most assuredly, just as we think that some young men at high school or college give too much attention to athletics and to running around, to the neglect of their studies.

"Do you not think the church is in serious danger on this account?" Most emphatically, No. We are not depending upon human wisdom alone. No matter how much a man is learned, he must have the inspiration of the almighty God before he attempts to occupy in the sacred desk.

No man can assist in this work unless he is humble and full of love; but we do affirm that the greater his physical strength, the greater his intellectual power, so long as he is humble, prayerful, and seeks divine guidance, the better work can he render to the church and family of God.

Furthermore, we have many special questions to meet. It is a very different proposition—writing for the church papers and preaching a sermon that will melt our hearers to tears. The affections are more easily reached from the ear than the eye. Grammatical expression, which may and should be overlooked in the case of the oral representation of the truth, cannot and should not be overlooked on the printed page. In hearing a sermon we should strive to get the truth that the man is presenting, not merely the form. But on the printed page we need to consider both.

Then there are additional problems that require, it is true, divine direction. But should we forever say, "Jesus paid it all; all to him we owe"? He certainly has done his share. Ought we not to be willing to assist and do our part? Salvation, it is true, comes only through him. But that can scarcely mean that we should lie down and wait to be carried, either physically, intellectually, or spiritually, for we are called to be laborers together with God.

Our physical strength differs; so must our physical work differ. Our intellectual ability differs; so should men be selected for the several works for which they are best fitted. But the same great Spirit of our heavenly Father should abide with us, one and all; direct and fit us for our own special service.

HALF HOURS WITH CELEBRITIES

III. SIR PROCRASTINATION

It was afternoon. I had just seated myself at the desk to prepare an editorial. I was fingering the keys of the typewriter tentatively when some one touched me on the shoulder and a voice said, "Do not be in a hurry. Wait a little while, until you feel more in the mood for work."

Glancing up I discovered a very presentable old gentleman standing at my elbow.

"Whom have I the honor to address?" I asked.

"I am Sir Procrastination," he replied.

"And your business with me?"

"Oh, I just dropped in, as usual, to have a little chat and pass the time away. But in this strenuous age I find that I must be brief. People used to give me weeks of time—still I have no reason to complain, I make Duty cool his heels in the waiting room a good many hours yet."

"You dropped in as usual?" I queried. "I do not recall your face."

"Oh, yes;" he replied, "I have been here before, at times when I thought that you were not too busy to listen to a harmless old man. You simply did not recognize me; that is all. Many people do not. My voice is much like that of Reason, and people often mistake one for the other, a mistake that is somewhat to my advantage at times."

"Pray be seated," I urged, somewhat tardily.

"Thanks, in just a moment," he replied.

There seemed no occasion for him to say in just a moment, but I discovered that it was one of his peculiarities to meet every proposal with the remark, "Wait a moment," or "Presently," or "To-morrow," with the exception of any motion to defer action, which always elicited a ready second.

After my visitor had seated himself, I inquired further of him concerning his business with me, and obtained this reply:

"I merely dropped in to advise you to defer this task until a more opportune time. Never do to-day that which you can put off until to-morrow. We have but one life to live. Why not have a good time while we are at it? Throw books and study and work and worry to the dogs! Go out and chase a rainbow; or if it suits you better, sit here and dream. I can tell you some wonderful things that you will do by and by.

True to his promise, my friend, for I then supposed him to be such, launched out in a glowing description of the future. He painted gorgeous word pictures of the wonderful deeds that I might do some day. Under the hypnotic spell of his oratory the present was forgotten; it seemed of no value—the present task became a dreary round of profitless drudgery. Ah, the beautiful, shining land of To-morrow!

Once I stirred from my dream to ask him the time; but he only frowned angrily and declared that he never carried a timepiece and abhorred calendars. He averred that we had talked only a minute and that he would go presently.

In answer to certain inquiries I learned that my visitor had played a very important part in the history of the world. I then discovered that he had journeyed with the Israelites in the wilderness, and it was largely through his influence that they kept out of the Promised Land so long. He had watched them later as they labored on their temple; and standing at their elbows, he had advised them to defer their labors until their own homes were fully builded and furnished.

He boasted with considerable pride that he had been closeted in his day with such rulers as Louis XVI, Czar Nicholas, and others of like station, and on his advice they had deferred granting liberty to the people until that ever-receding, magical by and by.

He it is who has counseled every sinner since the world began to postpone repentance one more day. He stood by Felix while great Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment. And when Felix trembled under his kingly vestments and was about to yield, he it was who suggested the avenue of escape: "Go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee."

I asked my guest if he did not feel some regrets concerning the results of such advice. He only replied, "Oh, I don't know. I have never given it a thought. I will think it over by and by.

"Do you know," he went on, "that at one time your God said, 'There is even now already in store a sufficiency, yea, even an abundance to redeem Zion, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice'?"

"That was a great day for me. Whose voice do you suppose they were hearkening to?"

"I am sure I do not know," I replied.

"To mine," he answered. "People who listen to me are deaf to God."

"Then," I answered, "I will not listen to you any more. And any way, I must get at my work right now."

My visitor sprang to his feet angrily. "Do not use that word in my presence," he commanded. "If you do I shall depart instantly."

"What word?"

"That insulting word now!"

"Then I shall repeat it; I must go to work now!"

At that my uninvited visitor stumped vehemently from the room.

After he had made his exit I was about to take up the task that had been deferred, but just then I was astonished to hear the clock strike the hour of seven, and immediately my wife appeared to announce the evening meal. My half hour with this particular visitor had consumed the entire afternoon.

"What," I cried, "I have lost six valuable hours! Where can the time have gone?"

"Why, didn't you know," she said sweetly, "that Procrastination is the thief of time?"

I am compelled to believe that the charge is true. I had harbored the greatest thief in the world. I have never recovered the six valuable hours that the old rascal stole from me. The Saints everywhere should take notice, and not admit him to their homes or listen to his blandishments.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Hawaiian Number of the "Herald"

Early in February we expect to issue a magazine number of the HERALD, devoted entirely to the Hawaiian Mission. It will be profusely illustrated, with an extra number of pages and some very interesting and profitable material. The "copy" is all in our hands, and barring accidents, we expect to have it ready for issuance the first number in February.

$100,000,000 To Restore Holy Land

A campaign is being conducted to raise the above amount as a Palestine Restoration Fund and "which will be devoted to the needs of the Zionist organization, outside and inside of Palestine, to enable it to realize and further the aim of the Zionist movement." The Baltimore convention pledged itself to raise a million dollars of this amount within sixty days. Some of the most prominent Jews are affiliated with the movement.

Holden Stake Bishopric

Bishop C. J. Hunt of the Holden Stake, with his two counselors, J. W. A. Bailey and I. M. Ross, have issued a four-page bulletin entitled An Appeal to the Saints, being Bulletin No. 2 of their series. Brother Hunt has done this each year in his previous field and finds it pays. The front page carries a picture of the three of them, while the entire sheet contains interesting information and pertinent suggestions. Two cartoon illustrations are used. It is the kind of publicity that pays.

Draft Law Upheld

We note that the Supreme Court has upheld selective service of the draft law. It is of interest to note that men have been drafted in the previous wars of the United States. This time an effort is made to proceed more consistently and to give to each man the work for which he is best fitted. It is, in fact, more democratic, and as Socialism means, a setting aside of rabid individualism for the benefit of society and the state, to that extent it would also be socialistic. The Supreme Court is concerned only with the question of its validity under the Federal Constitution. Hence the contentions made against the law are overruled.

The Far West Stake

We are publishing in this issue the statement from the bishop of the Far West Stake. He has received many inquiries, and so desires to give this general information to our people. Similar conditions will also be found in the other stakes, so far as farming community is concerned, except the Independence Stake, within the city of Independence. But the land around it is very good farming land, but rather higher in price. The one thing above all others we should remember is, to have all things prepared before us. Confer with the bishops before you begin to get ready to make your move. Bishop Scott, of the Far West Stake, was in the real estate business for several years in Independence, and had been appointed to the Saint Joseph District, which is the larger part of the Far West Stake, for the past four years.

Graceland To Close May 3

By vote of the faculty and students of Graceland it was agreed that during the second semester classes will be held six days a week, including Saturday, instead of five, as heretofore. It seems that in each course of study, one extra hour every week will be provided. Fifteen weeks, six times a week, is the exact equivalent of five times a week for eighteen weeks. College classes which meet three times a week will now meet four times a week, thus giving six additional classes for the semester. The spring holidays in April will also be eliminated, thus permitting the college being closed four weeks earlier, without loss of time. The purpose is, that as many of our young people come from rural communities, it will free them as early as possible for farm work. Another purpose is, that this speeding up means that four months to May 1 will be sufficient to complete the wireless course. Then beginning May 1 there will be time for another four months course in wireless, provided the demand is sufficient. The value of wireless and its necessity to the Government at this time has already been emphasized, together with its value to our young men who may be drafted for war service. It will also shorten the period for which the students must pay board. Those who are working for their board, who desire to do so, may remain and make up the time after the close of the semester.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

ZION AND EDUCATION

I am glad of the opportunity to respond to your invitation to submit an article on "Zion and Education."

As a people we have always been willing to "admit the value of the education of the schools for general culture and esthetic appreciation and as a preparation for citizenship in a democracy," and to recognize its legitimate place in the progress toward Zion conditions. We have, however, sometimes and all too frequently failed to appreciate the "close relation between education and the production of wealth," or to understand fully the extent to which wealth and the wealth producing power of any people depend on the quantity and quality of education." We have many times failed as heads of our own families and responsible for their economic and industrial independence to comprehend fully that "no other form of investment yields so large dividends in material wealth as do investments in education, and that comparative poverty is not to be pleaded as a reason for withholding the means of education, but rather as a reason for supplying them in larger proportion."

Recent letters from the presidents of some of our branches in a few of the largest cities in the country bring the information that with very few exceptions the young men and young women of our church in those large cities are not taking advantage of the public school facilities in their own communities much beyond the compulsory school age; that very few of our own young people are found in the high schools of those cities.

We have recently been admonished that the hastening time is upon us. We must therefore begin the preparation of Zion for the Saints who are going to ask for admission soon. One of the first essentials for that preparation is the purchase of the lands and properties in the "regions round about." To begin this preparation, then, large sums must be available for these purchases. God might have planned it some other way, but the fact that in his divine economy he has not, admonishes us that if we are to enter in and occupy we must do it in God's own way and not in our way. Hence the necessity of recognizing the close relationship between "education and life," and that education promotes industrial efficiency and increases material wealth.

One of the leading educators of this country recently said that the most valuable result of right education is the broadening, deepening, and refining of human life. This result can no more be measured by dollars and cents than truth, self-sacrifice, and love can be made out of meat and potatoes. While the higher things of the soul are priceless rewards which true education brings, they are not its only result. The material and measurable rewards of education must be more fully appreciated by us if we are to take our place in the economic and industrial development of Zion.

The concrete evidence of the effect of education in increasing industrial efficiency is overwhelming, whether considered from the national standpoint or from that of the individual citizen. We have only to examine the records of the nations of the world to realize that one, with limited natural resources, but with an excellent school system, has grown in wealth and power so much more rapidly than another with a vigorous and talented national stock and vastly better resources, but poor educational facilities. That this phenomenal success is the direct result of her thorough educational system is generally admitted.

The remarkable results shown in the history of the leading nations of the world cannot be wholly attributed to racial or climatic differences. Wherever there is adequate provision for education there follows great industrial efficiency and national wealth. On the other hand, wherever there is the lack of the necessary school system there is the same story of poverty, revolution and misery, regardless of race, climate, or abundance of natural resources.

Even in our own country it has been shown by the president of one of our great universities that the earning capacities of the citizens of the several States are in direct proportion to the efficiency of their school systems. In one State the average schooling given to its citizens was seven years; to those of the United States as a whole four and four-tenths years; while that of another State was only three years. Corresponding to these figures it was found that the average daily production of the citizen of the first State was eighty-five cents; that of the United States as a whole fifty-five cents; while that of the second State was only thirty-eight cents. The productive capacity of the citizens of the first named State was found to be on the average $466 per year; for the United States as a whole, $332; and for the second named State, $174.

Of course, many elements entered into the conditions bringing about these remarkable results, yet the unbiased observer must recognize that education is a controlling factor when he sees that among all varieties of races and accompanied by all kinds of conditions of climate, natural resources, geographical location, economic and social environment, in every case educated people produce much and amass wealth, while uneducated people under the same conditions produce little and save less.

Zion is to be a land of plenty, a land of wealth, a land where there is to be no misery, no poverty, no hunger, no one without everything his needs and just wants require. To bring this condition about God's spiritual and economic laws must be observed.

It will not satisfy Zion conditions for the few to be spiritual and to be educated, for the few to be in a condition to appreciate and to take advantage of all opportunities. One prospers just in proportion to the prosperity of the average man with whom he is brought in contact. If the masses of the people are poor and ignorant, every individual, every interest, every industry in the community will feel and register the pulling down power of their backwardness as inevitably as the thermometer records the temperature of the air. Every man who through ignorance, lack of training, or by reason of any other hindering cause is producing or earning only half as much as he ought, by his inefficiency is making everybody else in the community poorer. The necessity for education has increased and will continue to increase with the advance in complexity of the processes of civilization. Because of the unparalleled progress in most directions during the past fifty years the need for education has in a generation multiplied many fold.

In recent years several studies have been made which show the influence of education upon individual success.

One such investigation shows that only one child in 150,000 has been able in America, without education, to become a notable factor in the progress of the Nation, while the children with common school education have, in proportion to numbers, accomplished this four times as often, those with high school education eighty-seven times as often, and those with college training eight hundred times as often.

Another investigation shows that in proportion to their numbers in the population, the college men have become members of the National House of Representatives 352 times as often as the non-college-bred men; members of the Senate 530 times as often; President 1,392 times as often; Justices of the Supreme Court 2,027 times as often. In proportion to the total number in America possessing a college education there were 277 times as many college-bred men who have amassed great wealth as there were non-college-bred men.

The above studies indicate the advantages of a college education in the way of material profit. Some investigations have recently been made to show the financial returns of elementary and technical education also.

Such a study was made in two of the average sized cities of the country. It is found that the life expectancy of the average high school boy is more than forty years, and that his average annual salary is $1,000, while the average annual salary of the illiterate laborer is $500 for the same length of time. A comparison of these figures shows how richly the child and the community are repaid for each day the child attends school.

$1000 for 40 years equals	$40,000
$ 500 for 40 years equals	20,000

Difference.....	$20,000

Twelve years of 180 days each, or a total of 2,160 days of school, bring the child, therefore, an added life income of $20,000, or a return of over nine dollars for each day spent in school.

An investigation of the earnings of nearly 4,000 pupils who left school at the end of the eighth grade showed that they started life with an average salary of $240 per year, while the salaries of nearly 1,000 graduates of the high school in the same community showed that they started with an average salary of $600 and after six years were earning an average of $1,380.

Another investigation of the labor income of 1,303 farmers in four townships showed the following:

With district school education,	$318 per year.
With high school education,.....	$622 per year.
With college education,.....	$847 per year.

Many other such studies have been made. The above are only a few taken from a recent report by the United States Bureau of Education, which closes as follows: "Such studies as the above, while open to the criticisms that have been mentioned before, because of the fact that the educated are a selected set to begin with, have nevertheless answered unmistakably the question as to whether the schools, with all their admitted imperfections, are preparing their pupils for greater economic efficiency. The figures show conclusively that the schools are giving their pupils a greater earning power than even the strongest advocate of education had claimed. Inevitably, as the economic processes become more complex, the relative need for directive force in industry becomes greater and greater. Experience has shown that only through a thorough system of public schools and colleges can a State or Nation provide for itself an adequate supply of citizens capable of furnishing this necessary directive force."

Zion must be redeemed on the basis of God's economic laws, and when redeemed must be organized and conducted in accordance with the same laws. Hence it behooves us to be awake to the signs of the times, and in proportion as we appreciate these "handwritings on the wall" and profit by them, in that proportion will the time be hastened when Zion will in very fact be redeemed and the Saints of God will be ready to step in and fully occupy, according to his divine plan.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

DOUBLE D.'S

A well-dressed man of pleasing appearance knocked at my door late one Saturday afternoon. He was a tall, broad-shouldered, fine-featured gentleman, with a clear, honest eye, which bespoke confidence.

"Mr. Hartshorn, I believe," he said, as he handed me a card upon which was neatly engraved:

Rev. J. Reginald Rawlston, D. D., Ph. D.

Pastor Keeler Ave. Congregational Church, Chicago.

"My purpose here is to invite you to our community church in this neighborhood."

Then he introduced himself, and upon invitation entered my parlor, where a few inquiries developed into an hour's conversation.

Most of what "he said" and "I said" will be left to the reader's imagination, as it lacks any general importance. "The nonessentials of churchism" were discussed. The advantages of supporting our "community church" were urged in all their spiritual and civic aspects, with special inducements added for families in the habit of spending carfare to go two miles to meetings four times a week, as mine did. He also discouraged any attempt to go into doctrinal matters, for by so doing only "magnify our differences," and "after all," I was told, "the matters wherein we differ are inconsequential, while we have common faith in the essential matters of belief."

His tact and grace were admirable. The impression was slightly marred, however, by an inferential argument. "I have been through two college courses, and I ought to know whereof I speak." I found consolation in Paul's statement to the effect that not many wise, mighty, and noble after the flesh, are chosen, but God has chosen the foolish and weak to confound the wise and mighty. (1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27.) Yet I am not in the habit of classifying myself with the "foolish and weak."

I can imagine that the Reverend Rawlston came from a good home, where faith in God and the family altar were a part of daily life, and reaching the age of discretion, that his heart was touched with the real desire for service to God. Seeing the effects of sin, the misery and woe which follow in its wake, and having tasted the sweetness of doing good, the peace of mind which attends the righteous, that this man must have said with all the sincerity of a noble heart, "Here am I, Lord, use me."

The best preparation of our schools and colleges were obtained after years of expense, hard study, and self-denial. The D. D. and Ph. D. were conferred as a just recognition for the work successfully completed. The course followed is the logical outcome of his sacred choice, considering the environment and the titles conferred—from the world's standpoint—follow as naturally as the harvest follows the planting of the grain.

In Isaiah 29: 26 we learn that with the latter-day restoration, God would "Proceed to do a marvelous work . . . for the wisdom of the wise and learned shall perish." Those who trust in their own wisdom should be confounded by servants chosen and enlightened by God. Yet this does not give us the opportunity to "lord it over others." Though we have more knowledge of spiritual matters, yet Jesus said, "The children of this world are in this generation wiser than the children of light." Because others cannot "see the light," it does not offer occasion for ridicule. Good grace is not manifested upon our part to speak slightly of the Reverend D. D.'s, etc. I fear the motive is frequently mistaken as a case of "sour grapes."

The "sectarian" ministry represents a class of citizenry far above the average. In fact, I believe, that when considered by the knowledge they are to be held accountable for, they are among the noblest class of men on earth. 'Tis idle talk to tell of the unwise speech of a few. Some may even "teach things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake" as they did in the days of Titus and Peter. But I venture the assertion that ninety per cent of the sectarian ministry are getting less money than they would receive had their education been devoted to the business world. They really deserve twice as much.

Certainly they are entitled to the courtesy and respect of all men, and especially from the representatives of the "children of light." "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" No. But to parade another's errors or make jibes about "doctoring divinity" has the appearance of glorying in their weakness, which is unbecoming the "evangelists of love." "Can we say we have been baptized with the spirit of love" and yet joy in holding these men up to public contempt? The injury does not stop with offending some visitor, but some members get an idea that it is clever and they try to "pull it off" on their neighbors, who generally are slow to see the joke or patronize it half-heartedly.

Latter Day Saint prejudice and jealousy belong in the garbage can. Don't set them on the table when feeding the faithful.

Quoting a HERALD editorial (November 14), "I have many forces at work in the world, saith the Lord, I have many spiritual forces at work that you know not of. You see but the smaller part of my work and the world perceives it not at all."

The great army of ministers, Sunday school and church workers; regardless of title or denomination, who are with us in the fight against sin, trying to make a better world according to the light as they see it, may be here indicated as the "many forces." Should we not then studiously avoid antagonizing them? I do not mean to compromise, diplomatize. It's either charity or "sounding brass." They should be treated as erring brothers, for Isaiah says of our time, "They that erred in spirit shall come to understanding."

Summing up all these things, brethren, as we "live in glass houses," to indulge in "stone throwing," would therefore not be prudent.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 12

BY J. F. MINTUN

BRETHREN IN CHRIST, OR DUNKARDS

The religious society now calling themselves the "Brethren in Christ," but better known as Dunkards, had their origin in 1708, at Schwarzenan, Province of Wettgenstein, Germany. The first organization was formed of five men and three women, chief among whom was A. Mack. Their effort, like many other reformers, was to bring back to the world primitive Christianity.

Since its origin, its growth has been slow. It is claimed that the church now numbers about one hundred thousand members.

The question of baptism was seriously considered by the eight who first formerly entered into this society, having concluded that it was necessary to form a new association, and they decided that trine immersion was the only correct mode, but they could not so easily decide who had authority to officiate in the rite. Mr. A. Mack, one of the number of eight, says in his book, A Plain View of the Rites in the House of God, edition of 1888, that they finally concluded to act as follows:

They mutually pledged their word that no one should ever divulge who among them had baptized first (according to the lot), in order to cut off all occasion of calling them after any man. . . . Being thus prepared, the eight went out together one morning in solitude, to a stream called the Eder, and the brother upon whom the lot had fallen, baptized first that brother who desired to be baptized by the Church of Christ, and when he was baptized, he baptized him by whom he had been baptized, and the remaining three brethren and three sisters.

Mr. Mack was of the Calvinistic faith, and through investigation he became convinced that he was wrong in his belief, and with him others came to the same conclusion. But none had been immersed, or had previously believed in trine immersion. There is no evidence that any of the eight had been ordained before the baptism above referred to was administered, nor has there been any record of any ordination of A. Mack since, yet this religious society now claims that the eldership in America came through him. See Messenger, volume 41, page 682. They do not recognize that any priesthood is conferred by ordination, yet men hold office in the church through ordination. The offices into which men are ordained are evangelist, elder, minister in the second degree, minister in the first degree, and deacon.

They believe in anointing the sick with oil, but do not strictly adhere to the instruction to "send for the elders of the church" in such cases, they believing that those who hold no office in the church may administer this rite.

They believe in feet washing, the sisters washing the sisters' feet, and the brethren the brethren's feet. While they claim it to be an ordinance in the church, yet they do not consider that officers of the church only have the authority to administer it.

They do not believe that the Lord's supper and the communion are the same, but believe that they are two institutions to be engaged in, associated with each other, but to be administered in the evening, the communion to follow the Lord's supper. The supper is believed to be a meal prepared as a feast, while the communion is the bread and wine received in commemoration of the sacrifice of Christ, and should be administered to none but those in union with the church.

They claim that the Bible is their only creed, yet they have published tracts and articles that completely justify the conclusion that they have a fixed faith that they claim to have always taught, as follows:

1. God is the Father of us all, the Creator of all things, the one true and living triune God.
2. One Lord, the only Begotten Son of God, our Redeemer, the Christ, the head and founder of the Christian Church.
3. One Spirit, our Comforter, which is to guide us into the way of all truth.
4. One church, of which Jesus Christ is the head, founder, and lawgiver.
5. One law, which is the New Testament and perfect law, to which we must not add, and from which we dare not subtract.
6. One faith, of which Jesus Christ is both author and finisher, and which is made perfect by works.
7. One baptism, administered "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—E. M. Cobb, of Elgin, Illinois, April 19, 1908.

We append to what we have said the following, wherein they speak for themselves upon the several subjects:

CHURCH

It is important to become a member of the church, for in the church is salvation. We have no promise of salvation out of it. . . . We enter the church in Christian baptism, and if we are in Christ we are in the church.—The Importance of Church Membership, p. 1.

We are living under the same dispensation that Paul was, and God has never authorized the existence of any other sect than that to which Paul belonged; there is no divine, no Bible authority for any other church.—Which Is the Right Church, p. 2.

Now just adopt the same course of reasoning in every case, compare all the features and leading characteristics of the various churches around you with that old sect to which Paul belonged, and when you find a church having the same name, the same foundation or creed, the same officers, the same ordinances, the same teachings and practices, which that old sect had, you have found the right church, the true church of Jesus Christ, that God will own and bless, and not have aught against us as long as it lives up to its creed (the Bible).—Ibid., p. 8.

The promised seed, which is Christ, having come into the world, all power in heaven and in earth is given to him. He establishes his kingdom with citizenship, conditioned upon obedience to the first principles of the doctrine of Christ,—faith, repentance and baptism, as enunciated by the Apostle Paul. See Hebrews 6:1, 2.—Christian Baptism, p. 5.

The question of sin, sins and death, in relation to mankind, is fully met and forever settled, in Christ Godward, that is, God has accepted it and became reconciled to the world.—The Atoning Blood of Christ, p. 3.

BAPTISM

For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. (1 John 5:7.) And so also is there but one ordinance of baptism by which they are all introduced into the one body or church.—Christian Baptism, p. 1.

As we have no account of the introduction of trine immersion this side of the apostles, it follows, as a logical sequence, that it is the "one baptism" in the text, and that Paul was not discussing the action in the performance of the ordinance.—Ibid., p. 2.

We have in Christian baptism, a trinity in unity, and a unity in trinity, one in three and three in one, one baptism by three immersions.—Ibid., p. 11.

It is emphatically declared that baptism is for the remission of sins.—Ibid., p. 14.

LAYING ON OF HANDS

Before the candidate arises from the kneeling posture, (after baptism), the minister lays his hands upon the head of the applicant, and in a brief prayer asks the Father for the gift of the Holy Ghost, after which the candidate arises, leaves the water, and is received by the members of the church into full fellowship.—E. M. Cobb, in Register and Leader, April 19, 1908.

The penitent believer . . . being then baptized . . . is a child of God, and has the promise of the Holy Spirit, for which the brethren pray and lay their hands on everyone they baptize, as did the apostles.—The House We Live In, p. 5.

OFFICERS

How completely this church was officered! There were the bishops or elders, overseeing the church. . . . Then there were the deacons, attending to the temporal interests of the church. . . . There were the teachers, instructing the ignorant and assisting the elders in feeding the lambs of the flock upon the sincere milk of the word. There were the evangelists, going like swift-winged messengers in all directions, publishing the glad news of the gospel to the world.—Which Is the Right Church, p. 8.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION

But, dear reader, the true apostolic succession is not a succession of ordinations, but a succession of faith and practice.—Ibid., p. 8.

FEET WASHING

The brethren, in the evening, in connection with the Lord's supper and the communion, wash one another's feet as the Lord commanded. A full meal is prepared for all the members present, and is placed on tables around which the members are seated as one family. Before eating, one brother arises from supper, girds himself with a towel, and both washes and wipes the feet of another, who then rises, takes the towel, girds himself with it, and both washes and wipes the feet of the next, and so on until each member has followed the example and command given by the Master. . . . The sisters, in like manner, wash one another's feet.—The House We Live In, pp. 10, 11.

COMMUNION

Immediately after the supper, the Lord instituted the communion—the bread and cup, commemorative of his death.—The House We Live In, p. 12.

They practice the feet washing, the Lord's supper and the communion all in connection, and in the night, as the Lord instituted them.—Ibid., p. 13.

ANOINTING THE SICK

The elders of the Brethren Church anoint such members with oil in the name of the Lord, when called upon to do so, because so commanded by the Holy Spirit.—Ibid., p. 14.

The Church of the Brethren disbelieve in going to law with a brother, in taking an oath before a magistrate, in war or retaliation, in becoming a member of secret societies, or in the foolish amusements and fashions of the world; yet they believe in the sisters having a prayer covering, in the holy kiss, wherein brother kisses brother, and sister kisses sister, and in temperance. They have a fashion of their own in regard to their head gear, although many are not observing that, and some of the Dunkards have a peculiar style of dress, made very plain, and generally of plain goods, although as they increase in wealth the goods used are quite expensive, as well as the hats they wear.

The generous heart should scorn a pleasure which gives others pain.—Anonymous.

By varied discipline man slowly learns his part in what the Master Mind has planned.—Nathan Haskell Dole.

It is a ridiculous thing for a man not to fly from his own badness, which indeed is possible, but to fly from other men's badness, which is impossible.—Marcus Aurelius.

COMMUNITY CHURCH WITH ADVANCED IDEAS

At a meeting yesterday afternoon in the home of Howard W. Evans, Gas Avenue, Northside, a constitution was drafted which provides for the creation of a congregation to be known as the Community Church of Pittsburgh and which will be undenominational and the initial one of its character in this country. It will have a charter membership of about fifty persons and the meetings will be held for the present in Schwerd Hall, 145 McClure Avenue, Northside. It was expected that Reverend Steward Smith would head the church, but he has been forced to decline on account of taking up Y. M. C. A. war work in France. He will leave Pittsburgh to-night for that purpose.

The creed of the new church will be broad enough to admit everyone who believes in the fatherhood of God, the immortality of the soul, and the brotherhood of man. Activity in the church is a condition of membership, and every member will be assigned some specific duty upon which he will be required to report. The constitution states that leadership shall be delegated as the need arises and that the compensation shall be an honorarium of a stated amount to be doubled each time the contributory membership is doubled. Thus the pastor's salary will depend on the efficiency of his work.

The church is to be made a center of social righteousness and civic progress, the constitution states, and its aim will be "to help the people in their daily work, to help them in the maintenance of sweet domestic relations and to promote child welfare and wholesome amusement."—Pittsburgh Dispatch, December 26, 1917.

THE FUTURE OF PALESTINE

The establishment of a great Jewish community in Palestine is now as certain as anything can be contingent on an allied victory. The forty small settlements already started, with a population aggregating 40,000 will be extended, enlarged, and drawn together into a self-governing republic under the auspices of the world's most liberal governments. And in the carrying out of the enterprise, the opportunity is presented to put to the test of practice those new social principles that have acquired universal acceptance in every enlightened democratic nation, but that have never been realized because of the inertia of the people and the power of the established order. The time is here when such a set of principles can be agreed upon by the most practical of men, provided only they are free of self-interest and have the courage of their convictions.

The new Palestine will be a land of agriculture, a miniature California, its farmers dependent upon community enterprise for the irrigation works and the fertilization without which the soil cannot yield generously enough to support the increased population that is planned. All the experience of the most enlightened communities in the United States, Australia, Canada, and other nations can be drawn upon to devise a method of financing and a system of land tenure that will assure the independence and prosperity of the humblest Zionist, provided only he have the will and the industry to contribute his share of toil. This question of land tenure is certain to be vital in the new colony. And there will be no excuse for a method of colonizing that will leave room for the land speculator, the taker of unearned increment, the usurious banker, or the monopolist of such community functions as the transporting and storing of the land's products.—The Public.

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD ENEMY PEOPLES

"We do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austrian-Hungarian Empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small.

"We shall hope to secure for the people of the Balkan Peninsula and the Turkish Empire the power and right to make their own lives safe, their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and from the dictation of foreign courts or parties.

"And our attitude with regard to Germany herself is of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German Empire, no interference with her internal affairs. . . . We are in fact fighting for her people's emancipation from fear along with our own—from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbors, or rivals, or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence or independence of the peaceful enterprise of the German Empire."—From the President's Message of December 4.

WHO ARE THE SLACKERS?

[The following appeared in the Macon (Missouri) Daily Chronicle-Herald for December 18, 1917, contributed by Elder A. M. Chase.—EDITORS.]

Slacker—One who fails to do his duty by his country in any time of stress, but more particularly in this time of our country's peril of war.

How is this war to be won for democracy? By conservation, or saving our resources.

Is the above definition and answer correct? If so, how many of us are willing to "do our bit" in this cause? We hardly take up a paper but we see something about conservation, urging the good housewife to be more careful not to use anything that can be put to our account as a nation in this battle of resources. "Use less flour, sugar, meat, and animal fats," is the constant cry, and we are even instructed to give the kiddies substitutes for the usual sugar candy which we have been taught was such an excellent food if not taken in excessive quantities.

I wonder how many of our men are willing to deny themselves of their usual tobacco in any of the several forms in which it is used and put the money so saved into Uncle Sam's hands in return for Liberty Bonds? Why should they not be asked to do their part as well as the kiddies and women "that the world may be made safe for democracy?"

It is a very moderate user of tobacco who does not spend as much to gratify that artificial appetite as would purchase the flour for a family of two. How many Liberty Bonds could be purchased for the money which daily goes up in smoke, or is otherwise consumed by our tobacco users in this broad land?

Of course we would not like to say that the men are slackers, yet if a slacker is one who refuses to enlist in the service of his country, either with his manhood or means—that this war may be won, do not those who will not deny themselves of that which can do no good other than to gratify an artificial appetite come perilously near the line where stands the company to whom we give the unlovely name of "Slackers?" Shall we ask the kiddies to do what we are too selfish or too weak to do ourselves? Are we slackers?

Children's Bureau War Time Program for Child Welfare

WASHINGTON, December 10.—The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor announces its War Time Program for Child Welfare in the fifth annual report made public to-day.

Young children and mothers need public protection. Through public effort some, at least, of the 15,000 mothers who die each year from conditions caused by childbirth and some of the 300,000 children who die under five years of age may be saved. The Children's Bureau's studies of child welfare abroad have shown that by the great efforts which Paris, Great Britain, and Belgium have made to give mothers and babies better care, they have reduced their infant death rates in the midst of war. The Bureau's studies of child welfare in this country show mothers and babies suffering and dying because nursing and medical care are not available.

Babies and older children need their mothers' care and decent home conditions. The bureau's infant mortality studies show that for this the fathers must have adequate income. In Manchester, New Hampshire, nearly three fourths of the mothers whose husbands earned less than $450 a year were gainfully employed; only about a tenth when the husband's wage was $1,050 or over. And the babies of mothers who went out to work died at more than twice the rate of more fortunate children.

That the chance of life of the baby grows appallingly less as the father's earnings grow smaller is shown by the combined results of the bureau's studies of infant mortality among 13,000 babies in eight American cities—Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Montclair, New Jersey, Manchester, New Hampshire, Brockton, Massachusetts, Saginaw, Michigan, New Bedford, Massachusetts, Waterbury, Connecticut, and Akron, Ohio. One fourth of all the fathers earned less than $550 a year; in these families every sixth baby died. Only about an eighth of the fathers earned $1,050 or more; of their babies only one in sixteen died. The rise of prices and the disorganization of social and industrial life with the war accentuate the importance of this persistent relation of income to infant mortality.

The special needs of soldiers' children, and the provision made by the governments of Canada and 12 other foreign countries were included in the bureau's studies of child welfare abroad. The new law providing separation allowances to the wives and children of American soldiers is based on this foreign experience and will do much to make possible for the children of our fighting forces the home life and parental care upon which the welfare of the country's children depends. Supplementary provision for extraordinary needs, and mothers' pensions for the widows of civilians will have to be made from local public or private funds if mothers are not to be driven by poverty to leave their children and go to work.

Children must be safeguarded from premature labor, and older children from overwork. Reports received by the Children's Bureau from France, England, Russia, and Italy have warned America that labor standards let down to speed up production must be restored to promote greater efficiency. For the sake of output, as well as of children, child-labor laws must be strictly enforced.

Children protected from work by child-labor laws should have full-time schooling, and especially in war time, children, whether at school or at work, need all the safeguards of peace, playgrounds, recreation centers, clubs, with increasingly skillful leadership.

The war time record of juvenile delinquency abroad shows, according to the Children's Bureau, that the sure penalty for neglecting the home, the school, and the play needs of children is an increasing stream of young delinquents brought to court for offenses that community foresight and care should have prevented.

Resolutions of Some Famous People

A good resolution is only a noble choice. It indicates a right use of the will. Many persons, who have won great fame, acknowledge their indebtedness to some good resolution, which they found in early life. Having made such a resolution they found it to be a spur to right conduct. No one should be afraid to resolve to do what he knows to be right and best for himself. It is manly to do so. The youth of to-day should be impressed with the importance of setting a high aim in life, and then pushing toward it with all their power. The following resolutions of some well-known people should prove a stimulant to the young people of to-day.

To rise above little things.—John Burroughs.

In my highest moments I have tried to subordinate my private interests to a common good. I have found this endeavor sufficient for the effort of a lifetime. The common good should be the North Star in all conduct.—Edwin Markham.

For many years my motto, by which I endeavor to guide the ordinary actions of life, consists of one word, which is "Stop." It is generally very easy to go on, no matter what you may be doing, good or bad. But to stop when the right time comes to stop is so difficult that I endeavor to keep continually in my mind the importance of so doing.—Frank R. Stockton.

Some years ago I resolved to cultivate habitual cheerfulness under all circumstances. It has not been an easy task, but I have succeeded, and now, drifting on to my eightieth birthday, burdened with heavy cares, stripped of those nearest and dearest to me by death, I am not sorrowful. I am not "going downhill," as people say of the old, but "uphill" all the way, and am sure that life is better farther on.—Mary A. Livermore.

I have, like other people, I suppose, made many resolutions that I have broken, or only half kept; but the one which I send you, and which was in my mind long before it took the form of a resolution, is the keynote of my life. It is this: always to regard as mere impertinences of fate the handicaps which were placed upon my life almost at the beginning. I resolved that they should not crush or dwarf my soul, but rather, be made to "blossom like Aaron's rod, with flowers."—Hellen Keller.

I hereby resolve that I will live honestly and walk uprightly before God and man. I will keep my lips wet with words of kindness, my heart pure with noble ideals, my hands clean with honorable actions. I will keep my body sacred and my soul free. I will strive to be rich in love, strong in gentleness, untiring in patience, abundant in hope. I will serve God by helping some of his children. I will always to be better than my word, and more liberal than my promise. Every day I will make the most of my time and the best of myself, and so be ready for the opportunities which God daily sends to those who are waiting for them.—R. J. Burdette.

The Study of Domestic Science

What study, in the wide area of subjects open to women of to-day, is more fitted for her natural acquirements and line of activity than that of domestic science? And yet, how surprisingly few of the young women are interesting themselves in it! Some scoff at the idea, and seem to feel that it is a subject upon which they must be comparatively ignorant in order to make a "success" in the world—at least from a business standpoint. This is a short-sighted position for an alert young woman to take, for more and more is it really becoming recognized that in order to become a "helpmeet," and to intelligently and faithfully perform her part of the dual contract when a home is established, the woman must be informed as to the duties she is assuming. It is her business to be efficient and capable in her part of the partnership of life. It is a work which calls for responsibility, thoroughness, good judgment, adaptability and the ability to blend all into a harmonious, individual, and serviceable whole. The mind of a competent homemaker is broadened along many channels; it must grasp the principles of different trades and sciences; it must understand something of sanitation, food combinations, decorative effects, plumbing, comfort, appointments—and the long train of other necessary qualifications.

It is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when domestic science will be taught in every public school, and our girls everywhere be impressed with the desire and the determination to prepare themselves to properly and efficiently manage a home, whether that home shall be in the shelter of a good man's care, or one small hall bedroom, from which she daily emerges to toil in other ways. We would find fewer unhappy homes, fewer divorce cases, fewer wrecks on humanity's shores, could this be accomplished. Young women would enter upon their life's tasks with a clearer idea of their scope, with a better understanding of their privileges, and better qualified to make a success of it all.

They will know how to economize, how to meet emergencies, and will better appreciate their positions as "helpmates," in all things which pertain to home life.

While I have referred more to the young women, the rule applies equally to older ones. We are never too old to learn better ways of doing things—better ways of managing, or in fact, to receive teaching along any line of thought or improvement. Many of the older ones have learned to be efficient managers of their homes, only through many bitter trials and experiences. When a young woman remarks, "I would enjoy a home of my own, if I thought I could ever conduct it in the systematic manner in which Mrs. B. manages hers!" she should feel that right then is the time for her to begin and learn how Mrs. B. does it. She should resolve that she will put forth every effort possible to her, to qualify herself along this most charmingly interesting science. A woman should understand that every attractive, well-governed home has its foundation in system; where there is system, there is order—even heaven's first law! So do not despise the old adage "A place for everything, and everything in its place"! It has been the keynote of many well-ordered households.

To the young woman of to-day, I would urge, in the strongest language necessary to impress it indelibly, endeavor to equip yourselves for the efficient conduct of a home. Avail yourselves of every opportunity to study this most vital of subjects; neglect no privilege of qualifying yourselves in this oldest of arts—the maintaining of a real home! Sooner or later, somewhere near or far, you will, without doubt, have the responsibility of household duties upon you—the happiness of its inmates resting in your hands. Be a real help and partner to your husband, giving lifts which will make his burden lighter, and a sympathetic and intelligent understanding of his efforts and aims. For remember, that his labor is not very exhilarating or exalting, when every scratch of the pen, or every stroke of the hammer, is simply to rivet a link in the chain of grim necessity! A wife, by cooperation, by intelligent management and economy, can aid, so much, the "wage-earner of her home," and thus help him to rise above obstacles to success. Some women, alas, never appreciate what is done for them, never realize how many burdens and buffetings she has been shielded from, until the battered old dinner-pail hangs, unused, beside the toil-stained coat that will never be needed again!

Oh, that we might have a domestic science class in every branch of our church, competent instructors provided, and our young girls well-grounded in the principles of home-making. Then our older women, too, will catch the spirit of progress and proper qualifying, and every home will feel the trend of the call to come up to higher grounds!

A Remedy for a Growing Evil

Chicago's Court of Domestic Relations has, in a number of recent instances, been privileged to pour oil on the troubled waters of domestic infelicities, by the tactful ministrations of Miss Mary Bartelme, in charge of that work. Naturally, she has ample opportunity for close observation, and considerable importance must, therefore, be attached to her recent statement regarding marital misunderstandings: "If we could find some way of restoring the fine old home spirit of the past, we would find a sure way of getting at the roots of a good bit of the divorce trouble." Her analysis of the matter is worthy of serious thought. Somehow, in this busy and bustling age, our Nation is fast losing the real home-making, home-keeping and home-dwelling spirit that, at its best, makes divorces practically impossible. A home that is merely a place in which to eat or sleep cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be regarded as a real home. It is just such a condition that furnishes the many divorce suits, continually crowding the calendars of our courts. A home must have attractions congenial to all, and, while it has wholesome liberties, there must also be duly recognized restrictions. All outside activities should be subordinated to the one supreme aim of making the home a real haven of rest to all its inmates. When the door closes, it must shut out the world, with all its troubles and perplexities. The ideal home must, in fact, be an antechamber of the better world beyond.—Selected.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

South Sea Islands Mission

Some time has elapsed since the HERALD has heard from us, but it is not due, however, to our forgetting the many HERALD readers who read the news of our mission. We left Tahiti June 2 for an extended tour through the upper islands, and just returned to Tahiti the middle of this month. Five months and a half is the longest trip we have made yet in this mission, and its length seemed much greater because of the absence of our companion, who was detained in Papeete.

Upon our return to Tahiti we found Brother and Sister Robert T. Brown, from Merlin, Ontario, in Papeete. We are overjoyed with the enlargement of our missionary force. We hope, pray, and work for greater results during the years before us. They are at the present time trying to decipher the means by which they may be able to keep from saying what they do not want to say, and say what they want and ought to say. It is one of the many difficult things met in this field. Success is their goal and we have no doubt as to their reaching it. It is sure.

Our mission work is still moving, notwithstanding the many and peculiar obstacles with which we come in contact. The war's influence has not seriously affected us in that our numbers have been reduced to any degree. Rumor after rumor comes to our ears that the Tuamotuan inhabitants are to be drafted for the front, but up to the present time no action has been taken. We have many young men in these islands, and should the bloody hand be stretched toward them, disaster is sure to be the result in some of the branches.

We read with much interest and pride of the strides being made in the home land in Zionistic conditions, and we are laboring with our might in these isles, endeavoring to establish the Zionistic spirit among our native brethren. All points to the hastening time of the Lord. May we stand, faithful and true, with unexcelled loyalty to the banner of righteousness.

Still fighting,

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

Rhodes Dedication

A two-day meeting and the dedication of their comfortable little church was held at Rhodes, Iowa, December 29 and 30, Brother O. Salisbury, district president, assisted by the writer, being with them. Three preaching services were held each day, with Sunday school and Religio sessions on Sunday. Brother Salisbury delivered the dedicatory sermon Sunday morning, the writer offering the dedicatory prayer, each taking his turn in the other services.

Although the weather was very severe, the attendance at all the services was exceptionally good and the Saints are to be commended for the efforts made.

A brief history of the branch was given by Brother Charlie Richeson, branch president, showing the branch to have first been organized about 1868, under the name of the Independence Branch, with fourteen charter members, two of whom are still living: Sister Anna Nirk and Brother I. N. White. Brethren William C. Nirk and James Z. Smith were baptized January 19, 1868, Brother Nirk being ordained an elder and Brother Smith a teacher on the same day. The branch has continued to grow until at the present time they have a membership of one hundred and sixty. The name of the branch was changed in 1881 to the Edenville Branch, and again in 1902 to the Rhodes Branch. In 1894 they organized their first Sunday school, through the instrumentality of Sister Mattie Hughes, who has continued a faithful worker and to whom much credit is due for the present condition of the work at that place. In 1912 Brother William Nirk passed away and for a while they were without a leader, Brother Charlie Richeson being ordained a priest soon after and later to the office of elder.

Meetings were held in private houses until 1914 when a hall was rented for a short time and a lot was purchased for $139.75. A little later the present building was erected at a cost of $2,167.75, making a total cost of $2,317.50. Of this amount $1,006.00 has been raised since May, 1917. Surely they have made sacrifice and are entitled to enjoy the fruits of their labors, and we pray that under the guidance of their present leader, Brother Richeson, and his able collaborators, and others who may be chosen from time to time, they may continue to develop and grow on toward perfection.

All rejoiced in their newly acquired home, as it was dedicated to the service of God, and especially was Sister Mattie heard to express it as one of the happiest moments of her life.

To say that the visiting brethren mentioned enjoyed the services and the genial hospitality of the good Saints there, is putting it very mildly, for we were made to realize a goodly degree of the Spirit was present throughout the services.

May the Father continue to be with them and abundantly bless is our earnest prayer.

Serve, not rule; be least, not greatest; last, not first, meek, not proud; poor, not rich; feel sinful, not righteous; weak, not strong; be pure in soul and not merely ceremonially correct; regard God who sees the heart, and not man who sees externals; found the Kingdom of God within and not without; let it develop secretly and slowly and not come suddenly with ostentation or by observation, and if need be let its citizens be recruited among Gentiles and even outcasts.—G. The Protecting Hand of God

I am one of those who settled with the first colony at Jaffa in 1866, so I have had some "ups and downs" in my life.

We have always looked forward with awe to the time when Turkey should fall, knowing it would cause trouble in Palestine, but when talking it over mother would say: "Do not worry, Mary, for when that time comes, if you will be faithful you will be led to a place of safety." Now I think it quite wonderful how, after my husband's death, I was led to come out to this lonely but peaceable spot during the terrible war in Europe.

Before leaving Jerusalem, in 1911, in a dream I seemed to be above Jerusalem, and watched mountain after mountain (for there were many of them) arise, turn into volcanoes with fire spurting out most terribly. I looked on in wonder, then seeing that it did not cause our home at Jerusalem to catch on fire, I said in wonder, How wonderful it was that the place did not ignite with that fire all around it. And I seemed to know and thank God for its protection.

In 1912, while in Egypt, when the war was being waged with Italy over Tripoli, I seemed to have the assurance that that was one of the volcanoes.

Since seeing how nation after nation has arisen, if He allows me to live to see the home at Jerusalem whole, how thankful I shall be to him for comforting me with dreams in these trying times.

According to the papers there has been a massacre, probably reaching twelve miles inland at Jaffa; so if reports are true, our property would be destroyed. But as that was the starting point of the colonization, and if our going there was, as we have thought, by the leading of God, he surely will protect that place.

So you see I am hopeful and interested in watching for the end of the war.

"Let the Privileges of the Lands Be Known"

The gathering, redemption of the land and building up of Zion, as part of the gospel plan, were committed to the church of latter days in its organization, and again in its reorganization. Malachi 3:6 declares that God changes not; James 1:17 confirms the thought, assuring us that in the Father of lights, from whom comes every good and perfect gift, there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Through the first prophets to latter-day Israel (Doctrine and Covenants 2:1) we have been reassured that the works, designs and purposes of God cannot be frustrated nor come to naught that he does not vary from that which he has said; that his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round. Through the voice of inspiration he has also instructed us to search the commandments of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises therein shall all be fulfilled.

We refer you to sections 122:6; 126:10; 127:7; all of 128.

God has not changed; that which he purposes he will do, and he works largely through human instrumentality. Do we believe in him? Are we making full preparation to meet his requirements?

We believe, from daily inquiries received, that the spirit of the gathering is growing among the Saints. Many manifest an earnest desire to locate in organized territory, in harmony with the law.

Six months have passed since the organization of Far

West Stake. Each of the nineteen branches has been visited and a careful study made of land values and of opportunities in general. Sixteen counties in Northwestern Missouri comprise our territory, and after years of experience in the real estate business in Jackson and adjoining counties and four years' residence in the former Far West District, I am prepared to say a better section than Far West Stake, for those desiring to engage in agricultural pursuits, would be hard to find. The land, generally, is well watered. The soil on the bottoms is a deep black loam, especially adapted to corn; the table lands are of a lighter yet very productive soil, suited to small grain, fruits and meadows; the more rolling and hilly parts are unsurpassed for blue grass, clover and pasture. Considerable timber land remains; oak, hickory, walnut, ash, elm, and many other varieties suitable for building and fencing purposes. Oats this year made from 35 to 80 bushels an acre; corn, from 30 to 85; wheat, from 15 to 35. The price of land varies from $65 to $200 an acre, according to location and improvements. In the immediate vicinity of Saint Joseph, prices are higher, ranging from $200 to $300 an acre.

This is a very good section for poultry and stock raising; recently, sheep especially have proven a money maker. The honey bee does well here.

In some parts the land is underlined with coal, there being a number of mines in operation near Richmond, Lexington Junction and Trenton.

At present we have two openings for blacksmiths—one at Far West and one at Kingston.

We shall be glad to hear from those who contemplate moving Zionward. As a result of correspondence, a number have already located within our boundaries and are assisting in building up the waste places of historic old Far West. We look forward to the coming of others. We are at your service; do not hesitate to write us.

Very sincerely,

B. J. SCOTT,

Bishop Far West Stake.

The Capture of Jerusalem: The Fall of Islamism

With the capture of Jerusalem by the British forces this month came a thrill of joy to my heart and gratitude toward God, for we have been awaiting this news month after month for three years. I know it will be a source of great relief to those of our number there, and I lost no time in trying to get mail to them via Egypt. Marvelous, too, does it seem, when we consider that Jerusalem was taken without bombardment of its sacred places, for Jerusalem next to Mecca and Meding is a most sacred city to Mohammedans. A Moslem must visit his shrine at Jerusalem before he can call his pilgrimage completed.

While we witnessed before leaving that country great patriotic demonstrations by the Turkish Government, together with the German colonists, we realized also that there was a great undertow of grave consternation felt by many Moslems as to the outcome of this great war. I well recall a day Sister Jenkins and myself were shopping, and we had strayed well into the Mohammedan quarter of the city. I had noticed a group of sheikhs (men of letters, at least, judging from their white turbans) upon our left, ardently engaged in conversation. You can imagine my surprise when one aged sire of the group turned and touched me upon the arm, inquiring in Arabic if I were an American and if I lived at the American colony. Upon being assured I was an American though not living at the colony, he asked in all seriousness if I thought Messiah was soon to come. I replied that I did not believe he would at that time. Again he questioned if I thought he would come that year. And when I answered that I believed it would be a few more years at least, a look of satisfaction came over his face, and he turned again to his friends who had been apparently listening. The real object of the inquiry I shall never know of course. But as we passed along I recalled the beautiful Golden Gate of the temple, which has long been closed, and the Mohammedan fear that some day a conqueror would come and enter by that gate, and that conqueror would be the Messiah, which would mean the downfall of Islam forever. While this time has not yet arrived, the passing of Jerusalem from Moslem to Christian rule will mean much to the Mohammedan.

I am very much interested at present to know just what weight the letter written by Doctor James L. Barton, secretary of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, to Senator Lodge, setting forth reasons against a declaration of war on Turkey as well as Bulgaria, will have with this Government. Despite the fact that a few of our statesmen have said the only real way to champion the cause of the Armenians, the Syrians, the Jews and the Greeks, would be to make war upon their enemy the Turks, I believe Doctor Barton is right in his argument, as he has been able to view that situation at close range. In brief he declares that Turkish officials are impressingly friendly toward the United States," and that such an act would be "destructive to American interests in Turkey, and to the innocent people of the empire who are suffering at the hands of their lord almost as much as the people of Belgium, Serbia, and German Poland suffer."

While our property losses would be very small compared with those of other institutions, I should feel very sorry indeed to learn that the small beginning we had made during our fifteen months stay there, had been completely undone by ravages of the Turkish officials. Of course if the British continue to hold their positions there (and we sincerely hope they will) there will be no chance for such depredations, unless the Turks took such liberties before this time. However we do know that whatever has been undone, God will set to rights in due time, for his work must prosper.

I believe it will not be long now before we shall hear from our people in Jerusalem, for I am confident that the British will do all in their power to relieve the strain of misery which has been so long endured there. Ships are undoubtedly plying daily now between Port Said, Egypt and Jaffa with supplies (a night's journey), and I have great hopes that we shall soon be in touch with our Saints there.

Suggestions to Local Ministry

Herald Editors: I am inclosing carbon copy of "Suggestions to the local ministry." The original was sent to President Frederick M. Smith. These suggestions have been handed to the members of the local ministry under the Los Angeles charge.

I have divided the territory occupied by the Los Angeles church into seven districts and have placed an elder or priest in charge of each district. I have also placed a teacher to look after that department of work.

My plan is to have these men take charge of their respective districts, secure new openings for preaching, organize Sunday schools and visit each member in their respective charge.

Each man is expected to be in his district on Sunday and any other day he can devote to the work.

I have prepared a local church directory and divided the membership into "Active," "Passive," "Bad Standing," "Absent from city," and "Lost." In addition to this I have another classification covering the names of "Resident" members who do not belong to our branch; also "Inquirers."

During the last three months I have succeeded in locating about fifty members whose whereabouts were unknown. Letters of removal have been sent to most of these.

We hope for good results. The New Year finds us fully consecrated, with our sleeves rolled up and ready for hard work.

Greetings of the season. May this be our "bestest" year. We must go over the top with colors flying, the enemy routed, and peace achieved.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

PREPARATION

Preparation and fitness is essential to success in all walks of life. No man can succeed in church work unless he masters every detail of his profession. He must avail himself of every possible means making for efficiency.

There is no royal road to success. It has been aptly said that "Genius is the ability to work hard." Desultory, sporadic effort is of little avail. Persistent application, coupled with ordinary ability, will win.

MUST BE STUDENTS

The Lord has commanded us to "seek to be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God." We are commanded to "study all good books." This implies research and application. Paul instructed Timothy to "give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," and "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

CORELATION

All church work is corelated. The church of Christ is a theocracy. Inspiration emanates from the head, not the feet. This precludes the "rule of the mob." There is no place for anarchy. Liberty, yes, but not license. Every man attends to his own duty. To win respect one must render respect to others. Let every man occupy where God hath placed him. Fraternity and priesthood are synonymous.

MINISTERIAL DIGNITY

Comport yourself as a minister of Christ. Refrain from telling jokes. Use chaste and becoming language. Be exemplary. Maintain your dignity. Do not lower yourself in your own estimation nor in the estimation of the Saints. Make your influence elevating. Do not be officious. A man can be a gentleman, and at the same time, be pleasant and agreeable.

BE OPTIMISTIC

Be optimistic. Do not be a conveyer of pessimistic germs. Do not repeat any scandal heard in other quarters. If any member recounts a grievance to you endeavor to dislodge it. In most instances a tactful worker can dissipate imaginary wrongs and settle difficulties without even calling in the second party. If this cannot be accomplished have the party make his charge in writing and turn same over to the pastor. Cultivate the habit of seeing the bright side of things. This is God's work. We cannot fail.

RULES FOR VISITING

Do not approach the membership with an air of superiority. Do not assume an "I-am-holier-than-thou" attitude. Treat each individual as an equal. Make him feel that "we are workers together with God."

Avoid, as much as possible, any reference to "authority."

"priesthood," or "duty." Manifest the spirit of comradeship, mutual love and friendship.

Reach the members on their social side. Talk with them on their business and social interests. Touch their human sympathies. Avoid the "church" tone. Eschew religious cant. Under no circumstances "lecture" them as to their duties. Allow for individual expression. Make them feel glad that you called and look forward with joy to a return visit.

Point out the way in which each individual may render service without drawing attention to his past derelictions. You cannot create interest by upbraiding a man or telling him of his shortcomings. The spirit of this work is manifested in loving, not driving; in drawing, not forcing.

Create interest by reviewing church activities. Recount attractive features. Relate special blessings. Outline opportunities for doing good. Impress upon each member that the church needs his services. Discover his particular talent. Show him where he can fit in. Assign work to the different members and trust them to accomplish same. Make your appeal along altruistic rather than selfish lines.

In speaking of family duties let your advice be general rather than specific. If you have occasion to feel that family prayer is neglected do not humiliate the "head of the house" before his entire family. Confer with him in private.

Cultivate the habit of listening as well as talking. Do not assume the role of "know it all." Be modest. The real work of the visiting officer is to "draw out" the members. The "cramming" process is ineffective. Encourage the members to relate their experiences and recount their difficulties. You can in a few, well-chosen sentences, meet their demands and leave them rejoicing in the help secured. Do not talk about yourself, what you have done, or what you are doing.

STUDY FITNESS

Do not force a prayer on the people. Let the suggestion come from your host. Always remember that you are a guest. If the Spirit indicates you may, with propriety, suggest a season of prayer. Study the eternal fitness of things.

Avoid set phrases and stilted terms. Be human. Be natural. Adapt yourself to the circumstances. Some of the best "official" visits ever made were out at the woodpile helping the man stack wood or holding the baby while the mother washed dishes.

BE A MAN

Be a man first—a minister afterwards. Be social. Be pleasant. Cultivate love for the children. If the dog licks your hand you may know that you are showing the right spirit, toward the rest of the family. Let your visit be a benediction—a joyous welcome—an anticipated repetition.

THE PROPER APPROACH

Judgment must be used in calling on members. In some instances it is best to make arrangements before hand. This can be done in a casual way by saying, "Brother Brown, I am thinking of coming out to spend the evening next Wednesday, will you be at home?" This will have a much better effect than if you say, "I am coming out to your house next Wednesday evening on an official visit and I would like for you to have all the members of your family present." If an officer would thus accost me I would be tempted to tell him that I did not wish to see him. The more we forget that we are officials and realize only that we are men and brethren the better it will be for all concerned.

UP-TO-DATE

Keep in close touch with every member of your charge. Be awake to their life problems. Know what difficulties they are encountering. Render assistance wherever possible. Acquaint yourself with the different classes of business so that you will be in a position to converse intelligently with the different business men in your charge. Advise them of any new departure coming under your observation relating to their lines of business. Be up-to-date regarding everything which concerns the members of your flock.

Study the needs of wage workers and note what each one is adapted for; keep your eyes and ears open to discover an opportunity whereby he can improve his condition. Keep in touch with the labor market. Learn where workers are in demand along given lines. Use your best endeavor to "place" all those who need employment to the best advantage. An idle body is as much your concern as an idle spirit. Keep in touch with the Employment Bureau of the local church.

If you know of any places where purchases may be made to advantage inform the members of your charge. In case any member has supplies or provisions to dispose of post him in regard to available markets. Endeavor to bring the producer and consumer together.

When any member of your charge is sick, visit him. Tell the other members about it. In case one is in need, enlist the assistance of the other members and, if you cannot meet the demand, tell the pastor and he will give the matter his immediate attention.

Induce each family or single member to subscribe for the church papers, HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Journal of History, etc. [Correspond with the advertising manager at the Herald Office for assistance in this work.—EDITORS.]

Where a Sunday school is established enroll the members in the home class department and report same to the home class superintendent.

KEEP TAB ON MEMBERS

Report any change of address, name and address of new members, name and address of all friends and inquirers and any other information which may prove helpful to the pastor.

We wish the following information in regard to each member, and ask your cooperation in securing same. We will supply the necessary cards containing the items required.

It is very necessary that we secure the husband's and father's name. Should the member become "lost" to this church it is much easier to locate from directory the name of the husband or father. By securing the names of two persons who are well known in the community or to the church who are friends or relatives of the party it will be easy to trace, in case the members remove without giving address.

Let us make the year 1918 the most eventful in the history of our work.

Spokane District

The Spokane District conference has just closed, and we are glad to report that it was the best attended conference ever held in Spokane. Our friends in the city were well in attendance, which fact we were glad to note.

We are glad to see a steady growth throughout the district, both in the Sunday school and the church and a good foundation is being laid for future work.

Sunday school and Religio conventions convened December 7. That evening an interesting program was rendered under the direction of Brother Daniel Macgregor, who made us a timely talk on patriotism, also preaching a wonderful discourse at the close of the conference, which it will be well for some of our brethren to fall in line with, defending the Government which gave birth to all that is dear to us as Saints of God. We were also favored with a talk by Brother William Aylor and a talk by Brother Greene. We are glad to have these brethren with us especially at this time, giving the Saints throughout the district an opportunity to hear the advice and words of comfort and encouragement. May we take this advice in the good spirit that it was given, also heed the council of those who are the watchmen on the towers of Zion. These brethren have preached alternately during this week. Brother Greene talked under the auspices of the Ad Club and Red Cross Society at the Spokane and Davenport Hotels. The meetings have been well attended at the church during the week and all seem to be encouraged by the instructions that have been given.

Brother Charley Crabb and Sister Olive Tomlinson were recently married by Brother Macgregor.

Our reunion will be held at Coeur d' Alene, Idaho. This is a beautiful place on the Coeur d' Alene Lake, just a few blocks from the depot and hotel. As far as accommodations are concerned, it is the best place we have had yet. Only six months until the reunion, so now is the time to start to prepare to go and enjoy a good time.

Our gathering together at this time was a success in all departments. All seemed to enjoy themselves and we are glad to see the work moving along in the right way, our prayers ever being for the success of the work and the building of Zion.

CORRESPONDENT.

PERRY, IOWA, December 11, 1917.

As the end of the year draws near, we feel impressed that a few items from this part of the vineyard may be of interest. With few exceptions, the Perry Saints have been active and truly rejoicing in this great work, yet, as we glance in retrospect over the efforts of the past year, we are forced to admit that we have not fully availed ourselves of the many blessings that might have been ours, had we been alive to the duties and privileges that were ours to enjoy.

Nevertheless, we feel strengthened and encouraged, because the Lord has been pleased to remember us and to call to the offices of priest, teacher, and deacon three of our worthy brothers, thereby completing the branch organization. The newly ordained men are proving themselves alive to their duties and calling.

Priesthood meetings are held the first Sunday of each month, bringing about a unity of effort and enabling the branch officers to cooperate and coordinate with one another and to qualify for the greater responsibilities of this great work.

The Perry Saints were privileged to entertain the Des Moines district conference in June, and received much spiritual strength from the various services. The discourses of Brethren James Gillen and William Aylor being especially edifying and encouraging.

Our various organizations and helps are thriving. The Religio has just elected the new officers for the year and as we look back we feel that some progress has been made in the last year. A systematic effort has resulted in the observance of a number of special days, with suitable and well-rendered programs. One encouraging indication, especially to the program committee, is the spirit of helpfulness with which the members offer their talents in these efforts.

The Sunday school is preparing for the usual Christmas observance, and while it is planned to limit the efforts to conform to the spirit of the present strenuous times, we want our children to rejoice in the day as usual.

Our various departments of the Woman's Auxiliary are active in their respective departments. The educational class has enjoyed many pleasant evenings in the study of the church history, together with the current events. However, we feel the need of a more organized effort in the auxiliary work and hope to be able to secure the help of some of the experienced workers in the near future that our work for the coming year may conform to the general upward tendency.

Our branch president, Brother H. H. Hand, gave a successful series of lectures, with chart illustrations, on the prophecies as related to the Book of Mormon. Quite a gratifying attendance of outsiders with good attention was the result, and we feel that some good was accomplished. The brother is giving the series again at a country school eight miles out, by invitation of a union Sunday school in that district.

We are expecting to have the pleasure of having Brother J. J. Cornish with us in the near future for a series of meetings. From reports throughout the district we are due for a spiritual feast, and look forward to his coming.

May the Lord bless all engaged in this great work in its various departments and may each one sense his responsibility and privileges, and may we all feel the necessity of greater efforts and greater sacrifices for the new year, to the end that the work shall go on and be blessed, strengthened and encouraged, is the prayer of your sister in the one faith.

ESTELLE F. TAYLOR, Correspondent.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII,

December 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: We, here in the islands are greatly blessed with lovely weather, while many others are living in a freezing climate. We are enjoying the warmth and sunshine, and rejoice that we are permitted to bask in the sunshine of God's love. With the Psalmist, we can say that goodness and mercy hath followed us all the days of our lives, and it is the great desire of our hearts to dwell in the house of the Lord forever. It is the great desire of our hearts to see the church grow in grace and knowledge of the truth. I believe that in these islands they who are of the church seek nothing but the truth.

There have been a number taken into fellowship with us the past year, since Brother and Sister Miller and family have come into our midst; over twenty, I think. The services are much better attended, and a greater desire for the things of God are manifested among the Saints here, and it makes our hearts rejoice greatly, yet we desire to see them come up on higher ground. We desire greater spiritual gifts to be among us and want a more abundant outpouring of God's Spirit upon his people. We can say with the Psalmist: "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I appear before God? Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting."

We have a fine body of men here in the priesthood, men who are an example to the flock over which the Holy Ghost has called them to be overseers. They are men who are united in the work of God and for the upbuilding of his church and kingdom. It would take much space to elaborate on this, but I do hope you will have the pleasure of meeting our people in the near future.

Dear sisters, I wish you could meet with our Hawaiian sisters. They are women of whom the church may well be proud; women of whom it can be said as of Mary by the Lord himself: "She hath chosen the better part which shall not be taken from her." They are faithful and true, while their whole desire is to do the will of God and to accomplish the work he has called them to do.

It would be a pleasure for the Saints everywhere to meet with our children in Sunday school. It would do your souls good to walk into the church some fine Sunday morning and see our beautiful, bright, intelligent little ones and it would make your hearts leap with joy. How I love this people! My heart is knitted to them as were the hearts of David and Jonathan of old.

Dear Saints, I remember all of you in my prayers, and desire that you remember us, for it is written that the prayers of the righteous avail much. Aloha, aloha, aloha, nui from

Your brother,

THOMAS CLANCY.

SARGENTVILLE, MAINE, December 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our work thus far this year has had at least a temporary effect in some places, and we trust we have accomplished permanent good in others. The latter is due to our extended stay, and the providing of local men to look after the work; the former, the result of our being unable to make more than a brief stay, and the impossibility of getting capable local men to care for the work after we left.

There are many grievous wolves entering in nowadays in the form of moving pictures, dance halls, auto excursions, and lodge functions that are sapping the spiritual life out of many young people in these rural communities. Some are so engulfed by these things that they have actually suggested the putting off of religious services that they might attend the amusements, and yet not miss any of the meetings. Church work for the most part seems a secondary consideration.

A deplorable feature is the desire of some of our people to cancel services that they might go to some other place of enjoyment. Perhaps this may be all right when all are affected or interested, as attending a silver wedding of a neighbor, or something that has been previously arranged, but I doubt seriously the practicability of doing so in a great many other cases. In one instance I noted there was a prayer service in our church, and a moving picture show not far away on the same night. The absence of our young on that evening was very conspicuous, only a small number going to prayer service. What is true in this case, is true in other places in the State.

The conditions in Maine are radically different than in any State I have been in. During the summer months it is given over largely as a playground for the well-to-do people of this country. Thousands upon thousands come from Chicago, Philadelphia, and other cities and take up houses along the shore, in inland towns, and along the lake fronts. Business, religion, and the serious aspect of things, are totally forgotten in their wild scramble to have a gay time in every way the human mind can conceive of. The spirit of this element is being imbibed more and more by the people each year, and some of our own people too, and if they have not a strong mind, and a stiff backbone they are utterly carried away by the temptations they meet. Morality is a thing least considered by a great number in their endeavor to go the limit.

To induce the people to get out of the swirl is a hard thing to do. Quite a number of people have said to me: "Elder Koehler, I would join your church, but I know that I would not feel to attend the dance and movies after doing so, and as there are no other amusements, I cannot make up my mind to join just now." Some of our people would suggest that if they did not care to give these pleasures up, that they were not yet converted or that they didn't love the Lord. This may be true in some cases, but in a great many it is not so. It is a serious case with them, that if the church does not provide for their amusement, just where they can go to get it. And every boy and girl knows, although it has been forgotten by a great many older folks, that this desire must be gratified or they suffer. The trouble is that a great number of our people are not converted to the imperative need of making provisions for the youth of our church. The neglect of doing so has been the means of condemning many young souls. Where our people are taking an interest in the young, and although some attend the movies occasionally, you can most always see them at their places in church and prayer services. Where they do not take an interest in the young, you can invariably find them at some place of amusement or at home. This is not anything strange. It is a serious proposition that must be considered by us here if we are to save our young people from this deplorable situation that has arisen. Suggestions have been made and urgently given, but in most every case they have been entirely ignored.

A lack of real life in the auxiliaries, Sunday school and Religio particularly, is responsible for this condition. The people here with few exceptions do not recognize the value of good working auxiliaries in their midst, and are quite satisfied with but a little preaching now and then with only the mildest effort put forth in behalf of the Sunday school and Religio. And it is not altogether their fault, for thus far many have not come in contact with a first-class school or Religio that is actually accomplishing much for the young people. Until they are privileged to see the results accomplished by great effort along these lines, it will undoubtedly remain a difficult matter to instill the desire to promote the work of these auxiliaries for the benefit of the young, thereby greatly aiding the church work also. How many of us owe our spiritual growth and development to the Sunday school, Religio, or both!

It seems there is the necessity of some one occupying much of his time here in the interest of the youth in Sunday school, Religio, Oriole, and other organizations to properly meet the demands of the youth. The missionary cannot do this work efficiently, as the means of travel and the territory to cover would occupy too much of his time and would be an added expense, often too much to be met by him.

Elder John Sheehy and I have labored together in the Eastern District for several months. We were pleased to see large audiences at Addison, South Addison, and Indian River. The numbers attending our services at Indian River were a surprise to us, as few have attended our services there during the past ten years. Our association certainly was congenial.

I wish to speak of the favorable outlook for our work in Dixfield, Vinal Haven, and Sargentville where some have been baptized and the Saints strengthened in the faith. Our work in Dixfield and vicinity has been on the decline for several years, and it made our hearts glad to see the young men in particular come to the front. The integrity of the older Saints there is also worthy of our mention, for they certainly labored diligently for the onward progress and revival of the work, and we trust their efforts will be abundantly blessed in the future.

Splendid signs of life are being manifested at Mountainville and Stonington where Brother George Knowlton is assiduously working to develop the cause.

I have been unable to do any speaking to any great extent during the past three weeks on account of a bad case of laryngeitis. I am much better now and expect to get to work soon again.

Sincerely,
H. ARTHUR KOEHLER.

DALLAS, TEXAS, December 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: While we have had some cold weather here we have not let that interfere with the onward trend of the work. Elder Simmons has been with us for the past two weeks, and holding nightly meetings. The interest is good. Brother Simmons got into a conversation with a Congregationalist minister of a small church in the suburbs, and resulted in his being asked to preach for them. He is holding the interest there.

Bishop McGuire occupied morning and evening of the second, and the evening sermon was so impressive that we omitted the closing hymn, not caring to disturb the thoughts. We simply asked the congregation to arise for the dismissal prayer. It is not often we get such a spiritual awakening and can therefore appreciate it.

Yours truly,
J. E. NICOLL.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, December 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: This, I believe, is my first attempt to write anything to the HERALD. However, I wish to submit a few of the many thoughts had in regard to the great events that are now transpiring in the world.

Like many others, no doubt, I was wonderfully impressed by reading the prophetic declaration given by Brother Elbert Smith at the November sacrament service in Lamoni, and which was published in a recent HERALD. Was especially impressed with the statement that we should not be unduly concerned about being few in numbers as compared with the world, that the Lord had many spiritual forces at work, that we know not of. In this connection I want to mention an article I read in the November 10 number of Collier's magazine entitled "The future of socialism," by Charles Edward Russell, and which to me was wonderful.

The socialism he speaks of is not the kind one hears from soap boxes on street corners as he expresses it, but all I could think of while reading it was that the Lord permitted him to have a vision of the ideal conditions that would exist if we would but follow the teachings of our Savior; the conditions he describes and which he calls "true socialism" are what we understand as Zionite conditions. He tells how they can be obtained (from his point of view). We as God's people know how they can be obtained, but who in the world would read an article and what periodical would accept an article and print it, written by a Latter Day Saint, if he were known as such? describing Zion and how to obtain it. While there are exceptions to every rule, speaking in general such a person would be ridiculed even if a popular magazine could be prevailed upon to print it. It would not carry much weight. We speak of people, not individuals, as no doubt there are always individuals seeking for light and intelligence, and isn't it true that individuals only accept and obey the gospel, one here and one there, no community or nation ever did or I guess ever will; while on the other hand, communities and large numbers of people are accepting socialism, and if they were accepting the socialism depicted in this article by Mr. Russell, which eliminates politics and other similar features and brings out clearly the teachings of Christ and true brotherhood, they would not be many steps from the right way and could in consequence be easily directed.

And so I see in Mr. Russell and many other writers at this time, who are calling people to higher ideals and conditions, the forces God spoke of in that prophetic declaration mentioned. And would not be at all surprised if Mr. Russell and others did not know themselves, that they are but instruments in God's hands doing their part to help bring about his purposes. If this is so, how grateful we should be that we are so wonderfully blessed as to be in God's confidence concerning these things, that we can be in direct communication with almighty God himself, due to our having obeyed his commandments to the extent that we were baptized and received the gift of the Holy Ghost which leads and directs us unto light, truth, and intelligence, and if we offer ourselves to him to use as he sees fit, couldn't we be useful instruments? I should think so. The time has come for us to waken if we have been sleeping on our privileges, and be attentive and ready for orders from on high which we should execute with all diligence, not neglecting however to do the little, ordinary things that come our way and need to be done, for who knows but that may be all that will be required of us and if we pass them by waiting for the big things to come we may be called from this sphere of action and have not even the little deeds of kindness, love, and charity, which we can execute every day, nay every hour, to our credit.

May the good work go on, which we feel it is, as we have no doubt it is, as God is manifesting his pleasure and will concerning us from time to time as we read in the HERALD and Ensign, and from our observation. We notice the tendency to higher ideals among the Saints here in Brooklyn, as elsewhere.

May we, all of God's people, so live that we may be among those who shall inherit the earth which we read in Doctrine and Covenants 85:4 need be sanctified from all unrighteousness that it may be prepared for celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father. May it be our happy lot to be considered worthy to partake.

Faithfully yours,
KATHERINE NICHOLS.

ANDOVER, MISSOURI, December 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am writing a few lines to tell you how busy our small branch is in trying to raise a big Christmas offering to help pay the church debt. We are none of us rich in this world's goods but we are trying to do our best.

We were made to feel very sad when one of our workers was called home to the paradise of God. David Dale, the ten-year-old son of Brother and Sister David Perry, departed this life November 23, 1917, and was laid to rest in the Andover Cemetery. He was a bright, earnest, faithful worker, and was loved by all who knew him. He is greatly missed in the home and in the junior class at Sunday school. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved parents, and we hope they may find some comfort in the words of the poet:

I may not know the reason why
Dark clouds so often veil the sky,
But though my sky be smooth or rough
The Lord knows why and that's enough.

Your sister,
JANE E. STANLEY.

LOCK NO. 4, PENNSYLVANIA, December 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: I get much good from the efforts of others to write, because we are hungering to hear from our brethren and sisters, to learn what they are doing throughout the church so we can compare our part of the work with theirs. It seems to me when I read so many inspiring letters I surely feel my unworthiness to even try to write. The things that are coming to pass about us cause us to wonder—perilous times, men's, women's, and even children's hearts wax cold. They love pleasure more than God. They are haughty, high-minded, boasters, and proud.

We can see advancement in our branch. It is doing well and our brothers and sisters are learning the law of tithing as well as other laws. That goes to make a lively branch. Our branch numbers between sixty and seventy. Some others are near the kingdom. Our Sunday school is growing, our average each Sunday being from fifty to fifty-five. You see we have a good-sized school. We are doing our bit in the Christmas offering. Last year we had $12. We have at the time I am writing, $75 to $100. We are anxious to see the debt paid.

We understand and teach our people that the debt must be paid before Zion can prosper as it should, the temple of the Lord be built, and a place of safety for the Saints of God to dwell in made ready. We are only praying that the brethren who are in charge of the finances will use them wisely, so that we all as the years go by, may have increased faith in the ones who are at the heads of the different bodies of the greatest organization on earth.

We have a Religio and there is a growing interest manifested in it. We have from thirty to forty each Friday evening. The lessons are inspiring.

We hope the young men and women will cultivate the gift of song and knowledge so that in the future when the endowment is given, and they are called to labor for the last time in the vineyard, they will be qualified to answer the call and go forth with power, healing the sick and lame and blind and casting out devils, and even raising the dead, being baptized for the dead, also. Paul says, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all?" Why are they then baptized for the dead?

We have with us Brother Alma Booker and wife, and they are a great help to us. We are blessed much in our place of meeting at present. We also purchased a tent last summer.

If any of the brethren who have labored here read this letter, I wish to tell you that your work has not been in vain. You all have friends who are not of the fold who often ask about you after you have gone, and we would like to see you again. We have several homes now that you could rest your weary bodies in. Brother O. R. Miller used to like hot buns as well as Brother Etzenhouser liked noodles. We all have our faults.

We are all doing our best to get our church publications before these people and to get our neighbors to read our books.

Your brother in Christ,
SAMUEL GASKILL.

HACHITA, NEW MEXICO, December 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the HERALD for November 28. I am that far behind in my church papers. I can't read very much at a time on account of my eyes. They get weak and tired easily.

I enjoy especially the letters from the different Saints; they are a source of inspiration to one who hears constantly the "Lord's" name taken in vain. I have been in the Army since last April, enlisted in Saint Joseph. If any of the Saints who are from there or around there and are now in the Army or Navy, I would appreciate corresponding with them. Address me Twelfth Cavalry Band, Hachita, New Mexico.

There isn't a single electric light in the town. All are either gas or coal oil. It is a very small place; more saloons than anything else. The camp is a mile from town and one walks through dust all the way.

I have placed all the Ensigns, as soon as I finished reading them, in places where I know they will be seen, and I hope read. Also had a short argument with an old man. I found an Ensign that covered the point and gave it to him. He said it was fine, but said he didn't have time to read more. I told him it wouldn't bite him. I don't think he ever gave it a chance to.

It is my sincere desire so to live that I will be ready to meet my Master any time. I ask the sincere prayers of all the Saints for all of us boys in this great struggle. No one knows, except ourselves individually, the temptations which confront each of us each day. May God help us all is my prayer.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,
Your brother in Christ,
ROY F. URSENBACH.
Twelfth Cavalry Band, Clarinet Section.

MORRILL, NEBRASKA, December 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: This writing, two days before Christmas, finds the writer with wife and Lorne in our cottage on the treeless prairie in sunny Wyoming. To-day is Sunday, and it will be the first for some time that I have not officially occupied in the formality of divine service. But Henry Ford is somewhat tardy for the time being, the distance against a fierce wind is quite a consideration, hence the Sunday is spent in the quiet and solitude of our quaint little dwelling, as the first Sunday I have had at home for I don't know when.

My mission being applicable to both Wyoming and Nebraska, I am necessarily carried to quite a radius in different directions. New openings have been made and some baptized from time to time. Growth is steady, but sturdy. I know of scarcely an instance of hardness or trouble between members. They are not all afloat on that bark of spirituality which is destined to land them on the delectable shores of Zionian perfection, but withal there is a commendable reciprocity and fraternity between them.

Known to a few of the ministry and quite a number of our readers are Bridgeport, Bayard, Vance, Gering, Scotts Bluff, Bushnell, Wheatland, Slater, Fort Laramie, Torrington, and Morrill, at each of which or in its region the writer has discoursed during the past year.

Two winters ago we had a discussion with a kind of a Baptist preacher at Keystone, Nebraska, who came near being baptized immediately after the debate. He did not quite make the grade at that time, but followed to last General Conference, where he received baptism at the hands of Elder J. M. Stubbart. The same zealous and honest old convert returned to western Nebraska and actively advocated, as he understood it, the principles of his newly espoused faith to those whom he had previously baptized and proselytized to his former belief. Many became greatly interested in what he now offered them, determining to pursue his example, having unbounded confidence in him. Sister Lillie M. Richards, of North Platte, auxiliary worker, went among them at her own expense and brought them farther along. And later still Brother C. W. Prettyman by invitation went among them, who wrote me a few weeks ago that he had baptized—was it twenty-four or twenty-six? That old preacher-convert's name is J. M. Bryant, and he can do much good because he is much honest.

I don't know where Brother Stubbart is, but I presume he is one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles north of me in Wyoming. Brother Prettyman is in Scotts Bluff with his daughter and family, in waiting and lying low for Tuesday's turkey, as I saw him and visited briefly during the past week while en route home.

During the past summer, in answer to promise, I gave wife and boy an outing, taking them on trip through Wheatland Hills, where, way back many miles from town, live the Dodge family, Mrs. Dodge having been baptized by the writer last summer. There is where the mountain trout are; also the sage hens and the berries. We had the trout and the berries, and had my "twenty-two" done its duty we would have had sage hens. We motored on to Bosler, Laramie, Cheyenne, Fort Collins, the big city of Denver, and next to Wray, Colorado, conference, where we had a real old Canada time with many new acquaintances. It is many years since the writer was in Denver beyond merely passing through. A big bundle of fuel for the coming burning!

Our homesteading conditions and duties will be served to completion by about the first of June next, but our three years will not expire till next fall when we can prove up, acquire patent to our half section, and treat it as our own. Adjacent to us there is much irrigable land which will later be thrown open to filing. A railroad is sure, within a mile or two, and the big Government canal is on its way, and the powerful and gigantic drag lines are operating but seven or eight miles distant. Government land, well grassed, and with much fencing, is available at ten cents per acre adjoining, to lease.

We have not forgotten Independence, and it is hard to say what another winter will bring about. Just for the present we are experiencing—the family, and I when with them—a glorious immunity from what is hounding and tantalizing you in the populous centers. If you don't surrender you are "disloyal." If you assign your reason you are a "traitor." "Traitor" is the little infertile egg pinched off at the end of the season—the dingy smoke which ascends after the engine of intellect and reason has stopped.

For my part I cannot join the furious clamor of the howling rabble. The advice of Brother William's article in a recent HERALD is commendable. Certainly the old world is gasping its last. Look out, Brother Saint, or in your affected patriotism you will lose out elsewhere, like Cardinal Wolsey, the poltroon of King Henry, who, dying in disgrace, said: "Had I but served my God as I have served my king he would not have given me over in my gray hairs." Would you abstain from meat at the instance of an earthly ruler and yet not fast at the instance of God? God is judging the nations, and while his besom of destruction sweeps forth let us with divinely illumined countenances neutrally watch and wait.

My address remains Morrill, Nebraska. In latter March we expect to motor to Independence.

Watching the signs of the times, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

ALVIN KNISLEY.

SANDUSKY, MICHIGAN, January 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: On December 29 and 30 a spiritual and very successful two-day meeting was held at McGregor, Michigan, and though climatic conditions were not entirely in our favor, the thermometer being inclined to go down, and keep pretty close to zero, God's love and kindness under all circumstances was plainly comprehended.

Powerful and inspiratory sermons were delivered by Elders W. M. Grice, of Crosswell, Michigan; O. J. Hawn, of Bay City, Michigan; and Arthur Leverton, of Minden City, Michigan.

The morning social services of both days were of a high order, being well carried on by spiritual impetus.

The musical part which is always an important feature at such events was given due attention, Brother O. L. Thompson was given charge of same by vote of assembly. With as much talent as is always characteristic among God's children this department is speedily going upward.

The Saints at McGregor are a hospitable band. And very kindly ministered to the needs and comforts of those attending the services, for which commendation is due them.

All parted with a greater determination than ever to be true to the gospel of Christ, and help to win the great war for truth.

ORVAL L. THOMPSON.

ELGIN, ILLINOIS, December 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are a little band of Saints who are trying to let our light shine. There are Saints here who have grown cold in the work, so our great desire is to awaken the Spirit of this great latter-day work among them again. We have a regularly organized Sunday school and hold meetings every Sunday, at 320 Brook Street at 10.15 a. m. Sister Carrie Roth is our superintendent and we would be pleased to have visitors meet with us. We are proud of our attendance record for the last quarter, it was 100 per cent. Our Christmas exercises were held December 23 and all of the children took part.

We have not forgotten our Christmas offering, and we are trying to make it come up to the mark set by our bishop. Some of the elders come here from Chicago every second and fourth Sunday of each month, to preach to us and we invite all who can and have a desire to meet with us. We are looking forward to the time when we can have a member of the priesthood with us so that we can have prayer meetings regularly, and eventually have a branch here; for we feel that there are a number of honest ones here that may be brought into the fold. Wishing all the season's greetings, we ask you to remember the Sunday school in Elgin in your prayers.

Fordham, accepted, and Oliver Turnbull elected. Delegates to General Conference: S. S. Smith, Daniel Macgregor, Pearl Reed, Lewis Summers, Robert Newby, with W. F. Yates, Robert McDale, Oscar Case, Sister Robert McDale, Sister S. S. Smith as alternates. Resolution adopted that the Army should have one chaplain for every twelve hundred men, favoring the passage of House Bill 6320. Reunion committee elected: J. O. Hower, William J. Rhein, W. W. Fordham, Oscar Case, Henry Wing. Oliver Turnbull, secretary.

The Presidency

The notice appearing in the HERALD of December 19, 1917, with a request for annual report from General Conference appointees and those devoting their time to church work, should have stated that said report was desired for the conference year ending February 28, 1918. Those concerned please take note.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Church Secretary

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to secretaries of districts, stakes, and branches not in districts, addressed to secretaries when possible to obtain addresses. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1918 to President Frederick M. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri; as soon as practicable, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed by conferences held in the fall or winter should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in stake, district, or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are unnecessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; scattered and absent members may be included in the number; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned. Credentials should be made upon the official blank, for proper filing and ready reference.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

distinguished himself by capturing a contraband ship for which he was brevetted by President Lincoln. Married Josephine Margeson in 1871. Baptized in 1889. Died December 11, 1917, without previous illness, at Joplin, Missouri. Leaves wife, 5 sons, to mourn. Funeral at Saints' church, sermon by Charles Fry, assisted by F. L. English and Augustine Dwyer.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

Elder J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, is at this writing in the Sanitarium at Independence for treatment. He is suffering from exhaustion due to overwork. The outlook is good for speedy recovery but he needs rest.

A letter from Sister Dorothy Oliver, of Brodhead, Kentucky, tells us she misses very much the association of the Saints and longs for the privileges which a branch would furnish.

Brother Israel Goheen says the Saints at Butman, Michigan are enjoying much of God's special favor in spiritual and temporal blessings. He enjoyed Frederick M. Smith's

American Archaeology Is An Absorbing Study

The Book of Mormon gives us an advantage had by no other people. The true origin of the ancient inhabitants of this continent ceases to be a mystery and becomes a constant source of interest.

Archæology, the study of ancient buildings, monuments, etc., confirms our beliefs and proves a revelation to investigators.

The following books are especially valuable, and the "Autumn Leaves" during the coming year will have some especially good illustrated articles on this subject.

Archæological Committee's Report.
No. 142, cloth$.75

Issued by authority of the General Conference, being a report of the church committee on this subject. Contains findings on which we base our Book of Mormon geography to-day. Covers the ground extensively.

Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology.

No. 176, cloth$.60

The title is self-explanatory. A standard and easily read text for all Religio students. Written by Louise Palfrey Sheldon, one time editor of the Religio "Quarterly."

Book of Mormon Lectures.
No. 51, cloth$.75

A series of important lectures given by H. A. Stebbins at Independence, Missouri. A strong presentation of the subject, with abundant proofs from some of the most valuable books on the subject to be had.

address to the priesthood. He tells us that the Saints were admonished by the Spirit to be steadfast through the trying times that are at hand, that they may have communion with God and ultimate success in his work.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY

His many friends throughout the country have doubtless been wondering where they could write Bishop Kelley, since the item appeared that he had sold his home in Independence to the church for church offices. He writes us that probably until next June, his address will be 821 North Gilbert Street, Iowa City, Iowa. His wife and daughter Ruth are there, while the latter is completing her work at the State University of Iowa. Bishop Kelley expects to be in the field the greater part of the time after the middle of January. He is traveling in the interest of the church.

One of our missionary brethren wants a Corona typewriter. Who of our members has the agency now? Let us know. He is not averse to a good second-hand machine.

"The lecture given by E. D. Moore at the Saints' church, here at Rhodes, December 20, 1917, was well received, both by members and nonmembers. It was spicy and full of good suggestions. On account of bad conditions of the roads, and some sickness in the branch, it was not as well attended as it otherwise would have been."—Sister Mattie Hughes, Rhodes, Iowa.

Brother George Elson of Wayne, Nebraska, desires the prayers of the Saints.

Sister Mary Atwell, about 79 years of age, lives alone, does her own work, and is a great reader. She has read the Bible through 17 times, the Book of Mormon six times, the Doctrine and Covenants several times and is "still learning."

The Chelsea School in Kansas City had 208 new one dollar bills arranged around the room as a decoration at Christmas time, the offering they had raised for this year. Brother J. L. Winter says that though they nearly all work hard for daily bread, they are beginning with a greater determination to do more next year.

DECEMBER UNITY

One of the important features of Unity, the priesthood journal, for December is a discussion of the question: "Is the sacrament for the remission of the sins of the Saints, or not?" Then there is an editorial on the manner of baptism, the words to use and advice as to those not to use, another concerning a helpful circular, and a pastor's suggestion that local church directories are needed. Those of the priesthood not on the list should send in a quarter for a year's subscription—to this or the Ensign office.

Sister Sadie Long writes from Loveland, Iowa, to give the address of her son in his country's service. His name and address is Ray Long, Company 8, Puget Sound, Fort Worden, Washington. Anyone who can should call on him. He and his wife are new in the work, they being baptized shortly before he left.

HELPS FOR NORMAL STUDENTS

Brother L. F. P. Curry has gotten out some new leaflets of instruction on the normal course for teachers in Sunday school and Religio. He especially recommends the standard course which is not subject to the same criticism that the old course was. Those who do not have such information should drop a card to Brother Curry at 906 Carnegie Building, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The books for the course may be had of the Herald or Ensign offices.

A PASTOR'S WORK

At the business meeting of January 1, the Lamoni Branch resolved to appoint an elder or high priest in charge of each of the fifteen districts of the branch. On Sunday, January 6, President John F. Garver announced the men who were placed in charge. In number one, we note that E. D. Moore, assistant editor of the HERALD, associate editor of the Autumn Leaves, advertising manager of the Board of Publication, secretary of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Elders, secretary of the General Sunday School Association, secretary of the Lamoni Commercial Club, etc., on the afternoon of his appointment went to call upon the priest of his district and found him down with pneumonia. He notified the deacon for that particular district, asking him to call upon the family. The deacon did so immediately with the result that he made an appointment for himself and others, including Elder Moore, for Tuesday afternoon for a wood sawing bee. This is one of the honors that comes to high office. He who is greatest among you, let him be the servant of all. Reporting the incident the next day, Elder Moore paraphrased Cæsar's famous message to the Roman senate in this manner: "I came; I sawed; I ached."

An interesting lot of information was secured in a library survey made last summer by Brother F. J. Sharpe, of the Oland Branch, Blythedale, Missouri, in the Lamoni Stake. He sent out a questionnaire and secured among other items the following: Of the blanks sent out 75% were filled out and returned. Average numbers of papers and magazines taken 11½; the lowest was 5, the highest 20. Church periodicals were read in the following ratio of percentage: HERALD, 83½; Autumn Leaves, 75; Ensign, 16%; Journal of History, 8½; Unity, 50; all members of the priesthood taking the latter. Fifty per cent of the members filed magazines or papers. Church periodicals were filed in the following percentage: HERALD, 33½; Autumn Leaves, 41%; Ensign, 8½; Journal of History, 8½; other magazines, 33½. The average number of books in home libraries was a little over 100, the smallest was 33 and the largest 265. There were 83% using the traveling libraries and 58% using State and United States bulletins. Average daily time spent in reading, one hour. This is a typical farming community. Why not have such information from every community filed with the branch and auxiliary officers? They could then work with a much better understanding of the situation. These surveys do not tell everything, but give valuable information to those locally concerned.

A sister out West sends us 14 short term subscriptions to the Autumn Leaves. She kindly suggests that she thinks that when these have read the Leaves for three numbers they will surely want it longer, as she thinks the magazine of exceptional interest of late. The business office is glad to do it, and the editors say they will do all they can to keep up the excellent interest in the only church magazine for the youth and youthful—which should include all of us.

The address of Miss Ruth Reeves is 912 Summit Avenue, Webster Grove, Missouri. Street and house number are not really necessary in that place. This is in response to a request for her address.

WEALTH FROM THE SOIL

This important book by an expert (C. C. Bowsfield) tells how to engage in farming with certainty of success. It does more: it tells the experienced farmer a lot of interesting things which make it valuable to him, with the practical side always foremost. It may be had from this office for $1. There are 300 pages, and it is bound in cloth.

HALF HOURS WITH CELEBRITIES

IV. MADAM RUMOR

At a certain informal social affair, the precise nature of which I have forgotten, I found myself seated by the side of a lady of very charming personality. Without waiting for an introduction, we entered into conversation, as she seemed quite eager to talk.

"You do not recognize me," she said, smilingly, "though you must have heard a great deal about me in the past."

"No," I confessed, "I do not, although your voice has a familiar sound, and I have the impression that I have seen your face before. But, then, I never can remember names and faces."

"You need not apologize. I dress very differently at different times and get myself up in so many guises that you may be pardoned for not recognizing me. But I will tell you who I am; I am Madam Rumor."

"What," I cried, "not the Madam Rumor of whom we hear so much?"

"The very same. And now I am going to be very confidential with you, because you are an editor, and they are among my best friends. I help them get news; thus they help me to scatter my stories farther than I otherwise could."

"But," I interposed, weakly, "I edit religious periodicals."

"That need not worry you," and she smiled sweetly; "religious people are among my very best friends. They furnish me no end of material. And I have access to many of their homes."

"Yes," she went on, "the editors are a great help to me. Though I used to get on very well even before the press was invented."

"Before the press was invented! For pity's sake, how old are you?"

"That," she answered, "is a very impertinent question to ask a lady. Like all single ladies, I am not old at all. I am always young. I have the secret of perpetual charm. Old Mark Antony was much infatuated with me in his day, and so was Belshazzar, and Pontius Pilate, and Cæsar, and all the other great ones, from A to Z. And the humblest scullion for these great men was no less interested in me.

"And it is just the same to-day," she added with delightful candor, "kings and presidents listen for my latest word. Politicians and reporters without number watch my lips and faithfully flash my words over the wires and speed them on the printed page."

"Indeed," I gasped.

"Yes, and to-morrow I contradict that which I said to-day, and then they flash that over the wires and speed it on the printed page."

"But," I inquired, "if you are of such importance, why have you time to sit and talk with me? President Wilson or the Kaiser William may be waiting for you right now. The Associated Press may be holding the wires for news from you."

"Tut, tut," she rebuked, "you are very ignorant. Have you never heard that 'Rumor has a thousand tongues'? Well, it is true; and I have the feminine ability to use every one of them to advantage. I can talk to you and to King George and to the Associated Press and to the servant girl next door and to John D. Rockefeller all at the same time."

"My," she went on, maliciously, "I know a lot of women who would like to be able to talk as much as I can!"

"But they do the best they can with one tongue," she added, charitably.

"And," she continued, "I can be in a thousand places at once. I beat Peary and Cook back from the Pole, and I followed Roosevelt into Africa. I can be busy right here in Lamoni between prayer services and at the same time be scaring ungodly Gentiles on the board of trade. My, you men are fools. You laugh when I talk about the women. But I have made life one long nightmare for man ever since the world began. I have started more business panics and wars on a thin air basis than you could count in a week. Shakespeare recognized my power to foment war and muster armies, when he said in King Henry the Fourth:

"And who but Rumor, who but only I,
Make fearful musters and prepared defense?"

"And I keep civil and church courts busy with litigation started on the same basis. I have made a million murders; and regiments of suicides, have accepted my stories too literally and acted on them too hastily."

My companion seemed lost in pleasant retrospection for a time. But presently she roused herself again and continued:

"But while it is very entertaining to mingle in large affairs, to keep statesmen agog and set kingdoms by the ears with intrigues and rumors of wars, I find it even more to my taste to mingle with people in a social way, to make free with neighbors and help to spread the 'small' gossip of the town."

"You know, it is so interesting to tell everybody about everybody—all about the things that they have done and the things that they would do if they dared, and the things that they are suspected of doing."

She leaned toward me confidentially, and continued in an undertone, "For instance, there is Mrs. Blank, just across the room from you. She is a very unhappy woman. You didn't know it! Why everybody is talking about it. And just think, she has been married only a year! And her husband was so attentive. He is attentive now but not to her. You are the twentieth person that I have told about it to-night."

As Madam Rumor talked on and on, going from one name to another, her eyes sparkled with enthusiasm. Her voice was thrilling. Her whole personality was magnetic. The little stories about the foibles and sins of my neighbors became entrancingly interesting. I felt impelled to hasten away and tell them to others. They seemed too good to be kept to myself. I burned to confide them to some one else. This desire seemed to increase rather than diminish when my companion charged me that I positively must tell them to no one.

But I bethought me of consequences, and so said to her, "I should think that you would make no end of trouble telling these things everywhere you go."

"Trouble," she laughed, heartily, "why, don't you see? I grow fat on trouble—literally—the more trouble there is in a community the more Rumor there is. When trouble ends in this old world Madam Rumor will die. But I am sure that, as the insurance companies would say, I am a pretty 'good risk' yet. No, young man, you will not live to publish my obituary."

I hastened to assure her that we were not reserving space in the SAINTS' HERALD or Autumn Leaves on any such remote contingency, though I have since concluded that the church could well afford to publish an extended "died notice" free of charge, and erect a handsome monument over the grave of this lady, if we could have assurance that she was indeed dead.

From this rather personal topic, our talk drifted by degrees to the church. I soon discovered that Madam Rumor knew a few things about the history of the church and fancied that she knew a great many more. She recounted the old Solomon Spalding Romance Story, told me that Joseph Smith had thirty wives, and that the Saints in Missouri used to steal watermelons.

"You seem to have these stories by heart," I ventured to remark.

"Oh, yes," she replied indifferently, "I have been telling them for many years. I used to keep the Gentiles in Missouri and Illinois all stirred up. I suppose that I had as much to do as anyone in bringing Joseph Smith to his death. And I still find a great many preachers and others who like to listen to these old stories. But I prefer something newer, something fresh, that I can get even the church people to listen to.

"Now do you know"—here followed a marvelous tale about the Presiding Bishopric. It was followed by one about the First Presidency, and another about the Twelve. This was followed by others in rapid succession, until it seemed that no officer or member all the way down to the assistant deacon of Obscurity Branch, had been forgotten.

A wonderful thing about these stories was that certain details that I had reason to suppose were true were connected with others of a very damaging nature in such a way as to leave a sickening suspicion that perhaps something was wrong after all.

But right here I made bold to inquire, "Are the things that you are telling me true? Are they facts?"

At the sound of the words truth and facts, a startled and horrified expression came over the face of my visitor.

But I persisted in my inquiry: "Can you furnish any proof of the things that you have told in my presence?"

And now occurred the most singular feature of this strange interview. At the word proof, the hitherto apparently solid and substantial form of my visitor began to grow dim and misty, and ere the sentence was finished it had faded entirely away.

Without suspecting it at the time, I had violated her one rule of intimacy. Madam Rumor will not remain with those who desire only facts. To demand proof is to forfeit her society.

A peculiar after-effect followed this brief half hour with the great personage who has kept the world agog for six thousand years. For some time afterward whenever I would meet any of those friends, and especially those church members of whom she had spoken, her stories about them would instantly flash across my memory. It was impossible to banish them entirely from my mind. They created a feeling of suspicion and destroyed cordiality, even though I had learned that they were without foundation.

So I determined that the price was too great to pay for the privilege of associating with an individual who entertains such a peculiar aversion to the words truth and proof. It seems that my error consisted in not using those words at the very beginning of our interview, as I am creditably informed that in such an event she immediately withdraws, or if she remains she becomes very reserved and conservative in her statements.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CHURCH INDUSTRIES

One of the fundamental ideals of the Zionie condition is that the Saints shall own and control sufficient industries whereby they shall become independent of all perverted commercial tendencies in the world to-day. A start has been made, on a small scale, but it has developed sufficiently to indicate what may be done along this line. We might mention just one instance here:

The Lamoni Roller Mill is owned by the church and managed by Brother Jay Barr, on a stewardship basis. That is the way it should be, but what of the results? On account of the food situation, it has been much handicapped in trying to extend operations. It is impossible to procure sufficient wheat, with the situation as it is, to do very much. The corn crop is nearly all soft, and exceptional care must be taken to mill it for food.

Yet that latter phase is what we would speak of in this brief article. Exceptional care is taken in such a minor operation as grinding corn into meal, that we may use it and save wheat. Every ear is sorted by hand and inspected to see that it is sound. Only clean, sound ears are used, and they are ground under sanitary conditions. The danger from moldy grain must be apparent to all.

Then there is another advantage: The germ, the richest part of the kernel, is left in, increasing the food value of the meal to a considerable extent, though it will not keep so long as if it were taken out. By keeping the stock moving and allowing none to get stale, the manager is able to assure us that none of it will spoil unless kept an unusually long time in a heated and unventilated place.

That's a little thing, but a vital one in these days—personal supervision of details by men in whom we may trust. Multiply this by a dozen or a hundred, and would we not have relief from adulteration, short weights, etc., which contribute so largely to the high cost of living?

Speaking of adulteration, how many of us are able to secure pure buckwheat flour these days? Those of us who have raised the grain and had it milled without mixing with corn meal, rye, or other grains, know all too well that the brand "Pure buckwheat," is usually a standing prevarication. The buckwheat itself may be pure, but it is adulterated with cheaper materials. A brother recently secured some of this flour at a low price at another town and his wife found it unusable. An examination proved that it was largely corn meal and that the hulls had only partially been removed. The supposed saving in price was more than lost in the fact that it was worthless.

The new Lamoni Steam Laundry is in operation, and the first week their business far exceeded their most sanguine expectations. We are glad it is so. High-class work plus the fundamental spirit of true service will win, if we but appreciate them. Brethren R. J. Wildey and A. E. Stoff are conducting it on a stewardship basis, as a church institution.

We learn of a pleasing little incident about the Independence storehouse which we have not had time to verify in detail, but it was reported along this line: Certain coal dealers there were worried about the low price at which the storehouse was selling coal. They protested to the Fuel Administration at Washington, who wrote a letter of commendation to Brother Lester Haas, that he was doing the public so great a favor in these times of stress.

May the day hasten when we will have more industries on this basis, but it will require general co-operation. However, there is no need to wait. Those living anywhere near may begin now by getting in touch with these industries and their products.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 17

Question. Is section 17 of the Doctrine and Covenants a revelation from God, or is it Joseph Smith's own formation and makeup?

Answer. Section 17 is a revelation from God. It is so presented by Joseph Smith and has been so accepted all along by the church, as will be seen by Church History, volume 1, page 67. He states plainly that it was given by the Spirit of prophecy and revelation. It not only "gave us much information, but also pointed out to us the precise day upon which, according to his will and commandment, we should proceed to organize his church once again here upon the earth." (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 928-931.)

DUTIES OF THE DEACON

Q. Is scrubbing and sweeping the church, cutting the grass, shoveling the snow, the deacon's duty? What is the difference between the deacon and the janitor? If resolution number 471, adopted April 12, 1900, is the deacon's duty, what did they have prior to that date?

A. In 1871 President Joseph Smith, who by virtue of his position had the right to interpret and define such matters, prepared an article on the duties of deacons and published it in the SAINTS' HERALD. It was republished several times. At the General Conference of 1900 the church, upon recommendation of the joint council, adopted an abbreviated form of this article, setting forth those duties in specific form. This answers the latter part of the question. The adoption of the resolution in 1900 is merely a brief summary of what was represented by the President of the church in 1871. What he then presented was his understanding of these duties; not only what they were, but what they had been.

We note under this statement that it is the duty of the deacon to see that the floors, doors, windows, pulpit, stand, seats, tables, lamps, and other fixtures are cleaned and in good order. To see that the lamps or candles are trimmed, lighted, and burning, to keep and preserve from damage, and account for all personal effects of the association.

A tract by President Elbert A. Smith, printed at present by the Herald Publishing House, "The duties of branch officers," has more to say along the same line, and reiterates the fact that the floor and other parts of the building should be kept clean.

As custodian of the church property, it is in like manner his duty to care for more modern equipment. It is also his duty to care for the exterior as well as the interior of the building; see that the grass is cut, that the walks are clean from snow or anything else which may hinder. In many places it is the duty of the custodian by the law of the land, to see that snow is removed from the walks and that weeds are not permitted to grow on vacant lots.

In what his duty differs from a janitor is this: In some instances it is deemed advisable by the branch to hire some one specially to do the cleaning. If so, it is done under the direction of the deacon. In many instances the deacon, with local help, can attend to these matters himself. In some instances he makes the janitor his representative to see that fires are built, that the building is open, lighted, and warm. But any reasonable service ought not to be considered beneath the dignity of any man of the priesthood.

We would respectfully call attention again to the instance related by President Frederick M. Smith, that when Elbert A. Smith was in Colorado Springs, he was elected and acted as deacon of the branch, and in doing so, swept and cleaned the building. The interests of the body should be conserved.

But the deacon is more than a janitor. It is part, but not all of his duty to care for the building. We refer to 1 Timothy 3 as to his qualifications. According to the Doctrine and Covenants he is to assist the teacher, to be sent by the teacher to adjust matters, or may be sent by the pastor of the church to adjust difficulties. He may preside over branch business meetings if so chosen (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2), or where there is no one else of the priesthood present to do so, he may preach in a local way.

He takes charge also of the work of the ushers, preserving order in the building, escorting the members to their seats, caring for their health and comfort and for the sanitation of the building. He has the right to carry the keys and have the custody of the building.

He has charge of the treasury of the branch and should be an assistant to the bishop in administering the financial law. As financial officer of the branch he should be a proper one to be chosen by the branch to supervise repairs, when needed.

He is to visit the poor, ascertain their needs, and report the same to the church.

In this somewhat brief summary it will be seen how great and responsible is the work of the deacon, and how carefully right men should be sought for that duty and responsibility. We trust the above will give the information desired.

THE ORDINATION OF JOHN

The following questions were sent us from Australia.

Q. In section 83: 4 we read that John was ordained by an angel of God to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews. What can this mean?

A. The portion of this paragraph which evidently applies is as follows: "Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord, in his wrath, caused to continue with the house of Aaron, among the children of Israel until John, whom God raised up, being

NEUTRAL REFLECTIONS

In 1895, upon the completion of the Baltic Canal, there was a great peace demonstration at the instance of the present German Emperor. In response to his call and proclamation there was over one hundred war vessels assembled at the Kiel and passed in procession through said canal, these vessels being sent by the different nations participating.

In those days everyone talked peace. It was but four years after the writer's baptism, and I very distinctly recall a conversation with a young man associate into whose company I was frequently thrown, who took me to task because I was honest enough to believe in the prophecies and an eventual crash. He said: "You have been dreaming, Alvin. War is a thing of the past. The civilization and advancement of the nations will no longer stand for war. Difficulties hereafter will be adjusted by arbitration." Such was the talk, the sincere cry, not only by this young man, but by press, platform, and pulpit as well.

Jeremiah said the time would come when people would say, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." (Jeremiah 6.)

In 1899 the Czar of Russia took his turn to make a peace proclamation. At this instance the nations sent representatives to The Hague during that very year to talk peace with the object in view of gradual or eventual disarmament. But it is noteworthy and remarkable that the very nations who were thus represented in that great international council went home and increased their armaments instead of decreasing them.

The poet Whittier did not take to this false alarm of "peace" when all the nations were preparing for its very opposite. Many years ago he wrote:

Great peace in Europe! Order reigns
From Tiber's hills to Danube's plains!
So say her kings and priests; so say
The lying prophets of our day.
Go lay to earth a list'ning ear;
The tramp of measured marches hear,
The rolling of the cannon's wheel,
The shotted musket's murtherous peal,
The night alarm, the sentry's call,
The quick-eared spy in hut and hall,
From polar sea and tropic fen
The dying groans of exiled men,
The bolted cell, the galley's chains,
The scaffold smoking with its stains!
Order,—the hush of brooding slaves!
Peace,—in the dungeon vaults and graves!
Speak, Prince and Kaiser, Priest and Czar!
If this be peace, pray what is war?

It would almost seem that the poet had a premonition of the great crash to come. Yet not necessarily so, for there was nothing more apparent than that we were approaching the time when the nations would have to either try out their weapons or throw them away, notwithstanding the peace cry.

And right here it is not by any means improper to call the attention of the reader to a picture of the European conflict by Joseph Burton in 1878, who writes from Brighton, California:

This morning I felt very happy. Being in the enjoyment of the Spirit of God in my heart, I desired to be alone, where I could commune with God, and went out for a walk in a field (they are now so green and beautiful) and while there the following passed before my view:

From the western side of Asia there arose a great cloud of smoke which rolled westward until it enveloped all Europe and extended even to America. I heard a great noise accompanying this smoke, as of heavy artillery, and the clanging and clashing of cavalry and arms; and the dark cloud was pierced from time to time with shafts of light or fire, the sight and sound of which caused an intense feeling of horror to rest upon me, insomuch that I felt to be sinking to the earth.—Page 152 of Revelations in Our Times.

The actual place of the beginning of the present great war and its developments have most satisfactorily vindicated Brother Burton's remarkable manifestation. The expectancy, the forebodings, of many Latter Day Saints was such that when in the latter summer of 1914, or about the first of September, when the papers announced the war declarations they were wont to exclaim: "Prophecy is now being fulfilled."

Reading a portion of the third chapter of Joel, one cannot help but believe that we are in the very throes of the calamitous times which he describes:

Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about; thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.

Indeed they have been preparing for war, and now all the men of war are drawing near. Church bells, junk yards and the fragments, even of exploded shells, have contributed to replenish the ammunition supply, which responds to that part of the prediction indicating conversion of peaceful implements of usefulness into weapons of destruction.

"Learn war"—universal training, conscription, etc. Europe is a veritable training camp, and we are on their heels.

The "valley of decision" must be the place where the knockout blow is to be delivered, whether it (Jehoshaphat—decision) is in Syria or figuratively in Flanders.

Adventist theorists have speculated on the manner in which Turkey, the supposed "king of the north" of Daniel's prophecy, would be affected. They taught us that she would be driven out of Europe and temporarily set her capital up in Palestine. And those very speculations have sometimes been recited by and have found vent in our literature and pulpits. But I have this to say, that the very opposite of that is apparent now, with Palestine passing to the English and the promise of the pope to condemn anyone who attempts to recover it from them.

Truly the mighty men have been waked up. Cabinets are tumbling and toppling. The great and admired of to-day are the cast-offs of to-morrow. The Czar is worse than out of a job and Kerensky is interested in his personal safety. In fact, there is no crown that has the assurance of permanency, and even the security of responsible offices is in doubt. Where will this thing end? Lord Northcliffe said it was destined to destroy the civilized world. Daniel said: "And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time." If ever there was a time to stand in holy places and be not moved it is now.

The Revelator said the time would come when a third part of the ships would be sunk. Such has been approximated.

Our martyred Seer said that the time would come when no flesh would be safe upon the waters. Come it has, for safety is no longer on either inland or ocean waters. The very waves seem to protest our voyage.

Joel's prediction was to be fulfilled at a time when "their iniquity is very great." Their iniquity. Whose? One nation's? No, but the whole plurality. When Israel was right with God war was of short duration. But when they had prostituted opportunity, even though they had the right legal side, they were the surrenderers and their enemies the conquerors.

We could hardly sympathize with the nonresistant idea, or the position of peace-at-any-price. This for the reason that, as Father Lambert says in reply to Ingersoll: The right to exist implies the right to repel that which hinders existence. In Old Testament times, in Book of Mormon, and New Testament times, alike in the latter-day dispensation, men of God have made forcible resistance to the invasion of their birthright, to violent aggression.

It is, however, equally true that before they were anciently justified in going out in armed array to grapple with their enemies they were required to get a certificate of approval by revelation from God himself. Otherwise they would go at their peril.

Peace will come when comes the Prince of peace. Babylon is falling. Ecclesiasticism has lost its grip and must go down as the prophecies foretell. The Lord is done with them. The churches have told their story and have failed in their mission. So of all earthly governments, for the Lord said the consumption decreed would make a full end of all nations—none excepted.

Pastor Russell's posthumous work speaks of a reversion to anarchy. Maybe. I entertain some very serious reflections here which I shall not trust to paper just now. I know of no scripture or revelation bearing out the conclusion that all governments will necessarily become democratic prior to Christ's coming. If you do, teach me; but let me interpose to ask if the right and righteousness under democratic administrations to-day exceeds that under monarchial or kingly forms? Does it? God helped ancient Israel, not because that between them and their enemies they were right, but because they were right between them and Him.

There is to-day neither an absolute monarchy nor an absolute democracy. Yes, says one, our democracy is quite absolute. It is? Let us see. Suppose our electoral term were fifty years instead of four. That would be almost monarchial, would it not? Suppose however, the term were twenty years instead of fifty. You will agree that that would be much better than fifty, but that it would afford us a very meager opportunity of correcting the abuses into which a government is very liable to degenerate. Let us bring the figure down to ten then. The only corollary being manifest is that the greater the time that elapses between our opportunities of directing our candidates, the less is the responsibility of our Government, and, therefore, the less is it democratic. All you say about a fifty-year term, then, is, that it is less democratic than a four-year term. But none of them are purely and fully democratic.

Nor can we concur in the idea that it is our duty at all times and under all circumstances to stand by and support the acts of our different governments, of whatever form they may partake. He who so insists let him answer me when I say: Suppose our Congress were to pass a law that all children at a certain age and for a certain time be drowned. Must we yield without dissension? He who says yes would have made a very poor revolutionist in Washington's time. With such as he composing the Russian yeomanry they would ever have stood solid with the Czar. Evidently our great administrative minds are not imbuéd with that doctrine; for we notice that they favor the dropping of literature of that nature, behind enemy lines, as is intended to beget sedition and revolution; showing that they recognize the existence of circumstances which justify a revolt on the part of the governed from their government. The right, therefore, to revolt under the strain and stress of given circumstances being established and granted, we are only left to consider, and it merely becomes a question of when such crises or circumstances have arrived.

May the Master soon take charge of things. May he soon set up his government in which every citizen will have fair play—no grafters to corner the food and fuel. His government, his kingdom, is to smite not one but all, all, these other institutions, these human governments, and it is to supplant them forever.

BRANCH ELECTIONS

(Paper written for the Massachusetts ministerial conference by Elder Ralph W. Farrell.)

In order to answer properly and comprehensively the queries asked of me; namely, "Which officers should a branch elect? Who should nominate them? Which if any officers should the branch president appoint? Why?" it is necessary for a prefatory statement to be made.

That "dark and cloudy day" which is referred to in a revelation given to the church, through her prophet, cast a peculiar shade over the mind of more than one leader in modern Israel. By this I mean, simply, that the church is coming out from the shade of ignorance and wrong methods. The light is breaking over her fast, but no faster can it be used than the body is willing to appropriate it. At times it takes years to get the body to see a matter which in itself is very plain, and the body admits this plainness when a fair examination is made. It is not necessary to show here to what extent the people have endorsed methods which have been proved wrong later. The instances are numerous. On the other hand, I do not advocate the adoption of moves which in themselves appear speculative. We should, however, be swift to move along right lines, and when it comes to an issue of decision as to who is right, the body or the chosen head of the body, the chances are strongly in favor of the chosen head, though this may not always be the case. In nature it is observable that the tallest tree or house or pole first comes in contact with the lightning bolt—receives the first impression from the vault of heaven. It is so with the leaders of the people, all things being equal.

especially I discovered inconsistencies therein. Rules were on the books, which were not observed, certain customs observed which had been suitable for old days, but even were not in accord with the revealed law of the church, etc. To advocate a change of these usages was but to bring forth the cry, "The old way is good enough for us." And one hearing such remark is reminded of the days that burned Bruno, imprisoned Columbus, whipped and strangled others because they tried to introduce measures which were in advance of their day. But more inconsistent than crying out that the old ways are good enough, is to cry for the continuance of a certain rule as the old rule when in reality it is a new rule. For example, When I started the drive which did away with the annual or semiannual election of officers, some member cried: "The old way of semiannual election is good enough for us." And the fact is that the election of these officers every year was in reality a new way, for the general church has been sustaining her officers all these many years, so that sustaining officers is really the old way.

First. Which officers should a branch elect? She should elect them all, in this sense: The branch has the right to choose the officers she is to have to represent her, but this choosing, or electing, should take place only once, providing the officers continue to remain workers in said branch. I must repeat in order to make my point plain. When a brother is recommended for ordination and is ordained it is understood that he becomes an officer in the branch. This is his election, as it were, and he continues to hold active office as long as he is faithful in magnifying his calling. Why, then, should the branch go through the repeated form of nominating and electing her officers every little while? On the other hand, it is well to have, for the present, an annual opportunity to elect the presiding officer, for he is not placed in the branch presidency to remain during his life. When a man becomes incapacitated because of age or other legitimate reasons, he should be removed from presiding, that another more efficient may take his place. But this is not so with members of the Aaronic order—they are to serve the branch as long as life and good behavior remain, provided they are not called to travel. It is justly proper, however, to sustain all officers of the Aaronic order at stated periods. This act of sustaining is not an election, and it is done so that if there are reasons an officer is not fit to serve in the branch, (or anywhere else, for that matter) the branch may have opportunity to refuse to sustain. It may be said that in a proper working branch men who hold the priesthood and are not fit to serve the body should be dealt with by the proper authorities, silenced, and thus not be proper candidates for branch service. I ad-wise, to speak somewhat boldly and positively, that the president of the branch be elected annually, by nomination of the body or higher authorities, as the case may be, and the matter ratified by show of hands. I advise further that the clerk or president of the branch then read the names of all active members of the priesthood (and every member should be active or able to furnish good reasons for inactivity) that they may be sustained by the body to act in such offices as their call and ordination provide. Members of the Aaronic order, then, should be elected but once to serve in their respective branches, but they should be sustained at stated periods, as I have already outlined.

Who should nominate them? Any member of the body has the right to nominate the officers that are to serve it; but the more consistent way would be for the president or clerk, acting for the body and as a member of the body, of course, to read off the inactive members to fill positions, subject to the ratification of the body. I am sure that if you catch the right idea, you will see that at this time of sustaining officers there is really no call for nominations in the sense that we have used the term, for the officers are already branch workers and need only to be sustained. If a body refused to sustain her officer or officers, then the body must through one or more members give reasons for refusing to sustain. No man should rest under a charge that is not proved. If the branch has on its books rules which conflict with the procedure I outline, I advise the branch to begin a careful study of the matter and in time introduce such change as will bring complete harmony with the proper course. Let us be patient and careful and wait till the presidents of the branch, district, or general church advise some change. I mean, that I would not wish to agitate a move before its time. The time has come in the Providence Branch and the body has been willing to embrace it.

Which if any officers should the branch president appoint? I have in part answered this question. So long as the names of the members of the Aaronic priesthood are read for the body to sustain, it does not matter who reads them,—but the better way would be for the secretary or chairman to read or state them. The branch president should appoint the names of those whom he desires to have serve as his counselors, and there should be two.

I shall not be present with the conference when this paper is read, and I trust that there will be no construction placed on what I write other than the construction that I place there myself. I know that the time is not far distant when we shall see many changes along some lines of procedure—and these changes will be for the best interests of the church. I would advise, however, that suggestions be sent to the president of the general church rather than putting them into operation in a careless way in the initial form. Let the head of the church perfect a concerted action for the branches along lines that are really vital. We should in no wise quibble over nonessentials. God has given us lots of latitude, when it comes to nonessentials. But there is beauty in harmony and system and unity of action—and may God soon speed the day when we can face the world with such a working out of the divine plan he has given that Satan will tremble because of the power of unity which will then be manifested among us.

To this end I labor and pray.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES—Part 13

BY J. F. MINTUN

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

From a noted writer of the Presbyterian Church it is said that by the reformation of the Catholic Church the pure principles of the gospel of Christ were restored to the world as taught in New Testament times. This reformation was represented by the Waldenses, the Dutch Reformed Church and others, but the Presbyterian ideas were first proclaimed by John Calvin.

John Knox received his instruction from Calvin, and to him is credited and should be credited the representation of the specific ideas and doctrines in a concise manner as they are taught to-day, and as they should be believed. He was the founder of the Reformed Church of Scotland, and this church represented the true Presbyterian idea, and is now considered one of the representatives of the ideas upon which the church received its name. John Knox was formerly a priest in the Catholic Church, as was also Calvin. Knox was converted to the Reformation when he was about thirty-seven years of age.

The Presbyterian Church in America had its origin with the Presbyterians of both Scotland and Ireland, the Church of Scotland being more than any other the model. John Knox and the Church of Scotland claimed the Holy Scriptures as the source of doctrine, discipline and government. At the death of Knox in 1572 he left the Presbyterian Church as it now exists both in doctrine and government. The first General Assembly of the Church of Scotland met in 1560, and received legislative approval in 1567.

This church claims only to be a branch of the family of Christ, but approaches nearer than others to the apostolic model. The apostolic model became changed in the gradual departure from the faith which finally assumed the form of popery, and through this "man of sin," as they claim papacy to be, the church lost its simplicity and purity.

It vests the oversight of the church in the hands of the Presbytery, composed of several bishops of equal authority. Presbyters and elders were appointed in the churches to instruct and to govern. They claim that succession of the apostles' doctrine and not the office of the apostle is the principle by which they are the true church in succession, and that when the apostles all died the office of apostle ceased.

From works of accredited authority we glean the following:

RESTORATION

Many similar facts prove that the system taught by Calvin was received as truth by the Reformers of England, France, Germany, Switzerland and the Netherlands. . . . As to his connection with the Presbyterian policy, he only perfected what he already found in existence. When he came to Geneva, Farel and Viret had already been instrumental in establishing a Protestant church, and a Presbytery had been formed. By that body Calvin was received as a minister, and appointed to the pastoral office. He approved of all that had been done, and only perfected the work by appointing a body of ruling elders, to assist in the government of the church. . . .

The great work of the Reformation was now fully begun. The church had thrown off the burdens and deformities of the man of sin, and once more appeared in its original purity and simplicity. The restoration of the word of God to its proper place, as the only rule of faith and practice, opened the eyes of men to the errors which had crept in through the traditions of the fathers, and set them free from a long and oppressive servitude. The doctrines and principles of primitive Christianity were re-established.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 88, 89.

REFORMATION

Soon after John Huss and Jerome of Prague were burned at the stake for maintaining similar doctrines, [Similar to Peter Waldo and Wycliffe.—AUTHOR] and attempting to restore the Catholic Church to the simplicity and purity of the apostolic age. It was the preparatory era, and Providence was arranging the material with which, in another century, to introduce the Reformation.—Ibid., pp. 78, 79.

APOSTASY

It was not long before the city pastors, who were chosen to preside in their presbyterial meetings, assumed new powers and authority, claiming supremacy over the churches in certain districts (afterwards called dioceses), and superiority to their ministers or presbyters. It was this departure from the simplicity of the gospel, and from the positive rule of Christ, which forbade any strife for preeminence, that in the course of a few centuries made the church corrupt, filled it with a ministry destitute of the Spirit of Christ, and that changed the simple ordinances of the gospel into a round of rites and ceremonies, borrowed from the temple service and from the worship of heathen idolaters.

Then, as was foretold, the true church fled into the wilderness from before her enemies, and there among the mountains, nourished and kept alive the truth and worship of God, while the whole world went after the lying wonders of the mother of abominations.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 28, 29.

The facts thus briefly presented will serve to answer the question which is often asked with a sneer by the supporters of the papacy and prelacy: "Where was your church before the Reformation?" Its principles are found in the Bible, and they entered into the simple and popular government of the synagogue, and were the early type of the Christian church. All its grand outlines appeared amid those communities which have most purely kept the faith once delivered to the saints. It was found in the valleys of the Piedmont, when all the world had gone after the lying wonders of the Man of Sin. . . . It is no new creation of wild reformers, but is built upon the eternal truths of the gospel, and on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. . . . And when the morning of the Reformation dawned, it took its side, with the hosts of God's elect, against error, and superstition and sin.

The papal church had at last reached the lowest depth of its corruption, and darkness covered the earth, except where, amid the valleys of the Piedmont, the light shone undimmed by all the growing superstitions of the age. The great doctrine of the gospel, "By grace are ye saved through faith," had been lost amid a round of rites, and heartless observances, and unmeaning ceremonies. The priests of a corrupt religion had succeeded in inducing men to come to them, and not to Christ, for salvation introducing works and rites and saints between the sinner and the Savior. Then a change of dress, a renunciation of social pleasure, and bodily comforts, and necessary food, and the pain of self-inflicted tortures, were substituted for repentance toward God. Afterward, as the pope needed money he began to sell indulgences for sin, and then to receive money for the redemption of souls from purgatory. Thus the church became a place of barter, and was full of corruption. Gradually it had thrown upon the people a burden of superstition which they were unable to bear. The Bible was laid aside, and the voice of tradition, speaking through wicked priests, became the guide of men. The visible church was changed from the bride of Christ to the "mother of abominations."—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 75-78.

THE CONFESSION OF FAITH OF THE WALDENSES

Article 1. We believe and firmly hold all that which is contained in the twelve articles of the symbol, which is called the Apostles' Creed, accounting for heresy whatsoever is disagreeing, and not consonant to the said twelve articles.

Article 2. We do believe that there is one God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Article 3. We acknowledge for the holy canonical Scriptures the books of the Holy Bible, viz: [Here follow the names of the books.—AUTHOR.]

Here follow the books Apochryphal, which are not received of the Hebrews. But we read them (as saith Saint Jerome in his prologue to the Proverbs) for the instruction of the people, not to confirm the authority of the doctrines of the church, viz: [Here follow the names of the Apochryphal books.—AUTHOR.]

Here follow the books of the New Testament: . . .

Article 4. The books above said teach this, that there is one God, Almighty, all-wise and all-good, who has made all things by his goodness; but he formed Adam in his own image and likeness, but that by the envy of the Devil, and the disobedience of the said Adam, sin has entered into the world, and that we are sinners in Adam and by Adam.

Article 5. That Christ has promised to our fathers who received the law, that so knowing by the law their sin, unrighteousness and insufficiency, they might desire the coming of Christ, to satisfy for their sins, and accomplish the law by himself.

Article 6. That Christ was born in the time appointed by God the Father. That is to say, in the time when all iniquity abounded, and not for the cause of good works, for all were sinners; but that he might show us grace and mercy, as being faithful.

Article 7. That Christ is our life, truth, peace, and righteousness, also our pastor, advocate, sacrifice, and priest, who died for the salvation of all those that believe, and is risen for our justification.

Article 8. In like manner we firmly hold, that there is no other mediator and advocate with God the Father, save only Jesus Christ. And as for the Virgin Mary, that she was holy, humble, and full of grace; and in like manner do we believe concerning all the other saints, viz: that being in heaven, they wait for the resurrection of their bodies at the day of judgment.

Article 9. Item, we believe that after this life, there are only two places, the one for the saved, and the other for the damned, the which two places we call paradise and hell, absolutely denying that purgatory invented by anti-Christ, and forged contrary to the truth.

Article 10. Item, we have always accounted as an unspeakable abomination before God, all those inventions of men, namely, the feasts and the vigils of saints, the water which they call holy; as likewise to abstain from flesh upon certain days, and the like; but especially their masses.

Article 11. We esteem for an abomination and as anti-Christian, all those human inventions which are a trouble or a prejudice to the liberty of the Spirit.

Article 12. We do believe that the sacraments are signs of the holy thing, or visible forms of the invisible grace, accounting it good that the faithful sometimes use the said signs or visible forms, if it may be done. However, we believe and hold, that the above said faithful may be saved without receiving the signs aforesaid, in case they have no place nor any means to use them.

Article 13. We acknowledge no other sacraments but baptism and the Lord's supper.

Article 14. We ought to honor the secular powers by submission, ready obedience, and paying of tributes.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 259-262.

CHURCH

The word church is used in two important senses in the Confession of Faith, and the distinction therein made is clearly affirmed in the Holy Scriptures.

1. It signifies the whole body of Christ's redeemed people. Thus it is said, "The Catholic or Universal church, which is invisible, consists of the whole number of the elect, that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one, under Christ, the head thereof; and is the spouse, the body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all."

2. The second sense in which the word church is used, refers to those who profess the Christian religion. Thus, in the Confession of Faith, we read: "The visible church, which is also catholic, or universal, under the gospel (not confined to one nation as before under the law) consists of all those throughout the world who profess the true religion, together with their children, and is the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the family of God, out of which there is no ordinary possibility of salvation." . . .

It includes, therefore, all the various denominations, who, while differing from each other in many particulars, receive the word of God as their only rule of faith and practice, and observe the ordinances commanded by our Lord Jesus Christ.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 15-17.

The promise of Christ, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," forms a church wherever there is a Bible, and a people who love and worship God.—Ibid., p. 18.

They were assembled to consider questions of discipline, and when any subject of interest to the church at large was to be decided, we read of a meeting of ministers, or apostles and elders, at Jerusalem, whence decrees were sent to all the churches. (Acts 15: 4-22.)

Here we meet the general outlines of our church:

1. An equality among the ministry.
2. The government of particular congregations by two or more elders.
3. The union of many churches, under a council of ministers and elders, deciding questions of doctrine and practice.

The office of deacon was afterwards introduced to relieve the ministry from the care of the poor.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, p. 25.

The Christian church was first organized at Jerusalem.—Ibid., p. 51.

OFFICERS OF THE CHURCH

The permanent officers of the church they arranged into four orders, viz: the minister, or pastor, the doctor or teacher of theology, the ruling elder, and the deacon. To these they added, as temporary officers, because of the paucity of ministers, superintendents, and exhorters. . . .

The government of the church was vested in the hands of the pastor and session. Presbyteries were also erected, which with the provincial synods and a general assembly, constituted the courts of the church.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, p. 166.

The officers of the Presbyterian Church are bishops or pastors, ruling elders, and deacons. "The pastoral office is the first in the church both for dignity and usefulness." . . .

Ruling elders are elected by the people as their representatives. In conjunction with the pastor they exercise discipline. . . .

Deacons are also regarded as distinct officers in the church. Their official duty is to care for the poor, and the reception and disbursement of the charities of the congregation.

The sessions consist of the pastor or pastors, and the ruling elder of the congregation, and is the primary judicatory of the church.

A Presbytery consists of all the ministers and one ruling elder from each church, within a certain district.

A synod is a convention of the bishops with one elder from each church in a larger district; it must include at least three presbyteries.—History of Denominations of the United States, pp. 486, 487.

FAITH OR DOCTRINE

The doctrines of the Presbyterian Church are Calvinistic. They are so called, not because Calvin invented them. They were doctrines of all the leading reformers; of the Waldenses, for five or six hundred years before the Reformation; of Augustin and the primitive church, and especially are they distinctly exhibited in the word of God. This doctrine is clearly set forth in the Westminster Confession of Faith, and the Larger and Shorter Catechism.—History of Denominations of the United States, p. 489.

The principal tenets of the Calvinists are comprehended in five articles, to which are added a few of the arguments they employ in defense of their sentiments.

1. That God has chosen a certain number in Christ unto everlasting glory, before the foundation of the world, according to his immutable purpose, and of his free grace and love, without the last foresight of faith, good works, or any conditions performed by the creature; and that the rest of mankind he has pleased to pass by, and ordained them to dishonor and wrath for their sins, to the praise of his justice.

2. That Jesus Christ by his death and sufferings, made an atonement for the sins of the elect only.

3. That mankind are totally depraved in consequence of the fall; and by virtue of Adam's being their public head, the guilt of his sin was imputed, and a corrupt nature conveyed to all his posterity, from which proceed all actual transgressions. And that by sin we are made subject to death, and all miseries, temporal, spiritual, and eternal.

4. That all whom God has predestinated unto life, he is pleased, in his appointed time, effectually to call by his word and Spirit, out of that estate of sin and death, in which they are by nature, to grace and salvation by Jesus Christ.

5. That those whom God has effectually called and sanctified by the Spirit, shall never finally fall from a state of grace.—History of All Religions, pp. 193-196.

The character and peculiarities of the Presbyterian Church, may be learned from the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; containing the Confession of Faith, the Catechisms, and the Directory for the worship of God; together with the Plan of Government and Discipline as amended and ratified by the General Assembly at their session in the First Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, in May, 1840, and the annals of the church found in the published reports of the proceedings of the ecclesiastical judicatories. . . .

It acknowledges no authority in things pertaining to doctrines and duties of the Christian Church, but the revealed will of God as found in the sacred Scriptures. It maintains—

That God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrine and commandments of men, which are in anything contrary to his word, or, beside it in matters of faith, or worship; that the rights of private judgment in all matters that respect religion are universal and inalienable, and that no religious constitution ought to be added by the civil powers farther than may be necessary for protection and security, and at the same time be equal and common to all others.

That in perfect consistency with the above principle of common right, every Christian church, or union, or association of particular churches, is entitled to declare the terms of admission into its communion, and the qualifications of its ministers and members, as well as the whole system of its internal government which Christ hath appointed; that in the exercise of this right, they may, notwithstanding, err in making the terms of communion either too lax or too narrow; yet, even in this case, they do not infringe upon the liberty or the rights of others, but only make an improper use of their own.

That our blessed Savior, for the edification of the visible church, which is his body, hath appointed officers, not only to preach the gospel and administer the sacraments, but also to exercise discipline, for the preservation of truth and duty; and, that it is incumbent upon these officers, and upon the whole church, in whose name they act, to censure or cast out the erroneous and scandalous; observing in all cases the rules contained in the word of God.

That truth is in order to goodness; and the great touchstone of truth is its tendency to promote holiness; according to our Savior's rule, "by their fruits ye shall know them." And that no opinion can be more pernicious or absurd, than that which brings truth and falsehood upon a level, and represents as of no consequence what a man's opinions are. On the contrary, that there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. Otherwise it would be of no consequence either to discover truth or to embrace it. . . .

That all church power, whether exercised in the body in general, or in the way of representation by delegated authority, is only ministerial and declarative; That is to say, that the Holy Scriptures are the only rule of faith and manners; That no church judicatory ought to pretend to make laws to bind the conscience in virtue of their own authority; and that all their decisions should be founded upon the revealed will of God. Now, though it will easily be admitted, that all synods and councils may err, through the frailty that is inseparable from humanity; yet there is greater danger from the usurped claim of making laws, than from the right of judging laws already made, and common to all who profess the gospel.—History of the Presbyterian Church, by Joel Parker, D. D.

Calvin says:

Predestination, we call the eternal decree of God, by which he hath determined in himself what he would have to become of every individual of mankind for they are not all created with a similar destiny; but eternal life is foreordained for some and eternal damnation for others.

He directs his voice to them (the sinner) but it is that they may become more deaf; he kindles a light, but it is that they may be more blind; he publishes his doctrine, but it is that they may be more besotted, he applies a remedy, but it is that they may not be healed.

John Knox says:

The reprobates are not only left by God's sufferings, but are compelled to sin by his power.

HOLY SCRIPTURES

The Holy Scriptures are the only rule of faith and manners; that no church judicatory ought to pretend to make laws, to bind the conscience, in virtue of their own authority; and that all their decisions should be founded upon the revealed will of God.—What Is Presbyterian Law, p. 27.

ORDINANCES

That which is established by authority is an ordinance. . . . That which is ordained of God is an ordinance, binding on the conscience and cannot be changed save by the order of God. All the laws of God, appointed services, times, ceremonies, types and officers are in Scripture called ordinances (Exodus 18:20; Numbers 9:12; Psalm 99:7; Luke 1:6; Colossians 2:14; Hebrews 9:1, 10; Romans 13:2). In the Christian church, therefore, "the ordinances are established by Christ the head." They have his authority and are of perpetual obligation.

These ordinances are, "prayer, singing praises, reading, expounding and preaching the word of God, administering baptism and the Lord's supper, public solemn fasting and thanksgiving, catechising, making collections for the poor and other pious purposes, exercising discipline, and blessing the people.

Christ hath given the ministry oracles and ordinances of God, for the gathering and perfecting of the saints, in this life, to the end of the world; and doth by his own presence and Spirit, according to his promise, make them effectual thereunto.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 71, 72.

SACRAMENTS

A sacrament is an holy ordinance instituted by Christ; wherein, by sensible signs, Christ and the benefits of the new covenant are represented, sealed and applied to the believer.

Under the Old Testament there were only two sacraments: Circumcision and the passover (Genesis 17:10; Exodus 12). Under the New Testament Christ has instituted in his church only two sacraments: Baptism and the Lord's Supper. This is the doctrine of all the Reformed churches. . . .

Baptism is a sacrament.—Ibid., p. 82.

BAPTISM

Baptism is a sacrament, wherein the washing with water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost doth signify and seal our ingrafting into Christ, and partaking of the benefits of the covenant of grace, and our engagement to be the Lord's.

It is the initiatory rite of the Christian church, as circumcision was of the Jewish church. They have the same signification and use. Baptism in the New Testament dispensation has taken the place of circumcision. . . . Circumcision is forbidden (Galatians 5:2), and baptism is enjoined (Acts 2:38). . . .

In other reformed churches, as in our own, baptism is "not to be administered in any case by any private person, but by a minister of Christ, called to be steward of the mysteries of God.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 82, 83.

The sacraments become effectual means of salvation, not from any virtue in them, or in him that doth administer them, but only by the blessing of Christ, and the working of the Spirit in them, that by faith receive them.—Ibid., p. 84. Shorter Catechism, p. 91.

Baptism is not to be administered to any that are out of the visible church till they profess their faith in Christ and obedience to him, but infants of such as are members of the visible church are to be baptized.—Shorter Catechism, p. 95.

Not only those that do actually profess faith in and obedience unto Christ, but also the infants of one or both believing parents, are to be baptized.—Confession of Faith, ch. 27, sec. 4; What Is Presbyterian Law, p. 85.

Dipping of the person into the water is not necessary; but baptism is rightly administered by pouring or sprinkling water upon the person.—Confession of Faith, ch. 28, sec. 3. He is to baptize the child with water, by pouring or sprinkling it on the face of the child, without adding any other ceremony; and the whole shall be concluded with prayer.—Directory for Worship, ch. 7, sec. 5. Baptism is the rite of initiation into the church. It was an application of water to the body, in token of the cleansing blood of Christ and the renewing influences of the Holy Spirit.

Hitherto, circumcision had been the seal of the covenant, and the sign of introduction to the church. But when Christ sent forth his ministers, his command was to teach and to baptize the nations. This was only changing the seals but not the covenant. Hence the apostles, rehearsing the promises to believers and their children, baptized them and their families. . . .

The mode of baptism is not essential to the validity of the ordinance. It is a token of purification, and may be accomplished by pouring, or sprinkling, or by immersion. . . .

Baptism is admitted by all to signify the cleansing and renovation of the soul by the Spirit. . . .

Thus the language of Scripture points out to us sprinkling as the most appropriate manner of baptism, and as significant of the work of the Spirit.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 31-33.

LORD'S SUPPER

The Lord's Supper is a sacrament, wherein, by giving and receiving bread and wine, according to Christ's appointment, his death is showed forth, and the worthy receivers are, not after a corporal or carnal manner but by faith, made partakers of the body and blood, with all his benefits, to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace.—Shorter Catechism, p. 96.

Neither of which (baptism nor the Lord's Supper) may be dispensed by any but by a minister of the word lawfully ordained.—Confession of Faith, ch. 27, sec. 4.

Besides the ordinance of baptism, or the rite of introduction to the church, our Savior introduced the Lord's supper, which he designed to be a part of the worship of his people. . . . When, therefore, Christians celebrate the Lord's supper, they testify before the world to their belief in Christ, and their confidence that he was crucified for their sins. . . . This was evidently the design of Christ in establishing this sacrament, that it should serve as a memorial of him, and its value was to be in proportion to the degree of faith and love in which it should be received. He established no rite which of itself secured the salvation of the soul.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 34-36.

MIRACLES, APOSTLES, AND PROPHETS

Our blessed Lord at first collected the church out of different nations, and formed it into one body, by the mission of men endued with miraculous gifts, which have long since ceased.

These officers were called the apostles, and sometimes the twelve or the disciples. . . .

An apostle was an immediate messenger of Christ, a witness of his doctrine and of his resurrection. . . .

The special work of an apostle was to testify of Christ, in his name and by his authority to declare the doctrine, worship and polity of the Christian church, and to superintend its establishment and extension.

Their peculiar gifts were: 1. Inspiration; 2. Miraculous powers; 3. Impartation of the Holy Ghost to others by the imposition of hands. . . .

When the church was established, and furnished with the complete word of God for its rule of faith and practice, the apostles' work was finished and their peculiar gifts were no longer needed. The church and the world has long recognized the fact that inspiration, miracles and the impartation of the Holy Ghost have ceased.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 41, 42.

Other extraordinary officers in the Christian church were prophets, who "differed from the apostles in that their inspiration was occasional, and therefore their authority as teachers subordinate." Sometimes they foretold future events.

These have ceased because the church has the completed word of God.

Christ made no provision for their continued work or recognition in the church. After the apostolic age they ceased, and so have their qualifications, inspiration and miracles.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 43, 44.

OFFICERS ; HOW CHOSEN

Ruling elders are properly the representatives of the people, chosen by them for the purpose of exercising government and discipline in conjunction with pastors or ministers.

It has been the permanent office in the church under all dispensations, even under the Abrahamic.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 52, 53.

Every congregation shall elect persons to the office of ruling elder, and to the office of deacon, or either of them, in the mode most approved and in use in that congregation. These who vote for elders may vote for deacons.—What Is Presbyterian Law, p. 68. See Form of Government, ch. 13, sec. 2.

MARRIAGES

Marriage is not a sacrament, nor peculiar to the Church of Christ. It is proper that every commonwealth, for the good of society, make laws to regulate marriage which all citizens are bound to obey.—What Is Presbyterian Law, p. 95. See Directory for Worship, ch. 11, sec. 1.

Marriage is to be between one man and one woman only; neither is it lawful for any man to have more than one wife, nor for any woman to have more than one husband, at the same time.—Ibid., p. 97. See Confession of Faith, ch. 24, sec. 1.

