against the individual, as he recognizes, or not his real place in this struggle. Doors of wonderful opportunity are ajar—who will enter? There has never been, in any period of the world's history, such opportunities, or such need for sacrifice and service as we have now. Conditions are terrible; can we, favored people of United States, realize that human beings are starving to death? Can we sense what suffering that means? Do we shut our eyes and ears to the call for help?

Opportunities for service lie all about us, and reach even into the small and intimate domain of our own kitchens. Are we conscientiously heeding, and living up to all the requests made by our far-seeing Government officials? Such things develop character, the character that will be fitted to live in the kingdom where love rules supreme, and greed and self-interest are not. Remember, character is the only thing that will stand triumphant when the books are opened!

I lately heard some one assert that blunt fingers were an index to character. I thought, "If they are blunted through long and unwearying service to others, they certainly are beautiful in the sight of God." Such service will stand the test, at eternity's bar. I have in mind a dear soul whose silver hair betokens her years. She has raised thirteen orphan children besides the six of her own, and she still works hard in spite of her advancing years. Her hands are rough and her fingers blunt, but in the great accounting day, when the records of our deeds are opened, who would not take chances upon her standing approved before her God? Of what use, then, in such an hour, the elegant, tapered fingers, whose only duty has been to be kept white and beautiful?

Another dear one, who now is resting in the quiet churchyard, had also roughened hands, but she walked miles to care for the sick in her neighborhood. She never turned a deaf ear to an appeal to help, even to the tramp who came hungry to her door. Surely such service will count for much in the last great day.

Heredity and the laws of nature, environment, and cultivation, are all subjects that are receiving a great deal of attention in these years of progress, but after all, honesty of purpose and integrity of principle are the basis of good character, which alone counts with God, who looks upon the heart of man. When we get in touch with him, true refinement of character will ensue, just as surely as day follows night, for his spirit is a "refining fire," and ennobles those who partake of it. The very highest standard to which we can aspire, is that we may always please God, and live in harmony with his laws.

The Family Purse and the Children's Food

AMERICAN MOTHERS, MAKE EVERY DOLLAR COUNT

The family must be fed, whatever foods cost, and the wise mother will study how to get the greatest return on her investment by the careful selection of foods. The cheapest foods are by no means necessarily the most economical. Half-decayed fruits and vegetables are sold very cheap from the wagons or markets, but may be very expensive to the family if illness results, and it is only too true that cheap milk may cost the life of a baby. It is plain that unless food is in good condition it is not cheap at any price. But even when the quality of food is above reproach, it must be selected wisely and adapted to the needs of the family. To do this it is a good plan to divide the money that may be spent for food in some such way as the following:

(a) "Spend from one quarter to one third of the total food money for bread, cereals, macaroni, and rice."

Bread and other cereal foods form the basis of the American family diet and should be freely used for children.

(b) "Buy at least from one third to one half a quart milk a day for each member of the family."

This amount of milk for the family will ordinarily permit each child to have one and one half pints a day.

(c) "Spend as much for fruit and vegetables together as for milk."

Children should begin to have a little vegetable food in the first year, and after the second year well-cooked vegetables should form a usual part of their diet.

(d) "Spend not more for meat and eggs together than for vegetables and fruit. The amount spent for meat may be decreased as the amount spent for milk increases."

It has been found that many families spend an entirely undue amount of their food allowance for meat, which is the most expensive article of food on the market. Especially in summer the proportion of meat in the diet of young children may be reduced by using milk, and milk products, eggs and vegetables in its place. Fish and chicken are excellent food for children.

In order to keep track of these expenditures it is a good plan for the mother to keep an itemized account of her food costs for a while. In the country and villages where the family raises a great deal of its own food the problem of buying will not be so serious, but it is always necessary to see that the proper balance of the family meals is observed.

Having purchased the foodstuffs, still further economy can be effected by proper preparation and cooking. A fireless cooker will help greatly in the task of cooking in summer. Most cereals and many vegetables may be reheated so that at least enough for two days may safely be cooked at one time. Milk may be used in many kinds of good summer foods, such as vegetable soup and custards, or may be the basis of the children's suppers, either with bread or cereals. Directions for the use of milk are given in a bulletin of the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia, on the care of the child, which will be sent to anyone who cares to write to the Bureau for it.

Food should be kept as cold as possible and carefully screened against flies, mice, and other marauders. When there is danger that foods will not keep until the meal for which they are needed, they should be cooked, scalded, or sterilized, and then cooked as quickly as possible, even if they must again be warmed before being eaten.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

After the War?

"Education has become the greatest human interest of the American people; and the people recognize, moreover, that this development of the higher form of this interest is fraught with tremendous potentialities for righteousness intellectually as well as ethically."

Thus comments one of our great leaders in the present day crisis. He had been discussing the "greatest change which ever occurred in the history of higher education in America," the almost revolutionary program put into effective operation in the colleges and universities of this country during the present month wherein over 150,000 high school graduates are being sent to higher institutions of learning at Government expense.

Already there has been introduced into Congress a bill to provide for the appointment of a Reconstruction Commission to consider, among other things, the matter of education and educational institutions after the war.

Why was our church institution of higher learning, Graceland, not able to meet the conditions prescribed by the Government for the organization of one of these units of the Students' Army Training Corps? The answer is a very simple one. We did not have one hundred Latter Day Saint boys who were high school graduates or who had the equivalent education.

Graceland had filed her application for a unit. The faculty, her library and laboratory equipment fully, met Government standards and her application had been approved. She was ready to make provision for housing and caring for the student soldiers, had met all the requirements prescribed by the Government for a unit. The Government had done all she could to provide for the units; had sent commanding officers, was ready to send equipment, provisions, uniforms, arms; stood ready to pay for the tuition, board, lodging.

In fact every provision had been fully made by both Graceland College and the Government, but the one thing needed was one hundred Latter Day Saint high school graduates. (Our student body largely comes, of course, from members of the church.) They were not available, and the unit of the S. A. T. C. could not be organized.

There is no question but that some provision will be made after the war continuing higher education, not only for the young men but for the young women as well. The only question is, Are our young men and young women going to be ready to take advantage of this provision? Graceland has a larger enrollment than ever before—fifty-two per cent over last year—and is doing her part to prepare these young people for this reconstruction period. Are the thousands of our young people throughout the church going to respond to President Smith's clarion call for "qualifying educationally for greater responsibility"? He says "There is every reason to urge redoubled energy in this direction. We must be alert, active, and zealously interested in what are the tremendous tasks ahead of us."

If the Government should continue her policy of higher education for peace as she had undertaken it for war, and there is every reason to believe she will, and that some similar method will be brought to the door of every home in America where the young people are alert and ready to take advantage of the opportunity, and "if the requirements laid on the students for the great intellectual and ethical qualities of accuracy, thoroughness, promptness, and obedience should be made equal to those now laid down, what a nation the Americans would ultimately become!"

Are we going to be ready for our part in this program of reconstruction? We can only do so by taking advantage now of the educational opportunities provided. To-morrow, next year, will not do. It must be done now.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS,
President Graceland College.

Let the Good Work Go Forward

The literature work is moving along as a confident army advances to the attack. Each week's mail, as a rule, brings word of local boards organized in different parts of the United States. It is very slow and difficult work to get in touch with foreign lands. The commission trusts that interested persons in Europe, Australia, and the islands will arise to the emergency and act as organizers of local literature boards, and in an organized manner take up the mission of collecting and distributing the church literature. If reports would be sent to the chairman of the gospel literature commission (R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island), the cause would be strengthened, others would be interested, and system and order conserved.

A world of good is done by members of the church securing subscriptions for church papers, and, where there is no book agent, sending in orders for church books. It is not necessary to wait for the other fellow to work, before we do our task. Let the good work go forward. Surely there is in every branch some person sufficiently interested in the welfare of his neighbor to prompt the organization of a literature board. Will that person please speak to his pastor? When the work is done send me the name and address of the chairman.

Two members on a board can work for their branch or district, provided they are united, till the third member is elected. The local boards are committees and should so work. Let either the chairman or the secretary (according to agreement) report the work of the board. Do not keep the work separate, as done by each member. Report as a whole to the three organizations that appoint.

R. W. FARRELL,
PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, 14 Kenwood Street.

Prettyman-Gardner Debate

We have had another debate with the more progressive wing of the Church of Christ, held at Pinebluff, Wyoming. Brother C. W. Prettyman took care of our side of the question. Elder Gardner, of the Church of Christ, a young man, and not having much of a foundation to stand on, did not make much of a showing.

Church propositions were discussed. Our church was laid on the block first and our opponent hacked and sawed at it, but when he got through he had more than when he started; the saw he used was the one that R. B. Neal had made for him and others of like faith, but when Brother Prettyman showed up the shop that the saw had been made in, the elder laid it on the shelf. All went very well till the so-called Church of Christ was put on the block. Then our opponent denied R. B. Neal, Alexander Campbell, and tried to bluff his church through from the day of Pentecost, but could not make that and the nonprogressive part harmonize.

Of course, Joseph Smith's prophecies might have been guesses, but he failed to see that Christ and all the holy men of old might have guessed it instead of prophesying. All went well, our brother handling our side very satisfactorily, leaving all stronger in the faith, and glad that we have a gospel that will stand the test. So may the good work go on.

Yours for truth,
KIMBALL, NEBRASKA.

H. H. ROBINSON.

A Good Example

The Kaiser may be all that is reprehensible; but nevertheless we have at least two good Germans in Salt Lake, who belong to the church. They are Brother and Sister Gerns. They are always faithful in their attendance at services, and never forget their financial obligations. Sister Gerns recently dedicated all her "Sunday eggs" to the Lord. This good sister has forty hens, and from March to July she sold her Sunday eggs apart from her week-day eggs, and netted for the church the handsome sum of $20, or fifty cents per hen in three months' time—Sundays' laying only. "The hens seem to work harder on Sundays than on week days," is the remark she made in paying over the $20 to the Bishop's agent.

We have no objection to the hens working harder on Sundays than on week days. Would that all Saints would follow the good example of the hens and work harder for the Lord on Sundays than they work for their earthly masters on week days! What a wonderful result would follow! But, mark you, we mean spiritual work, keeping the Sabbath day holy in the best sense of the word.

Sister Gerns pays her tithing as well in full; and this donation or offering of twenty dollars, the product of her forty hens in three months' time, is additional, purely voluntary, and grows out of her desire to see how much she can give and not how little. What a splendid example!

A Veteran's Testimony

I want to record my testimony in favor of God's latter-day work, or the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in fulfillment of the vision as shown to John (Revelation 14:6), on the Isle of Patmos, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, in the early part of the nineteenth century.

I was born July 25, 1826, and believe I am of age and am entitled to speak for myself. I was born into the Church of Christ on October 3, 1847, so this is the 71st anniversary of my spiritual birth. My mother was a widow, my father having died seven months prior to my birth, leaving mother with a babe to care for, one year and five months old, so that he was two years old at the time of my birth.

After I had become of age and had carried to her the gospel of Christ, she told me that in my infancy she dedicated me to the Lord to be his so long as I should live, after the manner of Hannah of old in the dedication of Samuel.

My youth was wayward until I heard the gospel of Christ, which I obeyed on the 3d day of October, 1847. Soon afterward I was ordained an elder and sent out to preach the gospel as my life's work. How well I have filled my mission is recorded in a record in which no mistake is made. I only wish and pray that I may prove to be worthy of the encomiums from my brethren and sisters who have known me through life, and more especially of the blessings which God has graciously promised me if I am faithful to the end.

Life is not measured by the weight of years,
Nor by the amount of wealth or fame acquired;
But by our works, God's word declares,
And this stern justice does require.

I was called in my young manhood to take hold of the gospel plow. In that calling has been my experience, of which I want to bear testimony. Unlearned and inexperienced, I had no power of my own to depend upon. My dependence must be upon God by the power of his Spirit. I know that in my life's labors good has been done. The glory is the Lord's, not mine. I have felt and seen the blessed effects of the glorious gospel of Christ in many ways—casting out of devils, healing of the sick, and the various gifts of the gospel as graciously promised by our Redeemer; and better still, frail, sinful men made new creatures in Christ Jesus, and the evidences of this found in their lives. For this we give God the glory.

I do know that God hears and answers prayers when we humbly seek unto him. The evidences to me are too many and too plain for doubt. Hence, I can with unbounded pleasure commend the gospel of Christ as taught by him and restored in these last days as foreseen by John on the Isle of Patmos (Revelation 14:6). I can truthfully and joyfully commend it to every sin-sick soul as the only healing balm to be found; one that if applied with the whole heart in faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, will never fail to bring relief and perfect cure, even eternal life.

May God bless this feeble testimony to all who "pant" for the living waters that flow from the throne of God.

WOODBINE, IOWA.

Respectfully,
CHARLES DERRY.

THE HAGUE, HOLLAND, June 30, 1918.

President F. M. Smith,
Lamoni, Iowa, U. S. A.

Dear Brother Smith: I have just arrived in Holland on the N. C. O.'s exchange, after being a prisoner of war in Germany for nearly two years, and you can imagine that I am pleased to be here when I can have a bit of freedom and write as many letters as I like. I had all my books, papers, and photos taken from me before I left Germany, consequently I have lost all my addresses, but I thought I would write to you in care of the Herald Office as I remembered that address. I have not seen any of our papers since I have been in Germany and I have not seen a Saint since I left home on February 7, 1916. so you can guess I am hungry for the sight of a Saint and to hear some church news, especially news of last Conference.

The exchange conference will start again to-morrow, and if that is successful I hope to soon be with my loved ones again, and with the brethren and sisters. I long to get back to my work. I feel now that I owe my life in an especial manner to the Lord, and I consecrated it to him afresh after I was taken prisoner. There were 12,000 Australians engaged in the scrap I was taken prisoner in, and there were 7,500 casualties. I was wounded in the hip by a piece of shrapnel in the afternoon, and was lying out all night in the open, exposed to everything and getting hit with spent shrapnel, shell, and dirt and stones, but the last few words of the 119th Psalm kept coming into my mind, "With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation," and I felt sure that my life would be spared. In the morning when the Germans came up behind us, I expected a bayonet to finish me, but to my surprise they took me a prisoner instead. So I feel that my life belongs to God and I would like to give all of it to his service, but he knows best and I will strive to do my best for him in whatever way he sees fit.

I have had some hard trials and experiences, but I don't regret that I enlisted, as I have done my bit for my country in the cause of peace and freedom, and I feel that I have more power than ever I had, or would have had otherwise, without the experiences that I have passed through. I hope to do a good work for the Master in the future.

If this exchange does not go through, I shall send for the HERALDS to start from April 1 last, so as to get all the conference news, and some books also, as I have not any church books, but it is no use till I know whether or not we are likely to stay here. If the exchange is arranged, we shall soon go home. I should like to know if there are any of our people here in Holland. I have not had much time yet, but am trying to find out. I should be grateful if you would send me the address of one of our people if there are any here. I had Brother May's address and wrote to him to send me some books to Germany, but did not receive any reply. He may not have received my letter, although I wrote twice, or his answer may have gone astray. Letters have been very irregular and uncertain in Germany and we could only write four post cards and two short letters a month. Now we can write as many as we like and as long as we like. The food here is a bit scarce, but clean, and we are treated as human beings once again. The Lord has been good to me and has comforted and helped me from time to time and though I have had many trials and difficulties he has helped me out of them all, and I want to give my life, my all to him.

I will write again in a few days when I hear something definite. In the meantime, please accept my kind regards and best wishes. I am enjoying good health and I hope you are, also.

Your brother in the one gospel,
WALTER DYKE. (Elder.)

July 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have just recently arrived in Holland from Germany, where I have been a prisoner of war for over one year and eleven months. I am very glad and thankful to be here, where we have a fair measure of liberty and where the food is clean and wholesome. I am looking forward to soon returning home to my loved ones, and to my work for the Master, as the exchange conference has concluded its labors, and we shall soon be on our way home. I am longing for church news, as I have received very little, owing to our letters being so restricted. I am looking forward to hearing the news of the last General Conference.

Some of the Saints thought that I should not have enlisted, but I thought that it was up to every man who was able to do his bit for his country. I have been laboring in the Adelaide Branch for some years and it seemed to me that a change was desirable both for the branch and for myself. I did not take the step before I had made it a matter of earnest prayer. And I thought at the time, and still think, that I did the right thing. I shall go back to my work with renewed vigor, and I believe that the experiences I have gone through will help me to do a better work than ever I should have been able to do without them.

I feel that I want to throw my whole heart and soul into the Lord's work, and I feel that I shall have a greater power than ever I had before. But the Lord knows best.

I have consecrated the rest of my life to him to use in the way he sees fit and am praying for guidance and direction from him. I feel that it is the least I can do for him who has done so much for me. I am looking forward to meeting some of the Saints in England soon. I have not seen a Saint since I left Australia on February 7, 1916. So you can guess I am real hungry for the association of, and the communion with, the children of the Lord. Ever praying for the advancement of the work,

I remain, your brother in the faith,

WALTER DYKE.

Home Address: KING STREET, ALBERTON, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

SAWYER, IDAHO, September 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: A long time has passed since I have sent in a line from these parts, but feel duty-bound to try at least to get this into print for the good that has been done in this district through the help and efforts of our beloved brother, Peter Anderson. Saints, if there ever was a home blessed by a visit from Paul of old, surely our home, too, was blessed by the presence of one of the Twelve. Our home still feels the blessing, for it was good, wholesome food from God's word we received, things were explained that had been misrepresented to us. Not one minute of time was wasted, for he seemed so anxious to set aright this big family's mind from the dark clouds which hung before us. I thank God from the depths of my heart for the time given us to counsel with him. We have been anxiously waiting for a return visit, when he expected to hold a round table talk, that those like ourselves might ask him all questions wherein they have been troubled, but to our sorrow, Brother Newby just brought the news that things had turned to Brother Anderson, over which he had no control, and he could not come.

We are very sorry indeed, but for the good of others, we are quite willing to give him over to them. We know that his presence is needed in many parts. Let us pray God to restore to him perfect health that his work will be easy for him. Come often, Brother Anderson. Welcome to our home.

JENNIE CRABB.

BARTH, FLORIDA, September 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am yet striving to enter in the straight gate. I am a girl of fourteen years of age. I would be glad to hear from any of the Saints who desire to write to me. My mother is blind, and I ask the prayers of all the Saints that if it be the Lord's will she may receive her sight.

Yours in Christ,

DELLA BOOKER.

October 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: Although I do not have the opportunity to be with the church people, nevertheless, my whole heart and soul is with them and I am trying to be of true service to the cause which so much concerns us.

In army life, as everywhere else, there are many disappointments, and it is an especially good time to live the life of a true Latter Day Saint.

Pray for those who are "with the colors," that they will be strengthened in the faith and while serving their country they may also be able to render service to the church.

JAMES C. DEMPSEY.

Editors Herald: As we are not habitual intruders upon your valuable time, and do not often ask for space in your columns, we feel some degree of liberty in addressing you at this time in view of the fact that it is our belief that in this great work of ours, the things that are of vital interest to a few are of more or less interest to the entire body; believing this we feel that a statement of recent happenings and general conditions as they exist here in Spearfish, South Dakota, will not be out of place at this time.

To the few Saints who are here, September 21 was a day of rejoicing; occasioned by a visit from Brother W. M. Aylor of the Twelve, who remained with us until the following Thursday, September 26, and preached us five splendid sermons. While weather conditions were unfavorable and only a few outsiders heard the message as delivered by him, we gathered from expressions made by those present the efforts were not in vain. One bright young man said it was the first real sermon he ever heard. We all feel encouraged from Brother Aylor's visit with us and believe a greater effort will be put forth for the advancement of the work here than has heretofore been done. You know it is sometimes convenient for us to fall into a condition of inactivity and say all is well that ends well, and trust to circumstances. However, we of Spearfish are trying to anticipate the end from the beginning and are hoping all is well that begins well. Perhaps we can claim two beginnings; the work first being planted here by Brother R. Etzenhouser in January, 1915, when seventeen were baptized at one time, while the thermometer was eight below zero, with no ill effects to anyone. Since that time many changes have taken place and four of the seven families then represented have moved away; some of them not far, but too far to assist in the local work. With the three families left to form the nucleus, an organization was effected on Sunday, September 22, with Brother W. M. Aylor in charge. This we feel is our second and most important beginning; here is where we hope to take proper thought and add to our church stature as God directs until we shall become a flourishing branch that may sometime be heard from.

Spearfish is located just below the mouth of Spearfish Canyon, which canyon is somewhat noted as one of the beauty spots of the Northwest and is very popular with the tourists as well as the local people during the warm summer months. The town of Spearfish is called the Queen City of the Black Hills and the valley as it unfolds below the city is often referred to as the garden spot of the State.

To the Saints living in the "regions round about," we would like to urge that they get their letters and place them in this branch; it will stimulate their interest in the work, and encourage us.

Yours in the interest of the work,

GEORGE W. NEWTON.

CHETOPA, KANSAS, October 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we are isolated from the Saints we do not hear much preaching, only the Silent Preacher and we surely do enjoy it. Brother A. C. Silvers and Brother William Bath were with us a few days last January and gave us some fine discourses but the weather was so cold that there were small audiences. We expect them again soon and hope there will be some good done. Myself and daughter are the only members here. My son-in-law, Harry Burrows, is now in France, and we ask an interest in your prayers that he will return home safely again.

Your sister in the faith,

LILLIE POOR.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, October 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: This beautiful Sunday afternoon finds me writing to God's chosen people in the land of the free. Nothing is dearer to me than the Saints of God, and I enjoy conversing with them.

Kirtland is very beautiful at this time of the year, and we surely appreciate the beautiful tints and colors lavished by the hand of the Great Artist upon the trees and surrounding country. The hill upon which the "house of the Lord" stands, is magnificent in all its autumnal beauty, but not more so than the interior where dwells God's Holy Spirit. In the center of the temple there hangs a service flag with thirty-two blue stars; which tells of many tearful good-bys said to our boys in this district.

The reunion was a great success, and we enjoyed many spiritual feasts, and listened to many elevating sermons which seemed to transplant one into another heaven. One afternoon all the missionaries were here at our home for dinner and we had a spiritual feast as well as a physical one. Among the missionaries were: Brethren R. Baldwin, F. G. Pitt, B. R. McGuire, Paul Hanson, Ralph Farrell, U. W. Greene, and Zimmermann.

This spring I was very ill, and while lying on my bed of affliction, many were the pleasant experiences I had. One night I sent a message with a neighbor girl to ask the elders to stop at our home, on their way home from church, to administer to me. After waiting until late and they did not come, I exercised the faith necessary and after offering my prayer, I was relieved, and the pain left me.

Another time I was suffering pains around my heart, caused by gastritis, and when offering my prayer for the pain to be removed, I was impressed to specify the time as half an hour. I turned over and in just one half hour, the pain left my body never to return. Since I have my restored health I surely know how to appreciate it and sympathize with those who are suffering, and especially our boys at the front.

But we know God can and will protect them and bring them safely to our arms again. I always enjoy reading the church papers and my prayers are always for the advancement of this grand and glorious work.

Yours, in the army of the Lord,

MANILLA BREWSTER.

APPLETON, WISCONSIN, October 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines in appreciation of this gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness which I received about three years ago.

Through the efforts of Elder B. C. Flint I first saw light in God's light and truth in God's truth, and oh, how different all seemed! Having been born and reared a Roman Catholic where my conception of God was so limited, I was a mere infant.

It is my greatest pleasure to testify of the truthfulness of this work and the wonderful manifestations I have received. May we one and all so live and qualify ourselves that we may be able to meet our Lord and Savior at his coming, is my prayer.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. H. D. FUMAL.

REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN, October 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have not written the church papers for some time, as there was nothing startling or of extra interest to report. All details are reported weekly and monthly to the presidency. To write the same things over again, is like reading a book a second time. So I have refrained to report. However, I have something of importance I desire the Saints of the Northwest to know, and a request I desire them to comply with.

Regina is a training camp for our soldier boys, and we believe a number of members of the church are in training here. My special request is that all Saints who have sons or friends here, either in training or residing here or near here, write at once and give us their names and addresses. Do not delay. As soon as you have read this, write us at once, so we can hunt them up. We propose holding a series of meetings here soon, and if you delay, they may miss these meetings. Brother C. R. Bowerman, 2325 Stewart Street, is Sunday school superintendent and will look after your friends. Write him; as I will not be here long.

We are renting the Baptist Church, Fifteenth Avenue and Stewart Street, for the winter, and perhaps longer, and will hold regular services. Brother Bowerman lives in the next block south.

We have located eleven families and parts of families, but doubtless there are more. So far we only have the names of three soldier boys, but there must be many here. Don't fail to write about them. We will have a Sunday school of over thirty-five when we get in our new quarters.

I expect to be here and near here until about the close of the year. Address in care of C. R. Bowerman as above

J. W. PETERSON.

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI, October 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am at present holding a tent meeting at Troy, Kansas. I came here to assist Brother G. E. Harrington, but he has been called away. We have had a tent full almost every night. Yesterday I baptized six, and others have given in their names for baptism for next Sunday. These will all be members of the Fanning Branch, which is near Troy.

Brethren Harrington and Roy Tilden, the latter the district Sunday school superintendent, organized a Sunday school at Troy last Sunday. The work looks good at this place. They are shipping out loads of big, red apples from this point every day just now.

Yours truly,

J. W. A. BAILEY.

There is no moral object so beautiful to me as a conscientious young man, whose aim is honorable and whose character is noble. The inducements for the formation of a good character are almost innumerable. Among these the respect of the world should not be forgotten. All people love to be respected. To obtain respect one must possess a good character.—A Mother.

NOVEMBER 7, 1918

The basis for this number will be two addresses by President Elbert A. Smith and

delivered to the Independence Stake Conference at the Stone Church on Sunday afternoon, October 6, 1918.

President Elbert A. Smith's address is an example of the keenly intellectual and sweetly trusting spirit which has endeared him to all of his acquaintances.

President Frederick M. Smith's address is a concise and powerful presentation of some ideals of the church which will invite contemplation and study.

The spirit of this meeting will be understood by the readers of these addresses.

In addition to these addresses we are presenting a number of leading men in short testimony. How would you like to hear the following men bear testimony to the truthfulness and power of the gospel?

Apostles Peter Anderson and J. A. Gillen, Patriarch I. N. White and High Priest Hugh Goold, Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire and Missionary W. E. Peak.

How many extra copies of the Ensign for this date are you going to need for distribution among your friends? We will fill all orders received up to the date of the issue, November 7, at the following rates:

Single copies, each	5 cents
10 copies	35 cents
100 copies	$3.00
1000 copies	$25.00

This is a chance for you to do a little real missionary work. Will you be alive to it?

Order from

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—At Tulsa, Oklahoma, September 7 and 8, Edward Rannie in charge. Next conference at Oklahoma City, February 15 and 16, with Sunday school and religio occupying the 14th. W. S. Huff, secretary, 916 North Olie Street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LONDON.—At Saint Thomas, Ontario, October 5 and 6, 1918. District presidency chosen to preside and they chose as associates, James A. Gillen and William Grice. Ministerial and executive reports were given, showing the work in a progressive condition. The district has an approximate gain of 100. Bishop's Agent's report showed tithes and offerings to be $4,483 for the year. The officers for the coming year are: William Grice, president; James Winegarden, vice president; Percy Yerks, second vice president; Lucy Yerks, secretary; B. H. Doty, chorister; Clarence Duesling, member library board; C. C. Raison, member gospel literature board; J. L. Burger sustained as Bishop's Agent and treasurer. The services were held in the church, with the exception of Sunday afternoon and evening, which were in the Columbus Theater and well attended. Two excellent discourses were given at these times by Brethren Gillen and Grice. Adjourned to meet with London Branch, at call of district president. Lucy Yerks, secretary, Waterford, Ontario.

The Presidency

By concurrence of the First Presidency and missionary in charge, Elder E. C. Shelley is transferred from North and South Carolina to Eastern Florida as missionary, and Elder A. G. Miller from North and South Carolina to Western Florida and the Mobile District as missionary for the remainder of the conference year.

The Presidency also gives notice of the transfer of Elder R. T. Walters from Southern Missouri District to the Clinton District as missionary for the remainder of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the church.

After consultation with members of the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, the Presidency gives notice of the following changes in appointment:

Elder John F. Martin has been transferred from Eastern Colorado District to the Kirtland District, Cleveland objective, (local).

Elder J. W. McKnight has been transferred from the Florida District to Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district, (missionary).

Elder Hale W. Smith has been transferred from the Massachusetts District to Eastern Colorado and Western Nebraska, (missionary).

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

The Bishopric

Northern California District: Owing to the illness of Bishop C. A. Parkin, we have arranged for Brother Edward Ingham, 6445 Colby Street, Oakland, California, to look after the interests of this department in the Northern California District. Solicitors which have heretofore been representing Brother Parkin will kindly report for the present month to Brother Ingham, and scattered Saints desiring to pay their tithing will all kindly do likewise.

We trust that the same spirit of devotion and cooperation which has been expressed while Brother Parkin has been serving, may continue under the administration of Brother Ingham. We feel to commend him to the Saints as worthy of their confidence and esteem.

Under present conditions in the world, there are numerous demands being made upon the finances of the Saints. We feel therefore to urge that in the distribution of our funds, we do not forget the importance of supporting the Lord's work, not only that we may fulfill the law, but that we may be entitled to the blessings which he has promised to the faithful.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Our Departed Ones

WEATHERHEAD.—Albert Shute Weatherhead was born at Stokes Bay, Ontario, March 4, 1894; died October 2, 1918. Sermon by D. P. Perkins. Interment in Bayview Cemetery.

SNELL.—James Wesley Snell, son of Silas and Maud Snell, Bartlett, Iowa, was born April 21, 1918, and departed this life October 4, 1918, leaving to mourn, father, mother, 3 brothers, one sister, and a host of friends and relatives. Funeral was conducted from the home by John Huston; sermon by M. M. Case.

MCGINNIS.—John A. McGinnis, born February 23, 1883, at Twin Lakes, Chippewa County, Wisconsin; died September 20, 1918, after long and painful suffering from tuberculosis. Married Carrie Mair, March 24, 1904, and to this union were born four children: Laura, Derrell, Margaret, and William, all of whom survive him. Baptized by A. L. Whiteaker, June 20, 1904. His influence was for good, and his friends said he always gave his best service to the church. Was ordained a priest June, 1908, by W. P. Robinson; to the office of elder March 3, 1918, by A. L. Whiteaker.

DUNCAN.—Nancy Duncan was born at Portland, Jay County, Indiana, August 24, 1853. Married James D. Duncan, at Walkerton, Indiana, January 30, 1877. To this union were born 7 children, 4 girls and 3 boys. Was baptized May 30, 1897, by David Smith, and has been a faithful member. Died September 5, 1918, near West Branch, Michigan. Leaves to mourn, her husband, J. D. Duncan, and three sons, Delbert D., John W., and James M.; 4 daughters: Mrs. Bert Masterman, Mrs. George Goff, Mrs. Etta Brom, and Mrs. Nancy Phillips; 19 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren. Sermon by George W. Burt; buried in Brookside Cemetery.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Any of our brethren who are in the American or Canadian forces and are visiting England are invited to call at the home of F. H. Edwards, 13 Heathfield Road, Handsworth, which is the center for the Summerfield Branch, Birmingham, where meetings are held. They will be gladly welcomed. The invitation is thus renewed by Nellie Arrowsmith, secretary.

MEETINGS DISPENSED WITH

Beginning on the 13th, all public meetings in Lamoni, including the public schools, were ordered dispensed with by the local board of health. There are not many cases of the Spanish influenza—the cause of the order—and we have heard of no cases of pneumonia as yet, Monday morning. The stake conference, to have been held in Hiteman on the 17th to 20th, has been indefinitely postponed, and most of the appointments in rural districts have been postponed for perhaps two weeks, till the danger of spreading the disease has passed. Graceland College is continuing by conducting supervised study classes in small groups, with athletics and outdoor sports freely interspersed. The students residing in town are not allowed to attend till the danger from infection is past. Independence went under the same restrictions as Lamoni on the 8th, though it may soon be raised, as there are but few cases. Word is coming in from other points that conferences and similar meetings are being postponed. At Logan, no child under eighteen is allowed on the streets.

COORDINATED PROGRAM

We have just received a program of conference and auxiliary conventions of the New York District, held at Niagara Falls, New York, October 4, 5, and 6. It is rather a new development since the Friday evening and Saturday morning sessions were devoted to four papers followed by general dis-ussion for a half hour. This part of the program followed that of the ministerial conference, first started in the Massachusetts District by the eastern quorum of elders under direction of W. A. Sinclair. Saturday afternoon, business session for necessary business; first, of the church; then the Religion; finally the Sunday school. Only a limited time is allowed for these themes, followed by a paper on Sunday school work and general discussion. Saturday evening and three sessions Sunday of preaching services, sacrament service early Sunday morning, followed by Sunday school. It looks like an ambitious program, but one which could be readily carried out, unless it be for the limited time allowed for business. It is of special value, first, because of its educational features in the church institute. Second, that the auxiliaries are acting under the direction and with the church, following the lines of the recent effort towards coordination of the general organization.

Sergeant W. A. Rogers, at Camp Beauregard, is very sick and asks the prayers of the Saints. He also desires letters. Address him at Base Hospital, Ward 3A, Camp Beauregard, Louisiana.

One who was in a position to appreciate his qualities, writes this concerning the late Gideon Hawley whose demise was noted in a recent issue: "His home was always open to the elders; if they were ill or needed financial aid he was always happy to be of service. Graceland College found a loyal supporter in him when she needed it most."

LIBRARY BULLETIN NO. 1.

Brother Vernon A. Reese, secretary of the General Library Commission, has ready a number of new bulletins for local library workers, which he will be glad to send to those interested. It is supplemental information which should be read in connection with the Library How-Book. It comments on and explains the present situation regarding coordination and will be most helpful to all who will read and observe the instructions thus indorsed by the Library Commission. He desires to send them to all connected with local boards or having to do with that work, so if you know of others besides yourself, include their names in the request. They are sent without cost upon request to Vernon A. Reese, 919 North Kedvale Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

TESTIMONY NUMBER OF THE ENSIGN

The November 7 issue of the Zion's Ensign will be a "Testimony number." The basis of that issue will be two addresses given at Independence on October 6, by Elbert A. Smith and Frederick M. Smith of the First Presidency. In addition, there are to be some short testimonies as to the truthfulness of the gospel from such men as Peter Anderson, J. A. Gillen, I. N. White, Hugh Goold, B. R. McGuire, W. E. Peak. Read the details of the announcement elsewhere in this issue.

HERALDS FOR SALE

Miss Lizzie Molyneaux, 1939 North Tenth Street, Saint Louis, Missouri, writes that she has a large number of old HERALDS. From the list, we note that she has six numbers in volumes two and five. Volumes nine and twenty-eight are missing. Volumes eight, eleven, fourteen, thirty-one, thirty-five, thirty-eight, forty, forty-one, forty-two, forty-five, and fifty-six are complete. Several volumes have but a single number missing. In fact from volume six to fifty-six, she has sixteen hundred and forty-six copies out of a possible eighteen hundred and forty-eight. A complete list will be furnished upon request. It may form a basis for a complete file for some one who has kept some of their old HERALDS. The HERALDS prior to the fire of 1907 are rare.

NOTICE TO READER—When you finish reading this magazine, place a 1-cent stamp on this notice, mail the magazine, and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors destined to proceed overseas. NO WRAPPING—NO ADDRESS.

WHO ARE THE UNTEMPTED?

Many times is the question raised, Are these good men, who are never tempted and who find it easy to do right, entitled to the same reward, as is the young man or young woman who is tempted, makes a mistake, gets up and overcomes his or her weakness and does right?

Asked in this form, the question answers itself. It no doubt refers in part to those men who are appointed in charge of the work, and whom as young people, we are inclined to idealize, quite naturally and quite justly in part. But the question is based upon a few misapprehensions.

First: Every impulse of young man and young woman is not vile, but quite the reverse. Yet how often have they suffered keenly, because of some newly developing impulse, which they fear, because it is new and they do not understand it, to be wrong. This attitude is all too often encouraged by those older in years who should know better, and should treat young people with sympathy, remembering their own youth. Suppression of impulse leads to harm, while proper instruction leads to real joy and progress.

Of course there are sins of youth, and we may rest assured, if we are guilty of them, we shall look back in a later day with the utmost sorrow to our mistakes.

It is true that the indiscretions of youth are drafts upon a later age, payable with compound interest. It is also true that many of these impulses of youth, which some older in years reprove so strongly, when we are older, we shall know were not wrong at all, but were part of nature—the divine nature—moving within us. There is no impulse, but what rightfully directed, makes for good, for happiness, for better manhood and womanhood, for a better world in which to live.

There is no impulse but what misdirected, makes for evil, for individual suffering, and for a worse world. Even spirituality, which when rightfully developed and directed, means a fullness of life in the highest possible sense and the nearest approach to the divine, when misdirected, narrows, and may become an injurious bigotry, and scorches instead of healing. Youth is rarely as vile as those older in years would make it to be. Sophistication often gives a cast to an innocent act which is both unjust and untrue.

In the second place: Where is the man who has never been tempted? Where is the woman who has never been tempted and greatly tempted? If there are such, let them be pitied, for their development is surely narrowed.

Even the great Master himself, the very Son of God, was tempted and tried like us in all things. He was tempted. He was tried. And, yet, the wonderful truth follows which is the answer, "Without sin." Though he was tempted, yet he sinned not.

As some have expressed it, "We cannot keep the birds from flying over our heads, but we can prevent their building nests in our hair." In other words, we cannot prevent thoughts coming into our minds, but we can prevent their taking lodgment there and developing into wrong words or acts. A continual belief in evil creates evil, and causes more of it to be within the world. The continual belief in the depravity of young people and its teaching as is done by some narrow-minded people, tends to create that very condition which we would avoid.

Those who would condemn so quickly a young man or young woman, because of some untoward circumstance, or because of possible guilt, can you say you have never been where you could have sinned, if you had so desired? Have circumstances never been such that you could have gone greatly wrong? Character as well as circumstances must determine.

There are men who possess a measure of that divine attribute, though tempted they sin not. Opportunity is not a sign, nor a final evidence of guilt. Personality enters in large measure, and if we have discernment to know the caliber of those with whom we are dealing, we know that there are men and women who can be trusted to do right no matter what the circumstances.

But young man or young woman, do not think of yourself in your temptations as being different from others. Others are also tempted and tried. Perhaps with some, the fires of life have grown cool, if not cold; but there has been a time. Humanity cannot be divided upon such a line as tempted and untempted.

It may be divided, if you choose, into those who yield readily to temptation, and those who hold the integrity of the soul high; and these latter do not feel boastful, but only to thank God that through his mercies and help, they have been able to keep clean and do right, despite temptation.

Nor need we seek temptation to develop our life. Temptations will come quickly enough. They are unavoidable. So the Master has directed us to pray, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil."

When temptations come, remember then that song of years past, "Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin." And you older in years, remember your past youth and meet present youth with sympathy and with help.

UTAH CHURCH ATTACKS POLYGAMY

COVENANT OF MARRIAGE

The work is from God and not from man, let the Saints remember that, said President Penrose; let them heed the counsel and teaching of God's servants and not be led astray. The work of the Lord is eternal, he continued. One of the greatest evidences of its eternal nature is the revelation of the eternity of the marriage covenant. The young people should be taught that to be married in the temple is not only a duty, but a privilege and an essential to eternal progress and highest salvation. The key of plural marriage, said President Penrose, as may be found by studying the revelation, is given to but one man at a time on earth, the president of the church. When the law of the land forbade the practice of this phase of celestial marriage, the man holding the key, at that time, President Wilford Woodruff, issued a manifesto to the effect that the solemnization of plural marriages should be discontinued; and no one in all the world, said President Penrose, has any power or authority to perform the ceremony when the key has been withdrawn. President Penrose said he speaks of these things because it has been thought advisable, inasmuch as it is believed that at least a few people do not understand the situation even yet. It has been said that some people have said plural marriage is all right even now, if the knowledge of it can be kept from the president of the church.

"Think of it," said President Penrose, "keeping it from the man who holds the key!" President Penrose said there had been from time to time certain misunderstandings about plural marriage; and subsequent to President Woodruff's manifesto President Lorenzo Snow and President Joseph F. Smith each issued renewed statements, and it was supposed the matter had been cleared up. But even now people will say: "Oh, the church leaders know all about it."

"It is false," declared President Penrose. "The church leaders do not know about it, and it is the duty and obligation of those who claim to know to bring it to their attention."

He was fervent on this point and said he can say to all Israel and to all the world that the president of the church and his associates are sincere in this matter; plural marriage is no longer countenanced, no longer allowed in the church and transgressors, if they can be apprehended, will be disciplined by the church and turned over to be disciplined under the law of the land. He said to let the people not believe these men who go about to satisfy their own lusts and lead innocent followers and pure young women astray. They are rebels, said President Penrose, rebels against church and rebels against the law of the land.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH

President Penrose closed with a fervent prayer for all the church. When President Penrose sat down President Joseph F. Smith arose and said:

"I feel it imperative upon myself to indorse and affirm without recourse, the statements that have been made by President Penrose in relation to the subject upon which he last treated. I want to say to this congregation and to the world that never, at any time, since my presidency in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have I authorized any man to perform a plural marriage, and never, since my presidency of the church has any plural marriage been performed with my sanction, or knowledge, or with the consent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and therefore such unions as have been formed unlawfully and contrary to the order of the church are null and void in the sight of God and are not marriages."—Deseret News, October 4, 1918.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

President Heber J. Grant was the first speaker. He said he attended the general conference sessions when he was a child and a young man, and for 36 years he has attended them as one of the general church authorities. He said he desired to express his thankfulness that President Smith was able to attend the opening session and hoped he would again be able to be in attendance before the close of conference. He said he gives unqualified assent and approval, as president of the council of the twelve, to what was said in the morning session concerning plural marriage. People who now advocate plural marriage, said President Grant, are in very deed rebels—and traitors. And, he said, it is the duty of those who may be approached on the matter of plural marriage, to expose those who approach them.—Deseret News, October 5, 1918.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The News trusts that those numerous pulpiteers and lecturers who have been helping out their incomes by engaging in a crusade against the "Mormon" Church for alleged continuing and conniving at the practice of polygamy will read and heed the utterances of the leaders of that church on the subject at the present general conference. To those who know the truth and are honest in stating it, these utterances are superfluous, except as they add emphasis to the declarations previously made. There has never been a time since the church authorities took this attitude, when there could be the slightest doubt as to their sincerity. Publicly and privately, in printed statements, in preaching and in conversation, they have always and unequivocally and undeviatingly adhered to the position enunciated in the so-called "manifesto." If there are those among their own people who with sincere motives have sought to put a strained construction upon their words, and have acted upon such construction, they stand branded as rebels and traitors, subject to the disciplinary punishment of the church as well as to the penalties of the law; and surely for the offenses of such individuals the great body of the church and its leaders may not be held accountable.

Language can not be found to define more plainly and positively the sentiment and the position of the church on this subject, than has been now again employed by the speakers at the present conference. By no skill or subterfuge can a dubious or double interpretation be placed upon these words. The most unlearned cannot misunderstand them, the most ingenious cannot distort them. We shall wait with interest the evidence of their effect upon those who, first above referred to, have made the welkin ring with charges of "Mormon" perfidity, duplicity, disloyalty, dishonesty and all the other crimes against the moral code. If there is a trace of honesty in the pretensions of such opponents, they will acknowledge their error and seek to do justice to those whom they have malinged. If on the other hand they continue in their falsehoods, they will deserve to be known and stigmatized for what they are—makers and promulgators of a lie for the love of lucre.—Deseret News, October 5, 1918.

You will notice that some of the speakers stated is was a rebel or traitor who would go ahead now contrary to what the leaders of the church say and enter into polygamy. If going contrary to advice and counsel of the leaders causes one of their members to become a rebel or traitor, I wonder if going contrary to the advice and counsel given many years ago by the Lord when he told his people to "Love thy wife with all thy heart and cleave to her and none else," would not be equivalent to the same offense. It was the leaders then; but now after polygamy once established by them and forced on the people, those who are now carrying out the policy of former leaders are branded as rebels and traitors.

I was in the general church offices this morning and had a talk with a son of Mr. Lund and the First Presidency, also Kimball Smith, son of Joseph F. Smith, on the subject, and they both said the leaders are warning those who are inclined to believe that polygamy would soon be one of the principles practiced here or is being practiced at the present time. On several occasions this summer I have heard several Mormons say that in a short time polygamy would be looked on as being all right, and would be in force not only in this country, but in foreign lands as well. They seemed to be elated over the situation and wished for its return. I really believe the leaders are sincere in speaking against the practice, as they are beginning to realize that public sentiment would give them a black eye again, if they thought the practice was again resumed.

Many of our missionaries, as well as Brother Holloway, report such statements from men in Utah, that they look for a return of polygamy. This is confirmed by the above quotations. Such assertions have been made very recently by members of that church.

We have also to remember the fact of several continuing to live in polygamous cohabitation, with wives previously married. This is the case with Joseph F. Smith.

To this should be added occasional references in their publications in recent years, as well as public declarations by their prominent men. This has given apparent basis for criticism by others not of their persuasion.

We are pleased to note the above and Elder Holloway's belief in their sincerity. We sincerely hope they now fully recognize polygamy for what it is and has always been—an abomination to God. This that is now setting the rank and file as "rebels" and "traitors" against the leaders has always been rebellion against God.

We are indeed glad to give space to this declaration and hope it marks the end of polygamous marriages in Utah and among her people everywhere.

FOOD VALUES

There have appeared recently in Physical Culture a series of articles concerning the condition of the crews on the Kronprinz Wilhelm and other ships, and upon the increase of heart disease in the United States. They attempt to point out a relation between heart disease in this country and beri beri in Asiatic countries, and ascribe the latter to polished rice and the former to white flour, and too much of dry food. The one thing that will prevent it is plenty of green vegetables, graham bread, and fruits. Yet the people of this country all too often look upon fruit as a luxury, instead of an absolute necessity for health. Of course, as with any other mild poison, it takes some time to destroy life.

But when one has carefully considered the evidence there can remain no longer doubt that many cases, if not most cases of heart disease are directly to be ascribed to a diet of white bread, pastry, potatoes, and meats.

The reason for the increase now, as compared with earlier years, is because of the increase of highly polished and finely ground food from which the necessary ingredients are removed. Graham flour, whole wheat flour, bran, and rice do not present the same objectionable features.

Moses emphasized the value of fruit trees and urged that they should not be destroyed, even on an enemy's land. The Mosaic law provided for the use of green vegetables liberally. It limited the use of meat in a hot country. In oriental countries health is yet preserved and the people flourish on brown bread and olives as a steady diet.

As for us, we are advised to eat wheat and vegetables, and fruit in the season thereof, and to eat no meats except in times of famine and cold weather.

WOMAN'S WORK

The American Journal of Clinical Medicine, for September, 1918, is published as a woman's number. It discusses the problem of the industrially free or the industrially bound woman. New occupations for women, including secretaryship, and what women are actually doing, are discussed. Some of them are engaged in the lumber camps, others are using tractors, and one, at least, running a railroad locomotive. Girl students at the New York State Agricultural School are engaged in carpenter work. Certainly a very large number of women are engaged in farm work—plowing, and making hay.

Several of the cities have women letter carriers, and several have girls as subway guards or conductors on the street cars. In England this has developed more than in this country, for there women are engaged in munition manufactories and the manufacture of aeroplanes. In the war they are doing everything except handling the guns.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

There has been marked development in the past few years of the idea of a league of nations. Five years ago such an ideal was considered Utopian and impossible. To-day, in many quarters, it is considered not only possible but fundamentally necessary. Some action must be taken to prevent war. This is one possible action.

Still we must recognize that no form of organization alone will make justice or peace, even though it does provide an environment more conducive to justice. It requires a reformation of character. It requires repentance. It requires a love of that which is beautiful, true, and right. It requires a love of righteousness and of truth above nationalism and mere individual privileges.

That is one reason for the necessity of the continued preaching of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was no weakling, but a strong character. He stood firmly and uncompromisingly for truth and right.

But he also stood for peace, for mercy, for brotherly love, for that spiritual and moral development of a people which is only possible when we prefer one another and help one another; when the strong work and seek not their own interest, but instead, the good of all.

A TYPICAL SITUATION

The following letter from the East represents a condition resulting from the epidemic of Spanish influenza that is sweeping over the country and even the world which seems very typical. Even in the Middle West conditions are very serious. Missionaries are compelled to take a respite in their preaching work. Brother Daniel Macgregor says it is reported that there are five thousand cases of the disease in Omaha, and funerals night and day. Very few of the Saints have had it, and with no deaths.

Graceland College is still free from it, though still under rigorous quarantine. Lamoni has escaped with few cases so far, and Independence reports very few. The letter follows:

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS, October 14, 1918.

President F. M. Smith;

Dear Brother: We are having some distressing times here and the surrounding country, owing to the influenza epidemic. All churches, schools, amusement places are still closed up; I am kept as busy as a doctor, looking after the sick and those who are dead. In Fall River and other places buildings near cemeteries, have been secured, to put the dead in, waiting for caskets to arrive, so the dead may be buried. One of our undertakers went up to Camp Devens to help embalm the dead soldiers up there. When he started to work he found that they were placed on top of one another crosswise; before the embalmers could lower their pile, another pile had been made, so fast did the men die, the undertaker played himself out, and returned to this city.

Most all of our own sick are on the way to recovery; our people seem to have the disease light. Relief committees have been formed in this place, to help nurse the sick and supply them with food. People in autos collect the food in homes and then take it to the sick—splendid work.

I am a member of the Attleboro Community Fellowship. We get up something patriotic for the city about every two or three weeks, I inclose the September 23 program.

The Liberty Loan committee raised almost their entire quota the first day of the drive. The influenza epidemic has caused a big loss along this line.

We are trying to keep the Saints alive during these times, by visiting the members and our friends and having fireside talks; our people have been blessed in more than one way during these strenuous times. Everyone is hoping that the churches will be open next Sunday, cannot tell till toward the end of the week.

Sincerely yours,

E. B. HULL.

God is unchangeable, forever the same. Let us put our trust in him, and let him mold us in his way; it may not be our way, but he knows best. Whatever comes, rest assured that it is for our good.—Olive May.

THE CLOUD OF WITNESSES

(Sermon delivered by Elder W. H. Greenwood at the conference of London District, England, held at Enfield January 20, 1918. Reported by Elder Dover E. Judd.)

I have selected two verses, which you will find in the twelfth chapter of Paul's epistle to the Hebrews, for our meditation and consideration this evening. I ought, perhaps, before reading them to observe that they should be read in connection with what precedes them. An epistle is a letter. This letter is divided into no less than thirteen chapters, so it is a pretty long one. The verses that I am going to call your attention to to-night are the first two verses of this chapter:

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

I might, perhaps, read the third verse also:

For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

Of all the people upon the earth, I suppose we claim to be the greatest of all witnesses, and when we present our claim before the people, or even to an individual, we make the declaration that the Lord himself declared that this—note the singular term—this gospel of Jesus Christ should be preached in all the world for a witness. Do not mistake the idea, or even the idea that the Christ desired to convey to us, and don't run away with the thought that every one that you bear witness to will receive the gospel, because they won't; but the object and purpose of the Almighty is that the gospel shall be presented to the world for the purpose of witnessing to them the possibilities that lay before the human family.

We claim to be in possession of this gospel. We claim to present the doctrine of Jesus Christ intact: that we neither add to nor take from so far as the Word is concerned. We believe that the law of God is absolutely perfect, and, if put into operation, will bring with it the power of regeneration to the human heart and mind. And this power gives us a witness—the witness to the power of the gospel. Please note: this power to witness will not save you. You may recognize the power, you may enjoy the power, you may live in the light of the power, but unless it is utilized it will not save you —it may rather be to your condemnation when the day of account comes and the great judgment shall sit. Not that it is necessary God should be exposed in majesty and splendor for the purpose of sitting in judgment upon the human family. So far as that is concerned, in the external sense, it would be absolutely unnecessary, because every soul will know. Why, bless me, sometimes in the world you drop across people who will tell you where you are going by your disposition—all kinds of dispositions exist in the world, and are manifested through individuality; and in like manner this gospel should witness to the human mind the divine possibility of the establishment of the character which is designated divine, that is only found and revealed in the Christ. But the standard presented to us by the Christ character, we must work for in order to attain; and every one of us are to be judged and measured by the measure of Christ Jesus our Lord. Fancy! What a wonderful day it will be!

Do we recognize the marvelous power that is given to us in this gospel of Jesus Christ and the way we are allowed to utilize this power: But in that day we shall recognize all our lost privileges and our lost opportunities. We shall be able to reckon up every minute of the twenty-four hours of the day, and how we utilized the time. We shall be able to recognize what we might have been, as well as just exactly what we are; and thus we content ourselves at times and we say: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness"—in the likeness of Christ. We do not want to wait until that time; if there was ever a time that we should be able to identify the likeness it is in the present, and if the gospel has come as a witness, and it declares that to everyone that received him—mark the term: Not believed him—but received him, to them gave he power to become sons of God. Realization, hence the individual knowledge.

What is your witness? Paul speaks here of being compassed by a cloud of witnesses. We have witnesses on every hand. For instance: sometimes we have the thought presented that there is a possibility that the gospel may not be true, that there is a possibility that the record found in the Bible may not be true, but that there may be other explanations given, or discovered, accounting for our present existence and for things as we observe them. Now what would be your answer to that proposition? What witness have you in your mind? Let me just describe how it appeals to my mind. In the first place I recognize my being, that is, that I am, not was, or to be; but I am. The present moment is mine. This moment is the moment of triumph. The next one may not be mine. I realize the present, I have the power to utilize it; I have the power to use it; I have the power to make the best of it—to get all the good from it. It is a self-evident fact to my mind that I live. We have had evidences presented to us in the short space of time that we have been in this place. We have put the brethren and sisters about to procure two meals for us, and we feel content; we feel happy. We feel it is good to be alive; but if we had not had the meals we might have been experiencing a different condition. Now that is life: the power to utilize, the power to realize, and the power to discharge those functions which bring into perfect correspondence of the interior—the internal wants with the external. We feel happy with everybody. There is not one of us here but would wish that everybody had been as pleased as we have today. Yes, of course we do. We feel happy. Why? Simply because we have utilized the power to assimilate to our necessity that which has been provided for us, and it means that when we have life we are reproducing all those sparks of wasted energy—all the parts of our being. That process is going on repeatedly, and we sing: “Change and decay in all around I see.”

We have gone so far as to discover that we do not possess the same body more than seven years—that every seven years we are a new creation. We have to spend a lot of energy to manufacture a body like this every seven years, and we do! However that may be, it is a self-evident fact that we are, and this book declares—this witness declares—that God not only created the earth (we will talk about that in a moment), but it gives you a record of the origin of man. God said: “Let us make man in our own image and after our likeness,” and we are here, in the form of God, fashioned with a mind, and fortified by the same attributes as God, in likeness and disposition. And immediately afterwards he commanded man to subdue all things unto himself. Man had given unto him sovereign power, and not only has he that in the order of creation according to the mind of God, but he becomes the sovereign of all created things and beings. This is our witness, and although thousands of years have expired, we find man is still perfect in image, in form, and blessed with mind or, as our brother prayed to-night, with soul, mind, and spirit, and with all the divine possibilities before you. Is that a fact in your experience?

The book which is one of the witnesses of the trinity states that God created the heavens and the earth. The earth is still with us—that is a self-evident fact, is it not? What does that witness to your mind to-night? Does it not witness just exactly what it did thousands of years ago when the Lord directed his servants to say, “The great I Am hath sent thee”? God’s course is one eternal round. The earth is governed just as it was in years long since gone. We have the spring, summer, autumn, and winter. Yes, God’s course is one eternal round, without diversion. You can depend upon it. If you sow your seed in the season, you can depend upon gathering your fruit, whatever kind or character it may be. These are self-evident facts.

Now returning to the state of our being, and that is as far as I need go to-night, what evidence have we? The book says that the gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come. Again, the statement is made in a previous chapter that “In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.” I have no need to quote the further testimony of the Apostle Paul: every Latter Day Saint says that when he speaks of not being ashamed of the gospel. Why? Because he was just in the position of you and me: “I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ,” we say as we uplift our heads almost with pride. We do not suppress that fact, but how often are we ashamed of ourselves? There is the point. We are willing to witness for the gospel by word of mouth at any time—that is easy—but that is not what God calls for. He wants the witnessing power of the gospel applied. He wants to see that body that is degenerated, that is deteriorated, that is strangled with death, he wants to see it pass through the proper channel and bring forth the Christ life, that the Christ man may appear. Therefore we read in Paul’s letter to the Romans: The earnest expectation of the creature—any creature in the world; anyone to whom you may be testifying of the power of the gospel—the earnest expectation of the creature awaiteth the manifestation of the power, that you are witnessing in yourselves. You see the force of that point. What is the use of my asking you, as Paul asked the saints “to run with patience the race that is set before us” if patience is foreign to our nature? You must run, but you have got to do it patiently. As a rule people when they run, don’t do it patiently. But the gospel calls for a peculiar kind of running, and the peculiar characteristic of it is patience. Think of it! The earnest expectation of the creature awaiteth the manifestation of the sons of God—Zion redeemed in the soul, in the heart, in the mind. We plead away just like old Israel used to do; we go down on our knees and we pull all kinds of faces at the Lord, thinking that he will hear our prayer, and say, “How long, O Lord, how long will it be before Zion is redeemed?” It is a wonder he doesn't answer us by revelation and say, "You are not ready."

Now let us consider the witnesses. External witnesses we might multiply, but for a beginning let me present three witnesses. You have God as the creator, as the author—the first cause if you will—the first witness. We present as a second witness the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior, the means; and the book says in the evidence of the trinity, that we are not saved by Christ but through him. Through him: he is the means. Jesus Christ is the gift of God, the second witness. Then we present to you the Holy Ghost—the holy disposition. And here we have three witnesses that will stand and testify against every one of us in that day of accounts. Three witnesses for the origin of the earth upon which we live, for your hope of the heavens that are above, for your perpetual existence! There is the author of your being. The book says so, and you cannot find anything better. Science cannot even begin to suggest anything better. God presents to you the realization, the self-evident fact: it is with you continuously. Now don't you see what Paul meant when he said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel . . . for it is the power of God"? If that is not enough you may never hope for anything to excel it.

Now, what witness have we for God? What knowledge have we of God? By what means do we comprehend or know God? The book says that secret things belong to the Lord our God, and if there is some great thing that we want to discover either for our own blessing or for the blessing of our fellows that we do not understand, there is the source to get it from. The secret of the Lord, the source of his power, is with them that fear him. That does not mean that we are afraid of him, but fear is used in the sense of reverence there; that respectfully honors God as the first great cause, and takes the evidence that he submits and puts it to the test and proves it up to the hilt, that it becomes a realized fact, in the same way as my existence and being is a self-evident fact to you to-night. That is the idea. That is the plan and there are the witnesses. These secret things belong to the Lord our God who desires you to have a knowledge of himself—a self-evident fact, that he exists. What does he do? He does not leave you to yourself with your puny experience, but he reveals himself. Yes, God reveals himself. He revealed himself to-day speaking of the age of the restoration of the gospel, and the man who was the means in the hands of God in bringing in the restored gospel was conferred with initiatory rights to adopt people into this sense of regeneration, into the kingdom of God. He saw God and Christ and they spoke to him—commissioned him. He went forth with that authority.

With your revelation, the first witness, is your Bible. There is a cloud of witnesses in the pages of that book. They all testified to the existence of God, but we have a trinity of evidence. We present to you the Bible simply as one evidence—though it comprehends a cloud of witnesses—and it is the testimony of the eastern hemisphere. The one thing that characterizes this church and people is that they bring forth a second witness, and they actually believe that while God paid attention to the people that live on the eastern hemisphere that he actually knew those that lived on the western hemisphere. Is it not wonderful that God knows so much! Well, he just acted with those people on the western hemisphere as he did with those on the eastern hemisphere and the result is that we have unison of expression, oneness of testimony, a cloud of witnesses to the saving power of the gospel—that is all.

The third witness we have is the book of Doctrine and Covenants. When I was talking to a gentleman once with regard to this work, I said, "Well, have you had a letter from the Almighty lately?" He looked at me as if he thought I was non compos mentis.

He said, "Why? Have you?"

I said, "Oh, yes, I have a whole series of them here. Yes, these are letters from my heavenly Father. Haven't you any?"

"Oh, no," he says, "we do not get revelations to-day?"

I said, "Well, when did your heavenly Father die?"

There is our trinity of evidence. I want you to make the best use of it. I cannot begin to present a tithe of the things that are contained therein. There are your three witnesses: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Make the best use of them.

Now we come back to man again; and don't you know that we have a trinity in man himself? Dressed up in this suit of clothes it looks a doubtful proposition doesn't it? But it is a fact. Man is three-fold in character. I want you to follow the idea, not just because it pleases you for a moment or two, but I want you to think about it because it means something. I want to suggest to you to-night that after God made man he lay there and God did something: he breathed into him. You had not thought, perhaps, that God had been so near to you as that. He not only breathed upon man but into him and that which was breathed into him is in existence to-night: so that the man that you see is not the man at all—it is only the house he lives in! That is all. Let that thought impress your minds. Man, then, is three-fold. It is a self-evident fact that you have a body, is it not? Oh, yes; we have a body. The book says that the blood is the life of the flesh, but the spirit is the life of the man. And it is a wonderful thing, too, but in this witness here it tells us that there are works of the flesh. I am not going to read them to you to-night, but they are found in the epistle to the Galatians, and the works of the flesh number nineteen, if my memory serves me correctly. Nineteen! And immediately after the works of the flesh are enumerated, the fruits of the Spirit are given—and the flesh has a majority of ten. Did you ever notice that? Now which is the more sensible course for us to pursue: to allow the blood which is the life of the flesh to run away with us and make us work to the extent of committing nineteen sins against this poor body of ours, or would you rather utilize the powers of the mind, utilize the power that has been breathed into us and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit? We do not have to work so hard, either, because there are only nine points—nine items. Of course, I present the thought in the light of trade unionism. If you had to do nineteen acts you would want pay for them, but if you had only nine to perform, well, perhaps you would be willing even to subtract. Just think of that!

Man is threefold in character: body, mind, and spirit. The body is subconscious, practically asleep one half its time. You would be surprised if you kept a record of the small amount of conscious intelligence that we exercise in the things of life. The spirit is the divine part of man. In order that you may develop the spiritual part or properties of your nature you do not send a postal order to Sandow for instruction and lessons, but you might do so very profitably if you wished to develop the physical part of man, because he has made it his special study and knows all about it. He is considered a great authority on physical culture. Now the Almighty is the greatest authority to-night on spiritual development. It is wonderful what aid you will get if you send a postal order along, in other words, if you will make the sacrifice. But you will have to adhere faithfully to his instructions. You will have to become firmly attached to your lessons or you will not get very much good from them.

So far as the world is concerned we say we have got a threefold enemy to fight. There is a trinity of evil, and we call it the world, the flesh, and the Devil. I really could not tell you which is the worst of the three. I might venture an opinion, but I do not think it would be very popular if I do. But I will tell you, in my estimation it is the flesh; that deceives us more than anything else, because when the Devil manifests himself you are prepared for him, and when anything opposes you in the world you are doubly prepared for it, but, oh dear, when you get a thorn through your boot, and it pricks your foot, you know about it—it comes home to us. And there is the secret of our power and of our witnesses. This power—self—has got to be destroyed. Don't you know it is self that is causing all the bloodshed to-day—you need not say another word about it. Self-interest, that is all there is to it. In the Christ you have the beautiful perfect example of self-lessness. That is the ideal we have to reach, and the blessedness of that condition even when we only get to the verge of the power to realize it, is really wonderful. Think of it! This trinity of evil—the world, the flesh, and the Devil—may be dismissed by the crucifixion of self.

Now just let me read these verses again to you: "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." Witnesses? Paul was writing, I might say, after giving that beautiful chapter on faith, and he says that by it—faith—the elders obtained a good report. Don't you know it is the pivot upon which all success depends in this great latter-day work? Faith! "Oh," says one, "I have lots of faith. I think you would be surprised, Brother Greenwood, what I do believe." Yes, and I guess I should, too! You have no right to believe anything but what you have evidence for—you must have a witness.

Listen how Paul defines faith. It is a wonderful rendering, is his definition of the word. "Now faith is the substance——" The world says there is no substance about religion, yet the word says that the very first step is substance. The world dispenses with substance, and grasps at the shadow. Let us see the reason why. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." That is a strange thing, is it not, that you can have evidence of something that you have not seen, possibly never will see, for there are some things you see in the world that you cannot believe, must not believe, and seeing is not believing always: and the world has its maxim along these lines and it says: "All is not gold that glitters." And it is true, too! You would think so after a visit to Birmingham.

Paul defines "faith as the evidence of things not seen," and he goes on speaking about the faith of the elders, the faith of Abraham and of Abel, and so on, and then he goes on to say that "without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." How? According to the evidence—according to the faith—you cannot have faith without evidence. Your faith must be based upon evidence to give you assurance. Now mark his exhortation: Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight—some of those things that weigh heavy upon us and cause our minds to be filled with doubt; some of those things that grieve us and are very painful—he bids us to lay aside every weight, and the sin—it may be ever so small, for the book says the law of the Lord is perfect and whosoever keepeth the whole law and yet offendeth in one point is guilty of all, simply because even the least transgression is sin. “Let us,” he says, “lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.”

Now the trouble is that we are in a hurry to finish the race. We want to get (to use a worldly expression) to the top as quickly as we can, and some of those things are very slowly developed. And yet, as I say there are twenty-four hours in every day, and the present is always with us, and we just simply want to maintain our fidelity according to the witness, according to whatever cloud it may be whether large or small, the witness we have of the saving power of God.

I could go on much longer talking to you of things of a threefold character. For instance, we have the word, the water, and the blood. Is it not a singular thing how all these things come in a threefold sense and confirm all our experience. Even our glory and our reward comes to us in a threefold sense. You have the glory of the sun, the glory of the moon, and the glory of the stars. Perhaps, now, you can understand the value—the depth and the breadth of the language of the Savior when he said that in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

But the greatest witness that we have, or can have, the greatest strength that we can show, depends upon us—absolutely everything depends upon the man. The possibility is found in the degenerate condition; all that a man has to do is to pass through the process of regeneration, to be brought into communion with God until ultimately he may be enabled to dwell in the divine presence of God. Don't you realize the fact? Yes? And this earth upon which you and I dwell is to become heaven. God is coming, so the witness declares, God is coming out of heaven and the cry will go forth, “Behold the tabernacle of God is with men.”

These are a few of the witnesses, but I want to submit to you to-night that the greatest witness, the greatest witness that we can submit to the world is the inherent power: the power of salvation and redemption that is given to us; that has opened our minds and placed us in touch with the divine; and, above all things has given unto us power to manifest that which the creature—the man in the street, the person in the world, the friend with whom you are conversing, is waiting for, and as you enumerate and as you tabulate these different evidences and features of the gospel, the individual is naturally just comparing these things in the mind and saying, well, have you come in touch with these things? We are the evidence, we are the witnesses—where is the power? Not in those things, but in you: the power must be shown in you:

For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.—Romans 8 : 19.

That is, by our personal realization, our desire and purpose to honor God and keep his commandments and by adding to the cloud of witnesses which I am happy to think is multiplying each day that we live.

INTELLIGENCE

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5.

Intelligence is, then, really a correct understanding of truth, or of light and truth. We very often say that the Devil is intelligent, but is he? If the glory of God is intelligence, certainly the darkness of the Devil could not also be intelligence.

There must be some difference in the mere exercise of the mind, and true intelligence. For a man to be truly intelligent he must develop all his faculties, and not be content with the use of only a part. The development of some parts of the mind will make a man selfish and unlawfully ambitious, and will lead him to climb to fame or fortune over the sorrows and distresses of others. It is that so-called intelligence of Germany, or kultur, that has led the Kaiser and his followers to want to govern the earth. Mentality alone is not intelligence, and the sooner we understand this the better for the world and the church.

ONE-SIDED DEVELOPMENT

The writer once belonged to a gymnasium; there were many men and boys who took part in the exercises for the development of the muscles of the body. Some of them went to the physician in charge of the physical department and received advice as to what exercises would be best for them to take; others thought they knew what would be the right thing for them to do, and went ahead themselves.

I noted that some of them were overdeveloped in the shoulders and underdeveloped in the lower limbs. These men liked to walk on their hands and were experts on the swinging rings. Others were great runners, but poor in arm development. Some were great kickers and did not want to do anything but kick. Now these men considered themselves athletes, but they were not so considered by the physician when they went before him. Some parts of their bodies were not developed, while other parts were overdeveloped. A muscle that is not used for a long time becomes useless.

Some kinds of fish that live in dark pools of water away from all light, lose their faculty of sight. Men by long use of their carnal faculties lose the power to discern the spiritual, and do not have a clear vision of truth. If I lose a part of my body by accident or by disuse, it cannot be said that I have a perfect body. If I lose some part of my mind, either by lack of development or by a one-sided growth, certainly it cannot be said that I am fully developed, or that I am intelligent, in the true sense of the term.

THE SEED ON GOOD SOIL

Simply the accumulation of facts from our own experience or from the experience of others, would not and does not help us toward solving the riddle of our existence. Facts are good things to know; even theories are good things to know. To know what men have done may help us to know what they may do under like circumstances. Man has achieved many things; wonderful things, and it is well to know how and why he did these things. Man, however, is limited in his research and achievement. The raw recruit may be made into a fine soldier, and the virgin earth may produce the finest crops. So the intelligence of God may come to a mind untouched by the theories of the scientists, on the origin of life, or to a soul free from the doubts of infidelity regarding the birth of Christ. He may not be able to solve all of the problems of Euclid and yet know more about God than Spencer, as made known to us in his Synthetic Philosophy. If the glory of God is intelligence, the study of God should be the most interesting study that man could take up.

It seems, however, that the study of the divine requires something more than a knowledge of men and things. We may become very proficient in delving into the splendors of the celestial worlds, and by the aid of the telescope travel from one constellation to another, even weigh the worlds and conjecture what they were made for, and yet not understand the power by which they were created. Law, order, and wonderful harmony are seen as we watch the worlds rushing through space and a beneficent power is manifested, not only in the heavens but also on the earth, and while all of this is recognized by the most casual observer, a clear knowledge of these facts does not bring us any nearer the great question, and all this expenditure of resources? Why is man made with all these great possibilities of achievement, development, and longing if they tion of all questions: What is the meaning of all are never to be realized?

THE HIGHER HELPS THE LOWER

The plant has every want supplied; the animal is content with his lot. Yet man is never content, he is always reaching out for the attainable and for the unattainable; he is always building towers to heaven. Reasoning from what we know about other creations here upon the earth, we must conclude that there is some way to satisfy the longing of the highest creation, since all of the lower creations are satisfied. Everything but man is in harmony with its environment. There is a way. Drummond shows that the higher in nature always reaches down to the lower, and brings it up higher, but it is always the superior or higher that descends to the lower. The plant reaches into the earth, and raises the elements into itself, and thus raises it higher. The animal partakes of the plant, and raises the plant life into the animal life. The higher raises the lower; help comes from without and from above. It ought not to be a hard or strange thing to believe that help can come to the most vital thing that man possesses: his mind.

Usually the man who makes a machine, a complicated one, knows most about it and how it should run. Do you think God knows how this machine called man ought to run? God reaches man. How? Man because of his very makeup is dissatisfied and when he sits down to think says to himself, "Who and what am I, and does death end it all?" Fear comes to the human mind because man discovers in his quiet, thoughtful moments that he knows very little about the true values of life. But this kind of fear of God is the beginning of wisdom. Christ came to make it possible for a man to reach God by law—by obeying the laws he taught. He promised a clear demonstration to those who would believe and obey. Is there in man sufficient power for him to raise himself without aid into the higher life? If we say "no," then help must come to us from God, and that help has been given by Christ.

GOD'S REVELATION TO US

So it is consistent with reason to believe that God as the higher intelligence and power should come to us with some kind of a revelation of himself. Not only this, but speak to us in ways and words easy for us to understand.

To say that this revelation of himself should come to us without any effort on our part to find out and obey the law governing such revelation would be folly. If the glory of God is intelligence, man must become intelligent to associate with him, at least if he is to enjoy his presence. We ought not, however, to get the idea into our minds that intelligence means simply and only, that we know how to raise fat hogs for market, or being able to tell how far Alpha Centauri is from the earth, or even to know how to make a million of money. One definition of intelligence or intellectual is as follows: "Intellectual. Belonging or relating to or performed by the intellect or understanding; as intellectual faculties. 2. Apprehensible by the intellect alone; hence with reference to mythical contemplation, of a spiritual nature: perceptible only to inspired vision or by spiritual sight."

I heard Mr. Ingersoll say that no intelligent man believed in either God or the Devil. There are many lesser lights to-day that are saying the same thing.

WHAT IS SPIRITUAL LAW?

We contend that there is both a God and a Devil, and that man has a right to choose between them as to which he will serve. All lasting development must be the result of the free exercise of the mind. The mind once started on its investigation of the source of all power, never is content to stop until the glory of God is made manifest. As power comes from the higher physical life to raise the lower, so power comes to the lower spiritual life from the higher, to raise the spiritual life of man. It comes to him by process of law—spiritual law. What is spiritual law? It must of necessity deal with the spiritual part of man, but as man is composed both of body and spirit or matter and spirit, the spiritual law or law of God deals with both, the spirit dominating and the body obeying. There may be many unknown laws of God and nature, that man has not understood, but there are some laws that have been given us by Jesus Christ that we can understand as a basis, at least, to work from in our investigations.

That there is some vital connection between faith in God and the obeying, or doing those things he requires us to do, must be plain when the results come to those who thus obey.

THE WHOLE GOSPEL LAW

We often say there is no virtue in the water, when Christ commands baptism. There may be a virtue, however, and no doubt is, when connected with other laws and ordinances commanded. The different parts of an electrical machine separated would bring no results; even when all assembled would not produce results unless put in motion by another, and that an outside power. Yet with one part lacking, all the outside power possible would not produce results. The human mind untrammelled by false philosophy reaches out toward God, so when man honestly desires to know God and can enter into the spirit of self-sacrifice that was the leading characteristic of Jesus Christ; he will naturally be drawn toward the light and be able to understand.

It will take all parts of the gospel law, and all helps possible to obtain from heavenly influences, and heavenly beings, to make us truly intelligent.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

DEMOCRACY AND WAR

Some time ago we received the following question, which we will endeavor to answer in this issue:

"Several times you have said in your editorials and in public addresses that democracies do not make war, and that if we could get a world of democratic nations all fear of war would pass away. I am not quite so sure of this as you seem to be. I remember the Boer War and the Spanish War and in both instances the people clamored for war. I am not sure that even should Germany, Austria, and Japan become republics that the people would not cry 'war' on some fancied insult to the nation. Be this as it may, I should be glad if you would give your grounds for your belief that if we had a world of democracies world wars would pass."

We are very glad to answer this question. We begin by asserting our faith more emphatically than ever in democracy as the great foundation of peace. We believe with all our heart that if Germany was as much a democracy as is the United States that there would be very little danger of wars in the world. And we say this in spite of the two examples mentioned by our correspondent which seem to point the other way. It is easy to find seeming exceptions to any great principle. But it should be remembered that both the Boer War and the Spanish War happened a long time ago, and that both England and the United States have become democracies in a much more real sense since that day. It should also be remembered that there was a noble party in England which stood out against the Boer War, including the present Prime Minister—and that it was put over with great opposition and some difficulty. It should also be remembered that when three years ago the yellow press tried to embroil us in a war with Mexico the people made no response. But, compared with real wars, as we are seeing war to-day, these were but little disturbances in an otherwise peaceful world.

The great truth is that no great war has even originated either with the people or with democracies. They have always come from kings and kingdoms. They are imposed by kings upon the people of the nations which begin them, not by the people upon the kings. This is as true of the present war as of any war in history. We were in England, a democracy, the last week of July, 1914, and we could not find a soul who wanted war. Every man of any influence was trying to dissuade Germany from going to war. We went over to France. The same thing was true there. We went into Germany. The same thing was nearly true there. In the German city where we were—the day the war began—we met no Germans who wanted war or knew why their country had gone to war. The war was imposed upon the Germans, as much as upon the rest of the world, by kings.

There happens to be a remarkable corroboration of all we have been saying in a notable book that has just appeared, Face to Face with Kaiserism, by James W. Gerard. Ex-Ambassador Gerard says on page 21 of his book: "When I talked at length one day with President Wilson on my visit to America in October, 1916, he remarked, half to himself, in surprise at my tale of war, 'Why does all this horror come upon the world? What causes it?' 'Mr. President,' I answered, 'It is the king business.'" Then he proceeds: "A German republic would never have embarked on this war; a German Congress would have thought twice before sending their own sons to death in a deliberate effort to enslave other peoples. In a free Germany teachers, ministers, and professors would not have taught the necessity of war." Again, on page 23: "Kings come to look upon their subjects as toys. A postcard popular in Austria and Germany showed the old Emperor, Francis Joseph, seated at a table with a little great grandnephew on his knee, teaching the child to move toy soldiers about on boards; and it is unfortunately true that the same youngster—should the system of the Central Empires be perpetuated—will be able to move his subjects across the map of Europe just as he did the toy soldiers on his great-grand-uncle's table. He will be able to tear men from their work and their homes, to seize great scientists, great chemists, great inventors—men who may be on the eve of discoveries or remedies destined to rid the human race of the scourge of cancer or the white plague—and send them to death in the marshes of Macedonia or the fastnesses of the Carpathians because some fellow king or emperor has deceived or outwitted him." Finally, Mr. Gerard puts it all in a word: "In a monarchy all subjects seem the personal property of the monarch and all expressions of power become personal. This extends throughout all countries ruled by royalty."

No one has stated this truth, that democracies do not make war, more clearly than our own President. Here are his words: "No one who really comprehends the spirit of the great people for whom we are appointed to speak can fail to perceive that their passion is for peace, their genius best displayed in the practice of the arts of peace. Great democracies are not belligerents. They do not seek or desire war. Their thought is of individual liberty and of the free labor that supports life and the uncensored thought that quickens it. Conquests and dominations are not in our reckoning, nor agreeable to our principles." Believing this as thoroughly as he does, the President has put democracy for all nations as one of the chief aims of the war in every utterance he has made. He has even gone so far as to insist that there can be no negotiations with Germany until the people become the responsible parties. Negotiations with the present autocracy would have no value. Autocracies lie and plot and scheme and begin to prepare for "the next war" while professing peace. Negotiations with a people would have worth and permanency. Great peoples do not lie and cheat and scheme and play the hypocrite. They love peace—even the German people would love it could they once have anything to say about preserving it. The President is right. Could we get a Germany as much of a democracy as is America the fear of great wars and all wars of aggrandizement would vanish from the world. It is interesting to remember that Emanuel Kant, a great German himself, saw this years ago and said: "Now, in point of fact, the republican constitution, in addition to the purity of its origin as arising from the original source of the conception of right, includes also the prospect of realizing the desired object—perpetual peace among the nations. And the reason of this may be stated as follows: According to the republican constitution, the consent of the citizens as members of the state is required to determine at any time the question whether there shall be war or not. Hence, nothing is more natural than that they should be very loath to enter upon so undesirable an undertaking; for in decreeing it they would necessarily be resolving to bring upon themselves all the horrors of war. And, in their case, this implies such consequences as these: to have to fight in their own persons; to supply the costs of the war out of their own property; to have sorrowfully to repair the devastation which it leaves behind; and, as a crowning evil, to have to take upon themselves at the end a burden of debt which will go on embittering peace itself and which it will be impossible ever to pay off on account of the constant threatening of further impending wars. On the other hand, in a constitution where the subject is not a voting member of the state and which is, therefore, not republican, the resolution to go to war is a matter of the smallest concern in the world. For, in this case, the ruler, who, as such, is not a mere citizen but the owner of the state, need not in the least suffer personally by war, nor has he to sacrifice his pleasures of the table or of the chase or his pleasant palaces, court festivals, and such like. He can, therefore, resolve for war from insignificant reasons, as if it were but a hunting expedition; and, as regards its propriety, he may leave the justification of it without concern to the diplomatic body, who are always too ready to give their services for that purpose." Music After the War

There is just now a great deal of speculation being indulged in among musical circles as to what will be the state of our music after the war. It is but natural. The war is making great inroads upon our none too abundant musical material, and has already played havoc with many of our musical organizations, some of whom have been forced to disband in consequence of so large a proportion of their membership being called to the colors. Some of our choirs can appreciate this, having had their ranks "all shot to pieces," in that the Governments' conscription demands have taken their male voices.

Our anxiety as to music after the war is a most proper one and naturally to be expected. The process of developing our present degree of musical attainment has been a slow one, the result of many painful efforts. To now see this development frustrated and our efforts dissipated is certainly discouraging, and we can well wonder how much of the material now being taken from us will come back to us after the war.

Let us not needlessly worry. Some of our efforts will doubtless be lost; some of the material we have sent "over there" may never come back; some of the activities we have so earnestly fostered may never be resumed; but there are abundant signs that ample compensation will be granted us in many ways we do not now conceive. Our music may not be the same after the war; it will probably be much different, but all indications point out that it will be much better. Unless this terrible conflict is carried to the point of effectual extermination, which we pray may not be in the divine contemplation, the material for our renaissance will be found in the new period following this war.

In The Literary Digest for September 28 is an excellent article that stimulates us to vision the future through the lenses of hope. It is entitled, "New status of military bands." It is an account taken from the New York Tribune of the visit of Walter Damrosch, the noted musical savant and orchestral director, to France, where he had the privilege of interviewing General Pershing, on the work of music in our armies. Note the extensive preparations for the development and instrumentation of the military bands, as well as the numerical standard for each band.

"Summoned to general headquarters only a few days before the big offensive at the Marne, Mr. Damrosch dined with General Pershing and his staff. 'We spoke not one word of battles—only of music,' he says.

"As a result of the conference Mr. Damrosch examined personally every one of the two hundred bandmasters conducting in the American Expeditionary Force. It was decided that since they are to be commissioned second lieutenants by recent order of Congress they must be trained, as all officers are, in their special line.

"So, with the aid of the French Government and the cooperation of Pershing's staff, a school has been established, to open about October 15 in an old stone mill near general headquarters, where conductors will be instructed. There will be a supplementary school to train players in order that the personnel of every American band will be fifty real musicians. General Pershing has desired that the bands be modeled on the Garde Républicain. The pupils will be trained to play the oboe, bassoon, and French horn, instruments used by the famous French band, but not by the Americans. It will take three months to train them and two to train the conductors.

"André Caplet, now sergeant in the French Army, who conducted for two years at the Boston Opera, will be at the head of the school. François Casadesus, another famous French musician, will teach orchestration, and many professors serving as privates in the French Army will be released to teach the Americans.

"According to Mr. Damrosch, this will place American band music in the army on an equal footing with that of bands in the French and British armies. The regimental band will no longer be at the whim of the commanding officer. It will be used only for musical purposes, because of the extremely important psychological effect of music on the men. The band will not go near the front-line trenches, but will play the regiment to the front and meet it with music on its return.

"During his stay in Paris Mr. Damrosch witnessed a remarkable change in the feelings of the French people, from deep depression to a glow of enthusiasm, due, he says, to the victory of the Americans at Château-Thierry and the constant arrival of fresh American contingents. It was with this new impetus that the French went into the battle of the Marne."

This is not all that the Government is doing for our soldiers and sailors, not only before they leave our shores but after they get "over there." In every camp, cantonment, or divisional assignment of men the Government is going to unusual lengths to provide musical activities for our boys in khaki. Any soldier boy who can play a band instrument reasonably well is given a chance to "do his bit" in the regimental band. Many of the camps and cantonments have organized orchestras, glee clubs, and other musical activities among the men. There are song masters in each camp or cantonment who teach the "Sammies" to sing in the big massed choruses that meet regularly at the various centers. Musical entertainments of good quality are provided for the enjoyment and relaxation of our boys, so that better musical ideals are thereby being fostered. With us who remain the "home fires" are kept burning musically in many places through the instrumentality of the community chorus.

Now, what shall the harvest be of all this? The several million of our boys who will come back to us will demand music, more music, better music, and their demands will have to be met. They will have been taught to love music; to want the music of band and orchestra and the opportunity to express themselves musically in song and chorus. They will be the effectual leaven in our national life that will lead to the growth of better music ideals and practices among us. The thousands of boys who have served in the magnificent regimental bands that are the ideal and aim of the Government will come back to us determined that band and orchestra music shall in the future have its own among us. The desire for music, the love of music, the determination to have music in its most abundant measure will be in the hearts of these boys and they, uniting with the forces at home, will see to it that we do have music in ever increasing measure.

Let us therefore look forward to the brighter day of music that will dawn upon us and prepare for a renewal of activities when it does come. Further, let us as a church prepare to take our place and have our part in the coming renaissance.

The Dominant Chord

The master had been teaching. Then I heard Him touch a single note low in the scale,
And say, "Now find a harmonizing chord,
All strength and sweetness; but let this prevail."
One timid tried—'twas plaintive minor wailing;
One boldly struck a sharp, discordant strain;
One smote a chord—the dominant prevailing—
And joyed the note's new life and power to gain.

Our Master has been teaching. He has given Us all a chosen note, low in life's scale,
Bidding us seek its harmonies for heaven—
Oh what dire shame and discord, should we fail!
Doubt, fear, and self are not the notes we want—
Trust, hope, and love swell high and jubilant.
Oh, glorious chord—chord of the dominant!

Old People in the Choir

"I don't care! If they're going to have all those old people stuck 'round in the choir I won't sing in it any longer. Just look how they acted last Thursday night at the choir practice. They just insisted on singing nothing but those old, worn-out tunes, like "Duke Street" and "Redeemer of Israel," and when us younger singers asked if we couldn't practice some of those pretty new hymns, old Sister Passy sniffed and said she could easily see how the church was drifting into worldiness by the kind of tunes people were demanding nowadays. I think she's an old nuisance, anyway, so I do."

"H'm! Them youngsters we've got in the choir certainly do think they're smart. If we just stepped aside and let 'em, they'd run our choir just like them high-toned city choirs, that actually pay their singers money to praise the Lord. Our old-time hymns aren't good enough for them any longer; we must sing them new highfalutin' kind that make you feel like you want to dance. I declare, I don't believe I want to sing in the choir any longer if it's going to be run by such smarties."

The above hypothetical bits of conversation are not altogether imaginary and certainly not at all impossible. We have heard the substance expressed in them a number of times and they represent in a humorous way the tendencies of the young and the old classes in our choirs to look askance at each other in a somewhat intolerant as well as critical way.

As long as young people are young and old people are old and each is impelled by the common mainspring of human nature we presume there will always be this element of antipathy whenever the two classes are thrown into association. It is in effect a species of intolerance and should be discouraged and corrected whenever possible. The young should seek to respect the aged, not only because of their gray hairs, the honorable badge of their lives of endurance, but for the experience and counsel they can impart. The aged should endeavor to regard the estate of youth with its ambitions as a very proper one. Above all, they should strive in every possible way not to live so much in the fruitless past.

In some of our choirs there is found the somewhat precarious mixture of old people and young people. In some instances the mixture progresses satisfactorily; in others there is more or less friction. We remember an instance of a choir "somewhere in the church" that was composed of a singularly heterogeneous collection of young and old, some of whom were just reaching the age where the instinct to "keep company" with some agreeable companions of the opposite sex was beginning to manifest itself, and others who were the veritable grandparents of these same ardently inclined striplings. But little attempt had been made, seemingly, to amalgamate these incongruous elements and friction was the inevitable result. Finally the young people resolved on executing a strategic coup on the old people. They assembled bright and early one Sunday morning in full force and hustled into their places into the choir seats, their numbers being sufficient to practically fill them all. "All went merry as a marriage bell" until the old people arrived on the scene to find their accustomed places being occupied in all the dignity of "squatter sovereignty" by "them upstarts." A hasty council of war was held by the invaded forces and a campaign to recover lost territory was instituted. Then the dispossessed old people went boldly up to the smiling, confident "upstarts," who rested secure in the thought that possession was "nine points of the law," and gently but firmly notified the aforesaid "upstarts" that they were sitting in their seats. The forces of invasion were not expecting this counter maneuver, which threatened their left wing, and were forced to retreat in disorder, leaving the old people in possession of the field. It was said that "Coronation" was never sung with more enthusiasm by the victors and with less fervor by the vanquished than it was that morning.