THE DAY OF WORSHIP

The first day of the week was universally set apart for the public worship of God. On that day Christ, the Lord of the Sabbath, arose from the dead, and the following passages show that it was henceforth observed as the day of rest: Mark 16: 9; John 20: 19; Matthew 28: 1, 8, 9; Acts 20: 7; 1 Corinthians 16: 2; Revelation 1: 10. Compare also Psalm 118: 24 with the foregoing. From these texts of Scripture it is evident that the apostles with the divine approbation and appointment, changed the day of worship from the seventh to the first day of the week.—Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 30, 31.

DIVORCES

Divorced persons may not marry unless the divorce has been obtained on scriptural grounds, which our "Confession of Faith" (ch. 24, sec. 6) says to be "nothing but adultery or such willful desertion as can in no way be remedied by the church or civil magistrate." . . .

Drunkenness, abuse, neglect, incompatibility of disposition, etc., are not sufficient cause for divorce. Nor is it sufficient that scriptural grounds are known to exist; they must be alleged and proved as the reasons on account of which the divorce is granted.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 99, 100. See Presbyterian Digest, p. 684.

RAISING THE SALARY

Each congregation should adopt a plan for collecting the salary which it deems most advisable. There are several plans now in use:

1. By subscription. . . .
 2. By taxation. . . .
 3. By rental. . . .
 4. By auction. This is sometimes called the annual sale of pews. . . .
 5. By weekly offerings. . . .
 6. By collection. . . .
- What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 342, 343.

CHOIRS AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

The manner in which this important part of worship is to be conducted must be determined by the session. (See Form of Government, ch. 9, sec. 6.) The custom in the Church of Scotland is to have a precentor who occupies a place in front of or near the pulpit, and leads the congregation in singing. This was also the usage in the Presbyterian and some other churches in this country. . . . It is more usual to have a trained choir. In 1867 the O. S. Assembly declared that those who lead in singing should be, as far as practicable, only "those who are in communion with the church and amenable to its jurisdiction;" that "the introduction of choirs or musical instruments can be justified only as they serve this end (to inspire and express devotion) and aid or accompany sacred song; and no display of artistic skill, no delicacy of vocal training, no measure of musical ability, compensates for the violation, or even neglect, of the proprieties of divine worship.—What Is Presbyterian Law, pp. 76-78.

THE CASE AGAINST SMOKES

Is it harmful to smoke? Does smoking rest one or does it tend to make a man irritable? What is the effect of a habit which is so general? Does it decrease efficiency? Does it lower vitality? These are questions I have tried to find an answer for. No one had in my judgment given an adequate answer to them. I approached the question dispassionately, for I am not fanatic about the matter. I simply wanted to know the truth so that I would know how to advise young men accurately.

For the past four years I have had a series of experiments made at the Y. M. C. A. college at Springfield, Massachusetts, under the direction of Professor Elmer Berry, upon young men between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five, men of exceptional physical vigor who were being trained as physical directors. The plan in the experiments was to use smokers and nonsmokers alike, so as to note the effect of smoking on each, to have them go through a given test, first without smoking and then try the same test after smoking. As a rule we used a single cigar or a cigaret.

In our first experiment we tested the effect of smoking a cigar on the heart rate and blood pressure. A single cigar increased the heart rate and blood pressure. The most significant thing about this experiment was the apparent disturbance to the heart in that it took some considerable time for the heart to return to normal, longer than we could wait to measure.

In the next experiment a year later we tried to go into this problem further and gave a series of exercises before and after smoking, taking as before the heart rate. This series of tests revealed as did the others that smokers have a higher heart rate than nonsmokers and that the return to normal after exercise is much delayed after smoking. For illustration, in 74 out of 118 smoking tests, or 62.72 per cent, the heart rate was increased and did not return to normal in fifteen minutes. In 72 out of 74 tests in which the men did not smoke fully 97 per cent did return to normal in less than fifteen minutes, the average time being only five minutes. The smoker does not become fully habituated to smoking.

At the same time that the latter test was given some tests in muscular precision were made by having the men draw lines with a pen on a chart between narrow columns. Every time the sides were touched an error was registered. To test the large muscular coordinations the men were required to lunge at a target with a fencing foil. In these two tests all the men showed a loss in precision. This was a great surprise to us. I did not dream that a single cigar, or the smoking of two cigars which were used in the target thrust, would show any appreciable effect.

This led us in our next experiment, to make some experiments on the effects of smoking upon baseball pitching. Twelve men, all baseball players, both smokers and nonsmokers, were used. The men in the tests had ten throws at a target which were recorded. Then each thrower smoked a cigar, taking thirty minutes for the purpose, after which they had ten more throws which were recorded. In another test the men rested in the thirty minute interval instead of smoking. In another test the man smoked two cigars, using sixty minutes between the throws. In this way it was clearly discovered what effect resting or smoking one cigar or smoking two cigars had upon accuracy in pitching. An official baseball was used, fast straight balls were thrown, the men winding up for the throw as baseball pitchers do. The chart shows the group average of the men in test A after smoking one cigar, in test B, after smoking two cigars, in test C when resting and not smoking.

In test A, after smoking one cigar, there was a loss of 12 per cent in accuracy. In test B, after smoking two cigars, there was a loss of 14½ per cent. In test C, during which no cigars were smoked, there was an increase in accuracy of 9 per cent, so that the real effect of the smoking should be judged by comparing the scores made after a rest and those after smoking.

We then determined upon a further test of coordination, and because of the interest in the war we selected rifle shooting. The Wesson Revolver club range of Springfield was used and Mr. Wesson furnished the rifles and ammunition. Five shots at a target twenty yards distant were fired, then either a rest or smoking was indulged in, then five more shots were fired. The prone position was used. Five tests were made in the first test; the men rested thirty minutes between the two periods of shooting. In the second the men smoked one cigar, in the third test two cigars were used in a period of sixty minutes, in the fourth test two cigarettes were used, in the fifth the men again rested. Briefly the results were these. In test number one, when the men did not smoke, they showed an increase in accuracy of 7 per cent. In the second test, after smoking one cigar, there was a loss in accuracy of 4.8 per cent. In the third test, in which the men smoked two cigars, there was a loss in accuracy of 6 per cent. In the fourth experiment, after smoking two cigarettes, there was a loss in scoring of 1.8 per cent. In the fifth experiment, in which the men did not smoke, there was a gain in accuracy.

These tests which I have been having made, covering a number of years, are exceedingly interesting. I do not claim they are conclusive.

As far as we have gone, however, we seem to be compelled to believe that smoking is not beneficial. It quickens the heart rate, affects in slight degree the blood pressure, disturbs the circulatory apparatus so that it takes some considerable time for the heart to return to normal. Smoking affects muscular precision, in such fine movements as writing and in such larger movements as lunging at a target with a fencing foil or in baseball pitching, and also in rifle shooting.

These experiments were made upon men twenty-one to twenty-five, of unusual physique, men accustomed to smoking and those unaccustomed; both groups were affected and in all the experiments there was a remarkable consistency in the character of the results obtained. The case seems to be against tobacco.

In the light of such facts as these what should be our attitude in furnishing tobacco to soldiers? If smoking disturbs the heart, what effect will it have on endurance? If smoking affects accuracy in baseball pitching, what will be the effect upon bomb throwing? If smoking makes for inaccuracy in lunging at a target, what will be the effect in lunging at an enemy with a bayonet? And if men, after smoking, do not shoot as well at twenty yards, what will be the result at a greater distance?

These experiments were made in a well-ventilated place in each instance and after the men had smoked but one or at most two cigars, and two cigars were more severe than one. Most men do not stop with one or two cigars, but have a tendency toward many in a day.

I am not willing to say that soldiers should not smoke. Those habituated to it seemingly get great comfort from smoking. I do not believe, however, that we should encourage them to smoke incessantly nor incite the young soldier who has never smoked to indulge. I am wondering whether special funds for tobacco are wise and I question the wisdom of placing tobacco in every comfort kit. We take it for granted that a soldier will smoke. We are urging him to do so, and incidentally I believe we are doing harm.—George J. Fisher, M. D., in The Independent.

BISHOP MCGUIRE IN SAN BERNARDINO

The following clipping under the heading, "Noted church head a speaker at the Reorganized Church here," appeared in San Bernardino Daily Sun for December 13:

B. R. McGuire, presiding bishop of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, addressed an interested audience last evening at the local church at Fifth and G Streets. Many people came from different parts of the country and from Riverside to hear the notable speaker. Elder John W. Rushton, who is accompanying the bishop, introduced him to the gathering last evening. T. W. Williams, pastor of the Los Angeles church, offered the opening prayer.

Bishop McGuire used as his text, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." He was a practicing lawyer in New York formerly, and quoted Blackstone, as of all human laws, none are perfect. The perfect law was laid down by the divine mind. He said that the fundamental law is love. Warning the congregation not to believe that success is sure with the building of a great church, with its dedication, with its acquiring of an eloquent pastor, with its formal services, he said all these things may result in absolute failure. "The Lord provided opportunities for us to give to the Lord's work. Give one tenth of our increase and seek to use our best judgment as to the dispensing of the remainder. You can't take the amassed millions with you. The laws are exacting. Inheritance taxes have partly eliminated this feature. Leaving money for children to squander is a curse. Rich men have a money distinction between them from the common herd. Children become selfish and quarrel over their income."

Instead of hoarding the money to fight over, Bishop McGuire urged that as Christian people all should give at every opportunity. "It will help us to show our love for humanity. Love our neighbor as ourselves. Help the needy, poor, the Red Cross, education, and the prosecution of higher ideals. Help in the onward march of civilization. We ourselves would be happier."

The party will go to San Diego to-day. During the rest of the week, the delegation will travel over Southern California. In Los Angeles on Sunday, representatives will congregate for a symposium. All elders from Southern California churches will be present. In the absence of Elder George H. Wixom, Elder A. E. Jones will conduct the service here.

[In the Chicago Herald for December 17, in an editorial entitled, "The world after the war," we note the following extract concerning education, which we think is worthy of separate publication.—EDITORS.]

The reborn democracies will pursue a new vision of education. Already the signs are in the clouds and the people are awaiting to welcome the shattering of the shackles which hitherto have handicapped the human spirit.

Education will signify, it is now coming to signify, a genuine development and refinement of the latent strength of the races. In an unprecedented manner schooling will be made universal. Every child will be given an actual opportunity to go as far as his potentialities permit. The nucleus of this progress is now visible.

In spite of the fact that for many years most civilized countries have pretended that all children had even chances to enjoy the benefits of public education, vast sections of society have been deprived of the advantages of school. In every industrial nation—and that means all modern nations—hundreds of thousands of children have been too poorly fed, too inadequately clothed, too shabbily housed to make them receptive to the stimuli of education.

Early in the war the British nation was authoritatively informed that a large part of the millions spent on public education was money thrown away. Hungry, shivering, poorly nourished, disease-infested children cannot learn. Despite the efforts of the most competent teachers for them education fails. Common sense has long known this. Science has now discovered it. So generally the democratic nations are beginning to prepare to meet the challenge.

Because the new democracies realize that their own prosperity depends upon universal education—a truth made manifest by the shameful betrayal of illiterate Russia, but equally realized by the democrats of other centuries, such for example, as Thomas Jefferson—they are beginning to insist that clothes, food, shelter, anything and all that stands between the child and education be supplied by the state. Already the educational bill brought in for the Lloyd George ministry by Herbert A. L. Fisher provides the beginnings of these things.

After making it physically possible for the coming generations to profit by the educative facilities provided, the new democracies will devote themselves—they are now laying the foundations—to re-creating the purposes, the methods, and the machinery of education itself.

No longer will the ideals of education be class ideals. No longer will culture be the narrow, artificial, desiccated decoration of a leisure possessing aristocracy. With ever greater speed goals fit for the new age will be set up. Education will both be more practical and more cultural in a revived sense. The old feudalistic ideal developed in Germany evokes constantly growing contempt. The human race will not live by bread alone and neither will democracies permit their childhood to be deadened by routine repetitions in the materialistic processes of industry.

Children will be taught to work as specialists, all children will be taught to work, but all children will be taught likewise and at the same time to share in the enjoyment of the varied delightful arts achieved by the race. Industrial and vocational schools will be common—every modern country is now laying the foundation for them—but neither vocational nor industrial education will be so administered that classes and castes will be crystallized.

Every child will be given the means to nourish and develop his special capacities. The ditch digger's son may be the painter of the next generation and the mathematician's heir may be qualified only for the humbler tasks of the menial. But the great intellectually liberating and mentally training machinery fabricated by the great democracies will stand ready to make the best of all. The poor child will get the best and the rich will be able to buy no better.

No longer will enormous hordes of undeveloped boys and girls be swallowed by the voracious maw of a materialistic industry. No longer will the curse of incompetence be passed on from generation to generation. The new democracies will forbid, they are now forbidding, the absorption of the frailty of youth by the monster of mechanical invention. Children will not be transformed into workers before they have qualified as normally developed members of the human race.

Public schools will attain a new dignity and a new utility. The process speeds on. Even in Chicago it may be seen. The school buildings will become more and more the nervous centers, the social ganglia, of the communities. Infancy and old age, childhood, youth and maturity will meet for their respective needs in the schoolhouses. Education will be spread out until it is a large part of the public life of individuals. Babies will be taken to the school nurseries. From kindergarten to university, for training, for play; for the formulation and the expression of the organized community will, the public school building will offer hospitality.

Education and recreation will not be as things apart. Citizenship will emerge from schooling. The habit of the public nursery and the kindergarten will grow into that of the open assembly. Education, in brief, will be rebuilt according to plans now fairly obvious to serve the needs of the new national organizations now casting prophetic shadows across the future. Education will be different, revolutionary, because new races of liberalized men and women are intent upon fulfilling their destinies.

With the background of better education there will be fewer futile men and women. An ever-growing number will work because escape from work will be impossible. Even now idle rich men are objects of well-nigh universal contempt. More and more parasitic, sybaritic women are earning the scorn of society. The payment of the immense debts piled up by the war calls for the vast amounts of human labor devoted to public purposes. As in war, all must fight; so in a democratic peace all must work.

But work itself will tend to be less deadening. With better preparation, with a broad conception of the entire industry of which the individual task is so fragmentary a part, will come that enjoyment of labor which is now chiefly the property of creative scientists, artists, engineers, executives, and promoters. The sense of power which is born of a knowledge of the wide significance of the detail in the intricate chain of production will be more generally distributed.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Resolution Song

(Tune, "Glorious things are sung of Zion." Given by inspiration.)

Shall we take the name of Jesus
As we climb life's rugged hill,
Keep his name forever with us,
Trusting all things to his will?
Yes, we'll take the name of Jesus
As we work or sing or pray,
Making happy those around us,
Doing kind acts every day.

Shall we take the name of Jesus
As through life we journey on?
For the church and kingdom need us,
Doing all things through his Son.
When we'll take the name of Jesus
Till we win this glorious race,
Keep his name forever with us,
Then we'll see him face to face.

Let Silent Hearts Break Forth Once More

Oh Israel, let thy silent harps
Which long have hanged upon the reeds
Break forth once more in gladsome song,
For thy salvation's day succeeds.

That long, long night of wandering
As strangers in far lands unknown;
Proclaim Jehovah's song again,
For thine oppressors are o'erthrown.

Come from the north, come from the south,
Come from the distant isles and seas;
For He that scattered gathereth now,
And to Jerusalem speaks peace.

Soon comes thy king; behold his feet
Upon the Mount of Olives stand,
And lo! of mercy filled I see
Outstretched to thee his wounded hands.

With mercy in those hands he comes,
Oh, wilt thou, Israel, own thy king,
With humble joy before him bow,
Salvation's songs henceforth to sing?

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

What Can the Woman's Auxiliary Do for the Home?

(We commend this splendid article to all the sisters for a careful, thoughtful consideration. Does it not help you to glorify your humble daily tasks by viewing them from this spiritual height? Would we could all bring this feeling, this attitude into our home lives; that all could receive of its reflected beauty! Will Sister Davis favor us with more of her helpful articles?—A. A.)

In speaking on this subject I am not speaking from actual experience, since our auxiliary is very young; but we have not been without our ideals on this subject when contemplating the future. And while speaking from actual experience might bring more satisfaction to the hearer than speaking from theory, yet the ideals must have their place before there can be the satisfactory experience. It has been truly said that we can rise no higher than our ideals.

We have had a vision in moments of aspiration of an auxiliary whose aims and objects were fully understood and sympathized with in the branch, to the extent that every sister was a member; and we have dreamed of the possibilities of such a case, and may here set forth a few of those possibilities.

All benefits to a body must come through the individuals composing that body. All benefits to the home must come through some member or members of the home circle. If the home maker be benefited, we shall see that change in her finding expression in many ways in her home. As our homes are the places where our individualities find expression, one should expect to find the home of a Latter Day Saint not only simple and tasteful and free from gaudiness, but in it an atmosphere that is restful; the place pervaded with the sweet patience and calm faith of the one who presides there. Whatever the facts may be as to whether our homes are thus or not, one unanswerable fact remains; they should be, and should be more free from friction and jarring than the homes of any other people on earth.

It is to be deplored that for many years past there has been a tendency in the world to call in question the family or home life as a career; and many women have come to prefer professional recognition, or educational opportunities, or an independent bank account.

But the pendulum is swinging slowly backward, and many powerful agencies are at work in the land to-day (chief among them being some of our best magazines and many women's clubs) which are presenting to our young women the dignity of house work, the sacred calling of making a home out of a building of four walls: seeking, too, to ennoble the calling of motherhood, and showing up the folly of the idea that has for many years seemed to exist in the minds of many, that it was more noble and more dignified to care for the children of some one else in a school or social settlement than to care for our own at home. Among these agencies, we are proud to say, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Latter Day Saint Church stands out prominently.

The very act of our meeting together to learn, and to discuss our problems of interest, should engender a sisterly affection among us that can only be productive of good. The spiritual good that we should get if we meet in the right spirit and with the right desires, should sweeten all our everyday lives, and help us over the rough places that we are sure to encounter.

In a recent book by Richard C. Cabot, entitled What Men

Live By, he claims that the four great fundamentals necessary for a contented and useful life are work, play, love, worship. With them he believes there is contentment, despite sorrow and pain. Life is successful despite apparent failure in the worldly sense of the word.

Work, love, and play he claims, make a powerful team together, but without worship we are rudderless and chartless on the sea of life. Worship ennobles work, consecrates play, purifies love. Drudgery, he defines as doing under strain that which you do not enjoy, for an end that you can at present appreciate. Work is doing what you may or may not now enjoy, for the sake of a future which you clearly see and desire. Worship, then, provides the vision which keeps work from degenerating into drudgery.

This, then, is the vision, to my mind, which we as housekeepers and home makers may behold as we come together at our auxiliary meetings. We may not only study practical ways of doing work, systems and plans that others have found helpful to home efficiency, practical sewing and millinery, economy, etc., but we may also come to see that our business is as noble a profession as any on earth. Most of our complaints of monotony, or the narrowness of our home duties, would cease suddenly, I believe, and our heads hang in shame if we could but suddenly behold in vision the importance of the work to which God has called us as home makers. It is, in very truth, our sacred profession, as noble as that of the preacher of the gospel, or the physician who seeks to allay human suffering, or the teachers who instruct the young of our land in school.

I read once that there was just as much religion in scrubbing the kitchen floor as in going to church, provided the kitchen floor needed scrubbing. Whether this would be true under every circumstance that might arise might be questioned, yet the idea was a great help to me at the time, when I was tempted to despise housework and to look on church work or talking religion only as being acceptable to God.

It is only right that we should all demand of our work that it give us a chance to achieve, to build something, to recognize what we have done; in other words, we have a right to look upon our job, to use a homely word, as our own special spiritual property. I like that poem by Henry Van Dyke in which he prays:

"Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market place or tranquil room,
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray,
This is my work, my blessing, not my doom,
Of all mankind I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way."

Scrubbing the kitchen floor, then, or doing any one of the countless household tasks that are necessary for the comfort and health of the members of the home are noble tasks, and do give us that chance to achieve and to build something that each of us crave, if their motive be the making of pleasant and comfortable home surroundings for those we love, the creating of a pleasant home atmosphere for our children to look back to in after years, and for our children's father to look forward to after his day's work. The wage earner should expect to find at home, peace and happiness, relief from care, replenishment of strength from food and rest, and intelligent companionship.

Here we find another great benefit to the home that may come through our auxiliaries if we use their privileges rightly. The studies that we are there privileged to take up should make us more intelligent companions to our husbands, better able to understand their discouragements in the business world, or in their religious life, and better fitted to offer them such encouragement as may be a real help to them. They should also make us broader minded and better informed as to the events and great movements of our day and the reasons therefor, and able to better hold our children's respect and love, as they can look up to mother for their knowledge of many things.

I will not touch here on what may be done to better our homes by the child welfare department, since another sister is to deal with this subject, but will only say that when we better understand how to deal with our children, body and mind, it will be one tremendous factor in the improving of our homes.

In closing let me quote from Woman in Modern Society, by Earl Barnes: "For the good of society every young girl should be trained to handle money wisely, to have a general idea of household sanitation, of water supply and sewerage, of foods and their preparation, of clothes, their cost, and their wearing qualities. She should have a sense of the significance of the family life to society in general, and of the social relationship that must exist between husband and wife if their partnership is to be happy and effective. She should have the beginnings of a eugenic conscience established in her, and she should know something of the care of children in infancy."

We have faith in the Woman's Auxiliary—though as yet we have not followed it far—that it will fit us, if we apply ourselves earnestly to learn, to fulfill all these requirements—nay, fit us to come up higher than any standard that the world may set up, since our motive should be to establish a Zion in our homes, that thus we may aid in the establishment of Zion upon the earth as a dwelling place fit for the Son of God when he shall return to earth.

A Workday Prayer, by Burton Braley

Great Master Workman: This day I pray thee for imagination, that I may find in the dullest routine of my work the thrill of the true romance. For though I am but one toiler in a universe of toilers and my part in the labor of the world is small, if I have the vision to recognize the beauty and the dignity of that labor I shall know that I, too, am helping to build the dreams of the ages into the facts of the future. And knowing this I shall find even drudgery worth while and feel within me the joy of creation. Amen.

As One Bishop Views It

At one of the reunions of the past fall, following a talk on the new relief and service work outlined by the president of our general auxiliary, and presented by her, one of our bishops spoke for the church on this phase of our woman's work. We quote from his speech:

"The Woman's Auxiliary work has taken a direct step upward in presenting these plans for their work. We are glad to see the great advancement that is being made by them. The suffering among the members of the church should be attended to before even the sending out of the ministry; for sometime, somewhere, it is that the poor are going to inherit the earth. We should not have paid socials. Throw open your doors and give the poor the good things as well as those who are able to pay. There should be no charge at the church door for socials. A few spend more money getting ready for such things than they are worth. We find, too, that many people are very much alive, social-ly, and very much dead, spiritually! Consecrate of your money, directly; relieve the suffering and distress that are close at hand, and be blessed. I have noted that the activities of the women of the church are bringing them out, and the men, too, as has never been done before. It is time we take off our hats to the sisters, and tell them to occupy as a factor in this work! Much of this burden can be taken from the shoulders of the priesthood and placed upon theirs. In my opinion, there lies before them a wonderful work in this relief and service department."

These comments, from one in authority along temporal lines, are helpful to those who are trying to work out the policies of the auxiliary work, and the statement of the president of the association at the beginning of her administration was not far wrong, when she said that the men of the church should be won to our cause if we would work successfully. Our work is designed to supplement that of the priesthood, and the interest being taken in it by the men in charge of districts and branches, has helped us to realize that we have made no mistake in putting out work on a more definite basis as a "helping organization" to the main one. We should emphasize the spiritual nature of our work as it has never been emphasized before, also, and work in harmony with the ministry at all times—following, not leading.

LULA M. SANDY.

Are Women Businesslike?

If they are, why does our general secretary have such difficulty in getting the secretaries of the various locals to report? We all feel that the work of the women in our church has been greatly accelerated; that much interest has been awakened and blossomed into organized effort among them, everywhere. Why, then, can we not see to it, that our general secretary is enabled to make an accurate and encouraging report to the convention in April, reflecting the inspiring conditions among us throughout the church. Arouse, you secretaries! Look over the past year's activities in your local, neglecting none that will be of interest or suggestive value or encouragement to others; embody them in a newsy report and send to the district organizer appointed over the work in your vicinity. If none has so far been so appointed, mail your report directly to Sister Gardner. But let it all be done "snappy," as the boys would put it! Be "up-to-the-minute," and see how it feels for once!

A. A.

To All Secretaries

The year has just closed, and all clubs, circles, classes, and societies should send in their reports. If you are in a district over which an organizer for the Woman's Auxiliary has been appointed your report should be sent to the organizer at once. If in a district where no organizer has been appointed, or if in isolated territory, your report should be sent to the general secretary without delay.

This is very important, for we wish to enroll you with us in this department of church work. Our enrollment is far from being complete at this time. The first of the year we published a request for every organization of women in the church to notify us whether they were auxiliary members or not. We would have appreciated an active response, but we heard from a very small number.

The following questions are suggestive. Any additional information which you may wish to give that may be helpful may be included and will be appreciated.

1. What class of work or what studies is your organization pursuing?
2. How many members have you enrolled?
3. How often does your organization meet?
4. Your annual assessment of ten cents per capita is due now, if you are a member of the auxiliary. Have you paid it? If not, we invite you to join us.
5. Have you the Auxiliary Yearbook?

Every group of women, whether regularly organized or not, which is engaged in active work or in class work should report. We suggest that you make this report in duplicate and send one copy to the supervisor of the bureau in which you are interested and one to the address given below, at the earliest possible date. It is time now that we were working on our report to the general church President.

Please sign names of president and secretary and give their addresses; also give name of branch.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,

General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Country Babies

The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor has recently issued its first detailed report on the care which is available for babies and mothers in rural districts. This report is based on a study of the open country in a single county in Kansas and will be followed by reports on counties in other States.

The population in this Kansas county is widely scattered, but no home is more than twenty miles from a doctor, and telephones and good roads minimize the disadvantages of great distances. In all but three of the families visited, the father is a farmer or a farm worker, and the general level of prosperity is high.

In spite of these favorable conditions, two thirds of the mothers had no medical care before their children were born, and more than one third had no visit from a physician after the day of the birth. In only a few cases were the prenatal and postnatal care adequate as compared with accepted standards. Four fifths of the wives of farmers had to work for large farm crews near the time of confinement, when they specially needed to conserve all their strength.

The study includes a record of the infant deaths among those babies who were born at least twelve months before the Children's Bureau agents visited the county. The infant mortality rate is comparatively low, about one death among every twenty-five births, but (we quote from the report):

"The existing rate should not be regarded with complacency. For, as Sir Arthur Nedholme says, 'If babies were well born and well cared for, their mortality would be negligible.' In other words, there is no inherent reason why babies should die in the community which has all the advantages possessed by this county—country life, healthful climate, high standards of living, a high level of intelligence about matters of health, and means wherewith to provide for its mothers and babies."

The studies in other States on which the bureau is now at work indicate that in many country homes poverty and remoteness, with the attendant evils of which maternal and infant deaths are a striking index, press with a severity unknown in this Kansas county.

A plan for providing nurses, doctors, hospitals, and conference centers, making available to all mothers and babies in rural counties adequate medical and nursing care, is outlined by the Children's Bureau. The report says: "In the Kansas county progress has been made in securing certain of the suggested essentials, but in this county and others of similar type the next step may well be the establishment of a nursing service for the rural parts of the country."

Another bulletin of recent date contains this:

Better care for mothers, with government aid to local authorities and agencies, has been part of Great Britain's war program; she has achieved for 1916 her lowest infant mortality rate. The Government of New Zealand, whose infant mortality rate is scarcely half that of the United States, has for several years afforded to New Zealand mothers care at childbirth.

If the lives and well-being of mothers and babies in the United States are to be protected, Miss Lathrop believes that public health nurses must be maintained to show the mother miles out in the country and the mother in the crowded tenement how to care for herself and her children. Schools and universities should offer instruction covering the field of hygiene for mothers and children, for persons of varying ages and circumstances.

At a convenient center it should be possible to secure examination of well children and expert advice as to their best development. Adequate confinement care should be available. Hospital facilities should be at the command of every American mother and child.

God's Judgments on the World

I wish to write a few lines from a country once a land of flowers, but now a sheet of ice. December has been one of the coldest times that has been experienced here for many years. The war cloud is growing darker and the times are growing more perilous. In fact the curtains of time are about to go down on a world that will not be seen any more. We are facing a catastrophe that involves the whole human race.

We have before our eyes the declining twilight of one world preceding the dawn of another. The world is staggering under the terrific blows that have been given it in the hours of God's judgments, and our Savior said this was just the beginning of sorrows.

This evening, as I pen these few lines, I look back to the time when I first heard this gospel, and those who preached it thirty-five years ago. In northeastern Texas the Comforter came to us that shows the children of men things of the future, and it spoke of those things that are now coming upon the earth.

Yes; when the angel visited that young man, Joseph Smith, eighty-seven years ago and made known the fearful conditions that were coming to this generation, they killed him for it. But thank the Lord, this Spirit is true, and those things spoken of by the prophet of God are here, so this generation must be brought to its knees. Yes; old Babylon must go, though the earth may weep over her.

But amid these sad conditions the bright sun of inspiration is dawning upon the church, and thousands of God's Saints are rejoicing to know that he is remembering his people. And the long hoped for Zion will soon be a reality. I have enjoyed the Spirit of the gospel this year more than ever in preaching, and I had the pleasure of preaching over two hundred sermons last year to thousands of people. I led quite a number of noble men and women into the waters of baptism. The Lord is remembering his people and if we will live good and pure lives and do all he requires, he will do the rest and Zion will soon shine out in all of her beauty and say to her children, "Come home to meet the Bridegroom." Then we will not say good-by to our dear ones in death any more.

But we will live a thousand bright years with our Lord and have a home in the Holy City. So may God bless his people everywhere.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.

Deplores Fighting

There have been so many articles in the HERALD that seem to justify our entering into this great world war that I wish to offer a feeble protest. I cannot understand how members of our church can voluntarily go to war and maybe have to kill some of their brothers in other lands who are compelled to go. Of course, if any of our members are drafted, that is different, as we must obey the laws of our country.

Some of the articles claim it is a war for democracy against autocracy. Now who are the ones that are clamoring the loudest for this so-called democracy? Is it the common people? No. It is the rich and haughty. Can we believe they want democracy? Their action against conscripting the wealth of our country, as well as our young men, show that their patriotism does not reach that far.

Another thing, why is it that nearly all the churches are on the wrong side of every great question? One editorial in the HERALD several months ago said that the church was uncompromisingly opposed to war, and that it is a matter of individual opinion. Now if we believe the church's stand against war is correct, how can we have an adverse opinion any more than we could about any other teaching of the church?

I am surprised that anyone in our church could possibly in any way justify the horrible butchery that is going on in this world war, as war is only legalized murder. The Bible Student Monthly is the only religious paper that dares to speak out against this great war.

In conclusion, I wish to say I am not a German and have no apologies to make for any cruel wrongs they may have done, but believe as true Saints of God we are not to take up our sword against our neighbor.

Sincerely your brother,
JAMES F. CAMPBELL.

LAKE GENEVA, WISCONSIN.

Northeastern Illinois

This district is still on the map, but at present undergoing the worst storm of the winter. It began rather mildly Friday morning, but increased all day, and at night had reached the wildest blizzard I ever saw in this district. The mercury stood at twenty-two below zero this morning, and we look for much colder to-morrow.

Well, says some one, what has that to do with the Northeastern Illinois District? Just this: This is a day off; and as one brother said about reporting for this and that: "When I have nothing else to do I will report," and that is my case to-day. The mail man will not show his face here in the country to-day, eight miles west of Manteno; so no mail. I must just think of home, sweet home, and talk with Brother and Sister Abe Rogers, with whom I am made welcome.

The Deselm Branch numbers about seventy-nine members, but about half of them are absent and some of the aged are too far away to meet, except when the weather and roads are good. But the few are laboring on with some ups and downs; we trust with more of the former than the latter. And what is true of this branch is more or less true of all the branches in the district. On the whole we believe the "onward and upward" motto is being carried out.

In the last few months several have been "cast out" as the result of elders' court findings and recommendations. This is painful many times, but the law of God must be honored, else why continue to believe in the law? We are still of the opinion that there are many more who should be made to repent or be cast out, and as a result there would be a greater degree of service on the part of those remaining. I am wondering if conference resolution number 377 were made a test of fellowship, how many would need to repent, and how many would? It is as follows: "Resolved, That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming to Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."

Do I hear some one saying; "I did not know that General Conference had ever passed such a resolution?"

Yes, every now and then I find some one who never heard of some of these conference resolutions, but they are there just the same. How about this one: number 593: "That we discourage members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from holding membership in any society or order which requires the taking of oaths or entering into covenant or obligation to guard the secrets, purposes, or doings of its organization.

"How many are guilty in the light of this? For one I have endeavored to make bold to the young of our church to give heed to the voice of counsel of the church in General Conference assembled.

Again listen: number 671: "That the practice of theater-going should be discouraged and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice as detrimental to spirituality." Who answers, I am guilty and I will repent? That is what every member who is indulging in such ought to do.

When we urge the children to save their Christmas offerings, by not doing this and that, I sometimes think of the older children, and wonder if they are willing to stop things that the church has advised against. Why not make the church first in all things? Why put your trust in the arm of flesh? Jesus said we should not. He said we could not serve two masters. Was he correct? I think so. If not, why claim to follow him? Does the law of God not make provision for the needs of the members of his kingdom? You answer, Yes, it certainly does. Well, then, why not let your all in all be put into it? If we do, and further free the hands of the bishopric, Zion will be redeemed and every man's wants and needs be supplied, inasmuch as they are just. That is all I ask for the dearest of mine. Can we not trust the provisions of our heavenly Father, or must we add to or take from? The Lord has said it must be done in his own way, and that is the way I desire to see it done. I hope there will never be a young man or woman with whom I have labored that will be able to meet me, at the judgment day and say that I did not tell him of what the church has required of us and what the Lord has warned us not to do.

I would like to see the money turned into the church in 1918 so that the bishopric could have plenty for every requirement of the work intrusted to their care. I believe this district is coming nearer to the pattern as the days go by. The question is, Will we be among the "valiant" or among the "forgetters"? Then, dear Saints, let us live very near to the law God has given, and come out of the world, and be "separate" that we may be his "sons and daughters."

Your servant and brother,

MANTENO, ILLINOIS.

Good Results in Omaha

The work for the new year looks good to me in many respects. We are facing grave questions, but the work of the Zion of the Lord ought to attract so much enthusiastic effort that it would be a great joy to all of us to work in the vineyard of the Lord in the closing scenes near the coming of the Lord; and, as he has said, we ought to lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing our redemption draweth near.

The cold weather here of late reminds the writer he is no longer in the south. The country is covered with snow, and the northwest wind is piercing cold. I just returned from preaching the funeral sermon of Brother George Brown, a brother of Sister Allie Brewater, of Oklahoma, and the father of Sister Fry, of Boone, Iowa. There is some sickness in the city among the Saints. Sister Schwartz lingers very low, not expected to live. Many of the Saints remember her faithful writings and work.

Six were baptized in the font of the church by the writer last Sunday; all grown people, some noble ones. We have longed to see them come. One of the number, Brother R. W. Scott's wife, surely will be a good worker. Four of the number were from Valley, Nebraska, where I preached a sermon on the signs of the times Wednesday night, and Sister Kelley sang beautifully. The building was too cold for a meeting, but the people were anxious to hear, so about two hundred stayed and listened with intent interest to the last.

The soldier boys from the fort are seen in church here nearly every Sunday, and some of them show real interest, as they surely should do, for they are going into the worst mixup the world ever had. The great events undoubtedly portend good for Zion and Jerusalem.

A Word About "Sandhedens Banner"

When in 1916 our missionaries returned from the Scandinavian countries it was found necessary to suspend for a time the publication of Sandhedens Banner, our mission paper for that field, but in the interest of the work among the Scandinavian people in this and the home countries we deem it best to resume its publication. The Banner will now be issued from our publishing house in Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Peter Muceus, Lamoni, Iowa, and the undersigned will again take up the work and responsibility of editing the paper. It will appear monthly, contain sixteen closely printed pages and cost fifty cents a year.

We feel sure that in the past the Banner has fully demonstrated its usefulness and thus earned its right to a place among the publications of the church. While it has its own sphere of influence and activity it endeavors as a colaborer to present the same truth to the people in their own language and to assist in building up the same cause.

While we are aware of the fact that most of the Scandinavian Saints in this country can read our English publications and may not have any special need for a paper like the Banner, we believe that the paper may help even them to greater activity and usefulness in the church. Some cannot read English, and we have people in the home countries who need our help. To fulfill our mission in the world as a people, two important facts must be kept constantly in mind: we must not become selfish; and the missionary spirit must be kept alive among us. A failure in this regard would make us like the salt that has lost its savor. So, while you may not need the paper, you have friends, relatives, or neighbors who do. Subscribe for them and give them a chance to know the truth. Branches of our people could do the same by a small collection.

We trust this matter may receive the earnest attention of all our people, so that the Banner may not only become financially self-supporting, but be able to extend its sphere of activity and be instrumental in bringing the glad news of a restored gospel to many people. Subscriptions should be sent to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Your colaborer,

PETER ANDERSON.

filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb; for he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight years old unto his power: to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews, and to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people; to prepare them for the coming of the Lord, in whose hand is given all power."

It would seem to us in reading this passage as a whole, he was baptized in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God unto this power, that in his mission he was to be a forerunner of Jesus, that is—to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord." Doing so, the result would be the rejection and overturning of the kingdom of the Jews, for the Jews rejected Christ, and thereby lost their standing and have been wanderers for many years. It could scarcely mean that he, single-handed, was to overturn the kingdom of the Jews. It is true that he was the forerunner of a movement which ended in the destruction of the kingdom of the Jews and the gospel being taken from them and preached to the Gentiles, as is so clearly set forth by the Apostle Paul in the Roman letter. Hence until the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled, the kingdom of the Jews is overthrown. (Luke 21: 24.)

THE BREASTPLATE

Q. What is the specific use of the breastplate?

A. There is not very much definitely written upon this subject. In the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 5: 5, there is a reference to breastplates, but these were apparently used for defense in times of warfare and are closely related to the swords, so used in the plural sense. Paul admonished us to put on the breastplate of righteousness, and we find a similar admonition in Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3.

However, we have the promise given in Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1 that to certain men the privilege was allowed of having "a view of the plates, and also the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount, when he talked with the Lord face to face."

We find a direct reference in volume 1 of the Church History, page 14, to a record kept by Joseph Smith. "Again he told me that when I got those plates of which he had spoken (for the time that they should be obtained was not yet fulfilled) I should not show them to any person, neither the breastplate with the Urim and Thummim, only to those to whom I should be commanded to show them, if I did I should be destroyed."

Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times. (Ibid., p. 13.)

It would appear from this that they were used in connection with the Urim and Thummim, possibly as was the case with the high priests of Israel. It is not known definitely so far as we are advised, exactly how they were thus used among the Israelites. There is an assumption that there was a bag or pouch in which the Urim and Thummim was kept. There is no further record that this breastplate was exactly like the one in Israel or similarly set with precious stones.

We find on pages 16 and 17 further reference to the breastplate, but without description. The above passages are from Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 729.

We find also in Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, in chapter 24, the following description of the breastplate:

"It was concave on one side and convex on the other, and extended from the neck downwards as far as the center of the stomach of a man of extraordinary size. It had four straps of the same material for the purpose of fastening it to the breast, two of which ran back to go over the shoulders, and the other two were designed to fasten to the hips. They were just the width of two of my fingers, (for I measured them) and they had holes in the ends of them, to be convenient in fastening.

"The whole plate was worth at least five hundred dollars. After I had examined it, Joseph placed it in the chest with the Urim and Thummim."

The fact that it is stated in the previous chapter that Joseph Smith kept the Urim and Thummim constantly about his person, would seem to indicate that it was not permanently attached to the breastplate, but it would seem, considering all these passages as a whole, that they were related to it in some way.

Book Reviews

GULIVER'S TRAVELS.—The Macmillan Company, New York, has recently gotten out a new edition of this old classic for children. It is edited by Padriac Colum and beautifully illustrated in colors by Pognay. The illustrations make more vivid the strange stories and stranger peoples that trooped from the wonderful imagination of Jonathan Swift. The tiny people of Lilliput and the giants of Brobdingnag are made very real. In cloth, $2, postage 14 cents.

WHEN STORIES.—Perhaps no writer of children's stories is more popular than Thornton W. Burgess. Even the grownups like to read about Reddy Fox and Bobby Coon and Sammy Jay. A new series under the title "Mother West Wind Stories" is now on the market. The latest of these being the "When Stories." Little, Brown and Company, Boston. Price $1, postage 10 cents.

PADDY THE BEAVER.—Two new "bedtime stories," are out. Paddy the Beaver, and Poor Mrs. Quack. Written in the usual Burgess style. Fifty cents the volume. Little, Brown and Co.

An Important Book

THE LAW OF HUMAN PROGRESS.—By Henry George, published by Joseph Fels International Commission, New York, 1917. Price 50 cents; leather, $1; 121 pp. This monograph comprises five chapters of book ten, or Progress and Poverty, by Henry George, with a few verbal changes made by the request of the family of Henry George. It is very readable and of marked interest. It points out the continual decline of empires and civilization of the past. It emphasizes the effect of environment. It gives as the one great underlying cause of decline, progressive in equality. The solution of civilization of association in equality. Equal opportunity and social justice. Civilization tends to specialization. Specialization is too dominant of one class, so that mental powers are used to intensify the system of inequality, which means inevitable decline.

Our Departed Ones

BUTLER.—At Niles, Michigan, December 25, 1917, Sister Frances M. Butler, aged 73 years and 14 days. She died from heart failure a few minutes after the attack. She was a faithful Saint, a noble and worthy woman. Baptized at Galien, Michigan, in 1865. Her daughter, an only brother, and a nephew came to Lamoni with the body. Buried, as she requested, by the side of her husband, Brother Charles J. Butler, who died in 1909, they having lived in Lamoni for many years prior to his death. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Columbus Scott.

BEATTY.—Martin Luther Beatty, born at Limerick, Ohio, October 8, 1879. Married Effie Ethel Erwin, October 1, 1899. To this union were born 5 sons and one daughter, who, with their mother, are left to mourn, also an aged mother, 2 brothers, 3 sisters, besides many other relatives and friends. Baptized October 4, 1903, by his father, T. J. Beatty. Ordained priest in 1907, an elder, 1916. Was president of branch at Limerick, for 10 years. Died December 23, 1917, sermon by J. G. Halb. Was humble and faithful, a kind and affectionate husband, a loving father.

CLEMENTS.—George W. Clements died suddenly, December 21, 1917. He was born at Cane Island, Arkansas, February 20, 1873. Baptized by D. R. Baldwin at same place, March 19, 1905. He maintained his faith in the gospel and always had a cheerful answer for the hope he enjoyed, doing all he could for the cause he loved. Saints in this part feel his departure most keenly. Four sons, 3 daughters, 3 brothers, MCNAMARA.—Thomas McNamara died at his home 743 Harriet Street, Flint, Michigan, December 27, 1917, aged 57 years. Death caused by cancer. He leaves to mourn a widow, 7 sons, and 3 daughters. Two daughters and one son preceded him. Funeral services in Saints' church, in charge of J. R. Grice. The choir of forty voices rendered the music. Many beautiful flowers showed the esteem in which he was held. His 4 sons Lewis, Fernly, George and Dewey, acted as pallbearers. Interment in the Grace Lawn Cemetery.

WIXOM.—Jasper Wixom was born December 25, 1841, at Woodford County, Illinois. Was baptized in the early sixties, by William Anderson. Married Rebecca Catlain, July 2, 1871. To this union were born 7 children, 5 boys, 2 girls, six of whom preceded him to the beyond. Died Dec. 23, 1917. Wife and daughter, Elizabeth Forest, survive him. Located in San Bernardino in 1864. Thus passes a pioneer of the West, and a pioneer of the church. Funeral sermon by T. W. Williams.

ANDREWS.—William Logan Andrews was born December 2, 1858, Macoupin County, Illinois. Grew to manhood in Illinois, moved to Iowa in 1883. Married Blanche I. Hougas, March 20, 1884. To this union were born 7 children, 2 boys, and 5 girls, 3 of whom died in childhood. He was a teacher in the schools of Iowa over 20 years. Moved to Lincoln, Nebraska, in 1907. In early life he became a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. At time of death, he was not affiliated with any church, but was a clean, upright gentleman, and will be missed by his associates. Died at his home in Lincoln, Nebraska, January 11, 1918. Funeral at Latter Day Saint church in charge of J. A. Dowker, sermon by F. A. Smith.

SCHWARTZ.—Alice Cary Schwartz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Schwartz, was born at Iowa City, Iowa, July 20, 1868. She taught school for four years in Iowa, and for twenty-five years did stenographic work in Omaha, Saint Louis, and Chicago. November, 1916, a small growth appeared on her neck, causing much pain, which was not relieved by an operation. In time cancerous growths appeared over the body, and she soon became paralyzed. She was a great sufferer until the last four days of her life, when she was freed from pain and died as a little child going to sleep, January 14, 1918. She was an untiring worker, and for twenty-two years was fully consecrated to the work of the Lord. Leaves 3 brothers, 3 sisters, and many friends and relatives who will miss her. Funeral from Saints' church, Omaha, sermon by Hubert Case, prayer by James Huff.

RUST.—Jacob L. Rust was born in Oquawka, Henderson County, Illinois, in 1839. Joined the church in 1870, presiding at that time in Millersburg, at Buffalo Prairie. He was a soldier in the Civil War. Died October 12, 1917. Leaves one son, Cyril K. Rust, and 2 daughters, Phoebe L. Allen, and Hattie Hicks, 12 grandchildren, and one great-grandson. Funeral service at Burlington, Iowa, conducted by Elder Sage. Interment in Henderson Cemetery.

YOUR "HERALD" MAY BE LATE

Nearly all our publications are arriving late. Some come along a week after the usual date of arrival.

It is on account of congested traffic, due to war conditions. Be patient and wait several days before writing us of the nonreceipt of any of your publications. They are all being mailed on time as usual.

"Last spring when Brother Smith—I don't know which Smith it was—made such an earnest appeal to the Saints to help pay off the church debt through the Christmas offering, I wondered what I in my poor circumstances could do. I turned to the old hen and she proved a faithful friend indeed. I decided to save the eggs that were laid on Sunday, to set a hen and save their increase till Christmas time. Behold the results."—Roda Hunter Erhard, Minnesota. The results were $13.45 for the Christmas offering.

S. R. BURGESS PASSES

The father of S. A. Burgess, the associate editor of the HERALD, died suddenly on the morning of the 18th, presumably from heart failure. His health had been good to the time of his death, though it is thought possible than an injury he suffered from being run into by an auto at Christmas time may have contributed to this event. Brother Burgess and other relatives in Lamoni left for Saint Louis, to attend the funeral.

C. W. Clark, recently ordained an elder at Columbus, Ohio, tells a typical little experience in a personal letter, which we take the liberty to quote: "I went last Sunday to hear A. C. Lattimer, ex-Mormon priest, lecture against Mormonism. The Methodist pastor invited me into the pulpit; had me lead in prayer and gave me the resolution it was intended to adopt against polygamy, having me make the motion to adopt the same. Mr. Lattimer seemed to wilt some when he found our people were respected, and confined his remarks to Utah, which he did not do elsewhere."

A number of branches are beginning a campaign to put one of the general church periodicals into the home of every resident family of Saints. They are going to succeed, too, the way they are organizing for it. The idea is surely a good one, and we note the willingness of the advertising department to cooperate with sample copies, mailing lists, etc. One pastor says it was a revelation to him to note how few of his flock were subscribers to the church papers. Do you realize how few there are among yours?

MAKING THE FARM PAY

The office here acts as agent for an excellent book with the above title. It has 300 pages on how to get the biggest returns from the soil and make the farm life attractive and successful. It is highly recommended by a large number of good journals and is eminently worth the dollar it costs.

Knobnoster, Missouri, is going to be one of those branches that has a church publication in each Saint's home. Brother W. S. Macrae went out about three hours and as a result sent in an order for $16.18 worth of church literature, mostly new subscriptions. He took out his ten per cent for Christmas offering, which you can do. Who's next?

WHAT OUR READERS THINK

"There is nothing in the HERALD for me. The same is true of the rest of the church papers. There are other church papers from which I can get more. The composition, as I consider it, is loose and the subject matter is not profound. The articles are in the main hackneyed. I always read with a notebook and pencil or typewriter at hand. I do not use them when I read the church papers. They neither contain new subjects nor new thoughts on old subjects. There is a little change since I first read the HERALD near forty years ago."

Then read this, which expresses a sentiment you may have heard before: "The HERALD seems rather deep for most, anyway for a great many nonmembers." And this: "The HERALD seems to be written mostly for the educated or learned class." What are the poor editors to do, anyway?

James W. Stobaugh, secretary of the General Religio Society, recently visited Lamoni in the interests of his work.

Iowa is to observe February 3 as Thrift Day. Every pulpit in the State is urged to use the subject "Thrift" as a text and all the people are requested to join in the spirit of the occasion. The sale of United States War Savings Stamps will be especially recommended, which are on sale everywhere at 25 cents each.

DES MOINES DIRECTORY

We are in receipt of a complete directory of the Des Moines, Iowa, Branch, dated January 1, 1918. It shows the various divisions of the city into sections, with the full membership of the branch, their names arranged alphabetically, with number of residence, the street, and the phone number. There are pages listing the names of the branch officers and also the officers of the Sunday school and Religio. The whole makes a convenient little booklet of 24 pages. The branch owns a small press, one of the brethren has a job linotype machine, and they are making good use of both.

NEED ANY MAPS?

The Herald Office has the agency for some excellent maps for Sunday schools and Bible classes. If you do not have class and wall maps for your Sunday school, you need them. Drop a card to the office for an illustrated price list of maps, or include it in your first order sent this way. Money spent on good maps is an investment paying large dividends in inspirational knowledge. In these days when Palestine is figuring so largely in the world's history, are you sure you know its geography? It is easy, with good maps.

"OPEN HIS EYES, THAT HE MAY SEE"

(Synopsis of a sermon by E. D. Moore, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 20, 1918.)

A mighty host encompassed Dothan, where dwelt Elisha the prophet of God. The king who had sent this host on its mission had heard strange tales of the uncanny power of the prophet. Furthermore, by means of this power, the king of Israel was safe from the Syrian army.

So the Syrian king said in effect: We'll send down a big army and surround this man. When we have captured him, we'll see if he can tell the words I speak in my bed chamber, as my servants verily believe.

The servant of Elisha arose early in the morning—we admire him for that—took in the situation at a glance, evidently, and reported in terror, saying: "How shall we do?"

He had only half seen, as it developed, but yet the sight was sufficient to nearly overcome him. Who wouldn't be frightened under such circumstances? How many of us are prone to flee to our real or imaginary bomb proof caves at much less impressive sights?

Are there any here to-night who have ever been guilty of poking their respective noses out from under the coverlet on a biting cold Sabbath morning, sniffing a few sniffs, and, bearlike, deciding to hibernate most of the day in our cozy dens? How many under like circumstances are prone to forget our duty to our God, our Sunday school classes, ourselves—all because of our fear of the elements.

How many of us are sorely afraid to venture out into the night air, lest we catch cold, as though there were any other kind of air after the twilight and before the dawn?

But we might read further into the sixth chapter of 2 Kings, else we may be as foolish as the servant was blind. It's dangerous to stop at the wrong place. This may explain to Brother Elbert, author of the "Blue pencil notes," the reason why we poor preachers do not stop—we're afraid we haven't said anything and must continue yet a while, hoping we may. We fear to take chances on stopping. It's dangerous to stop too soon.

Elisha prayed that the eyes of the young man might be opened—and they were. Why, he hadn't seen even half there was to be seen. "The mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." The man of God explained that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." They had been there all the time, but the young man saw them not. The prayer of the prophet had been: "Open his eyes, that he may see." They were opened.

Here were two opposing hosts in battle array, yet there was no conflict. Do you recall the outcome? In answer to Elisha's prayer, the Syrian host had been smitten with blindness, led into Samaria, sumptuously dined, and sent home.

BLINDNESS

Oh, the awfulness of blindness! We who possess the full use of our sense of sight, hardly appreciate the blessing it is. To be shut out from the sights this old world affords, in all its range of wondrous beauty of nature to the stark ugliness that civilization may bring, what a pity! To be led by the hand through life, to vainly try to imagine the expression on the faces of those whose voices we know—how cold and dark and dreary!

We shudder at the thought, as well we may, yet most of us are as blind as newborn kittens to the realities existing all about us. We seem to be as unseeing, sometimes, as bats at noonday. The world is teeming with activity, yet they cannot see it. But the young Israelite was out before breakfast and saw while others slept.

When we use the word see and its relatives, it is understood that we mean more than the mere registration of sight on the retina. Principally, we mean to include that which reaches the mind and is woven into our characters. To have our natural vision blinded is terrible; to be spiritually unconscious is doubly dreadful.

AFRAID—OF WHAT?

In one of our old fables, according to Grenville Kleiser, it tells that when man first beheld a camel, its huge size caused him to flee in dreadful terror. Later, observing the animal's seeming gentleness, he approached him less timidly, and then, seeing the almost spiritless nature of the beast, he boldly put a bridle in his mouth and set a child to drive him.

Uncomprehending vision often brings this panic of fear upon us at first, which may later subside into a stupid lethargy. God told Noah and his sons the fear of them should be on every beast and fowl and fish. To this day they retain that fear except when especially domesticated; and no matter how well intentioned we may be, no wild animal is going to appreciate our caresses. It is unreasoning fear, we say, yet it is real.

We who were created in the image of God in the beginning, shall we behold his handiwork and fear? As his thunders roar and his lightnings flash, do we cringe in fear lest we be stricken?

In the present world conflagration which may pave the way for the promulgation of the gospel to the nations of the earth, does the limited vision that comes to us drive us to cover, too fearful to think clearly?

Ah, we would be brave and loyal patriots in the army of the Lord; everyone of us. Sons and daughters of fearless men and brave women; no mere bugaboo shall frighten us. Of course not.

Hark! There is a call on the telephone. "Yes. . . Preach where? . . . Oh, yes. Well, I'd be glad to do what I could, but I'm afraid I'm hardly prepared just now. You know I haven't been feeling just right of late and . . ."

Of course you're not prepared. You never will be. You're afraid to try!

But you over here who have been chuckling about his cowardice over a little thing like that, here is a call for you: "Yes, he's here; I'll call him," and I turn it over to you. The audience and myself listen to you say this: "Yes; this is Mr. Awfully Busy Man. . . . How's that? Sick? Well, I'm awfully sorry; is there . . . What's that? . . . Wants some one to sit up, and thought of me? Well, I'd be glad to, but I'm so awfully busy lately that I'm afraid . . ."

No need to wait longer. You sister over here who has been at the telephone, hours at a time, I ask you: Did he go? The answer I hear is, "Sometimes." But we know that mostly he did not.

But, you protest, you assign such difficult tasks. We cannot preach or visit, neither can we lose sleep and work. Of course not. Yet many have done so. But we'll give you something easy. It requires great courage and endurance to do the things we have mentioned. Allow us to introduce you to the superintendent of the Sunday school. You know him, already? Very well; he knows you, too. This we hear:

"Teach a class? What class? . . . Do you know, I just joined this bunch here and I'm sure I need to study awhile as a student before I can teach others. Then I'm carrying such heavy work outside, I'm busy all the time. Really, I couldn't handle that class anyway, so I'm afraid . . ."

So are we afraid about you. Just keep right on sponging another fifteen or twenty years, parasiting your way through life, and then you'll be ready—ready for the museum as a fossil—not a teacher or a leader.

To the friend you recommend, we introduce the president of the Religio, but he, too, is possessed of this great overshadowing fear and won't try. No results.

At prayer meeting the time drags, the ticking of the clock booms out over the oppressively silent meeting—all because so many of us are afraid to tell what God has done for us and what we want to do for him. Fearful are we lest we have nothing worth while to say. No doubt about it, so long as we retain that frame of mind.

What a set of moral cowards we must seem to the Almighty.

Constantly we allow ourselves to be afraid. We fear to do a thing anywhere, lest we fail. They need singers for the community chorus, and the chorister asks us to join, but our only song is: "I'm afraid; I'm afraid; I'm a-fra-id." They don't like our anthem, and by request we cease to attend.

For some reason your speaker sometimes lapses into the would-be-leader style of exhortation. Possibly it is the result of earlier training, habit formed from years of leading horses to the tank that they might drink. I led them to the water, but I never made them drink. By a little ingenuity practiced by every farm boy, I have taught many a calf to drink, but never an equine.

One calf in my list of acquaintances seemed to have been born with a vacuum where his brain should have been. He would not drink without something in his mouth. Our fingers got sore, so we would substitute a piece of a corn cob, and he would serenely devour the pailful and bellow for more. He never got over his crazy habit of taking all his liquid nourishment via the cob route. Many a time when he was a big, hulking three-year-old, have I seen him snoozing all over the tank to find a cob, that he might drink.

Foolish? Yes; but I have seen hundreds of male human beings who seem able to breathe well only in that way. Their air seems so much sweeter when pulled through an old corn cob pipe or a bunch of weeds called a cigar, or possibly through a coffin-nail cigarette.

You don't smoke? Thank God; but I have seen many male and female human beings who could hardly part with a quarter for a legitimate purpose such as Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., or even our own church work, except as they were given something to eat for their money. . . Away with such habits if we must be slaves to them!

THE "COMING TO" PROCESS

Years ago, when I was "young," Brother M. H. Bond preached a powerful sermon to me—and I hope to the rest of the big audience—on a text from the parable of the prodigal son.

The young man had fallen to the depths of degradation. He, a cultured Jew, feeding the detested swine, and compelled to live on their rations.

The text said: "And when he came to himself." You know what he did when he came to himself.

That sermon and that text made a lasting impression on me. The coming to one's self is surely an interesting process. To really and truly find one's bearings and emerge from the chrysalis stage where we may unfold our wings and soar a little, is a wonderful thing, whether the subject be a silkworm or a full-grown man.

We were speaking of the leadership attitude. It really isn't that. It is more of the bugler type. If we are able to sound the reveille which will awaken a goodly number in time for the dress parade before the real leaders, it will be sufficient. Anybody can blow a bugle—if he knows how.

As we said, the process of awakening is an important one. We should come to, now. You will recall how in the parable of the ten virgins they all slumbered and slept; and when the call came, only five of the ten were ready. They knew the call was coming, but they were unprepared.

To come out of a state of spiritual drowsiness is not the work of a moment. It is not possible to merely unfold our spiritual wings and fly into the realms of eternal bliss. It is better to fly closer to the earth, in touch with the great heart of humanity, lest we fall and break our spiritual necks.

Before we would "rule over many things" we must set our own homes and our individual selves in order. Ere God can use us to evangelize the world, let us demonstrate our willingness to serve, by beginning at home, among sympathetic friends. Truly, the field is already white for the harvest, but it requires more than a passive desire to labor in the harvest field at noonday. Great endurance is a quality that comes from training and practice.

SEEK ENLARGED CAPACITY

We pray for the endowment. We should. We need it. But should it come to-morrow would it energize and vitalize us, or wreck us with its vibrating power? The Spirit of God is truly as the writer of the Hebrew letter says: "Quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing, the demands greater, the remuneration more attractive. But we should not be blinded by the glitter and glare. God has iterated and reiterated that he would abundantly bless his people; not only spiritually, but temporally. Perhaps he is waiting for those with capacity to receive, for those whose eyes are opened.

They who see not by halves as did the servant of Elisha; they who are not fearful and afraid; they who "come to" ere it is too late, will be fit subjects for God's kingdom, militant and triumphant. even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Paul told the Ephesians that this word of God is the sword of the Spirit. The same power that moves mountains and turns rivers from their courses; yes, even by which the creation was brought about in the beginning, is a terrible thing when it comes to those not having capacity to receive and assimilate. History is full of incidents wherein men have been struck dead by this Spirit for violating divine restrictions.

Our worthiness to receive the blessings God is anxious to pour out upon us now and in more abundance later, is for us to determine. There is no need to sit idly in the market place, saying, No man hath hired us.

Everywhere the call is insistent. More and more is there to do, and greater and greater is the emphasis that now is the appointed time. The world beckons and pleads for the services of our most efficient workers—and it gets many of them. It offers much for to-day—nothing for to-morrow. As we qualify to a greater extent, the call is more impera-

A LIFE WELL SPENT

Fifty years ago a boy of sixteen started to write his diary, but before doing so he wrote a brief review of his past life and then concluded his "Retrospective" with the following:

As I close my book this evening to commence regularly to-morrow, I cannot help conjecturing of my future. But oh! I hope that be it what it may in regard to this world's charms, it may always be a righteous, truthful life; and that if every action were recorded here (as Christians say it is in heaven), there would be few among them all that I should be ashamed to acknowledge. And when the doings of my last day are written by another hand may it be said of me, "He died contented with his lifetime's actions; he expired happy in the thought of having well spent his time."

Since that boy was my father, Samuel R. Burgess, it seems only just that a slight token of respect and love should be paid him, for this boyish idea and hope expressed so long ago has been abundantly fulfilled.

His father was an elder in the church in the days of the Martyr and president of the branch at Manchester, England. In 1847 he moved to Nauvoo, and later to Saint Louis. About 1857 he removed with his family to Great Salt Lake City. "Soon, however, becoming estranged from the church because of the wicked practices of the people, they returned to the States and settled again in Saint Louis."

In 1864 they again went west for the sake of selling goods. There his father died and he was left a boy of twelve to make his own way. At that early age he had completed the grade school and was ready for admission to high school, but as he was the eldest of the family it was necessary that he go to work. Despite his many handicaps he persistently and apparently alone, studied algebra, rhetoric, English grammar, bookkeeping, German, public speaking, and with Doctor J. X. Allen, Latin. As a result he became a reader of exceptional power of expression and clearness, and also a critical and accurate grammarian.

Baptized when he was fifteen years of age, pursuant to certain promises made him, with a close personal friend he fasted Sabbath mornings for several months, and prayed that he might receive the light of revelation and knowledge of the work. He was an active worker in the Sunday school as a teacher nearly his whole life and at various periods as chorister. He developed an orchestra in those early days and trained a quartet of male voices for many years. He was instrumental in the naming of the Zion's Hope Sunday school and the extending of this name to our Sunday school paper.

As a young man he helped to organize the Young Men's Philosophical and Theological Institute for the purpose of studying religious topics. This organization about 1870 was a forerunner of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society. Of recent years he has been quite active in this latter society.

In his earlier years he assiduously helped in all parts of the church work in Saint Louis, even going out with Elder Mark H. Forscutt for a short time.

He held very high ideals of the priesthood. He considered that no greater honor could come to a man, but that in attempting so to represent the Eternal Father a man should have personal evidence that God really wanted him; it should not rest simply on the word of some worthy sister or even an elder who favored him.

Every man should be honorable, prompt, clean in person and thought, or, in other words, "a gentleman and a scholar." But a priest of the Most High God should be all that and more. He should be above the petty and the worldly, and be ever a high example to others.

He was a gentleman in the highest and fullest sense of that term, gentle to the erring and unfortunate. Truly, members of the priesthood and elders' courts are all too often harsh, holding to the letter of the law. Our effort should be rather to win men and draw them nearer to Christ. This he did much more than would be apparent to the casual eye. He spent hours and even days at a time quietly and secretly trying to reconcile some disaffected one to the church, but he avoided whenever possible public knowledge of his activities. He did not let one hand know what the other hand did, while it was doing good; but he was inclined to enlarge his own faults while forgiving and reconciling those of others.

His success in business made possible his assistance of many others in times of need. He made many "loans" with no hope of any return. He sought out the worthy poor and helped those in need at a time and place when it could not be known. It is quite probable that he did much more in this way than was done by the regular financial officers of the district.

He forgave quickly those who injured him and even helped them, not on occasion, but as a rule of life.

In recent years he was called to the Melchisedec priesthood, but the necessary evidence was in good part prevented by the acts of men.

His assistance was also liberal to the church and its institutions as well as to the missionaries and the local branch, especially when it could be done quietly.

As a husband and father his life belonged to his family. All of his children are in the church. He taught them the great principles of truth, love, virtue, and gave a prayer by example rather than precept, and not at all by force or fear.

Now much of this may seem personal to our readers but there are a few deep lessons. Genesis 1:16 reads: "He made the stars also." Some ask, "Did he not know that the stars were greater than either the sun or moon?" Yes, he knew, but spake according to man's conception. We have often thought that some who modestly serve, practice charity to all, who humble themselves and exalt others, will be found in the divine eye greater, brighter, and more fair than the glowing light of day and night which make their own works apparent.

Again, it is a time for higher ideals of the priesthood by those who hold it and an insistence that higher standards must be maintained. Our work lies not so much in discerning evil as in discovering good and winning one another to better and higher things.

Among the very last words that he spoke were to repeat several times the thought of a book recently read: "He ever lives to intercede for us." His passing was exceedingly peaceful. We never knew just when he left, but the sunrise found him gone. Truly is it written: "He giveth his beloved sleep," and also "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Question. Do you think it is right for people who did not economize at the command of the Lord to do so at the direction of the Government?

Answer. Most emphatically, yes. The commandments and purposes of God still remain. The fact that we were disobedient is no reason why we should not now obey his commandments. It is purely incidental that the directions of the Government on food conservation are to exactly the same end. Also the urging of the Government of fuel saving is along the line of the commandment previously given.

As citizens of the country, we should keep its laws, and carry out the purpose of its Government.

As citizens of the kingdom of God, we should keep not only this command of God, but should seek out all of his commandments and strive to understand them and put them into effect.

WHO WROTE IT?

Those who have listened impatiently to the reading of a long report from some one and have put their time in trying to figure out who was the author rather than to get the points brought out, will appreciate this plea for a change in the custom.

When you pick up a letter from some one, you always want to know who wrote it before you peruse it, don't you? When you read an article or contribution in print, isn't it your habit to turn to see who signs it?

Dozens of conferences and conventions are being held this winter, as usual. There should be many most interesting reports, most of them in writing so they may become a part of the record.

For the sake of those who did the work and put in their time writing those reports, we plead with those in charge of getting them before the people, especially the secretaries, to begin right by stating before a word is read, the name of the author and the office held when he wrote the report.

It may be a committee report. So much more the need of telling the audience whose signatures are attached and possibly for those who don't know, the origin and purpose of the committee.

If you are in the audience and this is not observed, you might kindly ask for the information, even by interruption, that you and the others might get the most good from the reports read. E. D. MOORE.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Hawaiian Number Next Week

Everything is going nicely toward the getting out of the Hawaiian Magazine Number next week. It will be extra good, we believe, and a valuable addition to our special list in this series. Extra copies will be sold at five cents each. Order early, lest the supply be exhausted.

"A Woman's Whole Duty"

Our readers will do well to turn to the Woman's Auxiliary Department in this number and read the leading editorial there by Sister Audentia Anderson. It is interesting; it is vital; it is comprehensive. The fundamentals of the question are reached, and we hope she will soon furnish us other articles along this line, as she suggests she may. The department is always of value to us, but sometimes we note a contribution like this which stands out as a beacon light to guide us to higher aspirations and possibilities.

Woman Suffrage

The Leslie Woman's Suffrage Committee is sending out over the country a letter concerning the national amendment. They point out quite truly that several of the States' constitutions cannot readily be amended, and that it would take another generation if not longer to secure mere justice in recognizing woman's interest in the state, and right of personal representation. It may be true that women are different mentally as well as physically from men. But they have qualities of mind which are needed in the home and are also needed for certain problems in the state. It is quite possible that they may make mistakes. Men have certainly made their share. It certainly is curious for a student in history to read the antisuffragist arguments, as they are so nearly identical with those made against universal male suffrage. The arguments are so clearly antidemocratic and in their logic would mean that male suffrage should be repealed. It is becoming more and more apparent that woman is prepared to take her place in the firing line, or immediately behind it if necessary, and to assume also the responsibility of carrying on the heaviest civic work; but beyond this she has taken a decided interest in the upbuilding of the state. Equal suffrage is one of the movements for social justice and democracy. On January 10 the amendment passed the House, so its submission is now before the Senate.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES—Part 14

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE DISCIPLE OR CHRISTIAN CHURCH—IN TWO PARTS —PART I

Thomas Campbell, with his son Alexander, in the early years of the nineteenth century, came from Scotland to the United States. They were brought up, educated, and believers in the Secession Church, a branch of the Presbyterian Church. The father held credentials to preach, and was assigned to the presbytery of Chartiers in Western Pennsylvania, by the synod of 1809, held at Philadelphia.

They both viewed with dismay and disgust the divided and deplorable condition of the various religious denominations, not excepting the denomination with which they were affiliated. Thomas Campbell, because of this condition, began to plead Christian union on the basis of "the Bible alone." No sooner had he begun this work than his ministerial brethren became suspicious, and he was investigated by the presbytery, the decision of which was that he should be censured, and the synod confirmed this decision when appealed to them.

Those who held to the same views, among whom was his son, Alexander, formed themselves into a society which they called "The Christian Association of Washington," and they adopted "A Declaration" of faith prepared by T. Campbell, and the following resolutions among others:

Resolution 1. The sole purpose of this society is the promulgation of simple, evangelical Christianity, free from all mixture of human opinions and inventions of men. . . .

Resolution 4. That this society considers not itself a church, neither does it assume the powers of a church, but merely as voluntary advocates of church reformation.—Sketch of A. Campbell, p. 8.

In propositions soon after adopted by this society is found an expression of what they were trying to do, and interpreted the meaning of that adopted. It is as follows:

Let none imagine that the subjoined propositions are at all intended as an overture towards a creed, or standard for the church. . . . They are merely designed to open up the way, that we may come fairly and firmly to the original ground upon clear and certain premises, and take up things just as the apostles left them, and thus disentangled from the accruing embarrassments of intervening ages, we may stand with evidence upon the same ground on which the church stood at the beginning.—Sketch of A. Campbell, p. 9.

While others had made an attempt to reform the church of which they were members, the Campbells and associates sought to reform the entire religious world by restoring primitive apostolic Christianity.

Without any ordination, or any claim that God had revealed to him a call to represent him, A. Campbell began to preach in 1810, at the suggestion of his father.

While these men disclaimed any intention of formulating a specific faith, or separate church organization, yet each move brought them nearer to this condition, and in a speech delivered by A. Campbell, he said in answer to an objection urged by the synod of the Presbyterian Church to what they had already done in adopting "The Declaration," and "Address," that the efforts of the Campbells would "terminate in a new party." "It is in their power to verify their own prediction by forcing us into a party. But even then we do not become a new party, but only in the same sense that the primitive Christians became a new party." (Sketch of A. Campbell, pp. 15, 16.)

On May 4, 1811, a distinct organization was formed, claiming to be after the original pattern, with Thomas Campbell as bishop, and the appointment of four deacons, and this without the authority or consent of any existing religious organization, or command from God so to do, the authority to act originating wholly with those who formed the organization.

At this time both the Campbells believed in infant baptism and in sprinkling, they themselves not having understood the Scriptures upon these points, and when their attention was called to the fact that there was neither a "Thus saith the Lord," nor apostolic precedent for infant baptism, they still favored it, the father being the last to yield this, to him, favored principle, because to accept this as true was proof that neither had been "baptized into Christ," hence they were out of Christ.

Becoming convinced, not only that they were out of Christ, because infant baptism was wrong, but also that immersion was the only mode of baptism, they sought to a Baptist minister for baptism, or immersion. After some protesting Elder Luce of the Baptist Church consented to baptize them upon the confession that they believed that "Jesus Christ was the Son of God," and without any previous spiritual "experience." When it is known that the authority of a Baptist minister is to baptize only those who have had an "experience," and because they are saved from their sins, it will be seen that the Baptist minister exceeded his authority, and without any authority so to act except the request of those to whom he ministered. Elder Luce complied with the request, June 12, 1812, associated with Elder Spencer of the same church.

For a time the father and son both preached for the Baptists, being members of the Redstone Association, from which they withdrew in 1823 on account of opposition and the charge of heresy, when they joined the Mahoning Association. In 1830, this association and the Campbells with their followers were renounced by the Beaver Association, and this renouncement was indorsed by Baptist papers generally. The Baptists withdrew from the Mahoning Association, leaving the Campbells and those who believed with them as the "association."

Of this act of the Baptists A. Campbell wrote:

Who are creating factions, swellings and tumults? . . . If there be a division, gentlemen, you will make it, not I.—Sketch of A. Campbell, p. 33.

In 1832, the Dover Association, then the largest association of Baptists in the United States, decided that the doctrines propagated by the Campbells were "not according to godliness, but subversive of the true spirit of the gospel of Christ—disorganizing and demoralizing in their tendency; and, therefore, ought to be disavowed and resisted by all the lovers of truth and sound piety. . . ."

The writings of Alexander Campbell and the spirit and manner of those who profess to admire his writings and sentiments, appear remarkably destitute of "the mind that was in Jesus Christ." Wherever these writings and sentiments have to any extent been introduced into our churches, the spirit of hypercriticism, "vain janglings and strife about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers," have chilled the spirit of true devotion, and put an end to Christian benevolence and harmony. . . .

We, therefore, the assembled ministers and delegates of the Dover Association, after much prayer and deliberation, do hereby recommend to the churches in our connection to separate from their communion all such persons as are promoting controversy and discord, under the specious name of reformers.

The plea for "a restoration of the original gospel and order of things began to be plead" in 1823. In 1827, the Baptists began to declare nonfellowship with the "brethren of the Reformation. Thus by constraint, not by choice, they were obliged to form societies out of those communities that split upon the ground of adherence to the apostles' doctrine," says A. Campbell, in Millennial Harbinger, volume 5, page 208.

It will be seen from what has preceded that this religious movement began under the authority of the Secession branch of the Presbyterian Church, continued without any authority from the time they renounced the authority of the Presbyterian Church, then continued under the authority of a small society banded together in 1810 by the acceptance of principles defined by Thomas Campbell, by which society he was appointed bishop and A. Campbell licensed to preach. They continued to exercise ministerial authority thus conferred, though they decided afterwards that they were "out of Christ." In 1812, they were baptized by a Baptist minister, from which they claimed to be in Christ, but without any other authority than that conferred upon them while they were out of Christ.

This authority associated with their baptism was that by which they afterwards preached and baptized for the Baptists. It was the same authority with which they acted when they began to form religious societies of their own. This they claimed they were compelled to do because of the opposition of the Baptists, who afterwards excommunicated them. By this last act they claim they were compelled to form a separate organization. This certainly places them in the unenviable position of being without authority from either of the churches of which they had formerly been members, or from God; for they make no claim that God had conferred authority upon them; in fact, they deny any communication from God. Thus they would have no authority to minister in word or ordinance only as they assumed that such authority was resident with the people to confer on whomsoever they would, by choice or appointment.

To more completely represent their claims, the position they occupied in the religious world, and their faith, we append the following quotations from representatives of that religious society upon the more important subjects:

AUTHORITY

It was their purpose to unite God's people, of all denominations, into one harmonious body, for the conversion of the world. To do this, they must plead for the authority of the Bible alone. This is the only orthodox position, consequently the only one on which all can unite.—Christians or Disciples, p. 7.

The Community, the church, the multitude of the faithful, are the fountain of official power. This power descends from the body itself—not from its servants.—Christian System, 1890, p. 69.

As we have frequently answered before, the elders or bishops of the congregations are the organs through which the church acts. Their authority is delegated to them by the congregation which they serve.—Christian Evangelist, vol. 33, p. 644. J. H. Garrison.

CHURCH

Undoubtedly the apostolic church is just what is needed. This would give us the living Christ in living men, and this is the practical formula for the cure of the world's unrest. But when we ask, Where is the apostolic church? echo answers, Where? It is freely admitted that our broken and divided denominationalism is a poor representation of what Christ intended his church should be.—Man Preparing for Other Worlds, by W. T. Moore, p. 243.

The Scriptures do not warrant us in asserting that "one church is just as good as another." This is a monstrous fallacy, for the reason that Christ never established but one church—a church which bears his name, and no other name.—The One Body, by Rowe, p. 17.

The Presbyterian platform is too narrow to receive the Episcopalian, and Lutherans and Methodists; and the Methodist platform is too narrow to receive the Presbyterians, and Episcopalians, and Baptists; and so through, to the end of the list. All of them will not stand combined upon the same platform. Hence, as Christ has only one body, one of them must be right and all the rest wrong, but when compared with the apostolic church we find all these wrong.—Ibid., p. 25.

Christians must regard the church, or body of Christ, as one community, though composed of many small communities, each of which is an organized member of this great national organization.—Christian System, p. 81.

OFFICERS

The standing and immutable ministry of the Christian community is composed of bishops, deacons, and evangelists. . . . Officers there must be while there are offices or services to be performed.—Christian System, p. 83.

All its officers, whether for its services at home or abroad when fully proved, are to be formally and solemnly set apart by the imposition of the hands of the presbytery or eldership of the church. The whole community chooses—the seniors ordain. This is the apostolic tradition.—Ibid., p. 88.

CREED

To present such a creed as the Westminster, as adopted either by Baptists or Pedobaptists, such a creed as the Episcopalians, or in fact, any sectarian creed, composed as they all are, of propositions deduced by logical inferences and couched in philosophical language, to all those who are fit subjects of the salvation of heaven, I say, to present such a creed to such for their examination and adoption shocks all common sense. This pernicious course is what has paganized Christianity.—Christian System, p. 131.

No man can be a Christian without the acceptance of the New Testament creed. This is true of no creed which human wisdom or folly has ever devised. . . . It was this profound conviction that caused the pioneers in this movement to go back beyond the Lutheran reformation, and beyond the shadow of the great apostasy, to New Testament times, in search of a simpler, purer, broader, and diviner creed to such for their examination and adoption shocks all form of unity for all the dis severed and alienated members of God's family.—Our Movement, p. 21.

Christianity as a divine system was perfect in the beginning, and when not contaminated by the touch of man, is as perfect as ever.—Disciples of Christ, p. 3.

Apostolic example is justly esteemed of equal authority with an apostolic precept.—Christian Baptist, p. 180.

APOSTASY

If Christians were and may be the happiest people that ever lived, it is because they lived under the most gracious institution ever bestowed on men. The meaning of this institution has been buried under the rubbish of human traditions for hundreds of years. It was lost in the Dark Ages, and has never been, till recently, disinterred. Various efforts have been made, and considerable progress attended them, but since the grand apostasy was completed, till the present generation, the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been laid open to mankind in its original plainness, simplicity, and majesty.—Christian System, p. 192.

The glory of the cross, waving its blood besprinkled banner over the united armies of the Prince of life, streamed through the ancient world with all-conquering might, till the incorporation of pagan philosophy, heathen superstition, and the paralyzing ambitions of the great apostasy, the vaunted assumptions of the mystery of iniquity, disrupted the body and corrupted the pure stream of Christian doctrine that flowed out from Jerusalem and Pentecost.—J. J. Haley, in Christian Evangelist, 1896, vol. 33, p. 643.

They (the Christians) regard all the sects and parties of the Christian world as having in greater or less degree departed from the simplicity of faith and manners of the first Christians, and as forming what the Apostle Paul calls "the apostasy."—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, pp. 206, 207.

RESTORATION

It ought not to be expected that a complete restoration of all that is essential in the primitive faith and practice could possibly be accomplished within a short period of time. Many years will probably yet elapse before we shall see the dawn a fully restored church.—Man Preparing for Other Worlds, by W. T. Moore, 1904, p. 149.

Not until within the present generation did any sect or party in Christendom unite and build upon the Bible alone.

Since that time, the first effort known to us to abandon the whole controversy about creeds and reformations, and to restore primitive Christianity, or to build alone upon the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself the chief corner stone, has been made.—Christian System, p. 5.

But who would have thought it remained for any so late as 1827 to restore to the world the manner—the primitive manner—of administering to mankind the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.—Hayden's History of the Disciples, p. 173.

It seems to us to be a matter of vital concern just at present, to call renewed attention to, and lay special emphasis upon, the animating and controlling purpose of this movement; that it is an effort to restore Christianity to what it was as it came from the lips of Christ and his inspired apostles.—J. J. Haley, in Christian Evangelist, vol. 33, p. 643.

Let it be remembered, then, that the Reformation is not a denomination, its purpose is not to establish a sect, but simply to restore the church of Christ to the world as it was before denominations existed.—Christians or Disciples, by F. G. Allen, p. 7.

AUTHORS OF THE REFORMATION OR RESTORATION

When the persecuting power of Rome was broken by the Reformation of the fifteenth century, it was the privilege of God's people to restore the Church of Christ in all respects as it was at the beginning. . . . It was never attempted by any man, so far as history informs us, till the present reformation began. This is the fundamental difference in principle between the Reformation inaugurated by A. Campbell, and those of Luther, Wesley, and others.—Christians or Disciples, by F. G. Allen, p. 10.

The inceptive thought and first purpose of this movement had their origin with Thomas Campbell. . . . This was the father's task—to project the great reform. But to bring it to full development of purpose and constitution of life and then execute with success, demanded qualities Thomas Campbell did not possess in the fullness of their required strength. This office fell providentially to the son.—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, pp. 64, 66.

But Alexander Campbell was no ordinary young man. . . . He thought as no other man ever thought, spoke as no other man ever spoke, wrote as no other man ever wrote.—Life of Alexander Campbell, by Grafton, pp. 67, 180.

VAIN MEN LIKENED TO WILD ASSES' COLTS

My text is the language in the Book of Job, chapter 11, verse 12: "For vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt."

There is a philosophy which, going out with a spy-glass and a telescope in search of God, returns to say that there is no such personality. Some profess to believe in and to reverence God, yet persistently deny his existence in any more definite conception than that God is in the blade of grass, in the rosebud, and in all nature everywhere. This error leads to the disregarding of the existence of sin as a fact of circumstance, for fear that if we admit the reality of sin, we make it a part of God whose allness, (according to our false notion) includes everything that is, in his very self or personality.

Disregarding the account of the creation of man in the image of his God, this philosophy, not finding God nor the origin of life by instruments made with hands, attempts to interpret physical life, together with spiritual intelligence, in terms of mere physical demonstration; and proceeds to dissect the bodies of a few bugs, animals, and men, and then to announce with due highbrow dignity that all life originated from one, or possibly two, minute particles of matter called protoplasm. Protoplasm is described as a "semifluid albuminous substance, which is viscid, gummy, and sometimes granular." From such a beginning, some science tells us, all life evolved.

God is left out of the subject altogether. Two of those funny little protoplasmic spied each other across a boundless space of a few million miles, fell in love at first sight, carried on a quiet flirtation for a few billions of years, were married without anyone to say the ceremony, took a honeymoon trip to the moon, and proceeded to furnish the universe with worlds, and every kind of walking, flying, creeping, and crawling thing, together with other little protoplasmic, which look just as "albuminous" as their parents before them.

But the words of the book which wild science and burro philosophy spurn as an idle tale, overshadow all the volumes of worldly wisdom. Standing profound and serene in the splendid glory of their truth those worlds live, and will live, to be a lasting rebuke to the foolishness of the man who, failing to find God a personality, with a scientific search warrant, exhibits the poverty of his own soul by denying the existence of the living God, in whose image man is created.

THE WORD

Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? . . . For he knoweth vain man: he seeth wickedness also; will he not then consider it? For vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt.—Job 11: 7, 11, 12.

THE OMNIPRESENCE OF GOD

A personal supreme being having definite dwelling place in some realm of his vast domain can be omnipresent by his matchless power, and by the limitless reach of the laws of nature and of life which are at his command; but if such a spread out nothing as is represented as having no body, no person, no parts, and no passions, is to be the ideal formless, existless form of life and beingless being, then a similar final end for all mankind is all that can be hoped for!

It must be admitted that the hidden, propelling force of all life is operative with, and unfolds from within life in all nature; and that such an exhibition of design and form can not be the result of chance or accident, but that such works as creation displays, are, in and of themselves, monumental witnesses that a Master Intelligence is concerned in it all.

But it does not follow as a necessary conclusion that because such a wonder work as nature is, could not be produced independent of a directing Intelligence, that therefore that Intelligence is in its own essence spread abroad through all life, and that, (as false philosophy asserts) nature is the only God.

Such false ideas as, that there is no God except as is resident within each living atom of nature, leads men to worship the creature rather than the Creator.

That is one common form of idolatry. Believing that the only God existing anywhere, is in the varied forms of nature itself, the next step—adoration and worship of the creature—becomes easy. Thus, the mind may be prostrated to regard the beautiful form of a perfect human body as the very expression of God, and to worship at such a shrine.

Mankind having been created in the image and likeness of his Creator, there is some truth in the thought that man is in very deed, the best expression of God that the works of nature afford; but until God is recognized as a separate personality and Creator, apart from the things which are created, the truth that God is revealed in his works is only partly told, and is not properly divided!

An adoration of, or a worshipful attitude toward all of the beautiful and wonderful things in nature, which are profusely spread as a perpetual invitation to man to reflect upon their wonder, is no doubt very good in its place, and stands as the great primitive sermon being preached in all languages; but that soul which never lifts its gaze above the wonders of the thing created, to discern above all the Master Intelligence and Creator of all, fixes its aim upon an ideal far too low ever to develop the best that is possible, from the highest conception of the truth concerning the creature and the Creator.

Those who believe nature to be the only God, assume that the Bible account of the personality of God and of the creation of man in his own image, is a mere myth. Self-important philosophers clinging to such ideas in contradiction to the best revelation that the world has received, sally forth in the material world, all eyes and conceit, looking for God; and when he is not found of them, they are ready to scoff at others who in the Lord's own way have found him.

There is a vast difference between a ponderous material brain and a fine spiritual mind.

Mere brains may be weighed by ounces, and the brains of animals are even bartered over the counters for so many pence per pound, but no instrument made by man can gather up, nor measure out the God-quality—mind.

It is both worthy and desirable, that the brain be cultured and cultivated, but above all things "let that mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

But beware of the tendency of the mere brain operation which ridicules people who are not supposed to be schooled to the wonderful psychological accomplishment whereby they assume to know that as God is not to be seen anywhere by the naked eye, nor by glass lenses of any kind, that therefore he does not exist as a living personality.

The kind of science which takes such position to declare the nonexistence of a personal God because it has looked and failed to find him, and which ridicules those who disagree with it, as being either child minded, ignorant, or fools, and which regards the Bible story of God and creation as a mere myth, is the kind of science or philosophy which peers down the cellar, and squints toward the back yard of God's great universe and, failing to find him, comes back to report that he isn't there; or that if he is there he is a something so diffused through everything as to be a very specific nothing.

Such is the finished wisdom of some sciences, and the Devil is pleased that some churches indorse the same folly.

GOD EVERYWHERE, LITERALLY?

Think of God being in the brothel, in the saloon, and in every place of filth literally; his immediate presence would be in hell as much as in heaven. The Devil, as the opposite power and personality, would by the same fallacious principle be everywhere, and heaven by his presence would, after all, be part hell.

Those who oppose the fact of the one living, personal God, who is to be revealed to all in due time, may hurl their ridicule, and continue to jest concerning the probable color of his eyes, the quality of the hair of his head, and the amount of his avoirdupois, but their own position is the very height of inconsistency and the legitimate target of ridicule.

Think of such an one as even the most rank infidel is willing to admit that Jesus was, teaching his people to pray by saying: "Our Father which art in hell, and one place or other, hallowed be thy name."

No! he who was known as Jesus, is the Christ, and he said: "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come;" etc., and as surely as day follows night, when that prayer is answered and he does come in his kingdom, there will be a lot of these philosophies relegated to their portion of shame and everlasting contempt, where they belong—but the philosophers themselves "may be saved, yet so as by fire, but their works shall be burned" (see 1 Corinthians 3: 15); and that would leave an immense amount of shelf room in some libraries.

From the days of Job the woods have been infested with "wild asses' colts." I am glad that a certain salvation has been provided for these wild rangers—vain men who would be wise—and heartily that as the Apostle Paul has said, their buildings of "wood, hay, and stubble, shall be burned, but they themselves shall be saved, yet so as by fire."

That may be a pretty hot brand of salvation, but some scientists, "philosophers, epicureans, and stoics" will have the heat to encounter by reason of not being worthy of a better grade of salvation—at least not on the first few laps of eternity anyway. "For he knoweth vain men: he seeth wickedness also; will he not then consider it?" (Job 11: 11.)

JAMES E. YATES.

CHRIST TO COME AGAIN?

[Under a subtitle of "Statement of London ministers arouses unusual discussion," The New Freedom, of January 5, 1918, published at Honolulu, features the following contribution, evidently from the pen of Brother Thomas Clancy of that place. It is an interesting discussion of a timely topic.—EDITORS.]

In the morning paper of last Sunday there appeared a statement issued and signed by a number of London divines, "some of the most distinguished preachers and religious authors in the world," indicating their belief that Christ is soon to reappear upon earth. In interviews which were published the following day, several "local ministers" took noncommittal or hostile stands, and the matter seems to have become one of quite general comment on the streets of the city. A statement of the case may, consequently, be of some interest to the readers of The New Freedom.

BELIEF IN THE BIBLE—IS IT NECESSARY?

I make no pretensions to scholarship in this matter. I do believe, however, that the ability to read and an earnest desire for enlightenment should be sufficient equipment for anyone to undertake an investigation into the matter. I do not even regard as necessary a belief in the Bible as the word of God, for an honest investigation into this subject, and the wonderful fulfillment of the Bible prophecies pertaining to it are sufficient to cure all unbelief on that score.

"WHERE DOCTORS DISAGREE——"

The ministers of Honolulu, in their published interviews, practically contradict the views set forth by the London ministers, and say that the second coming of Christ is an event either very indefinite or not to be expected at all.

SOME ASSERTIONS—AND THEIR FOUNDATION

But Jesus is coming again! His second coming is not some mysterious or intangible event, which will only become known through a general increase in righteousness, and which will usher in a period of peace, prosperity and general enlightenment, to be known as "the millennium." When Jesus comes he will come as an actual and visible person. "This same Jesus . . . shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1:11.) "And every eye shall see him." (Revelation 1:7.) "As the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." (Matthew 24:27.)

WHAT WE DO KNOW

It is quite true, as one of the local ministers has said, that we "know not the day nor the hour" when Christ will come to earth again. Whether or not "the day" or "the hour" ever will be revealed before the actual event, it is not for me to say—I don't know, though it seems extremely improbable. But we may know the generation (Matthew 24:34.) Even more than that: We may know when he is "near, even at the doors." (Matthew 24:33.) And so we know that

THE TIME IS NEAR

Jesus is coming soon. In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, also in Mark 13 and Luke 21, we read of the signs which will herald his coming. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." (Matthew 24:29.) The darkening of the sun and the moon and the falling of the stars from heaven are signs which are given as immediately preceding Christ's coming. These signs have already been fulfilled—as history will show.

A PERIOD OF HORROR

A study of the other prophecies and their fulfillment in history will show that "those days" of "tribulation" (Matthew 24:29) are the 1260 years during which the "saints of the most High" were to endure persecution. This evidently refers to the persecutions of the Dark Ages and the Inquisition, in which, it is estimated, from 50,000,000 to 100,000,000 men, women, and children were martyred by the Roman power. See Daniel 7:25: ". . . and shall wear out the saints of the Most High . . . and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

A MYSTERIOUS PHRASE

What is meant by "a time and times and the dividing of time"? See Revelation 12:14: ". . . that she [the woman] might fly into the wilderness, where she is nourished for a time and times and half a time." In verse 6, which is speaking of the same event, it is stated that "the woman fled into the wilderness, . . . that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three-score days." This shows plainly enough that the time and times and the dividing of time (half a time) means 1260 days (prophetic time; actually, 1260 years—see Ezekiel 4:6, Numbers 14:34, and margin).

BEGINNING AND END OF THE PERIOD

This power then, was given full sway for 1260 years. The period began A. D. 538, when a decree of the Emperor Justinian was put into effect, giving the bishop of Rome power over all the churches. Twelve hundred and sixty years from that date would bring us down to the year 1798, and in that same year the period of persecution was brought to an effectual close when French troops under General Berthier entered the city of Rome.

A SHORTENING OF THE DAYS

Although the persecuting power lasted until the year 1798, the persecutions did not continue until that time. The "days were shortened." "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." (Matthew 24:22.) The actual persecutions had practically ceased by the year 1773.

A DEFINITE PROPHECY

Now "IN those days, AFTER that tribulation" (Mark 13:24) "the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall not give her light." From this we would expect the darkening of the sun and the moon to come between 1773 (end of "that tribulation") and 1798 (end of "those days"). And this is just what happened.

SOME REMARKABLE HISTORY

On May 19, 1780, the light of the sun was completely blotted out, and that same night the moon did not "give her light." The darkness began at eleven o'clock in the morning, and lasted until eleven o'clock at night. This was no eclipse, for the moon had fulfilled the previous night. Noah Webster says: "No satisfactory reason has ever been assigned for the darkness." Herschel, the astronomer, says: "The dark day . . . was one of those wonderful phenomena of nature which will always be read of with interest, but which philosophy is at a loss to explain." It is said that "if every luminous body in the universe had been struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete." The blackness was absolute. Thus were fulfilled the first two signs of Matthew 24: 29.

THE FAMOUS "FALLING OF THE STARS"

"And the stars shall fall from heaven." On the night of November 13, 1833, the stars (shooting stars, or meteors) did "fall from heaven." For five hours the shower continued, and during that time the stars fell as thick as snowflakes in a storm. They appeared to come from one point in the heavens, and were scattered abroad "even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." (Revelation 6: 13.) In an article on the falling of the stars, there appeared in the Connecticut Observer of November 25, 1833, a quotation to the effect that "a more correct picture of a fig tree casting its fruit when blown by a mighty wind, it was not possible to behold." Professor Olmstead, of Yale College, has said, "The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west. . . . The exhibition of shooting stars was not only visible, but everywhere presented the same appearance." In a book published by Leonard Heinrich Kelber, in Stuttgart, Germany, in the year 1835, it is stated that the same sign occurred over Europe a few days after the great shower over the Western Hemisphere. We read: "On November 25, 1833, there was a fine display of falling stars on the Continent of Europe," and "in Minsterburg, Silesia, stars fell like a rain of fire. With them fell balls of fire, making the night so light that the people thought that the houses near them must be on fire. . . . Many people were made sick through fear."

WHAT IS YET TO COME

This falling of the stars was the fulfillment of the third sign given in Matthew 24: 29. The next statement in this and the succeeding verse is that "the powers of the heaven shall be shaken: and then [at that time; i. e., when the powers of the heavens shall be shaken] shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven . . . and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." This statement of the case makes it appear that the shaking of the powers of the heavens is to take place at the time of Christ's coming. Thus the last of the warning signs (the falling of the stars) has been fulfilled, and we are now to apply the parable of the fig tree: "Know that he is near, even at the doors." (Matthew 24: 33.)

"THIS GENERATION"

"So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." (Matthew 24: 33, 34.) Jesus was speaking of the generation which should see all these things fulfilled; i. e., which should see the fulfillment of the last of the signs, the falling of the stars, which occurred in 1833. The youngest of those who were living when the stars fell and who are still alive are now 84 years of age, and, since "this generation shall not pass," some of these people will still be alive when our Lord comes.

EIGHTY-FOUR YEARS—A LONG LIFETIME

Although all the signs thus given have been fulfilled to the letter, a study of the prophecies of Daniel and the Revelation makes it plain that many things are to take place after the falling of the stars and before Jesus comes again, chiefly in the way of changes of government, wars, etc., in preparation for the great battle of Armageddon, also in the spread of the gospel message throughout the world. Many of these things have already come to pass, and others are coming to our notice every day. But these things must all happen quickly, for "this generation [now eighty-four years old] shall not pass." (Matthew 24: 34.) "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." (Matthew 24: 35.)

Speaking of the condition of the world before his second coming, Jesus said: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. . . . Nation shall rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. . . . Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." (Matthew 24: 6, 7; Luke 21: 25.) It would be practically impossible to give a better pen picture of the world to-day.

STRAWS THAT SHOW THE WIND

"Famines, pestilences and earthquakes"! Plenty of these surely! To go no further back than a month, the Halifax disaster and the Guatemala earthquake are straws that show which way the wind is blowing.

Another straw we find in the morning paper of last Monday; there we read that "the consensus of opinion among local ministers is that the chances of Christ's coming before the earthly people again are very slight."

HAVE THEY READ IT?

I wonder whether any of the "local ministers" have ever read this:

"There shall come in the last day scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. . . . Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Peter 3: 3, 4, 10, 13.)

This, the greatest revolution, the most awful upheaval of nature the universe will ever see, "must shortly come to pass." Look into it, reader!

PULPIT APOLOGIES

Apologies made by an elder before he addresses the congregation before which he stands to speak are always regarded with more or less suspicion. It has happened that an elder has said at the outset of his effort: "Now I have nothing of myself to say; unless the Lord has something to say through me, I shall not speak to you," and has then rambled on in such an incoherent and careless way that everyone could see that he had not received the Spirit to teach at the time. An instance or two of this kind happening to the same man, will greatly injure the efforts such a man might attempt. We advise the elders that they take thought on this, and when they are called upon to preach, make no apologies, put up a silent prayer for direction and help, and do the best they can.

If they have no liberty it is better to stop than to bore the people and ruin their own reputation. When one has exhausted the thoughts given for utterance, stop and close the effort, no matter whether it be five minutes or an hour. Some otherwise splendid speakers are noted for not knowing when to stop. It is far better to leave much unsaid than to risk losing a good impression already made, by protracting the speech until the listeners are worn out. Two sermons of fifty minutes each, are much better than one of ninety or one hundred and five. It is better to avoid the habit of saying, "In conclusion" and then beginning a new topic. We once listened to an elder who said, "In conclusion" and occupied thirty minutes in a new direction that fell flat on tired ears.

Elders should try diligently to avoid the repetition of useless phrases, and pet expressions. No matter how fine such expressions may sound at the first hearing of them, they wear upon the ear, and if repeated often they jar on sensitive nerves to such a degree that a fear of their repetition incapacitates the hearer from rightly judging what else is said.

We remember once hearing an elder use the words, "and the great God of heaven," twenty-five times in a sermon thirty-five minutes in length. We heard another use the terms, "this age of the world," "that age of the world," fifty-eight times in an hour's discourse. Another, the sentence, "the children of men," fifty-three times in as many minutes. All such repetitions injure the effect of the elder's speech, and thus hurt his efficiency. Do not use the terms, "admit the fact," "considering the fact"; unless the elder really understands what is stated as a fact and knows it to be such, and is willing to stand by his admission, if it be observed by an opponent. The words "and we find," "we see then," "my dear friends," "my Christian friends," "my dear hearers," "bless you," "bless your souls," and all such expressions are burdens unnecessarily placed upon the thought the speaker is expressing and are only "filling" at the best.

We are charged to help each other in becoming useful in our work; and these suggestions are not intended to hurt the feelings of any rising elder, but as needful instruction which will be beneficial to all, if heeded.

It is understood that the elder is to minister as the Spirit may direct; but it is not proper to understand that the Spirit supervises the utterances of words that convey no meaning in keeping with the harmony of the subject upon which the elder is speaking. A man may cultivate both the manner and matter of his delivery.—Joseph Smith, in THE SAINTS' HERALD, volume 33, page 401, 1886.

SOLDIERS MAKING NEW RELIGION FOR WORLD

The soldiers in the trenches are working out a new religion for the world. It will be a religion free from all sectarianism, narrow patriotism, and artificiality.

Religion has been kept alive throughout the world's history because of its adaptability to changing conditions, but chiefly because some prophet has discovered a great new truth which men had long since forgotten.

Martin Luther reminded men that "the just shall live by faith"—and he became the prophet of the day.

John Calvin proclaimed the doctrine of "the sovereignty of God"—and he became the founder of a great theological system.

John Wesley emphasized "the free will of men"—and he brought the thought of the religious world back to an even balance.

Charles G. Finney thundered out "the law of God" and men fell down upon their faces, crying out for mercy.

Dwight L. Moody plead "the love of God," and men came to the penitent form with tears in their eyes but with smiles upon their faces.

Each new era in the world's history has demanded a new religious message. It was the same old gospel, but it was given a fresh emphasis.

The great world war in which we are now engaged—one of the most stunning events in history—is sure to change our thinking about industrial and political principles and practices. Does anyone imagine that religion—the most vital thing in every man's life, whether he admits it or not—will remain unchanged?

The religion that will come out of the trenches will be a religion that shall fire the hearts of men to heroic action. It will no longer almost exclusively limit the great sacraments of the church—particularly the communion service—to the needs of tired, discouraged people.

It will be a religion that shall satisfy the red-blooded men and women who have been tremendously stirred by the appeal of the war—and who will never be content to crawl back into their shells of formalism and ceremonial observance.

The soldiers who are to bring us this new religion have been face to face with death—every last man of them will have "died" in a very real sense; they come back with a new look in their eyes—and after that what but the most vital things in life can count with them?

They will have seen how small and petty a thing religion has been to most of us, and the church will be unable to hold them with a narrow, sectarian appeal.

The new religion will test the church. Religious life as a whole will grow stronger and better—but it will be a serious question whether the church can stand the pressure of the new expansion of thought and life that the new religion will bring with it.—Reverend Charles Stelzle in El Paso Morning Times, December 16, 1917.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Woman's Whole Duty

Our study class in this place, once gave the above topic consideration, and the many things that were brought out were enough to be really disheartening, were it not for the thought that God does not require us to live more than one day, one hour, one minute at a time. Really, the scope of a woman's work seemed as broad as the universe, and as minute and detailed as the mote in the sunbeam; yet we realize that not a jot or tittle is unimportant—the least no less than the greatest. It is as important that the smallest bolt in the great swinging bridge should hold—should "do its bit" as for the immense structure itself to fill its purpose, and allow the heavy trains to pass safely over.

It is not always easy for women to sense the importance and vital nature of the everyday duties that are apt to seem humdrum and burdensome. It is not always easy to see that it is only by perfecting the units in her home, by keeping up the detail work, that the whole is accomplishing its destined mission. True it is, that many women enter into home life without a conception of what its requirements may be, and they find themselves unfitted for it, and its details. Among men it is customary to consider fitness, or liking, when a profession is chosen. The man of literary turn of mind would never choose the anvil, nor the sagacious financier the shovel; but all seem to expect the woman of a literary turn of mind to be as efficient with the dish mop, the broom, or the pancake turner, as the maiden trained to their use. Does it mean that, no matter what a girl longs to be, no matter what inspiration comes to her along other lines of achievement or accomplishment, she must prepare to settle down into the rut of housekeeping? Was it to this end that God gave her powers to write, to paint, to analyze, to create, to carve? Does the "talent" lose its significance because it was delivered into feminine hands? Is there no happy way of combining the highest aspirations of the mind with those of the heart?

These and many similar questions have come into the minds of many women, in the world, as well as in the church. Many women cut the Gordian knot, by refusing to take upon themselves those duties which time and its customs have placed entirely to the mothers' share. They frankly turn their backs upon the privileges of wifedom or motherhood, and go forth in response to the voices which call, as they did Joan of Arc. With what measure of success they do this, opinions may be varied. Counting success as the world counts it, many of these have won much that is enviable. Did they sacrifice more than they gained? Was what came to them more to be desired than the privilege of getting meals for "the best man in the world," darning his socks, bearing, rearing, nursing his children, with a world bounded by him and his interests?

No, Latter Day Saint can feel that a life unblest by love and what it stands for, is a successful life. No career that is unguided by the central power of real affection and its attendant consecration can be counted to have filled its highest possibility. The greatest dynamo of human life and interest is this glorified passion called love, which causes those who possess it to pass through trials, purifications, disasters—experiences of whatever nature, unhurt, undismayed, and unconquered. This we all concede; but we are wondering if that great gift can not be "glorified" more than is commonly done or seen in our midst. The consecration of love should not spell drudgery; its power to eliminate self and self-interest from one's heart should mean that God-given powers of brain or body, of mind or hand, should be dwarfed or extinguished. On the contrary, love should be the inspiration for a more perfect, a more beautiful expression of that gift or talent.

A man toiling in the world for the "bread and butter"—or the bread without the butter—finds that toil irksome only when its fruits are shared in bitterness in his home. A discontented wife, or ungrateful children will "take the heart out" of the best man in the world, and his labor, far from being an expression of the finest there is in him, becomes a yoke, a horror from which he yearns to be free (and from which many cowardly men have freed themselves in ways which were contemptible in the sight of honorable people). On the other hand, a wife toiling in the home, for a thoughtless and unsympathetic husband or selfish and fault-finding children, loses, gradually but surely, that wonderful glory which overwhelmed her life with its beauty and allurements in the first days of her love and mating. She becomes disheartened, too; who can blame her? She has put so many offerings upon the altar—her ambitions, her plans, her freedom to come and go, and if she reaps in return nothing but the privilege to work and labor, to bake, boil, stew, mend, wash, iron, scrub, etc., will it not take a spirit almost unconquerable to be able to keep one's faith and buoyancy?

All this is as it should not be; no woman should give so utterly of herself and her strength that she becomes a mere household drudge, unable to keep pace with the mental activities of her children, or hold her place with a sense of propriety in the world of women about her. And no man has a right to expect this of her! If he is unable to provide for her the help every mother should have with the work of a house and family, he should at least make up that deficiency by an appreciation and sympathy which would take from arduous labor its deadly power to crush the spirit. He should supply all the encouragement, with as little fault-finding, as possible, and then feel that he was doing no more than God requires. Just as he finds in her praise and encouragement and faith, incentive for better efforts, for more efficient work in the big world outside, so will the wife find in his intelligent comprehension of her difficulties and triumphs in the homely affairs of her life, that which will rob them of their terror and clothe them with an exaltation, with which she is able to mingle every God-given talent she possesses.

We believe that almost every "gift" God bestows can be exercised and "improved" by woman within the sphere of her own home. Does she wish to write or read or study? Given a chance to do these things, however rarely, what an inspiration that woman can be to her family? The child comes home to her from school with confidence that mother will understand and be able to explain that which puzzles him; the husband turns instinctively to her for suggestions about his business; the friend drops in to discuss the book, or picture, or music which has interested, and finds, instead of merely a household machine, a woman with heart and soul, alive to the things about her, with poise and purpose, giving of her best to those about her, in a way she could not do, had her husband not been in sympathetic accord with her desire to study a little in connection with her work. True, perhaps, (since there only twenty-four hours a day, and some of them must be spent in sleep,) there were times when a button was not found where it should be, or a corner of the house with some dust upon it; better that the dust be there than upon the wife's brain.

If we stopped here, we feel sure a storm would be upon us! We hump our shoulders almost instinctively to meet the weight of the criticisms which would descend! So we hasten to assure our readers that the woman we have in mind is not the one who would sit and read and let the teakettle boil over, or let the fire go out, and have naught but a cold house and an empty table with which to greet her returning lord and husband! Oh, no; she is not one to neglect such obvious duties. If she is truly consecrated, she will have learned the spiritual development to be found in the regular performance of duties necessary to the comfort and the health of her family. It is not so much the knowing how to get a meal which is an education for a woman, but the mastery of her personal inclination to such an extent that she can get that meal when it is due, in spite of everything that would coax her to more fascinating things. Besides, she has learned how to invest even the getting of a meal with a charm of her own, and exults in its perfection, its balance, its harmony and suitability, in a fashion not possible to the drudge.

One writer says a woman's whole duty is threefold: to self, society, and God. That does indeed cover it amply, but the analysis of each one of those phases is a study in itself, and seems to overlap that of every other. Our paper is getting too long, but another time we would like to go into these more in detail. Suffice it for now, if we have been able to help any sister to feel that there are wonderful fields of pleasure and profit to be opened to her through a really earnest study of her position in the world, her duties therein, and her qualification for the accomplishment of the best designed for her. Study to show thyself a workman approved of God, applies to us, and the woman who thinks that her whole duty is performed with becoming only a piece of machinery in her home should ponder that advice, which came from on high.

Is such a course one which would win His approval?

Our Brooklyn Sisters

When you think of the many and varied obstacles to be met in a city of this size, the women of the Brooklyn Auxiliary have done exceptionally well the past five months.

We are not a large circle, and some of our members live miles apart, yet at a recent bazaar held we cleared $232, and incidentally made friends to the church by the quick and orderly manner in which it was conducted.

We also have in our auxiliary a Red Cross department and are doing what we can to push work in that line.

We have lately started a class in dressmaking and are quite hopeful of its success. It will not only help to reimburse the treasury but will be the means of teaching those who attend to be more efficient in the art of sewing.

The Orioles are feeling their responsibilities and seeing opportunities in moving out in harmony with the new movement in their line.

How beautifully the auxiliary provides for everyone to work and what amazing results soon follow united action. We are hoping, we are longing, to see every sister enrolled in some department of the work. May the Lord direct our movements and may everything be done with an eye single to his glory.

L. LENOR CHRISTY,
Press Chairman.

Questions

Can you put the spider's web back in place
That once has been swept away?
Can you put the apple again on the bough
Which fell at your feet to-day?
Can you put the lily cup back on the stem
And cause it to live and grow?
Can you mend the butterfly's broken wing
That you crushed with a hasty blow?
Can you put the bloom again on the grape,
And the grape again on the vine?
Can you put the dewdrops back on the flowers,
And make them sparkle and shine?
Can you put the kernel again in the nut,
Or the broken egg in the shell?
Can you put the honey back in the comb,
And cover with wax each cell?
You think my questions are trifling, dear,
Let me ask you another one:
Can a hasty word be ever unsaid,
Or a deed unkind undone?—Exchange.

The other day at the woman's club in the home economics department, we had a meeting that was the best attended of the year on "Bread." The women were greatly interested in other grains besides wheat that can be used to make palatable bread. Oatmeal and corn are very good and are easily used. One recipe was: Pour 2 cups boiling water over 1 cup rolled oats, when cool add one half cup brown sugar, one tablespoon fat, two teaspoons salt, one compressed yeast cake and about five cups of flour. Knead dough until it squeaks—about ten minutes. Put in vessel, with straight sides, to rise, in warm place. Let it double in bulk; put on board and make into loaves; let them double and bake in hot oven for 45 minutes. It is estimated 70 per cent of the women make their own bread. There is no use talking about the cost of flour; even corn meal has gone up, with absolutely no reason, here in Nebraska.—Exchange.

Providence Branch

The Sunday school in the Providence Branch is in first place and we want to keep it there. I want to tell you about one gift that was really a surprise to the one who received it. This event took place on the Sunday following Thanksgiving. At the close of the school an appropriate concert was given by the children, and then some one placed before us a large clothes basket and, one by one, representatives from the classes came forward; and after reciting appropriate passages of scripture, deposited in the basket different kinds of fruit.

It seems that the trees and vines from over the earth had been invoked; for there were given pears, apples, grapes, lemons, oranges, dried plums, nuts, figs, etc., and the heaping basket reminded us of everything that was appropriate with the season. But many of us who were but onlookers wondered what was to be done with all this luscious fruit. Was it to be distributed to the crowd? Surely no one would be selfish enough to take the whole basket for his own! But the secret was given away when the superintendent—our much beloved leader of the Sunday school, C. I. Brown, gave an appropriate address, in which he spoke of the pastor as not only a spiritual adviser but also a chum to the members of the branch; and in behalf of the deep regard of the Sunday school, presented that wonderful basket of fruit to me and the family; we who have tried to serve, but not always with success, owing to the weaknesses of the flesh. Think ye not that the beautiful basket of fruit was a touching tribute?

But this is not all I have to relate. And we should not keep the flowers till it is too late. There has been much practical Christianity manifested by the Providence Branch. The members have never forgotten their pastor and his family on Thanksgiving and Christmas. At one time the young people would bring the turkey, nuts, fruit, etc.; at another time it would be the sisters' society, or the brothers. This is my fourth year as pastor of the branch in this city, during which time I have found the Saints kind and thoughtful and serious minded.

The Lord has not been unmindful, for the blessings of his Spirit have been wondrously poured out. The branch is not without the gifts of the Spirit, as well as the graces. Our sick have been healed, raised as it were from beds of death; members have been encouraged and instructed by the voice of prophecies, and by dreams and visions. Nearly every young man in the branch holds the priesthood, and they are working with more serious and determined effort than ever before, in many cases. So far seven of our young men of the branch are enlisted in the service of their country, but not one of this number holds the priesthood. We do not know what the next draft will do, but we believe that the power of God is able to direct our lives if we will let it do so.

We held a series of meetings just before the holidays. Brother Christy, of Brooklyn, was the speaker. He delivered nine very interesting sermons and held the attention of the audience and the number increased; but for some reason which we cannot give, the outsiders who attended did not return after the close of the meetings. We hope that some of those who listened will eventually come back to hear more of the gospel story. Certainly the responsibility rests with them, in many senses, for the preacher and the Saints did their best.

On the street corner we erected a big sign, four by fourteen feet in size, and good fortune has permitted us to keep it there. We inserted several advertisements in the daily paper. One advertisement was a question asked of the churches of Providence. The publishers liked it so well that they gave it extra space and put it in two issues of the paper. It ran like this: "If there be no progression after death, and salvation from an endless hell depends upon public confession of faith in Christ, what will become of the millions of soldiers who have fallen on the battle fields, in this age and other ages, who belonged to no church? Will they have no reward? The creeds say No; but Christ's church says, Yes," etc.

Believing that many efforts (summer schools, outdoor services, concerts, series of meetings, even distribution of literature, etc.,) put forth by the branch in the past three years had not really struck the keynote, I determined to try another, and we are now in the midst of the latest effort, which is, the edification of the branch—devoting every energy to spiritual house cleaning and thus preparing a place in which the outsider may be received and saved from the wrath to come. The apparent failure on our part; with all the efforts to bring outsiders into the church, to see strangers baptized, has led me to believe that though the method was right, yet the time had not come. Now I am holding Sunday night conferences with the church membership. I am presenting and explaining the teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants, and the efforts are being well received by the Saints. We struck the note of entire consecration, emphasizing the need of becoming stewards under the Lord's direction, the need of being free from the bondage of broken tithing law. We are happy to see Saint after Saint falling into line and expressing willingness to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

There has been a growth in the branch numerically and a wonderful change from the old condition has taken place. I am willing to remain or to go; it is just as the Lord directs through the authorities who have charge of this phase of the work. Since coming to the Providence Branch I have received no commendation from man, I have not expected it or wanted it. But God has certainly stood by me, and so have faithful men and women.

When I came here Satan was trying hard to disorganize the branch and totally discourage the membership; but so far he has succeeded in getting only three, two of whom declare their disbelief in the existence of a personal God, and the third departed from us because of pride and unwillingness to be softened by the trials of life. In my first week here I was shown a vision of God's arm under the branch and sustaining me in it. A year later I was shown that I should be successful in uniting every faction. The work has been accomplished. And now I query, What next?

I have introduced, with the sanction of the body, several innovations in organization. Two elders, Brothers Harrington and Joy, have been elected to form with me a presidency. The deacons are sustained as the financial board of the branch, one chosen as treasurer. The priests meet in council every month with Brother Joy as chairman. The teachers meet with Brother Harrington. They are committees and arrange their work as committees should. The deacons' work is divided into courses, each brother taking charge during his respective week, others assisting if occasion requires. Members of the priesthood are elected after ordination to serve as officers in the branch; after this they are sustained annually if it please the body, and reasons for not sustaining are fully investigated.

Religio is leaping into first place again. The branch is doing Red Cross work. The auxiliary is progressing. I trust that I am not leaving the impression that everything and everyone are perfect in the Providence Branch. We are going on unto perfection. RALPH W. FARRELL.

The Order of Enoch

Come all ye who want to help the poor in the church; all ye who want to do something for somebody quick, come to the help of the Lord with your money and influence. Join in with the United Order of Enoch, that organization within the church for the benefit of the poor.

We need help! Some of us who are poor, but willing workers, need help. We have been half bent, as it were, lifting a heavy load a long time. Just please give us a lift.

"The Lord has spoken,
Few have heeded,
What remains for him to do?"

The order has been organized by divine command; now what are you waiting on? The open door of opportunity is here; who will occupy according to his talents or ability? Surely stewardships and inheritances need to be given, but where is the money coming from? Let us arise in the strength of the Lord and do our whole duty. "The purposes and designs of the Lord cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught."

In the church we need unity, equality, not only of opportunity, but of means according to our needs.

"Time is short, my work must hasten."

Shall we be slothful servants or willing workers in the vineyard of the Lord?

Overloading the Willing Horse

Many are guilty of riding a "free horse to death" and not until he balks or falls down in the harness, unable to get up on his feet, has the driver seen his mistake. I have in mind a true, willing horse, that for a number of years rendered valuable service. At last it seemed as though some one had informed the overtaxed animal, that as long as he would continue to climb the hills with load after load and each one a little heavier, the unthoughtful driver would add a little more and more to the load. One day, after straining every muscle to take the overloaded "load" to the top of hill number one, and having two more to climb, on reaching the foot of number two hill, the horse stopped, turned his head back, looked at his master and seemed to say: "You have overloaded me. I cannot reach the hill-top with this load." But the driver thought, "Oh, well, you brought the load so far and so often have done this, you can surely go the rest of the way," and he urged the horse to go; but the poor animal, by virtue of the experience, had now more sense than strength, so he again looked at the driver and pawed the ground with his front feet and snorted, as much as to say, "I will not try to go up this hill with the load."

The driver was greatly surprised that the old, faithful, reliable horse should refuse to go on, so he petted him and said, "You can not afford to go back on me now; you must take this load to market," and so he touched him lightly with the whip, and then again a little harder, but Tom would not move; he had pulled his last load; he stamped, kicked and snorted, but would not undertake to go up the hill with that heavy load.

This is but one case out of hundreds, where a good, valuable horse has become worthless; and what is true of the horse is also true of man. Often we see or hear of active, faithful persons broken down because of overtaxing them mentally and physically, and not until the collapse takes place is the mistake made apparent. But some will even then say, "Better to wear out than rust out," which, of course, is true. But, why load one person down to the hub, so to speak, and let others go empty-handed? Why overload a willing worker? Where is the wisdom and justice in asking one person to occupy in six or more places at the same time, when there is plenty of material to draw from? Besides it is not treating those who are willing to work and who need experience with proper respect, to ask one person to carry all the load and ask nothing of them. And, inasmuch as it is considered an honor to occupy in any of the various positions in the church, branch, district, stake, Sunday school, Religio and other auxiliaries, it would be well not to place all the responsibility and honor upon one person. There is much material which is unemployed and which needs practical experience in order to develop and grow, so as to be qualified for greater responsibilities, and should be given the opportunity to work, in place of asking one person to do it all.

I read in the SAINTS' HERALD, January 16, 1918, page 72, where one of our faithful, willing workers occupied, first, assistant editor of the HERALD; second, associate editor of the Autumn Leaves; third, advertising manager of the Board of Publication; fourth, secretary of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Elders; fifth, secretary of the General Sunday School Association, (which is no small affair); sixth, secretary of the Lamoni Commercial Club; seventh, president of district number one in the Lamoni Branch; eighth, one of the lecturers; ninth, one of the sawing bee. I think it was quite thoughtful of the one in charge of the sawing bee to invite this overtaxed, willing worker to the woodpile, for it certainly would be a recreation, for a "change of pasture is good for the calves," and the experience of all who are confined to the office or to any indoor work is, that a little outdoor exercise is very invigorating and essential; especially is it commendable when we help the worthy poor, whether we make garden, work in the harvest field, or chop wood.

In conclusion let me suggest to the ones who are being overloaded, if the body (electing or appointing) will not see their mistakes, balk, like the good, faithful, old work horse!

SAULT SAINTE MARIE, ONTARIO,

January 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing nicely here. Not many missionaries have visited us since Elder R. T. Brown was with us about a year ago. He held some series of meetings while here and we felt that much good was accomplished by his efforts and hope in time that the seed that was sown will still bring in more harvest. We hope our loss of Brother Brown will be the gain of the South Sea Islands.

We had a brief visit from our worthy district president, from Ontario; everybody was glad to hear him. We think he is a good man in the right place. We also had a call from our assistant president, Elder Ernest Aelick, of Spanish, and think the little branch there must feel grateful to have such a spiritual leader. Brother Arthur Starks, president of the Northern Michigan District, also gave us a call.

I am glad to say that everything is in unity and peace with us, and we have a man with ability, Brother M. K. Brown, for our president.

Much zeal has also been shown in the raising of the Christmas offering, and through the earnest work of our Sunday school and its superintendent, Brother T. B. Campbell, we hope to have a good offering. We hope to see the church debt paid, and are earnestly praying that more of the honest in heart will be gathered into God's church and kingdom in this part. Yours in gospel bonds,

VINA CAMPBELL.

ASHLAND, MISSOURI, January 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: As I am one of the isolated Saints living in Boone County, I have not heard a gospel sermon for over a year. I thought before I came into the church if I found anyone who wanted argument I could "do him up on the quick notice"; but oh, what a sad mistake it is to talk harshly with people! How much better it is to be mild! As the prophet of old has said, "Come, let us reason together." Of late years I have talked some, and have used as much gospel as before, and they have said, "Mr. Tremaine, I did not know what you believe and I feel a great deal better since talking to you."

I am one who has made some sad mistakes since I came into the church, but I will say that God has blessed me when I have been living aright. He blesses me when I try to do good, but during the time when I was serving God a little, and Satan the most, he let me depend on Satan for some things. Dear Saints, let us live close to God, and pray; pray without ceasing. Daniel of old prayed three times a day, and if he could speak to us now, no doubt he would say he was blessed for it.

Will those reading this breathe a prayer to our heavenly Father that I may keep clear of the background of my life and live a pure life from now on? If any who read this care to write to me I would appreciate it very much. I am looking for a place to work on the farm for part of the crop. I have a wife and five boys, am thirty-eight years old. My oldest boy is thirteen and knows farm work and we could handle a large place.

With best wishes to all the Saints,

C. E. TREMAINE.

SAWYER, IDAHO, December 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: Spokane conference is past. There was a large attendance, a good representation from the district. We young Saints were delighted to see and talk with our "big brothers," Brothers Greene and Aylor, the two apostles sent to visit the Northwest and West. I think of the little children at school when big brother happens in to visit the school; how their hearts swell with pride to be known as the little sister of this nice big boy. So it was at conference. How the hearts of us sisters swelled with love and pride to know the apostles are our brothers, as well we know they are God's servants. It was a great surprise to us, but surely a pleasant one.

We are living in a time now when these surprises are to come at any time. We are to come higher at each meeting. God is hastening his time. Are we keeping up? Are we doing all we can to help those who are not so fortunate as we are? Saints, do not let the golden opportunities pass; to-day will soon be gone. We cannot claim to-morrow will do. He says, "To-day is the day of salvation." Nowhere do we find we are to wait until to-morrow. Let us get in mind the great spiritual need of the rushing people, and then pray, "God, what can I do?" Soon you will be busy. We see on every hand those who are willing to give temporal relief to the suffering of to-day. The cry is abroad to save and to send. Are we as alive to the spiritual need of these people as we should be? Remember, Saints, God says, Fear not those who are able to kill the body, but fear him who is able to kill both soul and body.

We find a desire in the minds of many to know more of the word of God and live better. Then let us strike hard with the sword of the gospel.

I am astonished many times. Go with me to a home where they read the daily paper as their guide; oh, they will begin to tell us of the horrid sufferings on this page, of the great battle over there, what the Red Cross is doing, etc., with tears running. Why, we say, did our Savior not tell us all these things were coming upon the earth? Then why not search out from his word what we shall do? "When ye see all these things come to pass, lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh."

I have gone from homes, leaving the studying of the spiritual welfare of our country, and of those things coming yet. They have said, "Sister Crabb, you ought to go and talk to the soldiers." It causes me to smile when I think of the many things they expect us to do. Surely the time is here to apply that sacred and inspired hymn of ours, number 357 in the Hymnal; let us shout the words:

"Arouse, arouse, why idly stand,
Why sit at ease with folded hands?
There is a work for you to do,
No other one can do for you.
Arise and work, both great and small,
For by our works we stand or fall."

Ever praying for God's people and the church, I am still fighting the adversary.
MRS. JENNIE CRABB.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, January 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: The district conference of the Pottawatomie District was held in Council Bluffs, January 13 and 14. Reports of many of those holding the priesthood were read by the secretary. Judging from the reports some good work has been done in the district the last year. The bishop's agent's report showed the receipts for the year to be $5,000, which was much larger than any other year in the history of the district, which is encouraging indeed, showing that the Saints are living closer to the financial law, and even though they have been called upon to subscribe money for many other things on account of the war, yet their tithes and offerings have been paid more liberally, manifesting by so doing that they are willing to sacrifice for the Lord's work.

The Spirit of the Lord was there in power at the auxiliary prayer meeting, and all present seemed to have felt its influence and rejoiced that they were engaged in the work of the Lord. Through a word of prophecy the Saints were admonished to press onward and put forth a greater effort than ever before to live wholly in accord with the law and commands.

CLINTON, MISSOURI, January 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: I would like through you to address a few words to the Saints scattered abroad, many of whom once knew me, as through the infirmities of old age I have tried to keep up the place I once had in our church literature.

But my love for this restored gospel grows more certain and enthusiastic, as time rapidly unfolds the words of prophecy delivered so long ago that men had begun to think there was nothing to them. But now many are forced to consider, and to study their Bibles a little more carefully than they have ever done before. Some are busy planning what shall be done after the war. They will be quite put out when they find that the kingdoms of this world have then become the kingdom of our Lord, and men will not have so much to say about the government then.

The work in this place has almost become extinct, a half dozen or so still struggle to keep the camp fire lighted, but the people seem interested in everything except the gospel. All are working valiantly for the Red Cross. That is all right, but they remind me of those people "all Judea," was said, who went out to see John the Baptist, and never knew that a greater than John was there.

I do not know what I should do without the church papers, and wish I had the means to help the publishing houses of the church to circulate the HERALD and Ensign, I would be glad to send mine out if I could get anyone to read them. We miss the church communion so much, and would like to gather to Zion or some of its stakes, were it not that we do not know what we could do there to sustain life in these mortal bodies, and so we have to consider the bread and butter side of the proposition, and may not get to go until we are taken to the cemetery; but we must leave that to the Lord.

With much love to all the Saints,
ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY.

SWEET HOME, OREGON, January 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: The opening of 1918 finds me at this place where I have been preaching for nearly three weeks. I am having fine audiences and interest. From one hundred to two hundred are attending regularly, usually about one hundred and fifty. The place is a small village, too.

I came here December 13, and attended a Red Cross meeting that night, where I announced my services. At first I gave two lectures entitled, "The European war in the light of prophecy, history, and Christianity." The third night I gave a patriotic address "Uncle Sam's yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow." Since then I have been preaching. The Saints feared my audience would fail me when I changed from lecturing to preaching, but such has not been the case.

Elder J. C. Clapp raised a branch here about forty years ago. Its record was checkered, darkly checkered. Finally, from various causes, it broke up. Only a few Saints remain, but they are good ones. The reasons which led up to the disorganization of the branch made against the church in addition to the usual prejudice. All that, however, has largely passed away, and the lapse of time has, through deaths and removals within and without the church, made the place new.

I have been generally warned against this place, but, as has been usual with me in Oregon, the place that was considered the worst I have found best. On the other hand, some of the places that have been highly recommended, have been of little or no consequence.

I am preaching in the Grange Hall. Last Sunday morning I occupied in the Christian church by special invitation. I was urged by the people there to preach there continually, but so far I have not changed, for the hall is more centrally located.

The public response has not only been splendid, but I had more invitations to visit than I could fulfill though I may get around later.

It will be twenty-five years next April since I entered the mission field. I have never before, within all that time, had as much inspiration as I have recently enjoyed. Never previously have I been so happy in the work. Truly, as Joseph, the Seer, once declared, "The preaching of the gospel is the greatest work man can engage in."

Your brother in Christ,
A. C. BARMORE.

THE CHURCH AT RHODES, IOWA

The Saints at Rhodes bought a country schoolhouse, had a working bee, dismantled it, hauled the lumber to town, and by using it in the construction of their little church, made a considerable saving. It is stuccoed and is a neat little structure. The report of the dedication services was in a recent number, written by J. R. Epperson.

[The following letter was accidentally buried in the accumulations on one of the editor's desks for a time. When it was brought to the light we hurried it into print, and here are our apologies.—EDITORS.]

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, December 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am within eight miles of where I did my first preaching in this State, more than six months ago, and will start for home in about one week, and introduce myself to my wife and son as a returned prodigal. As I have had plenty to eat, it will not be necessary to kill the fatted calf.

How is Oklahoma? will be asked of me many times. It is all right, but it is different from every other place that I have been. It has a great mixture in the melting pot: people from Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Missouri, and States east of the Mississippi River; from all the States in the Central West; and from foreign countries. The negro and Indian is ever present in the city, town, and country.

The communities are in the transition stage. They have not yet reached the cultural development of the Bostonians, nor do they belong to the "wild and woolly West." The tall cowboy hat is often seen and so are the high-top boots, and the clank of spurs are heard as the wearer walks on the sidewalk. There are no street brawls, because there is no firewater for sale to get their fighting spirit started.

As a farming country it does not equal the States north of Kansas City. Its great wealth is its mineral and coal and oil. On a quarter section of land the amount of oil produced per day at present prices, will vary from five hundred dollars to forty-five thousand dollars. The land is usually leased by big companies, and they pay as a royalty one eighth to the land owner.

In things religious, as pertaining to our people, there are three kinds: the loyal, faithful few that you can always depend on in heat or cold, wet or dry; the rich or poor, sick or well, they are always found at the post of duty. They do not growl and find fault when the financial needs of the church are pointed out, and do not tire soon at hearing the preaching of the gospel. The second class are sleepy and so many methods have been tried by the officers of the branches and the missionaries, to wake them up, that they are at a loss to know what new method can be tried. The third class are dead. No signs of life are visible, and the last message that they left to be read by their friends was that the church was headed pell-mell for perdition, and they are the only ones that are keeping in the old path.

The necessity for earning a living is the ever-present problem with our people, and as conditions change in the industrial and commercial world, it is necessary for our people to change their location so that in the greater number of branches, from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent are absent. Under such conditions, and because of a lack of officers, the proper care can not be given to the membership, and so while no numerical loss is apparent, the spiritual loss is great and the potential power is much less than it should be according to our numbers.

Our methods are antiquated. They are out of touch with the age in which we live. We scatter our work instead of concentrating it, we make a maximum effort and get only minimum results. One county or city is big enough for one man to spend all his time in. If I spend two weeks in a branch to perform the duties assigned me, it will take nearly five months to get around, and during the interval some of the branches hold but few preaching services; and there are some communities where one or more families reside. Some care must be bestowed on them. God in his wisdom told the Saints to gather into the regions round about. Man in his folly says scatter to the regions round about to give the missionary a place to get something to eat, and a place to sleep; so while the missionary gets his physical needs cared for, a few weeks in the year, the one who cares for him goes hungry for spiritual food the remainder of the time. We should change our methods so that the missionary can go in a new place with money to pay his way and stay for several months and build up a branch or find out that there were no sheep there and then bid it a long farewell.

I am optimistical concerning gospel work in Oklahoma, and the entire church. One thing that goes before reformation and all improvement, is a knowledge of our needs; and as a church we are beginning to see some of those conditions that should be changed, and they will come in due time.

There will come special, and in some respects unusual work in this State, because of the prominence of the Indian and his wealth. It may be of interest to note some things in regard to his future as foreshadowed in the Book of Mormon. The Prophet Enos said God had made a covenant with him that he would bring forth the record in his own due time to the Lamanites. (Enos 1: 26, Authorized Version.)

In 1 Nephi 4: 17-22, we learn that the Lamanites are to come to a knowledge of their forefathers, a knowledge of Jesus Christ and his gospel; and come into the fold of God, and because of that they will greatly rejoice and give praise to God for their deliverance from their long night of darkness. They are to become a delightful people. (2 Nephi 12: 84.) They are to blossom as the rose. (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5.)

In 3 Nephi 10: 1, 2, 3, we learn that the Lamanites will be an important class of people in building up the city, New Jerusalem. The Indians of this State possess enormous wealth. When the Liberty Bonds were offered for sale, the county of Muskogee, with a population of 52,743, subscribed for $4,000,000 and $3,000,000 of it was taken by the Indian residents in the county. The county judge has a trust fund of $150,000,000 that he administers in the interests of the minors, who are Indians. The wealth of the Indians in Oklahoma amounts to several hundred millions of dollars.

According to the "books," there is a great work to be done among the Indians. They are to be a very important people in the latter-day work. It will be done in the Lord's own due time, and not by men's wisdom. It is too important to be done in any other way than under the Lord's direction. He reveals his secrets to his prophets when he has something of importance to be done.

In financial matters many of the Saints are doing well. Some are making real personal sacrifice so that they can do their part, others have not yet been converted to the keeping of that part of the law, and do not seem to fear the burning process that is to come in the due time of the Lord. (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.) The Christmas offering will be a large one; most of the Sunday schools are awake to their opportunity to do good in the Lord's work. I am busy, cheerful, and hopeful.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE.

LEICESTER, ENGLAND, December 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: There has been quite a revival in this branch. We have opened two new rooms, with an outlay of about twenty pounds to furnish it, and we have put it in order with much success. We are rejoicing, and everyone seems ready to help in the Lord's work.

We opened our place of meeting September 4. We have already baptized two, and others are nearly ready to come into the church. Our branch numbers about fifty, but six of our young men have been called into the Army. One has been missing for eighteen months. We are longing for their return to help us in our effort to raise the work to new life.

Leicester is a town of about 250,000 souls. We need more laborers to help get the truth before the people. May God speed his work and lead us to those who desire the truth.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM ECCLESTONE.

PATEROS, WASHINGTON, January 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: For the last year we have been holding Sunday school, although there were only four members of the church here. We had very little success. Once in a while a few nonmembers, but more often it would only be we four members in attendance namely, mother and father and my wife and I.

Brother James Puckett tried to hold a series of meetings but with no success. The writer was called to the priesthood through Brother Puckett and ordained under the hand of Brother Pearl Reed. After being called to the gospel, I was desirous to know for a surety if it was God's will that I should act as a representative of the gospel.

After seeking the Lord in earnest prayer I was made to know in a dream that I should preach the gospel. A bright light shone around me which was the most pleasant of anything I had ever seen or experienced. I saw two men standing a little way from me with their backs toward me, looking away from me. Between them was a bottle, and on it was written the word iniquity.

While I looked upon it in wonder, I saw that the bottle was broken in pieces, small fragments flying in every direction. I was made to know, if faithful, I would be the means of breaking many bottles of iniquity in this part of this country. I was told while being ordained that I would have the privilege of baptizing many in this neighborhood.

We labored on with Sunday school and preaching once in a while, but did not accomplish anything. This condition of affairs continued for about a year.

But things have changed. Elders Newby and Reed have just closed a series of meetings. They had a full house most of the time, and good interest. When Brother Newby wrote us from Spokane that he wanted to make an opening here, we were discouraged, but we made up our minds we would try it again, then if we had no success we could not help it. So the day was set and we advertised. We told the people that there would be a big preacher here from Spokane to hold a series of meetings. This rather appealed to them to think that a big preacher would leave a city like Spokane to hold meetings in a little isolated spot like this.

I think a great many came first out of curiosity more than anything else, but after they had come once it was more than curiosity that brought them again.

The meetings had been in progress a week when a Methodist preacher appeared on the scene. He was to preach on Sunday, at 3 p. m. Now the meetings were held in a school-house, and our Sunday school was held at 2 p. m. The house was crowded, perhaps more to see how the Latter Day Saints would take the Methodist minister's sermon than anything else.

Just as the writer called the house to order that we might begin Sunday school, a lady, a nonmember, rose to her feet and suggested that we postpone the Sunday school and allow Brother Newby to preach during that hour. It was left to a vote of the people, and not one vote was cast against it. Brother Newby preached from two to three, and promptly at three the Methodist minister and some eight or ten of his people who were too prejudiced to come and hear us, came.

All I care to say about the latter's sermon is that if it takes big words and fine clothes to preach a sermon, that preacher was a good one.

Then Brother Newby preached again on Sunday evening, and one of those Methodist gentlemen who came with the Methodist preacher was there. After the meeting he called Brother Newby in question about probation after death.

"Do you believe the Bible?" Brother Newby asked.

"Yes, sir; I believe every word of it," was the answer.

Brother Newby quoted 1 Peter 3:18, 20. He said he did not believe a word of it. Brother Newby turned to the people who were standing near and said, "You see, he doesn't believe the Bible." Quite a discussion ensued, in which Brother Newby tangled him up so badly that he was glad to quit.

The Methodists and the writer were the last to leave the building and the Methodist gentleman said, "Do you know what I heard a Methodist preacher say one time?"

I told him I had no idea. He said the Methodist preacher stated that the Latter Day Saint and the Christian Science religions were the two worst enemies to Christianity the world has to contend with. I told him that was not surprising when you took into consideration that a Methodist class leader led the mob that killed Joseph Smith.

We were threatened with mob violence but a threat was all it amounted to. One night after praying in secret for the meetings, I was made to know by dream that we could not expect the people to join the church right away. It was shown to me this way. Last year my wife and I sowed two onion beds but the seed in neither field grew. I was shown the fields and they came up as thick as could be; as I was looking and wondering why the seed did not grow last year, I was made to know that we could not always expect the seed to grow the same year, that many times it would be the next year before the seeds brought forth fruit, and that this was especially true with gospel seed.

There are no baptisms to report, but many are near the fold. Brothers Newby and Reed broke the bottle of iniquity in this neighborhood and won many friends for the cause. It is our earnest prayer and request that the conference send Brother Newby back here again. He is an able defender of the faith and we surely need him out here on the front.

Yours in bonds,

S. A. DOBSON.

Our Departed Ones

DOBSON.—Robert George Dobson, son of Joshua and Louisa Dobson, was born July 15, 1907, at Disley, Saskatchewan. Blessed by S. W. Tomlinson and Joshua Dobson, December 1, 1907. Baptized August 1, 1915. Died December 21, 1917. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, 4 sisters, 2 brothers. Funeral in charge of P. Trumley and I. A. Tomlinson.

EDWARDS.—Jane Eliza Edwards was born May 1, 1859, at Lynn, Wisconsin. Baptized June 26, 1905, at Flora, Grant County, Wisconsin, by J. O. Dutton. Died June 12, at her son's in Iowa. She was a kind, devoted mother, and companion. Leaves her husband, John Edwards, and 5 children. Funeral at Lancaster, June 15; sermon by J. O. Dutton.

PHILLIPS.—Elizabeth Phillips was born April 17, 1863, at Pembrey, Carmarthen, Wales. Baptized September 11, 1892, at Llanelly, by Gomer T. Griffiths. Died December 9, 1917, at her home, Carway, Carmarthen. Funeral services in charge of Thomas Jones, the Congregational minister, Mr. Williams, assisting at the home. Mr. Timothy, Church of England, officiated at graveside. At the age of 54, our sister, in the prime of life, passed away peacefully, leaving to mourn, her husband, 5 sons, and 2 daughters.

HART.—Wilemina Hart was born November 17, 1849, at Bower Towden, Germany. When 16 years of age, she married Adam Frank, and at once came to the United States. She was the mother of four children, three preceding her in infancy, one still living, Mrs. Amelia Whittie, of Millbrook, Illinois. On May 15, 1882, she married E. H. Hart. Died at Sandwich, Illinois, December 27, 1917. Leaves husband, 1 daughter, 1 sister, and 2 grandchildren to mourn. Also many friends. She was a good Saint, loved and respected by all who knew her. Serman by W. A. McDowell.

JONES.—Aseneth Adelaide Bell Jones was born June 16, 1848, at Macomb, Saint Lawrence County, New York. Baptized February 6, 1871, at Wilmington, Will County, Illinois, by L. D. Scott. Married August 29, 1869, to Seth Jones. She leaves husband, 2 sons, Wilbur and Reginald, and 1 daughter, Vivian Eklof. Died December 5, 1917. Funeral at the home, December 7, conducted by Elder J. O. Dutton. Interment in Wesley Cemetery. She was known far and near as a staunch defender of the restored gospel, and left her dying testimony to her children that she knew it was true.

BURGESS.—Samuel R. Burgess was born at Saint Louis, Missouri, December 26, 1851; baptized September 16, 1867, by Mark H. Forscutt; married Eveline Allen July 4, 1876; died January 18, 1918, in Saint Louis, leaving his wife, 5 children, 7 grandchildren, a brother and 2 sisters, besides a host of friends, to mourn him and wait the day of meeting. While he made many trips east and west, his whole life has centered in Saint Louis and the church in that place. The LONG.—Lucy Ellen Long was born October 19, 1867. Married W. A. Long, July 24, 1886, to whom 9 children were born, 6 living and 3 dead. Baptized at Morton, Idaho, May, 1915, by Sidney N. Gray. Lived a faithful life and was a living witness to the latter-day work. Died December 21, 1917. Funeral services at the home near Morton, in charge of Brother Townsend; sermon by S. S. Smith. Interment at Cocollella, Idaho.

ACKERLEY.—At Independence, Missouri, January 16, 1918, Sister Charlotte Ackerley, aged 84 years, 6 months, and 20 days. Born in England in 1833. Obeyed the gospel there in 1847. She and her husband, Samuel Ackerley, went to Utah in 1855. Came out in 1864. Joined the Reorganized Church in Wisconsin in 1864. Came to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1871. He died in 1901. Her body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Three sons and 2 daughters survive their mother. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins; W. B. Paul in charge. Prayers by Roy Young and F. M. Weld.

WILLIAMS.—James Andrew Williams was born at Hamburg, Iowa, July 28, 1871. Baptized when twenty years old by Henry Kemp, at Thurman, Iowa, and has lived in that faith ever since. Died at Bancroft, Nebraska, December 5, 1917. Leaves to mourn, wife, 2 sons, 2 daughters and several brothers and sisters. Funeral held at Randolph, Iowa, sermon by M. M. Case.

HERE AND THERE

PROBLEMS OF THE SECRETARY SOLVED

The Sunday School Department in the February Autumn Leaves contains an important editorial from G. R. Wells on "Enrolling and removing names from the roll." Perhaps every Sunday school has had trouble over this question, from lack of understanding or agreement on the subject. Read this carefully and there need be no trouble at all about when to enroll or when to drop a person from the records.

A number of letters from the West express enthusiasm about the results of the trip of Brethren U. W. Greene and W. M. Aylor through that section. On their way home Brother Aylor went down the coast via steamer, but Brother Greene had seen enough of the briny deep, so he went via Government controlled railway.

COLD AND SNOW IN THE SOUTH

Eighteen inches of snow and sixteen degrees below zero at Fisher, Arkansas, is the report from J. T. Riley. That's awfully cold for that section. Those of us who were thinking of going south to get warm once more might as well remain where we are.

"ENSIGN" LIST CLIMBING

We are pleased to note that the list of subscribers to whom the Ensign is sent is increasing nicely. It is also gratifying that a large number of these go to those who are not members of the church, who will in this manner have at least fifty-two opportunities to learn what the teachings of the gospel are and how its principles are being worked out. If any of the HERALD readers are not acquainted with this church publication, the publishers will be glad to send sample copies on request. Either send direct to Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, or to this office, from which request will be forwarded.

THE COAL SHORTAGE

We have in this country been suffering some from a coal shortage, especially in the East; but we learn through other sources that fuel is as high as a hundred dollars a ton in some parts of Europe. We learn from one of our brethren in Central Europe to the effect that fuel is so short that he invites the children into his house after school time and keeps them there. That is, the children whose parents are kept from home bread-gaining, and also women who have housework and no fire. Fuel is so expensive that they crowd up during the day in a single room which they keep warm.

"A STORY OF THE PLAINS"

This is the title of a serial now running in Stepping Stones. It is the experiences of the father of Ellis and M. T. Short in an extensive trip to the West and back again, via prairie schooner. The story is written by Eva Bailey Short, who has sought to preserve the actual incidents, as they happened, by clothing them in interesting language. Those who are not already reading this excellent serial should begin now.

The fuel shortage brought Evangelist Frederick A. Smith home from holding a series of meetings at Lincoln and Nebraska City, Nebraska. Fortunately for him and others, a few cars of coal arrived simultaneously with his return. Cobs have been plentiful and cheap. Lamoni being a shelling station for several elevators along the line, and green wood is available, but few are equipped to use these extensively in the extremely cold weather we have had.

A personal note from Brother E. B. Blett adds: "It is the most trying time this city has ever experienced. We have had the deepest snow I ever saw; very cold, and no coal to keep warm. Schools, city hall, etc., have been open for those who were required to occupy them. We have not had to go, but may. We are enjoying the blessings of the gospel and look forward to brighter things." Perhaps by this time there has been some relief.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY FOR GOSPEL LITERATURE COMMITTEES

A number of thoughtful members of gospel literature boards have taken the right course in deciding to begin operations on the campaign to increase the circulation of the church periodicals. It has always been urged that they do this, and no doubt many have been the means of enriching the lives of our own members in this manner. It is as important that our own members be well-versed in the interpretations and teaching of the law as it is to convert others from the world. Both are essential, but let us not overlook the former. Sample copies of the various periodicals, advertising, etc., are available to those who need them by addressing the Advertising Manager, this office. Begin now and secure a nice Christmas offering on the ten per cent discount given for all new subscriptions.

THIS WILL TOUCH YOUR HEART

There is a class of girls in the Lamoni Sunday school which is taught by Brother R. V. Hopkins and numbers about forty-two members. It is made up of college girls mostly; those in attendance at Graceland College. They come from all parts of the country; some from foreign lands, including England and Hawaii. Four or five distinct nationalities are represented.

The class itself is interesting, but what they did is more so, and we'll tell it briefly.

Last May, when the class was about twenty in number, they pledged two dollars each for the Christmas offering. A special secretary kept tab on each member during vacation and all paid, some much more. One girl earning six dollars a week, sent in twenty-five dollars.

At the beginning of the school year the Christmas offering was made the wheel about which all others revolved. They became enthused and raised the goal to one hundred dollars. It gave them something to do—and they did it. Every Sunday it was brought up and kept before them from the standpoint of sacrifice. The spirit of that class was beautiful to behold. Tears filled many eyes every Sabbath when considering the subject.

A general supervising committee was appointed which devised plans for increasing the offering. They were most successful. One plan that worked well was this: Each girl wrote five letters to friends who were isolated, many of whom might never have had an opportunity of sharing in this great joy of giving.

Four of the girls are not members of the church, yet all helped liberally. More than all, however, more than the mere dollars and cents raised, was the softening and spiritualizing effect it had on the girls. Many a member of that class who had not enough for the necessities of life, gave all they had.

They raised in all $256.35 for the Christmas offering!

TWELVE-SESSION DEBATE

Elder J. T. Riley reports that he just closed a debate with a Baptist minister at Fisher, Arkansas, resulting in a number of friends to the cause and rejoicing among the Saints. D. N. Jackson was the Baptist's name.

In the Halifax explosion Wylie Canning Fillmore, husband of Sister Calla Fillmore, was instantly killed. He had gone to the city that morning and at the time of the explosion was asleep on the van, he being a driver. The many elders who have visited at the home of Brother Blair Fillmore will sympathize with the young sister who so tragically lost her husband.

FROM NEW ZEALAND

A letter from Brother J. C. Bradley, of Dunedin, New Zealand, states that Brother and Sister H. W. Savage are now laboring in the north island, after having been active in the south over a year. The work is moving along slowly in Dunedin, the Sunday school continuing and an occasional stranger dropping in. Certain slanderous statements have been made by a Campbellite minister, which have been challenged. If he will not consent to public debate of the issues involved, lectures on the subject will be announced.

* Mrs. Addie R. Ingersoll, a sister at Addison, Maine, enjoys reading the HERALD and feels she could not get along without it. She has taken it for twenty-four years, and during that time has found much comfort in the gospel, especially of late when the times are so trying. The branch there is large but much scattered, only a few of the Saints being able to meet for sacrament service.

AH MEN AND AD DRESS

While I'm not so much on the use of our common language, yet I confess it gives me a pain to hear otherwise well-informed people persist in butchering the king's English by some such terms as "Ah men," when they simply mean amen, with the good, old-fashioned a. It's essential to say it with the ah on these anthems you sometimes hear, but otherwise don't. Then some people come along and want an ad dress, whatever that might be. The dictionary folks don't know any such pronunciation. Say it with two syllables and the accent on the dress rather than the ad and you will not be singled out for lack of observation, at least.—From The Periscope; February Autumn Leaves.

$68,776.93 CHRISTMAS OFFERING

The latest report we have is that the Presiding Bishopric have received $68,776.93 on the Christmas offering. We are all rejoicing over the success of this year's work and feel that it is only a good start toward what we can do.

The Columbus (Ohio) Evening Dispatch of the 23d has a comprehensive statement of the position of the church regarding polygamy and loyalty to the Government. A Mr. Lattimer is lecturing in the city and seldom fails to blame Joseph Smith for the introduction of polygamy into the church. The exception was when Brother C. W. Clark of that place was in the audience, as recently noted in this column, when he readily admitted Brigham Young was the author of the pernicious evil. The writer of the article was Brother Clark, and with the 35,000 circulation the paper has, it should help in clarifying the atmosphere.

We have an inquiry as to whether Sister Anna Paris, of Coverdale, British Columbia, lives near Victoria, Vancouver Island. If so, Sister R. I. Jones would like to meet her. The address of the latter is Ramsbury Cottage, Victoria, British Columbia.

"UNITY," THE PRIESTHOOD PAPER

If there be any of the priesthood who do not know what The Unity is, let us briefly state that it is a monthly publication edited by President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire, especially for the priesthood of the church. It contains each month several especially valuable discussions of subjects of vital interest. The price is very low—only 25 cents a year—and it should reach every ordained man each month. It is published by the Ensign Office, but orders may be sent here if more convenient.

NOTICE TO READER: When you finish reading this magazine place a one-cent stamp on this notice, and hand to any postal employee and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. No wrapping. No address. A. S. BURLERSON, Postmaster General.

Cuts from "Paradise of the Pacific."

Every cloud here has a silver lining. There are the most wonderful sunsets imaginable in these islands.

We look out upon the Pacific and see the steamers coming in from the homeland and wonder what news they are bringing for us.

We see them depart, and sometimes long to be a passenger homeward bound. Then our calling rests upon us, and we feel it is an honor to serve the Lord and we say: "We will go and stay where you want us, dear Lord."

Just think, a night-blooming cereus hedge half a mile long! It surrounds the Punahou High School, and it is a glorious sight to see it in bloom. As I pulled off a flower one evening I felt as if it belonged to the Lord.

This is the famous "Pali." Here is where Kamehameha forced the Oahu Army over the Cliffs in 1795, and the bones of the defeated army are lying at the base of the "Pali."

As you stand near the pass, you look upon a most wonderful view. Below are pineapple plantations, the sea is in the distance, the mountains to the right and left, making a wonderful combination. The "Pali" is one of Honolulu's show places. At the pass the wind is so strong you can lean right against it.

OUR HAWAIIAN NUMBER

Deciding that a special illustrated number of the HERALD devoted to our mission in the Hawaiian Islands would be of much interest and value to all our readers, we asked Brother C. Edward Miller to secure the material and look after the details of such a venture. Being on the ground and having had experience in the printing business, we knew he could handle it nicely, which he has done. Brother G. J. Waller kindly assisted by going over all the manuscript to prevent errors in history, etc.

We commend the number to our readers as a very creditable presentation of our work. Of course it is not possible to present every interesting phase in so limited a space, but we believe it quite representative. The Mid-Pacific Magazine and the Paradise of the Pacific very kindly loaned a number of cuts from which the pictures were printed. Some are new ones made especially for this number.

We of this continent have a very warm place in our hearts for our brothers and sisters in the islands of the sea and they may be assured that anything concerning their good works is read with great interest. When the millennial reign is ushered in, if not before, we shall appreciate the privilege of meeting all these dear people who accept the same glorious gospel as we do.

Since this one number is so inadequate to tell of the island missions, we hope to hear often from those in charge and the native workers concerning their interesting experiences.

Before many weeks elapse, we hope to issue a special number on the Society Islands. The manuscripts are in hand now and the edition will prove an excellent companion to this one.

HERALD EDITORS.

About fifty-four years before the coming of Christ there was a great emigration of the people of Central America to the "land northward." A number of ships were built, loaded with Nephites and "much provisions." Some of these returned for second trips and others were never heard from again. The thirtieth chapter of Alma in the Book of Mormon tells of this.

GILBERT J. WALLER

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

To start the work in these islands and keep it going, required no ordinary man. The Lord knowing what was needed called to the task Brother Waller,

ELDER GILBERT J. WALLER.

A tower of strength and support to the Hawaiian Mission. Others have come and gone, but they always counted on the support of Brother Waller—and received it.

who being anxious to see the kingdom of God established here, readily and freely gave of his time, means, and strength to that end. This Honolulu Branch is the monument crowning his efforts. It is a monument composed of priceless souls, many of whom will inherit celestial salvation during the countless ages of eternity. Such a monument will never perish, but will be preserved by the hand of God.

I consider Brother Waller one of the remarkable men of this church. There were many discouraging matters arose which would have completely disheartened an ordinary man, but Brother Waller, with a sublime faith, never wavered for a moment. He has an iron will, tempered with a fine humility, and the work here gives evidence that he has been led of the Lord. He has a remarkable memory, which makes him an expert in the use of the three books. He is an interesting speaker, vigorous and convincing.

He has now a great trial to face. His son-in-law volunteered for service in the British Army, and is now in England. His son refused exemption and is now preparing for active service. These younger men were helping to carry on a large business, but now their support has been withdrawn and additional responsibilities rest upon Brother Waller until other arrangements can be made. At present he is president of the San Francisco Branch, his family residing in that city, but he is still bishop's agent and historian for the Hawaiian Mission.

HISTORICAL

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

The Hawaiian Mission has been fortunate in having a detailed written history preserved, from its inception to the present time.

Space necessitates that this historical matter shall be given in very condensed form. This will take much of the "life" out of the history, and make it cold, when it should be warm with life, sympathy, and activity; but the reader will get a "bird's-eye view" of this mission, as given in this condensed form.

The church appointed Elder Albert Haws to the Hawaiian Islands, then generally known as the "Sandwich Islands." He arrived September 19, 1890. Gilbert J. Waller, a business man of Honolulu, had accepted the gospel the previous year in California, and together with Brother and Sister Luther, who arrived at the same time as Brother Haws, started the work in this mission.

All church doors were closed to this pioneer quartet. It was left to a native lawyer, Kaulukou by name, to offer his office as a meeting place. A hall was rented for one month. For Hawaiian tracts, two hundred and fifty dollars were spent. Elder Haws was in poor health. Another hall was procured, as they were refused the continued use of the Odd Fellows' Hall. An interview was held at the palace with Queen Liliuokalani, by Brethren Haws, Waller, and some natives, and the differences between us and Utah explained. Elder Haws was reappointed by the Kirtland conference, and Brother Waller recommended to be ordained an elder. The membership now numbered twenty, so on August 2, 1891, a branch was organized with Elder Waller as its president. August 16, Joseph M. Poepoe, a native brother of considerable learning and a skilled interpreter, was ordained a priest. On December 17, Elder Haws, on account of his health, left for San Francisco. Thirty-nine persons were baptized in 1891.

1892. The Elele Evangelio or Gospel Herald was started. On September 7, Joseph C. Clapp arrived. The work received additional impetus. During the year seventeen were baptized.

1893. Troublous times in Honolulu. In January, Liliuokalani was dethroned. The Hawaiians were very much downcast over the overthrow of their queen. The Doctrine and Covenants was translated into Hawaiian, and to insure accuracy, was retranslated into English. On April 23, Sister Clapp and 1897. The translation of the Book of Mormon into Hawaiian, which was commenced in 1895, was continued. The family of Brother Waller returned. Three were baptized during the year.

1898. U. W. Greene, of the seventy, was appointed to this mission, Elder Waller continuing in charge. On November 9 the Book of Mormon was printed in Hawaiian. Brother Greene arrived on November 17. Three were baptized during the year.

1899. On July 2 Gulstan K. Poepoe was appointed to labor with Elder Greene, who was doing missionary work in the country districts of the island. Towards the end of the year, Brethren Greene and Poepoe went to Hilo, located on the Island of Hawaii, the largest in the group. In December the bubonic plague broke out. In an effort to arrest the plague, which infested the Chinese and Japanese quarters, fire destroyed that part of the town. Brethren Greene and Poepoe returned to Honolulu. No members of the church were afflicted with the plague. Five were baptized.

1900, 1901. In March, 1900, Elder Greene returned to the States. After now nine years of existence, the branch had only one Hawaiian holding the priesthood. The historian says: "The instability of the Hawaiians made the work amongst them difficult and slow, and it required charity and faith to enable the elders to carry on the work amongst them."

THE MISSION HOUSE IN HONOLULU.

Unpretentious, but most comfortable looking; an eight-room house with all improvements.

children arrived. During the year twenty were baptized.

1894. The work among the Hawaiians became more difficult, on account of the overthrow of the monarchy, and the feelings of the Hawaiians toward the white race. A complication of difficulties arose, but the work forged ahead slowly. Elder Clapp and family returned to the coast, and Brother Waller was placed in charge. Six were baptized during the year.

1895. In January another revolution took place, the Hawaiians attempting to restore the monarchy. For a time services were not held. In August cholera broke out in the city and the services were discontinued. In September the Doctrine and Covenants was printed in Hawaiian. None of the members of the church were afflicted with cholera. Ten were baptized during the year.

1896. Elder Waller's family moved to the States. A revelation was given to Brother Waller by President Joseph Smith, that he should not leave the mission, permanently, but that he could visit the United States if he wished, which he later was able to do. Twelve were baptized during the year.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In one of the first branches, located at Waikiki.

The facts are, these men had a man's job to handle! There were no baptisms this year.

A Japanese Sunday school had been started early in the year.

In August, 1901, Brother Robert M. Elvin, of Lamoni, Iowa, forwarded a tract which was published in Chinese. Through reading one of the tracts,

We hear very favorable reports of the work and ideals of this organization. They have been of much assistance to the sisters in the Society Islands in overcoming some pernicious traditions regarding social purity.

a Chinese merchant was instrumental in having a Chinese Sunday school started.

On December 22 Elder Waller was ordained a high priest in Oakland, in accordance with an action of the General Conference of 1898.

1902. January 19 a Religio was organized. March 23 probably the first Chinese to obey the gospel was baptized. The young man's name is Too Shau Chinn.

May 27 Presiding Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, Elder Leon A. Gould, Elder John Kaler, wife, and children, arrived at Honolulu from Australia. Brother Kaler and family just stayed over the day and continued to the coast.

The patriarch conferred thirty-three blessings during his two weeks' stay. On June 10 he and Brother Gould left for the coast. Quite a number of the white members of the branch also left for the mainland about this time.

On July 30 Elder David Anderson and wife arrived. On the same vessel were Elders Wight and Barmore for Australia, and Elders Hanson and Tucker for New Zealand.

There were Sunday schools at Kapalama and Waikiki, attended by Hawaiians and Japanese. Nine were baptized during the year.

1903. In January a Sunday school was started at Brother Kanui's house, Kalihi, consisting of eighteen Portuguese and Hawaiian children. Too Shau Chinn had lost interest in the work. It developed that he was puzzled about the gathering. How could Chinese be gathered to Zion when the Government would not permit them to enter the country. A satisfactory explanation was made to him. Brother and Sister Anderson left for Oregon on June 2, the work continuing in charge of Elder Waller.

A fund was started for building a church. A suitable lot was purchased on the principal street of the city.

1904. April 24 the Waikiki Japanese Sunday school was organized. No missionary was appointed by conference.

1905. April 13 Elder Waller appeared before the grand jury, to answer questions relative to the teachings of the Utah church. Congressman Colonel William P. Hepburn was visiting Honolulu. In an interview published in the Advertiser, June 8, is the following: "Colonel Hepburn said he came from Clarinda, Iowa, near which was the home of the Reformed Mormon Church, a church which believes in the doctrines of Joseph Smith, but has never believed in polygamy. 'The son of Joseph Smith lives near me,' said Colonel Hepburn, 'and I have great 1905. The open letter of Frederick M. Smith to the people of Utah was published in a Hawaiian newspaper here, and created quite a sensation among the Hawaiian Mormons.

AN ISLAND GROUP.

1906. Elder John D. White was appointed to labor here. Much favorable notice was given our work by the Honolulu press.

On July 26 Elder White and family arrived. Several months of activity resulted in several additions to the church. On October 23 Elder White went to Hilo to size up the situation, and concluded the time was not propitious for starting the work there.

On account of high cost of living in Honolulu, Elder White concluded to be on a self-sustaining basis by practicing law, and he decided to move to the Island of Kauai, he and family leaving Honolulu December 27. Twelve were baptized during this year.

1907. January 9 a committee was appointed to obtain plans for a church building. February 15 the Waikiki Religio was organized, with nine members.

A duplicate copy of the history of this mission was forwarded to the HERALD, to replace one destroyed by Herald Office fire. April 2 Elder White and family left for Independence, Missouri.

May 14 the erection of the church commenced. Home classes were started in various parts of the city and greater activity prevailed. Correspondence opened with President Joseph Smith, inviting him to dedicate the new church. In July the church building was completed. August 4 the first service was held there. August 25 three Japanese were baptized, the first possibly in the church. Twenty-three persons were baptized this month.

October 4 Elder Waller received a cablegram that President Smith and Elder Sheehy were sailing October 5. They arrived October 12. They were interviewed by reporters. The heading of one of the interviews reads:

“THE CHAMPION POLYGAMY FIGHTER
“PRESIDENT SMITH TALKS ON TRADUCERS OF HIS FATHER”

On Sunday, October 13, the dedicatory services were held and were well attended. The church and property cost seven thousand dollars. The dedicatory sermon was published in the Advertiser. Services were held during the week. A special sermon to the members of the Utah church was preached on October 21: this was reported and published in the Advertiser. It appeared under the heading: “One wife at one time enough.” President Smith was permitted to preach in the Utah church at Laie, where there is a Mormon settlement. Audience not large, but attentive.

Sunday, October 27, a number were baptized. At the close of the preaching service, arrangements were made to give a luau in honor of the distinguished visitors. This event will be described elsewhere.

October 28 President Smith, Elders Sheehy and Waller visited Mrs. Whitney, daughter of L. L. Rice, Mr. Rice having discovered among his effects the famous "Manuscript Found" story of Solomon Spalding's.

Sunday evening, November 3, President Smith preached his farewell sermon. Tuesday President Smith and Elder Sheehy called upon ex-Queen Liliuokalani, and were well received.

November 6 President Smith left on the Alameda, Elder Sheehy remaining. December 6 Elder Sheehy left for Hilo. This was the most prosperous year for the church in this mission; fifty-eight persons were baptized, thirty-five children were blessed, and four ordinations took place.

December 30 Elder Sheehy was permitted to preach in the Mormon church on Punchbowl, an extinct volcano overlooking the city.

1908. A second meeting was held in the Mormon church by Elder Sheehy. January 12 Robert K. Pahau was ordained an elder. On the same date Elder Sheehy left for San Francisco. No missionaries were appointed at the conference for this mission.

1909. The branch now numbered 195. On February 26 Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah church, arrived. March 2 Elder Ingham, many years an elder in the branch, moved to Hawaii. March 26 Joseph F. Smith and party left for the coast. April 8 Elder Waller was called to the Island of Kauai because of illness of wife and child of Elder White. The babe died before arrival of Brother Waller. He returned on Saturday and was called upon to baptize three Portuguese. An effort was made to interest others of that nationality, but was not successful. The conference made no appointment for this mission.

June 24 Elder Gomer R. Wells and family, from Australia, visited while their steamer was in port. July 24 Elder Ingham returned to Honolulu. Elders Roberts and Davis, en route to Australia, saw the town while their vessel was in port. August 4 Elder Ingham left for California, and on the 17th Elder White and wife for the coast. October 6, petition sent to Independence, to ask support of church for bill to be introduced in Congress for prohibition of sale of liquor in Hawaii. The matter was taken up by the Presidency of the church, and the Missouri senators' aid enlisted. November 1, Elder Waller had been elected a member of the Ministerial Alliance. The total branch membership now was 217.

1910. Elder Waller requested some one be sent here, as he proposed visiting his family in Europe. Yearly the offerings to the various funds had been sent and were increasing. This year, $54.90 Christmas offering; Sanitarium, $21.25; Graceland College, $18; Birth offering, $2; Order of Enoch, $2.50. February 17 Elder Ingham and family left for the coast. They deeded their eight-room cottage to the church for a mission house, a picture of which is in this issue. April 25 Burton L. McKim, a priest, arrived to do missionary work. April 26 a farewell reception was held for Elder Waller, who left the next day for the coast. May 2 Elder M. A. McConley and wife arrived. May 4 Elder McConley was elected president of the branch. May 23 funds were secured and material purchased for a tent, made by Sister Fanny Mahuka. June 6 the tent work commenced. July 25 the Territory voted against prohibition, the Catholic and Episcopal bishops opposing it! August 18 Elder Waller returned, after an absence of five months in Europe with his family. August 24 Elder McConley resigned and Brother Waller was elected president. October 21 Brother McKim was given a farewell social, as he was to sail for the coast the next day. The Christmas entertainment, in charge of Sister McConley, was attended by the various schools. The Chinese school was provided with a special car. The church was so packed that only standing room was available; $62.55 was sent as a Christmas offering. Seven baptisms took place during the year.

1911. January 28 Elder McConley baptized Eugenia Akana, she being the first fruits of the tent work. May 21 Elder Waller started a Japanese Sunday school at Kalihi. July 21 Priest J. B. Barrett and wife arrived to reinforce the missionary force. July 24 Mr. and Mrs. George Holt gave thirty dollars for material for a new tent, and tent services were again started. Brother Barrett later was ordained an elder. The tent work was discontinued, as the rainy season had set in.

1912. February 26 a farewell reception was tendered Brother F. W. Kline and family, who were to move to the coast. March 18 a petition was drawn up to be forwarded to the General Conventions and Conference, asking that funds be appropriated for a mission house to take care of the Chinese work. April 11 tent services were started again, with good attendance. The conventions and conference appropriated thirteen hundred dollars for a Chinese mission house. (For some reason the money was never forwarded.—C. E. M.)

September 30 Elders McConley and Barrett started on a trip around the island.

November 8 at the solicitation of influential Democrats in Honolulu, Brother Waller became a candidate for governor of the Territory. (Appointment to this office is made by the President.)

November 16 McConley and Barrett went to Hilo to do missionary work. Several were baptized. On account of financial conditions, it was thought best to postpone the establishment of the Chinese mission.

This was a great year for missionary activity. Nineteen were baptized. Five Sunday schools, with an enrollment of 217, were in the city.

1913. The two missionaries continued in Hilo and the country districts, returning to Honolulu on the 31st. January 26 five boys and nine girls were baptized, scholars of the Kalihi Sunday School, Honolulu, eleven of whom were Japanese. At their own request, Christian names were given to these Japanese children. February 8 Elder Waller left for Washington, and was present at the inauguration of President Wilson, returning on the 17th. As he was a candidate for governor, he with other candidates was summoned to Washington. Through an interview with Secretary of the Interior Lane, he had an opportunity to explain the difference between our church and the Utah organization. There were a number of forces arrayed against Brother Waller, the Catholic bishop here cabling the President he was opposed to Brother Waller on account of his church affiliations. Thus Brother Waller and President F. M. Smith, who also visited Washington at this time, were able to place before the rulers of the Nation our position as a church. Secretary Lane told Brother Waller that Fred M. Smith had made a splendid impression upon the President and himself. Eventually L. E. Pinkham was appointed governor. July 26 Sister Barrett left for the coast. August 1. The tent again in operation; four were baptized. On the 23d Hiotaro Tsuji, a Japanese boy, left for Graceland. September 22 the tent was packed away for the season. September 15 Elder Waller returned. October 14 the first Sunday school convention of this mission was held.

1914. Elders J. W. Davis and C. E. Jones were appointed to this mission. Elders McConley and

Barrett went to Hilo, where they found the Sunday school previously organized had been discontinued. Elder Waller wrote a letter to the Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve, making certain recommendations, a number of which the quorums carried out. Elders McConley and Barrett made a three-hundred mile trip, mostly on foot, around the Island of Hawaii, returning to Honolulu April 30. May 20 Elder Barrett left for the coast. June 26 Elder Jones and wife arrived. On July 4 Elder McConley and wife left for the coast. August 13 Elder Davis and wife arrived, going to Hilo for a time to continue the work started by previous missionaries.

November 6 Apostle Griffiths, on his way home from Australia, spent the day in Honolulu. December 3 Elder Jones and wife sailed for the coast. Notices of the death of President Joseph Smith appeared in the Honolulu papers. Sixteen baptisms during the year.

1915. Here is an interesting bit of history: On January 31 the branch voted unanimously to adopt the individual communion cup. Elder Davis was again appointed to this mission, but on account of Sister Davis's health, Brother and Sister Davis left for the coast on July 1. James Puuohau, a Hawaiian priest, left for Hilo on November 3, purposing to look after those whom Elders Barrett, McConley, and Davis had interested. There were eight baptisms during the year. Christmas offering, $90.90.

1916. Brother Puuohau started the Sunday school work at Hilo, which had been discontinued after Brother Davis left. Elder Waller, chairman of the Law and Order Committee of the Anti-Saloon League, wrote President F. M. Smith to use his influence with congressmen of his acquaintance, to get their support of a bill to make Hawaii dry. President Smith took up the matter at once.

January 18 Elder C. Ed. Miller stopped for two weeks on his way home from Australia, leaving Honolulu February 8. April 28 Elder Miller wrote that he had been appointed to the Hawaiian Mission, Honolulu objective point, and that Elder McConley had been appointed to Hilo.

July 12 Elder Waller sailed for the coast. July 31 Elder Miller, wife, and daughter arrived. Elder Waller had sent in his resignation as pastor of the branch, as he expected to be away for many months. Elder Miller was elected president of the branch.

October 2 Elder M. A. McConley and wife arrived. Resolutions, expressing the deep affection held by the members of the branch for Elder Waller and voicing appreciation of his sacrifices and labors for the work, were sent to Brother Waller.

October 18 Elder McConley and wife left for Hilo. A branch was organized at Hilo.

1917. April 22 a memorial service was held in the church for Brother Okela Kaohi, who lost his life on the Aztec, which had been destroyed by submarine or mine.

May 22 Elder Waller returned from the coast. A reception was given him in the church on the 25th. July 14 a piano was purchased.

July 29 was a record day for attendance, seventy-two out in the morning and eighty-five in the evening. There was nothing special on the program.

August 2 the twenty-sixth anniversary of the branch was celebrated. Sister Elfrieda Pilger left for Graceland.

September 19 Elder Waller, Sister Clegg, and Mr. Clegg, son-in-law of Brother Waller, left for the coast, Mr. Clegg having enlisted in the British Army.

September 21 Apostle Paul M. Hanson and wife arrived from Australia.

September 26 Brethren Hanson and Miller went to Hilo, returning on October 2.

October 3 Brother and Sister Hanson left for the coast. Up to the time this was written, about twenty were baptized this year. The 1917 conference made the first appointment of a Hawaiian missionary. James Puuohau, an able and faithful young Hawaiian, is the first among his race to represent the church by conference appointment.

Now, dear reader, you have twenty-six years of history before you.

HAWAII'S ORIGINAL INHABITANTS FROM AMERICA

Captain H. G. Morse, late of the steamer Alameda, has developed into a lecturer since his retirement. His first appearance will be in San Francisco on November 22.

Captain Morse commenced his long and eventful career back in 1844 on a thirty-ton schooner, which was engaged in the fishing trade on the Eastern Coast, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Since then he has sailed the Mediterranean, spent four years in the pepper trade on the west coast of Sumatra, has been engaged in the fur trade on the east coast of Siberia, and has made many trips to the coral islands of the Pacific, besides innumerable visits to every inhabitable spot in the broad Pacific Ocean.

During his long career at sea Captain Morse has had an opportunity for observing and studying the queer people who inhabit the many groups of small islands with which the broad Pacific is flecked, and at his lecture he will develop an interesting idea in respect to their origin. Captain Morse disputes the theory advanced by most writers, that the inhabitants of the Society Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, and the other island groups in the tropics came originally from Asia. He has satisfied himself that they came from America, and he is full of intelligent arguments in support of his theory.

"In the first place," said Captain Morse, in speaking of the matter, "we have every reason to believe, that the natives of the Sandwich Islands came originally from the Society Islands. They have a tradition, which has been handed down by the forefathers, that the progenitors of their race came in canoes from the southward. Now, in my estimation, it would have been impossible for the natives of the Society Islands to have made their way eastward from the coast of Asia in small canoes, when the winds and currents are all against them.

"I do not believe that the important question of winds and currents was considered by the historians who have attempted to settle this matter. The trade winds in the tropics blow from the east and strike the equator at an angle of forty-five degrees. To be more specific, the trade winds north of the equator blow from the northeast. Below the equator they blow from the southeast. The currents in the tropics follow the direction of the trade winds—that is, from east to west. Now all the islands referred to are in the tropics, and it stands to reason that the slight canoes in which these ancient navigators traveled must have gone with the winds and currents.

"That the inhabitants of the islands off the east coast of Asia came from Asia, there is no doubt. We find on the Marshall and Solomon Islands an entirely different race of people from those who inhabit the islands further east. They are as black as jet, and their hair is short and curly. The natives of the Society and Sandwich Islands are light complexioned and their hair is long and straight.

"These are not the only facts in support of the theory that the people in question are the descendants of the native Americans. There is a lot of old stone work in the Hawaiian Islands which bears a striking resemblance to similar work found in Mexico. In the big Mexican Museum are many relics of the Aztecs which have a striking resemblance to relics of past generations of Hawaiians. It seems to me very plausible that at some remote time, ages ago, the islands I have referred to were a part of the American Continent, for I cannot conceive how any canoe, built of the largest trees then growing, could survive the storms and rough weather such as are encountered on the Pacific. However, in whatever way the natives of the Pacific islands might have reached those isolated places, I am satisfied that they came from the coast of America, and not from the coast of Asia."—Honolulu Advertiser, December 6.

The foregoing is from the Honolulu, Hawaii, Advertiser, of December 6, sent us by Brother G. J. Waller. Captain Morse seems to have traveled extensively among the Pacific islanders and to have studied their manners, customs, and traditions, from which he concludes, as stated, that the inhabitants of the Hawaiian, Society, and other islands of the central and southwestern portions of the Pacific are descended from the ancient Americans—the Indians. This seems to confirm the opinion of brethren who have labored in those islands, that they are descendants of colonies from America—those referred to in the Book of Mormon, (Alma 30: 3, 4,) Hagoth's migrating companies. Captain Morse's statements are interesting in that connection.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 43, p. 17.

DIAMOND HEAD

So firm and stanch before the restless sea
You watch Earth's nations pass (more restless they),
And guard what secrets vast, O silent clay
Wrapped in such mystic Sphinx-like mystery,
Gibraltar of the Isles of Hawaii!
Magnificent your massive proud array
And of your hidden strength, O, who can say—
Stern sentinel by far famed Waikiki!

—Margaret K. Morgan.

Here is the famous "Diamond Head" and the also famous "Waikiki Beach" at the left. This extinct volcano has special interest for Latter Day Saints, on account of its former Hawaiian name of "Leahi." I have before me a history of the Hawaiian people, and the map of the Island of Oahu has this point marked, "Leahi or Diamond Head." One of the best Hawaiian students said the "a" had no significance in the name, so here we see evidence of "Lehi." Why should not the most prominent point on this island be named after the forefather of the Hawaiian race?

Surf riding is a picturesque sight, requiring considerable skill to stay "on board," but some become so expert they stand on their heads while riding the waves.

The volcano is a powerful fort, and instead of belching forth stone and lava, it is ready to send out great projectiles of steel.

Another extinct volcano is called "Punchbowl." It is situated right back of the heart of the city, and from its summit a splendid view of the town is to be had, with the blue Pacific and the mountains in the distance.

Every Easter Sunday, services are held at sunrise on the summit, the boy scouts helping the pilgrims to ascend the trail.

C. E. M.

I have never forgotten the native words I learned on my first visit to Honolulu twenty-four years ago, taste of luscious guavas, trip to the Pali, plunge at Waikiki, native feast, but above all the simple faith and fraternal devotion of the native Saints.—Gomer R. Wells.

DEDICATION AT HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

President Joseph Smith and Apostle F. M. Sheehy arrived in Honolulu, October 12, 1907, being invited by the Honolulu Branch to dedicate the new church. In an editorial for SAINTS' HERALD, November 6,

THE HONOLULU CHURCH.

The building and grounds cost $7,000. Situated on the principal street of the city.

1907, President Smith wrote quite a lengthy description of the event. The following extracts have been made from it:

"Elder Waller, and the branch under his charge, were indeed ready for our coming, and for the dedicatory exercises which were advertised to take place at eleven o'clock, October 13."

At the time appointed, the house, which will seat some two hundred, was well filled. By request Brother Waller took charge of the services, the following report of which with a description of the building were given in the Advertiser.

CHURCH DEDICATED BY THE SON OF THE PROPHET

With simple but effective ceremonies and services, the first church edifice of the body of Christians known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was dedicated yesterday morning.

The church is a frame structure on the mauka [a Hawaiian word meaning toward the mountains.—EDITORS] side of King Street, opposite the Catholic cemetery. It is of the pleasing ecclesiastical architecture of which many examples may be seen scattered through the rural regions of the Mississippi Valley and the Alleghany region. There is adaptation to this climate, however, by an abundance of windows to secure ventilation. The entrance is through a square vestibule formed by a tower terminating in a pleasing cupola. The pulpit platform, with small rooms on either side, occupies the mauka end of the church. The platform is raised higher than is usual in most churches, and is reached by steps at the left. The interior of the church is finished in natural wood. The ceiling is vaulted and supported by framed trusses. The pews are in dark stained wood, and exceedingly comfortable. The pulpit platform and the organ were pleasingly ornamented with ferns and great jardiniere of cut flowers, carnations, and asters.

The dedicatory services were at eleven o'clock. There was an audience that practically filled the seating capacity of the church, about two hundred. . . .

The sermon by President Smith was a simple, straightforward presentation of the purpose of the church to be, to present the truth to all men as it was presented by Christ to his disciples and those whom he sent, to be by them presented to those who should follow after, until all should have the opportunity of hearing the gospel.

President Smith is a benignant figure, gentle, kindly, yet not lacking vigor nor strength. He is a tall, well-built man, erect in spite of his seventy-five years, his gray beard softening a face which a slightly aquiline nose would otherwise make too severe.

The dedicatory invocation following the sermon was by Elder F. M. Sheehy, who has a voice of marvelous richness, and a diction that is almost eloquence in itself.

Further observations of the services were made, and President Smith's sermon was freely quoted. President Smith, in referring to the kindly reception he received from the various members of the branch and their friends, including the reporters of the papers, and to the church work, speaks as follows:

We dined at the house of a native brother, Robert Pahau, where food deliciously prepared tempted the preachers' appetites, including the national dish poi, made from a plant called taro. . . . It is by no means an unpalatable dish, looking much like mush, but having a slightly sour taste. Brother Sheehy ate his with sugar and milk, and appeared to relish it, and we, although not disliking it, ate of it sparingly and without trimmings. Fish cooked, wrapped in leaves, giving a slight spicy taste to the white flesh, is most excellent, chicken and fruit made a good meal for anyone. . . .

We note with great pleasure the presence of the Spirit in the several meetings, including the study series, and discover that here, too, the Lord remembers his people, to give his Spirit of testimony, comfort, strength, and peace, as in other places where the Saints are trying to build up.

THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

HAWAII

The loveliest fleet of islands that lies anchored in any ocean.

No alien land in all the world has any deep, strong charm for me but that one; no other land could so longingly and beseechingly haunt me sleeping and waking, through half a lifetime, as that one has done. Other things leave me, but it abides; other things change, but it remains the same. For me its balmy airs are always blowing, its summer seas flashing in the sun; the pulsing of its surf-beat is in my ear; I can see its garlanded crags, its leaping cascades, its plummy palms drowsing by the shore; its remote summits floating like islands above the cloudrack; I can feel the spirit of its woodland solitudes; I can hear the splash of its brooks; in my nostrils still lives the breath of the flowers that perished twenty years ago.—Mark Twain.

These islands were discovered by the English navigator, Captain Cook, in 1778. He called them the Sandwich Islands. They are: Hawaii, Maui, Oahu, Kauai, Molokai, Lanai, Niihau, Kahoolawe. The islands were first brought under the control of one governing head by King Kamehameha in 1795. Queen Liliuokalani (Lily-o-ko-lon-e) was the eighth and last Hawaiian to occupy the throne, being deposed in 1893. The monarchy was succeeded by the Republic of Hawaii, 1893-1898. Annexation to the United States took place in 1898.

The Island of Oahu, on which is located Honolulu, is a kind of Gibraltar, being a powerful naval base. There are 11,000 soldiers stationed here at present, the intention being to increase that number.

There is a $20,000,000 naval station at Pearl Harbor nearing completion. The population is divided as follows:

Japanese	97,000
Hawaiian	23,770
Portuguese	23,755
Chinese	21,954
American
British	16,042
German Russian
Filipinos	16,898
Part Hawaiian	15,334
Porto Rican	5,187
Spanish	3,577
All others	5,254
Total	228,771

So there are four times as many Japanese in the islands as there are Hawaiians! The Japanese are hard-working, while the Hawaiians love ease and pleasure. The latter are generous to a fault, are natural musicians, and seem to be born statesmen. They are generally well educated, compulsory education having been in vogue for half a century. They never were cannibals and the term "savages" could hardly have been applied to them.

Native blood flows in some of the highest social and business circles of the islands. Many of the half castes are magnificent specimens of manhood and womanhood. The brown blood seems to make an excellent alloy.

The Hawaiians are not repulsive to the average white person, as are the negroes. Nature has placed a great gulf between the negro and the Hawaiian. There is a marked difference in the color of the skin, but the greatest dissimilarity is intellectual.

Nature had a primary and secondary object in view in providing a soft place in a babe's skull, which does not close for months in some races. At birth, the skull can "buckle," thereby reducing the size of the head. After birth, that soft place allows the skull to expand, likewise the brain can develop. In the white child, I believe the skull does not close for nearly a year. It is the same in the Hawaiians; but in the negro race it closes in a few months and the skull becomes thick, limiting the development of the brain.

A VISIT TO THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

BY PAUL M. HANSON

When on my way home from Australia last September I broke my journey at Honolulu and spent two weeks in the Hawaiian Islands. Twice have I been in the islands, but my recent visit proved more interesting than the first because more time was at my disposal to view the beautiful tropical scenery, gaze upon the strange street scenes, where an impression is gained that a part of the Orient has been imported into our country; visit extinct craters of volcanoes; feel the fanning breezes of the constant trade winds, and mingle with the people.

Beautiful landscapes are to be found nearly everywhere; beauty resulting from an exquisite combination of sea and sky, mountains and valleys, cliffs and beaches, tropical vegetation, and flowers of unusual hue.

On the streets of Honolulu can be seen Japanese dressed as in Japan, Chinese, Portuguese, Koreans, Filipinos, Porto Ricans, English, Ethiopians, Hawaiians, and other nationalities. The Hawaiian Islands are interesting from every point of view—I wish every American could visit this Territory of the United States.

Near Honolulu are the well-known extinct craters of Punchbowl and Diamond Head; the famous Waikiki bathing beach; and Nuuanu Pali, a great cliff six miles from the city up the Nuuanu Valley, which extends from the ocean and narrows at the top to two hundred feet, then falls away sheer over twelve hundred feet. Here is where the army of the Island of Oahu was defeated by Kamehameha the Great, and more than three thousand men were forced bodily over the steep precipice to death on the rocks below. The aquarium in Kapiolani Park possesses a collection of fishes most wonderfully unique in form and colorings.

We have a church in Honolulu, pleasantly situated amidst palms and shade trees. Here a large branch assembles and worships under the pastoral care of Elder C. Edward Miller. I preached one morning to an audience composed chiefly of Hawaiians, Elder Harbottle, of Hawaiian blood, ably acting as my interpreter. On another occasion I dispensed the word to a large congregation, composed of various nationalities.

ELDER PAUL M. HANSON.

On his way home from the Australian Mission recently, Brother Hanson visited Hilo and the world-famous volcano, Kilauea. In another picture he is shown with Brethren Miller and McConley, scorching post cards.

While in Honolulu my wife and I were hospitably entertained at the Mission House, which is embowered in palms and coconut trees, where the pastor of the Honolulu Branch and his family reside.

My opinion is that with more laborers in the missionary field a much greater work could be accomplished in the Hawaiian Islands than at present exists, especially among the Hawaiians. The church in Honolulu appeared to be growing and manifested signs of life that were encouraging for the future.

Elder Miller and I made a trip to the Island of Hawaii, to visit Hilo and also to see the world-famous volcano of Kilauea. The volcano, about thirty miles from Hilo, is accessible by automobile. Here molten lava is to be seen moving as the waters of a river and beating against the sides of a great pit, fountains of fire playing as high as thirty or forty feet, then nearly the whole mass in such activity as to excite the deepest feelings. At night, especially, with darkness all around, is the sight awe-inspiring as one stands on the brink of the precipice and looks down into the immense caldron, glowing and throbbing and roaring in terrific grandeur! The crater of Kilauea is more than seven miles in circumference. Descending a precipice six hundred feet high, we come to a solid lava floor resembling the waves of a troubled sea; then after traversing this we arrive at the fire pit, a scene that I feel few pens or tongues could adequately describe. So near were we to the molten lava that Brother James Puuohau with a long pole dipped lava out of the pit, and he with Elders Miller, M. A. McConley, and myself pressed coins into it before it was cold, to retain as souvenirs. Before leaving the region we scorched post cards in a crevice of the lava fields.

If there were no volcano, the drive through the sugar plantations and across the island would, because of the education and beautiful driveways, be time well spent.

At Hilo we have a branch of the church which is presided over by Elder M. A. McConley. A considerable number have united with the church here recently, and the prospects are fair for growth. In this branch the following nations are represented:

SCORCHING POST CARDS AT KILAUEA'S CRATER.

Not dangerous, but uncomfortable. In this way one can carry away personally supervised souvenirs.

Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, Filipinos, German, Russian, English, and Hawaiian. Perhaps in no place in the world is a greater mixture of nationalities to be found than exists in these islands.

The Hawaiian people are lovable and appear to be responsive to the faith of our church; and I would be most happy to see our work well established, not only among them, but also among all the branches of the Polynesian race. In the Pacific is a large field awaiting the occupancy of the church. It is for us to move forward and set the foundations of the church in all the world.

When the time came for us to depart for San Francisco, a number of the Saints, mostly Hawaiians, brought leis (wreaths of flowers and of colored paper) to the steamer and soon, in accordance with their custom, we were bearing round our necks and shoulders a great mass of wreaths representing the good will and love of the donors.

Aloha nui came from many hearts—may God bless the mission of the church in the Hawaiian Islands.

ITEMS OF THE HONOLULU BRANCH

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

The Religios and Sunday school invariably keep a record of their attendance. Why should not the branches do the same? As much as possible all the meetings held in the church should be recorded. We have adopted such a system and know exactly where we stand, from month to month. Last quarter the average attendance at the preaching services was, in the morning, 60; in the evening, 63. The Sunday school, 75 to 100. Religio, 50. The branch numbers nearly three hundred, who are scattered everywhere; some on the other islands, some on the coast. Only one family lives within walking distance of the church, so car fare is quite an item.

Practically every family attending the services regularly, pays tithing. During the last fifteen months, an average of thirty persons per month paid tithing. It amounted to $1.66 per capita, or $50 per month.

From $25 to $30 per month is paid for branch expenses; $20 was sent to the Belgian Baby Relief fund; $10 to Graceland; $25 to the Hilo building fund; $75 paid on a piano; $150 Christmas offering on hand; $50 in the branch treasury; $100 in the Sunday school, $75 in the Religio, and $65 in the Woman's Auxiliary treasuries; a missionary sustained and another one assisted. So this Hawaiian Branch has done well, considering none of the Saints are endowed with much of this world's goods.

This is the financial system we have adopted. Small envelopes are always accessible, which have the following printed on them:

Date,
 For branch expenses, $.....
 For tithing, $.....
 Signed,

The Saints are encouraged to keep some of the envelopes at their homes, fill them out and hand them in at the sacrament service when the oblation is taken up. All money received for tithing or branch expenses must first be placed in these envelopes, as it is not convenient to always give a receipt when money is paid. At the end of every month, the envelopes are arranged alphabetically, and the receipts, required to be given by the bishop, are made out from the envelopes, and handed out after sacrament service. At the close of this service, the names of those contributing toward branch and tithing, and the amounts, are read out. Every quarter a statement is given to each contributor, showing what they have paid in tithes and toward the branch. If they have overlooked paying one month, this is a reminder. Since we have adopted this system there has not been a single error reported.

We also use the tithing cards, to be had from the Herald Office. In my opinion these cards should be for one dollar instead of five dollars, for it takes a child a long time to pay five dollars in amounts of five or ten cents. When one dollar has been paid I make a note of it on the back of the card, place a dollar in an envelope, and give the child a receipt. These cards have started quite a number of children paying tithing.

About the same kind of sermons are preached here as elsewhere. Education has been compulsory for nearly fifty years. Quite a number of the Saints have graduated from high schools. There are a dozen or so of the members who do not understand English very well, so for their benefit half of the time of the morning service is taken up by one of the brethren preaching in Hawaiian, followed by the English service. The younger Hawaiians do not understand Hawaiian very well, and some cannot speak it at all.

Permit me to introduce to the HERALD readers, our staff of officers: Elder Harbottle is a full Hawaiian. He also speaks Japanese. He was sent to Japan to become acquainted with the language. He is a magnetic speaker and a splendid interpreter, and is a growing man in the Lord's service.

Elder Charles Lee is a talented Chinese-Hawaiian; a young man of fine appearance and thoroughly reliable and dependable; a faithful standby. He is a Government employee.

Gulstan Poepoe is a pure Hawaiian; is a priest, and the best scholar among the priesthood. He is an able preacher.

Thomas Kelii, priest, has an article in this issue. He has a very unique, interesting way of expressing himself, and is never tedious. He is employed in the post office as clerk. Pure Hawaiian.

James Kanui, priest, is again in the harness and doing fine. He is a pure Hawaiian. He is employed as a guard at the jail and he cannot attend very many of the services but is as active as circumstances permit.

J. W. Wright, priest, is part Hawaiian. Brother McConley found him teaching school on the other island; the seed fell on fine ground and he is a valuable addition to our force. He is employed as a sanitary inspector by the Territory.

John Mahuka has been referred to in the HERALD before. He is a fine specimen of pure Hawaiian. Has been a consistent member from the time he obeyed the gospel. He gave up all his evil habits, and is one of the faithful members of the branch. He was in prison for seven months for being a "rebel" as he was a "royalist." He is a teacher.

Thomas Clancy is a white man, about sixty-eight years of age. He has only been in the church for a couple of years. The Lord surely led him over to these islands from Australia. He has an interesting history. He never misses a meeting; does his duty financially and spiritually, and when he is called to the other side, his reward is sure.

Fred Cockett; Hawaiian. He was a faithful deacon for years, and has considerable talent in music, and was chorister when his eyesight failed him. He was employed by the governor, and has been pensioned by the Territory. Lately there are evidences of returning eyesight.

Frank Bertelmann, our present deacon, is part Hawaiian. His conversion is the marvel of this town. He was a notorious character. Was active in the revolution here and sentenced to death. He has been in jail, had evil habits, loved evil associates, and now for the last three years has never missed a meeting where he could possibly attend, and is a living witness of what the gospel will do if it is permitted to have its way. He is a giant in stature, but is humble and teachable and has given to the office of deacon a dignity that many holding that position have failed to endow it with.

With their various temperaments, it is remarkable how well these brethren work together. There has been the finest kind of unity among the priesthood, and recently in a sacrament meeting the Lord called the attention of the branch to this unity, and commended the brethren for it.

Our Chinese and Japanese missions have not been an unqualified success or an utter failure. Until we have as elaborate facilities, or something like them, as are possessed by the sectarian churches, we will not make much headway with our missions. The facts are, the churches here have, to some extent, possibly unconsciously, bribed the Orientals to become "Christian," and they naturally go where they can get the most for their allegiance. Here are some of the inducements held out by one mission:

A playground, library, girls' club, boys' club, ball grounds, mothers' club, sewing classes, swimming pool, dispensary. A series of hikes are arranged, etc. Our success seems to be with the Hawaiians, so we are directing our activities toward them.

The Woman's Auxiliary is presided over by Sister Thompson, a very faithful sister, a Hawaiian. This society has done a lot of good work in the branch.

The Sunday school is presided over by John Thompson, who is in his last year at high school. He is a growing young man in the Lord's service.

William Thompson, recently graduated from high school, is president of the Religio, and is improving right along. The policy of Elder Waller, and of the present pastor, is to develop the young local material as much as possible.

We have a senior and a junior choir. Sister Miller has charge of the former and Sister Bernice Kahanamoku has charge of the young people, so we are blessed with the gift of song.

AN INTERESTING VISIT

BY G. J. WALLER

One of the interesting and enjoyable incidents of President Smith's brief sojourn in Honolulu was a visit paid by him to the home of Mrs. J. M. Whitney, an estimable lady of the islands and daughter of the late L. L. Rice, whose name is familiar to Latter Day Saints on account of the part he played in bringing to light the Spalding Manuscript.

This visit took place in the very house where in the year 1885 this manuscript was found, its discovery destroying the claims that had been made for it.

The following is the account of the visit as written by the local church historian:

On Monday, October 28, at 2. p. m., Elder Smith and Elder Sheehy, in company with Elder Waller, visited the home of Mrs. J. M. Whitney, who was a daughter of Mr. L. L. Rice, with whom President Smith had corresponded in the year 1885 with regard to a manuscript that had been found by him, written by the Reverend Solomon Spalding. Inasmuch as the wise men of the world had concluded that it was from this manuscript that Joseph Smith, the Martyr, had written the Book of Mormon, its discovery by Mr. Rice was a matter of the greatest importance to all interested in the latter-day work, who accepted the Book of Mormon as a divine record. Mrs. Whitney was very pleased to meet Mr. Smith and related the details of the finding of the manuscript. She said when her father came to Honolulu from Ohio, he had brought with him two trunks, containing papers and other effects, and that during the visit of President Fairchild, of Oberlin College, he had been led to look through them for the purpose of finding out whether or not he had any antislavery literature in his possession. Mr. Rice had bought while in Ohio, a printing-press, and had there been interested in an anti-slavery organ. Before looking into the trunks he felt sure that he did not have any literature of the kind, as he had gone through them several times before during the long period (nearly fifty years) they had been in his possession, without finding anything of importance.

One morning when Mrs. Whitney was at breakfast her father came in and calling her by name, said, "Do you remember hearing of the Solomon Spalding manuscript?"

Her reply was, "Indeed, I do." For when she was a young girl she had often heard it spoken of.

WHITNEY HOME IN HONOLULU.

Where the notorious Spalding Manuscript was found. Mrs. Whitney said the discovery was "very, very curious."

"Well," he said, "I have found it."

They both rejoiced over the finding of the manuscript, and with great pleasure informed President Fairchild, upon his return from Hawaii, where he had been on a visit to the volcano, of its discovery. He was much interested in the matter, and upon hearing of it, raising his arms in delight he exclaimed, "Well, well, well!"

Elder Smith took part in the conversation, stating that while in Utah on a visit he had learned of the finding of the manuscript and had therefore put himself in communication with Mr. Rice, with whom he had corresponded in the matter. Mrs. Whitney said that two Utah elders called upon Mr. Rice for the purpose of securing the manuscript, but her father thought it best to hand it over to President Fairchild, who deposited it in the archives of the Oberlin College. President Smith stated that through his acquaintance with some students of Oberlin College he was able to get permission from President Fairchild to copy the manuscript, which was then published by the Reorganized Church in pamphlet form, and later by the Utah Church, for the purpose of showing to the world that the writings of the Reverend Solomon Spalding could not possibly have furnished material to Joseph Smith for writing the Book of Mormon, the subject matter in the two books being entirely dissimilar. Correspondence upon the subject by L. L. Rice, President Fairchild, and Doctor C. M. Hyde of Honolulu, shows the conclusion they had reached with regard to the matter, which was that the Book of Mormon could not possibly have been compiled from these writings of Mr. Spalding, and that therefore some other origin for the Book of Mormon would have to be looked for.

Elder Smith here introduced a personal experience of his own previous to the finding of the manuscript, which had prepared him for its coming forth, through a vision he had in the spring of 1884, in which he saw the manuscript of the Reverend Solomon Spalding, together with a document on which were affidavits by certain individuals certifying to the fact that the manuscript contained the writings of Solomon Spalding, and at that time, he had remarked to one of his church associates, Elder E. L. Kelley, that the Spalding manuscript would be brought out to the world. Mrs. Whitney remarked that she did not blame our church people for believing that the discovery of the manuscript was providential, for she added it was "very, very curious."

ISLAND EXPERIENCES

BY J. B. BARRETT

When I read in the HERALD of April, 1911, that I had been appointed to labor in Hawaii, with Elder M. A. McConley, my voice was lifted to God in prayer that I might be able to do my work well and thus assist in the work of the Master. I did not then understand the nature of the task that was before me, or perhaps I would not have been so ready to enter in and occupy.

A few weeks later Bishop R. Bullard came to my home in Denver, Colorado, and at the midweek prayer service he spoke to me in prophecy, relating some of the things that I would pass through while on that far-away mission. Some of them were not pleasant to hear, yet I was assured that God's protecting care would be over me. I was told that none of the diseases of the islands would affect me. This was fulfilled to the extent that I was not even seasick.

It was rather amusing to hear my wife say at times: "I am sure that I won't be seasick, but Bert has so much trouble with his digestion that I will have to go along to take care of him." However, when we were at sea Bert was installed as private nurse for his wife most of the way. I left the islands with my health very much improved.

Our first view of the islands was on July 21, 1911. They were green and fresh from the recent rains, and we were glad to see again the dear old Mother Earth, the trees and flowers. We were on the sea seven days.

Brother and Sister McConley, Brother Waller, and a few of the native Saints met us at the wharf, to welcome us, and a royal welcome it was. This was our first visit to a tropical zone, and all the flowers looked very beautiful.

Brother McConley and I at once began a series of tent meetings in the city of Honolulu, leaving most of the branch work for Elder Waller. Our tent was of "our own make," like Paul's of old, that being our craft for one tent only. Nevertheless in it we have enjoyed some of the richest blessings of heaven, when standing to declare the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

We followed tent work most of the time for two years, and I am sure that the seed sown will bear fruit some time. My first subject of baptism was a little Japanese boy, Keon Tsuji, whose brother Hiotaro Tsuji, is now attending Graceland College. Keon is assisting in the Religio work in Honolulu.

Our last year's work in the islands was mostly spent walking around the islands, visiting the natives in their homes, and teaching them the gospel. The Lord spoke through Jeremiah, as recorded in the sixteenth chapter and sixteenth verse, these words: "Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks." They used to have caves of refuge and cities of refuge (some of them we visited, or rather the ruins of them), a custom decidedly Hebrew. So we were hunting the children of Israel on the mountain side, in the valleys, and along the seashore. In these places, as we have told the old, old story of Jesus and his love, and the restored gospel of these latter days, the tears of joy would often moisten the eye and cheek of these humble dwellers on the islands of the sea. Many times after such a visit we have lifted our voices to God in prayer, that the seed sown might some day bear fruit to be reaped by these kind people.

We went to the home of a native minister one very warm afternoon, and showed him our charts, also sold him a Book of Mormon. He invited us to stop over night, which invitation we accepted. The next morning it was raining, so he told us to visit the rest of the natives that lived near, while he prepared our breakfast. He went down to the sea, and stood in the rain and storm for over an hour, trying to catch enough fish for our breakfast. He caught one small fish, which he cooked and asked us to come and dine. The table was a cloth about three feet square spread on the floor. We asked God's blessing on the food. The tears were falling fast from this good man's eyes, as he complained of his inability to furnish more for us to eat. He had plenty of poi, but only a little quantity of fish. We assured him that we were satisfied, but he wanted to do more, and wept because he could not.

I have sometimes thought that we could learn a lesson in hospitality from these people. As he bade us good-by, he asked us not to forget him as some others had. He wanted us to remember him as a friend. Many times I have marveled at the kindness of these people, and I have felt the influence of the Spirit to a marked degree while laboring among them.

God is directing his servants in the Hawaiian mission, as the following incidents will show. We packed our two small suit cases for the long trip around the Island of Hawaii. In one we had a change of apparel, in the other our books, tracts, and gospel charts. We were over a month making the trip, and traveled nearly four hundred miles, walking most all the way. When we bade Sister O. T. Shipman, of Hilo, good-by, she cautioned us to be sure and take the stage from the volcano house to their ranch, because their ranch house could not be seen from the main road, but when we learned that the stage driver wanted twenty-five cents to let us ride, we thought we could walk a mile and a half for that so we started out to save the money. After walking nearly all the afternoon and not finding the ranch, we concluded that we were lost. So we knelt down by the roadside, and lifted our voices to God in prayer, that he would tell us what to do, and where the Shipman ranch was. (We were in the Kau desert, a great lava flow from Mauna Loa. This desert contained thousands of acres of crushed, lava like, coal clinkers. There is very little vegetation growing.)

The stage passes through this desert about three times a week, and it had passed us early in the afternoon. We knew of no other persons who would be traveling the road, because it is not used very much. Realizing this, and that night was approaching, and with it a heavy mist and driving rain, knowing also that the Volcano House charged five dollars a day, we were just a little worried. We arose from our knees, compared notes, and began a retreat, until we came to an old road leading into the desert another way. We followed this for some time, then retraced our steps to the main road, feeling quite discouraged, and as we were walking and pondering over our condition, Brother McConley said: "God has promised to direct his servants when they ask him; I don't see any yet." I remarked. "Perhaps it will come by and by."

After a while, this thought was presented to me: "At the end of the paved road you will find out." I did not say anything to Brother McConley, because I thought it was just my own imagination, but still I could not dismiss the thought from my mind. When we came within sight of the paving, I could not see anything to assure me that my thoughts were well grounded, nor even when we came to this road was I able to fathom the mystery. We walked along on the paving a little way, and then an auto came over the little rise that kept it from our view. We tried to stop them, but they passed us, and stopped at the end of the paved road. They were Japanese, but they told us where the ranch house was. I then told Brother McConley that God had let me know that we would find out at the end of the paving. We were made to rejoice for the care that God had shown to us.

On our trip around the Island of Oahu, we had spent all of one afternoon talking with the natives, and just before dark began inquiring for a place to stop over night. Not finding any, and as the shades of night were gathering fast, we stopped to talk with a native who was cooking some taro to make poi. Brother McConley took out his charts, and by the aid of a dimly-lighted lantern, explained the charts and the gospel, continuing for over an hour. I was now almost in distraction. He had said nothing about a place to sleep or to eat, which at that time was all I could think about. When he finished, we were asked to dine, and also given a place to sleep. And two tired and lonely missionaries slept soundly on a bed composed of two or three thicknesses of matting, about as soft and downy as the old-style rag carpet. Yet we were thankful, because they did the best they could for us.

REPENTANCE

BY JOHN M. MAHUKA

To the Editors: The following paper was prepared for a priesthood meeting by the teacher of the branch, John Mahuka. I told Brother Mahuka I thought the Saints would be pleased if the article was published just the way he had written it, but he said he wanted it corrected if it was printed. (The Hawaiians are very sensitive about their broken English.) I convinced him the Saints would read it in a sympathetic and not in a critical spirit, so he consented to its publication and here it is.

Brother Mahuka took the HERALD before he could read a word of English, but in 1901 he began teaching himself, his ambition being to understand the English sermons, and to be able to read the church papers. He has done remarkably well. Notice the beautiful handwriting of the manuscript.

The idiom of the Hawaiian language requires that the qualifying adjective should follow its noun, and that the predicate of a sentence should precede its subject.

In our Doctrine and Covenants 11:1 it reads thus: "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men." In the Hawaiian Doctrine and Covenants it is thus: "It will come forth the great work and the wonderful among the children of men." You see evidence in this article of thinking in Hawaiian but trying to give expression in English.—C. E. M. [The writing was excellent, and only one word misspelled—evidently that was by accident, as he had previously used it correctly.—EDITORS.]

The transgressed of our first forefathers. "Adam and Eve," of the Lord God first commandment to them, said, Thou shall NOT EAT of the Fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden. Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. LEST Ye Die." (Genesis 3:3.)

This is cost them to fall. As the fall had brought upon ALL mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal: that is they were cut off from the PRESENCE of the Lord: it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death, this probationary state, became a preparatory state. Alma 19:11.

But behold, I say unto You, that I the Lord God gave unto Adam and unto his seed that they should NOT DIE, as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, Should Send forth Angels to declare unto them "REPENTANCE," and Redemption. Doc. and Cov. 28:12.

Repentance, it is the only best and clear way for a falling mankind to go back to the presence of his maker, and again, Repentance it is a second principle of the doctrine of Christ. Hebrew 6:1.

John the Baptist, was sent of God, preaching in the Wilderness of Judea, and saying "REPENT YE" for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand. Mat. 3:1.

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand: REPENT YE, and believe the gospel. Mark 1:14-15.

And they went out, and preached that men should REPENT. Mark 6:12. REPENT YE therefore, and be converted, that your Sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. Acts 3:19.

THE METROPOLITAN MEAT MARKET

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

The old market was torn down and recently the new structure was completed. As the building and interior arrangement were designed by the architect of some of the leading San Francisco markets, and as no expense seemed to have been spared, this is possibly one of the finest meat, vegetable, and fruit markets to be found anywhere.

Brother G. J. Waller is manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, the largest distributors of meat upon the islands. The market is not conducted by the meat company, but by the Metropolitan Meat Market, operated by Mr. Louis, who rents the building from the meat company, and handles their products.

Competition has a tendency to make business selfish, every concern looking after its own interests and trying to surpass its competitor. But is there not a new spirit entering into business to-day? The best magazines have caught it; the great department stores are feeling it. Some of the leading steel concern managers say they are not only trying to make money, but they are also trying to make men, and find pleasure in both efforts.

At the opening of the new market, which recently took place, as Brother Waller and Mr. Louis were conducting the visitors through the establishment, I seemed to discern this larger spirit animating these men. It was the spirit which led the best of the ancient kings to subscribe for their motto: "I serve." So as the visitors wandered through that beautiful, sanitary, cool food palace, I seemed to sense a tangible spirit also circulating everywhere in the establishment—in the frosted pipes under the counter, at the scales, in the cooling rooms back of the counters, at the butter booth, over in the vegetable stand, at the wrapping counters, that spirit was everywhere, the beautiful spirit of "I serve."

THE WORK AT HILO

BY ELDER M. A. M'CONLEY

HILO BAY, WITH MAUNA KEA IN THE BACKGROUND.

This mountain is 13,825 feet above sea level. Snow is nearly always to be seen on the summit.

Hilo, the county seat of the Island of Hawaii, lies 156 miles to the southeast of Honolulu. The Island of Hawaii is by far the largest in the group, having an area of 4,215 square miles, and is still in process of formation. Forty miles west of Hilo is Mauna Kea, whose peak 13,895 feet above sea level; is the highest point in the Pacific. It is covered with snow most of the time.

Kiluea, the largest active volcano in the world, is thirty-one miles south of Hilo. One may visit it with safety and get within a few feet of the lake of fire and molten lava. Mauna Loa, another active volcano, lies some sixty miles to the southwest. It breaks out about every ten years and spreads lava all over the surrounding country. In the eruption of 1880 the lava came within four miles of Hilo. The last outbreak was in July, 1916.

The principal industries of this island are the raising of sugar cane, coffee, tobacco, and live stock.

Hilo, with its 11,000 population, includes the following nationalities: American, 653; British, 110; Chinese, 653; Filipino, 597; German, 64; Hawaiian, 1,058; Japanese, 4,500; Korean, 87; Asiatic-Hawaiian, 260; Caucasian-Hawaiian, 463; Portuguese, 1,925; Porto Rican, 61; Russian, 30; Spanish, 73.

FIRST GOSPEL WORK

The gospel was introduced into this cosmopolitan community by Brother U. W. Greene, who, accompanied by a Hawaiian priest, G. K. Poepoe, visited here in the fall of 1899. Their stay was cut short by the outbreak of bubonic plague in Honolulu, to which place they returned early in January, 1900. One Hawaiian man was baptized the day they left.

LATER LABOR BY M'CONLEY AND BARRETT

For more than ten years no more work was done in Hilo. On November 16, 1912, Elder Barrett and I left Honolulu on the S. S. Kiluea and arrived here next morning. We spent about a week distributing tracts and getting acquainted and hunting for a place to preach. The first meeting was held on the street on Saturday eve, November 23. Next day we held out first indoor service in the Hilo Armory. Here we became acquainted with Sister Siemsen, who had joined the church in Honolulu, but had been isolated for many years.

We began a house-to-house canvass of the town, distributing tracts, and soon homes were opened in which we could preach. We had brought with us a box of Books of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, printed in Hawaiian, and we sold many of these.

ELDER M. A. M'CONLEY

Brother and Sister McConley are on their second mission to the islands, located now at Hilo.

After sowing the seed in Hilo we began to reach out into the adjacent country districts, walking from village to village and explaining the gospel as best we could. The Hawaiians seemed to be drawn to our message more than the other nationalities, but as we could speak but little of their language, the work was difficult. But the Lord helped us and good seed was sown.

On December 15, two young men were baptized in Hilo and we were encouraged by a spiritual dream which Brother Barrett had on December 17. In this he saw us gathering grain from among the weeds, not a great quantity, but of excellent quality. In visiting some the Spirit bore witness that they would some day join the church.

On January 31, 1913, we returned to Honolulu to continue labor there.

SECOND VISIT OF ELDERS M'CONLEY AND BARRETT

On November 8, 1913, Elder Barrett and I again left Honolulu bound for Hilo. The people were glad to see us back and we felt good in again being among them. On December 6, in answer to prayer, we were directed to try and secure the Firemen's Hall for a meeting place, and we succeeded in getting the use of it free for Sunday afternoons.

On Sunday, December 21, we organized the Hilo Sunday School. We then divided our labors, working in the country districts part of the week and returning to Hilo for Sunday's services. The interest was good. The Spirit was present at the meetings, many Books of Mormon were sold and tracts distributed, but there were no more baptisms.

We finally were constrained that we should go clear around this island, and in consulting Brother Waller, found him of the same opinion. He assured us to move out in faith and the way would be provided. On March 25 we started on this 250-mile trip, each with a small hand satchel and a paper umbrella, prepared to travel and preach. We walked most of the way and became first-class pedestrians. The trip occupied about five weeks. In almost every town we sold some of our books and left friends, with an invitation to return.

On our return to Hilo on April 30, we found that we had been appointed by conference to labor elsewhere, Brother Barrett being assigned to Eastern Colorado and I to California.

So we bade our many friends here good-by, committed the seed sown to our heavenly Father's care, and on May 11 returned to Honolulu. May 20 Brother Barrett sailed for San Francisco on the Wilhemina and my companion and I followed on the Sierra on July 4.

WORK CONTINUED BY BROTHER AND SISTER DAVIS

In August, 1914, Brother and Sister J. W. Davis arrived in Honolulu, and soon after came to Hilo and followed up the work which had been started. Thus the seed previously sown was cared for and some new people reached also. But they were not permitted to remain to see its development, as they were obliged to return to the States in the spring of 1915.

ELDER M'CONLEY AND WIFE APPOINTED TO HILO

In 1916 I was appointed to return to Hilo with my companion, and we arrived on October 16, 1916. In the meantime Brother Puuohau, a Hawaiian priest from Honolulu had moved his family to Hilo and Elder A. B. Purfurst had moved here from San Diego, and they were conducting the Sunday school and holding weekly prayer meetings. These and one Japanese sister and ourselves made seven Saints residing here.

Until suitable headquarters could be found, we were kindly taken care of at the home of Mrs. O. T. Shipman. A place was finally secured and we opened our doors at 401 Haili Street on November 1. This was a place owned by the Hawaiian Congregational Church upon which I secured a one year's lease before they were aware of the use we were going to make of it. It was located on the same property where Reverend Philip Cohen, the first Protestant missionary lived. A large front room served as the chapel, and we lived in the rear, with two bed-rooms to spare which we rented to two of the brethren and thus reduced our expenses.

We had no furniture except two bedroom suites loaned us by Mrs. Shipman, and as furniture was Scott visited us and presented us with a beautiful individual communion set.

In June Brother C. E. Miller came up and stayed a week, then Elder G. J. Waller visited us a few days in September, and also Brother Paul Hanson and Brother C. E. Miller the last part of the month.

On November 1 we were compelled to vacate the mission house on Haili Street, not being able to secure a renewal of our lease. We are now meeting in the Moose Hall. But we have a lot purchased in an excellent location and a church and mission house are in course of construction. We hope to be able to hold our Christmas entertainment in our own church.

Several have been called to the priesthood, so that we are organized to properly take care of the work. Brother James Puuhau, formerly a priest, was ordained an elder September 13. Brother Joseph de Camara, formerly deacon of HILO SUNDAY SCHOOL IN 1915.

This is the Sunday school as it was when Brother and Sister J. W. Davis were there. It has continued to grow until they have a flourishing Sunday school now, with an average attendance of over forty. See the picture following.

very expensive, at the suggestion of my companion we decided to make some. She did the designing, Brother Puuhau furnished the tools and helped us, and we soon had our place furnished, mission style.

On December 10 two were baptized, the first candidate being Brother G. Kruck, a German, to whom we had sold a German copy of the Book of Mormon in 1913. Baptisms continued as follows: December 31, four; January, one; February, three. And on February 28 the Saints were organized into a branch. Our numbers continued to increase almost every month as follows: March, two; May, two; June, six; July, seven; September, four; October, one; making our number to date, November 17, 38.

On January 7 the Hilo local of Zion's Religio-Literary Society was organized, with eleven charter members. It has grown until we now number 32, with an average attendance of about 30.

The present enrollment of the Sunday school is 49, with an average attendance of over 40.

We have been very fortunate in receiving assistance from some of the brethren who have visited us. In the early part of the year Elder I. H. Harbottle, a native elder from Honolulu met with us and encouraged all by his testimony. Also Sister Mariah the Portuguese Protestant Church here, was ordained at the same time to the office of teacher, and Brother Herbert Lai Hip, a Chinese-Hawaiian, to the office of deacon.

We cannot yet boast of a real choir, but Sister Mc-Conley has one in the making. We are hopeful for the future of the work and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints everywhere that we may make the work a success.

The following nationalities are represented in our number:

American, German, Russian, Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, Filipino, Chinese-Hawaiian, Caucasian-Hawaiian, and Japanese-Hawaiian. Some of them are especially gifted and will be heard from later.

WHY MY LIFE WAS SPARED

BY THOMAS M. KELII

My folks told me when I was a baby that my health was very delicate. I was so sick one time that the service of kahuna (sorcerer) was required to make me well. The kahuna made me a bed out of tea (in Hawaiian Ti) leaves. Should I move when he placed me on it my case was hopeless and I should die. When they placed me on my special bed I slept well, a sign that the gods of the kahuna had permitted him to work on me. He stayed by me until I got well. My folks spoke very highly of the kahuna when they related me this incident. They did not know any better.

At the age of eight years my father made a kite for me. We gave the kite a trial, but it did not fly well. My father went to examine the kite to determine the cause of its failure to fly. This is a very dry part of the island and sometimes we went six months without a drop of rain. A well was dug, and during the rainy season it was filled, and when the warm weather came we had enough water to last through the summer season. The well was covered with boards. A small hole, with a cover, was cut in the boards whereby we were able to draw the water out of the well. I did not know the door of the well was opened and was so happy about my new kite that I went and sat on the door, and down I went into the water. My father on returning from fixing the kite missed me. He suspected I had fallen in the well and when he looked into it he saw me there struggling. Instead of throwing a piece of rope to me and pulling me out, he jumped in the well, too. The depth of the well was about fifteen feet, and at the time of the accident there were only about six feet of water in it. We were in an awful condition. My mother was away. Only my father and I were home at the time. While in the water I urged my father to pray for us, and I, too, offered up a few words of prayer. My father was a strong, small man. We both swam, and when I felt tired he would put me on his back to rest up. God heard our prayers, for while struggling in the water a good heavy rain came and filled the well up slowly until we were about three feet from the cover of the well and the water. Between the boards and the cement work around the top of the well was a space of about eight inches, so I told my father to place me in that small space while he made an attempt to open the door and get out of the well. The wind closed the door of the well while we were in the water. The first jump he made he opened the door and the second he got hold of the side of the door and worked himself out. Father was very tired while doing this arduous work. Undoubtedly it was a divine power that gave him the strength so that he was able to open the door and get out. We were about three hours in that hole, and when my father got out he took some of the boards off where I was and took me out.

While attending a boarding school in Hilo a friend of mine invited me to a Chinese dinner. I ate something that did not agree with my stomach and was sick all night with dysentery of the worst kind. Early in the morning I could hardly stand up, and if it had continued for an hour longer I could not have lived. There the same power that saved me from the well was again manifested, and I was made well—that Sunday morning.

After being baptized I had a fight with my brother-in-law, through some misunderstanding. I was to be blamed for starting the fight as I had allowed my temper to get the best of me. He is not of the same nationality as I am and I knew very little of their habits. I slapped him on the face and he started for me. Had he only used his fist I would not care, but he went for a knife, sledge hammer, and anything he could put his hand on. The love of God saved me from being stabbed, for he was willing to go that far.

In summing up these experiences I came to the conclusion that God had spared my life for some purpose. I did not realize that until after I had served him for three years. The field is white and harvesters are needed. My office of calling is a priest. God had blessed me in all my efforts to perform the duties of my calling. I find it's a pleasure to serve him and help others to live up to the standard he has set for us to follow—his Son Jesus Christ. I know I will be well paid at the end, and my desire is to serve him faithfully daily as long as I am permitted to serve him.

Note the wonder and surprise of Brother Butterworth at the ease with which the native interpreter repeated what he had said in addressing an audience. What had been your idea of this procedure? No doubt much different from the reality, as told in this experience.

A LATTER DAY SAINT FUNERAL

SERMON PREACHED IN A ROYAL PALACE

The second Hawaiian to join the church was James M. Poepoe, who was baptized by Elder Haws April 3, 1891. When the Lord wanted the Book of Mormon translated, means were provided, and Oliver Cowdery was moved upon to offer his services as an amanuensis. The Lord provided the means and the men to start his work.

In this mission, provision seemed to have been divinely made for establishing the latter-day work. A man of means was placed here, and the second Hawaiian to be baptized was one of the best native scholars in the islands. He was fluent in English and Hawaiian, and was well versed in French, Latin, and Hebrew. His services were invaluable in interpreting, and in translating. He translated about half of the Book of Mormon, and all of the Doctrine and Covenants, and many tracts and articles. He was recognized as one of the best living authorities on the Hawaiian language and customs. By profession he was an attorney. He died April 10, 1913.

EXECUTIVE BUILDING, FORMERLY THE PALACE.

The funeral of Queen Liliuokalani was also held from this building.

In life he espoused a cause which was unpopular, but by reason of being a member of the legislature, few men received the honors he did at death. The funeral took place at the palace of the ex-queen, which is now used as the capitol building. Nearly two thousand people gathered at the palace to witness the service. One hundred vehicles followed the remains to the cemetery. The service was held in the great throne room, where were gathered the governor and other territorial officials, mayor, and the entire membership of both branches of the legislature.

Elder McConley, writing to the HERALD, says: "In delivering the funeral address, I stood directly in front of the platform upon which the throne originally sat, and as all high officials of the Territory and city were present, it was rather a trying event for us all. We were wishing Elder Waller were here. In the brief time given we did not have opportunity to tell them very much, but I gave them to understand that the deceased was not a Utah Mormon, as many thought, and explained there were two churches, giving briefly their differences. . . . It was the first, and probably will be the last time that I will have such an audience."

A VISIT TO HONOLULU

BY C. A. BUTTERWORTH

It is more than a privilege to me to pen a few impressions gleaned from my short visit with God's children on the islands of the sea. Although I had called at Honolulu on three previous occasions, it was only for a few hours while the steamer was being discharged of her cargo. However, in February, 1914, I was on my way from Australia to General Conference, and being somewhat early, and to avoid the cold weather in the States, I made up my mind to spend two weeks with our island Saints and learn more of their faith and habits than I could by reading the letters from others who had called there.

It was early Friday morning, February 20, that we entered the harbor at Honolulu, and after a short wait for the pilot, and a little excitement viewing several large sharks, which gathered around our boat, we landed at the wharf.

A few minutes walk and I was at the Metropolitan Meat Market, where the office of our congenial Brother Waller is located, and to see his noble, earnest face, and receive his welcome words, was much like the foretaste "of the earnest of our inheritance."

All my association and conversations with him were of the most inspiring and uplifting nature that anyone could wish for, and can hardly be forgotten by those who are privileged to share his company.

Arrangements were soon made for my stay at the Mission Cottage, where Brother Waller was staying at the time, also Brother and Sister M. A. McConley, and Sister Kanui, where I received a most hearty welcome, and was made to feel at home by Sister Kanui, who had been the principal interpreter for a long time, and was well up in our faith. It suddenly dawned upon my mind that I would be asked to preach on the coming Sunday, and it would have to be through an interpreter, a thing which I thought next to impossible for me to do, as I was afraid the strange and peculiar language uttered after me would cause a smile or perhaps some laughter, and that would certainly spoil the effect of my talk in the eyes of the natives; but, happily, I had drawn the wrong conclusion.

When the time came for my address, I entered the pulpit with Brother Waller and Brother Harbottle, the interpreter, and asked him how we were to proceed. He replied, "You go ahead for fifteen minutes, or so, and then I will follow."

I thought this would be next to a miracle, if he could remember and repeat all I would say in that time, but I proceeded to address the congregation, and instead of a smile I never witnessed a more solemn occasion, for the Holy Spirit so softened all our hearts that it was almost a case of weeping with me, and the tears dimmed my eyes when I thought of God's recognition of these scattered children, and his boundless love even to those upon the islands of the sea.

I spoke about twenty minutes, and then gave way for the interpreter, who followed for the same length of time with wonderful liberty, and to my great astonishment. We spoke twice each, and the Saints seemed greatly pleased.

I will give my diary account of my first Sunday in Honolulu. "Sunday school at 9.45 a. m., which was very interesting. I preached at 11 a. m., and Brother Harbottle interpreted. A good Spirit was present and all felt it. We went at the close to a Chinese Sunday school and then home to lunch at 2.30. Then motored several miles to a Japanese Sunday school and found they all read in English. Sister Dolly Lee was a bright teacher. She is a Chinese girl, and well informed. Back to the church at Religio at 6.15 where I gave an address, and then preached without an interpreter, as most all knew English. Subject, Psalm 23. Arrived home and had supper at 10 p. m. God surely has many children about this locality.

The weather was charming, cool, and delightful, and the United States militia was holding a parade and demonstration, which I witnessed on Monday afternoon, and saw a sham battle in the evening.

The sham fight was not so bad, but I have no use or sympathy for the cruel work of the real thing if it can in any possible way be avoided.

I found in visiting among the brethren that they were of a most kind and loving disposition, and they looked upon the missionary as a messenger of peace, sent by the Lord to them, and they listened with the utmost attention to the message they had to deliver. They have a wonderful, childlike faith in the gospel, and especially in the gift of healing, for my diary records numerous visits with Brother Waller to the homes of the sick, to anoint them with oil, and lay on hands that they might be healed, during my short stay with them. It reminded me of when Paul was wrecked upon the Island of Melita, that he went to the home of the father of Publius, who lay very sick with a fever, "and prayed and laid hands upon him and healed him." And "when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came and were healed." The same God and Christ are directing their work by the same "perfect law of liberty," and why should we not be favored as in days gone by, if our faith is still in the Great Physician.

I had some very pleasant visits at the homes of Sisters Piltz, Scott, Thompson, Middleton, Brother and Sister Puuohau, and others, which will long be remembered for their hospitality, kindness, and sympathy. One sister gave me a ten-dollar gold piece which I carried about for two years and gave it to Brother Miller in exchange for other money, and he carried it back to the island.

My last night was spent preaching to a mixed audience, many of whom were seated on the floor, and several were connected with the Utah church. I narrated the errors and evils of the so-called Mormon church, which had brought shame and disgrace upon the fair name of this great latter-day work, God's militant kingdom on earth.

Brother Puuohau interpreted with such eloquence and rapidity that the audience seemed to be almost spellbound, and I was made to rejoice.

In conclusion, I wish to say on behalf of our island Saints, I found them kind, loving, sympathetic, and hospitable, possessing great faith, and musical talents, with a desire to learn all they can of the way of life, and fast departing from superstition of bygone days.

May they all be clothed with the robe of righteousness, that the Saints' ideal may be realized of "entering the gates into the city," where the Lord shall bring again Zion.

GEELONG, AUSTRALIA.

THE LEPER SETTLEMENT

On the Island of Molokai, there is a leper settlement which has been in existence since 1866. The settlement is on a horseshoe-shaped peninsula and is an ideal place for such a purpose.

Leprosy first appeared in the islands in 1853; so it was introduced by foreigners. In 1856 there were 274 persons afflicted.

The world-renowned Catholic Priest, Father Damien, went to the settlement in 1873. In 1888 three sisters also volunteered. Father Damien died April 15, 1889. His death attracted the attention of the world to the settlement. He has been succeeded by Joseph Dutton, who is affectionately called "Brother Dutton." He also is giving his life to the care of the unfortunate lepers. Of Father Damien he writes:

Father Damien died April 15, 1889. This death after such a life arrested the world's attention. A spontaneous outburst of applause from everywhere at once followed. The sixteen years of labor on Molokai made a record that was unique. The world knew very little about lepers. This was a revelation and was recognized as heroic self-sacrifice.

Father Damien is the acknowledged apostle of the lepers and justly so. What others may do in the same field will help to perpetuate his fame and honor. All of this, with the increase of leprosy in several countries, has caused the subject to be well known and much discussed. Many beneficial measures have followed.

Besides the laudation in print and in speech a monument was offered by the people of England and accepted by the Hawaiian board of health.

The leprosarium is the greatest institution on the island, or in the world, probably, of its sort. The appropriation by Congress was generous. The buildings are extensive, the outfit very elaborate, of best quality, and of latest invention; everything present-day science can provide.

THE PALMS OF HAWAII

THE PICTURESQUE COCONUT

In their wanderings from the islands of the southern seas the natives brought with them coconuts, which were gradually planted on all the islands of this Territory. The only mistake made in this regard was in not planting more. Every island should have a complete fringe of coconuts. No other tree can wave so graceful a welcome or so fond a farewell to visitors as the coconut.

The coconut palm is above the observance of formalities. It cannot be forced to grow in a straight line. Each trunk leans in whatever direction may suit its fancy, without regard to winds or man's desire. The coconut's special place in nature is as a coast-line tree. Its roots are not embittered by the brackish waters, and its crown of leaves is ultimately lifted so high that it can laugh at the salt spray. No sea-level view could be tropical in character without coconuts. The coconut is the one tree which the tourist must see in order to be sure that he has been in the tropics. In order to be effective it is not necessary that coconut palms be planted in rows, or according to any geometrical plan, or in any particular part of a yard. The coconut merely asks for a spot to get a foothold, without much regard to the nature of the soil, and for a bit of water and other attention until it is well established. It gets along well and pleasantly with any kind of tree associates, and finally carries its crown at such a height that it can obtain light and air without interfering with the equal rights of other trees and plants.

Recently it has become fashionable to speak of coconuts as the "consols of the east." They furnish milk, coco-butter, copra, and fiber, all of which are demanded in the business of the modern world. Without the slightest strain upon one's conscience, and without becoming sentimental one can look with favor and fondness upon a tree which lives to such a great age as does the coconut, furnishing a distinct addition to the beauty of the landscape, and also, each year, nuts to the value of three dollars or more per tree. We are fortunate in not having the really serious pests and disease which affect coconuts in many countries.

A sister species, Cocos plumosa, has been recommended as a superior palm for street planting. The crown of this tree is large and graceful, and the species is tall and longlived. It is, however, not commonly planted in Hawaii, and it has accumulated little of the literary interest that has centered around the coconut.

THE STATELY ROYAL PALM

The royal palm is perhaps the most formal and precise of palms. Every specimen of this tree stands as a living and emphatic protest against the irresponsible and easy-going habits of its arboreal neighbors. The trunk is exactly straight and perpendicular, standing like a soldier at attention, dressed in conventional white. Even the style of coiffure of the crown of leaves shows only infinitesimal variations. For the most part the prim preciseness of the royal palm has been duly recognized by those who have used it in the ornamentation of avenues and grounds.

A single tree will furnish enough seed to plant a whole city. When once it attains full size nothing can ruffle the stately dignity or bend the pride of the royal palm. It scarcely recognizes its relationship with the cabbage palm, a sister species which furnishes an edible head.—E. V. Wilcox, in the Mid-Pacific Magazine.

of lawns in straight rows, or wherever formal landscape gardening in geometrical patterns is practised.

Streets like this one make the residence section of Honolulu a "Paradise in the Pacific."

The coconut trees are always graceful. There are ten of them in the mission house yard.

People send many unhulled nuts to the coast to friends, especially before Easter.

ETHNOLOGY AND ETYMOLOGY

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

The term Polynesia was used to denote all the intertropical islands of the Pacific Ocean eastward of the Philippine Islands to the north, and the New Hebrides to the south of the equator. But now Polynesia has been restricted to the central and eastern islands inhabited by the brown race, becoming an ethnographic rather than a geographic term.

It is not the purpose of this article to go into an elaborate treatise of this subject, but we shall confine ourselves to those islands which may be of interest to us as a people.

The word Sawaiori has been invented by some one to apply to the three principal peoples. Book of Mormon students are interested in, so far as our work on the islands is concerned. The word is derived from Samoa, Hawaii, and Maori, and is a compound of (Sa) moa, Ha (wai) i and Ma (ori). The letters in parentheses forming the word. The Hawaiians have a tradition that they came from the Society Islands, so the Tahitians are embraced in the group. While originally the New Zealanders (Maoris) were not classed as Polynesians, this was probably for geographic rather than ethnographic reasons, but since a more scientific and accurate method has been used in the division of the races, the Maoris have now been properly placed, and the Sawaiori group of people embrace the inhabitants of the Samoan, Hawaiian, Cook, Society Islands, and New Zealand. How did these people, originating from one tribe, ever become so widely scattered over the Pacific Ocean? Are they descendants of Hagoth of Book of Mormon fame?

The Maori Comparative Dictionary has the following: "That the Polynesian dialects are related to each other and form but isolated varieties of one great language is by no means a modern discovery." Then illustrations are given of a common origin of language. Here are a few:

The Maori k is entirely lost in Hawaiian. The Hawaiian k represents the Maori t. There are cases though when the k seems to have been retained. For instance:

HAWAIIAN	MAORI
Kakakaka , small cracks	Katakata
Kala , a public crier	Kala
Kawa , to flow freely, as perspiration	Kakawa

There seems to be a generally accepted idea that the Hawaiians are acquainted with many of the requirements of the Mosaic law, and practiced them.

COMPARISON WITH HEBREW (From Journal of William Ellis.)

In the Sandwich Islands, as well as the Tahitian language, there are a number of words that appear true Hebrew roots, and in the conjugation of the verbs there is a striking similarity; the causative active and the causative passive being formed by a prefix and suffix to the verb.

In many respects it is unique, and in some defective, but not in that degree which might be expected from the limited knowledge of the people.

The simple construction of the words, the predominancy of vowels, and the uniform terminations, are its great peculiarities.

The syllables are in general composed of two letters, and never more than three.

There are no sibilants in the language, nor any double consonants.

HAWAIIAN SYSTEM OF PRONUNCIATION

Every word and syllable terminates with a vowel; and the natives cannot pronounce two consonants without an intervening vowel; nor a word terminating with a consonant, without either dropping the final letter, or adding a vowel; hence they pronounce Britain, Beritania; boat, boti; while there are many words, and even sentences, without a consonant, as e i ai oe ia ia ae e ao ia, literally, "speak now to him by the side that he learn."

The frequent use of the k renders their speech more masculine than that of the Tahitians, in which the t predominates.

The sound of their language is peculiarly soft and and harmonious; great attention is also paid to euphony, on account of which the article is often varied; the same is the case in the Tahitian, in which the word tavovovovo, signifies the rolling of thunder.

A TRIP TO A LIVING VOLCANO

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

Six of us left the Mission House in Hilo, where Brother and Sister McConley lived for a year, at about two p. m., on June 25, and motored in a couple of hours to the sulphur banks several miles from the volcano. There are great rents in the earth from which steam and sulphur fumes escape. There are sulphur banks so hot that water will boil if a vessel is placed in certain parts of the banks. We noticed men gathering sulphur in bags, which was to be used commercially. One wondered, as he walked over that district, if underneath was an immense sea of fire.

From the banks we motored over to the Shipman ranch. If we had been vegetarians and Jews, I am afraid our convictions and religion would have been temporarily laid aside in the presence of the delicate wild pig served us by Mr. and Mrs. Dent for our supper.

The cowboys of the ranch gathered in the commodious living room and the writer tried to preach, but he was certainly not at his best—too much ranch supper and too much mind wandering to that fire pit eight miles away. About 8.30 we left the ranch, and took our way to one of the greatest sights of the whole world—a living, active, accessible volcano! We could see the glow in the sky, as if a large city were on fire. We now go along a winding road, passing several extinct volcanoes, whose dim outlines are just perceptible. The road slopes down, and now we are on the lava bed of the crater—we are inside! We go through steam, and all around us steam is issuing from fissures. The road leads up to within fifty yards of the pit. We are keyed up to the highest pitch. The glare in the sky is uncanny. We get out of the motor and walk toward the pit over the rough lava. Sign posts, marking dangerous points, are silhouetted against the red glare of the fire, like skeletons with outstretched arms, ready to embrace or repel us. Nearer and nearer we approach the edge of the pit; a few feet more, and oh, what a spectacle is before us! What a sight to look upon!

You can view colored photographs, or immense dioramas; you can read elaborate descriptions, you can listen to a lecture, but to understand what Kilauea looks like you must see it yourself. Everybody who has been there wants to describe it, but they know it can't be done. You are in the position of Paul, in one sense; not that you have been caught up to the third heaven; rather, you have descended to hades, and have seen things which cannot be uttered. But you feel as if you want to share the sight with others, and so you are another one who tries and fails.

Here is a great wound in the side of the earth, exposing the heart of the world, pumping, pumping the red lava blood into the earth's veins and arteries.

wide. The yellow red molten lava is covered by a black crust of cooling lava, which is torn apart, and streaks of fiery lava run across the lake in every direction. Then there is a magnificent display of fountains, eight, ten, or a dozen playing at once, shooting up from ten to fifty feet at intervals of a few minutes. These fountains are carried by the currents of the ever-moving lava and beat up against the side of the walls with a noise like the waves of the sea on the beach. There are grottoes formed in the side of the pit, the lava eating in and forcing out tongues of blue fire. We called them "blow holes."

The surface of the lake is constantly fluctuating in height; a few months ago it was nearly up to the rim. As the lake sinks, the walls cave in and the floor of the crater collapses. When it sinks more than six hundred and fifty feet below the rim the lava rubbish

An old lava flow in the crater. Fissures and crevices abound in the region, from which fumes arise, affording an opportunity for visitors to scorch post cards as souvenirs. Brethren Hanson, Puuohau, McConley and I scorched cards at one of these steam spots.

Will some Harvey discover that these arteries lead to Alaska, New Zealand, Vesuvius, Japan, and back to Hawaii?

The fire pit is within a pit. The accompanying cut shows the crater proper. The fire pit is shown in the second cut; it is at one end of this sink. The lava in the sink was formed when the fire pit overflowed, which it does occasionally. The sink, shown in the cut, and which is called Kilauea, is three miles long and two miles wide. The automobile road has been made across this sink, up to within fifty yards of the pit, which is called Halemaumau, and means "the house of everlasting fire." The fire pit is also called Pele, the Hawaiians in the past worshipping the goddess of fire, and offering sacrifices to her.

The lava lake in the pit, as we saw it, was about two hundred feet from the rim, and is about six hundred feet long and two hundred and fifty feet fills the hole and the fire disappears into a funnel-shaped depression. One time the lake was running over the rim and then began sinking at the rate of twenty feet an hour. Where does it go? What makes it rise and fall? It's the safety valve of the islands.

There is an observatory perched on the edge of the cliffs surrounding the outer sink, and Professor Jaggard and assistants have been making observations for the last six years. Among other discoveries, it was found that steam was not the cause of volcano activity. Jaggard says: "In 1911 most geologists still thought that steam actuated volcanoes. In 1917 it is known that only four per cent or less of the Kilauea lava gas is steam, and even this in part may be burnt hydrogen. Burning sulphur, hydrogen, and carbon gases we now know are powerful heating and oxidizing agents in and about the liquid lava, making great natural blow pipe flames and effervescing through the hot liquid as in a Bessemer converter."

Volcanic activity may be the effect of forces which reach around the world, or as the result of local chemical action. Who knows?

We sat there on the edge of the crater in a more or less dazed condition, as Mark Twain expressed it, "thinking thoughts." For Latter Day Saints it was natural for us to begin to sing:

"My God how wonderful thou art,
Thy majesty how bright!
How glorious thy mercy seat,
In depths of burning light."

We stayed at the volcano until one o'clock, arriving at the Mission House about three in the morning.

While Brother Hanson was here on his way home from Australia, I had another opportunity of seeing Pele, as I went with him to Hilo. On the trip to the crater we stopped at the extinct volcano Kilauea-Iki. Here we saw an absolutely perfect rainbow, right inside of the crater, spanning it from side to side, and perfect from end to end. Brother Hanson succeeded in getting a good picture of it with his Graflex. After arriving at the volcano, we walked around the edge and over the lava beds. There are signs placed around the crater, indicating danger points, but no one pays any attention to them. As we looked into the pit, we saw some venturesome spirits climbing down on to the benches or floor of the pit, and walking toward the boiling lava lake. Brother McConley expressed himself very vigorously at the foolishness of people going down there and risking their lives just to get a little bit of the boiling lava for a souvenir. I don't just know how it happened, but it was not very long after these italicized observations were made, we were down there also, Brother McConley leading the way! Brother Puuohau had a long pole, and pushed it down into the lake, getting lava on the end. Into this was dropped a coin, and the lava rolled over it, making a unique souvenir. There will be a terrible disaster some day, and then possibly the benches will be taboo. After we ascended we concluded we were not brave, only idiotic; but we secured some fine photographs through our venture. Here is an item which appeared a few days ago in the paper:

A party of tourists visiting the volcano a few days ago had a narrow escape from plunging headlong into the boiling lava, according to a report received here yesterday. Despite warning signs placed around the rim of the pit, they ventured onto the lower benches and narrowly escaped a frightful death.

"Their very narrow escape serves to emphasize the warning I issued last week," said L. W. de Vis-Norton yesterday. "These people, led by a totally irresponsible 'guide,' went down onto the lower benches at the level of the lava lake, and just missed accompanying a large section of the bench in a spectacular dive into the molten lava. It is well said that fools rush in where angels fear to tread, and there is not much hope that such things as notice boards and published warnings will serve to protect the public from disaster.

"Our volcano is perfectly safe and harmless for just so long as people will act with ordinary common sense. It has been repeatedly said that the trail down under the east rest house is dangerous, and should not be attempted, but it seems to become more popular every day.

"The average man would not go and stand on the top floor of a burning house if he knew that the under side of the floor boards was actually alight and that only a very thin strip of wood intervened between his feet and the roaring inferno of the basement. And yet this is exactly what people are doing when they take the chance of going down below at the volcano."

We are sorry that we have not more data in regard to the Woman's Auxiliary. We learn from the SAINTS' HERALD that as early as 1895 the Sisters' Prayer Union was meeting every Thursday afternoon and the Daughters of Zion were being organized.—EDITORS.

Woman's Building at Independence

The Independence local organization of the Woman's Auxiliary having relinquished the custody of the Woman's Building, and keenly feeling the need for the activities which might center in this building, the First Presidency has appointed the following committee to assume charge of the building and direct the activities thereof: Mrs. Joseph Sturgess, Mrs. Joseph Mather, Mrs. Dora Glines, Mrs. Ellis Short, sr., Mrs. F. M. Smith.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

I concur in this appointment.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Bishop.

Roll of Honor

Report blanks have been sent to every Sunday school of which we had the address in which we asked for information for the Roll of Honor. Many schools have not reported to us.

Unless your report is sent to the address given below your school will not be listed on the Roll of Honor. This report should reach us not later than February 10.

Please inquire to-day whether your school has reported, and if not can you not send in the following information immediately?

Name of Sunday school
Location (town) State
Total enrollment; Offering 1917, $ Aim 1918, $
Name of superintendent for 1918
Address (town) Street State

Send report to A. W. Smith, Federal Reserve Bank Building, Saint Louis, Missouri.

FROM HERE AND THERE

EDITORIAL DIFFICULTIES

Brother Elbert Smith, who has not been able to work at his desk since his return from the West, has been ill for some three weeks with an attack of grip or similar affliction, unable to be out of the house, and in fact confined to his bed much of the time. He is out a little at this writing. Brother Burgess has found it necessary to remain in Saint Louis for a month or more, attending to matters there following the demise of his father. He will attempt to look after his part of the HERALD interests from there. Those desiring to reach him with personal matter should address him at 5920 Etzel Avenue, Saint Louis, though all matter for publication may be sent to "Editors Herald," as usual. Much time is lost by sending items for publication to any individual on the force.

WHERE TO GO IN LONDON

A brother wrote us from France for the address of some brother in "Blighty" as they call England, for he explained that he was to have leave before long and must have the name and address of some one to whom mail might be forwarded, and to locate his whereabouts. Another brother going across soon, wanted similar information. We suggested Bishop R. May, 58 Ickburgh Road, Upper Clapton N. E., Valetta, London. He will be glad to meet the lads and introduce them to the other Saints there. At Manchester is Brother W. H. Greenwood, at 23 Cicero Street, Moston.

There is a goodly branch at Manchester as well as at London.

Elder Heman C. Smith returned from his tour of the Des Moines District on January 28, having had a successful trip. He missed Knoxville because it was impossible to secure a good place for the showing of his pictures. The weather was unfavorable some of the time, but the attendance was satisfactory and the interest good. Reports are favorable and they hope he will be able to return some time when they have arranged for better weather.

LAMONI STAKE CONFERENCE

At the stake conference on February 2 and 3, held at Lamoni, Brother J. F. Garver, stake president, was released till such time as his broken health was restored; and upon recommendation of the First Presidency, Brother Roy V. Hopkins chosen temporary president, to serve till Brother Garver was able to resume his duties. Brother Duncan Campbell, who has served so long as historian of the stake, was, on his insistent request, released, and the appointment of J. A. Gunsolley by the Church Historian concurred in. The membership of the stake is now 3,418. Bishop's McGuire and Keir arrived Sunday afternoon and addressed the priesthood meeting. Brother McGuire preached to a large audience in the evening.

BISHOPRIC MAKING SURVEY

Questionnaires are being circulated in the Independence Stake from the office of the Presiding Bishopric, to ascertain the occupations, financial standing, etc., of the Saints. It is intended to extend this to the other stakes and to finally cover the church. With this information it will be possible to more intelligently advise the Saints as to changes in location, etc. Similar steps are being taken to secure information as to real estate.

TO DISTRICT RELIGIO VICE PRESIDENTS

Brother T. J. Elliott wants the above officers to be sure to complete their reports and mail same to him without delay, so they may be compiled for the General Convention. Blanks have been mailed to all, and he wants them back not later than March 1. The district report blank is for the year from the reports in hand. This is necessary, as regular and quarterly reports have not been submitted. Address T. J. Elliott, Vice President Religio Society, 1004 Tillie Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

CALGARY SAINTS NOTICE

A sister living at 512 Second Avenue West, Calgary, Alberta, (Mrs. Martha Anderson is her name) desires information as to the meeting place of the Saints at that place. She has five children whom she desires to have attend Sunday school. Her husband does not belong to the church. She is not able to get out and find the meeting place or Saints, so hopes to reach them in this manner.

SOME EXCELLENT TRACT CASES

The General Gospel Literature Commission has designed some excellent tract cases which are the best we have seen. A number have been made up and are on sale at this office at a dollar each, postpaid. The supply is limited, and we urge that any who have use for one of them order it soon. There are three compartments in it, which hold the literature upright and keep it looking nice. The headings of the tracts and papers show just enough to attract attention, and the case looks businesslike and neat.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Some forget that the music of God is a chorus—they persist in trying to sing a solo.

Some creeds are very broad indeed, but it doesn't take a depth bomb to reach the bottom.

Charity is the "pure love of God," and was best demonstrated by the act of Jesus in giving himself to save others.

What an awful thing to be blessed with plenty in basket and store, but mean and small and starved in spirit—big in bread basket, but small in heart.

I think that even the Devil gets ashamed of some of the church quarrels that he starts, and draws out, leaving the party of the first part and the party of the second part to carry on the altercation by themselves.

"Even a deacon" may become lifted up and arrogate to himself authority over celestial things. Not long ago a Lamoni deacon approached a lady who was standing in the aisle of the church, and we heard him say to her: "Do you want to go up?"

It is a proverb that the hog doesn't know much about war. Yet paradoxically we are told that pork is the mainstay of armies. The Iowa farmer is assured that the hog may win the war for the allies. Speaking of paradoxes, reflect upon the picture of Jewish congregations holding solemn convocations of thanksgiving because pork-eating Christians have rescued their Holy Land.

The action taken by General Conference against theater going, and the rather rigid stand taken in Lamoni, on the same subject, are not without reason.

Not long ago the Des Moines Register said editorially: "There is no mistaking the direction the drama has been taking in recent years. It originated in the parlor, and, tarrying in the boudoir for a considerable time, recently passed into the bedroom. The question of where it will go next has been answered by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, whose new play, presented this week for the first time, is entitled, 'Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath.'"

A certain missionary was asked concerning the progress made by a young traveling companion, and replied, "Well, I hate to say it, but he never studies. I haven't seen him study anything for a month. He just depends on what he can pick up in conversation."

The young man mentioned above should read Ruth McEnery Stuart's verse and take warning:

De green gourd on de sunny shed
Was mighty proud of his pethy head,
So he never pondered or studied or trained,
An' now he's ol' an' rattle-brained—
An' he ain't by 'isself in dat.

Every time church men make some mistake, or some enterprise of their launching goes wrong, some one smiles in a superior way and quotes the saying of Jesus that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. That sort of thing seems particularly inept just now, considering the awful mess the children of this world have made of things mundane. German trained diplomacy succeeded only in arousing the hatred of nearly all nations—and all at one time, too. For England, David Lloyd George frankly says that during the war "Great Britain has made every mistake that a nation could make and survive." With the experiences of the allies to guide us, America has already fallen into more than one pit, and probably will yet make incredible blunders. We are tempted to think that Jesus was indulging in a little irony at the expense of the children of this world—or some people are not using his words properly. Give the children of light a little more of your patience, please.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE LIBRARY WORK

All too frequently we note the tendency to treat the library as of very little importance. One is placed upon the board as an honor and as receiving a position not requiring any particular work.

This is bad enough, but to make it worse, we note that many times there is a tendency to pass such an honorable position around from one to another, and so frequent changes interfere even with those who would be active. This hinders the work, especially in the districts. The members of the board may be too widely scattered to meet conveniently. Conventions and conferences not being held at the same time, the times of elections are different; so, as soon as an organization is effected, perhaps a change is made in some one department.

To meet this condition, we should remember first of all what a man will mean in the end; his philosophy, his attitude toward God and religion. The work is therefore vitally important.

Those should be chosen as members of these boards regardless of their ability elsewhere, who are best fitted to assist in a proper selection of books. The work is not that of custodian, it is true, but there is a need in many instances of a great deal of work, and that work should be of the highest possible quality, and the one selected should be prepared to advise for our private library, as well as the local library. We should have higher ideals of service.

When we have found an efficient officer, we should not be too quick to make hasty changes, but should encourage him rather to study carefully the situation, and after this has been done, to utilize his knowledge for the good of all. One does not want to keep a member until he becomes mechanical in his work, but we do want to keep him long enough to utilize his work of preparation.

Then the board itself should have an annual time of election. If changes are made in the personnel during the season, why should not the other two members appoint the new member to the like office or to some other office for the unexpired term? In other words a rearrangement should not be made more than once a year. If one holding a certain office has not been released, consider that office vacant, and then fill the unexpired term. In our humble judgment the practical results are more important than following a set form.

As we have intimated before, a district will present a different problem. It may be in some districts there is some one person so evidently fitted that he or she would be practically the unanimous choice and could handle the work better than a board. It is the opinion of the writer that in such cases such a one should be left free to direct the work. Each body could elect him in turn, and leave each one free to make a change if the district conference or convention desired to do so.

They should appoint an active member for each special duty, so they do not have to meet and discuss each problem. Let one of the three take care of the ministerial duties, and the others, if any, assist as may be agreed upon. We should by all means give aggressive work and seek opportunities to present the value of good books.

It is such a pity, the amount of time that is wasted upon inferior reading which could be used to such great profit. A board may be well for a branch, especially a large branch, or in certain of the stakes; but the time is doubtless near at hand when a closer organization will be possible, and some live person will be placed in sole and active charge in each district. In the past library boards have been necessary, but surely now we are getting ready to choose wisely some one person to be in active charge and represent and push this department of work. With board members scattered from twenty-five to one hundred miles apart, and with perhaps a limited interest on the part of some one or two members, the results we want are not being achieved, as there is too much of a tendency to wait for some one else. We have tried to urge many times that it is tangible results we want more than organization.

ARE BIBLE BELIEVERS RETROGRESSIVE?

Frequently I hear young men say: "Bible believers are retrogressive," "Christians are old-fashioned," "The wide-awake, progressive fellow won't spend much time with that sort of thing."

There is too much of this current for the good of our Nation. I hope to see the press accept the challenge and preach the plain truth along this line. What can you give us?

The above from a letter is a fair illustration of communications which are occasionally received. We touched upon this matter once last year, and the roots underlying.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall, in his latest work, Jesus the Christ, in the Light of Psychology, also takes up this particular question with much sympathy. He places the responsibility in part on a limited preparation made by men for the ministry, and the rather narrow outlook that most of them take. They do not as a rule go deeply into either science or philosophy. The result, anyway, is that many college young men feel a lack of satisfaction in the way in which their questions are answered.

One basic reason is doubtless because some Bible believers do not go deeply into modern thought, and so do not meet the issue.

A second reason lies in biblical and religious criticism. Nietzsche is perhaps the most extreme and bitter, the most direct enemy of the church and of Jesus the Christ. But there are many other critics whom we regret to say deny even that Jesus ever lived. Others make him purely a good man, but only a man. Others do not even make him a good man, but make him to be a degenerate, epileptic, or even a paranoiac. Some try to make him out the representative of a secret order and that his whole life was but a play for the multitude. Others question the biblical sources and the records that we have.

Now, while it is true that not very many go back to these original sources, the effect of these teachings two and three times removed, is many times peculiar, if not disastrous.

We have, within the church, men who think it smart to take certain texts which have long received a certain interpretation and then do everything they can to tear down their meanings, and in doing so consider themselves "progressive," even though their interpretation is not logical, and may be in the judgment of most thinking people decidedly inferior. Instead of turning their intellect and their force to a constructive work, they prefer a destructive, and if only they can cast doubt on some one's belief, they feel that they have proved their superiority to all others.

It is really strange how many there are of this kind. Their work is principally one of objection and negation; yet if you note closely, they consider themselves superior to the orthodox, and those who agree with them are told that they are thinkers.

There comes another seeming paradox. A paper is headed, "for thinkers." The idea is held out that those who agree and doubt are thinkers. Many followers will come, and with some pride agree without data, or investigation, and will accept the statements made wholesale.

It is true that an honest doubt is an evidence to a certain extent of growing thought, though it does not mean that the thought has progressed very far. Descartes placed it at the lowest dubito ergo sum, and it represents much less than does constructive criticism which takes into consideration all possible questions, examining the possible doubts, seeking ever and feeling for the truth, and thus verifying and justifying the old way, and the old truth. Truth is old-fashioned, and also to us the newest and most up to date.

It is perhaps natural that young men approaching scientific questions, testing them, and finding certain hypotheses set forth, attempt to apply a similar test to religion, and question each allegation and then consider those old-fashioned who accept the old way, and who either have not questioned, or who having questioned have passed that period of doubt so many years that they have lost sympathy with youth.

Nor have all the Sophists been in the Grecian age. There are many to-day who emphasize as the chief fact that "I think" instead of making the great fact to be that "I think, and am one of other thinking persons." They fail often to see that the conclusions that one man may come to, variant and vagrant, are much less important than is the consensus of opinion of those who have for years considered the nature of truth, of righteousness and of goodness.

Now it is true that some Bible believers are unprogressive. It is unfortunately true that some Bible teachers are not accurate thinkers. It is doubtless true that some who stand to declare the word of God are actually retroactive and belong in the Middle Ages. But it is not true that Bible believers are retrogressive. Christianity may be old-fashioned in the sense that it is the plan acknowledged by millions of people who have been on earth for two milleniums for the salvation of man, and as we would affirm and believe, for many thousands of years before that; in fact, we would affirm that the divine plan is the source of all other forms of religion. It is eternal; it is ever old and yet ever new and presenting ever new delight and beauty.

It is not true that the Christian is old-fashioned in any fair sense of the term; that he is unprogressive and reactionary. Nor is it true, as some college writers have asserted, that religion is for old men, old women, and children. Religion belongs to humanity, and is a necessity for the development of the higher powers of man and the best that is in him. We find such a man as William James setting forth the varieties of religious experience and affirming these superior aspects and powers.

We find such a man as Doctor G. Stanley Hall, also emphasizing strongly the higher powers of man, and after many years of scientific study in his supreme work, setting forth as the result of ripened thought his belief in the apostles' creed, with a new force and power.

The man who has not been converted lacks full development, and is incomplete. The man without religion lacks the higher part of himself, and lives beneath his power and privileges. The man who rejects the Book of books, the Bible, is retrogressing to a lower plane.

The religious man, the Bible believer, at least preserves that which is highest and best. The progressive, wide-awake man may look askance at some extreme construction, but he cannot reject or ignore the book and be really progressive and broad-minded. Rather, he thereby limits himself and his own growth.

S. A. B.

WAR ECONOMIES

The more we consider this coming economy enforced by war, the more it pleases us, as it would seem that it is a step that we should take now voluntarily, and that we should have taken previously of our own free will. One vital purpose is to deny ourselves unnecessary wants, and save. This would put us in position to help not only the Government, but also the church and those who stand in need. It means simple living and high thinking. But it does not mean, as some may have thought, that we should do without; and as some would intimate, that we should sacrifice to the point of weakness in order to help on the war.

People should be fed and be fed well. It is essential that that which can be most easily transported, be saved, so as to send to those who need. We hope for an early termination of the war, yet that will not lessen the fact that there will be many poor people still to be fed among other nations. Waste means some one suffering, either at home or abroad.

Unlimited use of many foods is allowed by the food administration, and a sufficiency of all. We need sugar. We need a certain amount of sweets, but not an excess. We need a certain amount of fats, but we do not need to waste fats, or pour down the sink. In fact, that is one of the worst possible places for them. They tend only to clog the waste pipe, and do no good.

The first great purpose, as we see it, is thrift; to learn to save, to learn self-sacrifice, though we think our people need this lesson less than many others. Missionaries' families for long have had many meatless days in full measures. The day to be noted by them is the meat day.

The next reason is humanitarian. To help others; and therefore that we should use those foods even though equal in price, or higher in price, which are not so easily transported. This is one reason why poultry is urged, as a substitute for beef and pork. Also why nuts and cotton seeds are recommended. Then, in place of sugar and candy, that we even use figs, dates, and raisins; honey, and maple sugar, and fruits.

But the curious feature is that a service card has been put up to signify that the family is sacrificing and is eating corn meal, oatmeal bread, and whole wheat bread instead of the sickening white bread of the past. Yet the family is really better fed than ever before, and with more healthful food. Is that sacrifice? If such plans are laid down and carried out, it will obviate excessive eating, and will cause us to eat more nourishing foods, rather than the reverse, and so secure better health.

In the past, it has always been considered polite for the mistress of the house to have too much of everything on the table. Then the guests are supposed to show their politeness and daintiness by not finishing up any dish, but just tasting. How often have we seen some one reproved for this as a child, for not being polite, and leaving something to be scraped into the garbage can!

We should now have a new politeness—a clean plate. It certainly shows more intelligence not to waste. We are informed that at some of the finest hotels a guest is given a plate, then takes from the larger dishes just what he will eat.

Why should ill health be considered the thing rather than for one to live so full bloodedly and so fully as to really enjoy what is set before him? The old idea is based upon a sense of daintiness and superiority in indigestion. Sound reason would make good health catching and polite. It certainly is a greater social good.

We have often noted the folly of hospitality in standing in zero weather with the door open to speed the parting guest. We have been in a house the temperature of which was reduced thirty degrees or more through this one method, holding the door open and talking before going.

We talk about fuel economy, but not a little is wasted in this way, as it is useless to try to heat all outdoors. Would it not be more courteous for the departing guest to say his farewell within the house, then when he turns to go, go, and see that the door is closed after him? What is gained by leaving a cold behind you and making some one sick?

Why cannot the host and hostess give all their kindly expressions to the parting guests without standing in the cold doorway, and throwing uselessly the heat outside? The waste is so common, but are real results hopeless?

The call is to rational living, to eat plenty of good, wholesome food, but avoid excess and waste. Use that which can be used here, so far as possible, so as to release as much as we can for the need of others abroad. The winter is severe. Drastic measures have been put in force to save coal. Must such measures be enforced in private residences, or shall wisdom justify her children? The debt is being paid, but there is vital work before the church and a need of our help if success is to be ours. Let us not wait to be commanded in all things.

SUPREMACY OF CHRISTIAN ETHIC--Part 1

BY J. W. RUSHTON

Cicero admonishes us that "we should learn in order to become the masters of the world."

Authority and mastery in life depend upon knowledge and discipline. Knowledge is the result of the exercise of our reason; and discipline is the habitual obedience to the authority of what we know to be right. Obedience may be exacted by force or desire for favor, but such is not of the same moral worth as that which is the enthusiastic gift of love.

In the process of education we must make frequent pause in order to take an inventory and then contrast the results. Tireless energy is not enough to assure efficiency in life. There must be purpose, accuracy, and poise, or we may easily waste time and knowledge. At the beginning of a new year it has become a custom for men to take pause in the midst of life's busy activities and in the spirit of reflection contrast and balance experiences in order to readjust, secure poise and direction for the future. New Year's time is an annual stock-taking period for most of us; a time when we decide to jettison undesirable accumulations and increase our stocks of things which are needed to make our lives more efficient.

By some very happy providence we close the doors upon the old year while the lights, and laughter, and good will of the Christmas festivities are still lingering as the upmost memories. The gayety, generosity, and spiritual fusions seem to have brought up to the surface the strongest and most permanent elements of our racial character. The world is passing through a baptism of fire and death and devastation such as never was known before; and still this, the fourth Christmas of cataclysmic war has been filled with the same good will, affectionate concern for others, and joyous service for the well-being of the whole as ever before. Of course, there has been a softening of the lights, a modulation of the music, and a chastening of spirit which the black cloud of universal sorrow forced, but Hope, Faith, and Love still have given triumphant proof of their presence and supremacy.

Standing in the solemn quietness of the old year's passing and upon the elevation of the supreme "present," we bid adieu to the past, while we receive the sacramental memories as the guerdon of the past and the inspiration of the future.

Thus enriched we turn to the future with outstretched arms and buoyant mien, still believing in human goodness and hoping for the final victory of love.

If everything depends upon getting a good start, then the psychology of the new year following so closely upon the happiness of the Yuletide is very significant.

But upon what do we turn our backs? And what faces us in the future? These questions are singularly fateful and give a depth to the words of Robert Hebart Quick which they did not have when he first wrote them: "If we ignore the past we cannot understand the present, or forecast the future."

Looking beyond the immediate past into the gloom of the world's dreadful night, we see the Stygian blackness rent and shattered by tongues of fire; the echoes of booming ordnance, the whinings and moanings of the speeding messengers of death and destruction, the dull detonations of bursting shells and pulsing undertones of rattlings and cracklings of war's machineries are still in our ears. We see the smiling fields blasted, the laughing greeneries of forest, orchard, and vineyard transformed into the wild Valkyries and strange eldritch, swaying their ghastly limbs in the howling gales of death, while the variegated foliage, blossoms, and blooms have been swept into the rags and tatters which in their unholy riot seem but to accentuate the hideous nudity. The fair faces of the European paradises are now loathsome with corruption; and, like some foul psoriasis the beauteous landscape is pitted and streaked with the lurid colorings or reds, greens, yellows, and browns; the smoldering fires of death which have filled the fissures with the corruption and effluvia of war.

There are towns, villages, and hamlets, once the abode of happy, prosperous industries, whose architectural treasures have been the pride of the passing centuries; and upon which Time with gentle hand has placed the enrichment of priceless tracery and filigree. Nestling in these old-fashioned places were industrious citizens, happy mothers, joyous children filling the air with natural symphonies. To-day like caried teeth in the mouth of sinful senility we see the broken columns and charred piles thrusting themselves up into the wild and stormy horizons. Under the Juggernaut of modern warfare holy sanctuary, romantic castle, proud chateau, and humble dwelling lie in a common pile of debris and dust—a grotesque phantasm of wanton destruction. The men are dead or in slavery, the women and children have been offered up as sacrifices to the hellish kultur and efficiency of this world-tragedy.

Through the skies strange shapes glide and gyrate in fantastical evolutions. Mechanical birds of prey deposit their eggs on towns and cities which hatch death, devastation, and horror. The serene azure of day and the shimmering indigo of moonlight nights are desecrated by the cruel deeds man is working in the mad hysteria of ambition.

In the ocean's depths other shapes and forms lurk and move with sinister silence, awaiting their prey. As the innocent merchantmen or swift passenger vessels sail from port to port in pursuance of the lawful and peaceful missions, they are assassinated with relentless completeness. From one of the monsters there suddenly is ejected a white, feathery streak which goes with accuracy to the vitals of the unsuspecting ship; and there is a dull roar, a vivid light, and the stricken vessel lifts heavily and then begins to sink. Groans, cries, shrieks mingle with hoarse shouts and curses, and soon the quiet night looks upon the still forms of men, women, and little children which one by one are taken into the sheltering bosom of the cold waters.

Moving through this scenery of infernal horror we see the incarnation of ambition who, with Mephistophelian truculency, has been the leading director of this dreadful show. We see the sanctity of treaties, the honor of nations and the international guarantees all violated, all that once was the essence of national honor blighted in the wish for power.

It surely would seem that faith had perished from the earth, and in the night of despair all that civilization had labored to produce was lost.

But the redeeming feature in the present aspect so foreboding and tragic, is that men are thinking as they have never thought before, questions are being asked and all of our foundations are being searchingly analyzed. People are pressing the utilitarian interrogations with insistency, "What is the use? What is the purpose? What are the results?" Christianity and the church are being tested in the light of these questions also, and it is very evident that there must be readjustment if not reconstruction in every way. When this travail is over and the future begins to articulate its demands, we must not offer stones for bread, we must not try to meet the new demands with the anachronisms of the past.

The year which is just opening may bring the crucial test, or at least it will lead up to that test very closely. The war will not last forever, and when the war ceases, the nations will soon forget their acrimony and hatreds and begin the work of repair and development. It will be in these days that all ethics will be tested by the standard of utility, and the adequacy with which we meet the new demands will be the basis of survival and vitality.

It will be the duty of all interested in the advancement of the Christian cause, whether as individuals, pastors of congregations, or leaders of the great federal organizations, to justify the existence of the church and claim the intelligent faith and support of humanity by the irresistible appeal to the universal law: "Service with mutually beneficial purpose." Already it is very clearly evident that men are either impatient of or quite indifferent to appeals which have nothing to support them but adroit architecture of scriptures, and an imposing array of doctrines, rituals, and institutions. The church must be more than a museum of moribund ideas and of fossilized ecclesiasticisms, she must be the center of dynamic energies which move men to heroic enterprises, and the salvaging of the wreckage and the production of the kingdom of heaven from the remnants of earth. And down the vista of the immediate future we see this big and imperious demand which will be made on the church.

If the philosophy of history has an authoritative message it is this: "Utility is the test of truth."—James.

History is the great judge and vindicator of the ways of God to man.—G. Stanley Hall.

Everything we do against our consciousness of right weakens our perception of the truth and disturbs the purity of our fundamental conceptions and experiences.—Pestalozzi.

Paraphrasing, we may say, it is the established law of human experience developed in the history of the past, the continued activities of the race develop the truth, and that truth is the consciousness of right, in which are the ways of God with man.

God would contradict himself if therefore he could approve or even allow to continue in existence anything which is not true, or right, or according to his way. And as the mind not only enjoys experiences but is the sum total of its experiences, then all which is unlike God as the regnant power of the universe is doomed to obliteration. This is in harmony with a recognized principle of psychology—that which is continually resisted becomes moribund and finally dies. It is equally true that, what we resist voluntarily which is true and right and therefore eternal, we ourselves become dead to; for "Such is the constitution of things that unwillingness to goodness may ripen into eternal voluntary opposition to it." (Julius Moeller.) And, as the wisdom of India offers to us: "Repeated sin impairs the judgment and he whose judgment is impaired sins repeatedly."

In the light of history and experience, then, as a church we must realize that our claim to divine origin is not in and of itself our justification, but rather the testimonial to the world of a better and more efficient revelation of the grace of God in the increasing spiritual results. It is our duty to find our purpose, and to interpret that purpose in modern terms of sympathetic relationships, with all that thrusts and urges humanity in vast and resistless sweep to the divine destiny. Let us not believe that the war is the most important if it is the most tragic event of all time. At the back of the black carnage and devastation which has become appallingly monotonous in these days, let us look for the unseen but potent causes. We shall not accomplish any useful purpose by proclaiming against the war nor hysterically shrieking for peace, for the causes of war are not emperors, kings, or czars nor even the money lords of Wall Street nor the much-abused capitalists. These are all symbols of very kindergarten-like type of root principles which must be discovered and reckoned with before we can move intelligently to the abolition of such conditions.

Cleaving our way through the tremendous amount of accumulated intricacies of diplomatic charges, denials and counter-charges we all seem to be agreed that the two underlying principles from out of which the war has developed are these:

On the one hand we see "the right of the governed to express their will in the government, and such will to be sovereign and supreme." This we call democracy.

On the other, "the rule of the privileged class imposed upon the government without any real recognition of the rights of the governed to express their will." This we call autocracy.

To state the matter in other and possibly more familiar terms, it is the struggle of right against might. Biologically, the big question is, Shall the law of the survival of the fittest be interpreted in terms of brutality or in terms of moral and spiritual import. Or, again, Shall the course of evolution continue without interruption or shall there be reversion to type?

Shall the cave-man with heavy jowl and ugly temper, swinging his club to force obedience to his despotic and capricious will, become the ruling force of our democratic world; or, shall we enthrone Christ and his ethic as the sovereign power of the new federations of men, in order that the evolutionary course may be realized in all the earthly kingdoms being merged into the United Kingdom of Heaven?

To leave this question undecided is as impossible as it is for living being to maintain a balance; our only possibilities are "elaboration or degeneracy."

So far as the Christian church is concerned there can be no doubt as to our attitude, and without any prejudice and with freedom from all national considerations, we say unhesitatingly that, simply because the trend of the evolving racial consciousness is definitely towards the rights of majorities, justice to all and in the love of truth the strong has assumed the responsibilities of altruistically caring for the weak, just so surely is the cause of the Central or Teutonic powers doomed. History cannot be reversed; the finger of time cannot be forced backward; therefore either the old ideas must be abolished or be modified to conform to the central and vital truth of the present facts in the racial experience.

"Truth may be called an ultimate function of our intellectual activity. . . . Truth is that manipulation of them (objects), which turns out upon trial to be useful, primarily for any human end, but ultimately for that perfect harmony of our whole life which is our final inspiration." (Professor James.)

It is at this stage of the argument that we find the foundations of our belief in the supremacy of Jesus Christ and discern the reason why he must be acclaimed as "King of kings and Lord of lords!" With a singular simplicity he has given us the essential elements of the profoundest philosophy, not in its partial bearings but in its vast and limitless whole. After two millennia the idea of wholeness both as regards the individual and the collective life is being recognized and worked out as the true philosophy. This is now elaborated by the modern German writer on religious philosophy, Eucken. But it was sensed by the astute French writer, Balzac, even before Eucken had framed his ideas, for this leader of the French school of Realists said:

"Let the man learn to see his work—in its roots and products; in the past which begat, in the present when it is manifested, and in the future when it develops."

Our own Abraham Lincoln was in intimate touch with this same idea when he said: "The work we are doing to-day is not for to-day alone but for a vast and mighty future."

Jesus said: "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill." In him the past finds its meaning and the future its destiny. And what is true of history, and philosophy, and Christ, is true of the race as a whole and of all as individuals. And only so far as we are faithful to the highest and best which the past has produced and projected do we justify and "complete" the past and guarantee the future. If it is true that "all whoever came before me and testified not of me are thieves and robbers"; then all who are dishonest or unfaithful to what Jesus Christ in full and complete expression symbolizes, must be equally sure of condemnation.

May there not be an interpretation of the peculiar sayings of Christ found in this suggestion which is at least singularly impressive? "I say unto you before Abraham was I am," "Abraham saw my day and was glad."

From the dim twilight of the prehistoric past the possibilities of Christ were involved in our remotest ancestors, and to Abraham belonged the honor of having visioned and prophesied of that coming glory which should yet be revealed in man. The interpretation seems to be suggested by the entire range of the argument in the eighth chapter of John.

What then is the ethic of Christ? What is the essence of the Christian philosophy of morals? And with the same simplicity we have the answer which is offered by our Lord himself in the conversation with the rich young man: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hangeth the whole law and the prophets."

Mark's variant of this same scripture reads: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with [from] all thy heart, and with [from] all thy soul, and with [from] all thy mind, and with [from] all thy strength." Luke also follows Mark in the cataloguing of the quadruple powers, heart, soul, mind, and strength.

It certainly is traceable to this essential principle of the Christian message that our civilization has been produced and according to which it has developed. The racial consciousness has become thoroughly saturated with this quality and is evidenced in every department of philosophy, art, science, and political enterprise.

It is not too much to say that all the struggles since the massacre of the holy innocents until the present have been the result of this growing consciousness of humanity's common ancestry and mutual responsibility. The French Revolution possibly was the first of our, comparatively speaking, modern revolts against the forms of society and states of social relationships which were hostile to the Christian principle of common fatherhood and resultant brotherhood, and the revolution of the American colonials, while having more directly and superficially a political origin, had singular sympathies with the same underlying ideas of "equality, fraternity, and freedom." And, still more singular to remark, the same causes which produced the revolutions of a political and violent character in these countries was producing a mental and social revolution in Britain which in many ways has contributed to a democracy which leads even that of France or the United States. Everywhere, in all sorts of unexpected places we have seen the agitations of this leaven which is within man working its way out. Turkey, China, and Japan have responded to the influences of this ethic; besides, the confused and turgid pre-war struggles of Russia, the radical changes in the British Parliament, sweeping away the anomalous veto of the House of Lords, and the gradual transfer of the taxes from labor and necessities to the privileges and luxuries of the so-called aristocracy; the unrest in our American social, political, and economic life, together with the universal demand that all people, women as well as men, who are responsible for the expenses of government and affected by the government shall have voice and representation in such government, testify to the growing power of that inward idea and its effort to express itself in the mutual relationships of the whole life.

To be sure, it is improbable that any could satisfactorily explain the meaning, or define the scope, or trace very clearly the line of descent of this universal impulse. It may be and most likely is true that such an impulse did not originate with Christ or Christianity; and that the modern developments are not anticipated in the idealistic teachings of the Master. Still it is true that he gave articulation to the impulse and he also made this impulse the focal point of all preceding laws and prophecies, and with an imperialistic authority he condemned as dishonest all who preceding him had not pointed with clear, unmistakable testimony to what he was the incarnation of.

It is also true that these developments of fraternity, freedom, and equality have forced themselves into history and experience as resultants of that Christianization of the individual and social consciousness. We are not required to understand the genesis and methods of the evolution of this consciousness before we can own and apply it, any more than we must understand the origin of life and the laws of its development before we can live; or, that men should be able to explain God and understand all the processes of spiritual phenomena before they can be religious. Eucken reminds us that men have had a religion when they had no definitized idea of God, and comparative religion gives us incidents in which Buddha's teaching tacitly assumed that the idea of God was unnecessary; Zarathustra also taught the ancient Persians to dispense with the idea of God.

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE DISCIPLE OR CHRISTIAN CHURCH—IN TWO PARTS—PART TWO GOSPEL

The gospel or Christian system, is that only scheme which infinite intelligence and almighty love could devise for that benignant and gracious end. This purpose, like all God's purposes, is eternal and immutable. The scheme or theory was, therefore, not only arranged before the Jewish and patriarchal ages, but before the foundation of the world.—Christian System, p. 32.

Evident then it is, that the whole remedial or gospel system was purposed, arranged and established upon the basis of the revealed distinctions of Father, Son and Holy Spirit; and by these, in reference to one another, before the foundation of the world.—Ibid., p. 33.

We have now placed the matter fairly and fully before you, and think you agree that any preaching not containing the death of Christ, his burial, his resurrection, the blood of the covenant, and the office and influence of the Holy Spirit, is not the gospel of Christ in its fullness, as preached by the apostles and as should be preached now.—Reign of Christ, p. 7.

When was this "beginning" or preaching "repentance and remission of sins" in Christ's name to occur? When the apostles were "endued with power from on high." As a matter of fact, we know that this occurred on the Pentecost following Christ's resurrection. This, then, was the "beginning" of the proclamation of the gospel offering salvation to men in the name of Christ. It was the beginning of the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, the beginning of Christ's reign over a spiritual kingdom.—J. H. Garrison, in Christian Evangelist, vol. 34, p. 50.

FAITH, REPENTANCE, AND BAPTISM

Faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and many other words in the New Testament are perfectly understood and believed by us. For my own part I was immersed on this very confession, and for that grand object, by special covenant and stipulation with the Baptist who immersed me.—A. Campbell, in The Gospel Echo.

Baptism is, then, designed to introduce the subjects of it into the participation of the blessings of the death and resurrection of Christ; who "died for our sins," and "rose again for our justification." But it has no abstract efficacy. . . . It can merit nothing. Still to the believing penitent it is the means of receiving a formal, distinct and specific absolution or release from guilt.—Christian System, pp. 61, 62.

Now the question arose, who should baptize us? The Baptists would not, unless we would unite with them, and there were no elders among us who had been immersed. It was finally concluded among us, that if we had authority to preach we had authority to baptize. The work then commenced. The preachers baptized one another, and crowds came and were baptized.—Barton W. Stone.

HOLY SPIRIT

But the Spirit is not promised to any person out of Christ. It is promised only to them that believe in and obey him. These it actually and powerfully assists in the mighty struggle for eternal life.—Christian System, p. 69.

I could not, indeed, esteem as of any value the religion of any man, as respects the grand affairs of eternal life, whose religion is not begun, carried on and completed by the personal agency of the Holy Spirit.—Brief Sketch of A. Campbell, p. 64.

The one who admits that the Holy Spirit now is in man, literally, personally, as a comforter, as a gift, has any other influences of the Spirit than the works of the words of the Spirit, any other indwelling of the Spirit than the indwelling of the words of the Spirit by faith in the word, simply hands himself tied hand and foot into the clutches of Mormonism.—J. B. (D?) McClure, in Church Register, April 6, 1898.

The age of those gifts have passed away, and now the influence of the Holy Spirit is only felt in and by the word believed. . . . But we are taught that since those gifts have ceased, the Holy Spirit now operates upon the minds of sinners only by the word.—A. Campbell, in Christian Baptist.

A religion of which the Holy Spirit is not the author, the subject matter and the perfecter is sheer deism.—A. Campbell, in Memoirs of A. Campbell, by Robert Richardson, ed. 1870, p. 155.

The only seal spoken of in the New Testament as the guarantee and property of all Christians is the seal of the Holy Spirit.—Ibid., p. 35.

REVELATION

Now it is important to notice the fact that the New Testament makes it very plain that the Holy Spirit is a speaking Spirit, and that this is specially a prominent office of the Spirit.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, by W. T. Moore, p. 133.

What! have we no men among us called and sent of God? Stop, my friend. What use have we for such men? Do we need any new message from the skies? No. Divine messages require divine messengers. If there be no need of a new message from God, or a new revelation of the Spirit, then there is no need of new ambassadors, of new revealers, or new prophets. . . . In short there is no need to have men among us professing to be called and sent of God.—Christian Baptist, pp. 20, 21.

But it accords better with my immediate purpose to say that Alexander Campbell was the Elijah of our nineteenth century restoration, while his venerable father, the benign, the gracious, the tender and loving Thomas Campbell, was its typical Elisha.—J. S. Lamar, in Christian Evangelist, December 6, 1900, pp. 1549-1551.

Many things, indeed, that are of vital importance to the well-being and prosperity of the kingdom of Christ, are left to the law of expediency.

There is no law, rule, or precedent for the manner of eating the Lord's supper, no hint as to the quantity of bread and wine to be used by each participant; nothing said about who shall partake first, or how it shall be conveyed from one to another.

That "marriage is honorable in all" is clearly taught, but who ever read a verse on the manner in which this most important of all social institutions is to be performed. . . . Nothing said about who shall perform the service, the formula, the witnesses, the record, etc. And still more singular, there is no table, or law, or statute, in all the New Covenant saying who may, or who may not, enter into that relation on any principle of consanguinity or affinity.

But here arises a practical and all-important question, viz; Who shall ascertain and who shall interpret this law of expediency? . . . Now the law of expediency is the law of adopting the best present means of attaining any given end. But this is a matter which the wisdom and good sense of individuals and communities must decide. This is not, this cannot be, a matter of standing revelation.—Christian System, pp. 97-99.

THE BIBLE

The Bible is to the intellectual and moral world of man what the sun is to the planets in our system—the fountain and source of light and life, spiritual and eternal. There is not a spiritual idea in the whole human race, that is not drawn from the Bible. . . .

The Bible, or the Old and New Testaments, in Hebrew and Greek, contains a full and perfect revelation of God and his will, adapted to man as he now is.—Christian System, p. 15.

The New Testament is, then, the gift of Christ and was written by his guidance and inspiration. . . . The New Testament is a volume written by his servants. Six of his apostles and two of his evangelists wrote it all. That book is to us now in the stead of the personal presence of the Lord and his apostles.—Ibid., p. 53.

From the beginning of their movement the disciples had always taken a deep interest in translations of the New Testament. This feeling was strictly logical in view of their religious position. They magnified the word of God as no other people did. It was, therefore, all-important that they should possess, as far as possible, the exact mind of the Holy Spirit in any translation that might be used. They felt that the authorized version, though incomparable in some respects, was, nevertheless, in some important particulars, far from what it ought to be. Mr. Campbell had himself taught them to discredit King James' Version, as he had published a version made by George Campbell, Philip Doddridge and others.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 220.

But some are so wedded to the common version, that the very defects in it have become sacred; and an effort, however well intended, to put them in possession of one incomparably superior in propriety, perspicuity, and elegance is viewed very much in the light of making "a new Bible," or of "altering and amending the very word of God."—Living Oracles, p. 12.

ANGELS

If Jesus himself, in one of these conflicts, needed an angel to minister to him, we need it more.—Christian System, p. 55.

Angels also were employed, and are still employed, under the great King in administering to them who are heirs of salvation.—Ibid., p. 183.

NAME OF GOD'S PEOPLE

Father Stone, Father Campbell [Thomas] and many of our good brethren have long had great respect for the venerable and ancient name "Christian," and so have I. But they never sought to impose it on anyone. It is, however, but an earthly name. There are no Christians in heaven—no Jews in heaven—divisive names in heaven. But there are saints in heaven, holy brethren, and other designations of great age, and of unquestionable divine authority. Abraham and Moses, though not Christians, were saints.—A. Campbell, in Millennial Harbinger of 1840, p. 378.

Campbell held that all denominations never could unite in one spiritual body; . . . but that they could unite as Christians, that being designated as the scriptural name of the followers of Christ.—Disciples of Christ, pp. 37, 38.

LORD'S SUPPER

It throws our memory back to Jesus Christ. You are not invited to it because you are perfect, but because, though imperfect and liable to sin, you are anxious to grow Godward, and enter heaven at last. . . . It is a memorial act, a prospective act (for it looks not only backward to the suffering Christ, but forward to the coming and enthroned Christ), and an act of supreme renewal of baptismal vows.—The Christian Worker, by Foy, pp. 91, 92.

The weekly observance of the Lord's supper—which is one of the peculiarities of the disciples—is based on the admitted custom of the primitive church, which undoubtedly made it a part, and the central part of the established worship of the church.—Our Movement, by Garrison, p. 27.

There is neither "open" nor "close" communion among us, as we neither "invite" nor "debar."—Ibid., p. 28.

HEALING BY FAITH

Faith, indeed, is the principle, and the distinguishing principle, of this economy; but it is only the principle of action. Hence, we find the name or person of Christ always interposed between faith and the cure, mental or corporeal. . . . The imposition of hands, or a word, or a touch, or a shadow, or something from the persons of those anointed with the Holy Spirit, was the immediate cause of all the cures in the New Testament. It is true, also, that without faith it is impossible to be healed; for in some places Jesus could not work many miracles, because of their unbelief.—Christian System, p. 225.

MARRIAGE

Matrimony is not, as Romanists affirm, a sacrament of the gospel, but it is an honorable estate instituted of God in the time of man's innocency, and therefore, not to be entered into irreverently and lightly, but soberly, discreetly, and in the fear of God.

The gospel took men as it found them, and told them to go and sin no more. . . . When a man with two wives was converted he was required not to wrong one by putting her away, but at the same time the disapproval of the church was placed on his marriage relations by making him ineligible to office in the church.—B. F. Johnson, in Christian Evangelist, March 30, 1893.

PREACHING TO THE DEAD

1 Peter 4: 6. The interpretation of this passage depends very largely upon the interpretation to be given the difficult passage in the preceding chapter, 1 Peter 3: 18-20. The passage seems to us to state that Christ, after his crucifixion, went in spirit, and preached unto the spirits in prison, the spirits which were disobedient in the days of Noah. . . . The connection between the two passages is so close that we can scarcely resist the conclusion that the persons referred to in 4: 6 as "the dead," to whom the gospel was preached are the "spirits in prison" of 3: 19. The utmost that can be drawn from the passages, if we accept this interpretation is, that God, in his infinite mercy, proposes to have the gospel presented to all men, sometime and somewhere, in order that they may be judged upon an equality.—Editorial in Christian Evangelist, July 1, 1897, J. H. Garrison, Editor.

MIRACLE WORKERS

Nothing short of divine attestations or miracles can evince that any man is especially called by the Spirit of God to instruct us in the Christian religion. . . . When, then, I hear a modern preacher, either with or without his diploma in his pocket, saying that he is an ambassador of Christ, sent by God to preach the gospel, moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon him the work of the ministry, I ask him to work a miracle, or to afford some divine attestation of his being such a character. If he cannot do this, I mark him down as a knave or an enthusiast; consequently an impostor, either intentionally or unintentionally.—A. Campbell, in Christian Baptist, p. 20.

FIRST DAY OBSERVANCE

Apostolic example is justly esteemed of equal authority with an apostolic precept. . . . It is no derogation from the authority for observing the first day of the week, to admit that Christians are nowhere in this volume (the Bible) commanded to observe it. We are told that the disciples, with the countenance and presence of the apostles, met for worship on this day. And so long as we believe they were honest men, and taught all that was commanded them, so long we must admit that the Lord commanded it to be done.—Christian Baptist, p. 180.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

What Our Hands Find to Do

We are exhorted, in a well-known hymn, to be "not hearers of the word alone, but doers of it, too." If any just criticism can be made of our church and its accomplishments in the past, it might well be that of having been lax in the doing of the things we profess to believe to be right. This criticism cannot justly be confined to our own church organization, we admit, but in that we have received the greater light, do not our sins of omission stand out the more prominently?

"And there were no poor among them"; "each man considered the interests of his neighbor." These are terms which sound ideal, and, alas, have come too often to have but an empty sound in our years. Each one in his heart thinks, "It would be an ideal condition, but Brother So-and-so will never comply with it, and Brother This-one overreaches every time he gets a chance. I think I will just wait for some one else to lead out in this!" And poor, overworked Some-one-else has not yet gotten around to make the start! The result is that we find the members of the church standing back, holding on to what they can get, drawing their warm coats about them against the wintry blasts, and—we grant—putting up a most earnest plea that God will remember the poor! Another job for Some-one-else!

Our Woman's Auxiliary has a bureau called "Relief and service." It is the doing part of our work, towards which all our study and organization and prayer and preparation are but stepping stones. What would it profit us were we to become "letter perfect" as to what the temporal law of God and our church is, if we persist in not living what we profess to understand? In our work as women, we wish to place ourselves in a position to be of the greatest service to those about us who may need our care and ministry. True our duties at home lie nearest, but we should not be blind to what we may do a little farther off. Perhaps just around the corner, or on the other side of town, or across the neighboring field there are those who are crushed with the futility of their struggles—who feel friendless and despondent, who are praying for a lift over the present difficulty, that they may get upon their feet once more—and above all, there may be those who are sick in sin who need just what comfort and hope we have to offer them. What of them? Will it not be asked of us, some day: "What of thy brother?" Shall we, guilty as Cain, be stammering: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Let us take a more intelligent view of this relief and service branch of our work as women. Let us study—oh, how much study it needs to accomplish much of permanent value! and let us deliberately and unflinchingly go out and seek those who need us. Let us make this department of our locals the most efficient of all, believing that to visit the sick and the fatherless is indeed the pure and undefiled religion—not altogether for the specific charitable good we may do, but as well because the doing is expressive of a spirit in tune with Christ's, which was one of utter devotion to others.