A proper and wise adjustment of forces in choirs composed of mixed old and young must be had if harmony is maintained and the full measure of service rendered. There must be the rightful amount of "give and take" on both sides. The young should give to the old their proper need of kindly respect; the old should remember that the young have ambitions and ideals that in the main are right and proper and that upon them is laid the burden of the world and its progress, which burden the old have had to relinquish with the advance of age and its infirmities.

A brief inquiry into the Lord's instructions concerning the conduct of our musical services will perhaps give some practical hints as to how our young and old choir members may adjust themselves to each other. We are told (Doctrine and Covenants 119:6) that "humility and unity of spirit" in the conduct of the song service in "acceptable with God," but that sadness "and bitterness of spirit" in that service is not pleasing to him; that therefore all strife and contention in the conduct of this service must cease. "The young men and the maidens" are commanded to "cultivate the gifts of music of the song" that they may the more effectually render that service. But the "middle-aged and the old" are also instructed not to forget the "gladsomeness of their youth," that the efficiency of their service may be the more enhanced, for they are enjoined to "aid and assist so far as their cares will permit."

Let both young and old engaged in choir work remember that the service is a blessed one, desired and accepted with God. Let them give due tolerance to each other and strive to so adjust their associations that they may in harmony

"labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."

When You Write to the Officers

Many inquiries come to our desk which should more properly be addressed to one or another of the general officers of our auxiliary. We therefore again print the names and addresses of these women, and suggest that you preserve the list for future reference. Cut it out, or copy it, and place it in your address book, so that when next you have occasion to write, you will be able to determine the proper one to address, thus avoiding duplication of time, effort and expense. Better still, perhaps, would be to send to the General Secretary for a copy of the new supplement to our Year Book, in which are given the details of our organization, together with the names of leaders and that part of our work they have undertaken to do.

The Organizer

The organizer is the official representative of the Woman's Auxiliary in districts and stakes.

She has full charge of the work in her territory and should be consulted on all matters where information and advice is desired. For some organizers it is difficult to leave their homes and travel extensively; therefore, we would urge that you make the acquaintance of your organizer at the district conference and consult with her there, as much as possible, about your local work.

When an organizer visits your branch and establishes the Woman's Auxiliary work, it is expected that her expenses will be met by those receiving the benefits of her visit.

We urge a hearty cooperation with the organizer. Make your needs known to her and she will advise you to the best of her ability.

Below is a list of appointments of organizers who have notified me of their acceptance. Those who have not responded are urged to do so at once, that an additional list may be published soon and the members in your district notified of your appointment.

Are These Your Children?

May I, who am only a "mother by proxy," be permitted to write a few words of entreaty to the "real" mothers who read this? I am a primary-school teacher, and in my work with little children I have come across some conditions which make me long to write these few words. I hear some mother say, "Oh spare us from the advice of old maid school-teachers!" Nevertheless, being not so very old, I rush in, where, I presume, an older and wiser person would fear to tread.

In my work I have come across some conditions which are very common, and in my heart there arises the longing to call the attention of all mothers to these things. Even if what I say does not apply to you, you undoubtedly know some one to whom it does apply, and you can pass on the tiny word of advice, and—who knows?—may save the future happiness of some little child.

I have little children five days a week, most of their waking hours. I see them under natural conditions, at their work and at their play. It is my business, first of all, to make "good animals" of them. This, I believe, is the reason that I see many things that the parents do not see. Many mothers, from too many other cares and worries, from "unseeingness" and carelessness because of daily association, and, worst of all, the most common, from ignorance, neglect the little things that cannot but result disastrously for their little ones.

On investigating in my room of over fifty children, I found that only eight had ever used a tooth brush, and only four of these, regularly. Three had a "common" tooth brush in their homes, used occasionally by any member of the family! Oh, mothers! Some may say this is a little thing. Well, perhaps, but mostly not! A toothbrush costs so little and it is easy to teach the little folks to use them, morning and night. This soon becomes a habit that nothing can break. "Of what good is this?" you ask. The mouth is the greatest carrier of disease germs of any member of the body, and the teeth are the storehouses, literally, for these. A good tooth soap, or even common table salt, will work wonders in destroying these germs. A doctor told me to-night, as a precaution against the dread influenza that is sweeping over our country, to have the children wash their teeth four or five times a day with common table salt, in order to destroy incipient disease germs, that lodge there.

Dirty teeth, with food lodged in the crevices, will soon cause the teeth to decay. I found that nearly every child in my room had decayed teeth. This means impaired digestion, and other physical ailments which result directly. A tooth brush, some salt, the conscientious daily use of these, will save money for yourselves, parents, and, for the children, an uncounted amount of suffering.

Then, next, and perhaps most neglected of all, are adenoids and enlarged tonsils. Oh, mothers, I pray that you will learn the dangers that rest in these, and that you will never permit them to go uncared for. It is found that adenoids are the causes in many cases of stupidity and mental dullness. There is nothing more dangerous to the child's health and intellect and yet, perhaps, nothing more neglected. Adenoids cause disfigurement of the nose and mouth, and in advanced cases deform the shape of the face, and make it loathsome to look at. They are also lodging and breeding places for disease germs, and often the spot where diphtheria gains its seat. Most mothers fear the operation necessary for their removal. I have a horror myself of operations, and have a decided prejudice against them, and yet I pray that no mother who loves her child will ever let it go without having these enemies to health removed, when necessary.

Let me tell you of a case I had in the training school of our normal, a case, which is, I fear, only too common. In my class was a boy, with pinched and deformed face, eyes wide, dull, and staring, having all the defects of the "mouth breather." My heart ached for this little child. He sat there, day after day, apathetic, dull, stupid. My supervisor took up the matter with his parents, whereupon they said, "Why, there is nothing wrong with him! He's never been sick a day in his life!" Think of it! Nothing the matter with him! and yet, because of his adenoids his whole face is deformed, and the happy, cheerful child which he normally was, sat there day after day, an object of pity and heartache, dull, stupid, and, at times, aroused into fits of temper almost maniacal in fury! Yet he was a dear lovable child! A specialist who examined all the children found this lad to be mentally aged only six years, when, cronologically, he was nearly ten. Four years retarded, and a life of suffering and inadequacy ahead, just because those parents, in their ignorance, committed a crime against his body! Are our States committing similar crimes in not having school doctors and nurses empowered to act above the parent's ignorance? Are you, my reader mothers, committing a crime against your child? Act before it is too late, I beg.

How many of you have ever had a cold in the head, and had to breathe temporarily, through the mouth? Did you feel happy at the time, and mentally alert and at your best? Or did you feel heavy, dull, depressed, and sluggish? Just put yourselves in the place of the child with adenoids, who never gets enough needed air and circulation up into his head, due to the stoppage in the nasal passages caused by adenoids. How could you expect him to learn much, living always in that condition?

Enlarged and diseased tonsils are another cause of sorrow which can be easily removed. Chronic sore throats, tonsillitis, and even the dread diphtheria, may be prevented by a step in time. Then, too, many of God's little ones are suffering mentally, physically, and morally, when another slight operation, for either sex would save them. A great deal of immorality and evil habits might have been avoided, by a slight operation when the first signs for need are shown.

Then again, eye trouble, and, in many cases, actual blindness, can be avoided if only the parents knew, and insisted upon the attending doctor or nurse washing out the eyes of the new born babe with a two per cent solution of silver nitrate. Even if you feel sure that there is no possibility of congenital disease, yet insist upon this precaution being taken. The eyes of the child, in its passage at birth, must of a necessity get full of matter which will cause soreness, if not blindness, unless care is taken. Most doctors know this, now, and attend to it, but anyway, you be sure that they do! Take no risks that involve such terrible consequences to the heritage of your child. Then, later, teach your child; to take proper care of his eyes. Teach him to avoid eye-strain; to avoid reading facing or even looking at a strong, bright light. Teach him not to read lying down or leaning over his book. Do not let him sit on front seats at the movies, for the eye-strain in this all-too-popular diversion, is very dangerous to the eyesight of children, even from the rear of the room!

Mothers cannot be too careful in teaching their children habits of cleanliness. The idea of germs is often the butt for jokes, but pretty serious jokes some of them have proven to be. Teach them not to drink from public drinking cups, nor to use common or public towels. Teach them not to handle things which many other people have handled. Teach them to thoroughly wash their hands, often, during the day, and especially after a trip away from the home, to school, or down town, or playing with other children. The carefulness won't hurt anything and it may save a lot of worry, anxiety, suffering, or sorrow.

Be sure that your children are well nourished. It is appalling the number of children who come to school having had little or no breakfast, or, which is almost worse, only coffee. Children have not strength to study, or to ward off disease, or resist its attacks, if they are poorly fed or illy nourished. There are so many good books upon the feeding of children, no mother is justified in remaining in ignorance concerning the needs of her children. She should study to understand, and not try to feed her children the same things her husband eats.

I should like to recommend again, as has before been urged from these pages, the three pamphlets mentioned by Mrs. Max West in her articles. No woman with little ones, or expectant mother, or any woman, for that matter, who has the care of children now, or who may ever have, can afford to be without such knowledge as these pamphlets give. They are on the subjects "Prenatal care," "Infant care," and "Child care," and may be obtained, free of charge, by simply sending a request for them to the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia. They contain good, practical, every-day advice of value to any woman.

If, by means of this little article, even one mother takes heed to the "little" things I have mentioned which menace her child's health and happiness, the labor of writing and printing these words will not have been in vain. For the sake of the men and women of to-morrow, who will lead our church and our Nation, I make this plea for the little ones of to-day!

A Group of Winners

Brother Edward Rannie, writing from Holdenville, Oklahoma, pays most enthusiastic tribute to the splendid work of our Auxilliary located at Oklahoma City. He thinks they are too modest to "toot their own horn," but wishes their good work shall not go unnoticed as it may prove an encouragement and incentive to other locals to hear of their success. For five years they have conducted a dining hall at the State Fair, and their work has expanded with each year. This year they had ten tables, each accommodating ten people. During the rush hours from sixteen to twenty women are kept busy, and five men were "on the job" steadily. Young, attractive women waited on the tables and they had the support of Brother F. W. Kueffer in the capacity of "spieler," who has proven himself a past master in this art of attracting the attention, and arousing the interest of the casual passer-by.

The meals were served for fifty cents, and the entire portion was arranged upon a large platter, with the exception of the dessert. Nearly all the dinners had chicken on the bill of fare, with roast beef for supper. On the busiest day 1,100 meals were served. Brother Rannie recalls one evening when 700 were served for supper and he acted as bread cutter, and says he sat from four o'clock to seven-thirty without getting off his chair, too busy to look around!

Some of the young women had charge of a cold drink stand, where the children of the Saints helped nobly in the work of accommodating the patrons. Comparing the proceeds of other years the sisters have managed this hall, Brother Rannie found satisfying gains. The amount cleared this year, above all expenses, was $1,617, from which the sisters first paid their tithing, and then bought a Liberty Bond. They also made the final payment on their church piano, and have offered to pay for certain desired improvements upon the church property which will cost $600.

The officers of this energetic and successful little group of women are Sister Godfrey Kueffer, president, Sister R. M. Maloney, secretary, and Sister F. W. Kueffer, treasurer, all of Oklahoma City. Several of the ladies proved to be good missionaries as well as financiers, and in quiet ways got in a goodly amount of gospel work along with the material. We congratulate these sisters on their splendid success, realizing that it came with much hard work, both mental and physical, and represents a unity of effort highly commendable.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Northeastern Illinois

We enjoy reading the news from other districts, so will try to reciprocate to some extent at least. As a district we certainly are made to feel that we are living in the last days. From childhood we have heard preaching and prophecy relative to these very days in which we are living, but now we are seeing the real thing, it seems worse than we could imagine or did imagine from reading the Scriptures, the preaching and prophesying.

To-day the various camps in the United States are scenes of suffering, that a few months ago were not dreamed of by most of us. Thousands of our soldiers are being buried this side of the battle fields of France! Camp Grant of this district is a scene of grief and sorrow as hundreds of our boys are being laid to rest. Some fathers and mothers say there is a certain satisfaction about this, as they know where the body of their son is, how buried, etc. However it is a sad condition and makes us wonder what the end will be. I remember hearing some years ago when all was peace, a prophecy stating that not far ahead in this country, that there would not be, in a certain section, enough living left to bury the dead. These conditions begin to make one think of the things we have heard.

I have noticed for some months a spirit of boastfulness on the part of many, and I have tried to warn our people against it, stating that our Nation should be very humble and ready to give all the glory to God for whatever was accomplished for the cause of right, and that Latter Day Saints should be the last of all to boast. I have heard some go so far as to say that "one American could lick five Germans, any day." It made me feel sad for nothing was said about God assisting, and we know that if the allies are successful it will be because the Lord has come to their assistance, in this time of need.

This district is doing what it can to keep things moving as to the church here, and doing some by the way of assisting the Presiding Bishop with funds. Everywhere I go I see the fact that our young men are fast going from us, to serve their country. Certainly it behooves all those who are left, young, middle aged, and older ones, to do all that lies in our power to keep the cause of Zion moving as rapidly as possible, for the time will be all too short before the demands on the church will be greater in many ways. And perhaps the instruction given in Doctrine and Covenants 42:12 should receive special attention and application to our lives:

"Again thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands, and let all things be done in cleanliness before me. Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."

There certainly is a demand for activity on the part of all if we are ever able to accomplish the work the Lord has outlined to be done. We hope that the Sunday school offering of this district will be far ahead of what it was last year if possible, but if so we will have to make a greater effort than ever before, when meeting the many demands of our country in these trying times of war. So far as the farming district is concerned, there is a wonderful crop throughout this district, of all sorts, but the cost of labor is very high, and for husking will be hard to get. There is no excuse for anyone being idle in these times, and even those who are only able to do half a day's work can find employment. I have read with pleasure and satisfaction the editorial by Bishop McGuire, on "Consecration, surplus, and tithing," and I hope that every Saint will read with care and try to do the very best he can to carry out the requirements of the law.

I also wish to recommend that the Saints write the Herald Publishing House and get the tracts on the recent disaffection in Toronto. The truth as brought forth by Brethren Rushton and Williams will show that the church has been long-suffering; perhaps too much, so.

We missionaries of this district are trying to keep busy, Brother Christy for the most part in Chicago, but of late has held a series of meetings at the Deselm Branch. Saturday we were given notice through the local papers that no more public meetings could be held till October 19 at 12 p. m., so this missionary is going home to-morrow and assist his wife who is not in good health at present. Had a very pleasant series of meetings at Buckley and was, for the most of the time, cared for at the home of Mr. and Sister William Hardy. We found it a home indeed and long for the time when Mr. Hardy will obey the truth also. Other homes made welcome the missionary, and we desire that the good Lord will bless them all. Have been here now eight days at Piper City Branch and can report that the Saints are doing real well and those not of the faith told me that they never lived among such good neighbors as they found here of our membership. I feel very thankful that the neighbors thus hold our people in esteem. Brother Heavener (priest) is the only officer here as yet, but we see material growing that will some day assist him, if they continue as they now are. One year ago when here with Brother McDowell we baptized six; five of them attended the sacrament meeting last Sunday and are all in the faith. The other one is a school-teacher and teaching some miles away. There are several here that we hope will soon be with us and among them William Quick, husband of Sister Ada. He has long been a friend of the work and assisted with his means and many other ways and it would do us all good to see him with us fully.

Your brother and servant in Christ,
PIPER CITY, ILLINOIS. JASPER O. DUTTON.

Augustine Dwyer in Washington

[The following letter was sent to President F. M. Smith by Brother Dwyer from Washington, dated September 16.—EDITORS.]

Washington has become the capital of the world! I am here, the guest of friends of other days, will leave for Philadelphia this evening. Washington to-day is a very different city from the Washington with which I was familiar, ten years ago. Then men were talking in terms of dollars and cents, to-day they are talking in terms of life and death. The shadow of this war is over the Capital.

Yesterday, with my host and hostess, I attended service in the President's church. The edifice was packed. I inclose a bulletin. The President did not attend. Since the prohibition on running autos on Sunday, has been put into effect, he does not go out on Sunday, save in the grounds of the White House. His advisers object to his taking any risks during these critical times. It is said if he had his own way he would go.

I listened to a masterly and timely sermon, from the lips of his preacher, upon Nehemiah. I have never heard the beautiful character of that great leader of a far-off day so impressively portrayed. . . . His sermon showed evidence of a great thinker, and a man who has covered large tracts of reading.

I was deeply impressed with the solemn hush and reverence of the waiting congregation. They seemed to have come away from the toils and distractions of the world to listen to a message from the Eternal. Five pews were filled with United States officers—and much of the body of the church had a generous sprinkling of uniformed men. The dignity and simplicity of the service were all that could be desired. No choir—congregational singing.

During the service I thanked God that our people in all the branches are awakening to the importance of church decorum. Every branch I visit, I hear words of thanks for the lecture you had me give at General Conference on church decorum. It has been blessed of God and is bearing fruit. We have the best people in the world so far as real genuineness of character is concerned. I love them most because they are so free from the artificial accessories that go with a life of conventionalities.

At 9.45 this morning Mr. Howard and myself drove to the White House in his beautiful car. The president was announced to receive at ten o'clock, but it was eleven before we were admitted into his presence. There were fourteen others. The meeting was not a private interview, nor did it have any particular purpose attached to it. We had a privilege accorded us which any citizen might have, if he were properly recommended. However, it was something to be valued to get so close to the personality of a man who holds almost the civilized world in his grasp. He had a pleasant word of greeting for each one, with a firm hand grasp, then we filed out. I noticed a very different man in appearance from the man I met years ago at Princeton University. His voice seems freighted with the awful responsibility that has been laid upon him, and yet its tone is optimistic. One feels in his presence the dignity of being a citizen of this great Republic. He has about him more of that indefinable something which distinguishes a truly great man than perhaps any man I have ever met save the great Gladstone. I will never forget the experiences of this visit to the Nation's Capital. Last night, more than all the experiences, will be valued most. I gratified my ambition to deliver my lecture on Wilson in Washington. I had a large gathering of cultivated people and all I said was well received so far as I am in the way of knowing. This afternoon, at three, I will speak before a body of young Jews in service upon the subject, "The rise of Israel." This is a great week for our Jewish friends. Their synagogues are open and crowded. It is the great feast of Yom Kippur. I will attend one of the synagogues this noon, in a few minutes. My host and hostess have many friends among the Jews of this city. The Jews, as a class, are ardent supporters of Woodrow Wilson.

The unflinching attitude of the Nation toward the war is: There must not be an incomplete victory. The Germans must be brought to see that militarism and belligerency don't pay. We will win, but oh, at what a cost! The Nation's duty is pushing along a rocky road of blood and pain and sacrifice. In my lecture last night I made a statement that called forth enthusiastic approval. It was this: "This war cannot end—it must not end—until mankind is liberated from all systems which deny the principle of government with consent of the governed. Many minds are still dark. They fail to understand that this is a war for universal liberty, and not a misunderstanding that can be patched up by Germany and the allies." I think the more we emphasize that fact, in our public utterances, the more we will show ourselves to be in harmony with our Government, which is, indeed, the one important thing for every public speaker, who for conscience and country's sake, is giving himself to the shaping and molding of public opinion. These days in Washington, are of supreme value to me, and I am deeply grateful to the dear friends who have made it possible.

With all manner of kind wishes and assurance of daily remembrance at the throne of grace, I am, dear Brother Smith, Fraternally yours, AUGUSTINE DWYER.

How Does YOUR Report Read

There is confusion still existing in the minds of some workers. Let the members of the local and district boards meet. As a committee they arrange the work for each member to do. Report is made of full work done by the committee. Make out three like reports and send one to the Religio, one to the Sunday school, one to the branch or district. The district boards should report to the chairman of the general commission once in six months. Make special effort to get in the annual report before March 1.

What is being done? Much is being done. I take up the report, that lies on top of recent ones, from Seattle. It tells us that over twelve hundred pieces were distributed in the past six months, seventy books sold, eighteen subscriptions taken for church papers, etc. Other districts are sending strong reports. What has your local done this year? Why not begin now to write out a few letters asking the Saints to send you their clean papers that your committee may place them where they may be read. Have you placed any boxes in public places? There is the local barber shop, the hotel lobby, the station in the country place, the entrance of the church. It is far better to give out old papers, no matter of what date, then give out none at all. Do not wait. It seems that the bugbear of our work (or nonwork) is waiting. "Why do you wait, dear brother, why do you tarry so long?"

Call into service somebody's auto and take a trip, one of these lovely fall days, into the country. Visit the homes of the Saints and collect from them their clean papers, tracts, church books, and arrange for their distribution. It is worth while. Why wait? Let it be said of us: "Thou hast been faithful in that which is little; I will make thee ruler of that which is much."

A Vision and a Testimony

To the many testimonies that have been given regarding and in favor of the divinity of this grand and glorious latter-day work, I wish to add mine. In the fall of 1871, while working in the Dayton, Illinois, woolen mill as a weaver, I was taken down with typhoid fever and came near passing over the river of death, but through the mercy and wisdom of God, and the kind and loving care under the hands of Brother and Sister Chris Johnson, I recovered, and when strong enough to travel, I went West as many others have done to fully regain my health.

I stopped at Omaha, Nebraska, and after a few days of recuperation, a very unwise notion entered into my head. (Being at this time only twenty-one years of age, I was not as wise as I might have been.) I planned a hunting expedition in the far West alone and on foot. Accordingly, I supplied myself with an up-to-date hunting suit, firearms, and ammunition, in fact everything suitable for the fray; I bade good-by to the innkeeper, and was off, feeling just fine, in fact never felt better in body and mind.

But before I had passed half way through the city (Omaha) I became so deathly sick that I could go no farther, and sat down on the sidewalk in front of some business houses, and leaned up against an awning post. Storekeeper after storekeeper came out to take a look at the strange hunter. Some would venture up and remark, "You seem to be very sick, young man. Where are you from? Where are you going?" and the like. I replied the best I could, and off they went without offering to give me a helping hand, or a cup of cold water.

At last another storekeeper stepped up to me and said: "You are very sick, young man, let me help you into my place of business. Myself, wife, and daughter have rooms in the back part of our business house. Come and lie down on one of our beds. Soon you may be all right and able to move on." I complied with his request and offer. Oh, what a Godsend! Never did a bed give greater comfort. But little did I think that I would hold that bed down for six long months.

After lying down, the keeper returned to the store, but soon came back, and seating himself up against the bed, he inquired: "Where are you from, young man?"

"Dayton, Illinois."

"Where are you going?"

"Out on the plains to hunt wild game."

"Are you a single man?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are your parents living?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where?"

"In Illinois."

"What church do you belong to, if any?"

"To the Latter Day Saint Church, Reorganized."

"Well, well," said he, "we, too, are Latter Day Saints, and my name is Joseph Dove. We welcome you, and want you to make yourself at home with us. We will take the very best care of you till you are able to move out on your proposed journey, if wisdom directs you." But at this juncture he gave me some very timely and wise counsel as to the dangers of hunting wild beasts in a wilderness alone.

For about six months I lingered on that bed, away from home and loved ones, among strangers, without health, and soon without money, downhearted and blue, and like one of old, I turned my face to the wall and wept; not because I did not have good care, for Elder Dove and his noble wife and daughter were true and kind to me, for which a grand reward awaits them. But I feared I had become a burden and possibly a pauper, and of course that was too much for my proud nature.

However, I tried to make the best of it. While lying there in that condition, weak in body, there came to my bedside, almost daily to converse with me, many who had at one time been members of the dominant church in Utah and who had become dissatisfied and disgusted with their ungodly doings and practices and doctrines; they had drifted to infidelity, spiritualism, and other isms.

While in that weakened condition, I partook of the spirit of apostasy to some extent at least, not that I doubted the truthfulness of the latter-day work, with the exception of having become skeptical as to the authenticity of the Doctrine and Covenants, and whether or not Joseph Smith the third was the proper one to preside over the church, or should it have been David, or some one else. But why should doubts of that nature come over me? My answer will be of a threefold nature.

First, Satan seeks to destroy the usefulness of mankind, especially those of the household of faith. Second, I had seen members of the church do things that were wrong and shameful (to my mind, I thought that a Saint should be about as good as an angel), hence it seemed to me that there must have been something wrong with the head, or the feet would not stumble. Third, this had been instilled into my very being by bedside apostate visitors.

But as I did not want to either live or die in that unhappy or unstable condition, and knowing that God knew that I was honest in my convictions, right or wrong, I began to lay my case as bare as possible before him in earnest prayer, pleading with him to restore me to health and strength, and to give me a zeal and unmistakable knowledge, and testimony of young Joseph's calling, and the authenticity of the Doctrine and Covenants, which I had never received up to this time (although firm in the faith otherwise).

Ere this, however, I had written to the authorities of the Mission Branch in Illinois, where I held my membership, to drop my name from the church records. This was in the latter part of 1871 or early part of 1872. Toward spring I began to recover and about this time one of the old-time Saints, a Sister Knapp (who had long years gone by lived in the city of Nauvoo, in the days of Joseph the Seer,) came up to Brother Dove's to pay me a visit, and while there she kindly offered me a home free of all charges, with her and her two grown sons, until I fully recovered. Of course I gladly accepted her offer, thinking that a change might do me good, which proved to be true, for I was soon up and about.

One day while there my earnest prayers were answered. On a bright day about two p. m. I received the following manifestation or open vision and will say as did Paul of old, whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot say. But I do know that I saw my own body standing about eight or ten steps ahead of me, holding a small hand grip in one hand and the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants in the other, as high as I could reach, and from said three books I could see rays of light going out in all directions, far above the light and rays of the sun, and heard my own voice saying: "With these [the books] I defy the nations of the earth." And I heard a voice saying: "Retrace your steps, and pay no attention to what others may say or do. Work out your own salvation."

At this juncture the scene changed, and I found myself standing on the sea or ocean, with no land in sight. I gazed upon the white-capped waves or billows as they rolled by, one by one, and wondered in my very soul as to what this could mean.

All at once I beheld a monstrous ship, the ship of Zion, pass across the waves, just before me. Her masts were bedecked with banners, her deck crowded with people, and young Joseph with both hands on the rudder, steering the ship hastily forward and onward. When I came to myself I was still in one of Sister Knapp's rooms, and in my very soul I felt thankful to God that my prayers were answered. I now knew that it was young Joseph that should preside over the church and that the Doctrine and Covenants was in common with the other two books, the law of God to the church. (The third in my hand.)

There was no longer any room for doubt. Just after I had come out of the vision, Sister Knapp opened the door into my room, and when she beheld my face, she remarked: "Brother Chrestensen, what has happened?"

"Why?" I asked.

"Why, your face is not natural."

Just before, or just after this gift of God's love toward me, I received a letter from one of the elders of the branch of which I was a member (four hundred miles away) in which he informed me that I would fully recover and that in due time I would be called into the ministry, that my field would be the world. He said he had seen Jesus Christ in visions, together with two other men, and that he had heard them counseling together about my ministerial work and field of labor upon the earth. In his own wisdom the elder advised me not to marry. This part of his counsel I failed to carry out, and if I had I would not now have a son in the mission field.

After having fully recovered, I was determined to see and have a face-to-face conversation with Sister Emma Smith Bidamon, the Seer's wife, before she passed to the beyond. I had been told by the apostates that she knew and would confess that Joseph the Seer was in polygamy and that he had given the revelation on plurality of wives and the Adam-god doctrine. I was at this time out of money, and as yet not very strong in body, but I knew that the time would come, sooner or later, when I would be called into the gospel mission field, hence was very keen and anxious to know and learn the real facts for myself.

With unshaken faith in God I undertook the journey from Omaha to Nauvoo, Illinois, on foot (four hundred miles, more or less), and landed there on the eleventh day of September, 1872. I inquired for Mrs. Emma Smith, but was informed that she was now the wife of a Mr. L. C. Bidamon. I located their dwelling place and found them at home, introduced myself, told Sister Emma Smith Bidamon the object of my mission, and in a kind, loving way, she consented to being questioned. She set a chair just in front of them and invited me to occupy. Mr. Bidamon sat to the left of me and Sister Emma to the right. My questions to her ran as follows:

"Sister Emma, were you at one time the wife of the Prophet?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is it not a fact that he had other wives besides you?"

"No, sir; I was his only wife, to my knowing during his lifetime."

"Could he not have had other wives without you knowing it?"

"No, sir; no one had a better chance and way of knowing this than myself."

"Sister Emma, is it not a fact that Joseph Smith received a revelation favoring polygamy and spiritual wifery?"

"No, sir; there was no revelation given through him on either spiritual wifery or polygamy. Nor was that abominable doctrine taught either privately or publicly before Mr. Smith's death."

"How about Brigham Young's statement to the contrary—that Joseph Smith did receive the polygamy and Adam-god revelation, and that he presented it to you by the hand of a Mr. Clayton, and that after reading it you got mad, tore it up, and burned it?"

"That is a base falsehood made out of whole cloth."

"Have you ever seen and read that feigned and assumed revelation on polygamy?"

"Yes, sir."

"When and where did you first see and read that polygamy revelation?"

"Right here in Nauvoo in the year 1853, published in Washington, District of Columbia, in a paper called The Seer, by Orson Pratt."

This ended our conversation along that line.

I thanked her kindly for having answered my questions so pointedly, bade her good-by, never to meet again in this life and probation; and now having looked into her honest face and heard her frank testimony, in person, I could not make myself believe that a woman standing on the brink of the grave, the mother of three noble boys, or men, with whom I had formed an acquaintance, would or could tell a barefaced lie, to be met in the day of accounts. Her life and character were above reproach. Whose testimony would be most reliable: Brigham Young's, the real father of the revelation on polygamy, Adam-god, and the blood-atonement doctrine, who had broken both the law of God and the law of the land, or that of Sister Emma, who had remained true to God, true to the last request made by her husband, that she remain in Nauvoo and bring up their boys in the way they should go? She had honored both the laws of God and the land. I had to accept her testimony, and hope to meet her again, with other true Saints of God, in the great by and by.

Yours in the true faith of our Lord Jesus Christ,

To many it may not have occurred that there is a relation between the discomforts they feel and the food they eat. The several purposes of food are to promote growth, to supply energy, to produce heat, and to furnish material for the repair of the body waste. If the food eaten be such as will cause the vital fires to burn fiercely at the same time when the sun's rays beat down with intensity from without, one is literally between two fires, and his suffering will be proportionate to the heat produced by each.—Doctor J. H. Kellogg.

Halt! Listen!

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN THE HOME DEPARTMENT WORK? IF NOT, WHY NOT?

Through a questionnaire just recently sent out and returned, I find we have many problems confronting us as home department workers. Each day I am striving to reach my workers in a personal way, but I feel the need of touching upon some points in a general way.

Do we fully appreciate the opportunities and advantages offered to us through the home department work?

This department is to the Sunday school what the missionary is to the church. Could you measure the effect if our missionary force were to become extinct? Many of our Sabbath schools are failing to make rapid progress because their missionary, the home department, is lying dormant. The home department superintendent whose duty it is to canvass the territory surrounding should be bringing to your records such new material as would build up your holy structure.

Question. Present membership in your branch? Answer: 160.

Question. Present enrollment in your school? Answer: 75.

Where are the rest of your sheep and lambs? Jesus went to find the one that had strayed. Are you seeking after those in your territory whose minds have never been enlightened by the touch of the gospel? The local superintendent says he hasn't time. That is just the reason you have been provided with a home department superintendent as an assistant. Will you permit us to help you by bringing to you the precious souls we may glean by the wayside? We ask for the district and local home department superintendents your aid and support and the school back of you.

Some say, "Let them come to the school." The Savior did not assume this attitude when viewing the fallen condition of humanity, but said, I will go and redeem them. "Oh, to be more like Jesus!"

A WORD TO HOME DEPARTMENT SUPERINTENDENTS

The world at large is calling for soldiers brave, those who will sacrifice their lives if necessary to obtain the goal they have in mind. Our heavenly Father is asking for no less. He is calling both the aged and the youth. He is pleading for soldiers who will offer themselves as a "living sacrifice," to help the world see the goal for which Christ died, that of eternal life gained through the gospel. Will you answer the call?

Are you willing to do for others what the Savior did for you? He gave his life that we might be saved. Our mission is to help those who are unable to help themselves. Perhaps many such are in your midst, living in isolation because of being severed from your assemblies, yearning in their hearts for aid, friendship, and spiritual help. Do not hesitate to search for homes where there is want and care, to carry the light of the blessed gospel there, even words of life, the spiritual food they so much need. Will you permit God to use you as one of his soldiers to help wage the battle of right against wrong in these last days, the hastening time?

We have been earnestly urging both district and local home department superintendents to enroll all those who go to act in the service of our country; also that every home department member make a strenuous effort to make a Christmas offering this year. We beg that you keep this request in mind.

We solicit the most hearty cooperation of the missionaries who labor in unorganized territory. Please interest all in the Quarterlies, if possible, and send me their names and addresses. We will respond at once, as will also the local and district officers. Let us labor together for the spread of the gospel to every creature in all the world. Benefits to be derived from home department work.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI 1128 South Pearl Street.

SHAWNEE, OKLAHOMA, October 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: Recently I went to Oklahoma City to visit brother R. M. Maloney's folks, whom I had not seen for five years. I found them at the State fair with other Saints, Brother Dillon, Sister Peatee, old and cherished friends, with quite a goodly number of new Saints that I had never had the pleasure of meeting before, all engaged in serving meals for as many of the vast throng as they could, who came daily to the fair. Brother Edward Rannie was there, and he also spent several hours of the day, peeling potatoes and cutting bread. I assisted also in the afternoons, and then I would sit in the corner near the front and view the crowds of fine-looking people, and when they got through their meals and paid their bills to the cashier, there was a look of extreme satisfaction on every face. The very sunshiny appearance of Sister Keuffer, the cashier, would nearly always meet with a response and provoke a smile in return.

Several days there was a large crowd to serve and the ladies aid, with their gallant husbands and brothers, reminded me of a swarm of bees, taking advantage of the ideal weather to lay in a store of honey before the wintry winds and frost hinder their activities. It was their fifth season and they cleared $1,617.

It was with gratitude to our heavenly father that I contemplated the effect the gospel has upon the character and lives of men and women; and I realize that the bond of love and union that was enjoyed by us, as a people, is stronger than natural ties without the gospel.

I went with them to their Sabbath home, a neat church, and felt the warming influence of the Spirit of truth as Brother Rannie dispensed the word of life. I am sure if the same spirit of love and good will is cherished, it will cause a great development along spiritual lines, that will bring many to a knowledge of the truth, who will be as stars in their crowns.

I will relate a testimony that I received last summer while reading the article, "Timbers for the temple." As each number was eagerly read, I felt grateful (the true history of this wonderful latter-day work was so beautifully and touchingly portrayed) as I could see the overruling hand of the greatest of all designers, in strengthening and sustaining God's people through those trying conflicts, and in the outcome, making even the wrath of man to bring praise and honor to their deliverer.

I was alone after all the household had retired, when I read the closing chapter. I could see this great work spread out before me like a panorama, and especially the restoration. I was filled with gratitude to the Lord for raising up such men as Joseph Smith, his posterity, and others, to accomplish such a grand and glorious work. I received such a baptism of the Spirit, as I reflected, that I could scarcely refrain from singing. While I was trying to surpress my emotions, my granddaughter, Edna Crawley, looked in from her room, and asked, "Grandma, are you sick?" I told her I was only having a season of prayer and thanksgiving.

I believe that many others have had a like experience. How thankful we are that the Lord has seen fit to restore our dear Brother Elbert to us, and all the army of workers and writers that are blessing this church from week to week, and from month to month. May their lives be prolonged to bring knowledge, joy, and comfort to those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, is the prayer of your humble sister,

MRS. H. A. CRAWLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 11, 1918.

Editors Herald: As a religious body we of Independence have come to a turning point in the road, that is, a standstill. For loss of the midweek prayer meeting, the study classes and Sunday services, also Religio on Friday night, we are surely almost at our wit's end to know how to get along.

Of course we can pursue our reading of economics, logic, guess out the pronunciation of French sentences, and apply ourselves generally to the study of all good books, without the teacher, but association is certainly a very precious thing when one desires to advance in education. And we have some very excellent teachers here at the "institute."

Since the new recruits arrived, that is, since we have had the pleasure of getting a few new comrades from abroad who have taken up church work among us, our courage has been renewed, our spirits uplifted, and from many quarters we hear the clarion sounds of a new awakening among the workers at the front. But alas! Fear has seized the campers, on account of the prevalence of the so-called Spanish influenza, and right in the very beginning of our class work, and just when we were being buoyed up in spirits with a very comforting outlook for the future service, we had to close our church and auxiliary doors, and stay at home and be content.

We have been greatly blessed of late with excellent meetings and hope to report more favorably as to our condition later on.

Yours in gospel covenant,

MRS. A. A. HORTON.

SILVER.—Locke William Silver, born November 13, 1850, at Columbia, Missouri. Died September 28, 1918 at Spokane, Washington. Married Ruth E. Hotinger October 10, 1878. Four children were born: Samuel E., Archie L., Walter B., and Mrs Mamie F. Maggart. His wife and children were present. Baptized by T. W. Chatburn, 1909. Ordained deacon, and later a priest. Was respected and loved for his faithful service, and honest stand for the highest ideals. He bore a faithful testimony to the angel's message. His faithful life will long survive in memory his earthly pilgrimage. Burial, Riverside Cemetery, Spokane. Sermon by S. S. Smith.

SAVE YOUR TIME AS WELL AS OURS

When articles, letters, or notices of any kind are sent to us for publication there is no need to use a separate sheet and write at length and say that "The enclosed notice is for publication in the columns of the HERALD at your earliest convenience," etc. We always print at the earliest convenience. Notices that reach us on Monday forenoons—if they are not too long—are usually printed in the issue for the next Wednesday. Write out your notice about as you think it should appear, boiling it down as much as possible, yet putting in all items of general interest to your district and the church. Leave off all introductions and complimentary conclusions, and it will receive careful and personal attention and publication. If you think there is any doubt as to where it should go, mark it "HERALD" or "Autumn Leaves," and we'll know you intended it to be published. If you have any special instructions about it, or a personal word in addition, we are glad to get them, but leave out the usual trimmings we have noted above.

A suggestion comes from Brother Peter Hinds that there be a church directory issued in leaflet form, to include all the addresses of the churches in the larger cities where they are hard to find sometimes. We shall refer the suggestion to the Church Recorder, who is securing such information from all the sources possible.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR OCTOBER

In spite of heavy handicaps in the mechanical departments, the October Autumn Leaves came through. There are so many good things in this one number it is a difficult task to try to mention them all. The characteristic breeziness begins on the first page and continues throughout, with sufficient food for solid thought woven in to keep one busy for a number of delightful hours. The "Camp Cricket chirps," include contributions from some of the best-known church writers and jokes on some of them everybody will appreciate. Delbert's story and picture of himself appear—the latter being a section of a General Conference picture and allows you to guess which one he is. He says he's not to blame because everybody crowded around when he wanted to get his picture taken. The second and concluding installment of "gospel experiences," by Elder Lee Quick, convinces one that it pays to stick to the gospel ship. After you figure out why the leaves change color, run over the novel brain test to see how near normal you are. In the Young Woman's Department is a most ambitious piece of poetry on "The unfinished picture," by May Needham. These notations are only a hint at the full contents. The Editor's Postscript promises some excellent features in the future, including a strong article on "The art of clothing the heavenly message," by Augustine Dwyer. The new serial, "A call at evening," begins in the November number, we are told. The price is only $1.25 a year.

The First Presidency, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, would like the names and addresses of Saints living in the city of Washington, District of Columbia. If any who are able to furnish such information will kindly respond, it will be appreciated.

Is your Sunday school working for the Christmas offering diploma which Bishop McGuire will send to every Sunday school whose Christmas offering amounts to $2 per member or more? Better hurry.

Miss Donnie Lehman, secretary of the Religio Society, has moved to Independence and is employed in the Ensign office. Her address is Box 88. In addition to this charge, Mrs. Zella Harder, home department superintendent for the Religio, who has been residing at Flint, Michigan, has moved to Independence. Vernon A. Reese, secretary of the library commission, has changed his address to 919 North Kedvale Avenue, Chicago.

From a letter to district and stake superintendents, by G. R. Wells, Sunday school head, we quote: "There is a movement on foot among the heads of the auxiliaries to organize 'teams' to work in zones comprising several districts covering the United States and Canada, each of the auxiliaries to be represented thereon, said teams to travel and hold three-day institutes in every branch needing and wanting it, about two months this winter." The plan is in the hands of the First Presidency and if approved details will be advertised soon and workers asked to assist in the selection of people to make up the teams. Brother G. S. Trowbridge is sending out a similar letter.

An invitation is extended to our lads in the service to call on the Saints at Leeds, England. They will be delighted to entertain any of our church members. Address or call on the branch secretary, Louise A. Priestly, 39 Leamington Terrace, Leeds, England.

A missionary in the south writes to the Presidency: "I am in receipt of yours of late date in reply to mine of August 28. I fear you took the matter seriously. I was not chafing at all in regard to the food, in fact, I rather like corn bread, sorghum, molasses, and buttermilk. Why shouldn't I? It is all the go in this part of the moral heritage. I will admit that I am a little tender of the egg question, nevertheless, the people persist in feeding them to one at all times, even between meals. To show you: As I stood in the pulpit one evening last week, some boys thought I looked too lean, I suppose, so they sent a half dozen eggs in for my benefit. I assure you I did not wish them but I took them just the same. The little chicks that were in them I could not use, so they were a clear loss. I am sorry. Ha! ha! After a thorough application of soap and water, the perfume was removed and to use 'Teddy's' expression, I felt 'bully.'"

COMMUNITY LYCEUM COURSE IN LAMONI

Lamoni will have a fourteen-number lyceum course the coming season, on the same popular plan that has prevailed for the past two years. They sell sufficient pictures to pay for the course and give the rest of the seats out to those who might not otherwise be able to attend, till every seat is taken every time. In addition to the usual high-grade type of numbers given by traveling talent, we find Frederick M. Smith listed for a lecture on "Church and society" for November 8. The local band has a date—afternoon and evening of December 13; the college glee club January 17, afternoon and evening. Lamoni Orchestra March 7; Community Chorus oratorio on March 28. Two lectures by Augustine Dwyer on April 1 and 4, on "President Wilson and the war," and "Rome, the eternal city (illustrated)." No Wednesday nor Saturday evenings are scheduled, and the tickets sell for $2 for a season adult ticket, and $1 for a child under 12. The plan is considered a great improvement over the old method.

PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN IN NEW ZEALAND

Brother H. W. Savage, in a letter to the editor of Stepping Stones, says they have baptized nine people of Auckland, have a Sunday school of seventeen, and have ordained one priest. At present they are taking a prominent part in a campaign to establish national prohibition for New Zealand. The drink traffic is awful there now. Women as well as men are constantly seen on the streets and in public places, under the influence of liquor. Shipping is scarce, yet one ship from England recently brought 1,400 tons of whisky; another from a port in England carried 800 tons, and one from this country carried 850 tons. All these refused essential cargoes of machinery and necessities of life. He says there is never a lecture given on the subject that does not mention with pride the progress being made against the traffic in the United States.

Mrs. Lucy Wilson, of Vincent, Iowa, has several years' numbers of Autumn Leaves and HERALDS she would like to give some one.

CHANGES IN METHODS VERSUS CHANGES IN DOCTRINE

(Synopsis of a sermon by Elbert A. Smith at the Lamoni Stake reunion, 1918.)

CHANGES IN METHODS

Not long before coming to this reunion we received a letter at the office from a missionary. He presented the idea that we should make some changes in doctrine and method so as to become more up-to-date. He said that other churches had found it necessary to change and revise their creeds, and that we might well follow their example.

Since coming upon these grounds I have received a letter from another man who says that some of the Saints whom he has observed are disturbed because of innovations and changes that they feel have been made. He does not express concern for himself, but merely chronicles the feelings of others, who were ready to sing mournfully, "Change and decay in all around I see."

Here we have two criticisms coming from entirely opposite viewpoints. I have tried to examine them carefully and believe that in both instances there is a failure to discriminate with sufficient clearness between changes in methods or procedure and changes in doctrine and principle.

THE INDIVIDUAL WORKMAN

Paul says: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

This may apply to the individual elder. His condition is not to be static. By prayer and study he should endeavor to improve himself and his methods so that he may indeed be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. He is not bound to preach and labor just as his father or grandfather may have done before him. He should be progressive in his methods, always improving when it is possible to do so.

THE ELDERSHIP

Concerning the priesthood in general it is written in the Book of Covenants: "It always has been given to the elders of my church, from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit." (Doctrine and Covenants 46:1.)

Recently certain of the Utah elders were questioning one of our members very closely concerning our fall reunions. What their object may have been does not appear, but the inference was that they felt that these reunions are an innovation not warranted in Scripture.

It is true that the reunions are quite unlike anything found in the "old church" as it is termed. They may in some particulars resemble the old tabernacle meetings of the Israelites, but not in many. They are an evolution, an outgrowth of our old semi-annual General Conference formerly held in the autumn. But if they lack other Scriptural sanction they find sanction in this statement that the elders ever have, and ever shall have right to conduct all meetings as they are led by the Holy Spirit. The Spirit meeting with us in this big tent under the trees bears witness that the change is not objectionable.

ONE LIMITATION TO CHANGE

I believe that it is proper to make changes in our methods of work. These changes of course should be made in harmony with wisdom. And I must mention a qualification. Wherever procedure or methods have been prescribed by revelation no change can properly be suggested. As for instance in the mode of baptism, by immersion, so plainly set forth in the Bible and particularly in the Book of Mormon. Also in the method of blessing the sacrament, wherein we are commanded to kneel, the emblems to be uncovered, and the form of prayer to be offered is given. No man by variation has ever improved upon the form of prayer given for the blessing of the emblems.

CASES IN POINT

There are some cases in point to which I might call your attention, illustrating what I mean by changes in method or procedure. There was a time in the history of the church when the organ and other instruments of music had no part in the service of worship. The introduction of the organ met with most bitter opposition. One church, the Christian, so-called, was divided and remains so to this day. The nonprogressives will not tolerate the organ even now, while the progressives have it and pound it loudly to irritate their obdurate brethren. In our own case the Lord spoke and told us that we might use the organ and other instruments of music in the preaching service.

He need not to have told us that. The organ never was offensive to him. We might have made the change at any time. But the prejudices of some, and their traditions, made the church door too narrow to admit the organ otherwise.

It was not so long ago that many felt that baptism should be performed in some river or natural body of water, no matter how muddy or uninviting and inconvenient. Now we think nothing of baptizing in fonts in church buildings. The service loses nothing in sacredness by the change.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS

In the case of the individual communion cup, I am told that one good elder whose name is a household word in the church has not taken the sacrament since the adoption of the individual cup, until within a very few weeks. He is reported to have taken the sacrament in a small branch which has not yet made the change, though whether they had a common cup or not I cannot say.

I do not remember ever taking the sacrament in a branch where there was but one cup used. I may have done so, as that may be the rule in some very small branches. But generally there are at least two cups, and more often four or six. While in the case of large assemblies, as at Independence, or here in Lamoni, we have for many years used twelve or more cups and thought nothing of it.

What is the difference between two or four or six or a dozen cups and five hundred or more cups? It is a matter of method pure and simple. And to my mind the change is very excellent. It originated, if I remember correctly, in a motion made from the floor of the assembly and adopted by the General Conference.

COORDINATION

The adoption of the report of the coordination committee has caused some comment. One reason why the entente allies are not now being pushed back further toward Paris and the channel ports is because they have coordinated their forces. They now have a central management. For three years the allies fought, each by himself and for himself, and they were defeated everywhere and all the time, with a few local exceptions. Now all is changed. All fight together to a common end. A football team in which every member plays by himself and for himself will always be defeated, unless it should meet a team worse disorganized than itself.

It is only in line with reason and wisdom that the church, the Sunday school, and the Religio should coordinate under a common management. They are always opposed by an enemy whose forces are always and everywhere organized and united. The plan adopted at the late conference may not be the best. If not it can be improved. The point is that the change was legitimate. It is a matter of method pure and simple. The field of experimentation is open to us and we have a right to occupy. The report of the committee did not represent the work of one man. The committee was appointed by the various bodies and their report was adopted by the conventions and conference after very full and free discussion.

THE GROUP SYSTEM

It was my intention to touch upon the matter of the recent division of the branch at Lamoni into wards and groups and the division of the Independence and Kansas City Stakes into groups. This was overlooked, but furnishes another case in point. The division does not touch doctrine or general organization. It is an effort to facilitate the work of the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, by bringing them into closer touch with the people.

An elder, priest, teacher, and deacon can work with a small group of twenty or thirty families very intimately and accomplish thorough work. It is in line with Benjamin Franklin's motto: "A little farm well tilled; a little barn well filled." This change is no more radical than the organization of districts, which occurred many years ago.

HARVESTING THE WHEAT

All of the changes noted are changes in method or procedure. The same probably is true of any change not noted that might come to mind if we were to make a more exhaustive study of the question. My contention is that it is proper to make such changes if it seems reasonably sure that by doing so we can obtain better results.

One has compared it to the work of harvesting a field. There is a field of wheat to be harvested, we will say. The Master, by the way, speaks of the harvest. We may go at the work of harvesting this field with an old-fashioned cradle or scythe. Or we may take a reaper and cut the grain and bind it by hand. Or we may use a self-binder. Or we may even cut it, thresh it, and sack the grain at one operation, as I have seen them do in California. Wisdom would direct that we should use the method most available and best calculated to accomplish the work efficiently and expeditiously.

REGARDING DOCTRINE

I turn now to the second division of my subject, that pertaining to doctrine and principle. In the past we have made three historic contentions in our propaganda, namely, touching doctrine, church organization, and the gifts and blessings.

In the sixth chapter of Hebrews, Paul names the principles of the doctrine or gospel of Christ. With these you are very familiar, but I will read: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do, if God permit." (Hebrews 6: 1-3.)

Paul says that he was not taught these doctrines by men, neither did he learn them of men, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. We have always taught these principles, and probably always will teach them without change, until the work of preaching the gospel is accomplished. We cannot by bur-nishing them add to their luster or by tinkering with them add to their efficiency.

One thing, however, we should note. Paul says that after we have obeyed these doctrines we should go on to perfection. Peter takes the matter up where Paul drops it and says: "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." (2 Peter 1: 5-7.)

THE SIGN OF ADDITION

We must never forget this work of addition. The cross of Christ is the sign of addition—add to your faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, and so on, to the crowning grace of charity.

I mention this because of a criticism suggested by a young brother who has been out in the world among other denominations. He says that they allege that we are very strong on doctrine, but care very little for the morals of our people, while they stress morals and care little for doctrine. The truth of course is that we emphasize both doctrines and morals, which is the true position to occupy. But it may be that some of the elders in their zeal to present the doctrines have failed to tell the whole story.

I feel that we should never move on and leave a place until we have made our attitude upon moral questions so clear that it cannot be misunderstood, if it is possible to do so. Sometimes we may even with profit preach first upon those questions of morals, thus seeking first a point of common understanding, paving the way for a more favorable consideration of doctrines upon which we are at a disagreement with our religious neighbors.

ZIONIC TEACHINGS

Again, this same young man suggests that in the future our strongest drawing card in proselyting may be our Zionite teachings, equality, consecration, stewardships, and so on. That may be true. Those things may be our strong "talking point," as a salesman might say, in our future work. But that would not mean any abandonment of the principles previously mentioned. Nor would it mean the introduction of new doctrines, for these Zionite conceptions are as old as Pentecost, yes, as old as the city of Enoch.

But wisdom and care must be exercised in presenting these doctrines. For I predict that while they may be a strong "talking point" with us in the future they will also be a favorite point of attack. In the most recent work published against the church the "Order of Enoch" is selected for assault. It is held up to the world as a grafting, robbing organization designed to impoverish the many and enrich the few, though the author well knew to the contrary.

We believe that our ideas on equality, consecration, and stewardship contain the true essence of the brotherhood of man, and constitute one of the brightest pages in gospel lore. But the world will not credit us with a sincere desire to help the poor, give stewardships and inheritances to the needy, and bring about equality.

We ask the people for their surplus for those purposes, but the world will only assign base motives. That which to us is one of the brightest and best pages in our propaganda will be to them one of the darkest and meanest. And they will be at some pains to make it appear so, by the old method noticed by Paul in his day, of "making the truth of God a lie."

OUR CREED

So far as doctrine is concerned we are told: "And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them."

Also we are assured: "Whatsoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed." (2 John 1: 9, 10.)

THE LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

We are not situated as are other denominations. Rejecting revelation, they have been groping in the fog of human conjecture and ancient tradition in search of the truth. But the light shone down from heaven at Palmyra and revealed to us the doctrine of Jesus Christ in its simplicity.

The first elders were told that they were sent out to teach and not to be taught. And so they were. The whole theological world has swung toward our conceptions of truth since that day, to a remarkable extent.

From the "sectarian world" so called we have not been obliged to borrow one item of doctrine. Apparently from us they have borrowed many—as for instance the doctrine of divine healing, and the second personal coming of Jesus Christ, recently heralded by prominent British divines, tithing, etc.

LET US TOUCH HANDS

Before I pass from this division I must make one suggestion. Those of the ministry who labor in stakes and other large gatherings of Saints of necessity in preaching branch out and cover a wide field. But they should not permit a feeling of contempt to creep into their hearts toward the elders who are out on the frontier and must of equal necessity confine themselves to the principles and to plain and simple themes. Nor should the men in the firing line grow suspicious of their brethren in the central places who are trying as best they can to feed the sheep and meet their every need.

Each man has his calling. God works with each. I would be no good as a proselyter. My calling has been to the Saints. But my hand touches the hand of the missionary and I want his hand to touch mine in mutual sympathy and support in our common work.

ORGANIZATION

So far as church organization is concerned it is stated: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." (1 Corinthians 12: 28.) "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; . . . till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Ephesians 4: 11, 13.)

We learn then that God set the officers of various grades in the church and that they are to continue until we come to a unity of the faith and attain to a perfect stature in Christ Jesus. You are perfectly familiar with this line of argument, and it is valid and sound. It will stand. No effort has been made to our knowledge to change the organization in any way. We should oppose and resent any such change. But we ought not to oppose any change of method that will really facilitate "the work of the ministry" to which these men are called.

THE GIFTS

We come now to the ancient gifts and blessings of the church, an important theme. In this same remarkable twelfth chapter of the Corinthian letter we read:

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues.—1 Corinthians 12: 7-10.

Here we have the various gifts of the Spirit mentioned. All are important and necessary. I have heard some dwell at length upon the superior value of the gift of wisdom, and the contention is a true one. All should seek the gifts of wisdom, faith, and knowledge. But when making such an argument we ought to be careful that we do not by insinuation or inference discredit the other gifts. To do so would be a grave error.

DO WE NEED THE GIFTS?

And again I have heard some argue, perhaps not in these words, but to this effect, that the gifts of prophecy, tongues, the interpretation of tongues, and the healing of the sick, are for the particular benefit of the weak, the undeveloped, the ignorant, and that we do not need them so much after we have progressed in intelligence and strength. This is not in concord with historic examples in which the church when it drew nearest to God received the richest outpouring of these miraculous gifts, as at Pentecost in the primitive church, and at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple in our own history.

Again, I do not concede that there is anywhere a local gathering of Saints superior in intelligence and

AUTHORITY

(Sermon by Elder E. E. Long, Sunday evening, March 25, 1917. Reported by Raymond C. Scott.)

I wish to call your attention to a Scripture reading found in the seventh chapter of Matthew, beginning with verse 15:

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it. And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

I wish to call particular attention to the last verse as rendered in the Inspired Version. You will notice that it does not read the same as it does in the common version.

"For he taught them as one having authority from God, and not as having authority from the scribes."

The question of authority is a vital one. It strikes at the foundation of every religious organization in the world. We have said it many times, in fact, until it has become somewhat hackneyed, that we are either right or wrong. This being a self-evident truth, the question resolves itself into this form: If the latter-day message as we present it to the world is what it purports to be, if the announcement made in 1820 is true, somebody will be grievously disappointed in the day of reckoning. Luke reports the Master's words in substance the same way in the thirteenth chapter, that many will strive to enter and not be able. The fact that he says many will strive to enter and not be able is an implication that those who so seek to enter will be people who here in this life have based their hope on something, religious people, because those who pass through this life without making any preparation or giving thought to the future will hardly come up before the great judge and demand an entrance into the kingdom of God on the plea that they have done many wonderful works in his name. I repeat, therefore, that those who will be disappointed at that time must be people who in this life are very religious, and who think they are the true followers of Jesus Christ.

I have often wondered, when contemplating the divided condition of modern Christianity, why it is that people cannot see and understand that there must, in the very nature of the case, be something wrong somewhere. In making this observation, we note that the church of Rome has never lost sight of the fact that there was such a thing as priesthood authority in the primitive church. The Church of England, too, still maintains this ancient landmark in a modified form, while the rest of the Protestant world appear to have lost sight of it entirely. Only a short time ago one of the most prominent ministers of Europe forsook Protestantism and was ordained under the hands of the bishop of the Church of England, and by that act declared that his work heretofore was invalid for the want of proper authority. Ministers of prominence have left the Church of England and gone to Rome for the same reason. They evidently discovered to their satisfaction that there was something wrong with the claims of the Church of England in particular and Protestantism in general. Basing our judgment on their actions we are forced to conclude that they think if there is such a thing in the world to-day as divine authority to represent God on earth, with any of the numerous factions of Christianity, it must be resident with the Catholic Church.

It is a fact, whatever we may think to the contrary, that the Roman Catholic Church is the only faction of modern Christianity that can trace an unbroken line of succession back to the apostles. All Protestant sects stop at the gates of Rome. I know that there are some periods in history that are very hard to bridge when we measure them from the moral point of view. But so far as the line of authority is concerned Protestantism must bow to Rome. It is an easy matter to dispense with the claims of Protestants without doing any violence to their integrity and honesty of purpose. If there is such a thing on earth as authority to represent God, that authority coming down the line and through the Catholic priesthood does not abide with the seceding Protestants, for when the reformers withdrew or were expelled from the Catholic Church they left all the authority they had behind. If the Church of Rome had the right to confer authority on anyone, she likewise had the power to withdraw it at her caprice; and that is precisely what she did with every one of the reformers. On the other hand, if, as it is claimed by the Protestants, the Church of Rome had so far departed from the truth and fallen so low morally and spiritually as to lose divine favor, then Protestants have nothing to bring with them. It makes no difference which horn of the dilemma they take hold of, Protestantism stands absolutely destitute of divine authority, as we view the situation. So there remains but one conclusion, namely, if there is any authority obtainable to-day to represent God it must come to us by divine and direct revelation.

Modern Christianity is the greatest paradox in the world to-day. It matters not what kind of business we may consider, in every line of endeavor delegated authority is recognized as necessary and fundamental. Suppose we want to buy an automobile. We decide to buy a Ford, and we write to the Ford factories asking their lowest cash price f. o. b. Detroit. Would we get it? Well, hardly. They would write us a nice, courteous letter referring us to their local agent. He has been authorized to represent the Ford company in this vicinity. Why is it that in the business world, in the social world, in every line of endeavor authority is recognized, and yet the very same ones who recognize authority in all lines of business would have us believe that any one, man or woman, can start out with a Bible under his arm and represent God Almighty? I have a number of good friends over in Canada. Suppose they come down here desiring to become citizens of this country. I am a citizen of this country enjoying all the privileges belonging to loyal subjects but I cannot administer the oath of allegiance to my Canadian friends, no such authority ever having been conferred on me. I know they are good and worthy people, and I would welcome them to our domain, but the power to make them one with us rests with certain individuals who have been authorized to administer the oath, and I could get myself into trouble very easily by assuming the right to so act. Now, in all candor, if mortal man is so jealous of his rights and so particular as to who acts as his agent, what shall be said about those who represent God Almighty? Has God the right to designate those he would intrust with power and authority to officiate in the sacred offices of the kingdom of God? And that, too, when it comes to dealing with the souls of men?

For four thousand years God called and authorized men to represent him officially by direct revelation. That right, power, authority, was called priesthood in ancient times, and under that divine afflatus Jesus and the apostles acted. Jesus, himself, never presumed to act in any official capacity, so far as we are able to learn, until after his baptism, and he was baptized by a man sent from God. On this point he has positively declared himself: "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak." (John 12: 49.) So the people were astonished. He spake as one having authority from God. The Pharisees, Sadducees, Esenes, and numerous sects of that time represented God in much the same way that modern Christianity represents him now. People to-day are just as much astonished at the positiveness of the latter-day message as they were when the same message was preached by Jesus Christ in Judea. A like cause always produces a like effect.

Another thing I wish to mention is this: We have heard considerable said about preaching our message affirmatively. Well, I have never learned how. I have listened to others try without getting very far. From the very nature of the case our message is negative. The very first pronouncement was a negative proposition: Those churches are all wrong and their creeds are an abomination in my sight. This radical declaration was supplemented by such statements as, "for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way," etc., also, "and also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking of the church collectively and not individually." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 5.) If that is not negative I do not know what to call it. The Savior said of the churches in his day: "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up" (Matthew 15: 13), and John the Baptist declared, "The ax is laid unto the root of the trees; therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and cast into the fire." (Matthew 3: 10.) Strong words, indeed, but they were words of eternal truth, and born of the spirit of authority. Of course the people were astonished. Why should they not be when he said, "You, by your traditions, have made the word of God of none effect." When the Pharisees heard it they were offended. Their cherished opinions were being assailed, bombarded, and demolished. The Lord, be it said to his credit, never compromised the truth for the sake of popular opinion, and the man who tries it to-day will soon find himself on the border line of apostasy and so far removed from the fountain of truth that the plain simplicity of the gospel will be distasteful to him. I would rather be denounced as a "radical" for preaching the plain, unvarnished truth than be called a "wolf in sheep's clothing" for hiding the sword of the Spirit behind empty and unmeaning platitudes. "The truth shall make you free." We are sent out to "reprove" the world, and by reason of the authority vested in us we will be held to accounts for the manner in which we discharge that sacred duty. Ours is a positive message and in a large measure negative regardless of how we present it.

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.—Hebrews 5 : 1.

Everyone, I believe, will understand that the Apostle Paul is writing about authority, about priesthood. And now listen :

And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.—Hebrews 5 : 4-6.

And when some people have turned a little further to the seventh chapter of this Hebrew letter and read the statement in the common version of the Bible that this man Melchisedec was without father, without mother, without beginning of days or end of life, they have been puzzled. But we have it here, corrected, as we believe, by modern inspiration, so that it gives us to understand that this priesthood was without father or mother. It was the priesthood and not the man. Now you just think a moment. Imagine, if you can, an order with only one man in it. Suppose, when speaking of the Order of Railroad Engineers, that we understand that there is but one engineer belonging to that order. Could it be called an order with only one man in it? The word itself implies a plurality. We have an Order of Enoch in Lamoni, supposed to have one. Do not think for one moment that that order is composed of one individual. It means more than one. We are here informed that the Savior had this priesthood authority after the order of Melchisedec. I have a little book here in my hand which throws a good deal of light on this question as to who Melchisedec was. A good deal of time and money has been spent in an effort to throw light on Bible history in the old country, and they have succeeded remarkably in the last few years, as they have done in this country throwing light on the Book of Mormon. But here we have the history of the same gospel preached in the holy land and elsewhere and they have discovered that this Melchisedec was really a man, that he was one of a long line of priest-kings.

In these tablets

is maintained by what is recorded of the meaning and antiquity of the word "Jerusalem." It is evident, from these tablet inscriptions, "that Melchisedec, king of Salem and priest of the most high God, who is taken as a type of Christ in his united kingly and priestly offices, was not the solitary occupant of that dignity, but one in a succession of priest-kings which continued to the times before the conquest. And that Abraham should have received Melchisedec's blessing was only the due acknowledgment of the God of peace to one who had delivered Palestine from the invader and given peace to the land." In reference to this great personage Professor Sayce says: Two or three years ago it would have seemed a dream of the wildest enthusiasm to suggest that light would be thrown by modern discovery on the history of Melchisedec. Whatever lingering scruples the critic might have felt about rejecting the historical character of the first half of the fourteenth chapter of Genesis, he felt none at all as to the second half of it. Melchisedec, 'king of Salem,' and 'priest of the most high God,' appeared to be altogether a creation of mythology. And yet among the surprises which the tablets of Tel el-Amarna had in store for us the discovery that after all Melchisedec might well have been an historical personage."

There is more said about this discovery and more will be said in the future. Long before this discovery was made or thought of being made, modern revelation had declared what they now tell us to be a fact, that Melchisedec was an historical character, that he was only one of a long line of priest-kings. And isn't it remarkable that Jesus Christ is a priest-king? One of the very first announcements made at his birth, or before, was he shall sit upon the throne of his father, David, and he is coming back as a king to rule and reign with his people. We learn in the tenth chapter of Matthew that after the Savior had spent the whole night in prayer, from among his disciples in the morning he selected twelve whom he named apostles, and he tells these apostles a little later in Mark 3 : 14, that he ordained them, and in the fifteenth chapter and sixteenth verse of John's gospel, he says :

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

In John 20 : 21 he says: "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

The Catholic Church goes back to the sixteenth chapter and nineteenth verse of the gospel according to Matthew and they make their strongest argument on that verse:

"And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

It requires no stretch of the imagination on the part of anyone to see there divine authority recognized. "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." God would recognize their official acts. But after his resurrection when he appeared with his disciples for the last time, just before his ascension, he says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." We believe that the word power means authority. "All power is given unto me." Go ye, therefore, because I have this power, this authority, given to me. Now I confer it on you and you go now into all the world and preach this gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He told them elsewhere, if they reject you, they reject me; if they reject me, they will reject you. So then from these Scripture statements it is plain and evident that the Lord came from heaven clothed with divine authority. He placed that divine authority on his apostles. Of course, that fact is admitted, but we are met with this criticism to-day, that that authority was limited to the twelve apostles. Some go a little further and say it was limited to the apostolic age, not seeming to care to set any definite time when that limit expires, but designates it simply as the apostolic age. And then to justify themselves we are referred to a statement by the Apostle Peter which I will now turn and read to you. It is found in the second chapter and the ninth verse of his first epistle:

"But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation."

We also are told that that statement of itself authorizes all Christian people to represent God, that the grace of God or God's favor and divine authority was not confined or limited to any order of bishops or apostles but that it was extended universally to his whole church, and the humblest member in that church may represent God acceptably. But I find a similar statement uttered by Moses. In Exodus 19:6 he said in substance the same thing. "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." This effectually sets aside the argument based on Peter's statement. No one will question the fact that the Mosaic economy was one of authority and that the law of God was rigidly enforced. God was very jealous about who exercised that authority. Certain men were called, ordained, and set apart to officiate in the sacred offices of the priesthood and all others were warned under penalty of death to keep their hands off. If the mere "shadow" (Hebrews 10:1) was so sacred that all but a chosen few were commanded to maintain a respectful distance what shall be said of the real object, the gospel economy in its sublime fulfillment? Why, we call to mind an instance when the Philistines captured the Ark of the Covenant. Everywhere it went plagues troubled the people. Finally the Philistines loaded it on a cart drawn by two cows and started it down the road without a driver. The Israelites, with joy at its safe return, surrounded it. The cart jostled and one man, with the best of intentions no doubt, stretched forth his hand to steady it when he was instantly stricken with death. (2 Samuel 6:7.) He had never been authorized of God to attend that sacred treasure. God bestowed the priesthood on certain men who were thus authorized to burn incense. No one else was allowed in the sacred precinct. But one man arrogantly assumed the right to enter the holy place against the earnest protest of him whose right it was to so act, but he did it to his sorrow, and Uzziah was smitten with leprosy. (2 Chronicles 26:19.) Why is it that Christian people to-day who profess to believe in the same God can conceive that God has so changed in a short time that he will recognize the ministry of any man who presumes to go out and represent him, is a mystery to me. One of the grand results of this misconception of God is the never-ending strife and confusion in the religious world. Imagine the situation if you can if the State and Federal Governments were conducted after the same fashion it is alleged the kingdom of God is being established, every man acting according to the "dictates of his own conscience," and placing his own interpretation on the law. Anarchy would be the result, and I am stating a solemn truth when I say religious anarchy prevails universally to-day. That's why the Christian nations are being scourged with the terrible war. It is true each State has the right to act independent of every other State so far as the local conditions pertaining to each State are concerned; but the power to so act extends only to the boundary line, while the federal law applies to every State alike. No State can admit aliens to citizenship contrary to the national law enacted at Washington. I believe this principle is universal among the nations. And yet those same nations who so rigidly enforce the law of adoption assume that God Almighty will allow any man to admit aliens to full citizenship in the kingdom of heaven without a commission from the King. I said awhile ago that modern Christianity was the greatest paradox in the world. You see now what I mean. In the church and kingdom of God as we represent it each stake, district, and branch of the church enjoys the same independent right to attend to its local affairs, yet there is a federal law governing all alike from which there can be no deviation. It must be so to preserve unity and oneness.

As we study the history of God's dealings with humanity in the past, especially with reference to this question of priesthood authority, and compare it with modern conditions, we are astonished, and we are not surprised at all that the Savior should declare, "Ye never knew me." I find a parallel in the Scriptures for the modern conditions, and it is a striking one. You will find the story in Judges, 17th and 18th chapters. There was a certain man by the name of Micah. At that time Israel had no king and every man did about as he pleased. This man Micah made a god, and he needed a priest. It seems that fortune favored the man at this particular time, for a young man came along looking for a place, and he said, "I am a Levite. I am looking for a place." Micah was delighted. Said he, "I'll tell you what I'll do. If you will dwell with me and be a priest to me and my family, I will give you ten shekels by the year, a suit of apparel, and your victuals." The young man said, "All right." And he went in and became his servant. Shortly after five men of the tribe of Dan came along. They were looking for a good location. They stopped at this house to lodge and while there observed the Levite. And after asking him what he was doing there and finding out his occupation, they said, "He is only one man, only one family. Come and go with us and be a priest for a whole tribe." So he left Micah, violated his contract, and went over to another place. I have some clippings that I have gathered up in recent years concerning men who have hired out like this Levite and a number have been called elsewhere just like that. I have known more than one case where a man engaged to preach for a certain number of months or a year for a certain price. Before the year is up they get a call somewhere else and they go. I know a man not very far from Lamoni, who does not belong to any church represented in Lamoni. He announced one Sunday morning not a great while ago that he had a call in another city and he was going. He offered the people his resignation. They offered him five hundred dollars more to stay with them. That nullified the call. That is exactly parallel to this case here in Judges where Micah hired this Levite for so much a year and the Levite violated his contract because there was more money in it. I have been told by a number of men of various religious denominations that that is just the situation to-day. God called men nineteen hundred years ago and placed upon them the right to represent him authoritatively, and those men were sent out to teach the word, to please God, even if it made men mad. We have been told that very same thing in these latter days. You remember what happened to John the Baptist. John was sent of God and honored his calling fearlessly. He lost his head by doing it. But we are more humane in this age of the world. If a man tells the truth and people do not like it they simply cut his salary off and it has the same effect—it stops his mouth.

I have another clipping. About two years ago a prominent minister of a great church of New York State began to preach some straight practical sermons to his congregation, and in these straight practical sermons he condemned some of their actions. They told him, "We don't want you any longer." They carried it to their conference and put the man out of the church, and that man said when being interviewed a few days later, "The time has come when the safety of God's people lies not in action with the church but going out of it." It is a fact. You know if I come to you and say, "I'll preach for you people this year if you will pay me a certain amount of money. I'll preach twice on Sunday and so often during the winter months perhaps. I become your servant and as such you have a perfect right to dictate what I shall say. And if I don't preach to suit you, you have a right to give me the G. B. any time. Jesus said, "I do always those things that please him." My Father "gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak." And since God is no respecter of persons, and since God never changes, if God has a ministry in the world to-day which he recognizes as his ministry, they will preach the message just as positively as they did nineteen hundred years ago, whether anyone believes it or not. This we can say with John the Baptist, "This, therefore, our joy is fulfilled." We ministers know what it is to preach this message. Not very long ago I was holding meetings in a certain place. I thoroughly advertised over the city. While I was preaching on the war and the fulfillment of prophecy people would come out and fill the house. Just so soon as I undertook to preach the principles of the gospel and the duties they should perform, I had empty seats to talk to. Recently one of the greatest ministers of the Protestant church had left it and gone back to the Church of England. In a little book published just recently he tells some reasons why he left the Protestant church and went back to the Church of England. And in the paper called The Christian Work, a whole chapter is quoted that, to the editor, is such a striking instance at this particular time that he gives considerable space to it. They recognize that there is something wrong somewhere, but just how to correct that wrong they do not know. But now it is easy to a Latter Day Saint: they have simply drifted away from the old faiths and God does not work with them as he did in days ago. God says he would not and he has been true to his word.

The world to-day is in a deplorable way. People wonder why such a terrible calamity should befall the world at this time as the European War. It is because they have sown to the wind and are reaping the whirlwind. In this book the Lord says they have departed from the truth. An individual down in Louisville, Kentucky, one Sunday morning announced to his congregation his resignation. He was not only resigning his charge, but he was leaving the church altogether, and told the people he was going to meet the next Sunday and organize a pure church, because he said the Baptist Church had drifted away from the cross of Christ, as also had the Methodists, the Presbyterians, and others. It is a common thing to read in the religious journals of to-day of men going from one church to another. They say, Lo here and lo there; but Jesus said, "Go ye not after them, for he is not there." It is a serious proposition. God had, among his people in ancient times, priesthood authority, and the Scriptures are replete with testimony that in the latter days that authority would be conferred on humanity again. Latter Day Saints are the only people in the world to-day who make the claim to have received that testimony. That very fact of itself ought to arrest the attention of every honest religious person in the world long enough at least to make an impartial investigation. May God help us to think about these things and we Latter Day Saints to appreciate the fact that somehow God has opened our understanding that we can see the truth and comprehend it to that extent that we can have the abundance of his gospel truth and rejoice in its teachings.

THE NECESSITY OF OBEDIENCE

[Elder Dyke says that he wrote several articles while he was a prisoner in Germany, and prepared a small Bible concordance of his own, but all of these were taken from him when he left Germany. The following article was written without a concordance and evidently while he was interned at The Hague in Holland. He writes that he has hopes of being permitted to return home soon, to his loved ones and work for the Master; and that he is spending his time in the meantime, studying the Bible in an effort to be ready to go straight into service. He has been a prisoner for two years. When he was taken nearly all his regiment were killed.—EDITORS.]

To obey is better than sacrifice.—1 Samuel 15: 22.

If you love me keep my commandments.—John 14: 15.

If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love.—John 15: 10.

Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. John 15: 14.

Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?—Luke 6: 46.

In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.—Matthews 15: 9, Mark 7: 7.

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me, if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 16, 17.

These are a few texts on the necessity of obedience; the first is Samuel's, the others are Christ's own words. Peter tells us we ought to obey God rather than man. (Acts 5: 29.) There are some who tell us they do not want doctrine, that it is not necessary, but they are not consistent, for they give it as their doctrine that they do not want doctrine; for doctrine, teaching, gospel, and belief are synonymous terms. It is true that we do not want the doctrines and commandments of men, for Jesus says he will not accept them, (see above). (Matthew 15: 9; Mark 7: 7.)

Where can we get the answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved"? Shall we ask the opinion of learned men, ministers of the gospel? If so, what ministers? Those of the Church of England, the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Church of Christ, Christadelphians, Salvation Army, or Roman Catholic, or any of the many denominations? If so, which one? They are all different, they all preach a different gospel, a different doctrine, and Paul says: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Corinthians 1: 10.) And he says further on in the same epistle (14: 33): "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints."

Notice the last three words. God's people are always called "saints" in the Bible; there is no mention of any of the other denominations that I mentioned above. But is not their teaching confusion? Then can it be of God?

Jesus tells us to search the Scriptures; "for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.)

And Paul says: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Timothy 2: 15.) How are we rightly to divide, or understand the word of truth? We cannot do it in our own wisdom, but James says: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1: 5.)

And he tells us in the next verse how to ask: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering." Notice he says: "Any of you." God is no respecter of persons, but if any of us are really desirous of knowing the truth, if we search the Scriptures and ask for wisdom, we shall find it, but we must be willing to follow where he leads. It may be necessary to put away some of our preconceived notions, for as we search God's word we may find that it is in opposition to some of them. God is unchangeable, Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. His gospel is the everlasting gospel. "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." (Jeremiah 6:16.)

Shall we say, with the Israelites of old, "We will not walk therein"? I hope not; it would be better to be like the Bereans, who were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so. (See Acts 17:10, 12.)

God has given us our minds, our reasoning faculties, and he expects us to use them. He expects us to be able always to give a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear. Can we do so? If not, why not? Is it because we have been content to take our opinions secondhand? Not taking enough trouble to think them out for ourselves and to see if they are in harmony with God's word? If it is, it is not very complimentary to God, nor, for that matter, are any of our actions complimentary to him, considering our relationship to him, considering that in him we live and move and have our being, that we are dependent upon him for what we have and are.

We say that God is a God of love, and that is true, but we must not presume too much on that love. God says that "my Spirit shall not always strive with man," and we are told that we are not to tempt God. We must not forget that though he is a God of love, he is a God of justice. He is a God of mercy, and righteousness, a jealous God, hating sin and iniquity, and that he will not accept half-hearted service. He says if we are lukewarm, he will spue us out of his mouth. He wants us to be either hot or cold. (See Revelation 3:14, 16.) If we are hot in his service, zealous in his service, he will reward us; if we are cold and indifferent we will get our reward, too, for every man will be judged and rewarded or punished according to the deeds done in the body, according to his own deeds, and not according to anybody else's. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of God and give an account of how we have used the talents that he has given us.

I do not believe in a gospel of fear, but in a gospel of love, but still we must fear God; not only fear to offend him, but fear to grieve him, fear to cause him sorrow. For he loves us, and when we think of how much he has done for us, of his long-suffering and patience, of his care over us, while we were yet sinners, while we have not had time to spare a thought for him, who has done so much for us.

Let us obey Jesus and search the Scriptures, for he says, "They are they which testify of me." (John 5:39.) Let us not only read and hear his sayings, but let us do them, for he says: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:46.) James says: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." (James 1:22.) John says: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 1:9.)

Let us be like the honest Berean and search the Scriptures and see whether these things be so, and finding that they are, obey them. (See Acts 17:10, 12.) "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:31, 32.)

WALTER DYKE.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SUCCESSFUL COOPERATIVE COLONY

It can no longer be truthfully said that cooperative ownership has never been proven practicable in a test conducted on a large enough scale to be conclusive. The proof has actually been furnished. It is being furnished daily. Anyone who will take the trouble to go to Stables, Louisiana, can see it with his own eyes.

The proof is found in the Llano del Rio Cooperative Colony, which is located at Stables. Their collectivism is really in operation on a tract of 20,000 acres of land and is working as definitely as the law of gravitation works. There several hundred colonists—substantial, serious, industrious men and women, with their children—are living under the cooperative system and believe it such an improvement over the competitive system that they wouldn't go back to the old plan for all the money on earth. All of these people are regularly employed, all are self-supporting, all are cheerful and contented, and none are ever bothered with thoughts of rent bills, strikes, lockouts, cuts in wages, and the other worries of the competitive system.

The Llano Colony is virtually a world within a world. Outside, the old scheme of things prevails—the scheme inherited from the days of the cave man, when might made right and property belonged to those strong enough to take it and keep it. Outside, two men struggle for the same crust, and one eats while the other goes hungry. Outside, Dives feasts on the finest food, while Lazarus is lucky if he can lick up the leavings from the former's table.

In Llano Colony all this is done away with. No man has more good things than another—or not unless, after working under this system of equal wages, he has saved more than his neighbor and can, therefore, buy more of the comforts of life. No man owns the land and makes a big profit off the labor of other men who till it for measly pay. The land is owned in common by the community, those working on it get the same pay as those working in the offices or the store, and the products of the land are sold at the commissary to the colonists at actual cost of production, plus a trifle for transfer, packing, and storing. Food raised on colony land already costs much less than what it would cost if bought elsewhere. Later it will cost even less than now.

What is true of the land is true of the machinery and industries. Nobody owns the machine shop or printing office and "salts" away a fat sum left after the employees have been paid. All get the same salaries. And whatever profits there are, go into the common till, the colony treasury, to help reduce the cost of supplies. The prosperity of an industry is the prosperity of every employee. Its misfortune, were there such, would likewise affect one no less than another.

Membership in the colony assures a man or a family free lodging, either in a room in the hotel or in one of the numerous cottages on the plantation. Medical service is furnished free. Instruction is free, not only to children, but to adults who wish to attend night school, studying languages or other subjects. The curriculum will be enlarged from time to time, as the growth of the colony will permit. A weekly musical entertainment, with recitations and a brief address, interspersed, is furnished free, as also is a weekly dance. A library has been opened and a gymnasium will be provided in the near future.

It will be seen that collective ownership of the means of production and distribution, as practiced in Llano Colony, does not interfere in any way with the privacy of home life or with individual ownership of articles of a purely personal nature. This bugaboo of fear, which has obsessed so many—the writer, too, before he learned what cooperation really means—can be dismissed from the mind at once. Land, machinery, houses, tools, etc., belong to the community. But every individual or family is free to bring to the colony or acquire after coming there, bedding, furniture, pictures, dishes, books, toothbrushes, towels, suspender buttons, or anything else he or it may want in the household. The home life is as sacred and as separate as it ever is under the competitive system—more so than in most cases in the outside world, for it cannot be disturbed by factory shutdowns or acts of money-grabbing landlords.

Fuel is furnished free, the vast Llano tract containing enough wood probably to heat every home for a couple of decades or longer. Aside from a little fuel for cooking purposes, artificial heat is needed only a few months in the year, and then much less than elsewhere in the United States.

There are no churches yet, but any colonist or colonists are welcome to conduct services of any kind that may be wished. The church instinct is gratified among many of the colonists in regular informal gatherings, in which questions of ethics, spiritual development, and social justice are discussed in a friendly and interesting way. The good derived from these meetings is tremendous.

Both by reason of the practical methods of its management and the vast natural resources at its command, the colony is successful. Reference has been made to methods and the system. A word should now be said of the resources. The land is situated in the highlands of Louisiana, where the air is invigorating, the climate delightful, and the health rate high. The soil is rich and fertile and will raise enough food for thousands of human beings. The hotel dining-room is supplied entirely with food produced on the plantation, except for tea, coffee, and a few similar articles. Large stretches of land are now planted to sugar cane, peanuts, corn, velvet beans, and garden vegetables. Rice and cotton can be raised and undoubtedly will be later.

The facts mentioned will give some idea of the practicability of the Llano plan from a purely material standpoint. They will show why, so far as food, shelter, clothing, fuel, and physical wants are concerned, the colony is succeeding and is bound to succeed.

But man does not live by bread alone. There are other things to be considered beside the material and physical. And if these needs are not supplied, neither silken couches nor the food of the gods nor the elixir of youth can make a cooperative colony or any other organization of human beings a success.

The Llano Colony supplies these other needs. It considers the inner man as well as the outer man. And in so doing, it constitutes the foundation—in the opinion of the colonists—of a New Order of Things which can only be built on a secure base such as this community affords.

In seeking equitable economic readjustments, the Llano community has not forgotten the spiritual principles beneath. These it takes full cognizance of, as in fact it should.

There is, therefore, real democracy and real cooperation in the colony. The colonists believe that "all ye are brethren" and they practice it. Job Hariman, big-hearted, kindly, broad-visioned pioneer, who founded the colony and is its manager, sits side by side with the sun-tanned farmer with overalls and cowhide shoes, who burns stumps, clears underbrush, and plants vegetables. Each calls the other "Comrade." They are brothers. Each has his work to do. And in the ethics of the colony, one man is as good as another. It may be added that it is hard for the average man or woman who has lived many years in the artificial atmosphere of the competitive system to practice this democratic code of conduct. Only a sincere, patient, persistent example can work such a change in people in the short space of a few months or a few years. Such an example has been provided all along by Comrade Harriman. And its beneficent influence has brought noticeable results. The transition has been quicker than would seem possible.

The demoralization of men and women has not caused, as many would naturally fear, a reducing of the efficient to the level of the inefficient, of the intelligent to the level of the ignorant. The reverse has been true. The untutored, when treated on terms of equality by his cultured comrade, seeks education more quickly than if the class line were drawn, as it is in the outside world. He begins to read and learn, and one day he surprises his acquaintances by the mind-power he begins to manifest. He had the potentialities all of the time. Competition, "red in tooth and claw," could not call them forth. Cooperation and brotherhood are doing what competition could never do.

The equal wage helps to lift the standard, too. There are no longer economic worries and there is no longer any reason why the farmer or machinist should not read and learn as well as the clerk or superintendent. If one man gets the same pay as another, he should be as intelligent and as well-informed as the other, in his own branch of work, at least. And he usually proceeds to make himself so.

As time goes on, the hours of labor will probably be reduced uniformly and the expenses of living, which are low now, will be cut, too. This will give more opportunity for individual development, study, and growth. Greater economic freedom will bring greater spiritual and intellectual power and more perfect physical health. Freed from industrial chains, men and women will become makers, instead of creatures of environment—lords of the earth, instead of worms of the dust.

The Llano Colony is not only the "Gateway to Freedom" for the person or family locating there, but it is the Gateway to the Freedom of the World, for it opens up the great vista that leads to Industrial Emancipation—the Brotherhood of Man and the New Civilization!—Edward Dickenson in The Mexican Review, July-August, 1918.

Every person gets, not what he deserves, but what he earns; increase your earning capacity and your just deserts will be forthcoming.—Common-Sense Sayings.

WAS THIS A LATTER DAY SAINT BOY?

HIS SECOND COMMISSION

"Dear father," the soldier boy's letter read, "I know you and mother will be glad to learn that I have passed the final tests in the officers' school. I received my commission as lieutenant this morning. Some of the fellows who used to beat me at the university in mathematics and in chemistry failed to pass; they could not stand the grind. I'm not crowing over them, of course, but I can't help feeling set up a little over my first commission, for, if I do say it, I worked hard, and I thought of you and mother, and I was bound to pass."

The middle-aged couple who had given to the service their only son read his letter with tears of pride.

"The boy is doing well," said the father, as he perused it a second time. "'Lieutenant' sounds right to me. We must not forget to address his letters that way. He has earned his title."

The mother murmured assent and tenderly placed the letter with the others that the boy had written since leaving home.

A year afterwards a letter from the boy came from "somewhere at the front," bearing the mark of the "Y. M. C. A.," and in the handwriting of a Red Cross nurse. This is the way it ran, in part:

"I have been here three months, and they tell me you have been kept informed of my condition. This is the first time I have been able to dictate a letter." (Here followed an account of the engagement in which he had been wounded.) "While lying in this hospital I have had a remarkable experience. There are five nationalities in my ward, and the Red Cross administers its wonderful aid to us all alike, of course. A few nights ago, in a sort of waking vision, I seemed to see these nations lifting up beseeching hands for help to be lifted out of darkness into light. Then a figure came walking through the ward all in white, and it was the Christ. He stopped by my cot, and I heard him say as plain as I ever heard you or mother speak, 'I commission you, with thousands of others like you, to preach the gospel to the world that has not heard or heeded it.'

"All that was as clear to me as any real happening. It was a real happening. I cannot describe to you the wonderful beauty of that figure as it came down between the cots. But I, as I lay there that night, said to my Lord and my Master that I would accept his commission. If I am spared, I will come back as a gospel messenger to fight the battle for souls. I have received my second commission, father, and it is greater than the first, don't you think?"

Is that vision of the young lieutenant coming to thousands of young men after the war is over? They have been living the life of adventure and excitement. It will not be easy for them to settle down to the commonplaces of civic and business life. But the world will lie open to the great adventure of the gospel messenger as never before. The nations that have felt the hand of the Christ held out to them through the Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association, and the other agencies of mercy, will be ready as never before to accept him. May the vision of him and his great commission come to the young men now in the fighting ranks as it came to this one in the hospital "over there."—Youth's Companion, October 10, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

I Will Write My Law in Their Hearts

The task that is primarily a mother's: that of instilling fundamental principles of right into the hearts and minds of the little ones in her care, is one which is receiving a great deal of attention at the present time. Educators sense that the impetus towards good or evil is often given a child long before he comes under the guidance of those who have made the training of children their life work and study. It is in the home that this impetus is given and received. True, there are outside influences which count, but a clear-sighted mother can, more often than not, forestall and counteract those impulses which originated in the undesirable associations outside her home.

Can one conceive, then, of a responsibility greater, or of a work more worthy of the best concentration and power of a woman's mind than this: to "train up a child in the way he should go," that "when he is old he will not depart from" the path that will lead him to eternal happiness? Mothers in the church, are you conscientiously striving to do this? Are you putting yourselves in touch with the best helps which are at hand, that you may unerringly choose that which is good, rejecting the unprofitable, in methods as well as materials? Are you concerning yourselves with the proper kind of spiritual and mental food for your children with thought and earnestness equal to that you put upon their clothes, their bathing, or eating?

We are glad to tell you that for a time, we will publish short articles on the training of little children, which articles have been prepared by mothers who have been kindergartners, at the request of the United States Bureau of Education, and the National Kindergarten Association. If you will preserve these, they will make a splendid collection for your study in your child welfare classes, and we do beseech you to let not the good you receive from them stop with that. Remember that what helps you will help another mother, and we cannot have too much light of truth and earnestness in this day and age of the world. Show these articles to your friends and neighbors and study them together with a view of benefiting not only your own methods, homes, and children, but letting the influence go out to as many others as may be reached.

Let us each one as mothers truly striving to prove workmen unashamed of our labors, try to understand the will of God as it affects us and our homes. Let us try to impress and mold the plastic minds of our children into willing forms of usefulness, responsive to the divine leadings. Let us be as the instrument, the pen, by which God may indeed "write his law in the hearts" of the young of the church, that they may indeed find freedom therein, instead of the bondage entailed by ignorance, willfulness, and wrong-thinking.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by the United States Bureau of Education, and the National Kindergarten Association. Learning to love what we have to do makes our tasks with the children easier, and fills the home with sunshine. By Mrs. Mana Clark Jackson.)

If I were a fairy god mother, I would wave my wand and say to all mothers, "Love what you have to do." Children's wants are so numerous and a mother has such constant demands made upon her that she needs to retire within herself often and, no matter how tired she may feel, repeat again and again, "I love what I have to do." Then suddenly she will feel better, and it becomes easier to go on with the task of caring for and training the children. It pays in dollars and cents, as well as in peace of mind and satisfaction of spirit, to devote much thought toward starting the children right.

What are some of the simple ways in which we can help our little ones? Let us begin the day happily, no matter how we feel, and never be discouraged, nor allow the children to become so. Together, mothers and children can learn to be honest, obedient, and faithful.

It should not be forgotten that all virtues thrive best in a healthy body. Therefore, give the child plenty of fresh air, have him sleep in a well-ventilated room, wear clean, whole clothes, and eat simple food.

Let the children take hold and help about the house a little. At four and a half years old they can wash dishes, and they love to do so. An oilcloth apron will keep them dry. They can also help make beds, brush up crumbs, and do many other things. But we must not nag the children at their tasks, remembering that interest in useful work may be most successfully developed by keeping it in the realm of the play spirit.

Let us teach our children to be gentle of voice and manner, because such a bearing attracts good friends, whereas roughness drives people away.

We have churches and schools to help us, but it comes back every time to the parents and the home to develop in the children the simple practices which lead to right and happy living.

We must be patient in answering questions, and if we do not always know the answer, let us try to find out with the children.

Fun is as natural as breathing to most children. Try to laugh with them at their simple jokes.

Let us take a little time at the end of the day if we can to tell a short story. The quiet will do us all good. Perhaps we may have seen a bird, squirrel, or a child do some amusing thing as we glanced out of the window while at work. The wind may have been chasing the pretty leaves or the sun playing hide-and-seek among the clouds. Stories are not all to be found in books. It is a big accomplishment to learn to do things in the child's way—things they like to do—but which we have often denied them because we felt we didn't have time to be bothered.

If the little ones see that mother and father are trying to find something to love in all their trying tasks, before we know it the home will always be full of sunshine.

If we have a fretful child to deal with, find out first if he is being properly nourished; then try telling him stories that will take his mind off himself.

Many children are often disagreeable because they haven't enough of the right things to do, such as games and songs that provide activity and stimulate the mind, and occupations that answer the child's need to be doing and making something.

A most important point for the mother to realize is the necessity of sticking to the lessons she needs to teach—every single day, until the right habits are permanently formed in her child.

No one can tell us exactly the things it is best to do with children. But if we begin to watch and think, read when we can and exchange experiences with other mothers, many suggestions will be found to meet our needs. Take a glimpse backward into your own childhood and many ideas will occur to you in that way. And through it all we will find that the children are helping to bring us up too. Courage and joy prolong life, and we can well afford to stand and wait feeling sure that if our motives have been right, and we can find something to love even in the hard things of life, our little ones will see and know, and will "rise up to call us blessed."

Some "New" Words!

(An address before the Woman's Auxiliary conference at Post Oak, Missouri.)

We as women of the Latter Day Saint Church must equip ourselves to be of service to our country, both at home and abroad. It is almost as if we were learning a new language. First it was sacrifice, as we saw our boys march away. Then it was service, as we put aside our own work and took up that of the Red Cross and did whatever we could find to do for the comfort of those who were gone, and to strengthen the hands of those who stood behind them.

We had, before this time, begun to get acquainted with the word efficiency. It had traveled from the down-town office back to the home and out into the kitchen. Then after we had learned to use the words, sacrifice and service, we were taught a new one, economy, which we were told to harness up to the older word, efficiency.

We have been and are being taught new economies which, to the most of us before this necessity came, had been undreamed of. When the war is over we shall have been introduced to new methods and new standards.

There is another new word creeping into our vocabulary, and that is thrift. There is a feeling of satisfaction that we no longer are wasters but savers and that, at the present time, what we save goes to aid our Government in the big fight it is waging for enduring peace, and the safety and happiness of humanity.

Sacrifice is not a happy word but it is a word that indicates soul growth. Service is a word of dignity and responsibility, indicating the brotherhood of man. Thrift, this new word, is a word of strength. It gives one the satisfaction of gathering up the loose ends, of stopping little leaks, of carefulness and good judgment. It is one with which the American people have not been acquainted and one which we have neglected to place in the vocabulary of our children.

This great and terrible world war is teaching us many things. It will bring new conditions and new relations all over the earth, and one of the results will be a new understanding of, and a new respect on the part of all of us for, service. This is the one great aim of the Woman's Auxiliary—Service along any line that comes within the sphere of woman's work.

MRS. I. M. ROSS.

The Woman of To-morrow

It is woman more than man who has the power to raise the standard of a race. The woman of to-morrow may not have so ready a laugh; there will be too much sadness to remember. But we think their smile will be much sweeter. Ease and luxury never brought out the best in anyone. Character can only grow splendid on thorny ground. Thorny ground enough and to spare this war has given us, and upon it will grow woman worthy of man's reverence. There is already a new seriousness in women. They have started to take life in earnest.

One notes on every hand how little time is frittered away by them compared with three years ago. So called "fancy work" has been relegated to the drawer where things not wanted are kept. Instead one seeks work that has some practical value in the hands of a woman. Of course, there are still many who cling desperately to the old state of things, who fight to keep their old amusements and their old adornments. But they will pass. The tide of advance will be too strong for them. Women who have learned to work in these troubled times are the rich promise of the woman of to-morrow.—London News.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District Institute

This institute, comprised of the four auxiliaries—Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary, and music, met October 3 and 4, and can be pronounced an unqualified success. It was educational, without which our work cannot reach a very high plane of spirituality.

In the past the Woman's Auxiliary has suffered more or less because the men did not comprehend how far-reaching the work of this movement is, and how greatly we needed their support. We welcomed the "coordinating" system of working, knowing it afforded an opportunity of reaching not only the men, but the women who have apparently been indifferent to our work. We cannot say enough in favor of "coordinating." Some couldn't at first understand how it could be put into effect and still have interesting sessions. As one expressed himself, "How will it be interesting to listen to the work of the women?" This was the very class we wished to reach. We need the prestige of the priesthood, which is easily obtained, if they once understand how closely allied is our work to theirs. In fact, without the Woman's Auxiliary, all other departments in the church will suffer to a certain extent.

We will not say anything further in regard to "Coordinating"; suffice it to mention that it proved so satisfactory that the conference, which convened October 5, voted to accept this mode of working for the future. It is a step forward and speaks well for the Saints of this district, showing they are eager to make progress and keep in line with the general onward movement of the church.

We were fortunate in being able to have Elder John R. Grice of Detroit, with us. Much credit is due him in getting our line of activity before the people. In his enthusiastic manner he emphasized the fact that not only the women, but the men, should do all they can in assisting this organization to accomplish its aim and establishing its ideals in every home. He understands the "bigness" of this department and is a willing worker, which means much to those who have charge of the work. In a tactful way he also gave an address on social purity, which met with the hearty approval of all. It was the best we have ever heard; and districts feeling the need of outside help, will do well in securing his assistance.

Elder E. K. Evans also gave a very forceful talk on "The relation of the Woman's Auxiliary to the branch." These addresses were so helpful that we regret that they were not taken down by a stenographer, that all might have the benefit of them. Might mention here that from our ranks surely there are those who would be willing to prepare to take down all important matters that come up in our institutes and conferences. Such helps would be a credit to our organization.

Sister John Parker, of Coldwater, Michigan, gave the story of "The other wise man." This is in five parts and was interspersed with musical numbers. It is a wonderful story, with an uplifting moral and carries inspiration with it. The close attention given proved that it was told in an acceptable manner. This number was to demonstrate what the story-telling course will do for anyone desirous of taking advantage of this opportunity offered through the Woman's Auxiliary.

Sister Francis Baker, of Clear Lake, Indiana, gave an interesting address on the work of the Temple Builders.

A paper by one of our Oracles, Sister Leda McNickle of Coldwater, Michigan, on their work, also contributed much in getting this department of the Woman's Auxiliary before the Saints.

The question box was helpful. Questions of vital importance pertaining to the organization, were asked. It was quite evident from the nature of these questions that all women are not reading our church papers as carefully as we might.

A young ladies' meeting in charge of Sister Frances Baker was held at the home of Sister John Kutt. The object of this was to demonstrate how to conduct sessions of the Temple Builders. "How a girl should conduct herself in the business world" is the title of an address given by Katherine Kutt, which will be published in a later issue of The Glad Tidings. A brief talk on table etiquette by Louise Evans. The question box was conducted by Ethel Martin, to which nearly all the girls responded, showing a keen interest in these things which tend to make us cultured as well as more useful in serving others. After a few musical numbers were rendered, ice cream and wafers were served. We had planned on a hike, but the session proved so interesting, that there was only time enough left to return to the church, where a table had been reserved that the girls might have supper together. It was gratifying to observe that they tried to put into effect some of the things we had learned during the afternoon session. This will not be the last of such meetings. We are planning for one at our next district conference. As a result of this meeting, a chapter has been organized at Lansing, Michigan, with Gladys Dudley, leader, and Ethel Martin, recorder.

A short business session of the Woman's Auxiliary was held. Considerable change was made in the district organization, in harmony with instructions from the general officers. Heretofore we have had a president, vice president, secretary, etc., but now this is obsolete and the organizer is the only officer. This officer is permitted to chose a committee to assist in planning programs for conventions, etc.

The following sisters were appointed: Frances Baker, of Ray, Indiana, Mrs. Walter Ryder and Mrs. A. Woodin, both of Grand Rapids, Michigan. Sister Alice Storey will continue as editor of the department in Glad Tidings.

At an early hour Sunday, October 6, a brief session for the women convened, at which Sister A. Woodin ably presided. She gave us a "heart-to-heart" talk, concerning matters pertaining to their activities.

The panels on child welfare, gotten out by the National Conference of Social Workers, were secured through Sister Krahl and were hung in conspicuous places all around the church auditorium. This surely helped in advertising what we are trying to accomplish.

With the degree of progress made at our institute, we have been encouraged to the extent that we are going to strive to make the next one even better. We will get out of it according to what we put into it. What are we willing to do?

LOUISE EVANS, District Organizer.

Travel Notes

On September 6, we left Providence for Narragansett Pier, or Wakefield, Rhode Island, visiting relatives of Sister Bond, and old-time friends until the 10th, when we spent part of the day at Kingston Fair, leaving for Providence via trolley line in the afternoon. The war has made serious inroads on the prosperity and ordinary scenes of festivity at that famous summer resort, as well as Newport. We were informed that the largest and finest hotel at the former place has been eliminated at forced sale, with all its costly furnishings and equipment, and at a tithe only of its original cost, for wreckage and old junk merchandise.

It is without doubt true that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth;" but it seems also true, to the writer, that he never could have selected New England coast country for purposes of agricultural pursuit or feeding, with the necessities, the primal needs of mankind, unless it may have been for the purpose of illustration of the truth embodied in what has been signified as being the "primal curse," that was signified at the beginning of man's experience in this world, when told that he would have to secure a living or maintain existence "by the sweat of his face." It is enough to make a "man from Missouri" "sweat" in thinking how a man could dig a living from between the rocks, or live on poetry for a steady diet.

Wednesday evening we enjoyed an unusually good prayer and social service. The presence of the Holy Spirit abounded in the liberty, comfort, edification, and manifestation of spiritual gifts and blessings, that seem to be the heritage of true worshipers in every time, and in all places where God's Saints congregate and to whom it seemed a sad thing to say the final and altogether probable last good-by.

Thursday, the 12th, while enjoying the evening meal with Brother George Gates and family, Brother Sheehy drifted in from somewhere, just before our leaving. The following morning we left early (in the rain) for Buffalo. We arrived in that city after ten o'clock at night. Deciding not to disturb our friends at that hour, we went to a hotel.

The following morning, having learned of our arrival in the city, Doctor Weegar, in company with F. G. Pitt, rushed down town in the doctor's car, before breakfast, and before we were able to fairly recover our surprise, we found ourselves, at the fashionable hour of ten o'clock a. m., sitting at the breakfast table with the "whole bunch" of pleasant and congenial gospel associates: the doctor and his family, and Brother and Sister Pitt. At this time we remembered and were particularly impressed with the words of the poet: "Blest be the tie that binds."

In the afternoon in company with Brother and Sister Pitt, we motored with the doctor to Niagara Falls and were privileged to again admire and be thrilled in soul with the beauty and sublimity of their world wonder. And something else—when crossing the bridge which led to the island, we met with the unexpected but one of the frequent pleasant surprises with which our absence from home abounds. "Collisions" are generally of unpleasant and sometimes serious character. But the one we refer to was nothing more serious than a temporary loss of breath. We fairly "collided" with Brother and Sister Paul Hanson, Brother Gillen, and a brother from the Canadian side. Before parting Brother Paul backed the whole company up against beautiful scenery and "shot" the whole crowd with one or two volleys. If the future reveals "mutilations" perhaps the camera man should only share the blame with the culprits, who might have made his aim unsteady by their love of fun.

The day following, Brethren Hanson and Gillen were to fill appointments on either side of the falls.

Sunday, the 15th, we spoke in the morning in the chapel at Buffalo. Brother Pitt preached in the evening. Dined to-day with Brother and Sister Knowlton. Brother Knowlton has been called into Government service and is now stationed in Buffalo for an indeterminate season.

Monday, the 16th, Brother and Sister Pitt left for Toronto. The evening was made an enjoyable event in association with Brother Gillen, Brother Bishop, Brother and Sister Knowlton, with the family of Doctor Weegar, at their home.

Of the home, the family relations, the unstinted hospitality and kindness shown myself and Nellie by the family of Doctor Weegar, I hesitate somewhat to speak, for the reason that public announcement might in some event prove poor recompense for favors for which we may never have opportunity to show proper appreciation and express our thanks. "Whoso feedeth you and clotheth you... is my disciple; and he who doeth not these things, is not my disciple." It is well for us to heed, "lest we forget" the kind of evidence that appeals to those not of our faith when we thus evidence our discipleship in our love, one toward another.

Tuesday, the 17th, it rained all night. We left for Chicago at 7.30 a. m. and arrived at Englewood Station in the evening about 8.30. Here we were welcomed at the home of Sister Maggie Warlick.

Wednesday evening was blessed with old-time associates in an excellent prayer service. At this time Nellie was signally blessed in administration.

Thursday we spent part of the day at Sister Warlick's, in company with Brother and Sister Christy, their new missionary from the East. At 3 p. m. Brother McGuire of Hammond, Indiana, came for us with his car. In the evening Nellie accompanied Sister Alice to the association rooms of the Woman's Red Cross and war workers, of whom Sister McGuire is head and director.

Friday and Saturday, Sister Bond was prostrated by cold and old recurring troubles, but by splendid nursing and everything that could prompt kind hearts and unselfish interest on the part of Brother and Sister McGuire, she was restored and in fit condition to journey to Chicago the following Sunday morning, where we spoke to the people of the South Side Church. For the afternoon Brother Christy had planned a union prayer meeting for all the branches of the city and of Pullman, at which the old-time missionary and his companion might enjoy a brief, and in all probability, a last reunion.

This meeting was presided over by Brother Christy. It will prove to be a long remembered event on account of the presence and power of the Spirit of God, and good fellowship, such as Latter Day Saints only can understand.

A strenuous and happy day was concluded by filling an appointment on the West Side, when, with unexpected liberty, we tried to rehearse in some new light, the blessedness and profit of obedience to the evangel of latter days. We had a good-sized, responsive audience, and were very glad to meet our old-time friends and associate workers.

Monday, the 25th, we visited with our daughter and granddaughter on the South Side. Though we had planned to leave for home in the evening, we were persuaded to stay for a surprise which the Saints had planned for Brother and Sister Christy. No one who was present will question the success of this event; and the quantity of provisions piled on the kitchen table for Brother and Sister Christy was calculated to make them forget all about Mr. Hoover, for some time, at least.

A speech by the writer being scheduled and called for, we tried to respond as well as the surprise and our emotions would allow. This was followed by speeches by my companion, Brother and Sister Christy, Brethren Dutton, Kier, Burwell, and perhaps another, after which we enjoyed music and social cheer.

I think I will refer, before closing, to the impressions made upon my mind by the speeches made by the brethren referred to, now laboring in the interest of the church in that mission. Of their efficiency, zeal, and devotion to the cause of God and human welfare, the officers and people of the church can be well assured. They are all out to accomplish something that relates to the interest of others rather than their own. They are not considering this world's rewards for service, but are capable and willing to labor and expend their energies after the fashion and example set for them in an intelligent and altruistic service under the Leader and Commander, Jesus Christ, the spirit of which this old world is too sadly ignorant.

Farther than this, I am taking the risk of recording my impressions had while in Chicago, that Brother Kier is a man whose talent, zeal, and devotion marks him as being fitted for a more extended field of service, as soon as conditions and his consent will allow.

Tuesday, the 24th, we left for Kansas City at 10 o'clock a. m. arriving there at 9.30 p. m., after a somewhat tiresome journey. Hotel accommodations.

Wednesday. Independence and home! Dilapidated—dusty—dirty—weed overgrown, but still—"home, sweet home," a good town and pleasant place in which to live, and for us—in all probability—to die!" M. H. BOND.

TOLEDO, OHIO, October 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: After a silence that has become even monotonous to me, I have the great pleasure to assure you that my interest in the building up of the kingdom of God has not abated, but I believe that it is increasing. My pleasure in writing is increased in that I can say that the work in Toledo is slowly advancing toward a higher social and spiritual plane.

The gatherings of the Saints at the prayer services are increasing, and the manifestations of the Spirit in every way gives evidence of this advancement. These manifestations are in healings, tongues, interpretation of tongues, dreams, visions, faith, prophecy, and the best of all, in knowledge and wisdom. The fruit of the Spirit is developing, and several of the characteristics of this fruit is seen; namely, love, and increased humility, faith, temperance in what is said as well as the manner of saying it, as well as in eating and drinking. Also in the use of the means given of God for our increasing power for good in the world.

Brother Harold H. Harmes, who with his wife came into the church last summer has been called to the office of teacher, and bids fair to be a studious and efficient laborer in the purifying the body of iniquity and backbiting with all the attendant evils.

I am happy to say that the young in the church are sacrificing their appetite for worldly pleasure, and providing for social gatherings as are both healthful and at no sacrifice of their spiritual development, and does not bring reproach upon the things and work of God. This work is the result of having made a covenant with God by sacrifice, and to be true to that covenant we must keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and destroy whatever love has been previously developed for such things. Yes, it has been fully developed that we can put righteous heads on young shoulders. To manifest youth does not necessarily need to partake of foolishness. I have noted that some, when speaking of some others, say that they act younger than others, and have reference only to the fact that they act more foolish. That is a reflection on youth, and no commendation to older people. The gospel requires as much of righteousness from one member as another no matter what the age, and it is much easier for the young to be righteous than for those who have spent their youth in worldliness and folly as well as wickedness who come into the church.

Brother Clare Terrell and wife Ruth have been located in the city some time, but had drifted from the work into indifference. But he became sorely burdened with disease, and his faithful mother came to minister to him. Through her efforts the elders were sent for, for it was through her faithful instruction that her son requested the administration, and at that time a very humble confession was made by the brother, and through the manifestation of the Spirit evidence was given of pardon of his sins. After the administration he testified that he thought that he previously had received of the Holy Spirit, but when Brother Ulrich and myself laid our hands on his head he said that he received it as he had never enjoyed it before, and he knew that the work was of God. He had been sick for five weeks with typhoid fever, and they were in trying circumstances both physically and temporally, as well as spiritually. There came blessings needed in every way, and this has given them such a love for the work that they can talk about little else when the Saints are present.

Two of our members have been called to the army. One is in camp, Albert Ulrich, and one in France, Orval Burtch. A service flag is being prepared to show our appreciation of the sacrifice they are making in the interests of our beloved country and to make it possible for Zion to be established on this land.

Last Monday occurred our business meeting, and the testimony of those present was that it had been the best for many months. All counseled together and transacted the business with an eye single to the glory of God and the building up of his kingdom.

Of late the periodicals have been conveying to us news of the progress of the work in many places, and in this we greatly rejoice. It has been a great struggle to start the work in every department of the church in the upward trend, as I view the coordinating of the auxiliaries to be. I pray that the directing of the carrying out of this principle may be subject to the Spirit. There are so many possibilities of being influenced by some of the worldly institutions which have done good along certain lines, but in other ways are at fault. When the Sunday School Association began to be formed in the districts before the general association, we were urged to unite with the International Sunday School Union, and the argument they made was that, "we have the material and the means and we would like to help you," but I decided that this was God's work, and we were to gather the good things from every source, from within and without, and decide what was pasture, and not be subject; that is, not the tail, but the head in this matter, and so it has proved the better plan. I believe that as fast as a real necessity arises, and the time is opportune for providing for it God will reveal that which will enable the necessity to be cared for as well as the ones to bear the responsibility of caring for it. This has always been the case. This will always be the case if our faith is unwavering.

We have seen no injurious effects of the apostasy of one whose name has been noted recently, but we have every evidence that we are living in the sifting time, and there has hardly been a family but what has or is experiencing that which is trying their faith; but those who have reached out for the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life, have stemmed the tide, and have recovered or are recovering spiritually.

I was present at the series of meetings held at Sylvania, about ten or twelve miles from here, by Brother Jesse Harden, and find an earnest branch of Saints, most of whom are young in the work. I felt well in telling the gospel story, and urging them to stand by the right as against the demon rum and its cohorts who are trying with all they have to keep Ohio in the wet column. We hope to see Ohio in the position to tell the world that prosperity follows the observance of the principles of temperance and sobriety. The night I was there a murder occurred within a few rods of the church, as another striking evidence of the evil effects of strong drink, and the crazed condition of the brain as the after effects.

I am sorry that our government and the so-called Christian people and organizations are favoring the use of tobacco, which the Lord has said is not good. Physicians who have so testified in the past, where are they now? Even the Red Cross Society, so The Literary Digest asserts, are the authorized distributors of the tobacco among the soldier boys. How are the mighty fallen! A man who is one of the officials of the Y. M. C. A., has said of late that the time was when one who used tobacco was considered unfit for membership in that association, but now the use of tobacco was a commendation for membership. He expressed his regrets. I noted by a Toledo daily paper that the soldiers and sailors were being provided with a dance by one of the so-called Christian associations of this city, while in other columns the deaths of both soldiers and sailors from this city were announced, and the funerals occurring, and homes filled with sadness and mourning because of the many deaths that have occurred among those who have gone from this place. It did not look consistent. These associations should be furnishing something besides husks for these boys. They need it and many of them long for it, as is evidenced from the letters from these boys in the battle fields. They are looking to those associations to furnish them a soul-healing balm, but what do they see? All vanity and vexation of spirit.

I am not one who does not appreciate what the Y. M. C. A. and the K. of C. are doing for our boys in the land of conflict, for they are doing much that is highly commendable, but we must use our good judgment and not compromise with some things they are doing not in harmony with the word of God. We must support our Government in its rightful place, but it has no rightful place to encourage the use of tobacco, which the Lord has said is not good for man.

It is easy to see the effects of the favor given the use of tobacco by both the Government and those who profess the name of Christ. I pray for our brethren who are compelled to be associated with such influences that lead to wrong habits.

Another influence that is damaging to our work among the young is the influence of our public schools in favor of dancing. One sister came to me of late and asked my counsel in regard to associating with a school club or association which has on its program recitations, readings, and music, and then follow with dancing. She wished to associate in the former while knowing they would follow with the latter. She says we will not stay to the latter, but for the development and enjoyment found in the former she desired to be with those young people. It is hard to resist temptation, and harder to pray for us not to be led into temptation and practice what we pray. My heart sympathizes with my brethren and sisters, and pray that God will not permit them to be sifted out of his kingdom in the harvesting time.

With a brighter hope in the final redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

Keep Your Books and Tracts at Work

He was a diver at the bottom of the sea. He noticed under his feet a piece of paper. Picking it up, as best he could with his clumsy fingers, in the stillness of that spot, he read these words: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." And he thought, "Though I go to the bottom of the sea, thou art there." And this is true, in principle, of us. God speaks to us by means of the printed word. Why then should we not let it speak to others in like manner? Surely were there no virtue in tracts the Lord would not command us to write them, as he has done in the Doctrine and Covenants. And that even whole churches may be turned about toward saving light, by means of the written word, is evidenced by the fact that God commanded John to write to the seven churches of Asia. "Unto the church of Ephesus, write; . . . Repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

And then we have present-day facts. The testimonies of Saints who know that they were brought in contact with the gospel by the printed sermon or article sent forth in the church paper or tract.

Unto them it shall be given to write in a manner to convince others of the truth of the work. The author of An Instrument in His Hands, who is personally known to me, wrote a series of letters to her nephew and he received baptism as a result. Thousands of similar cases could be cited. But have we considered just how many of these valuable tracts and books and papers are now covered with dust, as they lie, unused and valueless because not read, on our shelves? And millions of people are without the light of God in its fullness. Write me next week and tell me that you are with us in literature work.

Attention Soldiers, Present Arms!

We have received another challenge. Read it; think it over. Now, what have you to say?

Brother John Gaw writes for the Kimball Sunday school as follows: "We have a membership of 65 and to date have about $400, and when you drew our attention to the challenge contained in a recent number of Stepping Stones it rather made us wake up and take notice. Of course a small school of six or seven members has quite an advantage over a school with 65 members. Still we are after the largest percentage in the church this year and are willing to contest our amount, on percentage, with any school. Still, we feel it would be fairer if the schools were nearer the same size. However, we propose to challenge any school on percentage basis that is half our size and on largest amount we challenge any school three times our size!"

There is no joke about this, and they undoubtedly mean just what they say, and if the writer is not badly mistaken, the Chatham District, of which Brother John Gaw is superintendent, is going to give any other district in the church a hard tussle for the largest amount.

We would like to see every school working in the same spirit as the Kimball school, for they are working for the advancement of God's work in making this challenge, not simply for the glory they get from having their school mentioned, and if any other school beats them I am sure they will be just as pleased as can be to see that school do so well. Little friendly contests of this kind are wholesome and will be productive of good. How many of the schools are willing to enter into this contest?

There are many other good thoughts and suggestions in Brother Gaw's letter but we shall not take time or space to have more of it printed. We wish we could get a dozen a day just like it.

We are not getting as many reports for the Roll of Honor as we had hopes for, and we trust that every school that has reached the $2 per member mark would send us a report—how many members, total amount to date, and name of school so we can list them on this roll.

We trust that those schools that did so well last year will double their efforts this year. Remember, it is an increase of $25,000 we are asking for, and that means $100,000 that we must raise. We sincerely hope that every school will be on the list this year. Last year some schools failed to respond at all, but this year we sincerely hope and pray that all have sensed their duty and that not a single school will be absent from the list when completed for the year.

Another thought we would like to have you consider well is that we can save several hundred dollars each year if the schools will only send in the name of the school when reporting their Christmas offering and let the Blue Stepping Stones contain only the names of the schools and the total amount from each school instead of listing the members. It used to cost approximately six cents per line to print these names and amounts; now, with paper and higher cost of labor, it will cost more. Let us save this $800 or $1,000 by listing the names of the schools and amounts only. It would be just the same as if some person were donating that much to the fund. Post names of individuals on your school blackboards where it will be most appreciated.

Watch the Roll of Honor each week from now on and be sure that your school is on that roll. After once on, it will be there all the time, for the first week it will be represented by your report, the next and following weeks it will be represented by a star—be sure your star is shining.

Your work, my work, our work, is and should be to leave not a thing undone that we can do to make this offering a success. I am going to try to do my part, both in giving and in work—who will do less?

A little poem written by Adelaide Proctor, seems to the writer to be quite appropriate for use at this time. It is as follows:

"See the rivers flowing Forward to the sea,
Bearing all their treasures
Bountiful and free;
Yet to help their giving
Hidden springs arise;
Or if need be, showers
Feed them from the skies.

"Watch the princely flowers
Their rich fragrance spread,
Load the air with perfumes
From their beauty spread;
Yet their lavish spending
Leaves them not in dearth,
Their fresh life replenished
By their Mother Earth.

"Give thy heart's best treasures.
From fair Nature learn;
Give thy life and ask not,
Wait not a return.
And the more thou givest
From thy little store,
With a double bounty
God will give thee more."

Will this not inspire you to even greater efforts than ever before: "And the more thou givest from thy little store, with a double bounty God will give thee more."

Yours for $100,000.

Roll of Honor

Winnipeg, Manitoba. Sister O. L. D'Arcey reports membership of 42 with a total offering to date of $93.65. They have set their aim at $300 and are sure to get it. They were not afraid to set their aim high and this sort of spirit shows determination to "go over the top." This school will represent the first star in the roll of honor, not because they were the first to raise their $2 per member, but because they were the first to report after October 1.

We believe that the Second Detroit Sunday School was the very first school to report that they had $2 per member for the offering—they had raised their $2 per member on May 12. You will find their report elsewhere.

O'Fallon, Illinois. Brother Robert Scott advises that they have an enrollment of 40 and a total offering to date of $105. He states: "We have cards with 5 and 10 cent amounts printed on them and as the members pay in these amounts are punched from their cards. We also have ice cream socials and profits have been given to offerings."

Kimball, Ontario. Look at this: Brother John Gaw

reports: We have 65 members, and to date have $400. Of course we know the small schools have an advantage, but we want to challenge any school—on a percentage basis—having even half our membership or over, and for the largest amount we will challenge any school with three times our enrollment." Read what we have to say about this in our letter. Brother Gaw is superintendent of the Chatham District, and from what we learn of the rest of the schools in that district they are going to make any other district "go some" to equal their mark.

Paonia, Colorado. Sister Lillian Pottorff writes: Our Sunday school having fifteen members has raised $66.81 so far, and our aim is $100. The Saints have not given their offering unwillingly, nor for the name, but have given for the Master's work. Some have given all the dimes they could save, one gave all the new money received, and another gave all the money saved by watching their purchases and buying at a saving. The Lord has blessed us with his Spirit in all our efforts.

Eustis, Nebraska. Sister Henrietta Keller reports: "We have kept the Christmas offering constantly in the minds of our members which, including the home department and cradle roll, totals 34 members. We are going to keep right at it until Christmas." Sister Keller suggests that we need not state the amount, but we are free to state that Eustis is away over the $2 per member mark and have set a good high mark as their aim for the year. With the very excellent start they have they are sure to win.

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, September 14, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have seen some real, modern warfare since I last wrote to your valuable paper, but have had the protecting care of our heavenly Father, so I am still safe and sound, for which I am very thankful indeed.

We are at the present time located in a nice little town with good quarters to stay in—electric lights, etc., and plenty to eat, such as fresh bread, jam, ripe tomatoes, grapes, apples, potatoes, meat, fresh butter, and the rest that goes to make good meals.

I have seen quite a good deal of France, and I think it is a very pretty country, except up along the old trench lines, and they are a mass of barbed wire entanglement pretty well blown to pieces, and shell holes, up out of one and down into another. It surely is some sight.

The crops that I have seen over here looked very good. One thing that I could not understand was why there were no bundle carriers on the binders, and I have not been able to find out yet. They have the modern makes of binders, too, the McCormack, Deering, etc. I saw a few ox teams pulling binders, which reminded me of when I was doing the same way on the fertile plains of Saskatchewan, Canada, several years ago. At that time, I never once dreamed that I would be watching some one else do the same some years later on the opposite side of the great Atlantic.

I received several encouraging and cheerful letters from some of the Saints, in answer to my last letter to the HERALD, and I wish to take this opportunity to thank them all for their kindness to me, and I will try and answer them as soon as possible, but I trust this will suffice for the present.

It seems to me that some of our folks at home worry over us boys a good deal more than they should. They seem to think that this warfare is really worse than it is (not saying but what it is bad enough). I had the same impression when I was at home, partly on account of reading some of the newspaper accounts of the war. I have seen men killed on the battlefield, also wounded, and have helped carry them to the dressing stations, and it would surprise you to see how cheerfully the most of them take it. I have seen our boys charging, facing a hail of machine gun bullets, and laughing at the same time. Now you may think it is impossible for the boys to do so under such circumstances, but it isn't, and perhaps the next instant their spirit would be in the great beyond, free from the sufferings of this world, better off than we are.

So, good folks at home, don't worry so much, but put your trust in Him who doeth all things well.

The church papers continue to bring messages of comfort and cheer to one of the boys, and I hope a great many more than one, over here.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, September 20, 1918.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother Smith: I am now in the place of my boyhood and youthful years. I am meeting many dear friends. My expenses here were all handsomely met by one who was impressed with my work among the wounded soldiers in Washington and Baltimore. I have spent the whole afternoon in the wards of the city hospital among our wounded and dying soldiers. To-morrow I go to the hospital at Wakefield, then to the one near Springfield. Preachers must confine their talks to fifteen minutes in the wards. Then a personal visitation to every soldier is expected and greatly desired, especially if the preacher can take with him to the afflicted men the pity and love and sympathy of the heart of the Savior.

I cannot tell you, in written words, how my own spiritual life has been enriched, and my consecration deepened by what I have seen and heard. The hearts of these stricken men are crying out for the Great Comforter. Any word or any ministration that will reveal him in clearer vision they welcome with eyes streaming with tears. In the crucible of suffering these soldiers, from the trenches, have been permitted to get a right estimate of this earthly life with all its sordid ambitions and its selfish gains. Their hearts and minds are set upon the "peace that passeth understanding." This afternoon I knelt and prayed at thirty-six bedsides. I sat by one who passed into eternity with the name of the precious Savior on his lips. He looked so peaceful in death I could not help believing he saw the Savior in the parting of soul and body. The nurse told me that he was deeply spiritual. These are experiences that are burning into my soul in letters of fire. I feel as if I cannot do enough to extol the precious Savior in this day of great opportunity.

I become very much saddened in heart after leaving one of these scenes of the brutality of war, but the mists clear away, and I see again the face of the heavenly Father, and hear him saying: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." So I take courage and hold with tighter grip the nail-pierced hand. If we are fervent in prayer, I believe God will not fail to let us see his purpose even when the hour is darkest.

My daily prayer is that my eyes be anointed, and my ears open to the Spirit's leadings, that no opportunity to help or comfort others be lost. My trust in God, and my faith in the imperishable gospel of his only-begotten Son were never more ardent than now. I commit myself to his loving care—like a trusting child to a fond parent—I know he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind, and he hears us when we call on him. These wounded and dying soldiers, with their awful experiences in their eyes, have brought me into a closer fellowship with Christ. I feel as if I could wear myself out in his service. This war is too big a thing for any of us to keep out of it. Each, in his own way, must do his bit, or be found wanting in that day.

I leave for Jonesport in a few days. Pray for my success there.

Yours fraternally,

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

CHANGES IN METHODS VERSUS CHANGES IN DOCTRINE

spirituality to the assembly at these Lamoni reunions. I do not deny that there are gatherings equal in intelligence and spirituality, but I admit no superiors. And you are my witnesses to the wonderful manifestations of these particular gifts at these meetings. They are truly pentecostal, and working in closest harmony with wisdom and intelligence.

AN EXAMPLE

Still further, notice the character and training of the men who have exercised under these gifts. Pardon me if I mention names. It is necessary. Brother Burgess is a university man, perhaps not excelled among us in learning and breadth of reading. He speaks to you often under the influence of the gift of prophecy. Professor Hopkins of Grace-land College but recently spoke to you in an unknown tongue, not known to him or to you, and later by the Spirit gave a partial interpretation, and still later Brother Burgess gave the "literal" translation, as he said. Other members of the college faculty, including President Briggs, have been with us on this platform and have said amen to these gifts.

Brother Burgess said that he had always desired the gift of wisdom. He did not say that he had received it. You are his witnesses that he did receive it. But he went on to say that for reasons not known to him God had seen fit often to put upon him the gift of prophecy. I think perhaps this may have been done that he might serve as an example in refutation of the erroneous argument that these particular gifts are intended only for the ignorant and the undeveloped.

DANGER OF FALSE GIFTS

We are told that there is danger in the exercise of such gifts—danger of fraud and deception. That is true, every blessing brings with it danger. But the same is true of the other gifts. There are many who claim to be filled with wisdom whose counsels are but folly and confusion. Many claim the gift of faith who at heart are agnostic.

A greater danger would be found in the passing away of these gifts. Then we should have but an abnormal, or at best a partial operation of the Spirit. The idea that the gifts should cease may be good Methodist doctrine but it is neither "wholesome" nor "very full of comfort." Some years ago an article appeared in the Improvement Era of the Utah church entitled, "The passing of the gifts," and lamenting the fact that the gifts mentioned had ceased among the Utah people. We do not accept that as an evidence of greater enlightenment but rather a further evidence of apostasy; and so would it be also in our case. But to the contrary our faith is greatly strengthened at these meetings by the manifestations of the gifts and by the reputable witnesses speaking and confirming that which is given.

NOW ABIDETH

I must not forget, however, that while these gifts are very important, there are other things of great importance. After enumerating the gifts, and dwelling upon them Paul says: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." (1 Corinthians 13:13.)

We meet here and enjoy the wonderful blessings of heaven. The Spirit moves upon this one and that one and we hear the word of prophecy or of tongues, or perchance see our sick healed. The meetings close and we go away. These things are not with us then excepting in memory. But now abideth with us day and night faith, hope, and charity.

BE A SOURCE OF STRENGTH

The man who is without faith and hope in this work is but a source of weakness. I met a certain man a few days ago. He looked me very intently in the eye and said: "How is it with the church? Is everything upside down?" I looked him as directly in the eye and replied, "No, I think most everything is right side up."

He seemed vastly relieved. But I do not know how soon some one else would knock the props from under him. We should be strong and hopeful ourselves and strengthen others. That is the command. As we have received let us measure to others. Jesus has strengthened us. Let us strengthen others—make the crooked paths straight and strengthen the weak knees, as we are told.

And we must have charity. Let us bear with the faults of others in a Christlike manner. If they are transgressors, let us bring them to account, but in the lawful way, lest while dealing with them we ourselves become transgressors of the law of reconciliation.

THE CONCLUSION

Now in conclusion: My contention has been that changes in method and procedure are legitimate when made in harmony with wisdom and the spirit of light. We should be progressives in such matters. But changes in the doctrine and principles revealed to us are not permissible. We have no creed to revise. No such changes to my knowledge have been made. We have not added to or taken from or changed in any way the position of the church on doctrine, organization, or blessings.

COLLEGE DAY OFFERINGS

It has been brought to our attention that on account of the influenza in various parts of the country, that it was impossible to take up the annual College Day offering the first Sunday in October. We trust that the branch president in such branches will not fail to receive this offering from the Saints at their earliest opportunity.

The work at the college this year is being supported by a greater number of students than in former years, and we feel that, as a church, we should loyally support the Government which has urged that our colleges and schools be supported, not only numerically but financially as well, and those who are in a position to assist in a substantial manner should not hesitate in imparting of their substance to uphold this splendid work of the church.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Our Departed Ones

WEIR.—John Weir was born September 20, 1884, at Boone, Iowa. Baptized December 27, 1914. Died October 9, of pneumonia, following influenza. He had a strong testimony of the gospel and was a faithful member of the church. Services in charge of Henry Pratt. Sermon by C. Malcor.

PERRY.—Richard, son of Alma and Anna Perry, was born at Detroit, Michigan, July 29, 1918. Died September 20, 1918, at home of his grandmother, Joanna Perry, near Vales Mills, Ohio. Services in charge of George Burt. Burial in Bowen Cemetery.

PERRY.—D. R. Perry, aged 45 years, died at his home near Vales Mills, Ohio, September 27, 1918, of ulcers of stomach. Twelve years ago he became a member of the Reorganized Church, being baptized by L. R. Devore. Survived by a widow, 3 sons, and 4 daughters. Funeral services at Saints' church at Vales Mills, Ohio, in charge of George Burt. Burial in Bowen Cemetery.

BUNCH.—Rachael M. Bunch, born October 14, 1849, at Colchester, Ontario, died September 22, 1918, at Livingston, Montana. Baptized November 19, 1862, by James Blakesley. Leaves to mourn, husband, and 2 brothers, C. N. Hutchins, of Meadow Grove, Nebraska, and Israel A. Hutchins, of Lyon, Montana. Buried at Ennis, Montana.

BENJAMIN.—Rufus John Benjamin, born July 3, 1831, at Hunter, Green County, New York, died October 6, 1918, at his home in Princeville, Illinois. Was baptized into the early church, also into the Reorganization. Was present at the Amboy conference when President Joseph took his place at the head of the church. Was an elder, but not actively engaged in late years. Was faithful to the end; a staunch defender of the faith.

CASE.—Lyman Edwin, son of Warren E. and Joanna Case, born at Nokomis, Illinois, August 7, 1896, passed to his reward August 14, 1918. Graduated from Lamoni, Iowa, schools, he enrolled at Iowa State University in September, 1914. He enlisted for service to his country, trained for flying, was sent to the front in France, collided with an enemy machine and was dashed to his death. He is survived by mother, brother, Milnor, 2 sisters, Mrs. L. B. Moore and Miss Ida. A faithful member of the church, he awaits the resurrection of the just. Memorial services were held at Lamoni, his home, sermon by J. F. Garver.

BALEY.—Charles Baley died September 11, 1918, of uremia following an operation for appendicitis. Was born in Exeter, England, June 20, 1859, the son of William and Adelaide Charlotte Baley. Came to America the latter part of 1875, residing for a few years in Illinois and Kansas, afterwards in California until about fourteen years ago, when he came to Salt Lake City, where he died. He leaves two sons, one at the present time in the United States Army. Services were held in the Joseph W. Taylor undertaking establishment, in charge of C. A. Smurthwaite, the sermon being by Bishop Richard Bullard, and interment in the Mount Olivet Cemetery, Salt Lake City.

FITZPATRICK.—Elmer J., son of Eddie Fitzpatrick and wife, was born October 30, 1895, at Radcliff, Ohio. Died October 11, 1918, at the city hospital in Minneapolis, Minnesota, of pneumonia following influenza. Baptized at Creola, Ohio, September, 1914, by R. C. Russell. September 13, 1918, he left his home to enter the Aviation Naval school at Minneapolis. With patriotic ambition to reach a higher plane he took up his work after an attack of influenza, with the result that pneumonia developed, death following a few days later. He was very popular in church and educational work. Funeral services at his father's home, in charge of George Burt.

FROM HERE AND THERE

A mistake crept into our item on the Lamoni Lyceum course last week and made us say pictures when it should have read tickets. When sufficient tickets are sold to pay for the course, the committee disposes of the rest of the tickets as they feel is best for the occasion, thus filling all the seats at all the numbers.

Apostle James A. Gillen spent a few days in Detroit recently with J. R. Grice and family. On account of the ban on public meetings, due to the influenza epidemic, he was not given the opportunity for preaching and other work that the Saints so much desire. His presence was much appreciated and several sick calls were responded to, blessings following the administrations. He reports a successful trip through Ontario, and left on the 24th for Coldwater, Saint Joseph, and other points. Our correspondent says: "Come again, Brother Gillen; you are always welcome in Detroit."

Brother Glenn L. Sager, in reporting the recent conventions of the Eastern Michigan District says the sentiment expressed was that the church debt should be paid this year and the Christmas offering kept going for the good of the church. During the election of officers some of the preachers offered to preach the funeral sermon of Ida Cline (I decline) who was given a prominent place. They were good conventions.

Elder F. G. Pitt writes that they expect to go to Biloxi, Mississippi, soon to spend the winter. This is in the Mobile District, where Elder A. E. Warr was in charge prior to taking up the Des Moines pastorate.

A brother writes: "Read the last Unity a few days ago and must say I found it amusing, interesting, and very instructive. I have never seen so small a sheet that contains so much food for thought as I find in it. May God bless it to the good of his servants is my prayer."

The offer of the Saints of London, Ontario, of the basement of their commodious church building on Maitland Street as an emergency hospital to be used by the board of health in caring for the influenza victims has been accepted, and it will be so used, according to The Free Press of that place, dated the 21st. All expenses will be met by the board of health. The basement will accommodate about 20 beds while two good-sized class rooms will hold four or five each. Elder Frank Gray is the branch president. This practical demonstration of Christian sympathy is much appreciated in the Canadian metropolis.

The Santa Ana (California) Daily Register of the 14th gives considerable space to the part Elders G. H. Wixom and J. W. Rushton had in a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. groups of the county held at that place on the evening of the twelfth. Their speeches are quoted from at length and very appreciatively commented on.

Charles H. Martin, of the Main Garage, Main Station, Great Lakes, Illinois, would like to meet any Saints there or thereabouts.

The name and address of David M. Archibald is sent to us for publication. Address him at Headquarters, 10th Ammunition Train, Camp Funston, Kansas.

Graceland College suspended operations on the 21st till the restrictions on account of the Spanish influenza were definitely raised. At this writing, the 28th, no definite word has been received from health officials as to date for opening, but it is hoped that by November 4 the college may resume its work. A large number of the students went home on vacations, since it was announced that to make up for lost time there would be no Christmas vacation. The public schools are still closed, with no date announced for opening. The number of cases seems to have increased in the community, though no deaths as yet.

"WILL HE FIND FAITH ON THE EARTH?"

(Address of Frederick M. Smith, delivered at the Enoch Hill Branch, the morning of September 22, 1918, Independence, Missouri. Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.)

I do not know just how long I shall occupy your time this morning, or just where I shall land, but there are some things about which I wish to talk to you, and it will be more in the nature of a talk, with, perhaps, some exhortation, than a sermon.

WHAT IS A GOSPEL SERMON?

In a report from one of our missionaries, one of several hundreds which I have been reading, within the last few days, I was—I don't know whether I was astonished or not—but I was a little bit surprised to hear a recrudescence of something which I had heard on different occasions, and had hoped wouldn't hear any more. This missionary working in a field where missionary work was distinctly required, in his sermons he spoke on what we call the principles of the gospel, those which are fundamental to an acceptance of the faith, and he of course was making an appeal to those who were nonmembers for the purpose of arousing their interest in the message and mission we have. It seems that in his congregation was a person from Independence, and this person from Independence went up to him and said that that was the first gospel sermon he had heard in a long time, and the impression that he gave to the missionary was, and I think it was the impression he intended to carry, that the preachers at Independence, the headquarters, were either not able to give gospel sermons, or chose not to give them.

Now, that opens up a big question, and it is a question that our people ought to be somewhat informed on. For let me say this, after all due consideration, and knowing the significance of what I shall say, if the men at Independence were constantly preaching to you the principles they preached to you when you were nonmembers I certainly would feel that they were not discharging their responsibilities to you or the church. And that does not mean to say, either, that they have gone astray, and are not preaching gospel sermons.

There are some of our missionaries who have a little group of sermons from half a dozen to twenty or twenty-five that are on gospel themes as they understand them. They preach these sermons, then turn the barrel over and begin preaching them over again. Some have been used to hearing these sermons, and think if they go outside of them they are outside of the gospel. Now I may not preach a gospel sermon to you this morning, according to that criterion, but I shall hope that it will not be outside of the gospel, and that it may contain good things, or some of those things that the Lord himself expects shall be given to our people.

Has it ever occurred to you that it would be utterly impossible for this church to meet and solve the problems of the Zion gathering, and educate the people as they must be along these lines, and still continue to preach the gospel sermons that we heard in the early missionary days of the church? And hence, to put the question fairly up to you, Is it fair for you to place the old missionary yardstick to the sermons of the men in Independence, and say they are failures or successes as they may measure up to the standard demanded of the missionary?

A WORKING FAITH

It is useless for me to talk baptism to you, for you have been baptized. I do not say that it is useless for me to preach repentance to you because there are few that do not need the principle of repentance. I doubt if there will ever be a time in the development of Zion or the church when the principle of repenitance will not be an ever-present need, for that is simply to say that we are but human. I may say that it is necessary that we shall preach faith, but the faith that I think we are now in need of having preached to us in Zion is not the same kind of faith that we are preaching to the world, when we ask them to have faith in God to the extent that we are asking them to believe that God is, that he was, and that he will be, and that he is the ruler of the universe; but I do think that there is a crying necessity of preaching faith to the people of Zion and Independence when it comes to their giving their support, their spiritual support to the men of the church who are attempting to solve the problems of Zion. There may be people in Independence who have not a live working faith in the gospel they claim to give credence to. They are prone to listen to the tales, and what shall I call it, I don't know hardly how to characterize it, the wranglings of those who are, shall I say it, behind the times (that may be putting it a little harshly), but who feel, according to this old-fashioned idea, that because the younger men of the church and leaders are trying to get the people to walk into fields ahead and yet unoccupied, that they are therefore leading the church astray.

Faith in God implies faith in the men of God, and it is a much easier thing to have faith in Jesus Christ, looking at him from the distance of nineteen hundred years, than it is to have faith in some man that stands as a representative of God to-day, in his human dress, displaying to you human frailties. And yet it is utterly impossible for us to ever redeem Zion, impossible for you as the people of God, to make the progress that you should, until you are equipped with that splendid faith in God which has faith in the instruments he has chosen to accomplish this work, in spite of their frailties and weaknesses.

Now, if we can sense the full significance of that, and realize what a test it will be to our faith to have a good, live, practical, working faith in the instruments of God and the tools he has chosen to accomplish his work with, and if we can comprehend how utterly essential it is to have this faith, a working faith in God and his instruments, you can appreciate that passage of Scripture that I desire to use for my text, if I need one this morning, found in the eighth chapter of Luke, "When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on the earth?" Do you think that Jesus did not know what it would take for you to accomplish your work? Do you think he did not realize the test you would be put to, and the strain your faith would be under in order to accomplish the things necessary towards the end of time? And do you not believe that he had a full comprehension of the widest and broadest significance of the question that he then propounded to his disciples, "When the Son of Man comes will he find faith on the earth?" I may put it a little more practically and pointedly: When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on Enoch Hill? And that applies to the Independence Stake as well as here.

RESPONSE TO CHRIST'S CALL

We look back at the times of Jesus, and we see the manifestations of faith on the part of the men who were with him; who had been associated with him, and yet they were human men. They perhaps had even greater weaknesses than some of the men who are among the leaders of the church to-day—what you term your leading men. I venture the guess that as weak as some people think the men that constitute your leaders to-day are, that man for man, they will compare favorably with the disciples of Jesus, and those who supported him. Why shouldn't they?

I say, you look back and see the manifestations of faith that these people had, and see the manifestation of faith that the people who followed Jesus gave to those leaders, and the assurance and respect and fealty that they gave, and you think it is easy. Why? Because they were in the presence of Jesus, the Christ. Therefore, his influence, so splendidly divine, radiating from him to every quarter of the church, stimulated the faith that was unquestioned, and caused them to give an unquestioning obedience to his commandments, and the commandments of the men whom he associated with him; but do you believe that? When Jesus came to the fishermen on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, who there were extracting from that sea the means that would give them the livelihood they desired, they were simply indulging in what men are doing to-day, making a living and earning a competence. They were doubtless deeply interested in it, very much as you are interested in your business to-day. Consequently when Jesus came to Peter and Andrew, he realized they had a good business, one which would secure ample support to their children, themselves, and families. They could live respectably as a result of their industry carried on there by the sea. Yet he said, I am going to ask you to give it all up and follow me, and sometimes you will have but a precarious living as a result. These men left their work and followed him, and Jesus fulfilled the promise he gave to them, that he would make them fishers of men.

You say it was easy because it was the Christ. Is it any easier to believe that they had a more extensive knowledge that Jesus was the Christ than you have now? Personally, I doubt it. I do not believe that there came to these individuals that undoubting faith, that unquestioning faith that later came to them, for at this time Jesus came to them practically as an unknown individual. It is true, his reputation had run before him, and they perhaps had knowledge of the wonderful work he had been performing. They recognized that when he spoke he did so as one having authority, and they probably realized that he knew what he was talking about, but the manifestations of divine power that were his to enjoy, one nearly every occasion where such power was needed, were not then known to them, and it was only later that they became aware of the great powers that were in this man. And hence, when Jesus the Christ said to Andrew and Peter, the fishermen, and Matthew the tax collector, Stop the work you are doing now, that guarantees to you an ample living, and follow me, and give your service to the church that I am building, there was enacted what is likely to happen to you in a way—to leave your occupation and work for the church. And can you give the same answer that was given by the fishermen? If not, where is your faith? If not, is not the question pregnant with meaning, "When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on the earth?"

WHAT WILL OUR RESPONSE BE?

Now, listen. Yesterday there left my office a letter wherein we put up to a young man in one of our big cities a question similar to what was put up to Matthew, to Andrew, and to Peter. A young man, who, by reason of his own application to duty, to study, has made himself proficient in a certain line of activity, and is associated with one of the greatest industrial organizations of the United States, has been asked to leave his work and come to work for the church, at a remuneration far less than he draws now; and, do you know, I haven't the least doubt of the answer that will come from that young man.

But what concerns you is this. Suppose the same question came to you? I do not care what your business is. I do not care what you may be working at, how big may be your income now, and the guarantee to you that you and your children will have that which will keep the wolf everlastingly from the door because of the easy competence that it brings to you, the question is likely to come to each of you, Are you willing to leave your nets and become fishermen of men, or work for the church? And when that call comes will the answer of those on Enoch Hill show to the Master the faith that he knows must be in his church, and which is essential to its success?

Of course we have this assurance, you say, that when the call comes, it will be through men of God, that we believe to be men chosen of the Lord to do his work, to be instruments in his hands, but do we know it? But there comes the same question, do they speak as one having authority, and I will assure you of this, that if there isn't the faith that God requires that there shall be in his church, and if you have not been progressing until you can recognize gospel sermons, though they may not ever mention the word baptism or the necessity of repentance, and are definitely able to see in these men that they are doing their work, although their efforts may smack strongly at times of humanity, then there will not be that faith in you that will make you recognize that the call comes from the Master. And you will probably stumble on the rocks that are in the pathway of all Christians. The trials and tribulations will become greater than ever, and difficulties will become more difficult, increase, and there is necessary a faith sure and steadfast, and we should make every endeavor that there shall be resident in us the unfoldment of even a greater and more substantial and grander faith than ever in the past.

WILL HE FIND FAITH IN ME?

Signs multiply, that individually and collectively our trials increase, hence every individual should be asking himself almost every day of his life, "When the Son of Man comes will he find faith in me sufficient to guarantee his selecting me as one of the jewels to make up his crown?"

There are many instances throughout the life of Jesus that can be used to illustrate the activity that is essential for every follower of the lowly Nazarene, but if you will examine his life's record you will discover that in the beginning of it he was consecrated by a season of prayer and fasting and of meditation that enabled him to emerge from the wilderness thoroughly endowed with the great import of his mission, with the whole of his life having been given direction by the predominating interest, by the sanctification of that great dominating idea. And I take it that the life of Jesus in its general outlines is a duplicate of what every individual that will ever accomplish anything worth while must be, what the life of every individual ought to be, at least, and that is, that sometime early in his life, every individual is seized by some great interest; there is developed in him some great purpose for which he is willing to give all his energies and his entire life. That interest when once aroused must be consecrated and made sacred by devotion and by worship; by prayer, by meditation, and fasting. Somewhere, sometime, in the life of every individual, I do not care who he is, there will arise the necessity for him giving a definite answer to the question of religion. Not only as to his attitude toward it, but how it shall dominate his life, and how completely his life shall be actuated by the principles of religion. And when an individual has decided that religion shall become a dynamic in his soul and activities, then there shall be found, as there occurred in the life of Jesus the Christ, a refinement and consecration of that interest by seasons of meditation, by prayer and fasting. How far has your life been so controlled, and how often have you gone into the wilderness in prayer and meditation to examine not only your strength and virtues, but your weaknesses and failings?

LOYALTY TO OTHERS' VIEWS

Of course it is easy for all of us to play and to work when we are having our way, but the difficult thing to do is to work and play according to the other fellow's rules. Now there are individuals in the church, some of not very great importance so far as their influence is concerned, some of greater importance, so far as their personal influence is concerned, who feel that at present the church is not working according to their way of thinking, and doing, and here is where you see manifested a splendid criterion of a man's integrity of soul and devotion to principle. The man who says, "I have received a testimony of this work, I know that it is based on fundamental principles which are true and everlasting, and divine," will be able to see that though the practical working out of some of these details are not exactly in harmony with his will, yet because of his knowledge of these principles, his devotion is still true and his application to duty is still intense. He will not say, Because my methods are not carried out I will hold back and see whether the other fellow will make good his claims. There is, perhaps, no more effective way in the world of killing any kind of a plan than assuming exactly that attitude toward it; that of indifference or sitting back and saying, Well, we will see how it works out. A man the other day spoke of an individual in this church and said that he is one of the most splendid men he ever knew. I wanted to know why. He said it was because he could when asked for criticisms in regard to certain plans, state clearly his objections and criticisms, and yet when a decision had been made contrary to his judgment, without a single feeling of resentment or manifestation of bitterness, he gave the best service at his command for the success of the plan of the other fellow. How many of you would do that, or feel that you could do that way? It takes a manliness for a person to be able to give his services to a cause actuated by a principle he believes in, yet not agreeing on all the details of the practical application of it.

I do not mean, of course, that anyone should give devotion to a cause that involves principles that are contrary to his conscience. He should not do it, and in this case he should have the manhood to come out and speak his sentiments and the dictates of his conscience, but there will not be a time perhaps, at least for any length of time, that the Saints and people of God will be able to say that they are not walking by faith. Paul says that we walk by faith, and not by sight, and hence you will be asked, many times, to give your support to those things which, in their minor details, may not agree with your ideas of how they should be carried out.

STRENGTHENED FOR WHAT?

Many of you have doubtless gone through periods of study, of meditation, and devotion, from which you have come strengthened to do a greater work, and doubtless many of you have received what you believed to be the illuminating light of the power of God. You may even have had experiences approximating Pentecost, and so completely satisfied were you that you—immediately proceeded to do nothing, except to tell people how greatly you had been blessed in your prayers and meditation.

Now the contrast between that and Jesus is just this. Jesus began his great mission by having this period of consecration and devotion in which he was submitted to tests by powers of darkness, yet he emerged triumphant. Jesus knew exactly what his temptations were for, understood the weakness of his humanity; knew how far he could go in his period of strenuousness, and knew when to stop. He knew what was at stake. He understood those things in himself which were human; and which divine. And we, under the Spirit of God might know the same things. But Jesus, when he came from these meditations, proceeded to work as no other man worked. We too often come from our periods of spiritual emotion only to sit down and do nothing, and that kind of ecstasy when worked out in ecstasy itself or allowed to be frittered away in idle meditation, is almost worse than nothing at all, for it weakens rather than strengthens. Hence, when we come from our periods of fasting and prayer (for there are meetings which are pentecostal showers) follow it with a period of activity that will justify God repeating the experience because of the response of our spiritual energies, that will show to the world that we have received the light, and enable others to receive it, too, and help this great cause on by furnishing one more consecrated effort, one more enthusiastic worker to the cause.

It is the contribution of the many littles that makes the much in our onward progress. It is utterly impossible for you to select a body of men who will stand as your leaders and representatives, and leave them to carry all the burden. They cannot do it. You have got to contribute your part; your little or mite, and perhaps you can contribute even more than they. They are your servants, and have to assume the responsibility, and they cannot accomplish their work unless you give to them the assistance necessary for them to have.

That Jesus was aware of how utterly useless it is to enjoy spiritual illumination unless there is an accompaniment of work is evidenced by the fact that he has stated to us by his own life, and through the lives of his inspired disciples, that as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead, being alone; and so individuals who cry, Lord, Lord, and do nothing else, are likely to find that in the day of reckoning their spiritual value is on the wane. Even a pentecostal shower or even a Pentecost itself would be utterly useless to the church and to the great cause of Christianity if it were not followed by a period of activity, such as followed Pentecost itself.

ENDOWMENT A PRACTICAL RESPONSIBILITY

There should be a preparation for work, and hence it seems to me that we individually ought to draw this lesson, that when God has poured out upon us a great spiritual endowment, when we find ourselves set on fire by the Spirit of God, when our minds, under that divine intelligence, have been broadened and illuminated until our vision is enlarged because of it, to take that as a sure testimony that God requires of us a certain period of work to follow until our physical and our spiritual strength is taxed to its utmost to accomplish the work we set out for ourselves.

There are many calls to the ministry. Young men and old men are feeling the burden of the call, and come to us and express that they feel they have been called to do a certain work, but too many of them—and this is the criticism we have to offer—too many of them feel that they should do nothing other than sit down and wait for God in the hour of need and trial to command them, and give them the power they need. When God has said to a man that he is called, there is immediately opened the necessity of work, in preparation, and hence, when an individual feels the call to go to work in this church, it ought to be a signal for an intense work of preparation for the discharge of that responsibility, and a preparation which will be continuous in his whole line of ministry.

ONE USE FOR THE TEMPLE

Be it said, to the credit of the early men of this church, that they sensed this to the uttermost, and one of the striking testimonies we have to it to-day is the temple that stands in Kirtland, with its preparation for all its class rooms, and school rooms for the education of the ministry, erected by those individuals, under the inspiration of God; and I hope the time is not far distant when it can be used for this very purpose in the advancement of our work. I have been criticized in this place because I wanted to erect Culture Hall. The people who were criticizing me thought I was going astray, notwithstanding the purpose of that temple. They upheld the building of Kirtland Temple, with its cultural side, while condemning my plans for a cultural hall here. Perhaps if I had called it a temple it would have been a different story, but what's in a name? Personally I hope the day will come when that splendid edifice at Kirtland will once more be consecrated to the education of the ministry, and I hope to see the men of the ministry, both local and missionary, come in groups to that splendid building to listen to courses of lectures by men who, under the inspiration of God, by virtue of their own industry and mentality, are able to give to the ministers those things they are hungering for, and desirous of listening to.

It may be, of course, that as we enter upon our work of the ministry emergencies will occur when the Spirit of God must needs come to our rescue, when under its illuminating flood we can meet the demands of the hour and temporarily enable us to attain great heights. Or it may be that under the inspiration of God, looking ahead, in the presence of that spirit of enlightenment, we may be able, in the silent watches of the night, and in the seclusion of our own homes, make preparation against the time when in the emergency we will find our preparation to be the very thing we need. Then, under the Spirit of the Almighty God these things can be brought to our remembrance and we can thank God, in both instances, for the principle of inspiration that makes this preparation that qualifies us to meet the emergency which we have not anticipated.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN ZION?

Now, although we should be willing to give thanks to God for his overruling providence, and for the principle of inspiration, yet we should also give thanks for the opportunity for preparation. We sing about Zion. We believe in it. I suppose there's not an individual here to-day who, if asked the question point blank, Do you believe in Zion? would not say yes. But when we come to put the question in the terms of work, the answer is not always so ready. My fellow Latter Day Saints, the expression used by Jesus is just as applicable to the work of Zion as it is to the general work of the mission of Jesus Christ that as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead, also. And a Saint in Zion is utterly useless unless he is willing to work for Zion.

TWO CAREERS AND THE END THEREOF

I digress here for closing, and speak of the careers of two individuals that have come under my observation. One is an individual who at one time did a great work in this church, as we believe he was blessed of the Lord. He converted his hundreds, and yet he, through the passing of years, developed a spirit of selfishness and self-aggrandizement that eventually culminated in his leaving the church because his ambitions were not being fulfilled. If there is one thing, or any sentence that can be assigned as the cause of his fall would be "personal ambition and greed for wealth." When the time came that he must choose, after a long life of activity in contributing to this work, whether he should allow his work to stand as a testimony to his life, his spiritual faith, or choose rather to destroy, so far as he could, the house that he had been building, in the course of our attempts to adjudicate a difficulty he had created, he sent this kind of a message to me: "Unless you compromise this difficulty, and permit me to remain and carry on my work as I think it should be carried on, I will split this church wide open. I will shake it from center to circumference until there will be only a small handful of people following you, and another small handful following me, and a large per cent will go out." I sent back word by the same messenger that this was the work of God, as we believed, and no man or set of men could do what he threatened, and if he could do it it was not the work of God, and I was interested in finding it out.

Now, as to the other individual: A man, called from the busy activities of life in his young manhood, clothed with the mentality that gave promise of his being able to enter any line he might choose to follow, a man who could appreciate what a call of responsibility meant, left his business and engaged in a life of service to the Lord. During his long life, there never was a time when self was made supreme, and when he found his bodily vigor declining, although his mental activity was such that he was keenly alive to the responsibilities put upon him, alive to what might happen if stricken perhaps, and some one not his equal called to fill the position which he held, he resigned, because of his interest in the work, positions in the church he loved that younger and more active men might be trained, and gave his blessing to his successors. To-day the man is in his ninety-third year. He is respected and loved as a philosopher, as a sage, and a Saint. I had the pleasure of visiting this man not long ago, and talked with him, and throughout his conversation there was that complete absence of the putting of self to the fore. He spoke of the work and his interest in it, and his great regret was that his waning physical powers did not permit him to give to the church the same service that he had given all the rest of his life, and he remarked that one of the things that pained him the most was to see men who had been prominent lights fall, and their lights go out in darkness. And while we were visiting him he read to us a little poem he had written the year before, in his ninety-second year, and that little poem was an epitomization of his life, of his faith. I want to read it to you this morning, and then I would like to have each individual member of you decide as to which one of these individuals at the close of your life you would like to resemble.

Now remember, if you have known him, the personality of Brother Charles Derry as we read this little poem, and remember his life which has been intimately bound up with the history of the Reorganization.

EXPERIENCE AND HOPE

BY CHARLES DERRY

You called me from the anvil, Lord,
A poor, unlearned youth;
And bade me to declare thy word
In meekness and in truth.

I bowed to thy decree, dear Lord,
Without hope of earthly gain,
Trusting in thy gracious word;
Nor did I trust in vain.

My duty I have tried to learn
By searching deep thy word,
That none my humble youth might spurn,
But see thy truth's accord.

And seeing they might humbly bow
Unto thy righteous law,
And grace receive to keep their vow,
And thy salvation know.

I've had to face a frowning world
Who never knew thy power,
Endure their scorn, so proudly hurled
In this, the eleventh hour,

And thou wast to thy promise true,
In standing by my side;
And bodily strength thou didst renew,
Through thy Spirit as my guide.

Nor was I ever put to shame,
As thy cause I did defend;
Nor have I blushed to own thy name,
My God, Redeemer, Friend.

My feeble efforts, I confess,
Are oft with error stained;
Nor can I boast my righteousness,
But I can trust in thine.

And now in my declining years
My hope is still in thee;
Dispel my doubts, dismiss my fears,
That I thy face may see.

I know thy promise stands secure
To all who trust in thee;
Who firmly to the end endure,
In glory crowned shall be.

Oh, help me, Lord, to firmly stand
As witness of thy love;
Till called unto a better land,
To dwell with thee above.

SERVICE

I am among you as he that serveth.—Jesus.
Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.—Paul.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land;
Ring in the Christ that is to be.—Tennyson.

Jesus taught that all men are brethren and the children of one heavenly Father, and that, therefore, the natural or normal condition of man is one of mutual helpfulness and universal friendship. He announced that mankind in the common struggle for existence should cooperate. That among themselves they should not struggle, but stand together upon a basis of reciprocal help.

This principle of cooperative activity, while it does not in itself end the great struggle, nevertheless changes the form of it. And it does not matter how we may name it, whether humanity, or altruism, or love, or Christianity; for we all know it in its true form with or without a name.

Materialistic scientists contend that this principle, commonly known as altruism, is merely a sublimated form of egoism. That is to say, the principle of self-preservation enters into every transaction that is attributed to this higher emotion. We find, however, examples of this higher principle of reciprocal help among even the lower and simpler forms of life. It is an energy embodied, so to speak, in a primary instinct; and in its every form of manifestation it is essentially altruistic, in that it constantly prompts to acts which redound to the benefit of others of both present and future generations. As Mr. Henry Drummond has so ably pointed out in his Ascent of Man, the missing factor in all current evolutionary theories is, "the struggle for the life of others."

It stands to reason that the instinct of self-preservation is essential as the conservator of existing conditions, but it certainly could not be the dominant instinct, for if so, the human race must have long ago perished; and not only the human race but the whole animal kingdom as well. So that, to claim that the altruistic instinct is normally paramount to that of self-preservation is to be consistent with the true interpretation of the doctrine of the survival of the fittest.

In view of the large number of predatory animals that infest the earth, the poet was evidently correct in describing nature as being "red in tooth and claw with ravin," but there are other agencies also at work in the animal kingdom, which, though not as spectacular, are at least as potent, and far more benevolent.

There runs the soldier-crab, wearing, as an armor over his weakly-protected back, the shell of a dead snail, of which he has taken possession. Upon this shell sits the bright orange-red form of a sea-anemone. Wherever the busy little crab goes he drags it along with him on his snail-shell. Each contributes a benefit to the other, life unto life. A portion of the crab's food falls to the lot of the sea-anemone, while the latter, with its poisonous stinging organ as a weapon, affords protection to the crab against his natural enemies. Both apparently recognize this fact. The sea-anemone never leaves the crab until the snail-shell is broken and climbs upon the new shell without stinging him; and sometimes the crab lifts the sea-anemone carefully back upon his shell when it gets adrift. A similar instance of companionship and mutual helpfulness is witnessed in the case of the jelly-fish and another little fish which swims inside the transparent bell of the former, acting like a living rudder to it, and at the approach of danger steering it in the direction of safety. At the same time the jelly-fish does not harm the little fish but affords it a haven of safety from other robber-like fish, using its powerful stinging organ for its protection.

Thus we discover that the organ that is used as a weapon of offense and destruction in the wild conflict of all against all has here become an organ of sympathy and protection. So when we consider the supreme potency of the emotional impulse called "patriotism" as a factor in our national life and character, and the willing sacrifices of property and even life itself prompted by its influence in defense of righteous principles and for the emancipation of weak and oppressed nations, is not the sword in the hands of such people a weapon of sympathy and protection rather than of offense and destruction? And does it not look reasonable to suppose that this emotional impulse when normally developed will be capable of impelling mankind toward the final consummation which was foreshadowed by the prophet: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Jesus has laid the foundation of our approaching great humanity and his teachings are destined to become the very kernel of our ethics and culture, and the guiding star of our spiritual faith and development. Renan declared that "the worship of Jesus shall grow without ceasing"; and this declaration may not, after all, be as extravagant as some have supposed. At least there is some encouragement in the fact that an individual should live in an obscure corner of Judea nineteen centuries ago, associate with a few inconspicuous fishermen and men of other humble pursuits, suffer the ignominious death reserved for criminals—crucifixion, and yet, notwithstanding all this, be revered and honored because of his wisdom and goodness, and worshiped as God by hundreds of millions of the leading races of mankind for nearly twenty centuries. We have him to thank for the fact of our higher stage of culture and civilization, and that the word love has been raised and ennobled so that it has become the watchword of our highest spiritual and social strivings. And from the individual love we shall evolve to the love of humanity.

Jesus unquestionably taught that society cannot be regenerated except by the birth of individual souls into a new life; but he also taught that the individual cannot exist apart from society, and cannot be saved apart from his social relations. This was implied in one of his startling paradoxes: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." The gospel of Jesus is as fundamentally social as it is individual. The blessings of this cooperative institution are countless: within its bounds complete harmony, unity, and solidarity rule among all the members of the association. In such an association one stands for one and all for one. As the pious old philosopher, Saint Augustine, in describing the love of God for humanity, says, "He loves each one as if he were the only one, and loves all as one"; and this must be the active result of the Christ ideals in the kingdom of God on earth.

It is a law that every organism lives for its kingdom; and this life is disclosed by the reaction of the organism upon nature. In the absence of such reaction we should be justified in doubting its connection with that kingdom. While the teachings of Jesus were, without doubt, spiritual, it is a grave mistake to assume that he was concerned only with the realm of spirit; for it is impossible to accept his teachings without endeavoring to apply them to every relation and detail of life. Their effect, therefore, just so far as they prevail, is not only to reconstitute the individual spirit, but also the society in which such spirits dwell. The rank and worth of our religion, therefore, can only be determined by the extent of its reaction upon the community in which we live.

Jesus had an enthusiasm of humanity which was born of the love of man. Being least in the kingdom of heaven he has become the greatest through his consciousness of being little; and as servant of all he has become the ruler through his enthusiasm for the life of service. Thus he has taught us that just in proportion as a person loses the thought of himself in his devotion to the interests of others does he become a center of influence to them; and that in this way alone can a person save his life in the act of losing it.

Centuries ago in the land of Uz we are told that a man named Job underwent a series of trying ordeals as a result of which his mind became disabused of certain errors which he had cherished regarding his Maker. We discover the nature of these errors in the following arraignment of them by the inspired Elihu: "If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him? or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto him? If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand? Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man." For him who made the milky way we can do nothing: but here are his creatures; and there is nothing to hinder us from putting our heads and hearts and hands to work for the purpose of lifting up the plane of our benighted and less-favored fellow men to higher levels of comfort, joy, and intelligence, and thus to make our righteousness profit the sons of men; for we can only render service to God in and through service to humanity.

Sympathy is not, in this sense, a genial mistaken philosophy, but the very life-blood of the highest organization of individuals. In this great association each one does not need to do everything. If one has a peculiar capacity in which he excels, others can obtain the highest advantage therefrom and gladly repay him with the results of the work which a second or a third can perform much better. This seems to be the intent of the following revelation given to the church: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."

• This principle of division of labor or service according to talent, when fully introduced, will become a great source of concentration of power, increase of total activity and of boundless progress; and it is the only way that a proper coordination of effort can be effected.

Man is the comprehensive crown of all adjustment, the most absolutely adjusted form of earth, and master of his planet through his wonderful intelligence and skill. He is a being who could do and could know everything in the universe, if only he had time instead of the few years of his earthly existence. It seems very significant, therefore, that the Apostle Paul, in his Corinthian letter, should have employed the human body—the masterpiece of all God's creations—with all the wondrous complexity of its organization, as symbolical of the church or body of Christ: "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ."

Can there be any doubt regarding the supremely efficient service that the Lord expects to see operative in his church? And it is bound to come. The theory of development, or the derivative hypothesis, now accepted by a large number of scientific men, sees in everything the results of a system which is ever acting for the best, always producing something more perfect and more beautiful than before, and incessantly eliminating whatever is faulty or less perfectly adapted to every new condition. Its central conception is that in the history of organic life changes have somehow always come about exactly in proportion as the need of them arose. This constant, forceful energy is the most potent psychic force in the universe and is irresistibly impelling mankind toward the goal of universal altruism, foreshadowed in the philosophy of the greatest of all teachers—Jesus of Nazareth.

That man is great, according to the Nazarene's gospel, who has the strength to serve and the patience to suffer—one who conquers, not the world, but his own selfish heart, and lives to bless his fellows.

Mr. Frank Harris, in his criticism of George Moore's book, The Brook Kerith, favors us with this trenchant comment: "I, too, read Gautier in Paris, and pages of his Mlle. de Maupin still stick in my memory; like Moore, I could boast that the stream which poured from the side of the crucified One and made a red girdle round the world, never bathed me in its flood. I, too, loved gold and marble and purple and bands of nude youths and maidens swaying on horses without saddle or bridle against a background of deep blue as on the frieze of the Parthenon.

"But afterwards I learned something of what the theory of evolution implies; realized that all great men are moments in the life of mankind, and that the lesson of every great life in the past must be learned before we can hope to push further into the unknown than our predecessors. Gradually I came to understand that Jerusalem and not Athens is the sacred city, and that one has to love Jesus and his gospel of love and pity or one will never come to full stature. Born rebels even have to realize that love is the way, the truth, and the life; no one cometh to wisdom but by love. The more I studied Jesus the greater he became to me till little by little he changed my outlook on life."

The glory of the Christ message is that it makes its appeal to some hidden instinct which already exists within the human soul, and for that reason has a meaning to the intelligence. When we attribute originality to the ethics of the gospel, we do so on the ground, not so much that it has given us new precepts, but rather that it has given us a new impulse to obey the moral instincts of the soul. All art is the endeavor to realize in material forms and colors an idea of beauty latent in the human soul from the beginning; and the true artist, therefore, is the one who thus impressively produces the images that we have but impotently seen outlined in the airy and impalpable elements of the imagination. This is the secret of the potency of Christ's teachings. He recognized in the knowing mind a standard or criterion of truth which is the measure of all ethical and spiritual precepts. Hear his own statement of it! "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice."

The best evidence of the soul's immortality is that perception of its beauty which results from the experience of a life consecrated to the service of humanity.

The expectation of a kingdom of heaven upon earth has in all ages of the world found some place in the religious instinct; and the vision of such a kingdom has never been entirely absent from the lives of men. But if such a kingdom shall await us in the future, and if our vision of a crown shall ever be fulfilled, it must be a kingdom that has been built on the service of humanity, and a crown that has been won through the spirit and power of sacrifice.

IMPORTANCE OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

Rare, historic record, so mysterious and yet so plain and commonplace! Who cares to know its message? Not one in a thousand knows, much less cares. Book of Mormon and Moroni, illumined by the stamp of inspiration—regard it what you will, it is of immeasurable purport. It boasts not, and yet is firm. These men, father and son, who compiled the pages and hid it up, bear their humble though strong testimony of its divine character.

No book ever came before the race of mankind with such an august message, nay, more than that, the contents of it have never yet been proven false. Purely original, though strange to many, yet calm and gentle, with no pomp of eloquence or magnificence, its claims have yet to be successfully refuted. It stands out unique, as if the trump of God were using it as a warning of his almighty power.

The whole earth should awake to that salient message. No man dare lift his voice to cry, "'Tis vain." It cannot be, for what God decrees, shall prevail, and puny man utterly fail and go below when against his auspicious will.

Angels bear witness to the truth of this wonderful record. The Holy Spirit testifies of the same; also men of sober character have verified its claims. Heaven and earth combine that its voice shall be heard, and by it they who hear shall be judged.

Has any other book, far or near, ancient or modern, ever been in such limelight, and still so little observed? At least it proves one thing conclusively: a hard and wicked generation, which will prove itself as the antediluvian world, awaiting the combustion of the elements. (See Book of Mormon, page 670, Authorized Edition.)

It may seem a small thing, the Book of Mormon, but in my estimation, there never has been so terrific an exposure revealed of facts as they are and will be, as those described in this wonderful message. Why not? God ever warns the people of things to come; and the end which is so plainly predicted herein is of as great consequence as any crisis this world has ever witnessed; it is near our doors, and judgment is as sure to come as the end of this world.

Read the book! Study its solemn cry, its humble entreaty to all human beings to whom it may come!

Though the world should yet continue for untold ages as it now is, yet a compliance with the requirement of the Book of Mormon, together with the Bible, would prove a certain and lasting benefit, and bring a peaceful and happy state, such as has never been since the fall of Adam and Eve. No more war, no more vice and malice and hatred, no more hurtful, disastrous events; no, not even sorrow and evil. No more curse of God upon the earth, but instead we would have heavenly homes, and all would be rest and peace and praise.

My observations in reading this wonderful book I submit herewith, using the authorized version in reference. Three distinctive emigrations found homes in this promised and choice above all other lands, viz, North, Central, and South America.

First, the Jaredites, over 2,200 B. C., second, the Nephites and Lamanite brethren, and, third, the Zarahemlaites—all of Israelite descent—600 B. C., all were in possession of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but became wicked to that extent that the Lord let them go to destruction, the last of which occurred about 400 A. D. The Jaredites became extinct some years after the Israelites arrived (Book of Ether 1: 1, 2), the last survivor having been found by the people of Zarahemla, sojourning with them for the "space of nine moons." The American Indians are undoubtedly a remnant of those Israelite colonies, more especially of the Lamanites.

Many prophets were sent among those people, of whom some suffered death in cruel martyrdom. Abinadi, a Nephite, was put to death by fire; King Noah was the leader. He was a wicked man, though his father was a righteous man, Zeniff, by name. (See historical account in Mosiah 6 and 7.) The Nephites kept records, of which we have a short abridgement by Mormon and his son Moroni to the year 420 A. D., when it was hid up. (Moroni 10: 2.)

These records give an account of Jesus' visit here, and the establishing of his church with them after his crucifixion, in fulfillment of his promise, by the prophets, who had told the people of these wonderful events years before they transpired. (Nephi 5 and 11, page 667.) He set forth the doctrine of salvation and redemption from sin and eternal death. In fact, the prophets had long since declared the same, with faith, repentance, baptism, and the reception of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection of all men, and a just judgment, at his next or second coming, and at the last great day, when he would reward all according to their works. But all men or mankind are redeemed from the temporal or physical death. (See 2 Nephi, 6th chapter; also 13th chapter; Mosiah 8, and scores of other readings.)

Further distinctive doctrine is set forth in this wonderful record. It teaches a new church (Nephi 10: 1, 7), or Zion—a new Jerusalem—on this continent to be built by real and adopted Israel—a city of the Saints. Also the gathering of the Jews and Israel to their ancient home, Palestine, just before his second coming.

I may say that repentance is the slogan principle of the Book of Mormon: Repent of all sin and keep the commandments; be baptized by immersion, as a witness or token of the covenant; then cometh a remission of sins by fire and the Holy Ghost (2 Nephi 13:24; 3 Nephi 12:33), which seals the adoption and the promise as thus verified.

All the gifts of the gospel and the fruits of the Spirit are promised to baptized believers (Book of Mormon, page 776), who seek for the same. God is no respecter of persons, and the same impartial being in all ages of the world, irrespective of color or sex. (Helaman 2:25.)

Strong words of the book are faith, hope, and charity, with meekness and humility, without which it is impossible to please God and Christ Jesus. It implies regeneration and sanctification of the whole nature and heart of man, to the end of his mortal career, to be saved in the everlasting kingdom.

MATERIALISM AND MIND

"Materialism is bound to postulate mind."—Doctor Mecklin.

Materialism is that outlook of life that conceives matter to be the fundamental principle of all things, both in their origin and destiny. It conceives of "Hamlet" as produced by an excellent meal. To the materialist mind is, that is "consciousness, our perceptions, ideas, volitions, and feelings, as such, have no influence upon our conduct; that they are caused by the play of the nervous processes in the brain."

Materialists are sometimes referred to as "mud philosophers." But no one who has "seen the dew-drop clinging to the rose just newly born" can think of all matter in terms of mud.

But after all they are bound to postulate mind as something distinct from matter.

In the American Journal of Psychology for July, 1918, the author of an article entitled "The human mind" works out this formula: "Mind is consciousness; consciousness is recognition; recognition is memory; memory is the faculty of the brain cells by means of which past experiences are recalled."

That memory is based upon the association of ideas and that the association of ideas has a physiological basis there can be no doubt. But that such a formula as in the preceding paragraph can explain mind is very doubtful. If the formula were true, then brain would be the greatest thing. But a brain without stimulus would be no good; and stimulus without insight would be wasted, practically.

The above formula is clearly materialistic in its tendency. As such it is inclined to contradict itself. Moreover it is not accepted by many of the leading psychologists. Of course common sense would never accept a contradictory philosophy.

But the author of this formula says, "Mind is going to rule, not brain." "The individual is going to supervise his own brain development; he is going to learn how to put ideas into his own brain to his own best advantage."—Page 288.

Is it too much to ask, Who is this "ruler"? Who is this "supervisor"? Why it is mind that is conceived of as the ruler and supervisor of the brain? Clearly, then, we are taken out of the realm of the brain cells into the realm of mind.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

"When Ye Shall See These Things Come to Pass"

We are indeed glad to give our readers this week two short contributions from Sister Gertrude Sessions, the leader of our Current Events and Social Purity departments. Sister Sessions but touches upon the vast and interesting field which is open to us, if we but keep an intelligent eye upon the events of the day—this day so big with import and potentialities. Who can read of the happenings of the world to-day, and then reading again the prophecies of the Bible, not feel impressed with the conviction that the "perilous days" are upon us? Men's hearts are indeed failing them for fear; nations have arisen against nation; famine and pestilence are stalking abroad in the world; and the record of death by earthquakes, forest fires, and the waves of the sea, glut our daily papers. Christ warned that other things may wax and wane, but the words of the Lord will surely come to pass.

Are we, in the light of these things, truly striving to "stand in holy places"? Are we making our own homes, our own immediate circles of influence, "holy places"? If we are not, then do we not come under the class referred to of old, "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof"? For, if the gospel is really, as Paul declared it to be, the power of God unto the salvation of every one who believeth, and we, professing to believe, can still not point to definite and concrete progress towards that "salvation"—which can mean nothing more nor less than the perfection of our characters—do we not stand convicted of possessing the dead "form" instead of the living "power"?

Let us shake off our crust of lethargy, indifference, or discouragement, and, looking those things fairly in the face, decide that from henceforth, "as for me and my household, we shall serve the Lord."

Current Events

Now that the auxiliaries have started on the new year's work, I hope to send you, occasionally, references to articles of special interest. To me "Current Events" mean more than the front page of the newspapers, important as that is. I am reminded of the instruction given in 1832 to the priesthood to "get a knowledge of countries and of kingdoms." Without a sympathetic understanding of a people's past, their struggles, failures, achievements and ideals, we can do little to befriend them.

There never has been a better opportunity to understand foreign nations than now, when not only their current history is closely linked with our affairs, but also editors, correspondents, and special article writers are constantly reaching into the past and showing to us the influence of the nations' past in this culmination of history. They are bringing to our notice neighbors worthy of our brotherhood, out of what were formerly merely Serbs, Poles, or Bohemians.

I am sure you will feel what I have been saying if you will read a series of articles on the Czechoslovaks in the October World's Work. The same magazine is very good on the situation in Russia. The maps of the two countries are helpful. This copy of the World's Work should have a place in your reference library.

The Literary Digest contains maps with good reviews of events.

The August Metropolitan contains an article entitled "Isreal" by William Hard, which is interesting to Latter Day Saints. It pictures the "Moses" and the "Joshua" of the latter-day movement to Palestine, and shows the divine influence through the raising up of able Jews to father the Zionist movement, and pave the way for an independent nation by their influence on men of state in Turkey, Italy, Russia, France, and England. GERTRUDE SESSIONS.

Social Purity Notes

A timely article encouraging to social purity workers is the one by William C. George, Surgeon General U. S. A., in the October Ladies' Home Journal. For the benefit of those who may not be able to see the Journal, I will quote a few sentences to show what supervision and education are doing to purify our boys. Speaking of venereal diseases he says:

"During the first year of the war, one European nation had more men disabled from these diseases than from disabilities incident to warfare. Is anything like this true, or going to be true, in the American Army? No! a thousand times no! Particularly if the women at home cooperate with the military and other authorities in fighting the scourge!

"The army doesn't try to hide it as it is concealed in civil life; it seeks to uncover it, then to attack it, and, what is more important, to wage relentless warfare against its admission into the lives of its soldiers.

"In September, 1917, the rate of venereal diseases in the national army contingents is represented by the figure 387; the rate in the national guard camps was 130; while in the regular army it was only 85. In other words, the greater part of these diseases then in the army, was brought to it from civil life, by the men who had just entered the service. . . . In the old days the regular army would not accept a man suffering from these diseases. Now, however, it has had to shoulder the burden of the disease carried by the men of draft age in civil life, with the result that in six camps the total number of cases brought into the army by draft men, was six and one half times as large as the number of cases contracted after admission into the service.

"No men suffering from this infection are permitted to accompany their regiments to France.