Let us see more clearly than to think we have done our whole duty as an "aid" society when we have made a few quilts or carpets, or raised a tidy sum by supper or bazaar. If we are unable to feel and to know that no one of our brothers or sisters is in need of what we can bestow, whether of this world's goods or of the spiritual ministrations of encouragement and faith, we are not living up to our greatest privileges. There are heights we have not climbed—heights where we may be in communion with the Creator of the universe and his matchless Son, who came as a physician to the sick ones of earth.

Dear sisters, read Sister Helen's paper on this phase of our work, which paper has been approved by Bishop McGuire, our honorary president, Sister Ruth Smith, and the executive committee of our general organization. It thus represents the attitude of these leading minds upon what our opportunities are in this field of work. Read it, we beg, earnestly and thoughtfully, and then proceed to apply the suggestions to your local field. Appoint your best and most tactful women upon this mission, and let them come together in prayer and earnestness of purpose, asking guidance from the Tender One on high, who will respond with an endowment sufficient for a successful achievement of his will in these matters.

Suggestions for Relief and Service Workers

In this time of our Nation's stress and turmoil, we are made to realize more fully each day how utterly selfish our lives in the past have been. No matter how much we have seemed to be doing for those around us, we are constantly discovering new ways in which we may be of service. For now the demand is becoming more and more insistent, the need more urgent, for service in every possible phase of activity. Not only are our pocketbooks asked to "do their bit," but our hands and our brains are being requisitioned in the great war for humanity and its rights. And we find, with the dawn of each new day, that it is possible for us to make some additional little sacrifice, in order to add our mite of strength to that of the millions comprising our Nation.

The need for organized relief is no less urgent within the church than it is in the affairs of the Nation at present. We are all interested in the Red Cross work, and rightfully so, for our boys in the training camps and in the trenches must be lovingly and carefully provided for. But within the church ranks our own must not be neglected in the meantime. In fact, as the scarcity of sugar, wheat, and other foodstuffs becomes more acute, the prices of all woollen and cotton materials continue to advance, it devolves upon us sisters to also "do our bit" in helping to provide for the less fortunate in our midst.

May I particularly emphasize two points in connection with the relief and service work (formerly carried on by the "aid societies").

First, it is very necessary that there should exist a perfect organization in carrying on this work; that is, great care should be taken to avoid any overlapping in the dispensing of relief in each community; also, to prevent any neglect of cases of dependence. Second—and no less important; perfect understanding and cooperation must exist between the relief and service workers and the officers of the branch. In some localities this last has been overlooked, unconsciously, perhaps, but the fact remains, nevertheless. Let the exigencies of the times draw us more closely together, so that the brethren may find that the sisters are not only willing, but capable, of taking some of the burdens of church work off their shoulders, and the sisters may see new avenues of service, hitherto unknown, opened up before them.

In accomplishing this, allow me to suggest that a committee of two, three, or five members be appointed from the local relief and service workers, whose duty and pleasure it shall be to make friendly, informal calls in all homes of Saints in the community. These calls should in no way be made "charity visits." On the other hand, the object of these visits should be merely social, for the purpose of promoting a feeling of fellowship and sociability; of tactfully suggesting their interest in the auxiliary work if opportunity is given; but above all, of impressing the fact that the branch as a whole is interested in each individual member. Especially should this prove efficacious in the case of members who have not shown active interest in church work.

If, in the course of a call, the womanly "intuition" of the visitors should discover a special need, whether it be financial, moral, or some such case as when a mother is able to purchase all needed materials for children's garments, but has not time or ability to make them up, this need should be mentally jotted down by the callers, to be presented to the society later as an abstract case, without mentioning name of the one needing assistance, for the purpose of discussing ways and means of giving aid under such circumstances. In the meantime, the case in hand should be brought to the attention of the pastor, bishop's agent, deacon, any one or all of these officers, according to the manner of organization existing in each particular local, to ascertain whether help is already being administered. By this concerted action of brethren and sisters, all especially interested in this line of work, the maximum of efficiency will be attained in this department. The brothers will soon learn that certain sisters in their branch have these matters under their direct surveillance, and will find it of great assistance to be able to confer with them, and to shift some of the burden to their willing and capable shoulders.

Sister Lula M. Sandy has written me of a plan which the Kansas City Stake has adopted, thinking it may well be adopted by other localities. All sisters interested in auxiliary work are enrolled in one of the four committees:

1. The committee on collection, the members of which collect all clothing that is usable.
2. Relief and distributions, for the purpose of investigating all cases reported, and distributing what is needed.
3. Home visiting committee, to visit the sick, also new members.
4. Ways and means, to provide means of meeting the needs for which there is nothing to supply. A general storehouse is kept; open one day each week. They have the full sanction and support of the bishop and president of the stake. This plan, where adopted by locals not within anyone of the stakes, should work with the sanction and cooperation of the local officers.

I might say in this connection, when sisters are giving their time and energy in this work of relief and service in an organized and efficient manner, they are entitled to aid in a financial way from officials of the church as well as having their full moral support, since the church has a fund particularly for "worthy poor." If whole-hearted cooperation exists between local officers and sisters in this department, this fund will be drawn upon, within reason, of course, and the sisters will be spared the necessity of cudgeling their brains for new ways of raising money with which to carry on their charitable work. And as a result, these sisters will have more time and strength to devote to the Sunday school, Religio, and other church activities.

There are other possibilities open to relief and service workers beside the one above mentioned. Now that Mr. Hoover is urging us to have "meatless," "wheatless," and "porkless" days and impressing upon all women the stern necessity for conserving the supply of foodstuffs, there are many of us who would gladly receive instructions from sisters who have been trained or are talented along this line. Classes might well be organized, meeting in the homes of the various sisters, where practical demonstrations could be given.

There is also opportunity for giving instruction in sewing and dressmaking, while those engaged in relief and service work are preparing garments for distribution. Some qualified sister should have charge of the remodeling and making of garments, so that there may be no waste of material.

In one of our city newspapers I read not long ago an urgent appeal by a well-known social worker to all women of the country to open their attics, take the old clothing that perhaps has belonged to a loved one gone before, and which has been kept because of loving memories, the toys and playthings stored away "to be mended and repaired some day," but never are; the old furniture that is "too good to throw away," but is no longer desired; garments out of style, but of too good material to waste. All such articles should be brought into the bright light of day, scrutinized carefully with the thought constantly in mind that such storing away and useless hoarding is just as criminal in these days of supreme hardship as is the needless storing of foodstuffs or fuel.

The "worthy poor" will suffer more acutely this winter, probably, than ever before, for there are so many demands for money and effort for the support and comfort of our soldier and sailor boys, and for the continuance of the war. Let us not, in our zealous anxiety for those overseas, overlook those in our very midst who must have our assistance if they are to get through the frigid weather safely. Let us all within the church search our attics and storerooms for discarded articles of all kinds, take them to some designated building in each locality, and hold a grand big "Rummage sale," allowing those who are able to buy what they need at a nominal cost, and give the rest to those who cannot pay.

In these days of intense activity, we are likely to overlook the fact that after the world war is over there will be a tremendous demand for trained and capable workers to take their places in the world's affairs, even more than at present. We must begin to prepare ourselves now, for the needs which will spring into existence later. Let us spend some of our time in study. Many splendid books are suggested in the Year Book, which deal with the very problems that are confronting our relief and service workers now, and which will be more and more insistent as the war progresses.

If you feel you cannot pause in your sewing, let one of your number read while your fingers are busy. Many kinds of sewing require very little brain activity. Let your brains be absorbing some useful information, rather than indulging in idle and often pernicious talk. If it is not a pleasure for you to study, let this be one of the sacrifices you lay on the altar, not only of the Nation, but of the church.

Thus, each one will be "doing her bit" and her "best," with God's help and approval.

Our Auxiliary at Scranton, Pennsylvania

Sister Elzettie Van Why, of Scranton, writes of the fine unity of effort there is among our sisters there. Sister John Lentell, as district organizer, has been able to use her good influence with the women and girls to telling effect. Sister Sarah Hawkins is district supervisor of the relief and service department. The members of the local "aid," Sister Millie Hawkins in charge, meet at ten o'clock each Wednesday for sewing, have lunch together, and at two o'clock get together in prayer, for the help, guidance, and blessings of the Father. They have thus enjoyed much of the Holy Spirit, and are drawn closely together in love and unity. Sister Hawkins also is in charge of a child welfare study class. A young woman's chapter and a band of Oriole girls help to swell the total membership of the auxiliary at this place to forty-seven, of which Sister Maria Jones is vice president, and Sister Armstrong secretary. They meet once a month, as a whole, and after business and program have a little lunch, and enjoy the companionship of each other. May the good Spirit guide these earnest workers, and open to them new and pleasant fields of usefulness in his vineyard.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Here's What Unity Will Do

EVIDENCE OF WHAT CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED BY COOPERATION OF LOCAL PRIESTHOOD AND MEMBERSHIP

On July 7, 1914, the writer was elected president of the Evergreen Branch, of Detroit, Michigan (now called First Detroit Branch), the only branch of the church at that time in the city. We began to hold priesthood meetings and counsel together concerning the work to be done in the branch, and how we might reach out and carry the gospel to those around us who were sitting in error's darkness. We started street meetings. This gave the priesthood courage and a chance to develop their talents, and I will say the priesthood was not alone in the street work, for many of the membership, including some of the sisters, came and helped in the song service.

There were several families of Saints living quite close together in the southeastern part of the city. They desired that an effort be made to open up the gospel in that section. Soon a little church was rented and a Sunday school and mission were started. Elder W. L. Bennett was asked to take charge of the mission, which he did willingly. He performed his work cheerfully and well, until it was organized into a branch, at which time Elder W. F. Smith was chosen president and it was called Second Detroit Branch.

Several of the priesthood, with their families and other families of Saints living in the northeastern part of the city got together, started a Sunday school, also church services. The branch declared it a mission and Elder Fred Simkiss was placed in charge. He served in that capacity until a branch was effected, at which time he was chosen president, and it was called Third Detroit Branch.

The Saints living away out in the southwestern part of the city had a long distance to come to church and it was expensive for them as well, therefore we thought a mission and Sunday school would be good moves for them and the work as well. It was started, Elder James Gault was placed in charge of the mission. After some months he resigned and Elder E. Yoder was placed in charge. He labored thus until a branch was organized. He was chosen president and it was called Fourth Detroit Branch.

Several families of Saints living near the home of the writer in the village of Highland Park (Highland Park is a village surrounded by the city of Detroit) got together at the home of the writer, talked over the possibility of opening up the work in this part, and a unanimous conclusion was reached that it could be done. A Sunday school and mission were started, with Elder Henry Williams in charge of the mission. He served in that capacity until it was organized a branch, and he was chosen president. It was called the Highland Park Branch.

In the little city of Orion, some thirty-five miles out of Detroit, there lived Brother D. M. Taylor, Sister Julia Hammond, and a few more Saints. They all held membership in the First Detroit Branch. (Evergreen it was then called.) They felt to take a more active part in the spread of the gospel than they hitherto had done, consequently they hired a hall and started a Sunday school. They appealed to the branch for some of the priesthood to come out and help them, as there was no one holding the priesthood living there. Elder W. J. Smith responded, and labored with them for some time, then the writer took up the work and went out most every Sunday for about two years, also F. Simkiss, J. Gault, W. L. Bennett, F. Bailey, K. Green and others lent assistance from time to time until a branch was organized. Brother Taylor ordained an elder, and chosen to preside.

In the city of Pontiac, twenty miles from Detroit, there lived a few families of Saints. We felt moved with a desire to open up the work at that place and thus encourage the Saints living there, and reach others if possible. W. F. Smith, F. Bailey, W. L. Bennett, R. D. Bennett, K. Green, the writer, and perhaps some others, held meetings there from time to time on the street, and in the homes of the Saints, until some holding the priesthood moved there from other parts of the country, among whom was Elder James Mead. A branch was finally organized, with Elder Mead president. In all these places additions by baptism were made from time to time. Additions by baptism and letters of removal continued in the First Detroit Branch so frequently that it has almost held its original numerical strength, notwithstanding the loss it sustained by the organization of the other branches. Thus six branches have been organized, wholly the result of local laborers, except the official act of organizing, which was done by the president of the mission and district.

I have not mentioned all the names of the brethren and sisters who helped in this good work, fearing lest our article would be too lengthy.

J. A. GRANT.

Eastern Montana

We have felt, many times, that we should send our bit from this Eastern Montana District; but have refrained that the space might be given to others. The conference year is nearing its end, others have not written from here, so I shall.

This has been my first year in this field. And, while I can say that we have a noble little district, I can say, too, that we have room for improvement. We have some of the best Saints in the world and some that could be if they only would, but we have found this to be true in each of our other fields of labor as well, so we are not discouraged. We look forward to the coming year with fond ambitions. It took most of the past year to get acquainted with the district and its needs. There have been calls that could not be attended to and I trust the Saints will understand. Perhaps next year we can arrange to save time, and work to a better advantage. We have thought of you and have wanted to be with you all.

We have four branches at present; each is inland. One is fifty miles from a Railroad, one twenty, one twelve, and the other about eight. We do not have the graded highways, or the electric lines, either, but we get there just the same! Yes, several have cars now, and that is making a big change in our missionary work.

I was so amused when I read Brother Dutton's letter from Illinois that I had to read the funny part aloud—excuse me, Jasper.

Let me see: he said they were having an awful blizzard; it was "twenty-two below zero" that morning. Whew! That was cold for you "tenderfoots"; but how would you like to step off the train some nice winter morning in Montana and find it sixty below? Or, how would you like to have gone to church with me the other morning at Andes, when the night before Brother Vail's thermometer had to be turned upside down so the mercury could keep on going down?

You don't see how we manage to keep going? Well, we are hindered some, we must confess; but we manage it something like this: My brother and a neighbor brought me to the train after the holidays—our home is twenty miles inland—we left at eight in the morning and got in town at five that afternoon. We had four horses on an empty sled, had to unhitch two or three times to get them out of the snowbanks, etc., but we got in all right.

Cold? Well, the first two or three hours my feet were cold, but they were giving me no trouble when we got in; in fact, I felt as though they were not. They were frozen; also froze my face; but I preached twice the next day, just the same; about the only difference was, I was not so lively on my feet, and it hurt some to smile. Yes, Jasper, if you knew just how much we enjoy that "twenty-below" weather, you would not blame us for feeling amused about your "big blizzard."

There is one thing, however, that I cannot say that we have you beat on, and that is the "hospitality of the Rogers home at Deselm." We have many homes as good, but none better. I will remember them.

Yes, this conference year is drawing near its close. We take a retrospective view and when we think of those we tried to help but they would not; when we think of those who, with Esau, have sold their birthrights in the kingdom; when we think of those that promised to help and have not; when we think of how God's kingdom has suffered because of such, we are made to feel sad, and wonder if in the coming year we cannot do more to better these conditions. Saints, let us try again, together, to build up the work that is intrusted to our care. Then there are things that we think of, work that has been done, Saints that have been loyal, homes made happy and glad, hearts softened; then we are glad that we have labored with you and have had our part. Such thoughts give us new ambitions and greater purposes. We will continue with you.

Having found the peculiar conditions and the extraordinary difficulties that our people have to meet in this district, and then noting the success they have attained, I have wondered just how great our work would be, had Saints in some other places where everything was in their favor, been so loyal, true, and ambitious.

It may be of interest to some to know that the work in Glasgow, Montana, is making good progress. The hireling ministry of that place have thought to do us harm; but, alas, they have but turned the people to us. Strange, that the Devil doesn't learn that he can do us the most harm by keeping his mouth shut!

A Methodist preacher first paid us his respects. Our people went to hear him recite. We behaved splendidly, save when he said that old Joe went about with a pocketful of sand telling folks that it was the golden plates; but I made apology for their smiles, which made a sort of buzz noise, when we replied to his lecture the following night. I told the several hundred that came to hear the other side of the story that our people should not have laughed at that statement; but rather pity the man; still it was not so sad, for anyone that would believe such simple stuff as that would never be held accountable.

We have some very exemplary Saints in Glasgow. Brother J. C. Page, former missionary of this district, is located there; he is caring for the work nicely. The missionary always enjoys his labor there. He is helped in every way. Many good things could be said of different ones at that place. I will only ask for space to mention the home of Sister Lutie Davis and her father, the missionary home; to go there is to leave there a better person. If such burdens as Sister Davis has had to bear would make us like her we could well say we are ready. Oh! for more such through-and-through Saints everywhere!

At present I am enjoying the hospitality of Brother and Sister Freie, at Dodson, Montana, which is truly a pleasure. This is just over the line in the Western District. I came here in response to several urgent calls from them last summer. They have a homestead out twenty miles. Brother Freie has charge of an elevator here in Dodson. He drives back and forth in his car during the good road season. They live in town during the winter.

We went out to the homestead last summer with them and opened the work there. A certain Dunkard preacher had a homestead near them. On this homestead he had pitched a gospel tent, which he used all summer for regular Sunday services. Sister Freie had been one of his principal teachers; she asked him for the use of his tent, which he willingly gave. I told them the first night that I was not of a compromising nature when it came to the Church of Christ; that either we were wrong or right, and what was true in our case was true in every case; that there would have to be the kind of surrender made that General Grant spoke of, by some one, before there would be unity; that we intended presenting our reasons at once. We continued for about sixteen nights. If we were wrong we wished to know; we were ready to compare religions. We thanked Mr. Dunkard Preacher for his generosity, and proceeded at once to straighten out his theology, not that we went after him in a negative manner, but just preached the simple truths, which automatically did the work. He seemed to think it more blessed to give than to receive, so continued to starve. At the end of two weeks he thought that plenty of gospel had been preached for some time to come, in that part, so dismissed us and pulled down his tent.

It might be well to state that we baptized six fine people at the close of those meetings; also to state that the home class workers have been busy and enrolled these six. They are all waiting for spring, that we may pitch our own tent and fish some more.

The minister gave us to understand that he did not want the kingdom divided here in Dodson, so we cannot use their church. The Freie home is open for gospel work, so we are arranging for meetings in it. Our first one is to be to-night. I am glad that we can't have the church. There are a lot of things much easier to tell in your own house. It takes a lot of courage to go into other peoples' churches and preach their funeral sermons before they are dead. We await the outcome.

We expect to visit the Saints at Havre after these meetings. From there Brother Freie and I expect to visit Great Falls, over one Sunday. Then to Valley, Idaho. The weather is so bad and uncertain here, just now, that we do not expect to work more in the rural districts for a while.

I feel very close to the Saints at Valley Branch, Idaho. I went there three years ago as per direction in prophecy; baptized nearly forty. There were three ordained and a branch organized. They have been writing for "Brother Bronson" almost constantly since my appointment was changed to this field. I am on my way there and feel as happy as does one when going home to mother and loved ones after a long absence.

It will be hard to turn back home again without first visiting others in the Spokane District, but we fear we will not dare take the time. We think of you, though, Saints, and pray for your welfare. We rejoice with you that you have been blessed by having the missionary that is with you this year, and while I would like to see you all and preach for you, we feel that Brother Dan will be all and much more to you than I could be. I spend many happy hours thinking of the good times we spent together, and many times I silently ask God to reward you for the many kindnesses you have shown me. I labored with you, with heavy trials which you knew not of, but you helped to make it possible for me to bear them.

Will return to this district in time to hold a series of meetings at Glasgow, also Fairview, before conference time. The work at Fairview is well represented by the few we have there. They are not gaining in number but are taking care of what they have.

Before closing I wish to make mention of the Vida Saints. We have no branch there, but they have regular services. We could have a branch. The Constance brothers are caring for the work there, and they are splendid young men. They come from a good family and the most of the family lives at Vida. We held a short series there last summer and baptized three adults, two young men and a lady. Were supposed to hold forth there again last fall but could not make it. Will have to ask the Saints to be patient with us and we will manage as soon as we can to help them.

Have made plans several times to visit the Outlook Branch, but each time something has happened to prevent. I have you in mind, Saints, and will get there, too, some time.

In closing, let me say to the Saints, especially of this district, that we voted at our last conference to have a reunion next summer. It is to be held at Glasgow, we think; the conference will be held during the early part of the reunion. This will be our first reunion. It must be a success! Will you be there to do your part? Truly the past year was a hard year on us financially; but if we start to plan now we will be able to attend. Because of the crop failure, I opposed it for the coming summer; but since the vote was in favor of it, we will do our part to make it a success. Most are within driving distance. You know, we drive a hundred miles several times each fall hauling our harvest to market, that the Lord has blessed us with. You will see more about the reunion, time and place, latter from those directly in charge of it. We will be pleased to have friends from other districts plan on visiting us. Will assure you a hearty welcome and a good time.

I will be glad to help anyone in anyway possible, and, I think I can say that I love this work with all my heart. It has meant much to me. It reached down and picked me up. I have made mistakes since then, but God knows I repent of them. It has helped me to be what I am and has given me ideals and ambitions that will enable me to some day stand with the redeemed in Christ. My work has not been altogether pleasant, because of wickedness in the world and in the church; but it has been so heavenly pleasant at times that we often weep for joy in living our past over in thought.

Very earnestly,

ANDES, MONTANA.

What Do You Think of the Gathering?

While reading the article, "Church progress measured by ours," by H. O. Smith in HERALD of December 26, my thoughts went back a few years to the time when I was asking most every Saint I met his ideas of Zion and the gathering. I had been isolated from Saints and church privileges for about nine years and most all I had learned of the gathering to Zion was what I read in the church papers. I longed to be among Saints, where I could talk of such things.

We moved to this country four years ago, where there was a small bunch of Saints, and judge of my surprise on inquiring, to learn that no one seemed to know or care about the gathering. Various were the answers I received. One brother told me it would never be in our day. Another good old sister told me she had never been in the States and had no desire to go there. I was a little surprised that people who had been in the church for a number of years would talk that way, but I kept right on with my investigation, when an elder that had preached for more than twenty years came among us, and I thought, Surely now I will learn something of the gathering.

Judge of my surprise when he told me we had just as much of Zion right here as they had in Independence. He went on to tell of the troubles they had there, without one word of encouragement. I began to think it a myth and that there was nothing to it, when Brother T. J. Jordan and Elder Davis came to hold a two-day meeting. I remember well when I first asked Brother Jordan his opinion. He had just finished hanging a chart. He pointed to it, and said, "I am going to preach on that this afternoon."

I never heard a more powerful sermon. At its close Brother Jordan came and asked me if I was satisfied. I told him that I was perfectly satisfied, and from that day Zion had become a reality to me, and no force of argument can change my mind; there is a real Zion and if I am faithful I will one day have a home there. Elders visiting among Saints far from Zion should be careful how they explain things, for the majority of Saints think the elders should know, and when they have differences of opinion they should be careful not to have the Saints misunderstand. Brother J. W. Peterson gave me the best advice I have received along that line. He said to listen to everything and use my own judgment.

Saints, awake; do not sit down content with the little world around you. Investigate, read the papers, find out for yourselves, ask the Lord to direct you, and if you really want to know, if you really want to go to Zion, it will be made known to you and the Lord will open the way.

But if you sit content with what you have; if you look at the material things of life and think you can make more money some other place; if you keep saying it is not time yet to go, you will never go. Zion needs men and women to help build it up. It wants workers, not shirkers, and the time is now. As Brother Smith said in his article, that "each person is an integral part of the church, and the church can make progress only as its integral parts make progress, and that as each member fails to take advantage of the privilege the church offers him, just that long will the church fail to reach its ideal, and will fail until each person finds his or her place and fills it, and fills it well."

Let us not wait to see what some one else will do; what others do and leave undone will not affect you or me. It is what we do individually that counts. Zion will be redeemed and all who take part in it must find their places and fill them, and fill them well.

Sincerely,

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN.

Life Insurance a Necessity?

Some time ago I wrote your valuable paper regarding life insurance. I think that I owe it to myself and friends, who are of the same opinion as myself, to say a few words and forever keep the peace regarding this subject.

It is all very well to write as some do, because by the tenor of the letters we can easily observe they are written from the standpoint of self-centered security. It is a very serious subject to the toiling masses of humanity.

Another point I would like you to note is my previous question, which no one has answered. What am I to do if the church has not gone forward trusting in God? etc. Am I wrong in investing in a perfectly legitimate investment, yearly, a small sum solely with the object of protecting those dependent on my efforts? It is all very well for men in the church to decry a system; call it human if they will, but when they have not something better to offer in the church, I think we had better leave criticism out.

It is also quite easy for those who are not in the ranks of the toiler, the six-day-a-week machine of the capitalist, to write lightly of such matters as life insurance; but let them get down to facts, let them take their places in the ranks and toil on year by year to raise a family and educate the members of the same to take their places in the struggle for existence from day to day, and they will see with a clearer vision that an endowment policy of life insurance will give them that sense of security and benefit of which I speak. They will cease to ridicule in light and questionable utterances the legitimate and laudable principles found therein.

In closing, let me say an endowment policy gives a return of about ninety-five per cent.

Yours fraternally,

WILLIAM B. BARTLEMAN.

Insurance

In several issues of the HERALD have appeared articles in reference to life insurance, and what seems to the writer to be the most important part is overlooked, that of giving assistance in a financial way to the widow and orphan, and others in times of sickness and distress, because of accidents. For whether it is life insurance or accident and sickness insurance, it all involves the same principles, that of giving assistance in time of need.

A missionary that would go into a community and tear down the religious house that a man was living in, would be a very poor one. The true missionary builds the beautiful gospel house and then invites his friend to leave his old house that is dilapidated and weatherbeaten, and move into a good house. Many of our brethren who love their wives and children are anxious to have their loved ones in a safe condition, and so get into the best house they can find, and so soon as the Lord's house is built they will move into it, or in other words, when the Lord's plan is put into operation, they will not remain in worldly institutions. It would not be fair to put all the blame on the chief officers of the church; neither would it be fair to lay all the blame on the membership.

In 1832 the Lord said the whole church was under condemnation because the Saints had treated lightly his commandments. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.) So we had better not show a spirit of selfishness but equalize the burden and say we are all to blame for not carrying out more fully the Lord's purposes. A few concrete cases will show how greatly we need the Lord's plan in operation to meet the ever pressing needs of our people.

A brother whom I have known for many years as an honest, industrious man, ever trying to do his part in the Lord's work, has a sick daughter in his home. She is taken to the Sanitarium; with good care and the Lord's help she returns to her home, the charges have been very reasonable, but it will take his daily wages for about two months to pay the bill. During that time the family will need to make many sacrifices and go without some of their just needs, and they could not help as much as usual in the Lord's work.

Let us look at a case from a worldly viewpoint. A brother is working for one of the railroad companies. He pays twenty-five cents a month for hospital fees. He is taken sick; the company has a ward in the hospital; he is taken there; he has good care given by the nurses and doctors, and when he returns to his home he is not in debt to the hospital. He was not an object of charity. The hospital got pay for the service it had rendered. If all our people that could be greatly benefited by going to the Sanitarium, could go, in less than five years it would be necessary to double the capacity of that institution. How many happy mothers there would be if they could stay in the maternity ward for three or four weeks, under the care of good nurses and doctors, and when they left the bill would be paid, and they would feel as carefree as though they were millionaires, and their husbands would not have to take one or two months' wages to pay the bill, and the wife could come home well and strong, ready to perform her household duties.

We must get away from the idea of getting something for nothing. Let us teach and practice that all that is done for anyone is paid for. Is there any just reason why we cannot be as wise as the world, and make ample provision to care for the sick and afflicted ones, and in such a way that all shall feel that they are equal and not getting something as the victim of some one's benevolence?

The following occurred in one of our large city branches. A father went to his work as usual one morning, and by an accident he was killed. He had no insurance. The widow was left with several children to care for and it was necessary to take the oldest girl out of school to help earn the living for the rest of the family. The widow had a hard struggle to care for her little ones. Nighttime often found her tired and weary, and the girl was deprived of a common school education. One time when asked why she did not attend the Religio, her reply was: "I must stay at home to help mamma do her work." Would it not be the better way to stop showing up the weak things of the worldly institutions, and finding fault with our brethren who make an honest effort to care for their dependent ones in time of sickness and death; and all, officers and members, work together to try to put into operation the Lord's plan, so that sorrow, sickness, and hunger may be removed from among our people? When that time comes it will be a jubilee year for many whose bodies are weary and whose hearts are sad. The most of our people have their hearts in the right place, but our heads are wrong. We do not do the things that will bring about the desires of our hearts. Some dream while others work. We must all be workers.

About the Meteors

The meteor that flashed over western Iowa last week, threw off fragments ahead of the Atkins automobile between Little Sioux and Mondamin, and near the Fred Ehlert farm six miles west of Woodbine, between Neola and Council Bluffs, and according to dispatches, the meteor bursted on the south line of the State about six o'clock in the evening.

A meteor traveling from the south to the northeast was reported to have passed over Saint Joseph and that a blazing fragment fell near a house on the corporation line. At the same time a meteor traveling in an easterly direction swept over Topeka, Kansas, and then over Kansas City like some gigantic skyrocket. From Peoria, Illinois, a meteor is reported to have passed over the city in a westerly direction and attracted much attention; and from Grinnell, Iowa, a fragment of a meteor was found by school children, imbedded in the frozen ground with the snow melted for a short distance around the spot where the fragment fell.

All of these different meteors were observed about the same time, and the thought prevails that the earth swept into a zone where the meteors floated in space, and that when attracted toward the earth they traveled in different directions, and were seen by the light induced by friction, or the resistance set up by the atmosphere.

Riley-Jackson Debate

Commenced at Tapp school, ten miles from here, (Fisher, Arkansas,) January 8, for twelve sessions, usual propositions. J. T. Riley affirmed first for the Reorganized Church.

The first three days was nothing unusual, except we listened to one of the most boastful and impertinent Missionary Baptist preachers that has fallen to our lot to hear, Mr. D. N. Jackson.

On the Baptist proposition Mr. Jackson sought advantage by his display of Greek education and eloquence, mixed with such nicknames as piggy-puppy, honey, falsifier, proselyter, and a lot of slang. Well, the Saints were much surprised to see how tenaciously those people cling to some of their God-dishonoring doctrine, viz: once in grace, always in grace; infant damnation, etc. Mr. Jackson made no defense against our charge that the Baptist Church is permitting polygamy in certain countries now.

We have heretofore held two debates with the Christian people, one at Fisher, and we thought them far wrong, but we now conclude they are as far above the Baptists as the clouds are above the earth.

When Mr. Jackson's church was up for examination he spent most of his time hammering at the Saints, or, as he called it, "blowing up Mormonism," which seemed to take with his followers. But this neighborhood has quite a number of newcomers, very intelligent people, of German descent, who took a decided stand in our favor, expressing themselves as pleased with the angel message, and disgusted with the way we were opposed.

So Mr. Jackson continued on the Book of Mormon, using his transcript carelessly, such as saying that Christ should be born in Jerusalem and misquoting otherwise, till finally Brother Riley told him that if he were not satisfied with his three days on that subject (Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants), that he, Riley, would sign up for thirty days on it, to which Jackson replied that he would sign up to repeat the debate, six days, at Fisher, sometime future. So 'tis signed.

Saints that attended feel encouraged.

Organization of a Branch at East Independence

A branch was organized at East Independence station on Sunday, January 27, in response to a request of the Saints of that place and in harmony with action of the Holden stake conference. This organization had been authorized some time ago but had been delayed until the present time. The first effort was when in company with Bishop Hunt the stake president made a trip to East Independence and found the streets so impassable, and many in the community quarantined on account of measles, that they were unable to call a sufficient number together to proceed with the organization.

There are forty-four members living in this community and near-by territory, and being a rural community their demands are somewhat different than those of the city. It is hoped that with this organization the community interests will be furthered and that which stands for betterment in the rural communities will be encouraged by the Saints who are living there. Efforts should be made to better the environments of our producing class. At no time has the agriculturist and live stock raiser occupied a more prominent place in the history of our Nation than at the present. We feel that every encouragement that could be offered to those following this profession to make their business a better one and their surrounding conditions an improvement should be extended.

A complete corps of officers was selected. Brother H. J. Friend was chosen presiding elder; J. F. Weston, priest; Jacob Friend, teacher; H. U. Bradt, deacon. The others of the ministry of the branch are Elder Robert Smith, Charles Friend, and S. Farrow. It is understood that each one of the ordained men are to be active in their calling and that those elected are chosen to act in harmony with the provision made in the book of rules. Sister H. J. Friend was elected secretary and recorder; Brother Robert Smith member of the library board.

This makes three branches in the Holden Stake located in Jackson County. We have a community at Sibley which we trust ere long will have a sufficient development to justify an organization. Brother R. B. Cook has charge of the work there by appointment of the stake presidency. There is also a small band of Saints located between Lees Summit and Blue Springs, known as the Fairview settlement. Most of the Saints living there are members of the Lees Summit Branch but are quite distant from that point. We will be glad to have some one move into this community and assist the Saints there who are striving to maintain their Sunday school sessions. The other branches are located at Lees Summit, Elder Calvin DePuy in charge; and Grandview, Elder C. V. Hopkins as presiding officer.

Saints who contemplate moving in harmony with the divine instruction given, to seek homes in Jackson and surrounding counties through the advice and direction of the bishopric, we trust will bear in mind the location of these branches. There may be more fertile soil found outside of Jackson and surrounding counties, but for some reason our heavenly Father has specified a certain locality which should be built up first, to the extent that the Saints are able, in harmony with the direction of those who are set out in the law to advise in these matters.

Referring to the soil located within the boundaries of the Holden Stake, as to its power to produce, it would be proper, we believe, to state that we have no apology to offer. The county ranking first in the State in agriculture is located in the stake.

At the Farmers' Week corn exhibit held at Columbia, Missouri, by the State Agricultural College, the award for the largest acreage for corn grown in Missouri in 1917 went to a Holden farmer. The prize ear of corn for the State was raised by a Pettis County farmer. Pettis County is also located in the Holden Stake. The question, however, is not to locate where one may produce the largest ear of corn, but rather to locate where he can be of the greatest value to the work.

Sincerely,
D. J. KRAHL.

Curtis-Warlick Debate

At present Elder J. F. Curtis and I are associated as servants of the church in ministering to its needs. We took part in the dedication of the church at Davidson, Oklahoma, January 6, and held a series of meetings the same week, attended by large and interested audiences. A challenge was issued at this time to us by the Church of Christ, to meet one of their representatives in public discussion on church propositions. Under the circumstances existing it appeared to us to be wise to accept. The debate began January 14 and closed the 20th, two sessions being held the last day. Elder Curtis looked after our interests, and Evangelist Joseph S. Warlick represented the Church of Christ. A lively interest was manifested in the controversy, by the townspeople, and the surrounding country was deeply stirred. Large numbers attended the debate, some from a great distance.

Evangelist Warlick, who is a veteran and professional debater, instead of dealing with principles spent much of his time in attacking character. By so doing he disclosed weakness and paid tribute to the strength of our church. It is fair to assume that an opponent uses the best evidence in his possession. The audience did not look with favor upon his resort to personalities. The champion of the Church of Christ plead that he was uninspired, nevertheless he should be able to see that an attack on character does not dispose of principles—a principle remains true or false regardless of the character of any man.

Evangelist Warlick's attacks consisted almost entirely of poisoned gas. He did not get through our first line of defense. The work of God given to the world through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and his coadjutors stood unaffected after all the assaults, in all its grandeur, sublimity, and truth.

Brother Curtis did well in the debate. Being gentlemanly at all times in his demeanor, humble, and ably taking his part in the discussion, favorable comment was soon heard from the business, educational, and leading classes of the community. At the close many expressions of appreciation of Brother Curtis's work and methods came from members of the Church of Christ. A number there are near the door of the kingdom of God.

Professor Wharton, principal of the high school in Davidson, acted as chairman, and performed his part in a creditable manner.

The press in Davidson, after making reference to addresses delivered by us one day in the chapel of the school, added: "A more interesting and pleasant hour has not been spent in the Davidson school auditorium." This reveals a kindly attitude.

Since leaving Davidson our time in part has been spent in Dallas, Houston, and San Antonio. We have found the Saints in the South in possession of big hearts, and given to hospitality.

The country is suffering seriously in places from extremely dry weather.

The aviation and army camps here show Uncle Sam is engaging in war preparations on a gigantic scale. The whole reveals a wonderful system of organization.

We have been blessed in our work, and are hopeful of the final triumph of the church and its work.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

PAUL M. HANSON.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, 175 Stroud Road.

Editors Herald: Just a line to say we are still alive though we have had three years and nearly one half of war. Our little branch in Gloucester is still trying to hold on, but we should like to see the end of the war, and hope when it does come we shall see peace established on such terms as will open the way for the gospel to go to all nations.

The Gloucester Branch has five of its members serving in the British Army; namely, Elder A. J. Trapp, Brethren W. W. Harris, William Stokes, A. A. Long, and Carl Stamer; the first three are in France. The last-named have been, but have since returned. We felt the loss of Brother A. J. Trapp, who was one of our active branch officers, also our district secretary. We pray for their safe return. War conditions have prevented us from making any great progress; we are struggling to hold on to our organizations.

Pressure of war work prevents us from being more active, and consequently the branch has to suffer to that extent. We trust conditions will be no worse. We still have pleasant memories of the association and labors of Elders J. W. Rush-ton, William Lewis, E. B. Morgan, and others who are in the United States, and trust we shall have the pleasure of the association of our minister in charge, Elder U. W. Greene, again before the year is out.

May God grant this year will bring peace among the nations and prosperity to the work of God. With good wishes to all the friends in the States,

Your brother in bonds,

E. J. TRAPP.

RAVENWOOD, MISSOURI, January 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been requested to write a short letter from this part of the Lord's vineyard, having recently been located here through correspondence with our bishop, Brother B. J. Scott, whose address is 307 North Sixteenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. We have unfailing confidence in him as a servant of God.

Ravenwood is a nice little town of about five hundred people, located on the Chicago Great Western Railroad, in the eastern part of Nodaway County, northwestern Missouri, within the boundary of Far West Stake. It is historic ground as you know, with one thing noticeable: the people are very favorable to the work and prejudice is largely removed.

The industries of Nodaway County are primarily agricultural and it is one of the leading counties in the State in the output of agricultural products. Combined stock raising and general farming, consisting mainly of grain production, is practiced through the county, and the general productiveness of the soil may to some extent be attributed to this system.

Small fruit and vegetables of all kinds do well and are grown in quantities sufficient to supply local demands. There is a considerable variation in the price of farm lands, the range being from $75 to $200 an acre. The average price probably would be $100 an acre. We have a nice little branch, with a building three miles northeast of Ravenwood, and will welcome any Saints who may contemplate moving Zionward. If we can be of service to you, please feel at liberty to write us, our service will be free. [Saints should always confer with the bishopric in accordance with the law, as well, before making a change.—EDITORS.] We will gladly do all in our power to assist you to find a suitable location. There are a number of farms for sale near the church. Our branch is a live one, although few in numbers, and ably presided over by Brother Joseph Powell, assisted by B. F. Powell.

We have unwavering confidence in this great latter-day work and firmly believe conditional protection will be given those who seek it. Zion is surely your protection. May the way be opened for you to come.

Very sincerely,
L. EARL ERTER.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, January 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: For the Saints of this branch the year has begun with several features that are encouraging and which furnish cause for thanksgiving. In the first place the paying off of the church debt in November lifted a great burden, so that we can reach out in other directions with our resources. The newly elected officers of the branch, Sunday school and Religio seem to have taken on new life, and we are hoping for a year marked with results along all lines.

We are expecting soon to begin a series of revival services under the direction of our pastor, Brother Goodrich, and our district president, Brother Harrington. They will be assisted by other speakers of the district. Arrangements have not yet been completed, nor the time definitely set, but we are trying by prayer and fasting to prepare ourselves so that we may be able, through the effort of all and the Lord's help, to accomplish some good at that time.

Brother Goodrich and Brother Inman occupied at the Laguna mission last Sunday, and Brother Harrington delivered the morning address here. We were glad to see Sister Emma Burton in the audience after her severe illness. Sister Burton is much loved and we miss her when she is not among us. She wishes me to say that as soon as she is able she will reply to the many holiday remembrances received from friends far and near.

Our Sunday school Christmas offering was $134.10. We are quite proud of this showing and have voted to try to double it next year.

Last week some of our members attended a lecture on "Mormonism" by a Mr. Biederwolf who is conducting a revival campaign here. Brother Goodrich had previously called upon the ex-evangelist to ascertain his intentions in regard to our church and inform him that some of us would be present. He tried to be fair, though it seemed to require some effort. Of course he told the usual slanderous stories about "Joe" Smith, but after each false statement he would say it "might not be true, but so history states." Needless to say he had gone only to our enemies for his information. He said that the Reorganized Church denied that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and if anyone could give him reliable information upon that point, he would be glad to have it. Brother Goodrich spoke up and said, "We can give you plenty of information."

Mr. Biederwolf actually warned his people thus: "My friends, don't you ever allow yourselves to be drawn into an argument with a Mormon elder, for he will just whip you to a frazzle on your Bible." He also conceded that "aside from their belief in the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith, the Reorganized Church is about as orthodox as any."

On December 14, Brother Goodrich, assisted by Brother Carmichael, conducted the funeral of Sister Annie Best, wife of Brother Newton Best. Sister Best was almost seventy-two and had resided in southern California since 1868. She was the mother of nine children, seven of whom with her husband, survive her.

June, the little daughter of Brother and Sister Goodrich, has been quite ill for some time, suffering from what appeared to be an attack of typhoid. She seems to be much improved now and we hope her recovery may be permanent.

Later, since writing the foregoing, word has been received that Brother Rushton will be with us on January 27, to begin our revivals, remaining during their continuance. We trust that the Saints, especially those interested in the work in this section, will unite with us in our prayer that if the Lord has sheep here, they may hear his voice at this time.

925 West Third Street. OLIVE M. CLAPP.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, January 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our conference is past. We will long remember the friendly counsel of the members of the Twelve who were with us. Brother Daniel Macgregor gave us an excellent discourse the last night of the conference on the question of loyalty to the Government.

Our Christmas offering for the past year amounted to $335.38. Although we are pleased that our offering should reach this mark, we are not satisfied. Our Sunday school is already working on the 1918 offering with the determination of placing it above that of 1917.

Our pastor, Brother S. S. Smith, who is also president of the district, has recently returned from Pasco, Washington, where he reports having a debate with a Seventh-Day Adventist on the Sabbath question. He left the Saints and nonmembers of that place feeling good about the outcome.

Four new members were presented at our last business meeting for membership in the Spokane Branch.

Our missionary, Brother Newby, is now reported in Okanogan County. He has done some effective work in the district in the past year. Brother O. D. Shirk was with us at several meetings. The last night of his stay he delivered an interesting lecture on the Book of Mormon.

Brother S. S. Smith has now gone to Kellogg, Idaho, where the Saints have secured the Congregational church for him to speak in. This is a mining town in the Cour d'Alenes. He expects to visit the different branches of the district shortly.

Brother Charles Crabb was chosen president of our Religio for the coming year. Much interest has been shown in this work, and steps have been taken for a Book of Mormon normal class.

We are favored in having with us Brother Oscar Case, whose sermons are good and afford much cheer and comfort for the Saints.

CORRESPONDENT.

NAVELENCIA, CALIFORNIA, January 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: A few words of cheer and courage from one of the lately organized branches may be of benefit. The Dinuba, California, Branch was organized October 22, 1917, with much of the Spirit of the Master attending us.

There being no preachers among us, Brethren Carmichael, Brooner, Powell, and Damron, from the Fresno and Tulare branches, have kindly filled the deficiency, and the Spirit of God as promised in his word abundantly attended them. The voice of the Spirit came through Brother Carmichael, giving us much encouragement for the humbleness and faithfulness of our membership, and also special words of encouragement to individual members, and a promise of active duty, thus showing that God is pleased with our faithfulness to duty.

Our Christmas offering amounted to $70.58, which we certainly feel proud of, considering the fact that it has been accumulated in a little over two months, and several of our members are so situated that they can take no active part.

The last member to be baptized, Sister Clark, has gone to live at Round Mountain, California, and I am sure that any of the elders that can visit her home will receive a royal welcome, as well as probably find a new opening for gospel work, the writer being impressed that other members of her family will accept the true gospel as again restored to earth.

Elder John F. Miles and mother have just located near us and will be of much spiritual benefit to us. Our brother is ever on the alert for active service.

Our pressing need is for a permanent place of meeting, but the need has been placed before the Presiding Bishop and no doubt we will soon be permitted to move forward.

A. S. VOTAW.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, January 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our pastor and president of the stake requested me to write a letter to the HERALD or Ensign. This is the second time he has asked me, and said I owed a yearly letter to the HERALD. Probably I do, but am not yet convinced of it. I'll think about it. True, I get great good from the HERALD. I have been a reader of it for nearly forty-four years; commenced to take it at once after baptism, and have taken it and been a reader ever since. What a wonderful sight of good I have read in all these years!

I told Brother Krahl I would like to be in the mood for writing when I did write. Next morning I was thinking over it, and concluded if I never made the effort I would never know when the mood was on me, and things began to come to me to write. I hope it may be interesting to some to read. At least, I have three objects in writing. First, to please Brother Krahl; second, to please myself; and third, to please others, especially those I have met and known in the gospel work.

The Holden Stake has been organized one year and a half to-day, and during that time many changes and events of great worth have taken place. Such a consecration of many individuals who have done work which was educational and uplifting, bringing forth heretofore hidden talent, waiting to be developed. And the greatest change of all is in our worthy president, which was altogether a new work to him, having so many years previously worked in the Sunday school and Bishop's office. If he was crude, I am sure all of us were crude also. Thereby we are coming up together. I have tried to keep in touch with the work done in the stake and by close observation I rejoice to find a betterment in the work done.

We have had all manner of good things here in Holden. I wish to mention some of them. Will commence with the Sunday school.

They have made a great effort to swell the Christmas offering. A few weeks ago, when our worthy superintendent, C. F. Scarciff, called the primaries into the main auditorium, together with the intermediates, he explained more fully the object of the Christmas offering, and asked if they were willing to vote to do away with the Christmas treat of candy, and take the money and give to the offering. When they put it to a vote to give fifteen dollars out of the Sunday school fund, every little hand went up quickly, showing how willing they were. Looking on, tears blinded my eyes, seeing the foundation laid for future sacrifice and service. The Sunday school is making great effort to come up higher. At the election of officers, there were six other superintendents elected over the various departments, to cooperate with the head superintendent, lightening the burden borne by one heretofore.

It does one good to see how cheerfully they all go to work. The inclemency of the weather has hindered the teachers and officers being in full swing, as they will be later on. Efforts are being made to revive the Religio, which has been at a rather low ebb since the severe winter has set in.

The choir, I can hardly find words of praise for its uplift. They have rendered the cantata "Bethlehem," which is a joy to those in the church as well as many outside the church. They are working in earnest to come up higher. Because of sickness, the orchestra has not advanced as they desired, but in time they will be more efficient in their work.

One eventful day, the last Sunday in the old year, 1917, will live in the memory of many, through all the years to come. Two of our soldiers and three of our college boys were home on a visit, and the busy brain of our pastor had planned a surprise for the audience by having in the choir loft twenty young men rendering the song service, assisted only by the chorister and pianist, seven of the twenty taking part, six making short talks, and one singing a solo. One had charge of the service entirely; one spoke for Religio and Sunday school; one spoke for Graceland College; one talked of soldier life at Camp Funston; one talked of the University of Missouri; and a solo by one; and last, but not least, one spoke valiantly for the church.

During the last song, the writer of this lost all sight of the song and service that had been, and offered up a most heartfelt prayer for all that bunch of boys, that the good Father would throw the protecting arms around each one of them in their vocations of life, preserving them, and that they might give the best that is in them, and that some, at least, might be polished shafts in presenting the glorious gospel to the people, bringing in many sheaves, that they, too, may taste the sweets of eternal life. We have had some of the very best of preaching in the last year, which was of a very helpful nature, and uplifting, various members of the priesthood being sent out to preach in many places throughout the stake. Our corps of priests, with some help from the elders, has made a record of visiting in their respective offices that has never yet been attained in the seventeen years I have lived here, which makes us feel proud of the effort made.

Other officers in the branch, such as deacon, secretary, and librarian, have made an upward leap, which is gratifying to all; and our worthy teacher, being handicapped by business, has not been able to render such service as he desired. Among other good things, we had a two-week course of lectures by Brother Dwyer; in all twenty. Besides his night lectures, two Bible lectures in the day, one to the auxiliary, two to the high school, one at the home. We learned many things from his lectures, and think he learned many things from being with the Holden Saints, one especially, to love them all.

The Sunday after he left was sacrament day, the service being in the forenoon. The priesthood always hold their meeting at two p. m. At the same hour the mothers' problem meeting is held in the other room, after which is a Bible research class. The committee on program for mothers' meeting thought nothing more suitable than for each one to tell what benefit the lectures had been to them, and there being a goodly number present, most everyone had something very profitable and edifying to say. So much so that our dear little president, Sister Krahl, said it was nearly like having the lectures over again, seeing the splendid results of the talks.

This brings me to the home stretch. I must not forget our worthy stake bishop, Brother Hunt, who is generally bubbling over with good cheer and encouragement, most always with a smile on his face; and our worthy president and wife, I cannot find words of praise enough for them. Of all the changes made in any one person, it is in Brother Krahl. He is getting into the spirit of the work in the stake. To my mind it is really astonishing. I have given you a little history of the branch, so I will speak a few words for myself and then close.

While not entirely well of my stricken condition of two years ago, I live alone and mostly can take care of myself. Yet, I am alone, for the peace of heaven and the Spirit of God reigns almost continually in my home. I love this precious work of God more than my life, and I am glad of my affliction, because it has brought me nearer to him. I must mention the dear good brethren who have cars, especially two of them, with hearts of gold, and their noble wives have always been ready to take me to and from church, as well as to take others who were not able to walk. They tell me when I need help to call them over the telephone and whoever answers does so with the kindest words, showing their sympathy for me in the tone of their voice. When I am able to walk, my beloved Sister Persinger, who lives next door, is ready with her arms for me to hold to, to steady me, that I might not fall. To keep from bothering anyone too much, I stay from Sunday school till after church at night, taking a small lunch to eat, so that I will not get hungry till I get home. So out of the seven days of the week, I spend one at the church. Home is the dearest place to me on earth. The next is the church, where beloved Saints meet in their various exercises, and if it is possible for me to get there to every meeting, I am there. Many Saints show their kindness to me in many different ways, for which I feel very humble and thankful. And I am thankful, too, that my lot is among such a noble people.

Every item that comes from the islands where I have labored touches my heart, and is read with interest. Cheer up and success to you, my brothers and sisters that are in that mission, for the arduous work that is before you. Iaora na, Tapu, my colaborer in Sunday school while I was there, and to all others.

With love and prayer for the entire church, I still remain your sister, ELLA R. DEVORE.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, January 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been many months since I have written to your pages, not having anything of great interest to convey to its readers and leaving its pages to those who are more capable and who have more thoughts that would be interesting in general. However, of late I have seen things in a different light and being engaged in missionary work with General Conference appointment to labor in Seattle and British Columbia District, I have thought that I ought to let the people of that district know what I am doing. I cannot get over only a small portion of this large district, especially since I have been alone since the first of August.

I had the pleasure of laboring for a time with Elder Swen Swenson, my first companion in missionary work, as this is my first appointment to the force of field laborers. I may say it pleased me very much when I learned that we were to work together, realizing I had much to learn and gain with him as a helper. I knew I was very fortunate indeed.

Our first place to work was Lyndon, a nice little town about sixteen miles from Bellingham where there are a few of the right kind of Saints. They made us feel at home and showed their kindness for our welfare which I felt the need of at the time. You who are in the mission field for the first year can understand my feelings and vouch for their correctness.

We had the pleasure of telling the gospel story, but we did not accomplish much in bringing many into the church. Still we made the Saints rejoice and gave the others some things to think about.

From there we went to Ferndale, making our home with Ira Lade and Sister Lade. That was a pleasant season to me at least, on a farm where I could look back to my early days at home. But I have spent almost twenty-five years in the city; you of the city can know my pleasure. I preached a number of times in a schoolhouse, very few attending.

From there we went to Blaine. Brother Swenson has not been very well and I am afraid we will lose him as a helper. However, we worked for some time there, making our home with Brother and Sister Melrosh. We wish to thank them for their kindness to us. Here Brother Melrosh baptized an old gentleman by the name of Foster. We have just learned that he has passed away. Here Brother Swenson had to leave me, returning to his home in Cameron, Missouri. I was left alone, but will not dwell on my experiences of the next few weeks. Some of you may be able to judge. I wended my way from here to Colebrook, staying with some of the Westminster Saints whom I had lived among for years. It was like home.

From there I went to Vancouver, my home, for a few days, and then to Chilliwack, where I first accepted the latter-day work. I stayed with Brother and Sister Stade, and we rented a building in the city opposite the post office and gave it a good trial for a month. Had a number out, but cannot say it was a success.

We also preached in Rosedale in the Orange Hall mostly to Saints; baptized Sister James Muirhead. I will here give you a little history. Some years ago when Elder T. J. Bell labored in their district, he went to Rosedale, secured this hall, but the enemy in the shape of the master of the lodge put them out. Brother Bell prophesied that this lodge would go down until it would be no more. From that time they have not held a meeting. It has been disorganized and their charter taken away, and the place is now in the hands of the Saints. They have not had to pay rent on it for four years.

From Chilliwack I went to Vancouver Island to the black diamond city, Nanaimo, where Brother William Johnson started the work. I preached in a dwelling house to a number of the Saints and outsiders, doing a great deal of good to the members there.

From Nanaimo I went to Victoria, but did not get to preach there. This was a great disappointment to the few Saints, but I had a hurry call from home saying that our little girl was very ill. I got home as soon as possible and found that Isabel was much better but had almost reached death's door.

I have been here since, having started to hold forth here till the district conference in February. Wednesday the ninth I received a telegram from our bishop's agent to come and preach the funeral sermon of Brother Joseph Milton Reed at Lyndon. I arrived at Brother Hartnell's that evening and was driven over by Brother Jacob Berrington, and stayed with him all night. The funeral was set for eleven o'clock from the Grand Army Hall. The Saints had been preparing the songs to be used, knowing this would be the greatest opportunity for some time to place our work before a number of people. There were about one hundred and twenty-five present. I took my text from Job 14: 14, and preached just fifty minutes under the influence of the Spirit. There was rapt attention, a number not lifting their eyes from me throughout the discourse. I believe we have dropped some seed which we hope will bring forth fruit. It made me happy to be able to do this, and that God came to our relief in telling this good old gospel story. We left the Saints feeling strong and satisfied. They gave me a strong invitation to stay over Sunday, but owing to my work in Vancouver which I had just started I could not see my way clear to do so, as much as I would have liked to, but I promised to return in the near future.

I take this opportunity to thank all the Saints who have ministered to my comfort and financial support on my first mission, and hope to continue to hold their love and support in the sacrifice that Sister McMullen and myself have made.

We only want to prove worthy of doing our part in the spread of this latter-day work. Let me hear from you in regard to any opening, that I may be able to fill some of them, as I want to be busy. My home address is Elder Isaac McMullen, 756 Broadway East, Vancouver, British Columbia.

ISAAC MCMULLEN.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Quorum Notices

I have asked Brother S. H. Simmons of Cameron, Missouri, Route 7, to act as secretary of the quorum until we have a meeting at the stake conference in March. All elders kindly send in reports of labor performed from June 1, 1917 to March 1, 1918, to him.

The members of the First Quorum of Priests of the Eastern Michigan District are expected to meet on February 17, at Detroit, Michigan. An interesting program has been provided for. All visiting priests are invited to meet with us. Ray D. Bennett, president, 78 East Milwaukee Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Let us prepare ourselves for more efficient work during the coming year. Let us consecrate our lives more fully to the work of the Lord, in which we are engaged; and let us labor more faithfully for Christ and to establish his kingdom of righteousness, that in the end it may be said of us, "Well done, good and faithful servants. Enter into the joy of thy Lord." S. J. Hines, president.

To the Elders of the Far West Stake and of the North-eastern Missouri District and the Northeastern Kansas District, who compose the Far West Quorum of Elders; Having been chosen president of the quorum and realizing the importance of work done by the eldership of the church, I earnestly solicit the hearty cooperation of the elders in completing our organization and promoting the success of our work.

DON'T YOU WANT A NEW SUPPLY OF BOOKS?

BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.—Are you a student? Here is something for your faculties to wrestle with. The author, H. A. Stebbins, has, with comprehensive outlook, embodied in these lectures a wealth of archaeological facts corroborative of the Book of Mormon narrative, dug from works unknown to the public prior to its publication, and from others published since that time. The statements in these lectures are made in such unaffected plainness and simplicity of language as to carry conviction to any normally unprejudiced mind. No. 51, cloth$.75

ARCHAEOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.—By the joint efforts of leading minds in the church this work was compiled. It gets down to rock bottom in archaeological investigation bearing upon the claims made by the Book of Mormon. Data that will fortify Book of Mormon students against arguments of "science." Interesting reading in itself. No. 142, cloth$.75

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM.—E. E. Long is one of the most aggressive ministers in the church. He has a "punch" proportionate to his physique, and does not hesitate to "apply" it. In this book he attacks Alexander Campbell's theology and the workings out of the same, with characteristic zest, but fairly withal. Full of tense argument and virile reasoning. No. 196, paper$.25

DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHAEOLOGY.—Student, here is a mass of startling data for your consideration. Nothing "sentimental" about this work. It adheres to reality, and yet it is full of the romance which clusters about the ruins of a departed civilization. Louise Palfrey Sheldon accomplished a notable work in writing this book. It is a bulwark against the guesswork of uninformed antagonists to Latter Day Saintism. No. 176, cloth$.60

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE.—A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible with a concordance to the Apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible. No. 166, cloth, net$ 1.50

THE INSTRUCTOR.—A compilation of scriptural and other citations by the veteran apostle, G. T. Griffiths, gleaned from the Word and his own wide experience as a thinker and preacher; not only handy but necessary. Ammunition every defender of Latter Day Saintism needs. No. 216, cloth, $1; No. 217, leather, $1.25; No. 218, flexible$ 2.00

DOCTRINAL REFERENCES.—Alvin Knisley, being a compilation of references on all subjects connected with the gospel, taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. No. E185, paper, 10c; No. E186, cloth, 15c; No. E187, leather$.30

MANUAL OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—A book of instruction to the priesthood, based on the law and upon church usage, prepared by Charles Derry, one of the veteran ministers of the Reorganization. The first fruits of an extraordinarily fecund mind, noted for its wisdom and judgment. No. 232, cloth$.35

PARSONS' TEXTBOOK.—An exhaustive compendium of texts and quotations, covering the entire field of gospel doctrine, collated by Alonzo H. Parsons. A ready (and adequate) reference for preachers, and also those who would accurately represent the angel's message in conversion—a maker of efficient. No. 263, cloth$ 1.00

BEATRICE WITHERSPOON. An autobiography of a prominent church worker. By Mrs. Emma Burton, including much of the life experiences of her husband, Elder Joseph Burton. Sea stories, pioneer experiences, conversion in spite of deep-set convictions—numerous features that go to make an interesting, active, useful life. No. 360, cloth$ 1.30

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH THE SEER.—A businesslike little work, scientifically written, showing forth the truth of the Book of Mormon and establishing the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. Contains pointed and significant statements of Doctor Lederer, converted Jew, and others bearing upon the question. No. 311, paper$.15

Parsons. Interment near their old home, south of Harrisonville, Missouri.

FROM HERE AND THERE

CONFERENCE ARRANGEMENTS

The committee at Independence have a notice in this issue as to rates for board and rooms at General Conference. It will be of interest to all, and those who are going should not delay in sending word to that effect.

MOB SPIRIT IN OHIO

A rumor was going the rounds in Lamoni recently concerning a mob which was about to take Brother Elmer E. Long out of action. For the sake of those who have heard it, and as a matter of interest to others, we may say that a letter from him dated the 9th, indicated that while there had been severe opposition, right was triumphing and that the work had been very effectively advertised by the stir. His letter will appear next week, written from Saint Marys, Ohio.

THE TRAVELING MEN'S ASSOCIATION

The brethren of the church who are engaged in commercial pursuits as traveling salesmen effected an organization at the General Conference last spring, with the object of increasing their efficiency in the commercial world and in the promotion of church interests. The association is to hold meetings at each General Conference, and anticipate a good program next April. They reasonably believe that their membership should be much larger. It should. All who are members of the church in good standing are eligible and will find it profitable to get in touch with the secretary of the association, Clarence Skinner, Lamoni, Iowa. The fees are nominal and the field for productive good is broad. We are sure these men, alert to the needs of the business world in their line, will find many ways of being helpful to the church and to each other.

WAR PICTURES

The Division of Pictures of the Committee of Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, District of Columbia, have for sale a large number of original photographs of war scenes at ten cents each. The list is added to constantly and is very interesting, especially to those who are making collections of such things.

WANTS A GOOD GOSPEL SERMON

A request comes from Brother J. A. Wyninger, of Big Springs, Texas, for some one to call and preach to them. He says Brother John Spence and himself are the only Saints there and desire very much to have a call from some of the elders.

A letter from Nowata, Oklahoma, says that Augustine Dwyer delivered six lectures at that place, one of them at the Christian church. His illness and a severe storm brought the series to an abrupt close. Sister Hayworth thinks a great deal of good was done.

DES MOINES DISTRICT DISPATCH

The January number of this Des Moines District monthly tells us the Des Moines school raised $409.50 for their Christmas offering. It contains other interesting items and information of special interest to the Saints residing in the district.

CHAINS AND EDUCATION

Did you ever try to drive a motor car through the snow without tire chains? If you did you know what happens.

Your rear wheels buzz around as if they were swimming in grease, your engine roars and coughs and tries to shake itself to pieces, you make a terrific racket—and get absolutely nowhere. You have enough power in your motor to move ten times the weight of your car, but it isn't worth a cent—because your wheels can't take hold. Right then tire chains are more valuable than any other part of your car, because the car is useless without them. . . . Now, then, a boy without an education is like a car without chains. He's got the engine; he's filled with gasoline; the whole equipment is there, but when the engine starts up the wheels simply buzz around because there's nothing for them to take hold of. Education is what gives a boy his traction in heavy going. Be sure you have it in your tool kit.—From The American Boy.

"This evening I read of Elder U. W. Greene taking dinner at Seattle with H. R. Tabbut. Now I met Elder Greene at Jerusalem in 1914, and the sister of Mr. H. R. Tabbut last summer at Frazee, Minnesota, at the reunion, besides the same Brother Tabbut my mother nursed his mother when he was born at Jaffa, and I remember her locking us children in and going for the nights, too." MRS. ROLLA FLOYD.

J. F. GARVER LEAVES FOR THE WEST

The physicians at the Sanitarium at Independence, decreed that the president of the Lamoni Stake must withdraw from active duty for a time in order to regain his old-time vigor. He has been suffering for some time with a nervous breakdown, and following the arrangements made at the stake conference and reported last week, he left for California on the 7th, hoping thereby to secure rest and recuperation. R. V. Hopkins is serving as president, with Paul N. Craig as counselor.

THE NO-TOBACCO JOURNAL

A new monthly periodical with this name is being issued from Butler, Indiana. We have a copy of the first number, issued January 1, and find it profitable reading. It is the official organ of the No-tobacco League of America, and contains information of value to all who are fighting the insidious advances made by this habit into our own allied ranks. Temperance committees of Religios will appreciate the facts and comment given. It sells for 25 cents a year. Sample copy free on application to publisher. Orders received at this office.

ORDER BY NUMBER

Our mailing clerk pleads with us to ask all of you to order by number. He appreciates your kindness in describing the articles wanted, but confesses that some of the writing is not as plain as it might be. If you can find the number in the price list (which is sent free upon request) use it. If you don't feel sure about it, add your description to confirm it. We all hope prices will settle so we may put out a descriptive list that will mean something to you. The paper houses, though, tell us not to be too confident that they have settled, so we aren't.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS AFFECT SAINTS

A letter from Sister Edna J. Cochran, now of East Side, Mississippi, says: "Industrial conditions are affecting our schools (Sunday schools) more than one can hardly imagine; so much so in fact that we have only four active schools in the district at present, while we had eight last year. The great centers now are Mobile and Escatawpa, where a great many of our members have moved to work at the shipyards. We are hoping for some good to come out of these 'movements.'"

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL

Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.—Hebrews 10: 5-7.

Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—John 14: 23.

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed.—John 8: 31.

We might multiply many other texts to the same effect. Recently we were asked what we considered to be the chief essential for the redemption of Zion. Much had been said about the new organization, rearrangements of districts and the like. We answered at once, Personal righteousness. The brother seemed surprised and we asked him why. He replied: "I thought you were going to say, building the temple."

But that is not the most essential thing. If we do our part our heavenly Father in his own time will do his part. The possession of the temple lot is only a means to an end, but the first essential is not organization. Organization is merely a means to help us to accomplish this one necessary thing, and that is personal righteousness. This past year the souls of some have been tried because of the serious illness of some of our brethren. Others have been near the end and now another one of the prominent church officials has been taken sick from nervous breakdown, in an effort to carry too great a burden in trying to set in order the house of God; to insist that those who bear the vessels of the Lord must be clean in body, in person, and as far as we can ascertain, pure in heart and spirit. The rearrangement of the work of districts will divide this responsibility, give to these large stakes several pastors instead of one; but after all it is indeed to this end, that we may learn to do his will.

Many are concerned about the temple lot. Some resent, we are sorry to say, the kindly attitude assumed by our brethren at Independence; but love is the fulfillment of law. We join most heartily in their efforts for a better understanding with our brethren, the Hedrickites, only to the end that in this hour of preparation we might the better get ready and help each other. Such a union can only be made on the basis of truth and righteousness. We would not have it otherwise. We may rest assured as we always have had the utmost confidence, that when our heavenly Father is ready those whom he chooses and those who are clean in his sight will build the temple and it will not be done before; nor do we believe that it can ever be done by any other than the best and cleanest methods. It must be a place of holiness, a place of sanctity, where men can meet with God.

We are reminded again of the statement of our late president, Joseph Smith, It is better to be set on some remote hill and worthy than to be set in the midst of Zion unclean. We have elsewhere discussed and no doubt it will be discussed again in these pages, the present conditions in the Army and in this country on social purity. That is one of the essentials, cleanliness of person, cleanliness of life; the avoidance of all narcotics are other necessary incidents. But as Hall so well expresses it, Yet this issue we seek all too often to avoid, the one thing needful. In Jesus the Christ, in the Light of Psychology, he presents it as follows:

But if this [self-satisfaction] is the greatest theme in the world, the personal duty of duties, it is also the hardest of them all, and human life is in no small part made up of devising ways of distraction or diversion from it. The passion to do the other thing is inveterate. The soul is full of schemes of procrastinations, of resolutions that abort, of truths that we put into the cold storage of symbols, of obligations that we seek to satisfy by ceremonies, of flabby reasonings and day-dreams that vicariate for achievement. Whenever the present is too hard for us, we fly for refuge to the past or to memory, or find reversion in amusement, which is abandonment to the impulses of childhood. We place the form for the substance, the sign for the thing it means, easy convention for hard virtue. In our very research we are prone to accumulate notes and protocol data without the incessant mental Bearbeitung and interpretation which they need, and lacking which they become mere learned rubbish. The intensive resistance is the most inveterate of all. Things that ought to be done, instead of leaping to accomplishment, are stored up in the shadowy limbo of hopes deferred. The times or conditions are never fully ripe, and the psychological moment never strikes. Neither the self as a whole, nor any element in it, is trusted with abandon. The god of things as they are is an unknown god. Wishes and imagination grow pale and false instead of being installed into living actualities. Thus the present is emptied of all meaning and value, rather than filled with them to repletion. How readily all these coward refugees from reality may become pathological in all spheres of life, psychoanalysis has abundantly shown. All these above traits of degeneration John found rife all about him, and hence the gospel that was needed and that he preached was that of presentification. Doctrines, traditions, punctilious ceremonies, are at best mere types and symbols of the one thing needful—righteousness. What is implicit in them must be made explicit.

The one thing needful, personal righteousness, the one thing necessary to get acquainted with ourselves, and with the law of God and learn to do his will. Our grave financial problems will solve themselves when this is accomplished. The issue of finance will not be difficult so far as our personal pocketbooks are concerned.

"Cleanse thou me from secret sin." (Psalm 19: 12.) There is a need for this prayer to-day, but our prayer should go deeper than that, Keep thou me from secret sin that I may walk in the way that thou hast walked and do what thou wouldst have me do.

JEW'S PREPARE FOR THEIR GATHERING

When the war closes and the Jews begin to gather back to their home land and establish a national state—which is their present intention—it will not be a promiscuous rush. All things are being worked out in advance, so that not a Jew will return who has not registered and given information as to his ability, his possessions, and his desires. While it is expected that the principal number who return will be from those countries who have so long oppressed the race, there are indications that a large number will go from this land. In Sioux City, Iowa, there were 160 who registered as pioneers in this emigration.

Saturday, January 26, was observed in the synagogues throughout the country as Palestine Sabbath. The theme on which the rabbis discoursed was the restoration of the Jews to their original inheritance. The offering on that day was set aside to help swell the fund of $1,000,000 now being raised to establish a Jewish state in Palestine. Perhaps a hundred times this amount will be raised throughout the world, but the first million is for immediate needs. When they were driven out they were an agricultural people, but used only the most primitive implements. As they return it will be to take with them the modern farm tractor, up-to-the-minute farm implements, and transportation facilities such as were never dreamed of in those days.

The fertile Jordan plain, and even the desert extending to the east and south, will blossom as the rose under the magic touch of modern irrigation systems. The plain of Esdraelon will be doubly fruitful. Electricity for power and light may be had by harnessing the turbulent Jordan in its mad flight to the Dead Sea.

When the war began, there were forty-eight prosperous agricultural colonies of Jews in Palestine, while the total population of that race was estimated at 150,000. If the predictions of Zionist leaders come true, there will be as many as half a million Jews settle in Palestine in the next decade.

USURY

Because of the heading given an editorial note, in reply to a question for January 9, a further query has arisen as to the position of the church on interest, whether one man can properly charge another interest or an increase for the use of his wealth. This question is not involved in our reply, but is suggested because of the heading given of "usury."

This subject was discussed in the editorial columns for the HERALD, 1906, volume 53, page 1029, in which the underlying principles are carefully considered. First, that it is just to ask an increase. Second, that if our brother or a stranger be very poor, usury or increase should not be taken so as to grind him down. Third, that no excessive increase should ever be charged, so as to oppress the borrower. Deuteronomy 23: 9, 10; Leviticus 25: 35, 37, show this point, as in permitting to loan to a stranger, they intimate that it is just to loan on interest.

In the New Testament times, private property is shown by Peter owning his own home, and that after the death of Jesus his disciples returned to their nets. It is urged that the condemnation of Ananias was not that he did not give all of his property, but that he lied in his gift. It says plainly: "While it remained, was it not thine own?" This appears to justify rent and profit.

The parable of the talents again requires the gaining of a profit, and commends the one who doubles his talent. Property is intimated in 1 Timothy 5: 4;

1 Corinthians 11: 34; 14: 35, and Titus 2: 5. But through it all there runs that thought, Give to the poor; love thy neighbor as thyself.

Plainly, in doing away with selfishness, there is no possible justification of the using of wealth to grind down our brother who is poor. There should be both, a community of spirit, a love one for another, working for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. A fair increase upon money alone is not unjust or unchristian.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

HOMES FOR NEEDY MOTHERS

Question. In the church there are homes for children, and homes for the aged, but where is the home for a lone mother with four young children? Where is there a rich mother in the church who wants to be separated from her children? Who, then, is willing to do as she would be done by unto the lone, needy mother, who is now in a home being housed and fed and clothed by one outside of the church, though a pastor of the church preaches in that home every week?

Answer. This question is not as difficult as it seems. If the mother wished to put her children in the Children's Home, of course she could do so; but if she does not, as the letter would infer, where should their home be except the one that she established for them? Doctrine and Covenants 81: 5 would seem to cover this. Do our duty, support the church and enter into the law of stewardship, and the family would be rightly cared for.

We know some families of this kind which have been well cared for by the branch and the deacon, but who have rejected new woollen clothing because it was not sufficiently fancy and who have considered that it was simply the duty of the church to take care of them without any effort upon their part; and not only to take care of them, but to do it the way they want it, give them every luxury. There are two sides to the problem. There should be justice both ways. We do not want charity in the old sense of the term; that is, giving in such a way that the recipients are made to feel belittled thereby. We should be workers together with God and with one another.

As the matter is stated, it would look as if the pastor may not be fully attending to his duty, but that depends upon the circumstances surrounding the case.

An answer can be very briefly made. The case should be laid before the nearest bishop or bishop's agent.

THE TWO STICKS

Question. Is the claim made that the two sticks mentioned in Ezekiel 37: 16 are or represent the Book of Mormon and the Bible, the doctrine of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

Answer. This question, sent to President F. M. Smith, has been referred to us without comment. I am not aware that the General Conference has ever taken a position in regard to this text of scripture. Recognizing the right of personal views, the church has passed but few such resolutions. This was expressed in 1886 as follows:

No. 308. . . . And the committee are of the opinion that the matter of the presentation of individual opinions by elders, or others of the body, such opinions not having been affirmed by the body as a rule of faith or practice, does not make them a part of the faith or belief of the body; but relate to us individually upon the issue of toleration, which toleration we believe as was manifested in the action of Jesus while dealing with men here in his ministry, should be so broad as to make no occasion for persons to wish to withdraw from the body by reason of these individual differences of opinion.

The following resolution concerning other publications would doubtless also extend to other opinions:

No. 368. 2d. Resolved, That we recognize the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the only standard works of the church; and it is our opinion that every other book, pamphlet, or other publication, should simply rest upon its own merits, the church being responsible only for that which it authorized to be done, or which it accepts after it is done.

We find also with interest the following, recommended by the First Presidency, and adopted in 1879:

We are further of the opinion, that, while it is not intended, or indeed practicable to bind or proscribe the liberty of conscience, whereby violence is done to the honesty and integrity of the people by prescribing dogmas and tenets other than the plain provisions of the gospel, as affirmed in the New Testament, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and set forth in the Epitome of Faith and Doctrine; it is clear to us that it is destructive to the faith of the church, and inconsistent with the calling and dignity of the ministry, to decry, disclaim, preach or teach contrary to the revelations in said Book of Covenants, or to arraign them in such a way that the faith of the people of the church is weakened and they thereby distressed.

We are further of the opinion, that the elders should confine their teaching to such doctrines and tenets, church articles and practices, a knowledge of which is necessary to obedience and salvation; and that in all questions upon which there is much controversy, and upon which the church has not clearly declared, and which are not unmistakably essential to salvation, the elders should refrain from teaching; or if called upon, in defense of the church, or when wisdom should dictate, they should so clearly discriminate in their teaching between their own views and opinions, and the affirmations and defined declarations of the church that they shall not be found antagonizing their own and others' views as a conflict in teaching upon the part of the church.

We are further of the opinion, that the advancing of speculative theories upon abstruse questions, a belief, or disbelief, in which cannot affect the salvation of the hearers, is a reprehensible practice; and should not be indulged in by the elders; especially should this not be done in those branches where personal antagonisms must inevitably arise, to the hindering of the work of grace; and should be reserved for the schools of inquiry among the elders themselves.

We are further of the opinion, that until such time as vexed questions now pending are definitely settled by the competent quorums of the church, the discussion of them should be avoided in all places where the elders labor, in the world and in the branches, and should only be had in solemn conclave when necessary to examine them for settlement, under proper rules of restraint.

We quote the above because it may be of interest to our readers, and not alone in connection with this question. It is evidently only the three books and that which has been adopted by a general assembly which can be held clearly as a doctrine of the church.

On the other hand, it is true, that it is the consensus of opinion among the eldership and has for some years been their interpretation of this scripture, that Ezekiel 37:16 refers in the two sticks to the two records, the Bible and the Book of Mormon, as being the stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim. Strength is given this from the fact that in those days, the law was written on parchments, and rolled upon two sticks, and that the term was sometimes so applied, roll of the law. It may also refer to the union of the two nations. It is of interest to note, that the line, the lineage, of Joseph Smith is with Ephraim, so that we have the stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim. To this extent it may be said that the two sticks mentioned in Ezekiel 37:16 represent the Bible and the Book of Mormon. It has been so held by the eldership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Though in fact, it is true that it has not been accepted as a doctrine or the doctrine of the church, the same as has the three books of the church, or the articles of faith.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

An Attacker Attacked

A clipping from the Toronto Globe of December 17, and copied from the Saint Mary's Journal of December 20, 1917, and Saint Mary's Argus, of January 3, indicate that the Reverend S. MacLean, of the Knox Presbyterian Church, who recently made an attack upon our church, has resigned his pastorate. It would seem that during the recent election in Canada, he used his pulpit for making political argument. Members of his church seriously objected to this procedure. They conceded that as a man he had the right to engage in politics, but insisted that this should be done from public stands, as is the case with other individuals, and not from the pulpit, as no equivalent reply is possible there. A number of members appeared to have protested his action, with the result that he resigned. A letter from Elder G. C. Tomlinson indicates that of the ministerial association of the town, who backed up Reverend MacLean in his attack on our church, one has died during the last nine months, one has resigned his pastorate, one has become so unpopular that few now attend his services, and finally Reverend MacLean, the spokesman, has likewise resigned.

New Lecture on "Mormonism"

About a year ago Doctor William Oeschger, of Bethany, Nebraska, president of Bethany College, spent several days in Lamoni, and with the assistance of Heman C. Smith secured considerable information in regard to matters of history about our church. He stated at that time that he was preparing a lecture on "Mormonism." He now writes Brother Smith that he has the lecture ready. He states that he has visited Palmyra, New York; New Harmony, Pennsylvania; Kirtland, Ohio; Independence, Missouri; Nauvoo, Illinois; and Utah. His lecture is illustrated with one hundred and thirty slides, and includes views of the temple at Utah. The posters he uses tell us he will explain celestial marriage and answer the question: Will the world return to polygamy? If any of our members have opportunity to hear this lecture, we urge that they do so and report their impressions to us, as he tells Brother Smith he solicits criticism.

Misrepresentation Corrected

In the Buffalo (New York) Evening News, for January 11, 1918, there appears about a column write-up by Elder A. E. Stone, who has been laboring in that district. He effectually clears the atmosphere, growing out of misstatements in connection with the lectures of Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepherd, though Brother Stone says she has been forced to acknowledge that the Reorganized Church is not affiliated with the Utah organization in any way. Opposition often advertises, and in that way pays.

DID YOU MISS THE JANUARY LEAVES?

Some who renewed late or didn't send their new subscriptions soon enough, failed to get the Autumn Leaves for January, as the big demand soon exhausted the supply. Just lately we found it possible to finish up about seventy copies by leaving out the frontispiece. All who feel disappointed at not getting that number may have it on request. It will help some of you fill out your bound volumes. By the way, some folks are complaining because we don't send them fifteen numbers for a dollar. That offer was to those who ordered last fall and many took advantage of it.

A letter from O. R. Miller, at Boston, says that all the public libraries are closed there except the one in Greater Boston. It has been the longest, hardest winter ever known.

SUPREMACY OF CHRISTIAN ETHIC--Part 2

BY J. W. RUSHTON

Whatever may be said or argued on these matters we find convincing proof of the supremacy and continuity of the Christian ethic in the fact that all representatives of influential religions and philosophies find, or think they find, in Christ and his teachings some expression more or less direct, of the highest and best in their own. And it is not a hyperbolism, but literally true, that no nation or school can lay exclusive claim to him. There is singular universality about him and his teachings in which there is a startling relationship not only between Christ and the Hebrew prophets and teachers, but also between him and Confucius, Buddha, Mithra, Mahomet, and all the epochal philosophies. And there is no way in which this can be accounted for except upon the basis of acknowledging that in all of these anterior or posterior teachings there has been some element of truth, more or less definitely applicable to the actual life of men; and further, that in Christ there has been a remarkable summarizing and blending of all. Still further, that in the advancing and widening experience of humanity that truth of Christ has not been exhausted nor superceded. This is demonstrated in the almost countless libraries and schools which are the outgrowth of his brief life, and comparatively few sayings which have been left to us. If a true interpretation of human value is in quantity and quality of reaction which one can create in society, then beyond any possibility of doubt Christ is still the most valuable person that ever created a reaction. To-day, while it is true that conflicts and antagonisms among the various schools, churches, and representatives, are noisy and at times acrimonious, yet when we lift our eyes from the trivial or secondary and gaze upon him we are impressed with the imposing grandeur of him who as the world's acknowledged criterion commands our "wonder, love, and praise." So that now we can say, "To him all bow the knee, acknowledging him as Lord to the glory of the Father."

That this is not a vague assumption but the deliberate judgment of those who are qualified to speak, the following quotations will attest:

Wolfgang Goethe: Let mental culture go on advancing; let the natural sciences progress in ever greater extent and depth, and the human mind widen itself as much as it desires, beyond the elevation and moral culture of Christianity, as it shines forth in the gospels, it will not go.—Conversations with Eckermann, p. 568.

Hermann Lotze: The love of the living God and desire to be approved of him, this and this only, is the basis of Christian morality, and science will never find one that is plainer, nor life one that is surer.—Microcomus, Book 8, chapter 4.

Rousseau, the depraved time-server of the French Revolution, whose prize essay "Emilie" did for education what the French Revolution did for politics, said:

Christ's gospel alone is, with respect to morality, ever certain, ever true, ever uniform and consistent with itself.—Emilie IV, vol. 2, p. 3.

Lecky: It was reserved for Christianity to present to the world an ideal character, which through all the changes of eighteen centuries, has filled the hearts of men with an impassioned love, and has shown itself capable of acting on all ages, nations, temperaments, conditions; has not only been the highest pattern of virtue; but the highest incentive to its practice. . . . Amid all the sins and failings, amid all the priestcraft, the persecution, and fanaticism which have defaced the church, it has preserved, in the character and example of its Founder, an enduring principle of regeneration.—History of European Morals, vol. 2, p. 88.

Theodore Parker, one of the greatest of the American theologians, said:

Measure the religious doctrine of Jesus by that of the time and place he lived in, or that of any other time and place. Yes, by the doctrine of eternal truth. Consider what a work his words and deeds have wrought in the world. Remember that the greatest minds have seen no further, and added nothing to the doctrine of religion; the richest hearts have felt no deeper, and added nothing to the sentiment of religion—have set no loftier aim, no truer method than his, of perfect love to God and man. Measure him by the shadow he has cast into the world—no, by the light he has shed upon it. Shall we be told that such a man never lived? The whole story is a lie? Suppose that Plato and Newton never lived. But who did their wonders and thought their thought? It takes a Newton to forge a Newton. What man could have fabricated a Jesus? None but a Jesus.—Life of Jesus.

These testimonies could be multiplied almost ad libitum; from all lands and people wherever the name of Jesus has been known; from men and women who have known life in all its varying moods and phases; and always is it true that "his is the name which is above every other name."

Looking therefore into the future, under the light and stimulus of this brief review of the past, it is a safe and justifiable conclusion that because Christ and his teaching so unmistakably have controlled the passing ages and have survived in all that is the highest, noblest, truest, and most desirable, whatever may be the developments of the future he can never be eclipsed, nor can he be disowned without contradicting our history and experience—and this philosophically, is a denial of self. The tribute of Jean Paul Richter is worthy of notice in this connection:

"This man with his pierced hands lifted empires from their hinges, turned into new channels all the tides of history and still controls all the ages."

The power of Christ and the truth of his ethic are at the root of all our racial developments, and if Darwin was right when he discovered the law of continuity, then the increasing power of Christ and the growing influence of his law is as sure as the law of the "survival of the fittest."

Let us reduce the ethic of Christ to its simplest terms, as crystalized in our history and experiences.

First, he recognizes that all experience and history are born of the inward vision and conception. What men think, dream, and vision—that is what inevitably they tend to become. In a vastly deeper sense than Heraclitus of Ephesus understood, man is in an indefinite state of becoming, for as yet we have not materialized or externalized our inward world, we have not realized our ideal. It is therefore of the utmost importance that we understand that our future, near or remote, is wrapped up in the Now. And if there is a clear vision of the ideal within us we shall consciously or subconsciously work outwardly that which is within. If there were anything needed to make this more emphatic than our own experiences, then the latest development of psychology in what is known as psychoanalysis, under the leadership of men like Charcot, Janet, Breuer, Freud, Bleuler, and others, has certainly made clear with almost unnatural skill, how the latent and quiescent ideals and impressions are affecting in either accelerating or retarding our life physically, morally, and idealistically. If the science of psychology had no other justification than this, it is enough to commend its careful study to all who are concerned with the final triumph of the Christian hope. For just because Christianity is "the life of God in the soul of man," it is a development from within and not an accretion from without; otherwise the very doctrine of regeneration upon which we as a religious body specialize would be meaningless and purposeless. Because Christ wants the kingdom of God on the earth, he insists that "a man must be born again," for behold "the kingdom of heaven is within you."

So Christ points man to God as the object of his being and the ideal which must be realized.

It is worth while observing at this juncture in reference to "God" that the One who admittedly knew him the most intimately had little, if anything, to say by way of definition. This also can be appreciated, as we understand better to-day than they did two thousand years ago that definition means limitation. It would therefore be an obvious contradiction to speak of defining—limiting—God, who is infinite—limitless. We may not find it satisfactory in some ways with an undefined God. I mean of course what we would call a physical definition, for humanity has always demanded a defined and even a visualized God. Going back to Christ we find that he seems to be concerned with making men acquainted with the essence and the quality of the divine, rather than with descriptions of form and shape. We cannot charge the "anthropomorphic concept" directly to Christ, but rather to those who have sought to interpret his teachings. If we take the attitude, conduct, and character of our Lord, which, after all, is the most real and positive interpretation and meaning of what he said and taught, God meant to him the source and center of the supremely good, the fountain of infinite truth, the ceaseless energy of the universe making for happiness. That these qualities were the radiance or attributes of a personality is also true, but we must not confuse "personality" with "personage." The one is the essential reality while the other is the form or medium of its appearance or expression. Probably John Caird offers to us a definition which, while subject to the same criticism which must always be applied to any such attempts, is still very suggestive: "God is the brooding intelligence of the universe."

From this we may at least gather the idea which already has been intimated, that God brooding over the universe will develop out of it the life and power which is latent within it, and inasmuch as God is the creator and preserver of that universe, he certainly will develop only that which ultimately will please him and be like him. The logic of our theology inevitably leads to this conclusion. Whatever therefore we may believe of God we cannot believe less than this.

He is the supreme personality functioning in love, reason, and will to produce that in all things which will satisfy and please his own nature. We know that what we call evil, sin, and vice, with all their congeners, are neither satisfying to the reason, nor acceptable to the love of God and must in the nature of things be antagonistic to his will. "Whatever is not of faith is sin," is a characteristic epigram of the Apostle Paul; and to him "faith" means "the rational inference from accepted truth." So that a life which was not adhering to the truth of things would be classified as sin and really be a distancing of the soul from God. Or again, it is the disparity between what man is and what God wants or wills. "The wages of sin is death." The consequences of such a condition is cessation of correspondence with him. It is also clear that to identify oneself with that which God does not approve or will means, if persisted in, "to be ground into powder," according to the graphic language of Christ. For just because God is infinite his will is irresistible, and if goodness is the quality of the divine, which the etymology of the word implies, then God is perpetually willing the good, and, in the nature of things, the time must come when goodness shall be supreme and everything which is not good must be obliterated.

"Thou hast made me for thyself and I am restless until I rest in thee," was Saint Augustine's summing up of Christ's philosophy.

Secondly, Christ urges that man shall love God with all that this word God can contain in the meaning which Christ has given it. By this word love which is the dynamic of the new life, he lifts religion up to personal communion and friendly intimacy, which gives Christianity its distinctive quality above all other forms of religion. Experientially we know that no dynamic of the soul can achieve such great things as love. What men love they live and die for. Indeed life without love is unbearable, and as Thoreau said, "Loving is living, living is loving." Though everything is lost if love remains we have still the raw material of heaven.

It seems obvious that the energy which must move man Godward must be love, for He is love, and therefore could not appropriate and make himself, either by absorption or identity, one with that which was energized or motivated by that which was discordant with his own nature. Even in our untutored and imperfect experience we find it very disagreeable to have to receive any service which is not the free gift of a loving disposition. Again, "love is the impulse toward unity"; and "the unification of all experience" in the language of Bosanquet and therefore could not amalgamate with itself anything but that which was congenial to itself, and all that is not of its own nature would not be attracted to it. We may go further, though this would be a venture into metaphysics rather deeper than we anticipated in the beginning, if "self" is the center of reality not in the egoism of the solipsist, but in the sense that knowledge, which is the base of all power, is limited to actual experience, and the ultimate "self" of the universe is God, then that which is not harmonious with himself and cannot be identified with him must cease to be. In this way it seems there is a real sense in which the apocalyptic vision can be applied, that "Satan shall be bound," that "They shall cast out the Devil," that "death and hell shall be no more." These things "are" because we will to have experience with them. If we develop this love of God, which unifies all with itself and is the divine impulse towards the oneness of man with Christ and of all with God, then these promises pictorially stated will become actual in the experience of those who conform to the ethic of Christ.

Love can only love that which is lovable, and so much is this true that even though the object of its affection may be bankrupt in that which is actually lovable, it is not improbable that love projects itself to develop the latent lovableness which only needs calling up from the dead. This is the supreme miracle of Mary Magdalene, and indeed of the maternal devotion to those who sometimes are spoken of as worthless children. It is the superb quest of love to always discover itself in all things, and never weary in hope of final victory as long as there lingers the faintest trace of response. Only that which has lost its capacity for love is really worthless. And in this ethic of Christ we see once again the transcendent power of the Master, for salvation is possible to every man who still can love goodness, for even though he may not possess it himself, the very revival of his love of it will sooner or later develop within him a capacity and power to accomplish the very thing which he can admire. So the ministry of love is to discover the lovable and redeem it from that which is unlike itself, and no other power can do this great work, so "love never fails—all else shall pass away."

Thirdly, Christ's call is to the "whole" man: heart, soul, mind, and strength. The emotions, the source and seat of the intellectual power, the faculty of understanding and desire, and finally the strength of will.

If we may attempt to paraphrase without losing the glorious meaning of the original word, Christ makes the supreme intelligence whose goodness is everywhere revealed, the ideal of man's life. This ideal shall be loved with all the passion of man's whole being, affections, reason, will, and essence. That Christ should even teach this is a wondrous revelation of God's estimate of human ability and power, and that being so, it is also a revelation of man's responsibility, for what can be ought to be, and therefore must be.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; this is at once the test and gauge of the reality and power of the foregoing, and also the completion of the whole.

A man cannot be true to his ideal and therefore himself if he acts towards another in such a manner as to contradict his own law of being. To commit an act of inferior quality to that which is esteemed by the "self" as being a lovable thing, to another is more injurious to the actor than the result can be to the victim. He is denying himself, and John's remarkable sociological principle expressed in vigorous language is profoundly philosophic. "If a man says he loves God and hates his brother, he is a liar and the truth is not in him."

He has lived beneath his known highest, he has neutralized his better self, he has denied, betrayed, and repudiated that which is his best and holiest consciousness born of his love of and for God, and has played the part of Judas Iscariot to himself. For as already remarked, the experience is himself.

What more could be said to improve or perfect this ethic of Christ? He himself with all-embracing sweep claims this as the foundation of all prophecy, which is the revelation of the divine, and the law which means the rules of conduct. No need to detail what shall be a man's code of conduct to his external world if his is properly adjusted to the inward vision. Let a man become "acquainted with God and he is at peace." The golden rule is no longer a platitude but a rigid law. The Lord's prayer is not a sentiment but a science—"Forgive me my trespasses as I have forgiven those who trespassed against me." In other words our external world, whether of this earth and society or of heaven, will be the reflex of those powers and influences which are at work within. In the free response of the soul to God, and the cultivation of love for him and all he means, is the safety of the present and future secured.

As the new year shall bring to us its problems and its responsibilities, as well as its golden opportunities as a church, especially looking to the establishment of the Christian commonwealth which we call Zion, let us beware that we do not lose the substance for the shadows. Let us not become too much engrossed in the mechanics, geography, chronology, theology, economics, and finance, neglecting the necessary devotion to the great ideal in which there is at once an inspiring call to service and the disclosing of an exhaustless reservoir of power.

For evolution cannot go beyond that which is involved. This is just as true of spiritual matters as it is of biology. Unless the power and capacity of and for Zion are developed within, it is impossible to get it without.

Mrs. Browning has very beautifully said:

It takes a Soul
To move a body; it takes a high-souled man
To move the masses, even to a cleaner sty:
It takes the Ideal to blow an inch inside.
The dust of the actual: and your Fouriers failed
Because not poets enough to understand
That life develops from within.

Our own distinctive definition of the biblical ideal is peculiarly apposite: "Zion is the pure in heart." The Apostle Paul in speaking of the heavenly commonwealth insists on the previous cultivation of that personal righteousness which is the outcome of "faith in Christ," issuing in "the righteousness which is of God." (Philemon 3.)

Unless our individual lives are right as God is right, the Zion for which we pray and hope must still remain imprisoned in the cold letter of the word.

There are no substitutes for these fundamental and elementary demands; there are no devices by which we can hurry matters. And whatever the new year may have in store for us will be the harvest of the seeds which already are in the hearts of men.

And so of the war, the future is not so gloomy as some would think. Let us take heart of grace in the trying hour. Christianity has not failed, the fruits of that Christian ethic in the heart of humanity are not corrupt, and its ancient ideal is not atrophied. Indeed it is because of the inherent strength of that ethic that this war was possible, for it is the eternal struggle of the right against might. The Christian morality is based upon the supremacy of the right and that only has the support of God which is right.

Our attitude in this war must be one of strong faith in the final triumph of the right as that right is interpreted in Jesus Christ; of patient but cheerful resignation and a willingness to serve both champions and victims in the struggle. Let not the immediacy of the war's horrors, nor the bitterness of the belligerents paralyze our faith in the natural trend of the race to goodness and truth. Above all let us not think that with the cessation of hostilities and the signing of peace that the strain is over and we can relax. This is the hour of the world's travail and with the end of the war we shall have a new world, a new humanity, and a new spirit shall be in that humanity, and as representing the great Christian church ours will be the task to assist in guiding and developing the new powers of that condition. The period of reconstruction will bring new demands and new opportunities and our message must be adapted to meet those in the grand to-morrow for which we pray.

The to-morrow in which those people who have fought together, bled together, and shared the common sorrows, shall be fused into a oneness standing for the ideals of Christian democracy, which shall wipe out the consciousness of enmity and make it possible for all in the future to "enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" in all that these high-sounding terms imply.

(Concluded.)

I believe this: Where there is war there is no Christianity; that war is the worst possible crime humanity could commit and should, for that reason, be avoided by all men except as a final step. Justice, liberty, humanity may be won or lost in war. Should not the Christian then fight? Yes; but not because he believes in war. No sane man ever wishes to go to war; he does so because it is his duty to his country that he fight and die. That is the duty of life for both Christian and non-Christian. It is also the paradox of life that we must face.—Massa Chibu, a Japanese student, in Chicago Herald, December 28, 1917.

SOME SIDELIGHTS ON HONOLULU

This is the land of the lunar rainbow and "liquid sunshine." There are actually rainbows on some moonlight nights! The Honoluluans can never forget God's covenant with the world, as in the summer you see two or three times a week, the most magnificent rainbows mortal eye has ever beheld. As we go out of the Mission House Lane, we can see the mountains at no great distance, and frequently there are rainbows spanning them in the most marvelous manner. Some of the bows seem to be straight and fill the whole valley with color. These bows are so perfect from one end to the other, and are so close to the earth, you sometimes pass through them, but alas, there is no pot of gold at the end!

China, Japan, Portugal, Korea, Philippine Islands, are right here and about fifteen other nationalities, wearing their peculiar costumes.

Paper money is taboo. Recently the sugar refineries distributed thousands of dollars in bonuses to the Japanese and Filipino employees on the plantations, and as the expressage would have been quite a large item, if either gold or silver had been sent from the coast, paper money was imported, but when the ignorant Filipinos were paid off in bills, some of them tore them up in their anger, thinking they were no good!

Matthew 5: 3 in King James' Version is rendered: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The Inspired Translation: "Yea, blessed are the poor in spirit, who come unto me; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The Hawaiian Bible: "Blessed those humble in heart, because for them the kingdom of heaven."

The way Honolulu is laid out reminds you of the story of the two brothers. One was greatly given to exaggeration, and the other one would frequently nudge his brother as a hint to make it milder, when occasion required. One day this young man was telling about an immense barn he had seen out in the country; it was half a mile long—(nudge) and twenty feet wide! Honolulu is six or seven miles long and half a mile wide. No exaggeration in this, except in the actual city as here given.

The Chinese and Japanese wear a form of sandal, which is always removed before entering a house. Many of the Hawaiians also remove their shoes when entering a home.

There is practically no Sabbath in this town, as the majority of the shops owned by the Orientals are open every day in the week from morning until ten p. m., and sometimes later. The Japanese and some Chinese women seem to be tireless workers, often helping their husbands in the stores and in places where manufacturing is carried on. The Japanese women invariably have a baby strapped on their backs, while engaged in their daily duties.

We have the high cost of living here in italics, with a red line under it.

Poi, the native staff of life, made from the root of the taro plant, was once the very cheapest of foods, but now it has advanced in price, so the Hawaiians mix flour with it, as a "filler" I suppose.

Poi is made by crushing the root, and it is ground until very fine, then mixed with water. When prepared for use, additional water is mixed with it and it is strained through a fine cloth. The natives eat it with a little salt. It has a slightly sour taste, something like apple sauce. In a few days it ferments. The natives prefer it two or three days old. Mixed with milk, sugar, and flavored with vanilla, it makes a very palatable "cocktail," and that is the way it is served at the soda fountains.

There is not a single Hawaiian in business in this city, that I know of, except several ukelele manufacturers. The majority of the places of business seem to be carried on by Orientals.

There are many private schools in the city, and of course public schools also. There are three high schools. At McKinley tuition is free. At Punahou the tuition is about seventy-five dollars a year. My daughter goes to McKinley, and there are only five other white girls attend, the balance being Orientals and Hawaiians. There is also a fine college, which is free.

We have very little dawn or twilight, but we surely do have some sunsets which are gifts from the skies to mortals.

The Lord certainly was lavish in his gifts of beauty in sea, sky, and land, when he made these islands, but when man made this town, he seemed to have done it in a left-handed sort of style, if there is any style in it. There are parts of the residence section which possibly are not excelled anywhere on earth; but the larger part of the town is composed of narrow, dirty, rough streets, and I have never before seen a city of this size with so few pavements. But they are apparently not needed, as "everybody" either rides in an automobile or in the street cars. There is very good car service, with excellent transfer accommodations. There is "Chinatown," "Japantown," and "Portuguesetown," with Filipinos much in evidence. The Japanese grocery stores seem to handle so many vile-smelling goods, if you were deaf, dumb and blind you would know when you were approaching one. I have seen more slums in this small, wealthy city than I witnessed in Sydney and Melbourne combined. But with all its faults you love it still. Beauty is not the only asset to look for in a city. This is a decidedly interesting town, and you meet picturesqueness everywhere. All towns look more or less alike—except this one!

The two daily newspapers have a surprising amount of news in them, and are well made up. They sell for five cents. The editorials are of the oracle, ex-cathedra style, from which there is no appeal. In these days of Literary Digests, culling from the world's editorials with their conflicting views, these infallible opinions, side by side, look rather ridiculous.

Here is Honolulu in a coconut shell: 63,000 inhabitants, not including the military; 30 miles of electric street railway; automatic telephone service; 33 church edifices; 41 public schools; eight private ones; two extinct volcanoes (we hope they remain so); two daily English newspapers; four Japanese dailies; two Chinese, and Filipino, Korean and Portuguese papers published weekly, as well as a weekly Hawaiian paper. Then there are Japanese and Chinese temples, spacious harbor, largest pineapple canneries in the world, immense sugar refineries, 2,000 distinct varieties of the beautiful hibiscus, over half a mile of night-blooming cereus, one of the greatest flower sights in the world when they are in bloom, and many other attractions and paraphernalia of a big country town trying to become modernized. And finally, we have Waikiki beach and the hula! The ukelele! The leis! And aloha!

You don't pronounce it Hon-o-loo-la, but Ho-no-loo-loo. Hawaii is pronounced, Hah-vy-ee, the sounds uttered rapidly to Hawaiianize them.

The majority of people think Honolulu is located on the Island of Hawaii, but such is not the case, it is the capital city of the Hawaiian Islands, and is located on the Island of Oahu, (O-ah-hoo.) Hilo, where Brother McConley has organized a branch, is on the island of Hawaii. The islands are called the Territory of Hawaii, hence the abbreviation, "T. H."

There must have been some prehistoric Saint Patrick on the islands, as there is not a snake on any of the group, comprising eight inhabited islands. This group has never harbored anything in the form of insect or animal life more dangerous than a centipede or scorpion, and by reason of an absence of minerals on the land, their bite and sting is no more painful or dangerous than the sting of an enthusiastic bumblebee. There is no other semitropical land in the world where one may roam from sea beach to mountain top, on plain or in deepest jungle, with absolutely nothing to fear from any animate creature. There are no common poisonous plants, such as poison ivy or poison oak.

In the aquarium you see the most marvelous shaped and colored fish in the world. There are such bright designs on some of them, it is hard to believe they are not the work of some artist. One can hardly realize such a variety of colors could ever be grown on a swimming fish. And what peculiar shapes some of them are! You look around the aquarium at hundreds of these brilliantly colored and peculiarly formed fish, and rubbing your eyes, you look at them again, and say with determination and conviction: "There ain't no such fish!"

Just think, there is only a difference of about 30 degrees in the temperature between winter and summer. The highest was 87 and the lowest 58. It is a good thing, too, as coal is eighteen dollars a ton! It is not used for heating purposes as heat in the wintertime is not necessary.

As there are 97,000 Japanese in the islands, Hawaii has been Japanned!

Honolulu has good backing. Punchbowl, an extinct volcano, is right at its rear door, and mountains pile up back of the crater.

There has been an invasion of the islands since the war; an invasion, not of men but of money. At last the penny has come into its own. Since the Government put the penny tax on moving pictures, etc., it has become necessity to replace the "nimble nickel" with the humble penny. We suppose the Sunday school will get some of them now.

These islands are certainly the melting pot of the nations and Honolulu is the center of the caldron. At one school, Kaiulani, there are children from twenty-six nationalities attending! A scrambled conglomeration as it were.

The Sandwich Islands were formerly one of the most isolated spots on the globe; now they are "the crossroads of the Pacific."

Some six years ago there was born here a movement which may have a worldwide effect. It has been christened, "The Hands Around the Pacific" movement, and there is a chain of affiliated clubs meet weekly in all the lands bordering on the Pacific. The leading men of these lands are active in the clubs, promoting Pacific patriotism, eventually binding all these nations into an international brotherhood. May that movement prosper. The Mid-Pacific Magazine, the Editors of which kindly loaned the many cuts credited to it, is the official publication of the movement.

We often have the privilege of meeting some very distinguished personages, who stop off on their way to the coast or who are crossing the Pacific. Recently Professor Sayce, Professor Brashear, a number of noted Russian violinists, Melba, and a host of other notables, and last but not least, the distinguished Charlie Chaplin! He drew the biggest crowd of all! I had the privilege of hearing Professor Sayce lecture. He is possibly the greatest living student of Assyrian civilization. During his lecture, he said, in exploring some of the ancient tombs, the most beautiful paintings were found upon the walls. There was a wonderful blending of blue and green and the most delicate shades, and nothing but white light made such coloring possible. He said not a particle of carbon was found upon the ceilings, or any evidence of torches or other light having been used, and as not a ray of daylight could enter the caves, he raised the question, what kind of light did these ancient artists use?

I had an opportunity of having a talk with him while on a street car. I asked him if he was the Professor Sayce who copied the Pool of Siloam inscription; he said he was, and seemed surprised to find anybody on the Sandwich Islands who knew anything about that feat. In studying up matter connected with the Book of Mormon I had occasion to look up the Siloam inscription and was able to talk with him about the afternoon he sat in the water of the pool copying the inscriptions. I asked him if he didn't have some great thrills when he deciphered that message. His face lit up and he said: "Ah, there is where the compensation of the student comes in."

I also heard Professor Brashear lecture. I surprised him by reminding him that he had invited to his observatory a number of young people from our church in Pittsburgh, to view Mars when it was the closest to the earth it had been for many years. He also was astonished to find somebody who knew "Uncle John" away out here in the Pacific. The world to-day is very small.

In asking for information you are not directed by the points of the compass, but makai which means toward the sea, and mauka toward the mountain: Waikiki way means toward that beach and ewa the opposite direction. For "done" or "finished" everybody says pau; and for hurry up wikiwiki; and nobody says trouble, but pilikia. A stranger is a malihini and a white person is a Haole. (How-le.) All these words are used every day in the newspapers, so you fall in line and use them unconsciously.

The Japanese children go to school all day. They leave home at 6.30 a. m., go to the Japanese school, which dismisses in time for the English school. The Japanese schools are also open on Saturdays, so the children have very little time for recreation.

Taro, from which is made poi, is still the staple health-giving food of the Hawaiians. It is possible now to make, by machinery, a taro flour that will keep indefinitely. Taro in this form has been used in many of the leading hospitals of the United States, and has been pronounced by the physicians as the most digestible, health-giving food in the world. In Hawaii poi is made by boiling the taro root, then pounding and slightly fermenting it. In this state it is easily digested by the stomach of the babe or the centenarian. It has produced such world champion athletes as Duke Kahanamoku, the Hawaiian swimming marvel, and poi-eating youths of Hawaii have made athletic records in nearly every American college and university.

If the Hawaiians ate the food nature provided for them and avoided the evils imported by the white man they would not be a dying race.

During the month of October just passed, the Board of Health issued statistics showing that half of the deaths in the city were among Hawaiians. This means that the death rate among them is twice that of the other nationalities, and greatly exceeds the births; so they are a dying race. Tuberculosis carries away many of them.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LARGER ISSUE

[The following editorial from the Des Moines Register for January 20 is a highly important contribution to our war literature and is worthy a careful study, affecting as it does the standing of Christianity.—EDITORS.]

When Governor Lowden said in his address to the Illinois soldiers at Camp Dodge that this war might mark the ending of the Christian era, probably few thought he was indulging in anything but a striking figure of speech.

How many have stopped to consider that after nearly two thousand years the Christian era is really challenged in this war; that not only subconsciously but consciously this war is being fought to disprove the Christian theory of social organization?

A few days ago the Cologne Gazette declared: "It is well for us that the world will be divided anew, not according to empty, sanctimonious, humbugging phrases, but on that most ancient principle of might which has governed the world at all periods of its history." That was not accidental, nor was it heated rhetoric. It was a frank avowal of the working philosophy of a dominant section of thinking men, mostly congregated in Germany and led by great German scholars.

It is not worth while to quote Nietzsche directly, for he was a rhapsodist as well as a solid thinker, and he seems to be subject to very contradictory quotation. But we may surely accept the resumé of his working philosophy offered by his sister in her introduction to "Zarathustra." After having tested Jesus as the "superman," Nietzsche exclaims, "Never yet hath there been a superman. Naked have I seen both of them, the greatest and the smallest. All too similar are they to each other. Verily even the greatest found I all too human."

Interpreting this and much more like it into the language of our days Mrs. Foerster-Nietzsche says:

He assumes that Christianity as a product of the resentment of the botched and the weak has put in ban all that is beautiful, strong, proud, and powerful; in fact, all the qualities resulting from strength, and that in consequence, all forces which tend to promote or elevate life have been undermined. Now, however, a new table of valuations must be placed over mankind—namely that of the strong, mighty, and magnificent man, overflowing with life, and elevated to his zenith—the superman who is now put before us with overpowering passion as the aim of our life, hope and will. And just as the old system of valuing, which only extolled the qualities favorable to the weak, the suffering, and the oppressed, has succeeded in producing a weak, suffering, and "modern" race, so this new and reversed system of valuing ought to rear a healthy, strong, lively, and courageous type which would be a glory to life itself. Stated briefly, the leading principle of this new system of valuing would be "All that proceeds from power is good; all that springs from weakness is bad."

Now nobody can read this resumé and not see that the declaration of the Cologne Gazette is merely an application of Nietzscheism to the present-day problems of politics, just as nobody can read this resumé of Nietzsche and not see that Germany's part in the world war is a practical working out of the superman idea, the idea of the will-to-power.

The first challenge came to Christianity in the days of the beginnings from cultured and beauty-worshipping Rome. The Christian philosophy was presented to Rome after Rome had exhausted a great deal of its primitive will-to-power. It was the elegant and the refined who were asked to accept this new gospel of the weak and the oppressed. The answer of Rome is nowhere better given than by Sienkiewicz in the words he puts in the mouth of the patrician, Petronius. Readers of "Quo Vadis" will recall that Vinicius urged upon his old friend that he accept the new Christian gospel, for which such tremendous sacrifices had been made. Petronius, representative thoroughly of cultured Rome, wrote in reply:

Your teaching is not for me. Shall I then love the Bithy, who cary my litter, and the Egyptians who heat my baths? By the white knees of the graces, I swear to thee that even if I wanted to I could not. There are at least one hundred thousand men in Rome who have either crooked shoulder blades, or thick knees, or dried up calves, or round eyes, or yet too large heads. Dost thou command me to love them, too? . . . Whoever loves beauty cannot for this very reason love ugliness. . . . Had I even desired to go where thou leadest me I cannot. . . . Would your Christ accept me with my gems, my myrrhian vase, with the editions of Soziuses, and with my golden-haired Eunice? At the thought of this I have to laugh, for even Paul of Tarsus said to me that for Christ one has to forsake the rose wreaths, feasts and pleasures. It's true he promised me another happiness, but I answered him as for that other one I am too old that my eyes will always enjoy the sight of roses, and that the fragrance of violets will be always more pleasant to me than the odor of a dirty fellow man from the Sabura.

This is not the present-day challenge of Nietzscheism, although it is part of it. The German thinkers are still in the preliminary stage of the evolution. Hunger for power is still strong with them, as it was with earlier Rome. They practice some of the virtues of an austere and Puritan society to conserve strength. They preach a gospel of power and exemplify a gospel of power. But in the end the challenge will be the Roman challenge, the challenge of beauty and luxury. For the end of power of the Nietzsche sort is self-indulgence, and the fruit of self-indulgence is effeminacy. It is an endless circle that has been trodden round and round many times in the gradual evolution of the race.

Now, attractive as this appeal to beauty and strength is, and plausible as the argument can be made that the world belongs to the powerful, the handsome and the brave, what is there in human experience, to give us confidence in it as a working program? Its accompaniments have always been selfishness, cruelty, self-indulgence, and what in the Christian era we call crime. It has always involved a total neglect of spiritual values. It has been physical, physical power, physical beauty, physical bravery. The lame boy losing his life to save his sister has no appeal to the true disciple of Nietzsche. He was lame and therefore unfit and any gospel of hope for him here or hereafter puts the emphasis on weakness rather than on strength, on ugliness rather than on beauty.

But what about history, which is said to be experience teaching by example? We have had two thousand years of nominal Christian ethics. Tested merely by success, what is to be said? Was Petronius right, are the modern worshipers of the superman right? Or has it proved true, as our American poet has written, that "The bravest are the tenderest; the loving are the daring"?

Why have England and America formally declared for equal rights for the small peoples? Why have they set up democracy as the political goal of mankind? Why has the ballot been extended to women? Why is world peace declared to be the prime object of world concern? Why are the great business organizers giving their time to the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A.? Why are we emphasizing in this war for the first time adequately the upbuilding social and moral forces? These are all of them part of the Christian theory of social organization. They are all of them distinctly not recognized by the worshipers of power and beauty.

A complete triumph for Germany, bringing German political supremacy in the world, could not be other than a triumph for the gospel of force, and that would automatically end the Christian era, for the gospel of love and the gospel of force cannot abide each other on equal terms. Fundamentally that is what is involved. The lines of demarcation are not plain, because there are thousands of Christians in Germany and thousands of force-worshippers in every other land. But Germany has officially adopted the one gospel and her enemies officially adopted the other. The longer the contest wages the plainer this issue will become.

The Membership of the Choir

1. WHO MAY BELONG TO THE CHOIR

A great many questions have been asked us from time to time, of such import as: Who should be members of the choir? What qualification does a person need for membership? Does he need musical training? Should he have a cultivated voice?

These questions are pertinent and we have always tried to answer them carefully. They cover so wide a range, and so much can be said in regard to even the least of them, that in a brief article we may just touch the perimeter of the field of knowledge concerning any one of them.

Who may belong to the choir? Every person who has within himself the qualities enabling him to acceptably do the work of a choir member, should be in the service of the choir. While it is a service that is recruited from those who are willing to serve, who "volunteer," it is still a service that is important, and the obligations resting upon those who are qualified are just as real and just as binding. It is true that individuals are not "called" to its service by the spoken voice of inspiration, but they are called nevertheless, and he who has the ability to serve and will not serve, is denying the call and evading the responsibility.

What qualifications are needed for service in the choir? The ability to sing in perfect time and true to tone and key in one of the four voices; the ability to understand the notation of ordinary music and to read sufficiently well to make a proper start in its practice: these are the two chief technical qualifications. But there are spiritual qualifications that are very important if one is to render service that is wholly pleasing to God. The acceptable choir member must serve out of the love of a devoted heart; he must serve because he loves to discharge his duty to the work of God. In brief, he gives a consecrated service, the basis of which is true love. When choir members give consecrated service, then will the true "spirit of song" find its best expression.

Should a person have musical training, or a cultivated voice to sing in the choir? Musical training to at least a rudimentary degree is very desirable for anyone, whether he be a choir singer or not. Music is but one of the many branches of human knowledge, and musical training but one form of education, a form that is too often ignored or neglected. Musical training therefore benefits layman as well as choir singer; but it will make the work of the choir singer more intelligent and efficacious. Hence the need for as much musical training as will enable the singer to intelligently and effectually grasp the work in hand. As to the need of a cultivated voice for the choir singer, it is but a sharpening of the tools with which his work is the more enhanced, an enlarging of the possibilities as well as the qualities of his service. It will enable him to sing better and more correctly. Many people are born with voices of real quality, but few are born endowed with the ability to naturally use the voice properly. This seems very strange, but it is true. Birds sing correctly by instinct, but the few brief notes of their beautiful songs mark the limits of their range of ability. Man by training becomes possessed of a practically unlimited range of possibilities. While many choir singers continually do good service with untrained voices, such would be able to render service of better quality and greater extent, especially in solo work, were their voices and faculties trained. In chorus singing the natural, untrained voice is at its best, and the absence of training is not appreciably felt.

Some of the qualifications of choir members not mentioned in the foregoing are almost as important in their way, especially as to the spiritual character of choir work. The quality of faithfulness in attendance at the practices of the choir and the services of the church is one that every chorister values highly. How often are choristers disheartened by having choir members "play off" on them by coming to the practice and enthusiastically helping in the preparation of the choir service and then absenting themselves without notice when Sunday comes, leaving the work to suffer or fail because of their neglect to appear. Their attendance at the choir practice was virtually a promise to do their part in the rendition of the service, and oftentimes choir members ruthlessly break those implied promises with utter unconcern. Or, how often do we see choir members stay away from the choir practice, and then, when Sunday comes, and the opportunity to "show off" is at hand, proudly take their places in the choir, indifferent as to the danger that they may be causing by their desire to sing that which they have not assisted in preparing.

Another quality that will appeal strongly to the chorister is that of loyal support; the willingness to uphold the chorister's hands by a ready compliance with his directions. How often do we see choir members who, while holding membership and place in the choir and enjoying its privileges, seem to strive more zealously to thwart the will of the chorister and subject him to a host of petty annoyances that tend to make his work a burdensome one. We have seen more than a few instances of choir members who seemed to have a "pick" on the chorister; who were continually "nagging" him and taking opportunity to heckle and thrust at him. We have sought to find a cause for this objectionable trait and can ascribe none except that of simple jealousy.

Still another qualification that, if all choir members possessed, would make choirs peace-loving bodies, and as such would not warrant the unpleasant reputation given them of being given to dissension; and the choir would no longer bear the facetious appellation of being "the war department" of the branch. This qualification is that of being charitable and tolerant; of thinking no evil and refusing to be jealous of the work or privileges of another; of being unwilling to scatter the seeds of envy and discord among the members; of being peacelovers and peacemakers instead of disturbers and destroyers of peace and unity. Oh, that choir members would realize the sacredness of their positions and would strive to perform their service in unity and humility. How often do we see choirs the scene of contention and strife; the expression of envy, malice, and bitterness of spirit. How God must abominate such; for has he not said, "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of Spirit in them that sing and them that hear is blessed and acceptable with God; but song with grievous sadness in them that sing and bitterness of spirit in them that hear is not pleasing to God. Therefore, in all the congregations of the people of God, let all strife and contention concerning song service cease." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.)

2. WHO SHALL SELECT THE CHOIR MEMBERS

Every progressive choir has its problems, and that of securing and maintaining its membership is an inevitable as well as a most important one. Especially is it a serious, and often a perplexing problem, if the choir is a factor in the development of the musical atmosphere of the branch; and what choir should not be active in the development of the musical interests of its branch?

There are many ways of securing choir members, and some of them are very much better than others. Various branches solve the problem in various ways, ranging from the method where the privilege of singing in the choir is a "free for all," where anyone who "feels like it" can come and sing in the choir when, like Sairey Gamp, he is so "disposed," to the more discriminating one of requiring candidates to meet a certain standard of ability. Different methods must be used in different situations, but commend us to the one that has the elements of system and good judgment as its basis.

Let us examine briefly some of the methods that have come under our observation for securing choir members. In commenting upon them we will endeavor to do so in the spirit of fairness and intelligent comparison, hoping that this latter may result in enabling some to comprehend their situations and needs more fully.

We do not think the method of opening the choir to anybody who may care to sing in it is a commendable one, for the reason that it does not accomplish anything permanent; it doesn't get a choir anywhere. It is energy allowed to run loose, activity that is not directed to any intelligent end. Therefore it is not worthy of serious consideration.

We remember that in one choir the matter of choosing choir members was solely in the hands of the chorister. Hearing, or knowing of a good "prospect," he was expected to invite that person to take a place in the choir and engage in its work. The plan worked fairly well in many ways and good results were had in the main. It must be readily seen, however, that its greater success would, of course, be dependent upon the good judgment and the energy and activity of the chorister. Given a chorister possessed of good "common sense," a fairly good judge of musical ability and quality, and who was alert and active, and the result would be gratifying. But choristers who are fortunate in possessing qualifications of leadership, do not always have the widely different ones of ready recruiting powers. Individuals who have all the valuable qualities embodied in one person are extremely rare, and we do not remember ever seeing one in the office of chorister. In most instances, if one has all of the general qualities that make up a well-rounded character, he is likely not to be so highly developed in the special ones of musical leadership.

Generally speaking, the way in which this system will be found most objectionable will lie, not in the chorister or his failure to perform his duty, but to those outside of him or the choir. In almost every branch there are found people who aspire to sing in the choir. They belong to the class of true music lovers, who enjoy hearing music, and this enjoyment leads them to desire to express music themselves. They are honest and sincere in their desire to do so and their belief that they can. It must be here understood that the ability to enjoy music does not necessarily mean the ability to sing, or play some musical instrument: in other words, to express music. Such people, however, do not comprehend this. They enjoy the service of the choir and long to engage in it. Not knowing that they do not have the ability, they naturally feel slighted because they are not asked to come into the choir.

They reason, and very plausibly to themselves, that a grave wrong has been done them and to the work itself. Are they not as good singers as so and so who have been asked? They naturally grieve over the fancied slight and hesitate not at pouring into every sympathetic ear their tale of woe and their conviction that the church is headed for the rocks of disaster.

The only other method we select for critical comparison is had, so far as known, only in very large choirs. It consists of a committee, whose duty is to be on the lookout for suitable material for membership. This committee is not only to search for this material, but is to investigate and gather all the facts concerning it; to receive nominations and applications for membership and to examine into the qualifications of prospective members. Their findings are referred to the choir itself or the chorister, for acceptance or rejection.

The advantages of this plan are in some ways unique. In place of some one person only who shall select the members, the work is intrusted to a committee, the members of which are expected to have proper qualifications for their task. This committee is, in fact, merely the duplication of the chorister in a number of people, on the lookout for material, whose attentions are not required in the more absorbing and exacting work of leading, and who can therefore exercise a wider search, and can inquire into qualifications and fitness more closely. Besides, it takes from the usually overburdened shoulders of the chorister the task of hunting the material that he leads, like the Israelites hunting the straw for the bricks they made. It also frees him from the charge of favoritism in his selections.

Probably the chief element of criticism that might be urged against this plan is that it sometimes may be found cumbersome. In small branches it might prove that an unusually ponderous piece of machinery had been set up to do a small amount of work; but it is equally evident that in large branches, where large choirs are maintained, too much would be imposed on the chorister were he required to do all this work himself. It is manifestly impossible for one chorister, even though he may have the best of qualities and the most alert of natures, to be acquainted with all the possible material which might be available for the choir.

As stated early in the second part of this article, methods must be varied according to localities, and we cannot attempt to give a plan that would be equally effective in all situations. Some general advice is all that we can offer, trusting that it will help in many instances.

In the small branch it might be found an excellent plan to place the selection of choir members primarily in the hands of the chorister, so far as the direction and initiatory features of the work are concerned. He might find it advisable to call to his assistance one or two of the leading supports of the choir who were known to have sound judgment, both musical and general. With them he could confer and they could materially aid him in both the search for and examination of material for admission. If it is not advisable to leave the final acceptance or rejection of new members with the judgment of the chorister, they may be submitted to vote of choir.

In large choirs it must not be expected that the chorister will be able to have a complete view of the musical possibilities of his branch. Here is where assistance is obvious and a small body of capable assistants of admitted judgment are advisable. They will probably have vision of their own, and their assuming this burden from the shoulders of the chorister will enable him to the more freely devote his talents to the better interpretation of the musical message that his choir should bring to the branch.

But right here it may be well to speak some words in defense of the chorister and his rights in the selection of choir members. He is the one upon whom the burden of dealing with these same members will fall after their induction into the choir. He is the one whom the branch has placed in charge of the choir and its work, and whom it will hold responsible, and from whom it will expect results. Therefore, he should be consulted in this important feature of the choir's work; care should be taken that nothing be done to impede his efforts; his opinions should receive real respect and proper consideration, and his wishes be acceded to, except when wisdom makes it apparent otherwise.

In conclusion we will merely observe again that the selection of members for the choir is a real problem; but let it be faced resolutely and let wise methods guide in its solution, always striving to advance to the attainment of better results and ideals.

Oratorio "Elijah" to be Sung at General Conference

Mendelssohn's immortal oratorio, "Elijah," has been chosen as the special musical offering of the big choir at the coming General Conference. Preparations for the rendition of this masterpiece have been under way for some time, and some of the larger choirs of the church have been diligently engaged in its practice for the past few months. It is therefore expected that the forces will come with the skill and zeal to give it a finished, spiritual interpretation. It is anticipated that the rendition of this great work will mark an era in the achievements of our musical forces.

The entire first part of the oratorio and that portion of the second part up to and including the chorus, "Be Not Afraid," will be given. Definite dates cannot now be given.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Notice of Appointment

We are pleased to announce the appointment of Brother S. M. Andes, of Andes, Montana, as district chorister for the Eastern Montana District, vice Sister Mabel Higgins, who removed to another district.

We urge for Brother Andes the hearty support of all the choir members of his district, that his work may be effective for the church.

ARTHUR H. MILLS, General Secretary.

We further desire to notify all concerned that Brother Neil McCallum, of Scammon, Kansas, is appointed chorister for the Spring River District, and we bespeak for Brother McCallum the hearty cooperation of all the choirs and singers of that district.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

S-A-V-E---the Children!

It is a day of "conservation." We hear the cry on every hand, and are told to save, save, save. To extravagant America this comes as a blessing in disguise. If "adversity" shall teach us the errors of the past, "sweet" indeed shall be its "uses." Our lessons in thrift have come—many of them—from across the seas. Years ago we were told that almost any foreign family could live well upon what an average American family wastes.

Recent paragraphs in the papers told of the return to this country of an American, one Mr. Dittlinger, who had acted as food controller of 108 public food kitchens in Berlin. In these kitchens an average of 300,000 people were fed daily, and Mr. Dittlinger's statements are most interesting as to methods and processes of the actual work done there. The thing that we wish to speak of here, is Germany's attitude toward her children. Mr. Dittlinger says: "The Government takes good care of the children, knowing they will be useful some day. In the distribution of milk, for instance, the full, or unskimmed, milk goes to the children under six years of age; the skimmed milk to those from six to twelve years old, and there isn't any left for others. Persons over twelve years can get neither milk nor cereals except on a physician's certificate."

Our country has not kept pace, in the past, with the progress made by other countries in taking steps to properly care for that portion of its child population which, through one cause or another, has so sorely needed care and protection. True it is, that of late years, by hard work and constant vigilance and urging, legislation has been accomplished which to some extent considers the real welfare of the helpless rather than the commercial value their toil might have for some "captains of industry." We are safe in assuming that if ever women are permitted to have a voice and vote in these affairs, more of "heart" and less of "finance" will be woven into our legislative procedures. Women were ever of "unbusinesslike" turn of mind; things appeal to them from a different standpoint; they are not always saying, "Will it be a good investment?"—meaning, of course, in dollars and cents.

The Government is awakening to the fact that more positive and energetic forces must be put to work if the ranks of our young men which have gone out at the country's call, are to be filled quickly by a sufficient number from the ranks of those who are still children. There has been an appalling proportion of deaths among children—entirely too great to be a credit to a God-blessed country such as this one has been. The odds against a baby's life have been too alarmingly great—caused by several very different habits of life and opinion among us. Of these it is not now our thought to speak, but sufficient it is to know that there are forces being set to work which will seek to better these conditions and to give every child born under the Stars and Stripes a greater chance for life and health.

We are pleased to call your attention to matter just received from the Government's Children's Bureau, and we hope that by keeping an intelligent watch upon the progress of these plans, each woman in the church will be able to lend a willing and capable hand in carrying them out to success in her locality. We should all feel it our special privilege to help in matters which so nearly concern our work as women and mothers; if we cannot see the need of conserving human life—we who go into the dark valley to bring it a gift to the community, who can be expected to rightly evaluate it?

Child Welfare Drive

(From the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor.)

The lives of one hundred thousand of the Nation's children are to be saved in a child welfare drive which the Federal Children's Bureau has announced to-day. The drive will begin on April 6, one year from the day the United States declared war, and the first day of the Children's Year.

Public health authorities agree that half the deaths of young children are easily preventable. Each State will be assigned a definite quota of the hundred thousand lives to save. State councils of defense and the State women's committees are being called upon to be responsible for the State quotas.

Methods of work will be those which have already proved efficient in saving children's lives in United States and other warring countries.

To inaugurate the Children's Year a nation-wide weighing and measuring of babies and children of pre-school age will be made. No such general test of the well-being of children has ever been attempted. It will show each community what its children need if the men of the rising generation are to be free from the physical defects which the draft has revealed.

The plans contemplate economy for every purpose except for the essential means of protecting child life.

In cooperation with the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, and therefore with the principal woman's organizations of the country, the Children's Bureau is preparing plans for a child welfare campaign for the second year of the war. The first aim of the campaign will be to secure the public protection of maternity and infancy.

Public health authorities agree that one half the deaths of infants are easily preventable, and that if children were well born and well cared for there would be practically no deaths of babies. Three hundred thousand American children under five die each year. Authorities also tell us that most of the fifteen thousand mothers who died last year died needlessly.

It is the plan of the Children's Bureau to save a certain definite proportion of these lives. It is believed that one hundred thousand lives can be saved this year notwithstanding the withdrawal of a large proportion of doctors and nurses for war service.

The State councils of defense and the State women's committees are called upon to be responsible for the State quotas. The actual methods by which those lives are to be saved are those whose effectiveness in saving children's lives is already demonstrated. They are described at length in various pamphlets which have been prepared by the Children's Bureau.

Briefly the methods are as follows:

First: The registration of births so that there may be an immediate record of every child born; and nursing and medical skill may be provided wherever family income does not permit its being secured independently.

Second: For every mother prenatal care, necessary care, of doctor and public nurse at confinement, and after care.

Third: Children's conferences where well babies can be taken periodically to be weighed and examined, and clinics where sick children may be given medical advice.

Fourth: The organization of State and city divisions of bureaus of child hygiene.

Fifth: The guarding of the milk supply, that every child may have his quota of clean, pure milk.

Sixth: An income making possible decent living standards.

In 1916 and in 1917 a nation-wide baby week was held under the auspices of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the Children's Bureau which has resulted in awakening a new sense of civic responsibility for infant life in thousands of localities, and has secured many new activities, such as nursing services, clinics, children's conferences, better milk and food supplies, better enforcement of birth registration laws.

In many communities the Baby Week celebrations have cost large sums, in others the Baby Week has proved an exceedingly effective means of awakening permanent interest at little or no expense.

Valuable as Baby Week is, however, the present emergency demands a longer and more comprehensive program. After the Nation's soldiers are provided for, the second year of the war should be dedicated by the civilian population to preserving the lives of the Nation's children. Is there any greater patriotic duty for the civilian population than to safeguard the welfare of the Nation's children?

Hence this year the plan is simpler and yet more far-reaching than ever before. It should be far more effective because through the women's committees not only the General Federation of Clubs but all the great women's organizations of the country will lend their cooperation.

Economy in unnecessary expenditures so as to save for essentials should characterize all work this year.

It is known that the examinations of the draft have resulted in a considerable number of rejections for physical defects which might have been remedied in infancy or early childhood if then recognized. Weight and height constitute on the whole a fair standard of development; how do the young children of the United States measure up to such a standard?

As a test of child welfare, to inaugurate the Children's Year which begins on April 6, the anniversary of the declaration of war by the United States, a nation-wide weighing and measuring of babies and children of pre-school age is proposed. No general test of children of pre-school age has ever been made, and an examination of such children with special reference to weight and height is now proposed as the primary feature of the war time Children's Year.

The Children's Bureau will provide a record card which will be arranged in duplicate so that one half can be sent in to the Children's Bureau and one half kept by the parents. The record will be filled out by trained physicians and nurses in many places; but if parents cannot take their children to an examining station they can secure cards and make the record themselves. The record card will show the fair standard for children of a given age and parents can judge for themselves where their children stand. Should there be any great divergence from this standard it is a warning that the children's health should be given medical consideration or should be carefully looked after. The records will all be gathered and tabulated by the bureau. The weighing and measuring experiment can be conducted with little or no expense.

Weighing and measuring should begin as soon as possible after the sixth day of April, and should be concluded within sixty days. It has been suggested that where Baby Week celebrations of any sort are to be held the last six days of this period, being the first six days of June, should be taken for Baby Week. Such celebrations as are held, will, it is hoped, especially emphasize the need of public health nurses and of special protection for young infants against the various dangers of summer heat.

One of the most remarkable developments of the war, a victory not heralded on front pages, yet which in time to come will be noted by all students of human welfare, is the saving of infant life in England during the second year of the war. The report of the Chief Medical Officer of the Local Government Board, Sir Arthur Newsholme, published in 1917, shows for one sanitary district after another throughout England and Wales the number of babies who died before the war, those who died the first year of the war, and the deaths for the second year of the war, 1916.

It is startling to turn over the pages of this report and to see that the general social confusion of the first year of the war resulted in a large increase in the number of babies who died. But in the second year of the war when the local government board was enabled to grant financial aid to the various sanitary districts and to secure cooperation in its policy of health visitors for every mother and baby, of health centers for consultation, of hospital care for sick mothers and babies, the rate went down not only far below the rate for the year before, but far below the rate previous to the war.

This record of life-saving in the midst of the strain of war by means so simple and so at command is, we believe, entirely without parallel.

Although the United States now lacks the machinery for such federal aid as England was enabled to grant to local work it has power enough locally to make a very creditable showing, and, it may be hoped, to pave the way for such governmental provision as will enable the United States to show the even greater salvage which its unexhausted condition makes possible.

Again, why should the United States, especially the newer rural States, be satisfied with a less favorable infant mortality rate than that which New Zealand can show? The New Zealand rate has steadily gone down, notwithstanding the war, and is now almost precisely half the rate for the registration area of the United States; that is, in New Zealand one baby in twenty dies, while in the United States one baby in ten dies. The most favorable State rate in the registration area is 70, that of Minnesota. Why should Minnesota not enter the race with New Zealand?

Information has just been received in this country that Doctor F. Truby King of New Zealand has sailed for Vancouver on his way to England. Doctor King is known as the active head of the New Zealand Society for the Health of Women and Children, an organization which, in cooperation with the Government, is credited with a large share of responsibility for the lowering of the New Zealand infant mortality rate in recent years. This society was organized when Lord Plunket was governor of New Zealand, and its nurses are known as Plunket nurses, in honor of Lady Plunket, who gave much aid to the society.

It is significant that Doctor King is now going to England to undertake similar work there at the request of a society in which Lord and Lady Plunket are moving spirits.

Doctor Truby King expects to be in the United States about three weeks. He writes that he wishes to be informed as to the latest developments in child welfare work in the United States, and his plan is to visit various cities where notable work is now under way. The visit of Doctor King just now gives added emphasis to the importance of the nation-wide campaign for infant welfare which the State and National Committees of Defense and the Children's Bureau are undertaking.

A Food Soldier

"Mother!"

The woman who has not been greeted about three-thirty or four o'clock of an afternoon with a shout like this, from a pair of healthy young lungs filled to capacity with fresh ozone from the out-of-doors, is a woman bereft indeed.

"Mother!"

The mother in an upstairs room smiled happily as she answered. "Present!"

Up he came bounding, three steps at a time, and into the lap of the mother flung a card, his books and cap upon the table.

"Just see what I have done, mother! Look at that card, and see what I'm up against now! Wheatless, and meatless, and sweetless,—goodness knows how I will ever be able to keep track of it all!"

The tone was full of dismay, anxiety, and real concern.

The mother examined the "food pledge card" just issued to the pupils of the high school, the fair head of her young son bending close to hers over the disturbing page. A tender light came into the eyes of the woman as they lifted from the card under examination, and rested yearningly upon the vigorous young figure beside her. How she loved him, and how she exulted in his pure young life, so far little contaminated by the evil of the world! He was but fourteen, and God forgive her if there came a little involuntary thought of thanksgiving that he was yet not old enough to be called from her side by the extremity of the Nation!

As the boy looked up, however, he saw only beaming joy and delight upon his mother's face! Not understanding, he drew back in wonderment! Could it be that she would fail him in this—would find pleasure in his real sacrifice—for such it had been to him to sign that card?

"And so my son is a soldier at last, a real soldier, one of Uncle Sam's very bravest and best! How glad I am, and what a splendid chance this is for you to show the spirit which animates our American boys and girls! The Government knew well upon whom it could depend, when it called upon its fine youth to help out in its emergency, in this fashion!"

The lad slowly smiled, a little ruefully, as he replied,

"Yes; but, mother, I do love ice cream and candy so well! It just seems hard not to have even a little bit, every day!" (Alas for our coming race, that the taste for excessive sweets is not confined alone to the young! Men and women of to-day like their sodas and sundaes, and sweeten their food and drinks extravagantly.)

"But, don't you see, son," said the mother, "this is the way in which you can do your bit? Are we not fortunate that you can do it, right here at home—that you are not sent out in the trenches in this cause? Surely you are willing; yes, eager, to fight Uncle Sam's battles, to be one of the many millions of units who are working to win the war for justice and humanity! You are ready for and consecrated to the purpose of carrying out to the letter the promises and pledges made on this card. I am so proud of you; so proud to know that you were prompt to make this sacrifice. I know it will be hard for you, and it will take self-denial, and self-control—plenty of it, but every time you are tempted to break this pledge, you will think, I know, of the boys 'over there,' who love sugar and good food as much as you do—away over there in a desolated country, dependent upon what we can send to them, fighting for us, for you and your safety, and for all you hold dear—I say, you will think of all this, and you will not yield, but will hold up your head, and rejoice that you have had this chance to show the stuff you're made of!"

The lad stood up. "I see it clearly now! I would be a yellow slacker if I did not live up to this food pledge, and be glad to do it! I would not be worthy to have those boys fighting for me. I may not be wearing the uniform as they are, but I can be as loyal to my country, and I am 'going to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer,' mother!"

He took the card with respectful touch and said, "Come, mother; help me plan it all out, and get it down to a working system. I want to begin right away—in 'the service.'"

It was no slight thing the boy had undertaken to do, right at the age of life and at the point of physical development, when great quantities of food seem necessary at frequent intervals to satisfy the pangs of boy-hunger. The pledge held him to ten meatless meals a week, seven wheatless ones, two candyless days, and one without ice cream, the elimination of which items from his menus made them seem, in his words, "pretty slim," indeed; but together they worked it out, and the lad has tried valiantly to be a "true blue" soldier for the Government. In the home his mother found he was a most valuable "first lieutenant" in helping her carry on that part of Uncle Sam's battles which must be waged in her kitchen and at her table, and among his associates, his fine patriotism, expressed in what he denied himself, and the careful observances of his pledge, serve to strengthen, build up and encourage a like sentiment upon their part. All hail to Uncle Sam's "food soldiers," wherever they may be, and God grant their efforts shall not prove in vain! A.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Holden Stake

The Holden Stake was organized July 15, 1916. Territorially it consists of nearly ten counties: Jackson (except the portions included in the Independence and Kansas City Stakes), Lafayette, Cass, Johnson, Saline, Pettis, and Cooper in Missouri; Miami, Johnson, and Wyandotte in Kansas, except that part of the last-named county included in the Kansas City Stake. The Missouri River washes the northern boundary of the Holden Stake, which is the southern line of Far West Stake. However, we haven't need of walls or fences; we love our neighbors. The Missouri River also affords our stake a hundred miles of water privileges, skirted in places with timber, giving employment to trained fishermen on a small scale. These advantages could help our Lamanite, Tahitian, and Hawaiian Saints to have a more "at home" feeling in Zion than some other parts of the State could offer them. Kansas was admitted to the Union in 1861 and has been an example to the Nation as a temperance State for many years. We have three good farming and stock raising counties named above in that State belonging to the Holden Stake, which the Saints looking Zionward would do well to consider.

The new Holden Stake has seventeen branches and missions with a membership of about one thousand four hundred. Elder D. J. Krahl is president; F. A. McWethy, counselor; C. J. Hunt, bishop; J. W. A. Bailey and I. M. Ross, counselors; Mrs. Anna M. Fender, secretary and recorder; The personnel of the stake high council is, F. A. Cool, secretary, H. E. Moler, W. S. Macrae, Doctor E. Thompson, C. A. Gaither, R. E. Burgess, E. E. Fender, J. E. Johnson, W. Hartnell, S. F. Scarchiff, and B. P. Thompson.

A FEW INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT MISSOURI

Missouri will celebrate the centennial of her statehood in 1921. The State lies almost in the geographical center of the United States, is a domain self-supporting, and leads nearly every State in the Union in horticulture or gardening, agriculture, stock and poultry raising. It also has a rich store of coal and minerals. More than three hundred varieties of fruits are grown, also nearly every valuable grass known to the world. Missouri is not a one-crop State. (The Holden Stake is justly proud of the counties provided from Missouri and her sister State, Kansas.) It has a variety of soil, also of climate. Two of its chief industries are sheep husbandry, cattle raising, and its dairy business which is increasing: Horses, mules, and swine pay well when properly cared for. The highest priced honey in the market is made from Missouri white clover. Seasonable years, corn, oats, and winter wheat are paying crops. Last year hundreds of acres of sorghum cane was raised in the Holden Stake, "sweetening" the market with thousands of gallons of molasses, the farmer realizing a satisfactory price.

Farm land ranges in price from forty to two hundred dollars an acre, according to quality, location, improvements, etc. Great care should be taken in buying, as some farms are very poor. A few of the Saints have bought without carefully investigating the land, paying exorbitant prices, lost money, became discouraged and finally moved to other States. Poor farms are always for sale, while good ones must be sought out. Very few farms are for rent. Don't believe all that every land agent tells you, though he claims to be a Latter Day Saint. We ought to be nearing the time when stake presidents will be authorized to prefer charges against members who falsely represent values of farms, town property, or business enterprises. (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1-6; 58: 1-4.)

The Holden Stake has great resources. Pettis and Saline are rated as the best farming counties in the State. Lafayette, joining Jackson County on the east, is the largest coal producing county in Missouri. Jackson and adjoining counties have more miles of rock roads than any other part of Missouri. We also have good markets at our doors, namely, Kansas City, Independence, and Sedalia. The annual State Fair is held at the last-named city. We have excellent schools and colleges. The State Normal is at Warrensburg where we have a good branch. This State strongly advocates the "mixing of more brains with our soil," hence a county farm advisor is furnished in nearly every county, whose service as lecturer and counselor is given free. One wise sage advised, "Give the boys and girls a chance on the farm and you have solved a most malignant social problem." Study every member of your family carefully before locating in a town or city.

RETROSPECTIVE AND PROSPECTIVE

While it is true that Missouri has not conducted herself towards the Saints in as pleasing a manner at all times as was hoped for, she is making amends for misdeeds, granting us privileges "after many days to accomplish all things pertaining to Zion." Buddha said, "He who hurts others injures himself; he who helps others advances his own interests." Missouri and Ohio, in the early thirties, hurt themselves, Illinois following their example, but they have had occasion to repent with godly sorrow which brings a change of heart. Now let us gently smooth the ruffled chapters of history with forgiving hearts, turning new pages containing invitation from them to attend their schools, colleges, and seminaries; occupy positions of trust in their factories, storehouses, and other commercial industries; to buy farms "in the region round about," to sow and reap, to plant and harvest, to pasture horses, cattle, and sheep "upon a thousand hills."

WORKMEN NEEDED

We need skilled workmen along many lines, as there is a constant demand for them. Holden is the stake headquarters. The office of the president and bishop, together with the new Saints' home for the aged is located here, and is in full operation. It has over seventy-five rooms and is the largest building owned by the church. One aged faithful sister, after entering this beautiful, comfortable home, said, "I have come to heaven to go to heaven."

A location is bought on which coal bins, etc., will be built, gradually adding to the enterprise until a real Holden storehouse will be in operation. Holden has good railroad facilities, hence an inviting place for factories. Investigation solicited.

COME PREPARED, THEN STAY

All Saints who contemplate moving to the stakes of Zion should read and reread Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8-14; 101: 2; 102: 1-8; 122: 6; 127: 7; 128: 6-9; 129: 8, 9; 130: 7, 8; then file your inventory with the Presiding Bishop, keeping a copy for your own convenience. When coming, do so with a full determination to "live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." The heaven-ordained principles of stewardship and inheritances will come before the church more prominently in the near future than ever before.

While it is true you can find some better farm lands in other States, where you might have greater prosperity financially, every Saint will remember that our heavenly Father directs the buying of lands in Jackson and adjoining counties first. He had a reason for giving this counsel. It has not been heeded as it should have been. (Doctrine and Covenants 102:8.)

TWO ZIONIC MOVEMENTS

Justice Brandeis of the United States Supreme Court, a noted Jew and Zionist worker for Palestine's redemption, said, "We need men, money, and discipline." Do I hear Latter Day Saint Zionist workers sanctioning, "So do we?" It was also advocated in their Zionist council that no man buying farms, etc., in the Holy Land should advance prices on their incoming brethren. God bless returning Israel. Shall we confess that the Jews in this generation are "wiser than the children of light"? (Doctrine and Covenants 127:7.)