"The army is attacking this enemy in many ways. Above all, however, it is endeavoring by education to inculcate in the men an understanding of what these infections mean, and to build up in them a strong determination to safeguard their own health, and that of others dear to them, by living pure and clean lives."

Thus the necessities of war have shown us the way. Can we follow it. GERTRUDE SESSIONS.

My Boy

(This poem by Jennie Warren Vivian, was clipped from the Kansas City Times.)

The little black bag came home to-day,
With the clothes he wore when he went away;
The neat new suit of navy blue,
The pretty pink shirt and the tan shoes, too;
Tenderly, lovingly, I put them away,
For I know, I know, on some fine day,
When victory is won and the world is free,
My boy will come sailing home to me.

Young son of mine, boy of my dreams!
I long for him so that sometimes it seems
I hear his quick, light step on the stair,
I seem to see him standing there,
With a smile on his face and the wind in his hair,
And my heart sobs out this mother's prayer:
"Dear God, bring him back to me,
When victory's won and the world is free."

Sweet Hour of Prayer

"Where two or three meet together in my name, as touching one thing, there will I be also, and that to bless."

How many Saints can testify to the consolation which has attend the fulfillment of these words of our Savior! How many burdens have been carried to the prayer service, and there, by the working of some beautiful law, have disappeared—dissolved upon the breath of some earnest prayer of confidence and trust! If for no other reason than that we may receive, there, this peculiar freedom, for a time, from cares that annoy, sorrows that press heavily, or doubts that disturb, none of us can well afford to miss the frequent "assembling of ourselves together," where "the Savior is the theme."

It was after experiencing the quiet and peace of one of these spiritual feasts at the home of a Saint, and witnessing his patience and trust under heavy trial and suffering, that the poetic muse whispered the following tribute of praise and appreciation to one of our sisters, who, with sweet tact and grace, caught it, and imprisoned it in words, and passed it to those with whom she had shared the joy. In turn it comes to you, dear readers of our column, that you, too, may catch some of the glory ere it is whirled from sight in the maze of earth-experiences. If it voice some of your own thoughts on like occasions, you will feel a responsive uplift of soul, and the glow may remain with you, to bless and soften, or to clear the spiritual vision.

Brother Hawley has, since the sister's lines were penned, passed on to his maker, leaving behind him memories which exalt. His kindness of heart, his quick response to appeal, his sympathy for suffering or need, will always be an inspiration to those who knew him best, and the world is surely better for his having "passed this way." A. A.

To Brother and Sister Hawley

Some enjoy only scenes that are festive and bright,
Some in gay social functions find keenest delight;
But to children of God, there's no pleasure so sweet,
As the joy of his presence, when bowed at his feet.

We may look with enjoyment on beautiful things,
Gaze enrapt at the picturesque scenes Nature brings;

But a face that reflecteth God's Spirit's great light,
Is to Saints the most cheering and exquisite sight.

Though we hear sweet, harmonious, soul-stirring sound
Though melodious songbirds be heard all around,
To a Saint, songs of Zion, so cheering and dear,
Seem the sweetest of music that falls on the ear.

So, dear brother and sister, the time spent with you,
Who so long have served God, and though tried, remained true,
Will among pleasant memories be stored in the mind,
As a witness that joy in God's service we find.

We are told that each one others' burdens should bear,
There are some who your trial would willingly share,
But, dear brother and sister, the best we can do,
Is to offer our heartfelt petitions for you.

We will pray that the trial be taken from you,
(For we know that the Lord greater wonders can do)
But he sees to the end—knows what's best for each one,
So we'll add to our pleading, "Thy will, Lord, be done."

We will know by sure signs that the time draweth near,
When the Saints' "Elder Brother," God's Son, will appear;
Then our meeting together indeed will be sweet
For all grief will be banished, our joy be complete.

And when glorified beings arrayed in pure white,
The kind Father adore, as they bask in his light,
They'll be those who through much tribulation have won God's great promised reward, as joint-heirs with his Son.
COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA. MRS. A. E. DEMPSEY.

The Parthenon and the Temple Builders' Symbol

The Temple Builders are slowly developing into a more definite and practical organization. With the help of Sister Ruby Short McKim, the nautilus has been chosen as their symbol. It will make its first official appearance, in the new heading for the Young Woman's Department in the November Autumn Leaves, which heading was designed by Sister Ruby. This symbol is very significant of the temple-building ideals of self-discovery, self-development, and service, since these three S's mean constant building, constant development of sweeter and stronger personalities. The poet, Holmes, has immortalized the nautilus as nature's typical builder, in his "Chambered nautilus."

In the November issue of the Autumn Leaves, our department will appear under its new name, The Parthenon. The symbols of our two organizations, the Orioles, and the Temple Builders, are appropriately inscribed in the heading, and an article, explaining the significance of the emblems, follows. For the next five issues before General Conference, many interesting articles and sketches are in prospect.

Those who are working with girls, in any capacity, and especially all Orioles and Temple Builders, should read these columns in the Leaves regularly. We hope to print a record of the activities of many of our circles and chapters. Monitors and leaders are invited to report to us everything of interest or value. Your successes will be incentives to other workers. Let us hear from you, soon.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by the United States Bureau of Education and the National Kindergarten Association. Build up virtues, and faults will disappear; praise the slightest sign of the virtue you are trying to cultivate; this will do more good than a dozen scoldings. By Mrs. Elvira Hyatt.)

It pays to have high ideals for our children, and to respect their individuality. Much can be accomplished by expecting children to be good, and by showing them that we trust them.

We should never call a child "bad," never wound his self-respect. This does not mean that his naughty actions should be "glossed over," but as one wise educator has expressed it, we should realize that every fault is simply the absence of some virtue, and we should try to build up that quality in which the child is deficient, rather than condemn him for that which he has not.

Build up the virtues and the faults will disappear. If the child is selfish, we should dwell on unselfishness; if the child is untidy, on neatness; if slow, on quickness; and we should always remember to praise even the slightest sign of the virtue we are working to cultivate. A child will try to live up to the thing for which he is praised. "How quiet and helpful my little Peggy is to-day!" will do more good than a dozen scoldings about noise and mischief.

Stories can be told to arouse and stimulate high ideals. Stories have a wonderful educational value and almost any lesson can be taught in story form. Tell stories about birds, trees, flowers, animals, great and good men, simple stories of home and family life, stories from history and from the Bible. The eager little minds are ready for anything you wish to give them, and if you are a natural story-teller, great indeed is your opportunity. Ideals of right conduct, love of family and sympathy with every living thing can all be given through the right use of stories.

Much has been said and written about prenatal influences, but volumes more are needed on past-natal influences. One of the first things that a baby learns is to "smile back" at his mother, and in all his earliest years the child reflects the attitude of those around him. He imitates the things which he sees and hears, in order to understand them, and "as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

A true mother leads a consecrated life. She will always be absolutely truthful and will keep every promise made to her child. She will recognize the good in all things, and will never speak ill of anyone in her child's presence. She will keep away all thoughts of fear, and will awaken a spirit of loving service toward others, and a growing belief in the power which is within himself, until at last he grows into a recognition of the universal love and goodness which underlie the whole of life.

Never allow your sentiment to control your reason. If you do you'll be led astray. Keep them both within the scope of your conscience. If you have to trust one more than the other, trust your reason.—Mark H. Siegfried.

Great souls are always positive and creative. They know more of the depths of gloom than their friends imagine; but a pessimist tells all the sorrow he ever heard of.—Mark H. Siegfried.

"The parent who earnestly desires the best good of his boy cannot afford to be a stranger in that boy's schoolroom, neither should the teacher be a stranger in the boy's home."

LETTER DEPARTMENT

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, October 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines. I am pleased to say, like Brother G. C. Tomlinson in the last issue, "Brothers, I feel like shouting hosanna to God in the highest," because of the bright days that are dawning on this district. Yes, it is true that Port Arthur is in the same district, and our dear Lord is remembering us in our isolated condition.

In our prayer meeting here of Wednesday, October 16, our dear Lord remembered us and did bestow of his Spirit on a sister who has only been united with the church a few months, and is one of the teachers in our Sunday school, which is progressing favorably.

Will the Sunday school authorities be so kind as to send us Christmas offering cards, as we would like to be in the ring?

On Sunday, October 13, we had Brother Innis with us for a few hours, who is a priest in the branch at Deckerville, Michigan. The Saints here were much comforted in the few hours spent together. Come again, dear brother, and all other covenanted people of God.

I am glad to pen a few lines for your valuable paper, and am sending you the name of two new subscribers and hope that others will soon follow.

We are not weary in well-doing and have rented a hall on the main thoroughfare in which to hold services. So, chosen messengers of glory, come and see us if you happen to pass this way. I remain

Your brother in Christ,

A. MILLER.

THUNDER HAWK, SOUTH DAKOTA, October 17, 1918.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription to the church papers, I will tell you that I am still interested in the latter-day work. There are only five Latter Day Saints here, that I know of. My husband and I, our daughter, and the orphan girl we raised, all have families that have not had the chance of hearing the gospel preached. If there are any Saints living near us, on the North Dakota side, near Lemmon, I would be glad to have them write to me.

We are trying to make our influence for good in our surroundings by daily leading a godly life and making our home a house of prayer. It is the only safeguard from all that is evil.

It seems that South Dakota has a few isolated Saints over the State with a very few branches. I do not know where the branch nearest to us is located. It may be in North Dakota, as we live near the North Dakota line. I should be glad to know.

The leading religion in our neighborhood is that of the Pentecostal people. We have a Union Sunday school which my husband and I have charge of. We are thankful that we are permitted to meet on the Sabbath and help to educate the children by the study of God's word, and they certainly enjoy it. We try to make it as interesting as we can. Sometimes we have an extra after the lesson—a song by the little folks, sometimes by the grown people; occasionally we have a recitation by one of the little folks, a piece of prose that is educational. As we have no other service on Sunday, we have plenty of time.

We find the Union Quarterly hard to teach from, as they come far from teaching the whole of the gospel plan of salvation. We gain a great deal of benefit from our own Gospel Quarterly, that helps us in the study of God's word.

The present quarter's lessons are just what we were interested in, as the Pentecostal people and we don't see alike on Christ's second coming and the resurrection. They say three and one half years, possibly seven years, is the length of time that Satan will be loosed a little season. Has our church ever stated the length of time?

And again, they say Christ's second coming is not the end of the world. You can see we welcomed the present Gospel Quarterly.

I don't see how any isolated Saint can get along without the church papers and the Quarterly. It would be a blank space in my life. I get so much information that keeps me in touch with the church.

At the present time, we are having an epidemic of Spanish influenza. Nearly every family in the neighborhood are down.

We are living in perilous times, when we can look for God's judgments to sweep the land. How thankful we should be that we have the promise that God will never forsake us or leave us alone, if we live obedient to his will.

Ever praying for the welfare of the church,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. ELLEN HERR.

WELLSVILLE, NEW YORK, October 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: I wrote you from Saranac Lake sometime in June last. I do not know of a more delightful place to be than in the mountains and on the lakes of the State of New York in the month of June. We always find a cordial welcome at the home of Sister Hatch and at the home of Brother John C. Hoxie. I held a number of services at Saranac Lake, and then went to Malone where I held services until July 16, returning to Saranac Lake for a few days, then went to Sherrill. I arrived at the latter place in time to go to a Sunday school picnic at Sylvian Lake, in company with a number of the Saints. We had advertised a series of services to be held in the tent at Sherrill, and had hopes that the tent might be well filled, but it was hot, very hot; then the subjects were perhaps a little warm for that time of the year, and altogether it seemed to be a poor combination, as the results were not as good as we had desired.

From Sherrill I went to the reunion at Onset. The reunion was a good one; it might have been better, but I presume that could be said of all religious gatherings. The preaching was of a high order, the papers read showed deep thought and much study. I think the trouble with most of the reunions I have attended is that we do not begin early enough to get, or try to get spiritual, that is, we let the days go by without trying hard enough to get in touch with God, thinking that there is plenty of time, and then the reunion is ended and we are not satisfied. On arriving at my home I found a letter from the First Presidency instructing me to get in touch with Brother William Landes of Niagara Falls, as there was a Reverend Mr. Pye who desired to debate with us on church propositions, and seemed to be in a hurry to get into battle, as I learned after conferring with Brother Landes. I took George (one of my sons) with me, to initiate him in the delights of a missionary life. We visited New London and were made at home at Brother Thomas Whipple's. We held two services there, then took passage on the steamer for New York. The writer preached for the Saints in Brooklyn on Sunday. Brother Calvin Rich is pastor of the Brooklyn Branch, and those who know him know that he is very unselfish when it comes to preaching, in fact he is generous to a fault. If you don't want to preach, don't go to Brooklyn.

August 27 found us in Wellsville where we held a few services at Brother Potter's home, where a welcome is always sure. We started from Brother Potter's home about 8.30 a. m. to go to Buffalo, and arrived the next morning at 1.30. Ordinary time between Wellsville and Buffalo is about four hours. The boy said, "Father, let's go to a hotel." I said, "Wait," so I called up Brother LaFey, and a silvery voice answered, "Come right along, we are waiting for you," and we went. Now don't think by this that they never go to bed at Brother and Sister LaFey's, because I know they do sometimes. We listened to a nice sermon by Brother F. G. Pitt on Sunday morning, and then the writer went to Niagara Falls, as I had promised to be there by the first of September.

The Reverend Mr. Pye wanted us to write out propositions, so we did that, and then he wanted to debate the Book of Mormon, so we accommodated him in that regard. Then after waiting and working through a very slow church committee on their side, he was still unsatisfied. I don't know what he wanted unless it was all of the time and an audience furnished him to hear a harangue against Joseph Smith and the supposed belief of the church.

The brethren told me that he had been studying for months to prepare himself for the debate. Too bad that all of that study was lost. Perhaps the longer he studied the less inviting it looked. The debate did not materialize anyway, so we let it go at that.

We continued preaching at Buffalo and Niagara Falls until September 14, when I received a telegram from Malone asking me to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Clare Nichols. With a sad heart I complied with the request. It seemed to our finite mind that she might have been most useful to the church, but who can tell but what God has work for her to do on the other side of life? It may not be orthodox, but the thought is comforting to me at least. Friends by the score came to pay their last respects to the departed sister, and listen to what we had to say regarding her faith in God.

I held another service in Malone, and then stopped at Saranac Lake for a few days. Sister Elizabeth Bell who had heard me preach when I was there in June, and had been investigating since that time asked for baptism, and we led her into the clear waters of the lake. Sunday found me at Sherrill where I preached to the Saints, and then went to Buffalo again.

The district conference was held on October 5 and 6, and had it not been for the street car strike would have been a large conference for our district. However, it was well attended, and all seemed to enjoy the sessions.

Brother Bishop and the writer held services after the conference, but the order by the city authorities that all churches be closed, brought our meetings to a full stop. We took this opportunity to go to the famed city of Toronto, Ontario, to attend to the conference there. The half was never told. It is a beautiful city and everyone seems to be busy, on the street, in the church, everywhere. The conference was certainly a success. It made me think of the conference I attended when I was a boy in Massachusetts. I mean the business part of it. The prayer meeting was very spiritual, and the preaching was excellent. It was certainly a spiritual and an intellectual treat to those that were present. If all of the Saints in Toronto are like Brother and Sister Field, where the writer and Brother Bishop were entertained, for hospitality, I wonder why Brother T. W. Williams ever thinks about going back to California.

Speaking about Brother Williams, he is certainly the right man in the right place. It seems to me that a bright day is dawning for the district of which Toronto is a part. I was told by some of the people there that they had been in the church for years, and that they never had heard such good preaching as they heard at the conference. (The writer did not preach.)

The sail over the lake from Niagara Falls to Toronto was fine, and the warning from Sister Green that it would be rough did not affect us any. The lake may be able to kick up a nasty sea, but if it can beat the coast of Maine any it will have to go some. This day, however, it was as smooth as glass. Now we are here at Wellsville. The influenza has got all of the cities, villages, and hamlets. I don't know what we will do, or can do, but be as patient as we can until it is over.

Yours,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, October 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: The work here is not progressing as I would like, owing to the fact that all Saints but five, including myself, have migrated to other parts. As I am busy managing my farm, raising all the wheat possible for the allies, it is impossible to devote much time to the work of the gospel. However, we meet together and welcome all "outsiders." I endeavor to present the gospel in its purity and simplicity, but it seems to fall upon deaf ears.

A few days ago we had occasion to visit San Francisco, and while there, we attended, for the first time, the sacrament service held in the neat little church, situated on Eighteenth and Danvers Streets. The interior harmonized with our ideas of a Latter Day Saint church—well-seated, a beautiful pipe organ, and a nice-looking piano. The meeting was presided over by Elders J. G. Waller and George Lincoln. Brethren Emery Parks and Hartshough passed the emblems. A good spirit prevailed as prayers were offered and many testimonies given. We felt at home for we were welcomed by all.

At the conclusion of the services, we were invited by the big-hearted Brother Benjamin Parks to dine at his pretty, cozy home. There we met Sister Parks and we partook of a sumptuous repast which we greatly appreciated.

The San Francisco Saints seem to be a happy band—so harmonious and earnest. Our poor, depleted branch seems so insignificant in comparison with the one we so much enjoyed.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

WARRINGTON, ENGLAND, October 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: For several years I have held a General Conference appointment as a missionary in these parts, and I was especially to concentrate my efforts on Wigan, Lancashire. In 1912 the branch there was closed owing to there not being sufficient interest to sustain it.

I well remember my first visit there. I had put a few pieces of bread in my pocket, in case I should require it, as it was Sunday, and I had never before been in any home in the town of Wigan. My heart was full of a strong desire to fulfill my task to the uttermost, and mounting my cycle I rode the twelve miles, full of joy, yet fearing I was too weak in faith to accomplish much good. I made my way first to the home of a sturdy champion of the church, our beloved and faithful Brother William Spargo, and his good wife, since gone to rest. I was received with joy, and after some little talk, we jointly decided to hold a meeting the same evening in their home, which was open for that purpose. We made a tour among the members, and any friends known to the members, and at 6.30 p. m. the same evening, we held a meeting with about ten members, and one or two friends invited in, and ever since the progress has more or less continued.

Then in the summer of 1912 began the great anti-Mormon campaign which raged through these islands from Liverpool in the northwest, to London in the southeast, and Wigan, for some reason, became a great center of the anti-Mormon crusade.

I have with me to-day, a mass of literature, which could, in the hands of some able man, develop into a book of lurid experiences seldom passed through by any branch or missionary during this last half century. Nobly did the gallant band of the Wigan Branch rally to the banner of the truth, and with help from Brother Andrew Fleming, of Warrington, and the worthy William Spargo, of Wigan, who had then become president of the Wigan Branch, we contested our position inch by inch, and that in the face of mob violence, clerical and otherwise. Our infantry held the front lines against the gas attacks and our eighteen pound truth-shells wrought havoc in the ranks and general headquarters of the great Liverpool Anti-Mormon Society. They finally discovered, to their utter discomfiture, that they had been attacking the very people who had the real truth in regard to what methods were required to stamp out the evils of Utah propaganda. Then the campaign fizzled out in the light of greater events, and we were left to continue the work of reconstruction.

For almost two years I continued to give my attention to the Wigan Branch, and then events transpired which required me to turn all my labor for the time being to Warrington.

The devoted band of Saints at Wigan continued to hold on, and when depression came along owing to war conditions, they were again helped by Brother and Sister Arthur Smith, who had recently come from America. These two became pillars of support to the work, and there is no more devoted man to the interests of the church than this humble and gallant gentleman; and he is the one who holds up the hands of the dear, faithful president, who though advancing in years, is still very young in spirit, and has great spiritual activity.

Then there are others in the work; Brother and Sister Fawcett, who came over from America, are devoted servants in very truth, and the able presentation of the gospel by Brother Fawcett is having great effect in adding to the church.

I could not do justice to this branch with my pen, in describing the splendid services held from time to time. The singing is lovely, and a credit to those whose care is devoted to getting such good results from it. I am sure there is no better conducted song service in the whole of the British Isles, and I have twenty years' musical experience to base my judgment upon, and have been a member of a band that held the One-Thousand-Guinea Cup Trophy.

The social side of the branch is not by any means neglected, and many bright, beautiful gatherings are the result of their united efforts. Almost without a single exception, young and old are doing their bit to insure success, and never was a more united front placed to overcome obstacles and difficulties.

On October 3 I was requested to journey to Wigan to baptize some who were ready to enter the church, and at 7.30 p. m. the Wigan Baths presented an inspiring scene. There was a large attendance, and eleven precious souls were standing waiting to enter the watery grave, and having duly promised to faithfully follow Christ, one by one they were led into the water, and not a single one faltered in the ordeal, although one dear sister was very lame, and others were sick; yet with burning desire to serve God, not one faltered. The water was very cold for them, since some of them were sick, but for over a half hour, I stood in it endeavoring to be a servant of the Lord.

On October 6 there was the confirmation of these newborn children, followed by the administration of the sacrament to them. In the evening the Harvest Festival was held, with singing, and preaching by Elder Arthur Smith. After the service, which was truly one of inspiration and love, four more names were on the list for baptism.

My pen cannot describe the joys experienced with this happy band of pilgrims, and I cannot close this lengthy letter without paying due personal thanks to each and every one of these humble people of God, who through years of patient toil, have ministered to my wants, and by courtesy and consideration have made my pleasures doubly secure. Their worthy president is to be married on October 23, to Sister Jones, of the Wigan Branch, and we all unite in praying for them to be spared to enjoy a good many years of loving peace in one another's company.

For myself, I ask the prayers of the Saints, that my faith remain steadfast in this great work of love, which is the friend of mankind, and without which love and friendship we are but sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. I for one can now more than ever say I have found a friend, and one which clings to me through all the various aspects of life.

Sincerely,

151 Orford Lane.

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, October 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write a few words to let you know that I am one of the Saints who is in the army. I am in the Motor Transportation Corps and will be a truck driver if I am sent across.

I have been quite sick with the influenza, but am nearly well now, although I am not out of the hospital yet.

I like the army much better than I thought I would. Of course I really am not in the real army yet, as this is only a school here to make us capable for the tasks awaiting us in this corps. We will be moved as soon as the quarantine for influenza is raised, and that will be next Sunday, the 27th. Some will go to one place, and others to another. The lieutenant of the hospital said the other day that I would be sent to Fort Sam Houston, so it may be only a few days until I will be there and near San Antonio. I think there are some Saints there, and perhaps a branch. If so, I wish to be informed about it. When I get there I expect I will see a great many things I haven't seen here, and will find out more of what the army is really like.

Mother sent me a big roll of HERALDS and Emblems which I received last night, and I enjoy reading them very much. I wish to call attention to the HERALD of June 12. In this issue I find such a good article by Brother H. A. Stebbins, on "Future rewards and punishments." I read it with great joy and pleasure, and when I had completed it, I said to myself, "I wish that the church would publish this article in tract form to be spread among the people of the world." It seems to me the article is quite complete.

Also, I find a short article which is very good in the letter department of this same issue, by G. N. Cox, "The hour of God's judgment has come." He points out very clearly the angel that was to come to earth with the everlasting gospel in the hour of God's judgment. I wish all the people who desire righteousness could read these two articles mentioned above.

Another very good letter is from an elder to his wife. It is very encouraging to those who have sacrificed their sons to this world's great conflict. It is entitled, "When we give our sons," and is found in the HERALD for September 25, 1918. This piece gave me much comfort when I read it. It should appeal to every one who reads it.

The boys with whom I have become acquainted are all very good boys. Some of them are religious, and we boys get together and talk about the Bible, and have prayer meeting, too.

Some of the people here think that I am a minister, and many have asked if I were not. I tell them, "No, I have never been ordained a minister, but I try to live a life that would be pleasing to Christ." I spend a great deal of my time studying the Bible and church papers since coming to the hospital.

A little while after I took sick my parents came down to visit me. This was a great comfort to me. They stayed three days and I hated to see them leave. We get good care.

I wish that when I get to the other camp that some more of the Saints would write me a letter occasionally. I like to get letters from the Saints anywhere for they are good people wherever you find them.

I find great pleasure and comfort in reading letters from the Latter Day Saint boys that are at the front, and even here, too.

I shall write you again when I get moved, and then perhaps I can tell you something of interest.

Ever praying for God to speed the day when this war will end, I remain,

In the faith,

PRIVATE JAMES A. WILLIAMS.

COREA, MAINE, October 8, 1918.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother Smith: I am here among the humble fisherfolk. The branch here is poor and struggling, but made of dear Saints who revive under the sunlight of encouragement. I was pleased to find so well educated and cultured a young man as pastor of the branch here; Newman Wilson is his name. He has had a fair education in the classics and makes a good impression when he speaks. He loves his humble fisherfolk and he is one with them.

The Spanish influenza blocked us in Jonesport. I will return there just as soon as the ban is lifted on the churches and schools. The mortality here in the New England is more and more alarming, and sorrow and grief seem the common lot. If the doctors could once gain control of it the death rate would be diminished, but so far they don't seem to understand it. In these great trials we are made to see the vanity of all earthly things.

The humble fishermen with their roughened hands and faces are a study to me. The more I study them the more I realize why the Lord laid the burdens of the world upon fishermen. I believe that if twenty such men to-day could be set on fire with the gospel they would convert the world. They have the sterling qualities that go to make up brave missionaries. They are inured to hardship—their patience is almost infinite, and they have a humility that is supreme. In many a fisherman here on the coast I see another Peter of Galilee.

I am deeply interested in the future that is before the church in this wonderful age. You, my dear brother, are privileged in the great opportunity you have to guide the destiny of an institution which, with God's blessing, will do much for the uplift of humanity. I believe this, and more, will be accomplished if we can bring every member of the church to understand that our lives should be epistles read of all men, to keep the church incorruptible amid all the changes, anxieties, and falsities of an age when truth is so often spurned and righteousness disesteemed.

I am on my way to the conference at Stonington. I trust the day may come when you will see your way to visit these parts. You will meet a poor but good people, grateful for any uplift God sends them. I keep you daily in my prayers.

Yours fraternally,

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

GROESWEN, BARBERS HILL, GREAT MALVERN, WALES,
October 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: We had a good conference of the Western Wales District, September 14 and 15, and continued our services for nearly two weeks at the mission hall at Gilfach-Goch, where a nice interest continues. I was called away from there to Nantyglo where our Brother Allen (whose death is recorded elsewhere in the HERALD), used to live. His injuries which resulted in death were no doubt accelerated after the amputation of his left leg by septic poisoning, and primarily, loss of blood.

Our difficulties increase when we lose good brothers and sisters.

Elder John Pughsley of Abercrumboi, who has a son serving in Mesopotamia, has been recently drafted into the army.

The continuous rains are playing havoc with the late crops of grain and potatoes.

I entertain the hope that the war may close this year.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

[Following is a personal letter to President Smith.]

WIARTON, ONTARIO, October 16, 1918.

ELDER F. M. SMITH,

Independence, Missouri,

Dear Brother: I am glad to say, we are having good times here in Canada now. The conferences were all good and well attended by Saints and outsiders, and the Saints were encouraged in the work. I am sure the work will go ahead faster now than it has for a long time. The old-time good feeling that we used to enjoy has returned among the Saints, and onward is the watchword. It was sure a good move to send the brethren of the Twelve to attend the conferences, for it encouraged the Saints. And I am sure it did us good. I learned much that will help me in my work in the future.

As ever in the faith,

S. G. STJOHN.

EUREKA, CALIFORNIA, October 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: In reading the article in the HERALD of October 9, on Joseph Smith, by J. E. F. Smith, I felt the spirit to write the evidence that I had given me of the worthiness and nobility of character of this man, and that he will be fully vindicated and honored before the world, to the everlasting disgrace of those who have traduced him.

I wish to state that I have never had the privilege of living with the Saints for any length of time. I joined the church when I was thirteen years old. I cannot remember when I did not believe the doctrine, as I was raised by grandparents who were loyal Latter Day Saints. I can also say that I know what it is to be snubbed and ostracized for my faith. But that only made me more firm.

I have tried to help the people around me to see the truth, but do not remember of one who was ever helped to believe. They would tell me that they liked me but could not understand how I could believe as I did, in that awful Joseph Smith, and that awful Book of Mormon. I asked them if they would read it. Oh, no, they would not read it. I suppose my experience is like that of many others of our faith.

My health is not good, and something seems to tell me to write this experience and send it to the HERALD and it may help some other brother or sister who is alone and has only God to teach him.

I think it was about twenty years ago when the following was given to me.

I had been spending the afternoon with a friend, and she was asking me about my faith. I tried in my weak way to make her see the truth, but I could see that it did not impress her, and I went home feeling discouraged. As I was about to leave she gave me a paper. I saw it was an old one, and laid it down and did not read it until I went to bed. I found a passage marked, and saw it was in reference to the character of Joseph Smith. It said everything the English language could express against him. My soul seemed to cry out: Why did God allow him to be so misunderstood? Would he never have justice done him?

I do not know whether it was a dream or vision, but all at once I seemed to be in some other place than my room. I was on high ground and was looking down into a valley or park of some kind. I saw a procession of people all going one way, toward some large object in the distance. It looked to me as though it were a monument of some kind. I went down and joined the procession, for I too was anxious to know what they were going to see.

When we came to the object, I found that it was a monument of great size, and at the base there was a large room. The people entered and would finally pass out the opposite side. I followed, and to my surprise, I found it a room with counters all around the sides, and standing behind these counters were men with rods or pointers in their hands, like those the teachers used when I went to school. On the walls behind these men were maps and charts which they seemed to be explaining to the people. I noticed on each counter a small book opened flat, and I went and lifted one of the books. I turned it over, and to my surprise I found it was the Book of Mormon. These men would point to the maps and charts, and then to the open book, and explain it to the people, who would say, "Well, after all it is true," and pass out.

I thought I would go out and see what this meant. I wondered what the monument could be for. It was of immense size, nearly as large at the top as at the base. I looked and found written, "Joseph and Hyrum Smith, martyred for the Truth."

When I came to myself, I felt that I had been in the Spirit and God had given this to me to comfort me.

I fully believe that some day this will be realized, and that the memory of these men will be held sacred, and the world will yet delight to honor them.

Yours for the truth,
SARAH J. KINSEY.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, October 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: This is our first churchless Sunday and we hardly know what to do. Influenza and diphtheria are prevalent in the city, so our churches, along with theaters, etc., are closed until further orders. Our presiding elder, Brother Hawn, says this is the first time in twenty-five years that he has had no appointment, unless he was sick in bed, but he blessed a sweet little baby, made arrangements for services one day a week in one of the factories, and talked the gospel to a Catholic family, so the day is not lost.

Our branch is advancing both in numbers and activity. Several young ladies have been baptized along with others, a good substantial "lift" for Sunday school and Religion.

Two circles of Oriole girls have been organized. The one with Sister Britt Hill as monitor, enjoys long hikes, and all the things that Orioles enjoy.

Sister O. J. Hawn has charge of the younger circle of twelve girls. They have planned a thimble party for next Saturday.

The war has taken only one of our boys thus far—Brother Harry Sweetman, who is now serving in northern Russia.

The Woman's Auxiliary is busy; some little Belgian children will find comfort in the work they have done.

These are ideal autumn days, beautiful Michigan weather, which ought to quell any disease epidemic, but we look for those things, and greater disaster. Words of cheer and encouragement come from time to time, so we are still pressing on.

We are planning a two-day session of institute work this winter. Dates and arrangements will appear later.

Brethren O. J. Hawn and E. S. White have organized a mission on the east side, services to begin as soon as quarantine is lifted. We are in hopes of splendid results as the outlook is fine; unity prevails, the priesthood all at work.

We of Central Michigan were sorry to lose our district president, Brother G. W. Burt, but we wish him Godspeed in his new mission.

Success to the HERALD this year, is our sincere wish.

E. A. SMITH, Branch Correspondent.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, October 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: The extended absence of the correspondent has delayed report of Burlington activities for longer than we intended, having left request that it would be looked after in the meantime.

The feature claiming especial interest during July was a series of lectures by Brother Augustine Dwyer, from July 19 to 25 inclusive. Following are some of the subjects, a number of which were illustrated: "President Wilson and the world war," "The Great Sahara," "Venice, the bride of the sea," "Rome," "Russia," "Story of my conversion," "The Holy Land," and "The power of personality."

The lectures are reported as having been entertaining, interesting, and educational. We need not comment on their merit to those who have heard Brother Dwyer.

A two-day meeting was held here September 14 and 15, which proved enjoyable and helpful to all in attendance. Saturday's order of meetings was, prayer service in the morning, auxiliary work in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening. We felt especially gratified with the interest manifested in the auxiliary session, and appreciative of the assistance rendered. One number which we were particularly fortunate in securing was "The relation of hygiene to character building," by Sister Margaret Bishop, graduate registered nurse, who has served as school nurse at Chariton, Iowa.

Brother Arthur Allen, district president, spoke Sunday morning and evening. The time was also well occupied at the afternoon prayer service and round table session. Visitors were present from three neighboring branches, and the association was mutually enjoyable.

Our October sacrament service was especially good. Much feeling was manifested, and a message of assurance and counsel given to three of the membership.

A good representation from Burlington attended the district conference and conventions at the Rock Creek church near Adrian, Illinois. The feeling was good throughout, and the time well and fully occupied—even to the auto rides of from two to four or five miles, and the feasts of good things provided for the visitors.

The Friday evening session was something of a departure, being a patriotic service. Special features were a patriotic address by Brother James McKiernan (characteristically good), a "community sing," after the fashion so much indorsed by Brother Hoxie, and a tribute to our boys in the service, together with messages from a number who have gone from the district. We should have liked to have them know how much they were in our thoughts throughout the session.

The influenza quarantine, being Statewide, has closed our services for the time, but we trust that when resumed it will be with renewed zest. CORRESPONDENT.

LAMONI, IOWA, October 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: Probably some of the people in Canada would like to hear from me, since I have come to Graceland College.

I left home on September 2, on my way to Lamoni. I arrived here on the 4th soon after daybreak. My trip here was not a very pleasant one, because I left home early in the morning so as to catch a train out of Detroit in good time. As it happened, the morning train had left before I reached there. That meant for me to stay at the depot there all day. I left Detroit at 9.45 p. m. for an all-night ride. I couldn't see any of the country. I reached Chicago about 8.30 a. m., just in time to see my train pulling out from the station. The gate was shut right in my face. Of course, I had to stay there until 6.10 p. m. and had to ride all night again.

I had to change trains at Chariton about 3 a. m., and I had no sooner walked into the depot than a man, all smiles, came up and introduced himself to me as Brother Hopkins, and said he was one of the teachers at Graceland, and asked me if that wasn't where I was going. He said he felt I was a Latter Day Saint and was going to college. There were others on the way to Lamoni. One was Miss Patterson, our music teacher.

I certainly have enjoyed myself greatly since coming here, but I don't find things here just the way I had planned. I wish the young people here were more interested in the church work. I surely have been made to feel proud of our young people over in the Chatham District. I feel sure there will be plenty of room for them in Zion. I only wish we had more like them to bring here.

I have found some wonderful people here, such as Brother Paul Craig, George Anway, Daniel Needham, etc. It seems as though I had always been acquainted with them.

The time is growing nearer every day for our next General Conference. I hope a number of the Chatham District Saints will come over then. I certainly will be glad to see them. I don't want them to leave without seeing me.

I have not been homesick yet. But quite often I dream of home, and sometimes I feel rather blue, yet I don't let it go far enough to make me homesick. I would like to have some more of the young people there write to me.

Sincerely yours,

439 West Main Street.

JOHN A. TAYLOR.

[Letter from Elder I. N. White to the Presidency]: During the month of September, parties in Kansas City became bothered over the disaffection of certain individuals, and this caused them some uneasiness over the call and authority of the present Presidency of the church by reason of the attitude these men took in regard to the presidency. During the time of uneasiness one of these parties dreamed that he had a can or vase that he greatly desired to be filled with oil, and resorted to a place where oil was wont to be kept, but looking across the street saw President F. M. Smith standing by some receptacle where they felt they could be accommodated, and passed over to him and made their wants known. He proceeded at once to fill their vases with pure oil until the vessel ran over. He noticed that the place where President Smith stood was enveloped and overshadowed with a soft white light from above, while all around at other points it was dark, save a flickering light here and there, etc. This person came to me to ask for an interpretation of the dream, and I was greatly impressed with the honesty and faith some of our people can go to God with for light when needed, in place of taking the word of dissenters from the faith.

God gave me the interpretation at once, which the parties drank in like pure water to a thirsty soul. Thus, little by little, are you, Mr. President, sustained by him who called you to the Presidency. You have only to keep humble and pray for faith in your work, and you will be sustained, not only by God, but by all Saints that are worthy to be called Saints.

Without further burdening your time, I close. As ever, your unworthy brother in gospel bonds,

October 24, 1918.

I. N. WHITE.

[The following breezy and educational letter was addressed to President Smith by our veteran missionary, J. J. Cornish.]
BELLINGHAM, WASHINGTON, October 21, 1918.

Mr. F. M. Smith,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Since last reporting I have not been permitted to do any preaching. Everything in shape of public gatherings is closed as stated in last report.

I have been doing my best to visit people and talk to them in their homes. Many have excuses: "Do not have time"; "No, we have too many kinds of religion now"; "Go on to h—ll with your tracts and religion"; with, "No, I am a Seventh-day Adventist, and I don't want to hear any other," etc. They appear to be worse out this way than I have ever noticed at any other place. But others tell me that they are about the same in almost every place they go now.

Brother Peter Anderson told me while in Centralia that to go from house to house was about the best we could do now as a rule.

But this I have done all my life. If I were in a place for any great length of time I would visit and talk to them in every home in each settlement, and get next to them, etc. And this has been the secret of my success through life. But it seems that we have come to a time when a large majority of people are in a hurry, and if there comes a little spare time a large majority of them put it in fun or frolic. I see more unbelief in the people in this part of the country than I do in any State I have been in, and in some who think they have religion, it is so different from the older sects, and so little of it, and that little almost all is opposite the true gospel of Jesus Christ! A sample: "Oh, yes, we believe Christ will reign a thousand years—up in the air—wicked all dead—Satan bound (on earth)—no one to tempt." Another: "Oh, yes, Jesus is reigning now—he's here now." (Russellites.) They have arranged for his coming so often, "Now he is here, but we don't see him." One more on that: "Oh, yes, Jesus is here now—he's in me reigning a thousand years." And is Satan bound? "Yes, I'm in Jesus, and Jesus is in me, and Satan can't get at me—so he is bound," etc. Worse and worse.

Well, you may not have time to visit, so I will say I am doing the best I can, but I cannot see that what I am doing is counting very much.

Best wishes to all, from your little brother,

J. J. CORNISH.

Liberty's Battleground

Do you know where it is? Can you pronounce the names of the villages, towns, rivers, roads, etc., which are referred to in your daily papers in their accounts of the fighting now going on?

PRONOUNCING AND LOCATING any point of interest in the war zone is made easy when you possess one of our Battleground of Liberty Maps, and you may have one for the asking if you are a subscriber to any two of the three journals embraced in our Gospel Trio—just by renewing for one year for any two of the three, and requesting the map sent to your address. We will do the rest. We also give a map to each new subscriber for any one of the Gospel Trio—HERALD, Ensign, or Autumn Leaves.

OUR BOYS ARE FIGHTING THAT WE MAY BE FREE, and we should keep posted on where they are and do all we can to keep ourselves free from ignorance of them and their work. There is no excuse for you when you can be informed at such small expenditure of time and money, as is made possible by this offer.

THE NEXT MAIL should carry your order to either the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, or to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE MAP IS 33 by 28 INCHES. Large enough to make it convenient for anyone to find the various points noted thereon. It is made by the leading map makers of the United States, and is standard in every particular.

DOW CITY, IOWA, October 23, 1918.

Editors Herald: Though it has been some time since I have written anything for the columns of your valuable paper, it is because the writer would rather read the communications of others than to write. However, there are some reasons why it seems to the writer best to occasionally write a few lines.

A long experience as a member of the church when the mind is permitted to run back over the past brings many pleasant remembrances most precious to the soul.

Fifty-seven years as a follower of Christ, and fifty-one years as an active minister of his church, only tends to confirm one in the faith, and one's faith grows stronger and hope brighter as the months and years glide by, though at times he may be almost discouraged at his individual weaknesses.

Reasons why one's faith grows stronger and hope brighter as the years pass by is found not only in the fact that a careful and thorough examination of the tenets of the church and principles of the gospel with the teaching of the sacred books of the church, make one to know that here is found a perfect agreement, and convinces the mind that it is not necessary to studiously avoid doctrinal matter in study and teaching to keep oneself in harmony with the church.

Paul once wrote to Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." But it is also found in the fact that God still confirms his ministry's words or teaching "with signs following." "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will"—Hebrews 2:4. (Mark 16:20.) In various ways and at different times these manifestations of the Spirit are witnessed among the Saints, and it is indeed encouraging to the mind and refreshing to the soul to be present in the assemblies of the Saints when the Holy Spirit seems to cover the assembly as with a mantle, and that holy calm settles down upon the audience that melts the heart to contrition and the eyes to tears, and brings to the individual that lifting up of the soul toward God, that enables it to drink in yet more fully of the divine nature, and makes one to know that God by his Spirit and voice is actually present with the people, and that he encourages and speaks to them as in days of old.

This is indeed a great privilege to be thus favored of God, and these manifestations should be exercised upon with the utmost care, and in the fear of God. When this is done the results are very beneficial to the church, and a means in the hands of God for the accomplishment of good.

Then there comes that manifestation of the Spirit to the individual when he hears its wooing voice and understands its words as truly as did Philip when the Spirit said to him: "Go near, and join thyself to this chariot." (Acts 8:29.) At other times the healing power of God is manifest to him and he feels and experiences its presence and is healed, and knows that such things do occur, even though at times we may be disappointed.

Just why we are disappointed we may not always know, though it is often a lack of faith on our part, or because we desire something that is not the will of God to give. However this may be, we should be as humble as the Savior when he said: "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done."

Yet there is that underlying power of the gospel which changes not only the aspirations of the individual, but his entire being, body and soul, and makes him indeed a new creature in Christ, and touches and enlivens and quickens every fiber of his being, because he is born not only of the water, but of the Spirit also, and the Spirit bears witness to his spirit that he is the son of God, and that he is so recognized by his heavenly Father. If one will but carefully notice the working of the gospel leaven in his own mind and heart as he in humility tries to do the will of God, he can but realize that the gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth"; if he will but do the will of God. To my mind there is no stronger evidence of the divine authenticity of the gospel of Christ than this inward working of the Spirit, in harmony with gospel principles, upon the inward man, bringing the fruition of the Spirit, which should be manifest in love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, virtue, knowledge, wisdom, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity. Thus the individual becomes fruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

On of the sad experiences of life, so far as the writer and his family are concerned, was in the death of his granddaughter, Sister Hazel J. Leise, which occurred at the parental home, near Vail, Iowa, September 27, 1918. She was a little over twenty-five years of age, the greater part of her life being spent in acquiring wisdom and knowledge along intellectual lines and the putting it to a practical use. She was known as one of the best spellers in her county, a successful school-teacher for a number of years, and a consistent and successful Red Cross worker. Her early death, of pneumonia, brought to the home a loss that can never be replaced until the family meet again in the celestial kingdom of God. The entire community seemed to mourn her early death and the cessation of her earthly work. She, like Mary of old, though busy with the things of this present life, did not forget to sit at the Master's feet, and learn the "one thing needful," for she was a devout Christian.

Under such circumstances there is much comfort in the truth so fully taught in the word that death does not end all, but that there is an intelligent and actual spiritual existence between death and the resurrection, for the righteous, in the paradise of God, where the good work of going on unto perfection may continue until the work is completed by the power of God, at the resurrection of the just, at the second and glorious coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

To the writer's mind there is just as much proof in the sacred books of the church for a conscious and intelligent spiritual existence between death and the resurrection, as there is for the resurrection itself. To disbelieve one would be to reject the other, and the Bible which contains proof for both.

At the request of proper authority the writer has spent some time this fall in the northern part of the Northeastern Nebraska District, where he was loyally entertained by the Saints and friends. Decatur, Walthill, and Blair are the points where the work was done, and that work would have continued had it not been for the fact that all public gatherings were forbidden because of the epidemic of Spanish influenza, which seemed to be quite prevalent.

The writer is ready to do any work in that part of the country assigned him, as soon as conditions will admit of his work being continued. Those interested will please keep a watch on changing conditions, and as soon as the way opens, and work is desired, please so notify the undersigned, at Dow City, Iowa, and he will respond, if the Lord is willing.

Hopefully yours,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Clark, and O. Salisbury. February conference to be at Des Moines. R. J. Farthing, secretary pro tem, care Y. M. C. A., Oskaloosa, Iowa.

FLORIDA.—With the Coldwater Branch near Betts, Florida, September 14, at 10 a. m. T. C. Kelley and D. M. Rudd presided, E. M. McCall, secretary. Statistical reports: Local 63, Coldwater 103, Santa Rosa 98. Bishop's agent reported $12 on hand. Elders reporting: W. A. West, D. M. Rudd, W. M. Hawkins, L. F. West. Priest reporting: E. M. McCall. Next conference to be held at Santa Rosa Branch, Saturday at 10 a. m. preceding the first full moon in January, 1919. The Florida District reunion organized immediately after the conference adjourned. E. N. McCall, secretary.

SOUTHERN OHIO.—At Wellston, Ohio, October 5, 10 a. m. District President F. J. Ebeling was in charge, assisted by D. E. Tucker. Reading of the district president's report showed all branch presidents in the district reported; that the general movement in the district was upward; also reminding us that it will take a consecrated and earnest effort on the part of all to keep it upward. Statistical reports from: Limerick, Wellston, Middletown, Nelsonville, The Plains, and Creola. Conference was brought to a close sooner than was anticipated. The board of health and town council stopped all public gatherings in order to stop the spread of influenza. Time and place of next district conference left to president of district. Conference adjourned at 3 p. m. after having arranged for a two-day meeting at Wellston in the near future, time to be determined by the president of district and president of Wellston Branch. Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary, The Plains, Ohio.

TORONTO.—At Toronto, Ontario, October 12, 1918, presided over by district president, D. Pycok, and William Place, with Apostles P. M. Hanson and J. A. Gillen associated. Four ministerial reports received. Statistical report: present membership 2,221; net gain 132. Bishop's agent's report for four months: receipts $1,266.62; payments $1,234.85. All delegates and visitors in attendance, by a standing vote, reiterated their allegiance to the general church, and expressed unreserved confidence in the general and administrative officers of the church. Officers elected: George E. Harrington, president; J. A. Wilson, vice president; Floralice Miller, secretary; A. F. McLean sustained as Bishop's agent and treasurer; Angus Kennedy, member library board; T. R. Seaton recommended as chorister. Delegates to next General Conference: F. G. Pitt, G. E. Harrington, J. A. Wilson, Robert Whitehead, J. W. Davis, Inez Davis, Sister W. W. Ward, P. Pement, Sister M. Hathaway, Sister A. McLean, Brother and Sister Ware, Sister A. P. Mortimer, A. F. McLean, James Pycok, S. W. Tomlinson, Floralice Miller, Angus Kennedy, Sister L. Campton, W. D. Bannister, Sister P. M. Hanson. Adjourned to meet at call of district presidency. Floralice Miller, secretary.

WESTERN WALES.—At Gilfach-Goch, Saints' mission hall, September 14 and 15. J. E. Meredith, of Birmingham, was associated with the district president in presiding. Elders Edward Williams, David Thomas, D. Lewis, Henry Lewis, and J. G. Jenkins reported. Priest H. Snook reported for Aberarcumboi. A resolution prevailed requesting Bishop May to take over charge of money relative to the Aberaman mission hall in behalf of the district in conjunction with J. G. Jenkins. Splendid priesthood meeting held Sunday under presidency of the president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders. A vote of condolence was passed by the assembly relative to the passing of Rees Jenkins in Palestine. Preaching by J. E. Meredith, H. Ellis, David Thomas, and Thomas Jones. Monday morning another session of the priesthood was held and the rest of the day spent in a Sunday school tea and an entertainment, the musical side of which was a good sign. This tacking of the local Sunday school treat on to succeed the conference proved a fine success. Thomas Jones, president, Groeswen, Barbers Hill, Great Malvern, Worcester, England; John Phillips, secretary, Gruynfry Home, Carway, near Vidwelly Cairn, Wales.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—With the Lansing Branch, October 5 and 6; district president, G. A. Smith, in charge. Official and financial reports from: G. A. Smith; W. P. Buckley, secretary-treasurer; S. Stroh, second counselor and bishop's agent. Branch reports from Battle Creek, Belding, Buchanan, Capitol City, Clear Lake, Coldwater, Galien, Grand Rapids, Hartford, Hibbard, Jackson, Kalamazoo, and Knox. Total membership of district, 1,154. Thirteen ministerial reports. Officers for ensuing year: president, G. A. Smith; counselors, O. H. Story and W. F. Shaub; secretary-treasurer, W. P. Buckley. Bishop's agent, S. Stroh, and chorister, Louise Evans, were sustained. Delegates for next General Conference: Louise Evans, Sister Francis Baker, E. K. Evans, G. A. Smith, E. A. Blakeslee, S. W. L. Scott, A. Whitehead, J. W. McKnight, E. B. Blett, S. Stroh, and H. M. Taylor. Alternates: S. S. Reed, S. S. Benham, O. H. Storey, J. C. Goodman, C. E. Glidden, Sister J. Rook, and Sister Warren. Speakers were: J. R. Grice, S. Stroh, E. K. Evans, and J. W. McKnight. There were 6 baptisms. Service flag dedicated. Services in charge of Elder Grice. Adjourned to meet with Clear Lake Branch (Ray, Indiana) the second Saturday and Sunday in June, 1918. W. P. Buckley, secretary.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—Met at the Stone Church, October 5, 1918, at 8 p. m., presided over by the stake presidency, with whom were associated the First Presidency and the members of the Quorum of the Twelve who were present. Reports read from the various officers and quorums of the stake. Upon recommendation of the First Presidency, Bishop M. H. Siegfried was released from the bishopric of the stake and Bishop J. A. Becker was chosen to serve the stake in his stead. Bishop Siegfried was to take up other lines of work, under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. The stake presidency reported the resignations of A. H. Mills and C. F. Davis from the stake-high council, and nominated R. J. Lambert and G. H. Hulmes to fill the vacancies. The nominations were approved. The stake presidency recommended that A. H. Knowlton and G. L. Harrington, who are with the colors, be granted a leave of absence and retain their places on the council, and that R. T. Cooper and I. A. Smith be chosen as supernumeraries to sit with the council, Cooper for Knowlton, and Smith for Harrington, in their places during their absence. The recommendation was approved. The report of the stake bishopric shows for nine months, cash received from all sources $27,011.58, paid out for all purposes $25,745.35, balance on hand $1,266.23. The devotional services were of a high order. C. I. Carpenter, stake secretary.

Convention Minutes

MOBILE.—Religio, at Vancleave, Mississippi, September 12, 1918, with Ealon E. Miller in charge. Good reports from Bay Minette and Escatawpa. A budget of $7 was adopted for district expenses this quarter. The resignation of Nora Warr as home department superintendent accepted, and Ollie Booker elected. Several good questions were discussed with interest, and all felt encouraged in Religio work. A. D. McCall gave an excellent talk along the line of social purity. Adjourned to meet at time and place of next Sunday school convention. Missouri V. Booker, secretary.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—Sunday school, at Beaverton, September 20, in charge of Superintendent O. J. Hawn, assisted by Matthew Umphrey. Officers reports read and accepted. Officers elected for the ensuing year: O. J. Hawn, superintendent; Matthew Umphrey, assistant superintendent; Gladys Umphrey, secretary-treasurer; George Shotwell, home department superintendent; Dora Clingerman, cradle roll superintendent; Willard Shotwell, member of library board; Bertha Shrock, member gospel literature board; Benjamin Burtch, musical director. Motion prevailed that the collection of the schools for the first Sunday of each quarter be sent to district treasury. Adjourned to meet at call of the superintendent. Gladys Umphrey, secretary.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—Sunday school, with the Mays Hill Branch, October 6, 1918, 2.30 p. m., with District Superintendent O. S. Caldwell in charge. Ethel McClain was placed in charge of the program. Reports received from several of the schools, and those that failed to get in a written report reported verbally. According to reports the Sunday school work is moving along nicely through the district. District officers elected: Flossie Gallimore, assistant superintendent; W. L. McClain, home department superintendent; Zula Johnson, cradle roll superintendent. Brother Trowbridge gave a fine lecture on Sunday school and Religio work, which was much appreciated by all. A program was rendered by the little folks. Good talks were given by J. R. McClain, L. M. McFadden, and W. L. McClain. A nice collection was taken to defray district expenses. Time and place of next convention was left to district superintendent. O. S. Caldwell, district superintendent.

TORONTO.—Religio, in Toronto, October 11, 1918. General vice president, T. W. Williams, presided; Floralice Miller and Charles G. McLean, clerks. Secretary's report showed a membership of 363 in the eight locals of the district, with a net loss of 65. Officers elected: F. G. Long, president; Earnest Rawett, vice president; Floralice Miller, secretary; Charles A. McLean, treasurer; Elsie Whitworth, home class superintendent; Orma Kniffen, member of library board; J. R. Osborne, member gospel literature board; Robert A. Braden, superintendent temperance department; A. Pearl Mortimer recommended as chorister; Orma Kniffen recommended as director of boy movement. The following resolutions unanimously prevailed: That we as a district indorse the action of the last General Convention held at Independence, Missouri, in adopting the coordinating committee's report; and we hereby express our confidence in the general officers of the church and Religio association. General Conference delegates were chosen as delegates to next General Convention. The evening session was held jointly with the Sunday school association, and a literary and musical program was rendered, which was greatly appreciated, especially the short addresses of P. M. Hanson, J. A. Gillen, T. W. Williams, G. E. Harrington, George W. Robley, William Grice, and A. F. McLean. Floralice Miller, secretary.

L. Gurwell, July 17, 1904, at Fanning, Kansas. Was a kind and obedient son, and leaves to mourn a wife, father, mother, one sister, and 3 brothers. Was given a military funeral by the Home Guards of Belle Fourche, and Nisland, South Dakota. Sermon by C. W. Prettyman, burial at Pine Slope Cemetery, Belle Fourche, South Dakota.

HODGES.—Albert Seth Hodges was born in Fayette County, Iowa, November 23, 1889. He spent most of his life on a farm. In 1916 he went to Minneapolis to work in an ammunition factory. The following year he returned to Oelwein, Iowa. On April 28, 1918, he entered military service as a private in Company A, 357th Infantry. After a few weeks' training he sailed for France, and died there from wounds received in action, September 21, 1918. He leaves to mourn his parents, 7 sisters, and 6 brothers. Memorial service in the Baptist church at Oelwein, Iowa, October 13, 1918. Sermon by Elwyn R. Davis.

JONES.—Died, of Spanish influenza, at his residence in Milton, Florida, September 30, 1918, Seaborn Jones. Born in Butler County, Alabama, January 5, 1836; married Miriam Kennedy in 1866; baptized by T. H. Waddell in May, 1868, and remained faithful to his covenant to the day of his death. He was an honorable citizen, and a consistent Christian. He had many friends and no enemies, and has gone, no doubt, to inherit his reward. He leaves a wife, 8 children, 6 grandchildren, and many friends to mourn. Funeral services were conducted at the grave by Doctor Humphries of the Presbyterian Church.

MORRIS.—George Morris was born October 11, 1876, in Wales. Died on October 14, 1918, at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, after a ten days' illness. Baptized at Nantyglu, Wales, September 23, 1899, by Thomas Jones. Ordained a priest at Cardiff, January 12, 1902, by William Lewis, G. T. Griffiths, and Thomas Gould. Ordained elder November 9, 1915, at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, by T. U. Thomas. He leaves to mourn, a wife in America, and mother, brother, and sister in Wales, together with many of the Saints. For a few years he labored under General Conference appointment, but was released at his own request February, 1918, that he might care for his wife who was sick. His chief desire was to be again devoting his whole time to the work of winning souls for the Master. Services in charge of A. D. Angus, assisted by H. A. Cunningham.

FROM HERE AND THERE

"A call at evening," is the title of an important new serial beginning in the November Autumn Leaves, written by Jessie Ward. It will continue throughout the year and is an unusually strong Latter Day Saint story, not only interesting to members but appealing to nonmembers.

Private James W. Stobaugh, former secretary of the Religio Society, is now in Tours, France, doing a shift each day as wire chief in the American telegraph office—the same kind of work he had at home. He is in a nice barrack and enjoys his work very much after some five weeks in the woods living in old buildings. He would appreciate letters from any of the Saints. Address him 34th Service Company, Signal Corps, A. P. O. 717, American E. F., Tours, France.

Brother William C. Cummings, of Hopewell, Virginia, says that carpenters at Camp Still, near there, are making from $60 to $70 per week, and there is a big demand for more workers.

Referring to the publication of his song on the front page of the November Autumn Leaves, entitled "Angel's message," Brother J. L. Williams wrote the editors: "When I received the proof of my hymn to-day I could not help but compare it with the headlines in the morning paper: 'Five hundred burned to death in forest fires; 159 killed by earthquake; thousands dying of the flu; four corpses of young men coming to this neighborhood; hundreds down in our own town; nearly a thousand names on the casualty list of the war department, etc. It makes us realize that the perilous times have come and the hearts of men are failing them, while the scourge is abroad in the land.'" Some copies of the song as it appears in the November Leaves have been run off and will be sold for 5 cents for 10 copies.

The Presidency's office reports that the church membership had 877 men in the service of the country at a recent date—79 officers; 19 deceased.

Seven members of the Twelve were present at a joint council meeting in Independence the last week in October, namely: F. M. Sheehy, Peter Anderson (recently returned from the West) J. F. Curtis, J. A. Gillen, (home from Canada) R. C. Russell, William Aylor, U. W. Greene.

In the November Autumn Leaves, recently mailed, there is an excellent article on "Sunday recreation," by G. R. Wells, editor of the Sunday school department. It gives some practical suggestions for parents who are conscientious in their efforts to provide something for the young folks for Sundays between meetings.

In the issue of August 28 we printed a good letter from Private Merrill B. Keck. The following is from The Denver Post of October 18. He was a lad of most excellent qualities and high ideals.

"Although fifty employees of The Denver Post have entered the Nation's army and navy since America entered the war, none have made the supreme sacrifice until this week. News was received here Friday that Merrill B. Keck is dead at Camp MacArthur, Waco, Texas, of pneumonia, superinduced by the Spanish influenza.

"Keck was the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Keck, 3706 Fillmore Street. He was 22 years old and a native of Illinois, but was brought up in Denver and was a graduate of the Columbine and Manual Training High schools. He was for years associated with the circulation department of The Post.

"The young man entered the army last June and was awaiting orders for overseas duty when stricken with the dread malady. The body will be brought to Denver for burial."

The National Historical Society, of which Elder Heman C. Smith, church historian, is vice president, has issued a statement to the press appealing against distraction by Germany's peace move. The statement is made that the society has just taken of the Fourth Liberty Loan more than double its subscription to the Third Loan, and stands ready to do more if necessary. It reached us too late for publication before the closing of the Fourth Loan.

After the raising of the ban on the meetings by the State Board of Health, the local authorities in Lamoni decided to begin meetings and so advertised. Graceland College authorities sent out word that college work would begin again on the 4th. On the 2d the local school board canvassed the situation and decided that since there were more cases of influenza now than when the ban was first placed, they would not open school for another week at least. Following this the local board of health put the restrictions back on public meetings. Graceland College sent telegrams and other messages to those who had gone home, saying that college would not resume until further notice. The Saints have much to be thankful for in the few fatalities so far.

The plan for winter institutes of three days in a community, as mentioned in this column recently, has been approved, and the details are being sent to all the district and stake presidents, superintendents, and organizers. The proposal is to organize in various sections of the country teams of three workers who will canvass the territory assigned and hold three-day institute sessions for the instruction and encouragement of the officers and workers; these institute sessions to be held at places where they will accommodate the most workers with the minimum of expense for traveling; these places to be selected in conference with the district officers and workers, but the time for the meetings to be so arranged that the teams will make a continuous trip of from three to four weeks in the territory assigned to them, covering all of the institutes desired. The course of instruction will be classified and cover all the departments of the auxiliaries by members of the teams who specialize on them. Afternoon and evening sessions are planned. Full details may be had of G. S. Trowbridge, 5032 Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, or G. R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa. We shall print more details next week. It is not likely that meetings will be arranged for till after the first of the new year, but the many details are being worked out in the meantime and it is urged that the Saints give due consideration to the plan.

Requests for prayers are sent in by Sister Emma W. Simpson, of Sayre, Pennsylvania, for her recovery from blindness and defective vision, and from Sister Ida Crabtree for Private Millard Crabtree, Co. C., 11 M. G. Bu., Am. E. F.

Since Miss Sarah Rogers R. N., has resigned as superintendent of nurses at the Independence Sanitarium, all mail concerning the training school should be addressed to Laura E. Mann R. N., who succeeds Sister Rogers as superintendent. Address her in care of the Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

WHO WAS RIGHT ABOUT POLYGAMY?

TWO PROPHECIES AND THE SEQUEL

Brigham Young sometimes indulged in prophecy. At the time when he first promulgated polygamy, August 29, 1852, he said:

You heard Brother Pratt state, this morning, that a revelation would be read this afternoon, which was given previous to Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine, a small portion of the world is opposed to; but I can deliver a prophecy upon it. Though that doctrine has not been practiced by the elders, this people have believed in it for years. . . . The revelation will be read to you. The principle spoken upon by Brother Pratt, this morning, we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people.—Supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 31.

Less than five months later at a special meeting the people of the Reorganization received the word of the Lord on the question of polygamy. Elder Zenos H. Gurley, sr., wrote:

God was truly with us, and many felt to say with the poet, "Angels are now hovering o'er us." This was on the eve of the 9th of January, 1853, ever memorable with the Saints of God. About half an hour afterwards we received through the Spirit the following, as nearly as we could write it:

"Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God: it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrines of the Nicolaitanes, and the men or set of men who practice it. I judge them not, I judge not those who practice it. Their works shall judge them at the last day. Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine. . . .—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 214, 215.

The issue was fairly drawn. Who was right? The Reorganization has never changed in its position. In that regard it is Godlike. God changes not. But what a change in Utah! Place Brigham Young's proud prediction in immediate contrast with the statement made by Joseph F. Smith and his associates at their late conference. Of President Penrose's speech the Deseret News says:

Plural marriage is no longer countenanced, no longer allowed in the church and transgressors, if they can be apprehended, will be disciplined by the church and turned over to be disciplined under the law of the land. He said to let the people not believe these men who go about to satisfy their own lusts and lead innocent followers and pure young women astray. They are rebels, said President Penrose, rebels against church and rebels against the law of the land.—Deseret News, October 4, 1918.

President Joseph F. Smith said:

I feel it imperative upon myself to indorse and affirm without recourse, the statements that have been made by President Penrose in relation to the subject upon which he last treated. I want to say to this congregation and to the world that never, at any time, since my presidency in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have I authorized any man to perform a plural marriage, and never, since my presidency of the church has any plural marriage been performed with my sanction, or knowledge, or with the consent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and therefore such unions as have been formed unlawfully and contrary to the order of the church are null and void in the sight of God and are not marriages.—Deseret News, October 4, 1918.

Heber J. Grant, President of the Twelve, is thus reported:

People who now advocate plural marriage, said President Grant, are in very deed rebels—and traitors. And, he said, it is the duty of those who may be approached on the matter of plural marriage, to expose those who approach them.—Deseret News, October 5, 1918.

Who was right in 1852 and 1853? By confession of the Utah dignitaries, the Reorganization was right. Brigham's prophecy fails even in his own capital city. Those "intelligent portions" who obey his doctrine are now branded as rebels—and from his pulpit. Brigham prophesied—but Joseph F. confesses.

We knew all the time that polygamists were "rebels against the church and rebels against the law of the land," and their unions "null and void in the sight of God and not marriages." And now to our gratification arise two members of the Presidency of the dominant church of Utah, and the president of the Twelve, and publicly obey the injunction given to the Reorganization concerning polygamy, "Ye shall contend against this doctrine."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE SUN A TYPE OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

Recently we had occasion to pass through certain towns in the early morning. It was very dark and scarcely a light was to be seen. Even the farm-houses were dark. It seems that not very many arise before sunrise, and we could not help but wonder how many really see the sun rise and appreciate its beauty and significance.

Yet quickly the sky grew lighter; especially in the east; but a little later it was scarcely possible to define the direction. Only where there had been gross darkness, now there was a faint daylight that permitted things to be seen dimly. Gradually it increased—then became yet brighter and the fainter stars disappeared.

Then a different color appeared in the east, so the direction from which the light was coming became apparent. This color soon spread into beautiful rays and tints of brown, red, orange, bright touches of yellow, but with the dominant red and orange. Then we noticed that the sky was turning a pale blue. Light clouds appeared which vivified the eastern color, which grew rapidly in brightness, until the sun appeared in its majesty.

We cannot but reflect upon how wonderful this must have seemed to the early savage who camped out by night when the gross darkness covered the earth, and how glorious must have seemed this coming light when men had no light for the night, except that occasionally given by the moon. It is interesting to note how, one by one, the stars fade out, till only a light crescent moon and the morning star, and one or two others of the great stars remained, and they too faded at the coming of the sun.

Greatly man must have marveled at seeing the orb of day descend in the west, and then in so short a time appear in the east. Is it any wonder he made up many stories to account for this transference and change?

Some point to Psalm 84:11, "The Lord God is a sun and a shield," and claim this means sun worship.

We think perhaps the truth of the Bible is better expressed in Malachi 4:2: "But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall." And by Isaiah 60:19, 20.

"The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

For these express him as does Doctrine and Covenants 85:2, 3, as the source of all light and power:

As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand. And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things, which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.

This if we can read it, teaches a new mystery, that he is the power and light that is in the sun. Those who worship the sun err, as it is only the result of his shining and intelligence.

We see this theme vivified in Doctrine and Covenants 85:12.

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise ye could not abound.

Note especially that these heavenly orbs are kingdoms, and any man who has seen any or the least of them has seen God moving in his majesty and power. Truly great are the wonders and truths which we avoid by not looking at the beauties of nature, and not thinking about them, and not perceiving. Yet it is written that he who can see and understand, will see the power of God.

The glory of the coming day is but a type of the dawn of a yet greater and more glorious age in which he will come as the very sun of glory.

THE WILL TO BELIEVE

In our Of General Interest department we are publishing this week a few extracts from the philosophy of William James, by T. H. Flournoy. They were taken from the chapter on the Will to Believe, and discusses with great clearness the relation of faith to life, to science, and to religion, and points out in a logical manner that faith is essential to science, as much so as it is to religion, and that he who would deny the religious aspects of faith, or faith itself, would condemn mankind to a very much narrowed existence.

It is not necessary to agree with every conclusion made by Professor James, in order to see the essential truth of the proposition which he urges. James was a careful student of science under Agassiz. He was a psychologist of high rank. He has approached these questions in a very critical manner.

Most of our readers will not require this new assurance. Some of our young people, however, have been raising these various questions, and have failed to see that in rejecting faith, they must necessarily reject science; and that in rejecting religion as a whole it thereby belittles and narrows their own possibilities for development.

This article is written in a very critical and analytical manner and may not be at first easy to follow. It is of such value as to justify a careful study to show what critical thought may discover and affirm.

SUPPORT THE WAR WORK CAMPAIGN

The need for support of the war work fund is still insistent. The practical duty of raising $170,500,000 for the seven welfare organizations operating in the war work to-day, is at our door this week and should receive our loyal and liberal contributions.

To avoid duplication and the more or less distracting confusion from so many "drives" for funds, those in charge have pooled their interests and decided to include all these appreciated organizations in the one call. They are: The Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War council, the Jewish Welfare Board, the Salvation Army, the American Library Association, and the War Camp Community Service. The Red Cross is not included, but will make its Christmas call later.

The work of these mentioned organizations is general. Letters come to us on stationery bearing the Knights of Columbus seal as well as the Y. M. C. A. No one is barred from these welfare huts because of his religion. The Salvation Army and the others work on the same basis. There are none of us but realize the wonderful work being done and which will continue to be done by these societies in sustaining the morale of our boys till there is no longer a need for them. The moral standard of our armies must be kept up. The war work fund directly supports the men in the service.

AN ARMISTICE ESTABLISHED

On November 11, at 11 a. m., French time, the firing on the western battle front in Europe ceased, following the signing of an armistice by German representatives. The terms are such that effective resistance by belligerent powers is impossible.

With unbounded joy the Nation rejoices. The whole world must feel the inexpressible thrill of supreme gratitude that hostilities have ceased.

The momentous time of reconstruction is upon us. Our thoughts must be engaged with the problems incident to a restoration of affairs to bring about the greatest ultimate good. The press of the Nation will present the ideals of the most prominent statesmen of the world. The pages of our church periodicals should reflect the conclusions of the best minds of the church. We should be deeply concerned in the application of the principles of right and of consecrated cooperation to the establishment of Zion conditions. Let us be heartened for the task.

SERVICE NOTES

The following is the third of the series of suggestions by Brother Rushton to coordinate the work of the entire church membership on this most essential work. At first thought, now that peace seems so near, it might be considered that there is no need to observe the call so insistently made that we remember to support the boys with our letters. But please do not forget, the war is not over for the boys till they are all home again or have paid the price the utmost—their lives.

While we do not presume to know, dozens of prominent military men believe it will require many months to transport the soldiers to this side of the Atlantic, even if there were no need of their service longer. Statements of prominent military men are being published that the cantonments are not likely to be dismantled soon, and that there will be work for the navy for a long time.

Read carefully the statements in the following from men who represent the sentiments of millions of lads in the service. Realize that our part is not done till theirs is.

The tragic side of the war is beginning to make itself felt among us as a church since America became identified with the allied cause, and the appended list will show the contribution we have made so far to the world's roll of honor. We are trying to secure the list of casualties from the other countries and will publish them as they come to hand.

The minds of the people have been stirred recently by the rumors of peace which the surrender of Bulgaria, the rout of Turkey, the near collapse of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the several notes suggesting armistice from Germany, have engendered. Unfortunately, we cannot allow ourselves to indulge the expectation of an early peace. Our first difficulty is in deciding just how much we can rely upon the word of the Teutonic representatives, and hitherto that word has not been very safe or sure. The general disposition of the Allies is to force an acknowledgment of defeat from Germany and then impose the same conditions of armistice upon her as was imposed upon Bulgaria. Whatever may be done it seems clear that the Teutonic consciousness must be made to understand the reality of defeat by employing the language with which she is familiar, and that is the language of "will to power," in plain words, force. The accumulating victory of the allied cause arouses the deepest thanksgiving and admiration. Never have the strong qualities of manhood of our race been so severely tested and never have they stood out so triumphantly as in this great conflict. We knew what to expect of the French, British, and Italian for their valor and courage have been demonstrated on many bloody fields, but the American soldier was a question until July of this year. To-day we are justly proud of the splendid showing which Pershing's "crusaders" have made. There is no doubt of their strength, prowess, and chivalry. The generous tributes from the French and British generals testify to the affectionate appreciation they have for the American soldiery. And incidentally, we remark that even the Germans are not quite so daring in their contempt of the Americans, but have expressed several cautions as to how they should be treated.

In the meantime, Foch and his associates continue their offensive slowly but surely crowding back the enemy to his own borders, clearing the lands of Belgium and France in the west, and permitting the exiles to return to their homes. Yes, home for the vandalism and wreckage which characterizes the German retreat cannot expunge the sentiment of the heart, which while they desecrate and try to ignore such "sentiment," yet this power of sentiment is still alive and will live when the Teuton's vaunted might of force and frightfulness are but memories upon the pages of history.

Serbia, Albania, and Italy all tell the same story of repeated victories and reviving national life. Russia also according to the faint gleams of information is gradually recovering from her nightmare of Bolshevism and the united armies of Nippon, Britian, and the United States are bringing liberation and readjustment.

Turkey and her condition gives one the inward feeling of pleasure that retribution, at last though delayed is now pursuing this people remorselessly and will exact full payment for the awful crimes which for generations have shocked the world and filled Armenia with groans, tears, and devastation. General Allenby's army has filled the names of the sacred book and the Holy Land with new meanings, and the crusade of the twentieth century is not only going to redeem the tomb of the dead Christ, but make that grave the cradle of a new nation in which we may read the long-delayed fulfillment of many expectations born of age-long prophecies.

Back of all this cataclysmic tragedy we can read the abiding principles of the Christian philosophy, rough, crude, and even sanguinary; but they are there strong and permanent, witnessing to the reality of the Great Redeemer's splendid achievement. Truth is the only ground of freedom; justice the foundation of national life; service for others the true test of individual worth; vicarious suffering the dynamic of redemption.

We are pleased to-day that a number have responded to the S. O. S. for work in corresponding with our church members who have gone into service. But compared with the number of needs and the many who have not yet responded, the list is meager and discouraging. Will you please read the following excerpts from the current Literary Digest?

"Family anxiety for news from the boys at the front is, if anything, rather weak in comparison with the intense craving our boys have for letters from home. The arrival of mail bags stirs them almost as strongly as the order to attack; when it fails to appear at the expected time, they become anxious and glum. 'A cheerful letter from father, mother, sister, or sweetheart,' one scholarly private was heard to remark, 'makes me think this station is like that of the herald Mercury new lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.'

"Arthur E. Hungerford voices the view of officers and men on this important matter when he writes:

"Won't you urge the folks back home to write more frequently? Ask them not to wait till the men answer their letters. Urge not only the families to write, but friends also. Every letter means much.

"I wish I could tell you of a scene on the battle field during the great advance. It had rained for days. The men had outstripped the artillery and the supplies and were living on emergency rations. It was almost impossible to supply them with hot meals because they were pushing on so fast.

"The losses had been very heavy. The battalion had just been relieved by fresh troops. It had halted in the woods. The men were tired and hungry—and yet in fine spirits. A runner arrived and shouted, "Mail from home."

"First hot meal in two or three days was ready, but the men got their letters first. One could pick out by the faces of the men who got letters and those whose friends "had forgotten," or, "who did not care enough to write." Men who got letters read them to chums who did not. The battalion had been made over."

Captain Pierson of the Canadians says it was letters from home that held the line in the dark winter of 1914-15. Though a great victory has been won, the end is not yet in sight, our men have a great task before them. They must win many battles. They must fight against great odds. They must live in the field in time of battle without adequate shelter and without hot meals. They must work hard, harder than the folks back home dream. Some of them will be wounded and some will be killed. They will do these things and fight their way to victory no matter whether the folks back home write or not; but the letters from home will make things easier and brighter and better and "keep the home fires burning."

There is a word from a Y. M. C. A. worker which will be of special comfort to parents and wives and friends of the soldiers, which will help to dispel some unnecessary anxieties; we quote as follows;

"Please remind them [the folks at home], of another thing, and that is that their failures to receive letters does not mean that their particular soldier is sick or has been wounded or killed. It simply means that he has been unable to write or that his letters have been lost by the torpedoing of the boat that carried them. No news in this case is good news. The army promptly notifies the nearest of kin when a man is wounded or killed. There is no use worrying about what has happened to him until the official notice of wounds or death is received."

We call attention now to the near approach of Christmas

THE PASSING OF THE COLLECTION PLATE

And why not relegate the collection box to the church garret or cellar, to be looked at by future generations only to remind them that their ancestors were "penny wise and pound foolish"? The practice of "passing the hat" (it being slightly more refined to use a plush-bottomed plate or a box on a stick) is vulgar, and belonged to the days when beggars held out a hand for sweet charity's pittance or when emergencies arose that made respectable the method. It is not economy. It is not friendly, say what we will. It is not businesslike, and contrary to the prevailing idea, does not gather one half the funds that could be obtained by a proper and just—therefore equal—subscription made by every member of the branch—and every member of the body should contribute something towards the expense of the body which gives him life. It is a custom, and like all customs is as hard to break or get rid of as it is difficult to remove the odor of turnips from the back hall. But I speak with due seriousness when I say the collection box must go, for there is a better way, and of that way I speak in the next paragraph.

It is the way of every member being responsible for his or her share of the branch's financial burden. Every member not allowing the burden of heat bills, light bills, pastor's board, building repairs, and so forth, to be paid by the few willing hearts and hands. Such method is not equality, neither is it just—for that which is not in harmony with the law is either a mistake or a sin, according to the degree of light that is given. How much longer will the many allow the few to keep open the church, send missionaries to the lost, supply life's necessities to the poor and needy? How much longer will members of the church testify of their undying love for Christ and the gospel and in the next breath turn aside empty the deacon who asks them to contribute to the upkeep of the local church? Surely such religion is mockery! It is not "pure religion." We take up the tithing report in the HERALD and learn, to our sorrow, that a small percentage of the church membership is supporting the church financially; and in the face of God's statement that at no time has he given us a temporal law, for unto him all things are spiritual. It seems to me that the "crack of doom" is about to sound for many persons who draw nigh God with their lips but with hearts removed from him.

Money contributed for branch expenses is paid for the advancement of God's kingdom. It is a part of the tithing system, for in its generic sense, tithing means the payment of money into the church treasury, whether the amount be a tenth or a hundredth. For this reason, proper credit should be given and a complete record of branch money kept by the presiding bishop of the church. But such record is impossible while members cast into a collection box their pennies and nickels or more, as the case may be. (And in time, the system will be perfected in such a way that an equal distribution of donations will be had so that each need will be properly met.) In some branches large sums are given (or paid, which is a better term) for the local work, but the only record is that kept by the branch treasurer; and yet money thus contributed is for the advancement of God's work as much as the tithing sent to the bishop. The foregoing reason is alone sufficient to justify and demand the abandoning of the promiscuous collecting of money.

There is another reason, which is by no means a sentimental one; it is the inconsistency of asking outsiders to pay our legitimate expense as a branch. Would we ask a friend to dine with us and after the meal ask him to pay for it? The other case is the same in principle. Worse. When we arrange for the church members to pay their part of the expense we do not beg or even request them to do so—we accommodate them by collecting it; but when we place before an outsider a collection plate we beg him to give, whether we want to admit the fact or not, for to ask funds of those who are not members of the same family is simply to beg them to support a body to which they do not belong. Let us be bigger than this. If it is urged that our friends want to give to the cause, then we answer let those friends pass their offering to the treasurer or drop it into the treasury box, for all churches could have a freewill offering box for such purposes. And it would also be convenient for members to deposit into such box their weekly pledge, provided envelopes are used and properly addressed.

It is summed up in a statement made by a friend, and one of the finest men I ever met. He said: "I do not believe in the question box. As a church we are different from all others. Why not be different in this matter of running our financial affairs?" So I say, Why not?

"No one can escape the just penalty of sin."

THE PLACE OF MERCY IN THE LAW OF GOD

Mercy has several definitions. The standard Dictionary defines it in part as follows: "The act of treating or the disposition to treat an offender or an enemy with less severity than he deserves in strict justice or might legally receive;" especially when it proceeds from benevolence or compassion. Among the synonyms given is, forgiveness, and to forgive is defined to be: "To release from punishment or from obligation to make amends; cease to cherish displeasure or resentment toward; pardon."

Mercy is a quality in divine nature existing by reason of the constitution and tendency of man. It presumes law and its violation, degeneration, reinstatement, accurate judgment and sympathy. This quality it is intended shall manifest itself in man; abundant opportunity is offered him for its expression. It is to be cultivated and fully developed, forming a part in the construction of his character.

"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."—Matthew 5:7.

Mercy exists because of sin. Sin is the manifest disposition to violate the law. Wherever it exists it is manifest to God, although it may not be to man. All men sin or have sinned, ignorantly or knowingly, and it had pleased God to minimize if not remove entirely the consequences of sin by the extension of mercy, but this extension of mercy is dependent upon man's condition and attitude. Ignorance and repentance are causes justifying its bestowment, in proof of which we have Jesus saying, while upon the cross: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Peter on the Day of Pentecost told the sinning Jews to repent, and through baptism receive the remission of their sins. The Jews showed their appreciation of this extension of mercy by accepting the offer made by Peter. They had sinned ignorantly, later were made wise to the fact, and availed themselves of the pardon offered, by appearing before God in the proper attitude.

But is mercy alone for the ignorant sinners? Evidently not, and it may be questioned as to whether the application of mercy finds its expression until the sinner realizes the wrong he has done. It certainly cannot be appreciated until he sees the need for it. Until he knows what retributive consequences should follow his action, he feels no need of mercy. Still mercy abounds unrealized. "He maketh the rain to fall upon the just and the unjust." Jesus, in justice, could have protected himself from the mob, from undeserved humiliation; legions of angels were available to him if he chose to use them, but he refrained. God is merciful, Jesus was merciful.

We choose now to consider the knowing sinner. Is he entitled to mercy? Peter said to the Lord: "How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven."—Matthew 18:21, 22.

And again, verily I say unto you, If, after thine enemy has come upon thee the first time, he repent and come unto thee praying thy forgiveness, thou shalt forgive him, and shall hold it no more as a testimony against thine enemy, and so on unto the second and third time, and as oft as thine enemy repenteth of the trespass wherewith he has trespassed against thee, thou shalt forgive him, until seventy times seven.—Doctrine and Covenants 95:7.

Here we have answers that apply to both brothers and enemies, the same rule governing both, except in the Doctrine and Covenants the forgiveness is based upon repentance, and we must presume it also applies to the brother. Following up the quotation in the Doctrine and Covenants in the same paragraph we have an expression of mercy based upon a different attitude of your enemy, viz:

And if he transgress against thee and repent not the first time, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him; and if he trespass against thee the second time, and repent not, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him; and if he trespass against thee the third time and repent not, thou shalt also forgive him; but if he trespass against thee the fourth time, thou shalt not forgive . . . until he repent and reward thee fourfold in all things wherewith he has trespassed against you; and if he do this thou shalt forgive him with all thine heart.

This is explicit, definite and clear. We must be governed by it. He who will not be governed by this is considered the greater sinner.

My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion one against another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened, wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

The Lord tells us he forgives sins unto those who confess their sins before him, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death. Furthermore, he says: "I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

The presumption here is that God comprehends more fully the actual state of the soul of man, and with his unerring judgment meets the situation perfectly; but we, limited in our understanding, may fail in judgment, and in the exercise of mercy where it should be given: However, better to forgive in error than to refuse forgiveness.

A truly merciful spirit is generous and sympathetic, it does not ask equivalents for losses or injuries by way of compensations. If it did, what has it forgiven? It is justice that makes demands for ample satisfactions for all wrongs, but mercy sees through compassionate eyes and minimizes the demands of justice, realizing a loss has already been sustained by the sinner, a loss sufficient to serve as a cause for pity while it is clothing itself with spiritual beauty. The merciful has grown by its act of mercy. The sinner's pathway in righteousness is made easier to travel. It saves him from the infliction of merited punishment. It does not lift him but spares him. He must remove the disposition to do wrong, and cultivate the disposition he asks to have shown him. Development for him depends upon his meeting the demands of justice, only asking mercy where he is helpless, and by him given when others need it at his hands, as required by the Master, illustrated by the parable where one owing ten thousand talents was forgiven, but refusing to forgive one owing him one hundred pence. (Matthew 18: 23-35.)

He who will not be just cannot be merciful, and he who is not merciful will suffer. It ought not to surprise us if what we mete out to others will be meted out to us. That is what we should expect when we pray "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

HOW FAR CAN THE CHURCH EXERCISE MERCY?

The church is a public institution, brought into existence for the purpose of training souls for life here and hereafter. It receives crude material and focuses its forces upon it with a view to causing changes conducive to its development. Its influence as an attraction among men looking for development is dependent upon what it is accomplishing for others. If it tolerates, or fails to remove corrupting influences, its sign of power is weakness: helpless to raise beyond its own existing strength, and for this reason it is not permitted to suffer the number of indignities and humiliations that an individual may. It stands for helpfulness, purity, and intelligence, hopeful of producing spiritual perfection, and to the extent these qualities are absent is she deprived of the essential spiritual power for her usefulness and glorification. The lower her standard of righteousness becomes, the nearer she approaches apostasy.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6 the murderer is not to be forgiven. In paragraph 7, he who steals must repent or be cast out. He who lies, if he repent not shall be cast out. He who looketh upon a woman to lust after her, if he repent not shall be cast out. He who committeth adultery and repents not shall be cast out, and if this last offense be repeated, he shall not be forgiven but be cast out. He that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out.

You note in the individual's case you are to forgive three times without repentance, but in the case of the church a member can be removed or cast out where rebellion exists or refusal to repent in the first instance. Nevertheless, the church has to do diligent labor with its offending member through the efforts of officers designated for that purpose.

In paragraph 23 of the same section the procedure is outlined, showing the utmost consideration for the offending member.

In section 43, paragraph 3, the elders of the church are admonished to "Purge ye out iniquity which is among you, sanctify yourselves before me."

And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2.

The church to be a saving power must give cause for respect; it must not be degenerate; it must discipline; hence the measure of mercy extended by it must be consistent with its maintaining itself capable of rendering assistance required for the salvation of souls.

We are called upon to distinguish between individual right of the extension of mercy and that of the privilege of the church. In individual extension of mercy we are to forgive seventy times seven if asked, but if not asked we are told we may forgive the fourth time. However we are only required to forgive the third time; under such circumstances. Yet we are very highly commended if we forgive the fourth time. Still he is in our hands in justice to meet out to him according to the wrong done. This is where we are smitten by the enemy. Sins must be classified, and judgment rendered according to the magnitude of the crime committed; if it were not so, our children may be slain without any attempt to protect them, our property confiscated and we be left penniless. We here get into a maze of law which is confusing except we are careful in the application of the law.

The dual nature of man is universal. No favors in flesh. The elements are so mixed in every man as to necessitate a struggle equal to all for the supremacy of the spiritual over the carnal. The inequalities in constitution are offset by an extra share of divine aid so that all who desire can with equal effort gain the supremacy over the flesh, the world, and the Devil. The abnormalities brought about through heredity are naturalized by spiritual operations.

Great men are ignorant of the strength of carnal nature, and their desires sometimes blind their eyes to moral truth. See David: king, prophet, hero, sweet singer, musician, poet, moral degenerate, a character in which the spiritual and carnal finds its manifestations equal in degree to any person perhaps known; a combination of sublimity and depravity.

The battle of the soul is for the subordination of the carnal and the expression of the spiritual.

By baptism we enter the arena with a pledge to God that we will wage the conflict with sin determined to overcome by his help. This involves a spiritual conflict by two powers outside of our own, each seeking to achieve victory. Our victory is dependent upon the opportunities given one or the other of these powers. Likewise the victory of these two powers. It is within our power to succeed. The moment we enter the Church of Jesus Christ we are furnished with a full equipment to work with to accomplish the task.

Mercy is the exercise of favor where ill deserved.

G. E. HARRINGTON.

THE NAME OF THE CHURCH AND OF THE PEOPLE OF GOD

There is no other name under heaven save it be the name of Jesus Christ whereby man can be saved.

It is thoroughly in keeping with this statement that the church teaching the doctrines and principles whereby man can be saved, should bear the name of Christ.

In support of this, we will refer to the records of the various periods during which the church of God has been existent. We find the following instances where the name of the church and of the people of God has been specifically treated upon.

Benjamin, of Book of Mormon times, when talking to his people, said:

There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh, therefore, I would that ye should take upon you the name of Christ; all you that have entered into a covenant with God. And it shall come to pass that whosoever doeth this shall be found at the right hand of God, for he shall know the name by which he is called—for he shall be called by the name of Christ.

Let us dwell a little on this statement: "Whosoever doeth this." Doeth what? Taketh upon them the name of Christ? No, not in the full sense. They who take upon them the name of Christ and have entered into a covenant with God. It is well to note the qualifications: the name of Christ is only the means offered for the salvation of man, under the conditions set forth by the teachings of Christ; the redeeming power of the name of Christ is extended only to those who accept the whole word of Christ. Let us quote further from Benjamin:

And now it shall come to pass that whosoever shall not take upon them the name of Christ must be called by some other name, therefore, he findeth himself on the left hand of God. And would that ye should remember also that this is the name that should be given unto you that never should be blotted out except it be through transgression.

Here is one of the most important thoughts when treating on the name by which man can be saved and by which the church of God shall be called: That we cannot expect the benefit in the promises given to those who bear the name of Christ by simply obeying the ordinances which make us recognized before the world and our fellow men a member of the church of Jesus Christ; but that before God we must strive to keep the whole law, that we may not through transgression forfeit the beautiful promises made to those who take upon them the name of Christ.

We take up now the record of the church established by Alma in the land of Mormon, reading as follows:

They were in number two hundred and four souls; yea and they were baptized in the waters of Mormon, . . . and they were called the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward. . . . Behold I say unto you that the Good Shepherd doth call you, yea, and in his own name he doth call you, which is the name of Christ and if ye will not hearken unto the voice of the Good Shepherd to the name by which ye are called, behold ye are not the sheep of the Good Shepherd.

Let us pass on to the time when Christ appeared to the Nephites, where in the Book of Mormon we find some most pertinent statements pertaining to the name of Christ.

And they who were baptized in the name of Jesus, were called the church of Christ. And it came to pass that as the disciples of Jesus were journeying and were preaching the things which they had both heard and seen, and were baptizing in the name of Jesus, it came to pass that the disciples were gathered together, and were united in mighty prayer and fasting. And Jesus again showed himself unto them, for they were praying unto the Father, in his name; and Jesus came and stood in the midst of them, and said unto them, What will ye that I shall give unto you? And they said unto him, Lord, we will that thou wouldst tell us the name whereby we shall call this church; for there are disputations among the people concerning this matter. And the Lord said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Why is it that the people should murmur and dispute because of this thing? Have they not read the scriptures, which say, Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? for by this name ye shall be called at the last day; and whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day; therefore, whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name, that he will bless the church for my sake; and how be it my church, save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel.—3 Nephi 12: 13-20.

By giving these last words some thought we are led to believe that other churches than the true church of Jesus Christ may take upon them the name of Christ but not be recognized as his church, not being built upon the gospel. In this connection there comes to mind the words of Christ:

Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me.

Referring to more recent history, we find that though the church teaching the restored gospel was organized in 1830, it was not till May 3, 1834, that any action was taken toward the name of the church. Previous to this, no official action had been taken, and no uniformity of practice had obtained, hence to insure uniformity in records, it was necessary to have some official action. The church had been called the "Church of Christ," "The Church of Jesus Christ," "The Church of God," "The Church of the Firstborn," or whatever appellation suited the writer or speaker best. The result of this conference was that the church was hereafter to be called "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

We have no objection to other churches calling themselves after the names of their several founders. These names are man-made and are very properly attached to the organizations that have been organized by man. We call this the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from the fact that God calls his people Saints, and that we are living in the latter days, so that as far as the name goes, those who criticize it are criticizing the true Bible name of God's people, and the only name of the church supported by the Bible.

Not even the name Christian was indorsed by either God or Christ in the Bible, but was only a nickname used as a slur in the early church. Ninety-six times the people of God are called Saints in the Bible. The word Christian is found three times. First the disciples were called Christians at Antioch. That was a heathen city, and they in derision called the followers of the lowly Nazarene "Christians." Paul was taken before King Agrippa, who after some conversation with him said: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." When some of the Saints were suffering, Peter wrote something in this strain: "Now if any of you suffer as a Christian, be not ashamed." Peter did not mean be not ashamed if they suffered on account of being a Christian, but evidently had reference to their suffering on account of the name Christian being applied to them as an epithet.

Completing this subject, we have but to explain the word "Reorganized," and that is done by citing events that have taken place since 1844. The death of Joseph Smith in 1844 spread a degree of demoralization throughout the entire membership of the church and scattered its adherents in divers directions, and for the time being seemed to presage the complete overthrow of the organization then known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Recovering from their shock the scattered bands soon reappeared in various parts of the country, promulgated their doctrine and set to work to reorganize their scattered forces, resulting finally in what is known and recognized everywhere as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE WILL TO BELIEVE

To the mind of intellectualist thinkers nothing could be more foolish or disastrous than to assign to faith and to volition (notoriously at the service of personal interest, desire, passion, and, in short, of the most subjective elements of our nature) any part whatever in the elaboration of philosophy, whose goal is the purely objective and impersonal ascertainment of truth. Rationalists or positivists are all of one accord in condemning faith, which is merely the belief in something which we deeply need and for which we hope, is, in short, aspiration. Even if this aspiration and this anticipation should be ultimately justified, they are none the less declared illegitimate, and unworthy of any enlightened being. Huxley maintained that one should never admit anything not prescribed by reason, and he considered any form of faith to be a moral delinquency. If a belief, said Clifford, has been accepted without purely intellectual and conclusive proof, the satisfaction we take in it is a piece of self-indulgence, an infidelity to the human intellect, and a relapse into superstition. In short, it is bad at any time, anywhere, and for anyone, to entertain a belief on insufficient evidence.

You see we are forbidden to let our preferences or even our noblest aspirations influence our beliefs. Science alone must determine these. There is something imposing in this jealous care with which the intellectualists reserve to ratiocination, quite to the exclusion of Pascal's "reasons of the heart," the sole right to participate in framing our conception of the universe. But you may rest assured that James, having discovered that intellectualism always leads its partisans, when they are logical, to skeptical or monistic conclusions which are conspicuously unfavorable to the moral and religious life, devoted himself to refuting this point of view. He does this with his usual intrepidity and vigor by borrowing from the intellectualists their own weapons, that is to say, by convicting them of self-contradiction, and showing that their means of getting at truth exposes them to the risk of missing it altogether:

You assert that we ought to believe only what we can demonstrate; but where have you ever found or given a demonstration of this principle itself? That is merely a prejudice like any other, dictated by your personal preference, your purely subjective sentiment, and, namely, by your fear of error which surpasses your desire for truth. Unquestionably, if our first human duty were to avoid falling into error, you would be right, and we ought to hold nothing as true which has not first been perfectly established. But if it is our destiny to do everything we can to arrive at truth, even at the risk of making mistakes, then your rule presents itself as a fatal hindrance.

Furthermore, is it not insincere to advocate a rule whose application would obviously make for the paralysis of scientific research, human enterprise, and progress? Where is the scholar, the statesman, the man of affairs, or the private citizen who does not every day, even at the risk of disappointment, speculate on the future; who does not indeed live by faith, relying on facts as yet unproved and believing firmly in the success of his experiments and undertakings? And how many doubtful and obscure predicaments there are in which we are forced to take sides, and in which the mere act of withholding our support from one of two undemonstrable hypotheses amounts to favoring the other one exactly as much as if we had actually embraced it! Our moral and social life constantly subjects us to this choice. How are we to judge questions of value, that is to say questions of what ought to be, if we insist on restricting ourselves to the verdicts of science which inform us only concerning what is? And in the end does not science itself rest on purely sentimental motives? The most positivist scholars are assuredly governed by "reasons of the heart" when they lay down the law that the verification of facts and the correction of false ideas constitute for man the highest good; for if you question this doctrine, they cannot prove but will only reassert it. At the very best they may point out that verification and correction lead always to results which gratify man's needs, once more, of the heart.

Finally, this unfortunate caveat which is put on faith rests on the intellectualist supposition of a finished universe, independent of ourselves, of which we can only take passive cognizance and in which our initiative is futile. But this is an unfounded supposition, and is indeed refuted by innumerable cases in which faith creates its own object and contributes toward its own realization. The mountain climber facing a terrible crevasse may succeed in jumping it if he believes that he can, but he will surely fall short and be dashed to pieces, or else starve to death at the brink, if he doubts his own strength. In the same way anyone takes a risk who puts confidence in a stranger, but at the same time one stands the chance of making a friend of some one who, except for one's own overtures, would always have remained unfeeling and indifferent. Perhaps it is the same with this universe. What we hope and believe of it together with what our beliefs, even the philosophical ones, inspire us to set to work to accomplish, is unquestionably a part of its reality. But do such parts figure as passive factors with no influence on the rest, or rather are they not like an active ferment working to leaven the entire mass and contributing to shape its future? The intellectualists do not hesitate to accept the former hypothesis, and yet it is very far from being proved; and if the second should be the true one, they would some day come to see that, paralyzed by their own theory, they had deprived themselves of all active participation in the process of molding reality. . . .

But it is exactly this mental freedom which alarms the strict doctrinaires. This amounts, they say, to allowing people to believe what they wish! And this would open wide the door to superstition, to the worst abuses of libertarianism, and to every form of licentiousness. James does not deny these possible dangers but he is not daunted by them, knowing well that humanity makes progress only by much groping and at the cost of innumerable false starts. We should get nowhere without these tentative experiments, from which experience makes its selection and saves only what is found to be valuable. How many once flourishing philosophical and religious hypotheses have perished with time, like the gods of Olympus and the tortures of hell! We must not, then, fear freedom; mistakes and excesses automatically correct themselves in the great test of time. . . .

This religious belief, this volitional as well as intellectual choice, is the only one which gives our life a worthy aim and a significance, or can awaken in us that "strenuous mood" without which life would lose all pungency. And James believes that this faith is of such vital importance to the universe, as well as to ourselves, that nobody should be for a moment deterred by the arbitrary veto imposed by intellectualist philosophers.

"This feeling, forced on us we know not whence, that by obstinately believing that there are gods (although not to do so would be so easy both for logic and our life), we are doing the universe the deepest service we can, seems part of the living essence of the religious hypothesis. . . . When I look at the religious question as it really puts itself to concrete men, and when I think of all the possibilities which both practically and theoretically it involves, that this command that we shall put a stopper on our heart, instincts, and courage, and wait—acting of course meanwhile more or less as if religion were not true—till doomsday, or till such time as our intellect and senses working together may have raked in evidence enough—this command, I say, seems to me the queerest idol ever manufactured in the philosophic cave. . . .

“Since belief is measured by action, he who forbids us to believe religion to be true necessarily also forbids us to act as we should if we did believe it to be true.

“What the more characteristically divine facts are, apart from the actual inflow of energy in the faith-state and the prayer-state, I know not. But the over-belief on which I am ready to make my personal venture is that they exist. . . . By being faithful in my poor measure to this over-belief, I seem to myself to keep more sane and true. . . . Who knows whether the faithfulness of individuals here below to their own poor over-beliefs may not actually help God in turn to be more effectively faithful to his own greater tasks?

“I confess that I do not see why the very existence of an invisible world may not in part depend on the personal response which any one of us may make to the religious appeal. God himself, in short, may draw vital strength and increase of very being from our fidelity. For my own part, I do not know what the sweat and blood and tragedy of this life may mean, if they mean anything short of this. If this life be not a real fight, in which something is eternally gained for the universe by success, it is no better than a game of private theatricals from which one may withdraw at will. But it feels like a real fight—as if there were something really wild in the universe which we, with all our idealities and faithfulnesses, are needed to redeem; and first of all to redeem our own hearts from atheism and fears. For such a half-wild, half-saved universe our nature is adapted.”

These few quotations, and I could multiply them indefinitely, will show the value which James sets on religious faith, and the importance he assigns to a persistent and heroic attitude of determination. I hold that this point is perhaps the most important in all his philosophy for intellectual men (I do not say intellectualists!), and that there is nothing for which we owe him deeper gratitude than for the emphasis which he puts on the will to believe, supported as this is by his own personal example. Let me amplify this a bit further. The cultivated minds of our day can be roughly divided as regards religion into three categories. First, there are the privileged souls. Thanks to their naturally religious temperaments and to the favorable concurrence of circumstances (often tragic) they have been granted intimate experiences of a more or less mystical order, which bring them “absolute certitude.” They have experienced the direct intervention of God in their own lives. Henceforth, whatever befalls, they are safe from doubt and one can almost say they walk, not by faith, but by sight. They are greatly to be envied.

At the other extreme are to be found those positive minds who are entirely immersed in the daily humdrum and for whom the science or the business of this world is all-sufficing. Sometimes aggressive, to them religion is a dead issue, a question which is disposed of as being among the superstitions of the past. They, too, are safe from doubt. They are greatly to be pitied.

Between these two extremes is the great mass, to which most of us probably belong, for whom the religious problem is always there, and is, at times, more or less poignant. We would fain find a stable and satisfying solution. But we never reach it, torn as we are between allegiance to the faith of our fathers, and also to the modern ideal of scientific certitude from which we cannot free ourselves, and to which the old answers and apologies, so satisfying to our forebears, are unfortunately no longer adequate.—Flournoy in the Philosophy of William James.

Mothers of Men

Mothers of men, that the world is aflame,
War-swept and passion-rent take you no blame?
You who were destined to mold and to sway,
You are the potters and men are your clay.
Plastic they came to you out of the night;
Mothers of men, have you shaped them aright?
You, with your hands at the heart of the world,
Answer me—why is Hate's banner unfurled?
If men are evil or craven or great,
You were the builders who fashioned their fate.
You are man's devil and you are his god,
You re-created him out of earth's sod;
Mothers of men of this age and this day,
Answer me—how have you modeled your clay?
Infancy, childhood, and flexible youth,
Have you not carved in them honor and truth?
Man in God's image was yours to express,
Have you achieved—can you answer me “Yes”?
Helpless they came to you out of the night,
Mothers of men have you given them light?
Censure them not if in blindness they plod;
You are man's devil and you are his god.

Mother's Relationship and Duty to Her Daughter

The relationship between mother and daughter is indeed a very close and sacred one, since the latter is, in fact, a part of the mother herself.

Mother love is very strong, and, as is true of all real family affection, rarely fails, or disappears. Children may grow up, and leave the home nest, but the current of love, like a river, will flow on, ever ready to bear upon its peaceful bosom, the trembling barks of life intrusted to its care. In the trials, vicissitudes, and dangers of earthly life, this wonderful love reveals its constancy, its tenderness, and its power. Every person who has any recollections at all of a mother, can recall some token of her abiding affection, some expression of her deep and eternal love, which renders her name and memory blessed and hallowed.

Through her great and understanding love a mother is able to teach a daughter the things which are vitally necessary for her to know, in order that she may walk securely in the path of purity and virtue. So many things need explanation to the young, and no one can better make these explanations than a mother whose clear vision of love can direct with wisdom and safety. Real relationship between mother and daughter demands this common understanding and knowledge when the proper time arrives for it to be imparted. The true story of life, with all its sacredness and purity, should be revealed, and no mother, from a sense of false modesty, should permit another to give to her daughter this knowledge that will indeed prove her rock of defense and honor.

The true mother rejoices in the opportunities she has for molding her daughter's character by giving proper direction to her thoughts. Having the perceptive mind of the child under her influence from babyhood to marriage, she should be able to command all confidences, know every wish and motive, and give all instructions and light necessary to properly shield from the approach of evil, whether that approach be in open warfare, or in the more dangerous secret and cunning ways designed by the destroyer of souls.

Mothers have been, too often, to blame for much of the waywardness and sorrow of girls, because of the mistake they have made in not giving them a proper understanding of life and its meanings. To the best of example they should add the plainest of counsel, the most minute and careful explanations concerning the inevitable processes of life. All this, of course, should be offered in proper time and season; "timely words, fitly spoken, are like apples of gold in pictures of life silver."

Looking backwards over their own lives, mothers may easily see what their daughters need at vital periods of their growth and development. They will recognize what knowledge was most necessary to their own happiness, what lack caused them regret, and thus they will make it their prayerful study to prepare their daughters for more useful and joyous living. Oh, mothers, as you prize the virtue and well-being of your girls, teach them something besides the art of dressing! Teach them, to the utmost of your wisdom and vision, how to be pure, amiable, useful, healthy, and happy.

Because of the many evils which threaten the young, their incomings and outgoings should be carefully watched. If your children have been accustomed to have little conferences with you over what interests them, if you have always dealt with them patiently and wisely, and received those confidences in a sympathetic manner, there need be no embarrassment when questions in regard to the delicate matters of life shall arise.

One great source of a mother's power and influence over her daughter is in their praying together over affairs which concern them both. Family worship in the home should not be neglected, for children should early be taught their relationship to our heavenly Father and Creator, and to express to him their trust and confidence, their perplexities and disappointments. Through the voiced prayer at the family altar, many vital truths may be impressed upon the young, and a firm foundation laid for spiritual experiences which will bless and enrich their after lives. Mothers should set the example along these, as other lines, and always strive to live close to their God, that their young daughters may, with safety, imitate their thoughts and actions.

Training Little Children

MOTHER'S SPIRIT

Punishments should never be inflicted in anger, but should rather be the natural consequence of the wrongdoing itself. Nature teaches her laws in this way; if you go too near a fire, you are burned; if too much indigestible food is eaten, sickness results; and if you drop a fragile glass, it will break. No one ever questions the justice of these inevitable consequences, nor will a child ever resent a punishment which he feels to be the result of his own heedlessness or wrongdoing. To quote Miss Harrison, "A child readily realizes that scattered toys must be gathered up, that soiled clothes must be changed, that tardiness necessarily brings a loss of opportunity, that money foolishly spent by him will not be resupplied by the parent, that teasing or tormenting the younger brother or sister causes a loss of the society of the mistreated one, that petulance on his part brings silence on the part of the mother, that recklessness when on the street causes loss of liberty."

In families where several children play together, too much cannot be said in favor of a quiet hour, a time when each child shall be entirely alone, undisturbed by others. If the children are too old for a daily nap, they can be given some quiet occupation or play, such as looking at picture books, drawing with pencil or crayons, cutting out pictures with blunt-pointed scissors, making scrapbooks, modeling with clay or plasticine, or stringing beads or buttons. With older children, and with babies, too, poise and self-control are gained "in the silence," and the wise mother will give herself as well as the children this hour of rest.

It is a mistake to allow children to play with a dozen toys at one time. Children can easily be taught when very little to select and play with one thing at a time, and to put it away in its place before another is taken. Even in a crowded apartment it is possible to fit up a box or shelf where each child can have a place for his own treasures.

Toys which develop the imagination are better than intricate mechanical toys and elaborately dressed dolls. Next to a ball, the very best plaything is a set of blocks, which is capable of being transformed into anything desired, from a train of cars to a pigeon house. Give a boy of five a hammer, some nails and a few pieces of wood and see what he can make—the results are often surprising. Children love to create, and the toy which they have made themselves will give a more lasting pleasure than the usual elaborate plaything bought ready-made.

The occupations of grown-ups have great attraction for children. A few simple regular duties should be given them every day. Work is one of the greatest means of spiritual development, and the wisest of all teachers for little children. Frederick Froebel said that a child's offer to help should never be refused. To be sure, the mother may at first find it far more a hindrance than a help, but children of four or five can learn to dress and undress themselves, wipe the dishes, dust the chairs, help make beds, carry small pieces of kindling, empty scrap-baskets, water plants, and help in many other ways.

If the mother's spirit is right, children will always love to help. Children are little reflectors, and soon catch the spirit of cheerful, willing work. If they see work done complainingly, what wonder if they also begin to feel badly used when asked to perform some simple helpful service—and to look upon work as a disagreeable hardship.

Back to School

"The school is your training camp. Don't be a deserter." This is what the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor is saying to the thousands of children who are leaving the schools for industry, dazzled by the present high wages offered. Jobs that offer very little training and less hope of a future are being taken unquestioningly by the youngsters who "don't like school anyway" and think they are "old enough to work," or who feel the urge of home necessity.

The Children's Bureau has just announced a Back-to-School Drive whose object may be stated in the President's words: "That no child may have less opportunity for education because of the war." The drive will attempt two things: to return to the schools and keep there the children who have deserted them for industry, and to keep the children now in school from leaving prematurely. The actual work of the drive will be done through the Child Conservation Section of the Council of National Defense which is organized into State, county, and local units. In each school community committees are being formed whose first duty will be to study child labor and school attendance laws. After that they will go to the county superintendent, the school principals, and teachers to get accurate lists of the children who have not returned to school. Then begins the real work of getting the children back. Parents will be called upon, and the committee members will talk over with them why it is important not only to the child but to the country that he be well prepared for work before attempting it. Where the reasons for leaving were pecuniary an adjustment will be attempted so that the child can return. The bureau urges that the adjustments take the form of a scholarship similar to those in practically all of the colleges, and in certain city school systems. The average amount of school scholarship is $120 a year, and it is hoped that as a result of the drive an average of at least one will be founded for each of the 281,000 schoolhouses in the United States. The Red Cross will help to keep in school those children who have a father or brother in the service.

The refusal of the Federal Government to employ children in essential industries gives point to the bureau's contention that they should not be allowed to be employed to furnish a cheap source of labor for nonessentials. The War Labor Policies Board, which is composed of representatives of all the departments directly concerned in the prosecution of the war, has made a definite ruling that children under fourteen shall not be employed on war work and that children between fourteen and sixteen shall not be employed on war work for more than eight hours a day or six days a week, or between 7 p. m. and 6 a. m.

This action has been followed by a general order to all branch offices from the Director of the United States Employment Service. The order states that the policy of the service is to discourage all children under sixteen from leaving school. If a child under sixteen is placed Federal standards of child labor will be followed unless the standards of the particular State in which he works happen to be higher. In that case the State standards will be observed. An effort to put the children in suitable and 'developing' positions will be made, and so far as possible the conditions under which they work will be investigated.

The United States Boy's Working Reserve refuses to give Federal recognition to boys under sixteen who are employed on farms or in industry. It maintains that children under sixteen should be kept in school by all the pressure that can be brought to bear, on the ground that the future welfare of the Nation depends on the educational training of its youth.

The opening of the schools for the fall term gave the Children's Bureau an opportunity to find out to just what extent children were leaving school prematurely, whether those who had worked on vacation permits were returning, and, in general, the conditions among working children. A series of inquiries were made in typical industrial and commercial centers to throw light on these and other questions. The cities studied include New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Washington, Wilmington, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, and several smaller cities. In Washington it was found that this year 1,095 permits to work either outside school hours or full time had been granted under the law which permits children of twelve or thirteen to work, if, in the opinion of the Juvenile Court, the poverty of the family justifies it. In 1916-17 only 277 such permits were issued. This is a gain of 295 per cent. The number of children from fourteen to sixteen who were granted regular working permits rose from 727 in 1916-17 to 1,917 this year—an increase of 164 per cent. In Wilmington 61 per cent more children have taken out permits this year than last. Practically all of this 61 per cent have definitely left school to enter industry on full time.

Reports of greatly increased shifting from job to job seem to indicate that the child is not finding in his work a steadily progressing training. The figures do not show that children are staying at their jobs more steadily because of higher wages, or that they are staying long enough to gain from their industrial training experience which will make them increasingly useful.

The bureau emphasizes the fact that the success of the drive depends largely on an educated and intelligent public opinion which will insist upon the complete enforcement of child labor and school attendance laws, and demand that each community shall see to it that its children are not deprived of schooling because of poverty. The school welfare committees are urged to secure for their communities the visiting teachers, vocational advisors, and similar means of guarding the schoolchild's well being which have proved their value in other localities.—Bulletin: Children's Bureau.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

"I Will Make You to Become Fishers of Men"

There have been few experiences in my life more enjoyable than my arrival in Jonesport. This lovely town, situated on the eastern coast of Maine, may be called a stronghold of the Saints. It is a place where every member of the church feels at home, no matter from what distance he comes. The town is dignified by a handsome brick structure dedicated to be used as a public library. It has also an excellent high school, with an up-to-date curriculum. And though this town by the sea is twelve miles from a railway, it possesses a culture not often found in towns that are nearer the great currents of life and thought.

In these days of modern inventions, no town can be described as isolated. The little thread of steel in the telephone thrills responsively to thoughts of thousands, transmitting through forests of pine and through gloomy gorges the messages of love, hope, exultation, or despair.

In Jonesport one can never feel completely isolated. The little wire enables him at any point to vanquish space, and by placing a finger on the pulse of life, feel the heartbeats of the world.

Jonesport has the largest sardine factory in the world. This is not, after all, so strange if we reflect that fish is the great commodity of the town, and that this is one of the distributing stations for sardines to a great part of the world.

I cannot think of anything more enjoyable on a clear day, than to take a ride over the water in one of the swift motor boats used by the fishermen. The course lies through a labyrinth of islands, beyond which, every now and then, one gains a glimpse of the Atlantic rolling away toward the horizon. The proximity and the number of these islands astonished me. In the evening one sees them glittering in the sunset and in the morning one finds oneself environed by them. Just opposite these islands is the coast—a grand succession of bold headlands crowned by forests of pine.

There is something about the place that awes the visitor. Perhaps it is the combination of sea and land as found here. For me the sea has always had a peculiar fascination. I have often fancied that men and women living close to the sea should be deeply religious. It speaks of the infinitude of God. Then again, Jesus preached some of his greatest sermons by the sea. The storm at sea, described by Matthew, which brings out an episode in the life of Peter, is the picture of a continuous experience which unfolds itself in the spiritual life of the race. The storm described by Matthew has long since died away, and the frightened cry of Peter, has long been still, and all who were in the boat have passed into the eternal silence, but the experience of that night is not ancient history never to be lived again. On the great ocean of life, over which we are moving, day after day, we encounter many storms, and when our hearts grow faint we cry out with Peter, "Lord, save me!"

Often during my days in Jonesport, I have sat by the seaside allowing my thoughts to dwell upon the life of men who follow the sea. By day and by night they are on the deep. They pass from land to land and from port to port, and have no fixed abiding place. And how important is that man upon the water! He is one of the chief characters in modern history. Blot him out, let him sink, and you change not only the map of the world, but you change the texture of its civilization. Saul of Tarsus was a man of the sea, and all the apostles, with the exception of two, were men of the sea. When Saul of Tarsus reached the western coast of Asia, he lay down to sleep one night with the murmur of the Ægean Sea in his ears. In his sleep he dreamed, and in his dream saw a man, a European, with great, hungry eyes looking at him. All through the night Paul heard the man calling. His constant cry was, "Come over and help us!" Many a missionary in our church will ere long hear that same cry borne into his soul, over the waves, from Europe. I believe that after the war the gospel will be preached in every country of Europe. Italy, France, Belgium, and Spain, with eyes open to a new vision, will stand up in the form of a man and cry to our missionaries, "Come over, come over and help us!" The need of poor, suffering humanity pleading trumpet-tongued with God will thunder in our ears and will not let the church sleep.

The time has come when the whole world is paying new attention to the sea. On its bosom thousands of our boys are being borne to the awful conflict that is now thundering for decision on the fields of France. John, the beloved disciple, says he saw a mighty angel setting his right foot upon the sea. That is what the world just now is doing. It is taking possession of the sea. Our great Republic is preparing to walk upon the sea. On the ocean, as on the land, this Nation is to work out its destiny. What means the enlargement of our navy, if we are not to walk upon the sea? What means the constant effort to expand our merchant marine, if God is not leading us to walk in more influential ways upon the waters? An increasing number of Americans are destined to walk upon the sea. It is a fact of vast significance that our great nation, like the angel in Revelation, is putting its right foot upon the sea.

As I watched the fishermen's vessels come and go, along the shores of Jonesport, I began to understand in a new light, one reason perhaps, why Jesus lay the burden of a world upon the shoulders of fishermen. Perhaps there is no life with greater severities than the life of fishermen. They know how to endure hardships. Give men like that a love for Christ, and they will bring this world to God. I have studied the virtues that adorn the character of these men: supreme humility, perfect self-denial, unflinching courage, glorious endurance, reminding one of Golgotha—these are the virtues of the men of the sea. More hopeful material for the Christian warfare the world does not afford. The man of the sea is schooled in the spirit of self-sacrifice. He is used to rough knocks. Hardship has made him tough and courageous. He has the very elements which Christ demands in his missionaries. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." The hard life was not to change; they were to cast their nets for men, and not for fish. In many a fisherman on these shores I have seen the rough, tough-fibered, stout-hearted Peter of Galilee.

And as I look at these fishermen on the coast of Maine, laboring with their nets, their boats, and their traps—laboring with storms and with the ebb and flow of the tide, there comes to me a vision of Peter and James and John, who in the long ago labored at the same tasks until the call came that made them "fishers of men." Jesus attracted these men of the sea and made them his intimate friends. What men of fire these fishermen became! No one who reads the gospels intelligently can think of them as limp and pallid men. Jesus called Peter a rock, and after the gift of Pentecost he was a rock. He had a seething soul.

Often as I have walked the coasts of Maine I have tried to imagine Peter as a preacher. I fancy his breast heaved like a volcano, and the words rolled out of him like molten lava. Can we wonder that he converted three thousand souls by the preaching of that one sermon?

The years brought changes in the life of the fisherman of Galilee. Jesus has ascended to the Father, the church is organized, and being tried in the fierce fire of persecution. Peter, bowed with infirmity of years, is far away in Babylon. The labor-calloused hand holds now a pen. The boats and nets of Galilee are things of the long ago. How profitable it would be for us to-day to heed the admonition he sent out to the early Christians! "But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation."

As I ponder the rolling rhetoric of the epistle of that old fisherman, the mighty power of inspiration fills my soul. He is forced by the necessity, by the urgent demands of the church, to become a writer. The story of the cross must be handed down in the writings of eyewitnesses. How thoughtful in earnestness are his words: "Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty."

How eloquently in one stroke of his pen does he sum up the whole character of Jesus: "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

And of these other two fishermen—John and James, the sons of Zebedee? Their zeal and their fearlessness merited for them the name "Sons of Thunder."

A day came in the life of John when he too was far removed from the boats and nets of Galilee. See him, banished by the Emperor Domitian, to that lonely island of Patmos, far away from his beloved flock at Ephesus. Perhaps his mind often wanders back to the old Galilean days, when the call came to him to be a fisher of men. How his impression of the Master accords with that of Peter: "He was manifested to take away our sin, and in him is no sin." But he is now old, the pen trembles in the infirm hand. He longs for the rest that awaits him. Everywhere there is persecution, and the earth groans beneath the weight of man's sin and man's misery. To his mind nothing but the second coming of the Lord can change the condition of the world. And so the same hand that once labored with the nets and boats on Galilee's shores records the cry of his breaking heart: "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely, I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

These are the thoughts that came to me in the daily walks along the shores of Jonesport—thoughts that will linger in my mind for many days to come. And often I shall hear the solemn ringing of the bells of the buoy far out in the waters, and in its sounds I shall hear the prayer which I know lives in the hearts of the faithful Saints I left behind in Jonesport:

"Come to us, Lord, as the tide comes in
With the waves from the distant sea;
Come, till our desert places smile,
And our souls are filled with thee."

As the days went by and I watched the sun set in the western sky, leaving a golden reflection upon the surface of the waters, the words of the blessed old hymn would come to me,

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdoms stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

For one whole week it was my privilege to lecture before large houses in the Saints' church of Jonesport. Rarely have I had more inspiring audiences. The order in the church was all that could be desired. Speaking of the branch, I have not met a more united body of people in any branch I have thus far visited. I believe the secret lies in the pastoral care these Saints have ever over them. Brother J. F. Sheehy was born to the pastor's office. All the training of a seminary could never have molded a more zealous worker or a more watchful shepherd. There is truth in the old saying, "Near to men, near to God." The highest virtues and sweetest graces grow only in an atmosphere made warm by human fellowship. A man may be a pagan alone—he cannot be a Christian. It is where two or three are together the gospel promises a life which is divine.

It has always been my belief that a preacher of the gospel should live as close as possible to men. Isolation to such a man is fatal. This is something Brother Sheehy thoroughly understands. He is ever with his people—sharing their burdens, rejoicing in their successes, and sympathizing with them in their sorrows. His name is a household word. They know him by no other name than "Johnnie." He is one with them; that is why they use the familiar form of address. He knows the man in the street—the everyday man in working garb. And it is the man in the street the preacher must know. If he does not know him, no other sort of knowledge will make him either a successful pastor or a successful preacher. If a preacher really desires to serve his people he will not count time lost which is spent in their company. The closer he comes to them the larger his opportunity to give them what they need. What they are fearing and hoping, feeling and thinking, enjoying and suffering, reading and dreaming—all this can become known to him only as he comes into contact with them. And to know these things is more important than to know nine tenths of the teaching of all the books of a library.

It is for the preacher's own advantage that communion with his people may be most strongly urged. He needs the people even more than they need him. As a preacher he is marooned unless he has warm and tender sympathies, and how are these to be maintained unless he lives close to men? Men who aim to keep the Godward side of their soul open while the manward side remains shut, aim at the impossible. Jesus said to his disciples, "The world is the field." According to the beautiful utterance of John, we know we have passed from death to life only when we love the brethren. One half day spent with ordinary mortals will give a man more clear and helpful thoughts than can be found in the latest learned book, no matter who the author. "In the government of nations," said Cromwell, "that which is to be looked after is the affection of the people." And no less is true in the government and leadership of churches. I cannot wonder at the excellent condition of the branch in Jonesport when I consider the pastoral solicitude of Brother Sheehy.

My stay in Jonesport will ever live in my thoughts as a benediction. I will long remember the dear Saints and their hospitality. I felt while among them the truth of the poet's words: "Kind hearts are more than crowns and coronets." As I bade farewell to the peaceful shores of that lovely town sheltered by the sea, I felt like one leaving a spot where he had felt the sweet blessing of home.

There is a certain sweetness and elegance in "little deeds of kindness" and in letting our best impulses have free play on common occasions.—Joseph May.

Latter-Day Prophet Vindicated

On account of the quarantine for influenza we are barred from holding public meetings. The epidemic seems to be affecting great numbers, and a great many have died from it. However, none of our people have died that we know of.

This and the wars and rumors of wars, and other events taking place, which are causing great commotion among the people, while men's hearts are failing them for fear in looking after those things which are coming on the earth, plainly indicate that we are living in the perilous times that Christ and other holy prophets foretold would come in the latter days. If all these things are the beginning of sorrows, as stated by Jesus, what will be the condition when there shall be greater signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath, spoken of by Joseph the Seer? The Lord said through him that there shall be weeping and wailing among the hosts of men, and because of the wickedness of the world, "I will take vengeance upon the wicked, for they will not repent."

We are told further through him, that in the generation when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, there will be an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land, "but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. And there shall be earthquakes also, in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword, one against another, and they will kill one another."

In another prophecy, given in August, 1831, he stated as follows: "I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked; I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9.

In an editorial by Elbert A. Smith, in HERALD of July 31, 1912, published more than two years before the great European War began, he points out the fact that while the peace prophets were crying peace, and that there would never be another great war, he called the attention of the people to the prophecies in evidence that there would be wars and rumors of wars in the future. These prophecies in regard to the great wars, that were given by Joseph Smith, have been in print since 1831, and have been published from time to time in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants, during a period of more than eighty years; and our opposers cannot truthfully say that all these prophecies have been concocted, and put in print after the wars had all taken place. While young in years, he declared that a great and marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men; and in connection with Isaiah the prophet (24: 14) he stated that, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish." This is precisely what has been done in regard to the subject of war, as the following confessions of two of the most prominent men in the Nation show.

Ex-President Taft, President of the International Peace Forum, stated a few days after the declaration of war in 1914: "At the time when so many friends of peace thought we were making real progress toward the abolition of war, this sudden outbreak of the greatest war in history is most discouraging. The future looks dark, but we must not despair. God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. We must hope that some good may come from this dreadful scourge."

I quote from a speech by the honorable President of our Nation, Woodrow Wilson. Speaking in the city of New York, as recorded in the Mobile Register of November 5, 1915, he said: "Within a year, we have witnessed what we did not think possible—a great European conflict, involving many of the greatest nations of the world. The influences of the great war are everywhere in the air. All Europe is in battle."

It will be remembered that Woodrow Wilson is a friend of peace, and that his many supporters who were also friends of peace, declared that he had kept the Nation in peace and from the ravages of war; and in order that the Nation might be kept in peace, he should be reelected president; and it will be noted from the above speech that he did not think it possible for such a great war, involving so many upon the Eastern Continent. And, further than this, he did not expect our own fair land to be involved in such a bloody conflict to the extent we are now involved.

With our many millions of men, and billions of dollars, he recommended in the above speech an increase in the army, training within the next three years, only 400,000 soldiers, to be raised in annual forces of 133,000, and the strengthening of the national guard.

The great and honorable men of our Nation referred to above, and others who were friends of peace, could not discern with all their wisdom and learning the coming of the greatest war in history, nor keep the Nation out of war by honorable methods, while the young Seer, who was despised and unlearned, more than eighty years before, placed in written prophecy that which has caused the wisdom of the wise and learned to perish, not only in regard to the subject of war, but other matters that space will not permit me to speak of here.

In a revelation given August 13, 1831, he declared, "The days will come that no flesh shall be safe upon the waters."—Doctrine and Covenants 61: 3.

This prophecy is beginning to have its fulfillment in our time, especially since the late war began.

He also declared that peace shall be taken from the earth and that the wrath of God shall be poured out upon the wicked without measure.

The great and dreadful things pointed out that are transpiring and yet to transpire, should cause the Saints everywhere to be very watchful and prayerful, and give diligent heed to the word of wisdom and the commandments that are given in the revelations of God to the church. All should profit by the warning given by Christ as follows:

"And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."—Luke 21: 34-36.

Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, on the part of those who only have a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, make it very difficult to reach the hearts of the people with our message, which is the sweetest thing that ever saluted the ears of man. Truly, we can bear testimony that the word of the Lord through the latter-day Seer, given in 1831, is true. It is as follows:

"And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.

The Saints have been confirmed in the faith because they could read the signs of the times in written testimony, before the events spoken of came to pass, and have received a further confirmation in seeing the sights occur as portrayed beforehand in written prophecy.

The writer has been actively engaged in missionary work in Centralia, before the quarantine, holding meetings and visiting from house to house, and has distributed a great number of the "Angel Message Tracts." Three people were baptized. We were assisted in the work there by Brother W. H. Kelley. We trust that the scourge shall pass over without any harm to the Saints. We feel sorry to hear of the great desolation as a result of the terrible world war, and that our boys are required to leave fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, and sweethearts, yet we rejoice that they are in the struggle across the sea in behalf of a just cause.

Therefore, we can pray in faith for their success, feeling sure that victory will be theirs sooner or later.

We feel sorry for those who cannot discern the signs of the times and are walking in that broad way that leads to destruction.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5: "Now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)."

"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

I pray God to bless all the workers in the church with the spirit of love and unity, that the cause of Zion may be established and the Saints everywhere be in the full discharge of their duty.

Condemnation For Failure to Renew Covenant

"For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body."—1 Corinthians 11:29.

The above passage of Scripture was not clear to my understanding for several years after I had united with the church, for I thought it referred to nonmembers. I had never heard it explained, nor had I heard anyone preach on that subject. I heard only a few Latter Day Saint sermons, because we were isolated, and most of what I learned was through reading the church books.

The first time I partook of the sacrament was three years after baptism, and I did so without renewing my covenant. That night I had a most terrible dream, and following that I suffered distress of mind for nearly two years. I fasted and prayed often, without much lasting relief. Sometime during the second year I had a vision.

I was alone in a room, seemingly waiting for some one. The room was filled with a beautiful light, and close by was a pile of pure white stones and they extended some depth below the surface, as though in a deep well. Presently the Savior came into the room and said to me: "Thou hast stoned the Christ," and caused me to know I must suffer for it. Then I saw my spirit leave my body and go over to the stones, and like a mist it went down through them about three feet, and remained about ten minutes, bearing the weight. Then it returned to my body, and I felt at peace.

Stepping nearer the Savior, looking into his eyes, I saw the pains of suffering he had endured for humanity, all through the ages of time. His face was beautiful with a tender, loving look, yet sad.

The vision ended, and I was awake. The peaceful feeling remained with me for several days, then gradually the old suffering returned. I told no one of the vision or of my feelings, until in 1913 while General Conference was being held at Independence. My uncle being an elder, I sought him out and explained to him, and he advised me to attend sacrament services on the following Sunday, and to renew my covenant; and from him I first learned that it was for the forgiveness of sins.

When Sunday came, I did as he advised, and the distress was instantly lifted.

This has been a testimony that the sacrament is a cleansing power when taken with the right purpose and understanding. The vision also gave me testimony of the Savior.

Toronto Church Items

Church work in Toronto grows apace. The distance we have traveled evidences divine direction and power. God has surely been with us, for, without his help, we could not have achieved as we have.

The prevalent epidemic has been quite virulent throughout Canada. The fatalities have been heavy. During October the deaths from this one cause in Toronto alone numbered about fifteen hundred.

This has necessarily developed some concern among our own people. Our members have been remarkably preserved. The number afflicted has been much below the average. But two deaths have occurred thus far—Brother Elias Hill and Sister Gardner. Brother Hill was specially known and loved by the members of the church here. He was loyal and faithful to the end. He seemed to know from the beginning of his illness that he would not recover. The local eldership did all that could be done to minister to his need. There have been many evidences of God's interposition in healing and blessing, for which we make grateful acknowledgment.

For two weeks there was a ban on public meetings. The schools were closed. We were fortunate in that our district conference closed the day the order was issued. We have been permitted to hold one service each Sunday. The embargo is now lifted. We held all of our regular services on yesterday.

Our recent district conference was an eye-opener to many. Despite the influenza scare and the threatened quarantine of all visitors, a large representation was present from most of the branches of the district. A number were present from the London and Owen Sound Districts.

Our meetings throughout were above the average in attendance and interest. The church building was crowded at the Sunday night service. I am informed that it was the largest crowd which ever assembled at the local church. Brother Hanson was the morning speaker, Brother Gillen spoke in the afternoon, and the writer at night.

The prayer services were inspirational; the testimonies full of cheer and purpose. The membership is solidly for the church. The priesthood lined up well. The business was transacted with dispatch. There was general amity and good will. Everybody seemed to be free and happy.

The election of Brother George E. Harrington as district president was both fortunate and timely. The branches of the district outside of Toronto have been sadly neglected. They will now receive nurture and help.

We are rejoicing in a rehabilitated church building in Toronto. Our church on Soho Street has long been in need of cleaning and repairs. At an expense of less than one thousand dollars we have put in a new floor, retinted the walls, varnished the woodwork, and painted the ceiling. The main auditorium was gone over from the floor to the topmost rafter. The result does credit to the indomitable will and purpose of the people.

It is impossible for me to recite the valiant service or even to supply the names of all the workers. For two weeks the brethren turned out each evening, working sometimes until two o'clock in the morning. The sisters did their part nobly in scrubbing and cleaning and were not one whit behind the brethren.

It was apropos to do this housecleaning at this time. There is a different atmosphere in the church. It seems like home. The money now raised in Toronto is used to advance the interests of the church. The membership is stimulated to comply with the financial law of the church. There are no side issues, no personal purposes to subserve. All moneys handled, in any way, are strictly accounted for.

Brother Harrington will make his headquarters in Toronto, working the outlying points from this center. Brother Gillen has returned to the United States. Brother Hanson and wife are still in Canada. Brother Pitt and wife have started for Mississippi where they expect to spend the winter. Brother James Davis and wife are standing by the work in Hamilton. Brother James Pycock is doing good service in the Toronto District. Brother Jordan, our missionary to Alberta, has been in the city for a couple of weeks. He was called here by the severe illness of Sister Jordan. She has recovered and is rejoicing in the blessing of the Lord.

Brethren Bishop and Robley, missionaries to the New York District, were visitors to our district conference. Among other brethren of the ministry present we noted Brother S. W. Tomlinson of Niagara Falls and Philemon Pement of Ottawa. The Canadians gave the visiting brethren a taste of genuine Canadian hospitality.

Toronto is no longer isolated from the general body. We are keeping pace with the church in all the world. We are not building for a day nor yet for any individual name or person. We are holding up Jesus Christ as our only leader and the gospel as our only hope. Truth is our watchword and the incarnation of the Spirit of Jesus Christ our purpose.

There is considerable local talent in Canada which can and should be developed. It is our purpose to do this. The test of any institution is its ability to develop all arms of service and to demonstrate the need of the whole body to each arm rather than the indispensability of the arm to the body. In this way we make all arms of the service mutually helpful.

The news from overseas stirs our blood and confirms our position that God is in his universe, working out his divine purpose. We are living in propitious times. It is a pleasure to live and work in these days of stress and storm. The peoples of the world are responding more and more to the divine program. The good people are getting better. There are more of them. Pessimists will have to revamp their creed. To-day gives place only for optimism and courage and action. The man who is one with God is safe anywhere. Security and immunity are not necessarily synonyms. Whatever the future holds for each the one thought which sufficeth for every experience is—God with us.

May the church be prepared for the wonderful opportunities which are opening up on every hand.

For God and humanity,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

IN THE FIELD, September 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am a soldier in the British Army in Macedonia, and although I am far away from any of the Saints, my faith is as strong as ever. I have been in this country nearly twelve months, and in that time, I have received five copies of the HERALD from a brother in Cardiff, South Wales. I may say that the HERALD is a most valuable paper; especially to one like myself who is ever anxious about the church work, and who is so far from any of the Saints.

I have been in the army two years and nine months, and in that time have had varied experiences. But never yet have I come across a member of the church.

During my service here, I have been in many parts of Macedonia, and I may say it is a very mountainous country; no matter where you look there are mountains, and when we are marching, no sooner do we get to the top of one hill than we see a still higher one before us. So it is with the work of God. I am afraid we are apt to think at times that we are done, but we have more to do, and higher to go if we want to win the prize.

I often think of the Saints, especially on the Sabbath day, and long to be among them.

My blessings are numberless, and I appreciate them. I enjoy good health, for which one can be very thankful in this climate, which is so extremely hot, and then cold.

Plenty of fruit grows here, and here and there you see a village, or remains of one. Often I have used a stone for a pillow when I lay down to rest. But it is a grand cause for which we are fighting and I always keep in mind that motto, "Trust in God," and surely he has blessed me.

I was very much impressed with the article on tithing, and I have decided to pay tithing out of the little I receive from the army.

I should be pleased to see the HERALD in the homes of more of the Saints, and I believe in letting our neighbors see it.

I should be pleased to hear from any of the Saints at any time as I am just a young man and am very anxious to keep in touch with the Saints, and letters are always welcome to a Tommy. My address is: Private F. Bevan, No. 90487, B. Company, 2nd Garrison Battalion, Kings Liverpool Regiment, Salonika, Field Forces.

I can see a great future for the church, and I long to be back again, but not until righteousness has overcome might.

I trust the Saints will pray for me, as I believe the prayers of the faithful help one, and availeth much.

I was a teacher in the Wigan Branch previous to joining the army.

Taking everything into consideration, I am doing well, and I feel to thank God for his many blessings.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

F. BEVAN.

GOODWATER, OKLAHOMA, October 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we are isolated from the Saints we do not hear much preaching. Brother Grimes and Brother Barney Sharp came the 12th of this month and preached for us a few days. They would have preached more, but the meeting was closed on account of the influenza. We surely did enjoy the sermons we were permitted to hear. I pray that some day in the near future there will be a branch organized here.

My husband and I and two families are the only Saints here. If any of the brethren traveling through will stop here and preach for us we would surely be glad. Brother Grimes and Brother Sharp are the first Saints we have heard preach for over two years, so you may know we were glad to welcome them. I hope it will not be so long before some one comes and preaches for us again.

We take the church papers and that is a great help and comfort to us. We have two children and would be glad to live where we could attend Sunday school and church every Sunday with them. I want all the Saints to pray for us that we may soon live near a branch.

If Brother Jim Jackson sees this letter I hope he will come here sometime and preach for us. Brother Jackson baptized me three years ago, September 26, in the same place where he baptized my husband, several years ago.

With God's help we are trying to live as Saints should. I hope we will not always be as isolated as we are at the present time.

We would like to have some of the Saints living in California write to us. We want to leave here and go where it is not so cold in the winter time. We would like to live where it is warm all through the winter months, on account of our health; and we want to be near a branch of the Saints.

I hope and pray that this dreadful war will soon be over. I believe it has caused more sorrow than any other one thing in this world. I have two dear brothers in France, so you see I have tasted this cup of sorrow. My husband registered the 12th of September, and I hope and pray that he will not have to go. I would like every Saint who reads this to pray for us, and that all the soldiers may soon return home.

May God bless all the Saints, is my prayer.

MRS. MYRTLE STINNETT.

SIDNEY, IOWA, October 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written to the Saints. As I have studied the word of God and meditated upon it, it has brought to my mind the things of my past life, and the many mistakes I have made. I am striving to overcome. I feel that without the aid of the Master's Spirit I cannot accomplish the work I should. I have not been as diligent as I should have been in taking part in the church work.

I ask the Saints to pray for me that the Lord will give me a work to do in his vineyard.

Your brother,

M. B. OLIVER.

[Excerpt from letter by Elder E. J. Gleazer to President Smith]:

ARCHBALD, PENNSYLVANIA, October 30, 1918.

When I arrived in Philadelphia I found my uncle's home in a sad condition. As my father and mother are both dead my sister had been living with her uncle. His own three children had just recovered from the influenza, but his wife was in a serious condition. My uncle had never had his clothes off for two weeks, attending the five of them all sick at the same time. It was impossible to obtain any help, so I remained with him, relieving him as much as possible until my aunt passed away October 21.

I returned to Archbald, October 27, and expect to labor here and in Peckville an adjoining town for the next two months. The churches are closed here at present but as the ban has been lifted in other parts of the State we expect that the churches here will be permitted to open in a short time. However, I am very busy at present visiting the sick of the Archbald Branch all of whom we expect to recover, as they are improving each day.

This plague has taken a large toll of life in eastern Pennsylvania and from the reports which reach us it seems to have been as bad in other parts of the nation. It should bring to the mind of man the fact that the arm of flesh is weak. The words of the Psalmist appeal to me, "As for man his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more." I wonder what it will take to arouse the people to investigate our message. The sleep of indifference is upon the world and I am sorry to say that some of our people seem to be in the same condition. Will history repeat itself? Will the Christ return and find the church unprepared to receive him? I hope that when the war is over the church will be in a position to send more laborers into the vineyard, for I believe that many nations will be humbled to such an extent that they will be willing to investigate the restored gospel. The need of the hour is for consecrated men to take up the work. Some of the people now in the service are not consecrated to the work. They labor for other reasons, but I believe the time will come when they will be discovered.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, October 23, 1918.

Dear Brother: Brooklyn has been rather hard hit, and many of the Saints have been dangerously sick, though we have lost only one by death, Berneada Frisbie, a daughter of our priest, Ray Frisbie, died of pneumonia.

We still have a lot of sickness and are not holding public services, though the conditions are much improved.

I have had considerable experience as a nurse and have been assisting to care for the sick night and day. This has given us an opportunity to get very close to the Saints. The blessings by administration have been remarkable and gratifying.

We hope to open the church again soon, and have made extensive plans to build up the work.

In bonds,

216 Albany Avenue.

CALVIN H. RICH.

[Excerpt from letter to President Smith by Elder A. B. Phillips]:

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, October 31, 1918.

Our nightmare appears to be practically over, and the churches were permitted to reopen on Sunday last. The saloons and picture shows, etc., are opening to-day or this evening. They were opened last Saturday in Camden, but so many got drunk that they have been closed again, largely to prevent Philadelphia people from rushing across the river and returning in a drunken state, as many did. Such actions should form good prohibition campaign arguments.

So far as I have been able to get the statistics together, more than eighty of our people have been sick with the epidemic; though there may be others living so far away from us that I have not learned of their sickness. Three in Camden and four in Philadelphia have died; all but one of them were sickly previous to this attack, however, and died from the complications arising, largely.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, October 31, 1918.

The terrible epidemic is still raging, though partially under check at present. Church activities are tied up yet and the papers say that the ban on public meetings will not be lifted until November 10. Our people are continually calling me by phone and asking about the services, so we are a sort of information bureau at present. I am hopeful that the attendance at services will be greater after the present difficulty. Morning press confirms the statement, so no relief can be expected sooner. Business houses complain of losing thousands of dollars, and the churches are sending telegrams to Governor Sleeper asking that the ban be lifted.

As a people I think we should lift up our heads and rejoice, not that people are being stricken and are dying all around us, but that the prophecies of the past are being literally fulfilled. These things only presage future difficulties to be multiplied. May God help us to direct, as much as lieth within our power, the people of God that they may escape these trials which are surely coming.

EDGETTS, MICHIGAN, November 1, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading Brother Elbert's sermon in the HERALD for October 30.

As a babe in this, Christ's church, this was a real feast to me, as are many of the other articles which appear from time to time. The HERALD has been a regular visitor to our home and has brought to us much good. Many times it has been the means of our meditating upon the things of God; upon the things that make us better Saints, better neighbors, better citizens, and better subjects for the kingdom of heaven.

While I was reading this sermon I felt blessed to that degree that I felt I must write a few lines, at least, as a testimony. I thank our heavenly Father for this great work, and am indeed glad it is something dependable and something flexible.

This sermon caused my mind to wander back to the day when those six brethren were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood. What a difference to-day! This ought to bring joy and happiness to every Saint, from the greatest to the least, with a determination to keep both shoulders to the wheel of progress, and keep the bell ringing bringing souls to Christ.

We read on down in church history, and which I think of so many times, of Brother Joseph, prophet and seer, and those other faithful brethren, lying down in those cold, damp cells. Do we have those things to-day? I sometimes imagine I can almost hear those words that were confirmed upon our late president, saying, "Truly, truly, this is my successor." What evidence of truthfulness!

Then we go on a little further, and it seems we can almost see those, whom I wonder if we are worthy to call brethren and sisters, with their little boys and girls, traveling from the land of Missouri in cold and distress, leaving loved ones behind who had laid down their lives for the same cause of which we bear witness to-day, and testify of its truthfulness.

Then comes to our mind the events at Carthage, Illinois; those men with painted faces taking the life of innocent men. Brothers and sisters, young boys and girls, have there been any painted faces after you? Let us do our bit, and then some day we can "pray, gladly pray, in the house of Jehovah."
SAMUEL M. LONG.

[Elder E. B. Hull writes the Presidency]:

We held our first church service after five weeks forced respite, yesterday. All churches have been closed for that period of time because of the influenza epidemic; there are very few cases in the city at the present time. Everyone seemed to be thankful to be in church again, and take up the activities that were brought to a stop so suddenly. "We never miss the water until the well runs dry," and the Saints never missed the association of each other in Christian worship as they have in the last few weeks. These weeks have been weeks of anxiety and fear, for the pale reaper was taking many of the citizens of this place, one of our own number was carried away, and also her husband (who was not a member), the sister dying two days after her husband, she left one daughter in the hospital, sick with the disease, besides a baby two years old.

This week will be a busy one for our members, trying to make up for lost time, so many meetings have been postponed until we were privileged to meet together again.

CAMP GRANT, ILLINOIS, October 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am glad to tell you that I am still working for our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who has given me wisdom and knowledge. I am glad that I am a child of God. He has said, "If you love me, you will keep my commandments."

I ask the Saints to pray for me as I am tried on every hand. But Jesus is on my side.

Revelation 2:17 says: "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."

Brothers and sisters, I believe this stone is the law of God. No man knows how God worketh with one of his servants.

I long to see the time that I can get up and testify among the Saints of God. I pray not for a long life nor for the riches of the world, but for wisdom and knowledge that I may do that which is right.

I would be glad to hear from some of the Saints. On the 19th, I received a letter from my dear mother, giving me this address, and asking that I write to the HERALD. I was glad to receive it, and would like to have you remember me. I do not hear from any of the Saints but my father and mother, Elder W. P. and Elizabeth Booker, who live at Jay, Florida.

Your brother in Christ,

[Letter to Presidency from Elder R. Baldwin]:

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, October 28, 1918.

Boston is almost normal again after the Spanish influenza epidemic. There are a great many afflicted with the influenza in the city, and a number of deaths every day.

There was a fair attendance at the midweek prayer service. Sunday we had large audiences all day and especially the evening service.

Brother Dwyer will be in the city November 17 to 28.

[Extract from letter to President Smith by Elder J. W. Peterson]:

REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN, October 28, 1918.

Since last report I have remained in Regina, being unable to do anything in the way of preaching either here or near-by points, on account of the influenza epidemic which is especially bad in this city and increasing daily. Only one or two of our people are afflicted, and very mildly.

I preached the funeral sermon of Mr. and Sr. Malden's infant son, five months old, who died of malassimilation of food. Literally starved to death. Weighed much less at death than at birth.

We drove thirty miles to the former residence of the Malden's to bury the child beside that of a brother.

Two graves were ready for corpses and three others being dug. A new experience for me to see three graves being dug while we were burying in another. I should judge that there were twenty new graves in that one cemetery, all within a month and nearly all occupants dying of Spanish influenza. Multiplying that by every neighborhood in the United States and Canada and the thousands extra in the larger cities and military camps, and one gets an idea of the "overflowing scourge" both in Europe and America.

No public meetings (except home funerals) are allowed anywhere. Some of the railroads formerly running daily trains now run triweekly. Nearly every wholesale house is running on half force. Many banks are closed and most barber shops are closed. Papers this morning report five hundred bad cases and three thousand of milder form. Smaller towns are even worse. Nearly the entire medical fraternity are sick and the health board (twice reorganized) are incapacitated.

[Excerpt from letter of Elder J. H. Yager to President Smith]:

COURTRIGHT, ONTARIO, October 23, 1918.

Everything quarantined around here now so I can't do anything only administer to the sick and help keep house and do farm work in general.

Dug potatoes, drew them to town and sold them, and helped pick apples. I might mention that the potatoes were Christmas offering potatoes grown by the Kimball Sunday school. They had three acres and about 340 bu., which will net them nearly $500. They will have over a thousand dollars this year. I tell you with workers like that the church debt looks small and the missionary feels that he is not working alone. I will have some apples to pick and deliver to the Sarnia Saints free of charge sometime this week.

[Extract from letter to President Smith.]

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, October 26, 1918.

During the month of September, and up to the time the "lid was put on" by State Board of Health in October I have occupied the pulpit in eighteen efforts, in the administration of the word, beside answering the demands of the sick, and ailing ones over the city. Solemnized the wedlock of one couple who came to our residence for that purpose. The prevailing epidemic has been exacting a fearful toll, especially of those with previous complications. I have officiated at three funerals of late, the last one on Wednesday, October 23, was a child victim of three years of age. Whatever the character of the attack, it seems to be a "pest." "War, pestilence, and famine" is a grim trinity, sure, pointed out by inspiration, both ancient, and modern. In looking out through the horiscope, to the kaleidoscopic changes, and new developments, one is constrained to ask, What next? Surely this is "the great day of the Lord, and there is none like it," as saith Jeremiah.

I am hopeful that my home conditions will improve, so I may perform my work, at an early date.

The ban is still on, and churches, schools, lodge and club rooms, in fact, all public assemblies are prohibited. Trust all are well with you, and that you may be immune.

Hopefully your brother,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

[A personal letter to F. M. Smith]:

LONDON, ONTARIO, October 28, 1918.

MY WEEKLY REPORT

Called home by wire Monday—sickness of my family. All on the mend. From Tuesday to Sunday have administered to the sick thirty times and was sure run off my feet. Sunday

I had three funerals: Walter Mottashed at 10.30; Elder Henley's son Albert and Daniel Sheridan in the afternoon. Brother Sheridan was a returned soldier, having been wounded and discharged from the Canadian forces November 22, 1916. I married him to Annie Gray, sister of Elder Frank Gray, April 4, 1916. He leaves one son; his wife is still in bed with the influenza. Great crowds lined the streets; about one thousand people around the grave; guns were fired, the "last post" was played and, taking time by the forelock, I announced that as soon as the ban was lifted memorial services would be held in the church, giving the life and hope of our brethren who had fallen as a result of the awful sickness. Brother Greenslade was buried October 19 by Elder Gray, then Mottashed, Sheridan, and Henley. It was a sad Sunday, but I believe we are over the top.

Monday, October 21, the basement of the church was opened for an emergency hospital. Twenty-five beds were rushed in. Average attendance of patients, twenty-three. Up to Sunday night there were six deaths, two of our own membership. Sister Rosa Tier and Sister Annie Hackey are first and second nurses with some assistants. Mrs. Thompson is chief supervisor. Students of two or three years' study are in attendance night and day with our own members in the kitchen. It surely is a sad and busy place. Twins were born there Sunday morning. The whole expense is borne by the board of health of our town. Many of the Four Hundred of the city are sending food, fruit, etc., to what they call the Latter Day Saint Hospital. We surely took the lead and have increased our prestige for our demonstration of practical Christ service. Favorable comments have been heard on all sides.

My plans for the week, so far as I now see, will be, I expect to leave for Port Huron about Friday. Detroit has announced me for one of the speakers at their conference. Do not think I can attend, as Sandusky (my field) has wanted and will advertise me for a series of meetings lasting two weeks or more if interest demands. I hope to be guided.

Faithfully yours,

634 Dufferin Avenue.

WILLIAM FLIGG.

and New Year, we at home will have many things to make us enjoy the festive time, even though the war will still have its baneful shadow upon us, but the soldiers on the battle front, will be a long way from home, the wassail singing will be the booming of the cannon, the endless chattering of the machine guns, the groans of the sick and wounded. The rain, mud, filth, and gruesome stark forms lying around will be the soldiers substitute for the season's greeting, and how lonely the yuletide will be to many of these boys unless we remember them. I think we have nearly if not quite one thousand of our church boys in the service, I am sure all would appreciate a card and greeting. Will each branch try and supply cards to those who are corresponding and have them sent off not later than the last week in November please.

We had news this week that Captain Ambrose W. Teel, M. C., who had been stationed at the Base Hospital, Camp Kearney, California, had been transferred to New York en route to France and is probably on the water by this time.

We learned through correspondence of the wounding of Sergeant Harry Roberts of Independence, Missouri, during some action in France. A fragment of shrapnel struck him, but we are pleased to know that he is getting along nicely.

In news from England we hear that Norman Issott has been invalidated home, having been gassed during the operations in the Flanders section.

We urge that all having any news of the welfare of the church boys engaged in the war, whether belonging to America, Canada, Australasia, or Great Britain will please keep us advised.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, 951 West Thirty-fourth Street.

THE ROLL OF HONOR

Hathaway, Lieutenant Ira, of Toronto, Canada, died in England, airplane accident.

Case, Lieutenant Lyman E., of Lamoni, Iowa, killed in action in France.

Cook, Burrell, of Warrensburg, Missouri, died of influenza.

Judson, Ralph, of Lamoni, Iowa, killed in action in France.

Burns, Richard Otis, of Beetown, Wisconsin.

Becker, Clarence, of Kansas City, Missouri, killed in action.

Smith, David L., died of influenza at Fort Munro, Virginia.

Pittinger, William F., of Knobnoster, Missouri, killed in action.

Perry, Frank, Knobnoster, Missouri, killed in action.

Andes, Wilmer C., Warrensburg, Missouri, drowned at sea.

Leaverton, Guy, Warrensburg, Missouri, died on the way to cantonment.

This list is incomplete and represents the few items gathered up by reading various papers. We shall be very pleased if everyone will interest himself in this matter and report to my address names, addresses, and particulars affecting any of our soldiers or sailors.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

NOTICE OF TRANSFER

By action of the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, Elder Charles F. Davis has been appointed to labor in the Kansas City Stake for the balance of the conference year.

By action of the Joint Council of Presidency and Twelve, Elder E. A. Curtis has been transferred from the Kewanee District to Southwestern Kansas (unorganized) as mission-

This is to notify all concerned that the Presidency, acting under authorization of General Conference, has appointed R. B. Trowbridge as General Church Auditor, and in this capacity he will be at liberty to at any time examine the books kept by any of the church officials who are handling church finances.

He has been requested as expeditiously as practicable to make careful audit of the books of the auxiliary societies of the church, and other institutions with which the church is more or less directly connected. Those concerned, therefore, will understand the matter should the Church Auditor at any time demand access to the books kept by the church officials or officials of the auxiliaries.

Respectfully,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.
President of Church.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Southern Ohio District: After January 1, 1919, Brother J. Boyd Williams of 79 West Oakland Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, will act as Bishop's agent of the Southern Ohio District. Brother Williams will have solicitors appointed in each branch to represent him in the collection of tithing and offerings.

We take pleasure in commending Brother Williams to the Saints of the Southern Ohio District, who, we feel sure, will be pleased with the appointment and show their appreciation by the generous support which they shall give him in the performance of the duties of the office of Bishop's agent.

Yours very sincerely,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Our Departed Ones

HAWKINS.—Roy Hershel Hawkins was born October 8, 1903, at Boyleston, Illinois. Baptized at Marengo, Indiana, November 10, 1914. Died October 29, 1918, at Marengo, Indiana. He was a power for good in the church work, and before passing away he admonished all of us to put away sin and live righteous lives. Services in charge of L. C. Moore. Sermon by J. W. Metcalf. Interment in Marengo Cemetery.

HAYMOND.—Ruth Marie Haymond, daughter of Jefferson and Hulda Haymond, was born at Saint Charles, Iowa, September 22, 1902. She died at her home at Gunn City, Missouri, October 28, 1918. Was baptized at Holden, Missouri, August 12, 1917. Funeral was held at the residence. The body was taken to Blockton, Iowa, for burial. She leaves father, mother, and one sister to mourn her early departure. Funeral services conducted by F. A. McWethy and D. J. Krahl.

MILLS.—James Mills was born at Mosley, Lancashire, England, July 10, 1847. He died at his residence five miles north of Holden, Missouri, October 27, 1918. Was baptized March 31, 1878 at Streator, Illinois, by Thomas W. Smith. September 7, 1904 married Sarah Aylor. Funeral was held from the Rock Creek Church near Holden. Interment in Rock Creek Cemetery. Funeral sermon by D. J. Krahl.

SMITH.—David Lewis, second son of Joseph M. and Elizabeth J. Smith, born September 21, 1898, at Kansas City, Missouri. Childhood days spent in Argentine, Kansas, where he was baptized at age of 11 years. Enlisted November 1, 1916, in regular army, assigned to Company 14, Coast Artillery Corps, at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, remaining there until death from influenza, October 2, 1918. Survived by father, mother, 6 brothers, 2 grandmothers, and many other relatives. Funeral service from Argentine church.

BOND.—Mary Bond, widow of the late Ezra Bond, was born in Maine in 1828. She moved to Kirtland in 1843, where she has since made her home until a few years ago, when she moved to Florida, where she died. The remains were returned to her old home for interment. Her death marks the passing of the last of the old people who were familiar with the early history of Kirtland. She was kind and always ready to help in time of sickness and distress. Remarks and prayer at the grave by L. W. Powell.

Goss.—Benjamin E. Goss was born March 26, 1871, at Melton, Missouri. Was baptized July 30, 1905, by J. D. Erwin. Ordained elder June 15, 1913, by W. P. Bootman and John Harp. Died October 18, 1918, at Fanshawe, Oklahoma. He was a good preacher and a noble man. He presided over the Fanshawe Branch three years and built it up until it became one of the most prosperous branches in Eastern Oklahoma District. He leaves a wife, several children, and a host of friends to mourn. Funeral sermon by E. A. Erwin.

EWING.—At the Independence Sanitarium, October 8, 1918, George Ewing, aged 74 years, 9 months, and 15 days. His parents were with the church in Ohio, and moved to Nauvoo. There George was born in 1843. He was one of twelve children. The most of them united with the Reorganized Church, as did their parents in the sixties. Their father had the distinction of having been a messenger boy on Commodore Perry's flag-ship at the battle of Lake Erie in 1813. George's body was brought to Lamoni by his brother Lyman for burial. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Columbus Scott.

VAUGHN.—Mabel Agnes Vaughn, after an illness of a few days, passed away October 11, 1918, at the age of 25 years, 4 months, 22 days. Her spirit returned to God who gave it, and her mortal remains received an appropriate resting place in the beautiful cemetery in Seattle, Washington. Sister Irwin sang beautifully. Sermon by J. M. Terry, her pastor.

SINCLAIR.—Robert Loyd Sinclair was born May 25, 1875, at Saint Mary's, Ontario. Baptized October 17, 1886. Died October 5, 1918, at his home in New Bedford, Massachusetts. Was a member of the Fall River Branch for a number of years. Removed a few weeks ago to New Bedford. He leaves wife, 2 children, mother, and 4 brothers to mourn. Sermon by H. W. Howlett. Burial at the Rural Cemetery, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

JUDSON.—Glen Henry Judson, son of Ada and Isaac Judson, was born June 14, 1886, at Covert, Michigan. Died at Minneapolis, Minnesota, October 15, 1918, of influenza. He moved with the family to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1893. Baptized November, 1897, by F. A. Smith. Married Nellie Bales of Des Moines, April 19, 1910. He leaves to mourn, his wife, 2 sons, mother, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, and many relatives. Funeral service at Lamoni, Iowa. Sermon by C. Scott, assisted by H. A. Stebbins. His faithfulness to duty, and tenderness to his widowed mother will ever remain with them as pleasing and encouraging memorials.

BLOWERS.—Rouletta M. Blowers, eldest daughter of Brother Moses Sheehy of Fall River, Massachusetts, was born November 17, 1884. Baptized October 11, 1896, by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Died at Morrisville, New York. Recently became a member of the branch at Sherrill, New York. Leaves husband, 3 children, father, 2 sisters, and 3 brothers to mourn. She was the only trained nurse in her community, and worked day and night attending the sick until she was taken down. She has given her life for others. Funeral service conducted by the local Baptist minister. Interment at Carvanoza Cemetery, New York.

CRILEY.—Emma Smith, widow of Frank Criley, deceased, died at her home in Independence, Missouri, October 24, 1918. She was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, August 24, 1854. Married Frank Criley, also of Pittsburgh, March 24, 1881. From this union, a family of 5 children, all living in Independence, were present at the funeral. From Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the family moved to Lamoni, Iowa, and in 1900, moved to Independence, Missouri, where they have since resided. Many relatives were present at the service, which was held at the residence. Walter W. Smith had charge of the services. Sermon by E. L. Kelley.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Elder F. A. Russell has moved his family from Wichita, Kansas, to Independence, Missouri. He will probably occupy in missionary work in the Independence Stake or vicinity.

The Western Wales District conference on September 15, adopted resolutions of condolence in memory of our departed Brother Rees Jenkins. A copy was sent to the relatives surviving and one to this office, which in accordance with our past custom is not published, but is delivered to the historical department of the church.

There is still time for students to secure loans from the Religio Loan Fund to the amount of $60 without interest, a note approved by the president of the college being all the security required. Any of our elders passing through or going near Smalley, Kentucky, should call on S. D. Osborn, who is anxious to have a missionary call. He has been investigating our work for some time and knows the Utah viewpoint from having conversed with their elders.

A press dispatch says that local archaeologists at Bishop, California, are endeavoring to interest professional scientists in the epigraphs which abound in the rocks of Mound Valley. The general conclusion seems to be that these marks antedate all Indian markings, and are likely indications as to the water supply for traveling parties.

In answer to inquiries as to the address of The American Hebrew, one of the best publications concerning this people that we know, we state here that the price is $3 per year and it is published at 44 East Twenty-third Street, New York City. Herman Bernstein is the editor, and is also well known as a correspondent to the New York Sun. He has traveled much and within the past year visited Russia. His contributions on the internal affairs of that distracted country are among the important annals of the war. The contributors are from the best thinkers of the race, and at the present time are fearlessly discussing the new trend in the world's history which promises to renationalize the Jews. We are pleased to commend this worthy contemporary in the journalistic field. If more convenient, our patrons may subscribe through the church publishing houses.

In every time of stress and difficulty for over ninety years The Youth's Companion has stood by the family. It has cheered and encouraged and entertained—delighting all, informing all, and making home life and loyal sentiment the ideal of all. For 1919 the publishers intend to make the paper worth more to family life than ever before. The splendid serials alone are events in next year's reading in the family life. Hundreds of short stories and articles by great contributors, and a steady stream of helpfulness in everything from the solid and serious to the happy humor for which The Companion is famed. In these days the whole family needs The Companion, and it is still only $2.00 a year for 52 splendid issues.

Don't miss Grace Richmond's great serial, Anne Exeter, 10 chapters, beginning December 12.

The following special offer is made to new subscribers:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues of 1919.
2. All the remaining issues of 1918.
3. The Companion Home calendar for 1919.

All the above for only $2.00, or you may include

4. McCall's Magazine—12 fashion numbers. All for only $2.50. The two magazines may be sent to separate addresses if desired.

Some of our patrons seem to have overlooked the announcement recently made that the prices of the church periodicals had been advanced slightly, beginning with October 20. The HERALD is now $1.75; Zion's Ensign $1.25; and Autumn Leaves $1.25. These are all the price changes at present, and it is hoped it will not be necessary to raise any others, though no assurances can be held out at the present time.

Brother Floyd Rockwell, of Dayton, Ohio, relates how Brother H. W. Smith and family recently called at their home after his wife had been shown in a dream that a brother of F. M. Smith had been there. They were not only pleased to entertain the missionary and family but to also know that dreams may mean much to the individual.

Writing to the New York Evening Post Beckles Willson says: "The Jews are to have Jerusalem at last; they are no longer to be here on the sufferance of the Moslem. The tables are to be turned; they are at last able to stalk proudly through the streets; it is the Moslem and the Christians who are henceforth to take the wall. The Wailing Place is deserted. No one comes there now. For the first time in centuries the spectacle of the crouching Hebrew lifting up his voice in lamentations at the lost glories of Israel has wholly ceased. There is nothing to lament about. The sun shines on Zion."

Sister Inez B. Francis, of Ruddell, Saskatchewan, desires the prayers of the Saints for relief from her affliction.

The ban on public meetings in Lamoni still prevails. College opened on the 11th, with strict regulations for daily examinations as to physical condition, prohibition of attending gatherings elsewhere, etc. The announcement of the signing of the armistice brought out the town on Monday morning and the proclamation of a general holiday. The pressure was so strong that in spite of any misgivings as to the advisability of the move, college was dismissed for the day, with special instructions to the students to avoid any danger from a crowded situation.

We are a day late with the HERALD on account of the special holiday proclaimed by the town authorities on Monday of this week, which closed all business houses in the place.

DETAILS CONCERNING WINTER INSTITUTES

We learn that the work of selecting members of teams for the coming Winter Institutes for the auxiliaries, which will begin in January, is now under way. Team workers are to have all necessary lesson outlines for class work drawn up ready for their guidance. All that is asked for is average experience and intelligence with willingness and ability to go out for three or four weeks.

Here is an excellent chance for service. Who is ready? Inquiry is being made for such persons through proper channels, but the executives of Sunday school, general Religion and Woman's Auxiliary would be pleased to hear from volunteers who are able to take up this team work.

Each institute will be three days of enthusiastic class work, learning the how and why of auxiliary work. Anyone, young or old, may enter these classes, of which there will be four each night, besides three classes each afternoon on woman's work. There will be also a general talk each night between the class periods, making altogether two hours of worth-while sessions each night. The division of territory in which teams will operate is as follows:

New England States, including New York and Philadelphia District.

Western New York and Pennsylvania.

Eastern Canada.

Michigan and Northern Indiana.

Southern Indiana Central and Southeastern Illinois, Saint Louis, Northeastern Missouri, and Kentucky and Tennessee Districts.

Kewanee, Nauvoo, and Northeastern Illinois Districts.

Southern Wisconsin and Eastern Iowa Districts.

Northern Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas.

Iowa and Nebraska Districts.

Far West, Independence, Holden, and Kansas City Stakes. Kansas, Spring River, and Clinton Districts.

North Pacific Coast.

South Pacific Coast.

Western Canada.

Any others who may want it, provided it can be arranged. If there are any such, they will please communicate at once with G. S. Trowbridge, 5032 A Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

In the three years under the supervision of a general superintendent, the cradle roll department of the Sunday school has made three drives. The first year it was to have a cradle roll organized in every school and a district cradle roll superintendent in each district. The second year, it was to have every cradle roll mother visited. The result of both of these was very gratifying. Now this department has swung into line and is supporting the Children's Bureau effort to save the lives of 100,000 babies who would otherwise die from lack of proper care. The infant mortality of America is 300,000 a year, so in the "Children's Year," from April 6, 1918, to April 6, 1919, the saving of this number will be counted a patriotic duty. One feature of the present movement is to secure the number of babies in the church. Every cradle roll superintendent is requested to report to her district or general officer, the latter being Mrs. H. B. Roberts, 1407 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri.

THE DAWN AT MIDNIGHT

In the small hours of Monday morning, November 11, we were awakened by the roaring whistles of Kansas City. There was a sound in the air that no one had ever heard before. Those whistles conveyed upon the startled air a message. The world war was over. Peace had come.

We wished for the genius of Poe who interpreted the bells, that we might interpret this message of the whistles. But the whistles were not like Poe's "wild alarm bells" with their "tale of terror" in the "startled ear of night"—the bells that "feel a glory in so rolling on the human heart a stone." This was a message of joy, literally heard the world around. For the whistles were but the prelude to a bedlam of noise and a welter of emotions that circled the globe.

The expression that was denied us came to Sister Viola Short, who wrote a splendid poem, beginning:

Was ever the dawn at midnight?
Aye, once in the long ago,
When angels sang o'er Bethlehem's plain
To a sleeping world below.

Has the miracle been repeated?
Last night when darkness was deep,
Glad sounds—the dawning of peace on earth—
Rang out on a world in sleep.

They spoke of millions unshackled,
Henceforth, like us, they were freed;
Of the passing of thrones and dominions—
As the Lord himself has decreed.

The world may have indulged in fantastic, irrational, even profane forms of celebration. But without doubt when the whistles began to blow in the night many a deeply reverent prayer of thanksgiving was offered up. Mothers whose sons were in France, or in the cantonments, knew how to bring an acceptable offering of prayer.

For those whistles said to us: "Now the boys may get up out of the trenches. No more will they be deluged with liquid flames and suffocated with poison gases. No more will the murderous lunge of the bayonet rend the God-ordained unity of spirit and body. No more will crashing shells in an instant transform strong men into lifelong mental wrecks and physical caricatures of humanity. The hungry throat of the sea is closed. The avenues of heaven are no longer open to the assassin. The children of London and Paris may sleep at night. Belgium is free. France is free."

And so the song went on. Promising, or seeming to promise us all of these things. For all human promises are uncertain. In the very dawn of peace, threats were and are still visible. But in any event one supreme effort of the adversary of men's souls has been defeated and crushed. Democracy has won a signal victory over autocracy.

We believe that this victory was not won without divine aid. Not by accident did the Kaiser stand at the head of a coalition that was dedicated to the autocratic domination of the world. Autocracy was envisaged in his person. He was the chief exponent of its doctrines.

If Satan searched the halls of time to find a fit spirit to head his assault upon humanity in the closing scenes of time, it would be fatuous to suppose that God left the leadership of free peoples to hazard and chance in that supreme crisis, when the Kaiser's gamble with the "iron dice of fate" drew to its close.

What a wonderful period has been compassed in the past few weeks! It has been the time of falling crowns. While the plague of influenza has swept the land, closing our churches, and making us all "isolated Saints," that in our seclusion we might reflect upon the judgments of God and the verification of his promises, world events have crowded the pages of our newspapers until nothing remained that could astound.

The Holy Land was fully wrested from the Turk. Turkey, Bulgaria, and Austria fell. And finally German might melted away in a night. The Kaiser abdicated. Little kings without number were shaken from their thrones. In the last stronghold of autocracy men began to talk of a republic. What the future holds we can only surmise. All Europe is now a fertile field for the sowing of the seed of anarchy. Yet events may turn the other way toward a period of ordered government.

One form of evil is crushed, but we must not suppose that another will not arise. One walking the streets of Kansas City when the peace celebration was at its highest, passed the open door of a saloon. He heard the men within, standing at the sloppy bar, singing, "Glory, glory, hallelujah. Our God goes marching on!" They were too drunk to march any longer. But their god was marching on. The millennium has not yet come, even if Hindenburg is eating straw, and the Kaiser gone to lie down with the lambs of Holland.

Whatever may transpire, the Saints may rest assured in the triumph of the Lord's work. We must hate iniquity, no matter in what form it may reveal itself in days to come; and we must love righteousness. The prophecies are being fulfilled wonderfully. Events like a mighty scroll unroll with bewildering rapidity. All, all are in harmony with the "more sure word of prophecy" recorded for our edification. Let us remain faithful until the Day Star of our hope arise.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

PEACE AND THANKSGIVING

The war is over. The Kaiser and Crown Prince have abdicated and an effort is being made towards a democratic government in Germany.

Thursday, November 7, a false report started premature celebrations throughout the United States. But this apparently did not decrease the joy and demonstration when the armistice was really signed. As early as two and three a. m. in the Middle West, whistles were blown and bells rang and kept up their peals of joy for five or six hours. Parades were started at that early hour and continued through the day and much of the night.

But all this represents but the external exuberance. It is the superficial manifestation of a deep rejoicing in the hearts of the people, and a feeling of deep thanksgiving to the Giver of all good.

We publish in our General Interest department this week an editorial from a secular newspaper which voices something of this devotion and thanksgiving. It is only one out of many we might have used. The thinking nation realizes the gravity of the crisis and feels a Higher Power has intervened for justice and for peace.

The prayer of the righteous avails. And many prayers have been offered in general for peace. But we know of at least one very earnest prayer of faith by one little given to public prayer, in which he asked definitely, a year ago, for peace and end of strife for this coming Thanksgiving Day.

A few have been unable to see the hand of the Lord directing, and the necessity of this Nation entering that awful horror of war. Fortunately they are few. It has not been a case simply of supporting the Government, but a conviction of necessity and of right.

No army has ever before been so carefully protected from evils of intoxicants and immorality as has that of the United States. The record has not been perfect, as it is not perfect in civil life in times of peace. But it has been better than ever before.

There has been some mob spirit manifested. This is regrettable, but does not mar the great fact of the higher purpose of this people to fight for deliverance of others, without hope of reward and without hate. The actions of a few delinquents do not change that basic fact, that the fight of the United States has been for right and for peace.

Now peace has come. Much yet remains to be done. All Europe must be fed; not alone the people of our allies, but Turkey, Bulgaria, Austria, and Germany as well. Many must be clothed. The winter is upon us and suffering will be great over there. We must make it as little as possible to all people. We hope that peace and shipbuilding may now permit ships to go to Australia, Asia, Argentina, and other remote points for grain, meat, sugar, and other supplies; otherwise it means a winter of greater sacrifice on our part, to feed suffering Europe.

There remains the task to bring order out of chaos. There must be given the necessary help to bring order in Russia, and in central Europe, with a stable government of their choice.

There is needed greater devotion, greater worship, and more righteousness. Repentance and thanksgiving in a personal, religious revival which includes morality, should be worked and prayed for. True democracy requires cooperation and regard for another's interests.

The most terrible war of all history is over. Shall its suffering be in vain? Or can we not look for a broader spirit of brotherhood among all the peoples of earth, and justice between man and man here at home as well as abroad? There is a need of social justice and cooperation, as well as of religious revival. There is needed a continued devotion to higher ideals than self-interest.

President F. M. Smith has declared repeatedly the opportunity before us after the close of this war. Are we ready? If not, how soon shall we be ready to do our duty under God, to establish a righteous peace on earth? Our part is Zion and her stakes as the pure in heart, and a place of practical refuge for the oppressed, and a ministry to go ahead to teach the way of the Lord.

We as a nation have warred, not against a people, but against a system of wrong and oppression. We as a church join heartily in "good will to all men," and "glory to God in the highest."

It is a time of thanksgiving, for harvest by which we can help to feed the world, for peace on earth, for the divine plan of salvation. But with our prayer of thanksgiving there should go up an earnest prayer for immediate help, inspiration, and wisdom to prepare for the work God now wants us to do.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." S. A. BURGESS.

SUCCESSFUL COOPERATION

In the HERALD for October 30 there appears a reprint on "Successful cooperative colony." As indicated, it is a clipping without comment, merely inserted as a matter of general interest as to what is being done in this line.

The editors have been receiving from some of our members a number of such clippings, showing what is being attempted in community work. We should be glad to see such efforts succeed, and are interested in what is being attempted.

In regard to the above colony, we have heard promptly from Elder T. W. Williams, who was for years secretary of the California State Socialist Committee, and has been much interested for years in this work.

We print below extracts from his letter showing what he knows of this colony and its history, lest any of our readers be misled.

Elder Williams has become fully convinced that the cooperative effort which gives the largest hopes of success is that of the church, and that within the church is to be found the best of community effort and social unity. The difficulty in the past with most of their efforts has been that one important factor has been omitted, and that is the element represented by a spiritual consecration.

Brother Williams's comments follow:

My attention has been called to an article in HERALD for October 30, under the caption, "Successful cooperative colony."

While I realize the purpose of "ye editor" to be the very best, yet I consider it most unfortunate that this article should appear in our church paper.

I know something of the history of this colony in California. If a tithe of what has been told to me of deprivation and want, of wrecked hopes and blasted lives on the part of those who cast their lot with this colony is true, then our people should think long and well before taking up with this enterprise or advising others so to do.

Although the men who were directing this enterprise claimed to be socialists, yet, it is a fact, that the Executive Committee of the Socialist Party of California repudiated the colony and disavowed any connection with it, whatever.

I know Mr. Harriman quite well. It comes with considerable surprise to learn of his philanthropic spirit. The ground work of all his philosophy as I have many times heard him state it is: "Whatever is, is right." "That which is good for me is right to me." "That means which brings to me the thing which I wish or need is legitimate." "Men's morals are the outgrowth of their immediate interests." "We must appeal to men's selfish interest." "An appeal to the belly is far more effective than an appeal to the head or the heart."

The history of this colony from the very beginning is stormy. Every possible inducement was made to have me join this colony. I steadfastly refused, believing that it was not founded on true cooperative principles.

The provisions of the California State Constitution were quite liberal in the formation of cooperative enterprises. The promoters of Llano had every opportunity to so organize. Instead, they resorted to the rigid provisions of the corporation laws although they were, at the time, decrying the viciousness of corporations in general. As I view it, practically every essential of true democracy and real cooperation was eliminated from their articles of incorporation.

It was understood that colonists should pay into the corporation the sum of five hundred dollars. This was later raised to one thousand dollars. Upon payment thereof, and the action of the board of directors, they were then considered members of the colony. The management then issued to him or her a contract to labor which had no connection whatever with the right of the stockholder only as it was allowed by the board. This board reserved the right to cancel this contract to labor at will and the colonist thereby waived all rights to insist on its continuance.

Each colonist was supposed to receive four dollars per day for his or her labor, which was apportioned by the managers of the institution as follows: One dollar to apply on the unpaid balance of the stock which was placed at two thousand dollars; two dollars, or as much thereof as the colonist might elect, to be used for the payment for food, clothing, and family necessities. The other one dollar was placed in a cash reserve fund to accumulate to the credit of the colonist, and was subject to his demand to the amount of seventy-five dollars per year, providing there was money in the treasury of the company and the managers thereof decided the exigency was sufficient to justify the payment of the money.

It soon developed, according to the statements of the colonists, that any man who, in any way, offered criticism on the management of the concern, or spoke reflectively of the heads of the institution, came under the ban. He was notified to desist. He was isolated and placed at work remote from others. Dissatisfaction grew apace until there were many so relegated. These were christened the "brush gang" because they were put to work cutting brush. Such were always under suspicion. Their every act was under surveillance. This brush gang grew until, so I am informed, it threatened to outnumber those who were loyal to the managers.

I have talked with many of these colonists when I was State Secretary of the Socialist Party of California. I have listened to the most pitiable and disheartening recitals of alleged abuses and purported injustices. These people claimed that for exercising their right as free men their agreement to work was cancelled and they were denied even the right to purchase food at the commissary, and were compelled to start out anew in the world. A number of suits developed in the California courts.

I would not knowingly do injury to the many earnest and self-sacrificing people who may have risked their all in this or similar enterprises, but I feel it my imperative duty to warn those who may be ever induced by these glowing reports to make a move which will cause them disappointment and sorrow.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

WORLD WAR DEBT

In The Public, August 24, 1918, there appears a vital article, "Consolidating the world war debt," by Charles Fremont Taylor. He calls attention to the action of Alexander Hamilton, in consolidating the war debts of the various states, and the assumption of the entire debt by the United States Government. This formed one element for the basis of united government.

He suggests that similar action should be taken in this war; that the allies should form a confederation or association of nations, and the war debt of all of them should be consolidated into one debt, and then its redemption provided for in an equitable manner, so that a fair share of the burden would fall upon each individual and each nation.

With this would be taken a resolution that the control of the sea has been taken over, and the oceanic straits and canals, Gibraltar, Dover, Suez, and Panama, will be held by the council for all time, to be used to establish disarmament and to prevent autocracy again gaining a position threatening the safety of the world.

As the various States of the United States transferred their public land to the central government, including all of the western territory, so should the various nations consolidate their colonies, so that they will be administered for the benefit and in the interest of those who dwell therein, and who do the work of development.

All are fighting for the one object. A readjustment of the debt would mean that they would bear an equal share of the burden and a fair share, after the war. All have not borne the burden of the war equitably. Circumstances are to blame for this.

The grand alliance would not be a close corporation. Neutrals would be permitted to join, but in doing so, they should bear their share of the burden of the common war debt.

Those who are now enemies would also be permitted to join. They would be permitted to share the privileges and the burden of the grand alliance; but the burden would be small compared to the benefit, including disarmament, and the benefits of peace and free world commerce. Even Prussia would be permitted to join upon establishing a proper form of government, and would share the cost and benefit. But enemy nations would not be permitted to bring in an enemy debt. The plan might ultimately involve a repudiation of all enemy debts.

The debt being guaranteed by all nations of the world, could be secured at a very low rate of interest.