Let us fully realize that the Now is the Future we all longed for several years ago.

The bishopric of the Holden Stake are willing to serve you as best they can. Call on us by letter or in person.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.

A Vision on the Gathering

Will write you of some of my work and what I saw the Sunday before this country declared war against Germany. I was presiding over a prayer meeting. I saw the land of America before me. The women were dressed in mourning for their loved husbands and sons, and they were digging in the soil to make a living, for great was the distress of this people. But this land was surrounded by masses of smoke. There was light in the center of the land.

When the vision had passed the spirit of prophecy came. The Saints were told to live faithful, for this land was the land to which God would gather his people, and the time was near when his people would be gathered from all parts of the earth. This is what I saw and of which I spoke.

The work is moving along nicely in the parts where I have been.

A. E. BURR.

Some Questions on the War

The HERALD is a welcome visitor in my home, and although I have often heard it said that the term love was often misused, but for me to say I like the HERALD would be putting it too mildly, for I love it.

The last four years of my life have been spent in the mission field and I can say truly, the Lord has been good to me. When called to the office of priest, knowing the Lord wanted me in the mission field, and knowing my inability to do what I thought ought to be done, I refused for some time or until the Lord showed me positively that was where he wanted me.

When being ordained, the Spirit spoke and confirmed what the Lord had shown me, that he would go before me in dreams and visions. This has been verified. Months before going to places and among people who never heard anything about our work, some have seen me in vision face to face, and when going into their community to preach have recognized me immediately as one they had seen in their vision, and I have had the privilege of baptizing them into the kingdom of God.

On the other side of the question, I have been twice at death's door, but our heavenly Father, because of my work not being finished, saw fit to miraculously raise me as it were from the dead. And I hope sometime in the future to have the privilege extended to tell you of God's blessings to me more fully.

As everyone, more or less, has something to say about the war, I would like to ask a few questions. The last few months I have had to do things that have hurt me exceedingly. Some time ago, I received a paper and one of the questions asked me was this, "Does the religious organization of which you are a member stand against war?" And which I had to answer no, for the next question was, "When did your organization take such a stand?"

I could cite them to no such resolution to that effect. So when I answered no it was all asked me in that list. I have read much in the HERALD about war which I am decidedly out of harmony with. I believe we ought to be taught, so would like to have some one answer these questions for me.

Section 95, paragraph 6 of the Doctrine and Covenants, has been quoted many times by those who have tried to justify themselves in this war, but to my notion the main thing has been overlooked. These words I read: "I the Lord would give unto them a commandment, and justify them in going out to battle against that nation, tongue or people," then follows what the Lord says he will do. I have never seen any such commandment. If there is one, will some one please tell me where it is?

Let us see what it says prior to this: the Lord, in speaking in the 95th section, paragraph 3, says (if we analyze it,) that he is going to prove us several times. Therefore he said, "Renounce war and proclaim peace."

When before a school board in defense of God's work some time ago I said, "We believe that God and Jesus say what they mean and mean what they say." Now I would like to ask what the above statement means.

Doctrine and Covenants 63:9, first five lines says: "I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked, I am holding my spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth and the wicked shall slay the wicked," etc.

Does this allow the righteous to participate in the event?

Does section 42, paragraphs 6 and 7, refer to us or somebody else? If the prayers of faith are ascending to the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth to avenge the blood which has been shed, should we participate in the avenging when the Lord forbids us to shed blood in the establishment of Zion?

I wonder if Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 7:26, 31, is not prophecy fulfilled. Where are the righteous in this? Some one read it, then please tell me. Christ says that a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand. Jesus' mission was one of peace, and John the Baptist said, "He that is sent of God will speak the words of God." Then if Christ spoke peace should I speak peace or war? The Lord says we are justifiable in supporting that which is constitutional. If the select service law is constitutional, why didn't the supreme court say so? [They did.—EDITORS.]

I know of no country that has democracy absolutely, therefore I cannot see how the United States can be the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands. According to the scriptures we will always have monarchial or kingly form of government even when Christ comes.

Many more passages could be cited, but I believe this is sufficient for the present.

This is the first I have written to the HERALD, and hope and pray I may see this in print or in its pages, and will receive answers to my questions.

Your brother in Christ,
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO. JOHN D. CARLISLE.

PERRY, IOWA, January 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: Please herald the news that Perry is progressing, and the greatest effort ever made by every member, old and young, will be made now. The Cornish meetings have had such a telling effect that his return will be asked for. We now understand why the Lord calls so many different styles of men into his work. Here are some of the expressions that tell. "Cornish is so cute about bringing down his hammer that you can't get angry, but he does prove his points." "He is fascinating in his portrayals, and the little incidents of his home and childhood life are so interesting." Others like the dignity of E. E. Long. Some prefer this one and some that one, on account of little personal traits, but the Saints recognize the fact that all must be equally appreciated and upheld as agents of the true church.

The branch president, Brother H. H. Hand, will make a great effort to bring the children and their instruments into the choir. This is right, for we parents are paying our money to teachers of stringed instruments for the very purpose that they shall give their time and talents to the Lord. The president hopes to have some of the wind instruments later. In fact, he has two such instruments already bought. He has several pianists in his congregation, or they will be, as they are studying well and taking lessons. Perry does not lack for any kind of teacher but one that is playing the harp, and one of our sisters has been studying that beautiful instrument for two years. She has said, "I can never raise six or eight hundred dollars to buy one, but my education does not end here. I shall use it all in the future."

Brother Hand takes music journals, and studies them, too. We are pleased at this. We realize he can become a professional theorist and technician by this very course. He will tell us what this or that great leader has to say of music and its benefits to the service of the Master.

Brother E. D. Moore from Lamoni only spent a few hours with us. We must hear this man again. He must stay longer. We like the subjects he presented, and want instruction along those lines.

A new plan is being worked by the Catholic ladies for the benefit of their children's homes and other homes which sound good to us. They gather in one body, each set of ladies takes so many garments to work over (things that have been shipped in). They take them apart, wash or have them cleaned, then dye some of them and make new garments. Some bring little trimming buckles, buttons, or anything they can spare. Their secretary sends measures of different children, some child in turn is found who answers the measure. The same is done with grown-ups. Thus the garments are made ready, and you would be surprised to see the extremely beautiful gowns made up, and no cost but the time.

We like the idea and our people can keep all their clothing in the same way, and our children can be well dressed, too. Not homeless ones, but others as well. I think they made twelve garments in four hours.

We are all pleased with the educational advantages our church papers and tracts send forth. We believe there is no time to be lost and plenty of work for all.

NELLIE MARTIN.

SUVER, OREGON, January 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: I came out to Oregon about the first of May, 1909, and the HERALD and Ensign have been my only preachers since I came here. I have been doctoring for cancer since coming here, so I have not been able to spare the money to go to Myrtle Point to enjoy the company of Saints. I have been among Catholics, United Brethren, Seventh-day Adventists, etc., but have never failed to tell what church I belonged to, and was ever ready to defend the doctrines, when assailed.

I am still suffering from cancer and do not know whether I will ever be cured, but the Lord's will be done.

My home before coming here was West Branch, Ogemaw County, Michigan, and I miss the company of the Saints of West Branch, Rose City, and other places, where we attended conferences.

I ask for the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed and also that I may always remain faithful and steadfast in the faith, and my prayers will be for the onward and upward progress of the work.

Your brother in the one faith,
RICHARD BOSHAW.

ANDES, MONTANA, January 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we do not see our part of the Lord's vineyard represented very often in your columns, I will try to send a few words, as we are still among the living and are trying to be among the faithful ones. Our branch seems to be as wide-awake as ever, although it may not look as though we were so faithful, if you look at the Bishop's record, but we have had a very dry season and this accounts for the lack of finance.

Our little Sunday school did its part nobly considering the hard times, and all are ready to do their part again. We raised $156.50, and it would have been much more if the crops had not failed. We have some noble workers here and if we can only be blessed with a good season this year, you will hear of some good work being accomplished, if the Lord so wills. The talent is here and the mind to do, but circumstances are against us as some of our best workers have families to take care of, so if we wish to keep the commandments we must look to the care of the family first.

'Tis true, this does not hinder work being done in our own branch, and some are doing all they can, for which they will receive their reward.

Our Religio is quiet at present on account of bad weather, but we hope ere long we can revive it again.

I find it is not all in making a show or in telling what we know, but in the way we do our work, and the way we tell our brother of his faults, that does the most good. I may know my duty or my brother's duty but if I do not use wisdom in doing mine, or in telling my brother his, I have lost all the good I might have accomplished had I had wisdom.

Our district president in an address a few Sundays ago spoke at length on the subject of needing wisdom, and it made its impression, too. I only wish we had more wisdom so that we could be able to assist at the right time, and to keep silent at the right time.

Many are the good thoughts that we glean from your pages and it has been a good many years that we have had the opportunity of reading your pages, as you came to our home when I was a babe. Now I have eight to instruct; so we are trying to keep all the church literature in our homes that we can, that our children may be able to tell the gospel story.

We have more snow here this winter than we have had for years. That is why we cannot hold our Religio services, as we do not try to hold any services at night. We are trying to finish our church so we can have it dedicated in the spring. Hoping and praying for the speedy redemption of Zion, I remain yours in the faith, S. M. ANDES.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints of the Western New York District: Having received the resignation of Brother F. J. Updyke as bishop's agent of the above district, we have appointed Brother J. H. Lewis, of Hammondsport, New York, to act in his stead. We believe that in the appointment of Brother Lewis that the Saints will find one who is well qualified to act in this capacity and we commend him and trust that he may receive the benefit of their confidence and prayers as well as their financial support.

Brother Updyke has served the church for a number of years in capacity of bishop's agent and we desire to express our appreciation of the service which he has rendered.

Very sincerely,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Quorum Notices

Members of the Second Quorum of Seventy will please forward annual reports on the regular report blanks used for reporting to the First Presidency, to the undersigned as soon as possible after February 28. If you do not expect to attend the General Conference, please inclose 15 cents dues. A. C. Silvers, secretary, 329 West Hickory Street, Nevada, Missouri.

To the First Quorum of Seventy: You are requested to send me your yearly report, covering the period from March 1, 1917, to March 1, 1918, to the address, 708 South Willis Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Report, as per resolution, should be made on the regular report blanks No. 560. Let me admonish the brethren to be prompt in this matter of reporting and thus assist the secretary in making a compilation of the year's labor for the General Conference. If the brethren have acted in any other capacity besides that of missionary during the year please state.

S. S. SMITH, Secretary.

A Letter to Branch Presidents

A circular letter was sent out from the advertising department some time ago, to all branch presidents whose addresses we had been able to secure. Possibly yours was not furnished us.

This circular urged that each branch organize a campaign to reach the home of every family of Saints with a personal opportunity to subscribe for the church periodicals and secure other church literature.

A goodly number have responded enthusiastically. There should be many more. One branch president in one of the Missouri stakes replied that they were starting the New Year with a resolution that they would have at least one of the general church publications in the home of every Saint. In three hours he secured orders amounting to over sixteen dollars.

A brother in the East reported that the branch priesthood has organized and would carry out a systematic campaign.

Out on the Pacific a live-wire pastor wrote a fine letter, telling that the gospel literature board were getting to work and he would help them till they had accomplished the maximum of results.

In central Iowa a pastor told us he was the chairman of the gospel literature board and would surely report something done in a short time. In the same section a pastor and the priest of the branch went out and in a short time secured over forty subscriptions in a less number of visits. The Saints were glad of the privilege.

So the good work goes on in various ways, all of them good. One letter asked us if it would be a good plan to have the branch advance the money for those who felt they were too poor to subscribe, then collect small payments through a good local agent. It was a fine idea and we told him so.

Viewed from every angle, this movement is worthy the serious thought and endeavor of anyone. Every reader of the church publications is glad to recommend them to others. Good help will be forthcoming, we are sure. To you and other authorized agents we are willing to send a mailing list of the publications received in your branch. Sample copies sent free. A ten per cent discount is given authorized agents on books not marked "net" in the price list.

Let your literature committee earn its Christmas offering by retaining the ten per cent discount we are offering on all new subscriptions. The only restriction is that it must be turned into the Christmas offering fund.

LAMONI STOREHOUSE ACQUIRES COAL BUSINESS

The Lamoni Storehouse, managed by Bishops B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, and A. Carmichael, has purchased the coal business and part of the property of the Badham Coal Company, of Lamoni, taking possession on the 14th. It is intended to make it a part of the Storehouse line of mercantile business, which had already included a flourishing grocery store.

NEW PRICES ON LEATHER BINDINGS

The manager is running a notice in this issue that after March 1, there are going to be some advances in the prices of books, on those requiring leather in their binding. Those who had intended to purchase any of these should do so in a hurry now.

G. R. Wells, superintendent of the Sunday school association, left Lamoni on the 16th, to attend a stake convention of the auxiliaries at Independence. He was given the privilege of selecting such phases of the Sunday school subject as lay closest to his heart. He is scheduled for a trip to Chicago about the middle of March. Incidentally this is a busy season for Sunday school and Religio people, with reports showing in and programs to arrange, etc.

MEAT MARKET ADDED TO LAMONI STOREHOUSE

The Bathe and Hill Meat Market in Lamoni has been purchased by and will be incorporated with the Lamoni Stake Storehouse here. Possession will be given immediately and fixtures moved soon.

NEW LAMONI LAUNDRY EXPANDING

After only four weeks of business it has been found necessary to increase the capacity of the Lamoni Steam Laundry. New machinery will be installed immediately, totaling about $3,000 in value. The big basement under the entire building will be utilized and will furnish sufficient room for the present.

Elder W. E. Haden has been holding some very successful meetings at Pawnee, Missouri, not far from Lamoni, of late. The attendance was excellent and six were baptized. A well-attended farewell supper was given him when he left the community.

PRINTING NAMES OF DELEGATES

This is the time of the year when we receive long lists of names of delegates elected to the General Conventions and General Conference. So far we have only torn our metaphorical hair and wished there were some better way to circulate this information. Perhaps that is all that is necessary to do but it does seem, sometimes, that it might not be necessary to use several pages for these names when it gives them no official recognition because of being printed. The only thing it can do is to notify the ones elected, and might not that be done better by letter or card. The conference lists are not so long, but the Religio and Sunday school delegations are very extensive sometimes. We beg of the district and stake secretaries to consider the matter seriously to decide as to whether it is necessary to have the entire list of names printed. We are your servants.

PLEASE PASS THE RATS

When you stop in at Delmonico's or some other big place in little old New Yawk, run over the menu card and call for "marsh rabbit." They say it's fine and the wealthy people have created quite a demand for it. Of course if you want the same thing at home, ask Johnnie to take his .22 or his steel trap and go down to the pond and bring up a muskrat or two. Who'd a thought we'd be eating rats—muskrats—to save food for our allies?—From The Periscope; February Autumn Leaves.

BILLY SUNDAY IN WASHINGTON

Some kind friend evidently put us on the subscription list of The Washington Herald during the series of services held at Washington, District of Columbia, by William A. Sunday, the noted evangelist. Many of his sermons are printed in full and are a marvel in their style, but mere words do not express much regarding this man and his methods, so we forbear.

PHYSICAL CULTURE IN A NEW SIZE

The Physical Culture Magazine for February appears in a larger and more attractive size, already made familiar to the public in The American and Cosmopolitan, and latterly in Everybody's, The Red Book, and System. This is now commonly regarded as the new standard magazine size, offering better display of illustrations and a more attractive page.

Physical Culture uses a two-column page with large, readable type.

"I INTEND TO STUDY CONTINUALLY"

Brother William B. Hartley is in the Navy, serving on the South Dakota. He ordered a copy of the Inspired Translation of the Bible, having had a copy of the Sermon on the Mount, put out by Brother C. A. Gurwell. This latter was loaned to the chaplain of the training station who was also interested in the teachings of the church. "If I am to explain the difference between our gospel and other people's beliefs, I want to use what I consider one of our best arguments: the Inspired Translation. I have had occasion to tell of this glorious gospel to several of my associates, including my 'chum,' who at the present time reads the HERALDS with apparently as much interest as I do myself. I am trying to live up to my covenant to my heavenly Father and intend to study continually. More orders for church books and papers will be sent in later." The quoted extract is from his letter. He is from Philadelphia.

NEW CHURCH BUILDING AT ROCK ISLAND

We congratulate the Saints at Rock Island, Illinois, on the completion of their new building, shown herewith. It is a neat looking structure and should be a source of much comfort. We are sure that all the Saints sacrificed much in the effort, but we think first of the enthusiastic labors of Doctor J. E. Asay, of the building committee. He is a good advertiser, and naturally that quality appeals to us. They recently had a neat little letter head printed here with the picture of the church on it, so we appropriated the cut long enough to let you have a look.

CHURCH HISTORY STUDENTS NOTICE

In volume 1, page 209, of the Church History, is the account of the laying of the corner stone for the temple. The statement is that there were eight present, but only seven are mentioned. John Whitmer's journal gives the name of the other man as Frederick G. Williams. This may be of special interest to those who have noted the omission in the account.

Sister Mary Hawkins, of Stewartville, Missouri, relates that not long ago she was given the privilege of hearing angelic voices sing the third verse of number 83 in the Hymnal, beginning: "Fear not, I am with thee; O be not dismayed." She finds much comfort in the reading of the church publications.

It is related by Elder William Lewis, who sends us the obituary items for Angenetta Moberly, that had she lived till next August 15, it would have been her sixty-third wedding anniversary. At the soldiers' reunion at Golden City, Missouri, in the fall of 1916, a prize was offered to the couple present who had been married the longest. Over five thousand were present, but the prize went to this sister and her companion.

DOCTOR WASHINGTON GLADDEN AMONG THE PROPHETS

In view of the fact that the clergy of the world has long denied the continuity of the prophetic office and the possibility of further revelation, some strange utterances are coming from the pulpit of late.

Not long ago we reproduced a remarkable proclamation, signed and put forth by leading Protestant ministers of Great Britain, announcing the near approach of the second coming of Christ and the dawn of the millennium. Now we note a pronouncement coming from the pen of the noted Doctor Washington Gladden (Congregationalist) professing to voice the sentiments of Jesus Christ, and couched in terms of revelation.

This "revelation" is found in an editorial in The Christian Work, (New York,) in the fourth of a series of editorials entitled "Religion after the war." The quotation is carefully verified, and is as follows:

It [the church] is confronting now the consequences of its own timidity and treachery. And it is listening to a great voice out of heaven calling it to repentance. Shall we take our places with it on the stool of the penitent, and listen with a humble and a contrite heart to what the Voice is saying? There is none among us who has not need of its reproof.

Thus speaks the Angel of the Covenant, our Elder Brother, to the chief priests and elders and scribes and prophets of all the churches in this year of grace, nineteen hundred and seventeen.

Brother Men: Your words of confession and contrition have been heard in heaven. We trust they are sincere words; only he who searches the heart knows. The feeling you try to express may well be deepened. You have been very unfaithful to your trust; in an hour that tried men's souls you were found wanting. May we admonish you to read, carefully, in your Bible the first chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah? That was spoken by a man of God to a nation that was a church and a church that was a nation. There were men once who did not flinch from telling churches and nations the truth. You as churches and as the teachers and guides of the nations, need to hear it to-day, and lay it to heart.

You are conscious that the present war found you morally crippled and paralyzed, helpless to take the leadership belonging to you. That is a bitter confession, but do not evade it. You are looking forward to the cessation of the slaughter, and wondering what part you are to take in the rebuilding of the wreck of what you called civilization.

Be assured, then, that the thing required of you is a thorough reconstruction of your whole religious life. No less radical remedy than that of John the Baptist will serve. Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. We hear some of your prophets proclaiming that there is not to be any new religion; it was a more faithful witness who said long ago to people who needed it no more than you do: "Cast away from you all your transgressions wherein ye have transgressed and make you a new heart and a new Spirit, for why will ye die, O House of Israel?"

If you insist on keeping the same old religion you will have the same old hell on earth, which your religious leaders have been industrially preparing for through all these centuries, and the full fruit of which you are gathering now. If you like the harvesting, all you have to do is to keep on sowing the same kind of seed.

It should be evident by this time that the call of the kingdom upon you is for a radical reconstruction of your religious life, and especially of your religious teaching. You know that your industry, your education, your politics, your international relations have got to be revolutionized; do not imagine that you are going to muddle along with the same kind of religion. If you do you will be swept aside, and something other and better will take your place.

You must not only bring some new, constructive elements into your religious life, you must eliminate, remorselessly, some of the old ones. As the old prophet told you, you have some things to cast away. You must not only provide for the people some new and better food, you must stop feeding them poison. You must stop telling them lies about the Bible, and you must not keep still when lies are told. You must stop slandering God by saying things about him, or permitting things to be said about him, on your authority, which imply that he is heartless or hateful or unjust.

You must cease to stand sponsor any longer for those principles of militaristic and atheistic nationalism by which the rulers of the earth have so long kept the world at war. You must renounce them, deny them, stamp them out.

These are excrescences upon Christianity which must be cut out to save the life of religion. The pruning hook is not the only implement of soul culture, but it is sometimes needed, and this is the time for it.

You must not go down into the new day with the life of the church fettered and enfeebled and crippled by these falsehoods. You must bear witness against them; you must get rid of them.

But there is a great work for you to do not only in correcting errors, but in declaring the good counsel of God, the whole of it. The great truths which Jesus made the burden of his message, the truths of the divine Fatherhood and the human Brotherhood, you must clothe with life and power. You must believe them yourselves; you must convince men of their truth. It is amazing how few of the children of men are yet convinced of these truths; how many there are who still suppose that the law of love is never going to be in force until the millennium; that for the present it is nothing more than good-natured advice that men can take or leave as they choose. You must make them see and understand that it is in force to-day; that the penalty of disobedience to it is death—spiritual death—which means hate and spite and jealousy and fear and suspicion, with all the curses that they entail; that this war, with all its horrors, is nothing but the penalty visited upon mankind for disobedience to the law of love. Not one in ten of the members of your church has any conception of the meaning of this central law of the moral universe, or of the nature of its sanctions. Why have you left them in ignorance about it all these centuries? Why have you permitted them ignorantly to bring down upon their heads such retributions?

Make them see that the penalties of disobeyed law are instant and inevitable and deadly. Make them understand how much better it is to win the rewards of this law than to invoke its penalties.

Show them also the implications of the great law of Fatherhood, which so many of them have spent their lives in blaspheming. Show them how that law prohibits national hatreds and racial antipathies; how it makes war fratricide. How can it be that these millions have been bearing the name of Jesus Christ all these centuries and have understood this?

And how much there is in the life of all your churches that sets this law at defiance. Oh, you have got to get rid of a good share of it—of your formalisms and your sacramental and ritualistic technicalities, of your barriers that shut you in and shut love out, of your sectarian divisions that cripple all wholesome cooperations, of all the millineries and flummeries that belittle and devitalize faith. You cannot go down into the new day that is before you with all these encumbrances.

These are critical days, brother men, for the churches of Christ. You have had great opportunities which you have not improved; you have made a sad failure, as you confess; the tragedy of this war speaks to you a great warning. Will you heed it?

You are debating, perhaps, what you will do after the war. Can you afford to wait until after the war? Will not that be too late? Is not now, even more, the acceptable time and the day of salvation? For such tasks as confront you, for such responsibilities as await you, the work of preparation cannot too soon begin.—The Christian Work, December 29, 1917.

Many caustic criticisms have been passed upon the initial revelation given to our people in 1820. It is not so long ago that the Reverend Nutting wrote to the HERALD Editors denouncing the revelation given at that time as positively blasphemous in that it represented Jesus Christ as saying that the creeds of the churches were all wrong and the clergy in great need of repentance.

Yet now comes Doctor Gladden, a fellow clergyman of Reverend Nutting's own denomination and, posing as a prophet, asks us to listen to "the Angel of the Covenant, our Elder Brother," call all the chief priests and elders and scribes of all the churches to repentance, to cast away their "old religion" and "reconstruct" their whole religious life.

A reading of the first chapter of Isaiah, to which attention is called in the foregoing document, shows how bitter and unsparing is the castigation of the churches and the clergy.

Without indorsing the document in any way, we present it for what it may be worth as one of the "signs of the times." Truly many prophets shall arise.

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF THE WAR

Such publications as The Public and others are noting some of the strange outcomes of the present war. Of course one of the most startling is the revolution in Russia, but in England the laboring man has received a recognition hardly possible within a century except in such special time of stress as this. More and more it is being seen among the European powers that the people cannot be expected to carry the whole burden, but the landed proprietor must bear his share. The tendency is decidedly towards greater democracy and social equality.

Yet on the other hand, if certain reports are true, the junkers, or agrarian class, of Prussia, refuse to bear their proper share of the burden and are continuing to make large profits from the war.

In France there is a greater solidarity, and a quicker response to the demand of the popular will.

The United States, however, is still open to the objection in that some, at least, are being permitted to make profits, if not undue profits from the national necessity.

At such a time, the example of Henry Ford is noteworthy. The Government asked for his Cambridge plant; he turned it over without rent. He has placed all of its facilities at the disposal of the Government without profit. The daily papers advise that his whole plant has been placed at the disposal of the Government to make special trucks, and other articles needed by the Government. Hence the production of touring cars will be reduced, so far as this appears advisable.

He has placed his own services also at the disposal of the Government and is acting as assistant to the shipping board.

He is not alone in this. Many men of wealth are giving their services without price or for a salary of one dollar a year. Their private income is sufficient for their needs.

The importance of the movement is that it demonstrates that men of the first rank of ability are willing to work for the common cause, devoting time and talent for a lesser reward than can be secured in private enterprise, provided their service is needed by the state or society.

This has been in the past a matter of dispute. It has been contended time and again that men of the first rank will not give their services unless they find that they are gaining an equal recompense. But it has been pointed out by careful students that men have been repeatedly willing to work in the cabinet, which after all is a subordinate position, or in other ways in connection with the Government, in times of peace, taking their reward in honor rather than in pay, as they received a very much less financial reward than was the case either before or after their association with the Government.

Many consider the reason to be a matter of honor. Others make the claim that it gives an insight into Governmental machinery. It acts as a stepping-stone to better private employment. Such has proven to be the case in many instances, if not in most, for, after leaving the employment of the Government, these men have been employed at a very much increased salary elsewhere.

But we are of the opinion that the reason reaches deeper than that, and that it really means a devotion to the popular good and popular service: "Popular," that is the sense of the service of the people, that these men are willing to sacrifice, in other words, for the common service and the common good.

Some seem to see only the restriction and discipline associated with warfare, the very necessary limitations placed upon popular liberty for the sake of the common welfare. Others are concerned with an attempt to point out that some of the restrictions are unnecessary. But a careful examination of the history of this country shows that similar criticisms were directed against Abraham Lincoln, and similar pleas were made at that time, that democracy was being overturned.

The history of the country shows that when the crisis had passed, these extra restrictions of the time of war passed quickly with them.

Every war of the past century has meant increased rights for the people. It was so in 1848, it was so even in 1870 in France, although this was one of the most unexpected results of that war. It has been so practically around the world since then.

Yet this, the greatest war of which we have any historic knowledge, bids fair to bring the largest possible fruition of individual and collective freedom; a deeper recognition of fundamental justice and equality, greater politic and economic equality of man, and something at least gained for the spirit of cooperation.

It is true that much still remains to be done, but it is also true that the tendencies go so far as to cause some to look for a millennium to reign at the close of the war. The term millennium being used, not in a strict sense of a thousand years, but rather in a sense of an age of justice, peace, and righteousness.

If this is to be an accomplished fact, much remains to be done in the control of individual and community passions. Peace on earth, good will to all men, is not an impossibility, nor is sacrifice, cooperation, and justice between men to-day merely a dream.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Some things are useful, some are ornamental, some are neither, and some are both. The religion of the Saints should be both. If it makes no actual change in your life throw it away. If it is not practical it is not worth while.

While lofty ideals should actuate our lives they should be practical as well as lofty. It is all right to talk of "hitching your wagon to a star;" but we must find some way to get at the star—and be sure that it is not a comet.

Some one has said that "religion is the best armor in the world, but the poorest cloak." The Pharisees thought of religion as a cloak to hide their sins. Paul thought of it as an armor to protect his immortal soul and help him fight the good fight of faith.

Those people who are exhorting everyone to "smile" under any and all circumstances are on the wrong line. One smiles only when the heart is glad. A forced smile is merely a grin and fools no one and helps no one. Ruth McEnery Stuart says the jack-o'-lantern "lost his brains to get his smile."

If Graceland College does nothing else it does this one thing: it demonstrates the fact that men of exceptional ability and exceptional training can be obtained to do secular work in the church and for the church on a "stewardship basis" and that it is not necessary to adopt the worldly standard in salary raising in order to hold their services.

Sometimes we think that we are very "frank" and "plain spoken" when in fact we are only impertinent.

A very excellent elder, now deceased, was preaching on a certain occasion, and according to his custom was hitting the supposed foibles and faults of his hearers in a very blunt and savage manner. He justified it by saying, "I am like Nephi of old. My soul delighteth in plainness." Later he asked a good sister her opinion of his discourse, and, perhaps with equal "plainness," she replied, "It is all right to delight in plainness of speech but you were only impudent."

In our pulpit work we sometimes use sentiments identical with sentiments previously voiced by others. Even the words may be very similar. This may be a coincidence—the result of two minds thinking along similar lines. Or it may be that the sentiment has stuck somewhere in our subconscious mind and we use it without realizing where we got it. But in the event that we are consciously using the sentiments and words of others it is much safer and better to give due credit.

The ancient debate between Labor and Capital is many sided. But my sympathy goes with Labor. For it is flesh and blood. It has a heart—many hearts—even if they are calloused. It has eyes, if they are sometimes blind. It has ears, though often deaf. It feeds all men, but is often hungry. It clothes all people, but is often naked. It builds all homes, but is most often a tenant. To it Jesus addressed his most passionate appeal: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden."

On page 411 of the sixth volume of the church history published by the Utah Mormon church appears a remarkable statement, purporting to come from the lips of Joseph Smith the Martyr. It is found in a synopsis of a sermon delivered by the prophet from the stand in Nauvoo, Sunday, May 26, 1844 (only a month before his death.) He is replying to the charges made in the Nauvoo Expositor. He says: "What a thing it is for a man to be accused of committing adultery, and having seven wives, when I can find only one." Our Gentile friend may twist the statement as made here in a ridiculous way. But our Mormon friends claim to present Joseph Smith as a prophet whose testimony may be relied upon. Clearly his intention was to say plainly that at that time he had but the one wife. We are indebted to our Utah friends for having preserved and published this statement unwittingly.

In the same volume, on page 474, is a report of a sermon by the prophet from the stand in Nauvoo, June 6, 1844. In one passage they report him as saying: "I have taught all the strong doctrines publicly, and always taught stronger doctrines in public than in private." This was about ten days before his death and effectually disposes of the Utah claim that he taught the strong (and rank) doctrine of polygamy in private, not daring to teach it in public. Salt Lake can hardly repudiate its own version of these sermons. Our unknown correspondent at Mormon headquarters who has been writing us anonymous letters will please take notice.

There is no halfway ground. Either Joseph Smith was true and clean, open and above board, as the Reorganized Church claims; or else he was a hypocrite and a fraud through and through, as his enemies claim. The Utah Mormons cannot long continue seriously to contend that he was a real prophet of God, and a good man, yet blowing hot in private and cold in public, a monogamist in the pulpit and press and a polygamist in his home, a pure milk of the word man by daylight and a strong meat man after dark.

THE SEVENTH BABY

Again and again have we seen the information repeated that in certain communities, one out of every four babies die during its first year. The Delineator has been running for the better part of the year a series of articles under the heading, "Save the seventh baby." They state that the average for the United States is that one life is sacrificed out of every seven born, and that forty per cent of these die because their mothers are in ill health or subjected to living or working conditions that condemn the child before birth. The other sixty per cent that die are not properly cared for after birth.

Several towns have taken the matter up affirmatively, investigated the actual conditions, and what is needed. They are willing to furnish the information for any town desiring to make a survey and eliminate waste.

In the January Delineator, the following towns are listed on an honor roll, as they are trying to save the seventh baby: Farmington, Massachusetts; Helena, Arkansas; Casper, Wyoming; Staunton, Virginia; Amsterdam, New York; Middletown, Connecticut; Laurel, Mississippi; Leavenworth, Kansas; Sheridan, Wyoming; Oskaloosa, Iowa; Rome, Georgia; Hattiesburg, Mississippi; Boulder, Colorado; Pittsfield, Massachusetts; Danville, Virginia; Putnam, Connecticut; Westfield, Massachusetts; Fort Smith, Arkansas; Cheyenne, Wyoming.

We have emphasized before the great industrial loss of life, and also the great waste of life in infancy. It is a matter that very closely concerns us.

THE COMING OF CHRIST AND JERUSALEM DELIVERED---Part 1

BY HENRY A. STEBBINS

After going through the Scriptures and selecting what I consider to be the most important texts about the present days and the events that are to come, I send you the following:

"UNTO US A SON IS GIVEN"

1. The first thought in connection with this great world war is that the Lord Jesus Christ, in his covenant of sacrifice and by the promise of his Father, purchased this earth in order to redeem it and its inhabitants from Satan, sin, and death, and that all his work and all the progress that has been made and that will be made, are to result by and by in his righteous and happy government over the earth and over all the people of the earth.

We read as follows:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder. . . . Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal [or power] of the Lord of hosts will perform this.—Isaiah 9: 6, 7.

Ask of me, and I shall give thee nations [heathen] for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.—Psalm 2: 8.

Then in verse twelve the advice is given to "kiss the Son," that is that they should love and honor the Son of God, even the one who is to be their faithful and righteous ruler. I have substituted the word nations for the word heathen because that is what it means. Among the Hebrews all nations who were not Abraham's children were called heathen, not using the word however in the sense that it is used among civilized peoples in our time, thus indicating that all others are barbarians or uncivilized.

CHRIST'S REIGN

2. The Scriptures state that Christ is yet to come in possession of the earth; in fact he is to live upon it with his people. Besides the foregoing from Isaiah and Psalms, I quote as follows:

I saw . . . the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away.—Daniel 7: 13, 14.

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the Saints of the most high . . . and all dominions shall serve and obey him.—Daniel 7: 27.

And I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them, and judgment [or justice] was given unto them . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 4.

And hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.—Revelation 5: 9, 10.

A MILLENNIUM OF PEACE

3. Christ's work of redemption not only includes the earth and his special people, but also all the nations and inhabitants of the earth; and near the beginning of the millennium they will be brought under his peaceful and happy government. He is called "The Prince of peace." On this point read the previous quotations from Isaiah 9: 6, 7 and Psalm 2: 8. Also from Daniel 7: 13, 14. Then besides read as follows:

And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.—Revelation 11: 15.

I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.—Isaiah 49: 6.

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations.—Matthew 25: 31, 32.

SHALL JUDGE ALL PEOPLE

4. As soon as may be possible Christ will put an end to war and to all oppression and wickedness. All the nations have departed from God and from his truth, from purity and righteousness, and even the most civilized and enlightened of them will need to be reprov'd and punished for their sins, national and individual, for their follies, their corruptions, their oppressions, their deeds of cruelty and their wars and other bloodshed. On these points read the following:

And it shall come to pass in the last days. . . . And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore.—Isaiah 2: 4, and Micah 4: 3.

Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son. He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. He shall judge the poor of the people; he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.—Psalm 72: 1, 2, 4.

JUSTICE SHALL PREVAIL

5. Mercy, truth, and righteousness will be taught from heaven to all the people, and no one will need to go wrong; also justice and equity will prevail everywhere under Christ and his associate rulers. See texts already quoted; also as follows:

In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth.—Psalm 72: 7.

For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence; and precious shall their blood be in his sight.—Psalm 72: 12-14.

His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed.—Psalm 72: 17.

Thus saith the Lord God. . . . Exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.—Ezekiel 21: 26, 27.

RESTORATION OF THE JEWS

6. An important event of the near future is the restoration of the Jews to their land, as was promised to Abraham in God's covenant to him, and as spoken of by the prophets and by Christ himself. I select some of the chief verses from the prophets, as follows:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

And they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers and their queens thy nursing mothers.—Isaiah 49: 22, 23.

And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.—Isaiah 61: 4.

Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.—Jeremiah 31: 10.

And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth.—Jeremiah 33: 7-9.

And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms anymore at all.—Ezekiel 37: 22.

THE GREAT BATTLE

7. I will now speak of the nations that are engaged in the present world war, and of those nations which will be in the great battles that are to take place some years later in Palestine and at Jerusalem. Also of the remarkable events which are declared by the prophets as to occur at the time of that final war; and especially what will happen to the nations of eastern Europe as the result of their attacking Jerusalem.

Ancient history states that a few hundred years after the deluge there went colonies of Noah's descendants from Asia Minor up into northeastern and central Europe, and they colonized the parts that afterward became known as Russia, Poland, Germany, Austria, and Hungary. The posterity of the sons and grandsons of Japheth are spoken of in these movements, as their names are mentioned in the books of Genesis. Japheth's oldest son was Gomer and the second son was Magog, the fifth son was Tubal, the sixth son was Meshech. Gomer had a son named Togarmah. The five names, Gomer, Magog, Tubal, Meshech, and Togarmah are especially mentioned in the prophecies of Ezekiel, and the Lord calls their posterity in our day by those ancient names. History says that the descendants of Meshech were called Moschi and they were the founders of the Muscovite nation, which is one title for the Russians. And a son of Magog was Rosh, whose children were called Roschi, and from that came the name of Russia. From Meshech also was derived the name of Moscow, which was the capital city of Russia for so many centuries. Find in Ezekiel chapter 38 as follows:

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal; . . . and I will turn thee back. . . . Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee. Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them. After many days thou shalt be visited; in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations; and they shall dwell safely, all of them. Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee. Thus saith the Lord God, It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought; and thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land.—Ezekiel 38: 1-12.

Thus the foregoing words of the Lord through the prophet foretell the object or purpose that the armies and bands of the "chief prince" of the nations will have in descending from the north upon Palestine and upon Jerusalem in the latter days, coming out of eastern and central Europe, for the purpose of mending their fortunes with the money and other wealth that the Jews will bring with them in their gathering home from other lands. And these nations will certainly need money to take the place of the immense treasures they have expended in the war now being waged.

You see in verse eight that it says that they come into the land that is "brought back from the sword." And now, this month, December, 1917, the British Army has captured Jerusalem, has taken it from the Turks, and England has again proved herself to be the greatest friend of the Jews among all the nations. For England's purpose is to restore the Jews and to see to it that there is no more war in Palestine, so it is literally "brought back from the sword." For about twenty-eight hundred years that land has either been in the hands of or warred over by many nations, such as Assyria, Babylon, Egypt, Persia, Syria, Greece, Rome, and Turkey, besides minor nations that have done evil to it.

Now notice that Ezekiel 38:13 states that three peoples or nations will take up the cause of the Jews and will ask the invaders when they come certain questions about what they are doing, as follows:

Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? To carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?—Ezekiel 38:13.

Therefore, according to the word of the Lord, some nations will stand against the modern Magog, Meshech, Rosh, and Tubal, that is, against the nations of eastern Europe, when they come down from the north and make the greatest march and the greatest assault of the latter days. And all this with intent to rob and to destroy the covenant people of God. The above verse shows that the nations which will challenge and reprove are given ancient names, but these of course represent modern nations, perhaps England, France, and the United States, for those nations are even now planning a protectorate over Palestine for the security and benefit of the Jews and of their God-given heritage, that they may again come in possession of their own land as soon as possible.

In verse 13 "the young lions" are mentioned as standing in defense. And throughout all the world it is known that the lion is the symbol of the power of England and of her army and navy. Where they have had success in past wars it has been said, "The lion is in the ascendancy." Therefore it is quite possible that the stalwart young soldiers of England, who do stand and will stand to resist the invaders, are referred to as "young lions," particularly as Tarshish is named, and as in another prophecy the ancient name Tarshish seems to be applied to modern England. In Isaiah we read.

Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them.—Isaiah 60:9.

KINGS AND QUEENS TO SUCCOR

Clearly both the past and the present bear witness that England will be first in the work of restoring the Jews. And there are no other islands which have special interest in that work, or that can be called first in it. "The ships of Tarshish." England has been the leader of the world in its shipping and its commerce on the seas. Ancient Tarshish was noted for its many ships, and England inherits the name in prophecy, I believe.

And we may be certain that the United States will be a close second in the good work of restoring the Hebrew people. Seven hundred years before Christ came, Isaiah prophesied to the Jews, saying, "Kings shall be thy nursing fathers and queens thy nursing mothers," meaning that the rulers and chief men of certain nations shall be engaged in that service when the time comes. In Isaiah's day all rulers were kings and queens, there being no republics, and if the presidents and other leaders in America and France shall take part in restoring Israel it will fulfill the prophecy just the same.

INVASION FROM THE NORTH

Then again take up Ezekiel; we see what will be the result of the great invasion by the armies of the north under the "chief prince," which important event cannot be a great many years in the future. We find that the Lord declared as follows:

Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus, saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwell safely, shalt thou not know it? And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army; and thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen [the Gentile nations] may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. . . . And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel. . . . And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstorms, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.—Ezekiel 38:14-23.

By the above quotations from Ezekiel and Isaiah it is plain that at least a portion of the Jews will have returned to Palestine before the armies of God "come out of the north," and that for a time after "the land is brought back from the sword" those people shall "dwell safely." And you notice that the governments in the north will know that the Jews have come with "silver and gold," and that they have gained "cattle and goods" in the land of their fathers. Millions of Bible readers have in the past refused to believe that the Jews will ever be restored, yet recent events, especially the capture of Jerusalem and the declared intention of Great Britain, also the feeling in the United States in its favor, all go to prove that the time is near when their gathering will begin. Thousands of the Hebrew race are today rejoicing over its certainty.

We will read further in Ezekiel, as follows:

Therefore, thou son of man, prophecy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal; and I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee. . . . Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy hands, and the people that is with thee; I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field, to be devoured. Thou shalt fall upon the open field; for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.—Ezekiel 39: 1, 2, 4, 5.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ARMIES

Next, the prophet foretold the completeness of the destruction of those armies. Five sixths of them will be destroyed in the different ways mentioned, in the siege of the city, in their battles with the defenders, in the divisions and by the fighting among themselves, by the pestilence caused from so many dead upon the ground in that mild climate, and by the great hail, and the brimstone, and the fire that will fall upon them because of God's wrath against their wicked attacks upon his people and upon their beloved city, and their fields and their vineyards. You may read further from chapter thirty-nine about the wonderful things that will occur at that time, according to the word spoken through Ezekiel.

Next we go to the book of Zechariah and read there a continuation and completion of the prophecy by Ezekiel. It seems that there will be a great assault upon the city of Jerusalem, and though the Jews and the soldiers of England and of other nations will do all they can to defend the city, yet Zechariah says that it will be taken. We read his prophecy as follows:

For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled. . . . and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.—Zechariah 14: 2.

This may mean that the Jews will be left in the city while the soldiers and people of other nations will be taken out as prisoners, they being armed antagonists of the invading forces. Then at this crisis, yes, in the time of greatest need, the Lord Jesus Christ appears suddenly and turns the tide of evil and woe against the enemy. He becomes the leader and the triumphant commander of the forces of earth and the powers of heaven. We read the following verses:

Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley. . . . And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. . . . And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited.—Zechariah 14: 3, 4, 9, 11.

Chapters twelve and thirteen of Zechariah's prophecy declare certain other events that are to occur at the same period as the foregoing. Undoubtedly they are to have their fulfillment in the same remarkable time, when the Savior shall make his final appearing. Zechariah prophesied as follows:

Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem. And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces. . . . And it shall come to pass in that day that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first born. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem. . . . And the land shall mourn, every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart; and their wives apart; . . . all the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.—Zechariah 12: 2, 3, 9-14.

In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness. . . . And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.—Zechariah 13: 1-6.

BIBLE PROPHECIES

As with many other Bible prophecies there is a mixture with things spoken of that we do not fully understand, or that seem irrelevant, but so it has been with many other prophecies. For instance, we read:

And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.—Zechariah 11: 12.

Although the connecting Scriptures do not appear to have any bearing upon the subject of the Savior's betrayal, yet it is stated in Matthew 26: 11, that the above words refer to the price that Judas received of the Jewish priests for betraying Christ.

We read the following in Psalms:

Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.—Psalm 34: 19, 20.

In John 19: 36 this is said to have been fulfilled at Christ's crucifixion, in that the soldiers did not break his legs as they did those of the two crucified at the same time. Yet the word in Psalms appears to mean that any righteous man shall be protected in that way.

However, it is plain that Zechariah foresaw that their Messiah will be recognized by the Jews at Jerusalem when he shall indeed become their Savior in their great time of trouble. The marks which they will see in his hands, together with his words of explanation, will cause them to know that the man whom their father despised, rejected, and nailed to the cross was indeed the very Messiah for whom they longed, yes, their real Redeemer and they knew him not. But now all they who are gathered at Jerusalem will see and know, and they will mourn with deepest grief as they realize the truth about him, just as Zechariah states in prophecy.

Then will the baptism which their fathers rejected be again instituted, and those who are gathered will give heed to it. Yes, "there shall be a fountain opened . . . for sin and for uncleanness," even as John, and Christ, and Peter, and Phillip preached "baptism for the remission of sins" anciently.

From these prophecies and others we know that many Jews will be gathered before the Lord returns, in fact just before he comes, and then they will be converted to him, as Zechariah plainly states.

Undoubtedly the war that is now taking place in Europe is as the beginning of the later one, when the poverty-stricken nations of the "north quarters" will go against Jerusalem. From the beginning of the present war onward it all seems to be summed up in one verse by Daniel, the prophet, in the following words:

And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, everyone that shall be found written in the book.—Daniel 12: 1.

WORLD-WIDE TURMOIL NOW PREVAILS

Everybody admits now that since the days of Noah there has never been such universal woe, such world-wide evil, such wholesale and ruthless destruction as there has been the past three and a half years, and with the possibility that the worst is yet to come, not alone among other nations but perhaps also for our own beloved land, in the effects upon it; although we had nothing to do with the origin of war, or with its causes. The great demand now is for men from every nation to come up to battle, and the call is for material of every kind to aid in the work of destruction, so that the following prophecy is being exactly fulfilled:

Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong.—Joel 3: 9, 10.

Not less than twenty-five million men have already come up to do battle, and also all kinds of metals have become of great value in the manufacture of cannon, machine guns, shells, rifles, war autos, and a multitude of other accessories of war, so that not only are the ordinary sources of iron, steel, copper, brass, and other metals being sought, but in addition great amounts are being diverted from their proper use in farm machinery; and also household utensils, church bells, and various works of art have been melted and turned into war material.

"COME, ALL YE HEATHEN"

Asking you again to remember that the prophets and all Hebrews wrote and spoke of all other nations as heathen, or as Gentiles, I ask you to read the following from Joel:

Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves around about: thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen around about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down; for the press is full, the vats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her anymore.—Joel 3: 11-17.

Thus this prophet spoke plainly of the result, the victorious end of the war undertaken against Jerusalem in the last days of the Gentile dominion over the earth. Joel spoke as plainly as did Ezekiel and Zechariah, already quoted in this letter. According to Luke's testimony the Savior said that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled," and Paul wrote that blindness would be upon Israel "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." Certainly the events we are considering betoken that said "fullness" of rulership and of wickedness is now at hand for all nations.

I will mention here that the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament reads in Ezekiel 38: 3 and 39: 1 as follows, "The chief prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal." He will be at the head of the great northern army in its march upon Palestine. This defines more fully that Russia will have prominent part in that momentous "time of trouble." And we know that the rulers of Russia have been the greatest persecutors of the Jewish people of any nation, inflicting upon them the most cruel, heartless deeds of barbarism during many centuries. I remember that not many years ago, when the Russian soldiers drove the Jews out of the city of Kishinev that it was stated in the account (and not denied) that they did such cruel things as to thrust their bayonets through the bodies of Jewish babies, and lifting them up they carried the squirming little innocents high in the air as they rode along. They also nailed Jewish men and women to benches and floors, and gouged out their eyes, and performed unnamable crimes upon them. These facts have gone into history and we cannot wonder that Russia will receive punishment. While professing a Christian religion they have totally ignored the word of the Lord about his chosen people, that he still loves them and will "gather them as a shepherd doth his flock," even though all the nations of the earth should stand in the way.

(Concluded next week.)

THE STOREHOUSE

The Lord wills to provide for his people. He looks ahead, and expects his people to do likewise. He wants us to cooperate with him. We are by virtue of our calling, and should be by virtue of our activities, "laborers together with God." An effort then should be made to establish the storehouse, that the poor may be fed. This thought is deep in the mind and purpose of God. Those who are not in sympathy with it are not in touch with God. Let the inspired word of God to former and to Latter Day Saints, through former- and latter-day prophets, bear witness. God does not will that his people shall live from hand to mouth. He says concerning Zion, "I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread."—Psalm 132: 15, and,

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 10.

His will is not to aggrandize individuals, that as individuals they may abound, their barns be full, bursting with plenty, while many lack the bare necessities. It is rather that the people shall as a body abound, and that the distribution left in the hands of men, shall be to and for all alike.

Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2, 4 says:

Let every man deal honestly and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one even as I have commanded you. . . . Let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things both in money and in meat which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop.

As the consecrations were made 1900 years ago, and the distribution faithfully attended to, "great grace was upon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked." (Acts 5: 3, 4.) Those Saints had confidence in God, and confidence in each other. Their confidence was not misplaced. There were gifts of discernment for protection against Annanias and Sapphiras. God was able to take care of the consequences of obedience to his commandments. These have never been evil. The evil has come through deviations and departures from God's plan. It takes a great effort on our part, notwithstanding our loud profession, to reconcile ourselves to God's plan in its completeness, "not only to say, but to do according to that which is written." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.) As a body we have not kept the commandments that were at first treated lightly. Who is responsible? Those who have no means to consecrate except in the way of offerings, and no surplus tithing to pay cannot establish or fill the storehouse. The very poor need, or will need, to be fed from it. Neither the rich, nor those of moderate means and ability to care for themselves, need the storehouse, except as they need the blessing that comes through sacrifice. They should be concerned about this. The poor may and should sacrifice, but not to the extent of crippling their service. Every sacrifice made to enhance service, must be acceptable with God. But no one can give or do beyond his ability to do. If it is small it is required; if it is large it is required, therefore

Woe unto you rich men that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls. . . . Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands! But blessed are the poor, who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite.—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5, 6.

The worthy poor are usually very modest about asking in their own behalf. They cannot lift themselves up. There should be a spirit in the church to lift them up, or our faith is vain. God has commanded that they be searched out and administered unto. Riches must come in touch with poverty, or the rich with the poor. "Nature abhors a vacuum." Poverty is the vacuum. Riches must fill it; must go to it. There is no encouragement given in God's law for the poor to seek the wealth of the rich. Who then are responsible to take the initiative in curing poverty and distress? Those who have it in their power to organize themselves for this purpose. We may have every other organization, or phase of organization, that can be thought of; if we have not this organization, we are as a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. We might have the organization and, failing to enter into it with a pure motive, fail of making it a success. It would be as useless as baptism without repentance. But if we are not organized to do good, otherwise than to preach and administer sacraments, our preaching might well be less, until our practice had caught up with it. Looking into the perfect law, can we not see ourselves as we are? As a body deficient in practice, organized to preach, not organized to practice, Christianity. And should we not worry about it? At least should we not be deeply concerned and very active in self-judgment, to remove selfishness as far from our thoughts and lives as possibly could be done by us? So that we, so that I, may not be the hindering cause, the really refractory element unfavorable to progress and to perfection, through the full and complete operation and administration of the law. Our education has been sufficient to bring about quite a general willingness on the part of the poor, and those of moderate means, to pay tithes and offerings. And those of larger means do the same. Quite a sacrifice is involved in paying the Lord's tenth on the part of those of moderate means and abilities. This tenth is intended for the spread of the gospel or the support of the priesthood in administering the gospel. It is not sufficient for the providing of homes, even for the ministry, much less of administering stewardships, and fully relieving poverty. We have not reached the point in our education and willingness to do the Lord's will, really loving our neighbor as ourselves, where we have demonstrated this willingness and love, by bringing all the tithes into the storehouse; all more than is needful for our wants, all the surplus, that none might lack.

Abraham is called "the Father of the faithful," and why? because he fully complied with the law. At every point and place of trial, he demonstrated faith. He did so at his meeting with Melchisedec, of whom we read. (Genesis 14: 33-40 especially 37 to 39, I. T.)

And he lifted up his voice, and he blessed Abram, being the high priest, and the keeper of the storehouse of God; him whom God had appointed to receive tithes for the poor. Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes [not a bare tenth, but] of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need.

He retained only that which was needful. Was he thereby contracted, or narrowed down, temporarily? The sequel shows he was not, for the reading is:

And it came to pass, that God blessed Abram, and gave unto him riches, and honor, and lands for an everlasting possession; according to the covenant which he had made, and according to the blessing wherewith Melchisedec had blessed him.—Genesis 14: 40, Inspired Translation.

If the attitude of the body is correctly expressed by individuals whose attitude is: "I will be my own bishop, as to all the surplus tithing; I will invest it, that I may have more on which to pay tithing, still the law is not complied with. This situation prevailing, all the tithes more than are needful to the individual, belonging to others by the covenant of Christ, God is robbed. The bishop is his agent. The distribution is hindered, and the blessing of Abram is hindered. It cannot attach to the body, of which we are members, though we call it the church of Christ. We had better be anxious, if at all, over properties, to dispose of, rather than retain them, in view of eternal life being the stake we are playing for. I know the church would not accept of, as a gift, any person's living; their all. The church would rob or cripple no man; but if it would accept of all, one would do better by giving all, than by retaining all.

The reasonable sacrifice only, is required—all more than that which is needful—and a man should discourage himself in the expenditure of a dollar or a dime more than necessity demands. The church debt must go, and some other things come; among them, the storehouse, the temple, etc., for God says: "The storehouse and the temple, and the salvation of any people, are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation," and "section forty-two . . . [embodying these things] is as if it were given to-day." (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.

So we hope to have written upon "present truth," not that which is out of date, or before the time. We had better set our watches by the regulator, rather than seek to regulate the regulator. A perfectly correct attitude on our part to all the specifications of the law and commandments, and a perfect adjustment to them, may require the resetting of all our watches; the revolution to some extent of every man's mental attitude. But let God be true, and his law stand fast and firm, as the Magna Charta of our liberties, and the sheet anchor of our salvation; however deficient it finds us collectively, or as individuals.

The Woman Loyal

While we are in the midst of a contemplation of the whole duty of a woman, we are confronted with a peculiar phase of it, which is an outgrowth of the terrible times of war and ruin which have overshadowed the world. This phase is "food conservation," words which have been shouted and preached at us, in a multiplicity of form and expression for months. One almost feels that there is no need for half the talk and the explanation, and yet, one has only to keep ears and eyes open to discover that a vast number of women are as yet not touched, either as to heart or loyalty, in regard to the importance of this work. It is no fad, let us assure you; it is no graft, by which some are seeking to be profited at the expense of many. It is, instead, a very grave and certain menace of famine and want which is threatening the world. When one stops to consider that over 70,000,000 men are under arms in the world to-day—taken bodily from the producing avenues and put upon the "dependent" list, as it were—that fact, in itself, is enough to partly explain the grave situation which exists. Add to that thought the further one that for three years the wheat crop, even in undisturbed America, has been below normal in yield, for two seasons being less than the normal consumption, and one can see what a stupendous task it is for our country to undertake to spare out of her supply, scantier than usual, enough to feed those starving countries abroad, as well as the numbers of our own soldiers who are helping "make the world safe for democracy."

What woman would hesitate to deny herself bread if in her arms were a starving child who needed it? Why then should any woman toss her head and say she will not try to so order her household that she may do her part in trying to feed the hungry across the seas? Is it because the one misery is close at hand, and the other removed? Is the latter any the less real because of distance? Yet we have seen women, who have actually given their sons to the service, refuse to make the slight sacrifices necessary that those sons may be fed "over there."

It is gratifying to Latter Day Saints who are studying the movements and affairs of the world to see how surely, albeit slowly, some of the principles of right living which Joseph Smith promulgated and enjoined upon an unresponsive and hostile generation, are being justified and recognized to-day. Liquor, the use of which he decried, although popularly common then, has received the disapproving edict of the best thinkers of not only our own Nation, but those of others. To-day many physicians are telling the people that the excessive use of meat has caused most of the disorders of the body among indulgent nations. The HERALD a few weeks ago published an article called "The case against smokes," in which were given the results of a series of experiments with young men, comparing the users of tobacco with those who did not use it. In every case tobacco was the loser, a support to our position in the matter, which must be very gratifying to all Latter Day Saints.

As church women, then, we should feel that with us there is something to be demonstrated in our standing loyally by the Government in this food conservation matter, which is of a higher nature than mere patriotism. We should feel that it is an opportunity to express anew our allegiance to the positions taken long ago by our church. We should have few or no days upon which we serve meat, and then it should be used "sparingly"; and, remembering that God told us "wheat is for man," we should think of those impoverished peoples across the water, to whom wheat is as essential as it is to us. From our abundance we can spare; we can use the countless other things which are not so available to send to our brothers afar, and in so doing we will be blessed, not only in our own bodies, but in the spiritual nature which considers another's need as our own. Let us be true "kitchen soldiers," and be glad to do all we can from that military base.

Children's Year, April 6, 1918-April 6, 1919

The above is the heading of a bulletin which is sent out by the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, at Washington. Definite plans, it is stated, are being formed to make this second year of our war one especially notable for the advance made in the saving of the lives of our children. Efforts to promote the health and welfare of children everywhere throughout the country will be more vigorous than ever. "The saving of 100,000 children under five years of age is only one part of the big program laid out for the welfare of the 30,000,000 children under fifteen in our country. . . . The importance of safe-guarding children will be emphasized as never before. . . . It is looked upon as a patriotic duty in view of the unavoidable wastage of human life incident to war . . . 5,000 local committees are to carry the campaign into every community in the United States, . . . each community to bear its full share of responsibility in making the campaign a great success."

It is well that those of our church, and those under our direct influence shall be prepared to respond heartily to all efforts in this direction which shall come their way. Let us study the situation from a large standpoint, recognizing the value and the power that lie in a consolidation of the units, and let us be ready to be lively units in the matter. Latter Day Saints everywhere should be found in the front ranks of those who are working in such a good cause, and our duty to ourselves—to our higher selves—as well as our duty to the country and to God, should cause us to count it a privilege to do what we can in this direction.

So when it shall come to your community, that a week of lectures or instruction shall be offered you, be among the first to avail yourselves of the opportunity to learn, that you may work intelligently in harmony with the best forces that are in operation in our country, for the purposes of shielding and guarding our children, physically as well as mentally and spiritually.

Our Sorrow

How peculiarly are the interests of our church people interwoven? We sometimes wonder if there is among any other group such an intermingling of joys and sorrows as we experience. When one member suffers, all the others suffer with him—as Christ so truly foreshadowed. Thus it is that the sorrow which recently came into the home of our former president, Sister S. R. Burgess, which took from that home the beloved companion and father, has become our sorrow in very deed. We weep with Sister Burgess, and feel that her loss is also ours. Brother Burgess was a man whom one was blessed to have as a friend, and while of a quiet, retiring nature, and one not calculated to be much in evidence, he was always a veritable rock of strength and support to those who were privileged to be near him.

We extend deep sympathy to Sister Burgess and family, but we feel assured that they are able to look upon this separation with that calmness and assurance which characterize true Latter Day Saints. It is not without hope we mourn; we look upon this experience as of one simply passing from one room to another—a larger room, filled with larger and better opportunities and delights. We, too, will pass into that room, and the assurance we have of there meeting again the loved ones who preceded us has taken from the brief separation much of its sting, and all of its bitterness. The pity and love of God are very near in times of trial, and it becomes joy to feel the strength and support of those everlasting arms.

Our Course in Public Speaking

While out West last fall, Sister Glines, the ever-alert supervisor of our educational bureau, appealed to Brother T. W. Williams concerning a course in public speaking for those of our number who are interested in this branch of study and achievement. Brother Williams has for some months been conducting a class in this work, the members of which have met weekly, and been highly gratified with the ground covered. The result of Sister Glines's appeal is that she is now able to announce a most comprehensive course in this line suitable for beginners and those who are eager to take the first steps towards excellence and attractiveness as a public speaker. She sends, for your information and interest, a "foreword," from Brother Williams, who also sends a direct and inspiring message "to the student," both of which you will find in this issue of our column.

One can scarcely read these without feeling a great desire to enter most earnestly into this study, and who shall say that it is not one most vital to us who have been commissioned to "warn our neighbor"? We have often felt that it was indeed a great pity that some of our most earnest and spiritual speakers have been unable, through lack of opportunities for development along these lines, to present their beautiful messages in a language and manner worthy of that which they had to impart.

Foreword

This course of lessons in public speaking is the result of an insistent and increasing demand within the church and is adapted to the varying needs of the membership.

No apology is offered. It is not intended that this brief course will substitute the work of the schoolroom. It is simply preparatory. We furnish the ground work which will benefit those who have no other opportunity for study and, at the same time, will be valuable to those who wish to secure a regular course in college or university.

We do not claim originality. The purpose has been to gather material from the best authors. This is supplemented by personal experience and observation. Reference texts are supplied with each lesson. We suggest supplemental reading. To those who desire to pursue the study farther I particularly recommend the public speaking department in the various schools of expression. Among the universities, Cornell stands to the front, with Professor James Albert Winans in charge. The Columbia College of Expression, Chicago, Illinois, of which R. E. Pattison Kline is dean in the public speaking department, offers a reliable correspondence course.

Professor Winans has written a book entitled, Public Speaking, which will be found quite helpful for supplemental reading. As the lessons proceed we will recommend other works.

Each lesson should be covered in one week. If, for any reason, the individual student fails to accomplish this the time may be extended; but do not permit this to occur unless some unavoidable incident prevents. In class work it is essential that the lessons be taken as a unit. This will not permit one student to fall behind the rest.

We ask the support of the traveling ministry, the officials of the local churches, and the auxiliary organizations. If we can only arouse the general membership to the need of preparation, and the advantage which this course affords, it will enable us to enroll thousands of students and make this department a power for good.

Respectfully submitted,
THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

To the Student

We congratulate you on your determination to take up this course in public speaking. No other field of activity offers greater returns. The work will prove interesting as well as instructive.

We desire personal touch with every student. Accompany your answers with a personal letter each week. Relate your difficulties. Emphasize your achievements. Inquire concerning anything you do not fully understand.

Do not be in a hurry. Master every detail. Memorize the quotations and salient points of each lesson if, for no other reason, to develop your latent functions.

Once you realize the benefit of the course and the necessity for faithful and persistent effort, success is inevitable. You must know the difficulties others have encountered to tide you over your own. For this reason we have supplied the text of lesson No. 1. This lesson deals with difficulties to encounter, means of achievement, and benefits to be derived.

Do not make the study a task. Throw your whole soul into the work. Make it a pleasure as well as a purpose. People may make fun of your earlier efforts. Turn the laugh on them.

Practice reading aloud for a short period each day. Study your own voice. Memorize select passages from the best writers. Constantly review. Once having memorized a passage, will yourself never to forget it. Acquire the habit of understanding everything you read. Do not skip over the simplest passage. Better one sentence mastered than an entire chapter glanced over. Assimilation is impossible without digestion.

Lessons No. 1 and 2 supply the ground work for the entire course. Lesson No. 3 contrasts conversation with public speech, pointing out popular misconceptions. Lesson No. 4 enumerates many common errors of speech and supplies some simple rules by which the student can determine whether a sentence is properly constructed or not. As the course progresses the student will realize the necessity for the complete mastery of each lesson.

Sporadic work will not avail. Devote at least one hour each day to study. Never get behind. Where there is a will there is always a way. Do not be a slacker. Whip your self into line. Accept no excuse. Say, I will, I will, I WILL!

After you have mastered each lesson take the list of questions and, on a separate sheet, write your answers employing your own language as far as possible. Use letter sized paper similar to lesson sheets. Write on one side of sheet only. Double space your lines to permit corrections.

Wishing you every success,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Should Latter Day Saints Carry Life Insurance?

As light and ideas added to a subject make it clearer, perhaps something along a somewhat different line will make this matter clearer to those in doubt.

Perhaps the thought comes to most every man as he takes unto himself a wife, that she who is dearer to him than life itself, must be provided for against the day when he can no longer labor in the affairs of men. This is certainly a wise precaution, as proof we read that, "he who will not provide for his family, is worse than an infidel." There is no escaping the rainy day, sickness, accidents, and old age.

I hold that in this church in which we have the honor and privilege of being members, there is everything necessary for the human race, and I cannot believe that Jesus Christ was so shortsighted that he did not provide for our every need. He certainly must have known that we would get old and helpless and that oftentimes we men are called away long before our companions, and that they must live on for years and educate our offspring. I believe this has all been arranged for in this church. Let us see.

As Latter Day Saints we believe that we have been ordered to gather to a central place, Zion, for a specific purpose. Doctrine and Covenants states that it is for the purpose of escaping coming calamities that are about to come to the world; to avoid taking up a sword against our neighbor; to escape the sins of the world in a measure; to prepare ourselves for the coming of the Son of God. He has called us to be a peculiar people, not in oddity but in purity, honesty, the light of the world. He has told us to come out of Babylon and not to partake of the sins of the worldly.

I wish to ask a question right here: If we are to gather out of the various States and nations into a central place, for the reasons mentioned before, are we not to sell, dispose of, or leave everything we cannot or do not care to carry up to Zion? In other words, we have separated ourselves from the world to as great an extent as possible, and all on divine command.

I have read the church books for years, have talked about this matter, prayed and thought over it, fought it out with myself, and settled it with my companion, that this church that we honestly believe to be the Church of Jesus Christ and of his own planting, is all sufficient in all things, if, now note you, if we live in perfect harmony with it.

I had a long talk with a man recently about this church, the government in particular, and he made the remark that if we could get the people to do all the things mentioned, if we could, why even he could see that it would work fine. I tried to explain to him that the people and the church is made up of individuals, in fact there is only one person at all, and that person you. When you want this church as you want it badly enough, when you want Zion redeemed, when you want all the laws put into operation, you just say so and there is absolutely no power on earth or in hell that can stop it. Did you ever stop to think that you are the whole church, the whole thing? If you will get away from the crowd for an hour or so and think seriously, you will come to this conclusion, there is no other, and when you have thought it all out, go home a better and much wiser man, and put your ideas into practice and you will see that you have a great deal to do with affairs.

Now the matter of insurance. Have you figured it out how we are to be connected with life insurance companies after we gather to Zion and are no longer a part of the world, speaking religiously? Some of the things told of in prophecy are about to take place, in fact it has been given through the Spirit that there are some here now that will be here when He comes. If that is true, and the signs of the times certainly point that way, and you that have a policy have to die to win, it looks a little doubtful if your posterity will ever get the benefits.

I mentioned before that this church is all sufficient and that every condition that we are called to pass through has been provided for. Suppose that instead of paying money into insurance companies you comply with the law of the church and pay it into the storehouse of the Lord. The result would be that you do not have to die to win, but that you can get money to tide you over the rainy day, to start you in business, to care for the widow, the orphan, and all things will work out within ourselves and much good done for the body.

It is because of the fact that too much money has in the past been paid into worldly things, pleasures, luxuries, etc., that the "church" is not able at the present time to care for the unfortunate. The Lord said years ago that even then Zion might have been redeemed had we complied with the law.

Yet we ask the question, "What is the church going to do," forgetting that we are the church, and that it will do just what we want it to do.

Just so long as we do not place ourselves in perfect harmony with divine law, we retard the progress of the body. A lame man cannot walk as fast as he could if he were not lame, neither can this body of Christ's followers advance with hindrances such as noncompliance with law, as it will when we not only learn his will, but actually put into practice in our daily living his will in all things.

Do You Frighten Your Children into Obedience?

In reading over the little selection in a recent Autumn Leaves, called "The bugaboo man," it brought to my mind a similar circumstance that happened in this north country last summer, no more than six or seven miles from where we are living.

There are quite a number of Indians residing in the country in different places, and the mother of a little ten-year-old girl had told her at times that the Indians would kill her or carry her away, so naturally the little one had become very nervous of Indians and her only thought would be to escape from them.

It happened one day that the little girl with her smaller brother were out on the prairies looking for the cows. They saw an Indian coming towards them on horseback. The two little ones started to run; the boy ran towards home and the little girl took another course.

That was the last seen of the little girl.

As soon as the alarm was raised, there were hundreds of people scouring the country to find her. Her father offered a reward, but to no avail.

All this took place through the lack of wisdom of a mother. The parents were heartbroken, but it was too late.

What a warning it should be to mothers to tell the truth, always, to their children!

I remember an instance in my own case when a child. A man took out his knife and said he would cut off my ears. I always shunned him as a horrible creature.

Soldier Boys Hold Prayer Meetings

I am sure the Saints who read the HERALD are as interested in the "L. D. S. Sammies" as those who read the Ensign.

I look forward to the close of each week when I may feast on the good things contained in each of them.

There are many who read this, that have not read my letters to the Ensign. If any of the folks back in Egypt, (Southeastern Illinois) read this, I would like to hear from you.

As you all no doubt know, the first thing a soldier sacrifices after entering the service is his time. It is not ours anymore; therefore every moment we can spend in reading of the gospel is a blessing. We long for the association of the Saints. To a marked degree we do enjoy the spirit of the work now.

We have two dozen Latter Day Saint boys striving to get together for regular class work and prayer service. Last Wednesday evening we enjoyed a very spiritual hour. Eleven Latter Day Saint soldiers present; four prayers and eleven talks. The same peaceful Spirit you enjoy was with us.

We only hope we may find every one of our boys here and accomplish something really worth while. We have already proven that if we live our religion it is going to have its effect on those who know not the gospel.

Do not forget that we are going into a conflict where we will need the protection of our heavenly Father. The submarines are getting a few of Uncle Sam's boys as they go across, but according to our faith and your prayers, we will be protected. At least that is the way I am going into it.

Among our boys we have two priests, one deacon, and a brother called to office of teacher who has not been ordained.

That we may come out of the service of our country prepared to do more efficient service for the one true cause is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

More Nurses Needed

More nurses needed. Yes, as soon as possible. Need of them cries, more, more, more.

Are you an intelligent Latter Day Saint girl? Think on that name and what it means. To me it is righteous living for the benefit of others.

Going to sit reposed while God calls? I hope not! If you do you aren't the kind I wish to associate with in heaven. I firmly believe Latter Day Saints should be taking the lead in the relief of the suffering, instead of dragging along behind.

Are you going to allow people to say—and that truthfully—that you, the Latter Day Saint girls, are afraid of hard work and being robbed of personal comforts? Be it a shame to us if so, as it will not stop there, but will also be a disgrace to our church, inasmuch as they will have failed to impress upon the members, one of the most important principles of Christ's teachings, a thing which he spent a very large portion of his time doing—relieving the suffering and educating people to a right way of living.

Isn't he our exemplar, or is he? It's time to choose—now.

There will never be a more opportune time than now. Even when this war closes (if it should) there will still be great need of trained nurses and minds.

It is an honor for girls who have an education or other chances of earning a living to become a nurse. There is all the honor to be obtained that is possible for woman to attain to. If you are educated, you are the one God needs most? Why? Because you will be a better nurse, and more useful, when you have finished your training.

Some people seem to think, or at least that is the impression I gather, that all a nurse had to do when she is through training is to go somewhere, follow a doctor's instructions for a week, and then receive $25 or $30 as the case may be. They see nothing in that, because she is too tied down and her work too confining, etc. They see no particular honor that can come to a girl. Well, neither do I. For that is the wrong way to look upon nursing—the short-sighted way.

The other view is so grand and big that I hesitate to write because of fear of insulting that great purpose with my inability, even though I warn you beforehand that I am only capable of giving a hint of its depths of magnitude.

Nursing is a profession ranking with the physicians, ministers, teachers, or any whose business it is to relieve suffering and promote education.

Promoting education seems to me one of the largest problems, the most important part and most difficult of the professions. Why? Because sickness, to an inconceivable extent is largely due to ignorance.

Christ did not stop because the task was difficult or big, but began and healed them one by one, and at the same time (notice) cast an influence of peace and joy. That influence, yes, that's it. God only is wise enough to be able to tell what good it will do.

There are many and numerous evils in this world which the nurse must help to get under control. Doctors, teachers, ministers, and nurses must work hard, all together, before some of these social evils can be properly overcome.

We need nurses, more nurses. "What if she wishes to marry?" asks some one. "It would be too bad to waste her time studying as a mere nurse." To that I say, show me a girl who calls it wasted time and I will show you one who probably wastes her time at most anything she undertakes, or in other words, failed to get the fundamentals of nursing instilled in her mind. I confess there are many who have failed, which only drives home the fact all the more that we need intelligent, deep-minded, and the strongest of characters to become nurses. Society has insisted that nursing was for only those who could do nothing else—a sad mistake. But back to the point. Should she marry, she will be ten times more qualified for the position of married life than the average girl. Why? Because if she is properly trained she must learn to control her temper, her emotions, words, and actions. Few ordinary girls can do that, can they?

She must learn to cook, economize, dust, keep house, be neat, save footsteps, make all actions accomplish something, and think at the same time. She will likely learn a small amount of sewing, which is very likely to be more than a great many girls who marry know now. Isn't she just about as fit to marry when she finishes as most girls from any other course? Leaving out all the useful knowledge she will know about the body and its care, honest, now, isn't she?

Does her work need to stop with marriage? No. That influence and knowledge can go to every neighbor. She will be in a position to lend a helpful hand in times of their needs. In fact, she will have an unlimited field before her—could a stenographer or teacher do more? I say no. There is not a more useful, educational vocation on earth that a girl may take up than nursing. Then why hang back? We need your assistance.

A nurse can be as morally clean as any woman on earth, if she wishes. And so far in my experience, I have not had the slightest reason for not wishing to be. A lady is a lady no matter where she is and she, of her own personality, demands that she be respected.

The Independence Sanitarium offers to young ladies between the ages of twenty and thirty years, with a good common education, who can furnish certificates of the same, an opportunity to help, to answer the call "needed." Those with all the education possible are desired most, the reason, or a hint at it given above.

Any information will be sent gladly upon request. Address Superintendent of the Independence Sanitarium.

A Trip into the Southwest

On December 19 I commenced services at Calumet, Oklahoma, in the new church which we dedicated December 23. This is the home of Elder A. W. Sanders and family, who are well known to the Saints of Oklahoma, especially those in the western part of the State.

Not far from Calumet, through the efforts of Brother and Sister Sanders and others of the Saints, a Christmas tree was prepared for the Indians. This has been the yearly custom for several years past, and is looked forward to by the Indians as a great event. A tent was erected and the Indians secured a fine evergreen tree for the occasion and by the time the service was to commence, the tree covered with presents, looked fine.

A large crowd of Indians was present, all taking their seats on the ground, sitting in a circle in the tent. Two who had been baptized previously were confirmed. Before the confirmation I gave them a talk regarding our work and the gospel, using my large dispensational chart, which seemed to make a hit with the Indians. Most of them can understand English, but there were some present who could not, so when I had finished speaking Elder Philip Cook, our Indian missionary, explained to them what I had said. I had preached to the Indians in the morning just before noon; good attention was shown. Elder Cook also explained to those who could not understand English what I had said. It fell to my lot to read off the names of those receiving presents. The Indians were often seen to smile as I called out their names, and I had to smile also at the peculiar names that I found on the presents, some of whom are as follows: Mrs. Blowaway, Mrs. Fire, Mrs. Yellow woman, Mrs. Red Paint woman. (I did not see the red paint. I suppose it had worn off, but not so with many of the whites who have plenty of red paint on hand for almost any occasion.) Mrs. Magpie, Mrs. Tall Bird, Mrs. Buffalo Meat, Mrs. Annie B. Head, Mr. Victor Bushy Head, who is a priest in the church and on whose farm the camp was held; Mrs. Ear Bob, Mrs. Skunk Neck, Mr. Ralph Turtle, Mr. John Bull, Mr. Raymond White Cream, Mr. Paul Good Bear, and William Little Elk. There was plenty of candy and popcorn for all. All seemed to enjoy themselves.

I must not forget to tell you of the dinner we had at noon Christmas day. Four large rooms were prepared, but no tables were set, everything was set on the floor and all gathered around, Indian style, and sat on the floor. I soon got tired and had to stand up, which caused the Indians to laugh. Some others of the whites followed my example and were glad to do so, but the Indians seemed very comfortable, as they would rather sit on the ground than on a chair.

Quite a number of those present were members of the church, and if our work was given more attention, I believe that much good could and would be accomplished among them.

My next point was Davidson, Oklahoma, where I found some excellent Saints, among them Elder B. F. Renfroe, who has been a missionary for years. A new church had been built and paid for and was ready for dedication, which took place January 3. Elder Paul M. Hanson joined me at this place and arrived in time to preach the dedicatory sermon, which was enjoyed by all. Services were continued each evening during the week. While here I received a challenge for discussion from Joseph S. Warlick of Dallas, Texas. Some of the members of the church founded by A. Campbell and others, were becoming favorable to our work, and this challenge was for the purpose of keeping them from uniting with us, but we left them more friendly to our work than ever. We finally agreed on propositions and the debate was on. Church propositions were discussed. Four sessions of two hours each was devoted to each proposition. From the comments of many of the best citizens of the town we are satisfied that good was accomplished.

From Davidson we visited Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, and El Paso, Texas, then to Douglas, Arizona, where another new church was dedicated. The Saints, though few in number, have done excellent work here. Elder W. H. Mannerling and wife and Elder S. D. Condit and wife have been the ones that have taken the lead in the work at this place. I preached the dedicatory sermon and Elder Paul M. Hanson offered the dedicatory prayer. Brother Hanson preached for them at night.

Our next point was Bisbee, Arizona, where we found several families of Saints. Owing to there being several cases of smallpox in town we were able to hold only one service at the church, but met with some of the brethren and held two priesthood meetings with them which we believe will result in good to the work.

From Bisbee Brother Hanson returned to Independence, Missouri, and I came on to Phoenix. Here I met Elder Yates and family, also Elder A. T. Gray and family of Joplin, Missouri. Phoenix is the State capital and is a very fine city, surrounded by very rich agricultural fields and orchards of oranges, lemons, olives, and dates. The climate is most excellent now, but gets very warm in summer.

Your brother,

J. F. CURTIS.

A Recent Naval Experience

I was assigned to a naval vessel in the early part of January, and within a week after I had reported aboard we set sail from an Atlantic port. The third day, which was Sunday, we ran into a heavy sea and strong wind. During the entire day we were pounded by the angry waters, and as the night came on the weather became much worse.

In the early morning before the streaks of dawn had appeared on the horizon, we were awakened from our sleep by a terrible crash which was so powerful that it tossed those who were sleeping in hammocks to the deck, and those on the deck were dashed against the bulkheads with much force. In a few minutes everyone was on deck and there we could see through the rays of a powerful searchlight the outline of a large vessel, wallowing about in the water. She was sending out calls for aid and we, too, were sending out the S. O. S. We had rammed this vessel in the dark and both of us were in a very bad way. There were two large holes on her side, and we had smashed in a portion of our bow and weakened our bulkheads to quite an extent. The damage was so great that it was necessary to turn back for port.

All day Monday we battled on but did not make any speed and by night we were within fifty miles of the spot where the accident occurred. The heavy seas were pounding against our sides and fears were entertained for our safety, for if the water-tight compartments should give way under the strain, there would not be much hope left. Monday came and passed, and as Tuesday came on there was no change in the condition of the weather. Late Tuesday afternoon we had the misfortune to run into the tail end of a ninety-mile gale, but, fortunately for us, we did not receive the full strength of the storm, although the wind was howling through our masts at a rate of over sixty miles an hour. Many times during the night we almost despaired of reaching port, and as the following day came on there was a slight cessation in the fury of the storm. This continued until late in the afternoon when the sky again darkened and there were indications of having another storm. We knew that if we had to battle against another storm like that of the night before there would be grave danger in store for us.

The sun went down in the West, and all of the men were gathered around on different parts of the vessel and discussing the situation. I was seated on the "forecastle," and with the rest was very uneasy. I had been frightened very much during the entire return trip, and as I thought of the situation as it stared us in the face, I was frightened to even a greater extent.

While I was sitting there, there was a feeling which came over me, the occurrence of which was the reason for writing to you. The spirit of fear that I had had, seemed to leave me on the instant, and instead of fear I had the most pleasant thoughts. The water which had terrified me as it would sweep over the deck seemed to have a different look. As I looked at the angry water, I could see the visions of friends that had gone on before and then I could think of things that had taken place during the years of my life. I could think of how my dear mother had departed this life nearly eighteen years before, and then I could think of an aunt, whom the Lord had blessed up to the time of death, and then I could see how it was but a year since I had lost that which was near and dear to me in the form of my grandmother. These thoughts came to mind, and the Spirit I enjoyed at that time was indescribable. Then I was overtaken with a spirit of strength. I did not mind the rolling and pitching of the vessel, which amounted to over twenty-five degrees, and at one time over thirty-five degrees. I just sat, and the Spirit of the Lord was with me in great power. As the dark night came on, my mind was very easy and I had no fear for the outcome of our vessel, although it seemed a certainty that we would never reach port. I retired at eight o'clock, and as I lay down to sleep I had the spirit in prayer, and the words flowed from my lips in one sweet, solemn prayer. When I had finished praying I closed my eyes and (although I had not been to bed since the collision) started to go to sleep. I was soon fast asleep, although I was told that it was necessary for the carpenter's gang to stand by the weak bulkhead during the night, and be ready to check the flow of water should anything happen. I slept soundly till morning, when I was awakened at 4 a. m. to go on watch, and I thought they had made a mistake and called me at midnight. Such was my experience, and I felt that it was one which cannot be portrayed adequately enough in words.

Thursday morning came along with the storm subsided, and we were able to proceed at a speed of about eight knots until we reached port. As the night came on we knew we had covered considerable distance and were not far from port. I stood on the fore-castle, and as the broken bow churned through the yielding waters, and the moon cast a silvery glow all around, I thought of the hymn, "Whispering Hope," and with it my mind turned to the words "wait! 'till the tempest is over," and the spirit I had enjoyed for the last thirty hours was still with me. Oh, how sweet to feel its influence! Throughout the night we continued on, and by morning we had passed the last milestone of our journey in the light ship. Passing on, we were soon in the lower part of the bay, and then by one o'clock we dropped our anchor. Thus was a very eventful trip ended, and my heart was lifted to God in that sweet communion of the Spirit. I could see where he had brought me out of the tempest and this was indeed a very gratifying thought. My prayer is that I might prove more worthy of these blessings.

Northern California Conference and Conventions

Attenuated write-ups of district functions not being especially desirable to editors, is the apology for the absence of much personal mention and specific detail. Let it be understood, however, that we could produce good assortment of both, which in their operation and results rendered the above-mentioned gathering, which took place at Sacramento, the capital city, on February 8 to 10, instead of February 15 to 17 as previously announced, among the best in the history of the church in the district. The quality of goodness consisted largely in the seemingly entire absence of that which was not good.

The little difficulties which arose in the line of reports, credentials, etc., because of changing to an earlier day, only served to demonstrate the resourcefulness of the presiding officers and the Pacific mind generally.

Higher attainment and a desire for progress were emphasized in the Religio phase of the work.

Among the good things reported by the Sunday school was that of the twelve schools reporting, three of which are very small, and none of them large. There were over eighteen hundred dollars raised in the Christmas offering.

Greatly adding to the interest and success of the occasion was the presence of three apostles: U. W. Greene, William Aylor, and J. W. Rushton, who, with some local authority, presided at the conference. Elections were harmonious and, in most cases, the incumbents were retained.

There were two baptisms and confirmations, four ordinations, and two children blessed.

A movement to purchase a new missionary tent was unanimously indorsed.

The preaching, which was done by the visiting apostles, was pronounced excellent.

The local sisters were accorded a well-earned meed of commendation for the ample and hospitable courtesies rendered to their visitors.

The good fraternal feeling carried away by the delegates will certainly be an incentive to return at some future time.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Des Moines Branch

The Des Moines district conference and conventions met at Des Moines, Iowa, February 8 to 10. There was a good representation present from almost all the branches of the district. The next conference will be held at Rhodes, Iowa, in June.

The Des Moines District Dispatch was approved by the conference and continued, with the district presidency and bishop's agent in charge.

Brother Richard Harvey died on Sunday evening, February 10, and Brother O. Salisbury preached the funeral sermon at the church on Wednesday.

A public speaking society was organized at the church by the men, on Sunday, February 3, with O. Salisbury, president; R. J. Farthing, associate president; and Frank Mussell, secretary. A program of orations is being prepared for the next meeting, February 24.

Brother Frank Mussell was ordained a teacher at the conference, also G. Frank Hull of Knoxville an elder at the same time.

The following is a summary of the work done by the priesthood of the Des Moines Branch for the year 1917: Sermons, 214; services attended, 2,435; baptized, 18; confirmed, 14; ordained, 7; administrations, 267; marriages, 16; visits, 321; children blessed, 5.

Stockton Items

Latter Day Saints, Why? Transfer from Southern and Western Pacific depot cars on corner of Main and San Jaquin Streets to "Bath" car which runs south past Santa Fe Station; get off at Clay Street and walk east one block to Sutter Street, and then you'll find out why, if it is Sunday morning 9.45 or at 11 o'clock or 6.15 p. m. or 7.45 p. m. or if it is Wednesday 7.45 p. m.—always something doing.

The pastor's address is 538 South California Street, Stockton, California.

When you read this, either copy it or cut it out and pin it or stick it, somewhere not too remote or obscure—lest you forget.

Always good Sunday school and Religio—sometimes better. Always have interesting sermons, when visiting preachers come.

The branch has recently enjoyed a visit from one of the "Wise men from the East," Apostle U. W.

Last week the "present incumbent" went with a party of Ceres Saints to Sacramento convention and conference. Good time. Returned Saturday night. Sunday morning went to Ceres and helped in Sunday school and preaching services, immediately after which a very pretty and interesting ceremony took place in which the beloved young Sunday school worker, Sister Vada Viola Swall and a fine young man by the name of Charles A. Allen, helped out wonderfully by their presence. In fact the whole thing would have been a failure without them. It was the pastor's pleasure to accompany a party of about ten of the bride's relatives to the "Modesta" where we were royally entertained at a handsomely decorated table, upon the best that California produces, together with special music. Without controversy or slang, it was certainly a "Swall occasion."

Our only regret is that we lose the Sunday school worker, as she goes to begin the new life in Indio, Southern California.

We half imagine we hear faint sounds of more "silver bells," possibly only the echoes of those that are past.

CORRESPONDENT.

MARION, MICHIGAN, January 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: With profound interest we read the HERALD. Hope that a letter from Marion will be of interest to some of the HERALD readers. Am unable to write very freely, having suffered some from a siege of sickness nearly four weeks. Am able to sit up a little while at a time. I make mention of this, not by way of complaint, but wish to thank God for his wonderful blessing through the administrations of his servants.

We have had our ups and downs here. I have heard the expression, more downs than ups. Sickness has caused much distress in the town and among the Saints, but our hope is in the gospel, the only source of comfort we have in the time of trial. The writer has great comfort in listening to the letters and articles in the HERALD, when unable to read for himself.

We have had some of the traveling ministry call this way. On Thanksgiving we had Brother Halley, a priest, with us. He preached some fine sermons. Later, Elder James Davis, our patriarch, whose fatherly counsel one could not help but receive if he wishes to do right, came to our rescue. A cloud of discouragement seemed to be resting upon the branch. This was where Brother Davis proved to be the father in Israel. He left us feeling as though we had been to a conference or two-day meeting. Everything seemed new. Elder Archie Whitehead and companion were with us one night, assisted by Elder John Schreur, our district president.

The next morning Brother Whitehead and companion left for Edgetts, where he had opened up the work.

Brother Schreur did us lots of good. He is moving in the right direction for the growth of the district. Is taking special interest in the local priesthood to get all to work. This is a good way of getting the cooperation of his men.

Brother Hubbard, the branch president, had been on the spot ready to do his part. The Saints have need to be commended for their humble prayers and assistance rendered to nonmembers as well as members.

Your brother in bonds,

A. M. BOOMER.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, January 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: Far down in the southwestern corner of the United States and only a few miles from the Mexican border, built upon an elevation of ground that slopes down to the sea, is situated the beautiful city of San Diego, in the State of California. Close by, the waters of the Pacific wash the shores of nature's most beautiful harbor. In this place there is a church of God's planting, a branch of God's people, for many years a mission, under the protecting care of Brother Rulon. He was truly a father to this people. Then the time came when we were strong enough for a branch and Brother Harrington became our president, a position he filled for over two years, as well as being president of the district; but when the district work took him away he resigned his position as branch president and the writer was chosen to fill the unexpired term. At the annual business meeting the writer was again elected to succeed himself. Brother Ray Wetherbee was selected for branch priest, and W. O. Wetherbee as branch teacher, while Brother C. M. Salter, although a priest, as acting deacon.

The year just past has been a very busy one in San Diego. With Camp Kearney only a few miles away, one is reminded of war. On the streets, in the country, everywhere, the soldiers are to be seen. There are about thirty thousand at the camp, and among them are a few of our boys. There is Brother Tom Stauts, whom we had the pleasure of baptizing several years ago. His wife, a granddaughter of Elder Joseph Burton, the well-known missionary, has taken up her residence at San Diego so as to be near him. Then there is Brother Young, a brother who has preached to us on two or three occasions, and Brother Hardy, a bright young man who is prominent in Religio work, and some others whose names I have forgotten. They are in God's hands. Our prayers go with them.

We have just closed a series of meetings. Brother T. W. Williams, of Los Angeles, was the speaker. T. W. was at his best, using such subjects as The Church of God, Following Jesus, and many other popular topics, handling them all in his well known, forcible manner, driving home the principles of the gospel. The privilege of asking questions was given, and all questions were answered to the satisfaction of everyone in the room.

Meetings were advertised and the hall filled every night. Some strangers were attracted to our place of worship and continued coming through the entire series of meetings. Two were baptized and others are near the water. We hope the interest will continue and many may heed the angel's message.

All expecting to visit San Diego, please take notice: Our meeting place is 1156 Seventh Street, near B Street, with street cars on B Street. Cut this out and bring it with you.

LEVI HEMENWAY.

THIRTY-THIRD AND IMPERIAL AVENUE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: Not having written the church papers for a long time I thought I would tell something of how we are progressing in the Enoch Hill Branch. We began holding our midweek prayer meetings from house to house about two months ago, and are now having good meetings and a far larger attendance than we had at the church.

It seemed like it was hard to get nine or ten out when we had our meetings at the church, now we have nearly three times that number. Last time we had thirty-five out, so I think cottage prayer services are the best kind to have this time of the year. When we are united the Lord can work with his people, but when we are divided (not only in spirit but in person) we cannot receive the greater blessings. God has said that where one or two meet together in his name as touching one thing, he is in their midst. Surely, where two or three times that number meet together, his Spirit will be poured out to a much greater extent. Dear Saints, can we realize the good that will come to us individually as well as collectively when we become one, and offer up our earnest prayers to our heavenly Father? This brings to my mind song number 58 in the Hymnal, but I seldom hear the Saints sing it in the meetings.

We had a goodly number out to our meetings yesterday, although it snowed all day, but it was not so very cold. Last night we heard from one of our Hedrickite brethren, Brother J. L. Hartley. He spoke about forty-five minutes and told us concerning their meeting with our people in their church yesterday, how we as a church and their people are coming closer together along gospel terms. This is something we as God's people have been looking forward to for a long time.

I believe the hastening time is now upon us, and God is going to try his people to see how many will stand, and will be the test of the movement that is now beginning to cause an awakening among the Saints. So let us be faithful to all that we are called upon to do by those in charge of this great work, and not hinder its progress nor the redemption of Zion.

Your coworker,

A. A. GAYLORD.

LOWELL, ARKANSAS, January 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been afflicted for about a year with a dreadful disease which I believe to be tuberculosis, and it has caused me to read and meditate more.

I can see that our church has progressed in the last year, but not so much as I would have liked for it to; however, I do not blame the head officials and the ministers of our church so much as I do the members. I don't think the Saints help out with their money as they should. I have seen our elders stand in the pulpit and preach when their toes stuck out of their shoes, with the seat of their trousers patched, and with so little clothing they would have to wring out their hose and put them back on after they got through baptizing. Their Bibles were so worn out they could hardly turn through them and keep the leaves in, and they were our elders that the conference sent out.

Now this is plain language, Saints, but it is true; and in the face of all this, I have seen our people go to picnics and to shows that go through Rogers and Springdale, and never help one bit to better this condition; and it has caused me to weep many times for our elders. They sacrificed their all that we might hear the gospel, and then got such treatment.

We have worked to help better this condition and have spent our means to help out with, till that and sickness have gotten us in debt to the world. It is a great burden on us. We have not given up; we are still doing all we can. My husband is an elder, and he drives eighteen and twenty miles to fill his appointments for Saturday and Sunday and he scatters books and papers among the people wherever he thinks they will read them.

Now I am not complaining about what we are doing; it all is done willingly, but if the Saints everywhere would do their duty, this condition would not be among us, but it seems to me as though sometimes the Saints think this work can be carried on by the wind and the water and they go on after the worldly pleasures in the troublous hour.

I hope that what I have written will be read in the light in which it has been written and help the Saints to awake and make Zion a land of sunshine and flowers; a place of safety for all of us, and my prayer is that I will live to help the work too, and that I will soon get to dwell somewhere in the stakes.

Your sister and colaborer in the one faith,

ETTA LEWIS.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: The Saints here are trying to live worthy of the name they bear, and though these are troublous times, they are lifting their heads and rejoicing that our redemption is so nigh.

I am holding preaching services at Hamilton every two weeks, at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., in two parts of the town, in private houses. We have quite an interest and invitations to occupy in other homes. We have baptized three since Brother Arch McCord brought the tent here the last of August, and many more are interested. Our little branch, known as Oakdale, had about forty members five years ago. It has steadily increased till it now numbers nearly one hundred Saints.

Many families of Saints have moved here from Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, and five families from Nodaway County, Missouri. They are all delighted with the country and the influence they enjoy by associating with those of like precious faith. They are all trying to encourage their friends to come this way. We have a fine opening for a good blacksmith; also two good farm bargains we would like some of the Saints to capture.

Since our more perfect organization on June 3 into a Stake, I think Far West is taking a step in advance. We have surely been blessed in basket and in store the past season, for which we are truly thankful to our loving Father in heaven.

As ever your brother,

J. T. FORD.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, January 31, 1918.

Editors Herald: For the Burlington Branch, 1917 closed quietly, and 1918 began auspiciously. Since we have not reported since shortly before the close of the year, we might mention briefly the success of special Christmas features, and another item.

The Sunday school program was held Sunday evening, December 23; was well balanced and well rendered. At the close of the program a purse was presented to Brother Williams in token of our appreciation of his labors during the past year, and as the superintendent expressed it, "in anticipation of his labors for the coming year." Both Sunday school and Religio have profited by his assistance and counsel.

On the morning of December 23, Brother Williams announced as his subject, "Peace; How? When? Where?" The development of the subject, of course, comprehended the necessity of right living in harmony with the gospel plan preparatory for the millennial reign of Christ upon earth. In the course of the sermon, he spoke of Peter's admonition that we "add to our faith, virtue; to virtue, knowledge," etc. Here, he said the question came to him so forcibly that he dared not withhold it: How many of our people were adding knowledge to faith and virtue, especially knowledge of the Word of God as revealed in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants? He spoke of the rebuke to the early church because of neglect of these books, and the condemnation resulting, and urged that we be not under like condemnation, again repeating that the admonition was given so forcibly that he dared not withhold it, though why in this connection he did not understand.

Following the sermon, our presiding priest, who was in charge, related an experience had during the sermon. He told us that the Spirit came upon him in power, and he saw first, the room filled with messengers of light, after which the Savior himself stood behind Brother Williams, giving him words to speak. He exhorted us, therefore, to take the admonition given as if it were the words of the Savior himself, which it was in effect.

The following Sunday, in the pastor's absence, Brother Schweers spoke, using this experience as a basis for his talk, and urging the membership to use more diligently the opportunities afforded in both Sunday school and Religio to gain the knowledge so necessary to fit us for the Master's presence. We trust that the experience related may be of service to others than the membership here.

Severe weather has had its effect upon attendance, but the January sacrament service was well attended, notwithstanding heavy snow and blockaded street car service. Brother Truman Ziegenhorn, who is thus far the only one of our boys who has had to go in the draft, was present with us for the day on furlough from Camp Dodge. Camp life has evidently agreed with him—we wonder whether his popularity during his two days in Burlington would agree equally well!

The question of suspending midweek meetings was brought up at the close of the prayer service last evening, and will probably be decided next Wednesday at the branch business meeting preceding the district conference, which is to be held here February 16 and 17; convention sessions Thursday evening, February 14, and Friday, the 15th. It is proposed to hold cottage prayer meetings Wednesday evenings, and perhaps temporarily to hold Religio on Sunday evening preceding regular service, during the coal shortage.

CORRESPONDENT.

HOPEWELL, VIRGINIA, February 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: I don't like to come out plain, but was just noting about five pages of the HERALD taken up by an epitome of the Presbyterian Church. Every week there are several pages taken up with these churches. I believe there are about a thousand different churches, and if you don't intend to print them all, why print part?

I lived in the Baptist faith about five years, enough to know that there is nothing to compare with the latter-day gospel. I suppose there are those in the church from all denominations who have had like experiences, so it looks like a waste of time and expense to publish these things, where our own correspondence is crowded out.

There is nothing I like to read as well in the HERALD as the letters from my brothers and sisters in different parts of the world, and their writings and experiences in the work of God, asking for our aid in prayer in their behalf.

I have suffered a great many things for this gospel. I was told to take my things and get out of a boarding house, simply because I made a kick when they burned up my church papers. I quietly told them "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," and the wife of the man who told me to get out has been under the doctor's care nearly ever since I left, and very low. I only pity their ignorance and unbelief.

I was called the worst kind of names by another man, who said all Mormons were — well I will let you guess the rest. He said no miracles were performed after Christ left the earth.

Brother Nunley came here but the weather was so bad I thought it wise not to try, in stormy weather, to open up any meeting. This trip cost me twenty dollars, and no good done, as I can see.

What we want here, is one who has a trade, who can work during the week and preach on Sunday.

Mechanics get big wages here and plenty of work the year around; three and one half dollars to eight dollars a day; board, six dollars to seven and one half dollars per week.

I have been in Virginia over twelve years and have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon in the State. I will either see the work started here, or else move out of the State. I have a sweet girl, ten years old, here, or I would have been out of here long ago.

I gave Brother Nunley two dollars for a Christmas offering, to help pay the church debt. Hope the debt will soon be wiped out. I am well, and will be sixty-one years old the 19th of next month. I expect to be at the General Conference April 6.

Pray for your isolated brother.

In gospel bonds,

WILLIAM C. CUMMINGS.

CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, February 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are having one of the coldest winters that they have had for years in West Virginia, and the people, not expecting it, were not prepared for it, which makes it hard to do church work, as the people are not used to getting out to meetings when it is so cold. Besides there has been so much ice on the walks and roads that it has been dangerous for old people to venture out at all.

The work in this district is moving ahead, but not so fast as we would like on account of not having enough local laborers to keep up the meetings after the missionary goes away. I have labored in Clarksburg, Morgantown, Van-Voorhis, Masontown, Indian Creek, Cabin Run, Goose Creek, Anna Moriah, as well as in some new places in the district, and I find the Saints all desiring to help push the work ahead; but some do not have the zeal that we would like to see. Yet with all the discouraging conditions, I can see a brighter day dawning for this district. They are talking of building a church near Anna Moriah next summer.

The missionaries that have labored in the district in the past are well spoken of and the Saints would like to see them again.

A. V. CLOSSON.

CASH, MICHIGAN, February 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: While reading the interesting letters of our brothers and sisters, I feel impressed to write and tell what we are doing at Cash.

At one time this was a flourishing branch, but trouble came and for a time everything seemed dark. Some became discouraged and are staying away; but things look brighter now. Every cloud has its silver lining, so we hope to soon have them with us again.

Elder Grice, our district president, has just spent some little time with us and gave us much encouragement.

On Sunday morning the Spirit was with us in power. The Lord spoke through Elder Grice, calling Brother Winters, our presiding priest, to the office of elder; Brother William Maedel, the deacon, to the office of priest; and Brother John Fetting to the office of teacher.

The young were admonished to be faithful, and they would be the means of bringing their young associates to the gospel; and to the older ones, that there were many around us whose hearts were yearning to obey the gospel, but were only waiting for the Saints to get in unity, then they would unite with us. Many more words of encouragement were spoken to us. Dear Saints, isn't this worth trying for? Let us be humble and prayerful, that they might come in and be one with us.

We have a fine Sunday school and all, from the least to the greatest, are working to help pay off the church debt. Our offering last year was $281.50. We hope to make it more for 1918. Our one desire is to see this debt wiped out; for we know the hastening time is here and this gospel must go to all nations.

Ever praying for God's people, and that his will may be accomplished in all things, I remain

Your sister in the gospel,

SAINT MARYS, OHIO, February, 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: Leaving home January 8 I came directly to Saint Marys, Ohio, fortunately slipping through between two gigantic blizzards. Having previously secured the use of the Adventist church, I intended to begin a series of lectures on the war, but the blizzard blocked the roads so we could not get to the church. Some who were anxious to hear suggested that we get the schoolhouse. Brother Bartley called the members of the board of education by phone and obtained their consent.

Satan scented danger. Two miles from the schoolhouse is a Methodist church. The community is divided religiously between the Methodist and Adventist churches, the Methodist church predominating.

My first lecture was, "Why the nations fight." One individual, moved by prejudice, went away with a lie on his lips, which he carried to the members of the school board, with the result that the house was closed and about sixty or more men, women, and children were locked out in the cold. Brother Bartley kindly invited them to his home, where I have been preaching nightly with increasing interest. Meantime a petition was presented to the board signed by more than the requisite number of names to have the house opened, but the board being composed largely of members of the dominant church, the rights of the people of the community were disregarded, one of the board members telling the petitioners that if they wanted to go to church they could go to Walnut Grove, the Methodist church. This was of itself a violation of the statutory law, as well as article 1, section 7, of the State Constitution. But what do such trivial things as legislative enactment amount to when somebody's craft is in danger? Citizens of the community and patrons of the school made earnest entreaty to have the house opened, but to no avail.

Wicked falsehoods were circulated about me. But even the man directing the opposition had nothing but words of praise for Brother Bartley and family (Saints everywhere take notice) as model Christian people. It was "that preacher" who stirred up the community.

Last Monday the Evening Leader of Saint Marys had a half-column write-up with big headlines, making it appear that I was Satan personified. One lady, a Methodist, called the editor up and told him it was all a big lie. I also wrote a lengthy reply which was given equal prominence and which appeared Thursday evening, the editor treating me very courteously. It simply advertised us beyond our fondest expectations. Some were coming four miles in improvised sleds, as one lady said, "Any way to get here."

Last night I preached in a private home near the Methodist

BOOKS ON EASY PAYMENTS

To make it as easy as possible for all of our patrons to secure a good supply of the church books, we offer a plan whereby almost anyone can soon own a representative number of them.

The books are on our shelves, but we would rather they were on yours. Your credit is good and while paying for them you can be getting the good from them.

No Red Tape

It is as simple as such a plan can possibly be made. It requires no trouble at all and brings you books you have long wanted to own.

From our price list pick out the list of books and tracts you would like to have. Make the amount of your order as near these amounts as possible: $10, $15, $20. Sign the contract we send on request, have it indorsed by your branch president, (we make provision for this if that is not a possibility) then send it in with a dollar. We will send the order, all charges prepaid, right away, without further preliminary.

Then after that you only need to pay once a month in the small amounts of $1, $1.25, or $1.50, according to the amount of your order, and in a short time the books will be yours. Isn't that simple and easy?

This is a straightforward proposition from your own church publishing house. You have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Our personal assistance in selecting the books will be given if desired. You will need to give such details as will help us, and we'll make up a list if you think you don't know what you would like. Resolve that you'll be better informed, and let us send the blanks right away.

church with nearly a hundred present. Another man invited me to preach in his home, and they want me to preach in that vicinity next week. Thus it appears that Satan overdid the thing. Thursday evening one man with his family drove about nine miles to get here, and he said he was coming back to-night.

The enemy appears to have gone into hiding. However, we have our ear to the ground and will be ready to meet him at the first signs of an advance.

I must not forget to say that our district conference at Sylvania was a banner gathering for this district. Despite the cold and the big drifts, the attendance at all the services was large; better in fact than many districts with many times larger membership. On the whole we are encouraged to renewed activity.

Hopefully in the conflict,

Butterworth, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sheldon, Mr. and Mrs. James Sheldon, George I. Hansen, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mann. Alternates: E. R. and Virgil Butterworth, J. B. Wildermuth, Guerrit Juergens and Clifford Brown. Instructed to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. E. R. Butterworth ordained to office of elder. Reunion committee is actively engaged in planning the work of the coming reunion at Dow City, August 16 to 25. Adjourned to meet at Coalville, Iowa, June 8 and 9. Wave Cross, secretary, Glidden, Iowa.

DES MOINES.—Met in Des Moines, Iowa, February 9 and 10, in charge of district president, O. Salisbury. Statistical reports, together with the reports of the priesthood and bishop's agent, came to the conference in printed form and in numbers sufficient for distribution throughout the district. The bishop's agent's report showed the receipts for the year to be $4,638.59; expenditures, $3,993.70. Frank Hull was ordained to the office of elder and Frank Mussell, teacher. Unanimously voted that The Des Moines District Dispatch be approved and continued and that district president and bishop's agent be in charge of the paper. Delegates to General Conference: O. Salisbury, H. Castings, C. L. Nirk, Milo Burnett, E. G. Beye, William McBirnie, H. H. Hand, D. T. Williams, Bessy Laughlin, C. Malcor, J. O. Salisbury, R. J. Farthing, Frank Mussell. Alternates: Mrs. McBirnie, J. E. Slocum, Mr. and Mrs. George Williamson, Mrs. C. E. McDonald, Mrs. C. Malcor, George Hall, Mae Huffaker, Mary Sheets, F. A. Settles and Charlotte Dryden. There was a lecture by O. Salisbury, 2 sermons by J. J. Cornish and one by Henry Castings. Next conference to be at Rhodes, Iowa, in June. Bessy Laughlin, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Missouri Valley, Iowa, February 9 and 10. District officers in charge. Bishop's agent's annual report for 1917 was $15,468.55, or more than double any previous year. Report for January, 1918, showed receipts amounting to $3,070.91. A resolution passed prohibiting election to office in any branch of the Little Sioux District anyone addicted to the use of tobacco. Also a resolution that hereafter the conferences of this district be held on the second Saturday and Sunday of June, October, and February, but if found necessary at any particular time, the district presidency to change the time; and that the presidency of the district was in the future to be the program committee for the conferences. Owing to unfavorable conditions in the Evergreen Branch, the district presidency recommended disorganization, and the body concurred. Fred A. Fry desired to be released from the office of district chorister, and his resignation was accepted, subject to the consent of the general chorister, and the matter referred to the district presidency, they to recommend to the general chorister the one best qualified for the office. A uniform time for sacrament service throughout the branches of the district was named as the first Sunday of each month. Delegates to General Conference: Amos Berve, Sister Amos Berve, W. R. Adams, Sister W. R. Adams, Charles Kennedy, Sister Charles Kennedy, J. W. Lane, Sister J. W. Lane, E. B. Purcell, Sister E. B. Purcell, S. B. Kibler, Sister S. B. Kibler, Gladys Hupp, Robert Kirkwood, Sister Robert Kirkwood, Cora Kirkwood, Nellie Kennedy, P. J. Zimmerman, Sister P. J. Zimmerman, Charles S. Van Eaton, Sister Charles Van Eaton, Mary Reeves and Sidney Pitt, sr. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Northern Nebraska District conference having received the resignation of Brother James Huff, we are upon the recommendation of the district conference, appointing Brother H. A. Scott, 2105 South Thirty-third Street, Omaha, Nebraska; as his successor. Those who are acquainted with Brother Scott know of his sterling integrity and his fitness and worthiness to occupy as Brother Huff's successor. We commend him to the Saints and trust that he may have their confidence and support. Brother Huff has served the district for a great number of years, and for this faithful service we desire to express our appreciation.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

THE WONDER OF WAR IN THE AIR

By Francis Rolt-Wheeler. With forty-two illustrations from unusual war photographs and sketches. Large 12mo cloth, price, $1.35, Lothrop, Lee, and Shepherd Co., Boston. A most timely American boy's story of adventure, combining the fascination in the perilous excitement of flying and the thrill of modern war. No more lucid or technically accurate account has ever been written of the various types of aeroplanes, their construction, and their relative purpose in war. One sees the bombardment machine, the aeroplane for directing artillery fire, the scout, and the fighter of the air, at work in their several fields. The hero of the book, trained in the French Flying Corps, is taught every detail necessary in that new world of warfare—the battle ground of the skies. He witnesses some of the most historic raids of the War, and takes a share in the destruction of one of the newest aerial monsters.

FIVE OF THE TWELVE IN LOS ANGELES

Brother T. W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California, sends us clippings from the city dailies, advertising services in which a number of the Twelve were to participate. We note the names of U. W. Greene, W. M. Aylor, J. F. Curtis, Paul M. Hanson, J. W. Rushton. Brother Aylor began the series on Sunday morning (17th) and had a packed house. In the evening it rained so the streets were full of running water, making it almost impossible to reach the church. Fifteen arrived to hear Brother Rushton, and on the 20th Brother Williams reported it had been raining ever since. The week was to close with conventions and conferences.

FAREWELL TO SOLDIERS AT GRACELAND

On the morning of the 25th there was a special reception and program at Graceland College for the boys who are to leave for Camp Dodge on the 26th. As this is written, the Commercial Club has planned for a big public demonstration on the streets on Tuesday morning. Comfort kits are to be provided by the local Red Cross chapter.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR MARCH

The March number is out and it surely ought to be popular. There are a nice lot of illustrations, including important series on the Pyramid of the Sun in Mexico. There are two good short stories in addition to Elbert A. Smith's installment of "Timbers for the temple." Then there are a lot of interesting little bright spots that we all like. The Periscope teems with interesting bits, including an interview with Heman C. Smith on how to write. The departments are fine and contain important convention announcements. Ask for a sample copy if you don't get Autumn Leaves, or better still send a dollar for a year.

ACCOUNTANT AT WORK

Brother Kearney Kelley, expert accountant, son of Elder T. C. Kelley, has been in Lamoni about a week, helping to establish a comprehensive system of accounting in the various branches of the stake storehouse and also the laundry. He will also inspect the system in use at this office and that of the bishopric and offer such suggestions for improvement as appeal to him as helpful.

SERVICE FLAG FOR GRACELAND

The folks at Graceland have decided to construct a large service flag to hang on the walls of the chapel, to contain a star for every student and alumnus of the college. To that end they have appointed a committee to secure the names of all such as soon as possible. If you happen to know of anyone who has attended Graceland who is serving under the colors, send his name right away to Frank B. Almond, Lamoni, Iowa, of the committee.

Brother A. M. Chase thinks the interest is on the increase at Macon, Missouri. He commences a series of sermons there on Sunday, the 24th, and expects to continue over till March 3, or possibly till the 10th. Likely Brother Ely will assist.

A letter from Brother A. Jensen of Conception Junction, Missouri, speaks highly of the work of Brother R. S. Salyards, president of the Far West Stake. Weather was bad, so meetings were held at private houses and three sermons preached.

WORKING ON YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY

The printers have set forty galleys of the type on the second volume of the Young People's History, by Vida E. Smith. In other words they have a good start and we may look for the completed books this spring. It covers the history from 1852 till the death of Joseph Smith in 1914, and will likely find a ready welcome. But possibly you don't have the first volume of this delightfully written history. A dollar bill will bring you one. Order No. 126.

GOOD REPORTS FROM NAUVOO DISTRICT

Word from Elder C. J. Smith assures us that the Nauvoo District is on the upward trend and desirous of continuing that way. The recent district conference at Burlington had the largest attendance and best spirit of years. They are going to hold the reunion at Montrose again, on August 23 to September 1, and he hopes all will note the date and plan to come. Brother Smith was planning on going from Burlington to Rock Creek in a few days.

PLANTS THE GOSPEL IN BERMUDA

A second letter from Elder William Moore, of the British navy, tells some of his experiences in the Bermuda Islands (some 600 miles off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina). His ship had touched port there in June, and he made some friends to the cause. This time he was permitted to preach to an audience of about 200 people, some white, but mostly negroes and Portuguese. He says there was much interest in his talk, taken from Romans 10, with the 13th verse as leading text. He suggests that literature sent to Mr. S. Adcock, Cedarhurst, Southampton West, Bermuda, will do good. He left them some HERALDS, the Voice of Warning, and the Fall of Babylon.

"The work is moving nicely. Some improvement in a spiritual way. We also expect to make some improvements soon on the furnishing and finishing of the church building."—J. F. Mintun, of Toledo, Ohio.

Brother O. E. Tucker, of Clitherall, Minnesota, wants to know who has a copy of Confessions of John D. Lee for sale. He is not particular as to the condition of the book.

We have a nice letter from ten-year-old Cecil A. Milner of Johnsonville, Illinois, telling of his faith, his baptism, and expressing a desire that we pray for his mother, who suffers patiently from an affliction. We appreciate your faith, Cecil, and are sure it will be rewarded in this life, as well as in that to come.

THE HOME AT HOLDEN

The stake officers of the Latter Day Saint church this week purchased the triangular tract immediately south of the Katy right-of-way between Main and Market Streets, except the half lot on the west end. They contemplate building coal bins there for the coal supply for the old folks' home. That institution required a ton of coal a day during the recent zero weather.—Holden Progress.

CHILDREN'S HOME ABOUT FULL

There are at present 35 children in the Children's Home at Lamoni, leaving only room for one more bed, with several on the waiting list. A goodly number are adopted into the families of the Saints, while others are taken out as the parents or friends make better provision for their care.

BOOKS ON PAYMENT PLAN

The offer in this issue whereby you may secure a nice lot of the church books on the payment plan should appeal to a goodly number of earnest seekers after light. Many of us have gotten a satisfactory nucleus for a library in just this manner, which otherwise we wouldn't have had at all. It is simply one phase of cooperation, the principle on which Zion is to be established.

THE GENERAL CONVENTIONS

The general officers of the Sunday school and Religio are to take it for granted that everybody knows that the conventions will precede General Conference, but we might add that they are planning programs and business for the four days prior to April 6. The intentions now are to use April 2 and 3 for the Religio, and the 4th and 5th for the Sunday school, while the conference begins on the 6th, as it has done from the beginning. More definite announcements will be given later.

Gallands Grove District Saints please note that the address of your bishop's agent, C. E. Anderson, is changed to Box 211, Fort Dodge, Iowa. He is glad to get mail.

SANITARIUM NEEDS MORE NURSES

The superintendent of nurses is making a call in this issue for more nurses. It should appeal to a goodly number of those eligible as an important line of endeavor, fraught with a wonderful amount of good.

In the radio class at Graceland there are 35 young men and one young woman. They are doing good work and find it interesting.

SEEK THE BEST GIFTS

Seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, they are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited, that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lusts.—Doctrine and Covenants 46:4.

We find in the epistle of James a similar statement, but not so clearly pointing out our duties and rights in regard to the gifts of the Spirit.

Covetousness is forbidden in the law, both Mosaic and Christian; yet we are told to "covet earnestly the best gifts." (1 Corinthians 12:31.) We should desire them, seek for them, and prepare ourselves for them. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." (James 4:8.)

Believing in revelation and the gifts of the Spirit, yet we permit the turmoil of the world, or worldly interests, or lack of thought, to shut us out from real communication as children of God.

How often do we go about our work, and even to prayer service, unprepared. We go as a duty or a custom, instead of seeking to learn and do the will of our Father. At times we may even shrink from spiritual experiences and criticize advancement, because it means a change of routine.

We ought to live nearer God; we ought to come with the realization that some of the gifts of the Spirit may be ours. We are living in a remarkable age, when we especially need divine help and protection for our loved ones and ourselves.

But equally great, if not greater than this, is the tendency to treat spiritual gifts as a sort of passing stimulant. Some go to church hopefully; some even fasting and praying. But when a message comes by prophecy, or gift of tongues and interpretation, they go away and say, "We had the gift of prophecy today." "We had the gift of the Spirit." But apparently, it makes no difference in their life, for they go on and do just as they have done before.

Certain action may be condemned in clear terms; not once, but many times, and even several times in the one service. Yet, often we go on in the same way.

Truly our heavenly Father is merciful, patient, and long-suffering, yet surely there will come a time of choice when those, spiritually deaf, will suffer, being numbered with the transgressor. Now comes admonition and warning; then will come the day of decision.

A month from the date of this HERALD, General Conference will convene; in less than four weeks the conventions will be in session. Already the delegates are selected, and we know who are going. It is right that we should prepare, that we should seek by prayer and by study, devotedly and devoutly, to get ourselves ready for the work before the conference and the quorums. With deepest faith we should seek the throne of grace secretly for divine wisdom and direction, and especially for those who labor in the leading quorums.

But our approach to the throne of grace should be made with humility. When man receives a message, or the influence of the Holy Spirit in power, he feels his own littleness, and instead of feeling exalted, feels rather humbled and thankful.

It should be made with confidence, for our Father is all-loving and merciful, and as ready to communicate to-day as ever. If our obedience during the year or years past, the needs of the work and its possibilities, merit or require divine direction, He is able and willing to give it. It may well be doubted how far the temporary repentance and prayers of a few at General Conference, or even of the church, could bring a revelation not merited or ready or needed.

Still it is well that our preparation should include a putting aside of other cares, and a bringing to bear of the very best of our powers, spiritual and mental, on the problems before us, and that we put ourselves, so far as we can, in a condition of mind and spirit to consider wisely and rightly all that may come before us. We should, in a word, draw nigh to God, in the confidence that he will then draw nigh to us, or rather that he is not far from those who seek him.

Our approach should be made intelligently, considering the laws of God, the purpose of his word, and the responsibility that is ours in our association in his work. A commandment received profits nothing, unless we obey that which we have received as being a divine command. Wherein is the profit in receiving that which we are not ready or willing to obey?

Nor is it only at General Conference that divine direction may be received. Every worker, however humble, has the right to seek and receive from his heavenly Father, help for daily needs and problems. The ministers of the church need our support and prayers all through the year, both for their work in the field and in council.

Certain revelations, which are the law to govern the church, must first be presented to the quorums and to the body in General Conference. But the President of the church has the right to seek divine direction at any time.

This is indeed a wonderful privilege and also a great responsibility. We should covet the best gifts, but not for selfish reasons, not for lust, not to make a display, but so we may better understand the work of God and better help our fellow men and the church.

So let us go to meet our brethren with clean hands and hearts, a mind freed from distraction, a purpose devoted to the service of God and our fellow men.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

The opening prayer at church service should not be noticeable either for length or for brevity.

Once in a great while there is a man who falls into the unusual error of making his opening prayer so short that it is almost phonetic. He simply "leaves everything to the Lord with power to act," as one man expressed it. Such a prayer lacks dignity. It is not suitable to the occasion. It might be all right if one were falling into a well, but not for the opening only of a religious service.

More often we observe men who pray too long. They drone on and on, praying for everything imaginable and some things not imaginable—as with the elder who covered all thinkable mundane affairs and closed by interceding for those "who dwell in the uninhabited parts of the earth." They are not willing to leave anything to God without instructions. And they do not leave much for the preacher.

It is related that many years ago Elder Mark H. Forscutt was advertised to preach on the Book of Mormon. A very large audience assembled. The brother who offered the opening prayer entered into the theme with great zeal and thoroughness. He prayed all over the subject and all around it, citing Deity to many Scriptural passages and archæological evidences supporting the Book of Mormon. When finally "Uncle Mark" was introduced he said, "The brother covered every point but one, in his opening prayer, I will briefly notice that one point and then close." He was as good as his word. But the audience was disappointed. The people had not come to a prayer meeting.

President Joseph Smith used to say that he thanked God we had never had a heresy trial. True, the time may come when we will have a real case of heresy. Heresy at one time got into the church; but it was criminal heresy plainly in conflict with both church and civil law. But from time to time some one teaches some doctrinal point with which some one else does not agree and then some one thinks that we must do something to somebody quick or the church is lost. Generally it is mostly smoke and noise and misunderstanding of terms. If we wait and keep our heads and are patient it is soon over and forgotten.

Conclusions reached from round-about comparisons seem very plausible, but we should always bear in mind that the unexpected incident may overthrow the conclusion, as in the following: The horse is not afraid of a mouse but is terribly afraid of an elephant. An elephant does not fear a horse, but is very much afraid of a mouse. The mouse is not afraid of either the horse or the elephant. Therefore the mouse must be very powerful and courageous. This stands until the advent of a cat.

There are tricks in all trades. Even the preacher, when doubtful about the location of some New Testament text, may find it convenient to say, "As the inspired apostle says."

When the Duke of Wellington died, Queen Victoria decreed a great state funeral. The ambassador from France called upon the ambassador from Russia and expressed great concern because he felt that he could not attend the funeral of the former enemy of France. But the ambassador from Russia consoled him by saying that if required to attend the resurrection of the Iron Duke he might indeed feel some trepidation, but he should be able to attend his funeral with great pleasure. Time makes wonderful changes. To-day France would hail the resurrection of the great duke. He is needed.

Darwin attempted to account for the amazing variety in creation by the laws of variation, heredity, and survival of the fittest. Variations from type were noted. These were carried down to posterity by heredity. If they in any way assisted individuals in the struggle for existence they were preserved and became permanent under the law of the survival of the fittest. Thus came the long neck of the giraffe, the tiger's claws, the leopard's spots, the Ethiopian's skin. In this way it was assumed the marvelous variety and complexity of creation were evolved from "one or a few" original forms.

But no effort was made by Darwin to account for the origin of these original forms supposed to contain potentially all the varied species. At some point we must come upon a Creator, infinite in power, wisdom, and resources. Nothing is gained by pushing that point of discovery back millions of years. It is as easy to think of God as at work in the world today—and through all past ages. Christianity has its own laws. Faith, prayer, continued revelation, these make "a very present God" of the very distant God of science.

Darwin tried to push God back, back, back, into the dim past. Jesus Christ tried to bring God nearer, nearer, nearer; and said, "He that has seen me has seen God." While Paul tells us that God is not far from any one of us.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE COOPERATIVE COLONIES

The editors have received several copies of The Cooperative Colonist. It is printed by a number of Socialists who are attempting to build up a colony at Fallon, Nevada. They refer to what was done by the Utah Mormons in the Salt Lake Valley, and insist that they have an equally good or better opportunity in Nevada. They are evidently following the form of a stock company, in which those interested buy shares, and profit according to their interest. They report that they have 1,640 acres of land. Some have gone in and have worked, others have only contributed their means.

Many acres were cultivated this past summer, with the result of 1,000 tons of alfalfa, 2,000 bushels of potatoes, 1,000 bushels of onions, 700 bushels of wheat, 500 bushels of apples, barley, corn, and cane, 740 head of cattle, 70 head of horses and colts, and between 100 and 200 head of swine.

The movement is evidently intended to be cooperative, i. e., for the benefit of those who join. In a recent meeting, by-laws were passed requiring that the directors hand in their resignation in writing before taking the oath of office, then if any director fails to vote for a proposition which has received the approval of the majority of the workers of the colony, the secretary shall fill in the date of his resignation and forward at once.

This is of interest in showing the growth of a cooperative movement. We have alluded before to the cooperative movement in England dating back to 1844. We have also referred to the fact that leading students of the day in England and America are urging that every city should be made a Zion.

S. A. B.

"TAKE CARE OF YOUR DAUGHTER"

In the matter of social purity, a great deal may be said and is being said. Most of our readers probably are not aware of conditions in normal peace times. Many of the young men of the Nation have been gathered into camps. In many instances a distinct effort has been made of gathering a number of undesirable characters in the vicinity of the camp. This effort has doubtless occurred in many instances, but some of the reports, at least, are excessive.

On the other hand, the United States Government has been and is making a decided effort to clean up every city and town within the vicinity of their camp. We think it is safe to say that conditions are better now around the United States Army camps than they were before the boys were gathered to those neighborhoods. We think it safe to say that social conditions upon the whole are better because of the several decided steps taken by the Government in its own interest to insure the protection of its own men. We have seen the statement that three hundred thousand men in France are incapacitated from the one cause. Repeated so often, it may be true. Undoubtedly the condition will be more serious for our men when they have gone abroad. In this country there are the two problems: To protect boys in the Army; the other to protect our girls. Steps are being taken in both directions, but it does not relieve the individual of responsibility.

In this issue we have a clipping from a paper at Manhattan, Kansas. It will be noted that the story concerns New England. It has been assured by men personally known to us and whose integrity we cannot question, that they know many instances of girls doing this very thing, approaching soldiers and inviting them to take a walk. It is a bad thing under any circumstances, and undoubtedly makes it harder for the soldiers and those who have them in charge. And certainly it reflects upon the girls and those who have them in charge. And undoubtedly it reflects upon the girl, especially at this time, when there are such women making such approaches. When parents permit and when girls do such things, we will have to concede that the responsibility for the wrong does not rest all in one quarter.

It is our opinion that this gathering of young men has merely brought out the question more clearly, and aroused public conscience; that it is attempting to decrease the effects of an old-time evil.

Evil is genuine, and should be prevented. Personally we are glad to see something of an agitation, with the hope that it will mean better moral conditions, both now and after the war.

Immorality and narcotics invariably mean lessened efficiency. When this is recognized as meaning a deficiency, it does not show the mark of the man, but quite the reverse. When we realize that these defects in family history mark the defective and incompetent, we may hope for real ideals of manhood and womanhood, which make for greater physical and spiritual efficiency.

The Young Men's Christian Association, together with the Government, is taking decided steps to protect our boys so far as is possible abroad. After all, we need that courage and that personal stamina which will make us recognize that every wrong hurts not only ourselves, but others. We need that idealism that will help a man to keep right and not yield to the enemy forces no matter how, when, or where he may be approached; keeping strong for his country, for his family, and for his God. S. A. B.

MADE TO ORDER STORIES

We regret very much to note that two or three different stories have been sent in as being related by opponents who claim to be Christian ministers. We would suggest that where any such unfair story is told, those who relate it should put their statement in writing and sign it.

If this cannot be done, secure the names of witnesses in the vicinity, write out the statement yourself as accurately as possible, and have these witnesses sign or certify to it. This is for the purpose of fixing the statement as accurately as possible in memory by putting it in writing, as near the time as is practicable, and having it verified by those who hear it stated. We can then secure a proper answer and also insist upon its correction.

Some stories are of such a character that no one ought to relate them without being sure of his ground. Malice can fairly be inferred from the mere fact of such statement without verification.

It is strange to note how seemingly small a change makes an important difference, yet we all know that such is the fact. For instance, as one of these stories has it, a certain person was born a few months after his parents' marriage. The inaccuracy is in the word months which should have been years. One word wrong, but the difference is great. Then some one else will take a statement of this kind and treat it as if it were history, when it is utterly false from the very beginning.

This same principle should refer to all those who make unjust attacks upon the church or upon Joseph Smith or his family. In many instances such offenders cannot be reached, not for the reason that their statements are true, or that there is doubt as to their falsity, but because a deceased person is in a different class from one who is alive, when it comes to a case of slander or libel.

Again we would suggest that the statement be made at least a matter of record, either by having the parties submit it in writing and sign it, or else having a copy and verified by witnesses.

S. A. B.

As a result of all this, I believe I can now repeat almost every clause of the Apostle's Creed with a fervent sentiment of conviction. My intellectual interpretation of the meaning of each item of it probably differs toto caelo from that of the average orthodox believer. To me not a clause of it is true in a crass, literal, material sense, but all of it is true in a sense far higher, which is only symbolized on the literal plane. The change from my boyhood belief in it all has been to me all gain and no loss. Nothing has been dropped or denied, but only the mental imagery by which it is apprehended is changed. The same fundamental religious instincts are expressed in the new forms as in the old. What lay concealed in the old stands revealed in the new. I am still going in the same direction and in the same path in which my infant feet were first taught to walk. Senescent insights and adolescent sentiments meet and reinforce each other. How, thus, can I quarrel with those who are at any stage of this "grammar of assent"? I only insist that the way be kept open for all to escape arrest, as I have tried to do. Some will stop at each stage, and others will go far beyond any ranges I can attain, for the path not only goes on and up but ever broadens. Thus my own fondest hope and belief is that my best effort, here falteringly put forth, may very soon be transcended and superseded not by one but by many studies that are better and more worthy of the theme.—G. Stanley Hall, Jesus, the Christ, in the Light of Psychology.

"The leading papers of Germany are very free in the expression of their regret that Great Britain was permitted to be the first power to declare itself in favor of a national Jewish homeland in Palestine, which, according to the best editorial opinion of the Central Empires, should have been forestalled by definite action on the part of Germany."—The American Hebrew.

THE THOUSAND YEARS' REIGN

No doubt all in the church believe in this reign but the query in the minds of some, at least, is to its locality. That is, the queries arise as to whether those who are permitted to reign with Christ in person will do so upon the earth or somewhere above the earth. What is to be the condition of those who live during this millennial period?

In seeking for Bible analyses there are at least two safe rules: Firstly, do not depend upon one or two isolated passages to determine the thought at issue; secondly, take the preponderance of evidence to prove the thought under consideration.

There is one passage of scripture that is sufficiently ambiguous to make it susceptible of at least more than one interpretation, and it is, unfortunately, the one on which the "caught up" conclusionists are sure to base their arguments. It is found in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17, and more especially in the seventeenth verse. To relieve this verse of the seeming ambiguity and make it harmonize with the many direct and positive texts bearing upon this subject, it is but necessary to get the analysis of, "and so shall we ever be with the Lord." To do this successfully it is necessary to determine the meaning of the word so, for this is the one word of all the language that is made to do duty in the conclusion that this language means that those who are thus caught up are to remain in that "up" during the thousand years. The broadest meanings of this little word so, as given by the lexicographers, are: "At all events" and "in any case." Then at all events or in any case we are to "ever be with the Lord," hence the only question to settle is, Where will the Lord be during the thousand years' reign?

THE REIGN ON THE EARTH

The Master of men, the greatest authority of all, and one whose testimony should be the end of all controversy, said in that remarkable sermon on the mount, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." This clearly disproves the idea of an inheritance in the air and at once settles the question of place. While this statement is doubtless to be extended to cover the whole period of immortal existence it will hardly be germane to the question to argue that it refers alone to the inheritance on the "new earth." The Psalmist expresses the same thought in Psalm 37:11.

It is well that we get the distinction clearly in mind that the "reign of Christ" is to be during the thousand years, as this will materially help us as to location, that being the main point at issue. The Apostle Paul clearly covers this period in 1 Corinthians 15:23-28. "Afterward they are Christ's at his coming" clearly portrays the resurrection of the just as outlined in the first Thessalonian letter as already noted, and is clearly the time of the commencement of his "reign."

Then cometh the end, [of that reign] when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; [hence his reign ceases by the kingdom being "delivered up,"] when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

That he is to reign, being thus clearly established, the points next to be proved are as to the length of that reign and where it is to be accomplished. It should be noted by the preceding quotation that it is not to be a never-ending reign, else it were folly to insert the adverb of time. To reign till he has put all enemies under his feet is but to affirm that when that fact has been accomplished his reign will cease.

In that great panoramic review as visioned by John on the Island of Patmos and iterated in the twentieth chapter of his revelation, he says: "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."

Here is a clear portrayal both as to the time of duration and period of the world's history—one thousand years—and during the time between the resurrections of the just and the unjust, as the pretexts and contexts both clearly show. In the same connection the apostle reiterates: "But they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." This point thus successfully proved, what of the place? The same writer, Revelation 5:9, 10, says that Jesus Christ has by his blood "redeemed us to God" and that he has "made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Here is the testimony of a witness who had held converse with angels and to whom the angel had said, "Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter." These were some of the things shown unto John, and carry with them all the force of revealed knowledge, hence not controvertible. Proof texts all bearing directly upon the point at issue might be multiplied, but when the voice of impregnable revelation has spoken in so direct a manner, it were but a waste of time to thus multiply evidence. The only possibility of shaking such evidence would be by a negation by the same "voice," and that does not exist.

CONDITION

The second query of this paper covers the condition of those on the earth during the millennial reign. All sorts of theories are advanced and earnestly advocated, many believing that none but the redeemed will be permitted to occupy the earth during that period. As to the writer's understanding, there seems to be two conditions as to the earth's inhabitants during that period: the people of God, (the resurrected beings and those who are changed) who will likely occupy within "the camp of the saints," and the nations, such as are sufficiently good to escape during the process of cleansing that will benefit the earth for millennial habitation. This period will cover a thousand years and "little season" and will no doubt be the great gospel age of all the earth's existence, the time when, as portrayed by Isaiah, "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them." Joel seems to have had an inspirational insight into the same thought, for he represents God as saying, "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh."

Granting the conclusion to be correct as to the time, the portrayal is clear that whatever the nature of the cataclysm that shall precede the coming of Christ and to fit the earth for his reign, it is yet not to be such as shall destroy the beasts of the field, hence it follows as a justified conclusion that the "nations of the earth," aside from the redeemed, may also be found dwelling upon the earth. But why seek to reason to a conclusion when Zechariah 14:16, 17, makes it so definite? "And it shall come to pass, that everyone that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts," (during Christ's reign! See?) "and to keep the feast of the tabernacles. And it shall be that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain."

It will not do to say that these are the redeemed who dwell outside Jerusalem but are yet sufficiently numerous to be designated "nations" for the succeeding verse says that "the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up." But as if to put the thumbscrews of suppression upon the conclusion that only the redeemed are to inherit the earth during the millennium and padlock it into the desuetude of eternal oblivion, the Revelator hurls forth the thunderbolts of heaven, as follows:

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them.—Revelation 20: 7-9.

Texts might be multiplied, but why burden the record?

In that day when "the Lord shall be king over all the earth," (Zechariah 14:9) there are to be the actively obedient ones aside from the passively obedient already referred to. These will be the resurrected and changed beings, the ones who are to be "caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air," but will doubtless return to the earth to dwell in peace and safety a thousand years. This will be the time when Christ comes suddenly to his temple. (Malachi 3.) "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." (Zechariah 14:4.) In fact these shall be they who are the "dead in Christ" who "shall rise first," together with "we which are alive and remain." It will be these who are to constitute the "camp of the saints" and who are to be conditioned as follows:

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.—Philemon 3: 20, 21.

Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being examples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.—1 Peter 5: 3, 4.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.—1 John 3: 2.

The condition of the righteous is summed up in this: he "shall change our vile bodies" so that "we shall be like him." And what more need we ask or wish for?

As to the more abstruse questions of birth and growth, etc., during the thousand years, this paper prefers to remain silent other than to say that such result is likely to accrue among the nations outside the camp.

J. W. WIGHT.

According to the Jewish Encyclopedia, "Yiddish," the vernacular of the Jews, is in reality a Judæo-German language. "In their present states," it says, "the various Judæo-German dialects contain about seventy per cent of German, twenty per cent of Hebrew, and ten per cent Slav words. The construction is chiefly German, though here and there Polish and Russian influences are patent. . . . The grammar has always remained strictly Germanic, though much simplified in forms."

THE COMING OF CHRIST AND JERUSALEM DELIVERED.—Part 2

BY HENRY A. STEBBINS

PUNISHMENT OF THE NATIONS

Another thing to be considered is that the word of prophecy (Zechariah 12: 2, 3, 9) makes plain exactly what nations will be punished or destroyed in that great time of poured-out calamity. The prophet says it will be those nations "that come against Jerusalem," even those "that burden themselves with it" who shall be cut in pieces," those who "shall be in the siege against Judah and Jerusalem." Such will receive punishment there. Evidently those nations who have assisted and will assist in restoring and helping the Jews will not suffer the destructions prophesied of, even though they must endure correction otherwise for their sins, follies, and transgressions. All nations and peoples must "bear their iniquity" and be punished until they are corrected. But we can rejoice that no army of the United States will be "against Jerusalem."

Evidently very soon after the overthrow of the armies under the "chief prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal" will come the disarmament of the nations of the earth, even a universal giving up of war. This is something which many in the world have written of and talked about, especially since 1914, but which very few have really believed will come to pass. Because of the covetous, grasping, and warlike disposition so common to kings and other great men in the affairs of nations, it has not been believed that it will ever be possible to have peace over all the earth, but rather that troubles will continue to arise which only war can settle. Yet the Lord declared in the far past, by his prophets, that he will "overturn, overturn, overturn" until peace shall come to all nations. We read in the scriptures as follows:

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2: 4.

And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Micah 4: 3.

A TIME OF PEACE

According to the word of the Lord through many inspired men, and by Christ and his apostles, there will follow a universal and glorious time of peace, both to the people of Israel and to the Gentile world, even to the nations that will be renewed and built up after the great wars are over. The results of world-wide peace under the government of the "Prince of Peace" are plainly set forth in the Lord's promises through the prophets. Christ's just and righteous government will bring prosperity and happiness to every nation and to all people. The following declarations make this point very clear:

And he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you.—Joel 2: 23, 24.

And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. . . . The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain [kingdom] saith the Lord.—Isaiah 65: 21, 25.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; . . . and I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.—Amos 9: 13, 14.

But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.—Psalm 37: 11, 34.

Also the nations of the earth which remain shall have part in the universal blessings of the Lord, under the mild and happy government of Christ in his reign of a thousand years. After that he will give up the kingdom to the Father, and the eternal state under God shall come in. We read as follows:

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths.—Isaiah 2: 3.

Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord.—Zechariah 8: 22.

And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people.—Zechariah 2: 11.

And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isaiah 40: 5.

But it is stated that once each year the representatives of every nation must go up to Jerusalem to affirm or manifest their allegiance to the kind and loving ruler who has brought to them peace, prosperity, abundance, and universal joy. I quote as follows on this point.

And the Lord shall be king over all the earth. . . . And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.—Zechariah 14: 9, 16, 17.

GOG AND MAGOG

By this last prophecy it seems that there will be or may be one or more nations or bodies of people who will rebel against the righteous government that is over them, even as now there are always some whom nothing will please. Although Satan will be bound for a thousand years yet all people have their own spirits to govern, their own dispositions to curb or control. Even Satan and a third part with him rebelled in heaven until they had to be cast out. The gospel will be preached "to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" throughout the millennium, and all who will accept and obey it will be the Lord's people. By Isaiah the Lord said:

Also the sons of the stranger that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord . . . even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer.—Isaiah 56: 6, 7.

It is well here to notice that there will be a people at the end of the millennium who, in John's revelations, are called Gog and Magog, those whom Satan will visit and lead against the capital city of the world. In the book it is written:

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them.—Revelation 20: 7-9.

And possibly the most wicked of those millions will be the descendants of the very nations who will soon go against Jerusalem, in the time that is not far off. I have thought that is why the Lord calls them by the same name, because the posterity of the former nations will still hold the old rebellious nature at the end of the millennium. At any rate they are counted as equals of the old, because their disposition and their hatred is the same against the just and righteous government of God and of Christ.

OCCUPATION OF PALESTINE

It has been said that only a limited portion of the millions of Jews in the world can find place to dwell in Palestine, which is about seventy-five miles broad and one hundred and fifty long. But, according to Daniel 12: 1, the Lord will so prompt or inspire that only those fitted for that work will go and build the old places and redeem the land. "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Such shall be restored at first. This seems of the same nature as Christ's exhortation to his chosen disciples that they should "rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Millions of Jews are fully as worldly and evil as are the Gentiles, and the Lord desires the pure in heart to come, those who will come "with songs of everlasting joy." (Isaiah 35: 10.)⁹ Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and other prophets declared great blessings and rewards to those who shall return and rebuild the city and exalt the nation.

But the original promise made to Abraham of a much larger territory may be fulfilled in due time. In Genesis 15: 18, it is written: "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."

It is said that Solomon's kingdom extended to the Euphrates. He also conquered the possessions of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edmonites. But after the division of his kingdom between Rehoboam and Jeroboam the boundaries became much more limited, and finally the portion called Palestine comprised all that remained in Christ's day, consisting of the provinces of Galilee, Samaria, and Judea.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE HEBREWS

A brief outline of the history of the Hebrew people may be interesting. In 1921 B. C., according to accepted chronology, the Lord called Abraham from his father's house of idols to be the head of a great people. In Genesis 12: 1, 2, Genesis 13: 12-15, and 15: 1-21, you read accounts of the promises to Abraham. The covenant was continued in Isaac and Jacob. See Genesis 26: 2-5 and 28: 4. Even in that early time the promise was made that the Lord would gather them back to that land no matter where they should wander or be driven.

In Jacob's day they went to Egypt, but four hundred and thirty years from the first promise to Abraham they came out, in 1491 B. C. In Canaan they had various experiences with the small surrounding tribes and nations, but flourished, though often going wrong and being punished. In the year 1004 B. C. the temple of Solomon was finished and they were glad. But many had rebellious and idolatrous natures, and in 984 B. C. their overthrow and division was foretold, if they continued in evil ways. In 975 the kingdom became two kingdoms, under Rehoboam and Jeroboam. In 971 Shishak, king of Egypt, took Jerusalem and carried away the treasures. Then in 901 came Benhadad of Syria with thirty-two lesser kings and took the city. (See 1 Kings 20: 1.) And because of the idolatry and other sins of the people, or of their kings, the Lord permitted the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Philistines, and the Arabians to harass and distress them. Still later (857 B. C.) "Hazael, king of Syria, oppressed Israel."

In 771 Pul, the king of Assyria, came and assessed a tribute of a thousand talents of silver. He did not destroy anything, and returned home. Also later king Ahaz gave tribute to Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria. In 721 B. C. Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, came, and the result was the carrying away of the ten tribes, so that the kingdom of Israel was at an end. Sennacherib of Assyria invaded Judea in 710. In 608, 599, and 588 B. C., Nebuchadnezzar made his three invasions, and after a two-year siege he captured Jerusalem and took King Zedekiah to Babylon; the temple and city being totally destroyed and the walls razed to the ground. In 536 began the restoration under the rulership of Cyrus, king of Persia. The rebuilding of the temple was finished March 10, 515 B. C. The walls of the city were rebuilt in 445. In 325 came Alexander of Greece. History states that he saw a vision and was so impressed by it that he did the Jews no harm, but instead offered sacrifices in the temple to the God of the Jews.

In 320 B. C. the Egyptian ruler, Ptolemy Soter, took Jerusalem, and about 170 Antiochus, king of Syria, captured the city, pillaged the temple and killed eighty thousand men. The Roman army under Pompey came in 63 B. C. The Parthians invaded the land in 40 B. C., but the Romans retook the city in 37, and Herod rebuilt the temple about the year 18 B. C.

Then seventy years after Christ's birth the city and temple were sacked and burned by Titus, the Roman general. From that time it remained a ruin until Constantine, emperor of Rome, who had embraced what was called the Christian religion, began to rebuild and improve the old site. Still later Julian, called the Apostate, tried to rebuild, but the workmen are said to have been driven away by a strange fire.