The tax would be based upon individuals, as is the case with the Federal Government, and not upon States. Strategic sites, as tidewater docks, would be used in the common interest and not as the right of individuals.

It is of interest to note how frequent is the discussion of some provision for preventing another war and for a closer affiliation between the nations. Before the war but little was heard of such ideas, and then they were treated as practically impossible. Now they are treated as the only solution.

It is but one of the signs of cooperative thinking in the world; that men are coming to recognize more and more, as individuals, as families, as citizens, as combined in states and governments, that they are in similar position and have similar responsibility, and that what hurts one hurts all. The slum injures not only those who must dwell therein, but from the slums loathsome diseases make their way into nurseries in the reserved parts of town.

Common interests as well as humanity requires justice to our fellow man, as well as interest and opportunity, individual development, and social service.

These various intimations lead us to hope that better conditions will soon confront us. S. A. B.

To be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than your dislikes; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manner; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ; and to spend as much time as you can, with body and with spirit, in God's out-of-doors—these are little guideposts on the footpath to peace.-- Henry Van Dyke.

WHAT HAS THE REORGANIZED CHURCH TO SAY OF THIS NEW AGE?

This is a question we cannot silence. This war has transformed the world. Geographically, politically, commercially, industrially, morally, and religiously, we will have another world. The old standards of living have passed away. The intelligent inquiry for us is this: Will our missionaries in the field have to deal with the same spirit of unbelief and indifference, or will they find men and women hungry for the truths of the gospel? Or again; will the shock of war have torn men from their heavenly moorings that they will not be disposed to listen to preaching?

No one can doubt but that the war has made mighty changes in the hearts of men. But are the changes Godward or downward? Can our gospel survive the acid test of this war?

As I write, my thoughts go back to our last General Conference, and I still hear ringing in my ears the burning testimonies of some of the priesthood of our church, who, clad in khaki uniforms, had come fresh from the service. Then, too, there comes to my mind flowing words of faith from some of the boys of our church who are in the trenches of France. And I say with emphasis, our gospel will not only stand the severe test of this war, but our church will loom up as never before, bearing the mark of its divine Founder, and claiming its place as the one true church of Jesus Christ upon the earth.

The sectarian churches, making all allowances for the good they have done, must perish from the earth. The inner spirit of the gospel is eternally contrary to sects and schisms. Roman Catholicism has had the field for nearly two thousand years. The mother of the sects has sadly and deplorably failed. If she had conquered the world, as Jesus ordained his true church would do, this war would have been a sheer impossibility. At any rate she would have been able to tip the balance for peace when war was threatened. The voice of the pope of Rome has had but little effect upon the world in this awful struggle—in this inhuman slaughter on the fields of France.

While traveling in the countries of Europe, the utter lack of vital Christianity I found apparent almost everywhere. The pope of Rome himself had his battalions of armed soldiers. With glittering armor and military pomp he was escorted into the "Temple of the Lord." There was a profession of Jesus Christ, but his character, teaching, and example seemed grossly denied. The Protestant churches of England and the United States and Canada have much to make them look out into the future with dismayed hearts.

Can one find the true church then in Roman Catholicism or in the sectarian bodies? I answer in the words of Jesus: "By their fruits ye shall know them." I have pointed out some of the fruits, and surely by them we cannot know the true church. They have lamentably failed.

Who can read the gospels without seeing clearly that it was the purpose of Jesus, the King, that his church should rule the hearts of men, that it would be like leaven—that in time of crisis this leaven should have penetrated society so thoroughly that all decisions should be Christlike in quality? But the fact is, Roman Catholicism and the sectarian churches have professed Christ and have practiced Cain.

This infernal disparity could not go on forever. God, who gave his only begotten Son for man's redemption, would not allow the sacrifice of Calvary to be nullified, and his true church to pass from the earth.

The gospel was restored in his servant Joseph Smith. The light of faith shone on Cumorah Hill, and a new day dawned for the world. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is destined to reveal the true gospel to the world. And this, not so much by the spirit of denunciation of other churches, nor by controversy, but by a spirit of love, showing unto the world that the mind that is in her was also in Christ Jesus her Lord.

I think there is hardly a Latter Day Saint of the Reorganized Church who will not admit that all churches have had in them some good—some savoring and seasoning qualities. On the other hand I doubt if there is a religious thinker in the land today who will not admit that, as a whole, the churches have been a travesty upon Christ. The heart has gone out of them; nothing but husks remain. Men see through it all, and the result is, all faith in sectarianism has died. A new moral sense is being born. The utter weakness of a dissected Christianity has been laid bare by this war.

This, then, is the day of opportunity for the Reorganized Church. She must rise and gird herself for the great duties that are calling for her attention. She must emphasize as never before that she has no man-made religion to offer the world. She is voicing the cry of her divine Founder to every man: "Wilt thou be made whole?" She has no man-made creed; she has only the teachings of Galilee and Judea, which no outward calamity can change. Even the hell of war cannot burn them away. Atheism and doubt will shrivel before them. The war has sent these teachings throbbing through the world. The church will continue with the same in doctrine, but enlarged by a vision that looks into the eternities and hears in every passing hour: "I am with you alway!"

The coming General Conference will offer the church the opportunity it needs in this day of reconstruction, to give voice to the clear-cut message as to the relation of the gospel to the problems of social reconstruction that confront humanity. It will give it the occasion to reveal to what extent it realizes the tremendous upheaval that is taking place and in what manner it is prepared to meet it. If we Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church are to have the influence we should have in this giant awakening, then we must recognize the condition of the new era in which the world finds itself.

I always rejoice in the fact that the Reorganized Church is the church of the people. Its democracy is based upon the Sermon on the Mount—that sermon which Gladstone called the "Magna Charta of civilization." The opportunity of the new day should fire our missionaries with fresh zeal that will enable them to present the gospel message in such a way that will give it a grip upon the heart and mind and conscience of the working world. The Latter Day Saint gospel falls in with the change that is taking place and will continue to grow in social and economic values. One stands amazed before the changes in the standards of living, that are the result of this titanic struggle. Nothing in it all is more amazing than the strategic position which the working class have come to occupy. Our church is made up largely of the working classes, and naturally they will look to the church for light and guidance. To my thinking the light and guidance will come from no new message but from the old message which is always new—the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. It will come in the way of drawing the attention of the Saints with fresh faith and deeper consecration to its life-saving principles.

The great reform, which the prophets of the hour tell us will come as a result of this war, is the very condition and standard of living which the Reorganized Church has been preaching to the world for nearly a century. If the world had heeded it this war would have been an impossibility. The great principle for which the social reformers cry is the principle of human brotherhood. That is a fundamental teaching of the Reorganized Church.

But even more significant are the principles laid down in the labor program sent out recently by Great Britain. That program is preaching our gospel though it may not know it as such. No greater document has appeared in a century—no document of such far-seeing statesmanship. The term labor, as used in the document, is made to include workers with brain as well as workers with brawn. The fundamental principle of the labor program is that the new age demands for "every member of the community all the requisites of healthy life and worthy citizenship." Long before the labor program of Great Britain was ever thought out, I heard President F. M. Smith voicing that same principle with emphasis, in the columns of the SAINTS' HERALD. I think, too, that it is the clear teaching of the Doctrine and Covenants.

In direct and forcible language, the labor program points to the conditions which have come out of the war. "What this war is consuming," the statement says, "is not merely the security, the homes, the livelihood, and the lives of millions of innocent families, and an enormous proportion of the accumulated wealth of the world, but also the very basis of the peculiar social order in which it has arisen."

What it clearly means is that humanity has been living under a false system which the war is throwing into the scrap heap. The new system which is to take its place will be based, not upon the selfishness of the individual, but upon the recognition of the brotherhood of man. This is the very essence of Latter Day Saints. I believe that now the minds of many statesmen will be focused on our church, and the labor world will recognize in the Reorganized Church as a defender, a supporter, and a friend.

Just read these other words from the British labor program, and I think there will be found in them the clear teaching of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"Social protection of the individual, however poor and lowly, from birth to death, is, as the economist now knows, as indispensable to fruitful cooperation as it is to successful combination; and it affords the only complete safeguard against that insidious degeneration of the standard of life, which is the worst economic and social calamity to which any community can be subjected. We are members one of another. No man liveth to himself alone. If any, even the humblest, is made to suffer, the whole community and every one of us, whether or not we recognize the fact, is thereby injured."

Now in view of all these facts, what has the church to say to this new age? There is only one way to look at it. She will be what she has ever been—the one true church—only that her claim will be accentuated by the new conditions. She will have to say to the new age what she has been saying to an old age that did not heed. True it is, because of false brethren and misrepresentation and indifference on the part of some of her members, she has oftentimes come short of what she ought to have done, but with all her shortcomings, her principles were founded upon the rock of eternal truth.

Her duty now is to rise and gird herself to meet the disturbing conditions coming upon the world. She must become cooperative with the good outside of her, which though not of her, is not against her, and stands foursquare with that good in the labor of reconstruction. It is blessed to think of what the noble women of our church have contributed to the Red Cross work.

Dear Saints, a great challenge is coming to us as we face the new day with its industrial upheaval and its new social order. We must not be found wanting. Above the sound of the cannonading, beyond the glare of this awful conflagration just past, let us hear the voice of Christ speaking to his church: "Fear not, for I am with thee." Let us acknowledge, in the blessed brotherhood, the poorest and humblest, in the church and out of the church; and let us forever cast aside distinction and social standing, and be in fruit, as in doctrine, the one true church of Jesus Christ upon earth.

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

WHAT OF THE HOUR, FELLOW RELIGIANS?

Nineteen eighteen!
 Civilization's crest.
 High tide of human progress.
 Prophecies of ages fulfilled.
 Dreams of centuries come true.
 The "divine right of kings" in the discard.
 Special privilege a suicide. Autocracy dethroned.
 Injustice, inhumanity, entrenched greed, privilege, kultur in the prisoner's dock. God and Christ on the judgment seat. Chastened humanity in the jury box.

Democracy, fraternity, Justice, good will—the sweet-winged harbingers of the glad new day.

God has vindicated his promise made to Abraham four thousand years ago. Palestine regained. The holy city no longer profaned by the heathen. The democracy of Israel looming high in the horizon.

"Glory to God in the highest heavens, and on earth peace among men who please him."

As we "go over the top" we signal back to all of the martyrs along the battle fields of progress, to the heroes of stress and storm from Abel to Foch, "We win."

From out the past rise the living presence, the inspiring purpose of the vanguard of right—the pioneers of progress: Moses, Nehemiah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Mosiah, Jesus, Luther, Wesley, Joan of Arc, Pitt, Jefferson, Paine, Joseph Smith, Lovejoy, John Brown, Lincoln. These also share our joy.

From the beginning men have loved liberty and hated oppression. Throughout the ages men have suffered and sacrificed. Millions have bled and died that others might live and possess. "Vicarious Service—watchword of ages past—slogan of ages yet to come." "Insofar as you render such services to one of the humblest of these, my brethren, you render them to me"—the talisman of life!

We have traveled a long way. It has taken ages for man to learn that selfishness and inhumanity react. Experience, the last resort of God, is bearing fruit. Nineteen nineteen will witness greater changes still. God is in his universe. He never sleeps. His work goes on without interruption. He will continue his purpose until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

God is winnowing the nations. He is preparing the world for the new evangel. He is blazing the way for the great crusade. At no time in the life of the human race have we had such occasion to commemorate the Nativity than at this Christmastide. The world's purpose converges in the Messianic cry: "Thy will be done."

Each conflict 'twixt right and wrong has contributed to this our privilege. Prisons and dungeons, stripes and scourgings, fagot and flame, the guillotine and cross, all have paved the way for our present ministry and work. Ours is a heritage of promise—a sacred trust—a wonderful obligation. Will we be equal to the occasion? If not, then the very stones will proclaim our shame.

God has done his part. He is on time. He is waiting for us. He will not wait long. It is now or never. He will raise up others if we fail him now. As a result of the great world war, for the first time in our age the peoples of the world may hear the angel's message. A glorious ministry awaits us. What then our answer? Shall we enter in and occupy?

The coming generation will witness the culmination of God's premillennium purposes. Zion will rise and shine. The long-expected endowment will materialize. The World's greatest missionary effort will then begin. Even now "God is marshaling his army." He is calling men and women to be disciplined as ambassadors of peace. This call is to consecrate service. Those who engage therein must have no mental reservation. They must have an "eye single to the glory of God." All excess baggage must be discarded. They must renounce "the world, the flesh and the Devil."

Are you improving every spare moment of your time in making preparation for more efficient service? Are you systematizing your study? Are you cheerful and happy in your work? Are you doing all that you can to enlist the service of others?

Answering their country's call many, very many of our young men—the very flower of coming manhood, and who have been active in the various departments of church work have been called to the colors. This has, to an extent, crippled our work. It necessitates a closing up of our ranks—a determination on the part of each one who remains to carry a little heavier responsibility.

The best possible antidote for indifference and apathy is to interest oneself in the need of others. What then can the young people do to help and extend the usefulness of the Religio organization? Let me suggest the following:

First. Each returning transport comes freighted with the maimed and crippled soldiers who have, with their comrades, sacrificed nearly their all that democracy might live and human rights be preserved. Let us organize a "Welcome Home Brigade." And this is not enough. Let the Religio organizations throughout the church systematically plan to assist these returning soldiers in every possible manner. There are innumerable ways in which we can show the true spirit of Christ towards them. We should exhaust every possible means in restoring them, so far as possible, to their former civilian life. Arrange socials in their honor. If perchance one has lost an arm, or a leg, or an eye, let each vie with the other in reducing this misfortune to a minimum.

Second. Many of these men must begin life all over again. We owe it to them, we owe it to ourselves, to see that they are not unnecessarily handicapped in this respect. Religians can band together and see that suitable employment is secured compatible with the ability of each. You can volunteer your service in teaching those, who may elect, the intricacies of your own particular avocation. This will be a true Christian purpose.

Third. There will be vacant places in many homes. Again let the Religio workers in all parts of the country tabulate, regardless of church affiliation, the names of those who have fallen in their immediate vicinity, and see to it that the bereaved are given every possible evidence of your sympathy and good will. Short notes of condolence, a visit to the home, genuine expressions of sympathy will go a long way in easing the heavy burden. This, then, is our Christian service.

Fourth. There will be widows and orphans as a result of this war. We should never forget that "The religious service which is pure and stainless in the sight of our God and Father is to visit fatherless children and widowed women in their time of trouble, and to keep one's own self unspotted from the evil of the world." See that no widow or orphan children suffer for either physical or mental comfort. We are "our brother's keeper."

Fifth. In these times of stress and misery the tendency is to pessimism. Men fall into a gloomy gait. They lose heart. Their long faces and dejected attitude indicate that they have lost their grip. Our ministry is to dissipate the clouds, to lift the fallen, to bind up the broken hearts, for hath the Lord not said, "But when all this is beginning to take place, grieve no longer. Lift up your heads, because your deliverance is drawing nigh."

We should cultivate the social side of life. The Religio is specially organized for this purpose. Social service does not always spell fun. It is not always analagous to amusement. It does not always comprehend entertainment. We should have fun, lots of it. Innocent amusement is to be stimulated and encouraged. Entertainment is a big part of life. We must not lag in this. We must go farther.

Sixth. What recreational work have you planned for the winter? Here in Toronto our young people have organized a physical culture drill where, once each week, the boys and girls assemble under the tutorage of a proficient teacher in physical culture and delarte and spend a pleasant and profitable evening. This brings our young people together in common purpose. No worthy person is excluded. We suggest that this be done in as many other places as possible.

Seventh. Have you a gymnasium in connection with your local church? If not, why not? Any church which does not possess this very necessary adjunct of church life is behind the times. Take the matter up with your pastor, the Sunday school superintendent, the Religio president. Keep eternally at it until a church gymnasium is established. We are not doing our duty if we fail in this. Do you offer excuse that the church building is not suitable for this? Then remodel your church. Better far that you lessen the auditorium than to defeat the real purpose of religion. During the winter months a special effort should be made to develop physical culture activities throughout the church.

Eighth. This is the time of the year when Jack Frost is king in most parts of the world. What better than a sleighing party and at the end of the journey a widow's home and a sumptuous basket of good things stored away under the seat, a serenade, and a joyous evening?

Ninth. A skating contest—a spelling bee—an evening's debate—oh, there are many things for happy hearts and willing minds to engage in. Wake up, Religians! "The drift of the world's will is stronger than all wrong."

Tenth. Have you, my fellow worker, found yourself? What part are you going to play in this the last lap? What are your qualities for service? Do you know what you wish to be and do? Have you canvassed your qualifications for service? Decide NOW your work and resolve to achieve.

It is joy supreme to work for him to-day. Each service hath its own recompense. We need not wait for our reward. The pleasure of doing is full compensation. God speed and bless you, fellow Religians for "earth and her years down joy's bright way or sorrow's longer road are moving towards the purpose of the skies."

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

WHERE WOULD JESUS GO?

If Jesus should suddenly come to earth to visit his children awhile, pray where would he go when the chiming bells ring? What shrine would he greet with his smile?

Now if he should go where the cross is on high; where candles and wafers abound, and bow to the virgin, Saint Peter and Paul, pray, where would the Lutherans be found?

Or if he should go to the church of renown, where babies are sprinkled, indeed, would Campbell's "Disciples" cease dipping converts, and follow the Methodist's creed?

Now if to the Baptist perchance he should go, and thus to their creed should conform, would Catholics forsake holy water, and mass, and kneel at the penitant form?

But what if he went to the popular church where Calvin and Knox are afamed, would those Apostolics quit speaking in tongues, and worship where healing's defamed?

If he should abide with the Dunkards the while, who practice immersion triune, would Adventists then wear the 'mark of the beast' and with them on Sunday commune?

Yet now peradventure he'd visit the Friends, who quietly sit in the room. Could Baptists, and others who make a big noise, serve God in the silence and gloom?

And would our friends, Unitarians, come in? The scientists, and others galore? Would he to them all bring the message Godspeed? Or weep o'er the plight as of yore?

But shades of ye martyrs! and canonized souls! Suppose he should pass all restraints and go to Lamoni, the city of peace, and meet with the Latter Day Saints! And preach from their pulpit the gospel of old, and plead for the message so plain, as taught from the Bible by Latter Day Saints—say, friend, would he preach it in vain?

How many would follow the way of his steps, forsaking their creeds and their pride, and down in the river, like Christians of old, be buried with Christ in the tide?

Ye people in error, hear what we say: We bring the glad message to you, once taught by the Savior of men in Judea—the gospel unchanging and true. You may have been warned against Latter Day Saints because they're unpopular; so the Jews in their blindness made just that mistake and lost the "great treasure," you know. They looked at the man and his message ignored; no good in his life could they find. The treasure was there—beneath evil report—and poor wandering Jew is still blind.

So then from their error a lesson now learn: Don't turn from this message away, for God has revealed it, the same as at first, and pleads with all men to obey. Your creeds and your dogmas can never avail; they're not of God's choosing, dear friend, but, creatures of men, they will perish at last, and you will loose out in the end.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Nineteen centuries ago, Saint Luke tells us, a choir of angels sang to a group of shepherds on the hills without Bethlehem. For aught we know angels may have sung at other times and other places to earthly auditors, but this is the only instance of record that has received general acceptance as a historical verity, and whether we believe the sacred story or not we cannot doubt that the message of the celestial anthem is one that expresses the feeling of heaven toward mankind. And we may be sure that, although our ears are not attuned to its seraphic harmonies, the great supernal choir is voicing to-day the same joyous theme that was heard by the Judean shepherds. For there is peace to-day, peace on earth, after the greatest and bloodiest war in the world's history. In every city in Christendom the bells are ringing in glad acclaim, and even in pagan land the notes of joy are striking the ear with a new sound and a new meaning. The hearts of men and women in every country save Germany, and of many even there, no doubt, are filled with such an ecstasy that words utterly fail to give it expression. Never since the creation has joy been so nearly universal among mankind, and never has there been greater occasion for universal gladness.

Whatever may be the conditions of the final treaties of settlement, the acceptance by Germany of the terms of armistice dictated by the allied governments and the United States ends the war. There is no possibility of a resumption of hostilities. The world war is over. After four years and three months of titanic struggle, after the destruction of millions of lives and of treasure of unmeasurable value, the supreme conflict of all the ages has ceased. The black pall has lifted and once more the earth can smile; once more men can go on with the affairs of life in the broad sunlight of a new day.

"Peace on earth, good will toward men," sang the angels on that morning long ago, and assuredly the two things should go together. That is the idealism of heaven, and it should be so of earth. War and hate, peace and love, they are by the very nature of things inextricably associated, although love in the past has never distinguished peace as hate has distinguished and animated war. But through all the hatred of this great conflict the light of love has been burning, beaming good will toward men, and the principles that have developed from the struggle, the principles upon which permanent peace will finally be based, spring from love and not from hate. It was essentially good will toward men, good will toward the bleeding and ravished peoples of Europe, that brought us as a nation into this great war. It was good will toward men, good will toward all men, that inspired and actuated the wise and humane war policies of our great president. It is upon the fundamental principles of good will toward men that the peace treaty will be formulated. And in the peace that has now come, the great peace that passeth understanding, good will toward men should be, and, we profoundly believe, will be, the dominating influence in the world's relations. The "brotherhood of man" is no longer a phrase of fine-sounding rhetoric, but by this colossal war, this great rebirth of humanity, it has been made a thing of reality in the opened hearts and broadened minds of mankind. No longer are the people of other lands strangers to us, no longer are we strangers to them, no longer are we strangers among ourselves. We know now our kinship. We have gone down into the valley of the shadow with them, and we have learned that we are of one blood and one flesh, sons and daughters of God.

And who has done this thing? Who has brought this victory of civilization to its splendid fruition? Not we. We are proud of our great share in this work. We are proud that we perceived our duty and plunged with determination and enthusiasm into the task of its fulfillment. We are proud that we have arisen to the heights of tremendous accomplishment. We are proud of the spirit that brought us together as one. We are proud of the heroism of our sons who have fought so valiantly.

We are proud of the devotion of our men and women who have labored so gallantly for the cause. We are proud, immensely proud, of the fact that the establishment of American ideals have been made the primary purpose of the war and that they are to be the essential principles of peace. We are proud that it was given to us to become the deciding factor in the glorious conclusion. But we must remember that we have but shared in the work. We must not detract one whit from the splendor of other achievements. We must not forget that each and every nation has played its part nobly in the struggle. We must not forget the tremendous sacrifices beside which ours are but little. We must not forget the invincible spirit that maintained an unbroken front through years of awful anguish. We must give to all of them, even to broken Russia, the full credit and honor and glory for the work they have done in preventing the triumph of barbarism. It is enough that we have shared, splendidly shared, in the vast achievement. It is enough that we have helped with all our might in the attainment of the victory of righteousness over wrong. Nor must we forget that over all has been a Power that would not permit evil to triumph, a power that has raised one obstacle after another to oppose its advancement, a Power that has been ever present and ever guarding our destinies through the dark night of the earth's supreme trial. And although we may have often doubted it during the long hours of agony we can say to-day with profound conviction, as the morning dawns with the glory of peace flung across the skies, that God's in his heaven;

A COOPERATIVE PLAN

Since the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company was perhaps the first to develop a carefully worked-out plan of industrial representation, which was adopted by unanimous vote of the board of directors, and a seventy-eight per cent vote of the employees, and has now been in operation for about three years, it may be of interest to mention briefly some of the outstanding features of the plan, and some of the results of its operation.

1. The first outstanding feature of the plan, is the representatives, their conferences and committees.

By secret ballot representatives are chosen annually by the employees from their fellow-workers in each mining camp and each division of the steel mills, one for every one hundred and fifty employees, but never less than two in any camp or division.

The representatives, together with an equal number of the officers of the company, hold conferences at least three times during the year in the several coal mining districts, and similar conferences are held in the steel plant.

There is also an annual conference of representatives and officers of the company. Such conference occurs with the employees of the mines as well as with the employees of the steel plant.

In addition there are in each district of the mining camps and in all of the divisions of the steel plant, four standing committees, each committee composed of three employees, selected by the representatives but not necessarily representatives themselves, and three officers of the company. These committees can initiate business as well as consider such matters as are referred to them.

The committees are: Committee on cooperation and conciliation; on safety and accidents; on sanitation, health, and housing; on recreation and education.

There is also an officer, known as the president's industrial representative, whose duty it is to visit currently all the mines and confer with the representatives. A similar officer performs a like function in the steel plant. These officers are also available for conference at any time at the request of the representatives.

Thus it will be seen that the employees, through their representatives chosen from among themselves, are in constant touch and conference with the owners through their representatives, the officers, in regard to matters pertaining to their common interests.

2. The second outstanding feature of the plan is the employee's right of appeal.

Any employee with a grievance, real or imaginary, may go with it to one of his representatives. As frequently happens, the representative finds that there is no real ground for the grievance and is able to so convince the employee.

But if a real grievance exists or the employee is not satisfied, the representative takes the matter to the pitt boss, the mine foreman, or the mine superintendent, and in the majority of cases the questions are amicably and satisfactorily settled by one of them.

If not, however it is the employee's right through his representative to carry the matter to the President's industrial representative, the district committee on cooperation and conciliation, the district manager, the manager or assistant manager, the general manager, the president, and, as a court of last appeal, to the industrial commission of the State of Colorado.

Experience proves that the vast majority of difficulties which occur in an industry arise between the workmen and the subordinate officials with whom they are in daily contact, such as pitt bosses or mine foremen.

These petty officials are sometimes arbitrary. But it is by their attitude and actions that the higher officers and stockholders are judged.

Obviously, then, the right of appeal from their decision is important, and even if never availed of tends of itself to modify their attitude.

3. The third outstanding feature of the plan which I would mention is the employee's bill of rights.

This covers such matters as the right to caution and suspension before discharge, except for such serious offenses as are posted at each mine; the right to hold meetings at appropriate places, outside of working hours; the right, without discrimination, to membership or nonmembership in any society or organization; and the right of appeal, to which reference has just been made.

So much, then, for the outstanding features of the plan. What have been some of the results of its operation? In brief:

1. Uninterrupted operation of the plants and increased output.
2. Improved working and living conditions.
3. Frequent and close contact between employees and officers.
4. Elimination of grievance as a disturbing factor.
5. Good will developed to a high degree.
6. The creation of community spirit.

A community spirit has been fostered in many ways.

Club houses have been constructed in many camps, and are under the direction and operation of the Young Men's Christian Association. These buildings provide recreational and social facilities not only for the men and boys, but for the women and children as well.

There are band stands in a number of the camps, and bathhouses in practically all of them. In several, dispensaries have been built and supplied with district nurses.

Schools have been improved—some would serve as models in any city, however progressive.

One of the most important features of the community life is the gardens which have been generally cultivated. This has been made possible by fencing around each miner's house a plot of ground which is developed in grass, in flowers, or in vegetables, and always adds interest and attractiveness to the home.

The fences thus built have cost more than $40,000; over $155,000 has been spent on club houses, either completed or under construction; and upwards of $50,000 on bathhouses; in other words, a total of a quarter of a million dollars has been expended in three years for these several items alone.

The community spirit is developing community pride and rivalry. Each camp has its band, its baseball team. Of late this spirit has manifested itself most gratifyingly in patriotic endeavors.—John D. Rockefeller, jr. in Brotherhood of Men and Nations, an address before civic and commercial club, Denver, Colorado.

A Retrospective View

From the dawn of early history,
All along the golden way,
Trace the progress of the nations,
Downward to the present day.

Try to understand the story
Which the ancients safely sealed,
In the stone and marble columns,
Truth which cannot be repealed.

But to-day is just Thanksgiving,
So why trace a story old,
Farther than the Pilgrim Fathers
Who were strong and true and bold?

Yet it seems that something grander
Came before and paved the way,
For the faithful Pilgrim Fathers,
Thus to make Thanksgiving Day.

Architecture, letters, learning,
Were pursued by other men,
Long before the Reformation
Had successfully begun.

Then amid the busy people,
Walked a man with purpose strong;
And at last with ships and sailors
He had left the noisy throng.

After all the piercing trials,
After all the hardships borne,
They had found the fragrant blossom
Nestled soft among the thorn.

On that day so long remembered,
'Neath the dull gray autumn sky,
'Neath the leafless autumn branches,
Near the river running by—

Spread they there the feast with gladness,
As they dreamed of better days,
And with thankful hearts their voices
Raised in one glad song of praise.

Years have passed and yet as autumn
Brings the golden harvest in,
We observe to keep Thanksgiving,
"Ere the winter storms begin."

Beautiful may be the custom,
If we come with thankful heart;

Opportune the time and season,
To perform our humble part.

Small the service we may offer,
Insignificant is life;
To be helpful but a duty
Fighting bravely in the strife.

Out upon the trackless ocean,
Where the pleadings of his men
Failed to lure him from his duty—
He could not return again

Till the mission was accomplished
He had pledged his word to do—
Onward, steadily, and westward—
Ever on with purpose true.

Till success had crowned his efforts,
Though he never knew how great
Was the service he had rendered,
Led as by the hand of Fate.

Through the pathway he had opened,
Other vessels crossed the sea,
Other nations made a country,
And a home for you and me.

In those days of war and bloodshed,
Many hearts so brave and true,
Throbbled to waken other motives,
Grander than they ever knew.

And however old the story
Of the first Thanksgiving Day,
There's simplicity about it
We can get no other way.

They were glad and truly thankful,
Though the hand of death had come,
Leading many of their number,
On unto a better home.

Some Undependable Choir Members

Probably none of the annoying things with which a chorister has to contend can equal that of the undependable choir member. He is the unknown quantity, the broken reed of the choir, upon whom it were wise not to place too great store or to lean too heavily; for disappointment is as apt to accompany him as the sparks are to fly upward.

We propose in this article to touch upon two distinct types only of this undependable class: those who come to choir practice and then stay away from the Sunday services, and those who absent themselves from the choir practices and then presumptuously appear at the Sunday services and attempt to perform the work for which they have not prepared.

We hardly know which of the two named types can be considered the more annoying. Each thwarts the better work of the choir and each succeeds, in sins both of omission and commission, in nullifying to a large degree the efforts of the faithful looking to effectual progress. If we consult the chorister he will attest that each serves to render his burden the more onerous.

In taking the first type for consideration we will try to picture the choir at its regular weekly practice. There is a full attendance of the members and the practice is going swimmingly. Under the impetus of the mass the work for the following Sunday speedily takes form and perfected shape and the chorister is fairly radiant with the enthusiasm that comes from successful achievement. "Oh, 'tis good to be a Saint in latter days!" he feels, and how enjoyable it is to lead a choir when something is accomplished.

He enjoys the seventh heaven of choral delights; feels that the choir-life is really worth living, after all, and goes home with roseate-hued dreams for the future.

These Elysian dreams generally last until the next Sunday and then, usually, the rude awakening. The hour for service arrives; but where is the splendid galaxy of singers that rendered the practice so eminently worth while? It has sadly dwindled and the chorister finds it hard to keep his own patience and courage from doing likewise. Hoping against hope he tries to rally the depleted forces for the task ahead, only to find that the material necessary for the rendition of the work is lacking and the morale of the remainder has irretrievably suffered. The beautiful anthem upon which he lavished so much conscientious labor and upon which he had founded so much hope—the anthem that was to charm all who heard it and mark a distinctive era in the progress of the choir—had to be ingloriously abandoned; the child of hope perishing in despair.

An inquiry into whys and wherefores revealed a variety of excuses, none really satisfying, however. Sister Blank stayed home to cook the dinner; "You know Sunday dinner at our house is always the big meal of the week." Sister Contra felt "sorta tired" that morning and stayed home to rest. Sister Hinote found herself with a "cold" that morning and "just didn't dare tackle that solo" with her voice so stuffy. The two Jones girls bantered the young Brown maidens for a "short walk" after the Sabbath school service and the walk was so enjoyable that they "just stayed out" during the service. And so it went; none of them mindful of the fact that the Lord's work suffered by their delinquencies.

The trouble with those of this type is they lack true consecration. They accept the call to service in the choir and become duly enrolled members; and then they fail to realize that the obligation to serve is a real one, under which they actually rest. The sacredness of the promise given to serve is probably not granted more than a passing thought. When our choir members realize that their calling is a divine one, the duties therein truly sacred and holy and their obligations real before God, then their service will be more consecrated and results correspondingly greater.

Now for the second type which is, perhaps, the antithesis of the first type. In passing we may remark that the individuals of this type add their due proportion of the gray hairs that tend to cluster around the temples of the long-suffering chorister. They are not overly enthusiastic about attending the choir practices; they do not seem to take kindly to the work involved. There are no false hopes raised by them in the breasts of struggling choristers by their attendance at the practices, for if they come at all it is a signal occasion not likely to be too often repeated. But where they particularly manifest themselves is at the services. When the time comes for the choir to render the finished product; the time for sitting in the seats of honor; in short, when the opportunity to "show off" is at hand, they are there, ready to reap the rewards they have not earned; to partake in the successes the others have labored for and have made possible.

We cannot help but express our disapprobation of the individuals of this class. Not every individual is, of course, equally to be condemned, but the practice is one that should be discouraged. Choir members who are unwilling to engage with their fellow choir members in the labor necessary to prepare the song service, to bear their proportion of the brunt of this preparation, should not expect to sit in the honorable seats with the faithful and participate in the rewards of the diligent. Why should they crave to share in the fruits of labor in which they have not participated? The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer and these can have no right to the rewards and honors earned by the labor of others.

There is a decided element of harm that this type of delinquents may do, and it frequently is a very material factor in the rendition of the song service. These individuals come blithely into the choir on Sunday and attempt to sing in the service with those who have properly prepared it. Not feeling acquainted with the work as the chorister has developed it, they have to sing with a sense of real uncertainty, for they fear at any moment to find themselves in deep water. They cannot sing with the freedom and confidence that is so necessary to a proper rendition of the service and their uncertainty communicates itself to the others, thereby destroying the enthusiasm of the mass, which can only result in a lessening of the effectiveness of the service if not its failure.

We cannot do other than urge our choir members to take their work more seriously. What would become of "the latter-day work" if our ministry were to dawdle along, laboring only when they "felt like it"? Yet that is what some of our choir members actually do.

God has called our singers to his services and the work to which he has called them is a necessary and important service. Let them comprehend this and also that he will not hold them guiltless if they treat lightly his word and his work.

Churches to be Made Centers of Music

Music has taken a prominent place in the courses of the schools throughout the country. Educators have come to the appreciation of what the knowledge of good music means to the cultural development of the growing boy or girl.

A higher step in this field is now being taken by Doctor P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education. The church is an institution, which by virtue of its purpose is exempt from taxation. To more greatly aid the community which supports it, in the work of properly bringing up its young, it has been suggested that a series of concerts be given for the younger generation by every church which can boast of a good organ. The movement is entirely educational in its aim.

In speaking of the project, Doctor Claxton said, "In all the cities and larger towns of the United States there are hundreds and thousands of boys and girls who never hear good music. If they hear music at all it is of the ragtime or vaudeville type or the mechanical music of the moving picture theaters.

"Why should not every church in which there is a good organ and which has a competent organist open its doors freely to children between the ages of eight or nine to seventeen or eighteen for one hour every week, and arrange for its organist to render for the children the best music in his best style?

"In the name of fifteen million boys and girls living in our cities and towns, I appeal to pastors, priests, organists, and officers of the churches to give this suggestion a fair trial, and if the plan proves worthy, then to cooperate in making the weekly children's music hour a part of the program of all churches in urban communities."

Music a Natural Form of Expression

The latest phase in the development of the spreading of music in America is community singing. Community choruses have been formed in many cities all over the country, and thousands of people have become inspired with the joy of singing together. Witness the recent "Song and Light" Festival and Harry Barnhart's choruses in the park in New York. This idea of community singing was not imposed upon the masses. It was the logical outcome of the desire of the individual to express himself, spontaneously and untaught.

Man expresses himself in music from his infancy, but he is seldom aware of it nor does he trouble to check up the numerous occasions upon which he has burst forth in song. The babe in the crib gives forth melody before he speaks. The child at play sings. In the kindergarten the chief joy of the child is singing with his fellows. The mother rocks her infant to sleep with a lullaby. The man hums, whistles, or sings at work. When man gathers at the festive board, he sings. In time of war, man gives expression to his strong emotions in patriotic songs. It is his natural form of expression.

A prominent educator has remarked that the mission of music is not complete until it has reached every fireside. Sing if you feel joyous, we are told. Do not be backward. There is more singing going on in the world than we are aware of. The desire to sing is becoming keener, and with the growth of the community chorus, more pent-up spirits are finding an outlet for expression. That this form of choral singing, natural and unstudied, is filling a long-felt gap and need, is emphatically demonstrated by the rapid growth of community spirit in singing. The call of music, not of war, is destined to lure men to its temple of worship, after the period of world unrest has passed into history.

Choristers and Choir Work

Upon first thought this subject presented to my mind our branch choristers and choirs, I suppose for the reason that I have been associated with such work only, until recently; but I believe there is room for improvement in choir work in both Sunday school and Religio, and these organizations require different suggestions and methods.

In the Sunday school, for instance, the chorister has a chance to use the younger members as a choir and get them interested; and also to encourage orchestra work. Children, as a rule, love to sing and even though they sing mostly in unison, such singing may develop talent in unexpected places. They are usually taught to read music in the public schools, and in those who are fortunate enough to receive private lessons upon voice or instrument the improvement is usually more noticeable. Let the chorister try it out; let the junior and intermediate grades lead the singing for the Sunday school. Our Zion's Praises is well supplied with suitable songs, and with practice and the help of the older singers the more difficult numbers could be rendered.

Give the children every possible chance to work and become interested; and if practicable place some one in charge of this work who is not already overburdened with other church work, for each department of God's work requires study, effort, and time, and above all, perseverance; and withal, the frequent and sincere use of the medium through which we may receive divine help—prayer.

The department of praise in the Religio is developed in a different way. The chorister of the Religio has duties outlined in the constitution and by-laws, such as choosing suitable music for the services and serving as chairman of the music committee. The duties of this committee are to prepare music for the various programs, and as no program is complete without music this committee has a task for each Religio session in the year. If there is a class of young people let them lead the singing for the opening service. Music without leadership is apt to be lifeless; time, spirit, and expression are the fundamental requirements to good singing and good music.

There is so much to the work of the chorister other than merely selecting the songs for the service and directing the singing of them. He should be continually on the look-out for talent in musical lines and he should try to get such talent interested in Sunday school and Religio work.

Choir work cannot be made a success unless each member sees the need of prompt and regular attendance at rehearsals as well as at services. It also means individual work at home whenever such is necessary. Indeed, this work we are engaged in requires individual work particularly, for only in this way can we earn our salvation. If through personal and faithful work we each did our part, what a glorious work this would be, not only to us who are interested but to those who observe us. In closing, I give the following quotation; the words impressed themselves on my mind but I cannot give the author: "Do the thing we are doing now, better. Let us study our work and learn how to do it better."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5220 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Are These the Mothers of Your Children?

Criticism is a great caustic. There are two kinds, *con-*structive and destructive. Constructive criticism is the caustic that eats out the gangrene and poison from anything and then heals it. Destructive criticism is too much of a good thing—carbolic acid poured on a raw cut, destroying, not healing.

It requires a great deal of will power for a person to put caustic on a sore. It requires a great deal of will power for a man or woman to look at himself squarely and see himself as others see him. How many mothers do you know who can look at themselves in the light of their holy office and say, "Am I a mother to my child?" "Am I living up to the fullest to the purposes for which God has created and endowed me?"

There is nothing, perhaps, which more people unpreparedly stumble into and haphazardly undertake than marriage and parenthood! How many little children have come into the world and have grown up without knowing a real mother! Oh, no, I didn't mean an orphan in the literal sense of the word. There was some one who kept him clean and fed, and then complacently sat back and thought her duty done. Do you need any caustic? Can you find the poison and apply the cleanser and healer?

Real mothers long for the confidence of their children. And every real mother has it, too. When the little child is born and begins to develop, the thing he knows and loves best is mother. When he gets older, he finds many—oh, so many—things he doesn't know about. He's in a wonderful world—full of strange, wonderful things. To whom but mother should he run with his eager, curious questions—his desire for knowledge? Oh, mother, has your little child come to you with eager questions only to meet, "Oh, I haven't time, dear; run and play"? If so, be sure that his confidence in you begins right then to wane.

Then—he's made something—a wonderful castle—a mud pie—anything. Mother must see! And again, "Oh, I haven't time." Oh, mothers, take time for your child. If you have to let things go—don't lose your chance for real comradeship with your child. If he asks you questions, really wanting to know, tell him if you can. If you don't know, tell him so, and suggest you try to find out together. You cannot disregard his confidences in his childhood and then expect to regain them in his adolescence. Some day you'll suddenly awaken to find your little tot gone, and a stranger with you, one whom you cannot approach or help in the crisis through which he may be passing.

When it is rainy and your little one has to go to school, you put raincoat and rubbers on him. You safeguard him against the things which menace his physical life. How many of you think to prepare him for the things which menace his moral and spiritual life? When his first contact with the world (school) comes—have you prepared him for what he'll surely meet then? In any group of children, great though the pity of it is, there are always those who have been neglected or wrongly brought up. To your little innocent child come whispers of wrongly-interpreted things, evils that begin like the tiny speck of rot in an apple and continue until the damage cannot be estimated.

This is one of the most neglected things on God's footstool! A little child comes to his mother, truly wanting to hear the story of life. He gets, instead, some fairy tale about storks, doctors, and the like, tales which fool him only for a few years. When he hears these things spoken evilly of by other people, what can he believe? First, "Mother lied about it, therefore it must be true that it is bad." Thus begins the tiny speck of rot. And where does it lead? Light men and women; contempt for the thoughts of home and parenthood; confidence eternally lost in his mother. Are you the mother of that child? Oh, don't be! It is so easy, it is so wonderful to tell the true story to a little child. Answer his questions truthfully—you can—in a wonderful, beautiful way. One of the sacred memories of my life is the time I told my little sister. I can see her big blue eyes filled with the wonder and joy of it and her remark, "Oh, sister, and some day—I can be a mother!" A little tot, six years old. Awe and wonder and holy joy in her face. Have you missed that?

One time I heard a mother say, "I'll conquer that child if I have to kill it." She did conquer it, too; was it a commendable thing? No, decidedly not! A great, large woman with a strap arrayed against a little, tiny child with a will—that valuable something the mother should be trying to cultivate and direct. After two hours the little one finally gave in. What was gained? Why should the mother seek to conquer him, and break his will?

No child is "mean" and very few are "bad." Just analyze their "meanness" and see if it is not rather misplaced or misdirected energy. Instead of punishing, try to direct his energy in a legitimate channel. Little children are bundles of nervous energy. They have to keep moving—must keep satisfying their inborn curiosity—in order to grow and develop. Have something for them to do. Every mother who has had a kindergarten training is fortunate, for she may use its methods of developing her child through play.

Teachers prepare themselves for their work through special training. So, also, do stenographers, nurses, clerks, and all the professions. But how many girls prepare themselves for wifehood and motherhood? Yet nine out of every ten become wives and mothers. How many girls know about proper household management, sanitation, preparation of the right food and clothing? Last and greatest, how many can properly care for children? When the world awakens to the need for this knowledge, and girls are trained for their future life and boys for theirs—then there will be fewer hospitals, almshouses, insane asylums, cemeteries, divorces, and immoral lives.

There are many good books on occupations and play for children. Get some things from a kindergarten supply house, and use the principles to keep your children happily occupied. You will have little trouble about discipline, then.

Don't "yell" and scream at your children. Don't threaten them and then fail to live up to the threat. Never, never punish them while you are angry. If you cannot control yourself, how can you control a little child? Some day, the next time your children are cross and hard to manage—watch your voice and see if it hasn't unconsciously become loud and shrill. At each rise in pitch, the children's crossness increases with it. Try speaking in a quiet, modulated voice to them. It surely has a magical effect in the school-room! If the child has done something needing punishment, don't have this attitude: "He's been mean, therefore I'll punish him." But rather this, "He has done wrong and I must help him that he may not do that again." Talk it over with the child. Be sure he knows why he's being punished. Never threaten when you know you cannot carry out your threats. Every child can distinguish between right and wrong if you have done your duty and explained clearly and patiently. If he willfully does wrong or breaks a law, he must suffer for it, of course. That is a law of nature. Teach him that and he will not need threats.

Last but not least, there is another duty and joy for the mothers of children in our church. Don't let your child grow up in ignorance concerning the beautiful principles of the gospel. Teach them to him and he will love them. Teach him to reverence the house of the Lord and you will not have cause for shame in his conduct in church. Teach him to love and revere old age. Teach him to hunt and find the best things in life, work and service, with and for others. Teach him to keep his soul and body clean and to "do unto others." Be a comrade with him all his life. Study with him, be young with him, grow and develop with him. Help him to expand and make use of the talents and powers within him. Above all, help him to become an independent, thinking creature.

If you can do this, then you are a mother. If you haven't thus far, can you begin now to apply the caustic? "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." And what greater workman has our Father ever created than a mother?

Our Year Book Supplement

Our executive officers are wishing that more of the sisters in various parts of the country would send for copies of the Supplement they have recently published. Many locals have shown that they truly try to keep in close touch with the workings of the general organization by promptly ordering their supply of these supplements. They have no doubt felt repaid because of the added information they have received therefrom.

Others have not yet availed themselves of this opportunity to inform themselves concerning the changes and the progress the general organization is making. As a society we are, of necessity, in a state of development, and that we have found it profitable to change our plans, from time to time, indicates that we have attempted to keep up in some degree with the rapid strides that are being made by the church as a whole. These changes should be understood by every local in the church, and the names of the women who are placed in positions of oversight and responsibility in carrying forward the various departments we sponsor, should be familiar to auxiliary members throughout the land.

The Supplement has a list of such names and addresses, which is fairly complete, and fewer mistakes and delays would occur undoubtedly, if every member of our organization possessed one and would consult it. We are constantly in receipt of letters which come to us through misapprehension, being plainly intended for the general secretary, the president, the treasurer, or other officer.

Th general aims and purposes of the various departments of our work are quite clearly touched upon in the Supplement. A perusal of these outlines will give you an idea of what the Woman's Auxiliary stands for, its place in the church institution, and somewhat of its hopes and plans. Its leaders desire that the women of the church, shall, through the influence of this society, be "affected most favorably in their home life, their social concourse, and intellectual development."

The Supplement contains messages from our honorary president, Sister Frederick M. Smith, our president, Sister David J. Krahl, and the supervisors of our various bureaus. Each of the latter group gives a short sketch of what she is offering to the members, and seeks to arouse interest in her line. Sister Glines, as head of the educational work, has gradually developed quite comprehensive plans for study, and has gathered about her a corps of excellently qualified assistants. Sister Helen Silsbee Smith gives a very clearly defined and practical outline of work for the Relief and Service department, while Sisters Wight and Burgess do the same for the Child and Home Welfare, and the Young Women's Departments respectively.

A few pages of general information are included, touching upon various activities and accomplishments of interest to women, and the Supplement closes with presenting the constitution and by-laws of the Auxiliary, as amended at the last convention.

May we thus, again, call the attention of the sisters everywhere to this little pamphlet? Its cost is trivial (fifteen cents per copy postpaid), but your possessing one would put you in touch with what our organization of women are trying to do, and would also proclaim you as energetic, alive to opportunity, and alert to the spirit of progress which is permeating our church at the present time.

Send your orders direct to our general secretary, Mrs. John A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Notice About Funds

Will all classes, clubs, circles, or societies of the Woman's Auxiliary please send their assessments or donations to the General Treasurer, Mrs. F. H. Esgar, 700 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri? Orders are sent to those who have been officers but who are not now connected with the Woman's Auxiliary. This has caused delay and in some instances it has been necessary to send for duplicate orders, as postal money orders are outdated in thirty days.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, General Secretary.

Central Michigan District

The Auxiliary of Central Michigan District met in convention at time of the regular district conference, at Beaverton, Michigan, in September. This ended the first year of our work as a district organization, and a gain was shown of four new locals for the year. We hope at the close of the coming year, to be able to report greater activities.

Sister E. L. Pringle was unanimously reelected president of the district, and her untiring efforts under unfavorable circumstances during the past year justify the choice.

The ministerial force of the district gave us much splendid support and encouragement at our meetings, thus heartening those of our officers who have found some uphill work and unpleasant features connected with their duties.

The use of the Methodist Episcopal church was given us for our auxiliary meetings, which courtesy was greatly appreciated.

HENRIETTA H. FORBES, Secretary.

Ginger Cure for Pneumonia

I am sending a simple remedy which is a cure for the worst case of pneumonia. It may also break up the "flu." I have used it in several cases of pneumonia, and it proved a cure, without even calling a doctor. It will not interfere with other medicines, and acts quickly in scattering congestion, and breaking fever. I feel sure it will do much good to those who are suffering.

1 teaspoonful dry ginger.

1 teaspoonful sugar.

Make into tea, let settle, and drink while hot.

Keep the body well-covered. Apply poultices made as follows:

2 tablespoonsful ginger.

2 tablespoonsful flour.

Mix with water; heat; make two poultices; place one on the chest, and one on the back, nearest the pain.

Repeat this every hour, until pain and fever are gone.

The Auxiliary's Part in the Midwinter Institutes

The Woman's Auxiliary will be represented in the new institute movement the coming midwinter, and preparations are being made for handling the work of our bureaus as well as some other features that have been planned.

We believe the institute idea will be beneficial because of its directness and its personal contact with the workers which always begets enthusiasm; and we should be engaged in this work with earnestness and zeal—with the assurance that every effort is needed to forward this great cause. Shall any of us be slackers in these days of great moment when a world is to be reshaped, nations are to be rebuilt, and social systems reconstructed?

Our work needs to be more widely understood, and we are calling upon our organizers in this general way as well as by personal correspondence to take upon them this service of institute team representative for the Woman's Auxiliary, and we wish you to advise us according to the following:

Can you arrange to serve for full length of institute season, from three to four weeks in January, in territory adjacent to your home location?

Can you arrange for two weeks' service?

Can you arrange for one week's service?

Also other women who are consecrated to the work and have the time and inclination to prepare for this service, will they please advise us what length of time they could arrange to travel doing this work?

Each general supervisor is preparing an outline for the presentation of the work of her bureau; this will be material for study and preparation on the part of the team worker and will be in their hands in sufficient time for their perusal.

All traveling expenses are to be met by the district or stake receiving the benefit of the institute work.

The sections of country to be covered by the institute are as follows:

1. New England States, including New York and Philadelphia District.

2. Western New York, and Pennsylvania, Ohio, and the Wheeling District.

3. Eastern Canada.

4. Michigan and Northern Indiana.

5. Southern Indiana, Central and Southeastern Illinois, Saint Louis and Northeastern Missouri Districts, also Kentucky and Tennessee.

6. Kewanee District, Nauvoo District, and Northeastern Illinois.

7. Southern Wisconsin and Eastern Iowa.

8. Northern Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas.

9. Iowa districts and Nebraska districts.

10. Far West, Independence, Holden, and Kansas City Stakes.

11. Kansas districts and Spring River District.

12. North Pacific Coast.

13. South Pacific Coast.

14. Western Canada, if they want it.

Room for more if they are wanted and can be arranged.

This is a valuable opportunity for introducing our work and for encouraging those who have started in it.

May the way be opened for all who desire to assist, and great good be accomplished. Please advise me if you will be able to serve in this movement by November 23; it is important to have your reply by this date.

Trusting all are diligently doing their part,

Your coworker,

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Vision

A lady seated in her quiet room, in dreamy meditation, was communing with God and her own heart, and as the reveries were prolonged, a panorama or vision was presented to her that was of startling significance.

She first beheld a landscape in all its pristine glory, its trees, flowers, grasses, hills, and vales were after the Edenic pattern, as beautiful as when they first left the hand of the Creator.

It appeared to be a Sabbath morning. The sheen and brightness of early summer was spread over all nature. The sweet perfume of flowers filled the air, and the warbling of birds, in the leafy boughs, pleasantly mingled with the chiming of Sabbath bells. All lent a peaceful sanctity to the scene.

The lady saw workmen with their families, neatly attired, coming from different directions, their faces aglow with pleasant, holy anticipation of Sabbath joys. They met their friends with a cheery "good morning," and friendly hand-shake; then together wended their ways to the near-by house of God. Instinctively, the lady murmured, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

These happy groups all seemed to realize that they were members of one great family, bound together by ties they did not forge and could not break them if they would, and were all joined in the sacred mission of worshiping God and helping one another.

But suddenly this peaceful, harmonious scene changed to one of dejection and misery.

SECOND SCENE

A dark shadow seemed to overspread the sky, and the lady beheld a personage of very forbidding and repulsive aspect, who by his words and gestures proclaimed himself to be none other than the archdeceiver of our race, Satan, prince of darkness. As he looked upon the ideal scene around him, his features became distorted with rage, and calling to some of his followers who were near, he pointed out to them the peaceful environments of the community. He then commenced a tirade of abuse against them, for their shortcomings in their (his) master's service. He bid them to put forth every energy to counteract God's perfect work.

"See," quoth he, "that psalm-singing and sanctimonious crowd on their way to the house of God. I would much prefer to see them on their way to yonder saloon. When I invented intoxicating liquors, I thought it all-sufficient to lead men's souls to perdition, but I was mistaken, and something more must be done; something that will affect them unperceived. They are a little wary of strong drink because its effect is too visible and sudden." Said he, "This earth belongs to me by right of conquest. Why does he torment me before my time?"

For awhile this personage walked back and forth in sulen and deep thought, then stopped, and striking his hands together, danced in Satanic glee, exclaiming, "Eureka, I have found it, I have found it."

THIRD SCENE

The lady now beheld the Evil One going forth as a sower. He carried with him a small seed that he called tobacco. Said he, "I expect great results from this small beginning. This will appear harmless to men at first. Then gradually, but imperceptibly, the appetite for its use will be formed, and it will cause a thirst that only strong drink will appease. We must commence with the children."

The scene again changed. The dark deed is done.

FOURTH SCENE

Now the lady looks with astonishment upon the blighted hills and plains and flowering vales. All seemed blighted and desecrated by a noxious and poisonous weed in addition to the thorns and briars of the original curse. The grandeur, the sublimity, the delightful sights and sounds had departed. The sky was dark and dreary. The wind moaned through the trees. There seemed to be a pall over the once happy villages. Children were no longer neatly dressed, but were ragged, shoeless, and forlorn. Tobacco stores could be seen in every direction, and ninety per cent of male inhabitants in city, town, or country patronized them. Factories soon sprang up where men, women, and children were employed to prepare the weed for commerce. This was one way in which the people became used to the sickening odor, and soon learned to like the weed.

The churches were abandoned, except by women and children. The men were usually to be found standing around cigar stores and street corners, smoking, chewing, and exhaling the filthy odor into the faces of passersby.

The tobacco habit is a bane to everything good, destroying the sinner or the spiritual life, kindling all those low passions in poor, weak humanity. We see many of every rank in life, high or low, who seem equally under the influence of the destroyer. Times are greatly changed; iniquity abounds in high, as well as in low places, and the love of many had already waxed cold.

It brings to mind the words of Paul to his beloved Timothy, that the times would come when evil and seducers would wax worse and worse.

There soon sprang up new and strange diseases, hitherto unknown to medical science. One disease especially virulent was cancer at the root of the tongue, or on the lips, caused by excessive use of tobacco. Another was tobacco heart from the same cause.

Mothers, whose dearest hopes and fondest desires concentrated in their sons, were compelled to see them blear-eyed and weak kneed from their birth, owing to inherent narcotic poison in their systems.

In the vision, the lady saw many who were of Christian parents, even many who had been buried with Christ in baptism, and upon whose heads had been placed the hands of the priesthood in confirmation, who had so far forgotten their vows as to receive this mark of the beast in their hands, and upon their heads.

As the lady contemplated the depravity of her race, she felt sick and faint of heart, and in anguish of spirit, she cried, "How long, O Lord, till He comes whose right it is to reign?"

Then thinking of her own son she felt comforted for a moment, for she was sure he was proof against the prevailing evil. But turning again to the passing scene, she saw her boy standing by the fire resting his elbow on the mantel, and his fingers clasping a cigar.

At sight of him she sprang to her feet, and from her heart she uttered the prayer, "Father, spare me so great a sorrow!"

As she did this, the vision departed and she was alone. But she felt in her soul that her idol had fallen and crumbled to dust at her feet. And so it proved upon investigation.

Roll of Honor

*	*	*	*

The great majority of our good schools have been closed because of the influenza epidemic. Many have been closed for four and five weeks. This is to be regretted, as it has been a hindrance to us in our work, but we should not permit this to retard our efforts, neither should we allow it to hinder our progress toward the goal—$100,000. We may have to enter into the work with even more enthusiasm, work harder and even sacrifice more, but we feel sure that every one of us will be willing to do this for the sake of the success of this movement. If we will do this God will surely bless our efforts with success.

Some of our schools do not seem to understand that to be placed on the Roll of Honor they should report to us the name of the school, location, number enrolled, and amount of offering to date, or if preferred they may simply state that they are over the $2 per member mark. Only those reporting thus since October 1 can be listed on the roll, for it would be very tedious to go back over all the correspondence prior to that date and read through all the letters in order to find out who were entitled to be listed.

We want you to report your standing; we trust that you will do so; for every school reporting will add just that much to the interest and will add zest and enthusiasm to others who are working hard to gain their goal.

It is expected that the ban will soon be lifted, as the epidemic seems to be fairly well under control now. It is our hope and desire that every school will make an earnest effort to make their offering at least equal the amount that they would have given had their schools not been closed—in fact, we should be able to give more, for while the schools have been closed all places of amusement were closed, and we should have saved many a penny, nickel, and dime—and can we not offer this saving? Why should we not? Surely it will do far greater good in lifting the debt from our church than it would if given for candy and ice cream or in attending the shows. Think this over, count up what you would have spent under normal conditions and add the amount to the amount you would have given every Sunday and let us see if we cannot put every Sunday school much nearer the $2 per member mark.

Sandwich, Illinois. Sister Eliza R. Wright, reporting for this school, writes: "We observed mothers', fathers', and girls' days as best we could. We have but few mothers in our school and not one single father is a member. Our boys and girls day we combined with a rally day and the collection was very good indeed. We have an enrollment of 29 in the main school and set our aim at $150, and am proud to say we went 'over the top' some time before October 1."

This good school divided into sides and arranged for a contest, the side having the least amount of offering by December 15, is to entertain the winners. They only have nine families represented in their good little school, but they are evidently workers. May God bless them in their further efforts.

Ravenwood, Missouri. Miss Fay Gates in writing of the home department work mentions offering for the Ravenwood (Sweet Home) Sunday school. Sister Gates writes:

"Our Sunday school has an enrollment of about thirty. By the first of July we had $100 which we put on interest for the remaining six months. The first of October the hands on our clock stood at $119. We have our mark set at $200. As stake home department superintendent, I am doing my best in trying to urge and encourage the local superintendents to help see that the home departments do their bit toward helping make the goal of $100,000. Four of our boys are in France."

We are very glad indeed to have this report from Sister Gates, but have wondered why we have not heard from the superintendent of this good school.

Logan, Iowa. Sister Cora Kirkwood reports: "We have long ago passed our $2 per member mark and are not expecting to stop yet. Our enrollment is 109 and our aim is high for this 1918 Christmas offering." Here is a school that has succeeded splendidly, and God has surely blessed them because of earnest efforts. We have received much encouragement from the good officers of this school.

McGregor, Michigan. Sister Jennie M. Booth writes: "Our school has worked to reach its aim with a spirit of determination, and has given its offering willingly for the Master's work. We passed the $2 per member mark in the month of September. We have an enrollment of 78 members including home class and cradle roll, and our offering to date is $337.27. We are also pleased to report that our school is not inclined to stop here. The Lord has surely blessed us with his Spirit in all our efforts to assist." When we read these good letters, all of which tell of the blessings they have received, it makes us feel that we want to double our efforts. We hope it will have the same effect on all the schools.

Brentwood Sunday school, Webster Groves, Missouri. Brother C. Roy Remington gives us some news from this school: "One of our dear little girls, Josephine Moreland, has fallen victim to the influenza and has been called from this life. She had just passed her sixth birthday and was a good little worker for the Sunday school and Christmas offering. Her folks have had a great deal of sickness throughout the year, to say nothing of the sacrifice of a son to his country's call, and hence it was by hard work this little tot got her pennies for the Sunday school. After she passed away they found she had carefully tucked away in a little box, eight pennies for Christmas offering. We are working hard and with a zeal that will surpass all obstacles. We hope when the quarantine is lifted—because of the influenza —that we can make up for all lost time. We have passed the $2 per member mark and our enrollment is 43. Ever praying for the advancement of God's work and working for it, too." There is a splendid lesson in the act of our little worker who has passed on and we are very glad Brother Remington was so thoughtful as to report this to us. We are proud of the good work this school is doing for we happen to know that they have not worked under the best of conditions, yet they are prospering and God has been with them.

A Word of Eulogy

We were indeed pained to learn of the demise of our beloved and worthy Brother Rudolph Etzenhouser. He had many true and good friends in all the places that he had visited as one of the leading missionaries of the church, and had served the church for thirty-nine years in that capacity. He was one of our extraordinary preachers.

There never was a more economical and sacrificing minister than he—not a drop of lazy blood in his body. He was a hard worker and put in full time; a great student; a man acquainted with deep sorrow and grief.

He labored for many years under the writer as assistant minister in charge. He never had to be watched as he was ever true to the trust committed to his care. I have known him since the fall of 1879. He traveled with me when he first started out in the general ministry, and I never was associated with a more congenial fellow servant in all my ministerial experience.

Hundreds of people have been made to rejoice in many parts of the world through the great sacrifices and hard labor of the deceased, as it was through his untiring efforts that they were brought in contact with the gospel of Jesus Christ, and those people truly appreciate it, and will never forget our departed brother. We feel confident that his soul is at rest in the paradise of God with many of his brethren with whom he had been associated on this earth, in the ministry.

We will miss him. The church has lost an able defender of the truth, a true and faithful servant. Peace be to his ashes.

A Conversation on Baptism

On the train from Edmonton to Calgary, the following conversation took place between Thomas Bates, a Latter Day Saint, and Reverend Adjutant Johnstone, of Edmonton. I will write L. for Latter Day Saint, and S. for Salvation Army.

L. What is your belief?

S. We believe in God the Father and Jesus Christ; also we believe he is a Supreme Being; also that Christ died on Calvary. We believe in faith and obedience to the principles of Christ's doctrine, but we don't believe in baptism as essential to salvation.

L. Why don't you believe in baptism as essential to salvation?

S. Oh, well, you see it was for them in the apostles' day; not for us nowadays.

L. Why was it for them in those days, and not for us? You know James makes the statement that Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, in which there is no variability nor shadow of changing.

S. Oh, you see, young man, (whoever you are, you seem very intelligent) that we do not have the material for baptism nowadays.

L. What do you mean when you say we do not have the material for baptism nowadays? Is there not plenty of water, the same as in those days?

(No answer.)

L. Why should Christ, when baptized, say, "Suffer it to be so to fulfill all righteousness"?

S. Oh, well, you see he was baptized before dying on Calvary, and when he died he shed his blood for our sins.

L. Why did the apostles preach baptism?

S. Are you sure they did?

L. Yes. Paul speaks about it a great many times, and if you are versed in Scripture you must admit that.

S. Yes, I admit that they did. But you know you don't have to be baptized now. If God works with you and wants you to be baptized, by all means do it; but with another man he won't want him to be baptized. God wanted me; he showed me I was to join the army and I wanted to be an officer, so here I am. My station is here, my friend. Good-by.

We Are Making Progress

It is good to be able to report that the literature move is making progress, and those who are helping in this work should be encouraged in the thought that much is being accomplished even by the humblest effort, for a small and single seed sown to-day may become a big forest in due time. Some of us will hear the words: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many." There are many friendly hearts in the world, and often the literature worker discovers more than one in a day's effort tracting. This discovery was not made by placing a tract under a door, but by ringing the bell, if the law does not prevent, and meeting one of God's creatures face to face and offering a tract or paper.

It is well to bear in mind that in some cities we are not allowed to ring bells or call people to the door for the purpose of handing them literature. It is not lawful in any place to deposit reading matter in mail boxes, unless it is done by the mail man. Always make it a point to learn the different restrictions. In Providence one cannot pass literature on the street. In Plymouth it is forbidden to call people to the doors for such purpose as giving tracts. In Somerville matter can be placed where it will not blow on the streets. It is far more satisfactory, bigger in results, economy, and business principle to get in personal touch with the persons we hope to interest in our church literature. This method will reveal to us how many persons are desirous of studying about the restored gospel. We are often pleasantly surprised, let me assure you. It is God's work, therefore, whosoever desires to thrust in his sickle and work in the field of gospel literature, the same is called of God.

R. W. FARRELL.

BAY CITY, WASHINGTON, November 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: How good it would be if some of our ministers could visit some of our training camps and hold services. How I do miss the dear Saints; for months it went hard with me, having no church papers, and for some reason, no letters. But thank God, he has stretched forth his hand of love and mercy again for me, and now I receive many loving, heart-cheering, soul-awakening letters, and now my HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves are coming fast and I feel God's hand is again stretched forth in power and love for me.

I am in the aero section of the National Army, now stationed six miles from Bay City, Washington, getting out spruce for airplanes.

I wish to thank all the Saints for their love and help given to me in their letters and papers, hoping I will continue to hear from them.

Your brother,

PRIVATE THOMAS W. PRICE.

63d Spruce Squadron, Camp D-1.

KEARNEY, NEBRASKA, November 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: We enjoy reading the good letters in the church papers, as we are isolated and do not have the association of Saints. The church papers are our source of help in keeping in touch with the progress of the work.

At present we are engaged as a teacher at the State Industrial School for boys, at Kearney, Nebraska, coming here from the Boys' Industrial School at Lansing, Michigan.

As usual, when transferring from one school to another, we always try to see if we can find any Latter Day Saints. So far, we have been unable to find a single member in the town. We wonder why some of the members do not engage in this line of work. In all of our experience in State school work, we have not met a single member employed in the school; but we are glad to report that we have carefully investigated the roll of boys, and have never found a Latter Day Saint child among them. This speaks well for our church, and we hope we may never see a Latter Day Saint boy an inmate in the reform school.

There are good opportunities for any Saint at the schools to get different employment; also good chances to teach and train the boys in the right way.

If anyone who wishes to engage in this line of work will write us, we will gladly explain full details. It is a nice place to work. The work is easy and wages are good. It is a good chance to do a good work.

We are teaching and have a company of forty boys. They did not have any Sunday school when we came in this grade. The boys in our family range in age from seventeen to twenty-one years of age. We organized a Sunday school, and the boys enjoy it so well they all want to be teacher. It is wonderful how easy they are taught, and how they grasp the plain truth. We have the privilege of teaching them as we understand the gospel. They all say when they return to their homes they will not miss a chance to go and hear the Latter Day Saints preach, and if possible attend our Sunday school.

Ever praying for the advancement of the work,

Your sister in the one faith,

MARY V. TWYMAN.

NEBRASKA STATE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

[Elder A. E. Stone writes from Willoughby, Ohio, under date of November 4, as follows]:

The restrictions placed by the health officers upon public gatherings has had its effect upon us missionaries. It has in a way cut down our reports. Preaching services have been very few during the past month. Visiting from house to house has been forbidden. But every opportunity afforded to present the word or do what might fall to the lot of an elder, has been taken care of. You will notice by my report that over four hundred visitors have visited the old historic house [Kirtland Temple], which has afforded me almost unprecedented opportunities for presenting our side of the truth to people who seemingly come as sightseers, but are, after being talked with for a season, interested listeners to the trials incident to the building of the Temple and establishing the work of God by those early pioneers of the greatest work ever intrusted to man. The work seems to appeal to me very much.

[Excerpt from letter from Elder A. H. Mills, San Bernardino, California, November 4, 1918]:

After administering to and visiting nearly every family in the branch and seeing that all the sick were well on the road to recovery, I followed the fashion myself, and came down with the "flu" last Wednesday. Did not have a hard case and am beginning to sit up; but, to use the oft-heard prayer meeting phrase, "I feel my weakness."

It is clearly manifest that God has fulfilled his promise to the Saints here, for they have only been afflicted lightly by the passing scourge, much more so than the outside world. It is a matter of comment and felicitation among the Saints.

[Excerpt from letter from Elder E. B. Hull, Attleboro, Massachusetts, November 4, 1918]:

We had our first sacrament service in two months yesterday. It was well attended. One was present that was snatched from death's door by the mercy of God. There was a total of ninety-eight deaths from the epidemic in this city in the last few weeks. All things are settling down to normal again, but on the street you can meet people who are trying to recuperate—some sad sights. A few miles above this city is a sanitarium where they bring soldiers from the war that are afflicted with shell-shock. One day a group of them were found marching through the country miles away from the home, and they did not know where they were. When they were stopped, they said they were on the road to the trenches, and they had to hurry.

Our activities are in full swing again. To-night our choir sings at the city Community Fellowship meeting.

We are making arrangements to have Brother Augustine Dwyer visit this city and deliver a series of his famous lectures.

[Excerpt from letter from Elder Matthew W. Liston, Flint, Michigan, November 5, 1918]:

The influenza is abating here. The present outlook is good for the ban to be lifted now in a few days so by Sunday we can have meetings. Am glad to say that thus far not one of our members has died during the scourge. Several have had it and some were very sick, but after administration relief was given and nearly all are well at the present time.

When the ban was first put on the city here, the Spirit of God enveloped me like a mantel or cloak. That Spirit has gone with me into the sick room where our people were suffering and through that we can account for the blessings we have received. I truly have been blessed while an instrument in God's hands of blessing others.

DIXFIELD, MAINE, November 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been very much interested in the letters from the brothers and sisters in other States, and thought perhaps they might be interested to know that there is a small branch of Latter Day Saints in the town of Dixfield, Maine.

The work here was organized by Elder Sheehy and Apostle U. W. Greene, about thirty years ago, and the members soon numbered about twenty-five. The branch flourished for some time under the management of the following officers: M. W. Blanchard, E. E. Holman, elders; J. Toule, teacher; and George T. Porter, deacon.

Later on the work was discontinued, and for several years there were only occasional meetings.

About a year ago Elder Greene came among us again, and upon his departure, Elder H. A. Koehler held services for a few weeks. As a result, four united with the church, among them my husband and myself. One of the others who joined at the same time, received the call to the colors this summer and is now at Camp Devens, Ayer, Massachusetts, awaiting the call overseas.

Last May, Elder Koehler came again and held a series of meetings, preaching in Dixfield, Peru, and Dryden. No one joined at this time, but the interest was good and those who had previously accepted the gospel felt strengthened and encouraged to press on.

The first of June we organized a Sunday school. The interest was very good until the epidemic made it necessary to close it for this season. The indications are that we may be able to go "over the top" on the Christmas offering.

Yours in the work,

MAY WHITNEY PORTER.

U. S. NAVAL HOSPITAL, FORT LYON, COLORADO,
November 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have just read President Frederick M. Smith's address, "Will he find faith on the earth?" and the appeal to the Saints on their part for a live, practical, working faith in the men God has chosen to bring to pass his purposes on earth, is certainly reasonable and scriptural. The comforting influence of the Spirit present with me while reading this address confirms the verdict of my judgment. And again, did tears of joy blind my eyes as I read the letter from Elder I. N. White regarding the testimony given certain persons in Kansas City, of President Smith's divine call to the office he now occupies. This faith required by the Saints in the men who are leading, certainly is not a blind following of irresponsible leadership, as God will not leave us without a personal witness, if we faithfully and earnestly give them our best and determined support.

This is my first letter to the HERALD, but I just felt to write you of the assurance I have received that God is watching over his church, and so long as those chosen to lead are humble and prayerful, we can well walk by faith.

I belong to Uncle Sam's navy, having enlisted at Salt Lake City, in the hospital corps, July 2, 1917. After six months' training at San Francisco, California, was transferred for duty to the United States Naval Tuberculosis Hospital, Fort Lyon, Colorado, where I have been continuously up to the present time. I have the privilege of meeting with a few loyal Saints at Las Animas almost every Sunday and frequently have the opportunity of visiting with the branch at Wiley, Colorado. However, during the last six weeks I have not been permitted to leave the hospital grounds, because of the influenza quarantine. Services up until last Sunday were held at the fort by the chaplain, but have been discontinued; also every Tuesday night the chaplain conducts a Bible class for any who care to attend. I have been going regularly, and while his interpretation of the Scriptures from a Latter Day Saint understanding seem rather strained and somewhat camouflaged at times, he appears to be earnest and sincere, and the ideals set before the men will certainly bring them nearer to Jesus, if they will but listen and endeavor to follow out his advice. In talking with him, I find he is broad-minded and tolerant of those who differ from him, which I judge is a necessary qualification for an army or navy chaplain, as they have so many different phases of religious belief in their congregations. I find but a very few among my associates who are willing to give the latter-even a little in telling neighbors and friends of this marvelous work and a wonder, can accomplish most profitable results.

Get a Dollar Library, become acquainted with the 34 tracts and the price list in it. Know the contents, the style, the special aim of each. Then see that others know the message of salvation you have heard.

This is the special mission of the gospel literature workers, but anyone can help in some way. It is important work and should be done right—but it should by all means be done.

In most places the boards are organized to carry on this highly-important work. If there is no such board in your community, yet you have a branch, Sunday school, or Religion, let us know.

Where boards are organized you may help them very much by your service and moral support as well as patronage.

One important feature of such a board's activities is a campaign to secure subscriptions to the church periodicals. It is a real accommodation to the Saints to have some one call and take care of the details for them, suggesting what is available, the offers to be had, the announcements being made, etc. In places where there is a book agent, work with him in this regard. If you want information along this line, write either the Herald Office or the Ensign Office and it will be forthcoming.

You have been warned: warn your neighbor. Do you have one of our instruction leaflets, sent free?

day message a serious and honest investigation, however there are many who may be classed as "good, honorable men of the world," and if they have an honest heart I suppose some day they will accept the Savior gladly and wholeheartedly.

The passing of the days strengthen my faith in this latter-day message, and of its ultimate triumph I have no fear.

Elder Joseph W. Smith from Western Nebraska and Black Hills to Kewanee District.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: I wish to inform all concerned that there has been a change in the bishopric of Northern California. Brother Edward Ingham has taken my place to handle the finances of the church. He is now acting as the Presiding Bishop's agent. You will therefore send your tithes, offerings, consecrations, and money to purchase land to him. I am still district treasurer, so please send your district collections to me.

I wish to thank the Saints for their kind and generous treatment, and trust you will give him as true a service in the observance of your duties to the church, as you have given me, and do more if possible. The closer you observe the divine law, the better it will be for you, here and hereafter.

Yours very sincerely in the gospel,

C. A. PARKIN.

Our Departed Ones

LANPHERE.—Thomas N. Lanphere passed away at his home in Seattle, Washington, October 28, 1918. He leaves mother, 3 sisters, and 3 brothers to mourn. Sermon by J. M. Terry, from Job 14: 14; John 5: 25-27.

LEWIS.—Oscar Edward Lewis was born April 22, 1862. Baptized in 1896. Died October 1, 1918, at Bonesteel, South Dakota. He leaves wife, 5 children, 4 brothers, and one sister, to mourn. Funeral from Saints' church, Levi Gamet officiating.

ANDERSON.—Andrew Anderson passed peacefully out of this life on October 16, 1918, at Seattle, Washington, at the early age of 33 years. Restricted services were held October 19, 1918, at the undertaker's chapel. Sister Barney, our organist, played beautiful music. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

EVANS.—Harold G. Evans, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Evans, great-grandchild of John R. Evans of Lucas, Iowa, born at Hillsboro, Illinois, April 19, 1918; died October 12, 1918, at Albia, Iowa. His twin brother died July 6, 1918. Leaves mother, father, and numerous other relatives to mourn.

CHESWORTH.—Catherine Chesworth was born July 4, 1886, in Berwick, Maine. Baptized August 11, 1905. Died October 15, 1918, at Fall River, Massachusetts. Was an active worker in the local Woman's Auxiliary. She nursed her two children safely through the epidemic and then succumbed, sacrificing her life for her loved ones. Sermon by H. W. Howlett. Interment in Oak Grove Cemetery.

BAYLESS.—Eula Jessie Bayless, daughter of Brother and Sister H. S. Bayless, of Terlton, Oklahoma, was born March 12, 1897, near Warrensburg, Missouri. Baptized September 25, 1907, by W. M. Aylor. Died November 4, 1918. There are left to mourn, a father, mother, 3 brothers, and 2 sisters. Funeral services at the Bayless home in Terlton, November 5. Sermon by D. Amos Yates.

DANIELS.—John, son of J. M. and Martha Daniels, of Pauline, Idaho, was born at Malad, October 29, 1896. Died at Camp Fremont, California, October 22, 1918. Was called to serve his country August 7, and departed for training August 16. He was loved and honored by all who knew him. Funeral services at Mountain View Cemetery, Malad, Idaho, October 27, in charge of E. E. Richards. Sermon by Willard Parkes.

STEWART.—Mary E. Stewart, daughter of Henry and Nancy Stewart, was born July 9, 1872, near Thurman, Iowa. Married Archibald M. Claiborn, April 26, 1899. To this union 3 children were born. The greater part of her life was spent in Iowa, although she resided for a few years in Missouri and Nebraska. She was an active member of the church, having been baptized by Henry Kemp, September 17, 1899. Death occurred after a long illness, October 22, 1918, in the Saint Joseph Hospital, Omaha, Nebraska. She leaves husband, 3 daughters, and many relatives and friends to mourn. Funeral services by A. Carmichael.

MCLAUGHLIN.—Eliza Jane, wife of Harvey McLaughlin, aged 55 years, died April 15, 1918, after many months' suffering. She became a member of the church several years ago and remained true to its teaching. Funeral at Saints' church at Vales Mills, Ohio. Sermon by Reverend Bozarth, of Wellston, Ohio.

TOMLINSON.—Minnie Delia Tomlinson was born at Rhodes, Michigan, June 29, 1888. Married July 14, 1908. Died November 10, 1918, at Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario, after an illness of two weeks. As she was a faithful worker in this part of God's vineyard, she will be missed by the Saints and her many friends and relatives. She leaves husband and 3 children to mourn.

COOK.—Martha J. Booker was born February 14, 1872. Baptized by G. R. Scogin. She married M. K. Harp, and after his death was married to Edward McPherson; but this union was also dissolved by the death of her husband. Subsequently she married N. S. Cook. Died October 26, 1918. She leaves husband and many relatives and friends to mourn. Burial at Lone Star, where in girlhood days she received the angel message. Sermon by T. C. Kelley.

ROGERS.—Ralph, son of Arthur and Armanda Rogers, was born May 31, 1895, at Jonesport. Baptized by U. W. Greene, July 19, 1910. Died in a base hospital September 30, 1918, Paris, France. When the United States entered the war Ralph enlisted in the Medical Corps, November 21, 1917, and immediately went to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, to train. He sailed for duty overseas about June 1, 1918. Somewhere in France he was Ward Master on Hospital Train 53. The first Jonesport boy to make the supreme sacrifice in France, and a fine example of America's true manhood. A worthy young Saint. Besides father and mother he leaves 2 sisters to mourn.

FRISBIE.—Berneda J. Frisbie was born October 27, 1904. Died October 27, 1918. She was stricken with pneumonia, and though she received the best of care and nursing, and administrations by the ministry, it was the Lord's will to take her home. Of amiable and loving disposition, and dearly loved by her family and a host of friends. Baptized on her eighth birthday. Funeral services at home of her parents, Brother and Sister Ray Frisbie, in Brooklyn, New York. Sermon by C. H. Rich.

MCLAUGHLIN.—Harvey McLaughlin was born March 30, 1859. Married Eliza Jane Perry, December 30, 1880. Baptized March 30, 1885, by L. R. Devore. Died November 8, 1918, of dropsy. In the office of teacher and superintendent of Sunday school, he served faithfully until sickness of himself and wife prevented his attending services. Since 1915 he has been president of Vales Mills, Ohio, Branch. Funeral at Saints' church at Vales Mills, Ohio, November 10, 1918. Sermon by Elder Burt of Zaleski, Ohio.

MORRISON.—Marietta Morrison was born November 21, 1894, at Keb, Iowa. Died November 1, 1918, at Salida, Colorado. United with the church in 1905 and was a faithful member. December 17, 1916, she married George M. Morrison, whose death occurred a few hours following hers, both dying with influenza. She leaves to mourn father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Williams, of LaJunta, Colorado, 3 brothers, and 3 sisters. Double funeral services were held at the Fair View Cemetery at LaJunta, November 6, 1918, O. E. Sade officiating.

WILSON.—Doris Eileen Wilson, daughter of Nelson and Predetta Wilson, was born June 12, 1915. Died September 30, 1918, of tubercular meningitis, at the family home, 169 Langside Street, Winnipeg, Canada. She was truly an angel child, for, young as she was, she loved the things pertaining to God best, but was permitted to remain with us only long enough to win the hearts of all with whom she came in contact. Then God recalled his own, leaving sad and aching hearts behind. Sermon by O. L. D'Arcy. Interment in Brookside Cemetery.

GAYLORD.—Elijah B., son of Elijah B. and Elizabeth Gaylord, born at Tabor, Iowa, April 18, 1851. In declining health since January, 1916. Brother Gaylord passed to his reward November 6, 1918. He was baptized at Manti, Iowa, May 29, 1864, by John Leeka. Married Mary T. Griffith, January 11, 1871. They removed to Shenandoah, Iowa, in 1883, from thence to Lamoni, Iowa, 1894. There survive, his companion, 2 daughters, Mrs. David Anderson and Mrs. W. J. Mather, one son, W. B., one brother, Moses. Services at Lamoni, Iowa, sermon by J. F. Garver, interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

A WORD OF COMMENDATION

A recent copy of the Farmer's Advocate, published in London, Ontario, contained the following interesting item:

A little church—the "Latter Day Saints" Church—a fortnight ago threw open its basement and Sunday school rooms to be used as a hospital. I know nothing whatever of the people of this church or their religion, but no one can hear of the noble work being done in their place of worship without feeling that never was more sacred service held in any church anywhere. The proposal to open the edifice for sufferers was made one day, and by night beds and mattresses were being put in—not an hour was wasted in deliberations or red tape. Before midnight ambulances were arriving with sufferers. One of the women of the church at once took charge, and in a few moments V. A. D's. were whizzed along in motor-cars to help her—at first not a single trained nurse could be had for the place, because every trained nurse in the city was either ill or doing double duty. . . . More and more ambulances came, and medical students arrived to help in caring for the sufferers. The place became sadly overcrowded, but so long as there was a corner in which to put anyone who had nowhere else to go, no one was turned away. All day long the attendants might be seen running in and out, with masks over their mouths and noses, getting necessities from the neighbors or helping patients in, or out according as they were discharged. Among the neighbors was one woman who deserved especial mention, a kindly-faced, unassuming mother, whose home seemed to be placed absolutely at the disposal of the "hospital." Sometimes she was seen carrying in a big pile of sheets—evidently she had given her house for the washing of the "flu" bedding. At another time a nurse was seen carrying in to her a little sick child, who could, no doubt, be better cared for there than in the crowded hospital.

STORIES FOR CHILDREN

A surprise is in store for those who order the stories for children, recently published by the Religio and sent out from this office at cost. They sell for 3 cents for 6, or 5 cents for 12, and contain 11 excellent Book of Mormon stories by Sister S. H. Forties. If there is as much demand for these as there should be, the Religio will likely continue to issue them as a quarterly, to be sold at a nominal price.

SLIDES WANTED

Elder A. B. Phillips, pastor of the First Philadelphia Branch, whose address is 3318 North Howard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, desires to communicate with those in the church who have stereopticon slides on American antiquities. He would like to secure them for use in a lecture in the Philadelphia church.

The schools of Lamoni opened on the morning of the 18th, after an enforced vacation of five weeks. Church services were not allowed up to that date. College continues its sessions on the same basis as other colleges and universities, with careful medical inspection and extra precautions. They have a few cases of influenza in each dormitory, in light form, and most of the patients have recovered. At the Children's Home there are about a dozen cases confined to the house, a goodly number only kept in so they will be dry and warm. At Liberty Home there have been three cases, all back to normal. In the town there are still some cases here and there. No deaths in the town as yet from the disease, and only one of our members in the vicinity.

We would like to hear from the person who sent us the obituary notice of Forest P. Shepard, so we may correct what is evidently a mistake before printing.

Augustine Dwyer was announced to speak in Pearson's Theater, in Boston, the evening of the 17th, according to a letter received from the East recently. His subject was to be: "President Wilson and our victory." He has been at Jonesport, Maine, during most of the influenza epidemic.

ABOUT BACK NUMBERS

One of the things necessary in the saving of paper as demanded by the War Industries Board is the printing of just sufficient numbers of each issue to supply the subscribers. Those who allow their subscriptions to lapse and later seek to replace the missing numbers may find it impossible to do so, yet it is a situation that must be expected under the circumstances. It is well to keep close watch of the dates on the labels and renew promptly.

THE DAY OF FREEDOM

In the past one hundred and fifty years there have been selected one by one, days to be celebrated as days of political independence. Our own July 4 is probably the oldest. July 14 the fall of the Bastille followed soon after for France. Yet it took her twenty years to finish the revolution and nearly eighty years before a lasting republic was established. But now she is most democratic in her army as well as in civil life.

The Swiss Republic, though small, has become nearly a model. Italy, though a kingdom, is a constitutional one and shows great progress.

England has become one of the most democratic nations on earth, though in form a kingdom, and losing the United States she has extended self-government freely to her great empire, in Canada, Australia, South Africa, and so far as possible in Egypt and India. In fact she is governed to-day not by the king or lords but by the House of Commons, and its members in the ministry.

Japan established a constitution in the 70's. China became a republic within the past decade. Persia has also reformed her government within recent years, as has also Turkey. Though much yet remains to be done, these latter two are at least progressing towards political justice.

The whole American Continent has become a series of republican governments. The few royal rulers of fifty years ago have one by one disappeared.

On the continent of Europe, Portugal has become a republic. Now through this great war the Czar has been forced to abdicate, and Russia is taking steps towards political freedom. So far the effort has been confused, but we hope for a shorter period of revolution and reign of terror than was the case in the French revolution over a century earlier.

Finally, this war against autocracy brings with its end the forced abdication of not only the emperor and his heir apparent, the crown prince of Germany, but at this writing each of the kingdoms of the empire is also going through a popular revolution.

This war, started to dominate the world, to weaken democracy or destroy it, to establish autocracy more firmly in power, has marked the passing of the two Cæsars of the east and west (Czar and Kaiser) as well as the downfall of the house of Hapsburg of Austria.

Surely there is some directing hand in the history of nations. Every war for a hundred years has resulted in greater political freedom for some people.

The war of 1870-71 marked the fall of Napoleon III, and the firm establishment of the French Republic. The weakening of France by isolating her, according to Bismarck, by making her a lone republic among the powers of Europe and so with no family ties to strengthen her, has resulted in a democratic army with a spiritual ideal, unconquerable.

Is there not here a day for the world to celebrate when democracy, or the rights of man, triumphs over autocracy, or the right of one king to dominate and direct the nation for his own selfish ends?

With peace to the world and political freedom through all Central Europe, in Germany and her states, Austria and Bulgaria, for the Poles, Czechs, Serbs, and Rumanians, yes, and the Russians and Hungarians, it is not alone a day of the fall of emperors, but of lesser kings and autocratic rulers.

Then with political liberty more firmly established, we look for religious liberty and greater civic justice. We hope it means that those lands are to be opened to new ideas and the preaching of the gospel freely. We hope for cooperation and understanding between the men of business and the men who labor or create, with justice to both.

Other days have been to celebrate the liberty of one nation, but a greater day to celebrate will be that of human freedom and the brotherhood of man.

By faith we shall look forward thence to the still greater day when the fatherhood of God is accepted, and the necessity of moral truth recognized; when every knee shall bow to Him who is the Son of God.

OUR TABERNACLE

In three of the Gospels we read of the transfiguration of Jesus. These accounts differ verbally, and yet tell substantially the same story.

And after six days, Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light, And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias, talking with him. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold, a light cloud overshadowed them; and, behold, a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. And when the disciples heard the voice, they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid.—Matthew 17: 1-5.

We find this repeated in Mark 9: 1-6; and in Luke 9: 28-36. In all of these we have the statement made that Peter suggested, "It is good to be here, let us build three tabernacles, one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias."

In a sense this suggestion of the erection of a tabernacle, may be as a memorial, in commemoration of this wonderful event. But it seems to us, from reading the text closely, that it was also with the intent, It is good to be here, let us build tabernacles and remain.

The Christian world has long erred in this particular, as has the religious world before the coming of Christ, and since. They seek the approach to the Divine, and in doing so, to depart from all the suffering of this world with its many changes. The Hindu philosophy has much to say of the Infinite One; as has also the Greek philosophy.

The Greek religion made of their gods, rather human beings, on an earthly plane, and following the same fatal round of hopeless striving.

The Hindus, and after them much of modern thought, are altogether for a withdrawal from this world, and an entrance into that which is above, neglecting and leaving this world.

We find a similar idea in the monasteries of the Middle Ages, and in the hermits, in their attempt to withdraw from the world. And we find a similar spirit, apparently, in these three disciples in the mount of transfiguration.

But such is not the teachings of the Master. He descended and returned to a suffering world. He had been in a place of perfection greater than earth could hold, yet he had left the realms of glory for the sake of humanity. Then at the end he prayed only that he might be glorified with the glory that he had with the Father before the world was. (John 17: 5.) He affirmed and practiced the earthly duties, and in his wonderful prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John, he prayed:

That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one.

Peter desired that he might come speedily to his kingdom; but John desired that he might do greater works, and in this was blessed of the Master. For he evidently saw that the divine plan is alone accomplished by our working with humanity, not in our withdrawal to personal peace.

To-day, the teachings of the Master continually show this theme. It is not enough that we be taken out of the world, but that through us and our ministrings, that sinners be called to repentance, that the world be redeemed.

It is not enough that selfishly we escape from temptation and save ourselves from harm; or that we withdraw to some secret place where we can be at rest. We have a ministry and a work to do, so that we are called to the priesthood, and "he who would be the greatest, let him be the servant of all."

To-day, there is possibly a similar thought in the minds of some who talk and write much concerning the gathering. Where can we be safe? Must we gather to Missouri? As if the building of a material temple will work the salvation of our souls! It cannot be. At the most, the erection of the material temple can only be the outward symbol of a result already accomplished. At the most, the gathering cannot accomplish the redemption of Zion, until we have first been redeemed from uncleanness, to choose that which is right.

We recall the story of a southern woman of great wealth. She expressed much dissatisfaction and said: "Oh, I want to go away from here." But the colored mammy spoke up and said, "Where you go, honey? Do you want to leave this beautiful home? Do you want to leave all these lovely children of yours? Where you go, honey, to be happy? Don't you know you got to lug yourself along wherever you go?" We shall have to remember that, that we will take ourselves along wherever we go, and unless we are fit material for the building up of Zion, the carrying out of the temporal law will not accomplish great wonders of redemption.

Our consecration must be voluntary and of ourself, first. The consecration of our goods will follow. Nor does this mean that through some peculiar twist, that the church should receive and hold all our property. We sincerely hope never to see the day when such an idea is set forth and insisted upon. It is true, however, that we could and should hold what we possess in trust, or as stewards for our heavenly Father, and administer it as though for him. It is true that we should seek our own conversion to the truth, so that we seek not, first our own good, but also the good of our brethren and sisters.

Some picture Zion as a place separate from all the world, where we will withdraw and close the gates and not be influenced by what goes on without the walls of the city.

When we consider that even our heavenly Father wept because of the sins of the world (Genesis 7, I. T.); when we consider that God and our Lord Jesus Christ have not withdrawn so far that they are utterly uninfluenced by our suffering and conditions of the world, we may reasonably expect that as we grow like them, our care for those not of the household of faith will increase; and Zion be a place from which good will go forth to the nations of the earth; and that we shall go forth to carry that good in an effort to help and redeem the world.

Some, by their words at least, would reject everything in the world. Yet they will use the railroad. They will eat food that is raised elsewhere. They will ride in an auto or in a wagon that has been bought from the world.

Modern revelation is very plain to the children of God; Doctrine and Covenants 128: 7, 8, states:

It has been prophesied that the Gentiles shall assist in rebuilding the waste places of Zion. This cannot refer to the inhabitants of Zion who are the pure in heart, but must refer to the places which have been occupied or which it may be contemplated to occupy in the regions round about. The saints cannot occupy in any place on the land of Zion which is not under the domination of civil law, and as citizens of the state, holding their liberties under the law, there must be a proper recognition and observance of these laws. The Lord has said that this condition of obedience to law must continue until he comes whose right it is to come and assume to reign over his people. . . .

The Spirit saith further: That these organizations contemplated in the law may be effected and the benefits to be derived therefrom be enjoyed by the saints, in such enjoyment they cannot withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them; yet it is incumbent upon the saints while reaping the benefits of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organization as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designated of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

Many other passages convey the same theme. Zion is first of all the pure in heart. It is not a complete withdrawal from all the world.

We should not look for some mysterious and wonderful change merely from the erection of material buildings; but learning to love the Lord our God and his law, and the erection of the buildings will follow, where we may worship him in spirit and in truth. But we must remember always that the work of Jesus, the work of Christianity is not to withdraw us to a secret place, where we lose all contact with the rest of humanity. Rather its purpose is to develop within us that power that we may, with him, assist in the redemption of the world, and so break the awful circle of existence by bringing to pass a purified and celestialized world, and help to bring humanity to that higher plane.

The idea, because we are happy here, let us build tabernacles and abide, evidently was not, and is not, in accordance with the mind of Jesus. We should not withdraw utterly from our brethren and from a suffering world; but rather we should seek first personal righteousness and then to establish a place which may be a refuge for the downtrodden of earth.

PRESIDENT OF THE UTAH CHURCH PASSES

On November 19, President Joseph Fielding Smith, head of the dominant church in Utah, died at his home in Salt Lake City, Utah. He had suffered for some time from a paralytic stroke, which is said to have been the indirect cause of his death.

He was a son of Hyrum Smith by his second wife, Mary Fielding.

For a number of years his name has appeared as president of various important banking institutions and commercial enterprises in Utah.

According to the precedent established and observed by the church, he will be succeeded in the presidency by Heber J. Grant, who is the president of the quorum of twelve apostles, being senior member of that organization as well.

Oh, do not pray for easy lives! Pray to be stronger men! Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks! Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, of the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God.—Phillips Brooks.

THE RESURRECTION

There seems to be no principle of the gospel on which there is such a diversity of opinion as the theme of the resurrection. Some of the ministry will proclaim very strongly their hope of a resurrection and immediately deny the existence of one by their peculiar interpretation of the word.

I heard a new one quite recently that outdoes anything I have ever heard before. The position was taken that it was impossible for this same body to be resurrected. He said, Suppose I die and some animal or fish eats me; I become a part of that fish, my brother eats the fish, I become through this intermediary of the fish, a portion of my brother; in turn he dies and a like process is repeated with his remains, until I have entered into the formation of many animals, fish, reptiles, and men. I am not one body, but many, or fragments of a multitude of beings. How is God going to resurrect my body? It would be a conglomerate mass of animal, vegetable, and human, a monstrosity, neither me nor some one else.

The question was asked him: How about the body of Christ, was it not the same body he had when here? "Oh, yes, the body he presented for identification was, but I do not believe he has that body now. That body was marred. He has a glorified body now. He has laid aside that old body, that was not to be the habitation of the Christ Spirit."

But the Scriptures say that when he comes again, they that pierced him will look upon him and behold the wounds in his hands and his feet. How can that be if he has discarded this old body? I suppose he will use the old body again when he comes just for identification and then will discard it forever!

Quite a supposition to my way of thinking, and if the theory should be correct, of what use is the resurrection? Compare this soap bubble with the word of Jesus in Revelation 1: 18:

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

What part of the Christ was dead? Not his spirit, for that went home to God who gave it. (See Alma 19: 37-43.) It was eternal, an everlasting essence. His body was the part that was dead, and Jesus says: "Behold, I am alive forevermore." A union had taken place between the spirit and body, never to be broken.

This language precludes the laying aside of his body as a vesture to be taken on again when identification is needed, as if that were the only means of identification. It is his own body, his resurrected body, which resurrection is a pattern of the process which shall be meted out to all mankind.

Isaiah certainly expected that his body would come forth from the grave, as he states in chapter 26, verse 19:

Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.

If it is some other body we are going to have, what is the earth going to cast out? What does the scripture have reference to here, as the dead? Is not the thought expressed in conjunction with the idea voiced by Isaiah: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise"? Isaiah's dead body—the same as Christ's dead body. Not one formed of similar elements, but the same elements, otherwise it is not a resurrection, not even a reconstruction, but a recreation, and a recreation is not a resurrection.

We read in Matthew 27: 56 regarding something that took place at the death of Christ: "And the graves were opened; and the bodies of the Saints which slept, arose, who were many, and came out of their graves." Why was it necessary for the graves to be opened if the old body that was cast off was not to be brought forth again? It seems that locked up in these graves were the bodies of the Saints, not new bodies for the Saints, but those bodies which were once animate entities, containing the spirits of these saints who once before lived and moved upon this earth.

If we are simply to have a body in morphological outline similar to that which was, but of a new creation, why were the graves opened for these particular particles of matter to come together? Surely, if that were the case, bodies could be created or called from the air and free dirt without defacing the earth by causing the material six feet below the surface to come up, causing an upheaval and unsightly landscape.

The idea is absurd and foreign to the teachings of Christ and his servants. Christ had his own body, that which was born of Mary his mother, that is, the continuation of that which was born, without disunion until the time of his death.

We acknowledge that the body of Christ which was put into the tomb was not the same body which was born of Mary thirty-three and a half years before, but it was the continuous product of the same. The body changes every seven years, nevertheless, those same cells which formed the infant body were the parent cells of those which constituted the adult body, or as Paul very aptly puts it in 1 Corinthians 15:38: "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." So that while our bodies are renewed daily by a process which is known as karyokinesis or mitosis, i. e., cell division, a process of reproduction of the cellular structures of our body, nevertheless, it is the same body all along the line, "every seed [cell] his own body." But when death overtakes us this process of reproduction ceases and we pass through a retrograde metamorphosis until the elements have disengaged as an organized machine, and they may then intermingle with the innumerable millions of other particles of matter, but even so, is it impossible for the God who first formed us to call these elements back into union again and reproduce the same body of which they were a part before disunion?

We are inclined to measure things from a human standpoint and not from the divine, hence, we assume a position in our analysis of the problems of life which incertitude and faulty hypothesis, and the product is untrustworthy and many times far from the true state of affairs. We must remember that we are dealing with the mysterious creations of a more mysterious being, that his ways are not our ways, and that we are not capable of thinking his thoughts. That a power which can make wine from water, increase the flow of oil from a vessel so as to fill numerous vessels many times its capacity, and make bread and wine and feed the hosts of believers without having any bread to start with, is capable of performing this latter feat with as little trouble as these other mysteries is reasonable at least.

One might say, Well, if these particles are collected to form the first body, what is going to supply their place in the second or third body they occupied?

For a second this seems to be a poser, but under a close analysis we find a solution for this even from a human standpoint. In the first place we learn that the body changes every seven years, that is, the first or parent cells have multiplied by reproduction and they have retired, died, shriveled up, and have been thrown into the discard. This process is continued in the daughter cells over and over again, fresh cells taking the place of the worn-out ones, until the creature, though apparently the same being, has become completely a new creature and at the same time the same creature by continuity.

These elements that have been cast off, are considered waste material and not a part of us. They are, and they are not. That is, they have performed their function and are the cause of the present body, as the present in turn will be the cause of the future—"But every seed his own body." Not a re-creation, but a reproduction, the product of the former matter in direct line of descent.

Supposing these elements do pass through some other animal, that same animal has a similar process going on in its metabolic cycle and these elements are not retained as a permanent department of its mechanism, but only transitory, when they pass on to other usages and the animal through which it passed has lost nothing in its exit.

Everything we eat and everything we drink passes through the blood stream in order to contribute to our existence, not necessarily that every element becomes an integral part of the mechanism, but having effect on the cells of our body in numerous ways so that the conglomerated mass of cell organization may continue its division and subdivision or reproduction, and by this process continue the unit of the body.

Just how much of the dissolved elements of the former creature is retained in the new creature would be a problem, but no doubt the great Creator who formed us in the first place has worked out the problem so that these elements will come into their own abode finally, that when the resurrection of the body is due, the elements that formed it will be awaiting the call to form the material called for.

Jesus taught the resurrection of the same body, so we read in John 11:23-25:

Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

Martha received her teaching from the Christ and it is apparent from his language that she understood the resurrection to mean the coming forth of the body which was now in the tomb.

Paul had the same idea. We find it expressed in 1 Corinthians 15:51-55:

Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

Paul rightly calls it a mystery. No doubt he had considered the probability of our disintegration and contribution to the formation of other individuals, and though it is a mystery to us, nevertheless God would call this physical being back into its original frame and form, but imperishable, incorruptible, and immortal, nevertheless, it would be our own bodies; that which had been put into the grave; the anatomical constituents and divisions of our morphological construction, that which exists in its cellular formation; the identical body which was put into the grave and held a prisoner by the elements of the earth, this body would rise again and be victor over the grave, and being animated by the same spirit which possessed it formerly would be able to say: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

No reconstructed body this, but the same body which was held a prisoner is liberated and arises triumphant over the powers of death and the grave.

The Lord in latter day revelation reiterates the idea that it is our own bodies which shall be resurrected.

Michael, mine archangel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7.

And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27.

And the graves of the Saints shall be opened, and they shall come forth and stand on the right hand of the Lamb.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 10.

If it is not the body that was put into the grave which shall come forth from the grave, please tell me what is coming forth from the grave? What is the grave opened for? What is resurrected?

Jesus is going to have his same body when he comes again, according to Doctrine and Covenants 45: 9, even if he has, as our brother asserts, laid it aside now for some other more pleasing body.

And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God.

This language leaves us no room to think that Christ had any other body, for he states positively who he is, and this body he presents is the same body he had when he was crucified, bearing the same marks which were physically caused in mortal clay.

The evidence already cited seems to be conclusive as regards the resurrection of our bodies, but for fear some may even halt at what has been said, I wish to put a few more witnesses before you that there may be no room for the least controversy.

Now we do not suppose that this first resurrection which is spoken of in this manner, can be the resurrection of the souls, [the spirit is called the soul in this rendering] and their consignment to happiness or misery. Ye cannot suppose that this is what it meaneth. Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but it meaneth the reuniting of the soul with the body of those from the days of Adam, down to the resurrection of Christ. Now whether the souls and the bodies of these of whom have been spoken, shall all be reunited at once, the wicked as well as righteous, I do not say; let it suffice, that I say that they all come forth; or in other words, their resurrection cometh to pass before the resurrection of those who die after the resurrection of Christ. Now my son, I do not say that their resurrection cometh at the resurrection of Christ; but behold, I give it as my opinion, that the souls and the bodies are reunited, of the righteous at the resurrection of Christ, and his ascension into heaven. But whether it be at his resurrection, or after, I do not say, but this much I say, that there is a space between death and resurrection of the body, and a state of the soul in happiness or in misery, until the time which is appointed of God that the dead shall come forth, and be reunited, both soul and body, and be brought to stand before God, and be judged according to their works; yea, this bringeth about the restoration of those things of which have been spoken by the mouths of the prophets. The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame.—Book of Mormon, Alma 19: 51-58.

Alma here distinctly portrays a literal resurrection of the body which goes down into the grave, there is a reuniting of the spirit and body. The spirit enters into something it formerly occupied—"reuniting," occupying in a similar manner, performing the same function.

Alma had no idea of a re-creation. He expected every part to be restored as it was in the beginning and nothing to be lost. There is but one difference that will be apparent in the resurrected body, and that will not alter the principles of the resurrection. The resurrection, reconstruction, or reassembling of the body, is to be "to their proper and present frame," a correcting of malformations and blemishes that may have been our lot while here.

Again, we have the same language used by Amulek when contending with Zeezrom.

Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one Eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil. Now behold I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body, and also concerning the resurrection of the mortal body. I say unto you, that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death, unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption.—Alma 8: 99-107.

It seems to me that no comment is needed regarding this statement of Amulek. The language is so plain that there is no chance for mistaking his meaning. This body we now occupy, will be raised immortal, every limb and joint will be supplied and not even a hair will be lacking, but the reorganization will be to a proper and perfect frame.

Job had the same understanding of the resurrection, and he breaks forth in the following language:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.—Job 19: 26, 27.

In the light of these remarkable statements, how can a person with any knowledge of what is written, or with any portion of the Spirit, urge that we will not be resurrected? That the thought is absurd, impossible, preposterous, and that the resurrection is simply the formation of a new body like the former, but not the identical one that once existed?

And to think that Jesus has two bodies; one for identification and another for eternal occupancy, seems to be the wildest stretch of imagination, and is certainly much more ridiculous, absurd, and preposterous than any position set forth by those who believe in the resurrection of the original body, even allowing that that body had been scattered to the millions of animal and vegetable creations and divided and subdivided into millions of fractions.

The God who first formed us by the word of his power and made us animate beings, shaped from the particles of the earth, can just as easily call forth the same particles that formed us when we departed this life, and re-form our bodies for future living. And he so wills it. There is a resurrection, a resurrection, re-formation, and reincarnation. The same identical particles of our once animated flesh and bones will be the house of the spirit that formerly occupied it. Otherwise, the theme of the resurrection is an empty sound, death ends all, and we are in a miserable condition, with no hope for future exaltation or existence. But this is not the case, for God lives and his promises will be verified and all the powers of men and devils cannot hinder the culmination of his purposes. The resurrection is a verity and our hope is sure.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A SOLDIER'S LAST LETTER

"Dear Mother: Before you read this last letter I may ever write you, please recite the beautiful quotation, beginning 'Those who are wise,' which you have so often repeated to me."

"This is a passage in the great epoch of India:

"Those who are wise in spiritual things grieve neither for the dead nor for the living. I myself never was not, nor thou, nor all the princes of the earth, nor shall we ever hereafter cease to be. . . . These finite bodies, which envelop the souls inhabiting them, are said to belong to him, the eternal, indestructible, unprovable Spirit who is in the body. . . . The man who believeth that it is this spirit which killeth, and he who thinketh it may be destroyed, are both alike deceived, for it neither killeth nor is it killed. . . . It is not slain when this, its mortal frame, is destroyed. . . . As a man throweth away old garments and putteth on new, even so the dweller in the body, having quitted its old mortal frame, entereth new. . . . Knowing it to be thus, thou shouldst not grieve."

"Feel braced, mother dear? I wish this letter could reach you before you hear that I am gone, but that cannot be. I have volunteered for service which means certain death, or capture by the Huns. And I feel that the All-Father will grant death as my portion. I can't tell you what the service is, but a fine bunch of men willingly offered to do what may save the lives of many, and I gladly go to meet death with them.

"I've never gotten over my horror of shooting at a man. I entered the engineering corps thinking I'd never have to fight; but sometimes that duty has fallen to me and then I have prayed that no bullet of mine might carry death. You will understand that, and also why I so much more joyously give my life to-night than perhaps live to take one tomorrow. You won't mind my dying like a man for the world's welfare.

"Do you remember, Dearest One, the time we killed the rattler on the ranch? Hal hated the thing and had a real enthusiasm in killing it. I helped kill it, because you said it was a menace to humanity and must be killed, even though we knew it was not to blame for not having evolved beyond the venomous stage. I recall that you said it was a gentleman among snakes, for it never struck without a warning, but still it must be killed.

"Hal fights the Huns as he killed the snake. He is only a few miles from here and, though I've not seen him, I've heard of him. His men say that he fights like a demon, and that he constantly urges men to shoot to kill. He is right and I wrong in that, but I could never again be happy for an hour if I knew that I had killed a man—not even Emperor Bill himself. You know! I should have been born in a woman's body. I never was fitted to be a man. But I have no fear of death, or of the next stage of life, so I shall not die like a coward.

If wrongs exist, let them be settled according to the law of God. Grumbling and faultfinding will never make wrongs right.—S. K. Sorensen.

"In a few hours I'll find those who have gone before and tell how you've been a chum, sister, comrade, and mother to me. Then, just as soon as I get wide-awake in that other life so that I know my bearings, I'm coming back here to look after you. If you have a personal guardian angel, he (or she) has never been very faithful; so I'll attend to you hereafter myself. (No, mother, I've not changed my religious belief, but these three years in France have broadened my ideas, and I feel certain that if you lay back your head when you read these words, you will be resting on my breast.)

"This winter must have been hard for you, with three of us at the front. Sometimes I've feared that hardship had come to you some other way and you had kept it to yourself, like the game little chum you are, knowing I'd worry at not being there in time of trouble. How brave you are. . .

"I know you will not add to the world's depression by wearing black for me; and please keep merry inside as well as cheerful on the surface. In the hardest hours here I've seen your brave smile in my memory, and only God knows how I've thanked you for writing only words of cheer. Some of the boys all but go to pieces when they have letters from home, but I have had a hearty laugh over every letter of yours. My pal says, sometime he will hunt you up and see if you look as happy as you write. He is not going with us to-night, but he is no coward. He will tell you all about this night, sometime.

"Don't think, little mother-chum, that I have not seen the history of sorrow in your eyes, despite the constant smile. I know what the smiles have cost you. God bless you, dear. You have been a good mother to me. No man ever had a better one.

"Now I'll read your Psalm (the twenty-third) and attend to some simple duties. . . . I've given copies of 'A soul's soliloquy' to scores of chaps to whom I'd recited the first and last verses, and again and again a man has said to me, 'I'll memorize that, and repeat it when I am alone and afraid.'

"Oh, yes, we are all of us afraid over here—sometimes. We are still mighty human, you know. I can't get hold of the second verse at all, but I'm going into the duty of a few hours hence repeating to myself what I do recall. The first starts:

"To-day the journey is ended,
I have worked out the mandates of fate,

Naked, alone, undefended,
I knock at the Uttermost Gate—' doesn't it? And the boost that last verse gives me now:

"Lo, the gate swings wide at my knocking;
Across endless reaches I see
Lost friends, with laughter, come flocking
To give a glad welcome to me.
Farewell, the maze has been threaded,
This is the ending of strife;
Say not that death should be dreaded,
'Tis but the beginning of life.'

"That should be called the 'Soliloquy of a Soldier's Soul,' for more than one of us has passed on with it in our mind, and I shall repeat it, just before I whisper: 'Good-by, mother, I'm going home to God.' If only I could look into your eyes once more before I go out. Remember, always, that with all the love I am capable of feeling, I love you. WYN."

The Hastening Time Is Here

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
God's hand is moving fast,
'Mong' all the nations to fulfill
The mighty purpose of his will,
As told in ages past.

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
Behold fair Palestine,
Redeemed now from Gentile hand
'Tis yet the Jew's loved fatherland,
'Tis theirs by seal divine.

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
See empires quickly fall.
To servile souls sweet freedom comes,
And darkened minds new truth illumines,
Preparing for God's call.

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
The world is fallow ground,
Waiting the precious gospel seed,
By sowers sent of God indeed,
In whom his truth is found.

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
Behold the church of God
Fast rising from its low estate,
In faith and power becoming great—
An instrument of God.

'Tis here! 'Tis here! The hastening time!
Oh, who will keep apace?
Who then will bide in righteousness,
Go forth to serve, mankind to bless,
Supported by God's grace?

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Supreme Test

The supreme test that can be made of a man's love, according to our Savior, is that for it he shall lay down his life. The test which is supreme for the mother of to-day, is to give her own flesh and blood to battle for the principles she holds sacred. This test has come to some of our sisters. It sounds idle or inadequate for such of us who have not been called upon to make this sacrifice, to attempt to offer consolation or comfort. None can rightly know or rightly sympathize except those who have entered that inner sanctuary, and with bleeding heart and streaming eyes laid her all upon the altar.

However, we do want those sisters who have been called upon to pass through this Gethsemane, to know, that with what power we have, we do sympathize; and further, that we feel that the sacrifice was made for us, too. All American women feel that every American soldier is her defender, and only gratitude and loyalty live in their hearts for him. We feel a glow of warm gratitude as well towards those brave mothers who have given the world such men, and especially do we joy in the clean record made by the soldiers who bear our church banner along with the Stars and Stripes. They represent us, and all the beliefs and teaching we hold dear, and when they are a credit to our glorious cause, and "carry on" valiantly in the service of their Master, we feel to go down upon our knees in thankfulness and loving pride!

It was with swelling heart, therefore, we read the following letter of tribute which an appreciative comrade sent to the stricken mother of our young brother, Lyman Case, of Lamoni. Proudly we rejoiced that our lad was so true to his convictions and his baptismal covenant; reverently we thanked God that his cause on earth was championed by such a noble young man, and we plead for his blessing upon all the host of our youth who are fighting for truth and right, that they, too, may be helped to stand firmly upon their religious convictions, and be an honor to the church. Their temptations are many, but they have a Shield which will not fail them, if they but trust him.

In the white heat of battle many have found the Christ—have sensed the meaning of his wondrous life and service. They will come back with eyes and hearts more attuned to the infinite world than before, and will be able, with the help of the vivifying Spirit, to live more truly and understandingly. Again we cry, "God bless them—every one!"

Mrs. J. M. Case,
210 South Cherry Street,
Lamoni, Iowa.

My Dear Mrs. Case: This is the letter that I have always hoped I would never have to write. But I know that you are a brave and wonderful woman, for Lyman Case's mother could not be otherwise. I returned to my squadron two days ago, to find that your son and my very good friend had "gone west" in a scrap with Huns over the lines. Mrs. Case, I will not try to tell you that Lyman died for a noble cause or try to sympathize with you, for I know something of a mother's pride and a mother's heart, having a mother of my own. But I do want to tell you something of my esteem for "Casie" and how I regret his accident.

You have probably been informed of more of the details than I know. Lyman was not in my squadron, but our companion squadron, but as far as I can learn, a Hun who had just been shot collided with Lyman in the air and both were killed. I think, but am not sure, that Lyman had just shot the Hun himself. I think that he was probably killed instantly and without pain; he could not have lived for more than a minute after the collision, and he crashed from such an altitude that death must have resulted instantly. To add that it was unavoidable on Lyman's part is unnecessary. Lyman was an excellent pilot; one of the most promising, and his death is indeed a distinct loss to the squadron.

Lyman is the one man I have met since entering the army that I have come to love as a brother and to whom I give unreserved honor. I have been more or less closely associated with him since starting flying in November last year at Hicks, Texas. And since leaving the States I have come to know him well, and my respect and esteem for him has steadily increased. Two of the most enjoyable weeks of my life were those that we spent cycling through the south part of England together, and while we have not been in the same unit since, yet we have always been close together and have been able to go to church together occasionally and to see each other frequently. When my near friends started to "go west" I always hoped that Lyman might be spared, for while I thought a great deal of some of the boys, there were none I loved as I did your son. I think the reason I gave him unlimited respect was because he held an unalterable reverence for God and held fast to his best convictions. And to me this is a wonderful thing. There are so many of us who, holding that God is master of the universe and Christ the Lord, still lose the nearness of touch and personal contact we once held. Personally, I think I have held pretty close, but Lyman was an unusual man in this respect. In all the time I have known him I have never heard him profane the name of Christ or speak lightly of women. I could pay no man higher tribute.

And "Casie" was one of the most promising pilots I have known. I will not soon forget how he "put it over me" in a scrap one day and I had been flying at the front a month before he got there, too, and had been in several scraps of the real kind. All the boys who knew him regarded him as a very promising pilot.

I have some pictures I will send you as soon as possible. After the war, God willing, I will come and meet the mother of the man I honored most.

It is needless for me to remind you of the pride you have in giving your son in this most righteous struggle in which man ever engaged. "The Lord has given and the Lord has taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord, Amen." This war is for civilization itself; for the basic principles of Christianity; for the safety of humanity. It matters little whether a man performs his service at the front or in a lifetime of service in peace. It is the service itself that measures the service of a life. And I think a man can have no greater honor than to give his life in this war for all that America holds dear.

The last time that I saw Lyman we had a long chat, telling our plans for "after the war." And Lyman said, "After the war the first thing I am going to do is to build my mother a new house."

Mrs. Case, I am going to ask my mother to write to you. She is a wonderful little woman, and I wish you could meet her.

I will be very much pleased to do anything that is possible if you will suggest it to me. I will send the pictures soon and a film or two also.

Write to me when you can.

LAWRENCE T. WYLEY.

A Service of Love

A letter from Sister Rosa Tier, of London, Ontario, tells of some of the painful experiences the Saints have had to pass through in connection with the recent epidemic of influenza which has swept through the country. Their last happy meeting, in health, was on October 24, Dominion Thanksgiving Day. The Saints had a supper in the basement of the church, at which Brother Gillen was present. Some were there, helping cheerfully with the work of decorating, entertaining, and serving, who were shortly to be called to the other shore. In less than ten days thereafter, the Saints had laid away to rest four young married men who left broken-hearted wives and children to mourn their loss. She thus graphically describes some of the tragic events recently transpiring there:

"Our Board of Health was at their wits' end to know what to do for nurses, and hospital facilities. A week passed; I was helping here and there, where I could, but the awful conditions seemed to haunt me. Whole families stricken, Saints as well as citizens. Hospitals were full; my husband and I considered turning our home into an emergency hospital, which might accommodate about ten patients. I mentioned this to our branch president, Brother Gray, and I believe he was inspired at that very moment, for he uttered the words: 'Sister, how would the church basement do for an emergency hospital?'"

"I immediately saw a chance to save lives, and perhaps souls as well, and cried, 'Grand! Glorious! Will the Saints let us do that?'"

"He started at once to get the consent of the people, and I went to the health officer, who came immediately and inspected our building, as it seemed about half the city was down with the disease. He exclaimed, 'A grand place!' and asked us to open it at once."

"We got busy on Monday, moved out all our seats, banners, books, and supplies of all kinds, and by evening had our first patients in. By the following night, we had beds and cots filled with thirty-three people. I can never forget the experience! The moans of the suffering, and dying, and the grief of those separated. Little children calling in the night, 'I want my daddy!' or, 'I want my mamma!' when these natural guardians of their helplessness had passed on!"

"Sister Hackey and I were left in charge for the first week, with very little help, but if ever we were blessed, we were at that time. When the strain would seem almost too great to bear, we would go into the main auditorium, and bow in silent prayer for divine assistance which always came! We are still in the 'front line trenches,' but the scourge is abating. We closed our basement hospital on November 5, but Sister Hackey and myself have been nursing in the homes since then."

"The day Brother Gillen left our city, we were called to the home of Brother Henley, where Brother Henley and wife, their daughter, and their son Albert and his wife and two children, were all sick. Brother Gillen helped get the beds down from upstairs, so the family could be together. When the basement was opened Elder Henley and his son were the first to be brought in, also Brother Dan Sheridan and his wife. All that nurses and doctors could do was done to preserve the lives of these loved Saints, and they were administered to, as well. But God, who knows best, saw fit to call Brother Dan home on Thursday. His brother-in-law, the pastor of our branch, sat with him to the last. Brother Dan was our hero, for he had been in the terrible battle across seas, and carried German bullets in his body, as well as many scars from the cruel war. Yet, strangely enough, spared to come back to us, obey the gospel, bear his testimony, which he did many times, experiencing love and joy in the church and its associations, it was only to be called home to his Maker, by the grim hand of this pestilence!

"After he passed on, we battled for the life of Brother Albert Henley. Brother Fligg came to help, and stayed through the night. Towards morning Albert seemed some better, and we tried hard to believe he would be spared. . . . Later he sent for his wife, who was still weak from her illness. When his mother came, he said, 'Be still, and watch with me a little while!' He passed away peacefully at two that afternoon and on Sunday he and 'Dannie' were buried side by side, Brother Fligg, in charge of services. Brother Dan was buried with full military honors. The death of these splendid young men, as well as others, has cast a gloom over our branch, but with it all we still find cause for thankfulness."

"I feel to say that it was the Woman's Auxiliary which prepared me for some usefulness in this crisis. When I returned from General Conference, I decided to qualify myself for more efficient service, and so took a course in Saint John's Ambulance Brigade, first aid to the injured, home nursing, and hygiene. Passed all my examinations, but little thought how soon I would be called upon to use what I had learned! I hope every sister will try to train along the lines suggested by the Woman's Auxiliary."

"I might add that our Temple Builders cheered our impromptu hospital with lovely flowers."

"Our branch work has been suspended for a month, but we feel a desire to work with greater zeal than ever. Other scourges will follow this one, and we will all be needed. May God bless the Woman's Auxiliary, and may we, as sisters and mothers, ever try to do our best to promote the work of God in this day and age."

Your sister and coworker,

ROSA TIER.

Notice

To All Locals, Classes, Societies, and Circles: In our efforts this year to enlarge the work and meet the increasing demand of subscribers to our study courses, our finances, at the end of the year approaches, run very low.

You are well aware that the only income we have on which to carry on our activities is the very small tax of ten cents per capita yearly, and a narrow margin on our three publications, Year Book, Oriole Book, and Supplement.

So far, we have been able to meet all our obligations, but this year the cost of printing and supplies has been greater than ever before, and we are just now in need of funds to meet some demands that are pressing.

It would be a special favor to us if the annual assessment could now be sent in, and we kindly make this request of all who can make it convenient to do so. It would also be greatly appreciated if any of our financial working societies who have funds on hand, could make a contribution to the need of the general work at this special time. We feel sure that by another year proper adjustments will be made whereby these needs will be arranged for.

Send assessments or contributions to our treasurer, Mrs. F. H. Esgar, 700 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

Thanking you for the consideration you may give this request and trusting the work prospers under your care, I remain,

Sincerely,

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,
President.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Brother McGuire, in his "Red Letter" wrote: "God has indicated in His message to the church that the debt should be paid, and inasmuch as you are a member of the church, this becomes a personal message to you and a personal obligation."

While our efforts to raise funds for paying off the church debt have been confined mainly to the Sunday school members, we have fully intended that our appeals should reach farther than just to the Sunday school scholars—we desire to reach every member of the church—every member.

If you are a Sunday school member and have not done all you can, will you not exert every energy possible to help us reach the $100,000 mark this year? If you have made your offering and given as much as you can, will you not help to enthuse and encourage others to do as you have done? Are you satisfied with what you have done to that extent that you feel that there is nothing left for you to do?

If you are not a member of the Sunday school will you not send your offering in through your nearest Sunday school, or if you are not located convenient to a Sunday school—or home class—will you not send your offering direct to Benjamin R. McGuire, Box 125, Independence, Missouri? Be sure to state that it is for Christmas offering.

The armistice has been signed. Peace for all the world seems nearer now than it has for many months. With the signing of peace terms there will begin a new era, and with the beginning of this new period of time there will be greater needs for church cooperation and far greater needs for our ministry for—"The gospel shall be preached in all the world," and we should be able to start afresh, without church debt, and with funds for carrying on the work.

The influenza epidemic has interfered very seriously with the offering work, because most of our schools were closed for some four to six weeks, however, we can overcome this setback if we will, and we sincerely hope that each and every individual member will exert every effort to increase his offering to at least what it would have been had you attended Sunday school regularly. Give a little more for good measure.

Brother T. A. Bender, Sasco, reported through Brother McGuire's office that they have more than $2 per member, hence are entitled to be listed on Roll of Honor.

Altorado Sunday school, of Alberta. (Reported to Benjamin R. McGuire.) George E. Phay sends in $25 for this school which has a membership of only five. This is a splendid offering for this little school and we feel very grateful for their support.

San Francisco, California. Sister Ruth Griswold reports: "Our Sunday school has gone over the $2 mark—we have most of the amount for which we had set our mark and expect to reach our aim even though we have been unable to have any church meetings for some time owing to epidemic." We have learned to depend on this good school for they are wide-awake.

Allen, Nebraska. Sister Butterworth reporting for this live little school, writes: "We have gone over the top, as we have reached over the $2 mark. Everyone is enthused. This enthusiasm is not that we may excel, but that the church debt may be paid. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us—each one—in our efforts. Ever praying that the Lone Star Sunday school of Allen, Nebraska, may be a bright one and that we may reach the $100,000." We shall not soon forget how earnestly and enthusiastically this little school entered into the work last year—they seem to have retained the same good enthusiasm for this year.

Tulare Sunday school, California. Sister W. A. Bedford, one of our good boosters, reports: "We are now on the Honor Roll having an average of $7 and more to hear from. All are willing workers." Does this not sound good?

Lynden, Washington. Ira Lade reports: "Just a few lines from this part of the battlefield. We are only 17 in number, so we are not holding one of the first line trenches, but when the big ones go over the top we want to be there doing our bit. We have on hand at this time $75, and more coming. Our aim is $100 or more." Does this not enthuse you? They have the right spirit—they want to be there doing their "bit," no desire to excel, but to do their part Atchison, Kansas. Sister Edith H. Lungwitz reports: "We are late in sending in our offering report to you as we should have had it in the first of July. We have an enrollment of 47 and to date have $143.12. Our goal is $200 and we will do our best to reach that amount. Hoping that we will all go over the top with $100,000." This good school seems not to be discouraged because of the influenza.

Skiatook, Oklahoma. M. E. Haskins, writes: "We have a membership of 29; our offering to date is $115, and we are going to make it $200 if possible so as to do our share in the $100,000. We have had only one session of our school since the influenza let up in our town." This little school is working hard and the members have the right spirit to win.

We hope to have many more to report next week for now that the schools are permitted to assemble again results will begin to show.

Sincerely yours,
A. W. SMITH.

Take Time to Be Holy

In the whirl of events of these fast "hastening times," which are following each other in such rapid succession that we stand appalled, we are impressed with the deep solemnity attached to the words, "Take time to be holy."

We are looking upon the closing scenes of the last dispensation of time. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." We must fast and pray often in secret, and "pray for one another," for "the snares are growing thicker," and "perilous times" are upon us. Danger lurks at every corner and crossroad, and Satan is using all his cunning arts to deceive and destroy the souls of men and lead them down to destruction and woe. The danger signal is up and we must "Take time to be holy." We sing, "Awake, Saints, awake, no time now for reposing."

Dear Saints, this is not a time to mince words, when immortal souls are trembling on the brink of eternity. Satan laughs and his angels rejoice when they see the young of our church engaged in reading the light literature of the day. I have been in Saints' homes where they do not take any of the church papers, but their library shelves are well filled with a class of books that do not feed the soul. And they wonder why their children do not take more interest in the church. It is easy to judge of the standing of those homes.

One Saint told me that you could not give her a harder task than ask her to read. The Lord has said, "Study all good books." The gospel literature worker has a far-reaching mission and a mission that is very important. For what can be more important than to have an intelligent knowledge of our position and an ample ability to defend our work? And how is that knowledge to be secured if we do not read the church papers?

You have heard of the Sunday school superintendent who said to his school: "We intended to sing, 'Take time to be holy,' this morning, but we have not time."

Negligence of duty is a crime; it is criminal to be ignorant and lacking in knowledge to-day when all the means of information are so easily obtained. The editorials in our church papers are of the highest character and they contain reading that is essential to our development. The Lord has counseled his people to "come up higher." Read and meditate. "Take time to be holy."
MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

Sanitarium Needs

I have been thinking that the Saints who are interested and at times contribute to our institution would be pleased to hear from us occasionally. We feel that we are "here" and needed, perhaps more than ever, and are sure that you are glad if we are filling the needs though it be a little to-day. So far our nurses are well, for which I wish to thank our Father in heaven. We are endeavoring to do as we have been commanded: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and trust that all necessary things will be added, of which we have learned that the most important is health, and for which we are trying to be duly thankful.

We have just opened up the Kensington Home across the way from the hospital, for influenza patients. I am very glad that we are so situated that we are able to offer in this way some small assistance in this time of great need. I am proud to tell the mothers, fathers, and friends of the nurses of this school which now number twenty-eight, including two probationers, that their girls are not slackers, and that they show themselves not only ready but eager to assist in helpful service without a dissenting voice. We feel that perhaps the work here has just begun, but are trusting that we shall not be found wanting, even until the end.

We would not have you overlook the willing service of our Patroness Society. They have been very loyal in assisting with sewing, purchasing of supplies (of which we have never had enough), and have not hesitated when we asked for helpers in the kitchen and to nurse as first aids in our influenza quarters, which means hard labor and risk of life.

We appreciate all this assistance, for it helps us to give greater assistance to humanity (those whom Christ served) in that we can assist greater numbers. We do not wish, however, to lose opportunity to drop the thought that we may need more, and soon, if this epidemic continues. I would suggest, however, that those who volunteer to nurse consider well in several ways; first their own health, second their dependents (my opinion is that those with dependents should hesitate), third but not least we should consider the needs of the community and country. Some of you may get the chance to prove (if you watch) that you are made of the metal that I believe God is testing the world for. That kind which says, "I shall do my duty, no matter how unpleasant at times, no matter what the sacrifice, be that sacrifice my life itself. I shall be called and found—where?—looking for Easy Street? No! But as the song says, 'I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll be what you want me to be!'"

Now we are still in need of pupil nurses and wish to hear from some more of the valiant workers of God. But pray over this matter. It so happens occasionally that God has another work for some to do. But I don't believe that our church girls have responded, by far, as they might to our country's call for nurses. Many of our mothers and fathers say: "Oh, I don't want my daughter to be a nurse. They work so hard." Yes, dear mothers and fathers, shield your daughters, but don't, I say, don't rob them of the divinest pleasures of life: the satisfaction and compensation which comes after the completing of some difficult task that when finished will be of profit to humanity—to others. To shield her from work may be to rob her of that which she should have to make her life complete.

One mother said, "My daughter is stout and healthy and is very anxious to become a nurse."

"How old is she?"

"Twenty-one."

"And have you encouraged her?"

"No! Oh, my, no!"

"Why not? Are you willing to tell God in the day of judgment why you didn't encourage your daughter to enter one of his services, of which there is such great need?"

"Well, I never thought of it in that light before."

Did you? The call is ringing forth daily, "More nurses for our boys," and I am sure there are many to go, but mothers say: "Oh, I just can't give up my daughter, too." But listen: Who are you considering? What about daughter? We say, "I must be brave so it will not be so hard on my boy to go"; but where is daughter? Are you saying that for her? She, like your son, sees the need and hears and feels the call—duty. She sees her brother go (to duty) but she must be brave too, and that not alone.

I feel confident that our girls will come if you encourage them, judging from the readiness and willingness of the ones already here, and I am not willing to believe that we shall be found knocking at your doors with our appeal and find no admittance.

We will endeavor from time to time to have published the sizes and needs of some of the necessary things of this institution, and in so doing we do not wish you to feel that we ask you to buy materials and spend weeks and weeks in quilting, etc., in these busy times when the same amount of money would probably go twice as far in service if spent for blankets, which when purchased in large numbers can be bought much cheaper. But we have need of quilts and use them in the nurses' home, so don't hesitate or feel that they will not be appreciated if you send them. You can secure dimensions and quality of our most pressing needs by directing an inquiry to the undersigned.

We trust we will still have your cooperation in the carrying on of one of God's works, and will gladly send any information possible about our school or institution.

Sincerely,

LAURA E. MANN, R. N.,
Superintendent of Nurses.

"Partake of Me"

If I were a preacher I should select for my text a statement that reads like this: "Partake of me [Christ], for I am the cup of life."

The Religio opens up a field to the young surpassed by no other opportunity our church offers. It should especially reach the adolescent period between Sunday school and church work.

There are thousands of young people in our church who are being molded for a life of service. At least that should be their objective, and I believe many of them are facing it bravely, stanchly, and unceasingly.

When this Nation entered the war many men were called from their homes to enter training for "overseas" duty. I believe more than four million men have answered the call, either by enlistment or through the channels of the selective draft.

Necessarily Uncle Sam has provided mobilization camps and thus we find the city of Chicago the nucleus of three of the camps. How many men come from the Great Lakes, Fort Sheridan, and Camp Grant to Chicago? Roughly estimating, I shall say one hundred thousand every week. As the steam and electric conveyances carry these men to this vast metropolis, she calls: "Partake of me."

What has she to offer? When a rookie or a gob arrives for the first time (I particularly noticed one to-day), he looks at the tall buildings that touch the sky, until his neck is sore and stiff. Then he looks at the doors and their signs of welcome. The pool rooms, the dance halls, the carabets all call to him, "Partake of me." And thus the serious, deep-thinking onlooker sees our young men, those who must some day be the fathers of the Nation, enticed into an "unclean environment."

True, there are clubs for the boys to seek where women—such motherly women—officiate. There, arrangements can be made for a dinner, a theater, or a dance. But there is never a word of a church party or a spiritual blessing. They never stop their revelry to thank Him who has given all good things. I do not mean to criticize these women. They are doing the best they can with the light they have and the circumstances invite, but we have more light.

Girls and young women, are you taking advantage of the Religio? Are you being molded so as to be of use? Are you teaching a class, speaking a piece, or singing a song so as to develop your God-given talents? Are you preparing yourself so that when the occasion arises for you to lead you will be capable? Do not say you will never have a chance, because it is bound to come. If you are ready you can "make" the chance.

Young men and boys, are you molding yourselves or are you letting the influence of the Creator take a hand? Are you becoming such a part of him that when he calls you can say, "Here am I?" Are you spending your hours of recreation in healthful pursuits, or are you following the crowd?

Queen Victoria once had the world-renowned artist, Mr. Hunt, paint a picture for her. When the critic went to examine the finished product he found a beautiful picture of the Christ standing by the door of a cabin which stood on the hillside.

"Your work is perfect, with one exception," said the critic, "you have forgotten the latch on the cabin door."

"But," replied the artist, "Christ never forces the door of your heart; you must open it and bid him enter."

My prayer is that you will open and let him in.

CONCEPTION JUNCTION, MISSOURI, November 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Elder Joseph Arber made Bedison Branch a flying visit. He held one meeting in my home, but on account of sickness only a few Saints came out. Brother Arber is an able minister; he shows his spirit by gentle words and resolute action. The spirit of God was with him and he preached an excellent sermon. The Lord not only gave him the gift of preaching, but also the gift of song.

Thanks be to God for such noble men who are willing to give their all for the sake of Christ and their fellow men. It is a most glorious thought that a man is willing to do this.

We hope that the desire of our brother will be fulfilled, and that when opportunity presents itself he will come and make us a longer visit.

A. JENSEN.

QUAPAW, OKLAHOMA, November 17, 1918.

Editors Herald: As this is a cold, lonely Sunday, and no church to go to, or Saints to visit, I will write of my experiences here.

On account of the war, work in my line has been very poor for a year. I have had very little work, and for what I have done, I have not yet received all my pay.

I had paid my tithing, but every time, I seemed to lose money. However, I never lost faith in the promises of God.

In July, I was building a house in Baxter Springs, Kansas. I told the Lord if he would help me, I would give him one tenth of all I earned. One Sunday I was sitting on the porch reading my Bible, and there was a man sitting on a porch on the other side of the street. He arose and came across the street, and we began to talk about the war, etc. He told me he was connected with a firm that was going to build a large plant, and they wanted a superintendent. I applied for the job and got it. So I am here building the plant, earning a good salary and dividends. God works in a mysterious way sometimes.

My wife and I are the only Latter Day Saints here. I held meetings until the influenza broke out among the people here.

There are openings here for foundry help, molders, machinists, and tool makers; also, blacksmiths. If any Latter Day Saints want good positions and will write to me, I will give them all the information I can.

I am going to have meeting at our house next Sunday.

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. L. MUNRO.

MONTROSE, COLORADO, November 17, 1918.

Editors Herald: I was baptized almost six weeks ago and certainly have never been sorry. How I love this work!

We are isolated from Saints at the present time, although we can meet occasionally with the California Mesa Saints, near Olathe, eleven miles from here. The Saints at that place are a noble band, although few in number and scattered. We rejoice when circumstances are so we can meet with them. There are a few members here, but we are not organized.

There is a branch of Utah people here.

We expect to attend one of the churches here as soon as the influenza is checked so the churches can open again, since we cannot go to our own.

My companion and I have just recovered from a siege of influenza, and we consider ourselves very fortunate. Our baby escaped.

Yours sister,

MRS. INEZ ROSE.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, November 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: It does me much good to read the letters of the different Saints who are striving to make every possible effort for the advancement of this grand and glorious work in which we are all engaged.

It will no doubt be a surprise to some of the Saints to read that I am in this section of the country, but, nevertheless, I am glad to say we have a few Saints here who are striving to keep up the spirit of the work, and to let our light shine.

We have a nice little Sunday school, with an average attendance of twenty to twenty-five, and through it we are keeping the Saints in touch with each other, and also teaching the children the gospel message.

During the summer we had the pleasure of having the Eastern Montana District reunion held here. This greatly revived the few Saints that live here. We had with us Bishop Kelley and Brother R. A. Lloyd, who gave us some very interesting talks, and greatly encouraged us to hold fast and strive to come up higher, as the church was on the upward move all over the world.

I do not wish to mention all the noted missionaries who were here, but I cannot fail to mention Brother Thorburn of the Western Montana District, who was the life, as one might say, of the reunion.

After reunion the only elder residing here was called to Canada to conduct a series of meetings at several places. I refer to Brother J. C. Page. Most of the Saints in the stakes are acquainted with him, and can realize what a loss it was to have him leave us without anyone to take his place. However, through strenuous efforts, we succeeded in keeping up our Sunday school until the present epidemic of influenza visited our city. Then we had to close to abide by the law.

Brother Page has now returned and we are in hopes of again making a great effort to organize a branch here and to have preaching meetings as we had before his departure to Canada.

The influenza has claimed many victims in this part of the country, but at the present I know of no Saints who have suffered very much from it.

Any missionaries or Saints who are traveling this way on the Great Northern Railway will be welcome to pay us a visit at any time.

Your coworker,
CHARLES F. ENGLE, JR.

SALLISAW, OKLAHOMA, November 18, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am very much pleased to see the good work of the Lord moving along as it is, although I am not sending any money, only a testimony. I know this latter-day work and this restored gospel is of God and not of man.

I have just closed a two-day debate with the Goliaths of the people styling themselves Watch Towers. They seem to think they are holding out the light to all the world, but from reports coming in since the debate, the latter-day message did not suffer; but on the other hand, it is polished up a little.

I have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon in five years, and have not seen an elder either. Dear Saints, I have had much sickness in my home and no chance to call for the elders. I once called for Elder E. A. Erwin, when I was very sick, and after being administered to, I was greatly relieved of the intense pain, and gave God the praise. May God's blessings be with Brother Erwin.

Since coming into the church I have been very skeptical, as I was raised to believe in the Baptist religion, but God took that all out of me, and this is the way he did it: There was a big meeting of the Baptists going on in Fanshawe, Oklahoma, and I was taken to that arbor some five miles away, in the Spirit or in a vision. I was standing close by, and a man stood at my right side, just a little back, so I could not see him, and just as their preacher dismissed them (I knew most all of them) this man by me said these words: "They think they are heaping to themselves fame and honor, but instead it is shame, disgrace, and dishonor." Ever since that testimony was given me I have known that this latter-day work is the work of God. I was made to know it was Christ who stood near.

I have seen Christ, the Son of God, in vision twice; have heard his voice, seen his shape, and heard him say, "Wake up; ye know not how soon I will come to take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not my gospel."

I have many good testimonies of this restored gospel. I know it is true, but what of man? Will we, yes, will I, be true?

As I have had much sickness in my home, and the loss of two crops, and am not able to follow public work, I am absolutely penniless and cannot renew my subscription to the HERALD. I wish I could, but I cannot; and there is not a Latter Day Saint within fifty miles, that I know of.

Now I am not asking for mercy, nor even grace, but I do ask for your prayers that my health may improve, and a way open up for me in which I can better provide for the home, and not be a pauper in my declining years.

NEVADA, IOWA, November 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our city is now free from quarantine, although the influenza is still among us. The Saints here have well escaped—no deaths resulting. We were, however, called upon to mourn when Lynn, the five-year-old son of Brother and Sister Bernard Wolf, was struck by an automobile and died shortly afterwards. There is left to us a noble heritage; the tender memories of a life enriched by the finer virtues of purity, innocence, and love—a heritage to spur us on to greater deeds for the divine cause.

The beauty, the comfort of the gospel and its gifts never shone more brightly to us, or were exemplified better than then, when to the grief-stricken parents there came this song of consolation, given through Sister Susie L'Hommedieu, and sang to the tune of "Don't Step There":

"Come, oh, my children, come to me,
Your hearts are touched with grief;
I am your only Comforter
And I can give relief.

Chorus:

"Hear my call, hear my call,
Hear my call!
For if you do not follow me,
You will fall!

"A great reward's awaiting you
Upon the other side;
And little hands are beckoning
That you may there abide.

"Your little child is now at rest;
He is safe in paradise;
My angels came and took him home
Away from sin and strife.

"And when your work on earth is done,
If you will faithful be,
A place beside your little one
Is now awaiting thee."

Brother Joseph Smith once said that the time would come when the name of Latter Day Saint would be held honorable. Gradually this is taking place. The minister of the Christian Church here assisted in the services, and sang in the quartet at the funeral. Too often we, as a people, have put ourselves in a boxcar affair on the outskirts of a city, held ourselves aloof, and wondered why we were looked down upon, unrecognized. Truly God designated his people to be "the head and not the tail," but sometimes we seem too long in coming to our own.

This does not mean that we should seek popularity, but rather that we develop true leadership. The outlook seems encouraging when we view the work being done in educational classes along spiritual and temporal lines.

The work here seems slowly moving onward. The field seems broad, but the greatest need at the present time is to "feed the flock."

Fraternally yours,
ROY CHEVILLE.

Our Departed Ones

MELENYZAR.—Carl Grant Melenyzar was born September 7, 1900. Baptized February 14, 1915. Departed this life October 16, 1918. Leaves father, mother, 3 brothers, 4 sisters. Funeral sermon by J. D. Carlisle, at Lock No. 4, Pennsylvania. Interment in Monongahela Cemetery.

CUTLIL.—William Cutlil was born February 11, 1882, at Wakefield, Ohio; died October 24, 1918, at Battle Creek, Michigan. Leaves wife, father, mother, 2 brothers, 3 sisters, and a host of friends. He was not a member of our church, but did much to help the Saints. Sermon by J. C. Goodman.

THOMPSON.—Zietta Fern McCray, daughter of S. W. and B. L. McCray, was born near Woburn, Illinois, June 6, 1890. Died January 28, 1917, at Joplin, Missouri. Married Alex Thompson, August 23, 1911. Two children blessed their home. Baptized in 1910 by Hubert Case. Sermon by William English. Interment in Mount Hope Cemetery.

MCCRAY.—John E. D. McCray, son of S. W. and L. B. McCray, was born near Steedman, Missouri, November 5, 1896. Died with pneumonia, November 3, 1918, at Base Hospital, Camp Bowie, Texas. He was a firm believer in the restored gospel, and often wished the work could be started in our neighborhood. Interment in the Hams Prairie Cemetery.

WRIGHT.—Arthur Floyd Wright was born February 10, 1908, at Frazier, Iowa. Was blessed in early childhood by O. Salisbury. Died November 17, 1918, of pneumonia. He leaves to mourn his mother, 2 sisters and many other relatives. He was a bright, good boy. Services at the home, then from the Methodist Church, conducted by Joseph Arber. Interment in the Mineral Ridge Cemetery.

FAULKNER.—Mahala Jane Faulkner, widow of B. L. Faulkner, was born November 9, 1848, near McLeansboro, Illinois. Died November 1, 1918, after a ten-day's illness at her home near Eldorado. She has been a member of the Reorganized Church about 25 years. She leaves three sons and a host of relatives and friends to mourn. Remarks and prayers at the grave by Y. M. Young.

FLYNN.—Florence Ethel Flynn, wife of Brother Charles W. Flynn, died of influenza at her home in Chetek, Wisconsin, November 14, 1918, aged 32 years, 3 months, 27 days. A husband and 2 little boys are left to mourn, together with father, mother, and other relatives. She was a cheerful, kindly woman, and good to all. Was an active worker in the Sunday school, and we are indeed sorry her work was ended so soon. Services conducted by A. L. Whiteaker and L. Houghton.

DURBORAW.—Doctor Raymond H. Durboraw was born in Maryland, April 6, 1883. His entire life was spent in study and improvement of mind, in consequence of which he became a prominent and efficient teacher in the public schools. He was taking a post graduate course in Columbia University, New York City, when he met the contagion that resulted in his death November 3, 1918. Married Sister Ethel Banta at Lamoni, Iowa, June 11, 1918, and she was with him in his studies. She brought the body to Lamoni, where it was buried November 6. Funeral services conducted by Heman C. Smith and John F. Garver.

KELLEY.—Uriah M. Kelley died November 3, 1918, at his home in Indian River, Maine. Baptized by John C. Foss. Ordained a deacon in 1890; a priest in 1896, and an elder September 15, 1898. Many of the traveling missionaries will recall the many times they were made welcome at his hospitable home. The preaching of the gospel was very dear to him. He grew weary of waiting for his departure and expressed his desire to be released, and we feel sure he is at rest. Funeral services at the Baptist church, John F. Sheehy officiating.

If I loved a man I should love him so completely that I should never think of anything in which he had not the first and greatest share. I should see his kind looks in every ray of sunshine—I should hear his loving voice in every note of music—if I were to read a book alone, I should wonder which sentence in it would please him most—if I plucked a flower I should ask myself if he would like me to wear it—I should live through him and for him—he would be my very eyes and heart and soul.—Marie Corelli.

FROM HERE AND THERE

No services have been held in Lamoni since the first Sunday in October, on account of the influenza. The local board of health has found it advisable to so decree to date (25th). The schools and the college are running, though new cases appear almost daily. At this time three of the high-school teachers are ill with it. The disease seems to be in somewhat lighter form than ordinary.

President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire are in Toronto on church business.

Apostle William M. Aylor has begun a tour of branches in Arizona, Texas, California, and other points.

EPIDEMIC RAGING IN ENGLAND

Bishop R. May writes from London, England, under date of November 4: "The health conditions in Enfield Branch are still very critical. Another death occurred on Saturday morning, the victim this time being a young man by the name of Samuel Dennis. He was the teacher of the branch, married just five months to a day. There is not a family of the Saints in that branch free from the epidemic. In some, the whole family is down. Assistance is almost impossible. Sister Crick went to attend to the family of Elder Dover Judd, as both he and his wife are very low. I am among them almost every day."

NURSES NEEDED

Read carefully the appeal of the head nurse at the Sanitarium, appearing in the letter department of this number. She writes in a later personal note: "We need nurses, and need them very much. Since writing, we have had several sick nurses, and we are all overworked and tired. The others who have been helping are nearly all tired out."

AN ABBREVIATED NUMBER

In order to conform to the demands of the War Industries Board, and reduce the output of paper ten per cent, we are compelled to reduce the size of this number of the HERALD somewhat. While we hope and are led to believe these restrictions will be withdrawn ere long, it is required that we observe them till that time comes, and report at the end of each quarter beginning October 1, the progress made to that end. We feel that our readers will accept the condition cheerfully for the short time it continues.

Brother George Elson, whose name has appeared frequently in these columns, requesting the prayers of the Saints, reports that he is again out of the hospital, but in "a dark and cloudy condition in body and mind," and desires that the Saints continue to uphold him in prayer. He is again at Wayne, Nebraska.

NAME OF UNITY CHANGED TO ONE

With the November number, the priesthood journal of the church is issued under the name, One. Since there is a magazine published in Kansas City by the name of Unity the change was necessary. The quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 38:6 is the basis of the name: "Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine." The November number contains information on "The sacramental blessing," "Certificates of blessing," "Preparing the emblems," "Call to priesthood," "The backbiter." The price is 25 cents a year and subscriptions are received at either publishing house.

NOTICE TO READER—When you finish reading this magazine, place a 1-cent stamp on this notice, mail the magazine, and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors destined to proceed overseas. NO WRAPPING—NO ADDRESS.

CREATION IN TRAVAIL

(Extract from an address by President Elbert A. Smith, delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, November 17, 1918. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

WAITING THE MANIFESTATION OF THE SONS OF GOD

I wish to transpose two passages that appear in the 8th chapter of Romans. "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. . . . For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestations of the sons of God."

It is a serious matter to stand before you as the spokesman of the church at a time like this. The subject that I had previously selected was taken from my mind and another subject that seemed to me to come like a ray of light from above was given to me. I crave the help of God that I may unfold it for your consideration. It is compassed in this text. I will restate it in my own words. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.

IS THE TEXT DOLOROUS?

You may wonder why I should come before you with a text, the first part of which, at least, is dolorous in its language; though the last part of it is most glorious in its promise. It is because, as I view it, the sound of those whistles recently announcing peace marked only the close of one chapter in the great struggle of creation in the closing scenes of time. It was but the end of an episode, and by no means the end of the story of travail and pain that precedes the manifestation of the sons of God.

Now, let us analyze the text. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. I do not know how inclusive this statement may be concerning the whole creation. It is intimated in the Book of Covenants that there are innumerable worlds, and we do not know how many of them are caught in the travail that is destined finally to reveal the sons of God. It is told us in the 36th section of the Doctrine and Covenants that when Enoch had his wonderful vision and saw the condition of men through all the ages he saw that God wept, and the bosom of eternity was pained; and he wondered how it was that God could weep. We are told also that the angels rejoice when sinners repent; and doubtless they mourn when men fail.

VIA THE "LUSITANIA"

We do not know how universal this travail may be, but at least we are sure that for years past it has included all of this world. When the war first began, I tried to persuade myself that section 45 of the Book of Covenants wherein it is said that Zion shall be the only people that shall not be at war, referred to all of America, as the land of Zion—but it doesn't read just that way, and it didn't turn out that way.

A cartoon published some weeks ago represented the Kaiser as talking to a member of his general staff. The Kaiser said to him, "They told me that the Americans could not come. That they had no ships to bring them. But they are here! What ship brought them?" The answer was, "The Lusitania, your Majesty." The Lusitania and thousands of other tragedies brought America into the war, and all nations have been involved in that conflict, either directly or indirectly, and all have been made to suffer.

TIME OF FALLING CROWNS

Talking about travail and struggle and commotion, cast your mind back over the past few weeks. Think of the kingdoms that have fallen—Bulgaria, Turkey, Austria, Germany, and a host of smaller kingdoms that made up those great empires. It has been a time of falling crowns, and of world commotion, including the redemption of the Holy Land. Also for weeks past our churches have been closed because of the great epidemic of influenza that has swept this land. One man estimated that three hundred thousand have lost their lives in America in that time. I do not know whether that is an exaggeration or not. Probably no one knows. Now, finally, for the first time since the dawn of peace we are permitted to meet together and review these events.

EARTH HOLLOW WITH GRAVES

Peace has come, but at what a struggle has it been achieved; and what a price has been paid! It is estimated that there are twenty million dead as a result of this war. It is true, as never before, in the language of Tennyson, that "Earth is crimson with battles and hollow with graves." The jubilee that we had last Monday has not restored the broken homes that this war is responsible for. There is mourning and pain and travail the world over.

I used to have a sermon on the signs of the times, and I had a great many statistics; but I haven't preached that sermon for three or four years now. What is the use? My statistics are colorless in the light of the struggle just closed. The signs of the times preach for themselves. But this point I wish to reiterate—that this is but the closing of one chapter in the story.

THE BOLSHEVIKI HYDROPHOBIA

The menace of autocracy has been removed. In Europe the place of it is taken by the red flag of the Bolsheviki, which is just as dangerous as the black eagle of the Prussians ever was. Russia is in chaos. So is Austria and Turkey, and Germany, to a lesser degree. The red flag of anarchy has shown itself in Holland, Sweden, Switzerland, France, and the United States. The I. W. W. showed its head in this land at the beginning of this war, so that we know what may occur if the opportunity ever presents itself. And that prophecy that I referred to some time ago (section 45 of the Book of Covenants) yet remains to be fulfilled. I refer to the statement that the time will come when those who will not take up their swords against their neighbors must flee to Zion, and that they shall be the only people under heaven that shall not be at war, one with another.

I do not believe that refers to any war that has occurred, or to any international war that will occur. To my mind, it refers to a condition of anarchy, when order and government will break down in our own country, and neighbors be arrayed against neighbors, and we must flee to Zion if we wish to have safety. A good old brother told me just a few days ago that he saw that condition in vision, and he said that when it came the saints had no need to mix in the conflict unless they wished to do so. This time we couldn't avoid it. We must not conclude that the millennium has dawned simply because Hindenburg may be eating straw just at present, and the Kaiser has gone to lie down with the lambs of Holland.

THE WORLD IS WAITING

In this text the statement is made that the whole creation groaneth together in travail, and pain, waiting—waiting for something. There is a feeling of expectancy in the world. For years past, even before the war began, there was a feeling of waiting for something. There are a great many people who are waiting, as the Master said, in fear, their hearts failing them for fear, for looking upon the things coming upon the earth.

There is a significant statement in the Doctrine and Covenants, right along that line, section 45:4: "And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth."

On the other hand, there are a great many who are looking and waiting in faith and expectation. As the Master said, "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, lift up your hearts and rejoice, for ye know that the day of your redemption draweth nigh." In the light of the text, what is it that we have been waiting for? The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain, waiting for—what—for the manifestation of the sons of God. That question is answered; another immediately arises—who are the sons of God?

WHO ARE THE SONS OF GOD?

I have heard the doctrine propounded by liberal people that all men are the sons of God, and that all men are brothers. That doctrine may seem very liberal, but it is not true except in a very limited sense. All men are sons of God and all men are brothers by creation, but creation is a long time past. Humanity has traded its birthright for one kind or another of pottage on many an occasion, until the statement is made that all have gone out of the way.

Who are the sons of God? We are told in Romans 8:14, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And in John 1:12 the statement is made, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." Those, then, who do the will of God receive power to become the sons of God. We must come back to him again, before we can be called his sons, and be received by adoption.

The manifestation of the sons of God was foreshadowed in the prayer of the Master, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven." Those are the sons of God, then, who are willing to do the will of God on earth, just the same as their brethren in the spirit are doing it in heaven. There are a great many people apparently anxious to enter into the millennium who are not sons of God. They trace their genealogy along another line.

I do not presume, however, for a moment that this little body of people called the Latter Day Saints, as at present constituted, is all that will be revealed when the sons of God stand forth. That would be too narrow a conception. I believe that God has many righteous men in the earth, and many forces at work, and many institutions that are working for righteousness that perhaps we do not recognize, and certainly many individuals who are unknown to us.

The statement is made, that he will send his angels to gather the elect from the four quarters of the earth. There is something more in the Book of Covenants along that line, too. Let me read it—section 36. I will just read briefly certain sentences, and not take the time to read all that bears on this subject. "And again, Enoch wept and cried unto the Lord, saying, When shall the earth rest?" That is a very significant question. "And the Lord said . . . The day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, . . . great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, . . . and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare."

DYNAMICS OF THE GATHERING

Righteousness and truth will sweep the earth and gather out the elect, the sons of God. That is my conception of the gathering. I do not think of the gathering as a group of people driven together by fear of the calamities coming upon the earth. I think of it as an aggregation of men and women drawn together by the love of righteousness and truth. These great principles shining forth in the church, drawing them from the four quarters of the earth; and I am glad that such a conception is revealed in the word of God.

Who, then, are the elect? Henry Ward Beecher very bluntly said, "The elect are those who will, and the nonelect are those who won't." That is about all there is to the doctrine of election and predestination. One shall be taken and another left. One will obey. Another won't obey. One has in his heart the love of this righteousness and truth that shall sweep the earth. He is ready to go with it. The other sticks to the old order and he will be left.

I may, then, ask a fair question, How are the sons of God to be manifested? I think they will be manifested by the kind of lives they are willing to live, and by their allegiance. John tells us that by this are the children of God manifested, and the children of the Devil—that the children of God work righteousness, and the children of the Devil work unrighteousness. And we are told concerning Jesus, that he was exalted above his fellows because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity.

The sons of God may be manifested by the power and the intervention of God, but I think that they will be manifested also in the kind of lives they live, perhaps more than by any halo of light that will shine around their heads. And no individual who has a lukewarm attachment for righteousness, and a sneaking admiration for iniquity will presently be miraculously manifested as a son of God simply because he has his name inscribed on the church record.

A WORLD GETHSEMANE

It seems that there must be an individual Gethsemane, as that which occurred in the life of Christ. In sorrow and pain and travail, in the Garden of Gethsemane, Jesus learned to say, Not my will, but thine be done. His sonship was confirmed in that last lesson in which he learned to yield himself entirely to the will of God. There apparently must also be a world Gethsemane; the whole creation groaneth, travailling in pain until now, in order that the sons of God may be revealed. That is the fruition. That is the revelation, the culmination of all this trouble, sorrow, anguish, turmoil.

That is what it is all leading up to—the revelation of the sons of God, when Jesus shall come and set up his kingdom with all those who are willing to do his will on earth as it is done in heaven. In that day he will reign. Peace and justice will prevail on the earth. All those who are ready to receive him will be partakers with him. May God bless us that we indeed may be the sons of God and worthy to receive him in that great day.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

You may measure the illiteracy of men, says Herbert Spencer, by their excessive use of the pronoun "I," and by their chronic drivel about persons instead of principles, thoughts, ideas, the substantial and serious questions for intelligent minds. Both these instances, the verses from Proverbs strikingly illustrate: first, "In the multitude of words, there wanteth not sin:" second, "He that uttereth slander is a fool."—Rabbi Leon Harrison.

THE PROGRESS OF THE GOSPEL IDEALISM

While the whole world is deeply concerned with the establishment of a secure peace to be assured by a stable federation of the nations of the earth, it is but natural that we look closely into each new presentation to see wherein the fundamental truths enunciated by Christ find place.

During the years of world war just closed we have tried to be patient while listening to the denunciations hurled at us: "Christianity has failed. When the world so intensely needed personified spiritual force to prevent this holocaust, it was not to be found."

Our explanation that true Christianity had not been given a trial fell upon deaf ears. It was outside the concept of the ordinary observer that a civilization so impregnated with all manner of isms and cults, a landscape so dotted with innumerable heaven-pointing churches and beautiful cathedrals had not been a fair testing ground for Christianity.

But from pulpit and press we have gone on reiterating the gospel in its fullness, enunciating the principles thereof, which are as eternal as God himself. Our own confidence has been unshaken. From the time when the gospel was restored in these the latter days, our ablest exponents have insisted that so long as mortals have social relations, so long as groups, communities, and nations have to do with each other, the fundamental principles of the gospel will bring about the highest degree of joy in this world and the life to come. To be able to quote the utterances of inspired men of all ages and thereby weave an invulnerable fabric of philosophy, history, and prophecy, has been most gratifying to all who have had occasion to do so.

Now that active belligerency has ceased, we scan the troubled horizon to get our bearings. From the wreckage and confusion we hope to see a new era evolve. Few among our number harbor delusions as to the final outcome and the condition which will prevail at the soon coming of Christ, yet practically all now agree that favorable conditions must prevail ere the gospel can go to the nations of the world that the end may come. Ere this war broke there was some apprehension here and there, since there seemed no human possibility of bringing self-judgment to the world. But God's plans are not to be frustrated, and the prophecies of inspired men of old are being and will be fulfilled before our wondering eyes.

A LEAGUE OF NATIONS

One of the fundamental proposals intended to put a stop to future wars was a league of nations. It is currently believed that without that incentive this Nation would not have arisen as it did to the situation. It has found many adherents in high places among our allies. While we have no assurance that it will be adopted in the peace councils, we do know that President Wilson, who has been one of its ablest exponents, is planning at this time to attend the peace deliberations and will no doubt strongly urge that it be adopted as a plan for future peace.

In this issue we are reproducing an editorial from Doctor Lyman Abbott on "Christ's league to enforce peace." He seems to have been the first to attach a scriptural application to the idea. His reference is to the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, where Christ promulgated the plan for a settlement of disputes. It reads thus:

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglects to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

This procedure has been specially emphasized and uniformly observed by this church ever since it was reiterated in latter-day revelation in 1831. We quote from Doctrine and Covenants 42:23:

And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess thou shalt be reconciled. And if he or she confess not, thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, not to the members but to the elders. And it shall be done in a meeting, and that not before the world. And if thy brother or sister offend many, he or she shall be chastened before many. And if anyone offend openly, he or she shall be rebuked openly, that he or she may be ashamed. And if he or she confess not, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of God. If any shall offend in secret, he or she shall be rebuked in secret, that he or she may have opportunity to confess in secret to him or her whom he or she has offended, and to God, that the church may not speak reproachfully of him or her. And thus shall ye conduct in all things.

While we can hardly agree with the explanation of Doctor Abbott that "tell it to the church" does not mean what it says, but rather to tell it to "the popular assembly of the Hebrew people, a body halfway between a mass meeting and a representative congress," the principle is the same. Perhaps he would consent to the use of the word church after Pentecost at least. He concludes his explanation of this feature by saying that "to treat a man as a heathen man and a publican or Roman tax gatherer was simply to have no dealings with him. . . . If your fellow member defies the public opinion of the Christian community to which you belong, have nothing more to do with him."

Thus we have the proposal in a nutshell. When the league of nations is established and any member thereof becomes refractory he is dealt with on the plan our Savior laid down. If reconciliation is made, the honor of a nation has been preserved, and the feelings of the offended soothed. If such nation refuses to make reconciliation, it is to be left alone, "as a heathen man and a publican." Diplomatic relations are to be severed completely. Commerce is to be suspended and communication cut. No nation can long survive under such treatment, even though force is not displayed except in self-protection on the part of the league. It is at least an interesting possibility, and convinces us that in every social relation the gospel plan will work, if actuated by highest motives.

FORCE ALONE IS FUTILE

Perhaps the qualification last noted in the above paragraph will leave some doubt in our minds. We cannot be assured that the essential altruism will be the motivating principle in all cases. If we could have this assurance the millennium might be ushered in without the final upheaval of all things which has been spoken of by the prophets. Force alone fails miserably in any situation, not excepting the development of the gospel plan. Yet it is pleasant to try to anticipate how far the love-thy-neighbor-as-thyself concept will prevail among the righteous.

So it seems in every direction we turn, we are confronted with the same colossal IF. If the teeming millions of the earth would accept and live up to the letter and spirit of Christ's two great commandments he could then come and set up a kingdom of love far superseding all the best we have in earthly governments. A theocracy based on absolute justice is the quintessence of perfection in governments. An autocracy based on sublimated selfishness has been on the world stage the past few years, striking terror to the amazed hearts of all the world.

AN IDEAL ECONOMIC PLAN

Even in our own application of the economic doctrines of the church we find all manner of seemingly insurmountable obstacles. We doubt not the divinity of the laws and ordinances, but sometimes we wonder at the consummate weakness of humanity in the operation thereof. Even casual investigators often agree that our system is the most wonderful they have encountered—ideal, in fact.

We recently read with much interest and profit a book by Harvey Reeves Calkins, Stewardship Secretary in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and issued under the auspices of the committee on finance, entitled A Man and His Money (Methodist Book Concern, Cincinnati). It is wonderfully in harmony with our doctrines as enunciated in the three standard books of the church. Among other excellent ideas presented we find a detailed explanation and indorsement of tithing, stewardships, and store-houses!

The local newspaper in a neighboring town has been carrying a goodly amount of display advertising, evidently written by the local pastor of the above-mentioned church, urging the necessity of the stewardship concept of property interests and church responsibilities. In one issue he mentioned a number of organizations that were observing the tithing system, including some pagan religions and "the Mormons," concluding with "shall we allow them to be wiser than we?"

SYMPATHY FOR THE DISCONSOLATE

But in spite of the certainty of ultimate triumph, there are those among us who become discouraged. Since misery likes company, they persist in sowing the seeds of discontent and even disloyalty to secure converts to their morbid views.

While we cannot countenance their methods nor accept their conclusions, we do sympathize with them. If we were to prescribe a general remedy it would be a liberal dose of constructive and personal helpfulness to others, repeated till the jaundiced vision cleared and the viewpoint changed. This because it has been our experience that most of those so movingly affected are doing little for themselves or anyone else. We lose our troubles in whole-hearted service to others.

But not all the questioning minds are possessed by those who are stepping aside while the church goes on. Some are so busily engaged in their special branch of the work they have not kept track of the developments within the church. Periodically they emerge to ask, Why is nobody doing anything? Why is the church so silent?

All too often we judge superficially, whether it be men or organizations. When we judge either, we naturally associate them with the other. Some of the unassuming members among us who are not engaged in activities with a spectacular aspect, may be doing a wonderful work. Hasty and frenzied criticism, uttered in the heat of our desperation, may deeply wound many hearts and injure ourselves. We must be considerate of others. The requirement will be excellent discipline for us. If real indolence is the cause of the inactivity, we will be spared the trouble of denouncing it—it will speak for itself.

The spirit of the times had contributed to this tense condition. We have been laboring under great stress. Our nerves have been strained to meet the innumerable demands made upon us. We have worked incessantly under unusual conditions.

Our young men have gone out to fight for us. At the front they have experienced a transformation of soul that crystalized into a sublime courage which amazed and discomfited the enemy. We have been inordinately proud of them but the situation kept our taut nerves tingling.

We say that summing up all that we have gone through in the past few years, it is but natural that we have become impatient and perhaps frenzied. We have spoken trippingly in figures of billions, and upon coming back to ordinary routine existence realized that we are counted a poverty-stricken church. We have paid thousands into the coffers of the Nation, in loans and in taxes and gifts, yet we are urged to believe the church is only marking time.

These things have disturbed many and have been the underlying basis of many sharp criticisms of church officials and church management.

Just the other day a young man came to us and mournfully confided that he could not see how conditions could be better under our present methods. He thought it sounded out of place for us to talk about the wonderful possibilities of the reconstruction period ahead of us, only to go out and adopt the plan of action of the world, we who had been proclaiming advanced theories for years. Then there were other things he couldn't understand, all making what was to him an overwhelming total.

We were glad to assure him that this was not the case. We are not dependent on mere human wisdom, though we use the truth wherever found. It is not necessary that we gather up the potsherds of broken sectarianism from which to reconstruct a living and vital church organization. Our organization is strong enough, flexible enough, for any new situation. We have the material intact, as we have had for years. We have the latent power among our members, rapidly developing into virile strength and usefulness in the hands of God. Numbers mean but little. We have sufficient for the present need and must use our best resources to prepare for greatly augmented numbers and wealth.

So far as we have been able to observe, it is not among the ideals of our leaders that we sit idly by and wait for the moving hand of history to evolve and point out something useful for us. Rather are we a strong body, fitly joined together, ready for aggressive action, impelled by an unqualified certainty which will sweep us on to glorious victory. All this because God is with us. God's power is not limited.

While it is true that we have not fully established all the details of our economic program, the time when they will be is nearer at hand than some of us realize. It is not so much a question of readiness and alertness on the part of our leaders, but it rather hinges on the willingness of the members to subscribe to the divine plan for bringing about equality. We know of one bishop who has worked incessantly for weeks on a detailed interpretation of the stewardship plan, and has succeeded most encouragingly. Others have done similar work on various phases of the subject. Something over a year ago the joint council, including the order of bishops, had an important discussion of our economic plan, especially as to stewardships, and concluded that each member present should bring back his conclusions on the subject. They are being asked for those reports now. From the consensus of opinion of these and other men who have gone deeply into it will be evolved a plan of operation as complete as inspired men of God can make it.

We have never been a parochial nor even an imperialistic church. Indeed, our environment has made us notably free-minded—some say we are so much so that we are often victimized on account thereof. A new industrialism, a new (to the world) application of social equality will find ready acceptance with us because as a church we have believed and taught and practiced those things for years. We have been rearing a generation which is ready to practice as well as preach, ready to accept good from any source, and undeviatingly reject wrong. With this enthusiastic army God can demonstrate the value of idealized social democracy.

OUR MORALE

Certainly the forces of evil at work in the world will seek to undermine the morale of our forces. Morale is a mighty factor. If they can induce us to feel that we are too weak, too insignificant, to succeed, to that extent we will fail. If we may be made to believe that all but our personal selves have gone astray or have ceased to progress, we will awaken to find the church has gone on and left us.

The total of things done, projects being developed, and amazing possibilities within our reach when sufficient of our number are ready for them, brings consolation to our very souls. It may be our own fault that we have not all fully realized all these things. It may be that the innate modesty of our leaders has kept them from announcing little items of progress and new plans for the future, lest they seem to boast.

A brother in a distant district, laboring in the financial department, wrote us sometime ago and inclosed a clipping which showed something another organization had done, which seemed to him most commendable. He added: "Why cannot our church do something like that?"

It was with pleasure that we collated some of the items of common knowledge, announcements of which have been made from time to time in the church papers, and sent them to him with the comment that what we had done already far surpassed the incident he brought to our attention.

His reply included this: "Your letter came duly to hand and the information contained was to me a veritable storehouse. That is the information I have been trying to obtain for some time." Then he wrote of having it all confirmed by conversation with some of the traveling ministry. We can well imagine the gospel of good cheer he will hereafter emanate.

Any Saint with an idea of the situation we occupy in the religious world will know that any success we attain to will be reached in spite of the opposition of our enemies, within and without. It will not do for us to boast nor harbor unholy pride. Rather, clothed with humility, impelled by a moving faith, should we move steadily forward to the goal which we know is there. May we retain all our faculties, undulled and unimpaired by doubt and despair. Perhaps no age of the world's history has been so marvelous and teeming with action as ours. We are indeed fortunate to have a part in the last dispensation of time. Since our redemption is so near, let us lift up our heads and rejoice over the consolation it brings amid these times of stress.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GATHERING HOME NO. 3

In the issue of The American Hebrew for September 6, 1918, the editor writes as follows under the heading, "The past year":

A year ago the Jews everywhere celebrated the emancipation of the great masses of Eastern-European Jewry as an immediate consequence of the Russian revolution. But the seizure of power by the Bolsheviki came like a black cloud upon the horizon. Its first evil fruit was the treaty of Brest-Litovsk, by which millions of Jews were handed over to the rule, open or disguised, of the central powers. Russian Jewry was split up into fragments. . . . Hence we witness the spectacle of cruel pogroms against the Jews, in genuine Czaristic style, throughout Galicia, Poland, the Ukraine, and Rumania. . . . The world has noted the fact that many of the Bolsheviki leaders are Jews. Let it also note that other fact, that no element in Russia has suffered more under Bolsheviki rule than the Jews. . . . It should be constantly kept in mind that there is not a single Jewish group or organization which has reconciled itself to the Brest-Litovsk treaty. The Jews of Russia constitute to-day an influential force for the ultimate reunion of all Russian lands in a democratic republic. . . .

Another country in which the malign German influence has annulled the hopes raised by the Russian revolution is Finland, which has issued an edict of expulsion against all Jews who did not fight in the ranks of the White Guards. Fortunately the number affected by the cruel edict is not large. . . . In Germany itself, particularly in Prussia, anti-Semitism has again raised its head, notwithstanding the so-called civic peace. Pan-Germanism sees an enemy in every Jew, however loyal he may be to the government. Jewish army officers are driven into conversion. Thousands of Russian and Polish Jews have been forced to labor for the conqueror. In the German portion of Austria the same forces are asserting themselves. The city government of Vienna is violently anti-Semitic.

But he says that the transition from the central powers and their lands to the regions controlled by England, France, and Italy is like going from dense darkness into brilliant sunshine. These centuries show "no traces of discrimination against the Jew." In the French Army "the number of Jewish officers of every grade is surprisingly large." Also "A Jew has been appointed Governor General of Madagascar." And the editor rejoices "that the same tendencies prevail in Great Britain and her colonies." He names the notable Jews, such as Lord Reading and Lieutenant General Monash, also mentions that several members of Britain's present cabinet are Jews. He says about Italy: "The situation in Italy is precisely the same. Here Baron Sonnino (a Jew) guides the foreign policy of the country." In all the "entente countries the civil and political equality of the Jews is a firmly established fact, long antedating the present war."

These statements ought to impress every Latter Day Saint with the great truth that the Lord our God, the Jehovah of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their posterity, that he is governing and controlling national events in the great war so as to bring about the final overthrow of the nations that have for centuries so ruthlessly and unsparingly hated and destroyed the Hebrew people. Russia, Germany, Austria, Poland, Bulgaria, Roumania, have all been cruel and vindictive for centuries and have not repented, as have England and France since their doing evil to the Jewish people a long time ago. Leaving out everything about the dreadful atrocities in Germany, Russia, Spain, and elsewhere, I give here a brief sketch of former and later treatment of the Jews in France and England, as found in history:

Dagobert, king of France in 602 to 638 A. D., "issued an edict commanding the Jews to choose between baptism and death." Later it is said, "The comparative quiet which the Jews of France and England enjoyed in the earlier part of the Middle Ages was rudely broken in upon by the Crusades.

The spirit of absolute intolerance which the Catholic priesthood inculcated had taken at last a firm hold on men's minds. . . . The Jews had forfeited the right of existence in Christian states by the crucifixion of Jesus. Such was the theory propounded by the church." From the fourth Lateran council, in 1415, "the wearing of the Jewish badge was generally enforced in Christian countries." Those having this mark might be spit upon or mistreated in any manner and their assaulters not be arrested or punished.

In the year 1290 King Edward I banished the Jews from England, and in 1306 King Philip of France decreed the exile of the Jews. We read that King Edward's edict "remained in force more than three hundred years." Their first attempt to obtain a legal recognition was during the protectorate of Cromwell in 1655. Cromwell was in favor of it, "but the nation, particularly the religious portion of it, were strongly hostile to their admission." Yet Charles II "permitted them to settle quietly in the island," and "in 1728 they acquired the right to possess land"; also "in 1753 they obtained the right of naturalization." Beginning in 1830 they could serve as officers in village corporation and, from 1833, they have been lawyers. In 1862 they were allowed full political privileges in England, and in later times they have been chosen as members of the House of Commons, also exalted to the House of Lords, and everybody is acquainted with the fact of Disraeli, a Jew, becoming Lord Beaconsfield and his being made the premier of England under Queen Victoria. So that the Jews, as before said, now stand among the highest as statesmen, counselors, bankers, and officers in the army and navy of England.

A prominent Jew writes that "the greatest event of the past year was the British declaration in favor of the restoration of a Jewish home in the old land of Israel," and this action being indorsed by France, Italy, Greece, and Serbia. The same writer states that the declaration "has sounded throughout the world," and that "wherever there are Jews it has been hailed with joy and renewed hope." Even in Germany, Austria, and Poland, says the same writer, "the moral effect on these governments has been great."

The Saints who observe can see that one of the greatest proofs of the near fulfillment of God's promises to the Jews, and that very soon is the notable fact that they are receiving such extraordinary favor from leading nations of Europe, after centuries of awful persecution; but no favor from those who have persistently done them the grossest injuries, such as Russia, Poland, Germany, Austria, and Rumania. Western Europe during the past century changed from hating the Jews to tolerating them, then pitying, then adopting, and finally exalting them to high honors in governmental and financial affairs in those nations as already mentioned. In place of being the tail they have in many instances become the head, as the Lord said long, long ago was his purpose and intention.

The writer of a book entitled The Evolution of the Hebrew People claims that strong and determined characteristics, and the courage which has been so notable with them through all the centuries, the power that has sustained them during the persecutions from nations that have sought to exterminate them, that this sustaining courage and strength came to them because of the wars and distresses from which the race has suffered from its very beginning, especially since Moses' time. We may accept this idea, but also hold and believe that a greater influence has been their belief that they are God's "chosen people." This, more than anything else, has caused them to be self-sustained, determined, and confident in their final triumph, and to press on in total disregard of what other people have done to them. Hebrew men and women have alike been fearless and undaunted during two thousand years, and their posterity inherited these traits so largely that they have always looked forward in anticipation of a final success, according to God's promises.

The writer of the book affirms that in the beginning the land of Canaan, or Palestine, was understood as belonging to God, and as being for the use and benefit of all the people of God. Also that the Lord, as a moral being, "demanded ethical conduct from his followers." And as he is universal in his power he "demanded and commanded universal justice and righteousness." The writer says that this was before class distinctions came in, and in these times their prophets and writers, "dared to say anything in behalf of the poor and against the ruling class, or to the people as a whole, if they thought they were speaking for God." They held that "God and his ideas were superior to any race or any class within the race, and they saw visions of class distinctions done away with." That writer claims that the Hebrew people were "the first true progressives," or reformers who believed that "the best is yet to come" to the world.

The Literary Digest states that the site on the Mount of Olives where the Hebrew University is to be built, where its twelve foundation stones were laid last July, that this spot is the finest in Jerusalem. From it the view to the west is upon "the Holy City," and the eastern view takes in "the Dead Sea and the mountains of Moab." The university buildings will be "about midway between the two great synagogues of the old city."