In the seventh century, A. D., Jerusalem was plundered by the Persians, under King Chosrose, and thousands of Christians were killed or sold as slaves. The Jews were not permitted to come nearer the city than three miles. In 637 the Mohammedans under the Caliph Omar captured the city and since then it has been in the possession of the Arabs and Turks except that the Crusaders took and held it from 1099 to 1187, and the Egyptians had possession for a period. From 1517 the Turks have had it until now, December, 1917, the British soldiers have made the land free. Thus we see that for nearly three thousand years Jerusalem has been under the heel of despotic and bloody men of many nations and tribes.

SUFFERINGS OF THE JEWS

After the destruction of the temple and the city, and the slaughter of thousands at Jerusalem, in the year 70 A. D., there succeeded a rest. But, beginning in 132 A. D. during the reign of the Emperor Hadrian, the Jews revolted against their Roman rulers. War followed, and it is stated that over a half million Jews were slain and Palestine became almost depopulated. Many of them escaped into Arabia and Africa, and into European countries. By times they had peace in some parts, but the priesthood and laity of the great dominant Roman church hated the Jews for the reason that they could not convert them to Romanism. And because of their having killed Christ they were called the "enemies of God."

History states that in Spain "a massacre of peaceful Jews ceased to be regarded as an event of extraordinary interest." In Portugal many were sold as slaves, and they had to wear badges to show their inferiority and to make them as objects of scorn and abuse to anybody who chose to distress them. Anybody might spit upon them or misuse them without fear of arrest. Some were put on the rack to convert them to Catholicism. In Germany and Switzerland they were charged with poisoning wells, and many perished because of this falsehood. At the end of the thirteenth century 100,000 Jews were killed in Germany.

For three hundred years they were charged at times with shedding the blood of Christian children. In 1476 the rabbi of the oldest Jewish congregation in Germany was accused of offering a Christian child as a sacrifice. This abominable charge has even been made in Austria since the twentieth century came in.

In 1290 Edward I. of England banished the Jews, and in 1306 King Philip did the same in France, and many suffered death. In 1420-21 in Vienna, Austria, Jews were not only imprisoned but also many were burned to death, and in Germany and Switzerland many were thus sacrificed. A Franciscan monk named Capistrano so persecuted them that he was called the "Scourge of the Hebrews."

In Poland, between 1648 and 1658, history says that about 250,000 Jews were killed. In nearly or quite all nations they were forbidden to own lands or homes, and all civil and political privileges were denied them. They were shut out from the trades and as artisans, hence the clothing business and to loan such money as they could earn and keep on interest, were the only lines of business they could engage in. Therefore, so it is to-day, Jews are clothing dealers, peddlers, pawnbrokers, and money lenders. The greatest of all these are the Rothschild and Montefiore bankers.

But a change for the better came; and, after a banishment from England during many centuries, they are taken back, and in 1723 they were permitted to own homes and lands, and in 1837 the first political rights were given to them. In 1862 full political privileges were allowed them. Also the Jew Disraeli was made a peer in the house of Lords and also became the premier of England, the highest honor that can be conferred in that nation, under the king and queen. So, also, in some other countries, civil and political rights are given the Jews, and the present war is likely to lift the ban of persecution and cruelty very much more, and not far off "the reproach of his people" will the Lord remove from every part of the earth, according to his promise through the prophets.

KINGS OF THE NORTH AND SOUTH

Inquiry has been made, not only by some Saints, but also by some in other churches who study the Bible prophecies, as to who have been or will be the two men of power called "the king of the north" and "the king of the south" mentioned so much in Daniel 11. History appears to make plain that after the days of King Darius the most of this chapter was fulfilled, at least down to and including verse 35. But from verse 36, and especially verse 40 to the end, it seems that the fulfillment of this part is yet to be, in connection with Daniel 12:1. The terms "king of the north" and "king of the south" are applied to men in prophecy including the kings of former and those of latter times.

Yet it is not clear to me who in latter days will deserve the title, "king of the south," that is, who will withstand the king from the north, but he will appear in time. Probably the "king of the north" is the same one denominated in Ezekiel 38 and 39 as the "chief prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal." He is to be overthrown at the coming of the Lord at the time already described in this letter.

I will close by saying that I believe from Ezekiel's prophecy, chapter 38, that the nations of eastern Europe will soon be separated from the nations of western Europe. The present war may close by the total overthrow of Germany and her allies, or there may be a separation by withdrawal and the eastern people go by themselves and be gradually preparing for the raid upon Jerusalem. But the Jews must have time to gather home, enough of them to have considerable wealth, and with time and implements to rebuild to some degree, and also to begin cultivating the soil, planting vineyards and otherwise making improvements. These benefits will all be as invitations to the nations "of the north quarters" to come and help themselves in order to make up for their great losses in the war waged since 1914. How or when the present war will end no man can tell, unless he has the Spirit of the Lord to make him wise. But I believe there will come a separation or withdrawal in some manner, by which eastern Europe will go by itself and accomplish the things prophesied in olden times by Ezekiel and other spokesmen of the Lord.

JEWISH PRESENT CONDITIONS

After reviewing this article on February 8, I found some interesting items about the Jews in the January number (1918) of a religious newspaper and I quote from it as follows:

The first Jewish Agricultural Colony in the land of Judea was planned or founded in 1878. Up to that time the main effort of the Jews had been toward founding homes in Palestine for aged and infirm Jews, fostered by philanthropists after the type of Sir Moses Montefiore.

At the time of the founding of the first Jewish Colony, the entire Jewish population in Palestine was thirty-four thousand out of a half million, comprising the whole population of Palestine. In 1903 the Jewish population had grown to seventy thousand. In 1911, the last date obtainable, there were one hundred thousand Jews out of a total population of seven hundred thousand, ten thousand of whom were colonists. From 1898 to 1911, the number of Jewish colonies had increased from twenty-five to forty-one. These colonies are scattered over Palestine about as follows: In Judea, fifteen, Samaria, eight, Galilee, sixteen, and across the Jordan, one. The land held by these colonies comprises about one hundred thousand acres.

Hebrew is being resuscitated in Palestine as a living language. Zionists now, especially in Palestine, are using it as an everyday language. They are also special societies in various parts of the world for promoting the study of the Hebrew language and Hebrew culture.

The time has come, through the fortunes of war, when Judah is coming back to his former inheritance and when he will soon occupy his own. And the land of Judea and all of Palestine will again blossom as the rose and bloom as the lily of the valley. In the last twenty-five years the Jews have done more to develop Palestine than the Turk has done in five hundred years.

There may not be a large exodus of Jews from America but the Jews in southeastern Europe are ripe for a general exodus to the land of their forefathers. There are about thirteen million Jews in the world. Over one half of them now live in southeastern Europe, and at present they are living in a very unsatisfactory condition. The war has already broken up the homes of two million Jews in those regions, and the end of the great war will bring a Jewish upheaval and a great exodus to Palestine.

That writer states that Baron Edmund Rothschild has expended a large sum of money to clear the way for a general movement of the Jews into Palestine, when the time comes for its success. He says that twelve hundred delegates at the Baltimore Convention of Jews last June, 1917, had the "avowed purpose and object" of the restoration and redemption of Palestine. After General Allenby drove the Turks from Jerusalem, General Murray said: "The thing to be done with Palestine is to make it a new Jewish State, under the protection of the entente allies."

It is further stated that the Baltimore Convention of Jews made plans for cooperation with the allied nations of Europe in the endeavor to settle "the Jews in Jewry and the general Hebrew family in all of Palestine."

My opinion is that in some coming time the German armies will be driven beyond the river Rhine.

And whenever this takes place she will lose the great iron mines of Lorraine and of northern France. Without these she cannot manufacture steel implements of death to prosecute any great war, such as she has been engaged in the past nearly four years. She and her allies may continue the contest in a limited way for some years longer, until they see the gathering Jews bringing wealth to Palestine which they think they can take easily. Then they will begin the great raid upon Jerusalem, as described by Ezekiel and Zechariah.

In common with other Saints I have looked forward to the fulfillment of those prophecies; and now, since the Turks are driven from Jerusalem, it is certain that the great closing war and the final coming of the Lord cannot be far off, not many years in the future. We do not know when, but we can be certain that the time is drawing near. Both the Father in heaven and his Son are upon the side of liberty and of just government among all people, and according to their promise, they will soon bring in the freedom of all nations from despotism. They are overwhelmingly opposed to the German autocracy, and its defeat is foreordained. But the nations that will stand for the freedom of the world from the dominion of czars, emperors, and kings, must first show their virtue and their hatred of corrupt and evil practices both at home and abroad. Hence the struggle may be long and severe until victory is won. And it can only come by God's help. All nations must suffer, even America, to quite a degree, until all are corrected and purified for the millennial day, until they forsake not only war, but every form of oppression and wrong. Also the process will go on until they purge out every kind of wickedness and vice, not the work of a day but of years, in God's time.

(Concluded.)

TAKE CARE OF YOUR DAUGHTER

We hear much about the moral menace to a community caused by the neighborhood of a large camp. It is unhappily true. The purveyors of organized vice are on the alert for opportunities. But that danger is not the greatest. There is a subtler and therefore a greater danger that requires more imagination to meet and more delicacy to combat, because it is dealing with an evil which has its roots in a virtue.

A large camp was established near a New England city. Of course it became the central point of interest for all the neighborhood, and on visiting days the young girls of high school age flocked there with especial zest—such girls as one knows well, with the warm, selfish, ignorant, curious heart of youth beating high under the all-but-absent blouse and the eager, joyous young feet tottering in their gay silly shoes upon the eternal quest. One of the girls on a summer evening, saw a handsome officer standing alone, and summoned all her daring.

"Aren't you awfully lonesome?" she asked.

"Thank you, we would be if we had time, no doubt," he answered, pleasantly, "but we are usually too busy to think much about our feeling."

"Don't you want to walk with me?"

"Are you going home?" She nodded. "Then I will take you there."

They walked together to her home, she in great triumph at having secured so impressive an escort. When they reached the house, the officer expressed a wish to meet her father and mother. What he had to say to them was very brief and was a decided surprise to the girl.

"For God's sake, take care of your daughter. I am trying to keep my boys straight—but girls like this make it difficult."

A cruel saying? Yes, cruel as a surgeon's knife. True? Yes, true as the story itself—which end here; I do not know the sequel. The condition exists, and we must face it. There are many boys in the army well-schooled against open vice, but defenseless against the most insidious of temptations—the temptation that does not advertise itself as one.

Do you believe that child was for a moment guilty in thought when she spoke to the officer, though she used the street girl's formula? Try to get her side of the little drama that might so easily have been a tragedy—that so often has been. The soldier's calling has always been invested with a glamor of romance in feminine eyes; and the present world condition, while exposing the horror and evil of war as never before has paradoxically rather augmented than lessened the admiration for the individual soldier. The mantle of the Crusader is upon him—each of these boys in khaki is a young Saint George, arrayed against the dragon in a supreme war against war. With our minds resolutely fixed upon righteous and enduring peace, to-day in America the soldier is a hero more than ever before. What is more natural as a result than a heightened interest and a generous desire to make the last days of our boys on this soil as happy as possible?

We cannot expect our young people to analyze their feelings and motives. It is for us to recognize what gives the great elemental realities of life to-day a stronger grip than ever.—Amelia Josephine Burr, of the Vigilantes, from the Manhattan, (Kansas) Mercury.

THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM

We have published many items concerning the war in Palestine and the progress made by Great Britain towards the capture of that land. We have referred also several times to articles in The American Hebrew in hope that the Jews would be permitted to establish there a state of their own. Jerusalem has not yet been captured, but Great Britain has already officially sanctioned the idea of the Jewish State to be established in that land after the war.

It is remarkable and of interest, the progress that is already made in behalf of the Jews. Her bitterest enemy has apparently recognized the Jews as citizens and has repealed all of the Anti-Semitic law. Jews are fighting upon every battle field of Europe. Perhaps Great Britain, the home of Disraeli, is the most favorable of European nations towards this people.

There follows a clipping from The Kansas City Star of August 19 on the same theme. We hope that the first part may not prove true, the slaughter by the Turks, but we do know that the people left there have had a very hard time during the past years of the war. They have faced time and again practical starvation.

We note this editorial states that it is not known when Jerusalem was first founded. We are aware of a tradition that Melchisedec as prince of Salem had his headquarters there.

However this name of Jerusalem was first mentioned in the Bible in the Book of Joshua, as is intimated in the following editorial. The Amorite king about 400 B. C., wrote to Egypt concerning the city and called it Uru-Salim, the city of peace. The record since Davis is much better known. We trust the war will mean greater freedom and liberty for all people. It will be much gain if it means freedom for the Jews and a state of their own once more. The editorial follows:

THE GATHERING OF ISRAEL

The Turks, if driven out of Palestine, will first sack Jerusalem, massacre the Christians, and level the city in ruins; the dispatches announce. British soldiers are hammering at the gates of Jerusalem. It is only a question of time when it will fall. Palestine is to be given to the Jews. Nathan Straus, the grand old man of American Jewry, has offered to finance the journey of all Jews who will settle with him in Palestine after peace is declared. Solomon's Temple, to be restored in all its original grandeur, is a part of the program.

All of this has come to us recently in the daily news from the Far East. It is another wonderful result of this greatest of all wars. It makes the Zionist movement of several years back appear quite possible.

If the British get Jerusalem it will add one more to the long list of different races that have in turn held possession of the Holy City in the four thousand years it has existed. Nearly all the great nations have battered at its gates, and nearly all the great religions have in turn had ascendancy there.

No one knows who first built Jerusalem, or who first lived there, but it is known that the Egyptians occupied it long before Joshua defeated its king, Adonizedec. The Jebusites had it then and kept it until David, the shepherd king, captured it and made it the capital of his kingdom, and built David's wall about it nearly a thousand years before Christ was crucified there, and the stones of that wall, bearing the original marks of King David's masons, were found a few years ago by the archæologists, Bliss and Dickinson, who excavated and burrowed all around and unearthed the foundation walls of King Solomon's Temple, too. Sennacherib, the Assyrian, besieged Jerusalem and failed. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, captured and pillaged it and destroyed the temple; Alexander the Great captured it; Ptolemy, King of Egypt, captured it; Antiochus Epiphanes, the Greek, took his turn at laying it waste, and then Judas Maccabaeus took it from the Greeks; later on Herod the Great and the Romans took it, and back and forth and in and out its gates in succeeding years surged the tides of conquerors and conquered, until in 326 Constantine, the Roman emperor converted to Christianity, ordered that churches be built on the spots where Christ was crucified and buried. Three hundred years later came the Persian hordes who massacred, devastated, and burned. In 637 A. D. Mohammedan Calip, Omar, besieged it for four months, captured it, and that sect held it for nearly five hundred years. Then the waves of the Christian Crusaders from Europe beat against its walls; then the Turks took it again and have held it almost uninterruptedly until now, and a great mosque stands on the very spot of the Holy of Holies of Solomon's Temple.

And so, nearly all the great conquering nations left in the stress and storm of battle records of their national life, their culture, their power, their art, and their infamy in the forty feet of ashes, bones, dust, and broken masonry that form the ruins of Jerusalem. No city on earth has been so often pillaged, so often demolished, yet the smoke would hardly cease to ascend before the work of rebuilding would begin.

Christ predicted the fall of Jerusalem. When some spake to him of the temple, how it was adorned with the goodly stones and gifts, he said: "As for these things which ye behold, the days shall come in which there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

That prophecy was fulfilled. The city may be destroyed again, but again it will be rebuilt, as it always has been, for there is another Biblical prophecy concerning Jerusalem and Palestine which has yet to be fulfilled.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Many see in the tramp, tramp of marching British soldiers toward Jerusalem the steps preliminary to a fulfillment of that prophecy.—Kansas City Star, August 19, 1917.

"And above all, don't use an indelible pencil in writing these reports," warned Frederick M. Smith, at our meeting last year when the weekly report was being established. To which sentiment the editors breathed a fervent amen. As some one suggested there, to have to wade through a long letter, written on a rainy day with one of those instruments of torture, is but hastening us to our padded cells. Pray use a pen or a good pencil if you haven't a typewriter.

NO NEED FOR ATTORNEYS TO COLLECT SOLDIER INSURANCE

The secretary of the treasury has announced that neither the soldiers, sailors, nor their dependents or any beneficiaries under the soldier and sailor insurance law need employ attorneys or claim agents to collect the insurance; that the employment of such intermediaries is unnecessary and inadvisable and a needless expense.

The procedure for the presentation and collection of insurance claims is very simple and the proper blanks can be secured from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in Washington. The name of the person in the service who was killed or injured and the relationship which he bore to the person making the claim should be given. If further information or assistance is required by the claimant, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance will gladly furnish it.

Circulars have been sent out by claim agents and attorneys offering to assist persons entitled to the benefits of this insurance in collecting their claims. The "pension sharks," who once thrived and fattened under our pension laws, are still a rank memory in this country.

It was hoped that when they were legislated out of existence we would never see their like again. But their successors seem to survive, and the action of Secretary McAdoo in giving prompt warning against these would-be profiteers under the insurance law will be commended by all.

THE ARMY IN FRANCE

[Much has been written concerning conditions in the American Army, and some rather caustic statements have even appeared in our pages. We think, therefore, it is only fair that the following press dispatch from the Saint Louis Globe-Democrat of February 18, 1918, should be given notice. The record of less than one third of one per cent sickness and rare intoxication is exceptionally good compared to similar reports of other armies.—EDITORS.]

The moral condition of the American troops in France and the splendid behavior of the men in Paris are causing favorable comment on all sides.

The message of the American women who are engaged in war relief work in France to the mothers at home is that their boys are fine and intelligent men, and that the charges of intoxication against them made by Doctor Newton of London, or any such rumors, are absolutely unwarranted.

Not only are Americans residing in Paris pleased at the conduct of their soldiers, but the French people are often heard to remark upon "America's clean Army," as each day they are becoming better acquainted with the men.

The general opinion is that the discipline is as near perfect as could be, and the men are tremendously in earnest. Parisians say that they always had heard Americans were great drinkers, so they are surprised to find the cases of intoxication so rare that they virtually do not exist.

Intoxication is one thing that General Pershing will not tolerate, which probably accounts for the unusual record made so far in the matter of social diseases, which is another feature being commented upon in Paris, and which will please the mothers of America.

According to the recent official figures given out at headquarters, the percentage of social disease is less than one third of one per cent, showing that the American soldiers are serious men, and that they have eclipsed their own record—that is, the expeditionary forces in France are more free from disease than the Army ever has been in America.

RECORD IS REMARKABLE

As compared to other armies fighting in France, and also the armies in previous wars, this record is remarkable. The British records, for example, show that twenty-five per cent of the British Army were diseased in the same length of time in the first days of the war.

"The reason for this low percentage in the American Army," as one of the officers put it, "is mainly because these men are fine and clean. They are here to serve their country and they think of nothing else. I do not mean that they are all saints, but the records show that the men are leading decent lives. According to actual statistics, never in history has there been such a healthy army."

A prominent French officer says that he has watched the Americans going through Paris to the training camps for the last five months, and had not seen a single case of intoxication.

NO MEN IN PARIS ON A LARK

"I evidently had an exaggerated opinion of the American soldiers' fondness for drink," said this officer, "which I now realize was acquired from the boys who came to France for ambulance work before America came into the war. I have noted that since these ambulance services have been militarized under the control of the American Army I no longer see any of the men in Paris on a lark."

Priests have gained through the confessions of the soldiers, a clear understanding of conditions. They say they are not surprised at the low percentage of disease as they already had discovered that there was scarcely no disease to speak of. They even go so far as to say that preventative treatment is unnecessary. They account for such conditions by saying that they find the men extremely intelligent and serious.

Scores of other interviews could be quoted testifyng to the splendid moral condition of the soldiers, so American mothers need have no fears, despite gay "Paree" and her temptations.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Importance of the Study of Sociology

Having been asked the question, "Why study sociology and social pathology?" we will try, very briefly, to give some of the reasons.

In the first place this question comes from one who has never studied the social sciences. From the text we are using in our work, we quote first Doctor Ellwood's definition of sociology: "Sociology is the science which deals with human association, its origin, development, form and functions. This means that the main problems of sociology are those of the organization of society on the one hand, and the evolution of society on the other."

The moment the word evolution is used, many immediately attack the wrong idea that evolution means Darwin's theory of descent, and that that is the only meaning it has, that we are entirely out of harmony with the Scriptures, and that our study may prove disastrous. Doctor Ellwood clearly defines evolution to mean "not necessarily change for the better, but orderly change of any sort." Now that we catch this meaning of evolution it will not be difficult to see its proper use in any line of study.

Let us note the relations of sociology to the other sciences. Even though sociology is quite dependent upon biology, the science of life, and upon psychology, the science which explains the mental interactions between individuals, it has its own distinctive problems and is hence a distinct science. Economics, which is "that special science which deals with the wealth getting and wealth using activities of man," can be reduced to a problem in social psychology, which in turn is simply nothing more than the psychological aspect of sociology. Political science and sociology are quite dependent upon each other for a proper understanding of its own problems. Ethics, which "is the science which deals with the right or wrong of human conduct," should criticize and develop the norms and standards furnished by the social sciences. Education, one of the applied sciences, has as its great task the regeneration of the individual, so that he may become a more efficient member of society—in other words, he should have a socialized education.

Home economics, another of the applied sciences, must rest upon sociology when it deals with the "home" in the real meaning of that term. Philanthropy, the great science which "is especially concerned with the prevention, as well as the curative treatment, of dependency, defectiveness and delinquency," is but an applied department of sociology.

Our relief and service workers, whose object, according to the title of this department, has as one phase, the uplift of the depressed classes in society, seeking to place them on an "above poverty" line, aiding them to secure employment and educational advantages, are in fact only attempting to apply this science of sociology. How can these workers intelligently apply that which they have not? Just as the medical force is now being trained along lines of "prevention of disease" of the physical body, so our workers whose duty it is to handle the diseased social conditions should be trained along this, their special line.

Social pathology is a study of social defeats. We must first study the nature of social diseases in order to comprehend the problems with which we have to deal. Then we should study suggested remedies that have been found valuable in the experiences of others, and have acted as preventives, and thus help to reduce the evils that plague mankind. Knowledge and control of social forces, together with clear aims on the part of organized social groups, are the necessary equipment for the building of a better world. We are now living in a time when at least the leaders of society are studying its problems as never before. The great need of a sociological education, which would mean that all individuals shall be taught to be good fathers and mothers, good neighbors and members of communities, even more than that they be taught the accomplishments and embellishments of life, should be sensed by every member of the church.

Sociology is a very broad subject and deals with the foundation principles of all departments of life-association. The man or woman, no matter what his line of work, who has a knowledge of social conditions, who understands the laws and principles governing social organization, will be much better fitted to do his work, and will find in it a significance and meaning he had never before known.

To the Women of the Auxiliary

It is none too soon to begin consideration of our reunion work for the coming summer. Last year I was late in getting suggestive material to you for your sessions, and this minimized the good results from our efforts.

I was new on the executive board and the heads of departments on whom I depended for outlines of work were also new, consequently this delay. The only suggestion so far received in response to my request is, "Get material to us sooner." Very well, that is what I am planning for now. Will you, who are to have a two-day meeting or a reunion in your district, write me at once and express your thought as to how the general executive can be of help to you in presenting the Woman's Auxiliary work at that time.

You need not be a district president, an organizer, or even a prominent worker to do this. I will indeed be as glad to hear from our humblest sisters regarding their personal needs or their opinion of what should be done, as from our workers in the field. The more carefully you study the nature of woman's work (Proverbs 31:10-31), the larger, the broader the field appears. It embraces the activities of each and all of our women, young and old, and justifies the several departments outlined in our work.

In which department is your interest centered? Have you been especially helped by any article or discussion you can refer us to, that we may pass it on and others be benefited thereby?

Do not lay this paper aside and forget, but write me right now, that I may be able to place in the hands of your district workers just the material that will benefit you most.

Very sincerely, your coworker,
MRS. WILLIAM MADISON, Second Vice President.
(In charge of reunion work.)

The Woman's Building at Independence

The committee lately appointed by President F. M. Smith and concurred in by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire and the superintendent of the Relief and Service department of Independence, together with her assistants, plan to make the Woman's Building headquarters for a labor exchange bureau, where those seeking employment may be assisted in finding it, as well as to help those who wish to employ. There will be kept on file an up-to-date list of names and addresses of Saints, so visiting Saints or resident members may be able to locate definitely any member of the stake. So far as its limited space will permit, the building is to be a home for girls, young women, and older women who are without home surroundings. Other features of especial interest to women visiting Independence are the access to writing desk and material, a rest room and tea room.

The Captain's Gloves

A young soldier stood between two of his comrades in the khaki ranks and gazed at a gray-haired woman who stood about twenty feet away.

"That's my mother," he said to no one in particular. "Gee, I wish I could rush over and kiss her."

"Private Ellis," called the captain. The young man stepped from the ranks and saluted.

"See if I left my gloves on the train."

The young soldier hurried to the coach, and on his way back slipped over to where the old lady stood and implanted a loud kiss full on her mouth. Then he went to the captain, and, saluting, said: "They are not there, sir."

"Take your place," ordered the captain, and, turning his back on his company, drew his gloves from his pocket and pulled them on while he smilingly watched an old lady go away happy.—Exchange.

Our Oakland Sisters

Sister A. J. Young, of Oakland, California, writes of the new impetus the auxiliary work has taken in that place, since the members have entered so heartily into the work of the American Red Cross. Of their eighteen members they average an attendance of ten every week, where they combine pleasant social times with good work well done. This work is under the capable supervision of Sister Niel, while Sister Hoogs still pushes the work of the Oriole girls, with the assistance of Sister Ethel Christensen. The new president of auxiliary for the year is Sister Day, with Sister Julia Christensen to assist her, as well as to provide educational themes for their mutual benefit. Good attendance, earnest workers, a united effort to come higher spiritually, and a friendly invitation to all sisters to join with them, socially if they cannot sew or knit, have combined to put their auxiliary work upon a new and interesting plane. They meet at Sister Presley's, 1022 Chestnut Street.

CHURCH OFFICES

The new vault being built on the north end of the old Kelley home, where Presidency, Bishopric, and some other general church offices, including the Church Recorder, are to be located, is looming up. Continued cold weather has prevented its completion, but it will not take long to finish when better weather comes. It will make a most excellent location, on the next block east of the church, on the car line, and with pleasant surroundings.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Theater Services in Progress in Toronto

We are in the midst of our season's work and our theater services are proving very successful. The interest was never better, and Bishop Evans is up to his usual good form. We are having splendid audiences.

On Sunday, February 13, Brother Evans's subject was "Angels at the Battle of Mons." The crowd was so great that we had to remove the scenery, and hundreds stood on the stage behind the choir, while many turned away because they could not get seats. About twenty-five hundred heard the lecture.

Thousands of sermons are being distributed, and a good work is being done all over the city. Baptisms are taking place at nearly all the church services.

On February 11 and 12, the Latter Day Saints' Dramatic Club presented a play entitled, "The prodigal son." Brother Evans took the part of the prodigal son. Over thirty took part in the play. They drew a large crowd. The basement of the church was packed the first night and many turned away unable to get standing room. There was a good crowd the second night also. So many have asked to see it again, that it will be played on Tuesday, February 26, and we expect another large crowd.

Brother Evans has just received his new book entitled, Songs and Poems of Bishop R. C. Evans. This is a very interesting work, as it contains songs and poems given him by the Spirit, and many poems and letters written by him to his wife, when out in the field as a missionary. He also gives some private correspondence between himself and others, especially our late President Joseph Smith. None of the articles in it were written for publication, and so are from the heart and not "all dressed up for the occasion." It is a splendid book, well bound, and sells at two dollars. It is a magnificent collection of songs, poems, addresses, and private letters, and is one of his best books.

The Saints here sent boxes to over fifty of our boys in France. Nearly all have acknowledged receipt of same, and tell of the work they are doing with sermons in the trenches. Our boys are faring very well in the war, only three or four having been killed and several wounded. Six of our members have been called to the colors under the first class of the new military service act. Your brother,
 A. F. McLEAN.

Do Good Appearance and Cleanliness Pay?

Please allow a "spinster schoolmarm" to add her testimony to the others which grace the pages of the HERALD. I have always hesitated about writing, thinking the space I would occupy could be more worthily employed, but I have just been reading E. D. Moore's sermon, "Open his eyes, that he may see," and I don't want to be among those who are "afraid." I have begun another task which I "fear" I am presumptuous in attempting, but I also know that I have God's sanction in its performance. Pray that I may have a humble self-confidence, brothers and sisters.

My people live in northern Iowa. My mother has accepted the gospel within the last year and been baptized. Pray that the other dear ones may be brought into the fold, please. Mother reads the church papers and then sends them on to me, and then I send them on to a cousin in New Mexico.

A dear brother and I have had some friendly discussions on the question of education, dress, and general way of living. I am going to open the question and I would like to see it discussed on these pages. Since coming into the church, I have had an unquenchable thirst for knowledge and study along all lines; and as I study, I find my mind grasping facts as it never did before. I have a desire to get all the education I can so that I can be of more service to the Master. As a teacher, I feel that I must dress neatly and becomingly, purely as a business qualification.

Is there necessarily any greater degree of spirituality where one's shoes are run down at the heel, hair carelessly arranged, waist and skirt failing to make proper connections, etc?

I have had to board where the food was badly prepared. I am not finical about my eating. "Give me a bowl of samp (mush) and milk," but I want it clean. I believe the Lord desires order in everything.

Can a reasonable concern in these temporal affairs lessen in the least degree, the highest development of spirituality? I wish to be set right on the matter. I want to serve my Master and live as near right as one can in this life of imperfection.

A sister in the gospel,

MYRTLE GRAPES.

CAMP FUNSTON, KANSAS, February 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: At the present time, I am doing cantonment guard duty, but I am a cook by trade. That is what I have done since I came out here October 5; however, the men are all moved from my company to other companies in the camp, so my job as a cook ran out. I will be back on the job again as soon as the new draft gets here.

Dear Saints, we are in the time and place when it pays to be up and doing; where we have to fight manfully onward and upward, and never give up.

This great Nation stands in need of our prayers. The young men who are going out with their guns to defend this, the promised land, also need your prayers and support.

Saints, I do not believe that very many of our boys want tobacco, but they would welcome a little box of candy or a cheering letter from some one in the church.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

PRIVATE JAMES H. MADDEN,
Company 1, 164 Depot Brigade.

SHERRILL, NEW YORK, February 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: The last time I wrote you I was at Greenwood, New York, enjoying the hill country and the quietude. It is really wonderful how men can adapt themselves to circumstances and conditions of the country in which they live. At Greenwood some of the farms run up the sides of the mountains and one would think it almost impossible to cultivate the fields, until you see it done.

From Greenwood I went to Wellsville, where we have a few members. I was made at home by Brother and Sister Potter and began to hold services in their house, as no public place was to be had. On October 22, I baptized two children of Brother Potter's family, and felt that good was being done in other ways as well.

Before leaving Wellsville, at the request of the Saints there, I organized a Sunday school with Sister Nettie Potter as superintendent.

From Wellsville I went to Rochester and was made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Archie Price. I held a few services while in Rochester and was very glad to meet the people there. They desired very earnestly to have a Sunday school at Rochester, and one was organized with Brother Archie Price as superintendent. Brother Price is a young man of excellent capabilities, and I trust the Sunday school may be the forerunner of a good work in the city of Rochester.

Part of my mission being in eastern Connecticut, and as I had not been there except for a week or two in June, I felt under obligation as well as inclination, to visit that part of the field.

I had to go by my own door to get to my field in Connecticut, so of course, dropped off to say "hello." I arrived just in time to go to the Sunday school convention held in Somerville, Massachusetts, November 10 and 11.

The convention was up to the usual standard. Brother Travers, the president of the Boston Branch, informed the people that the writer was an angel in disguise, or must be, as I had appeared when he did not know what to do for a preacher for the evening service, Brother O. R. Miller having gone to Philadelphia to attend the ministerial convention.

November 18 I preached at a Union Chapel at Antioch, Attleboro which I did two or three times.

November 18, I preached at a Union Chapel at Antioch, (near Providence) where Brother Fred Roberts has been preaching and conducting a Sunday school for some time.

The people seem to be interested, but none have obeyed as yet. We are quite sure, however, that good has been done by Brother Robert's faithful efforts.

A night at Brother Thomas Whipple's in New London, and we are off the next morning to visit Sister Stella Whipple, who lives between Norwich, Connecticut, and Westerly, Rhode Island.

Although we were unexpected we received a smiling welcome. Who ever went to Sister Stella's and did not? An old, old farm house with its "fireplace wide and high, flung up its cinders toward the sky." No artificial fireplace this, but the real thing.

We began holding services in this house and continued with some interest until December 4, then went to New London and held a service at Brother Frank Crandall's. Sunday night closed services at North Storrington and went next day to see about a Baptist Church called the "Peckman" meeting house or church.

The trustee was willing if the preacher was, and the Reverend Mr. Robbins was if the trustee was, and so we began holding services December 11, and continued with varying success until December 24. The pastor of the church was very kind and asked me to occupy on Sunday morning, this being his regular service. I understand he has resigned his pastorate since I was there. I trust he may be blessed wherever he may go.

Home for Christmas! One vacant chair—my first born—all the rest were there, and one additional.

The district president asked me to occupy the pulpit at Attleboro which I did two or three times.

Back again in the land of wooden nutmegs, in company with Brother T. Whipple, I visited some of the scattered Saints, among them, Brother and Sister Palmer Whipple of Mystic, and Sister Bertha Bushnell of Norwich, whom I have not seen since I baptized her some twenty-five years ago.

Well, this letter is getting longer than it ought to be, so here we are in New York State again, holding services in the quiet but beautiful little city of Sherrill.

Storms and cold weather are hindering the work. I suppose it is the same everywhere. Brother Frank Mesle is in charge of the work here, and I ought to mention the fact that he is well and strong, and has no broken bones, and wears the same size hat that he wore before taking the automobile trip with the writer and three other brethren last fall, when all went to Greenwood. I understand the brethren got back just in time to go to work Monday morning. They left Greenwood Sunday noon. The writer could not come back with them—sorry?

Yours as ever,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

KENMORE, OHIO, February 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: There are so many fine encouraging letters from others every week, that, as Brother E. D. Moore said in his sermon this week I was afraid that what I had to say would seem insignificant. And as he also said, I feel that I have been sponging too much. So if my letter encourages one poor discouraged soul, I feel that its mission will have been fulfilled.

I love this great latter-day work and try to live as the often a few words might encourage some.

The HERALD is a great source of comfort and encouragement to me. I don't see how I could successfully overcome the trials of this life without it.

I love this great latter-day work and try to live as the Lord would have me, but I fail in this quite often.

I was administered to by one of the elders of the church, following a severe illness, and steadily regained my health.

My husband was not a member of the church at the time of our marriage, but I had often prayed that he would become one, something I had hardly dared to hope for on account of the opposition of his family. But the Lord heard my prayers, and about one year after his baptism, he was called to work in the vineyard of the Lord.

I enjoyed reading Brother J. O. Dutton's letter, especially where he shows the young people it is against the conference resolutions of the church to dance, also the evils of attending moving picture shows. If the missionaries know that the church has passed such resolutions, why do some of them encourage the Saints to go? A missionary said to me one time, that he thought we could learn a great deal of good from the moving picture shows and that we ought to go to see a good many of them because they taught us some good lessons. He also admitted that he attended them.

Now it may be that he possesses enough good judgment to know by the title of the play, whether he will gain any good by attending it, but have the young people enough judgment to know? Aren't the missionaries aware that a young person that is inclined to go to those places will grasp at their words eagerly and justify themselves in going because "Brother So-and-So says we ought to go"? I know of such cases myself.

If the church resolves that theater-going, dancing, and all such amusements are detrimental to spirituality, then let us, as children of God abstain from such practices.

There are members of the church, young and old, who claim they cannot pay tithing, still they always have a dime for the picture show and other such things. I suggest that the conference resolutions be more widely preached.

I also enjoyed very much President F. M. Smith's address to the priesthood. I was glad that he warned the missionaries about riding their hobbies, for I believe much harm is done by this practice. It is all very well for them to believe certain things, but not to preach them when they have nothing to support them.

My love and sympathy have always been for the missionary. I realize that they make many sacrifices. They have many trials and discouragements to meet that we know nothing about. My prayers are that they may be endued with wisdom and knowledge from on high that they may never bring reproach upon this great work.

I long to see the day when we as Saints may be willing to keep the whole law of Christ. How many of us are willing to do this to-day? Take the Word of Wisdom for instance. How many are ready to give up their nice hot cup of coffee and their meat in summer? I think I hear some saying, "Oh, the Word of Wisdom doesn't say anything about abstaining from coffee." True, it does not, but it does say that we should make mild drinks from barley and other grains, barley having the preference. If coffee was more healthful and nourishing, don't you think the Lord would have said so? Some say, "Oh, but I get such a headache if I do without my coffee." Of course you do, your system has become so accustomed to the caffeine in coffee that you suffer when you cannot get it. You suffer mentally more than physically, though.

Then, as a last resort, they say the Word of Wisdom was not given by command. Are we not persistent in our teachings to the world to "live by every word that proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God?" Was the Word of Wisdom given to us by the Lord? If so, should it not be obeyed? We read in Doctrine and Covenants 95: 4, that the Lord was very much displeased with many of the Saints because they failed to observe the words of wisdom which he had given unto them. In the Church History we read that he even withheld his Spirit from them for neglecting it. Can we still say it is of no importance?

I realize that it is hard to give up the things we like to do and it requires much will power and determination to succeed. These things can be overcome and must be, if we ever expect to dwell with Christ in righteousness.

Are we keeping the law of Christ when we fail to pay tithing? This seems to be a rock of offense to many. I have seen Saints become very angry after hearing a sermon on this subject. They say the priesthood ought to preach the gospel and let the members decide about paying their tithing. I'll venture to say, if these Saints were in the position of the missionary whose family was depending upon the church for support, they would think that the paying of tithing was very much a part of the gospel. Oh, Saints, if we would love our sisters and brothers as we do ourselves, and have their welfare at heart, what a happy band we would be.

Your sister in the gospel,

MAGGIE MAIER.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, February 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am glad when I get the HERALD to read the letter department; to hear from so many Saints out in the world and to learn more about the gospel.

We do not have an elder here, but we have a priest, Brother Sims. We observe sacrament and have good spiritual meetings. We have elders here every summer and winter. Are looking for Elder Jordan to come any day to preach the gospel to us.

There are some outsiders here who are interested in the gospel. The sisters of the auxiliary are doing good work. We have Sunday school every Sunday at 2 p. m. at the home of Brother Sims, and Religio at the different homes every Wednesday night at 7.30. There are five different homes where we hold these meetings.

We are trying in our weak way to do all we can to spread the gospel over the land. We ask the prayers of the Saints that this might be a fruitful field.

ALPHA O. NORRIS.

MOUNT CARMEL, ILLINOIS, February 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: We have had some very cold weather here this winter and it has been hard to get coal.

We have a town of about nine thousand population. Brother L. C. Moore has moved here, but is over in Indiana now, as that is his district. We hope he will get this district this year as we believe much good can be done here.

Brother F. L. Sawley has preached here three weeks at the home of Brother Luther Griess. We had good meetings. There are some who seem to be very much interested and we think they will come into the church before long. Brother Sawley is holding meetings now, about eight miles north-west from here, at Friend Grove Schoolhouse.

I have a grocery store here and I get to talk the gospel every day. It does me so much good to try to get the truth before other people. I am thankful to my heavenly Father for the blessings he has poured out upon me. I have a great desire to do all I can for the work here.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may live faithful, and become qualified for every duty that lies before me.

Your brother in the gospel,

J. E. KING.

HEDGESVILLE, MONTANA, February 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: I came to this town yesterday with the expectation of meeting Brother Spragg and holding some meetings, but soon after getting off the train, I found that he had awakened to the fact that the gathering was on and had taken his departure for Zion. As there are no trains for me to get out on, there is nothing for me to do but to go to the hotel, which, during these war times, is pretty hard on a Latter Day Saint minister's pocketbook. I have the promise that they will take me out of town to-day at 2 p. m.

From here I go to Judith Gap. There I change to the Milwaukee. I have only an eight-hour wait. I am in the Judith Basin, the wheat belt of Montana, but I don't like it; too much wind.

About three weeks ago, I went to Lewistown and held two weeks of cottage meetings in the homes of Brother Stewart and Sister Gurz. Not many attended but some interest was manifested. Did the Saints some good and baptized four.

Doctor Bryant, minister of the Baptist Church, where some of our people had attended, thought we might get his church in which to hold meetings. He seemed to be very democratic in his views. We also tried to get this font to baptize in, but the same old song; he did not have any objections but thought we had better see the trustees, and I presume if we had gone to the trustees they would have had no objections but would have said, "You better see the minister," so we just left them alone and baptized in the river, even though it was cold.

The ministers of Lewistown are making preparations for what they call a big drive for God, not for the church. They had a meeting just before I left and each one was assigned his subject; they agreed not to preach any doctrine or anything that would lead to controversy. The Bible test is, "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." John's statement being true, God won't have anything to do with it.

Next I came to Buffalo. Eight miles out in the country, lives Sister Crabtree, her good husband, and nice family. I held five meetings at this home. A few of her neighbors came out and we had good liberty in presenting the word.

I am looking forward with hope that I may be able to attend General Conference. I have not attended for five years so I feel it would do me a great deal of good to be associated with the great workers once more.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

JOHNSONVILLE, ILLINOIS, February 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: I read the epistles written by the brothers and sisters in the pages of both the HERALD and Ensign, and it gives me much strength and encouragement.

I want to testify to the truthfulness of this work. There are many blessings we may obtain through obedience to God's law. It is only through sacrificing and taking advantage of every opportunity, however small, that we can gain eternal life. Have we paid our tithing? If so, how much? Have we given any free gifts and made any offerings? If so, how much? God will reward us by pouring his Holy Spirit down upon us until all the wealth of the entire universe could not buy it from us.

There are none so poor but they can give a little, and the greater a sacrifice we make the greater our blessing will be. Let us study to see if we can do without a new hat or dress, or get along with a cheaper one and give the rest to help send the gospel to them who have never heard it, and to lift the debt from off the church. I need your prayers as I am very much afflicted, not with one affliction, but with many, inasmuch that the very best doctors say they do not see how I even live, much less go around as I do.

God speed the time when we will all be gathered to the stakes.

Your sister in the one faith,

JENNIE MILNER.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, February 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: Having a desire to communicate to you the success of the great work of the Lord in this part of the vineyard, I pen you a few lines.

During the latter part of December last, we arranged with Brethren J. F. Curtis and Paul M. Hanson, to dedicate our church building in Davidson, Oklahoma, January 6, 1918. Brother Curtis came January 1, and began preaching the night of the second; Brother Hanson was detained at home on account of sickness until January 5.

The dedication services were held Sunday, January 6, at 10.45 a. m., to the enjoyment of all present. Elder Hanson preached the dedicatory sermon and Elder Curtis offered the dedicatory prayer.

Elder Curtis occupied in the evening and it was supposed that that would end the meeting, but on Saturday evening our Christian friends handed me questions for discussion, which were handed to our brethren, and finally a debate was arranged for, between Brother Curtis of the Latter Day Saint Church and Joseph S. Warlick, of the Church of Christ. The debate was to begin January 14, so the brethren continued preaching until that time.

The debate lasted eight sessions, each session being two hours long. Our people are rejoicing, feeling that the truth was vindicated. Brother Curtis conducted himself so nobly in this debate that he won friends for the cause.

The weather was cold all the time, but most always our church was crowded; we estimate four hundred and fifty people.

The brethren left us January 22, and we were loath to see them go, but the work of the Lord must be carried to all people.

Come again, brethren, is the wish of the Saints of Davidson.

Your brother in Christ,

EDWIN B. STAFFORD.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, February 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: Winnipeg District held its annual conventions and conference February 8, 9, and 10, in our chapel at 247 Kensington Street, Saint James.

Brother Wellington Wilson was chosen as president of the Religio. Elder Nelson Wilson succeeded himself as superintendent of the Sunday school.

A program was rendered which included some excellent papers in connection with Sunday school and Religio work. The cream of the evening was an original poem, entitled, "Membership Alphabet," written by "The Doctor," or in other words, E. F. Robertson, wherein he described each one as he saw them.

A good spirit was present at the conference. Elder Wilson was reelected district president; Elders Arnold and Darcy, counselors.

A powerful sermon in the evening, was preached by Elder Robertson which proved to be his farewell sermon to the Winnipeg Saints.

The conference was a success. The sermons were all good, and we heard a member say he had received the spiritual food he came for. We all feel to rejoice in this great latter-day work, and look for the speedy redemption of Zion.

PREDETTA WILSON,
ELIZABETH DARCY,
Press Committee.

HERSCHEL, SASKATCHEWAN, February 14, 1918.

Editors Herald: At last I am able to send my one dollar and fifty cents for the HERALD. It has been quite a struggle to get the money, for last year was a total failure in crops for us. However, I do not wish to murmur; for the Lord is good to us and we cannot live without the church books and papers. I would rather live on less of the temporal food and be able to get more spiritual food, for we are not to live by bread alone but by every word of God. I thank God that I am living in the age of the world in which the angel message came to earth.

We as a family, are trying every day to be better. Although we do not have the privilege of meeting with God's people, yet we are thankful we can read the HERALD and the church books. We surely enjoy the articles in the HERALD.

We have had preaching at Herschel, but the people are so hard-hearted, surely Satan has a great hold on their hearts. However, we are letting our light shine before them that our testimony may some day come up against them.

We are expecting Elder T. J. Jordan here soon to give us a few sermons. We will be glad when he comes. I have done some preaching here, but the town folks would not come to hear, so we have meetings among ourselves. Though few in number the good Lord meets with us. My prayer is for the welfare of Zion.

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. E. MARTIN.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, February 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we are a part of the great organization God has established here upon the earth, I thought it might be interesting to some to hear how we are getting along at Windsor.

God has wondrously blessed us as a people since the organization of the branch, five years ago the twenty-third of February, 1918. We started then with forty-four charter members, and to-day we have one hundred and fifty-three, with three missions opened and in charge of the young priesthood of the branch. We also have a good live Sunday school and Religio.

Elder Leslie Brown is the president of the branch and the Lord has surely blessed the efforts that he has put forth. Many times we have been made to rejoice as God saw fit to use him to give us words of counsel and admonition. Our sick, also, have received many wonderful blessings, for which we are thankful.

When we look about us and see the condition of the people of the world and the terrible oppressions that are upon them, many with their hearts failing them for fear of the things coming upon the earth, how thankful we as a people should be to think that God has not left us in ignorance, but has been warning us continually of these times that are now upon us. He has said that when we see these things coming we are to lift up our heads and rejoice for our redemption draweth nigh.

We were made glad to see such a good response to the Bishop's request that we all take hold and try to pay off the church debt. The response was good, but if we as a people, would do like the poor widow who cast in all she had, it might have been better. There is still a chance for us to do all we can, so let us put our shoulder to the wheel and push, that the gospel might advance, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. We all know there is a lot to be accomplished before Zion can be redeemed.

It is all right to sing, "Shall we gather home to Zion?" but let us examine ourselves and see what we are doing towards making Zion. Are we giving in proportion to the way God has blessed us?

We were favored a few weeks ago by a visit from Brother Daniel Macgregor and had the pleasure of hearing him preach two wonderful sermons that we shall not soon forget. We regret that his stay was such a short one, but hope that we may again have the privilege of hearing him when his mission in Saint Thomas is ended. We have enjoyed many sermons by Brother Richard Weaver, also, who has been laboring in this district for the last four years. He is dear to many of us on account of his great zeal and love for the great cause we all love so much.

Trusting God's blessings may continue with all his people,
Your sister in the gospel,
HATTIE MOFFAT.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, February 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: The conference and conventions of the Central Oklahoma District were held at Oklahoma City the 15th, 16th, and 17th inst. The Sunday school and Religio held joint sessions on the 15th under the able leadership of Brother F. W. Kueffer, superintendent of district. Throughout the entire day's session a spirit of earnest consecration was manifest and a desire to use for the benefit of the Lord's work, every talent and ability possessed by the workers. Thoughtful consideration was evident in the selection of those chosen to have charge of the future work of the district, and we believe there will be no slackers among them, but that each one will move out to perform his duty with lofty purpose and a determination to occupy acceptably. The superintendent had arranged a treat for the visitors in the shape of a lecture by Brother A. Dwyer on "Enthusiasm." Brother Dwyer had been seriously ill in Oklahoma City for over a month, and it was with the utmost exercise of will power that he was able to leave his bed to do this service for the church; but the Lord blessed the effort, and during his talk he was free from pain, although his strength was sorely taxed. A feeling of love for God and for the great latter-day work pervaded the audience, and much of the "enthusiasm"—fire—of which the brother spoke, was communicated to his hearers, and all felt to renew their efforts in the work of the Lord. Brother Dwyer spoke again very acceptably at the night's session. There was informal discussion on topics calculated to improve conditions in local schools, interspersed with songs by some of the sweet singers of Israel, among whom we cannot but mention Sister Lena Meyers, formerly of Nebraska City, but now of Holdenville, Oklahoma—who contributed freely of her talent for the benefit of the convention and conference.

The pleasure of those present was augmented to no small degree by the report of the superintendent as to the Christmas offering of our district for 1917. With a total Sunday school membership in the district of four hundred pupils, our offering for the advancement of God's work reached the wonderful sum of $1,640, or an average of four dollars per pupil. And further, as there are 754 church members enrolled in Central Oklahoma, the offering averaged $2.43 for each Latter Day Saint in the district. We trust we will be able to do even better the next year—as we want to be in the foremost ranks of those who show their faith by their works.

Brother Edward Rannie is president of the district, and he gave much thought and preparation to the making of the conference an interesting and profitable one. He was assisted in his labors by Brother R. M. Maloney, president of the Oklahoma City Branch. Brother Arber, vice president, was detained on account of illness. He is very much loved by the Saints of this district, and they are praying for his speedy recovery. We were most agreeably surprised during the opening session to see Presiding Bishop B. R. McGuire and Bishop Ellis Short walk into our midst. They were invited to assist in presiding over the conference, but with becoming modesty chose to remain as visitors and coworkers. The business meetings were characterized by good fellowship and moved along with neatness and dispatch. Bishop Short gave the audience one of his oldtime enthusiastic sermons at night, which had the old gospel ring to it, and which made glad the hearts of his hearers.

Sunday morning and night Brother McGuire addressed the Saints on the temporal law with power and much assurance—and every heart seemed melted and burning with a desire to qualify and make good in the work of the Lord. His broad conception of the duties and privileges of his important office, and the unfailing charity with which he is endowed, shows to the thoughtful observer that the Lord will not ask a man to fill a place and do a work for him that he will not qualify him to do. So we feel that the work in this section received a great impetus from the visit of Brother McGuire. In the afternoon a sacrament service was held and a time of rejoicing was had. Beautiful testimonies were borne under the influence of the divine Spirit, and many renewed their covenant and reconsecrated themselves to the work of the Lord.

The Oklahoma City Saints have a neat little church, all paid for, and an earnest band of united workers. The Spirit of hospitality was very evident and during the two conference days, the sisters prepared a lunch to which they invited all visitors. They are past masters in the art of providing for the inner man—having had great success in that line of work at their Annual State fair gatherings. The local Sunday school, Brother Ed. Dillon, superintendent, held their regular session Sunday morning, and the choir, under the leadership of F. W. Kueffer and Sister Godfrey Keuffer performed good service. A song service of thirty minutes before each evening preaching service was participated in by the audience as well, and very much enjoyed.

I'm sure I voice the sentiment of all those present, that this conference of the Central Oklahoma District was a success from first to last.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

BELLE ROBINSON JAMES.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, February 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Saints here are striving to follow the motto, "onward and upward," but as in all branches, there are those who are indifferent. May the time soon hasten when all will be alive and ready to do their bit in the gospel army.

By the spirit that is manifested here, I feel sure that our school will have a larger offering next year. Our Religion meets every Tuesday night with good attendance.

About four months ago we organized the Woman's Auxiliary with a few in number but since have added quite a number to our list. It has, so far, the two departments, Home and Child Welfare Study and the Relief and Service work. How glad I am that we are among those who are taking up so valuable a work. God has told his church in general to study to make themselves approved, and how much more is it necessary for mothers to study that they may have wisdom.

I was very much interested in a recent article written by Sister Audentia Anderson, for the auxiliary column. How I wish every wife and mother in the church could have read it. Her thoughts were noble and inspiring.

On account of the coal shortage we are holding our Thursday night prayer meetings in the homes of the Saints and by so doing we are able to reach those whose duties keep them from attending the prayer service.

We have two Bible circles, which rendered a program a few weeks ago with much success. We also have a small normal class the members of which have prepared themselves for the first examination.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. IRA W. HUMES.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Brundage, member gospel literature board; Jessie Ward, member library board; Evan E. Inslie, chorister. Next conference at Bellingham, during time of reunion, in August; general church authorities petitioned to send J. J. Cornish to labor in the district the coming conference year and George M. Shippy to labor in southern part of district with Centralia objective point; it is earnestly requested that all those who are enrolled upon the records of Castle Rock, Tacoma, and Nanaimo branches, now disorganized, apply to undersigned for certificates of transfer to nearest branch; Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

LONDON.—At 58 Ickburg Road, Upper Clapton, London, England, January 19, 1918, W. H. Greenwood, associate president of the mission being present and authorized to preside, associated with the district officers. Bishop R. May reported receipts of £123, 14s, 3d. The standing rule that business was not to be transacted at religious sessions of the conferences suspended. The conference voted to disapprove of the office "associate president" used in any branch in the district. Membership of Priest Joseph A. Kemp being in dispute was referred to council of First Presidency and Twelve, and a committee appointed to gather and submit all evidence in the case. The committee named as follows: J. A. Judd, R. May, R. Goulee. A committee was appointed, consisting of W. H. Greenwood, R. Goulee, R. Clift, and R. May, to gather and examine some of the spiritual gifts which have been given in the district and refer same to joint council for decision. It was resolved that when individuals present letter or certificate of baptism to any branch, that branch shall be permitted to decide as to whether they shall become members of that branch or not. Election of officers: R. Goulee, president; J. W. Worth, first vice president; R. Clift, second vice president; Dover E. Judd, secretary; S. Dennis, secretary; S. She leaves to mourn, her parents, 2 brothers, 2 sisters and many relatives and friends. Funeral at Baptist Church. Sermon by Charles H. Burr, assisted by Reverend Hughes.

SWAN.—Nancy Swan Burroughs, nee Baker, was born in Ohio, November 26, 1832. Baptized in 1868. Died January 28, 1918. Leaves 3 sons, Lester, Albert, Martin Burroughs; 22 grandchildren and 32 great-grandchildren, to mourn. Two sons have preceded her in death, Arthur H. and Ulysses G. Burroughs. Funeral services at Saints' chapel at Brush Creek, in charge of W. H. Kelley.

ELLEGE.—Paul Duane Elledge was born October 18, 1914, at Colesburg, Iowa. Died February 11, 1918, at the home of his parents in Colesburg. He leaves to mourn his parents, Boone and Pauline; two brothers, Theodore and Leon, and a host of relatives and friends. Blessed September 2, 1915, by J. B. Wildermuth. Funeral from Bethel Church. Sermon by E. R. Davis. Interment in Bethel Cemetery.

JONES.—Elizabeth Catlin was born October 4, 1851, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Married Edson Jones, November 6, 1870. Died January 20, 1918, at her home in San Bernardino, California. Survived by husband and 3 children, Orson and John W. Jones, and Mrs. R. J. Courtney. Funeral at undertaking rooms of Stephens and Son, in charge of F. B. Van Fleet. Interment in Pioneer Cemetery.

COCHRAN.—Verna L., daughter of Hugh M. and Elizabeth Cochran, was born at Atchison, Kansas, August 17, 1891. She freely gave of her time and talent to the advancement of both auxiliary and church work. Baptized at Atchison, by M. F. Gowell. Died January 15, 1918. Services at First Saint Joseph Branch, Saint Joseph, Missouri, in charge of R. S. Salyards. Sermon by B. J. Scott. Burial in Ashland Cemetery.

SEAWORTH.—Raymond Seaworth, only child of Emma and Brown Seaworth, was born March 17, 1896. Died at his home in Wilber, Nebraska, February 10, 1918. Early in life he had a severe spell of sickness, which resulted in spinal trouble, from which he never recovered. Baptized in July, 1914. He found much comfort in reading good books. Sermon by S. Brolliar, to a large audience, Methodist Episcopal minister offering prayer.

SELL.—Phebe Melinda Snider was born in North Carolina, March 12, 1846. Died January 17, 1918, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. W. Reasoner, near Cedardale, Oklahoma. Married Solomon C. Sell, July 4, 1866. To this union 11 children were born, 6 of whom are living and were present with the exception of one son, William O. Sell, of Long Island, Kansas. Funeral at Cedardale, Oklahoma, January 19, 1918. Sermon by H. F. Durfev.

BOYLES.—Ruby Edna Boyles was born April 12, 1891, at Kansas City, Missouri. Died at Burlington, Iowa, February 13, 1918. Preceded in death by father, 3 sisters, and 1 brother. She leaves to mourn, husband, mother, 1 sister, 1 son, and a host of friends. Baptized at the age of eight years. Death came after an illness of five days, caused by poisoned food. Funeral services at Fort Madison, Iowa, conducted by George P. Lambert.

RICHARDSON.—Lizzie A. Richardson was born May 7, 1866, at Worcester, Massachusetts. Died at her home in Lachine, Michigan, January 20, 1918. Besides her husband, she leaves 13 children, most of whom are in the church and all present at the time of her death but the oldest, Arthur, of California, who arrived too late for the funeral. Baptized February 26, 1911. Funeral sermon by Ervin Hall. Burial in Greely Cemetery.

GIBSON.—Harry Burley, son of William and Emma Gibson, was born January 4, 1908, at Windsor, Ontario. Accidentally shot on February 2, 1918, near his home in Ford City.

Blood poisoning set in, causing his death on February 8. Funeral from Tuscon's morgue to Windsor Grove Cemetery. Leslie Brown preached a short sermon at the morgue, assisted by L. D. Campbell. A memorial service was held in the church on Sunday evening at which Leslie Brown preached, assisted by A. H. Bennett.

SPARKS.—Mary Ann Sparks was born in England in 1830. Married Elijah Sparks in 1855. Both baptized in 1871. Died at Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, February 16, 1918. Came to London, Canada, in 1872; to Iowa in 1882. In 1909 he was made helpless by paralysis. Under her constant care he lived until January 8, 1917. Of 7 children, 2 sons survive, Samuel, of Sacramento, California, and Alfred, of Wichita, Kansas. Being notified of his mother's death, Alfred came. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by John Wahlstrom.

MITCHELL.—C. M. Mitchell was born near Providence, Texas, April 4, 1873. Married Lizzie Pressley, October 7, 1896. To this union were born 4 children, 2 boys and 2 girls. Baptized March, 1899. Died of pneumonia on February 1, 1918. Buried at Caldwell, Texas, under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World. Was a faithful member of the church. Served the Texas Central District as secretary for many years. He leaves family and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn.

BELKHAM.—Charles Franklin Belkham was born September 30, 1844, in New Hampshire. Moved to Missouri and was baptized July, 1890, by Emsley Curtis. Married Martha Bradshaw, October 4, 1867. Came to Independence last March from New Mexico. Served the church seven years as a missionary and the United States in the Civil War with Third Cavalry of Illinois. Died at his home in Independence, Missouri, February 10, 1918. Sermon by A. H. Parsons. He leaves a loving companion and children to mourn.

ANDERSON.—Maggie Deletta Anderson was born at Burlington, Iowa, August 14, 1897. Has lived for a number of years near and in Lamoni, where she died at the home of her parents on February 14, 1918. As a result of a fall had suffered much from pains in the head, which were later diagnosed as tumor of the brain. Baptized July 22, 1892. Leaves father, mother, 3 sisters and 3 brothers. Funeral from Saints' church, in charge of John Smith, sermon by E. D. Moore. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

SURRIDGE.—Mark Surridge was born in 1834, in Suffolk, England. The most of his time was spent in Wales until 1855, when he emigrated to America, going to Utah. His first wife died, and he married Miss Marie Griffiths, November 4, 1863. To this union 14 children were born. United with the Reorganization in March, 1879. Moved to Bevier, Missouri, in August, 1880. Held the office of priest. Died February 4, 1918. Funeral at the Saints' church, February 6. Sermon by A. M. Chase, assisted by W. B. Richards. Survived by his wife, 4 sons, and 2 daughters.

WILLIAMS.—Elizabeth, daughter of Lewis and Alice Smith, was born in South Wales, June 14, 1842. Married David D. Williams in South Wales, June 5, 1865, and at once they journeyed to the United States, settling in Scranton, Pennsylvania. Later removed to Brookfield, Ohio, and in a few years to Canton, Illinois, the present home. Both were members of the church. Died at her home, Canton, Illinois, February 12, 1918. There were born to this union 11 children. The husband, David D. Williams, sr., and 4 children survive. Services in charge of E. L. Kelley, assisted by pastor of the Christian Church, Reverend Mr. Cleaver.

WILLIAMS.—William Wilson was born in Gibson County, Tennessee, February 13, 1835. When but a lad he went with his parents to Nauvoo, Illinois. At the exodus of the church from that place, he moved with his parents to Adams County, Iowa; from thence to near Council Bluffs. Here he united with the church. Married Miss Annis Gilbreath in 1863. Died at his home near Decatur, Nebraska, February 6, 1918. Leaves wife, 9 children; 24 grandchildren, 2 great-grandchildren, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn. Funeral at Saints' chapel, Ira Lewis in charge. Interment in Hill Crest Cemetery, at Decatur, Nebraska.

HARVEY.—Richard Harvey was born in Sheldon County, Indiana, September 7, 1844; died February 10, 1918, at Des Moines, Iowa. Married Lana Barlow in 1862. To this union were born 3 sons and 4 daughters. All the living children present at the funeral: Alexander of Anoka, Minnesota; Mary Chance, Adel, Iowa; Anne Weens, Winterset, Iowa; Minnie Grayson, Kildeer, North Dakota; Ella Wilson, Adel, Iowa. He left 18 grandchildren and 20 great-grandchildren. Baptized by Gordon Deuel more than fifty years ago. Funeral sermon by Orman Salisbury. Six grandsons were pallbearers: Cecil Harvey, Bert Harvey, Claude Harvey, Lester Chance, Merle Chance, and Paul Wilson.

PASTORS ON THE ATLANTIC COAST

One of our boys in the naval service, Ralph E. Herrick, inquires as to names and addresses of our members on the eastern coast. His ship often touches some port where he might attend the services if he just knew where to go. Others may be in the same situation, so we print the following for their assistance: At Brooklyn, look up Wardell Christy, 1312 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York; the city missionary at Boston is O. R. Miller, 7 Bradley Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, (this is one of Boston's suburbs); at Providence, Rhode Island, you will find R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street; and at New Bedford, Massachusetts, look up George H. Butler, 58 Woodlawn Avenue. These brethren are all pastors, and it is easier to give their addresses than to try to tell the location of the churches, especially at Boston and New Bedford.

BRIGHAM YOUNG TRANSFIGURED?

A letter from Sister E. D. Guest, of 1561 Phyllis Street, Jacksonville, Florida, tells of a little experience in attending a meeting of the Utah Mormons. She wanted information on the story that Brigham Young was once transfigured to appear in the likeness of Joseph Smith. We referred her to the information given on pages 9, 10, and 11 of True Succession in Church Presidency, by Heman C. Smith, which we think effectually answers the story. Those who would like to look it up and get the other valuable information the book presents, should order number 307, at 75 cents. Sister Guest invites any elders to call and hold meetings.

IBID.

No; this is not the name of a new food. It is an abbreviation.

Several times orders have been received at the business office here for "that book called Ibid." If the one really referred to had been sent, it would have occasioned quite a surprise.

Of course most everybody knows that it is simply a convenient method for avoiding the repetition of names of books, when such repeating would become tiresome. It is used mostly in giving credit for quotations.

The dictionary says: "Ibidem: In the same place; commonly abbreviated ibid." It is a Latin adverb, with the accent on the bi, long i. It is used so frequently that it has become almost Anglicized and often is not italicized.

If anyone asks you, tell him it means in the same book, or same place, as the credit before mentioned.—From Editorial Chat; February Autumn Leaves.

TO SAINTS IN UNORGANIZED KANSAS TERRITORY

Brother T. C. Turpen, of Wherry, Kansas, would like the names, age, post office, and county of all those in the unorganized part of Kansas who would like to join in the study of the Sunday school or Religio Quarterlies, in the home department, of which he is the superintendent. He has been in the hospital twice the past year from nervous breakdown, caused by trying to extend and maintain that work. The Quarterlies should be secured and two hours a week given

The Lamoni Roller Mill now grinds barley flour in addition to a nice line of other cereal foods. It is interesting to see our church industries thus expand and increase their usefulness to the members here and within reach elsewhere. The freight rate on these products is only fourth class, and it can be profitably shipped a considerable distance.

AN ALL-WIRELESS DRAFT

Every one of the Graceland boys in the recent quota sent to Camp Dodge from this county were qualified to take up wireless work in the army. Some of these lads were expert operators, while others who had enrolled late may be assigned to that department for further instruction. Jesse Roth, taken in the first draft from Graceland, competed in an examination in which there were two hundred participants. He was the only one of that number given an operator's certificate. By working on Saturdays the college will close on May 2 this year, and on the 6th will open for a summer session in which a wireless course will be featured for the following four months. Those who desire to enroll in this desirable branch of the service, pending further drafts, should make arrangements to be in that class. It is not hard to learn, under good tutorship, which Graceland supplies in the services of Arthur B. Church, graduate of the Valparaiso, Indiana, radio department.

Sister Mattie E. Shepard, of Neligh, Nebraska, wants some of the elders in Northern Wisconsin to stop off at Cumberland. She has a daughter and family living about twelve miles out who has expressed a desire that some of the elders call. They are not members but are anxious to hear the gospel preached by some of our representatives. It is quite a thickly settled country, and Sister Shepard believes a good audience could be secured. The address is Mr. and Mrs. Boyd W. Pritchard, Star Route, Cumberland, Wisconsin.

William E. Hansen, Company B, 334th Machine Gun Battalion, Camp Pike, Arkansas, is a lad in the service from Gallands Grove District. He is trying to keep the faith and lead as clean a life as possible. He pays his tithing and tries as best he can to observe the teachings of the church. Anyone feeling so inclined would do well to accept his invitation to write.

BAKER AND ROBERTS TO DEBATE

Elder A. M. Baker writes from Nebo, Illinois, that he is about to have a debate with W. G. Roberts, of the Campbellite church. It is set for March 5.

VOLUME 4 AT HALF PRICE

There are about a hundred copies of Volume 4 of the Church History here at the office which will be sold at just half price, $1 each. They have just a trace of oil on the edges from the rope with which they were tied when in bundles. They are of the uniform black cloth binding that sells under No. 116 at $2 each. Most of them would pass for first-class books but since that is not our policy, we are putting them out at less than cost of labor, to make room for other books. You'll appreciate this bargain, especially if you order right away before they're gone.

FIRE AT HERALD OFFICE

A leaking gasoline tank on one of the linotype machines at this office caused an explosion and fierce little fire early on the morning of the 27th. A house hose in the hands of the janitor put it under control before the fire department arrived and finished it with chemicals. No one hurt. Electric heaters for those machines were ordered about a month ago, but have not arrived.

Wichita, Kansas, has a new church building nearly completed. Hereafter they will meet at corner of South Water and Osie. Take South Main car, get off at Osie, walk one block west. The president is Elder E. L. Barraclough, 137 South Fern. They will welcome the traveling ministry and visitors stopping in Wichita.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith returned to Lamoni on the 1st from a trip into Western Iowa where he had held meetings in Pisgah and Missouri Valley. He reports very interesting meetings but bad weather.

KANSAS CITY STAKE ADOPTS NEW PLAN

At the recent stake conference the Kansas City Stake adopted the plan which is in operation in Independence and Lamoni, whereby an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon are placed in charge of certain groups of families, all working under the direction of the president of the branch. Very good results are being reported from this plan, and we have noted a number of very commendable features in its operation in Lamoni. Some supposed objections to procedure have melted away as they were displaced with unity of purpose and action for the good of all. It is indeed a long step toward Zionic cooperation.

"The HERALD is a wonderful paper, containing so much good in so small a space. We look forward to it each week, and think what a feast we will have after the day's work is done when we may sit down and read it."—From An Appreciative Reader.

REUNION DATES BEING SET

We note some of the reunion committees are already planning on next year's work and are setting their dates. The Lamoni Stake committee have chosen July 31 to August 11, on the reunion grounds south of town. This is one of the largest reunions held in the church, in fact is the largest in number of campers on the ground, drawing from many neighboring States. Tents are assured on these dates, they not conflicting with the Iowa State Fair.

DISCOUNT ON NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS

Please remember that the discount on new subscriptions is not given on renewals, and that agent's discount on books is given agents only. The subscription discount must be given to the Christmas offering while we place no restrictions on the other. In all instances there should be cooperation. If there is a branch agent, have a thorough understanding with him and the branch president as to methods of procedure, so there will be no conflict. It is a work of sufficient importance to engage the time of anyone, but let it be done in a businesslike manner. We advise those who are working for the Christmas offering to accept renewals and remit the full amount, deducting any necessary amount from the discount retained to send in the money. There is joy in rendering real service.

YOU'RE SURE TO NEED CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS

Whether you attend the General Conference or not, you will want to follow what the quorums and the big assembly legislate on and refer to. That is possible only by owning a copy of General Conference Resolutions. The books contain 754 of them, all nicely numbered and indexed. It is a valuable thing to have anyway, with its comprehensive array of vital information as to what the church believes is correct interpretation and procedure. If you want the paper cover order No. 206, at 40 cents. The cloth bound edition is No. 207 and sells for 60 cents.

BROTHER M'GUIRE WANTS BLUE HOPES

If any of our readers have copies of the Blue Hope for 1908 and the years prior to 1907, they will be doing a great favor to the Presiding Bishopric by sending them to Benjamin R. McGuire, Box 125, Independence, Missouri, to complete their files. It will be recalled that till 1914 the Zion's Hope carried the detailed reports of the Christmas offering; since that time they have been in the Stepping Stones.

ASSISTANT CHURCH SECRETARY IN INDEPENDENCE

Brother R. S. Salyards, jr., has shipped his household goods to Independence and will hereafter reside there, to care for the interests of the secretary's office. His father, who has long served as secretary, is president of the Far West Stake and finds it inconvenient to look after the detail work. We understand it is the intention to establish the secretary's office in the new church office building.

A SIGN OF PROGRESS

At the General Conference of 1913, section 130 of the Doctrine and Covenants was given to the church, and accepted by them as a revelation from God. To the Associate Editor, this revelation has a peculiar significance.

The Sunday before the conference opened, we were engaged in very earnest prayer, and there came to mind some of the wonderful promises of the Lord—the building of the temple, the school of the prophets, the endowment of the Spirit, the redemption of Zion, and the many other things which have been promised to us.

A very earnest prayer was made, that at the conference then approaching, the church might be offered some portion at least, of these promises, but at once the answer came back, "My son, would you ask for the condemnation of my people?"

To some, this may at first glance seem strange; the idea that a revelation given to us may be not a blessing, but the reverse. Yet, a little thought will show, that of necessity, it is true. When God speaks, it is with intelligence, and with a purpose in view. If we do not accept it, receive it and live by it, then the loss is ours and we suffer condemnation, rather than blessings?

When this revelation was given, paragraph 7 appeared to be especially presented to our mind, as a test of the readiness of the church for progress.

The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

That year several reunion grounds were purchased. In the years since then, an effort has been made for the purchase and the erection of several houses of worship. Some have sold and rebuilt, others, in many branches, have spent on pleasure vehicles an amount that would have paid their local debts and fully their share of the church debt, and then something over.

All thinking people recognize that, in these times, the use of modern instruments are a necessity. But it seems there may be room for the denial of large expenditures for personal pleasure, especially until the commandment has been kept and we have done our share to reduce and pay off the debt.

The same principle might be illustrated in the excessive consumption of ice cream or candy. We think we have noticed almost as great relative extravagance in this particular, as in the expending of larger amounts. These are merely a few, out of many instances of similar nature, in personal expenditure.

Now we have a situation compelling the elimination of unnecessary wants. Of course, there is a possible quibble over what are "unnecessary" wants, and what is the "unnecessary" erection of houses of worship. There are some so constituted, as to insist that anything they want is a necessity; there are others apparently so constituted as to think that one's just wants and needs are just their bare wants, (using the adverb instead of the adjective,) and would have one receive just enough to keep body and soul together, regardless of efficient results, regardless of real service. Both of these are, of course, extreme.

In this age of hope, we can but rejoice in the change shown by a few years' passage of time. A different and we believe better spirit is becoming manifest. Sacrifices are being made and the gift has been voluntary.

Much has been written in these columns concerning the work of the Christmas offering. Turn back to the HERALD for May 23, 1917, and note the urging, that we were going to double our Christmas offering for that year. Well, we did double it, and then doubled it again, and pretty near doubled it the third time. It is six times as much, instead of twice as much, as it was the former year, which was the largest in the history of the Sunday school.

As much as this has been done by a real spirit of sacrifice, much of it has been done by a strict construction of the term—necessity. Many have secretly given to help in the final result.

Then of equally great importance, in fact of greater importance, is to note the way in which the membership has supported the church in tithes, offerings, and consecrations. There have been many, at least, who are determined to cleanse their skirts from the blood of this generation, and do all that lays in their power to do the whole counsel of God.

This causes us to hope, more than ever before, that we are on the eve of a great devoted movement nearer to God, for this work will require devotion as well as intelligence; self-sacrifice as well as unity of purpose, a working together with God. Let us resolve that he will not find us on a strike, but each one earnestly striving to do his whole duty, and seeking first the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

A cartoon in a recent copy of Life represents a crowd of richly dressed people emerging from a church entrance. A poorly dressed woman and little girl are watching them. The little girl says, "Mother, I wish we could afford to belong to the Episcopalians."

Some choristers have an uncanny faculty for selecting hymns appropriate to the sermon. Elder X—— had just finished a very long and tedious discourse, and the choir sang, "Hallelujah, 'tis done!"

Doctor Oeschger, President of Bethany College, who is in the field with a new lecture on "Mormonism," is said to have given members of the Reorganized Church a clean bill of health in his lecture. He commended us for our stand against the use of tobacco. And he is said to have remarked, "I do not say that a man who uses tobacco cannot go to heaven; but he will have to go to hell to spit."

Atrocities in the European War make the historic performances of Apache and Sioux Indians look like amateur stuff. The Indians were crude, and operated on a small scale—and possibly were a bit tender-hearted. The Blackfeet, for instance, had a standing rule against killing women and children.

Personal righteousness must underly every successful effort to redeem Zion. The people who went West succeeded from a financial standpoint. But their Zion is a farce. Their prophets admit that God never speaks to them in revelation; while equality is undreamed of.

Our years of preaching of righteousness and sacrifice and unity have been the very necessary prelude to the temporal redemption of Zion.

It is said that we need practical men to redeem Zion. Unfortunately there are few men to be found who have had experience in Zion building. Enoch was very successful, but he was at the work a long time, and about the time everything was in good shape the Lord took him and his city away. It seemed almost that he was afraid they would spoil it all if he left them here any longer.

But fortunately we have many men who are practical men in many of the details of the redemption of Zion. They should be used for all they are worth as builders along the lines in which they are specialists.

It is almost a certainty, though, that failures will be made along some few lines in our work of redeeming Zion. Some of our enterprises are sure to come to grief. We may as well make up our minds to that at the start and save disappointment later. In every community of any size where there is a variety of undertakings some ventures fail. But there is this difference: in the ordinary community the man who fails bears the loss individually—or largely so, at least. While in Zion, as we hope to see it, the shock will be distributed, and the man who fails honestly in a legitimate business intended for the upbuilding of the community, will not be left to go down in ruin and despair.

It is within the range of possibilities that during the next few years the church as a whole will either make or break herself. If we succeed we must give God the glory. But if we fail we cannot lay any of the blame to his account. For if we succeed it will be because of his help. While if we fail it will be because we have in some way forfeited his blessing.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MORE ABOUT THE GATHERING

Much interest is being shown in the work that is now being undertaken in the various stakes by way of preparation, in the realization that Zion must be prepared, a place of refuge.

We are confronted with two difficulties, however, in discussing this problem. It is plainly written that our going should not be in haste, but all things should be prepared. No one should move without first due consultation with the Bishop, and after proper arrangements have been made.

It is a time when all of us should be considering these problems and their solution, and making our preparations. It is a time for getting ready.

Many are well established and could not move under a few years' time without suffering serious loss. We do not want to wait until we are compelled to go, and must sacrifice all we have and go up with empty hands. We do not want to go up weeping and mourning for what we might have done, had we only known, nor to bewail gifts we might have taken to have laid at the feet of the Lord's Anointed. Doubtless, provision will be made then for the poor, but those who have means do not want to be classified with the poor, because of negligence.

It is not a time for flight nor for quick movement; but it is a time when we may well consider the preparation necessary to be made. Even in this preparation it would be well to consult our local bishop.

While there are many, perhaps, ready to move in haste and without due preparation, there are also many who are liable to be too slow. There are some so well established and so justly respected where they live that they naturally hesitate even to consider moving or gathering.

This has been well and is well. In the past the church has suffered several times from a propensity on the part of some to gather without due preparation. It thus happens that the gathering places at times have appeared to be rather less representative of our ideals than the most representative communities. But we do not want to go to the opposite extreme; nor be too slow.

Zion is the pure in heart, nothing is to be gained from a place without the spiritual and moral preparation; but Zion is also a community of interest, and we should strive so to proceed as to conserve our own best interests and those of the body.

It is unfortunate that in every advanced movement there appear to be a few extreme critics. It is well that we have constructive criticism, that all points be tested and proven, and that all untoward tendencies be noted and curbed, but some criticism tends to be destructive. In this there are some who question whether there ever will be a time of gathering. We hope and believe these are very few.

Much is being done in the stakes in a constructive way to establish storehouses for groceries, meat, and coal; in the equipment of a mill; in the opening of industries, such as the electric light plant, ice plant, and steam laundry, at Lamoni.

An effort is also being made to secure a clear definition of Zion, a stewardship, the storehouse and the United Order of Enoch. But while these questions are being considered, constructive work is being undertaken carefully, yet earnestly, to secure and establish stewardships.

There may be noted the question of life insurance, which has recently been taken up by the Bishopric. Life insurance has, in the past, been largely a business proposition. It helps a man to save; it provides against sudden and unexpected accidents, whether they mean personal injury and sickness for a time, or death; it thus insures that the few who are taken in early years have their families provided for; those who live to be old receive, very often, much less than they invest, but if this has included life insurance for the earlier years there is no real injustice.

Those who feel themselves able to save have many times declined to insure; others have declined for sentimental reasons; others, perhaps, because they will not make the necessary effort to save, and some of these who start, do not continue.

It is not intending to show a spirit of criticism when we state that unitedly the church can do this better for each of us, when properly organized. And is it not somewhat unseemly to criticize and hinder while an effort is being made toward such organization?

We have suggested once that those having life insurance should not permit it to lapse, and certainly not until opportunity has been utilized to confer with those in charge. The policy doubtless has an actual, if not a surrender value, and the former will be the larger of the two even where it has a surrender value. Our work should be constructive and not destructive in this particular.

We are all toilers, or should be. We are all interested in the united success of the whole movement, or should be. Every possible contingency, so far as is reasonable, should have our due consideration, and we should move forward, not in haste, but with sure preparation, so as to be ready when the time comes and the command is given.

"Zionism is passing from the realm of possibility to that of probability. Nearer and clearer is the vision of the Holy Land looming up before our eyes. To-day to place Jewish nationalism outside of Judaism, would be to strangle Zionism at its very birth."

CONSISTENCY IN PRAYER

Prayer is an expression to God of the desires of the soul. As such it may be either silent or vocal, according to surrounding circumstances, the Lord being able to understand the secret yearnings of the mind as well as their formal expression.

Vocal prayer is appropriate, and becomes a necessity, when more than one wish to unite in their supplications, one being selected or privileged to express the desires in which all are to join.

Properly understood, prayer is a serious thing. It should not be indulged in carelessly, and certainly should be governed by wisdom. The sacredness and importance of an address to our heavenly Father are surely of sufficient merit to demand our most earnest consideration, that the Spirit of true supplication may not be violated in our efforts to pray.

There is no doubt that the spirit of true prayer is much abused. Especially is this true where a number are met together for worship. While this difficulty may be traceable to various causes, we believe it results in many cases from a lack of wisdom, and a failure to be consistent in the petitions expressed.

In the first place, it seems highly proper that the occasion of the meeting should determine largely the nature of the prayer or prayers. It is natural for people when assembled together to have their minds more or less directed to the object for which the assembly has been called. If the desires expressed by those who pray are irrelevant to the spirit of the meeting the minds of the people are confused, and to some extent diverted into other channels, and if their attention is retained at all, they are apt to become listeners instead of participants.

Suppose, for instance, that a few have been called to the bedside of one who is afflicted, for prayer and administration. The sympathies are naturally stirred with solicitude for the good of the suffering one. Would not consistency suggest that a brief, earnest prayer in behalf of the one desiring administration, followed by prayers of anointing and confirmation alike direct and earnest, be most desirable under the circumstances? Would it not also be wise at such times, when the thoughts are sad, and nerves, especially of the sick one, are tender, to speak in a quiet tone of voice suitable to the surrounding conditions?

Whatever the experience of others may have been, the writer has had the spirit of administration greatly confused by listening, on such occasions, to lengthy prayers concerning the progress of the work at large, the general good of the Saints, and various things foreign to the nature of the occasion, possibly concluding with brief references to the one requesting administration, and who anxiously awaits the blessing of relief. Under such circumstances it is hardly reasonable to expect that degree of unity, "as touching one thing," so essential to acceptable prayer.

What may be said regarding occasions of this kind is applicable in a general sense to all gatherings where prayer is appropriate. Preaching services, Sunday schools, meetings for baptism, confirmation, ordination, and all the various kinds of religious gatherings have special objects which demand our attention, and toward the proper accomplishment of which the assistance of the Lord should be imparted.

It is true that some occasions, being more general in their nature than others, allow wider range of thought without violence to the spirit of the meeting. There are some principles, however, that evidently should govern prayer upon all occasions. Among them are earnestness, simplicity, and brevity. We believe these to be the crowning graces of a good prayer. Especially should these characteristics be manifest in Sunday schools, and gatherings where children are more especially expected to unite. Their active, restless little minds will naturally protest against listening to long, tedious petitions, beyond their understanding, and injury instead of good may result.

And then, too, however others may feel, the writer is not as a rule much impressed by prayers of an oratorical nature in which an effort to instruct is apparent, the burden of the thoughts expressed being directed to the people rather than to God.

Surely, consistency would demand that such be left to the preacher, when the audience can assume a more receptive attitude, and the countenance and gestures of the speaker assist in the elucidation of his thought.

Jesus considered this subject of sufficient importance to give instructions relative to the manner in which our heavenly Father should be approached. His prayers are beautiful and impressive. They are brief, earnest, and simple. While in this, as in other things, some are more gifted than others, study and effort will bring development in all; and we think that a better understanding of the nature of prayer, with earnest effort to learn wisdom in the exercise of so sacred a privilege, will add solemnity to our public worship.

These thoughts are only suggested as the feelings of one. They are not offered by way of fault-finding, but with good intent, and with the desire that whatever of good may be in them may be appropriated in the interests of the work in which we are striving to develop.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 48, p. 513, 1901.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING AND GOD'S REMEDY: COOPERATION

More than eighty years ago, God sent his angels to earth with the working plans of his "industrial cooperation."

He revealed clearly the dire conditions soon to obtain on earth. The "evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days," in their craze to heap "treasures together for the last days." They would "keep back by fraud" "the hire of the laborer; condemn and kill nonresisting persons and bring about the day of slaughter so as to nourish their hearts upon the wealth of the world." (James 5: 1-6.)

Probably no other person in authority has shown how literally these prophecies are being fulfilled in so few words as Basil M. Manly, former director of research and investigation for the Federal Industrial Relations Commission. Mr. Manly says in one of his reports:

It is probable that the proportion should be more nearly three fourths, but it is absolutely certain as shown by the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, that less than two per cent of the adult population own two thirds of all the wealth of the United States.

One per cent of our population controls our Nation's great press. "By means of it" our Ensign editor tells us "nations are educated, directed, and swayed in every phase of their life."

This mighty power of the press to sway the nations, lodged in so few hands, is many times multiplied by holding a monopoly upon our Nation's finance, and upon practically all the necessities of life.

Had the church adopted this cooperative branch of the gospel work we would to-day be immune from this monstrous tribute. For Mr. Manly's report can mean nothing less than that less than two per cent of our population, who produce nothing annually, absorb from two thirds to three fourths of the net products of our entire Nation.

A few illustrations of how this is done is interesting at this point, for it also illustrates what God has long been wanting us to do for ourselves, in order to bar against this monstrous exploitation.

Montana farmers haul their wheat direct to the big mills at Great Falls to exchange for flour. They are paid Minneapolis prices for their wheat, less freight from Great Falls to Minneapolis, plus all the rake-offs along the way. Then they pay Minneapolis prices for flour, to which is added the freight from Minneapolis to Great Falls, together with warehouse, jobber, wholesale, and retail profits. Not a grain of their wheat has seen a railroad, an elevator, or commission merchant. Not a spoonful of the flour has been in a freight car, warehouse, wholesale or retail establishment. But Mr. Farmer must stand up and pay all these unearned increments before he may taste one mouthful of his own product. They retain less than forty per cent; over sixty per cent going to profit.

We can order one hundred pounds of Billings sugar from Chicago and pay the freight on it back to Billings for the same price we pay here in Billings where the sugar is made. So if we buy homemade sugar, we have to pay freight to and from Chicago, together with middlemen's profits.

Again I call attention to the wonderful simplicity of God's remedy for this iniquitous system of profit that fleeces his flock. The whole story is told in one word, cooperation. But study the definition of this word well. We rejoice to learn that Lamoni Saints are arranging to stop one monstrous leak in their Zion's bark by operating their own flour mill.

On an average, each person consumes annually two hundred and ninety-four pounds of flour. Ninety-eight pounds of Occident flour now costs $8.40. The Occident paid for our 1916 wheat last fall at the rate of $3.52 for 140 pounds, which made 98 pounds of flour. Profit on by-product over cost of converting 140 pounds of wheat into flour after deducting depreciation, 8 cents. Actual cost of 98 pounds of flour $3.44; profit made on 98 pounds of flour, $4.96.

If all the stakes should take immediate steps to operate their own flour mills and should awake some morning and forget to offer further oblations to the pagan god, Profit, they would save from three dollars to fourteen dollars annually per capita.

Flour is no exception to other necessities of life.

God's ordained plan of cooperation would not only solve the vexed problem of high cost of living, but less than a tithe of the savings divided between producers and consumers would liquidate the church debt in less than a year.

"It is estimated that last year (1913) two billion dollars was expended in the United States on advertising and salesmanship."—Charles Edward Russell.

Publishers of the Ladies' Magazine that was suppressed a few years ago, recently recounted the palmy days of that paper and told of receiving as high as five dollars per line; and if my memory is not at fault, fifteen thousand dollars for a single page advertisement.

The cost of advertising certain breakfast foods exceeds by far all the other expenses attached to that commodity.

The lump cost of transportation of foodstuffs is found to be more than one third what consumers pay for it.

A great amount of public money is spent investigating the vexing problem of high cost of living, and it is evident that more gray matter is consumed trying to conceal rather than explain or expose the real cause.

RELATION OF HIGH COST OF LIVING TO HEALTH

Prominent doctors are now forecasting more general epidemics, especially of pellagrin types among the poor as the natural result of the insane rush for profit on the necessities of life.

The HERALD Editor reminded us not long since that plagues and famine were the natural accompaniments of war. Food adulteration is sure to increase mightily.

Doctor Lechstecker, acting for the New York State Board of Charities, examined 10,707 aid society school children, reported 1,391 suffering with marked deficiency of red corpuscles in the blood, a result of lack of nourishing food.

It is a well-established fact that children of the underworld are far more susceptible to all forms of vertigo, debility, epilepsy, and general depression than children who are well nourished and warmly clad.

The United States Children's Bureau found at Jamestown, Pennsylvania, that the death rate of infants whose fathers earned less than $521 a year, was 255 per 1,000, and was only 84 per 1,000 when their fathers earned at least $1,200 a year.

Colonel Gorgas, who made the Panama Canal Zone one of the healthiest places on earth, said the first measure he would take, if given the problem of cleaning up a big city's health condition, would be to double the wages of every working man in the city.

Every student of infant mortality, no matter what corner of the world is visited, brings back the same story; and that story is that infant mortality is in direct proportion to the parents' income. The smaller the income the bigger the death rate.—Milwaukee Leader.

With these startling facts staring us in the face, the writer dare not advise the pinch and skimp method by which children are under nourished and illy clad as a remedy for the calamity that is upon us. The working people everywhere are being crushed into these practices without asking them to adopt the same.

The whole church has recently been brought to its knees by the nervous collapse of one of our beloved editors. Enough has been written to establish the belief that if the brother had not been overworked and had been properly nourished, he would have escaped this crucifixion and the church been spared the shock.

Economy is a virtue all should practice, but the game of pinch and stint is a niggardly misapplication of sacred duty.

The liberal physical, moral, and mental development of our children is a God-imposed duty.

As a servant of the living God who abominates the squalor of poverty, my counsel to his children is, stop paying from sixty-six to seventy-five per cent of your products to those whose coffers are already bursting, and apply it to nourishment, clothing, and education for the children God has given you.

Cooperation is the all-sufficient and the only remedy. Study well the definition of cooperation.

RELATION OF THE BRANCH PRESIDENT TO THE BRANCH

As nearly as the relation can be stated in a word I would say it is that of "Father." As the earthly father is to provide for the needs of his family so it is the duty of the branch president, as nearly and as completely as possible, to provide for the needs of the branch, spiritually. He is not supposed to provide merely entertainment, but good, substantial food should be supplied. Please read 1 Peter 5: 1-4; Acts 20: 28; and Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

Of course it goes without saying that as the president is to preside over the meetings, including the business meetings, that he must know the rules governing business transactions, known to us as the Book of Rules, if he is to preside properly. If he does not understand the rules correctly, and is not familiar with them, he is almost sure to make mistakes in his rulings. He may be ever so honest and endeavor to rule justly, regardless of his wishes in the matter, but if left to be decided upon the impressions of the moment, he is more than human if his desires do not influence him when deciding questions in which he is vitally interested and the correct decision seems to be against his wishes. On the other hand, if he knows the ruling in the book, or can turn to it readily, it settles it so far as he is concerned, as well as for the rest of the congregation. Also he may rule correctly but the other person may not agree with him, yet if he can refer the objector to the section of the rules governing he settles it without a feeling on the part of the other person that an injustice has been done. Correct rulings, backed by reference to the law, will have a strong tendency to keep everyone satisfied and good-natured and looking upon the branch president with respect, a thing which is absolutely necessary if he is to do his best work. Too, if his rulings along these lines are respected by the congregation, they will be much more willing to respect his word in other matters.

It is necessary that he have the interest of the work at heart if he is to do good work. He should be so interested that he is always ready with suggestions for the good of the work whenever there is occasion to bring up such things, say at business meetings.

When he has new propositions to bring up at the business or any other meetings he should consult with at least a part of his flock before coming to the meeting. Give them a chance to think it over and come prepared to act, rather than expect them to act without previous thought. He also gets the benefit of their suggestions, and sometimes will discover that his idea is not the best, or get ideas that will improve on his. It is not, in my opinion, electioneering to talk matters over with others in order to get at the best procedure. In unity there is strength. The president of the branch needs the good will and help of every member, and if he shows them respect to the extent of consulting with them on important matters, they will naturally be more interested.

The president should help to carry out all good ideas or methods, and not try to defeat them just because they are not his ideas, or because he thinks some other way would be better. If he cannot convince the majority that the other way is better he should work for the best thing he can get into operation. He should be a diplomat. If a measure is harmful and is passed, he should try to carry out the instructions of the body, if legal. If it is not good, he may be able to put it into operation in such a way as to show off its bad qualities prominently and in that way quickly convince a majority that it is not good, when he could not do it by argument. Ofttimes a little diplomacy will succeed where a diplomatic break will hurt the feelings of some very good workers, but who are sensitive, and their efforts are not only lost, but their influence is apt to be felt in the wrong direction. And even though they do not permit their feelings to be hurt, they cannot look upon the president with as much confidence as if his acts and conduct were always so guarded that people did not have to make excuses for his ignorance, or lack of diplomacy.

As the presiding officer, it is his duty to preside over the lower officers when in council, and also to the extent of seeing that their work is looked after properly. He cannot do this intelligently unless he is thoroughly acquainted with the nature of their work, the laws governing it, and the best methods of procedure. If he does not understand the work and laws governing, and the lower officers do not correctly understand them, he cannot correct them, and they may do things which will more than offset all the good he can possibly do. I have in mind a case which came under my observation wherein trouble arose between the teacher and another officer. The branch president also thought he had a grievance, so he took it up and undertook to bring the other officer to task. Not getting satisfaction, he preferred charges and the case came to trial. During the course of the trial one of the elders questioned him regarding the steps taken to right the matter and whether he had properly instructed the teacher. He replied something like this: "Well, brethren, to tell the truth, I have never studied those things much. I have been studying what I thought was more important."

Let us look at the importance of knowing the law in this case. The elders who tried the case were satisfied that the accused brother was not guilty. It is reasonable to suppose that if that president had properly understood the law and its application the case would not have come to trial; a proper investigation out of court would have cleared up the whole matter and everyone, or nearly so at least, would have gone on rejoicing and doing good. As it was, the decision was not satisfactory to the president, and not being informed as to the proper procedure, he seemed unable to comprehend the situation and lost interest in the work. Of course the rest of the members who thought as he did lost interest and drifted backward, losing to the church their fellowship and the good they might have done, to say nothing about the harm such conduct does the work by way of example to the people of the world, and the discouragement to others. In that case a branch was practically killed and the work in that place materially hampered because that branch president did not understand thoroughly how to proceed with a case of difficulty between members. Which is the more important, taking proper care of the sheep already in the fold, or neglecting them to go out after those which have never yet recognized the fold. The pastor is to feed the flock.

In order to properly feed the flock he must know what they need. It is not very strengthening to the old sheep to continually feed them on milk, because there might possibly be a stranger present. If the members are properly fed the result in their lives will do much more for the outsider than all the preaching of the branch president, besides the good resulting to the members. Personal visitation among the members, getting next to them in confidential matters and helping them out of their difficulties, especially those who feel discouraged, will, in my judgment, together with diligent study to meet those issues, better qualify the president of the branch to feed his flock than twice the time put in in study without the personal contact.

The leader should be sustained by the people, not because it is their duty or because they elected him, but because he qualifies himself to do the work correctly, because he sets an example, both in his personal conduct and in respecting the rights of others.

He should teach the people to respect the other branch officers. In this he should set the example. He should teach the other officers how to conduct themselves so as to command the respect of the laity, and should teach the laity why they should respect the officers, and it ought not to be just because they have been elected to those positions, or because they are trying to do their duty. It should be because the officers are doing their work correctly and consequently will be of help, real help, to the members. It is for the good of the members that the officers should labor, not because it is their duty.

The branch president should labor to be able to help his members solve many of the everyday problems they have to meet, and at the present time most of them are meeting them in a haphazard way, without any well-directed help from anyone. The question arises frequently as to the propriety of reading fiction, dancing, playing games on Sunday, theater going, bad company, etc. The branch president being the father of the flock should be the one to whom all could feel free to go with reasonable assurance they will receive good, wholesome, and intelligent advice. These are some of the questions he should try to qualify to answer intelligently:

Is it wrong to read fiction? If it is, why? If some kinds of fiction are good, what are the kinds? What are the real benefits to be derived? Or if harmful, what are the bad effects, and how is the reader to detect them. How can the member tell what kinds of books to read? It is not enough to tell them fiction is good, if they don't believe it, or that it is not good if they think it is. They should be told how they may detect for themselves. When you have imparted the information in that way you have settled the question for good with them, and they in turn will help you do the work by telling others.

The same is true of dancing. If dancing is wrong it is not enough to tell the person who likes to dance and has not yet learned the evils of dancing that it is an evil practice. It is necessary to show them the situation so plainly that they may detect for themselves the evils and then they are satisfied.

If the church has taken any action against theater going, and it has, the lover of the theater is much better satisfied and can much more easily refrain from going if he or she is instructed in such a way that he can see, or comprehend, just wherein the evil lies.

Teach the young the evils of bad company in such an intelligent manner that they can see it for themselves and many of them will then shun bad company who will not otherwise.

The branch president should know the value to the membership of taking and reading the church papers and reading the church books. Much might be said on this.

We frequently hear a good deal said about the necessity of cultivating the fruits of the Spirit. How can we best do that? How can the member who is naturally ugly and unkind, cultivate the habit of kindness and gentleness? How can the member who is naturally haughty cultivate successfully the spirit of meekness? How can the one who is given to evil thinking learn to think good, elevating thoughts? It is not enough to tell a person that he should think properly unless he is told how to do it. How can one overcome a vile temper? How can one who finds it easy to hold hard feelings overcome the fault? If he is inclined to be melancholy, how can he overcome that and cultivate a cheerful disposition, etc.?

The result of conquering these faults will be a happy congregation. Happiness is contagious, and methinks when a new member is brought into such a congregation he will be pleased, and the better he knows the members the better he will be satisfied with his religion and we will have less backsliders and indifferent ones.

Other important questions are such as courting, choosing a companion. Is the branch president qualified to give wise counsel on these topics? It would not be practical for him to make the choice for the other fellow, but if properly qualified on the subject he can instruct the other fellow so he can make a better choice. This is one of the subjects which is given less consideration, in comparison to its importance, than almost any other problem our young have to meet.

If a member's home life is unhappy, how can he go about it to bring about peace and harmony in his home? Where will he go for advice if he cannot get it from the president of the branch, the pastor? How can our members best conserve their health? If the wife is a member and the husband is not, can the president advise her wisely how to conduct herself so she will be most likely to convert him?

To what extent should our people engage in athletics?

What effort should be made to improve musical talents? How can it best be done?

There is plenty of work for everyone, if the work is properly organized. The president is the one to see that it is done and that everyone who will work has the work to do. While the laity cannot make official visits, they can visit, help, and encourage. It is not the number of official visits that counts, but the amount of real, effective work. Many times when the officers cannot go, and sometimes where they can go, a good lay member can go and do as much or possibly in some cases more good by encouraging and helping the discouraged, bereaved, sick, and poor.

An employment bureau could be organized under the direction of the officers so all the members can report vacancies, want of employment, etc., to a common head.

The officers can all do a great deal of work at the meetings by watching for the discouraged and indifferent (those who manifest by their actions that they feel that way but do not say anything about it) and making a special effort to speak to them and say some encouraging word without letting the member know that they have singled them out as needing encouragement. This can be done more or less systematically if directed by the president.

I have known of one instance where an individual attended most of the meetings but did not partake of the sacrament for a couple of years without a single branch officer saying a word to him about it. It evidently was either overlooked or neglected and no effort made to ascertain why the member was refraining.

The president should keep in touch with the auxiliaries and make use of them. They can be used to splendid advantage to accomplish many things and at the same time do the members good. Some of the things they can do for the president, or at his suggestion, are such as looking after church repairs, beautifying the lawn, help the poor, prepare for special events, visit the sick, hold special prayer meetings in the homes of shut-ins.

The president, together with the other officers, should plan their work ahead for years perhaps, (and not work on the hand-to-mouth system.)

Personally I am not in sympathy with the idea which prevails in some localities, that where there is more than one elder they should take turns acting as president of the branch. I believe when we get the right man in the right place we should keep him there until there is some real good reason to make a change. Some men make better presiding officers than others, and each branch is entitled to the best it can get. If the branch president is using the material in the branch to the best advantage he will have as much for each elder as the elder is willing to do, and there is no reason why he should not develop along useful lines without being president of the branch. It is certainly not right to hamper the branch and the church work in order to give an inferior officer, or one of inferior ability along certain lines, "his turn" at being president of the branch in order to satisfy his vanity.

In nearly every talk we hear by any of the priesthood, to the Sunday school or Religio, when anything is said about the members fitting themselves for church work the idea of doing missionary work is held out to them. We have more missionaries to-day than the church has the money to send out into the field. We have many branches which are most poorly run, and there is so much backbiting, jealousy, and careless living, that it is nearly sure spiritual death to a new member to be taken among them. Why not encourage our young men and women to fit themselves for local branch work? The greatest need of the church to-day, in the way of workers, is competent branch officers, those who comprehend the opportunities and requirements of the work in its fullest extent and have the ability to properly and effectively direct the work.

We believe all members should spread the gospel as they have opportunity to do so without neglecting their first duty. I certainly think the first duty of the branch officer, in church work, is to the branch, and until he has done all there is to be done, which he can do, for the branch and its members, he is not true to the trust imposed upon him if he spends his time and energies in trying to convert the outsider when his whole duty to the member is not done.

The wise branch president will try to develop the material he has in the way of new and young priesthood, particularly priests, teachers, and deacons. He will not, however, put them up to preach to the congregation when he is reasonably sure they cannot interest and edify the members. I do not believe there is any occasion to bore the congregation to develop young speakers. If the young priest or teacher will attend to the other work of his office and do it diligently and studiously and prayerfully, he will find plenty to occupy his time, and all he can cope with. By meeting the members in their homes and trying to meet their difficulties he will learn what they need and will store up in his mind the answers to many of their problems and when he attempts to preach he can instruct and interest them. They will not be bored by his poor delivery, if he tries to do his best in that respect, if he really presents the food which satisfies and feeds or nourishes them.

When all of these things and the others which will suggest themselves are well done, then go after the outsider and you will have a branch which is a credit to the work and it will strengthen the outsider, or new member, to bring him into such a branch.

THE GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH

Who is now head of the Greek Church? What is the status quo of the Greek Church since the removal of Nicholas II, who was popularly believed to be its official head? It seems that the general idea is that the czars of Russia have held rank in the church equal to that of the popes in the Roman Church, but it is not the case.

In former times, before the changes wrought by Peter the Great, the Muscovite czar was considered by his people as the equal of the patriarch of Moscow in the religious order and rank of the priesthood. The czar and the patriarch walked abreast in all state and church ceremonies where pomp and pageantry were displayed. The consent of both dignitaries was had on all occasions with the important matter of both church and state affairs.

The opinion of the patriarch was considered the more important, as it was he who placed the crown on the head of the czar and confirmed upon him the divine authority of his office. The patriarch was honored above the sovereign who was always made to feel that he was of secondary importance by having to consult the former on matters of both church and state and get his consent.

When Peter the Great came to the throne, he saw in the incumbent patriarch a dangerous rival, therefore he abolished that rival and moved the capital from Moscow to Saint Petersburg; and the authority of the patriarch was also transferred to the holy synod which was intended to be composed of the body of bishops, not only of Rome, but of all Christendom. This is apparent by the fact that a vacant chair has ever stood ready for the Pope of Rome at the solemn assembly of the synod, and now stands beside the vacant chair which the czar formerly occupied.

The members of the holy synod were bishops and archbishops appointed by the czar and the metropolitans of Saint Petersburg and Moscow, and Kieff, who were ipso facto members of the synod. The three metropolitans were equal in rank and the senior in office presided, who also in late generations crowned the sovereign; but always yielded preference to him when on rare occasions they came together on some state pageant or ceremonial.

The see of Petrograd, in late years thought to be the most important in Russia, was occupied by a notable monk named Anthony, the author of some standard works on the theology of the Greek Church. Through the influence of the noted Raspoutine (Rasputin) he was at his death succeeded by an ignorant village priest who went by the name of Pitirim and controlled the court and the capitol. The contrast between the character and accomplishments of Anthony and Pitirim were very much marked and the government that supplanted the czar soon asked the latter to vacate his office.

Pitirim needed only a suggestion to quit his function. He had practiced priestcraft until he had pretty well filled coffers; so he retired to an abbey. The church leaders then began to look about for a metropolitan candidate to fill the quorum. The spirit of the revolution was evident when a prominent bishop, Monsignor Andre, now of the see of Onfa, was nominated for the place. But the new regime refused to permit him to occupy the office. To add to the turmoil it was rumored that the ancient patriarchate was to be reestablished; but the provisional government refused to acquiesce; and the recent council did not even mention the vacancy in the see of Petrograd.

So Monsignor Andre who had come to the capital had to return disappointed to his bishopric. The quorum of the metropolitan yet lacks a member. The government of the Greek Church in Russia seems to be in as chaotic a condition at present as the civil government. It looks as though the beginning of the end is here.

In the future, an angel shall cry "mightily, and with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the Great is fallen." (Revelation 18: 2.) The Prophet Habakkuk had a vision which is "yet for an appointed time, at the end it [the appointed time] shall speak, and not lie." (Habakkuk 2: 3.)

The Apostle John was shown things that were to be fulfilled in the future. (Revelation 4: 6.)

And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.—Revelation 16: 13, 14.

In the seventeenth chapter John says he saw the woman, "and upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.

"And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth."

The great city is Rome, the seat of the Roman Catholic Church, which the Greek Church acknowledges as the mother church. The harlots are the offspring or daughters (churches) descended from the mother church at Rome. The abominations of the earth are creeds, traditions, and doctrines contrary to the word of God which are taught by the Babylon of churches, unauthorized by the Master in his everlasting gospel.

The Book of Mormon says:

Behold, there are, save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God, belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth.—1 Nephi 3: 220-223.

First Nephi 7: 26-29 says:

And the blood of that great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads . . . and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord.

LOVE

Love is the fulfilling of the law, not because it stands instead of other things, truth, justice, etc., but because it leads on to these and supplies the moral motive power for them. (Booke Herford.)

There is a thought contained in the above which is worthy of our notice. Love is one of God's choicest gifts to man, it quickens, and strengthens our souls; marks our course in life. And in whose bosom it is found there is also found a will to learn, and when listening they will hear the right word. It is only by the spirit of truth that truths are sensed and fully comprehended, and fixed in the heart.

For everyone who doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he who loveth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest. And he who obeyeth the truth, the works which he doeth they are of God.—John 3: 20, 22.

God accepts no offering, or obedience, which is not the free-will offering of a loving heart. God is love. Jesus said, "My father is greater than I." When people called Jesus "good Master," he said, "Why call ye me good? No one is good but God." If Jesus considered his Father's goodness so much superior to his, what about his love compared with our love? God is infinite in all his attributes: goodness, mercy, and love. We sing, "No earthly father loves like thee; no mother half so mild." He that cometh to God must not only believe that he is, but believe him to be such a character in all his ways.

It takes study, together with the Spirit of God, to enable us to be acquainted with God. One has said, "It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers the honey, but its abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet." It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth that will prove the choicest, wisest, and strongest Christian.

To get that thought established in our minds that God is such a character, it should inspire our minds with such desires as are elevating and exalting, increasing our faith and confidence in him. It will do it if that precious gift of love is found within our hearts. Jesus is our Savior, but he will not save us unless we permit him to do so. Jesus said, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice." (John 18: 37.) Truth is consistent with itself, is permanent, and cannot be moved, it is the only rightful claim to acceptance, will not evade, but challenge examination and comparison.

If we have power to draw the influence of love to us, we have also the power to drive it away. Our love is many times defective because our faith and love to God is defective. He that loveth God will keep his commandments: and he shall know the truth and the truth shall set him free. The song, "Jesus paid it all," is a pitiful one. There is something for us to do. The gospel of Jesus Christ is a reality. When people get so spiritualized that they lose capacity for practical life they grow away from religious good health. Pity and common sense should never be separated. It behooves us as Saints of God to be awake.

Brother G. T. Griffiths writes, "Very many trying and fiery trials await us in the near future, and only those who confide in our heavenly Father will receive of his protection while passing through the unpleasant experiences that confront us."

Paul wrote, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." (Romans 9: 28.) Adversity and sorrow might be expected, as well as prosperity and joy, while passing through our Gethsemane. This saying is true, "Rather walk in the dark with God than to walk alone in the light." God, therefore, being all-wise, all-loving, and all-powerful, it follows as a natural consequence that everything God has done, and everything God has suggested, must necessarily be the wisest, the most loving, and the most powerful that can be. God help us all to be faithful in the trying hours.

SOME "SCIENCE" SAYINGS

In the sixth chapter of Timothy we read in verses twenty and twenty-one, of some professing "science, falsely so called," and that because of this false science, some had "erred concerning the faith."

In those days supposed science as applied to things pertaining to the faith was a source of error. The world has not yet passed that same danger zone in this great age of "advanced thought." There are always at least two sides to every proposition, the front and the rear.

Error sometimes presents an attractive front, but a side, or a rear view, reveals bad patchwork and ugly discrepancies. The truth presents an agreement of each part with every other part when viewed from any angle. Truth may be joined to error by ignorance or for stage effect, but careful observation reveals the bad work; for truth and error were never united in perfect joint, and though the attempt has been made in numerous ways for thousands of years, a perfect union cannot be effected. In view of these facts, let us have a glance at some of the modern science sayings.

"Wrong thoughts are in human beliefs only and the wrong itself has no foundation in fact."

Then the act of theft or murder is not wrong, for if there is no wrong except in the mind and thought, these acts could not be wrong, for they have gone beyond the stage of thought and leaped from the mind into deeds of actual performance. The truth is: that when evil enters the thought and is deliberately planned out, there wrong exists in fact, and the soul that conceived and gave shape to such thought is already covered with guilt; but when the evil springs from thought into deed others are wronged, for there must be victims; and in this manner the awfully real fact of wrong is multiplied.

"Wrong thoughts are no part of consciousness." If that statement is correct, what a world of people are walking around unconscious.

"So long as we believe in both good and evil, we fail to discern the truth; to destroy all belief of evil is the only way out."

With sin, wickedness, and crime standing out in such awful reality in the thought and doings of men in all the world, it might still not be surprising that a few insane persons would deny the existence of evil, but when people who are sane shall affirm in the name of science that evil has no existence in fact, and that supposed sin is but an erroneous and imaginary creature of mortal mind, such torpor of unconsciousness seems to present in hopeless case.

"May we never forget that the only power in the universe is Divine Mind."

But the word of God says: "We wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with principalities and against powers." Also that the mission of Jesus Christ was that men might be delivered from the "power of Satan unto God." If the scriptures do not teach that there are two powers, one of good and one of evil, they do not teach anything.

"The world is losing its view of a personal Christ in its conception of the allness of Christian truth."

Certainly. And the world will wake up some day to the fact that in the "allness" of things there are some few things not Christian truth.

"By the aid of science the world is coming in possession of the ever present Christ idea."

But the word declares that Christ went away, promising to return again in such power that every eye shall see him when he comes, and further states that: "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Evidently those who have the ever present Christ idea will not be looking for his return, and they will be among the surprised number who are taken as by a "thief in the night."

"Human consciousness purged by the dross of materialism is resurrected." But the resurrection that Jesus partook of gave him such a material body that he partook of fish and ate in the presence of his disciples; and he said: "See me and handle me, for a spirit hath not flesh and bone as ye see me have."

"All who insist upon the reality of materialism, have not partaken of the resurrection." No, all we who are not unconscious enough to prevent us from being aware that we have a material body, would consider it a breach of good manners to attempt to be resurrected, from the bodily death before such death occurs.

"Tares are wrong thoughts bound in bundles and all to be destroyed." But Jesus said, "The tares are the children of the wicked one." (Matthew 13:38.) To talk of binding evil thoughts together in bundles and burning them, is equal to the idea of catching a sackful of echoes and stringing them as beads; for as an echo must be the product of originated sound, and sound in order to be must have an originator, even though it be nothing but a stone rolling down the mountain; so thought must be the product of mind, and the existence of mind cannot be unless there be individuality; and it is to these various units of individuality that the word of God points saying, "Some do good and some do evil; and the evil are the children of the wicked one who as tares shall be bound in bundles unto burning."

"The whole plan of salvation is a mental and moral condition of consciousness." Possibly in the sense that mental and moral conditions command and control the physical, but a denial of the reality of the physical as a material substance in fact, is a reflection upon the mental; and if Satan can have his way far enough in that deception he will make it as uncertain for the patient to determine the exact line between the moral and immoral as it now seems to be for some people to distinguish from the unreal, the real truth that sin, pain, sickness, and death are the facts of experience.

"When man can see that all power is given to do good and none to do evil, then the kingdom of heaven is open to him."

There seems to be a little of some other power than the power of good operating in Europe these days, but then that may be an illusion of mortal mind—if so, the illusion is worse in spots, and one cannot help but feel that the spots where the illusion makes it look like holes would be good places to keep away from at present for fear that something might slip and some little power be accidentally given to evil.

The word says, "Your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour." But look to science, so-called. "Evil is a self-constituted lie." Yes? But how can there be a lie without a liar?

"The omnipotence of God is not an argument but a fact." Very true, but in the omnipotent wisdom of the omnipotent God has he not granted liberties attendant upon the free exercises of the individual will of his creatures? Has he not permitted those liberties to extend to certain limitations? When such granted liberties are pursued even to conditions incompatible with his holiness, is this an abridgment of the omnipotence of God so long as he retains the power to command all other powers saying: thus far shalt thou go, no farther? Most assuredly not.

"The five physical senses are not the reality of life." No, but by means of these senses life receives information of outside facts; as for example, it is by the use of the sight of the eye that the reader is here informed of this invitation to take a mental view of some of these sayings from their rear as well as from their front.

"To understand that God is all good causes us to partake of the resurrection and the life." It is certainly true that God is all good, and it is also as certain that there are some things that are not all God.

"I am God and there is none else beside." This is a misstatement of the word; there is no scripture for it. The statement that God is, and that there is none else, is in the sense that there is no other God—no superior power.

Let no man fear to steer his ship through the known upon the great ocean of "science," or to thrust out as an explorer into the vast unknown, or by the laws of true science all things that are, have place, whether in the heavens afar, or the earth beneath our feet; whether in the realm of the physical or spiritual; but beware of the deceptive glimmer of that which the Apostle Paul said was "science so-called," for it is an open sea to the doldrums and spiritual death lurks above and beneath its placid fathoms.

JAMES E. YATES.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AN INTERESTING PROPHECY

[The following was contributed in a letter to the Saint Louis Globe-Democrat, for February 20, 1918, by Walter H. Saunders.—EDITORS.]

In the preface to the third edition of a standard work on international law by William Edward Hall, an Englishman, written on August 1, 1889, twenty-five years before the outbreak of the world war, the author uses this remarkable language, which would indicate that he not only had vision, but the gift of prophecy:

Looking back over the last couple of centuries we see international law at the close of each fifty years in a more solid position than that which it occupied at the beginning of the period. Progressively it has taken firmer hold, it has extended its sphere of operation, it has ceased to trouble itself about trivial formalities, it has more and more dared to grapple in detail with the fundamental facts in the relations of states. The area within which it reigns beyond dispute has, in that time, been infinitely enlarged, and it has been greatly enlarged within the memory of living men. But it would be idle to pretend that this progress has gone on without check.

In times when wars have been both long and bitter, in moments of revolutionary passion, on occasions when temptation and opportunity of selfishness on the part of neutrals have been great, men have fallen back into disregard of law and even into true lawlessness. And it would be idle also to pretend that Europe is not now, in great likelihood, moving towards a time at which the strength of international law will be too hardly tried.

Probably in the next great war the questions which have accumulated during the last half century and more will all be given their answers at once. Some hates, moreover, will crave for satisfaction; much envy and greed will be at work; but, above all, and at the bottom of all, there will be the hard sense of necessity.

Whole nations will be in the field; the commerce of the world may be on the sea to win or lose; national existences will be at stake; men will be tempted to do anything which will shorten hostilities and tend to a decisive issue. Conduct in the next great war will certainly be hard; it is very doubtful if it will be scrupulous, whether on the part of belligerents or neutrals; and most likely the next war will be great. But there can be very little doubt that if the next war is unscrupulously waged, it also will be followed by a reaction towards increased stringency of law.

In a community, as in an individual, passionate excess is followed by a reaction of lassitude and to some extent of conscience. On the whole, the collective seems to exert itself in this way more surely than the individual conscience; and in things within the scope of international law, conscience, if it works less impulsively, can at least work more freely than in home affairs. Continuing temptation ceases with the war. At any rate, it is a matter of experience, that times in which international law has been seriously disregarded have been followed by periods in which the European conscience has done penance by putting itself under straiter obligations than those which it before acknowledged.

There is no reason to suppose that things will be otherwise in the future. I therefore look forward with much

"I believe I should have been swept away by the flood of French infidelity, if it had not been for one thing: the remembrance of the time when my sainted mother used to make me kneel by her side, taking my little hands in hers, and caused me to repeat the Lord's Prayer."—John Randolph.

misgiving to the manner in which the next great war will be waged, but with no misgiving at all as to the character of the rules which will be acknowledged ten years after its termination by comparison with the rules now considered to exist.

It must be a source of abiding satisfaction to all who confidently believe in the uplift of the human race that right will triumph over might, and that liberty will not perish from the earth, to read this inspiring prophecy.

The excesses of passion are succeeded by the application of the immutable laws of justice, and it is as true now as it was in the ancient Hebrew days: "Righteousness exalteth a nation." To this standard the world will return, and, however much the rules of right and justice in international relations are temporarily obscured by fierce hatreds engendered by fierce conflict, it is certain that these excesses are transient, and future generations will enjoy the blessings of a covenanted peace, bought with the precious blood of this generation.

The world is steadily progressing from darkness to light, and the eloquent prophecy of the author will, within a decade, be largely realized. Ad astra per aspera is the settled law of life, and it applies to nations as well as to individuals. "In the dawning of the morning, when the mists have rolled away," a new light of truth and justice "shall shine upon the face of all peoples," and the great German nation in defeat, paradoxical as it may seem, will be greater than in savage victory, because the hour of its spiritual emancipation will have struck.

The improvement in international relations also necessarily means a corresponding improvement in the governmental relations of each nation to its own people. Graft, pull, and all of their hideous consequences will be largely eliminated from governmental functions, and governments in fact, as well as in theory, will be the efficient instruments of well-ordered national life and of the regulated liberty of the individual.

NIETZSCHE

To seek comfort in the fact that Nietzsche died in the madhouse is as craven as it is unpsychological; for his impeachment, his glorification of a splendid paganism, his apotheosis of the natural man of chivalric honor as the extreme opposite of the Christian virtues, in his chief trend at the acme of his power. It would be only subtle dishonesty to dismiss his views as merely pathological. Nor in view of his great vogue is it true or fair to regard him as an isolated, exceptional, and therefore negligible influence. To brand him as the arch skeptic, heretic, and apostate (he descended from three generations of clergymen) is mere rhetoric. Neither must his attempt to apply the principles of the struggle for existence and of natural selection in the social, moral, historic field discredit evolution, although we must recognize that genetics and eugenics constitute in some sense a predisposition to the acceptance of some of his opinions. Nor must we go too far in conceiving him as the national philosopher of Germany, as Hegel once was, in the sense that his doctrine of force and that might makes right is that of German militarism, although it is not lacking rapport with Bernhardt. He has scorching words for the blond Teuton beast, and even boasted that he was not of its stock; yet despite his feud with Wagner, he was not out of sympathy with his "Das Deutschentum musst das Christentum Siegen," or with his offering of a Norse substitute for Jesus in the Parsifal. One cannot but raise the question of affinity between Nietzsche and the Machtpolitik, militarism and strategy which assumes that nations are above mortality and that the ethics of private life does not apply to them. He said the great need of Europe was a colossal war, and that nations, like men, supremely dread inferiority and chiefly love titanic aggressiveness.

H. S. Chamberlain, in Foundations of the Nineteenth Century, more or less in Nietzsche's spirit urges that most of the great deeds and men of the world are German, and that Teutonism must now seize its inheritance and use every means to take and hold its rightful place in the center of the world's stage and make past history only prolegomena. Some have even questioned whether Germany herself was in heart and core Christian, and whether the God the Kaiser worships is not a tribal deity like Yahveh or rather Thor, with a mailed fist instead of his hammer. The Teutons were converted only in the thirteenth century, and Luther soon threw off the yoke of his divinity till now his very historic existence is denied. It is also often asked whether modern business and competition are not in fact dominated more than is realized by the Nietzschean supermorals. Does the worship of success imply that good is what able, and bad what weak, men do? Is modern man, in fine, only a link which ought as soon as possible to be a missing link, between the primitive troglodytes and the superman whom Nietzsche puts in the place of God, whom he declared dead? Are Freud and Pfister right in insisting that the present war has stripped from man all the thin disguises of religion and morality, so that he now stands revealed as what he is, a beast whose chief passion is to kill and take all he can?—G. Stanly Hall, in Jesus the Christ, In the Light of Psychology.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Here Is the Help You Are Seeking

It is indeed a great satisfaction to your editor to present for your reading and examination this week, the following most excellent outline for work from the supervisor of the Home and Child Welfare Bureau, Sister Lydia Thomas Wight, of Lamoni.

One has only to glance over this comprehensive outline to feel impressed with the amount of thought and intelligent observation and research its author has put upon the subject, and her consecration to the duties her position places upon her, is still more apparent.

The responsibility of a leader of men or women includes very often the task of arousing and stimulating a desire for advancement and improvement, as well as that of supplying and feeding already recognized and expressed needs. Sister Wight has managed, in this outline, to touch both phases mentioned, for who can even read the outline without sensing at once a desire for earnest study and application of the true and helpful things planned?

No woman in the world should be more truly awake to the privileges of womanhood and motherhood in this peculiarly vital age than those in our church. Given the beneficent light of the everlasting gospel, and expected by the Giver of that light to hold the beacon high for the guidance of the many who "sit in darkness," none of us should feel our duty done until we have so qualified, so labored, and so progressed towards the beautiful ideal held up before us, that we indeed feel ourselves "workmen" who have shown ourselves "approved of God."

A mother's work is fundamental. Almost all the mistakes of this benighted world rest upon the mistakes of parents—or, to put it the other, and perhaps more just way, upon the lack of proper parental care and training. This lack may come through ignorance, or indifference, or deliberate neglect; or it may come through misfortune in being deprived of a parent, or the unfortunate circumstances which demand a parent's whole time, to the exclusion of the rights or needs of the child. Concerning the two latter phases the remedy lies farther away from the individual home or parent, but with the first-mentioned each individual parent has directly to do, and its results are directly traceable to him. No one has excuse for ignorance in this day of opportunity; no one has excuse for indifference in this day of repeated warning; and still less has one excuse for deliberate neglect in this day of turmoil, with a spectacle of woe and failure everywhere spread before his eyes.

A child which is shoved from a parent's knee, unarmed by knowledge which it is his right to possess concerning himself and his relation to his Maker, is no less an object of pity than one whose body is unwarmed and un nourished for lack of proper food and clothing. A child whose health is undermined because of unsanitary conditions in its home or school, or because of lack of proper sleep owing to ignorant or indulgent parents, is likely to become, sooner or later, a ward of the State, even as is the one whose feet are left to stray through the maze of misguided amusements or "pleasures." There is no place for a woman to stop with safety, short of acquainting herself with every sort of danger, mental, physical, moral, and spiritual which threatens her child and her home, and then sets herself the task of escaping that danger, overcoming that menace, by arming herself with all the light, and all the determination, and all the consecration possible for her to reach and appropriate. Let us have the slogan "Only the best" for our children and our homes, and let us spare ourselves neither time, energy, nor painstaking thought to accomplish that for them.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Home and Child Welfare Work

The Home and Child Welfare Bureau has as its aim, this year, the outlining and presenting of plans whereby organized women may work to secure for their community conditions which make for the physical, mental, and religious health of their children.

The general outline to be followed, insofar as it is practicable, is presented here. Besides the work suggested in it, we desire to assist mothers and teachers in making practical application of the principles and laws which operate in the development of child life in the home; the principles and laws should be learned by study in the mothers' and teachers' problems classes.

OUTLINE FOR HOME AND CHILD WELFARE WORK

Health or Physical Welfare

1. Foods and their care. The correct care of foods is the work of both the individual and the community. The community, not the individual, can secure cleanliness in the care of food by the grocer, the dairyman, the butcher, etc., but the individual is responsible for its condition after it gets into the home. Below are a few of the lines for both individual and concerted action.

The sanitary kitchen. Care of ice box, dishtowels, sinks.

Milk inspection. The real saving in paying a higher price for certified milk, how to secure it, how it prevents infant mortality.

Screened provisions. Comparison of bacteria in screened and unscreened foods, how to get merchants to screen their provisions.

2. Sanitary surroundings. How they are conducive to health.

Proper disposal of garbage. The danger of garbage piles or cans, especially in hot weather; the value of clean-up week in the community.

The fly pest. Its significance and how to get rid of it.

Ventilation. Improper ventilation at public meetings and what to do about it. Home ventilation.

3. Exercise. How much and what kind should a growing child have. Work and its value; dangers of too little or too much.

The value of play. What and how to play, organized and directed play, supervised play at school and how to secure it, public playgrounds and how to use them.

4. Sleep. Do you know how many hours of sleep children of various ages should have? Are social affairs for the young overworked in your community? Supervision of social hours possible by organized effort.

5. Public health nurse. Need for a community nurse, and how to make one possible and practicable for your community.

6. Medical inspection in schools. Detection of adenoids, enlarged tonsils, defective eyesight and hearing, malnutrition. Adjustable seats, proper lighting, proper placing of blackboards are shown to be helps in retrieving eye trouble and bad posture.

7. School feeding. Malnutrition in childhood, its symptoms, causes, and results. Warm lunches practicable even in rural schools.

Mental and Moral Welfare

1. In the home. Necessity for attractive homes. Simplicity and comforts in home furnishing and decorating. Correct pictures, books, music, and their value in developing mental and moral natures.

Story-telling. How to tell a story; what stories are best to tell at various ages.

Habit training. Courtesy in the home, cleanliness, neatness, speed and accuracy in work, self-control, development of individuality.

2. In the community.

Morals in the schools. Does your system encourage cramming, cheating, lazy thinking, truancy? How can mothers work with teachers to offset these troubles? Parent-teachers' associations and their value.

Standard of school dress. How they affect the children of the community.

The motion picture. Value as a public recreation, necessity for censorship. It is possible for every community to have clean pictures. How shall we secure them?

The development of boy life. Utilizing the gang spirit; how to develop in them a sense of good citizenship. How to help the boy discover his possibilities. Keeping the confidence of the boy. Hygiene and the boy.

3. Religious Education. The danger of the over-sentimental idea in religious teaching. The value of making religion an everyday religion, of making it a "play the game square" idea to boys. The mother's place in religious training.

This outline is not absolute or final. As our wisdom increases, changes will appear. We expect to present articles in the HERALD column on these subjects. Sincerity of purpose and determination to do will win us success.

Our Approaching Convention

We publish this week the program which has been outlined for our coming convention, desiring to not only call the attention of the women to the plans which have been laid, but to urge every one of them to determine, right here and now, that nothing shall prevent her from attending these sessions. It has been a source of much disappointment to many who are so eager that our church women should avail themselves of every opportunity to understand the workings of the woman organization in our midst, to observe the apparent indifference shown by many of them on similar occasions, in the past. Last spring there were many splendid addresses by some of the best qualified men in the service of the church, as well as women who are consecrating their lives to an intelligent performance of duty, and it should become a part of the intentions of every woman who attends conference to listen to those things which are conceived and offered with the special good of the women in mind.

The opening address by our church president, followed by that of his wife, former presiding officer over our auxiliary and long in a position to vision the work of women clearly, will no doubt be well attended. No less should be the following meetings which will serve, as little else can do so well, to give the women from the small branches and districts, an idea of the scope and aims of the auxiliary. The messages you glean from this meeting with the workers in this woman's movement, are what you will wish to carry back to the women in your branch, to imbue them with the desire to band themselves together for advancement, or to stimulate them to fresh endeavors, that we may all become a unit force in the work—the serious work—that is before this church at the present time! Zion cannot be redeemed without intelligent cooperation of the women of the church, now, can it?

An Eastern Auxiliary Active

NEW BEDFORD, MASSACHUSETTS

Sister Cora Hulton writes of the activities of our auxiliary at New Bedford, a group which, though small in number, managed to roll up a good record for 1917. Various sales were held, at which articles of fancy work, such as aprons, ribbon handbags, handkerchiefs, lace, tatting, match safes, hatpin holders, embroidered towels, etc., as well as pop corn, candy, and peanuts, were offered for sale, netted them $115. She mentions good profit made from selling sweet chocolate, purchased at wholesale prices. One novel event was a "potato pie" supper, held at the home of their president. They feel encouraged for the coming year, and plan to do even better, desiring to be of service in the vineyard of the Lord.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Visit to Camp Kearney

Following the trip through Camp Kearney with Bishop McGuire and party, an invitation was secured through the Y. M. C. A. for Brother Rushton to deliver two educational addresses to the soldiers in encampment, on February 13 and 14.

The writer was privileged to accompany Brother Rushton, and we had a delightful time. The officials of the Y. M. C. A. were extremely courteous and obliging. We were given automobile transportation at night from the camp to San Diego, and afforded other accommodations by Doctors Stevens and Voris, and others. They also gave us invaluable aid in arranging for musicians from among the "boys" attending part of the lectures. The welcome word was finally passed that the speaker's addresses were entirely satisfactory, that he had reached the men. He was extended a cordial invitation to return whenever possible.

The first evening "Y" No. 3 was filled to its capacity, about fourteen hundred men being present. The address was along the lines of efficiency as produced in the services of the great corporations of the world.

The second evening "Y" No. 1 was also filled, even the standing room being taken up. This service was directed by Mr. Burr of the Y. M. C. A. with the writer as chorister. We had a chorus of men's voices and the piano, violin, and flute, and a song service composed of gospel hymns interspersed with war songs, was indulged in for about forty-five minutes. The speaker enlarged upon his subject, making it cover the subject of efficiency, necessity of God, winning the war, and "after-war needs," and his lecture met with the instant approval of the men.

In the camp we were guests at the officers' mess by favor of Lieutenant Young. Judging by the familiarity of Brother Young with the officers, he stands in very high esteem. He is trying to keep all the church boys together and waives the officer's formalities in inviting the church members to his quarters for a little service whenever possible, and he has received much encouragement in his office as elder while doing his duties there in the camp. They are a fine lot of church members, twenty in all.

Surely the God of justice will be pleased with the efforts of these young men and all others who are undertaking to end the awful atrocities now being perpetrated.

No Place to Stop

A long time has elapsed since we contributed anything to the pages of the HERALD. It is not because there has been nothing to write about, but we have too often listened to the deceptive voice of procrastination who advises always to wait for a more convenient time, and let those write who are more capable of edifying the body, and so we waited.

We rejoice to read the reports of the progress the work is making throughout the church. We realize that we are indeed living in the hastening time, and that the work is moving rapidly, both in the church and in the world.

But the all-important question for each individual to answer is, "Am I moving onward and upward with the church by any effort on my part, or am I being carried by others? Or worse still, am I placing obstacles in the progress of the work?" These are pertinent questions to be answered by each individual, to himself or to herself.

As many of you readers know, the work in this place had a hard struggle to live, but through the efforts of Brother Parker, David Williams, and others, about four years ago when several united with the church, the work has gradually revived. The secretary's record gives us credit for one hundred and fifty-nine members, but less than fifty of that number live here in the branch. Our numbers have increased by reason of other branches being disorganized and their letters being placed in the Rhodes Branch.

Within the last two years a little church home has been built and paid for, and was dedicated December 30, 1917. This is an event toward which the Saints have long looked forward, with hope deferred. But it is written, "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life." (Proverbs 13: 12.)

Truly, many times our hearts grew sick with the struggle. But now we are feeling that the work stands upon a surer footing than before. We have a good Sunday school and Religio, a mid-week prayer meeting, and preaching twice every Sunday. The brethren here have stepped to the front and put up the gospel banners. Brother O. Salisbury, our district president, not only encouraged us, but assisted in a substantial way in the building of the church for which we feel grateful. Both Brother Salisbury and Brother Epperson gave us some splendid sermons during the two-day meetings. The dedicatory sermon by Brother Salisbury and the prayer by Brother Epperson were inspiring, eliciting favorable comment from both members and nonmembers.

And the beautiful anthem, "Father, O hear us," sung by the choir in a humble and pleading spirit moved some of the congregation to tears, even nonmembers speaking in complimentary terms of the singing. This was especially gratifying to them as they had not been able to get together to make the necessary preparation for the song service on account of the extreme cold weather, and felt some apprehension as to the outcome. Some of them had fasted and prayed that morning for divine help in that service.

And we felt that the Lord graciously came to the rescue, and we were made to realize that it is just as necessary to have the help of the Holy Spirit in the song service to make it effectual, as in the preaching of the word.

But this is not the end, only the means to an end, stepping stones to higher and grander achievements. There is no place to stop.

The writer once knew a sister who was a devoted church worker, who had labored long and earnestly to help build up the Lord's work, always having in mind a certain work which she desired to see accomplished. And after many years of toil and discouragements, her hopes were realized, and she then thought that her life's work was accomplished and she was ready and willing to answer the Master's summons, to come up higher.

But a week or so after this she was shown in a dream that she was not quite ready. There were other righteous deeds awaiting her hands. She saw herself dressed in bridal robes awaiting the coming of the bridegroom. She felt quite well satisfied with her appearance being dressed entirely in white. But while she waited, she began inspecting her bridal robes more closely, when she noticed for the first time that her dress was an old one, and had been laundered. And while it was a very respectable looking dress for an ordinary occasion, it did not quite measure up to her ideas for a wedding gown.

So she said to the sister, to whose home she had gone to await the coming of the bridegroom, "This dress is not very white, and there is no hurry about the wedding, and I think I shall wait and make a new one." And as the sister seemed to concur with this idea, she decided to wait. We believe it is somewhere recorded that the white robes are the righteousness of the Saints.

And so we see that it is possible for us to deceive ourselves and think that our work is accomplished, when the Master still has need of us. But "our arduous work will not be done till we obtain the crown."

The writer was once talking with an elder who was about to quit the mission field for secular work. He seemed to think he had done his share of missionary work, and as things were not going right at home and his family needed him, he was going to quit. We asked him if he was sure the Lord called him to preach.

"Perfectly sure," said he, "else I would not have been preaching all these years." "Well," said I, "are you just as sure now that the Lord releases you?" But he could not answer this question in the affirmative. Ah, no; Saints!

"Tis a war that calls for valor,
 'Tis a conflict with the world.
 There can be no furlough granted,
 Never must the flag be furled.

"We can never cease the conflict
 Till the summons home be heard,
 We have all for life enlisted,
 In the army of the Lord."

RHODES, IOWA. In gospel bonds,
 MATTIE HUGHES.

"Come Up Higher"

Again and again God has called to his people to "come up higher." In Doctrine and Covenants 90:12, we are commanded to obtain a knowledge of countries, of history and laws of God and man. Also section 83:36 admonished us to "seek learning by study."

These words were given eighty-five years ago, and now we are in the hastening time, "very near the end."

When is Israel going to study? How many homes are taking the church papers? Can we afford to lose the grand thoughts contained in the articles and editorials of our church publications, thoughts that broaden our minds and bring us nearer to the great Maker of the Universe and increase our desires for more knowledge?

The Religio and Sunday school supply avenues by which much knowledge can be obtained. God has set his seal on these societies and said that from their ranks he would choose those who will be his warriors. In other words, those who will get knowledge.

The Religio student holds within his grasp the golden key that can unlock the mysteries of ages long gone by, and gives the history of a people long since dead, and of which the great world is ignorant. The Religio student has at his command a fund of information which the scientific world today would hold to be of inestimable value. The gay world holds out many tempting allurements in contrast, which are only empty bubbles compared to the knowledge to be gained in Religio.

We are living in a critical time. God has pleaded in the past, "Come up higher," but how many have heeded? "The hour has struck." Who is ready? Only those who have gained knowledge. God will have none but trained soldiers in his army. Arm yourself with knowledge which is power, and with the Holy Spirit you can go forth to combat the criticism of an unbelieving world.

MRS. H. MCKENZIE.

Aged Lecturer Gives Health Recipes

On the night of February 14, 1918, the First Columbus Branch was favored with a lecture by Madame Charlotte Davenport, a modest young lady of ninety-three years. The subject of her discourse was hygiene.

Mrs. Davenport was born in Saint Petersburg, (Petrograd) but at the age of four years moved to Vienna. She is a graduate physician, but gave up the practice of medicine very early for the practice of hygiene. Being the mother of eleven sons, she feels that she can be very practical in her advice.

Madame Davenport moved about the pulpit with a grace and ease that would put most women of twenty-five years to shame. She is a Greek Catholic by faith, but her ideas of hygiene are a practical demonstration of the Word of Wisdom.

We rather feared lest she might have some cranky notions for one so young, (?) but we all left the church feeling the effect of her radiant exuberance, and we believe that it was a lesson to all present. Her only methods were proper breathing so as to drink in an abundance of good, fresh air, which she expressed as having been given by God to live in; proper exercise, so as to exercise every muscle of the body, even the muscles of the ear and other dormant parts; and proper eating. She held up to ridicule the idea of eating a big meal and then following up with medicine to, as she said, chase it through the system.

She decried the use of coffee or tea, and any hot drinks excessively as weakening, and did not have a very good word for the use of meat, at least in excess.

Her message to mankind is much the same as ours.

The writer believes that the only thing that restrained her from doing some of the light fantastics, or the tango, was the fact that she was speaking from a church pulpit.

There was another item she dwelt on, and that was right thinking. She says we think too much of disease and death. Madame Davenport insists that we try to think how to live, and then we will be ready to know how to die without thinking about it. She sees no reason why we should not let our minds be absorbed with good thoughts. She dealt, with no uncertain hand, a blow at those who are continually going to physicians to get relief from every little complaint. She is a firm believer that the flush of youth should stay with us until the last and save the use of cosmetics.

In all, Mrs. Davenport is a very wonderful woman, and we are only sorry that we could not get her speech down in shorthand, but speaking seven languages, she says she still thinks in French and it is hard to get all, unless she is followed closely. She has been a nurse on the battle fields of Belgium and has, in all, had a wonderful experience. One of her sons is a general in the French army.

President First Columbus Branch.

Good Conference in Southern Ohio

At nine a. m. March 2, conference of the Southern Ohio District convened at First Columbus Branch, Columbus, Ohio.

The first service was a prayer service in charge of Brethren Allen and Finken, which was well attended and a good spirit manifested.

At ten o'clock regular business session convened, and from reports received it was shown that while considerable progress was made there was still room for more improvement. There was an extraordinarily good attendance from outlying branches.

Bishop J. A. Becker preached an excellent sermon on Saturday evening, outlining the necessity of being prepared for the approach of Zionic conditions which were nearer at hand than is generally realized by the Saints, emphasizing the fact that to win the race we should lay aside all unnecessary weights.

The prayer and sacrament service on Sunday morning was remarkable for its large attendance and activity of the Saints and for the degree of the Spirit present in gifts and admonitions. Many were exhorted to prepare for greater service, and two of the young brethren were called to the priesthood.

At eleven o'clock Apostle G. T. Griffiths preached one of his characteristic sermons on integrity.

At half past two E. E. Long was the speaker, using as his subject, "The world war as related to the return of Israel." The speaker outlined some of the things we may expect to look for in the near future, basing his conclusions on prophecies found in the Bible and Book of Mormon. The coincident development of public sentiment favorable to both the Jew and American Indian and the activity on the part of both with reference to organized efforts was emphasized as one of the signs of the consummation of the divine purpose in the great restoration in the latter days.

A very beautiful and touching incident occurred at the close of the afternoon service. Brother Henry Greenwood, son of Brother W. H. Greenwood of England, who has been with us for several years and actively engaged in the good work, being called to the service of his native country, was called and ordained a priest that he might be better able to declare the gospel among those who are fighting for the cause of democracy. Being actively engaged in the work of the Second Columbus Branch as a deacon and Religio worker and in appreciation of his faithful service, he was presented with a soldier's Bible, suitably inscribed, and a wrist watch, much needed by every soldier. The presentation speech was made by Brother H. E. French.

At half past seven the conference was addressed by Brother Richard Baldwin. With his usual forceful manner, he presented the practical side of saintly life.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: The group work in the Independence Stake has taken on quite an impetus. Cottage meetings are held on Tuesday evenings of each week at the homes of those who desire them. The interest seems to be on the increase and the neighbors are getting better acquainted.

Our pastor, Evan A. Davis, of the Second Branch, is also district president of that part consisting of six groups. There are four officers in each group. Brother Davis is busy every day in the week in this district. On last Sunday morning he preached an excellent sermon on the necessity of building for the future, and at night Brother W. P. Kelley of the missionary force delivered a splendid discourse.

Many of us are anticipating a large attendance at General Conference, and a number of important events to transpire during the session. I am thankful for the gospel, which found me more than thirty years ago in my native State, Illinois.

My greatest desire is to serve the Master, and those with whom I labor for the betterment of Zion. Let us not forget to pray for our young men who are going forth in the cause of liberty, that they might be protected. We are looking forward to a day when the nations will learn war no more, and out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God shall shine.

GEORGE W. TOUSLEY.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, February 23, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Nauvoo district conventions and conference at Burlington, February 14 to 17, 1918, had probably a record attendance, the reception committee reporting sixty-three visitors in attendance. The first convention session was held Thursday evening, February 14, the time being given to short talks by local workers, interspersed with special music numbers, all of which were well rendered. Friday evening, Brother Orman Salisbury of Des Moines, lectured on "The science and art of salesmanship," applying the subject quite forcefully to the auxiliary work.

The conference business was followed Saturday afternoon by a number of short talks, extemporaneous, on assigned topics. Elders C. J. Smith, C. E. Willey, and O. Salisbury preached.

The Nauvoo District Builders, an organization formed about a year ago, for the promotion of reunion and other district interests, held a meeting Saturday afternoon following the conference session.

Wednesday evening, February 6, the branch voted without dissent, to make provision for individual sacrament service.

Monday evening, February 18, the district auto was destroyed by fire in the barn of Brother E. R. Williams, of this place, where it had been kept for some time.

The cottage prayer meetings have begun with good interest, which we trust may continue until it is possible for us to meet altogether again at the church. A word of assurance was given to one of our number at the last of these services, and much feeling manifested in the testimonies.

CORRESPONDENT.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLAHOMA, February 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: In two more days the conference year will be closed, and in looking back over the past year I find more things to be thankful for than to complain of.

The Lord has blessed me in my work of service to others, and I have tried to take a message of good cheer and of hope, and not of despair.

There are dark clouds hanging over us, but each one has a silver lining to it, and the future of the "marvelous work and a wonder" has more glory and grandeur to it than anything the world has ever witnessed in the past; if we miss any of it, our own shortsightedness will be to blame.

This present war holds out more than a gleam of hope; it has a silver lining to all its somber clouds, it is to Israel, as represented in the Jew, "a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night."

In 1 Nephi 3: 230-236, the prophet describes the present war, and in verse 237, he says: "Then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel."

If the reader is interested in the Jew and Palestine, he can find valuable information in The American Hebrew, published in New York, 44 East Twenty-third Street.

In reading letters published in our church papers, in reference to the war, I am led to believe that some of the writers have the matter confused in their mind, or else I do not understand them. I have been a student of the history of our country since I was thirteen years of age, and I have tried to keep track of all that was going on by reading the best literature that was published. In doing so, I have never yet found a president or statesman that believed in an aggressive war. All that we have ever done has been to be in a state of defense against other nations and to protect the weak ones on the American Continent.

Had it not been for the firmness of Presidents Monroe, Johnson, Cleveland, and Roosevelt, Mexico and most of South America would be ruled by kings imported from Europe.

It was money furnished by an American philanthropist that built the Peace Palace at The Hague, in Holland. It was the ambition of the Honorable W. J. Bryan to conclude a treaty with all the great nations of the world; to submit disputes between nations to arbitration, and if they could not agree, that they would not go to war for one year after arbitration had failed. He was successful with most of the great nations, and one of the principal belligerents in the present war refused to sign such a treaty.

Our nation has always been against aggressive warfare, but always willing to wage a defensive one. The President obeyed the law; after securing all the information he could, he called the Congress in session and laid the matter before that body, the only one that had the power to decree that a state of war existed.

The selective draft law was passed, and to test its validity, a test case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was affirmed as constitutional. Thus all the forms of the law were strictly adhered to.

The Lord has told us that we should obey the laws of the land, and be a friend to the Constitution. He says it is wise for us to do so. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5; 95: 2; and 98: 10.)

Some day, when the hand of persecution is raised against us, we will have to turn to the Constitution for our protection, and then we will understand why the Lord said it was wise to be obedient to the laws of the land and a friend to the Constitution.

We can all have our respective ideas about war, but in this hour of supreme trial of our nation, let our attitude be that of absolute loyalty; let us respond to every call the Government makes upon us, whether it is at the battle front, in the hospital, or red cross work, or to conserve food by observing the meatless and wheatless days. EDWARD RANNIE.

DENVER, COLORADO, February 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: The semiannual conference of the Eastern Colorado District was held in Denver the 23d and 24th instant. A large and representative gathering attended from all parts.

Business progressed with good feeling, and all reports showed progress as the result of life and energy being shown in nearly all branches of the field. The reports show that the field is ripe unto the harvest, but the laborers are few. More places are calling for preaching than there are men to fill them.

A better spirit prevails in branches where troubles once existed, though still there is room for a more united work.

The net increase for the last six months was thirty-four. The financial report shows an awakening among the Saints in the payment of tithing. The Saints at Wiley and at First Denver are talking of dedications for the next few months, as they anticipate clearing their churches of debt. Both are modern church buildings and are a credit to the church.

Elders Sade, Pitt, and Robertson did the preaching at the conference. The prayer meeting on Sunday was especially interesting, and was characterized by a number of very spiritual testimonies, one tongue, two prophecies in song, and three prophecies otherwise. Words of encouragement, admonition, and warning, indicating that rapid strides were to be made by the church from now on towards her preparation to receive her King, the Lord Jesus, were received.

The weather was clear and warm and could not have been better. Colorado Springs gets the conference which convenes August 31, 1918, and as this is a noted resort for summer tourists we trust a more extended series of meetings can then be arranged. A splendid place and time for a reunion and a fine place for a week's camp and recreation.

A splendid feeling prevailed throughout, and the service rendered by the local Saints could hardly have been better. AMMON WHITE.

FORT MADISON, IOWA, March 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: A few notes from the Fort Madison Branch. Membership of branch 61, absent 19. Four young men of the branch now in Government service; three in Navy, one in the railway regiment now in France. Branch in charge of one elder and one deacon. Regular preaching services, Sunday school, and Religio, also prayer services held in our church, corner Tracy and Windmeyer Streets. During the past year we have adopted the individual communion service, and same works to a nicety. We also purchased a piano and organized an orchestra with five instruments. Since last September the public school board has had a class of day school in our building, owing to the reconstruction of a regular school building. Have been enabled to work the church and school propositions very harmoniously, the one not conflicting with the other. Present prospects look bright.

Am inclosing a program of a reception and dinner that was held last evening at the First Baptist Church in this city. Same was a great success, well attended, speaking and services of a very high order. Another such affair is to be held next year. Note, our branch had as much of a hand in this affair as the other churches mentioned. Each church had a member on the committee on tickets, also dinner committee, and each furnished two cooks and three waiters for the occasion. Our branch being associated in this reception was due largely to the efforts of the president of our ladies' aid.

THE DAILY "ENSIGN"

In accordance with our custom, a daily edition of the Ensign will be published during the sessions of the coming General Conventions and Conference. This is in addition to the regular weekly editions, and will not be sent to those receiving the weekly edition unless subscribed for.

It will be the usual price, so low that every family in the church can afford to have it come to their homes. The entire series during conference for

25 CENTS IN ADVANCE

It is largely a labor of love to get out these issues, help being scarce and we not having the facilities for getting out daily editions, but as a service to the church which we believe has always been appreciated, we are willing to do it, if we may have your cooperation by way of subscriptions. Tell your neighbors and friends about it, and see if every family in your community cannot be on the list.

By the issuance of the Daily we can have more room for the human interest incidents which always abound at such gatherings. We realize that only a very small percentage of the church membership can attend these meetings any one year, but that all who are not there—and some who are—appreciate the little touches which go right along with the transaction of weightier problems. Keep track of the details of what promises to be a most important conference, through the Daily Ensign.

The first issue will be on the second day of the conventions. We believe we can be assured of good mailing facilities, the papers going the evening published, giving you the news promptly.

Hunt's report for 1917 shows a total of $6,745.22 received as tithing, offerings, and consecrations. Final report of 1917 reunion committee was referred to the auditing committee. F. A. Cool was recommended for appointment to the office of stake chorister, Sister L. A. Johnson having resigned. It being necessary for G. F. Baker to be absent from the stake indefinitely, B. D. Andes was appointed member of the gospel literature board. Brother Baker's resignation had already been accepted. The following paragraphs from the stake Presidency's report were separately indorsed. "Red Cross and War Work. So important is the work of the Red Cross and relief department of our country that in this we would desire to urge the Saints to double their diligence. The boys in France are calling you. Let us who are out of the trenches hear the call and give reply in a substantial way. Let us not be slackers." The discussion as to how we could, throughout the stake, get into closer touch with the local Red Cross organizations resulted in the conference requesting the stake presidency to accept the oversight of this work. "Profiteering. Our attention has been called to instances where Saints moving in have placed undue confidence in brethren already residing in the stake and have been made to suffer because of a spirit of speculation. We believe that profiteering among Saints is unChristian and should be treated as such; labor performed, and the offending member cited to court. We are jealous for the Saint who moves into the stake. He comes to better his condition spiritually, and should not be made to suffer on account of the 'greed for gain,' which may exist in the soul of one supposed to be a saint. It has been the effort of your president and bishop to forestall work of this kind. Much work along the line of gathering must be done in the near future. The Saints must not profiteer. If they should, we feel as officers of the stake to see that they are cited for trial." The following amendment was added to the motion to indorse the paragraph, "Profiteering;" "This article be published in the church publications, and those contemplating taking residence within the stake first correspond with the stake bishopric and presidency." A part of the afternoon of the 2d was occupied with program by the Woman's Auxiliary, at which session was inaugurated a campaign against cigarette using. The matter of providing proper recreation for the young people of Holden was referred to the Stake Bishopric and Presidency. The preaching during the conference was by Apostles F. M. Sheehy, Peter Anderson, and R. C. Russell, and was much Conference: Sisters I. M. Ross, C. L. House, F. A. McWethy, Francis Kirby, Virdie Gaither, Ethel Dishman, L. A. Johnson, America Christensen, I. M. Smith, D. J. Krahl, William Hutchinson; Brethren Earl Thayer and Cornelius Edgerton. Alternates: Sisters Mary Lovell, Kate Hansen, M. B. Burroughs, Georgia Dillon, Harriet Redfield, William T. Mitchell, Minnie Harring, Mabel Brendel, Anna Fender, Frances Moler; Brethren Robert Dillon and Walter Johnson. A vote of thanks was extended the Holden Saints by the visitors for entertainment. Conference adjourned to meet with Warrensburg Branch at call of stake presidency. Mrs. A. M. Fender, secretary.

NAUVOO.—At Burlington, Iowa, February 16 and 17, district presidency in charge. Branches reporting: Burlington, 234; Fort Madison, 61; Farmington, 59; Keokuk, 54; Montrose, 90; Ottumwa, 85; Rock Creek, 116. Bishop's report showed receipts for year $2,829.50; expenditures, $2,356.93. Delegates to General Conference: D. J. Williams, James Mc-

Kiernan, C. J. Smith, C. E. Willey, G. P. Lambert, H. N. Snively, Sister D. J. Williams. Alternates: Ethel Lacey, Esther Ortleb, Anna Adey, Clara Conn, and Elmer Sherman. District concurred in the recommendation of the Keokuk Branch that Thara Robinson be ordained deacon, the ordination being left to district president to provide for. District reunion to be held at Montrose, Iowa, August 23 to September 1, inclusive. Next conference at Fort Madison, Iowa, June 15 and 16. W. H. Gunn, secretary, 3014 Seneca Street.

CLINTON.—At Eldorado Springs, Missouri, February 16, 1918. R. C. Russell presided, district presidency assisting. Verbal report given by the first vice president; other officers reported in writing. Ten statistical reports were received. Mina Kearney of Clinton, Sister A. C. Dempsey of Nevada, and Goldie Quick of Rich Hill, were appointed as a committee to forward the Red Cross work. A motion prevailed that the sisters of the Clinton District lay aside all unnecessary fancy work and take up Red Cross work. A resolution drafted by a committee, relative to story-telling in the Sunday school, to be presented the General Association, was read and adopted. Delegates to General Conference: H. E. Moler, R. T. Walters, Emma Keek, Clara Roberts, J. A. Marsteller, John Davis, J. C. Budd, C. W. Keek, Lucy Silvers, Lee Quick, Sister A. C. Dempsey, Addie Gouldsmith. Alternates: A. C. Dempsey, Bertha Walters, H. Ross Higdon. H. E. Moler, president, Holden, Missouri; Zora Lowe, secretary, 501 South Park, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

FREMONT.—With Tabor Branch, February 23, 1918. District presidency in charge. Branches reporting: Thurman, 195; Henderson, 79; Glenwood, 71; Riverton, 52; Hamburg, 60; Bartlett, 46; Shenandoah, 106; scattered members 32. Bishop's agent's report for 1917: Balance on hand, January 1, 1917, $257.07; receipts, $3,812.38, balance on hand January 1, 1918, $696.45; C. W. Forney, bishop's agent. Tent fund receipts by C. W. Forney: Riverton, $5; Bartlett, $6.25; Hamburg, $6; Thurman, $6.20; total, $23.45; receipts by T. A. Hougas, $285; paid out, $322.90, balance due, $14.45. A bill for freight and express on tent and organ was presented by Ernest Elliott for $6.84, a collection taken amounted to $7.94. C. W. Forney presented bill for $6.41, for expenses. The following resolution was adopted; Resolved: that we request the Board of Publication to appoint Elder M. M. Case as agent in the Fremont District, to sell church publications. The Thurman Branch petitioned for June conference which was granted, the time being left to the district presidency. Delegates were elected to General Conference as follows: Sister T. A. Hougas, Ruth Knight, Lillie Clark, Sister M. M. Case, Roy Barber, R. E. Pratt, Lester Forney. Alternates: T. A. Hougas, J. B. Wildermuth, H. N. Pierce, W. E. Haden, M. M. Case, J. W. Dunagan, Sister J. W. Dunagan, Susie and Gladys Dunsdon; in case of division to cast majority and minority vote. Upon recommendation of Glenwood Branch, W. S. Kuykendall and Ernest D. Elliott were ordained to the office of teacher. C. W. Forney, secretary.

Convention Minutes

CLINTON.—Religio at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, February 15, 1918. Written reports by the officers. Delegates to General Convention: Mable Braden, Lucy Silvers, Sister C. A. Dempsey, A. L. Crocker, Sister A. L. Crocker, Addie Gouldsmith, Sister W. A. Searfus, May Marsteller, S. B. Penson, Sister S. B. Penson, Emma Keek, Carrie Nafus, Sister S. J. Charleton. The latter part of the session was spent in institute work. A Religio session at 7.30 p. m. conducted by district officers. Class work was followed by a splendid program. Mable Braden, president, Nevada, Missouri; Adrain Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, R. F. D. 1.

FREMONT.—Sunday school, at Tabor, Iowa, February 22 and 23, T. A. Hougas presiding. Instructive program in evening. Election of officers: Sister T. A. Hougas, superintendent; A. G. Hougas, assistant superintendent; Lester L. Forney, secretary; Sister Lester L. Forney, treasurer; Sister N. L. Mortimore, home department superintendent; Ethel I. Skank, member library board; Jesse Donaldson, normal superintendent; Sister N. L. Mortimore, historian. Delegates to General Convention: J. B. Wildermuth, T. A. Hougas, Sister T. A. Hougas, M. M. Case, Sister M. M. Case, Lillie Clark, Roy Barber, Ruth Knight, H. N. Pierce, Sister H. N. Pierce; alternates: R. E. Pratt, W. M. Leeka, Sister W. M. Leeka, J. W. Dunagan, Sister J. W. Dunagan, Susie Dundson, Gladys Dundson, Lester L. Forney. The standard of excellence for the district was discussed quite fully, also grading of schools. Lester L. Forney, secretary.

CLINTON.—Sunday school at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, February 15, 1918. District officers in charge. All officers reported in writing. It is probable that the Baltimore and Ohio will be found to be the cheapest route.

Persons wishing to travel together from points named should consult the following: Bishop M. C. Fisher, 7 Miner Street, Winter Hill, Boston, Massachusetts; Elder W. L. Christy, 1312 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York; A. B. Phillip, 3236 Kipp Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; David E. Dowker, 6546 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, Illinois; J. A. Becker, Route 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

Arrangements for special car out of Chicago, if any, will be left to Brother D. E. Dowker, who will publish necessary notice.

For further particulars consult passenger departments of roads named.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 5, 1918.

Quorum Notices

The members of the Third Quorum of Seventy are hereby requested to forward their reports for the year ending March 1, 1918, to me at 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Please use the regular report forms as I am not sending blanks out this year. Those who will be in attendance at the conference may hand their dues to me there, but those who do not anticipate being at the conference should send their dues with their reports. Would like to have the reports all in before conference convenes if possible.

J. W. DAVIS, Secretary.

FROM HERE AND THERE

GOING TO GENERAL CONFERENCE?

The notice from the Secretary of the Church, in the Miscellaneous Department will be of interest to all who expect to go to Independence this year. Be sure to note the qualifications to the published fares that they are subject to an eight per cent war tax; Pullman fares ten per cent.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP GAINS 3,296

Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, has completed his totals for the report to the General Conference in April, and from it we glean the following: Baptisms for the year ending December 31, 1917, 3,890; received by transfers 2,460; removed by transfers, 2,371; expelled, 71; died, 610; net gain, 3,296; present total membership, 86,260. This latter is a gain of 3,296 over last year's total.

Sister Ella Baird, of Bangor, Michigan, bears testimony of the surety of the Lord's promises, especially to those who keep the financial law. She desires the prayers of the Saints.

The Chicago branches have arranged for a rousing institute session for the district on March 22, 23, and 24. G. R. Wells will attend and have a prominent part. "The Elijah" will be sung on the evening of the 24th.

THE DAILY ENSIGN

We are glad to hear that the Ensign office intends to put out a daily edition of the Ensign during the coming conventions and conference. There are so many things in addition to the bare outline of business transacted that are of interest, that it seems to require a daily to furnish all the news. We advise everybody to send a quarter to the Ensign office right away and thus be sure to get on the list. Some careful folks inclose a postal card, asking for a receipt, so they'll be sure the money was received and the order entered. Don't do like many did last year with the Daily HERALD: send in subscriptions after the proceedings were about over. Early editions are often exhausted.

PROFITEERING AIMED AT

In the conference minutes of the Holden Stake in this issue, we note an interesting development concerning Red Cross work and to prevent profiteering. It is intimated that some of the Saints have been disappointed in the outcome of some transactions, and the conference has indorsed the suggestion that all who victimize the Saints will be dealt with by the church officers. In accordance with the resolution of the conference, the resolution is printed with the minutes, and we call attention to the latter clause, instructing the Saints contemplating taking up residence in the stake to confer first with the stake, bishopric and stake presidency.

CHANGE AT THE CHILDREN'S HOME

Elder A. M. Chase has been appointed superintendent of the Children's Home, while Sister Chase will act as matron. They began their new duties on the 9th, following the resignations of Brother and Sister J. J. Boswell, the latter's health preventing her from further serving.

NEW WIRELESS COURSE BEGINS MAY 6

As we previously mentioned, Graceland is planning to put on a summer course for young men between 18 and 35 years of age, beginning May 6. It will be intensive, and include not only a thorough radio operators' training, but also military signaling and signal corps training. Registered men will find this latter invaluable, for it will fit them for positions as noncommissioned officers when they are called into the service. The demand for radio operators far exceeds the supply, and this wonderful science should appeal to our young men. The course beginning in May lasts for 15 weeks. For full information, write the Radio Telegraph Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

KILAUEA SPILLING OVER

A recent letter from Brother C. Ed. Miller, of Honolulu, says that Kilauea, pictured and described in the Hawaiian number of February 6, 1918, is overflowing into the outer crater. The automobile road is covered, and the old parking place for autos is under ten feet of lava.

Sister (Mrs.) Lena Weaver, 327 Russell Street, Emporia, Kansas, would like to have some of the Saints call. Brother T. C. Kelley is asked to take notice.

NEED ANY BACK NUMBER QUARTERLIES?

Anyone desiring back numbers of the Sunday school or Religio Quarterlies may secure the same of Edna M. Bowerman, Swanson, Saskatchewan, Canada, free of charge. We suggest of our own accord that it would be polite to slip in a dime for postage if you ask for any, but she doesn't require it, evidently. Our postage stamps are not good there.

INDORSES SPACE SAVING

The secretary of the Eastern Michigan District, Brother John W. Morehead, of Detroit, writes to agree with our statement that there should be some better and more economical method of notifying delegates of their appointment than by publication in the HERALD. He incloses a copy of a circular letter he sent out to the branch secretaries, which he believes is a better method and more apt to be noted. He uses a duplicating device which may be obtained for about $15 and which is a valuable asset to any district. It is a commendable plan.

MANUAL OF THE PRIESTHOOD

One of the books a young man of the ministry will specially appreciate is the Manual of the Priesthood, by Charles Derry. It is a very comprehensive compilation of passages from the Doctrine and Covenants and from church history, concerning the priesthood. The various branches are subdivided, and with the aid of the complete index, one can easily find all that has been written on any one phase, or a number of them. It is bound in cloth, No. 232, 35 cents, postpaid.

COTTAGE PRAYER MEETINGS

From many sources we hear good reports of the cottage prayer meetings held in many places throughout the church, largely to save coal in the recent shortage. With certain regular exceptions when union meetings are held, there are eight prayer meetings held by our members in Lamoni each Wednesday evening, and they are reported as very spiritual and intellectual. Of the eight, four are cottage meetings, one at the college, one at each of the old folks' homes, and one for the young people at the high school building.

One of our Sunday school workers in the Northern California District was offered a good salary not long ago if she would go East and devote her whole time to Sunday school work. She was especially proficient in story-telling and primary work. Of course she refused. But do we really appreciate the talent we have among us?

TEACHERS

(Read the Massachusetts District priesthood meeting, November 24, 1917.)

To what extent should the teacher undertake the teaching of the Saints, comparing Ephesians 4: 11-13 with the general work of the teacher?

Ephesians 4: 11-13 is as follows:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

The teacher evidently has his place in the work of perfecting the Saints and edifying the body of Christ, as well as the work of the ministry. Doing his full duty, he assists in this work to bring about the time when we shall all come to the unity of the faith.

That the teacher is an important officer in the church may be seen from Acts 13: 1; 1 Corinthians 12: 28, 29; 2 Nephi 4: 42; Alma 10: 103; 14: 8; Mosiah 11: 155, as well as elsewhere in the Book of Mormon.

The Doctrine and Covenants plainly lays down his duty. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.)

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.

This includes the statement that they are "to warn, expound, exhort, and teach." Then we have Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5:

And again the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit, and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

We should like to include some of the excellent editorials by our late President, Joseph Smith, but our space forbids that as we are limited to fifteen minutes. Also we are not sure of the scope of the program, but we are well aware that your president, Doctor Sinclair, usually divides the question in a way to indicate every point. We shall therefore try to avoid discussing at length other features and confine ourselves as much as is possible to the special topic assigned us.

This question has been raised time and time again. It would seem that the law is clear, that they are appointed to teach. It would seem that it is clear that they are appointed to preach, and warn their neighbors. President Joseph Smith in a long editorial on the "Duty of the teacher," included this paragraph:

Where necessity in church work requires or opportunity offers, in order to invite all to come to Christ he may properly address those outside the church as well as those in the church; that is to say, those who are not members of the church as well as those who are. He must himself feel that he has come unto Christ and properly become a member of the church, the body of Christ, and can assure those whom he invites that they can find room in the church through obedience to its teachings, the Spirit of comfort and of peace and a knowledge of the things of the kingdom of God.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 57, p. 822.

But prior to this it had been so greatly agitated that the question was presented to the Quorum of Twelve who adopted in 1898 the following resolution:

As a quorum we have considered the question referred to us—the right of teachers and deacons to publicly preach—and report as follows:

Whereas, The law contained in section 17, paragraph 11, Doctrine and Covenants, clearly authorizes teachers and deacons to "take the lead of meetings, . . . to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ," and,

Whereas, In section 42, paragraph 5, teachers are required, together with elders and priests, to teach the principles of the gospel; and in section 120, paragraph 2, either of said officers is permitted to preside; and,

Whereas, In our judgment said duties include in their performance what is commonly understood to be preaching; and,

Whereas, In section 83, paragraph 22, teachers and deacons are limited in their duties to local service,

Resolved, That in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the chief presiding officer.—General Conference Resolution 449.

It would seem from this that the teacher has, indeed, a very vital duty. He is included also in the commandment that we should warn our neighbors (Doctrine and Covenants 85:22). It has been ruled that he has the right upon request to preach to outsiders, when there is no organized branch, but it must be recognized that his primary duty is to the church and the branch with which he is associated. He is not a policeman and we sometimes disgrace ourselves by trying to make him a spy. His duty is not to find iniquity in the church, but to prevent iniquity. He is to deal with and strengthen them and see that there is no iniquity.

He is not primarily a visiting officer as the priest is, though he may be asked on occasion to assist the priest, or may be requested to visit by the branch, or its presiding officer. In the course of his own duty he has the right to visit, and should inform himself so that his visits will prove profitable. If he can prevent wrongdoing, he has done more than in discovering wrongdoing.

He should be prepared therefore to instruct in the law, and especially those parts which immediately concern his own duty. Instruct to the end that he may prevent iniquity or wrongdoing.

He should be prepared when called upon to occupy the public stand and preach, especially to present to the Saints his particular work, but speaking upon other matters as his information and the Spirit may direct. The whole spirit of his work is that of Ephesians 4:12: "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."

His own particular duty should receive the first consideration. Preaching is not the most important thing an officer in the kingdom of God can do. Many of us are appointed to other duties, so we should not feel that our opportunities are lost if we do not preach often. We should by our lives, however, teach the principles of the gospel, and lift a warning voice as opportunity is offered. But the teacher should be prepared to instruct the church by preaching according to his training and work, and especially under the direction of the presiding officers of branch and district.

The very term of his title, Teacher, shows he is one who is to teach. To teach in its original sense was to show or make plain, to guide, or direct. In its later sense, it is to cause to know, to show forth.

The term teacher is applied to him who presides and directs in the school of the prophets, though he is the president of the high priesthood. There can be no higher duty than this, to edify the body of Christ, through the work of our ministry, and so to cause all to come near to God.

Officers of Melchisedec priesthood should not be slow to assist, or act in this office when necessity requires, for it belongs to the high priest to labor as needs require in the office of an elder, priest, teacher, deacon, or member. (Doctrine and Covenants 104:5.) So it cannot belittle any of us to do that necessary work. If the teacher does not perform his special duties, some one else must, even if it be the president of the branch. But in connection with his special duties he should not fail to observe that he has the right with other officers to teach, preach, expound, and exhort, and invite all to come unto Christ.

S. A. BURGESS.

LAMONI SERVICE FLAG

The question is sometimes asked, what the boys in Lamoni are doing about the draft;—whether many of our church boys are going.

We notice in the front of the church a service flag for the Sunday school with thirty-seven stars upon it. A similar flag at the college contains sixty stars.

The first signifies members of the Lamoni Sunday school, the second signifies those who have attended Graceland College, who have now been drafted or have entered some military or war service.

SONGS AND POEMS OF BISHOP R. C. EVANS

We are just in receipt of a copy of the above work to which attention has already been called in the advertising department. The first part of the book is songs and poems sent to his wife or family, or to those in distress. It includes songs given by the Spirit. In one instance, the same interpretation was given two brethren at once to a song in tongues.

The book also includes several of the addresses received by Bishop Evans from different points throughout the world, where he has labored. He includes one or two letters from his lengthy correspondence with our late president, Brother Joseph, showing the love in which he and Brother Joseph held each other. There are also notes from some of his debates and articles and topics of general interest.

The book is not an autobiography. He published his autobiography about ten years ago. But it is rather more intimate and gives a touching insight to the real man. It is a book which will appeal most to his intimate friends and those who know him best. It is of historic interest, because of the work he has done and is doing.

It is a volume of 208 pages and he is selling it at two dollars. He informs us that he does not desire profit and has never made a profit off of any of his books, as he distributes many of them where they will do the most good, so makes no gain for himself. Those interested should address Brother Evans direct, at 51 Ozark Crescent, Toronto.

THE BUILDERS

The preachers and writers have told
How Zion should arise and shine;
In words both vehement and bold
They have pictured it line upon line.

The singers of Zion have sung,
The brightest, the purest, the best;
Till the blue vaults of heaven have rung,
And the heart burned warm in the breast.

The painters their concept have wrought,
Of the city, the temple, the men;
Portraying their vision and thought,
Reviving our spirits again.

But now let the builders lay-to.
The builders, the builders, we call!
The men who shall make it come true!
For they shall be greatest of all.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE WILL TO DO

"What you can do, or dream you can, begin it, Boldness hath genius, power and magic interest."

The above is quoted in the March number of the Delineator, which also contains two stories, one that a woodchuck can't climb a tree, but a dog got after one one day, and there was a tree handy, so to save its life, the woodchuck "clumb."

Another story is of a sudden flood from a dam going out, so that the stable was flooded. The man called his horses, they got out and he protected them with blankets, but though he called and called, the cold did not appear. Finally, when the water had subsided, several days later, he went out to the stable to learn the worst, for he was very fond of the colt, but found her up in the hay-mow. Of course, a horse cannot climb a ladder, but up the ladder was the only way to get to the haymow, and there she was.

Now we are not able to vouch for either of these stories. We do not know that they actually occurred, but we do know that they represent very good psychology. That a person can, in emergency, and an animal can, do much more than one thinks one can. To go at a matter boldly, to call out the best resources with an "I will," means one can and will accomplish results which are a surprise, not only to others, but to himself.

It would be a good thing to think about for our church work, and for an auxiliary work, and for that serious reading we have hoped to do but keep putting off, because we have not time or cannot do it. What one will do, one can.

How often have we seen, not only a mother, but others of the family, too sick to move and confined to bed, and yet, emergency calling, because some loved one was in even worse condition, arise, dress, and take up the household duties, and in doing so, throw off all aches and ills.

Wonderful things are before us if we will, as a church, as a society, and as individuals. Some things we have to overcome. But the greatest obstacles will often be our own inward resistance or inertia.

In the redemption of Zion we look for divine help and direction. But we can do much good of ourselves, if we will, and must if the work is to be done.

Then doing our part we can count confidently on divine help.

S. A. B.

OUR FATHER

"A father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation." (Psalm 68: 5.)

We are told that among certain heathen nations there are many names for God, but that few have the equivalent of "Our Father." One religion alone is said to have ninety-nine different names but none with this significance.

It seems to come home with peculiar force of recent date how God has forever made honorable and glorious that name of "father," in taking it to himself. As we kneel in family prayer "Our Father who art in heaven," suddenly there flashes into mind that he, who so recently we have honored on earth as father, is now, we are assured in heaven. Yet, for him we cannot pray, for his life is laid in truer hands than ours, his blessing assured.

Yet, our hearts go out quickly, not in fear, but in deep love for him, and to him, and then, this deep peace that all is well with him in God, and that the love of God and His mercy is never ended. Yet, our hearts are made tender, and our love goes forth to one another, to humanity and to the Eternal Father.

In the Old Testament this image is used many times, "A father of the fatherless." (Psalm 68: 5.) "As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." (Psalm 103: 13.)

Sometimes the question is raised as in what respect is a patriarch a father? Does it not give him the right to reprove and correct? Yet, all through this record we find the emphasis of fatherhood laid on love, on instruction, on pitying. That he is a father because he pities and loves us.

When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up. (Psalm 27: 10.) But now, O Lord, thou art our father, we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we are all the work of thy hand. (Isaiah 64: 8; 63: 16; also Psalm 89: 26.)

Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. (Malachi 3: 16-18.)

"As a man spareth his own son that serveth him," so is the same theme set forth in Malachi 1: 6, 2: 10, and elsewhere in the Old Testament.

But in the New Testament Jesus the Christ has emphasized above all others the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and divine love. He made the transcendent God to be the immanent father of everlasting love. He taught us in his one prayer to say, "Our Father who art in heaven." Baptism is in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. And when his time came to leave, he assured us, "I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God." (John 20: 17.)

In fact all four of the evangelists show this continued reference by him to God as his Father and our Father in heaven.

The same theme is then carried on by his disciples throughout the New Testament.

If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. (John 14: 23.) Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. (Revelation 2: 20, 21.)

We sometimes speak of the eternal verities and refer to such terms to human discovery of fundamental laws, but here is one who is from everlasting, to everlasting, the Eternal Father: What a wonderful symbol it is of divine love, the love of a father, the instruction of a father, the yearning of a father for his child, and the great protecting power as well, of our Father.

Surely in that he has made the name of father forever glorious and fatherhood partnership with the Divine.

So we go on in faith, even in times of trial, with this deep assurance of a meeting again, of a great reunion of all his family; and with a new idea by which to express the love of God to us, "Our Father who art in heaven."

PRE CONFERENCE NOTES

The Quorum of Twelve held its opening pre-Conference Session on the morning of the 14th with eight members present. In the afternoon session, nine were present, Brother U. W. Greene and Brother C. A. Butterworth. They will probably hold continual quorum sessions and joint sessions with the Presidency and Bishopric up to the opening of Conference.

At this writing Elbert A. Smith expects to go to Independence on the 24th, to meet in joint council with the Presidency and Twelve and confer in matters concerning the Presidency directly.

R. B. Trowbridge and Kearney L. Kelley, who have been appointed members of the Board of Auditors to fill vacancies, arrived in Lamoni on Sunday, the 17th, and Charles Fry on the 18th, in order to audit the books of the Herald Publishing House, Graceland College, the Children's Home, the Old Folks' Home, the Storehouse, and Electric Light Plant. They expect to return to Independence by the middle of the week to audit the books of the Presiding Bishopric, the Storehouse, the Sanitarium, and Old Folks' Home there.

All these are signs of the near approach of General Conference. Many are preparing to attend. Those who are not able to do so, as well as those who do attend, should subscribe at once for the Daily Ensign, and then go aside in secret prayer to the end that unity of Spirit and purpose in accordance with the will of our heavenly Father may be made manifest in the deliberation of these quorums, as well as in the Conference itself.

Grow we must, if we outgrow all we love.—Wendell Holmes.

Better to aim at the impossible and hit it than to aim at nothing and hit your mark.—Baldwin.

There are moments when the flesh is nothing to me, when I feel and know the flesh to be the vision; God and the spiritual, the only real and true. Depend upon it, the spiritual is the real.—Tennyson.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

CHARACTER BUILDING--Part 1

BY WARDELL CHRISTY

THE TRUTH ABOUT NARCOTICS

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The purposes of this series of articles is to discover the truth if possible, and by knowing the truth, save ourselves and all who will accept the truth, from physical weaknesses, consequent sufferings, immorality, lack of will power, and every force that binds or hinders the making of a "man."

They are intended for those who are seeking the truth, and who are not afraid to live in accordance with the truth when it is once known. E. F. Tittle said:

We are afraid to know the truth. We are afraid to live in accordance with the truth we do know. We are afraid to assume responsibility. We are afraid to marry. We are afraid to have children. We are afraid to die. We are afraid to live.

With all this we agree except that we "are afraid to marry."

I am sure if Brother Tittle had spent a month at Elkton, Maryland, and witnessed the stream of people who rush there to marry, or if he could have stood in line with some anxious couple in the clerk's office in New York City, or any of her boroughs, since the declaration of war and the passing of conscription, and discerned the anxious faces and the eager desires to obtain a license to marry, he would have been compelled to have said, brave or ignorant.

Still they may be classed as cowards in choosing the lesser danger to escape the greater. I am especially anxious that the ministry, the prospective fathers and mothers, and the young men and women of the church shall study the matter presented.

We are building every day,
In a good or evil way.
And the structure, as it grows,
Will our inmost self disclose.

Till in every arch and line
All our faults and failings shine;
It may grow a castle grand,
Or a wreck upon the sand.

Build it well, whate'er you do;
Build it strong, and straight, and true;
Build it clean, and high, and broad;
Build it for the eye of God.

"Knowledge, love, power—there is the complete life."

Every person born into the world has a mission to perform, a work to do, a character to build, a life to live. The life that I live and the character that I build is destined to touch other lives than my own; and as it touches them they are to be affected either for good or evil as my life may be directed in the way of truth and my character shall correspond to the perfection of holiness.

The primary mission in life, from a biological standpoint, is the perpetuation of the species. From the social viewpoint, the chief end of life is to develop good citizenship. From the intellectual, moral, and spiritual viewpoint, the supreme mission in life is to build a character that will secure for the individual the greatest happiness and contentment possible in this life and the next.

God has most perfectly adapted his laws, physical, social, mental, and moral to the comfort, need, and good of all his creatures. To know and obey law is to have life, prosperity, morality, and spirituality. God made all laws for our good. Go where we will there is no escaping the law, and whether they are written upon parchment or stone, or we might be able to get where there was no written code, still the law exists and its inevitable, unerring power is manifest, so there is no place where man may flee to escape the power and wisdom of God's laws. If we live wrong, eat wrong, think wrong, we must fail to perfect manhood and perfect womanhood. "Verily, I say unto you, that which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.)

If imperfection exists, if life is incomplete, if spirituality is at a low ebb, if afflictions abound, if mental faculties are impaired, if will is weak, if any of God's highest creation who was born to be a man, dies a cipher, something is wrong with his knowledge of law. His ancestors have been guilty of breaking some law, either ignorantly or willfully.

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by the law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.

We have found that we do not need to "altogether abide in sin" to suffer, but that every law and every commandment is important in its place and necessary to the perfect whole.

"Thou shalt not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God" means that we are to respect all the counsel of God if we inherit and obtain his blessings. When we ask God to "give us this day our daily bread," we are asking for all things necessary for man's life.

In a thousand ways God has spoken in no uncertain way. First he warned us, and lovingly instructed us what to do, how to live, told us what was good, and what was not good, and then as men and women disregarded the counsel of God, with wide-open seeing eyes, we have witnessed the results of violated law and discarded counsel, in ourselves and the sufferings of the millions all around us, and still we persist in continued disrespect and open violation.

The Devil is the most cunning and adroit, and as long as he can keep hid from us the power and far-reaching effect of the little sins and transgressions, he has a sure clog in the wheels of our progress, and he has sure taken the backbone out of, and materially destroyed the mental, moral, and spiritual efficiency of the church and the world, using the term church in its broader and universally applied meaning and application. Such a transgression is the almost universal use of narcotics and harmful stimulants.

I was told that we did not use whisky and tobacco to any alarming extent in the church that we represent, and that may be true. It is true that the percentage of membership addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco is less in our church than any other. Nevertheless, if there is still one who uses either at all it is an occasion for alarm, and no man or woman alive to the sense of their duties to their fellow men can afford to rest at ease until the danger is removed and the offender is saved.

The world to-day is tobacco mad, and there is still a percentage of users in the church, and we have an alarming number of men in the ministry, and members of the church who are habitually addicted to a habit that is proportionately as wrong, as seductive, destructive, and productive of evil effects as these, and that is the continual use of tea and coffee.

A woman came to me in one place where I was engaged in revival services, and had spoken of the evils of the cigarette habit and with tears in her eyes, asked me if I would not talk to her son and see if I could not dissuade him from the use of the destructive weed. He was showing its effect, in the stained finger-tips, the sallow complexion, the stuffy lungs and throat, the morbid, listless, unconcerned demeanor, and was really an object of great concern and pity.

I said, "Mother, did tobacco make your son sick when he first tasted it?" and the answer was no.

"Was his father addicted to the use of tobacco or liquor when he was conceived?"

"No."

"When you were carrying the child did you drink from three to ten cups of coffee and tea per day?" Answer, "Yes."

"After he was born you continued to feed it to the child through the nourishment, polluted as it was, that you furnished him, then when he was old enough to drink it from the cup, you fed him tea and coffee by the cup as he demanded?" Answer, "Yes. But what has that got to do with his smoking cigarettes now?"

Undoubtedly all. In the first place, a normal child, whose system has not been contaminated with some narcotic poison either through direct contact or hereditary taint could never chew a cud of tobacco, or smoke a cigarette or a pipe of tobacco, without being deathly sick. And barring the possibility that some hog in men's clothes, whose sense of decency and of the right of all men to breathe uncontaminated air had been atrophied by the use of tobacco, was permitted to smoke and breathe his poisoned fumes in the face of a helpless child, until his delicate system and stomach had been whipped into submission, you undoubtedly laid the basis for his present habit in the use of the very deadly, destructive, and habit forming drug, caffeine. When caffeine failed to meet the demands of his weak nervous system and furnish the stimulant demanded, he readily succumbed to the other and the greater stimulant and poison. From this it needs only the taste of cocaine and heroin to establish the drug and liquor habit, and then vice, abuse, and death.

But some possibly honest tobacco-using father resents this statement, that the narcotic habit may be formed by the coming in contact with the smoke, and he ignorantly blows in the face of his child and fills the room where it sleeps. Actual tests have proved that the wonder is that it did not kill the child, and were it not for the fact that so many of them have had their little delicate systems gradually poisoned by this and the lesser destructive narcotic, caffeine, fed to it by its mother, and bred into it by its father, many more deaths would be recorded as a result of tobacco smoke in the rooms of infant children.

Doctor L. L. Krauss, who has spent a lifetime in the actual work of the tobacco industry and the study of its effects, says on page nineteen of Tobacco Mysteries Exposed: "A turtle, frog, or large fish placed in an aquarium and a drop of nicotine floating on the surface of the water, or a stream of tobacco smoke blown through a putty blower into the water caused instant death."

Again: "Breathing the poisoned air of oil of nicotine will cause severe headache and convulsions. It is this atmosphere which we find everywhere and from which there seems to be no escape."

And when this class of men are asked to refrain from smoking in public places they are insulted and say we are infringing upon their personal liberty. This reminds me of the story I read entitled "Why?"

A Quaker, traveling in a coach, said to a fellow passenger, "Sir, thee seems to be well dressed, and would not bemean thyself to any ungentlemanly action, would thee?"

The young man replied with spirit, "Certainly not."

The Quaker continued, "Suppose thee invited me to thy house, thee would not think of offering me thy glass to drink out of after thou had drank out of it thyself, would thee?"

"Abominable. No. Such an offer would be most insulting."

"Still less would thee think of offering me thy knife and fork to eat with after putting them in thy mouth, would thee?"

"To do that would be an outrage to all decency, and show such a wretch was out of the pale of civilized society."

"Then, why should thou wish me to take into my mouth and nostrils the smoke of that cigar, which thou art sending out of thine own mouth?"

Why? Thousands of people to whom tobacco smoke is very offensive and injurious are asking why.

Medical journals report the poisoning of babes sharing the beds of tobacco using fathers, and even from being in the room where he smoked; and infant deaths have occurred from no other cause. (Tobacco Mysteries Exposed, page 20.)

"Much of the invalidism and also the positive ill health of women is due to the poisoned atmosphere created around them by the smoking members of the household." (Ibid.)

With these facts staring us in the face, is it not time that every man, woman, and child who are called to be a light to the world should be speaking out in no uncertain terms, first in warning and counsel to the user, and second in demanding that we shall have protection that is due to uncontaminated men, women, and innocent children from the vast army of thoughtless and ignorant smokers. I say ignorant, because I am sure that a very large percentage of the men who persist in blowing their smoke in the faces of other people are ignorant of its effects, or else they are criminal, and I cannot believe that.

Contributions for the Palestine Restoration Fund have already reached the $950,000 mark, and is expected that within the next ten days the first million dollars will be secured. Nearly $150,000 were raised during the last week, exclusive of the $100,000 recently given by the Joint Distribution Board of the American Jewish Relief committee for medical purposes.—American Hebrew, March 3, 1918.

WHEN AND HOW ARE MEN SAVED?

AN ELUCIDATION OF THE PENTECOSTAL BELIEF

To such as are earnestly trying to solve their own problem in the sum of eternal life, I address this, with the hope that the interpretation offered may assist them in comprehending the principles of divine justice and truth, in their perusal of the whole Bible.

A tract published by the Pentecostal Herald, Chicago, entitled, "Two great experiences or gifts," by William H. Durham, furnishes subject matter. A pencil notation at the top informs us that this tract is O. K. "Some are not reliable as a source for information on the Pentecostal faith," a member tells me, so "one of the faithful" has indorsed this tract. However, it will be of interest to my readers, and in fairness to the faith mentioned, I will say that the views we are about to throw upon the screen of critical analysis, are held by a large number, a majority perhaps, of believers in Christianity. And while credibility gives claim to our respect and consideration, yet an error, which has eluded detection of the mass, is only the more fundamental in character.

I wish to give the author of this tract credit for many good, beautiful thoughts in which it abounds, and in my heart I wish that after a brief exaltation of its virtues, I could feel content with duty done. However, orthodoxy calls us to the defense of the biblical standard, for Jesus says: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:31, 32.) Error enslaves the soul. Heresy poisons it. A father gave the following definition to his inquisitive son for a heretic: Anyone who believes differently than we do.

I disdain creeds or traditions of human origin—the word of God is the standard. Therefore the Apostle Paul charged the elders of Ephesus to take heed unto the flock that after his departing should grievous wolves enter in among them, not sparing the flock. (Acts 20:28, 29.) "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." (Acts 20:27.) Any "representative" of Jesus Christ who does less than this is a misrepresentative.

This, then, is my apology, if any should be required, for an attack upon false doctrines, which many of various creeds have been taught to believe.

Summing up the tract, it raises three vital issues for controversy:

First: That conversion is one "great, definite experience" that "works a complete change in the life of a man, by which he is made holy, and if he dies in this blessed state he is certainly saved."

Second: "It is not the actual sins or crimes a man commits that make him a sinner and cause him to be lost."

Third: "The moment a sinner accepts Jesus Christ he is saved; just as saved as he ever will be."

Please don't understand me to say that I question the sincerity or honesty of those who indorse the above propositions. There are a few passages which form a scriptural basis for their belief. But no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation (2 Peter 1: 20), and these are of that class of which Jesus said (Matthew 22: 29), "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." Kindly bear with me while we let the Bible speak for itself. On the first proposition: that by the power of conversion a complete change is wrought in our natures and beings, so that they who are in a "state of sin and uncleanness" are immediately transformed into "a state of purity and holiness," I must deny as false, because it is both unscriptural and unreasonable. "As a man thinketh, so is he," means that a man is the composite character of his thoughts. Some wise man said it in these words: "Sow a thought and reap an action; sow an action and reap a habit; sow a habit and reap a character; sow a character and reap a destiny."

The Bible, when taken as a whole, teaches just the opposite from an immediate and miraculous transformation, for such an abrogation of the laws of the universe would surely be a wonderful miracle. The deathbed repentance theory may sound good to a drowning coward, grasping for a straw of hope, but its only virtue lies in the belief that ignorance is bliss.

Peter says (2 Peter 3: 18), "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and (2 Peter 1: 5-7) "besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance," etc., which agrees with the Apostle Paul (Hebrews 6: 1, 2,) wherein he says, "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." Thus showing that "heaven is not reached by a single bound," but that we "mount the ladder round by round."

True, we do become a new man when we put on Christ Jesus, or accept him, in faith, as our personal Savior.

We have a new vision of life. Standing aside, we see ourselves go by, in all our cramped-up selfishness, and pride of heart. But to be honest with ourselves and the whole world, it is but our ideas, our thoughts—the fountain source from whence flow the deeds of life—and not our character, which has been cast in the world of time by the habits of a lifetime—this character has not been changed. And in this sense only can we understand the following scriptural experiences.

After Peter had been chosen, ordained an apostle, and taught by the Master three years, Jesus said to him (Luke 22: 32), "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Paul says (1 Corinthians 9: 26, 27,) he had a "fight" to "keep under my body and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." For he says again (Romans 7: 19-21), "but the evil which I would not, that I do." "I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me." These men had been convicted of truth, but were only in the processes of "conversion." Even of the Master of men, it says, (Hebrews 5: 8) "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." Christ said to his chosen disciples, which will apply to us as well: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 18: 3.) Thus we see that men of mature stature must become "babes in Christ," learning first to creep and stand before trying to walk or run. Some should be fed with the "milk of the word," before the "meat," which belonged to them of "full age."

Is he "just as saved" the day he accepts Christ "as he will ever be"? "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall," is a scriptural answer (1 Corinthians 10: 12). Paul says (Hebrews 2: 1, 3), "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." (Verse 3.) "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Hence we believe that by our own neglect we can slip, and as the Master says (Luke 8: 18), "Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have."

Let us now turn our attention to proposition number two.

It is not our own sins, says Mr. Durham, that make us sinners. We are "born under the curse." He throws the whole burden upon Adam. I cannot, I will not believe this man means as bad as he says. Our actual "sins and crimes" do make us sinners, and such transgressions will "cause us to be lost" according to their enormity. What a world, should many believe otherwise.

The Bible teaches that Jesus Christ paid the Adamic debt, as a "Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world"; and that men are responsible for their own transgressions and will be judged accordingly. Paul is the first witness on this point. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." "Being now justified by his blood." "We are reconciled to God by the death of his Son . . . we shall be saved by his life." "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world," "even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Romans 5: 6-18.) And again, "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Corinthians 15: 22-26.) Christ gave himself a ransom for all. (1 Timothy 2: 6. See also 2 Corinthians 15: 14, 15.)

Jesus, himself, says (John 1: 12), "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." Hence we see it places full responsibility upon the individual himself; original sin having been atoned.

Counsel was given to the Hebrew saints (10: 25, 26), "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together . . . for if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." On this point the Apostle Peter testifies (2 Peter 2: 20), "For if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world . . . they are again entangled therein" (verse 18, vanity, lust of the flesh, wantonness, etc.), the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. (Verse 21.) "For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them."

Does this sound like the proposition made by our Pentecostal brother? Do our sins and crimes make us sinners, or cause us to be lost? Friends, take no chance. It is very unsafe. We shall now conclude our evidences on proposition number two with the testimony of the Apostle John (1 John 5: 16), wherein he says: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say ye shall pray for it." This warning in itself is a complete refutation of Mr. Durham's idea that we are sinners, and are lost because of our original sin alone.

However, this question, involving as it does the nature of eternal judgment, has its complement in the consideration of proposition number three.

We here introduce the popular slogan: "Jesus saves now." Does the Bible teach momentary salvation? I answer in the negative. Human evangelism only. Such error certainly enslaves the soul. For as Christ says: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.)

The big if here, is to continue. Saint John puts it, (2 John 1: 9, 10) "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. . . . If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeak." Hence we see we must first "know the truth," then "continue" in the doctrine if we are to be "free." If we "abide" not, we have no promise. In this light we understand the Master's language (Matthew 7: 21, 22,) wherein he says: "Not every one who saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." This indicates more than belief or faith. Why! These even "prophesied in thy name," and "cast out devils," and did "many wonderful works," so they thought; like the class of whom Paul writes, (Romans 10: 1, 2,) saying, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge."

Mr. Durham says; "The moment a man believes on Jesus Christ he is made a new creature." Is he "just as saved then as he ever will be"? The Bible teaching leads me to believe that the man who accepts Jesus Christ, on the impulse of the moment, has only a new thought or idea. That is all—nothing more.

Then begin the processes of growth. Faith, having been conceived in the heart, in due time a birth takes place. The Christian birth of water and of the Spirit. Thus Paul speaks of "babes in Christ." (1 Corinthians 3: 1.) And Christ says: "Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom." (See Matthew 18: 3.) This does not argue that men are immediately transformed from servants of sin into angels of light, but to the contrary. In Ephesians 4: 4-14 we are told that the church was established and a corps of officers placed therein, "for the perfecting of the saints, . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

It is well to stop here and consider what the scriptural meaning of the word saved is, as it is vital to the point at issue.

In 1 Peter 3: 20, it means saved from destruction by the flood. In 1 Corinthians 5: 1-10 it is God's judgments based on the merits of conduct. In Revelation 3: 21 and 21: 7 it is to dwell with God and Christ as an eternal inheritance. Mr. Durham says: "The moment a man believes on Jesus Christ he is a new creature," misquoting 2 Corinthians 5: 17, perhaps, where Paul says "if any man be in Christ he is a new creature." Another perversion is his declaration that from the day of Pentecost the apostles urged the people to accept the Savior saying, "There is salvation in no other name, and that all who believe on him are saved." This is evidently a misrepresentation of Acts 4: 12, where Peter says, "There is none other name . . . whereby we must be saved." The Bible speaks of a momentary change in connection with the resurrection, but not concerning salvation.

The angel said to Joseph (Matthew 1: 21): "Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation," and if by its influence we are kept from any degree of sin, we are saved from the judgments and penalties attaching to that degree of transgression. In this sense Paul makes two references to "us which are saved"; yet as previously quoted, he feared lest he "might be a castaway." To illustrate this point, let us suppose I were working in the erection of a six-story building, along a paved street. If I should lose my balance, and plunge from the top of this structure, the pavement and sure death would receive me. Suppose a fellow workman on the fourth floor should be able to grab my waistcoat, and divert my course, so that I should be thrown inside of the building instead. I would surely say to that man, "You have saved my life." This would not prevent a fatal accident at any future time. Hence we should speak of salvation cautiously, remembering the injunction of the word of God, (1 Corinthians 10:12) which reads: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." There are a few isolated passages in the Bible upon which the Holiness theory of "sanctification" is based.

However, it cannot be reconciled to ninety-five per cent of the Scriptures, taken as a whole, and is therefore a strained construction. "Woe unto me if I preach not the gospel." (1 Corinthians 9:16; Acts 20:27.) Jesus said: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye may bear much fruit." Again, " whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap." (Galatians 6:7.) How can a reasonable mind conclude that a sinner can be sanctified in a "moment" and "just as saved as he ever will be"?

"To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me on my throne." (Revelation 3:21.) "If any man will come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." (Matthew 16:24.)

"Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." (Hebrews 12:1.)

"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure to the end shall be saved." (Matthew 25:12, 13.) These passages not only show how heaven will be gained, but what will make it heaven when we get there. No honest man wants to slip in—he wants an "abundant entrance."

Who said: "Jesus did it all; there is nothing man can do"? Perhaps some zealous evangelist did. I know Jesus Christ did not teach it. He said: "He which knew his Lord's will and . . . did it not . . . shall be beaten with many stripes." (Luke 12:47.) "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." (Matthew 16:27.) Hence Paul tells us to "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Philippians 2:12); for "faith without works is dead." (James 2:14.)

A volume easily could be written, giving scriptural evidence in support of my position, but I wish to point out not only the error but the underlying danger, as I conclude this humble effort.

Upon the advice of (ecclesiastical) counsel, many a poor sinner has procrastinated the days of his probation, thinking that when the sands of life had nearly run, and when all the lusts for sensual pleasures had been satisfied, then and only then would he take up the cross of Christ. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Galatians 6:7.)

"Doth God pervert judgment, or doth the Almighty pervert justice?" (Job 8:3.) No, indeed, but he that even gives a "cup of cold water, shall in no wise lose his reward." (Matthew 10:42.) We should "watch therefore and be ready" for surely the day will come when the prophet John "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened . . . and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Revelation 20:12.) The God who "looketh upon the heart" will render pure and unadulterated judgment at that day, and "we shall be joint heirs with Jesus Christ. If so be that we suffer with him." (Romans 8:17.) Deathbed repentance won't buy very much there. If you and I ever "dwell in a mansion in the skies," it will be because we have sent ahead the mansion-building material. CHRIS B. HARTSHORN.

The use of character is to be a shield against calumny.—Burke.

The Book of Mormon in the Hawaiian language was translated up to and including the first three chapters of the Book of Alma by Brother J. M. Poepoe. The remainder of the work was done by G. M. Kameakua. This work of translating the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon into Hawaiian was done under the direction of Elder G. J. Waller. He has truly desired help from the general church, but above all else to develop the local and native men so they can attend to the needs of their own race. There is an excellent account of Elder Alexander H. Smith's visit to the islands in the Autumn Leaves for 1904, pages 496 and 546. He was surprised to find that he would need an interpreter, but also was surprised with the earnestness and clearness with which the interpreter expressed himself, showing that they were both directed by the same Spirit.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE STORY OF THE SEVEN TONGUES

Entering Jerusalem, General Allenby posted a proclamation of his authority and a reassurance to the people in the Arabic, Hebrew, English, French, Italian, Greek, and Russian languages. Why those particular languages? There is an interesting chapter of history—perhaps it would be better to say a book of history—in the mere circumstance of the employment of each one of these tongues in the proclaiming of Christian and European power once more in Jerusalem.

In the use of the Arabic, one may see a recognition of the social and ethnic status quo in Palestine. The language of the desert has prevailed over all others as the vernacular of the Holy Land. Its position records the overrunning of all Syria after its conquest by the Arabs in the seventh century by the people of the desert, whose teeming and fanatical thousands the desert could no longer hold. The Arab culture supplanted all others, and assimilated to itself even the Syrian population which remained Christian after the Moslem conquest. So far as the indigenous populations of Palestine are concerned, the Arab tongue and culture are dominant still. It is in the Arabic language that the new conquerors must address Palestinian Moslem and Christian alike. Quite properly, the Turkish language makes no appearance in the polyglot proclamation. The Turks are but a small official and soldier class in Jerusalem—and they are gone.

Next in position on the proclamation comes the Hebrew tongue. Its use tells the story of the Zionist return, as far as it has progressed. Hebrews are now the predominant element in the population of Jerusalem itself, though not in that of Palestine as a whole. But they are essentially an immigrant population whose members, in their countries of origin, spoke not only Russian, and the German jargon which we call Yiddish, but the local tongues of many other lands. It is to be presumed that the language thus employed for the benefit of the Jewish population was the somewhat modernized form of the Hebrew tongue which has been adopted as the formal language of Zion by the leaders of the Hebrew element in Palestine, and not the Yiddish, whose use is quite common on the streets of Jerusalem. Its official employment is a recognition and a promise of the organized return of the sons of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to the land of their fathers. It links the modern history of Palestine with the ancient.

Directly beneath the Hebrew version of General

Allenby's proclamation appears to have come the English version. Naturally, as the language of the conqueror, or the redeeming power, English has a prominent place. It is the tongue in which Christianity, facing in triumph her holy places, says: "I have come at last!" It is the tongue which has become imperial in Asia. Nor is it locally a stranger to Palestine, for it has often been found a convenient means of communication there between the polyglot elements. Through it, Richard Coeur de Lion speaks again to the lost land he sought to save—and triumphs at last. It is the language of the future.

Next to English, if strict historical suggestion were followed, should stand the Latin, which was the official tongue of the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem from 1100 to 1287. No one remains who would choose to read General Allenby's proclamation in the Latin tongue, but the speech of Rome lives again, and will be read on the bulletin boards of Jerusalem, in the versions of French and Italian which are posted there. French was indeed the mother tongue of the Christian kings of Jerusalem, or of the most of them, and it is the language of the Power to which the protection of the Christians of Syria has been intrusted for centuries. The use of the Italian tongue is largely a compliment, no doubt, to the ally of Britain which sits on the seven hills of Rome.

There remain the Greek and Russian tongues. Vastly more people of the orthodox faith, of which these two languages are the habitual tongue, come to Jerusalem, and abide there, than of any other Christian communion. The Russian churches and hospices in and about Jerusalem are a city in themselves. They are well entitled to their representation on the list. But let us note that there is one tongue which is not infrequently heard in Palestine, and which has made the greatest pretensions there, in which the proclamation of Christian rule makes no appearance. It is the German language. The speech of Luther is not heard in Jerusalem in this day of the triumph of the faith. It is relegated to the barbarian limbo where it stood when Godfrey de Bouillon ruled over Jerusalem. And yet it was no longer ago than 1905 that William II of Germany, traveling in the capacity of Holy Roman Emperor, which he assumed for the purpose, visited Jerusalem in person, and on the Mount of Olives held a secret service, to which none but himself and his suite were admitted, in token of the future dominance of Germany in all the East! How are the pious and grasping schemes of the Hohenzollern fallen!

"THE TONGUE OF THE EGYPTIAN SEA"

(In The Fall of Babylon, pages 237 and 238, is a very interesting account of the fulfillment of Isaiah 11:15. Brother J. F. Sheehy asked us about the statement "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea was destroyed by the cutting of the Suez Canal in the century just closed." We referred it to Elder J. W. Wight and he reports with the following article.—EDITORS.

A research in this matter has been interesting but not as extensive as should have been made to bring out the thought in greater detail. It is not as yet clear that the quotation had any reference to the Red Sea or any of its extensions, though Doctor Smith who is quoted to so understand it and Brother W. J. Haworth in his work, The Fall of Babylon, take the same view. But granting that it did have such reference it is still a debatable question as to the meaning of "dryshod." The marginal rendering is "in shoes." However, granting that the Red Sea is the "Egyptian Sea" of Isaiah 11:15, we have the following in favor of the literalization of dryshod:

The most important change in the Red Sea has been the drying up of its northern extremity, "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea." The land about the head of the gulf has risen, and that near the Mediterranean become depressed. The head of the gulf has consequently retired gradually since the Christian era. The prophecy of Isaiah has been fulfilled (Isaiah 11:15; 19:5), the tongue of the Red Sea has dried up for a distance at least fifty miles from its ancient head.—Dictionary of the Bible by Doctor William Smith, p. 795, as published by Scranton & Co.

Sanford, in his Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 329, says: "There are geological proofs that the sea has retreated, and it is quite possible that 'the tongue of the Egyptian sea' may have formerly extended to the lake.

The above quotations harmonize fully with Isaiah 19:15, which reads: "And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up."

If it be true that the Gulf of Suez is the "tongue of the Egyptian sea," then it is also true that the statement in Isaiah 11:15 has not yet been fulfilled, for it has dried but 50 of its original 180 miles, and Isaiah 11:15 says: "And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian Sea." Either, then, Suez is not the "tongue," or else the complete fulfillment has not occurred. The safer conclusion would be that this prophecy is yet in the process of fulfillment.

"THE RIVER"

In the verse just referred to, the prophet says, "he shall shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod." In the latter clause of 19:5 we have: "and the river shall be wasted and dried up."

Fausset, in his Bible Cyclopedia, page 510, says: "Two alone of the seven noted branches of the mouth (of which the Pelusiac was the most eastern) remain, the Damietta (Phanitic) and the Rosetta (Bolbitine) mouths, originally artificial (Herodotus 2:10), fulfilling Isaiah 19:5 and probably 11:11-15, Ezekiel 30:12." Smith says on page 627: "That the Nile is meant by Yihor is evident from its mention as equivalent to Yeor, 'the river,' and as a great river (Isaiah 23:3)."

Granting the truthfulness of the conclusion it is thus seen that the original five streams are now so dry that men may go over "dryshod," in a literal sense. The drying process has certainly manifested itself for Fausset tells us that Solomon built a navy at Ezion Geber, which is now dry land.

Reverting to the preceding part of this investigation with relation to the Gulf of Suez, we insert the following from Fausset: "The northern end [the tongue of the Egyptian Sea], since the exodus, has dried up for fifty miles." This language is sufficiently ambiguous that it may mean that the northern end of Suez is the "tongue." If so, then the passages quoted are "fulfilled." J. W. WIGHT.

CAPITAL AND LABOR

But politics will never do the whole business of pacifying human life and making people content to live it. It never did: it will not now. The great agent in that is religion. The great asset of our civilization incomparably more important than all our astonishing apparatus for promoting physical comfort, is the mind of Christ. That mind penetrated all the perplexities of human relations and solved the problem of life in all its phases. It is on the spirit of Christ, working through individuals, and shaping and inspiring our politics, that we must count to straighten out the tangles in our affairs. That is the only force that is equal to so huge a task; that, working perpetually to bring justice, sanity and love into human concerns, can make men wise enough to be men and women patient enough to be women. That is the only force that can make labor duly tolerant of capital and capital duly considerate of labor; that can keep the spiritual in control of the material, and yet leave apparatus free to accumulate and wealth to increase, and beauty to develop, and can bring liberty and opportunity to all creatures to work out all there is in them that is good.—Edward Sanford Martin.

"The world may forgive the churches of to-day that they are so weak and so inefficient. The world will not forgive the churches if after this time of crisis and judgment and warning they are content to remain so inefficient and helpless."—Samuel Zane Batten, in The Christian Work.

The Use of the Baton in Leading the Choir

Our dictionaries define baton as a word of French derivation; meaning, "a stick; a staff borne as a symbol of office; the wand with which a leader beats time, as for an orchestra." It is, of course, with the last division of meaning that this article is concerned.

It is interesting to trace not only the derivation of this word, but the early uses of the implement itself. It has descended to us from the French because the baton was first used by French conductors in the direction of orchestras. Its earliest uses for this purpose were crude; and certainly, compared with our modern ideals and customs, they would appear ridiculous and amusing. Probably the employment of the baton for directing musical performances came from its original use as an insignia of authority.

The musical director first carried it as a badge of his office and naturally, having it to hand, came to use it to indicate the beats of the music he was leading. Of course the first batons, used principally to denote office and authority, were large, heavy, and imposing, somewhat like the gorgeously bedecked baton of the drum major, as now seen in the hands of the military band leader on parade.

Accordingly, it was used as we would naturally expect such a cumbersome instrument to be employed, by marking the first, or down beat only of each measure. This was usually done by striking the floor a resounding thump with the butt end of this heavy implement; a proceeding that undoubtedly accentuated the rhythm of the composition being played, whether it contributed to the beauty or not. Gradually, however, as musical composition developed and variations of shading, phrasing, rhythm, and expression came to be employed, this unwieldy implement underwent radical moderation, until it evolved into the light, graceful wand now universally employed.

A few words regarding the pronunciation of the word itself. We have heard it uttered in a variety of ways such as bay-tn, bat-tn, bat-toon, etc., but the correct pronunciation is ba-ton, accent on the last syllable, the vowel o with the same sound as our word ah.

The modern baton, used in musical performances, is usually a light, tapering piece of wood, about twenty inches in length, and weighing at most but two or three ounces. Batons may be purchased at music stores in almost any conceivable style, ranging from the elaborately ornate ones of ebony or mahogany, gold mounted and inlaid with pearl, down to the simple ones of inexpensive wood, plainly finished and fashioned. This latter kind are almost universally chosen by orchestral, choral, and band conductors, for the reason that they are light and do not tire the wrist and arm in their use. Needless to say, the former kind are chosen only for their ornate beauty, and conductors who value utility as a chief quality invariably select the simple forms. Patrick Saarsfield Gilmore, who in his day was the most famous bandmaster in America, when conducting the celebrated band that bore his name, invariably used a long, slender, tapering wand of white holly wood. He was frequently presented with costly batons of ivory or precious woods, richly and expensively ornamented with gold and inlaid with pearl and precious stones; and on the occasion of such presentations he would make his customary witty speech of acceptance and gratitude, conduct a few selections with the new gift, and then go back to his plain white stick again, consigning his new acquisition to his already numerous hoard of gifts.

In this connection we will say a few words as to color of the baton. They are made in many colors, but we fail to remember ever seeing a prominent conductor ever use any other than a plain white stick, for the excellent reason at all times and under all conditions a white baton can be plainly seen. For this reason they are to be preferred to the other batons.

There are many and various ways of using the baton in the conduct of musical compositions, and we unhesitatingly say that many of them are bad. They range from the senseless, gyratory waving of the stick through the air, to the quiet, methodical, intelligent pulsing of the implement, where every movement has a purpose. We have witnessed quite a number of fine conductors and have noted that all of them used quiet, orderly movements that embodied system and intelligence. On the other hand we have witnessed some choir leaders, who, in leading their choirs in ordinary anthems, would wave the baton wildly through the air, both arms thrashing like Don Quixote's windmill, and themselves worked up into a very pitch of frenzy and perspiration. They certainly worked hard at it. Their choirs usually took the obviously sensible course in the situation, and refused to get unduly "het up" by their leader's violent exertions. Such leadership amounts to but little. The choirs soon become accustomed to the extravagant, spectacular motions of their leaders and lapse into their own placid methods. A quiet, unobtrusive style of leading is always best. It is well sometimes, when striving for particular emphasis or effect, or in working to a climax, to indulge in widely extended motions of the arms when leading. Such are often necessary to enthuse the choir with the leader's own meaning. But the leader who is always at a climax, "running with the throttle wide open," never gets the results from his choir that he desires.

Should the baton be used to lead our church choirs? Some contend that it should, others that its use detracts from the sacred character of the services. We see no reason why, if it is used in a quiet, dignified manner, in which the element of pride and show is absent, its use should mar the spiritual character of any service. We can only answer that sometimes its use is demanded and sometimes it is better not to use it. Generally, the large choir needs to be led with the baton, while the small choir may well be led by some other method, although there are instances where the baton may occasionally be employed in the small choir. But in the very small choir it is better to dispense with it and lead the few singers by one of the several other methods. We know of no more amusing spectacle than to witness some self-satisfied chorister vigorously waving a baton over a choir composed of a half dozen or so meek, inoffensive-looking singers.

The baton is very often necessary in leading congregational singing. Large bodies of people are harder to keep together when singing en masse than small bodies. There are so many different temperaments, so many varying conceptions as to style, rhythm, and expression that a disagreeable conflict of sound is often had unless uniformity of direction is maintained. In almost every choral body there are voices, which, on account of their quality of commanding attention, easily take the lead, oftentimes to the confusion of the entire mass. In large auditoriums one part of the house may be unable to know what the other part is doing, and if each part is being led by a voice eager to maintain its lead, the result is often disastrous. This is frequently the cause of the distracting "see-sawing" so often heard in our church, especially in the prayer meetings. Steps should be taken to correct it, for, aside from the disagreeable features of such incidents, we have known such inharmonious occasions to effectually kill the spirituality of a service.

At all times, the use of the baton in our church service could be in a quiet, dignified, unobtrusive manner, always with wisdom, bearing in mind the fact that never should it be used in such a fashion as to mar the devotional character of the service. Except for the purpose of awakening emphasis or enthusiasm, or the expression of forcefulness in the singing, wide sweeps of the baton, or a labored waving of the arms should be avoided. Gentle, quiet motions of the forearm and wrist are generally sufficient and are far more efficacious than the wildly extravagant gyrations so often seen in amateur conductors.

Each motion of the baton should have its particular meaning and be used for a definite object, which, in time, the choir will come to understand and follow. In order that our choristers may be helped to a proper understanding of the use of this simple implement of the musician's art, we will endeavor to describe a few of the fundamental rules for its use, observing at the start that these rules, like many of the rules bearing upon art, are reasonably elastic in their application.

The most essential movements of the baton are founded upon the rules denoting time (rhythm) and determining accent (dynamic force). As these rules lie at the foundation of musical structure we feel that most every musical person will understand them. We shall consider those of time first.

There are several methods of classifying the various kinds of time measure in music, but we will take one of modern method as being a truly satisfactory and serviceable one, capable of practical demonstration. In this method all measures of time are classed under two heads: duple, or even, time; and triple, or uneven, time. Each of these divisions has a subdivision devoted to the forms of compound measure.

Duple, or even, time, embraces all rhythms under the time signatures of 2-2, 2-4. There are two pulsations and one accent to each measure, and the manner of using the baton in indicating them is, down on the first beat, up on the second; as, down-up, down-up, etc. Some conductors prefer to use for this form of measure, the horizontal style of beat, to the right for the first count, to the left for the second, on account of a supposed greater ease and grace of movement of arm.

Triple, or uneven (perhaps odd is a better word), time embraces all rhythms under the time signatures of 3-2, 3-4, 3-8. There are three pulsations and one accent in each measure and the time is indicated by the baton in the following manner: down on the first beat, left (some conductors prefer right) on the second beat, up on the last beat; as down-left-up, etc.

Growing out of these simple divisions of time are found some important compound subdivisions, corresponding largely to the principal divisions, but differing in that there are more than one accent in each measure.

Compound duple time embraces those rhythms under the time signatures of 4-2, 4-4, 4-8. There are four pulsations in each measure and two accents, a heavy accent on beat one and light accent on beat three. They are indicated by the baton by the motions of down on beat one, left on beat two, right on beat three, up on beat four; as down-left-right-up, etc. Some conductors choose to vary this order to down-right-left-up, but the first is preferable, as it is in harmony with the established rule that "the right beat should always indicate an accented pulse."

Compound triple time embraces those rhythms under the time signatures of 6-4, 6-8, 9-8, 12-8. In these rhythms is found the only complexity of time measures. We will therefore consider them each separately. Six-four time has six pulsations in each measure and two accents, on the first and fourth beats respectively. In reality this form of measure is merely the double of 3-4 measure, the unison of two 3-4 measures into one, and in ordinary usage may be treated as such. The wielder of the baton should therefore beat this time as he would beat 3-4 time, making two complete sets of beats in each measure. The old method of beating this form of measure was, down-left-left-right-up-up; but this method has been found so awkward that it has been abandoned.

Six-eight time is similar to 6-4 time in that it has six pulsations in each measure, as well as two accents, occurring on the same respective beats. It differs from 6-4 time however, in the fact that the pulsations are eighth notes instead of quarter notes, making the action relatively twice as fast. Very seldom is 6-8 time rendered slowly enough to count or beat it six times in each measure and hence resource is had to dividing the six impulses into two groups of three each, and beating it two impulses to the measure, on the accented beats. Thus, in the directing of this time, the baton is used as in beating the ordinary forms of duple time.

Nine-eight time has nine impulses to each measure and three accents, which come upon counts one, four, and seven. Like 6-8 time, it is usually rendered too fast for beating all the impulses in detail, and it is accordingly grouped three impulses to each beat and is treated exactly like the various forms of ordinary triple time, three beats to each measure.

Twelve-eight time, fortunately, is not often met with. Its twelve impulses are divided among its four accents, occurring on the first, fourth, seventh, and tenth counts. It is beaten on the accents, precisely like 4-4 time.

In denoting accent or dynamic force the baton is used according to the individuality and skill of the one employing it. For instance, in indicating a special accent or emphasis, a quick, emphatic movement of the implement at the time is usually all that is necessary. In indicating a crescendo or diminuendo a gradual enlargement or contraction of the area of movement may suffice. Again, a conductor may indicate special entrances, effects, or emphasis in certain parts of his choir or orchestra by the use of the baton in their particular direction. Again, the use of the baton in any or all of the foregoing work may be effectually enhanced by intelligently employing the other hand in well-chosen signs and gestures. This other hand, however, should be used in moderation and never, unless a meaning is desired to be conveyed with it. We remember watching Theodore Thomas, the great conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, as he conducted his magnificent organization. In his right hand his baton described modest, graceful paths. His left hand was used but seldom; but when it was brought into action, it conveyed a definite, intelligent meaning.

In describing the foregoing movements of the baton, we have tried to give only the specific directions the implement should traverse. We have merely outlined the skeleton of such body of movements. The chorister who uses the baton should endeavor to clothe these skeleton-outlined movements with the flesh and sinews of grace and elasticity. For instance, the directing of 4-4 time according to mere outline would be an awkward and stiff traversal of the baton to and fro along the two sides of a triangle, in severe, repellent straight lines. Let the conductor in following the established outlines, do so in lines of ease and flexibility, leaving the rigidity and stiffness of straight lines for the grace and flexibility of arcs and curves.

In conclusion we would urge that choristers endeavor to improve themselves in the use of this important implement. Study the directions in this article carefully and patiently, and try them out methodically and persistently in your own work. Also, if possible, watch the work of good conductors: whenever opportunity offers, for in that way may some excellent examples be found as well as ideas gained.

Mendelssohn, the Optimist

Thinking it may be of interest to those who delight in things musical, the opportunity is taken to present some facts and data concerning the man who composed and gave to the world the wonderful oratorio, "The Elijah," which is to be rendered at our coming General Conference.

You are doubtless wondering why the above title is chosen for this article, but those who have studied his life will readily see many reasons why Mendelssohn should be called "The Optimist."

During Mendelssohn's life, his friends and followers called him the singer of "songs without words"; which title he justly earned.

Mendelssohn was born of Jewish parents in Hamburg, Germany, February 3, 1809. As a child he was given every opportunity to develop the gift given him of God. His parents were wealthy and his youth was a continual song; not a requiem or a dirge, but a "spring song." He was fortunate in having an unusually talented sister, Fanny, with whom he spent many enjoyable hours, playing duets, as we recall was done in the lives of Mozart and his sister. But, "girl fashion," sister Fanny married and the world was deprived of her genius.

Mendelssohn, who is sometimes known as Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, afterwards married a young lady of the latter name. His parents adopted this added title as a protection against the persecutions which the Jews were suffering.

It is true that in the music of every master can be found his life; the lights and shadows, the smiles and tears that he could best express in his compositions. As we sit and listen to the overture of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," written when he was but seventeen, we can feel the joy of his youth as he must have felt it. Listen to the wonderful, scintillating strains of the scherzo movement of this overture and you, too, will say, "He was an optimist."

Some are prejudiced against his music because there are "no wrong notes in it." It carries one away through sunlit fields and flowers and when it is finished you are loath to return to earth.

Now for a bit of his character. In short, it was blameless. Carefree, full of life and vigor, delighting in all goodness, he stood as a mark among his loose surroundings. Yet, can you say after hearing his "Elijah," that he was not stirred by the weightier things of life.

He lived a life of real joy and happiness and his death came in Leipsig, November 4, 1847.

Special Musical for the Coming General Conference

Plans are completed to make the coming session of the General Conference a profitable as well as an enjoyable one for the musical forces of the church in attendance.

The chief musical offering will be, of course, the rendition of Mendelssohn's immortal oratorio, Elijah, which is set for the two evenings of Friday, April 12, and Sunday, April 14. Other choral features will be the rendition of the conference anthems by the big combined conference choir. It is also expected that, from the visiting singers, there will be rendered some special vocal selections.

Special institute work, in conjunction with these offerings, has been arranged, with the approval of the Presidency, as follows:

Monday, April 8, 9 a. m., special prayer meeting for the musical forces assembled at the conference, invoking spiritual grace on the music work of the church, with testimonies of its blessings.

Tuesday, April 9, 9 a. m., institute work; a "Round Table" for the consideration of our musical problems.

Wednesday, April 10, 9 a. m., institute work; continuation of the features of the preceding day.

It is expected that the sessions of the three last named days will be held in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. Also, if interest demands, the work will be continued, or special sessions held for orchestra or band problems.

General Secretary.

An Earnest Worker Passes

The passing of Sister B. C. Smith from this life to that of a higher and better realm, deprives our auxiliary cause of one of its most faithful and staunch supporters. Many, many years Sister Smith stood at the head of the woman movement of our church, and sought with all the power and vision with which she was blessed to lift that cause and purpose high in the realms of real service to God, humanity, and the home. We feel that we have not words to express adequately the loss we have sustained, nor to give our readers a clear idea of what Sister Smith and her faithful service has meant to us. Later we expect to present to you, from the pen of others, a more fitting tribute than we are able to offer at the present time.

Our sympathies are extended to the members of her family, praying that the grace of God will sustain and bless in this hour of sore trial.

From the Director of the Oriole Movement

[We have obtained Sister Gardner's permission to publish this very excellent letter which she has been sending out to the monitors of the Oriole circles. It breathes a spirit of great devotion to the cause, and an ideal vision of what we should hope and desire for our girls.—A. A.]

Dear Sister: May I make a special plea to you to-day to keep our Oriole colors flying? You may be doing more than we know, but a little inspiration from us, if we can give it, will be acceptable, will it not? We are so anxious to help you who are having the real experiences to meet, the actual problems to solve. The time for preparation seems all too short and we cannot afford to lessen our efforts or neglect our opportunities to fit ourselves for our future work.

Some of our girls are having what they need in training in their homes, for their future as women, but hundreds of our girls are not. This fact was emphasized by a most pitiful story from the lips of a sweet, innocent, fun-loving girl, just the other day, and I doubt not that many of our dear girls could tell us of similar experiences. But you and I know that the pure womanliness of our girls is threatened and endangered daily, so why talk of that?

Shall we picture to ourselves instead a group of girls, equipped with the brightest and truest of eyes, and the steadiest of nerves, strong bodies, and clear skins, all the result of good, wholesome, clean living; girls with high ideals of womanhood, with a spiritual and intellectual foundation, prepared to respond to the future and take the places that will be waiting to be filled by sincere, intelligent, and thoughtful women both in and out of the church. This picture is not impossible, but it requires wisdom, prayer, thoughtfulness, and unceasing preparation upon the part of the women who would help in its making?

You and I have many other insistent duties, but if we have ability and are prepared to work with the girls shall we not give a little of our time and do our bit by sympathetically, lovingly, and intelligently leading and counseling them? The Oriole work opens up a vast number of ways in which we may help the girls, and can we afford to fail them now when they are in the process of building and preparing for their work as women of the church? We cannot fail to see in the trend of the times, that consecrated and intelligent service will be required of both men and women.

While it is true that the Oriole work does open avenues for training, preparation, and service, as well as social activities, it is difficult sometimes to keep the play instinct on a reasonable average and to impress the girls with the necessity for a more serious consideration of their calling as women. But with a little patience and sympathy and a great deal of faith and wisdom, we should be able to introduce and develop the very necessary feature of training for intelligent service.

The moods and "spasms" of the adolescent are sometimes most unexplainable and trying, but through these experiences we should try to see the story that nature is telling, and help to make it the best story ever told. When a boy, passes a group of girls and speaks to all, but to one more particularly, nature is telling a story. In the grouping of boys and girls together for social pastime, nature is telling a story. So if the social life appeals more strongly to Orioles, perhaps it is just what they need. The development of social etiquette and relations is a big field and a very necessary one. The meetings and activities of the girls may be carefully and wisely planned to meet the social requirements, and at the same time introduce and make attractive some educational feature.

Now, dear sister, if you have a problem in your Oriole work which you feel that you have not solved to your satisfaction, write to us and we will do the best we can to help you. Your problem may be the problem of others, and by discussing we may be mutually benefited. Or if you have one that you have solved successfully, be generous and tell us about it.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
Director of Oriole Girls.

A Forward Campaign in Iowa

[Sister Wight, our supervisor of Home and Child Welfare, sends the following clipping from the Chicago World Herald. What Iowa can do, other States can and will do, and we should be a unit in lending our moral and financial support to a cause so worthy as that championed in this article. Ignorance is the curse of the world; young people make mistakes in ignorance of consequences which they would never deliberately choose. Municipalities are but just awakening to the need of more carefully shielding the children within their borders, realizing, as perhaps would never have been possible without this terrible war and its drain upon our young life, that those children are a greater asset, can they be saved to efficiency and citizenship, than any other at their command. So by power of pen, of platform, of picture, of any and all avenues of education, will the public be made acquainted with the need for this conservation of young life, and won over to the sacrifice and consecration necessary to accomplish that end.—A. A.]

The women's and children's welfare committee is a sub-committee of the woman's committee of the Iowa division of the national council of defense. With the confusion of demands bewildering even those most accustomed to solve public problems, it seems wise that there should be some central body to act as a clearing house for repetition of effect, or for duplication of organization.

It is hoped that the committee on women's and children's welfare in Iowa may be of such service. In order that it may be so we suggest that any organization dealing with women's and children's welfare keep in communication with this central committee.

It is our understanding that our committee deals with the three fields of women's and children's welfare, industrial, social, and physical. As a State far inland, we have not as yet felt much of the social and industrial upheaval that is already threatening the manufacturing States of the East, where women are flocking to factory centers and the care of children is being lost sight of in the immediate urgency for labor. However, Iowa should be on the alert with adequate labor laws, with proper social regulations, and with a definite health program to keep Iowa women and children in a normal condition. It is on the last phase that we particularly wish to center this article.

SELF-SACRIFICE OF WOMEN

Self-sacrifice in women is paramount in these days of world-wide unselfishness. But self-sacrifice becomes a useless, futile thing unless sustained by calm, sane judgment. No man is considered fit to go forth in his nation's service until he is fit physically to offer the best. Why should women consider themselves of less value when the social and industrial life of the country depends so largely on that health? England and France are giving us the benefit of their mistakes in numerous bulletins and pamphlets. It is our business to heed them and to heed seriously.

One of the first steps taken by the European fighting nations to protect the health of women was due to the decrease in the birth rate and the increase in the death rate among infants. It did not take a very clear vision to foresee the fate of a nation that was feeding its men into the trenches and its infant reserve into the fight against anxiety, hunger, exposure, and industrial greed at home. Upon recognition of such possible calamity steps were immediately taken to avert it. Among other protective measures, laws were made to give the proper care to expectant mothers. It is by no means too early for Iowa to be considering the same care. Women themselves can regulate this largely and by so doing render the country a service only secondary to that of the men who are fighting. An expectant mother should place herself in the care of a physician early in her pregnancy.

FREE CLINIC OFFERED

The children's bureau of Washington, District of Columbia, furnishes bulletins on the care of women during that period. Free clinics, if not already in existence, should be established in every community, where advice and care can be given, not only at this particular time, but to all women and children who cannot afford to get it otherwise. Local authorities should look to it that proper provisions for confinement are made for mothers who cannot secure it for themselves. There should be free beds in every hospital for confinement cases. The mortality rate of mothers and babies will be materially lowered when every county has a maternity hospital.

Iowa is far ahead of many other States in the baby welfare work, but we shall need to emphasize that work rather than lessen it this year. Women's clubs should guard against any decrease of interest in baby week. Less than a month ago, six of the volunteer nurses' aids from Chicago started to France to carry on baby welfare work. Surely if stricken France can take up such constructive work at this time, we in prosperous Iowa cannot do less than we have done in other years. Day nurseries for the care of children while the mother earns or helps to earn the living, are going to be a far greater necessity than they have been in the past. The number of visiting nurses should be increased rather than decreased. Every child should be protected and developed into a hundred per cent child if such a thing is possible. If remediable difficulties are made a study and permanent conference stations established where parents can receive intelligent advice on the care of children, much can be done toward producing the physically fit child.

IN THE SCHOOLS

Just as the visiting nurse is necessary for the home, school nurses and doctors are necessary for the school. Remediable troubles should be followed up in school, and contagious diseases checked by the most stringent methods. Anything lessening physical efficiency in the school child is inexcusable. The difficulties attending the boy and girl of the adolescent period should be approached by those in charge with the same sane, matter of fact treatment that any other phase of natural development receives. We have stood afar off from boys and girls at this trying time of their lives, letting them struggle along in ignorance or with distorted bits of information. These years should form a foundation for moral judgment for the rest of their lives. The war is dragging many facts out into the open which have been neglected or rather ignored by the public. The teaching of social hygiene, for instance, is no longer questioned. Now is the time for some such course to be introduced into our public schools and colleges to acquaint our boys and girls with an explanation of life that is decent and adequate. If we are to have a future generation worthy of the sacrifice being made to maintain it to-day, they should leave our schools with an education that permits them to face the origin of life and the emotions back of that origin with clean and healthy minds. This is a responsibility we must accept.

In conclusion, may we urge upon all a health crusade. Lectures on every detail of health should be given: Personal hygiene—care of the teeth, prevention and care of colds, well-balanced meals, etc.; nursing of contagious diseases; well-directed recreation; prevention, care, and cure of tuberculosis; facts about social diseases with their destructive force measuring greater than that of any other one disease in the world. In short, health propaganda and a sensible following of our own precepts is absolutely essential in bringing the woman power of the State to the degree of efficiency necessary to sustain the future welfare of women and children.

New York and Philadelphia District

Sister Lentell writes from Scranton, Pennsylvania, of the enjoyable time experienced by the women of this district at their late conference where they were given two numbers on the Friday evening joint auxiliary program, and two hours on Saturday afternoon. A good representation of the women in the district was in attendance, and many things were discussed of a progressive nature, among them being the talks from the various superintendents of departments along the lines of their especial interests. The convention made arrangements for meeting the expenses of the organizer and supervisors, and the conference granted the organization a place upon the district library board. Sunday afternoon the sisters had a round table, and they feel greatly encouraged for future work. Six branches out of the nine in the district have active auxiliaries, and they hope soon to enroll the others, so as to have a one hundred per cent section. Brother Ward L. Christy gave a very enthusiastic talk on "What women can do in the church," and the Oriole girls were in evidence with readings and songs of an original nature.

The Omahans

OMAHA, NEBRASKA

The conservation program enjoyed by the auxiliary women here last week proved to be most valuable. Sister Charlotte Dryden, for years experienced in teaching home economics at Iowa's State Agricultural College, gave a half hour's talk on conserving the strength, mentally, morally, and physically, of our workers, the young no less than the older ones. She interpreted conservation to mean "right using," instead of the popular erroneous one of "saving."

Sister Wallace gave a clear interpretation of the Government's wishes concerning the saving of certain foods in the homes of our people by substituting other sorts. An exchange of recipes and menus which our own women have found to be practical and helpful in observing these rules was much enjoyed, these being left with the secretary where all could have access to them. Copies of the splendid pamphlet entitled "Food conservation lessons," arranged and compiled by Miss Julia Vance, director of home economics at the Nebraska University, were distributed to all, through the courtesy of the Food Administration's Omaha representative, Miss Farnsworth.

The ladies of this auxiliary are to visit one of the local large bakeries, on Thursday of this week, having the processes explained in detail by the owner. This will be very instructive and of real value to housekeepers.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Temporal Law in a Spiritual Realm

Glancing over the world of the past, looking at it as it exists in the present, will in a measure give us a forecast of the future. Human knowledge occupies a legitimate field here. The eventful things of the world to-day fill the mind with thoughts that will find expression in a thousand different ways, colored by the individual, and presented by facts available to the conscious observer.

At no time in the history of the race has its problems been so widely and seriously exercised with the problems as we know them by the expressions of the present as well as the past, not looking at them in the light of a favored few, but the broader brotherhood of the race.

There must be a change if human hopes and aspirations are to reach the higher levels divinity teaches us to live for, to strive for. Inertia means death or the approach to it. All along the highways of advancement fierce and contending struggles mark the onward and upward progress of human effort. The normal individual seeks his welfare by the better instincts of his nature, and the dictates of an enlightened mind. Our individual natures frequently want the right way. That is a battle royal to deal with. If we "go over the top" we have been assured a means of collective life.

Some men live well; some men die well. That man is dead to the world's needs to-day who is solely conscious of self. The great mass of us will have to shape our conduct in an economic and social sense, widely different to what we have been schooled in the past. Existing conditions the world over make us painfully aware of the issues of life as they are. A simpler, deeper, and more human creed will have to obtain in the coming time. The true and natural foundations of society are the wants and fears of the individuals. Conserve the first, you escape the other. A righteous temporal law must find its rightful place in the philosophy of life.

Swiftly moving events passing into history are giving us lesson upon lesson in these days of wickedness and vengeance. Perhaps we are only on the threshold yet, of the perils which are foretold will encompass the world immediately preceding his second coming. Mankind is conservative. He develops habits, theories, and systems that become fixed. Unfortunately the currents of human life run too often towards self. It takes a mighty shaking, a mighty jarring, world-wide, to get him to learn the ideals of life. He who fights for the good of all, fights best for himself, and his temporal salvation will be better assured.

The popular belief is that redemption from the ills of this life comes only when you leave it. Why? The language of the apostle is, "Work out your own salvation." Here the working opportunities are given to shape the character, both temporally and spiritually. Competitive effort stimulates human activities, but too often it is unwise, unjust, and ruthless in its exactions, because in its very nature it is self-seeking. The wisdom that planned man's best mental and moral development, contemplated a spiritual law the counterpart of the other, having the stamp of divinity.

The dual nature of man responds to the operation of two laws, one ministering to his mental and moral being, the other to his physical needs. The spirit manifested in the temporal laws of the world will not fit into the gospel economy, hence the Creator contemplated the adjustment of our lives to a better law, fitting us for a nobler life on earth, a higher sphere of action and a greater glory.

Man's grosser nature is unsanctified by the spirit of the gospel in its fullness. It can never live up to the requirements of the celestial law. Human efforts many times in the past sought to establish this ideal social condition, but its permanent character could never be realized. The Lord said to his disciples, "Without me ye can do nothing." The Latter Day Saint gospel believer that can vision the impending fate of the world, must sense the wisdom of the Christ plan for a people's temporal salvation from the wreck and ruin of nations, and what the prophets declared would befall a perishing world.

Want to Enjoy Conference?

Notwithstanding these days of stress and strain, the familiar faces of both resident and visiting missionaries remind us that General Conference is near at hand.

Many young people are, no doubt, preparing to attend, and many more would do so if they were acquainted in Independence. The hundreds of guests and constant church activities tax the conference city until very little time is left for purely social purposes. Therefore, it is the purpose of the I. X. L. Sunday school class to devise a method by which visiting young may become acquainted. There is no investment that pays larger dividends than cheerful smiles and kind words, and we as a class, purpose to play social host to as many young people as will permit us.

The I. X. L. class numbers about fifty young men and women, and we are anxious to do our "bit" by making the young guests so welcome that the Zion city here will be sufficiently strong to bring them back again. Those who are unacquainted here are especially invited into the big family circle. "No deferred classifications." Drop a card to one of these, and you will be immediately enlisted in "Class A, Number 1": Walter Chapman, president, 1522 Short Street; Velma Brocaw, secretary, 816 West Electric Street; and Mrs. E. S. McNichols, 806 West Electric Street.

MISS VELMA BROCAW, Secretary.

The Hawaiian Herald

In the Hawaiian HERALD I stated that Mr. Clegg, son-in-law of Elder Waller, had enlisted in the British Army and was now in England. This is an error. I had received a letter from Mr. Clegg saying he was sailing the date he was writing, for England, and of course I thought he had gone; but it developed, I learned later, there was not sufficient room on the transport, so quite a number had to remain at Halifax. When the explosion there took place, Mr. Clegg was severely injured. Possibly at this writing is in San Francisco, convalescing.

We appreciate, over here in this mission, the care which the editors took in getting out the Hawaiian edition of the HERALD. There was splendid judgment used in the make up, and the printing is a very creditable piece of work. There is only one fault I find with it, and that is there was too much "Miller" in it; but it was not my fault, as I wrote to quite a number for contributions, but only a few responded.

The volcano of Kilauea is overflowing into the outer crater. The pit has been obliterated and great rivers of lava pour across the crater, something which has not happened since 1820. Elder McConley wrote me that every automobile in Hilo was in use taking sight-seers to the great spectacle. Earthquakes are frequent at the volcano as the gas pressure is something terrific. The automobile road is covered and the old parking place for automobiles is under ten feet of lava.

A Tribute to a Mother

Before me on the desk lies a typewritten page. An important, insignificant thing in itself but bearing a message that, in a sense, is to me almost sacred. Why have I carried it almost a year? It is the last page in that wonderful volume, the life of Sallie A. Russell—my mother! Written by one who loved her as one of her own children, these words, combined with the personal tribute of J. W. Rushton, constituted an offering which remains to this day a fitting benediction upon a comparatively obscure life. For her contribution in the interest of humanity was utterly without display.

To quote from this page: "Her entire life was one of self-sacrifice and helpfulness, she having taken a number into her home who had been bereft, and raised them as her own children, all of whom rise up and call her blessed. She was baptized by her father, Elder Otis Shumway, in 1862, and continued a gentle-spirited, faithful member and bearing, to a considerable extent, the Spirit of Him she owned as Master."

She died suddenly while sitting at the breakfast table at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. Clarke, in Colorado Springs, Colorado, March 15, 1917. I stood by her side supporting her in the chair until I knew it was true: "She is dead!" Then accepting the inevitable, these arms lifted her gently to the couch. Whatever there is in a man's life of real value which can be ascribed to the care and love of a true mother is mine to-day, and I thank God it was mine to be her boy! I know of no greater tribute which her children can bring to the memory of this devoted mother than to seek diligently to abide in her counsels, and thus, though she be dead, in a very particular sense, present her in themselves, yet alive unto the world to-day.

Forgetful of our sorrow, we push forward to-day in the strength of the rejoicing born of remembrance of her successful life.

Affectionately,

WICHITA, KANSAS.

FRANK A. RUSSELL.

The Spirit of Forgiveness

Christ says in the Lord's Prayer: "And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." We ask God to treat us as we treat others whom we think have wronged us." If we forgive, yet look back and bring up old grudges, don't you think God should be allowed to do likewise?

In Matthew 7:1, 2, we read: "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with that measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." In the twelfth verse we read further: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."

How happy this world would be if we should think of this saying and obey it. Yet we pass along all too carelessly, thinking mostly of ourselves, and all too little of the other person's feelings. How good it would be if we would stop to think before our acts: Is that what Christ would do, and would I want to be treated in this way? We could make others very happy if we would only be willing to become humble and submit ourselves to each other, considering the feelings of others. We are all equal in God's sight and one is our master, God.

In Matthew 18:21-35, Peter asks our Lord a question: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" The answer of Christ is: "I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven." We read along down through the chapter and get the account of the unmerciful servant and the result of an unforgiving spirit. "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every-one his brother their trespasses."

In Colossians 3:13, we read the following: "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

These are wonderful passages of scripture and just what we need each day. We should not only read them but take them into our own lives and practice them, letting others know the standard by which our lives are ruled. We can all be lights of the world if we will be.

In Matthew 5:44 we read this: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." In the forty-sixth verse we read further: "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?"

We must bear this in mind, that we are commanded to love them that have not loved us and are not our friends. It is for us to make friends and to do any kind act that will make them know that we are truly their friends.

We must not stand back and say: "Well, it is not my place to go to So and So, as he is the one who is to blame." That is a mistake. Just be humble and lay aside all malice, which will bring you sufficient reward to doubly pay you for the effort, and you will know that you have obeyed God's command. Love your enemies and forgive all who have trespassed against you.

A SISTER.

SOUTH SIDE, OMAHA, NEBRASKA, March 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written, although I enjoy the many letters and the news of the HERALD. Although reading the church papers, the HERALD is the only one I take. I would like to take them all, especially the Ensign and the Autumn Leaves. I certainly did enjoy the letter of Brother Gold, of Camp Funston, and he said he had been writing to the Ensign and I realized how much I had missed.

It certainly made me feel like a slacker. The brother stated they were holding prayer services and were enjoying the Spirit, and it makes us rejoice as it is an answer to our many prayers that they would remember their covenant.

Also our Sister Anderson, whom I have always wanted to meet, and I thought she was far away, but was surprised to learn that she was such a short distance away, just a street-car ride from here. I enjoyed her article of to-day, and I felt very much ashamed, too, as I have complained so much of having to eat so much corn meal, although I have always been very careful not to waste anything that I could possibly use. I always thought it a duty of every Latter Day Saint to economize. But to be compelled to eat corn bread and many other things which I disliked to cook, was not so pleasant. I was ignorant of the fact that they were much better for us all. Our health has improved since using them.

We do not use meat and have not for some time. I think I can safely say a five-dollar bill would cover our meat account in the last six years.

We are still holding the church services here. We hated to give up our other president, but he thought it was too much for him, and now we have as our president, W. N. Hill, of Omaha, and he has put new life in some. He brought quite a number with him, which we certainly try to appreciate. I think when the weather is more settled we will have a better showing.

We lost an earnest worker this winter by death, Sister Wallace Greenslitt. She was never very strong but took a great deal of interest in the little class which she called "Sunbeams." All the Sunbeams miss her. One of her youngest, three years old, says she has gone home to God. We all miss her, but our loss is her gain. She suffered, but was very patient.

We are still having our cottage prayer services. We have them on Tuesday evening of each week and enjoy them more each time. Brother Hubert Case was with us last evening, also our young sister, Mary Marmoy. What an encouragement it is to see the young come out to prayer meetings, and still better to see them take part. May God bless the young of the church everywhere. Let us remember them to our Father, Saints everywhere.

I many times think of the opportunities I had when I was where there was no branch, where I could have encouraged the thought of having a day set apart for prayer and testimony meeting. It would be a great help to Saints where there is no branch to meet together and unite in prayer, as there is great strength obtained in unison of prayer. Come let us reason together and pray together. Many obstacles are removed in this way, when seemingly they are immovable. God is only waiting for us to do our part and show our willingness to occupy where we are best fitted and heed the admonition, especially the verse beginning:

"Time is ripe, my work must hasten,
Whoso will, may bide the hour.
Naught can harm whom God protecteth,
Elements confess his power."

May God's blessing rest upon all his people,

K. E. STEELE.

DUBOIS, IDAHO, March 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: Again I ask permission for a little space in your precious columns, which are more precious to me than the "fine gold of Ophir." My loneliness, through isolation, has been tenderly succored and healed many a time through the comfort and upbuilding power which seems to pervade the columns of our church papers. Is it not a blessing to us that we have facilities to send the word broadcast throughout the world whereby the hearts of the honest seekers for truth may be filled?

We oftentimes murmur and fret because of our environment, but we must not forget that God wants a tried people, and our trials must come from without as well as from within. Trials and temptations go hand in hand, seeking to discourage and make us faint-hearted; but knowing that God has promised to be our stay if we trust in him, our burdens can never become heavier upon us than what he is able to deliver us from. Therefore, let us trust him and continue faithfully to do his will.

The time is nigh at hand, according to prophecy, that Christ will return to earth. The sun has been darkened, and the stars have fallen from heaven, and now we are engaged in the greatest of wars. One nation is arrayed against another, till the most precious blood flows in streams. Famine threatens the world. Yet all these, reminders of his coming, seem to little bestir the world. But "He cometh as a thief in the night," therefore let us watch and pray that we will be ready to meet him.

Let us love one another with a brotherly and sisterly love—helping one another to surmount the obstacles along our paths; for in so doing we are friends indeed to the Redeemer.

One night I dreamed I saw our temple being reared rapidly to completion. May we all be worthy to aid in that noble undertaking when the time comes.

Asking an interest in your prayers, I am

Your brother in Christ,

Care Denning and Clark.

DENVER, COLORADO, March 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: If as Saints of God we wish to become truly alive in the work, we must become much and accomplish much; one of the first essentials is to develop within ourselves the four prime factors in "being and doing": the first is a strong individuality; second, a strong character; third, a strong mentality; and fourth, a strong personality. When these four sides of a Saint's nature are highly developed, we have a Saint through whom God may work, one who will do things in this world and become a mighty power for good wherever he may go.

It is such people that the world is in need of to-day more than anything else; in fact, we all may become such individuals if we are prayerful and proceed with the best methods and application that we know of.

We realize that the world of to-day has too many that are likened unto an "empty barrel," there appears to be nothing in them and they make a noise, so to speak, only when pounded upon by the "stick of environment"; such people reflect only what little light may have been given them by their circumstances or by people that pass their way, the wick in their lamp is turned so low that no one can see it, and somehow they have neither ambition nor the force to turn up the wick; the reason for this is found in the fact that their own power lies dormant. It therefore becomes not only our privilege, but our duty to become as much as possible, and to do as much as possible; in fact, to let our own light shine as brilliantly as we can with the light that God has so wonderfully bestowed upon us.

When we take upon us the name of Christ, we should remember that when we undertake to become an active member in his work there is nothing in the work of attainment or achievement that will be impossible for us to do if we are in close touch with the Master.

We know that if we wish to build up in God's work along any line we must apply ourselves in that direction and not permit our aims to scatter under any circumstance, and to this end, self-control is indispensable.

We cannot afford to become impatient or discouraged, or to lose heart when we fail to get what we desire at the time desired; the fact is, we can obtain it if it is for our best in God's own due time, when we become impatient, restless, discouraged, we are simply losing time; what lies before us we can realize if we move forward, but every moment of impatience or discouragement is a moment of retrogression. When we are not moving forward in this work we are moving backward; therefore, if we would hasten the great day in view we must continue in perpetual prayer and faith.

Think of what it would mean if one hundred thousand Saints would begin to-day to make themselves more efficient in all that has been placed upon them, to live the most successful and the most wholesome life before God, to do their best in everything and outdo to-day what we planned and accomplished yesterday. Can we imagine an effect more inspiring, more beneficial?

Could not such an army be organized in our church to-day? Armies of destruction have had their day. The need of to-day is an army large enough to marshal all the work that devolves upon us as Latter Day Saints.

When we think we have exhausted all possible ways and means, go to the Lord in prayer and he will show us the way.

Having been elected correspondent of Second Denver Branch, I felt to write this at this time and also to say that God's divine power has been ours to enjoy, and that we feel encouraged to press onward as Saints and do that which has been placed before us as workers for the Master.

Ever praying for the advancement for this glorious gospel and for the betterment of the Saints, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,

OLIVE L. BULLARD.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, March 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: The annual convention of the combined Sunday school and Religio associations of the Eastern Michigan District was held at Detroit, Michigan, February 16 and 17, and was largely attended.

Special program work in the nature of a lively debate was the order Friday evening. Saturday was devoted to a prayer service and business sessions. In the evening the home talent play, "The last loaf," was given in the basement of the church.

Sunday morning prayer service was well attended and was very spiritual. Institute work was the order of the day. At eleven o'clock a very delightful sermon was preached by Elder Daniel Macgregor. He was indeed a welcome visitor at the convention, his management of the Sunday school business session was an inspiration, and his words of commendation were very much appreciated. Elder Matthew Liston preached on Sunday evening.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

Under existing conditions no special rates from Pacific Coast points to general meetings of organizations are authorized. However, the regular nine months' excursion fares, approximating two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip, are in effect daily from California and northern Pacific Coast points to Kansas City and other Missouri gateways.

Please note that the nine months' excursion tickets are sold only in the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, and British Columbia; that they do not apply to intermediate or interior points. Local ticket agents will advise delegates upon inquiry.

No reduced rates have been granted by Director General McAdoo except a rate named to Union and Confederate veterans. Under these circumstances, and upon consultation with general authorities, it was decided not to make application for reduced rates to General Conference. Had they been granted they would have amounted to little more than a fraction of a cent per mile, and been limited to small amount of territory in the central west. The usual slight reduction heretofore made by the Burlington was not granted for the reason that the place of meeting is not on its lines.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

Funeral from Stone Church, Independence. Interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The friends of Brother J. F. Garver will be much pleased to hear that he is improving very much and expects to attend the General Conference. Following that, it is hoped he will have regained his normal health and strength, and very largely if not altogether resume his responsibilities as president of the Lamoni Stake.

BISHOP AND PRESIDENCY MOVED

The church offices are about finished and the general offices are being moved as fast as possible. The Church Recorder will move from Lamoni as soon as possible after General Conference. We are informed that the building back of the Kelley home is also being fitted up for offices, 103 South River Boulevard.

From Wichita, Kansas: "The Saints here are enjoying themselves meeting in their new chapel. Am doing what I can to assist and confess I feel right good to be again back in the harness."—F. A. Russell.

Brother L. C. Donaldson writes from Riverton, Iowa, that he is still in the faith and likes to read the HERALD and

THE DAILY "ENSIGN"

In accordance with our custom, a daily edition of the Ensign will be published during the sessions of the coming General Conventions and Conference. This is in addition to the regular weekly editions, and will not be sent to those receiving the weekly edition unless subscribed for.

It will be the usual price, so low that every family in the church can afford to have it come to their homes. The entire series during conference for

25 CENTS IN ADVANCE

It is largely a labor of love to get out these issues, help being scarce and we not having the facilities for getting out daily editions, but as a service to the church which we believe has always been appreciated, we are willing to do it, if we may have your cooperation by way of subscriptions. Tell your neighbors and friends about it, and see if every family in your community cannot be on the list.

By the issuance of the Daily we can have more room for the human interest incidents which always abound at such gatherings. We realize that only a very small percentage of the church membership can attend these meetings any one year, but that all who are not there—and some who are—appreciate the little touches which go right along with the transaction of weightier problems. Keep track of the details of what promises to be a most important conference, through the Daily Ensign.

The first issue will be on the second day of the conventions. We believe we can be assured of good mailing facilities, the papers going the evening published, giving you the news promptly.

Autumn Leaves. He thinks the stories in the latter are very good. While he is not able to read much, he hopes to keep in touch with the progress of the church and be worthy.

"THE TRUTH ABOUT NARCOTICS"

In this issue we begin a series of articles by Elder Wardell Christy, on "Character building." The series will not be continuous, but an installment published from time to time, and each installment will be complete in itself, treating on some special phase of the topic. This series should be of interest to our temperance workers.

NEW WAR CYCLOPEDIA

The Committee on Public Information has recently issued a war cyclopedia which constitutes a "handbook of ready reference on the great war." It was edited by Fredric L. Paxton, of the University of Wisconsin; Edwin S. Corwin, Princeton University, and Samuel B. Harding, Indiana University. Though it is a closely printed book of 321 pages with a map, it is distributed at 25 cents a copy. Address: Committee on Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, District of Columbia. Do not send stamps. It is a reference book that should be in the hands of all our readers.

EVERY YOUNG MAN SHOULD READ THIS

Now that it is a fact that sooner or later every young man physically fit and of the ages prescribed will have to enter the service of his country, he should prepare himself for the branch of service in which he is needed and in which he will be assured of rapid advancement. The Government asks the schools under its supervision to fill its classes for radio operators to the utmost capacity. Graceland offers our young men the opportunity to learn wireless with the absolute assurance that, when called into service, they will be placed in the signal corps, as radio and buzzer operators. The Graceland Summer School which begins May 6 offers not only a thorough radio operators' training, but also a military signaling and signal corps training school—all under the supervision of the chief signal officer of the Army. Write for full information to the Radio Telegraph Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

DON'T PUT IT OFF ANY LONGER

If you haven't already made definite arrangements for a place to stay in Independence during the conventions and conference, do it now. It is most exasperating for the committee, yourself, and those who expect to care for you, to have you come in at the last minute without making previous arrangements. Read the announcement of the local committee reprinted in this issue, and let them know what arrangements you want, so they can make assignments.

BOOKS DURING THE CONFERENCE

The Ensign Office will maintain a book stand at some convenient place during the conference time. If there are any books you had wanted to personally inspect before purchasing, it will be an excellent time to do it, for they will have a good stock from which you may make your purchases and take them home with you. There will also be sample copies of the publications; if there are any of them you are not acquainted with, look them up.

SERVICE FLAGS UNFURLED

With complete unanimity of opinion and appropriate ceremonies, the Lamoni Sunday school unfurled a service flag on the walls of the church on the 10th. Elder J. W. Wight made a brief speech on the occasion and there was special patriotic music by the orchestra. At the time of the ceremony there were thirty-seven stars on the flag. Independence has arranged for a similar flag on the walls of the Stone Church. Assistant Editor E. D. Moore was in Hiteman, Iowa, on the evening of the 17th to deliver the presentation speech of a service flag from the Religio to the branch.

PUBLICATION LATE THIS WEEK

On account of the installation of a new folder in our press room the publication may be delayed from one to three days. All precautions possible were taken to avoid this, but it looks now as though we had not counted on mishaps and mistakes in transportation.

STUDY THE PROGRAMS

In this issue are the programs for the Religio and Sunday school conventions to be held April 2 to 5. Look them over carefully and be conversant with the order of business and other details so it will be easier to keep track of things later on. It looks like an interesting time will be had.

HOLDEN PROPOSES YOUNG PEOPLE'S ACTIVITIES

In reporting the recent conventions and conference of the Holden, Missouri, Stake, The Holden Progress says this: "A recommendation was made to the Presiding Bishopric to permit the use of a part of the home building and grounds for recreation activities of the young people. Another feature of the young people's work appeared Sunday afternoon at a mass meeting of the young people held in the Oriole Rooms at the home. A committee was authorized to cooperate with the reunion committee, looking toward recreational activity for the young people during the afternoons at the coming summer reunion."

AN INTERESTING STUDY

One of the largest classes in the Lamoni Sunday school is composed of young men, mostly from the college, and the text for their study is the book by Sister Louise Palfrey Sheldon, entitled, The Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology. In it are nonmembers as well as members of the church, and all seem equally interested as the teacher, C. E. Wight, leads them in this phase of our doctrines. We wonder how many of our readers really understand what they are missing in not having such a book easily accessible on their library tables or in their bookcases. It is easy to understand, and just what the title would indicate. It is bound in cloth, No. 176, and sells for 60 cents.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN CAMPAIGN BEGINS APRIL 6

Information is being circulated that the next big drive to sell Liberty Loan Bonds will begin on April 6. Organizations are being perfected whereby every householder is to be visited and given an opportunity to help win the war by subscribing to this loan.

MAKING BUTTER GO FARTHER

Sister (Mrs.) Lucy Bath, of Scammon, Kansas, sends us the following recipe which she finds valuable in these days of high prices. While we do not ordinarily give space for matters of this kind, we are going to try this one on the theory that it is on a vital subject. It is a butter recipe: One pound creamery butter, 2 small cans evaporated milk (Carnation or Pet brand) 1 teaspoon salt. Melt butter by setting in vessel of warm water; when melted, set in cold water and add the two cans of milk. Churn with dover egg beater or in a jar. When milk and butter are thoroughly churned, add the salt last. Turn out in a dish and set in a cool place. This makes two pounds of excellent butter.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Josh Billings used to say that the best time to pick watermelons is in the dark of the moon. A great many people select that season for somewhat similar transactions.

Arthur Brisbane, advertised some years ago as the highest salaried editor in captivity (he was a Hearst man), is singing a solo. His refrain is, "The world is growing better." It is a song that has not enjoyed much of a vogue since August, 1914.

Some few Americans are going into this war with such a blatant, boastful, and bumptious spirit that they invite disaster. It might help a little to remember that we didn't catch Villa. It is a long way to Berlin, and over a difficult road, owing to the fact that the country is so thickly infested with Germans. Victory is sweeter and defeat less humiliating to the man who has kept a still tongue.

If there are fishers of men there must also be menders of nets. If you cannot preach, perhaps you can darn the elder's socks. Not that he fishes with them—but it might be disagreeable to fish without them.

If there are fishers of men, perhaps you can bait the elder's hook with a good example and a godly life, to attract the attention of nonmembers.

Intelligent criticism seeks to follow the "thread" of the preacher's discourse to the end, and if possible suggest improvements. Destructive criticism would pull the bastings out and let the whole thing fall to pieces before it is completed.

Facility of expression is a dangerous gift. Finding it easy to talk, one may talk too long and without due consideration. Many very eloquent preachers fail to weigh their words with care. And the merely loquacious preacher is always inaccurate and sometimes untruthful.

History repeats itself. The procession of individuals persists. Yet because each individual is new to the world the world is new to him. So there may be a philosophy in the answer of the high school girl. The teacher asked his students to name one new thing that has happened in the past twenty-five years that never happened before. And one girl replied: "Me."

The English humorist, Charles Lamb, once spoke rather bitterly of a certain man: A friend remarked, "Why, Charles, I didn't know that you knew him." Lamb replied, "I don't. I can't hate a man that I know."

Two boys desired to roast themselves some eggs. So they started a fire in the manger. They succeeded in roasting the eggs, but did not eat them. They did not intend to destroy the barn; but good intentions will not extinguish a fire in a haymow. Men are boys grown tall and not always grown wise. Lenine and Trotsky, desiring to roast a few choice Bolshevik eggs, kindled a fire in the Russian manger. They have succeeded far beyond their original intention.

A statement appearing in paragraph nine of our Blue Pencil Notes in HERALD for February 27 should be corrected. The statement refers to extracts from a sermon purporting to have been preached by Joseph Smith, as published by the Utah Mormon church. Our statement that he was then replying to charges made in the Nauvoo Expositor does not convey the meaning that was intended. The language should read, "He was replying to charges then being made by the Laws, Fosters, et al, later appearing in the Nauvoo Expositor." The Expositor appeared some days after the sermon was preached. But the charges were at the time in circulation.

The moving of the church offices in Independence to new quarters revives memories of the old offices, some of them unpleasant, others humorous. The old office of the Presidency, as many will remember, was reached through a very long and dark hall. This hall had an air of its own. In fact, it had an odor of its own. If it had been aired out since the Civil War we were unable to verify the fact. The floor of this hall was broken in several places by short flights of steps. It was in no sense on the level. I was coming through this hall one dark night to attend a council meeting. I measured my length twice—as I have said, it was a long hall. When I entered the Presidency's office Brother Fred M. looked up, and seeing a smile on my face, said, "What are you laughing at?" I replied, "Did you hear me fall down?" He said, "No; but if you had been ten minutes earlier you might have heard me fall down." He had tested the floor twice—it was a very strong floor. We waited about ten minutes, when in came Walter W. Smith, nursing his shins, and inquiring, "Did you brethren hear me fall down in that old hall?"

The God-given basis of support in the church is according to needs and just wants. Whenever a man becomes firmly convinced that he wishes to leave church service because he can get an alluring salary at secular employment it is best to let him go rather than to bid against the world. When we begin to make concessions we may as well go the limit and recognize the worldly basis—that every man shall receive according to that which he can get. God wants consecrated men, not hired men.

An iron worker was forging a great chain to hold a ship's anchor. At first he took little interest in his work. The links were badly welded and of poor material. But as he drew toward the end of the chain he said to himself: "I will make these links very strong, for this end is attached to the anchor and must bear the strain." But when the ship rode at anchor during a great storm the chain parted, being only as strong as its weakest link. So with many men who live carelessly all their lives and think to remedy the matter by a few extraordinarily righteous days at the very end.

FASTING AND PRAYER

We regret to note, in some instances, a discrediting of fasting and prayer. It is true, as some have pointed out, that we ought not to make a fetich of it. We should strive for right living, right understanding, to know the will of God, and then to do it.

These objections by no means come to us from college or school people. Most of those we have heard have been from others—those who have received apparently little training.

It is true that some writers take the position that fasting opens and prepares the way for illusion and delusion and brings about a condition of semi-insanity. But because it is so asserted by some it does not necessarily follow that it is true. Possibly in some instances a state of excitement is worked up which is not good—especially when we remember that the glory of God is intelligence. To view it as a sort of legerdemain may possibly leave the mind vacant and open to vagrant impressions. Then with bodily weakness combined with mental weakness, a throwing of the body and mind open to anything that may come, the result proves unwise.

But from a scientific viewpoint, we greatly prefer the statements of Doctor G. Stanley Hall, in Jesus the Christ in the Light of Psychology:

To meditate in solitude upon the stupendous problem thus sprung upon him, Jesus felt impelled to retire to the desert, whence John had come, to brood and think it out. Meditation and introversion of soul favored by solitude, as the lives of hermits and anchorites show, has always been a great resource of great men, not recluses, on supreme occasions when they needed to orient themselves, to find poise after shock, or seek direction from within. When this exercise and discipline are combined with fasting, they tend to give a very peculiar and specific exaltation of mind. When alone, man abstracts from all the constraints of the outer world, and frees spontaneity and inner impulsion from inhibitions.

Other students have given similar conclusions, that this going away from the worldly, and the concentration of thought on the high and beautiful, does mean an approach to that which is better, and a clearer insight. It has been found so in the solution of purely intellectual problems. It has been found so in times of stress. It is so with prayer to God.

Prolonged fasting may prove weakening after the superficial ill effects have passed. But doctors often urge fasting for its therapeutic value, when not too long continued.

But with us it is not the going without food that is primary in importance. It is the fasting and prayer; the food prepared with singleness of heart; the heart and mind devoted to the worship of God; the best intelligence we have tuned to the study of the problems of his work.

Practical experience has demonstrated that such an approach brings vital results, bringing our thoughts in closer communion with higher powers. This remains true whether we call the reaction, as some scientists prefer to do, the soul of the race or man soul, or whether we call it, as we prefer, the Spirit of God. The fact is still well established: Fasting and prayer should bring us nearer to God, quicken the understanding, and enlighten the soul.

HE LOVES LIKE A MOTHER

In how many ways has our heavenly Father tried to express his love for us so that we may understand and come unto him! We have already referred to some of the beautiful passages that refer to him as our Father, and his love for us as a father.

But from his deep love, recognizing that not all earthly fathers are kind, and many men are vile, he has also compared his love to the great love of a mother. "As one whom his mother comforteth will I comfort you." (Isaiah 66:13.) "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me." (Isaiah 49:15.)

We recall the story of a good Sister of Mercy, who went to administer to a dying young girl. She spake of the love of our heavenly Father, but the girl would not be reconciled. "The Father knows. He loves you." But the girl answered, "No! all men are vile. A mother might love, but a father, no."

Then was the reply made, "But he is like a mother, as one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

We do not believe in deathbed repentance, and that one can with a few words undo a lifetime of wrong. But here was a girl more sinned against than sinning, and peace was brought to her in her last hours, by the repetition of this verse.

But the love of our heavenly Father goes even beyond the wonderful love of a mother. "When thy father and mother forsake thee, then the Lord will take thee up." "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee."

Thus in a new way our heavenly Father seeks to teach us of his great love, which is from everlasting to everlasting, which reaches on high, and into the depths to comfort those who weep and mourn, and those who seek him.

A RARE INSTANCE OF CONSECRATION

In connection with the movement of the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to their new offices, a story has just come to us that a certain brother of that branch was approached with a request for some one to clean the rooms before they moved in. He replied, it would be easier to do it himself, so "took off his coat" and spent five days scrubbing floors, woodwork, and cleaning windows. When his price was asked, he replied that he was ordinarily paid fifteen dollars a day for his work, which happened to be the facts of the case, as he is an expert in his own line of work, which does not happen to be scrubbing, although it seems that he is also expert in that as well.

Some one hearing of this, asked whether that showed more of a sacrifice than is made by our missionaries or by the men working for the publishing interests of the church, just because they get a smaller salary.

That would by no means follow. It is unfortunate that too often we value the service of a man to the church by what he is paid. But we gave an instance a few months ago of the assistant editor as pastor of one of the districts into which Lamoni has been divided, going out with other brethren to a "sawing bee" for the sake of a sick brother. The same spirit is evidently shown for a somewhat longer time, by this brother in Independence.

As to his name, that is hardly of vital importance, especially since he has threatened the editors with physical violence if they give it.

It is merely one more instance of the Spirit moving our people, which should mean that their efforts will be crowned with success. And they will be, if all move forward in this spirit—willing to do what their hands find to do, regardless of the question of dignity, but in the willingness of service.

THE RELIGIO LECTURE BOARD

One of the excellent new developments of the year has been the Religio Lecture Board. It was delayed because of the necessity of a change in the personnel; and then in order to secure a list of lecturers. Despite the shortened period of activity, it has already made an excellent beginning. We have long looked forward to such a plan as this and have no doubt of its being continued.

Those who have worked with it consider it a very satisfactory organization. We have no doubt that the board will be able to secure many more speakers for the coming year and be able to announce the names and other information at an early date, and so enlarge its usefulness.

Those desiring the services of the lecturers should make the arrangements as far ahead of time as is possible, in order that these special meetings may be properly advertised and the most good secured.

Also, early arrangements make it possible to arrange an itinerary, so as to lessen the expense. When one lecturer can go on a tour and reach several points, not too widely separated, the expense is reduced to all.

The lecturers receive no pay. There is only their actual expense to be met. In one instance which has come to our immediate attention, a district arranged for a lecturer to come and deliver lectures at each of several branches. The result was that it cost less than two dollars for each branch; nor is that the minimum, as we know of instances where the total expense was under a dollar for each lecture delivered. Certainly this is a ridiculously low sum.

We look to see another development, and would suggest that it may be considered by this board. When a lecturer of ability is making a trip, and the board know of it in time, they may arrange for a series of free lectures to be given, or at least at a nominal figure.

We ought to arrange so as to make the expense as reasonable as is possible, and to extend the service throughout this country and Canada with as little inconvenience as may be to those who so kindly donate their services. In some such way as this, when other business takes a lecturer afar, excellent arrangements may be made for the remote parts of the country, and still at a very low expense to each branch and district.

The arrangement at present is that no collections or private donations be provided, but that the lecturer on his return sends an itemized statement of the expenses of the trip to the manager of the board, together with a statement of the number of lectures and where delivered, these counting as well as the actual expense. This amount is then pro rated and statements sent to the communities visited.

All of these men and women are devoted to the work, and are willing to assist in any other way they can. As one expresses it, "One finds chances to help, ranging all the way from holding the baby to preaching a sermon." We even know of one of them helping to milk the cows and tending the pigs—as well as picking a chicken.

Of course this will have to be a matter after one's several abilities. The assistant editor can milk a cow, while the associate editor would have to give service in some other manner.

This work is doubtless in its infancy, and the good that it has done is only a beginning, foreshadowing what it may do in a practical way. Our readers will be interested in the detailed report of the board made to the coming Religio Convention, with the recommendations of the manager thereof. Certainly it is a movement that should be continued and supported.

THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

Announcement has already been made that the third Liberty Loan drive will start on April 6. The request has been made to all publications, all papers published within the Federal Reserve District, to send copies to Chicago of all issues for the next two months. It is considered a patriotic duty, that all should assist with the Liberty Loan to the extent of their savings.

The Editors are more than glad to assist the Government in any way that they can, and to re-emphasize what has already been set forth, that we should economize, or in other words, eliminate unnecessary expenditure—that we should eliminate all waste, and with the savings should assist the Government. We note in one recent circular that farmers are advised not to buy beyond their ability—not to purchase bonds beyond what they are able to pay for—but to save, and purchase all that they can.

This matter of payments is not simply the amount of cash on hand April 6, but the amount that they will be able to subscribe according to the plan presented, paying a small amount on the subscription and then making deferred payment if necessary. Debts we cannot promptly pay would only complicate the situation.

Probably most of us do not realize, even yet, what the war means, and what it would mean to us, as it has to Russia, if not brought to a successful conclusion. Germany shows the necessity of "making the world safe for democracy,"—while Russia shows the need of "making democracy safe for the world." It is now a matter of necessity that we support the Government, for the sake of our homes and families.

THE HERALD DURING CONFERENCE TIME

The HERALD for next week will likely be mailed about the 5th, in order to include as much of the convention news and reports as possible. We believe our readers will appreciate this arrangement, when we assure them that it will allow us to present most of the convention reports in full and considerable of the interesting happenings of the big gatherings in that issue. With the experiences of the past to help us, we are hopeful of being able to give many side-lights, notes, and summaries in addition to the report on the business done.

RUSSELLISM WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE--Part 1

BY FRANCIS EARL

It has been said, and it is quite an old adage, "The Bible is like an old fiddle; most any old tune can be played upon it." Thus, in plainer terms, it is said to be an old law book by which any old or new doctrine can be proven; but, in fact, in it is contained the record of the gospel or doctrine of Jesus Christ, the balance by which all others can be weighed. It is by this balance we propose to weigh the religious position of Pastor Russell. It is not necessary to become a graduate in his religious sentiments to weigh them by this rule for this reason; the doctrine of Christ being perfect, and we have a record of it in the sacred Scripture, we can easily weigh not only Pastor Russell but all others who claim to be ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We will therefore weigh the following extracts, taken from the photodrama of creation, in the gospel balance.

Thus we notice first his opening remark: "The study of creation is the key of knowledge." Using this key we begin to realize that the only worthy ambition is to cooperate with our Creator's beneficent designs respecting his creation." We find that the word cooperate signifies, "To act or operate jointly with another or others; to concur in action, effort, or effect."—Webster.

NO PRESENT REVELATION?

The pastor, if we understand him rightly, takes the position that our Creator does not now speak to man by present revelation directing in the affairs of his service, as we shall notice further on. Thus he places the ambition, if this be true, higher than there is any possibility of obtaining. For it is impossible to cooperate with our Creator unless there is direct communication between us and himself. The pastor may, no doubt, say in reply, as many others do and have said, "Our Creator has given us the Bible and we cooperate with him by taking it as our guide." In this there is a mistake in two ways: First, it is a record of God's word given to others and not to us direct. The communications were between God and them, not us, and is not sufficient for us in our environments. Second, in it we find no provision made for the changes that have been made in the religious systems of the pastor and others. Thus while his expression is scientific, he himself is scientifically out of tune, according to both the balance and Webster.

Second, he says:

The first man, Adam, was in the image of his Creator, the highest type of fleshly or animal being. That image of his Creator consisted in his moral and intellectual likeness (image). It is difficult to judge from present human conditions all that is meant by God's image, because we have no sample of perfect humanity for comparison. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God," in which Adam was created (Psalm 8: 5). Sin and death have reigned and the God likeness has been lost. All need restitution. It was toward the close of the sixth day, or approximately 42,000 years from the time of beginning the ordering of earth, that God created man. The image of God from this standpoint would mean a human being thoroughly in tune with the infinite One, one that would have no unrighteousness nor iniquity in him. Adam's transgression was not the result of ignorance—he knew that he was disobeying God. When thinking of man in the image of God, we look back to the man Christ Jesus, holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners, and like the first Adam whose penalty he came into the world to meet. 1 Corinthians 15: 22: "After our likeness let him have dominion." Adam's dominion over the lower animals was like God's dominion over the universe. Angels, although in God's image do not have a Godlike dominion over creatures of a lower order. Man's dominion, overthrown by sin, is to be restored by Messiah's kingdom. (Acts 3: 19.)

PHOTODRAMA OF CREATION SIXTH DAY OR EPOCH

We notice here that he raises the question of man's being created in the image of God, whether it be a personal image or a moral and intellectual image. This has been a matter of controversy in the religious world, because of the peculiar position taken, as expressed in the first of the thirty-nine articles of religion: "There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts or passions, of infinite power, wisdom and goodness, the maker and preserver of all things both visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there be three persons of one substance, power and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Thus we see that the idea of men being in the personal image of God would not agree with this article of religion, neither could he be in the moral image, if such an image could be, for the fact that God's moral image is perfect—"infinite in goodness," while man's is sinful and not infinite in goodness.

It is safer, we think, to stand by what is written in the sacred scripture, and there we find the following:

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.—Genesis 1: 27.

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.—Genesis 9: 6.

For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, for as much as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.—1 Corinthians 11: 7.

That God does live as a personal being, we turn to the sacred scripture and read that Jacob saw God face to face and his life was spared (Genesis 32: 30); that Moses saw God at one time and was afraid to look upon him (Exodus 3: 6); and that Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel saw God and did eat and drink in his presence (Exodus 24: 9-11); and that Moses saw the similitude (form) of God (Numbers 12: 8). Again, he raises the question because, he says, "We have no sample or perfect humanity for comparison," and then, apparently to recover himself, he refers to Christ, and of him we read:

In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.—2 Corinthians 4: 4.

Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature.—Colossians 1: 15.

Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high.—Hebrews 1: 3.

God is referred to as the invisible God, for this reason, that he did not come into the world and dwell in flesh among men, but sent his son Jesus Christ, "who is the express image of his person," to represent him. The fact that God is referred to as a spirit does not signify that he has no form or personality. The standpoint of the pastor, also, overthrows his theory of man being in the moral image of God. He could not be "thoroughly in tune with the infinite One" without direct communication between himself and the infinite One. "Angels," he says, "although in God's image, do not have a God-like dominion over creatures of a lower order."

Of this let us see what the scripture has to say of angels' power and who angels are. In Genesis 19: 2 two angels were sent to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah and direct Lot in his escape from those cities. In Exodus 23: 20 the Lord told Moses that he would send an angel before them. It is certain that this angel was given dominion over them, for Moses was informed that it was necessary to obey him. In Joshua 5: 14 an angel was sent as captain of the Lord's host, having sufficient dominion to direct Joshua in the movements which were about to take place. And in Judges 2: 1 an angel appeared to the people at Bochim and reproved them for their unfaithfulness, and the language is such as to establish the fact of his dominion over the people. In Judges 6: 11 an angel was sent to Gideon and instructed him in the throwing off the yoke of Midian. And in Daniel 6: 22 an angel was sent to Daniel having dominion over lions. And in Daniel 8: 16 an angel, whose name was given, instructed Daniel in things pertaining to the future. And in Daniel 10: 13 we learn of several angels who had power (dominion) over kingdoms. In Luke 1: 19, 26 we learn of an angel, whose name is given, who gave promises to Zacharias and Mary. In Acts 5: 19 and 12: 7 an angel was given dominant power sufficient to deliver the apostles from prison, while in Hebrews 12: 13, Revelation 19: 10 and 22: 9, we learn that angels (angels of God) are the spirits of just men made perfect, and are sent to minister unto the heirs of salvation. Hebrews 1: 14.

THIRD SEVENTH DAY

God there rested from his work—from creating. He foreknew the permission of sin and its dire effect upon humanity. He foreknew the steps he would take in providing ultimately a redeemer for the race, and that the redeemer would select a little company of believers, figuratively styled the bride of Christ, to this redeemer and his bride. God intended to give the dominion control of earth. God purposed that Messiah's kingdom of righteousness should eventually uplift the willing and obedient from sin and death conditions.

The writer has observed that many men who have been considered great leaders among men, have sometimes spoken and written much better than they knew, or were willing even to accept, and also observes that Pastor Russell is no exception. Briefly, the above extract sets forth the following: First, God foreknew that through Satan sin would come into the world, and made provision for its final overthrow through Christ. Second, that he rested from his labor and intrusted Christ with the redemption of man, and that Christ would select a little company of believers, (a little flock) styled the bride of Christ. And third, that to Christ and this bride would be given dominion over the earth, and that through them (Christ and the little flock) humanity would be uplifted. In this he is in harmony with the scriptures but out of tune with himself, as we shall presently see.

Christ was chosen before the foundation of the world (1 Peter 1: 20). For what purpose was he chosen? It was to accomplish the will of the Father in the redemption of man, and this according to the gospel plan in 1 Peter 1: 20; Titus 1: 2; 2 Timothy 1: 10. Somewhere, sometime, God foreknew and foretold the coming of sin, and gave to those who were capable and in condition to receive it, the promise of life and immortality, and that promise was made before the world began. Christ would select, as the little company, those who would be obedient to the gospel through which life and immortality is brought to light, and the rock upon which the church, "the bride," "little company," "little flock," would be built (Matthew 16: 18), and through which he has been the light of the world. It has a name, as we learn from the following: Genesis 4: 26, margin of reference Bibles, "Then began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord." In Acts 4: 12 and Ephesians 3: 15, and as God is the author of order, it must of necessity be organized, that under Christ's direction it may be enabled to do work for God.

We find that the children of Israel in the neighborhood of Sinai, were brought under a complete and God-given organization, with Moses as leader under God's direction. The Lord directed him to ordain twelve men (Numbers 1: 4). Later, Moses was directed to choose seventy men from the elders. There were high priests, elders, priests, and Levites, of which there were three orders. The children of Israel were thus organized into a church (Acts 7: 38). We thus find that in this church there were apostles, prophets, seventies, high priests, patriarchs, elders, priests and Levites, and that the Lord communicated with the people by both revelation and the ministering of angels. When Christ came into the world, he built the church by the same pattern (Luke 6: 13; 10: 11; 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4: 11, and many other places). The church was to be the light of the world (Matthew 5: 14; Philippians 2: 15). In it was to be gathered those who would be obedient to Christ (John 3: 5; Galatians 3: 27, and other places). Through her ministry mankind were to be instructed and called upon to repent (Matthew 28: 19; Mark 16: 16; John 3: 5; 2 Corinthians 5: 19). The bride (church) was to be adorned with certain endowments or spiritual gifts, through which Christ would communicate with her (Matthew 28: 20; Mark 16: 17, 20; Luke 24: 49; Acts 2: 4; John 16: 12; Romans 12: 6; 1 Corinthians 12: 7, 12; Galatians 3: 5, and other places). These scriptural facts the pastor sets aside when he presents the position that Christ does not now communicate with the little flock, but has left it to itself with the Bible only as a guide. He therefore is in discord with himself.

MOTHER EVE BEGUILLED

God had authorized our first parents to freely eat of all the fruits of paradise, except of the species called the tree of knowledge of good and evil. It was forbidden for a time as a test of their loyalty. The eating of the fruit of this tree they were forbidden would bring upon them the curse, the death sentence. The serpent ate of various fruits and seemed especially fond of the forbidden fruit. Observation proved that the fruit did not kill the serpent, and the inference drawn by Mother Eve was that God had forbidden the use of the very best tree in Eden. Her conclusion was that God had a selfish motive in forbidding the use of that fruit, that he feared his creatures would become as wise as himself.

The pastor here assumes that the command to abstain from this forbidden fruit was only for a time, to test their loyalty. He also assumes that the serpent went about eating of this particular fruit and that Mother Eve, observing this, and reasoning the matter out herself, put forth her hand and ate, no inspiration about it; Satan had nothing to do about it. She just saw the serpent eat of it and thought she could too, and, as it tasted good, she wanted Adam to have some, too. This seems a weak effort to set aside the thought of inspiration recorded in the written word. There we read that the Lord talked with them, gave them instructions, made known to them the results of disobedience, and afterwards the serpent, under Satanic inspiration, talked with Mother Eve, and as the result of this conversation she was persuaded to eat of the forbidden fruit; no observation on her part, only as her attention was called to it by this conversation with the serpent. No mention is made of the serpent eating of this particular or any other kind of fruit. It is unnecessary to make further comment upon this except to show the drift of many who set themselves up as leaders to set aside the inspiration of God, or any personal communication between God and man, especially in this age.

PRIDE, JEALOUSY, ANGER, AND MURDER

Years passed. Cain and Abel were inspired by the promise respecting the seed of the woman, and the hope of recovery by divine favor. They approached the Lord with offerings to receive a blessing. Abel's sacrifice of animal life God accepted because it typified the necessity for Jesus' death as the basis for forgiveness of sin. God's rejection of Cain's offering teaches that without shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin. Cain should have procured an animal for acceptable sacrifice, in obedience to the divine will. Instead, he allowed anger, malice, hatred, and strife, to burn in his heart, and became a murderer.

In this reference to Cain and Abel, like many others who set themselves up as leaders among men, the pastor speaks much better than the source from which he draws his information, unless he draws from his imagination and assumes that to be the word of God. Nevertheless his position is largely correct, but the source that confirms his position he has turned aside, being unwilling to accept it. God gave Adam a command, telling him that he should make an offering unto the Lord of the firstlings of his flock (herd), and when he had begun the practice of making this offering, an angel appeared to him and asked him why he made this sacrifice. Adam replied that he did not know, except that the Lord had commanded him to do so, and he did it to be obedient. The angel then told him that this offering the firstlings of the flock was a similitude of the offering which would be made by the only begotten of the Father who was full of grace and truth, and that what he did should be done in the name of the Son, and that he should call upon God in the name of the Son. This is to be found in Genesis 4: 4-8, Inspired Translation, published at Lamoni, Iowa.

So when Cain and Abel made this offering "that they might be blessed," they knew what the Lord had commanded in this matter. Abel chose to do as the Lord had commanded, and so made his offering of the firstling of his flock, while Cain, not willing to obey the Lord, in all that he had commanded, did according to his own inclination and the voice of Satan (Genesis 5: 6, 7, Inspired Translation). Thus, indeed, "Cain should have procured an animal for acceptable sacrifice, in obedience to the divine will."

SONS OF GOD AND DAUGHTERS OF MEN

Long before man's creation, angels were created, yet sin was unknown until Adam's day; the beginning of sin, according to the Bible, was in the garden of Eden. Lucifer, an angel of high rank, had long cherished in his heart ambitious designs. If opportunity ever offered, he would show God and the angels his grand schemes. His thought is expressed by the prophet: "I will ascend above the stars [angels]; I will be as the Most High," an emperor. When Lucifer beheld the first human pair, he was tempted to try his experiment. They were a new order of beings in God's moral image. They had procreative powers which no angel possessed; their offspring filling the earth would be his subjects, through whom he would work out his ambitious schemes. Thus Lucifer became Satan, God's opponent (Isaiah 14: 12, 14). All the holy angels were bewildered. His was the first rebellion against the Almighty's laws. No punishment followed, and the angels queried whether or not God was able to enforce his laws. Centuries rolled on, the human family was wasting, God's penalty, "dying thou shalt die," was gradually being enforced. Satan realized that his kingdom of dying subjects would make but a poor showing. However, he conceived a plan to outwit God and develop a new order of beings, hybridized humans, infused with superior vitality. The angels possessed a God-given power of materialization. They could appear in human bodies resembling those of men: the Bible attests this, Genesis 18.

The angels were permitted contact with the fallen race to prove whether they could bring mankind back to God (Hebrews 2: 5). The record of Genesis 6: 2, 5, is that the sons of God saw that the daughters of men were fair, and they took unto themselves wives of all they preferred. Thus the angels became the fathers of a new race, distinct from Adam's. The record is that these were giants, physical and intellectual, men of renown, who filled the earth with violence.

Angels, created long before Adam, then, after men and women had become numerous upon the earth, left their habitation, took human bodies, married women who bore children to them, and thus became the fathers of a new race superior to that of Adam's posterity. The pastor is not alone in this theory, but if we look carefully into the matter, we cannot but notice that the application generally made by many religious leaders to Genesis 6: 1-3 is an error and not in general harmony with the sacred record. First, we turn to Genesis 1: 27: God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. And in Genesis 2: 4, 5 all these were created before they were in the earth. This, then, leads to the thought that all men existed in spirit before Adam was created in the earth. This is easily confirmed by the following, 1 Peter 1: 20: Christ was ordained before the foundation of the world, showing them that man, in spirit, lived long before Adam was created. In Paul's letter to Titus 1: 2, we learn that a promise of life and immortality was made before the earth began. This promise was certainly made to intelligent beings who lived and were capable of comprehending the promise, and who were interested in it; and as Christ existed before Adam was placed in Eden, it is reasonable to suppose that Adam and his posterity existed also, as spirits, or angels, and that they were subject to law, and that this promise was made to them.

We also notice that there were angels who left their habitations and kept not their first estate (Jude 6); they were cast out because of sin (2 Peter 2: 4; Revelation 12: 7-9; Luke 10: 18). These angels were not permitted to enter into that second estate which was provided in the promise made before the world began. Thus those angels who kept their first estate were entitled to enter into the second. For light along this line we read Job 38: 7. The morning stars sang and the sons of God shouted for joy, when the foundations of the earth were laid (Ecclesiastes 12: 7). The spirit returns to God who gave it. This does not refer to the breath, but individual life and existence. Jeremiah 1: 5, this prophet was ordained before he was born. Ezekiel 28: 13, the Lord, through the prophet, speaks to the king of Tyre, telling him where he had been and the important place he had occupied.

The above are a few of the many references in Holy Writ bearing on this line. Thus we notice, first, that Christ lived and worked with and for the people before he was born into this earthly life. (See Genesis 1: 26; Exodus 23: 21; Joshua 5: 14; Daniel 3: 25; John 1: 3; 6: 62; 8: 58; 17: 5; 1 Corinthians 10: 4.) As Christ lived and worked in spirit before he was born, so did all men in the places in which they occupied. Genesis 6: 2 refers to men who were born and lived upon the earth, and not to angels who had left their habitations and materialized. Men became sons of God by their obedience to the law of God, the gospel (John 1: 12; Galatians 3: 26, 27; 4: 6, and many other places). Genesis 8: 1-3, 8, 9, Inspired Translation, makes this matter very plain:

And Noah and his sons hearkened unto the Lord, and gave heed; and they were called the sons of God. And when these men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, the sons of men saw that their daughters were fair, and they took them wives even as they chose. And the Lord said unto Noah, The daughters of thy sons have sold themselves, for behold, mine anger is kindled against the sons of men, for they will not hearken to my voice. . . . And it came to pass that Noah called upon the children of men, that they should repent, but they hearkened not unto his words. And also, after that they had heard him, they came up before him, saying, Behold, we are the sons of God; have we not taken unto ourselves the daughters of men? and are we not eating and drinking, and marrying and given in marriage? and our wives bare unto us children, and the same are mighty men, which are like unto them of old, men of great renown. And they hearkened not unto the words of Noah.

Thus this idea of hybridized humans, a cross between angels and men, is a mere fable and without any foundation whatever.

WHILE THE ARK WAS PREPARING

The disloyal course of the angels apparently continued for centuries without any outward manifestation of God's ability to check them. Thus all the holy angels were tested, and all who chose "were disobedient in the days of Noah." (1 Peter 3: 20.) Noah's family was singled as exceptional in the statement "Now Noah was perfect in his generation," implying that few, or no others, were perfected, pure Adamic stock. Genesis 6: 9, Noah's family, therefore, included all the uncontaminated—only eight persons. They, by divine command, built the ark and thus witnessed to the world the divine intention respecting a deluge. Noah's message respecting a divine judgment by a deluge seemed ridiculous, until the deluge there was no rain. The last of the great "rings" which then flooded the earth was pure water. For centuries it was spread out over the firmament; the whole earth was a great hothouse. There were practically no changes of seasons nor storms, because the great water canopy preserved it in perpetual summer. Of that period we read: "For as yet there was no rain on the earth."—Genesis 2: 5. The disloyal course of the angels apparently continued for centuries without any outward manifestation of God's ability to check them, thus all the holy angels were tested, and all who chose "were disobedient in the days of Noah."—1 Peter 3: 20.

The pastor here places speculation for truth. But the speculation is not in harmony with either scripture, history, facts, or common sense. The disloyal course of the angels took place before Adam was placed in Eden (Revelation 12: 7, 9; Jude 6: 2; Peter 2: 4; Luke 10: 18; Isaiah 14: 12, and other places). These disloyal angels were cast into hell and reserved in chains of darkness to the judgment of the great day, and some of them spoke to Jesus in the days of his ministry, demanding if he had come to torment them before the time. Those who were disobedient in the days of Noah were Adam's posterity and were in no way related, as posterity, to fallen angels. They did, however, listen to the deceptive influence exerted by them, and so became disobedient to God. The pastor assumes that Noah and his family were the only ones of pure Adamic stock; the rest, according to him, were mingled as posterity with the fallen angels, who kept not their first estate. Of this we will take no notice at present. "They by divine command built the ark." While they were doing this they were preaching righteousness (1 Peter 3: 19; 2 Peter 2: 5), to the mingled posterity of the "fallen angels," according to the pastor, for no other purpose than to give them opportunity to repent.

"Noah's message respecting a divine judgment by a deluge, seemed ridiculous." As it was then, so it has ever been from that time until the present. Christ's message to the Jews seemed ridiculous, and they persecuted him to the death. The apostle's message to the Gentiles seemed ridiculous, and the gospel ministers were persecuted, many of them, to the death. Also to-day preaching the same gospel to the world seems, even by professed followers of Christ, to be unnecessary and ridiculous. Of the climatic conditions of the earth previous to the deluge, we will pass unnoticed except the misapplication of Genesis 2: 5. The assumption is that before the time of the deluge there had been no rain upon the earth. The statement refers to the time before Adam was placed in Eden, and before anything had begun to grow, and not to the time of the deluge, and any effort to make it apply to the deluge is an assumption, and one of the worst cases of scripture-twisting known to the writer of this review.

NEPHILIM DESTROYED

The account of the fall of the angels from being sons, to be demons, helps us to understand why God decreed the deluge to wipe out all the human race, except Noah and his family. We perceive that God, from the first, intended to deal only with Adam and his family. The giant sons of the fallen angels came into being contrary to the divine will, hence, properly, no provision was to be made for them. They never had a right to life, nor will they have a resurrection. On the other hand, all of Adam's posterity, redeemed by Jesus' death, must be recovered from death with full opportunity to secure everlasting life. After the deluge the demon angels dematerialized and resumed their spirit conditions. Saint Peter and Saint Jude reveal the penalty inflicted upon them. "Those angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitations, God restrained under chains of darkness unto the judgment of the great day."—2 Peter 2: 4; Jude 6.

The liberties of the fallen angels were restrained; they were unable to use deceptions in the light; unable to materialize as formerly. However, that the limitation "unto" implies that when the great day of wrath shall come, these fallen angels will be permitted to materialize and become potent factors in the strife. Other scriptures indicate that these fallen angels will have much to do with the great "time of trouble" with which this age will close and in which Messiah's kingdom will be inaugurated. These fallen angels were cast to Tartarus, our earth's atmosphere. Satan, a cherub angel of higher rank, is styled the prince of demons. They are not in some far-off place, stoking fires, but keep as close to humanity as possible. Not permitted to materialize they seek to obsess, to demonize, by clairvoyance and clairaudience. Mankind would properly resent them if their true characters were known. They, therefore, impersonate the dead, communicating through spirit mediums.

In the above, the pastor assumes the following: First, that angels, termed sons of God, left their habitation, came to earth, took human form, chose wives and begat children, that these children became giants in stature and intellect, that no provision was made for them to be redeemed from the fall caused by Adam's disobedience. As a result, when they perished in the flood, there would be no resurrection for them. Then he assumes that just previous to the judgment they will materialize, and, that with them there is a spirit condition in which they retain their consciousness, and in this state they act through human agencies by clairvoyance, spirit mediums. Second, he assumes that these children of fallen angels came into being contrary to the divine will. The assumption that the antideluvians were the offspring of fallen angels is without scripture foundation, for, the truth is, they were Adam's posterity as much as was Noah and his family, and provision was made for their redemption and resurrection (1 Corinthians 15: 22; 1 Peter 3: 20). The matter of dematerializing and going back into spirit condition we will notice later.

THE TWO COVENANTS

[The following synopsis of a sermon by Elder S. S. Smith on the subject of Sabbath observance should be of special value to our young readers who desire to learn the nature of the subject and meet any objections to Lord's Day observance.—Editors.]

Lesson, Hebrews 8: 6-13; texts, Hebrews 8: 13; 10: 9.

Gospel covenant a primary law; Galatians 3: 8; Hebrews 4: 2; 2 Peter 2: 5; Romans 1: 17.

Mosaic covenant only for a time; Galatians 3: 19-25; Matthew 11: 13.

Mosaic Covenant made at Horeb, not in Eden; Deuteronomy 1: 5, 6; 5: 2, 3; Nehemiah 9: 13, 14; Malachi 4: 4; John 1: 17.

Mosaic covenant a law of types and shadows; Hebrews 8: 5; 9: 23, 24; 10: 1; Colossians 2: 17.

Mosaic covenant and the ten commandments the same; Deuteronomy 4: 12, 13; Exodus 34: 27, 28; 1 Kings 8: 9.

Mosaic covenant very faulty and imperfect; Romans 3: 20, 21, 28; 4: 14; 8: 2; Hebrews 7: 19; Galatians 3: 11-13.

Mosaic covenant rescinded; Romans 6: 14, 15; 10: 4; Galatians 3: 21, 25; 4: 21-31; 5: 18; 2 Corinthians 3: 3-16; Hebrews 8: 13.

This repeal took away the old Jewish Sabbath; Ephesians 2: 14-16; Colossians 2: 14-17.

This was intimated in prophecy; Isaiah 1: 10-14; Hosea 2: 11.

Cannot keep old Jewish Sabbath now with its death penalty; Leviticus 23: 30-32, Exodus 31: 15; 20: 10.

Two lambs had to be offered; Numbers 28: 9, 10.

Jewish Sabbath was not always on Saturday. Leviticus 23: 5, 7, 24, 25, 27, 32. Like Christmas, liable to come on any day of the week.

Our Saturdarian friends urge, "Where is the command to keep Sunday in the New Testament?" We are equally frank and ask them, "Where is the command in the New Testament to keep Saturday?"

If we are under the Mosaic covenant, let us offer sacrifices; let us practice circumcision; and kill for violating Sabbath, as they did. No half-way business will do.

Christ's gospel law is perfect; James 1: 25; Psalm 19: 7.

Evidences of first-day worship; Acts 2: 1; 20: 7; 1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2; Revelation 1: 10.

Christ's resurrection day, first day of week; Matthew 28: 1; Mark 16: 1, 2; John 20: 1.

We are not to be judged by old Jewish Sabbath; Colossians 2: 16, 17.

This old Jewish Sabbath a type of "another day," Hebrews 4: 4-9.

The "Lord's [resurrection] day" in prophecy; Psalm 118: 22-24.

The ten commandments do not condemn pride, boasting, drunkenness, unthankfulness, love of pleasure, anger, filthy talk, adulterous spirit, impatience, variance, or selfishness.

Which one of the ten commandments requires us to feed the poor, visit the fatherless and widow, to suffer long, and to be kind, to be gentle, meek, temperate, to pray, to even repent, and to go to meeting?

The old decalogue is not a perfect law, but a mere shadow of the genuine, and we are not to be judged by it.

If Saturdarians keep one part of this "old letter" (the Sabbath) they are debtors "to the whole law," (Galatians 5: 3,) and should keep it all.

As the Lord anciently was "weary," and "full," and he "delight not," and he calls it an "abomination" and a "trouble unto me" (Isaiah 1: 11-14), so should it be to us who have the true light of the gospel of Christ.

S. S. SMITH.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

PEACE WITH GOD BEHIND IT

(From the convention address of the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Kentucky.)

Can any good come out of the war? So many people have lost faith and hope, looking on this war as the consummation of evil. Such it may be and for the great benefit of the whole world.

Some fear that the clock has been set back both as to Christianity and civilization. Rather we should feel that it is set forward; for we now see what has held us back and bound us to lower ideals in a restricted life. The world is feeling and coming to its greatest needs; it is fast finding out that it cannot live without God in the world.

This is one of the greatest spiritual discoveries which is dawning upon the consciousness of a heart-broken and teachable world. What existed before this war broke out held the world apart in suspicion, jealousy, and pride of might. The world has grown a-weary of its own self-made condition and feels, as it never felt before, the need of something, aye, of some One, to save the world from itself.

We are growing by our failure and suffering up to the longing that we shall some day creep out of the shadows into the true light. Toward this the hands of the clock point forward. For we have put away much of our sordid materialism, we have cast off so much of our belittling selfishness in our devotion and service to win and uphold high ideals. We are learning that victory alone cannot make peace, it gives opportunity, and opportunity for permanent peace is for the world to find its way back to God.

The world needs a teaching mission, for there is a necessity of a conversion from the heathenism of war to the righteousness of peace, but peace with God behind it. This war will have its spiritual interpretation when men fully realize that man has worked his own will and it has made war; but God must have his way if man is to know true and abiding peace.

Jesus Christ has long stood among us as one whom we knew not, but heretofore and forever hereafter Jesus Christ and his law of love is the solution for the world's problem of strife.

If this war will cast men back on God for relief, then will man recover God, rediscover himself as brother and neighbor to all men and all nations. When this shall come to men, then will men find God a necessity and war an impossibility. If we do not get this and more out of the war, we shall lose even if we triumph in battle.

WHY THE RED CROSS SHOULD NOT BE SUPPORTED BY TAXATION

[Perhaps some of our readers may wonder why the Red Cross work should not be supported by taxation rather than by voluntary contributions. The following reported statement of Henry P. Davison, chairman of the war council of the organization, presents some authoritative reasons why it should not be thus supported.—EDITORS.]

I regret that there was not opportunity for consultation and wider discussion, before your estimable organization so recorded itself, as I am convinced it would be a mistake, at this time, to support the Red Cross, even in part, by congressional appropriation.

I understand the business man's side of the question, the claims upon his time, money and staff, the diversion on his community created by canvassing campaigns and the inequality that marks the distribution of the common burden, but I am convinced that he patiently should abide these minor ills for the greater good that, I am convinced, is being accomplished.

As I see Red Cross, with its widespread operations, it is a great auxiliary to the Government in war, made the more helpful because it claims no time from a rapidly expanded administration pressed by many problems, recruits no operating personnel from those liable for military duty, and imposes no financial burden or responsibility upon the national treasury.

I see it as the organization and the expression of that patriotic citizenry, anxious to pay more than taxes to help win the war, eager to care for its sons called to arms and ready to extend the hand of bounty to those in need in other lands.

I see it as a mobile organization, free from legislative delay, capable of wide service not easy of accomplishment by our Government, that in emergency or disaster can act instantly.

I see it as a great educational factor of profound inward influence upon our national life, moving toward mutual understanding and sympathies helpful to our social life, and now an impressive example of our national unity and solidarity.

I believe that the effect inevitable of government contributions to Red Cross would be the discouragement and discontinuance of private support and its conversion ultimately from a great voluntary humane movement to a department of government supported wholly by taxation; its place claimed by other voluntary organization or organizations.

I can conceive extreme circumstances where it might be advisable, in emergency or necessity, for the Government to ask Red Cross to perform some special function for which funds would be provided by appropriation, or for Red Cross to request, in emergency, some form of financial aid from Congress, but as long as our people have the spirit and the means to go on independently they should be encouraged so to go.

To do otherwise is to deny them the opportunity of sacrifice and contribution in this great tragedy, which is a blessing to them.

INTENSE SUFFERING IN PALESTINE

The Palestine Restoration Fund has received a message through British Government sources indicating the sufferings undergone by the people of Jerusalem. The message says:

"More than half of the Jewish population of Jerusalem have died of famine and pestilence, and the remaining 30,000 look little better than living corpses. The morale, however, is excellent, and everybody is happy, despite three years of acute suffering.

"Corn is scarce and dear and other commodities are practically non-existent. British soldiers are admired by all for their generosity to the poor, among whom they often distribute their own rations, and the British authorities are doing their best to feed the population."—American Hebrew, March 8, 1918.

ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

[A contributor sent in a lengthy statement to the Buffalo Express recently, setting out the differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah organization. He seemed to understand the differences but, was mistaken as to the origin of the Book of Mormon. Brother James Pycock wrote and had printed the following answer, which we reproduce in part with the idea that it may be valuable as a scrapbook note to help answer the Spalding Romance theory so often used by those who are not well informed.—EDITORS.]

Editor Buffalo Express: Your issue of the 4th inst. contains a letter from Frederick B. Stanton under the above heading. We appreciate the fair manner wherein he shows the great difference between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the apostate Mormon church of Utah. If all preachers, lecturers and writers, who may have access to the facts, were as fair, the people would soon cease confounding the true Latter Day Saints with the iniquitous church of Salt Lake City.

He is, however, mistaken as to the origin of the Book of Mormon. Neither Solomon Spalding nor Sidney Rigdon had anything to do with its origin or publication. The plates, from which the Book of Mormon was translated, came into the possession of Joseph Smith in 1827. It was translated and printed by March, 1830. Sidney Rigdon was not acquainted with Joseph Smith, nor did he ever see a Book of Mormon until Parley P. Pratt visited him in October, 1830, and presented him with a copy, which caused him seriously to consider the claims of the Latter Day Saints. Oliver Cowdery, who did write the Book of Mormon, says: "I wrote with my own pen the entire Book of Mormon (save a few pages) as it fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph Smith." "Sidney Rigdon did not write it, Mr. Spalding did not write it." (Church History, volume 1, page 145.) That manuscript in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery is in the archives of the church at Lamoni, Iowa. [Now at Independence, Missouri—EDITORS.]

In their work, Mormonism Unveiled, published in 1834, E. D. Howe and D. P. Hurlbut originated the idea that the Book of Mormon was copied from the work of Solomon Spalding. Others have copied it from them. They gathered eight witnesses, who depended upon their remembrance of hearing some fragments of Spalding's work read twenty years before. The evidence was void of proof.

The following extracts taken from a paper read before the Northern Ohio and Western Reserve Historical Society on March 23, 1886, by James H. Fairchild, who had possession of the original Manuscript Found of Solomon Spalding:

This manuscript [the Spalding] is now in my possession, and it is at hand this evening. The manuscript has no resemblance to the Book of Mormon, except in some very general features. There is not a name or an incident common to the two. . . . The names of persons are entirely original, quite as remarkable as those in the Book of Mormon, but never the same. . . . The only important question connected with this manuscript is what light, if any, does it throw on the Book of Mormon? This manuscript clearly was not the basis of the book. . . . Now it is difficult—almost impossible to believe that the religious sentiments of the Book of Mormon were wrought into interpolation. They are of the original tissue and substance of the document, and a man as self-reliant and smart as Sidney Rigdon, with a superabundant gift of tongue and every form of utterance, would never have accepted the servile task. There would have been no motive to it nor could the blundering syntax of the Book of Mormon have come from Rigdon's hand. He had a gift of speech that would have made the style distasteful and impossible to him. —Western Reserve Historical Society, vol. 3, pp. 187-200.

THE GREAT EXPERIMENT

The British Declaration concerning Palestine brought Zionism within the realm of world politics. The organization of a Zionist Commission for Palestine marks the beginning of its actual realization. The dream of the ages, the undying hope of successive generations, is about to become an accomplished fact.

The Commission is to be Jewish in its composition, that is to say, international. It will comprise representatives not only of the Jews of the Allied countries—Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, the United States—but also of neutral countries like Holland. It will include an official representative of the British Government, whose military force has made all this possible and to whose generous and far-sighted policy Jews will owe a debt of eternal gratitude.

The work of the Commission will be multifarious. It will extend from the granting of relief and making good the ravages of war to the founding of settlements and the establishment of a Hebrew University. It will have to harmonize differences among the various sections of Jewry, gain the confidence of the Jewish masses, and establish friendly relations with the native population of all nations and creeds. It is difficult work, but glorious, well worthy of our best brain and experience. The great experiment will test all the best qualities of the Jew. We are confident he will not be found wanting. A nation is about to be reborn, and the world is looking on with astonishment and awe.—The American Hebrew, March 15, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2099 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Light Ahead!

Some unavoidable delay has caused Brother McDowell's article concerning the boy movement within the church to be rather late in reaching the readers of the HERALD, but we trust that interest in this work is of so keen and vital a nature, that every word he has written will, nevertheless, be thoughtfully read, prayerfully considered, and most promptly and promptly acted upon.

The need for better oversight of those moments of a boy's life when he is "off duty," so to speak, is very great. The spare moments of anyone's life are the ones which most loudly proclaim character, and, in the years of molding and assimilating, they are the ones which are most influential for good or ill. Put that into a boy's life which will fill his playtime, his vacations, his evenings, with things which deeply interest him, and which are carefully planned for the good they will do him in one or another of the various phases of his nature, and we would have very few "bad boy" problems, confronting us, so far as he is concerned.

Later, in the years when manhood descends upon him, enveloping him in an atmosphere of new thought and impulse, more than ever he needs the anchorage which a well-planned and purposeful program of activity will give him. Too many flounder; too many go down in the deep waters the oncoming of which has taken them completely by surprise. We are shocked at the "evil tendency," blind to the fact that we ourselves are to blame that the "tendency to good" was never fostered intelligently enough to choke out the other. A recent writer is vigorous in his support of the theory that the only irresistible force in the world is the tendency to good. He says it is the one thing which is certain and unavoidable in this earth experience. In the light of the statement that "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep," can we not echo that conviction? But it shall not be so acknowledged in order that we may find excuse for negligence in helping to bring about that happy and much-to-be-desired condition; on the contrary, if we can keep this most beautiful thought before us constantly, we will more likely be inspired to greater efforts than we have made hitherto to line ourselves up on the side of the surely victorious King! "As for me, and my household, we shall serve the Lord!"

To successfully hold a group of boys together in "righteousness," is going to take more than an ordinary endowment of sympathy, judgment, charity, and breadth of vision on the part of the leader. He will be one who is found constantly at the throne of grace, beseeching the Giver and Dispenser of good to guide him aright in this responsible task. A molder of destiny he is; for what man cannot look back in his life and point to some one who stood as king to him in his early days, and who more than any other influenced him at that time? Lucky is the lad who found the right kind of man friend, at the right moment; pitiful is the condition of the man who has only a train of bitter thoughts—memories which burn—and in his body an ineradicable souvenir because he met the wrong one! Equally to be pitied is the lad who, with no desire to do so, goes to wreck on the rocks, simply because he found himself in strange waters, without the compass and chart with which he had a moral right to be equipped in order to pass safely through the dangerous channel.

Parents, teachers, pastors! We cannot shut our eyes longer to this responsibility! Let us up, then, and see to it that the enemy of souls shall no longer have power over our youth, remembering that "forewarned is forearmed." Paul's injunction still holds good: "Overcome evil with good." Let us fill the hours of our young people with so much that is wholesome, that they will shrink instinctively from that which is tainted. Read then, Brother McDowell's plan, and see to it that in every branch something is being done for our boys.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our Boys

To the Boys and Boy Friends: After earnest solicitation from President Frederick M. Smith, I have consented to make an effort to encourage and perhaps centralize the work of the various boys' organizations of the church. In so doing, I fully realize the difficulty of the task, and my lack of experience in such work, and it is only because I am extremely anxious that the church do something in a systematic way for the boys, that I have consented to assume the responsibility at all. I feel assured of your hearty and prayerful support.

Through the kindness of the church publications I am presenting herewith a few observations relative to this work and shall be glad to have each of you write me personally, offering any suggestions or criticisms you may have. This is the only way we can get together and I am sure that such letters will be invaluable to me. Here are my observations.

We are on untrampled ground so far as our church is concerned, and must of necessity move slowly. No one, so far as I know, is prepared to say just what kind of an organization is best suited to our needs as a church. This being the case, we do not think it wise to attempt to draw up an elaborate constitution, and to hand it over, ready made, to prospective local organizations. Neither are we certain that it would be wise to adopt bodily, without modification, one of the well-established boy organizations of the world.

In my opinion our organization, both centrally and locally, should have as little constitution as possible. Every opportunity should be provided for local groups to adapt the form and nature of the organization to their respective needs in the various localities. The success of such efforts will in every case depend much more upon the securing of wise and capable leaders than upon elaborate, technical constitutions.

We believe it is essential, however, that there be some centralizing agency, a central office, which shall act as a clearing house for all of the boy organizations of the church. The work of this office may of necessity be limited at first to the collection of general information, receiving of reports, encouraging new organizations, and at all times keeping its ear to the ground, so to speak, for just that sort of thing which gives promise of meeting our needs most effectively. Only upon such information can we hope to establish and perfect a general organization that can be relied upon.

We need, in a word, a systematic campaign of education. Those who do not as yet realize the urgent need of reaching "our boys" must first of all be brought in touch with the situation as it exists. Then assured of a united effort we must begin a year of serious experimentation and study. How may this be conducted so that we may be assured of the best results? To this question I suggest the following answer:

1. Let each boy organization, of whatever description, throughout the church, send me at once the following information:

- (a) Name of organization and when organized.
- (b) Name of president or leader.
- (c) Number of members.
- (d) Copy of constitution or by-laws.

(e) All further information about the organization and the conditions which it endeavors to meet that you deem significant.

2. If you have no organization but would be interested in forming one perhaps you would be willing to write me something of the conditions in your branch, and what you think should be attempted to improve such conditions.

3. In addition to these suggestions, the value of which is evident to anyone, I have this to offer; (and here is where I want your criticism): It seems to me that the best way to find out what we want or do not want is to actually try out thoroughly some plan of organization. That plan which seems to me to offer the best opportunity for such trial with assurance of profit is the "Boy Scouts of America." My plan is, that wherever we can find a group of our boys willing to organize, and a competent leader (a member of the church), let them do so, securing the Boy Scout literature and, if thought desirable, affiliate with that organization. If some form of organization already exists among the boys, let it also secure this literature and endeavor to try out as many of the good suggestions as possible, keeping close tab on the results, and reporting such to the central office or general director.

4. Such a plan has to my mind many decided merits: In the first place no time will be lost. We shall be doing something for the boy right away, and that something will be highly profitable. In the second place we will be training a number of leaders by having them actually putting in practice some of the best suggestions on work for boys that are available at the present time. In the third place we shall have a mass of information and opinion based upon actual experience which will be invaluable in perfecting our own work. I have gone over much of the Boy Scout literature and I am convinced that we have much to gain and nothing to lose by such a plan. There is nothing in their organization contrary to our views as a church. There is nothing to prevent our adding whatever we feel necessary in order to provide for the religious and spiritual training of the boys. In fact, that is exactly what its founders expect the various churches shall do. I quote from the latest Boy Scout handbook: "The Boy Scouts of America therefore recognize the religious element in the training of a boy, but it is absolutely nonsectarian, in its attitude towards that religious training. Its policy is that the organization or institution with which the boy scout is connected shall give definite attention to his religious life." The other training that is provided includes those things which every boy should know and are such that encourage a clean, healthy, normal life.

5. A year or more of such work would put us in position to move more wisely than we can possibly do now. We shall then know to what extent we can use this already established organization and its materials based upon years of experience, and what we shall have to add to meet our own needs. It might be well to suggest at this point that the Boy Scouts organization is incorporated, and there may be a question as to what extent we may be able to use its material other than by actually joining with them as I suggested.

6. I further suggest that the coming Religio Convention consider the advisability of appointing, as an additional vice president of their organization, the one whom the Presidency may have appointed to have charge of this work for the entire church. This, it seems to me, would be in harmony with the movement now on foot to coordinate the various auxiliaries of the church.

In closing, let me say that it is my earnest desire to receive from you, at an early date, any suggestions and criticisms which you may have to offer. The time I shall be able to give to this work is very limited, especially during the next few months, and I must receive help, both human and divine, if I can hope to move wisely in this important undertaking. Now is the time for you to help by expressing your opinions, and the sooner you write, the sooner we can get together on some plan of work. To the end that no more time shall be lost, I humbly request your immediate consideration of the plan we have suggested. If I have reasonable assurance of your cooperation I shall take steps to put it into operation at once.

Yours in the interest of "our boys,"

F. M. McDOWELL.

Special Music for Our Convention Programs

We have secured some unusually fine material for the special music feature of our programs during our convention. On Monday morning Sister James M. Kelley, jr., of Omaha, will sing for us. She was formerly Sister Nelle Atkinson, well known to the Saints in Lamoni and Chicago, as well as in New York City, where she studied voice development with Mr. Percy Hemus.

Tuesday morning we will have a violin solo from Miss Lillian Green, of Independence. Brother Ralph Smith has secured this number, as well as those for Thursday morning, and his taste in matters musical has long been known to conference visitors, because of his years of service in the Independence choir as organist and accompanist.

Tuesday evening, as has been published already, the soloists will include Sister Blanche Needham, of Toronto, Ontario, daughter of our devoted missionary, Brother Arthur Allen; and Sister Nina, wife of Brother Israel A. Smith, second son of our late church president. Both these singers are favorites with audiences, and qualified to grace any program. Other numbers for the evening will consist of organ music, anthem by choir, and chorus of children.

Wednesday morning, Sister Laura Green will give us a piano number. She will be remembered by conference people generally, as one of Bishop Kelley's group of charming and talented daughters. Sister Laura conducted the departments of music and harmony at Graceland College prior to her marriage to Doctor Green, and subsequent to her years of study in Berlin. So we will have a real treat in the offering she has for us.

Thursday morning, a violin solo by Brother Orlo Huntsman and a soprano solo by Sister Madge Nesbitt will prove a double attraction, as both of these young musicians will please their hearers. They are Independence people, studying in Kansas City, where Sister Madge has sung with the Kansas City Grand Opera Company with distinct success.

Sister Clara Haberlein will sing for us at the Friday morning program. It will not be the first time conference visitors have been privileged to listen to this singer, for, if we mistake not, she delighted them when she was a mere child, the gifted daughter of Sister Ella Whitehead, then of Lamoni, now of Independence.

Taken all in all, we feel that the women who assemble during the week of April 8-12, to take part in the necessary business of the convention, and to listen to the many splendid thoughts which will be presented in a helpful way, will carry away with them, beside the thoughts and suggestions, memories of sweet music, which is one of the rarest gifts God has bestowed upon mortals. Let us be prompt and faithful in attendance at these meetings.

What must of necessity be done you can always find out, beyond question, how to do.—Ruskin.

"Children First"

"The results of underfeeding or indiscriminate food substitution in childhood are startlingly shown abroad as a result of the war, and are beginning to be evident in our own great cities." And "milk has no substitute in the diet of the child." These and other unqualified statements of the importance of guarding the milk supply to prevent the physical deterioration of American children during the war are scattered through the latest report issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor and entitled "Milk, the indispensable food for children."

This report, with its striking figures showing a decrease in the amount of milk now available and in the amount which is finding its way to the children in poor homes, has especial interest in connection with the campaign to save 100,000 lives of babies and little children during the second year of the war. It not only emphasizes the fact that children who are deprived of milk cannot thrive properly, but it analyzes the changes in the production and export of dairy products during the war and shows the necessity of public action.

"The nourishment of our children is the first duty of the Nation. Since milk and milk products are a vital necessity for children, for nursing mothers, and for the sick and wounded, the public should be made to realize that the children's need for dairy products should be assured."

England and Italy have regulated the sale of cream and curtailed the use of butter, in order that their child population might receive the more adequate and economical nourishment offered by whole milk. Germany, early in the war, provided that the adult civilian population might have milk only after the needs of children, mothers, invalids, and the army were met.

The report discusses the various forms in which cow's milk may be used for children. For the young baby, it says, there is nothing so good as mother's milk.

"Never before in the history of civilization has it been so urgent a matter that every child should have breast milk for as long a time as possible, in order that every child that survives birth may have the best chance for life and health."

But for children under two, other than those breast fed, and for older children, the report states that cow's milk is an absolute necessity if disease and death are to be kept within bounds and if the coming generation is to survive and to sustain the national standards. "'Children first' should be part of the national food slogan."

"It is the duty now of every individual community to see that its children have milk of good quality and in sufficient amount to assure their normal development. To do this the price of milk must be controlled or fixed, and the milk supply to infants and children carefully safeguarded. The malnutrition of our children was, even before 1914, a serious national problem and one demanding urgent attention. Poverty and ignorance of dietary essentials have been ever-present factors in the malnutrition of the young, and war conditions cannot fail to increase the gravity of the situation and the difficulties of maintaining the health of the Nation."—Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor.

Men are Not Playing the Game

"A man is a difficult animal to reach when it comes to his food. He is infinitely worse than a woman in the rigidity of his dietary habits. He has within him the primitive barbarism of wanting a thing when he wants it. He instinctively dislikes changes. Housewives are discovering these masculine traits as never before, and the complaint comes from every part of the country that the men are not backing up the women in their efforts for food conservation. Men are insisting on their full quota of meat; they are resenting the change from white bread to bread made from the coarser flours, and where they bow to the inevitable in their homes with more or less grace—and generally with less rather than more—they are ordering for their luncheon at restaurant or club what they are refused for breakfast or dinner at home. It would be easier to deny these accusations of the women if the most casual observation at any restaurant or club at noon-time did not prove them to be so true. It is amazing to see intelligent men stuffing themselves at their luncheons with the very foods which the Food Administration has asked to be conserved and which their wives are doing their best at home to conserve. There is no question that women have gone farther to aid the Government in its efforts for food conservation than have the men. Thousands are stubbornly holding fast to their habits, refusing either moderation or change. Of course, the solution lies in the compulsory meatless and wheatless days in public places. It is not creditable to men, however, that compulsory methods must be employed on them when the effort has come voluntarily from the women. But that is the truth. The men are not playing the game."—Exchange.

When our glance rested upon the above paragraph in a current magazine, we wondered at once if this charge could be truthfully laid at the door of any of our Latter Day Saint men. Of all people we should be the most patriotic, and of all people the quickest to lend aid in an emergency, for is not our slogan "Service"? But, alas, too often we see human nature creeping out, in this food conservation as in other things of life. A pampered taste, an indulged appetite, ruling for years, cannot be changed in the twinkling of an eye, not even at the command of the high authority in the Nation. Individual character will show in this, as in all other decisions and acts.

As we pondered memory brought before our minds a certain brother who, taking but hot water for breakfast, good Latter Day Saint that he was, put into it, besides the usual amount of cream, four heaping sugar spoons of sugar, and a portion of the fifth! 'Tis true, for we saw it, and the conversation was upon the war, its exigencies, and the necessity for sharing certain things with our boys "over there"! Perhaps he was but absent-minded; we know he didn't want all that sugar, for we scraped most of it out of the cup when we washed dishes!

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Far West Stake

The third conference of the Far West Stake was held at Saint Joseph, with the First Branch, on Saturday and Sunday, March 9 and 10. We Saints of the First Branch had renovated the lower room of the church building in which temporary dining hall facilities had been installed, and where dinner and supper were served by a competent committee of sisters on both days of the gathering.

The attendance was very large, a good representation from the branches. The stake presidency and Elder Paul M. Hanson of the Twelve were in charge. The sessions were entirely harmonious, the spirit of brotherly unity being apparent in all business and other sessions.

The procedure of conference at Guilford in October had been very remarkable in its spirit of peace and progressiveness; but it is thought that the March conference marked a decided advance. Progress was indicated in the reports, which included the following items: Sermons 813, baptisms 98, ordained 29, pastoral visits 916, priest's visits 487, besides other services.

A notable feature was an action by the presidency, high council, and bishopric, which was adopted by unanimous vote of the conference. It is as follows:

"To the Saints of Far West Stake; Greeting: The presiding high council, and bishopric of the Far West Stake, after due consultation with general authorities and careful consideration afterwards of the needs of the people, have concluded to make a call to the Saints of the stake for necessary cooperation in our effort, in harmony with the action of other stakes, to establish the Saints in Zionic conditions.

"The perilous conditions of the times, together with the instructions of the revelations of God, admonish us that the time of the gathering is upon us, and that its requirements must be met, intelligently and competently. In our judgment, the time has come to establish the storehouse, and to begin the work of development of industries, that the temporal needs of the people may be provided for. A beginning should be made, and the work carefully developed under such safeguards as shall insure wise procedure and ultimate success.

"To do this work, funds are needed. We therefore urge that the Saints comply with the law of consecration and place their surplus as well as their tithes and offerings in the hands of the stake bishopric, in harmony with the law. In the stakes earlier organized some have complied with the law of consecration. We urge that the Saints of the Far West Stake also observe this law, as required of God and as defined by general authorities and the General Conference.

"The stake bishopric will give full information to any concerning the law of consecration, in harmony with the action of general authorities named.

"Praying for the redemption of Zion and asking the cooperation of her people in the Far West Stake, we are, on behalf of the stake authorities named,

"Your servants,

"R. S. SALYARDS, President.

"B. J. SCOTT, Bishop.

"COLEMAN SNIDER, Member High Council."

At the ordination and prayer service Sunday afternoon the word of the Lord through Bishop Bullard commended the action taken, admonished concerning the judgments to occur in the world, and gave words of counsel and encouragement concerning Zion and her development.

The Saints were heartened by the spirit and events of the conference—they comprised a happy, united people.

Bishop Bullard addressed the congregation on Saturday evening; Brother P. M. Hanson preached Sunday morning and evening. We were pleased to have Brother Hanson with us after his prolonged absence in Australia. The choir rendered an enjoyable series of numbers, a special program in the evening—about sixty voices under the direction of Sister Elma Scott, stake chorister.

There is a great majority of steadfast, earnest people in the Far West Stake who are standing by the work. The authorities are united and working in harmony. A well-devised system of administration has been set in operation and the work is being executed and developed intelligently. With competent workers, men and women are being prepared for intelligent progression and the outlook is quite promising.

The Lord has signally directed in the administration of affairs and we are hopeful in the evidence of careful, prudent, well-executed methods of operation. There is much to be learned and much to do. But we are hopeful that under the blessing of the Lord a faithful people will succeed by moving forward under his continued providence and direction.

With the people of God in other stakes and in all the world, we hope and trust and labor for Zion's redemption.

Yours sincerely,

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

A BROTHER.

Observations

"All the world loves a lover." All the world hates a liar. Even a liar hates a liar. A liar is only loved by himself.

There are two kinds of nods, with widely different effects on the preacher. The nod of approval that mans you, and the nod of the sleeper that chills you.

We have heard of idle rumor, but the sort we've heard was busy.

It may be safer to trust the self-confessed sinner, than the self-appraised Saint. We've heard of wolves in sheep's clothing, and met a few. But don't remember ever meeting a sheep in a wolf hide.

Everyone has heard, and probably believes, that "Honesty is the best policy." But a lot of people haven't "taken out a policy," in this good, old-line Honest Company yet.

The man who laughs at another's mistakes, or failures, makes a mistake, and is in all probability the greater failure of the two.

When we read of a missionary baptizing several adults in a locality, "one of them a promising, influential, gifted" brother or sister, we wonder what the others were, and if he had discernment of spirits.

When we read of a missionary leaving a lot of people "near the water," we wonder if they are on the seashore waiting on the "ebb flow of the tide," and think it's too bad to leave them standing thus, especially in bad weather.

The preacher that comes down out of the pulpit looking for applause or congratulations, and growls if he gets it not, has something to learn.

No trouble to get a full choir when a new and "big" preacher is billed on special occasions like "Easter Sunday."

The branch president has no need to "invite all to be on hand promptly at eight o'clock" if it's a special program, or to ask the audience to fill up the front seats if there is a stage performance or a tableau.

For forty years we heard a man testify that he "knew this work was true." We had his word for it, but failed to get other evidence.

"The elders shall see that my law is kept." Sometimes branch officers have deficient sight.

We will never forget the first fireside sermon given us by a brother, on "All things common," followed by a request for the loan of "a twenty." He got it, and still has it.

ALMA.

Stage Fright

During our association with folk of similar circumstances and mental caliber, according to rules and laws of society and organizations, a demand is for one of the number to appear as leader or commander, to be a spokesman, and when in discharge of such duty, there is so universally evidenced a disease of mind and body which is difficult to describe, harassing to the person, and no active antitoxin on the market for it.

When and under what circumstances the malady first originated, I am unable to tell, but that it existed away back in 570 B. C. is certain, for the fifth chapter of Daniel gives a vivid portrayal of its ravage upon Belshazzar.

Though the king was deadened to real acute sensations by alcoholic beverages and bigamic revelling, yet the writing of the hand upon the wall caused the "king's countenance to change,"—first symptom—"and his thoughts troubled him,"—don't doubt it—"so that the joints of his loins were loosened and his knees smote one against the other."

As for diseases with which we are well acquainted, it also differs as to its severity. Usually one attack makes the individual more tolerant for the second, though it seems as though there is never a positive immunity acquired and occasionally the "one smitten" is so weakened by the first attack, and with each succeeding one; that he finally "perishes."

I am grateful to confess that I have a somewhat natural immunity, a gift for which I am truly grateful, truly not proud of, neither do I flatter myself nor speak boastfully, as I expect sometime in my future to be surprised at the painfulness and severity of the disease. I cannot now fully sense it, as others whom I know to be sincere have portrayed it.

This is a gift of God as well as prophecy, tongues, or healing of the sick, and I recognize it as such, and for this reason I wish you to fully realize I am indebted to my heavenly Master that he has seen fit to remove from my path of service this human condition which has and does handicap so many persons otherwise splendidly fitted to further the establishment of Zion. And because this has been awarded me, more is expected of me in my efforts as a servant of God and his people, and I will be held in account for it when "finis" is written at the summary of my ledger page in the Lamb's Book of Life.

Paul advised Timothy not to neglect the gift that is in him, which was given to him by prophecy, with the laying on of hands of the presbytery, but to meditate upon these things, giving himself wholly unto them, that his profiting may appear to all.

We have considered briefly the disease as an obstacle in realizing our goal; as a stumblingblock in the path to our magnificent air castle; so next in order is a systematic eradication which must be both practical and possible.

I do not know of a single prescription that can be written, or remedy advised which will effect a cure, but as in influenza, each case must be treated separately and symptoms, as they may be present, be combated.

Suppose we consider remedial measures from an angle of religious service, as it ought to be the paramount issue of our ambition, for in this we must work out our own soul salvation with fear and trembling.

The first item on such a prescription in the majority of cases, or for me, would be faith in God. This is the real corrective. God has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and love, and of a sound mind.

The second, a knowledge of my duty, with a will and determination to do it, no matter who or what others may say or do.

Christ answered the importunate accusers of the harlot, "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone," and they turned away convicted of their own conscience.

The third and last number on the prescription is a mastery of the subject, or that to be presented.

This at first thought may be slightly contrary to the teaching of Jesus when he told his disciples, "When they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given unto you in that same hour what ye shall speak; for it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

It is in absolute harmony with Peter's advice: Sanctify your hearts, that ye may be ready always to give an answer for the reason and hope that is within you.

We are expected to use such strength and ability as we possess, and at the end of these we may expect the assistance of that Spirit which shall be words in our mouth and matter in our heart.

Martha announced the death of her brother Lazarus to Jesus, called her sisters, and they all started to the tomb, talking and consoling as they went. At the tomb Christ bade the sisters roll the stone away, for this was the limit of human power. Then the divine assistance was exhibited by Christ when he called with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth."

The question I wish to leave with you for your consideration is this: An individual who desires to be obedient, desires to do that which is outlined, feels a sense of duty bearing upon him at the sacrament service or prayer service, should he commit to memory a prayer he has read or prepared which expresses his sentiment, or prepare an outline of thoughts to be presented in a public prayer; or, as he rises to his feet to take a stand and opportunity to testify of the latter-day dispensation or relate the goodness of Jehovah to him and his, should he then, I ask again, depend on his mind, shattered by aforesaid disease, and possibly make statements which may receive the wrong interpretation, and permit an early effort to be unsuccessful? An experience which the Evil One causes to flash before his mind at each succeeding time or occasion when his conscience says, "You're next."

We have all seen and felt the "Spirit of God striving with man," but the sense of duty is offset by a sense of timidity or insufficiency, while a preparation of thought might have given courage to exhibit and confess the status of the mind and establish the individual to good works.

Eloquence should not be necessary in making such a forethought, for God has chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty, but an humble confession and a "pray for me," until we shall have acquired such confidence in ourselves that we may safely digress to speak from the abundance of our heart.

"If ye love me, then will ye keep my commandments," one of which is to be valiant in the testimony of Jesus, and "he that confesses me before men, him will I confess before my heavenly Father."

DOCTOR O. T. HAYER.

The Day That Is Finished

A few months ago it was my happy lot to be invited to Independence and have part in a home-coming of the Sunday school. I even read a poem. What exquisite hours of anxiety I spent on those poor little verses! Had I been competing for some great prize I could not have felt such a painfully intense desire to speak them with the heart's language.

Back of the generous committee, whose message to me by the hand of Sister McNichols was an inspiration, I saw a group of beloved faces—loved faces that I counted over by name.

When the day came, with the audience before me I found myself picking out, here and there, the faces I had dreamed into the scene. On the stand were old friends; back of me with the almost angelic choir of children's voices and the sweet-toned strings, were others. I was eager to see every one. My heart was beating to quick, sweet time.

Across the beautiful array of ferns and plants there were many faces I knew. Some of them I could not discern, but I was sure they were there within His earthly courts, where they had loved to dwell. The hour went by, an hour sweetened by childish voices in harmonious accord, that stood for months of persistent, of pleasant toil of somebody—whom, it was apparent. Although we think not so much of this at the time, believing these children sing by divine right, yet they recognize the power of One to command. Because these children were trained and led and accompanied in part by members of the first choir in Independence Branch, I felt strangely stirred.

My mind was intent upon the changes of time, and comparing the past with the present, with splendid hope for the future.

The soft autumn sunlight streamed through the tinted glasses on the scene about me, and it rests in memory that way. Independence wears most enticing robes in autumn, and is more regal and beguiling than she appears in her hilarious and teasing moods of spring. How I enjoyed each hour, each face, the touch of every hand! That day seems an impossible dream yet. In the afternoon I wandered with cousin Alice F. toward South Spring Street. Its charm lies not alone in the fact that here was my father's home. South of that there glowed a hearth fire whose flames were fed by a gentle friend.

Sitting that day in her pleasant room I saw the sunlight grow thin and night creep into the hollows. The wood fire burned softly as we talked of many things—how easily we drifted back to the time more than thirty years ago when first we met in Independence. The changes had been many, and not without sorrow to each of us, as to many others. Then we looked forward to the meeting that we believed awaited us somewhere, and wondered who would be the next.

I recall the low murmurs of the fire and the softness of the voices in the pleasant room, and the tears in the eyes of each.

I went out from that little home as one goes out from a sanctuary. I had not seen her face in the morning, but I knew she was there. The week that followed was filled to the brimming top with delightful surprises, and with a few disappointments to be sure. I looked into brave, anxious faces where the eyes were sad with the anxiety and perplexity of this war that was taking their sons and widowing their daughters.

I "sat at meat" with dear, dear friends. I see the lovely tables yet, and across them, brave, sweet faces. I stood with those whose souls were heavy with untold sorrow, but everywhere was the hope that makes us one. It is all cherished by me—from the touch of the little new friend's hand to the "light that never was on land or sea"—that leaped into the eyes I've known for years, and forever sanctified to the memory of Sister B. C. Smith, that Sabbath hour with her in the fading light of a glorious day. I recall her as one steadfast, purposeful, unwavering, yet gentle and low voiced, full of humility, going to and fro in a life of undeviating devotion to the advancement of God's work, not once neglecting her home and home people. I find my appreciation of her increasing as time revealed her courage and fidelity and integrity to her high conceptions of right.

I have a feeling of gratitude that with the many occasions delightful to think upon, in that happy week given me by my friends, there came also this one spotless, white-flamed hour when my soul touched for the last time the soul of this one, whose friendship, (like all things else in which she had part) was sustained to its perfection with serene, unhurried, deliberate ministrations.

I remind myself that here was a woman who gave careful public service, evidently without selfish ambition or the parading of opportunity, and was careful to the cares and exactions of wife and mother. And may I not—with the roses of gladness I offer the living who linger, present here purple pansies for the one still living, now gone away.

VIDA E. SMITH.

TABERVILLE, MISSOURI, March 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: Another conference year is passing away. This time our work has been in the Clinton District, and while everything is not as we would like it, we believe we can truly say the work in this district is advancing to a higher spiritual plane. Most of the branches show increased activity in the devotional services, which is bearing good fruit. There are some few exceptions, but not many. The two conferences I have attended, the one at Coal Hill in June, the other at Eldorado Springs in February, were excellent. Our reunion at Rich Hill was a success.

John Davis has been transferred to the Far West Stake, and Brother L. W. Fike to this district for the remainder of the conference year. The Saints are all made glad by the presence and timely counsel of Brother R. C. Russell at our late conference at Eldorado Springs.

The writer was called to Camden County to meet a Baptist who had been sent to annihilate the Saints near Brumby, where Brother T. C. Kelley had baptized four and thus succeeded in stirring up some opposition. We arrived in time to hear two of the lectures, and properly challenge the man to meet the issue in public debate. This he declined to do, although offered fifty dollars by one man, if he would. This is the amount he said he would lose if he stopped to debate then. But he finally signed up for some future date—to be agreed upon later. It is now agreed that the debate shall begin July 9, at Twelve Corners Union Chapel, near Brumby, Missouri.

Brother and Sister Willoughby have lived in that locality for a number of years and their effort in behalf of the gospel is beginning to show results. Three of the best of the neighborhood, and Brother Willoughby's son were baptized. The three were Brother and Sister Fred Schufelbine and Sister Claudia Stein. All are firm in the faith. Brother Schufelbine has been ordained to the office of priest, and we believe he will make an able representative of the work.

There are many good things to tell, but we fear our letter may grow too long. We have not forgotten the dear Saints in the Southern Ohio District, with whom we labored in previous years. May God bless all his people is our prayer.

H. E. MOLER.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, March 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: I suppose with all the ministry there are times when one feels like writing and times when he does not, at least this is my experience. I have thought for some time about writing, but did not have the feeling to do so till now. I want to tell you of experiences and incidents of our work at Glasgow and vicinity. It was about a year ago that

I came to Glasgow and secured the use of the court room, and started preaching.

A few became interested and when I returned in April I baptized Sister Rosa Richardson, formerly a Baptist. In August we set up our new district tent, but on account of bad weather and lack of interest, also notice to move the tent, we did not succeed in accomplishing very much, but we got the Saints together and organized a Sunday school. About this time I moved to Glasgow, having proved up on our homestead, and rented a farm.

For a time we met at the home of Sister Lutie Davis, but this soon became crowded and we rented the Odd Fellow's hall. Then we began holding prayer meetings week nights, and regular preaching services on Sunday. We soon won the distinction of having the largest attendance at prayer meeting of the town, from fifteen to twenty-five, and Glasgow has seven churches, claiming a population of three thousand.

Late in the fall the Baptists announced from the stand and in the papers a meeting, subject, "Why I am a Baptist," and anyone else would be privileged to tell why they were what they were. Several of us Saints went. There were ten of us present. We were anxious to tell them why we were Latter Day Saints, and considered it a rare chance. We listened to the Baptists telling why they were such with, "I was raised a Baptist," "Immersion right," and some said that more negroes joined the Baptist than any other church. Then the minister made a lengthy talk (the testimonies of the others taking up about ten minutes), then taking out his watch, said, "I am sorry, but we won't have time to hear from the others." But Sister Richardson could not keep still, so after the meeting was dismissed, she tried to tell them why she left the Baptist Church and joined the Saints. The minister only made light of what she said.

Some little time later, there came out in the local paper a large advertisement from the Methodist parson about a special lecture, in which he would unveil this strange religion of the Latter Day Saints. I notified Elder Jott Bronson, my missionary companion. He came and we heard the same old rehash, so familiar to all of our readers. "Joseph Smith was an all-around bad man," "Book of Mormon a tissue of lies," Spalding's romance—we heard them all.

We issued a challenge and Elder Bronson wrote you how the parson failed to meet it, and what a splendid hearing we had in answering. We have been thoroughly advertised and have made many new acquaintances, increased the attendance of our services, and interested a number.

The Reverend Stone told me of all the opposition he had had to meet, and that we were the worst of all. It was his first experience in going up against the truth. The worst he could say that we had done was to tell the people that he was unfair.

Our enrollment in Sunday school now is over thirty. In the short time that we were organized last year, our Christmas offering was $15.08, and we are already pushing ahead for a good-sized 1918 offering. Besides our Sunday school, preaching, and prayer meeting, we have a home class Religio, and an organized normal class, and two or three families have moved in this spring and will add to our force.

Glasgow has been selected as the place to hold our first reunion in this district. Watch for the date, and plan, all you Saints of the Northwest, to attend if possible. We have an excellent place selected, just outside the city, on the banks of the Milk River, in a nice grove.

Though released from our appointments, to meet obligations in increased cost of living, we have kept quite busy in gospel work. We have just returned from a very pleasant trip up north with the Saints in Golden Valley Branch, around Opheim.

In bonds,

JAMES C. PAGE.

OPHEIM, MONTANA, March 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are located fifty miles north of Glasgow, Montana, that being our nearest railroad point. Scattered within a radius of some twenty miles live about fifty members of the church who were organized into a branch two years ago by a former district president, W. R. Hillman, and Elder James C. Page.

The scattered condition, crop failure, and members, at least some of them, having lived isolated for some time, have made it uphill work. We have recently enjoyed a visit from our new district president, Elder Eli Bronson, accompanied by Elder James C. Page. On account of bad weather conditions, they were delayed in getting here, and as Elder Bronson is a farmer, with many interests at home requiring his attention, his stay with us was brief. But we feel that his visit among us will result in much good. Although he only preached one sermon, it was full of counsel and advice, and he personally interviewed each member of the priesthood, where he made very plain to us our duty and what was expected of us.

Elder Bronson left us Wednesday morning, February 27, while Elder Page remained with us, and we proceeded to keep him busy.

Opheim is our principal post office, an inland town of considerable size and note. Through the generosity and zeal of our sister, Mary Floyd, from Palestine, we were able to rent the theater for three nights, in which Elder Page occupied, very ably setting forth the doctrines of the church to a well-filled house.

The writer accompanying, we went to Tango, where is located the Floyd (Jerusalem) Branch, where Elder Page talked two nights to small but interested crowds. The Floyd home is a very pleasant place to stop.

Besides the above-mentioned places, Brother Page has preached a number of times in residences. The Saints drove several miles through storms to hear him.

The writer was reared a Lutheran by faith and came in contact with the restored gospel in Canada. He obeyed the same in the spring of 1914, and shortly afterward moved to this place and took a free homestead. About one and one half years ago he was called to be an elder, and about one year ago was chosen to preside over the branch here. I find great comforts in the gospel, but also have great difficulties to meet. My desire is to have strength and courage to overcome the obstacles that confront us and be found faithful to the charge that I am intrusted with.

I feel that the visit of the brothers has done the work much good and encouraged us all to press on toward the high ideals of the gospel.

Sincerely yours,

ELMER D. CHASE.

ARTLAND, SASKATCHEWAN, March 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: Elder W. D. Ellis has been in our midst, preaching for the past month, and we learn he will continue till April 1. We have been cheered and encouraged by these discourses. He is invariably greeted with a full house. Nonmembers are being attracted to his meetings. Some who have been enemies of our faith have also come. We are glad to have such a clean, upright man as Brother Ellis to represent our King in the church of his choice.

Brother Thomas Derbyshire is home again after a few months' sojourn near Edmonton.

A box social last Friday evening was successful. The proceeds were divided between the branch, Religio, and ladies' aid society.

Several are expecting to attend General Conference from this branch: Sister J. J. Cornish and daughter Leotis, Sister T. E. Harper, and Elder W. J. Cornish. We are already anticipating their return, laden with good thoughts to tell us, from the general assemblies of our people.

CORRESPONDENT.

GARDEN PRAIRIE, ILLINOIS, March 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: Having read Brother J. O. Dutton's letter in the HERALD, on dancing and picture shows, I thought it might not be amiss to ask you for a little space in your valuable paper to carry this discussion a little further, so it will cover a little more ground.

Remember, this is intended in love, to help some poor soul to come up higher. I wish to take in the tobacco habit, as there are some who belong to the church who use the weed, and I know from personal experience that it keeps us back spiritually. That is, we cannot attain to the standard we might if we did not use the stuff. I am speaking from experience, as I used it for a time after coming into the church and was brought to my senses while standing on the depot platform at Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin, some years ago.

Seeing so many people using the weed, it started me thinking like this: "If I should meet my Savior, would he have a cigar or a pipe in his mouth; or tobacco, either?"

The more I thought about it the more guilty I felt, and I there asked God to help me to throw the habit off, right there on that depot platform. And, brothers and sisters, I want to say that from that hour to the present time I have had no desire for it.

I know some say it isn't so easy for them, but remember the words of the Savior in Matthew, "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened."

With such glorious promises as these shall we not try to get help to throw off this habit that steals all our spirituality and robs us of blessings that we should otherwise enjoy? I say, Throw it off. Some will say, "I have tried time and time again, and I can't." I will tell you what an old man, an elder, told me once while talking on this very thing. I asked him if it was hard for him to quit. He said that "nine times out of ten when they say, 'I try to quit,' they don't have the determination to make it a success. If you hear a man say, 'I will quit,' that man will be successful."

Let us be clean in all things, brothers and sisters, so that when we meet the Savior, we may meet him with smiles on our countenances and not be ashamed. Allow me to say that this is all said in love, to help some who are in need of help.

Your brother in bonds,

WILLIAM DARMON.

NAVAJO, MONTANA, March 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we have not seen or heard from any of the missionaries for many months, I thought they would be pleased to know that we are still keeping up our Sunday school, and trying to do the best we can, although at times we feel almost helpless and long for wisdom, that we may be the means of bringing others to see the glorious gospel light, and also of raising ourselves to a higher and nobler standing.

As we look out upon the world in its sorrowful condition, we realize more and more the goodness of our heavenly Father, and my desire is to learn more of him, and try in some way to repay a part of the debt I owe.

Elder Snuggins, from Outlook, was out last night, and we enjoyed having him with us in prayer meeting. He also blessed our little twin babes, a boy and a girl which were born at Outlook, November 17, 1917. He is arranging to be with us often this year, which will give us more courage to press forward.

Any of the missionaries will find a welcome whenever it is convenient for them to come this way. Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel,

Your sister in the one faith,

NELLIE DECK.

PAONIA, COLORADO, March 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Paonia Saints are striving to be what our Lord wants us to be. Though few in number, somewhat isolated, and not having the privileges of some, we feel our weakness, and feel that we need encouragement from time to time, and we are praying that there may be more added to our number by so living that others may see our good works.

Brother Higdon was up and spent a week with us after district conference, and he left with us some of his encouraging sermons. We are praying that he may be sent back here.

We hold our little Sunday school at a private house every Sunday, and we have preaching once in a while after Sunday school by Elder J. W. DuBoise. We are practicing on our Easter program and also working on our next year's Christmas offering.

As I am the only one in my family who belongs to the church, I oftentimes feel my weakness and get discouraged; but how thankful I am to have some one to go to and know He will strengthen me, if I only put my trust in him and try to overcome my weaknesses. Those who have husbands that believe as they do, do not know how much they have to be thankful for.

But, dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers to endure those trials which come up from time to time, and be worthy of the blessings that are promised to those who are faithful. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister,

MRS. STELLA SCHONEMAN.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, March 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Saints of the Winnipeg Branch are striving to come up higher, and many of them are looking for the redemption of Zion in the near future. We realize that we must redeem ourselves before we can have part or parcel in that redemption.

It means much for us to live the gospel law, and do unto others as we wish others to do unto us, yet that is one of the things we must do in order for us to dwell together in harmony.

Our hearts were indeed saddened this last week, owing to the tragic death of one of our number. This was especially sad for ourselves, for she was a member of our family circle for several years, and had become endeared to us, Sister Annie Swan Sparkman.

Brother and Sister Sparkman moved to British Columbia a year and a half ago, hoping the change would be beneficial to her health. They had settled in Lillooet, where he was station agent and also took the level of the Fraser River at its deepest place for the British Columbia Hydrometric Survey. I understand that this measure was taken daily by Annie, Brother Sparkman assisting at times, as he did on the evening of Friday, March 8.

There was no danger attached to it, ordinarily, but this evening after they had taken the measurement, Brother Sparkman was engaged with the register, and placing the record in his notebook. Annie took the cable and went about eighty feet further along the bridge to fasten it in its proper place.

He was attracted from his notes by hearing the cable snap. Looking up, he saw Annie stumble, and stepping back to recover her balance, she tread on a pet dog which was immediately at her heels. The dog plunged, throwing her forward and clear over the side of the bridge to the rushing water seventy feet below, filled with spring ice and swift currents.

He only saw her once after that, about a hundred yards down the stream, moving swiftly with the current, before she was whirled under the water. To follow her was suicide; the only thing remaining for him to do was to get help and patrol the river. This has been done, but no sign of our sister's body is detected as yet.

Our brother is desolate indeed, and as he stated in a personal letter to us, "I have tried to say, 'Thy will be done,' though while my lips frame the words, my heart refuses to concur, and I can only realize that I am very miserable, very unhappy, and very weak."

This is certainly a sad blow for Brother Sparkman, and hard to recover from. He and his wife were devoted to each other and to the church. It was through her untiring efforts that he saw and accepted the gospel light, and now he feels that he is in darkness indeed, and clouds are all around him. He has the promise of the priesthood, and if he can only see the silver lining in this dark cloud, we know he will be a strong man in the service of the Lord and do much good in his day and generation.

Annie was a daughter of Frank Swan, and was formerly a member of the Priestly Road Branch, England. She had a bright, keen intellect, and was an adept on explaining the gospel truths. Her faith was great and she had become stronger physically and was more beautiful spiritually. We feel that her peace was made with God, and that she is now resting in paradise.

I do hope our people will remember Brother Sparkman and his two little girls in prayer, for they are desolate and lonely. If any old friends, reading this, should like to send them a word of encouragement and consolation, his address is, R. B. Sparkman, Lillooet, British Columbia, Canada. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister in the gospel, PREDETTA WILSON.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—With Foundry Hill Branch, March 9 and 10, district officers in charge. Weather fine and very large attendance, with the good Spirit of the Master prevailing. The work in the district is on the upward trend and many of the Saints are opening their eyes, though we see a need for much further improvement. We pray the Lord will send more laborers into his vineyard.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—At Inman, Nebraska, February 23, 1918, in charge of district officers. Report of district president and associate president read. Bishopric's report showed balance at last report to be $41.16, total receipts $2,213.20, balance on hand $695.88. Statistics showed membership to be: Inman 126, Clearwater 120, Bonesteel 103, Meadow Grove 73, and Round Park 63, total 485. The following officers were sustained: W. M. Self president, F. S. Gatenby associate president, Mary Sodersten secretary, N. S. Butler treasurer, T. S. Rutledge chorister, and Lulu Butler librarian. Meeting next with the Neligh Saints at the call of the presidency. Bessie Sodersten, secretary pro tem.

FLORIDA DISTRICT.—February 23, 1918, with the Santa Rosa Branch, near Catawba, Florida, J. W. McKnight presiding, E. N. McCall, secretary. Branches reporting, Santa Rosa 84, Cold Water 106, and Alafloa 198. Six elders, 2 priests reported, 80 sermons, 6 baptisms, 10 children blessed,

THE DAILY "ENSIGN"

In accordance with our custom, a daily edition of the Ensign will be published during the sessions of the coming General Conventions and Conference. This is in addition to the regular weekly editions, and will not be sent to those receiving the weekly edition unless subscribed for.

It will be the usual price, so low that every family in the church can afford to have it come to their homes. The entire series during conference for

25 CENTS IN ADVANCE

It is largely a labor of love to get out these issues, help being scarce and we not having the facilities for getting out daily editions, but as a service to the church which we believe has always been appreciated, we are willing to do it, if we may have your cooperation by way of subscriptions. Tell your neighbors and friends about it, and see if every family in your community cannot be on the list.

By the issuance of the Daily we can have more room for the human interest incidents which always abound at such gatherings. We realize that only a very small percentage of the church membership can attend these meetings any one year, but that all who are not there—and some who are—appreciate the little touches which go right along with the transaction of weightier problems. Keep track of the details of what promises to be a most important conference, through the Daily Ensign.

The first issue will be on the second day of the conventions. We believe we can be assured of good mailing facilities, the papers going the evening published, giving you the news promptly.

Book Reviews

THE RECORD OF A QUAKER CONSCIENCE.—The diary of one Cyrus Pringle, a Quaker, drafted during the Civil War and who remained true to the convictions of his church and himself. As Rufus M. Jones says in the introduction, "Slowly the sincerity of the Quaker conviction about war has made itself felt and limited legislative provisions have been made, especially in England and America, to meet the claims of conscience." No informed person will denigrate members of this organization as "slackers," but a book of this character helps us to better understand the state of mind and its consequent results which come from a conscientious observance of the principles of nonresistance. Published by the Macmillan Co., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York, 60 cents.

AFRICAN MISSIONARY HEROES AND HEROINES.—The Macmillan Co., New York, $1.25. A new and most interesting book by H. K. W. Kumm. "People of vision," he calls these leaders who have pioneered the gospel work in the great Dark Continent. Few of us realize the extent of that wonderful mission and the part it has played in the history of Christianity. We know of Clement, Origen, Tertullian, and Cyprian of Carthage, but alas, how little most of us know of the sacrifices made in our generation that these hordes of human beings might be rescued from their ignorance and superstition. There is much human interest in the book, and we come to feel more or less acquainted with such men as Cahina, Brooke, Crowther, Coillard, Grenfell, Krapf, Slessor, Mackay, Moffatt, and Livingstone. There are excellent maps, appendices, a chronological table, and good index.

Our Departed Ones

JONES.—Patsy A. Jones was born January 29, 1889, at Calhoun, Santa Rosa County, Florida. Baptized by I. N. Roberts, November 2, 1902. Died March 11, 1918. Leaves husband, 4 children, 5 brothers, 2 sisters to mourn. Funeral sermon in Saints' church, at Brewton, Alabama, by F. M. Slover.

JOHNSON.—Fannie S. Johnson was born October 27, 1846, in Conecuh County, Alabama. Baptized by F. M. Slover on October 25, 1917. Married G. A. Johnson July 24, 1870. Died March 18, 1918, at Century, Florida. Leaves husband, 2 sons, 3 daughters, and 18 grandchildren to mourn. Funeral sermon at Century, Florida, by F. M. Slover.

BELL.—Edith Bell Clark was born near Mondamin, March 26, 1877, died March 11, 1918. United with the church when a young girl. She is survived by her husband, 2 sons, one daughter, her aged mother, and several brothers and sisters. Funeral services in the Methodist church at Mondamin, conducted by D. R. Chambers, assisted by James Gunsolley.

ALDRICH.—Sister Adell F. Aldrich, mother of Sister J. F. Francis of Saint Joseph, a member of the church for eleven years, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. M. Hickman, of Kansas City, Missouri. Service held from the First Saint Joseph church, March 12, 1918, in charge of R. S. Salyards; sermon by B. J. Scott. Burial in Ashland Cemetery.

ERICKSON.—Joseph Erickson was born in Sweden, September 17, 1846, came to America in 1871. Married Helen La Follette February 14, 1877. To this union one child was born, David A. He was baptized in 1878 at Gallands Grove, Iowa. Died January 30, 1918. Services at the home of his brother, Louis Erickson, in charge of D. R. Chambers. Burial in Magnolia Cemetery.

NEWCOM.—Cypert J. Newcom was born in Story County, February 12, 1865, died March 6, 1918, at his home in Spirit Lake, Iowa. Married May Watson in 1885, who died June 8, 1902. On January 9, 1918, he was married to Nellie Patchin. He leaves to mourn, wife, 3 sons, one daughter, one stepson, 2 brothers, and one sister. Services in charge of D. R. Chambers, assisted by Carl Winey, at Deloit, March 10, 1918.

KNAPP.—Sister Francis Knapp, wife of Elder LeRoy Knapp, of Houghton Lake, Michigan, died March 7, 1918, at the age of 23 years, 4 months, and nine days. She leaves behind to mourn their loss, one baby boy, her husband, and many friends and relatives. Houghton Lake Branch loses one of its best workers. She was their organist, branch secretary, and Sunday-school teacher, and also held office in the district. She was loved by all, both in and out of the church. Funeral sermon by S. T. Pendleton, in the Saints' church.

PYERS.—Fred Pyers was born November 10, 1858, died February 26, 1918. Ordained a priest August 5, 1900, and was a member of the church about 28 years. He leaves to mourn their loss, his wife, his adopted son Vonnie, and Georgie, Vonnie's sister, who made her home with them, besides many relatives and friends. Brother Pyers suffered a great deal in his last illness, but was very patient. Just about three days before he died he said, "I want to go home." His testimony was in behalf of this latter-day work to the end. Funeral sermon by Brother S. T. Pendleton.

MOLLOY.—Thomas A. Molloy was born at Walsall, Staffordshire, England, May 19, 1850. Came to the United States about 43 years ago. Was married to the late Mrs. Molloy in the year 1882, at Belleville, Illinois. Baptized in 1883 at Lucas, Iowa, came to Centerville, Iowa about thirty years ago, at which place he died March 3, 1918. He leaves one son, Charles, and his wife and five grandchildren, and one stepdaughter, Mrs. Francis Roby, of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services held at the Saints' church at Centerville, March 5, conducted by E. B. Morgan of Lucas, Iowa.

FREDERICKSON.—P. W. Frederickson was born March 17, 1842, in Hancock County, Ohio. When 14 years of age came west and located in Fremont County, Iowa, where he later married Miss Laura Green. In 1876 he moved to Pottawattamie County, where he resided until the time of his death. Baptized December 15, 1888, and was a true follower of Christ. Died at his home March 3, 1918. Leaves companion, brother, and other relatives and friends to mourn. Services in Saints' church at Carson. Sermon by H. N. Hansen, assisted by Joshua Carlile. Interment in Carson Cemetery.

SCHENCK.—Robert Starrett Schenck was born March 20, 1860, at Indianola, Iowa. Died February 23, 1918. In 1864 he removed to Mills County, Iowa, where he was united in marriage to Louisa Belle Walker, December 29, 1883. His wife, two daughters, and three sons survive him. Mrs. Gertrude Fritcher and Mrs. Alzina Fritz of Red Oak, Iowa; Orville and Mervin of Lamoni, Iowa; and Roy of Red Oak. Baptized in 1889. Was ever a faithful and devout church worker. Funeral service in Lamoni, March 3, in charge of William Johnson, Heman C. Smith preaching the sermon.

ARCHIBALD.—Sister Ellen McInDo was born February 28, 1863, in Falkirk, Stirlingshire, Scotland; baptized in 1855, came to America in 1856, and went to Saint Louis in the same year. Married Russell Archibald in 1857. Joined the Reorganized church May 11, 1875, and remained a faithful member until death. Died in Avery, Iowa, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Angell, March 10, 1918. Her husband preceded her fifteen years. Nine children, 56 grandchildren, and 23 great-grandchildren survive her. Services from the First Saint Joseph church, in charge of W. W. Scott; sermon by B. J. Scott, burial in Mount Mora Cemetery.

DOWKER.—William Dowker was born in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, August 30, 1850. Married Hannah Bechtel in 1870. Moved to Caseville, Michigan, in 1886 and was ordained an elder shortly after and labored in his calling for several years as pastor, after which he was appointed missionary to Michigan and Indiana where he labored faithfully for the cause he loved. Died February 20, 1918, at Danville, Illinois, his wife preceding him five years. He leaves to mourn his loss six children; William H., of Danville, Illinois, Elder John A., of Lincoln, Nebraska, Elder David E., Chicago, Illinois, Mrs. George Warren, of Lansing, Michigan, Mrs. G. E. McKenzie, of Flint, Michigan, and Mrs. B. C. Harder, of Independence, Missouri. His remains were brought to Independence, Missouri; funeral services were held in the Stone Church. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WATKINS.—John J. Watkins was born at Blackwood, Monmouthshire, Wales, August 2, 1850; baptized by Jeremiah Jeremiah, at New Tredegar, South Wales, August 16, 1863. Married Sister Jane H. Roberts at Canton, Illinois, March 5, 1874. The same spring they went to Nortonville, California, and remained there five years, and then came to Lucas, Iowa, in 1879. Ordained an elder by D. S. Mills, at Nortonville, California, November 17, 1875. Was faithful and devoted from the day of his baptism in his boyhood, until his demise, which took place February 9, 1918, at the home of his daughter, Sister John X. Cochran, Chariton, Iowa. His married life was blessed with 6 sons and 3 daughters; one son died in infancy and a daughter that grew almost to maturity. He leaves his devoted wife, and the following children to mourn; Mrs. Sarah Jane Cochran, of Chariton, Iowa; Thomas J., Independence, Missouri; David H., Hiteman, Iowa; Mrs. Louise Williams, John J., Evan B., and Alma, of Chariton, Iowa, and fourteen grandchildren; also one brother, George N. Watkins, of Powell, South Dakota; 2 sisters, Mrs. John L. Morgan, of Butte, Montana, and Mrs. T. H. Lewis, of Springfield, Illinois. Brother Watkins came to the United States forty-nine years ago next June. The funeral took place Tuesday, February 12, at 2 o'clock. Services were held at the Latter Day Saints' church. Brethren Thomas Hopkins and John T. Evans rendered a beautiful duet, "Some other day," very effectively; and in keeping with the request of the departed one, a Welsh hymn was sung. Sermon by E. B. Morgan, of Lucas, Iowa, assisted by Parley Batten, after which the body was laid to rest in the beautiful Chariton cemetery.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Saints at Hiteman, Iowa, recently ordered their second large shipment of meal, graham, and other mill products from the Lamoni Roller Mill. They are much pleased with these goods and not only save money but secure quality impossible to get elsewhere.

LOOK OUT FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

As announced in their letter on page 290 of last week's HERALD, the I. X. L. Class of Independence young people will look after the social interests of the unacquainted young folks who attend the big gatherings. It will be their aim to do all in their power to do away with the "cat-in-a-strange-garret" feeling we all have when we are strangers among so many acquaintances. Write to some of the officers as named in their letter.

WHAT WILL YOU DO THIS SUMMER?

The opening date for the Graceland Radio Summer School has been set for May 6. Fifteen weeks of intensive training will be offered in radio telegraphy, military signaling, and signal corps training—practically a noncommissioned officers' training school. This work is offered under Government supervision. It should be invaluable to registered men, who, upon graduation, will receive Government certificates of ability which will assure placement in the signal corps as radio operators. Every registered man and every young man at liberty this summer should write immediately for full information to the Radio Telegraph Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

REAL ESTATE MAN IN BISHOP'S OFFICE

Elder R. T. Cooper has recently closed up his real estate business in Los Angeles, California, and is moving to Independence to devote all his time to the real estate department in the office of the Presiding Bishopric at that place. It is an important feature in the development of the work and establishment of Zion, and we join our readers in wishing him abundant support and success.

IDEAL SPRING, BUT—

You know how it is. We are prone to qualify about everything in this peculiar old world. We have had some wonderful spring weather in this region, following a very severe winter, and the roads excellent. But we need rain; need it very much, for it has been too dry for almost nine months. Possibly it will come with the conference rains—it usually pours then.

MACGREGOR GETS DECISION

The Saint Thomas (Ontario) Daily Times, for March 18, gives a very favorable report of a recent debate held by Elder Daniel Macgregor and Elder W. H. Boyce, the latter of the Seventh-day Adventist faith. There were five periods of fifteen minutes each for the speakers, in which they produced the best evidence at their command on the subject under discussion: Sabbath observance. The house was full and the audience was asked to note carefully each point and be the judges at the close, voting according to the evidence produced rather than as they had preconceived notions. Of the 250 present only 6 voted in favor of Elder Boyce, the remaining hundreds voting solidly for Brother Macgregor, and his arguments for Sunday worship.

CHURCH HISTORY IN BRIEF

The latest addition to the series of Angel Message Tracts is one by Elbert A. Smith, entitled "The Latter Day Glory: Church History in Brief." As the title suggests, it is a brief presentation of the history of the church from the first vision to the death of Joseph Smith in 1914, and the fact that his son, Frederick M., succeeded him in the presidency of the church. It is the only tract we have which attempts to deal at length with the history of the church, and will be of special interest to every member, being valuable in showing the salient facts of our history to those who are not conversant with them. It covers 40 pages, in the uniform style of the rest of the series, and sells at 35 cents for 10 or $3.25 a 100. Have at least one put in with your next order.

GOOD ADVERTISERS

The Utah church is sending out what seems to be a series of brochures on various phases of their doctrines. The second one discusses "Original sin," "Are babies to be dammed?" "The watery grave," "Baptism of fire," and in the suggestions to the reader lists some of their books and tracts, with prices. It is written by Doctor James E. Talmage of the Twelve and is signed as the Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City, Utah. The covers are in color and depict historical scenes connected with Utah.

TRAVELING MEN WILL MEET AT CONFERENCE

It is planned that the Traveling Men's Association of the church will hold a business session and election of officers on April 8, at Independence. There will also be an interesting program. All visiting traveling salesmen are invited to attend and become acquainted with this new movement in the church.

JUST TO SCARE THEM A LITTLE

"When the army came out here, in 1858, we wanted some bullets to go out and meet General Johnson and his forces that were coming in—not to kill them; we did not want the bullets to kill them; we just wanted the bullets to scare them with."—Joseph F. Smith, in an address at Salt Lake Assembly Hall, July 8, 1917.

CHURCH HISTORIES SOLD OUT

All the damaged copies of Volume 4 of the Church History recently advertised, are gone and the orders still coming in. Don't order any more at the dollar price. While we are on the subject, let us suggest that you could invest a dollar no better than to order a copy of the Young People's History if you don't already have one of them. A dollar each. They are an excellent production and of much interest and value to older folks as well.

LOCATION OF SHEBA

Brother D. F. Lambert of Lamoni, has completed the compilation of a reference edition of the New Testament in the Inspired Translation of the Bible and has gotten a nice start on the Old Testament. He found an interesting item concerning Joshua 19: 2. In the King James Version this reads as follows: "And they had in their inheritance, Beer-Sheba, and Sheba, and Moladah." The Inspired Version uses the word or instead of and between Beer-Sheba and Sheba, thus conveying the idea that the two names apply to the same place. The Revised Version is exactly the same as the Inspired Version. The remarkable feature of the matter is the fact that the inspiration guiding in the Inspired Version, led to exactly the same conclusion in regard to a simple historical and geographical question to which the scholarly compilers of the Revised Version were led by a very thorough examination of the latest historical and geographical data.

KIRTLAND ORGANIZED FOR LITERATURE WORK

Brother F. C. Webbe, informs us that at the recent Kirtland district convention they organized a gospel literature board for the district and later one was elected for Cleveland. They are beginning right by requesting information to help them extend the circulation of the church periodicals, with the idea that we need intensive cultivation within the church as well as out of it. They wanted to know about church literature racks and we told him we had a few left at a dollar each, postpaid. The convention appointed a committee for publishing a small district periodical.

THE INTERPRETER

One of the later books on the interpretation of the laws given to the church is The Interpreter, by Gomer T. Griffiths. It contains a number of charts which materially help in the study of the relativity of the various orders of the priesthood. It is vital to the interests of the work that we be well informed regarding the duties of the various officers. Carefully indexed, 152 pages, No. 212, cloth, 50 cents, postpaid.

THE RELIGIO CONVENTION

The first session of the Religio workers was a prayer meeting in the basement of the Stone Church, at 7. 30 a. m., new time, Tuesday, April 2. It opened with only eighteen present. It is hard to get any considerable number together at what was 6. 30 less than a week ago. A. E. Warr and Roy M. Young were in charge and stated that it was the desire of President Trowbridge that the meeting be principally devoted to prayers. The number in attendance soon doubled, and the ten earnest prayers were devout and inspirational.

Conferences of the temperance, normal, and home departments were held from 8. 10 to 9. 10, at which time the first business session convened, with G. S. Trowbridge, president, in charge. The car strike prevented a large attendance. The eastern party arrived but hardly in time to all get to the meeting.

There was some difficulty in getting under way, on account of delay in checking credentials. A supplemental report of Secretary J. W. Stobaugh, brought the total enrollment of the society to 16,018, thus lowering the gain to 2,581. The enrollment of the home department, under the new figures, is 2,293, which, added to the other total, which is the custom, makes a grand total of 18,311 Religians reported.

A straightforward, fearless address by Elder R. W. Farrell thrilled the audience as he presented his conclusions on social purity ideals and conditions under the subject: "Conservation through pure living." Having served a number of years on the joint Social Purity Board, he feels deeply on this subject and sincerely desires to move others to deep thinking and consequent purer living. In the report to the General Conference this board makes some important recommendations which deserve serious consideration.

Quite a flurry was precipitated when the credentials committee chairman recommended the dropping of names appearing in the lists of delegates without identifying initials. A considerable number were pointed out which were preceded only by "Bro." or "Sr." The recommendation was not concurred in, but there was a general exodus to supply the missing information. Considerable delay was occasioned in the whole delegate matter, so the business was delayed till the afternoon session except on some essential matters.

The following important document from the coordinating committee was presented at the morning business session, in printed form, and distributed among the delegates. It was made the special order for two o'clock p. m.

Our readers should study it carefully, remembering that it comes in signed by the committee made up of one each from the church and the three auxiliaries, with a fifth member chosen by them. It reads as follows:

REPORT OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 1, 1918.

To the Presidency, General Conference and Auxiliary Conventions: Greeting: The members of the coordinating committee appointed in compliance with the resolution of the General Conference and General Conventions of the Sunday School Association, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, and in conformity with the instruction contained therein, selected Elder F. M. Smith to be the fifth member of said committee.

The work of the committee throughout the year has been conducted mainly by correspondence which led up to meetings held just previous to the making of this report, at which the following recommendations were formulated:

First. That while the Sunday School, Religio Society, Woman's Auxiliary, Board of Publication, College, various Homes, and the Sanitarium have been auxiliary unto the church in their efforts, their work has become of such importance and magnitude that they should henceforth be officially recognized as departments of the church work under the following heads:

1. The Sunday school, primarily concerned with religious instruction.
2. The Religio, primarily interested in social and recreational development.
3. The Woman's Auxiliary, primarily having to do with the interests of the women of the church.
4. The Department of Education, having to do with the work of Graceland College, concerning itself with collegiate and academic education of the grade belonging to a fully standardized institution of higher learning.
5. The Department of Publication, having to do with the publication of all the literature of the church and its various departments.
6. The Department of Remedial and Corrective Agencies, having to do with the work of the Sanitarium, the various Homes, etc.

Second. (a) That the directing heads of the several departments of church work be hereafter appointed by nomination from the Presidency of the church, approved by the General Conference, insofar as their appointment may not already be provided for in articles of incorporation under which they may be working.

(b) That hereafter the subordinate officers of the various departments be appointed by nomination from the coordinating committee, hereinafter provided for, approved by the various departmental groups of the General Conference.

(It is understood that officers of the various departments for the current year will be elected in the regular manner. The officers elected as directing heads of each department to be subject to the approval of the Presidency of the church, provided the recommendations contained in this report are adopted by the General Conference and Conventions of the various auxiliaries. Also that pending the full organization of the Department of Remedial and Corrective Agencies, it is herein recognized that the Presiding Bishop is in fact the head of such department and should be so considered until farther definite provision is made.)

Third. That the annual conventions of the several departmental groups of the church work shall hereafter confine themselves to such time, following the opening of the General Conference, as shall be assigned them by those having in charge the work of preparing the program for the General Conference.

Fourth. That the directing heads of the several departments of church work shall hereafter make their reports to the Presidency of the church at such time as shall be determined by said Presidency, including therein such reports of subordinate officers as may be deemed necessary.

Fifth. That the question of financing of the several departments of the church work and of determining whether or not their financial interests shall be under the direct supervision of a bishop, be referred to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

Sixth. We recognize that the above provides for a mere beginning of a full coordination of the interests of the church and its auxiliaries, and that while concerning many of the activities of the church there would be no difference of opinion as to where they would properly function, concerning others there would be a question. The main consideration in these doubtful cases, however, would not be where they might be placed, but that they should be definitely placed somewhere. It is therefore recommended that a permanent coordinating committee, consisting of the President of the church and the heads of the six departments hereinabove provided for, be constituted to decide where legitimate activities of the church and its auxiliaries might function to the best advantage of the body as a whole, and for the determination of such other details as may arise from time to time.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Chairman.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS, for the Church.

DANIEL MACGREGOR, for the Sunday School.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE, for the Religio.

MRS. F. M. SMITH, for the Woman's Auxiliary.

At two o'clock p. m. the report was presented, followed immediately by a motion to adopt and one to refer. The latter was soon voted down, after which it was discussed and voted on by paragraphs. It took about twenty minutes, with the argument about equally divided, to adopt everything down to paragraph marked "Second," with a big majority. The attendance was excellent. In thirty minutes the nays had dwindled to less than a half dozen on the vote to adopt paragraph three. A motion to take a test vote showed 124 for adoption as a whole. Thus the memorable document becomes a part of the Religio's ideals.

Our task is to penetrate to these precious happenings, so largely made of soul-stuff, as they really occurred in this Mansoul. This indeed is the task of the Psychology of Christianity now, to gird itself to a work not unlike that of late so often and so brilliantly done in other fields, but here inspired by the new hope that we may really resurrect the Jews so long buried in the gospels. Not till then shall we fully realize how vain and fatuous are the current theories of all such scholars as now teach that no such man ever lived, but that his personality was a deliberate invention of the earliest founders of the church; or that Jesus' person was only a new version of a mythic hero of ancient Babylon; or that he was a wretched degenerate, or again, a commonplace man about whom, for reasons which lay outside himself, a vast body of legendary lore has been gathered. To the newer, more positive view, on the other hand, Jesus was a wondrous flesh-and-blood man who had the deepest and truest insight into the fundamental problems of life and mind, who solved the greatest of all questions by finding the true relation of identity between man and God, and who achieved by transcendent genius and incredible spiritual labor in the highest field and with devotion unto death a reconstruction of religious faith and practice so significant that it made the chief epoch in history, morals, and society, and all this by starting his followers toward the same insight he had achieved.—G. Stanley Hall, Jesus, the Christ, in the Light of Psychology.

"PAINT UP" SLOGAN OBSERVED

Everywhere in Independence one smells fresh paint and varnish and occasionally one carries some of it away. The outside woodwork on the new brick church office building is getting a coat of bright red and yellow which adds much to its distinctiveness. The library building, a small dwelling house just east of the church, is getting smeared, while you'll need to be careful not to stick fast to new varnish on the woodwork and chairs. We all appreciate the spick-and-span appearance of everything.

GOOD RESPONSE TO CONTRACT OFFER

A goodly number of members are accepting the liberal offer of a selection of books in easy monthly payments while others are likely to do so, having sent for the details of the offer. Don't put it off till you get too busy and forget all about it, but get the books now. You'll spend many a happy hour with them in your possession.

E D I T O R I A L

"HE DIED CLIMBING"

We were talking with a young elder who had just finished preaching a most excellent sermon. It was a gem of thought from beginning to end. The delivery was rather slow, to be sure, and there was some hesitancy in selecting words, but when they were selected they were the right words. Any lack of flourish and noise was made up by hard and logical thinking and cogent reasoning.

We complimented the brother, but he shook his head and replied, "I am in torment every time I have to preach. I don't need to go to hell."

"Well, even then, it is not so bad," we assured him, "if you can come out of torment with a discourse like that."

He shook his head again: "What bothers me," he said, "is that it doesn't get any easier. It is just as hard now as it was when I commenced, four years ago."

"Did you ever notice," we asked him, "that when you are climbing a mountain, and have gotten up a mile, the climbing is just as hard as it was at the start? But you are up a mile."

"I never thought of that," he exclaimed. "I'll have to remember that."

Perhaps the thought may help some one else. The more progress we make, the more heights we see before us; but we are sure of the ground we have gained. The climbing may not be easier, but we are just that far on our journey. The same exertion continued, the same progress of putting one foot before the other, will carry us still higher.

This young man was fortunate, in a way. Preaching came hard to him. He knew from the start he had to work to make up for certain things in which he was lacking.

But he did not have that fatal gift of fluency which some men have from the start. To be able to talk an hour at any time on any subject may be a very dangerous gift. When the tongue runs too easily, without much thought, there is a temptation to shirk thought and run to talk. Soon there is the spectacle of words struggling for ideas, which is so much more painful than the spectacle of ideas struggling for words. No fluency can long hide the poverty that results from parsimonious investments in preparation, prayer, study, thought.

This young man is climbing. He finds it hard work. But he is making sure and permanent progress. He will eventually outstrip those who rely too serenely upon brilliant gifts of expression, or who esteem sound and flourish as the chief ingredients of a sermon.

The simile used reminded us of a story related in a Lamoni prayer service by a minister of another denomination. It seems that somewhere in the West, in the Big Horn Valley region, if we remember correctly, he came upon a pile of rocks far up on a mountain side. The rocks were a monument. Upon them was this inscription: "He died climbing."

It was learned that a pioneer in years gone by had climbed to this height, to which no white man had previously attained, and had died there. Those who found him later buried him, and marked his tomb with those words: "He died climbing."

There is a text for a very inspiring little homily, if anyone wishes to use it. It is public property now. The man who dies climbing ought to have a good start in the next world. He is on the up grade. He has responded to the limit to the divine invitation: "Come up higher." It must be better to die on the up grade than on the down grade.

The only way to die climbing is to climb while we live. It may not get easier as we go, but we are sure of the progress made. It is a matter of keeping within our powers, and increasing our powers by exercise.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

OUR REAL PRAYERS

Most of us are familiar with Montgomery's definition:

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed—
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.

What is our sincere desire? To the host now assembling at conference, what is the most secret, deep and earnest desire of each heart? And of those who remain at home, what is that which is offered on high from every heart, hour by hour, as the great craving of the soul?

Is it for money and what money represents? for wealth? If so it may not necessarily be evil. There have been men who have started out in poverty, and by honest endeavor and effort, have built up a competency to care for their own family—an aged mother, brothers and sisters, wife and children; and who have also had an open hand ready for the missionaries and for those in need, and have liberally given or loaned without hope of return, to help others.

It seems, to this one purpose they had labored, and had used it for righteous ends and supported the work. When we look deeper, the desire was not primarily for money or for wealth, but for the means and power of doing good. This being the case, the soul's integrity and honesty is primarily far, far above the desire for wealth.

Such a man despises taking advantage of anyone or dealing unfairly. If a contract is made and he finds that circumstances afterwards intervene which make it unfair, he does not rejoice in having "put something over," but at once agrees to make it right, and makes the sale a just one. It is not to him solely or principally a matter of gain or of taking advantage of some one.

Unfortunately, we are warned that there are those whose first aim is money and what money represents, for it is plainly written that the time is coming when he who labors for money in Zion shall perish.

We are commanded again and again to pray without ceasing; to teach our children to pray; to seek ever the face of our heavenly Father; to seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness. If we are doing this last, then our prayer in the broadest, fullest sense of the term, is right.

Again of those gathering to conference, what is our purpose? A social visit? Or to seek knowledge and information which will better fit us for the year's work. Is it to be heard or is it to help? Is it for the sake of curiosity, to see and meet certain ones? If so, we may be seriously disappointed, for it is not given to the physical eye to see the man of God. To but three was it given to see the Master transfigured on the mount and see him as he is. The hosts meeting him when he walked the earth, saw only the son of Joseph the Carpenter.

Is it to see and greet these men on whom is laid the great responsibility of leading the church of God? If so, we should remember that the responsibility is ours to judge rightly. We have a responsibility as well as they, to consider carefully, prayerfully, and earnestly, every matter presented. To assist them with our earnest prayers, that they may indeed have the direction of the Spirit of God in all of their deliberations—to be upheld, not only during the conference, but during the year, by our faith and prayers and by the blessings of our heavenly Father. Yet, we have also, the responsibility of our material assistance, by our efforts to support the work intrusted to all of us, each man earnestly doing his share.

As we kneel for prayer within our little circle, or in the prayer services at the church, for what shall we pray? Shall it be a persistent effort that the Lord call certain men to certain work, or that he designate men for certain positions? That he give us what we consider a revelation to the church? As we look back over the history of the church, from the age of the "patriarchs" down, we note where persistent prayer has sometimes brought a reply, sent through a demand for a time, which has proven injurious. Surely our heavenly Father knows, not only who is best and what is best, but also when it is best.

We want the men whom he has chosen, designated and ordained when he calls. We want in the quorum sessions, the Spirit of God to direct in appointing to every man, his several duties, that those who are sent forth to distant lands, or distant parts of the country, may go singing in a clear voice, "I'll go where you want me to go; dear Lord."

We want the inspiration of our heavenly Father with these quorums, in outlining the work before the conference, not only in general ideas, but in the wording as well.

Truly to make progress in the carrying out of his law, we want divine inspiration and direction in our conference meetings, that we shall be veritably workers together with God; that we may come better to understand his will, and that in the assembly we may carry it out by our vote, deliberation and consideration, that truth and right may prevail. We want to recognize that he who points out defects is as much the friend of truth as he who moves the original motion.

We need the outpouring of the Spirit of God in our prayer services; we need his divine direction in lectures to the priesthood, auxiliary work, and in the sermons of the conference; that those who speak and those who hear may be edified together.

We want to be prepared in mind and body to accept the direction of the Spirit of God; to be willing to hear it, to intelligently consider it, and consistently uphold it. For this end let us pray, "Thy will be done."
S. A. B.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING

In this issue we are at last able to print the Christmas offering Roll of Honor. As explained by Brother Smith, it has been delayed because of defective items, and even now we note the absence of the names of several large schools which we naturally would expect to find there. In fact, we are reasonably certain that at least one or two large schools, are missing from the list of twenty-five. The reason is plainly set forth—a failure to report.

The Bishop's books were officially closed on the 16th of February for the Blue Stepping Stones, so all that is received after that date will probably be published in 1919. In due course we shall no doubt receive the Blue Stepping Stones for 1918, setting forth the items of the large amount actually received of nearly $75,000. Both the Sunday school and the church are indeed to be congratulated upon this result, representing as it does so much of sacrifice.

We should note especially the liberality noted by Brother Smith of a few small schools, and the large number of schools that have made good and have given an average of two dollars per member or more.

But you will notice that the first twenty-five of these large schools gave less than one-fifth of the amount.

Again do you realize that less than half the total collection is represented by those here listed, as giving two dollars apiece or more. We emphasize this to show that the result of our efforts is not alone that of a few who have been able to give large amounts, but it has been the result of a united effort by all of us.

The "widow's mite" and the little one's mite, has helped as much to the general result as has that of those who are well-to-do. Surely those, who by much sacrifice have helped to swell the results, will find a greater record than we have here—a greater record than the Blue Stepping Stones—recorded on high, for service well done.

We recognize that there are many small schools too poor to do what they would like to do. We recognize that in some instances the children have done their part, while the older adult classes have failed, or have done so until near the conclusion of the year. We recognize that many have given of their best under the circumstances and are deserving of credit. So we present the results as being the accomplishment of all of us. Surely it is a big enough one for each and all of us to rejoice over.

Those who have done well should rejoice and feel grateful that others equally able have also helped to swell the great amount. Those who have done as well as they could should be grateful that others, better able, have been equally willing, and so we all of us have accomplished this great work.

Now it remains for us to go on. We made a late start in 1917. The year 1918 is still before us. We are confronted by a period of trial and devotion. Having done so well, we know that we feel that we can do better this year, to help the cause of truth.

So let us press on to our best for the coming year, leaving those things which are behind us—a work well done, and building on this fact press on to yet greater accomplishment. S. A. B.

"Don't fool yourself into mistaking activity for efficiency. Most of the time it isn't."

The true way to be deceived is to think oneself more knowing than others.—La Rochefoucauld.

IN THE "EVENING NEWS"

The Lynn Evening News and the Lynn Telegram of March 9, 1918, give an account, beginning on the first page, of an effort by the Utah Mormons to secure permission to teach on the streets of that city. The matter is featured in both papers and discussed at some length.

After the representatives of the Utah church had been heard from, Elder O. R. Miller took the lead in opposing. Other ministers of the town also objected, but the main opposition evidently was taken by Elder Miller.

Though they had denied that they believed or practiced polygamy he brought out the latter point of the record in the case of Reed Smoot, and presented matters in such a way that they attempted defense of the doctrine of polygamy before the committee of the city council.

Frederick W. Blanchard also appeared and spoke on behalf of the church. He is a priest of the Reorganized Church, who has resided in Lynn for many years and is well known to the citizens and city government. He stated that certain of the Utah ministers had visited his home and inside of twenty minutes they were attempting to convince him of the justice of polygamy.

Elder Miller's speech is printed practically in full in the Evening News. The differences between the two churches were clearly emphasized, and that this is the true church, or the one founded by Joseph Smith. He quoted from the decisions of Judge Sherman, and also from the decisions of Judge Phillips, and from the speech of Senator Burrows, with telling effect. Especially did he emphasize the great opposition of the Reorganized Church to this heretical and damaging doctrine. The matter seems to have been fairly presented before the committee of the council and through the papers, especially the Evening News, to the citizens of Lynn, so that there is no longer need for confusion.

This is not the first time that representatives of our church have appeared before the council in Lynn in a like connection, as Frederick W. Blanchard made a like effort a few years ago, pointing out the difference between the two organizations. S. A. B.

REPORTING THE FINANCES

A letter has come to us which we answered in the usual manner, but the complaints it contained are set forth as the views of "a few thousand others in the church." so we take a little space to reach the "others" as well.

Because the Conference Minutes with the Bishop's summarized report was not issued as a supplement to the HERALD this year, but printed and sold at thirty cents to others than conference appointees and elders, it is set forth as a hardship.

It simply was not thought advisable to continue sending these out at great expense as a supplement to the HERALD since they have grown to such proportions, but the price was set very low so that those really caring for them could secure all the copies desired.

Then there is a protest that the complete report of the bishopric has not been sent out. Yet it was a part of the HERALD of October 31, 1917, occupying sixty-six extra pages in that issue.

And "no Blue Stepping Stones any more." This is a misapprehension as well, for the detailed report of the Christmas offering for 1917 will appear just as soon as the figures and items can be compiled and submitted to the printers. Neither is the suggestion that it is wrong to eliminate the names of the children well founded, for all that has been said is to urge in the interests of economy that the schools voluntarily reduce the space required. Many had already done this before a word was printed, while those who desire to do so are given the full privilege of having printed each name and the amount given.

BUY LIBERTY LOAN BONDS

In last week's issue there appears one item to the effect that a letter sent out by the Bureau of Publicity for the Chicago District states that farmers should not borrow or go in debt for the sake of buying Liberty Bonds. A later letter received this week attempts to correct this impression and says that there is no question of inconvenience. That it is a time for all to make sacrifices and that all should support the loan to the limit of their power. This later letter urges that we borrow or do anything possible, to buy all the bonds we can.

"TE OROMETUA"

The HERALD has just received the Te Orometua for November-December, January-February, last. The November-December is a magazine number of this paper which is issued at Papeete, and is well illustrated with cuts of the life of Joseph Smith the Martyr, the house where the angel visited him, the Hill Cumorah, the characters and plate from the Book of Mormon, the three witnesses, the Kirtland and Nauvoo temples, the Temple Lot at Independence, and Emma Hale Smith. The articles are concerned with the same theme, the life of Joseph Smith, sketch of the Book of Mormon, the three witnesses, the Kirtland Temple, the Nauvoo Temple, and the Temple Lot at Independence.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

A Message to the Oriole Girls

Greeting to All the Oriole Girls: I have felt for some time a great interest in the young girls of this church and as it has been my pleasure this last year to meet more of them than usual and plan for them, I have come to see that they are a very important part of our work, and that the future of the women of the church depends largely on the way we encourage and develop these young girls, and teach them the great mission before them.

It is to the Oriole girls that I am writing to-day. You who have such wonderful opportunities for development in this organization. In my girlhood we longed for something like this, but had nothing, so we formed a little club, elected some officers, and made a few rules for our guidance, and tried to piece a quilt. We had no monitor or leader to help us plan, no points to make, no honors to win, no particular aim or purpose in organizing, and nothing definite to work for as you have at this time. What joy it would have been to have worn a uniform, and had a song all our own, but we had nothing at all to point out the service we might do for humanity, for the church and for God.

Some of my greatest inspiration for my work among the women of the church has come from the Oriole girls that I have helped to organize and set to work in the Kansas City Stake. To see these girls all banded together, all preparing for service in this church, has meant much to me in my work, for the Oriole girls is the first step in the Woman's Auxiliary. Sometimes we forget this and think that the Oriole girls is an organization of itself, but this is not so as it is a department of the young women's bureau, which is one of the four bureaus of the Woman's Auxiliary. The Oriole girls have a voice and vote in all general business sessions, and I have wondered why we do not see them represented at our meetings. This year I am hoping to coordinate this department with the other bureaus in a much closer way than has been done before, by bringing to the attention of each Oriole girl through her monitor the need of cooperating with the main body and progressing from one department to another as their age and position demand.

First, we have the Oriole girls, then the next step is the home and child welfare work for the young home maker and the young mother, the relief and service for those who desire to enter the work of looking after the poor and giving relief to those in need, and then the educational bureau for all the women and girls of the church. A progressive work, indeed, for all our girls and women is before us in these four bureaus, and if we can cooperate and coordinate them as should be done, we will have done much toward bringing about better conditions.

There is something about the Oriole uniform, with its black and orange symbol, that makes us sense the great outdoor life of nature and rich living that comes with a close touch with God. It is to the Oriole girl what a soldier's uniform is to him, the emblem of service wherever it is seen. As the soldier enlists for his country, so the Oriole girl enlists in the service of the Master, a willing worker for him, and the strength and power of her decision is shown when she consents to wear the uniform of the cause. Then let us hold this badge of service high in our thought, and whenever we wear it remember what it stands for, and do nothing of which we would be ashamed. For none of us, I know, desire to drag this emblem in the dust. It should mean sweetness and purity of thought and action to each of us. And so, to-day, I greet each one of our Oriole girls as a coworker—all who wear the Oriole symbol, and have entered our organization in their youth; and pledge you my heartiest support, and my best wishes for your success. May you each find your particular place in the marching army of the Lord, and be prepared in your heart to render him a great service.

This is my prayer for you,

MRS. LULA M. SANDY.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

A Matin Song

We feel a degree of satisfaction when we are reminded, as we are at times, of the alertness which is characterizing some of our workers. In these days of "slumber," according to the parable, it is good to know there are some who are stirring, and patiently working to get their lamps in order. If the "oil" is "service" as some might interpret, surely some lamps will be overflowing! But can we "borrow"? We fear not; we fear the service must come from within, and cannot be poured into our vessels from without.

We have been urging the men who are qualified to lead the boys, to "get busy" in that direction; to cease pining for lands afar to conquer, or peoples afar to convert, and to plow, harrow, plant, and tend the rich fields found right at home in our own branches—the rich soil of youth! Too long has it lain neglected, for the enemy to sow his seeds of destruction upon! Too long have we hesitated to step from our traditions, meet our youth upon the grounds of their own interests, and save them, from that vantage point! We have drawn up a schedule (conceived in our own tastes and desires), taking their point of view into the question not at all. We have provided prayer meetings for them—because we liked them; we have plenty of preaching—for to us it is verily the bread of life; we have written lessons in Religio and Sunday school—two brief hours each week—have tried to arouse thereby a desire for spiritual things, that is, we have if—and here's the rub!—we were ourselves sufficiently interested to do anything more than coldly ask the tabulated questions in the Quarterly, and be satisfied with mechanical replies! Yes, and parents have rested easily in the thought that the Sunday school and the Religio were doing all that was necessary, and the teachers there, vice versa! But, where have we, as a church, as branches, as pastors and parents, tried to meet the young people upon their plane of thought and interests—with their ideas of life and duty, and attempt to gently sway and mold these into higher ones—truer to the principles of the eternal? In other words, to guide them through this transitory period of upheaval, into a right perspective of things worth while?

Glad we are that for the girls of the church, this Oriole movement has been conceived by young women, who retain the wonderful spirit of that time of gladness, so that they have been able to enter heartily into the things which interest girls. The fact has been demonstrated here, too, however, that the success of any attempt to hold the young people must depend upon the sympathy and consecration of the leader. Thus we have been pleased to know that the leaders of the Oriole work have tried to impart of their devotion to the monitors of local circles, and to keep before them the ideals to which we should all labor. We asked permission to publish some of these letters, feeling sure that all who read will be touched by the fine spirit they disclose, and perhaps, prompted to a still closer touch with our young people. A. A.

Girls, What Do We Owe to Our Enlisted Men?

The morning paper of several weeks ago contained a little paragraph which read as follows:

"WHEN HE GETS READY

"A certain movie actor says, 'I will serve my country after I have completed a five-year contract with a certain film company.'"

This may be typical of the attitude of many Americans to-day, but we are happy to say that we do not believe it represents the majority of our American men and women. Most of us, men and women, boys and girls, are ready to do our bit for our country now.

The passing of our men and boys from our communities, from our very homes, to the training camps of America, and the landing of our troops on foreign soil has suggested the thought that we are at war. The statement of the French officer, after inspecting the American troops in France, that they would be ready in a very short time to go to the front, emphasizes the fact that we are at war. Before we realize it, news of our boys fighting and of our wounded being sent back home will reach us. These facts must impress that there is something that we can do in connection with the present crisis.

A reunion speaker told us the other day that President Smith made the following comment in a talk to the Lamoni people, "Some of our boys may never return, some may die as the result of a German bullet being fired, some may be killed by torpedoes, some may die from the effects of typhus fever, but what does it matter if he is prepared to die?" There is not one of our boys, son of a praying father or mother, who has gone to the training camp, but he has had a serious thought and a spark of divine intent of purpose. Is it not possible for us to help him keep his purpose shining and undimmed, and his eyes steadily on the way of salvation? We considered the church associations, the daily prayer, the weekly meetings essential to the spiritual welfare of our boys when they were at home. Can we not supply this atmosphere to a certain extent while they are away from home?

The Orioles of one community may make a complete directory of all the men and boys who have enlisted from their home town. Then arrange that letters be sent regularly, probably once a week, the letters to be addressed to one boy one week, and to another boy the next week, and so on in their turn. These letters should be strictly letters from the circle and not personal. Each girl may make her contribution or the letter may be assigned to two girls each week. By the means of the Oriole correspondence the boys can be kept in touch with the home people and their spiritual experiences, as well as their everyday happenings. News from the camps and from the boys at the front, and the articles written from time to time by the newspaper correspondents as they appear in the papers, will furnish many a point of contact. Occasionally acceptable gifts may be made or bought and sent to the boys.

The Red Cross furnishes abundant opportunity to serve our soldiers' needs. The personal or individual work is difficult to carry on, in connection with such a large organization as our Army, and the Red Cross is a safe and efficient medium through which to work.

The following was printed in the paper the other day: "Keeping fit is doing your bit." There is a great need for every girl to keep herself fit for the work that may be required of her when our soldiers return from the front. We must prepare and equip ourselves to take our places intelligently and successfully as women, in the readjustment of affairs in the home and community after the war.

We should get into action at once and not wait for the completion of any contract, as did the movie actor, through which we cannot serve our country.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Dear Coworkers: We know you have been wondering why the promised roll of honor has not been published long before this. You are entitled to know, hence the following information.

Many of our good workers were somewhat careless in filling out the reports we asked for, some not giving us full information that would enable us to figure the averages of their Sunday school for the year. There were so many of these that we did not wish to take the time and spend the money that would be required to write to each one individually, so we took the matter up with the Bishop's office and requested them to fill in the necessary information. They did this on all reports they could, but even then we are forced to send in what we believe to be a very incomplete list, for it seems that these same schools failed in many instances to furnish this information to the bishop's office when sending in their offering reports. To figure the pro rata for the school it was absolutely necessary that we have the total enrollment, and the total offering, but some failed to furnish either one or the other of these two items. If your school is not represented on the following list you will know that it is because you have either failed to send in a report to the writer, that it was lost in transit, or that some information was left out of the report.

In any cases as mentioned above we shall be very glad indeed to have your correct report and our attention called to any error that may exist, so that proper corrections may be made and credit given in a later issue.

You understand of course that in this roll of honor only those schools that sent in an offering of $2 per member, of their total enrollment, or over will be found listed.

We feel that the schools have responded wonderfully for the first year and from the many, many excellent and enthusiastic letters that we received we know that God was helping and assisting all those who worked faithfully and diligently. Do you realize that from $12,997.02 in 1916 we made a jump to approximately $75,000 in 1917? We feel that this is indeed a splendid response and we are indeed grateful to all of you for your excellent and faithful support. The total that the Presiding Bishopric is reporting to the conference is $74,676.18.

There were many, oh, so many, schools that just missed the $2 mark, and we were tempted to list them also, but when we checked over the reports we found that it was hard indeed to find a dividing point, so we have stayed within the limit set some months ago—$2 per member and over—except in the case mentioned in the report where we have shown Sunday schools of England and Australia—those that reported to us—because of the greater buying power of the dollar in these countries.

You will find in checking over the following list that the West Side Sunday School of Vinalhaven, Maine, has the highest pro rata, which is $13.66 and over per member. Don't you think this is fine? Second in the list comes Huntsville, Missouri, a school only organized October 1, 1917, and with only three months to work they raised a pro rata of $11. My, what a good thing for Vinalhaven that this school was not organized sooner, for at the rate they worked they would surely have taken the lead. Then comes Harlan, Iowa, with a pro rata of $9.09 and Carson, Iowa, with $8.49, but, say, we just cannot consume the space necessary to tell you about all of them over again, so we will leave you to run through the list and see for yourself just what our schools did.

We wish that we could have the space to print the many letters that we have received telling us of the wonderful experiences of the schools in working for this offering. We just know it would do your hearts good if you could but read them and, too, it would help you in your work this year, but liberal as the HERALD has been with us, in granting us space for our work this year, we are fearful that should we ask for more space that they would want us examined to find out whether we were in our right mind.

We take off our hats to Vinalhaven—West Side—this year, and we congratulate them because of their faithful efforts; and we herewith ask if this good school will not send us a letter telling us just how they raised their offering; and give us some suggestions as to the good spirit that surely must have been manifest because of their efforts. They sent the writer one very fine letter telling us some good things, but we believe it only fair that they have the privilege of writing another letter with the understanding that it will be published—how about this Vinalhaven? Yes, and we would like to hear from Huntsville, Harlan, and Carson, too, and all other schools who experienced success under certain plans. What proved successful for you will very likely help others, so let us all work together, help each other, and we will very easily reach the $100,000 mark this year, for this is our aim and we do not want to fall short.

We also publish herewith a list of the twenty-five schools sending in the greatest total amount. (Remember, if your school is not listed it is because we have not received your report.)

Words cannot express the deep appreciation we feel because of the very excellent support you have given us, the many, many good letters, and praying that God's Spirit may attend your efforts throughout this year, and that you will work even harder than you ever worked before, we are,

Most sincerely yours,

A. W. SMITH, Second Assistant Superintendent.

P. S. Continue to address all mail regarding the 1917 offering to A. W. Smith, Federal Reserve Bank Building, Saint Louis, Missouri.

What schools are going to be in this set next year—$300 and over?

We all started late in 1917—but there is no excuse for a late start this year and we hope July 1 will find many schools with as much as they had all during 1917. Let us work with a will, and "Go over the top" this year, and never allow ourselves to be driven into the trenches (debt) again.

A STATISTICAL LIST

Fractions are disregarded in the pro rata amounts. In some instances it is a fraction more, and in others it is a fraction of a cent less.

PREACHERS ASKED TO HELP IN FOOD CAMPAIGN

Every minister, priest, and rabbi in the United States is asked to join in the campaign to insure, this year, record-breaking crops of every farm product. We were pleased recently to hear at every Sunday service in the Saints' church at Lamoni, a speech from one of the local Four-Minute Men, urging cooperation on the community garden project and the enrollments in the working reserve. We are confident that there is as good a response to the need of the hour all over the church, and urge that it be continued. It is a worthy subject and should be emphasized on every proper occasion.

REPORTS TO THE RELIGIO CONVENTION

PRESIDENT

To the General Convention, 1918; Greeting: Another year has flown with all of its opportunities, and its close brings to us the necessity of a careful survey of the accomplishments. We are glad to be able to advise that, from the reports received in my office, the indications are that we have made considerable advancement, both as to numbers, which may be confirmed from the report of the General Secretary, and also as to the work which has been done and which we stand ready to follow up.

(1) We had in mind at the beginning of the year the definite idea that our efforts should be chiefly with and for the young people, and that the greatest service our society could perform for the church in this field would be in the line of keeping our young people in touch with the church and its aims and in training them for service. These ends we concluded could be best accomplished by making the activities of the society more interesting to the young, and then by enthusing the workers with the importance of their efforts and the great things which could be achieved. We tried, through the means of circular letters to the district presidents, and local presidents where we have no organized districts, and also by individual or personal correspondence, to impress the thought that each officer was responsible for the success of the part of the work assigned to that department, and advocated a thorough understanding of this responsibility through the means of frequent executive meetings and by correspondence with the general officer in charge of that department. Some success has, we are quite sure, followed these efforts, and more will follow the future building on this foundation. The thought has also been advanced and impressed by repetition that we ought, in selecting officers, to choose, so far as possible, those who are temperamentally in sympathy with the work which they would be expected to look after.

FIELD WORKERS

(2) Last year we were of the impression that many who had talent for this work, and who would be willing to assist, were not doing themselves justice because they did not fully understand how to proceed, or perhaps just what was expected of them. This led to the suggestion for a general field worker, which was approved, subject to the concurrence of the Joint Council of the church. Being delegated by the executive committee to confer with the Joint Council, we received from them the suggestion that in their opinion more would be accomplished by the appointment of numerous field workers in various districts, to devote such of their time as was possible to the Religio work. To this end the members of the Quorum of the Twelve furnished me with the names of some forty-three persons in the fields where they had labored the previous year. We wrote to each of these people and received replies from a majority of them, although many of them advised they would not be able to do any considerable amount for the Religio. However, we replied to each one, and asked them to render all of the aid they could, and furnished them with a suggestion in the way of an outline for work. Request for reports from these workers resulted in our receiving replies from somewhat less than half of them and indicated, that with a few exceptions, little systematic work had been accomplished, although doubtless much good was done.

PERSONAL FIELD WORK

(3) During the year it has been our good fortune to be able to visit sixteen different districts, besides our home district, at most of which we have been able to hold a meeting of the executives and workers, and to address the assembly. Most of the visits have been on Sunday, as press of daily work has prevented attendance at weekday sessions; but we have been accorded courteous treatment in the way of time during the Sunday sessions. While these short visits were not all that could be wished for, they did serve to give us a broader vision of the conditions of the work and the workers and cemented the relationship between the general and district and local officers, even though the amount of inspiration left with the workers may not have been great. It is believed that others of the general officers would be glad to make similar efforts to a greater degree if the matter of transportation expenses did not prevent, and it might be well if the convention sees fit to make some provision to take care of a reasonable amount of such expense from the general fund.

OFFICE WORK

(4) We have written somewhat over 800 personal letters during the year, in addition to eight circular letters to all district presidents and local presidents not in organized territory, and two general letters to all locals in the society. We have tried to get a regular quarterly report from all officers of districts and locals not in organized territory, and it is pleasing to be able to report that the regularity of these reports is much greater than last year. Practically all now respond with reasonable promptness, which greatly assists in keeping in touch with the work, and we are convinced also helps those reporting to keep closer oversight over their work. The amount of office work would have been impossible but for the assistance rendered by some of our willing Religiens in Saint Louis, in the way of stenographic help. We wish to thank these for the efforts put forth.

RECOMMENDATIONS

(6) Field Worker

Our experiences of this year have confirmed us in the opinion that we ought to have some one who could devote his whole time to the Religio work with a view to instructing, advising, and enthusing the district and local workers, traveling among the districts and locals, and by personal assistance helping the district and local officers or field workers to become more efficient. In order that this general field worker might have more prestige, it would probably be well if either the general president or the general vice president was assigned to this work. Personally, I think the vice president would be the best officer for the work, both on account of the nature of the vice president's work being more in line with the work to be done, and the further fact that it would appear advisable that the president be permanently located where he can be reached easily, and handle administrative problems to better advantage than one who is constantly traveling about could hope to do.

(7) Stewardship

Viewing a stewardship in the light of a field of activity to be assigned, and a responsibility to be assumed therefor, we are heartily in favor of our society requesting the assignment of such a field for labor by our parent body, the church, and assuming such responsibility, and wish to so recommend. As to our finances, the Bishop of the church has been acting for some time past as the custodian of our funds, though we have never made direct accounting to him for them; there would therefore be only slight change involved in this respect.

There is this feature to be given consideration, however: if we are to receive from the church a stewardship to be looked after, it would seem advisable that the executive officers of the church be given the privilege of helping us choose the officers to have charge of the operation of our stewardship, particularly if we are to adopt the suggestion of having one of these officers spend his entire time in the field, and thus incur expense to the general society. As their other duties at the time our convention is in session usually preclude their attendance at our sessions, about the only way this could be accomplished would be through the privilege of nomination. This, I am aware, has been once tried and rejected by the convention, but is again suggested if the stewardship plan is to be followed out.

(8) The Boy Movement

We are strongly inclined to the opinion that the Religio ought to assume the responsibility for this budding department of the church work, and would recommend that action with this end in view be taken in conference with the church officers, who have been giving the matter consideration.

(9) Junior Department

Frequent inquiries have been received during the year as to what action should be taken with regard to the children under twelve years of age, who attend our meetings, and for whom the junior Quarterly seems to be too advanced. We have never encouraged the attendance of small children at Religio, but frequently they come to our sessions because the older ones, in whose care they are, attend, or for other good reasons, and the question of providing them with suitable employment should be given suitable and profitable consideration.

Our accomplishments the past year have not been startling, but we feel that the prospects for the future are bright. We have a wonderful power for good within the church in our young people, and those who are or could be reached through their influence, and it is worthy of the best efforts of our most earnest workers. Let us be enthusiastic about this opportunity and make the most of it. Let us choose those to lead who have a heart interest in that particular department of the work, as well as an opportunity and a willingness to pursue it. May their efforts be whole-hearted and crowned with success.

Sincerely yours,

G. S. TROWBRIDGE.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 15, 1918.

VICE PRESIDENT

To the General Convention: 1. The work coming under the supervision of the Religio vice president has more nearly found its scope and particular outline during the past year, more so, we feel, than ever before.

2. Heretofore, so many phases of work have had their place and head under what may be properly termed social work, that to find just where the vice president's work was confined was a question.

At our last convention it was practically agreed that we extend our efforts during the year 1918 to the especial and particular work of providing and encouraging the proper recreation and pleasure for the young people of the church, leaving the other very necessary and laudable features of training to the other branches of our society work.

We have understood quite well that sentiment is entertained by some that our work might be dispensed with, and the spiritual development of our young people be sought through the church religious services.

Much as many would assert to-day we have no problem to solve with our boys and girls, we find, as to restraint and natural inclinations they are subject to the same fires of youth and all the boundless surgings of proper limitations as other young people, and we have been striving hard in our organization to guard the lives of our young people, protect them especially in building them up spiritually in the work of the church. In fact, all our efforts are along this line. We have no thought of attempting or trying to introduce anything but what must eventually conserve the spiritual interests of our young people.

During the past year we have been hindered in doing as extensive and progressive work as we should have liked. All parts of the general field may not have been as thoroughly canvassed and assisted as heretofore. But several letters have been sent out over the entire field, and practically all the supply of postage on hand used in employing ways and means of better establishing the social status of our work.

As to detail reports they have been slow coming in, to the present time in response to our request for the regular annual report, we have eight letters of reply with which we have no report from the district, it being impossible to obtain a satisfactory report. There has been submitted fifteen regular reports; six of these have no items attached. The various features of recreation are tabulated, representing approximately one hundred. This at this time does not nearly represent the work that has been done, or what we may have with the additional reports that come in. But in order to submit our report as requested, we furnish this part of our statistics with our regular statement at this time, trusting our complete data will display our work coming up to the full quota.

We feel justified in stating with the complete organization we now have in the church, the social work, is better understood, and doing greater good than at any time in the history of the work.

Respectfully submitted,

T. J. ELLIOTT.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 6, 1918.

SECRETARY

To the Convention; Greeting: My work has been mostly of a general routine character throughout the year. We note many encouraging reports from various localities, and suggestions for new activities are gladly received.

2. We have tried to keep in touch with all parts dealing in secretarial work, and have followed up with letters giving suggestions from time to time. We experienced the seemingly unovercomable difficulty getting reports from some districts. All blanks were furnished each district secretary, and after much correspondence we were fortunate in getting reports from all but 4 districts and 6 locals. In all cases except one district we used the enrollment of last year, and the one district we took their enrollment of two years ago. It is gratifying to note the increase of enrollment in the General Society, and the large decrease in some cases was where the district secretary reported the enrollment of only the locals who reported for the last quarter. This should not be the case. Where a local fails to report, the figures of the last previous report should be used.

Six districts and seven locals failed to report. These are indicated by an asterisk preceding the name.

3. Our correspondence has run high, mostly in getting in touch with those districts and locals of which we had little record. We wrote about 530 letters and received 375. Most letters received were answers to queries and necessitated further action. We sent our circular letters to all district secretaries on five occasions and to all local secretaries once.

4. We could not give as much time as we desired to Religio work on account of other duties. As stake superintendent of Sunday schools (we are in the Kansas City Stake and not Independence, as many believed from our address,) our correspondence and work has run almost as high as that of the Religio.

5. Southern Nebraska, Southeastern Illinois, Southwestern Oregon, and Eastern Oklahoma districts were disorganized during the year. A new district was organized in Northwestern Ohio. The Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, District was divided into the Pittsburgh and Wheeling, West Virginia, districts. The Far West Stake was reorganized to take in the locals formerly included in the Nodaway, Missouri, District—we had no district organization in Nodaway.

6. In the new organization of Northwestern Ohio we commend the work of Brother S. C. Bethel, district president, who personally organized two new locals in addition to the one at Toledo, under commission from the general officers, so that a district could be organized. Brother Anthony R. Hewitt, district president of Chatham, Ontario, who retired in January, also is to be commended for the faithful service he performed. We wish that space might permit us to mention the many instances of good work that have come under our observation in the past few months.

7. Charters have been issued to 40 new locals this year, representing an enrollment of 762.

The annual statistical report blank for reporting districts to the general secretary has been considerably revised this year; the standard of excellence being included on the one blank with the enrollment, number of locals, etc. These were not printed in time for this year's use; however, we mimeographed enough for reports this time so as to leave time for more revision should reports this year make same advisable. We have already noticed needed changes. The blank for reporting locals to district secretaries is also to be revised as soon as the present supply is exhausted. We hope to get the Religio blanks in line with the new standardized movement of the church and Sunday School Association. In this connection we solicit suggestions and criticisms from all.

8. We understand some districts or parties are ordering the Religio blank No. F131 from the Herald Office. We are at a loss to understand the reason, as all these blanks are furnished to all districts at the proper time by the general secretary free of cost. We would suggest these orders or requests be taken up with the general secretary's office instead of the Herald Office.

9. We are endeavoring to work up a column of "local happenings" in the Religio's Arena of the Autumn Leaves. We asked each local and district organization to appoint a correspondent, items of general interest to be reported to the editor of the Arena weekly. Many locals and district secretaries have replied, and correspondents have been appointed or elected in several places, and we are hopeful that interest may be worked up in this line.

10. We wish to call the attention of this convention to the exceedingly large difference in the enrollment of the home department in the reports to the secretary and those reported to the superintendent of that department. It is indeed unfortunate that such should be the case; methods of recording so loosely carried out. We earnestly and sincerely ask the district secretaries and home department superintendents to work with more cooperation with each other, so that some time before the end of time we can at least once report these items correctly.

We will no doubt have an additional statistical report to present to the convention.

JAMES W. STOBAUGH, Secretary.

March 11, 1918.

GENERAL TREASURER

To the General Religio Convention; Greetings: 1. The financial status of the society shows that during the past year our total receipts, with balance on hand, $7,515.72 Against this we have expenditures to the total of $2,623.02, leaving a balance on hand of $4,892.70. This is a very favorable increase over previous year.

2. During the past year this department has undertaken to introduce a new financial plan for the locals and districts, and the results so far obtained have been very favorable. We are also developing the employment feature of our work and are suggesting plans for the relief committee. In all of the above divisions we expect to see great progress made and results shown.

3. Our system of accounts is not as complete and thorough as it should be, and we recommend that an appropriation of $10 be made to purchase additional books and cover cost of establishing a more thorough system.

4. We further recommend that all balances held at the end of the conference year be submitted along with the report.

ROBERT A. LLOYD.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 16, 1918.

HOME DEPARTMENT SUPERINTENDENT

To the General Convention; Greeting: 1. Pursuant to the custom laid down by previous department heads I herewith submit my report of labor performed as superintendent of your general home department for the past term, and a summary of conditions as at present existing in this branch of endeavor.

2. We started out with the aim of keeping in close touch with each and every district organized and otherwise. In the larger number of them we have succeeded in this with the hearty cooperation of many sacrificing and earnest district superintendents. In districts unorganized we have appointed several workers.

CIRCULAR LETTERS

3. Have averaged two circular letters each month to district superintendents. These letters have pertained to particular features of the work which warranted emphasis; such as need of reporting, methods of securing members, getting and handling finances, securing helpers, looking after the member, training the worker, etc. They were written with the intent of stating important facts briefly so that district workers would have material to pass on to the local officers, thus aiding them in pushing the work forward. District religio presidents and all the missionaries have also been circularized regarding the movement, to enlighten them regarding the desires and needs of the home department.

SPECIAL FORMS

4. Mimeograph form letters have been at the disposal of the district and local officers. Those taking advantage of them have found that they have lessened their work and increased the possibility of branching out into new avenues of endeavor.

REPORTS

5. Reports have come in fairly promptly and from month to month with signs of improvement. Yet there are still dozens of workers who need to be better schooled as to the big advantage to themselves of making a report. To some districts it has been necessary to send as many as fifteen and more letters and cards before securing a report or a reply. In other cases it became necessary that we recommend to the Religio president the removal of the home department superintendent for failure to perform the office work. In the cases where this was necessary we have secured hearty cooperation on the part of the district officers and members. There are perhaps some other cases where this method should have been followed, but we have waited in hopes of better things.

PERSONAL CORRESPONDENCE

6. This to the various helpers has necessarily been heavy, which is one of the drawbacks to larger efficient work. The necessity of doing all this, personally attending to so many detail matters, takes time that perhaps should be used to working out plans and ways of and for greater development. Have replied to practically every report with a personal letter, offering suggestions, etc. Correspondence has been answered as promptly as possible under business conditions.

TRAINING WORKERS

7. This is one of the shots we have been trying hard to send across the firing line. The necessity of seeking out from the membership timber which shows possibility, then enlisting and training them for the Home Department, thus building up a large corps of live aggressive agents who know the business. The work of ingathering of a large membership would then take care of itself. We have none too many workers even at the present time to properly look after those we have enrolled.

PRESENT CONDITION

8. As per statistics attached the work is growing. There is a great discrepancy between general secretary Stobaugh's report and mine, due I presume to the failure of the different district secretaries and home department superintendents to confer with each other.

9. The increase in membership in this department over last year of 172, while fair, is not near what it should have been. It is to be hoped that with an increase of trained helpers each year will see at least a doubling of the enrollment till it takes on a size somewhere in proportion to the church membership. The possibilities are great, the interest being taken in the endeavor is on the increase and promises good.

NEEDS

10. Above all things are workers—not these who are willing to take office for the sake of holding it that they may secure the honor; but consecrated helpers who will take the positions, desiring to do good, and to do all they can to promote the home department. This class of workers, we are happy to say, is on the increase. Not alone are we in need of workers, but they should be drilled and prepared for the duties they will have to perform.

ERRORS

11. A big mistake in my estimation in the plan of organization of the home department is that it follows the "Do for" idea. That is, one, two, or a dozen workers are doing everything for the membership who sit by and let them. A remedy would be to make the home department members more responsible for the maintenance and work of the endeavor. Turn them into a crowd of "Do for self and others," instead of as at present a flock of "Done forers." There are of course a number of localities and districts where I believe this would not at present be possible. Hence I present the thought and not a recommendation. Have suggested this to some district superintendents.

FINANCIAL SUPPORT

12. Another error which many district and local societies are making. Not so many of our people who accept positions and are workers have a large abundance of surplus funds. Yet according to the system in most of the Religio societies the home department superintendent is bearing the cost of the maintenance of their department, the constitution to the contrary, which states that the district and local should bear the expenses incidental to starting and maintaining this home department. Our people fail to get the thought that when a man or woman is devoting time and thought to carrying on and increasing any particular branch of church work, they should at least pay the freight of the actual expenses, and not ask it all of the sacrificing worker.

COOPERATION WITH SUNDAY SCHOOL HOME DEPARTMENT

13. Earnest endeavor has been made along this line in so far as possible. Printed matter, reports, etc., are now interchangeable. Consultations have been had between Brother F. F. Wipper and myself on matters of interest to both societies.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT AND WORK

14. The extension work took on a new aspect at the 1917 convention and became a joint affair and department with the Sunday school. Some difficulty was experienced during the year in securing a superintendent who could put time and attention to the work. Sister J. A. Davis was appointed and held the place for some time, but other matters compelled her resignation. Sister Burwell, of Louisville, Kentucky, was then appointed. She has been doing fine work, but has had insufficient time to show any special results.

15. Concerning the assistance or aid this movement has been during the past year to assist or increase the membership of the home department, I cannot say that I have seen any direct or indirect results from it. Whether it is aiding in bringing the Sunday school and Religio closer together

I question, only on the point of getting the various superintendents together to talk over the appointment of an extension superintendent and from that leading in some few cases to other things. Perhaps, however, sufficient time has not yet been given for a fair try out of this movement.

GENERAL THOUGHT

16. The Religio is intended for the youth of the church, to educate, to entertain, prepare them for life and church service. There are not so many of the real youth in the home department. I have had the following question put before me. Should the Religio itself or by the home department seek to enlist every member of the church in its ranks? Is this not more particularly the privilege of the Sunday school? A thought or two by the way:

Where shall the line for youth be drawn? Is the Religio study unnecessary or harmful to any church member? Would the time and few pennies devoted to this endeavor be used in some other department with as great a harvest? Is not the home department increasing the local membership by the new locals and members brought into locals by it? Does it not provide a way to start Religio work in places where the number is too small for a local, and thus build the foundation?

FINIS

17. Attached hereto you will find financial and statistical reports of the department. Appreciating the great and hearty support received from various general officers, missionaries, etc., and trusting that this convention may be one of the most profitable in the Religio's history, I remain,

At your service,

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

LECTURE BOARD

To General Convention: By request of Brother George N. Briggs, president of the lecture board, we have arranged the following report:

1. Not having been appointed on the lecture board until sometime during August, 1917, this report will cover only work done during period dating from that time. Sister Ida Etzenhouser, prior to this time (August), had been corresponding with various ones relative to the lecture work and arranged for most of the lecturers. All her correspondence was turned over to us to assist us in our work.

2. Immediately after being appointed as manager of the lecture board, I was assigned the special work of arranging for and routing of lectures. Brother Trowbridge, President of the General Religio, and myself, went over all the correspondence on hand and arranged list of twenty-four lecturers, titles of subjects they would handle, time and territory. I then made stencils for the mimeograph, and run off sufficient copies to mail to all the presidents of the district Religio societies, and also mailed copies to all district Sunday school superintendents—at least all that we had names and addresses of.

3. In response to these lists and the general letter which accompanied them, we received a great many inquiries asking for further information, also many requests for lectures. It was decided that it would be best to wait for requests and make only such appointments as we received requests for. (Here is one mistake that we made and we have offered suggestions that we believe will correct this error, see paragraph A under "recommendations.") Some of these requests came from far away points where it would be impracticable to send lecturer, unless other lectures could be arranged for along the route lecturer would travel. In many instances we endeavored to arrange for additional lectures in certain districts so as to make such trips possible. We were successful in some instances.

4. We were able to supply quite a number of lectures, as will be seen from the statement following, but could have done much better had we been more thoroughly organized. For a new movement, and because of difficulties encountered which can be eliminated, we feel that the interest was good and that a great deal of benefit was derived from the lectures delivered. As we urged the various districts to utilize the talent they had in the district for lecture purposes, much was done along this line that will not appear in this report. The following brief recapitulation of lectures delivered will serve to show only the work actually done under our direction.

5. Brother S. A. Burgess delivered one lecture at Bevier, Missouri, on January 1, 1918, while en route from Saint Louis to Lamoni.

6. Sister S. A. Burgess also delivered lecture at Bevier, Missouri, on January 1, 1918.

7. Brother Albert Carmichael delivered lectures at Bevier, Missouri, and Mount Washington, Missouri, during December.

8. Sister Charlotte Dryden is booked to deliver some eight lectures in the Des Moines District this present month (March).

9. Brother E. D. Moore, in October, delivered a number of lectures in the Nauvoo and Eastern Iowa districts, and in addition gave much encouragement and help in the conventions, which were being held while he was present. Brother Moore also gave a lecture at Hiteman, Iowa, March 17.

10. In December Brother E. D. Moore gave some seven or eight lectures in the Des Moines District.

11. During the past few months Brother Walter J. Swain, delivered lectures in all but one of the branches in Sydney and New South Wales District.

12. In the Far West Stake, during November, Brother Heman C. Smith delivered some five or six lectures; and during January Brother Smith delivered some eight lectures in the Des Moines District.

13. Two lectures have been delivered by Arthur W. Smith in the Saint Louis local, during the month of March.

14. Brother Walter W. Smith has delivered one lecture in the Kansas City Stake.

15. At Burlington, Iowa, one lecture was delivered by Brother Orman Salisbury, this was during the month of February, 1918.

16. Brother and Sister Pitt are booked for lectures at Webb City, Missouri, this month (March).

17. We have had a number of calls for Brother and Sister Pitt from sections along the Mississippi Valley, but as they departed during the summer for Colorado Springs Branch where they have been laboring up until the present time it was not possible to arrange for these dates.

18. We had calls for Brother Rushton in the Des Moines District, also in the Southern California and Southern Oregon districts, but Brother Rushton advised that it would be impossible for him to accept lecture dates for the present.

19. Some fifteen calls came for Arthur W. Smith, but it was not possible for him to leave the Saint Louis District owing to the work he had on hand. These calls came from as far south as Florida, west as far as Colorado, North Dakota and Minnesota in the north, and it would have taken considerable time to have filled these requests.

20. Quite a number of requests came from points where it would be too expensive to send a lecturer, unless this expense could be divided among a number of locals or districts. Many of the requests stated that they would leave the time and lecturer to be appointed by us, but that they would not want them if the entire expense could not be prorated between several other locals, including themselves. Though we tried hard to accommodate these locals we found it rather difficult to get in touch with right people though we were successful in some instances.

21. From all sources where lectures have been delivered come good reports and a desire is expressed for more and greater activity along this line. It is our opinion that we have opened up a new field of labor that will be productive of excellent results, if proper attention can be given to the movement and arrangements made for more definitely appointing lecturers and more systematic preparation in making appointments throughout the various districts.

22. Some district officers seem to have been asleep so far as rendering assistance in this work is concerned, for they have failed to disclose the details of the lecture system unto the various locals of their district. Others have been handicapped because of a lack of interest manifest by the local officers.

23. Our observations during the year just closing—conference year—have decided us in making the following suggestions or recommendations:

A. We recommend that in place of advertising the lectures, and waiting for the requests to come in, that the board select a series of locals or districts adjoining each other, and endeavor to secure definite appointments for lectures to be delivered. We would not be confined to one series of districts at one time, but might have several lecturers out at the same time, working in different sections of the country. By handling matters in this manner, we will be able to secure maximum results with minimum efforts. By making direct effort and suggesting definite arrangements, we may expect more immediate and definite support. This would consolidate the work and avoid scattered calls and disappointments.

B. We further recommend that each district take this matter up at their first convention, and that the matter of handling the lectures be left in the hands of the district officers, with the understanding that they make every effort to secure lecturers and notify the locals at least one week in advance of time set for lecture. Such an arrangement would allow more prompt action, and the lecture board would be able to proceed with greater definiteness than if they were compelled to wait for each district to make their arrangements, after hearing from the board. Too much time is lost in securing appointments when handled as we have been doing this year.

C. We recommend fewer lecturers and that those chosen be required to furnish a synopsis of their lectures so that same may be mimeographed and sent to all the districts for advertising purposes. The list this year contained some twenty-four lecturers, and we feel that half this number would be sufficient and a greater amount of good would result because the board could keep in closer touch with each individual member or lecturer.

D. During this year we have been advancing the expense of each trip to the lecturer—estimated the expense—then immediately after completing the trip, the lecturer sends in his report showing places visited, attendance, interest, and itemized expense. The money thus advanced was furnished by the Religio Treasurer—simply loaned to this department—and we have refunded full amount. Immediately after receiving expense accounts we bill on the various districts for their pro rata of the expense and as this money is received it is credited to the fund. Thus this fund is constantly replenished and full amount is on hand when all accounts are in. We have found this to be a very satisfactory arrangement and recommend its adoption for the coming year. This year we found $50 to be sufficient, but in broadening out during the coming year we feel that $100 will be required.

E. We recommend that in choosing your lecture board manager for the coming year that one be chosen that is very familiar with routing. This will be an important part of the work, if carried out successfully under the plans suggested in this report. This being a new movement it is required that it be kept constantly before the people, therefore we further suggest that this manager should be one who is not too heavily burdened with other duties, a worker who is enthusiastic and who possesses initiative. This is too important a work to be handled carelessly or indifferently, for unless pushed until well founded it will die out.

F. In almost all the districts there are members who are capable of delivering lectures along certain educational lines, hence we strongly recommend that all district organizations endeavor to have lectures, by local people, as often as may seem practicable. We do not mean by this that you are to depend on local lecturers entirely. Outside assistance, if of the right kind, is stimulating and tends to increase interest. As often as may be arranged by your district officers have lectures from those appointed by the board, but keep up the interest locally, if possible, by the use of local talent. This tends to develop the local talent also.

The good that is bound to result after this work is well in hand cannot be estimated, and we feel sure that it would be a grave mistake to allow even a slight let-up in the efforts necessary to keep this movement before the people and progressing.

We have enjoyed the association we have had in this work and have been benefited thereby. We are sorry that more could not have been accomplished, but for a new move and a late start I presume we should feel encouraged with the results obtained.

Respectfully submitted,

A. W. SMITH, For Lecture Board.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 13, 1918.

NORMAL DEPARTMENT

To the Joint Executive Committee: 1. The Convention year 1917-1918 has demonstrated the practicability of the new standard course. Enrollments are not as high as was contemplated, but opportunity has not been afforded to devote the necessary attention to this feature. Of the other courses previously offered, Short Course No. One, using the Hurlbut text, has proved the most popular, although the better brief text, Barclay's, "A First Manual in Teacher Training," has been adopted by a few classes. A new course in story-telling has been arranged and recently announced. Considerable demand exists for systematic study of this subject, and the formation of numerous classes is anticipated.

2. The district work has been better organized, the idea of district rather than State Normal superintendents for the most part justifying itself. No changes in the constitution and by-laws of Religio and Sunday school are recommended to more effectually provide for this office, inasmuch as it is earnestly hoped that plans will reasonably soon be consummated to more closely align the educational work of all our auxiliaries with the college, in which event new machinery for spreading teacher-training may be required.

3. The experience of the year just closed points very clearly to the need for a definitely worked out educational program for auxiliary workers in every department, a program which shall knit together efforts now scattered, and adequately provide not alone the fundamental, but also the more advanced training needed by the leaders and teachers of our young. Beginning with the Normal department, this program should embrace the activities of all local, district, and reunion institutes, wherever held, thus ensuring that a common body of essential knowledge should everywhere be acquired. Were it not that the ability to do so has been denied, we should look logically to the college for leadership in this important movement. Until something develops from that quarter, the Religio and Sunday school should take steps jointly to formulate and set in operation such a plan as here has been briefly indicated.

TRAINED MEN IN DEMAND

In a recent bulletin advertising for radio operators the Government states that the Army alone needs 15,000 radio and buzzer operators. These men must be trained immediately. It is pointed out that practically all radio-trained men in the Army are noncommissioned officers. Graceland, under Government supervision, is preparing young men for these positions. In the fifteen weeks' Radio Summer School which begins May 6 a full Signal Corps training will be offered registered men, and other young men who are liable to be called into service later. This training will include radio-telegraphy, military drill, and all forms of military signaling. Write the Radio-Telegraph Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for full information.

REPORTS TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

SUPERINTENDENCY

BY G. R. WELLS

1. Your superintendent has a conviction that all general church officers are entitled to voice and vote in all our conventions, both general and district, or stake, and that by virtue of their God-appointed prerogatives which we could not give or take away. I do not believe that we must have an amendment with sixty days notice in order that these ministers may have a right to the floor. That would seem presumptuous. True, it is a basic principle, but if we are to put all basic principles in our constitution, where would we stop? Let us not forget that the constitutional law of the church is basic, and to that we all owe allegiance. I ask the convention to approve of this ruling and make it a matter of record, merely recognizing a right that already exists.

2. All heads of departments have done faithful work, at the same time carrying on other more pressing duties. We ask you to note among their reports an almost unanimous sentiment in favor of concentration of responsibility, which means that simpler administration for every department is considered necessary.

3. According to resolution passed last year, the association considers that it has a stewardship with a temporal as well as a spiritual aspect. The treasurer's report will show the temporal aspect to have been a success. We are not prepared to say that we have done as well for the spiritual side of our trust. Not that we have lost any ground, yet in many respects we have only been marking time in the great march Zionward.

4. The majority of the workers still need a stronger sense of consecration to the trust placed in their hands. Through them the children and youth of the church must be made to feel a deeper sense of loyalty to truth and the church; their souls must be made richer towards God. We realize it is a part of our work to endeavor to stimulate the qualities mentioned for officers and teachers by every means at our disposal, by mail, with teachers' and officers' helps printed and written. We have come far short of obtaining the results that we had visioned. May we mention some of the conditions that have balked us in our work.

5. Some three years ago we started to make a "service survey," with a view to locating and classifying auxiliary workers in each school having special talents, or ability and training. The purpose was to meet a demand for field workers and a near future demand for writers of teachers' and officers' helps, designers of lesson materials such as blackboard illustrations, maps, pictures, and handwork for cradle roll and primary departments—all this by the time the lessons course was to be made sufficiently permanent to justify the purchase of expensive cuts. We met difficulty in getting the blanks properly filled out, going roundabout through district officers, and found we must revise our method. Owing to lack of office help to carry it through, we have had to abandon it, having done nothing further the last two years.

6. Knowing we must make our course approximately permanent, and not wanting to trust our own judgment as to when it reached that point, and knowing that it must come to that stage of development before it would be wise to order expensive cuts for teachers' and officers' helps, maps, pictures, etc., we asked the executive council last April to give us authority to assemble our officially appointed talent, the lessons committee (at an expense of about $200,) to coordinate the five grades of the course with a view to permanency, at least for themes and lesson topics. Our editors have been working apart with no opportunity for coordination. The council, anxious to conserve funds, did not want to spend the money. Instead, they voted to make the superintendent the editor in chief of the lessons, upon the theory that he seemed to understand what was needed to put the course in proper shape and therefore was competent to do the actual work. We submit that though a superintendent of public construction must know what ought to be done and recognize good work, that does not make him a carpenter, joiner, plasterer, plumber, or electrician. With the duties already attached to our office and with no constant help we have been unable to touch that very necessary piece of work. My coworkers did authorize me to secure stenographic help when crowded; but we found that good stenographers do not stay around Lamoni all year to accommodate some one with part time service. We have worked the typewriter with our untrained fingers most of the time. A few of the current lessons of the year were gone over with some profit, but no work has been done on the course as a whole.

7. Each year of the last four, we have been puzzled at our failure to secure such a simple thing as a complete list of local superintendents. It is called for each year by general church and association officers as well as the Government; but we have always been several hundred names short. We were nearest the goal when we kept close to the typewriter with follow-up letters to the delinquent superintendents, but never had less than 14 per cent of them delinquent. We think we begin to see a ray of light in the following:

8. All are familiar with the excellent result obtained by my second assistant in the magnificent "greater Christmas offering." But all are not aware of the fact that he dealt directly with local superintendents. Anyone who has tried it knows that such a splendid result could not have been realized had he worked through district machinery. Since Christmas, we have been asking self this question: If direct contact is best for a special campaign, why not the best for regular administration by executive officers? In the past we have felt obligated to honor the district organization placed at our disposal by the constitution. How often we labored hard to get a district superintendent enthused and doing good work, only to find his convention decided to pass the honors around and we again had a green hand or an indifferent one to coach. Lately the conclusion has been gaining ground that a large part of our failures were due to this system of organization. Either we must have office help to cope with the round-about method, or, as our first assistant wrote us when answering our observations on this point, "We must back up the horse closer to the load if we are to move it faster." This is emphasized by the following facts for the past year, and typical of former years: For general superintendent, 22 per cent of district superintendents failed to report; for general secretary, 14 per cent; for cradle roll, 32 per cent; library commission, 37 per cent; and for good literature commission, 90 per cent failed to report. However, to deal directly with 786 schools with some 8,000 officers and teachers would require a stenographer full time.

9. The lessons committee is composed of three elective members, J. A. Gunsolley, Heman C. Smith, and John F. Garver; the editors of the five Quarterlies; and the general superintendent, (chairman ex officio,) making nine persons so located that it is impracticable to get together unaided. For the reason given in paragraph 6 the lessons committee has nothing to report this year; and there has been nothing to report the past three years. The committee has apparently served its purpose. We recommend that either it be discharged or reorganized. If discharged, we urge that the executive council be authorized and directed to employ the best available talent for doing whatever professional work that needs to be done on our lessons course, at the earliest possible opportunity. The first year of the course begins in January and we ought to start it with an improved series. We have lost one valuable year for preparation, but it is barely possible that beginner and primary grades may be benefited by January, 1919, if work is started promptly. If the lessons committee is reorganized, it should be smaller, of expert talent, and given facilities for meeting and doing real work. The bravest and most patriotic soldier would be at a disadvantage in meeting the foe without the best weapons obtainable. We ask our teachers and officers to be consecrated, but they are worthy of the very best tools that learning and talent can produce. A primary worker needs something more than Bible references and lesson story, especially as the majority of them are without training in this most important of all our teaching—laying the foundation.

10. As the auditing board elected last year could not act, we found it necessary to appoint E. E. Corthell and B. O. Chapman, both of Independence. In selecting auditors this year, those who live near the treasurer's books should be elected, or provide for expenses to be paid while doing the work.

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR, FIRST ASSISTANT

1. During the year that is past, have acted firstly in an advisory way to our general superintendent and have had in hand the care of field work for the association throughout the church. Have appointed at least 35 district field workers who, judging from reports received, have done what they could.

2. I have no evil nor discouragement to report but may say that the work to be done and our limited system to do that work is scarcely accomplishing the good desired. After carefully summarizing the situation I am forced to the conclusion that we must readjust our system. In other words, the machinery at hand is scarcely doing the job, hence more up-to-date methods must be adopted.

3. In my opinion there must be a closer association between the general administration and the school. We have too many "magnificent distances" bridged only by far-away reports which lose their voltage over the transmitting lines, while substations intended to recuperate and reinspire are scarcely charging to the extent that we would desire. A more direct point of contact must be sought out between the scholar, the school, and the general superintendency than that permissible under our present system.

4. Have observed also that much care will have to be used to prevent overlapping of work in the arrangement that must be effected between district field worker and district superintendent. It may be that measures will be brought forth from the report of the coordinating committee that will remedy the situation.

5. The school is increasing its hold upon the people, and is proving itself more than ever a mighty leverage in the hands of the church for the general upbuilding of the whole.

BY A. W. SMITH, SECOND ASSISTANT

1. As second assistant superintendent I was assigned to work with Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire in furthering the Christmas offering movement.

2. I devoted all the time possible to this work and I believe we have been fairly successful in our efforts, not because of personal efforts but because of the wonderful cooperation of the many schools, and because God abundantly blessed, not only our efforts, but the efforts of the schools, in their devotion to His cause. I do not know that I have ever done a work that produced a better response. The splendid letters that I received telling me of the determined efforts of the many schools created an enthusiasm in me that I never before realized existed. Whatever of success may have attended my efforts I feel should be credited to our Father in heaven, and to the many good schools who so faithfully responded to our "Greater Offering" suggestions.

3. We believe—if there is any credit due us at all—that this credit should be because of the effort made to answer all letters personally, trying to help each school in their individual needs.

4. We have not been permitted to visit any of the other schools—except Independence—as other duties have kept us very busy at home, but we have done our best to keep in touch with the schools by letter.