About the work that has been done by the Jewish colonists in Palestine and particularly in constructing their villages, the correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, England, makes the following statement:

It is to the Jewish villages that the soldiers of our army turn for their quarters whenever they have the opportunity. In almost all of them you will find the headquarters of a brigade or a division. The villages, with their neat, modern houses and their pretty gardens, stand out from the Arab collection of mud hovels, fringed with cactus hedges, which is the typical center of rural life in Palestine, as bits of home for the English soldiers. . . . The houses with their red roofs and stucco walls, the gardens with their fruit trees and flowers, the broad streets with their regular alignment, and the country roads, with their hedges of mimosa, proclaim the advance of civilization in one of the oldest homes of civilization. . . . At first sight it would be hard to believe that the villages had passed through a severe crisis. Compared with the Arabs' half-cultivation, half-waste, the Jewish land looks wonderfully fertile and fruitful. Many of the orange groves have been kept alive, the vineyards show their neat rows of vines, the olive trees still spread their shade over the cornfields. But look deeper and you will see the disasters of war. The villages are full of refugees from Jaffa and Jerusalem. . . . Then, too, you will meet scarcely a farmer who has not to bewail the loss of his horses, or his implements, or the farmer's wife who has not lost the most of her poultry. . . . It is sad to see the rows of lopped stumps and bare tree-trunks.

Also The Guardian states as follows:

Hebrew is established again as the people's language, and Hebrew schools are firmly planted in towns and villages. . . . Southern Palestine has become a network of good roads and railway communications, and it is now thoroughly linked up with Egypt and Syria. This will accomplish much for the commercial possibilities of the country. . . . Mr. Balfour's declaration to Lord Rothschild as to the full sympathy of the English with the movement for making Palestine the home of the Jewish people, has opened a new and bright vista to all the lovers of Zion and the dwellers therein. It means that what is now a miniature of a Jewish home will become the full picture, and the collection of villages will grow to the proportion of a country wherein, as the prophet dreamed, each man will sit under his vine and fig tree.

The Jewish Agricultural Engineer for Palestine, S. Kolkowsky, who lives at Joppa, the ancient Jaffa, has an article in The American Hebrew for September 6, 1918, about the land and the people, and what the Jews have been doing during the past forty or fifty years. From that I give the following extracts and quotations. He writes:

There is hardly in history a more tragically moving instance of the fidelity by a nation to its ancestral home than that which is offered by the Jewish people, in carrying with them all through the ages of their long exile, their undying love of Zion, and their perpetual hope of being one day restored to their ancient land. . . . The longing of the Jew for Zion has become stronger with each century.

He remarks that when English, French, and German colonies go out to begin in new lands they know that they will have the support and protection of the powerful nation from which they came, but Jewish people have had no home land and no such support or protection. To the contrary all the governments that are similar to the German autocracy have made systematic obstructions to every improvement sought by the Jews. Still they have continued to work on, "until they have convinced the world of the practicability of their object." And they have won, he says "their recognition, sympathy, and practical support for their national aspirations."

He mentions that the land, entirely bereft of its children, has been indeed "a land desolate." And while Palestine was waste the Jews were constitutionally unfit for the task of developing a country that was "intended for agriculture." But he adds, "The reunion of the people and the land has changed both of them, restoring to the one its pristine fertility and to the other their ancient strength, a miracle. . . . One cannot help wondering which of the two miracles is the greatest, the revival of Palestine at the hands of the Jews, or the regeneration of the Jews through contact with the soil of Palestine." As to their past experiences he says:

As for agriculture proper, there was no expert direction as to what plants could most profitably be grown, or the methods of growing them. The only way open was to imitate the neighboring Arabs, and try to follow the methods used by them. But they, with their typical lack of foresight, which makes them sacrifice the future for the present, causes them to try to make their fields yield as much as they can, with their primitive methods, without trying to destroy weeds, remove stones, or maintain the fertility of the soil. Cattle breeding was almost impossible, because of the ever-recurring epidemics, which nobody attempted to fight, and every two or three years the herds were ravaged throughout the country.

The same writer states that anciently everywhere on the mountain slopes of Palestine there were built up terrace walls upon which good soil was placed, and thus the heights "were covered with a never-ending succession of vineyards and orchards of olives and almonds. But throughout the centuries time has wrought the destruction of these terraces by the torrential rains, and thus the fertile layers of soil have been washed away, and now bare rocks remain "on which no tree or vine can take root." He exclaims that these walls "stare to heaven as a mute yet eloquent witness of the criminal incapacity of the dwellers in the land and of their governments."

Much might be quoted from Mr. Kolkowsky about sanitary and other conditions, but I only mention one more item, namely that the work already done and being done, such as cultivating the land, and the vine and tree planting has demonstrated the satisfactory work accomplished by the Jews. He says:

The result of these efforts has been a triumphant refutation of the fallacy that the Jews are incapable of becoming good agriculturists. Indeed there is no profession or occupation in Palestine in which the Jews have proved as successful as in agriculture, fruit growing, cattle breeding, and the wine industry, for example. Their crops are more than double those of the Arabs; so, too, with the yield of their milch cows. The Arab land owners have repeatedly used Jewish workmen for the creation of new plantations, and for the delicate operation of grafting fruit trees.

One published item says that in prewar times the roads in Palestine were few and in bad order, but now Jewish settlers are repairing old roads and building new ones between the colonies and to the market towns, and doing so at their own expense, although around Jerusalem the British have paid for a great deal of the road labor to give employment to needy people.

In his issue for August 30, the editor of The American Hebrew states that "the report has come that Great Britain has invited the Jewish nation to affiliate itself with and become a part of the proposed league of nations." He says, "On reading this one rubs his eyes in astonishment. Is it possible? Has one of the greatest nations of the world invited one of the smallest nations of the world to join the proposed league? And that little nation is one whose nationhood has repeatedly been denied by friend as well as by foe."

A Jewish writer in the same paper believes that "the world is on the threshold of vast readjustments." He writes further:

Like an electric shock, thrilling the Jews into new life, came the British declaration concerning the future of Palestine. A great nation manifests its sympathy with the national aspirations of the Jews. After ages of dreaming they are to be rewarded. . . . What is this Holy Land toward which so many of our fellow Jews have been striving? Call them fanatics if you will. Assume, if it pleases you, that they are clinging to the skeleton ruins of a kingdom that can never be reconstructed. Assume anything, believe anything, but the fact remains that there are Jews who regard Zion as the salvation of the race; there are Jews who will cheerfully lay down their lives for the attainment of their ideal.

The Chicago Tribune for October 18, 1918, publishes a dispatch from New York which states that "a fund of a billion dollars is to be raised in America to help Jewish sufferers." This effort is spoken of as being "the largest purely humanitarian project" in the history of the world. Both gifts and loans will be received because some of those helped will prefer to return loans when they become able rather than to be objects of charity. Commissions composed of American Jews, experts in philanthropy and business, will go to foreign lands to study conditions and necessities, and thus the help given will be "based on reports received from every country where Jews have suffered during the war." It has been estimated that two million Jews "are destitute, starving, and homeless." The work will be managed by skillful men, men of integrity, too. There is proof that in Palestine alone twenty-seven thousand Jews died in recent years of starvation and attendant evils from the Turkish rulers. Wealthy Jews in America are subscribing to the great fund of a billion dollars.

It is expected that the cost of the Hebrew University will be a half million dollars. When the twelve foundation stones were laid in July not less than six thousand people were present, some from Egypt. In his address Doctor Weizmann said that in Palestine "amid a babble of languages" the Hebrew language "stands out as the one language in which every Jew can communicate with every other Jew," therefore the need of a Hebrew school where all may learn it, no matter what may have been their native country. It appears that these ceremonies were on July 24, and not July 30, as I saw in one paper and so stated in my second article.

A small paper is published in Brooklyn, New York, by the Jews who have been converted to Christ as being the Savior, the true Messiah. It is called "The Chosen People." In the issue for October the editor says that God is now unlocking the doors that have concealed for ages his great purposes, and he is now making plain events that were declared by the ancient prophets. He states further:

In every generation there have been those who denied the possibility of the Jews ever coming back into the possession of their promised land. There are still those who spiritualize God's promise. . . . But one turn of his key of power caused Great Britain to take Jerusalem from the hands of the Turks. . . . The Jews have had no home, no flag, no national emblem, and no name. Suddenly over night, as it were, God's key of power was turning, and behold in the morning the Jews woke up with their country within their grasp, and with a national emblem floating in all the Jewish quarters, and with a government administration in Jerusalem. Thus the restoration of Israel, which was to many a dark passage of Scripture, has been unexpectedly unlocked and realized by them. . . . Great Britain has called out the Jews to join the league of nations, against the foes of humanity. And they now have Palestine for their homeland, a national bank, a national flag, a national university (in building), and a national standing army fighting for the entire liberation of their fatherland . . . showing that the promises of God are yea and amen. . . . God has the one main purpose in view, namely, the acceptance of Christ by the Jews. . . . The first step is to bring them back to their land and restore unto them a nationality. Then they will be led to accept the Lord Jesus as their Messiah.

That writer believes that Isaiah 51:17-23 is now being fulfilled, in that God has taken the cup of wrath from which the Jews have been drinking for centuries and is now giving it to the Gentile nations who have hated and persecuted the Hebrew people without mercy or a particle of compassion. He says that whether men believe it or not, "the literal kingdom of Christ over the Jews and over all the world, yet it will surely come to pass."

Another writer in the same paper says that from the Scriptures "It is evident that the Jews will return to Palestine in unbelief and afterward a great awakening will occur."

Under the heading of "Jerusalem gets its first unpolluted drink in centuries," the Chicago Tribune for October 20, gives an account of the good work done by the British engineers in laying miles of pipe line and putting in a "powerful pumping plant," also the necessary standpipes to hold the water. The city was taken from the Turks in December, and in February a survey was made, after investigation of water sources, and on June 18 water was running into the city. Having pure and unlimited water is said to have wrought "a wondrous change in the condition of the people." Heretofore the winter rains filled the cisterns for the year, and many of these were in bad repair and dirty. Also the water carriers about the city had unclean water bags from which came infection. Thereby typhus fever and other diseases killed many people who would have lived if there had been pure water to drink and use.

To correct this condition the engineers went out into the hills and "found a group of springheads" from which they gathered sufficient water to give the city "fourteen thousand gallons an hour." Therefore from the standpipes all over the city the people can obtain all they need, and now "ten times as much water is being used as formerly." Cisterns and reservoirs have been thoroughly cleaned and filled for the people's use. Government hospitals have been established and thousands of people have been treated and cured of diseases, typhus and malarial fevers especially. General Allenby is greatly honored and loved both as the deliverer of Jerusalem and for the many reforms he has made, thus giving comfort and joy with plenty of food and other benefits to the people.

Major Ormsby Gore, member of Parliament, after six months of labor in Palestine the past summer, in the service of Great Britain and the Zionist cause, spoke recently in London of conditions and prospects in the Holy Land. He said that there is work for thousands of laborers and millions of capital in order to restore Palestine to what it can be. The country is "one having great possibilities." He spoke of the plain of Jericho and the Jordan Valley. There are "wells of water springing up there and running to waste." There is a little cultivation, but in the main nothing is growing, and "all is waiting for the hand of man to turn that country into a miniature Delta of the Nile." He said, "It is marvelous to see what the colonists have already done, like the colony of Rechoboth." Twenty-five years ago that site was barren and produced nothing, but he said, "Now are groves of orange, lemon, and olive trees, also vineyards." Then he added that "now is the call to go to Palestine even as the call was to Abraham, and to make of that land again a land flowing with milk and honey." If space permitted I would copy much more of his address. It was published in full in The American Hebrew.

As to the great world war now being waged we can feel certain that the Lord has been giving the victory to the allied armies. He continues to rule in the kingdoms of men, as was shown to Nebuchadnezzar, in Daniel 4: 17, 25, 32. He giveth power or taketh it away, according to his just purposes in behalf of nations and individuals. Even now leading British newspapers mention the great change that has taken place since America entered the conflict by her forces in the field. One British editor wrote, "It is little short of a miracle." Why, we answer that it is because God chose America as a standard for all nations, and here set up the ensign of liberty, with the decree that no king should reign and prosper on this land.

Also the allied governments are now fully committed to the rule of justice and equity for all people, to establish, with America as the leader, the largest possible liberty for all tribes and nationalities, and for a righteous freedom, such as America can take the lead in especially when she shall become cleansed of the wrongs and abuses which have been so easy and possible under a republican form of government.

All nations are now in the crucible, and all are being tried and proven, both as nations and as individuals. Injustice, graft, bribery, profiteering, white slavery, and all iniquity, must be burned out of the world by the fires of retribution now begun. We can also rejoice that God has given wisdom to the President of the United States to speak and write very wisely and justly to foreign nations, not by his own personal wisdom, but as it was with Washington and Lincoln, even by the movement of God's Spirit upon them and him. It is in great contrast with some early parleying and uncertainty of procedure as to Mexico and Germany. What will be wrought out in the near future we do not know. But certainly the Lord has charge of all. In his first inaugural, April 30, 1789, Washington said:

No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency.

Such a happy condition is as God intended from the beginning of Israel, and more so, when he warned them of the great evils that would come to them in being governed by selfish and autocratic earthly kings. For he, as their wise and just Creator and heavenly King would gladly guide and lead them into complete prosperity and happiness.

I add the following extract from an editorial in the Chicago Tribune dated November 6, 1918:

After centuries of persistent clinging to an ideal, the Jews are again about to set up a capital of thought and of action that will be to the race a fountain head of inspiration. The Jewish people have survived, flourished, and maintained an ever-increasing integrity in spite of centuries of opposition. Other people have disappeared in the vortex of assimilation among other nations, but the Jews, though deprived of national institutions and of the right of legislation, have presented such a rigid individualism that their religion, their thought, and their ideals have continued. We may well remark the purity of a tradition which guides its children down through the centuries without the guardianship of any state or country. What a state that would be which is founded on a tradition so just that it endures unsupported and is only maintained by those who made it their chiefest guide. Herein lies the lesson for Americans. . . . Wisdom, courage, and temperance do not change, and these are the enduring virtues of nations and citizens. Standards will always be the same; only conditions change. Let us know ourselves and forego the idea of establishing new gods.

The man who grasped those thoughts and wrote them was certainly guided by the spirit of truth, whether he knows anything about God and his purposes and his prophets, or not. Evidently the eyes of many people are opening to the great truths that are unfolding before the world preparatory to the time when they will say, "Come, let us go up to the house of the Lord. He will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths." That time is hastening on, even as history is being made rapidly.

THE NORTH COUNTRY

ARE THE JAPANESE OF ISRAEL?

[We have had two articles on this topic. Here is a third view.—EDITORS.]

And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another peaceable multitude unto him; those are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land, in the time of Osea the king, who Salmanasar the king of Assyria led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they unto another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might there keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land. And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river. For the Most High then showed signs for them, and held still the flood, till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go; namely, of a year and a half; and the same region is called Arsareth. Then dwelt they there until the latter time; and now when they shall begin to come, the highest shall stay the springs of the stream again, that they may go through: therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace.—2 Esdras 13: 39-47.

"OUT OF THE NORTH COMETH COLD"

The above quotation indicates that Elihu, the young friend of the great emir Job, who was profoundly erudite in things philosophical and scientific as well as theological, was by the inspiration of the spirit and power of the Holy Ghost, able to reveal not only the true meaning of his friend's affliction but also much concerning "this satellite of an insignificant star" on which we dwell, not then fully comprehensible to the mind of man, the time when knowledge should increase not being yet come.

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation.

God, we believe, overrules in the affairs of men, and has by the illumining influence of his Spirit and fatherly, watchful, guiding hand caused visions to enter the minds of men that have their fruition in the setting up and overthrow, for the accomplishment of his righteous purposes, of nations, and principalities and powers, including the establishment of our own republic in this the day of the harvest when his hunters and fishers, whom we are, have again the second time been sent forth with the trumpet which hath no uncertain sound.

We see in our commission given at the creation: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion," etc., the opportunity for the individual to exercise the agency given him of God: "In the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency."

As nations, tribes, and peoples, we are circumscribed and protected from amalgamation, or the loss of our racial and tribal identity. First, from the time of Babel, by distance or isolation; second, by racial atavisms and preferences; third, by God's own provision of safeguards governing propagation which render sterile mixed progeny to such an extent that we find in all peoples a trace of their descent from our common ancestor Noah, through the families of his grandchildren, who were dispersed over the face of the earth according to the Book of Moses (The Pentateuch) to which "He who spake as never man spake" was fond of referring when he should say, "It is written."

"The Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth."

Long after the great dispersion from Babel, in the days of Peleg, we read, foretold in prophecy and recorded in history, of the dispersion or scattering abroad of all the seed of Abraham.

"As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations."—Genesis 17: 4.

"I will bless her [Sarah], and she shall be a mother of nations; kings of people shall be of her."
—Genesis 17: 17.

Again: "Truly Manasseh shall become great—"; But Ephraim! What of him? Multitudes of nations in the midst of the earth, if they but knew, are heirs through him according to the promise. We are commissioned to carry the glad tidings of great joy to him, to the end that he, with all of scattered Israel, may be called out from among the nations, and, hearing the call and recognizing his voice whose sheep they are, they will no longer stay themselves but will receive gladly the ingrafted word and thus receive a knowledge and testimony of God the Father and his Son, our advocate with him; which knowledge is life eternal.

"And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father."

"Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's."

Hence not among the seed of Abraham through Ishmael, Zimram, Jokshan, Madan, Midian, Ishbok, or Shuah; or through Jacob's sons, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Dan, Naphtali, Gad, Asher, Issachar, Zebulon, or Benjamin; neither Manasseh, the rejected first-born of Joseph, are we to look for the favored people having the custody of the "little stone cut out of the mountain without hands," but through Ephraim "the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren" do we expect to see, as the prophets have foretold, God, bringing again Zion that Ephraim's long-delayed heritage or birthright may be enjoyed, and that it be fulfilled as it is written: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Which blessing his chosen messengers called to be Saints in these the last days, have been affirming to all nations for eighty-eight years, fulfilling the revelation of John who saw:

Another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

The gospel, the good news, preached "aforetime unto Abraham, saying, In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," is the same good news referred to as "good tidings of great joy" proclaimed years later to the shepherds.

"Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

Good news of what?

"For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Good news of him who said:

"And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing."

He came. He preached the kingdom of heaven.

"The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."

The man child, this same kingdom which is God's and Christ's, was caught up to God in heaven. (Revelation 12, Inspired Translation.)

Why? Because the dragon was about to devour it. Which fact would indicate that the Gentile power (Rome) rejected the kingdom, as Israel (the church) had rejected the Christ.

"I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not."

But the stone that the builders rejected is to become the head of the corner. When?

"The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people," etc. (Isaiah 11: 11.)

The man child of the kingdom (not the authority merely) was caught up to God in heaven, and because of it the angels rejoiced, saying: "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down."

The angel that John saw has delivered the gospel, the law of the kingdom, which is again among men. Restored to whom? We can logically in the light of these prophecies give but one answer. To the custody of Ephraim, the heir according to the promise, "for Judah prevailed above his brethren, . . . but the birthright was Joseph's."

The way is thus opened for the perfect law of liberty to be carried by his fishers and hunters as promised in the prophecy given through Jeremiah and recorded in the 16th chapter and 16th verse, to scattered Israel, who is serving other Gods day and night. Why are the fishers and hunters sent?

And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing.

I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister.

The times of the Gentiles are not yet fulfilled, for we have still the Aaronic priesthood which is ours until "the sons of Levi again offer an acceptable offering in righteousness before the Lord," but the time is near, the field is white for the harvest. Where shall we find Israel? Our hunters have already found many who are mostly designated as of Ephraim though Issachar, Zebulon, Manasseh, and perhaps all the tribes are represented among us: also, millions more have been moved upon, as was Columbus, to cross the mighty deep, seeking an asylum in this land of the free—Joseph's land.

When will those in the north country hear his voice and no longer stay themselves? In God's own time, we answer. The miracle will be wrought and those carried captive to Assyria in the days of Hosea and Salamanasar will be delivered. Do we know who and where they are? No, but God can designate by the spirit of revelation, and from among the nations of the earth they will return to their own land, to receive their birthright, this remnant of his chosen people.

Do they know their own identity? Obviously no; their prophets have not yet heard his voice, for his fishers and hunters, who we are, have not yet reached them. Just as the American Indian does not know his own identity. Likewise we find no nation under heaven who is aware of being his other sheep, of the seed of Abraham and heirs according to the promise. Yet, let us be reminded, he said "preach the gospel unto every creature."

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

Thus saith the Lord, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth. They shall lay hold on bow and spear, they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war; against thee, O daughter of Zion.—Jeremiah 6: 22, 23.

The above was the prophecy of Jeremiah concerning the coming of the people from the north country to take Israel from Samaria captive into the north country.

They will return says the same prophet, using the following language:

And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.—Isaiah 11: 16.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

Not that the earth is flat and square and has four corners, but that Israel is scattered, dispersed among the nations, where they are serving other gods day and night.

The church has not established as a belief or dogmatic teaching the idea advanced by some that the ten lost tribes, or any remnant of them, are located at the top of the earth beyond the northern ice, where, in this day when knowledge has increased, we are enabled to know, even without the testimony of men who have been there, it is perpetual ice. The writer wishes to present his opinion, believing many are needlessly turned away from the church, the fountain head of true knowledge, which comes by hearing the word of the Lord, because of those who persist in teaching, even preaching, that such is part of the doctrine of Christ which Paul said is the power of God unto salvation. The world receiving the impression that to be a Latter Day Saint is to be classed with those who believe and would declare that it is a doctrine or even a dogma recognized among us, much less the position of the church, that, contrary to all scientific and geographical knowledge, the ten lost tribes of Israel are, and have been for two thousand five hundred years, snowbound at some mysterious point in the Arctic Circle. That, contrary to all established, God-given laws, there is an asylum fixed behind a wall of ice beyond the boundary lines set by Him who has determined the "bounds of our habitations," where the days and nights are six months long (for the sun was placed by the creator and maker of the heavens and the earth to rule over the day), where there is no means of sustaining a numerous people and where men now living have explored the ice covered surface sufficiently to verify what we already knew by reason of our limited comprehension of the laws which God has instituted.

We are presenting to the world the kingdom of God and his Christ, and are endeavoring to point out for the salvation of all men, everywhere, "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," and this under a commission like unto that given to his originally chosen "prophets, and wise men, and scribes" who were sent to preach the gospel of the kingdom, the good news of eternal life, to every living creature, for are we not told: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come"?

Israel was carried into the north country by the people from the north country. (Jeremiah 6: 22, 23.) Then they went on into a further land.

Christ's ministers, whom we are, are to be sent to them and they are to hear his voice. Being his sheep, they will know his voice, and the voice of a stranger will they not follow.

God set his hand the first time to redeem Zion when he came who said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." His Son, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, being rejected, he has as the prophets foretold, set his hand again the second time.

We find Assyria, even Babylon, referred to as being north though it is in fact due east in the one case and nearly east in the other, this probably because the route taken was northward through Syria, avoiding the desert.

There is first, I believe we can infer, from reading all the prophetic utterances on this subject, to be a great continental readjustment (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5, 6), the land is to be as at the beginning, "married again," and the deep is to be driven back into the north countries. What then is to prevent a people located short of the regions described by some as "beyond the northern wall of ice" striking the rocks and the ice flowing down at their presence during or at the commencement of their journey, specially if the journey should be in the winter time? Then, reaching the highway to be cast up in the midst of the great deep, they are to be miraculously directed by the hand of God to their ancient inheritance, and reaching Jerusalem and Zion, now turned back in their own place (probably in close proximity), people witnessing the miracle of the Lord bringing again Zion, will no longer say:

"The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north."

The writer never did believe, even before Peary penetrated the farthest north, that Israel or any part of scattered Israel dwelt there, and still less does he now. Nevertheless, God is not mocked, for his prophets have never told the location of that country, except in a vague, indefinite, and uncertain way. According to Isaiah 11: 15, 16, they are, apparently, to return as they went through Assyria, north being a sufficiently definite description in that day when geographical knowledge was limited in the extreme.

The return is apparently to be at a time after the land is restored to its original position, and who can say what country may then be correctly described as the north country?

We might select, as an illustration, from among the nations of the present day, many of whom might answer the description, Japan as perhaps one of the least probable, but as a possible solution of the problem. Not that I know or am convinced that this is the solution, but to illustrate that it is not necessary to leap all the way to the Arctic Circle when we seek a location for this portion of lost Israel.

The following might be used as a basis for the argument:

There is abundant reason, however, to question the accuracy of all Japanese chronology prior to the fifth century. The first date corroborated by external evidence is 461, and Aston, who has made a special study of the subject, concludes that the year 500 may be taken as the time when the chronology of the chronicles begins to be trustworthy. Many Japanese, however, are firm believers in the chronicles, and when assigning the year of the empire they invariably take 660 B. C. for starting point, . . .

Prehistoric Period.—Thus, if the most rigid estimate be accepted, the space of 1160 years, from 660 B. C. to A. D. 500, may be called the prehistoric period.—Encyclopædia Britannica, Article, "Japan," vol. 15, p. 252.

Here is a people unknown to civilization and who have no authentic history from the time of the captivity until 500 A. D., long after the visit of the Christ to the ten lost tribes, also, a good one and one half years' journey for a nation.

Some will say, "The Japanese know nothing of Christ or of his visit to them, but we need only to reply: Neither does the American Indian, nor any people on the Islands of the Sea, neither do the Jews know that the Messiah is already come. The same period of time has elapsed in either case, and while all trace of his visit has not disappeared from the legendary or traditional history of the American Indian, neither are startling parallels absent in the traditions of Japan and the religions of that country, including that of Buddha, who enunciated the Golden Rule in negative terms.

Their prophets shall hear his voice. So also shall American Indian prophets again hear his voice as in the days of the Nephites and no longer stay themselves. His visit being in both instances in prehistoric times no comment is necessary on its absence from history, though, as we have shown it is abundantly attested in tradition and by similarity of doctrine.

Ephraim. Where is his land? Not in America of Book of Mormon days, for Mulek was a son of Zedekiah, and was not Lehi a man of the tribe of Manasseh? Search as we may the record of the Nephites or Zarahemlaites, and we find no progenitor of the aborigines who was of Ephraim, and even if we should go so far as to assume that there was such, his blood was so mixed that he could not possibly have originated an Ephraimite lineage that could be described as a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth. Moreover, the attempt to make the accidental happening of the Indian tribes styling themselves nations and from that arguing that they are the nations referred to, is a mere play upon words.

We are agreed that we believe in the literal gathering of Israel, and the restoration of the ten lost tribes, but let us not turn our ears unto fables and establish as a part of our theology a declaration which must repel from the consideration of our presentation of the Christ all those who by reason of having had the advantage of a wide knowledge of this world's store of scientific and demonstrated facts, are well aware of the absurdity of the theory that at or near the north pole dwells Israel.

Through him who is the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren comes the promise, the birthright, the privilege to be the instrument in the hand of God to bear the good news to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people—the gospel, the good tidings of great joy.

Do we then get the vision? Do we realize our privilege? Go ye therefore, Ephraim, and preach the gospel in all the world for a witness, and when they who are lost to man but whom God knoweth, ("God knoweth where he hath taken them") hear his trumpet, that it gives forth no uncertain sound, they will recognize his voice and the voice of a stranger will they not follow.

Israel through Ephraim will thus be gathered out from among the nations to the end that Zion and Jerusalem may be the abode of his saints, places where safety will be found, that Christ may come suddenly to his temple and rule as King of kings and Lord of lords, to the end that nothing will hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain. And, we by our election through our God-given agency, may be partakers with him. Joint heirs by reason of his sacrifice who entered once into the holy place, not into a tabernacle made with hands but into heaven itself that "Where I am ye may be also." For: "This is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

CHRIST'S LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE

[The following appeared in The Outlook as one of the famous Knoll Papers, by Doctor Lyman Abbott, chief editor of that magazine. The date of its appearance was September 26, 1917, and in view of the world-wide discussion of the proposal for a league of nations, it is of vital interest. Reference is made to this article in an article in the editorial department in this issue.—EDITORS.]

Jesus Christ compared his words to seeds. They are the expressions of a spirit which inspires life, and of the principles which guide that life in right channels. They are not rules to regulate conduct. If "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal," were a mere rule to regulate conduct, it would be a sufficient compliance to provide cedar chests for our clothes and a safe deposit box for our money. They are not substitutes for thought, they are incentives to thinking. As seeds they were intended to be developed by his disciples and intelligently applied to the varying circumstances and conditions of an ever-varying life. This truth must be borne in mind by the reader, if he is to understand this paper.

In the eighteenth chapter of Matthew are recorded certain principles which Christ recommended to his disciples for the settlement of any controversies which might rise among them. These principles are embodied in a rather specific prescription of the methods which he instructed them to pursue. These principles and methods appear to me to be as applicable to controversies between nations as between individuals. They are as follows:

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglects to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

Two remarks must be made in explanation of this counsel.

When the counsel was given, the church did not exist. The word here rendered church is one used throughout the Old Testament in the Greek version, current in Christ's time, to designate the popular assembly of the Hebrew people, a body half-way between a mass-meeting and a representative congress, probably sometimes one, sometimes the other. It might be compared to a "constituent assembly."

To treat a man as a heathen man and a publican or Roman taxgatherer was simply to have no dealings with him. The heathen were not subjected to penalties of any sort in Judea; the Jews simply had no intercourse with them. The meaning, then, of Christ's ultimatum, as it would have been understood by his disciples, would be: If your fellow-member defies the public opinion of the Christian community to which you both belong, have nothing more to do with him.

The great statesmen of the world, horrified by this terrible world war, are endeavoring to find some better method for the settlement of international difficulties than "wager of battle," and curiously, and as it seems to me very significantly, have hit upon the method which Christ commended to his disciples nineteen centuries ago. If I interpret Christ's counsel correctly, these statesmen are following Christ, whether they know it or not. For, if we apply the spirit of his counsel to international action, it would mean, first, diplomacy; second, arbitration; third, judicial procedure; fourth, to enforce such procedure, nonintercourse. To interpret and apply this counsel a little more fully:

I. If in the community of nations a controversy arises between two or more of them, the first step toward a settlement is diplomacy—that is, personal negotiation between the two nations. The object of its negotiation should be to gain a brother. Its spirit and its purpose should be specific; its aim, to find some common ground on which the two nations can agree. Austria had a complaint against Serbia. The Austrian crown prince had been assassinated, and the Austrian Government believed that the Serbian Government had been accessory to the assassination. If the charge was true, the trespass committed by the Serbian Government was very great. But Austria showed no desire in her negotiations to gain a brother. She treated Serbia as a criminal. She went with a demand in one hand and a threat in the other. And the demand was one to which no nation could accede under threat, without, by that very act, surrendering her independence.

Christ also advises that these negotiations between the complainant and the supposed transgressor be private. "Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Recently there has been in certain quarters a great outcry against secret diplomacy. There has been in this country some demand, though not very widespread or influential, for the abolition of the secret sessions of the Senate. It is said that secret negotiations have led to wars, and that, if all negotiations were conducted in the open, war would be avoided. And it is probably true that some wars have been prepared for, and perhaps promoted, by secret negotiations.

But it is certain that wars have often been prevented by secret negotiations. There are many international questions which cannot be discussed in the open forum without arousing popular prejudices and exciting popular passions. There is a strong popular feeling in this country against unlimited Japanese immigration. There is a strong popular feeling in Japan hostile to American discrimination against Japanese immigrants. Popular discussion in the press of America excites race prejudice against the Japanese. Popular discussion in the press of Japan excites race prejudice against the Americans. There would be little danger of war between the two countries if we could only unite our forces in a successful war against the yellow press of both countries. If the Japanese question could be taken out of the public forum, there is little doubt that, by friendly negotiations between the Japanese mission now in this country and our President representing the Democratic party and Elihu Root representing the Republican party, an agreement could be reached which would calm the excessive self-esteem of the one people and the excessive fears of the other.

II. If diplomacy quietly conducted between the two parties in a spirit of mutual brotherhood fails, arbitration is the next step in Christ's league to enforce peace. It is evident that the two or three witnesses are to hear both sides of the incipient quarrel. Their opinion is to be listened to by both parties to the quarrel. There is, indeed, no suggestion that they possess authority to decide. Authoritative decision is reserved for the third stage in this proceeding toward peace. But they are not partisans of the complainant taken by him to overbear the accused. They are witnesses, taken to hear the story, to reach their conclusion upon it, and, if no agreement can be reached by their aid, to report to the constituent assembly their judgment upon the undetermined issue. My readers will remember how urgent were the entreaties of England, France, Italy, and Russia to Germany and Austria to submit the issue between Austria and Serbia either to the Hague Tribunal for decision or to a conference of the powers for amicable settlement, and how emphatic and almost contemptuous was the refusal.

III. This was as far as Christian civilization had gone in 1914 in its preparations to avoid war. Reformers had urged the constitution of a supreme court of nations to which any nation might be summoned to give account of its claims. But no such court had been constituted. The imperfectly organized Hague Tribunal could pass only on such questions as were submitted to it by the consent of both the parties to the controversy. Christ recommended to his disciples a further step—the creation of some sort of body—parliament, congress, supreme court, constituent assembly, ecclesia—to which either party could report its complaint, a body which would have power to declare an authoritative judgment.

And if the other party would not accept the judgment, what then?—war to enforce the decision? No! Nonintercourse.

IV. If he will not hear the assembly, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

Let us imagine that in 1914 the eighteen nations now in alliance against the central powers had constituted a community of nations; that they had an international tribunal or assembly with power to hear and decide international questions; and that when Germany and Austria refused to submit the issue between Austria and Serbia to decision by that tribunal, the powers had instantly and automatically pronounced a decree of nonintercourse. What would have happened? Every foreign ambassador in Germany and Austria would have been called home. Every German and Austrian ambassador would have been sent home. The mails between other countries and Germany and Austria would have been suspended. Telegrams of every description would have ceased. The world's ports would have been hermetically sealed against the offender. No exports could have passed from the central powers to other countries, no imports could have passed from other countries into their territories. Germany and Austria would have been as effectually isolated as if they had been transported bodily to Mars. The present blockade, which is threatening to bring Germany to her knees, would be insignificant by the side of such a world blockade. What nation would venture to defy it? What nation defying it once would ever venture to defy it a second time?

It is true that such a league as is here foreshadowed would not absolutely prevent war. Germany might have invaded Holland, Belgium, France in the west, and Russia, Serbia, Bulgaria, Rumania in the east, to get by her arms the supplies which commerce refused to her. It might have been necessary to unite the armies of the world in defense of the right to decree and enforce nonintercourse against a defiant nation. But if such a league had existed in 1914, it would not have required three years of robbery on the land and piracy on the sea to call it into existence.

If any ecclesiastical reader is inclined to think that the counsels embodied in the passage here interpreted and applied to international affairs were intended by Christ simply as a direction for church discipline, I must refer him to my Commentary on Matthew for a statement of the reasons why I cannot agree with him; if any reader thinks they were intended only for the settlement of private disputes, I reply that the same principles apply to the settlement of disputes between organizations as between individuals. If anyone thinks it extraordinary that the world should not have long since discovered and adopted Christ's league to enforce peace, if it is really suggested by his teaching, I reply that he who believes, as I do, that Jesus Christ is the divine leader of mankind will not think it extraordinary that he should still be in advance of the age and waiting patiently for his disciples to overtake him.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Why Study?

The Educational Department of the Woman's Auxiliary being the foundation upon which every other department must be based in order to exist and do effective work, aims at producing a more intellectual and efficient womanhood.

We are now living in a period of the world's history when everyone must learn to live and live more intelligently and completely than humanity has ever before had to live. We must to-day learn that we are our "brother's keeper." Since we are now made to realize that "self" must not occupy only as it becomes a part of the social group, the purpose of education—fitting the individual to take his place in the social group and to add something to the life of the group—is more clearly understood. With the growth of civilization mere physical growing up, mere mastery of the bare necessities of subsistence will not suffice to reproduce the life of the group. Deliberate effort and the taking of thoughtful pains are required. Beings who are born not only unaware of, but quite indifferent to the aims and habits of the social group have to be rendered cognizant of them and actively interested. Education, and education alone, spans the gap. The task of social regeneration is essentially the task of education. If every parent could only realize the force of habit, its psychological meaning, how much mental, moral, and physical energy might be saved and well directed along useful lines. Professor James says, "Habit is the great fly-wheel of society." Without careful study we little realize the vast wealth of human energy that is momentarily lost because some one did not know its significance. This is only one of the countless neglected things which parents are unacquainted with because of failure to study. The spirit of prevention, based upon the only scientific ground—a knowledge and grasp of causes—should be sought by every individual, especially those in whose keeping the lives of others have been intrusted for guidance.

In this day of specialization when comparatively every department of work is considered more efficiently handled when supervised and managed by specially trained men and women, the rearing of a family, the most sacred responsibility that was ever assumed by man, is undertaken by men and women with absolutely no training at all along the particular lines pertaining to this great God-given institution. Ignorance on the part of parents and the great need of all that scientific study can provide has brought about a deplorable condition among the rising generations until we are, to-day, much in need of social reconstruction. In order to bring this reconstruction about neither education nor legislation can be neglected. The school, the church, and the home are the three institutions, of which the home is of the greatest importance, which must be relied upon to bring about the desired social reconstruction. How can the home, then, perform this great task unless the directors of this institution be so trained and prepared to perform the work which is theirs to perform.

One does not need a college education in order to be an educated man or woman. Good common sense, ordinary intelligence, a desire to learn and an ambition to take up the work and stay with it until the end is accomplished, are the necessary requirements for one to have in order for one to become an educated man or woman. There is no short cut, no easy way to get this knowledge. It takes work, patience, and perseverance. But without these, what good was ever accomplished? Are we not commanded to "study all good books"? The statement that "the idler shall have no place in Zion" means the mental idler as well as the physical.

The Woman's Department of the church appeals to the women everywhere to awaken and take advantage of the splendid opportunity of having a wider and better education. If you are not now acquainted with the courses offered, get in touch with your organizer, or the heads of departments, or the general supervisor of the educational department and find out how you may broaden your knowledge and become a more useful instrument in the great world of activity.

In James Russell Lowell's "Vision of Sir Launfal," he tells us how Sir Launfal searched the world over to find the Holy Grail and came home to discover it beside his doorstep. We women are some of us very like Sir Launfal, eagerly, with nervous haste, straining to find the work that we may do to help win this war, and do our bit. Men and women are rushing here, yonder, and everywhere, seeking some great thing to do, when the bits that need doing at home are fairly clamoring for attention. One of these bits that always clamors and that must have attention because it is the Holy Grail, because it is the best thing in the world, is our American children.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Toronto Theater Meetings

[Delayed.] We are pleased to announce that on Sunday, November 24, the Toronto Branch will resume its winter theater campaign. This is the fifteenth consecutive season. Everything seems propitious.

We have secured the very latest, "up-to-date," "down-to-the-minute," theater building in Toronto, The Allen. The acoustics are perfect. The one-floor arrangement is quite unique. It reminds one of the amphitheater at Rome. The speaker and the audience are brought "face to face." Every seat is a good seat. Only high-class moving pictures are shown in this theater.

Sister Blanche Needham (née Allen), who is well known throughout the church, has consented to come from Montreal and assist in the choral work. The Allen pipe organ is second to none in the city. Organ recitals will be a special feature of each program.

I have decided to discard all prefixes and titles and advertise myself simply as "Tom Williams, of California." I am not anticipating the future. I am building no air castles. I am endeavoring to put myself in the closest possible communion with God, trusting implicitly in him, resolved to do my best to express the spirit and purpose of Jesus Christ, leaving the results with God and the people. I desire that the work and ministry of Jesus Christ shall stand out as the one inspiring purpose of our every effort.

We sincerely trust that we may have the confidence and prayers of the members of the church throughout the world, to the end that God may be glorified and honest souls led to see the light of the gospel.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

WATCH IT GROW

There is splendid food for good thought in the following letters. We hope you will all read them, and as you read them try to sense the good spirit that has prompted these schools in their efforts.

If your school has not reported to us will you kindly take the matter up in your next service and have report sent in? Every report we can add to these we are now reporting will help us in this work.

Straubville, North Dakota. Sister Josephine Muffle reports more than $5 per member now, and hoping to have considerable more by Christmas time. Fourteen enrolled of which only five are members of the church. Only five of their school belong to the church, yet over $5 a member. May God bless these good workers.

Hiteman, Iowa. Sister Tessie Morgan writes that they have reached the $2 mark. An enrollment of 160 and now have $378.68. They had planned a rally day the very Sunday the town was quarantined, but have not been able to do anything since. Mark set for $500. We look for this good school to go "over the top" with a good margin over the amount they have set, for they are workers and not the kind that give up.

Port Huron, Michigan. Joseph N. Muir says: "Enrollment is 100, over the top, and more coming in." Port Huron is entitled to be on the roll and we are grateful for their support.

Dixfield, Maine. Ordesa Holman reports: "Dixfield Center Sunday School has gone over the top. As this is the first Sunday school we have had for a number of years we certainly feel pleased with our success. Elder Arthur Koehler was here in June and organized the school for us, and we continued until influenza closed all the schools. We were the only family of Saints living near here until last fall when four were added by baptism. Our largest attendance was 37 and average 20. We hope to continue our efforts." Here is a school—even under most adverse circumstances—that has done its share and gone over the top. These of our schools who have only pleasant surroundings and little to contend with can hardly appreciate what it means to work under the most difficult surroundings. May God bless the Dixfield Center Sunday School and prosper the good workers.

Inverlaw, Australia. R. J. Nugent reports: "We are sending herewith a money order for £4 1s (about $20) for the Christmas offering, hoping the money will reach you safely and so help the Lord's work along. We will do our best in the future and hope to double this amount next time." We do not know whether this good school reached the $2-per-member mark, for we do not know just how many members they have, but we feel that they are entitled to mention for they have been under severe trials in Australia. Though you are far away, Inverlaw, we feel that you are near us and thank you for your good support.

Omaha, Nebraska. A. A. Thiehoff, reporting for the Rising Hope Sunday School writes: "We have a membership of 100, and our offering to date is $260. We still have boys', girls', and fathers' days ahead of us which should increase our offering." We feel sure that the boys, girls, and fathers of this good school will boost the offering 'way up, for now that they have had the rest—due to influenza—there should be lots of enthusiasm to turn loose.

Nowata, Oklahoma. Sister E. M. Odle writes: "We have not progressed as we would had we not had to close on account of the influenza. We have had no session of Sunday school for six weeks until to-day. Our aim was $200. We have $118 now, which is over the $2-per-member mark. We hope to go over the top with our aim and will do so with the Lord's help. Pray that we may succeed." We do pray that Nowata may succeed.

Kansas City, Missouri, Central Sunday School. Sister Maude Gunsolley, reports: "Central Sunday School should have been reported to you sometime ago as belonging on the Honor roll. I take pleasure in stating that to-day we have an offering of $605.05, with an enrollment of 250. We gave $700 last year and are going to make it $1,000 this year. Everyone in the school is working and we have set our mark by classes for the seniors and adults and by departments for the children. Some of them have passed their mark, while some have not reached theirs. The ban on church service has held up the children but they will make up for lost time in the weeks to come. Yours for over the top with $100,000." For a school of this size we feel that Central is doing well, and we hope and pray that they may reach their aim of $1,000.

Tidioute, Pennsylvania. Brother Lee Roy Warren reports for his wife and self: "We are isolated members and have no church privileges, as our nearest branch is Sharon, Pennsylvania. We felt that we ought to let you know that we have not forgotten the Sunday school and the offering goal of $100,000. We have saved $5 offering up to now and will make it $4 each if possible. We would be glad if we could attend Sunday school once more for we have not been able to attend a Latter Day Saint Sunday school or church since the spring of 1915. We hope to be with the Saints some day and hope and pray that it will not be long until we can have a home inside of a stake of Zion and join with the Saints once more." Here is a splendid example for all our isolated ones and we hope to have many such letters as this to report.

The time is nearing very fast when we shall have to send in our offering as we desire that all schools close this year's offering on the last of December, 1918—but we also desire to see every school start their 1919 offering the very first Sunday in January. Let us provide some definite plans this year and work with some very definite objects in view.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.

Though the outlook here has at times been dark and discouraging, and many of God's people seemed to have forgotten him, there still remain those who are true to their covenant and the cause of Christ. However, we are sorry to mention that some of our earnest workers have left us for other fields.

The clouds have scattered now and the bright sunlight of God's favor is again shining upon us. We are rapidly taking on new life, and expect to be able to give a good account of ourselves in the very near future.

Brother E. V. Wagner will reorganize the band next week, and it is expected that all the old players will return to do their part. In the near future Brother Albert E. Lewis will be with us again to do his part in the band. At present he is with the 61st Infantry Band in France. We will surely be glad to have him with us again.

Under the direction of Sister J. R. Lentell, the Auxiliary workers are as usual doing their full part in helping to carry the gospel to our neighbors and friends.

We have a live Oriole circle, also, under the leadership of Sister Lentell.

Brother R. J. Hawkins is the superintendent of our school, and his motto is, "Over the top," with our Christmas offering. Our pastor, Brother John Lentell, is our Religio president, and his motto is, "Work, not talk." We have stopped talking; we are working and we are "going over the top."

In John R. Lentell we have a leader who is always for the right; a real worker, and a man of God.

It is with deepest sympathy that we refer to the death in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, of Elder George Morris, who, until a few years ago, was leader of the Scranton Choir. In 1915 he was appointed to the mission field going from Scranton to Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and from there to Elk Mills, Maryland, then returning again to Bloomsburg, where he died a victim of influenza. He was a good student and an able preacher.

More news coming.

CORRESPONDENT.

GARDEN CITY, ABERCUMBOI, ABERDARE, October 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from one who is isolated owing to the spiritual condition of the work here.

The longer I live, the more I can see the necessity of the gathering of the Saints. We shall have many trials to contend with before that time comes. The Lord is going to have a tried people who have been through the furnace of affliction, and will know the value of living by God's law. The whole church must come together for everyone to be perfected by that law. It is only by our living by the law that we can be ever sanctified from all unrighteousness.

I, for one, long to belong to the school of the prophets, and shall never be satisfied with anything less than to be guided by the Holy Spirit, to understand all that has been written and given by our heavenly Father as a law and guide to us as his church. If we as Saints are going to judge the world and reprove it, because of its unrighteousness, we must thoroughly understand the law ourselves.

I am longing for the assembly of the church upon the ground that has been sanctified for that purpose.

I am sorry to say that there have been many baptized into this branch and no sooner has the word of God taken root in their hearts than the Evil One has come along and done like as in the parable of the sower, where some seed fell by the wayside and the fowls of the air came along and picked them up.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. C. SNOOK.

[Excerpt from letter received from Elder C. Edward Miller, Hilo, Hawaii, November 4, 1918]:

I am here at Hilo taking the place of Brother McConley, who is at Honolulu with Sister McConley. She may have to undergo an operation for appendicitis. Am anxiously waiting to hear how she is getting along.

We had quite a severe earthquake a few nights ago. It awakened all of us. I thought somebody was under the bed trying to put me out, so I got up with blood in my eye. It is a curious sensation when the earth trembles like that, almost makes you seasick.

They have a nice little branch here. Hope they can get a few more men to help bear the financial burden.

Recently Brother Puuohau and I walked around the Island of Maui on a missionary trip, with Sister Dollie Lee, the niece of Brother Puuohau, carrying our luggage on horseback. It certainly was a great experience. May write it up for the HERALD.

[Excerpt from letter of Elder Edmund J. Gleazer, Archbald, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1918.]

Yesterday I had my first real experience at rural work. I have been trying for some time to obtain permission to use a church at a country place called Cortez about five miles from Archbald if you go over the mountain road, and fifteen miles if you take a better road which runs through Carbon-dale. We were denied the use of the church because they feared that we would stir up the people and cause disunity. We got in touch with one of the school directors (a man who is not connected with any church) and he said that the schoolhouse was open for any good purpose and gave us permission to occupy. Think of it, houses that are supposed to be dedicated to the worship of God closed to the true servants of God, and men who claim no connection with any institution opening up the schoolhouse for us to present the gospel! I wonder what the Master will say to the modern Pharisee when he stands at the bar of judgment.

We have posted the country for miles in the neighborhood of the schoolhouse. It is quite difficult to do this work without some means to get around. A brother from Archbald hired a rig and we drove to the country a distance of fifteen miles. We put the horse in a stable and spent the entire afternoon nailing up our cards and visiting the homes of the people asking them to investigate our message. It was late when we arrived home. We have done our part and we know not what the results will be but I have learned that it is our duty to put forth every effort we can to reach the people and trust our heavenly Father to give the increase. I told the brother who made it possible for me to obtain this opening that if God had a people at that place they would come and if no one comes we will discover that there are no sheep and then we will feel satisfied anyhow. It is our mission to warn the people; the people's mission to heed.

A brother has promised to take me out every evening in his car next week, and if the interest demands it I will try and continue the meetings; some way will be opened up for me to get there.

[Personal letter to President Smith.]

MARSHALL, MISSOURI, November 15, 1918.

F. M. SMITH.

Dear Brother Smith: Realizing that there are many demands upon your time, I will write but a few lines. I do not know that my few words will be of any use, but perhaps the loyalty of "one of the least of these" may cheer your heart a little.

Having read the nonsense written [and personally circulated] by some, and heard much criticism from many, I can partially realize the trials you must undergo, and how timely was the prayer offered by Brother Elbert Smith, and quoted in his touching address as given in the November 7 Ensign. I was interested in your eloquent address, and admire your courage and high ideals. I look forward to some day meeting you and shaking your hand.

The period of reconstruction, and of preparation for Christ's coming, will, of necessity, be a difficult time for the church, especially for our President. "We want no cowards in our ranks."

Joining in Brother Elbert's prayer, I also ask that God will touch all hearts with loyalty and teach the harm and narrowness of petty criticism. All humans are fallible and need help and sympathy. I believe all the Saints in Marshall feel as I do, that our President is doing his noble best, and has our hearty cooperation.

I am anxious to be of service in every way possible, and thank God for showing me the truth.

A loyal sister,

DELPHINE WILLIAMS BOZARTH.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, November 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to give you a kindly greeting, and to tell you how much we appreciate the good things that are being published in "our" church paper, THE SAINTS' HERALD, also the Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Unity.

If the Saints would pay heed to what is being given in the way of instruction and advice in these publications, by the heads of the church, and put them into practice, the church would make such strides as it has never made in the history of the Reorganization.

The Saints are rejoicing here because of the prospect of the cessation of carnage and bloodshed that has been going on in Europe, the victory that democracy has won over militarism, the subsiding of the influenza epidemic, and the privilege that we once more have of meeting together at our house of worship, which has been denied us for the past month. If any have died of the plague in our district, I have not yet heard of it, although some have been very near death's door, and have been miraculously healed through the administrations of the elders.

We are truly glad that the ban has been removed so that we can begin to move about in church work again. Our plans and program have been very materially broken into, because of the epidemic. All that we have been allowed to do during the past month has been to visit and administer to the sick. We have been called away as far as two hundred miles to administer. We are not consoling ourselves with the thought that the troublous times are about over, but we are admonishing the Saints to stand in holy places, and be prepared for the scourges yet to come.

Sincerely in bonds,

C. W. HAWKINS.

HUGOTON, KANSAS, November 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: Thinking a few items from this part of the great mission field would be of interest to your readers I write. To begin with: I have been held up by the influenza ban for the last seven weeks and the end is not yet. I preached only one sermon in October and so far only two this month. Yesterday I meant to preach but a sudden outburst of old winter accompanied by the "flu" scare prevented. The epidemic is worse here now than ever before. Hugoton and the near-by town called Rolla have more cases than hitherto. There has been a recent increase in the outbreak and while there is no illness in the country where I am yet there is constant danger, so the people are in a state of panic all the time. There are no schools running in the towns and none in the country except where I have been preaching. I have held the only services I have heard of. When will the end be?

Conference Minutes

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—November 15, 1918, stake presidency presiding. Reports of Woman's Auxiliary, Stake Religio, and stake bishop read. Bishop's report showed receipts $9,390.31; balance on hand $2,313.63. J. H. Paxton was recommended by First Kansas City Branch for ordination to office of elder. Same was approved and he was ordained by Brethren J. A. Tanner and George Jenkins. C. F. Davis was appointed to labor in the Second Kansas City Branch by stake presidency. His appointment was ratified by the conference. Appointment of Miss Mildred Crandall as stake secretary was also ratified. The following motion prevailed: That we look upon the use of tobacco with disfavor; that hereafter those holding the priesthood in this stake who are addicted to its use be not called upon to minister in their office. Stake approved the coordination plan adopted by the General Conference. A large attendance gathered at the Sunday sessions. Bishop B. R. McGuire preached the morning discourse. The balance of the time embraced a most spiritual and uplifting prayer meeting. Woman's Auxiliary and priesthood session, concluding with a demonstration by the stake orchestra at the evening hour. Respectfully submitted, Mildred Crandall, secretary.

Conference Notices

We are informed that the Spokane conference has changed its date from December 21 and 22, to the 14th and 15th.

Eastern Montana will convene at Andes, December 14 and 15. M. C. Hutchinson, secretary, Andes, Montana.

Convention Notices

Southeastern Illinois conventions postponed on account of influenza. Springerton is under ban and the date of release is uncertain. Ruth Lewis Holman, secretary.

Eastern Montana Sunday school and Religio, at Andes, December 13. Mrs. M. C. Hutchinson, secretary, Andes, Montana.

The Presidency

The First Presidency, after consultation with members of the Quorum of Twelve available, give notice of the following transfers for the balance of the conference year:

Elder F. A. Russell transferred from Southwestern Kansas to Holden Stake.

Elder F. L. Sawley transferred from Southern Indiana District to Southeastern Illinois District.

Elder J. A. Bronson transferred from Eastern Montana District to Spokane District.

Recent notice covering transfer of C. N. Headding should have read Seattle and British Columbia District instead of State of Washington.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

Addresses

T. W. Williams, first vice president of the Religio, should be addressed at 109 Fermanagh Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Services in charge of Arthur H. Mills. Burial in Mountain View Cemetery, with especial services by the Pioneers' Society of San Bernardino County, of which she was a member.

KINGHORN.—George C. Kinghorn was born June 10, 1857. Baptized into the Reorganized Church more than 40 years ago, holding fast to the faith until death, which took place suddenly, November 3, 1918, at Salt Lake City, Utah. Brother Kinghorn had labored diligently in the Salt Lake Branch for upwards of 35 years, occupying as an elder at the time of his demise, which was caused by heart failure.

He is survived by his widow, one daughter, and 4 sons. Services were held at place of interment, Mount Olivet Cemetery, in charge of C. A. Smurthwaite, assisted by S. S. Holm.

SMITH.—Catherine Smith, widow of the late Richard Smith, was born January 13, 1862, at East Dover, Ontario. Baptized May 24, 1891, by John H. Lake. Died November 4, 1918, at Calgary, Alberta. She was respected and loved for her faithful services and honest stand for the highest ideals. Funeral from the home with sermon by Charles Coles.

LAKE.—Carbon M. Lake was born at Gooderham, Ontario, September 12, 1895. Baptized July 3, 1904, by S. W. Tomlinson. Was a young man of splendid business ability and took much pleasure in home and society, being greatly respected among his associates. Died at his home, November 10, 1918, after a short illness. Funeral sermon by G. E. Harrington.

BURNETT.—Susannah Burnett, aged 71 years and 21 days, died near Lamoni, Iowa, November 6, 1918, after years of failing health. She was a kind woman, and in the past she and her husband had given the ministry and Saints hospitable welcome at their home. Funeral services were held at their residence. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins to a large congregation of their friends and neighbors.

ROBISON.—Bernard Eugene, son of Harry and Lena Robison, born September 6, 1901, at Mount Vernon, Indiana. Baptized February 26, 1910, by John Davis, at Ogden, Utah. Was accidentally killed November 22, 1918, by the overturning of an automobile in which he was riding. Services held at Mountain View Cemetery, Ogden, in charge of C. A. Smurthwaite, sermon by Richard Bullard.

LAKE.—Chester H. Lake was born December 23, 1855, at Oakwood, Ontario. Baptized by John H. Lake. Married Hattie M. Simmons October 9, 1883, to whom four children were born. Ordained priest in 1910 and served faithfully. Death occurred at his home in Gooderham, August 20, 1918, due to paralysis. Survived by his companion and 3 children. Was a faithful husband and father, loved and respected by all. Funeral sermon by Grant St. John, at his home.

GUTHRIE.—John H. Guthrie, died at his home in Wyoming, Iowa, November 22, 1918, aged 53 years, 4 months, and 12 days. A doctor by profession. Married Miss Hattie Rank, April 12, 1888, who died in November, 1895. To this union one daughter was born: Mrs. Jessie Kock, of Wyoming, Iowa. Married Miss Una Gunsolley April 16, 1898. A member of no denomination, yet was favorable to this church. Funeral services at the Methodist church, by William Sparling, assisted by Reverend H. J. Bowder, November 25, 1918.

COOPER.—Charlotte A. Cooper was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, September 21, 1837. Lived on a farm when a child, in Iowa. Crossed the plains in 1854, going to Oregon with her parents. Married Louis Cooper in 1855. Lived there 8 years and moved to Santa Rosa, California, where she died. Baptized February 21, 1895. Was of a kind and loving disposition and lived a saintly life. Was the mother of 7 children, 4 girls and 3 boys, one of the latter preceding her to the better land. Services in charge of C. A. Parkin, who also preached the funeral sermon.

SHEPARD.—Forest P. Shepard was born January 10, 1889. Baptized August 19, 1900, at Magnolia, Iowa. Married Harriet B. Gaskill September 29, 1909. Died October 28, 1918. There are left to mourn, wife, mother, 4 brothers, and 3 sisters. Deceased has lived in Valentine, Nebraska, a number of years and was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and leaves many friends. Was a member of the Valentine Home Guards among whom he was very popular. The Home Guards as an escort accompanied the remains of their fallen comrade to their last resting place, where the final salute was fired, and the farewell taps sounded. Services in charge of Reverend W. W. Wells. Interment in Mount Hope Cemetery.

TORONTO CHURCH BULLETIN

The newest tract on the Toronto situation treats several interesting phases of the questions recently raised in that city. The tract is a reproduction of terse and interesting letters written in the form of bulletins by Elder Thomas W. Williams. They are desirable for placing in the hands of inquiring or disaffected parties. You may obtain copies by ordering from either the Herald Publishing House or the Ensign Publishing House, at the following prices: 1 for 5 cents; 10 for 30 cents; 25 for 65 cents; 50 for $1; 500 for $9.

NEW PRESIDENT FOR UTAH CHURCH

Following the demise of the late Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, Heber J. Grant was chosen as president of the church, with Anton H. Lund and C. W. Penrose as counselors. Lund was chosen as president of the quorum of twelve, in place of Grant, and thus becomes next in line for the presidency.

In a letter changing his address to 124½ East Seventy-fifth Street North, Portland, Oregon, Elder C. E. Jones, Bishop's agent in that district, says he is again able to attend his duties in the Master's service, after an illness of six months caused by a nervous breakdown. He will be glad to hear from anyone in the district to whom he may be of service.

We are informed that Brother Augustine Dwyer has been giving a series of his illustrated lectures at the Boston church, beginning the 17th. He was advertised for a week, with a lecture each evening, but was prevailed on to stay another week. His itinerary includes Brockton, Providence, Attleboro, Plymouth, Haverhill, New Bedford, Fall River, Worcester, Brooklyn, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, and Niagara Falls.

CORRECTIONS

Our attention has been called by Brother R. W. Farrell to the fact that in the issue of the 20th we gave credit to him for a prose poem which should have been credited to the author, Brother Elmer Long. We are sorry for this error in not recognizing it in the new form but finding it uncredited in Brother Farrell's mission paper supposed it was original with him.

In the HERALD for November 13, read collection box for question box in the last paragraph of the article "Passing of the collection plate."

Prayers are requested for Annie Mayhorn, of Tolar, New Mexico, who desires to unite with the church upon recovery.

Brother R. W. Farrell, in charge at Providence, Rhode Island, is using two cards, put out by himself on his hand press, which might be of assistance to others in their pastoral work. The following visiting card is printed on one side and blank on the reverse side:

The spiritual life of a branch depends on the faithfulness of its officers, to a large extent. Trusting that you desire to do your part, I am requesting you to visit the person whose name and address is herewith furnished you. And please report to me, on or before the last of next week, the initial result of your call. RALPH W. FARRELL.

On the other side is this:

North American Review, volume 138, page 16, article by Governor Eli Murray of Utah (1884): "The 'Reorganized Church' (members) are entitled to the respect of all, and that church recognizes and receives in common with all others every protection under the constitutional guarantee. But polygamous Mormonism, which has overridden the constitution, nullified Federal legislation, and defied the Government, has made of Utah a deformed child."

Congressional Record, December 13, 1906, Senator Burrows's speech: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints . . . numbering some 50,000 peaceable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens scattered throughout the United States in small church societies, conforming to the laws of their country wherever they may be, and adherents to the faith of the founder of their creed, repudiating and denouncing the doctrine of polygamy and its attendant crimes, without temple, endowment house, or secret order—worship in the open like other church organizations, unquestioned and unmolested."

The work has been retarded in the Little Sioux District in common with that of the church, according to Elder C. J. Smith, of Sioux City, though not seriously crippled as is reported from the East. On the 11th things were beginning to open up and settle down to normal. All business was suspended for the day on account of the celebration of the signing of the armistice. All are pleased with the outcome and feel that the work of the church will go on with greater and renewed interest.

A PLEASING EXAMPLE OF COORDINATION

The literature being sent out by the general officers of the auxiliaries invites the freest coordination of the facilities and desires of every community in the working out of the proposed "winter institutes." A most pleasing response has come in from Southern California to Superintendent G. R. Wells, which furnishes a concrete example of what may and should be accomplished under the coordination plan, even without definite instructions from the general coordinating committee or convention resolutions. When the workers there received the letters describing the plan, they immediately called a meeting, which included Apostle J. W. Rushton, the district president, and the heads of the auxiliaries, perhaps some others. They canvassed the situation, selected the team, and arranged to choose the places for holding the meetings, all of which was promptly reported by Brother Rushton. This leaves an ideal opportunity for the general officers to instruct and coach the team and furnish outlines. It saves time, accomplishes results sought, and can but be of utmost benefit to the district.

Rockford, Illinois, Saints invite any of the Saints and friends visiting Rockford and Camp Grant to look up their meeting place at 120 Oakley Avenue. Meetings every Sunday. At 10 a. m. Sunday school and preaching at 11. Services 6.30 and 7.45 Sunday evenings. Take a West State Street car to Oakley Avenue fifteen blocks out. Everyone cordially invited. J. A. Daer, 120 Oakley Avenue, Rockford, Illinois. (Ensign is asked to copy.)

Bishop McGuire returned to Independence from Canada in time to spend Thanksgiving in Independence.

President F. M. Smith has visited various points in Canada in the London and Toronto Districts, and was expected to proceed west, visiting Seattle and other points en route to San Francisco.

WOMEN'S BUILDING MANAGERS WANT A PIANO

Those in charge of the Women's Building, at Independence, Missouri, feel that there must be some one or ones in the church who would like to leave a piano with them where it would not only receive good care and be kept in tune until they are able to purchase, but would at the same time supply an urgent need. Or if anyone has one to sell at a real bargain price they might try to raise the money in some way. Address Mrs. Joseph Mather, 1300 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri.

The Des Moines District Dispatch for November, is issued from Oskaloosa, Iowa, where R. J. Farthing, the business manager and printer, resides. We note that Elder O. Salisbury, editor, and for years district president and bulwark of strength to the Saints, has moved with his family to 740 Cross Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa. Brother A. E. Warr, in charge at Des Moines, was reported as convalescing from influenza.

FREEDOM, TRUTH, AND RIGHTEOUSNESS

(Resumé of sermon by S. A. Burgess at Lamoni, Iowa, July 21, 1918.)

Recently we heard the challenge made that any man who belonged to a church was a slave. A little later we heard the statement made that we were slaves to the church, slaves to our ideas of right.

FREEDOM FROM SIN

We beg to suggest that both of these ideas are wrong. There is no such thing as being a slave to truth—a slave to that which is right. Jesus expressed it clearly in John 8: 34, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." Slavery is an element related to sin and to ignorance. It does not belong to, but is a contradiction of terms when used in connection with truth and righteousness.

The Master expressed it clearly:

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. They answered him, we be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free? Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. And the servant abideth not in the house forever, but the Son abideth ever. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8: 31-36.

The same idea is repeated by Paul in the first Corinthian letter, and in the Galatian letter. "Ye are free from the law of sin and death." "The Lord's free men."

For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men; as free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.—1 Peter 2: 15, 16.

THE RIGHT TO DO WRONG

The above adds the further thought: our liberty is not to be used as a cloak for maliciousness. Freedom is not license. Free agency does not mean that we have the right to do wrong. It means that we are left free to choose our course; but there is no such a thing as a right to do wrong. It is a contradiction of terms and of facts. But it is manifested by way of a defense sometimes for wrong doing: "Well, I guess I had a right to do it."

It is in fact more clearly expressed when we come to consider the temptations of youth. The young man has fully as good a right to drink, or as good a right to smoke, as anyone else; and a right to do other things that are worse. But no one has such a right to do wrong.

Recently we saw a little picture, under it a bit of dialogue, to the effect:

He: "Well, what do you women want with the vote anyway? Haven't you everything you need now?"

She: "Oh, yes; it isn't for that, but you men have so many liberties, while we have to be so careful what we do."

In the picture she was smoking a cigarette. It conveyed a thought that perhaps too many are slow to see, a tendency you may not call modern, but by which perhaps unjustly the woman's movement sometimes is judged.

Recently a very able young woman urged and insisted that a young woman had as much right to go wrong as a young man, and that it was the fault of law that she was so unjustly blamed. The young woman was by no means making a plea for special privilege in the sense set forth above. She had no desire to make a misstep herself, but we fear she did not see the resulting tendency of her teaching.

In the first place it is not a matter of the law of the land, though we believe the law of the land could be improved in this respect. It is the way that good women look upon the question. It is a matter of public opinion and not of law. The temptation that comes to a young man or young woman often comes with surprising suddenness, and in a way that one looks not for. When that hour comes, if there is lurking in the unconscious or subconscious the thought, "I have as good a right to do wrong as anyone else," it tends strongly to weaken the moral resistance; and by this bit of sophistry causes one to think that he or she has a right to seek the moment's pleasure, and ignore the consequences. "Oh, well, other people do it. Why can't I? I have as good a right to do it as anyone."

We must emphatically deny that. A young woman has not as good a right to go wrong as a young man. A young man has not as good a right to go wrong as a young woman. There is no such a thing as a right to do wrong.

We plead for no double standard, but for a high single standard, and must resist that which will tend towards wrong standards.

Many crimes have been committed in the name of freedom. That does not mean true freedom, for it is not. No more than the gendarme who jumped his horse over the fence and started to tear up the farmer's garden, in the French Revolution, (and by the way, they almost worship the soil there, and a garden means more there than it probably does for most of us in this country). Naturally the farmer protested, but the soldier replied with, "We are free! We can do as we please." Of course in that he was wrong. There is no right of destruction—no right to do wrong. True liberty is only consistent with righteousness. He who yields himself to sin becomes the servant of sin. That is the declaration of a great philosophic truth.

WHO ARE THE TEMPTED?

Many times have we had the question raised among a class of young men, "Do you think that those men up at the church, the president of the branch, the Sunday school superintendent, and others, who never have had any temptation deserve the same credit as do us young fellows who have been tempted, and maybe we've done some things we should not have done, but who have repented and overcome our temptation and do right?"

Asked in that form, there is only one possible answer. Of course, the man who is tempted and tried and overcomes his temptation deserves more credit than the man who has no temptation.

But the question at once arises, "Where is the man who has no temptation? Is it the Sunday school teacher? Is it the presiding elder?" and you search in vain, for if the truth is told, we all have to overcome. Is that surprising when concerning him who was the greatest and best that ever took upon him flesh and became man it is written that he was tempted and tried like us in all things, yet without sin. Therein lies the freedom of Jesus. He was without sin.

As some used to express it when men wore beards a good deal, we cannot keep the birds from coming to our beards but we can keep them from laying their eggs there. We cannot prevent temptation approaching us, but we can prevent inviting it in, warming it, and watching it grow.

It is easy to see that the drunkard is a slave to his habit and sacrifices everything else to that end. It is easy to see the man who is a drug addict is a slave to it and unable to break away. But it is so of other sins or habits.

We have the divine declaration that he who sins becomes a slave to his sin, and that he who follows Christ becomes free indeed. We have the clear declaration of the law; but we have also the possibility of intellectual demonstration.

MORALITY AND INTELLIGENCE

Seeing then the other part of our subject, we add there can be no lasting morality without intelligence. That would be merely another way of stating that we may talk about how we would rather do the will of God than to be wise, but how can we do the will of God unless we first know it? There is a moral obligation to be intelligent.

We can see it very plainly when it relates to Bible principles, that good intentions are not enough. The law is laid down. Faith in God, repentance, baptism by immersion, the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost.

We can see it in the affairs of the world. The mother who feeds her child poison by mistake may have the best intentions in the world, but the consequences are still the same. There is a moral obligation to know that which is safe and that which is dangerous. The more a man knows the better and truer his service may be, if he will.

Also, there can be no lasting intelligence without morality. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants states it, "Light and truth forsaketh that evil one" (90:6). The same thought is expressed in the New Testament:

Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide himself from them. . . . I am come a light unto the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.—John 12: 35, 36, 46.

We have seen that exemplified time and time again as it has already been set forth. Sin means a darkening of the intellect. Insanity is based largely upon social wrongdoing. Truly the wages of sin is death. It is demonstrated time and again that continual sinning impairs the judgment; the impaired judgment sins continually. This means, in other words, that morality is only consistent with intelligence, and a lasting intelligence is only consistent with lasting morality.

INTELLIGENT FREEDOM

Critical thought confirms plainly this conclusion. The latest school of psychology is the Freudian. Without going into an analysis pro and con of its particular teaching it has undoubtedly developed and confirmed some age-old truths. In a recent book the Freudian Wish and Its Place in Ethics, by Edwin B. Holt, (New York, 1916), critical analysis is made of this same theme. It gives an instance in the teaching of children.

An innate tendency or purpose of an infant is to put out its hand to touch fire. If the mother is by, she holds back the hand (her purpose) before it reaches the flame. There is a hint for the child, here, of right and wrong. If the mother guards the child unremittingly, and every time restrains the hand before the uncomfortable warmth begins to stimulate the child's own tendency to withdraw, the child will never be burned and may eventually (in a way to be described) acquire the habit of stopping short before reaching the flame. But this cautious conduct will not be guided by (be a function of) the heat of the flame, for the child has had no experience of this. The child's general conduct toward fire will then be partly a function of the immediate properties of fire (its color, position, shape, etc.); but partly also of a something else (really its mother), which may or may not figure explicitly in the child's field of consciousness. The mother has set a barrier between the child and a portion of reality; and forever after the child will be in some measure impeded in its dealings with fire. An inhibition of which the source or sanction is thus not intrinsic is precisely, I suppose, a taboo.

Or again, if an equally unremitting mother lets the child put out its hand toward the flame and takes care only that the hand by too great momentum or an accidental lurch does not actually come into the flame, the child will not be burned and its own mechanism of withdrawal will be exercised not through the mother's interference but through the direct action of the flame's heat. The child's conduct toward fire becomes integrated, and is solely a function of the actual properties of fire. Ten years later you shall hear the first mother shouting, "Bobbie, don't you dare put your hand so near the lamp, and if you touch those matches again your father will whip you." And the second mother will be saying, "Bobbie, go get the matches now and light the lamp, and set it down on the center table."

He then extends this to another case where a child may still be permitted to partake, yet finds the consequences evil and so connects the pain with the wrongdoing. He emphasizes the great necessity that parents should be truthful, and that most parents fail in this respect; that it is useless to dub the truth sacred when parents do not use it strictly themselves. Absolute truthfulness is the only possible, right, safe basis on which to proceed with a child. So the time comes when it is a question of cigarette smoking. A child properly brought up, when his father tells him of the evil consequences, does not make these consequences an attribute of "father says I should not," or of father at all. Cigarettes are connected through, "Father tells the truth," with the consequences which father has set forth. It is not that "father says tobacco is injurious," but tobacco is injurious, because father says so, and father always tells the truth.

FREEDOM AND RIGHT

Another illustration he uses is of a young woman who goes from a rural and pious home to a great city. She makes the acquaintance of others who are engaged in the amusements of the town. She has been taught at home that the theater is a place of abomination. From the conversation of her associates she judges that to some extent the parental opinion is well founded. She is confronted on one hand with a proper curiosity of youth to see life, the love of companionship and need for relaxation.

On the other hand are the precepts of loving and trusted parents and of their religion, a sound prejudice against unbridled frivolity, and a normal shrinking from the moral contamination which the young woman sees is at work in her wage-earning friends. . . . We are fairly familiar with three ways in which persons behave when they meet such a dilemma. One way is to resist the present "temptations," which means to suppress the wish for companionship and pleasure, to renounce the "tree of knowledge"; eventually to drift away from social connections, and into a warped, acidulous, and (as Freud finds) nervously diseased spinsterhood. A second way is to "forget" (i. e., to suppress) the righteous precepts learned at home, to indulge unthinkingly in every "pleasure" offered, to become the butterfly and the riotous pleasure-lover; which means eventually to drop into any and every form of abandonment, and to die a drunken prostitute. I state extreme cases; that is, cases in which the suppression persists. . . . The ascetic "hates" the "evils of this wicked world," despises and rankles over the frailties of his fellow men, is seized by spasmodic impulses to kick over the traces himself, and is steadily obsessed by licentious thoughts. The abandoned pleasure-lover, similarly, has fits of "remorse" and the haunting prick of "conscience," becomes maudlin and weepy at mention of "home and mother," asseverates with suspicious vehemence his having "always tried to do right," and calls for drink to allay his mental agony. When drunkest he babbles o' green fields, and blubbers, "See that my grave's kept green."

A third way is no better. It is the way of those who undertake to follow both of two conflicting courses; in the present instance, to observe both the church-going traditions of home and the morally relaxed habits of town. A person in this frame of mind will sometimes go to his clerical adviser with the proposal—"I'll go to all the services, take an active part in church work on Sunday, and contribute money, if you will agree that through the week I shall do anything I like." This is, of course, the path of "compromise" in the most reprehensible sense of the word, and the direct route to all the vilest forms of hypocrisy. . . . This third way of meeting a dilemma resembles the other two in that dissociation takes place, and differs only in that neither branch of the character gains any considerable ascendancy over the other. In the first two cases there is a steady suppression of one set of tendencies, and a steady escape of these through furtive by-paths of thought and action; while in the third, each set of tendencies suffers alternate suppression. In none of the three cases is the victim able to do any one thing with his whole heart; a part of his strength has always to be spent in suppressing dissociated and antagonistic tendencies.

RESOLUTION FOR RIGHT AND FREEDOM

But there is a fourth way of meeting a dilemma, a way that involves integration and not dissociation nor yet suppression. Oddly enough it is not distinguished by superficial observers from the third way. It consists in a free play of both the involved sets of tendencies, whereby they meet each other, and a line of conduct emerges which is dictated by both sets of motives together, and which embodies all that was not downright antagonistic in the two. This sounds like compromise, whereas its mechanism is utterly different. And it were best called reconciliation or resolution. We return to our illustration of the young woman coming from a pious home to a great city. She is invited by a young man to go to a play. We have seen how, in the interest of home piety she may suppress her natural curiosity and love of friends, and say, "No"; or how in the latter interest she may suppress the home instructions, and say, "Yes." In either case only half of her has acted while the other half has been suppressed; and only half of her is active in going to the theater or, in the other case, participates in staying away. Suppose, however, that in this young woman her knowledge of the theater is not split into the two dissociated complexes of the deliciously pleasurable and the abhorrently wicked. She can view her invitation to the theater without either fascination or fear. Her knowledge, both direct and hearsay, as it accumulates, integrates around the central theme "theater"; and her reactions toward this, the various appeals which this makes, meet one another, so that the theater's attractive and repulsive aspects, not being dissociated, work on one another directly, and this balanced interplay works itself out in a discriminating line of conduct. It is precisely like the case of fire which both pleases and yet burns the baby; who, if not artificially deterred, learns to handle fire discriminatingly. The young woman learns to avail herself of whatever is good in the theater and to avoid what is bad. . . . And such a young woman will end neither as a careless butterfly nor as a grim ascetic. And it is to be noted that from this process of discrimination arises not merely sound moral choice in the individual, but sound moral development of the institution itself.

INTELLIGENT DISCRIMINATION

. . . Here, as previously in the case of fire and of tobacco, we see that moral conduct is discriminating conduct; morality is wisdom. . . . Let us here consider the motor attitude of the average person toward mushrooms that he finds when out walking. I meet in a field near the edge of woods some clusters of low, small, light-brown mushrooms. These look like the edible Agaricus campestris, and I am inclined to eat some of them. But I have read that the very poisonous Agaricus phalloides in some of its seven varieties strongly resembles the campestris, and I have never learned the visible marks by which the two are to be distinguished. Therefore I am also inclined not to eat them. Here, then, I am in front of one object which stimulates in me two antagonistic courses of action—to sit down and eat, and to walk on, taking care not even to handle. I cannot do both, for they are opposed. And they are therefore dissociated, for it is probable that opposition is the one invariable source of dissociation. Whichever course of action I follow, the other is suppressed. But this latter gives evidences of itself, for if I walk on I find myself doing so lingeringly and casting my eyes back from time to time and wondering if these really are the poisonous ones; or if I sit down to eat some of them, I find myself only nibbling, every now and then rejecting a mouthful, and feeling a distinct tonus in my leg muscles urging me to be up and off. This is like the exquisitely logical position of one who, in throes of uncertainty whether to commit suicide, gulps down a tiny swallow of the poison. In short, my behavior toward mushrooms is thoroughly equivocal; one and the same visual stimulus excites in me two antagonistic responses, and I act as if the mushrooms were both poisonous and not poisonous; that is, if I walk on, I am visibly impeded in doing so, and if I partake I cannot do so freely. This issue here involved would hardly be called a moral one, and yet the predicate "wrong" would very naturally be applied to such an ambiguous attitude as the one described. We have so far one object responded to, two modes of response, their antagonism or dissociation, their interference and the partial suppression of each by the other.

But now let some one explain to me the visible marks of difference between the Agaricus phalloides and the campestris. At once my conduct is changed. Now on spying a cluster of light-brown mushrooms, I go directly up until I can see whether they are the campestris or the phalloides. And if they are the former, I sit down without compunction and eat my fill; if the latter, I resume my walk quite as if they did not exist. This is discrimination. The stimulus that formerly excited two dissociated modes of response is now differentiated into two stimuli, each of which excites one of these modes. There is now no suppression because the other mode of response is not in the least degree stimulated. My conduct toward either mushroom is now integral; that is, the mechanism within me has taken one more step toward "integration." The dissociation of the two modes exists as before, but it is now harmless because the two will never again be excited by the one stimulus. In other words, it is not dissociated paths, but the simultaneous excitation of dissociated (i. e., antagonistic) paths by one stimulus that is harmful.

He thus again emphasized the fact, knowledge makes for intellectual freedom and at the same time for a right or moral choice.

Right knowledge and discrimination are not the only gain. Freedom and virtue both come also through a right choice which is wisdom.

WISDOM AND ARRESTED DEVELOPMENT

We often think of the wicked as supremely young, just taken in some act of dashing highwaymanship, and while envying them their youthful vigor we forget that they are true cases of arrested development. In short, the picture we make to ourselves is of the brief heyday of wickedness, and we fail to see that this very wickedness reveals a now arrested integration, and that the next phase will be a fearful display of suppressions, anxieties, and mental incapacity. . . . The Mephistopheles legend, of a very wicked man yet thoroughly master of himself and sound in body and mind, is about as untruthful a picture as mythology affords.

The writer urges that we should grow up to the good and aspire; not that we should bring the good down to us, but that we should come up out of the dust.

Here we have man, as "real" and as "scientific" as you please, growing upwards. (And I insist that the direction is somehow right.) He who does not see the real sanction of morality, that morality is a stage of wisdom and a step higher than "science," is merely shortsighted.

THE IDEAL OF INTELLIGENT FREEDOM

This would mean that the highest, best, and most free possible living is only possible when a man knows what he is doing. It must be in accordance with intelligence. The master prayed on the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." It is doubtful if the sinner does appreciate and understand what sin means. If he knew what sin meant to him, surely he would choose some other way.

First we must know that which is good, that which is beautiful, that which is true. Then knowing, and having wisdom to follow, we choose. We choose that which is good and makes for the purest happiness and highest ideals. So choosing, we have no suppression, no conflict, but feel perfect freedom; and it is only thus that we can feel perfect freedom.

When we choose a course of suppression, following the ideas of the Puritans, we do not feel satisfaction; we do not feel free. If we choose the course of following worldly pleasure, we suffer from the repression of our highest ideals, and so are not free.

It may be true that the man or woman who chooses the course of pleasure is as free, or does not suffer from as full or fuller repression, than does the one who follows a very narrow path of bigotry. But that is not the way to freedom, the path of righteousness, nor the path of truth. Knowing that which is good, we do it; and doing it, we have perfect freedom in our choice and no desire to do otherwise. Hence, as the Master says:

Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. . . . If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. . . . If the Son therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8: 34, 31, 32, 36.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

"MAKING GOOD"

Those who have no great reserve of mental or physical energy fight against great odds in this world. As was recently pointed out by one of our public speakers, there "are heroes among pick and shovel men as well as in the Alamo." With implacable and incurable disease fastened upon him, weak and ill, the man faces the day's toil, day after day, until the end, because the wife and children must be fed and clothed. He is "making good"; but no one realizes it.

There are heroisms in the kitchen, too, as well as on board the dreadnaught. So tired that she would like to lie down and die in order to obtain plenty of undisturbed rest, many a mother lives and works on by sheer force of will because she does not know what father and the children would do without her. She is "making good." What does the world know about it? Nothing. Nor does that matter particularly, either. The world is applauding the women who sing and act, they stand in the limelight; the men and women who do are in the shadow of obscurity, and only one in a thousand is discovered and applauded.

In fact the world has coined the phrase "to make good," but is not itself a proper judge of what it means to make good.

Christ himself by personal word of mouth and via the lips of his spokesmen has from time to time incited men and women to strive earnestly, hard, and long, to make good wherever called upon to occupy. "Brethren, faint not in well doing." "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life." "Remember without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love." These sayings come to mind.

Yet the great judge knows the limitations and the surroundings of every man, and the man makes good in his sight who does his best, no matter how many may do better. Nor will your reward be less because you help another man to make his reward greater. Nor will your coronation be delayed a day because you stop by the way to help others. In fact God is tenderly concerned in the work of helping those who are weak and at a disadvantage, both in spiritual and in material matters.

He is trying to secure in the church a condition which does not and cannot exist among worldly and selfish people. Namely, a condition where artificial inequalities shall be removed and where men will help their brothers to overcome natural inequalities, so that all, as nearly as possible, may have a fair, untrammelled opportunity to do their best.

Under those conditions there will be a blending of rivalry and fellowship, the ambition of each being to accomplish the greatest possible amount of good. Such a condition can be obtained by an observance of the law as God has given it, and in no other way.

Jacob gave the people of Nephi some excellent advice regarding one particular phase as well. The preparation for the struggle is, "But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God." The incentive is, "And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted."

At the point where man has satisfied the world, God begins his closest scrutiny. We think that the man has made good when he gets the money; he has simply arrived at the position where he can begin to make good, so far as money figures at all in his ultimate success. Whether a fortune shall be at the end accounted an asset or a liability depends on the use that is made of it—that and the methods by which it was obtained. "What is your pile?" the world asks. "How did you get it?" "How are you using it?" God asks.

It is the same, at least to an extent, in regard to other tests by which we are wont to measure success. There are several candidates for an office. One man is elected. We say that he has succeeded. In reality the question of his success is yet undetermined. Politicians may regard the victory as won; God begins to watch the man to see whether or not he will make good. We speak of the office as an honor conferred upon him—it may bring dishonor.

Perhaps even in the church we sometimes cherish a mistaken idea of success. An elder goes to a certain town and holds preaching services. He advertises as extensively as circumstances will permit and preaches the true gospel as prayerfully and forcefully as he can. No one believes his message. There are no conversions to report. Has he failed? Not in the sight of God. Those who refused to accept the gospel when they heard it are the ones who have failed.

The visiting officers of a branch attempt to settle a long-standing difficulty between two members. They comply with the various requirements of the law, prayerfully and humbly, with a real desire to save. A reconciliation is not effected. Have they failed? No. The stubborn persons who refused to become reconciled are the ones who have failed.

Both officers and others might avoid undue dejection of spirit at times or exaltation and pride at other times if they would remember that visible results in our work are not always the true measure of merit. The man who does his duty as best he can under all circumstances has nothing to be ashamed of. Under other circumstances another man may secure greater visible results; but he need not be unduly lifted up in his own esteem, he has done his duty, nothing more. Both men have made good in the sight of God, let the matter rest there and go on to other duties.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Questions. Is Kirtland a stake or in a stake? Will the Saints in Ohio be all right here in their homes without going west to Zion?

Will Zion be here at Kirtland?

Is Nauvoo in a stake? If so, what stake is it called?

Neither Kirtland nor Nauvoo are now stakes. In May, 1833, provision is found for a stake of Zion to be established at Kirtland. (Doctrine and Covenants 91.) We find in the Church History reference to stake organization at Kirtland. (See Church History, vol. 2, p. 24.) Later the First Presidency were requested to locate other stakes, and a number were so located.

In October, 1839, a stake was provided at Commerce, Illinois, afterwards called Nauvoo. (Church History, vol. 2, p. 371.)

Nauvoo is referred to as a corner of Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 107:1.) After the death of Joseph Smith, the stake organization was soon lost at both places, and no stake exists at either place at the present.

The revelation provides for a gathering to the central place of Zion first, and it should first be built up. There is no call, however, that all should gather at the present time, and it is wisdom that no one should do so without advice of the Bishop, and then not in haste. He who seeks earnestly for personal righteousness and to keep the commandments of God, will be safe. Others will not. We have to seek first righteousness and purity of heart.

We have several times urged this necessity for wisdom in the gathering. Bishop McGuire has urged it repeatedly, attempting to discourage the spirit of Where-can-we-go-to-be-safe? The primary question is, How can we live so as to be saved? The other question is incidental and will be answered in due time, as the Lord may direct. There is no such direction at present, either to maintain stakes at these points, or to gather hastily to Zion.

A DEDICATORY SERMON

(Sermon preached by Elder Paul M. Hanson, at the dedication of the church in Windsor, Ontario, November 17, 1918. Reported by Nellie Hunter.)

In the first chapter of Ezra, second and sixth verses we read:

Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, beside the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem. And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

Moved by the master motive of religion we assemble this afternoon to dedicate this commodious and beautiful church to the service of God. It is pleasing to know that not only here, but also in other parts of the country, and in other lands, buildings are being constructed by glad hearts and willing hands for public worship. This is as it should be. The Christian religion is preeminently missionary in character; whoever understands the mission of Jesus Christ and possesses his spirit, does not desire such blessings confined to himself, he wishes others to know what he knows, and to enjoy that upon which the supreme affection of the heart may safely be placed.

The world is suffering from a lack of knowledge of God. There can be no true happiness without a knowledge of the One in whom we "live, and move, and have our being." One may attempt to find it in forbidden paths, go into the world with hands wide open and endeavor to gain much, but it will be found after all the heart is not satisfied. It is essential to have a proper standard to guide human thought, conduct, and aspirations. Sorrow is to be found in some form represented in almost every home. The world's heart throbs violently. We behold splendid young men who once possessed a bright future, discouraged; beautiful maidens once the joy of a mother's heart, middle-aged men and middle-aged women, old men and old women, suffering because of the inroads of sin; life has for them not much in which to delight. Suffering from violations of a law, and sometimes, with health gone, financial ruin threatening, sufficient help not forthcoming from creeds, needed sympathy not given, they look upon life as an enigma.

The solution to the meaning of life has never come to them. They are without the divine standard of Christ by which they may mark out their course. They are like a lost person in a dark forest groping his way with a lantern.

A faint light is not sufficient to guide through the winding pathways, along the dark precipices, across the valleys and over the hills. One traveling with a light that shines but dimly gets a good many bumps, he cannot see the way. Christ is the light of the world. He came that man might have life, and have it more abundantly. With the increase of light it is possible to see one's way more perfectly; one becomes better acquainted with his environments, and knows whether or not he is near danger. Life's avenue is seen in its true perspective.

With an appreciation of the worth of divine precepts, one may say with the Psalmist: "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my pathway." Without an understanding of what is perfect and eternal, there is failure to discern and discriminate, and as a result one may accept what is human as though it were divine, or look upon what is divine as though it were human, or confound the human with what is diabolical. Such a person is not able to classify the forces of life in the midst of which we live. Without the Holy Spirit one is moved upon by divers influences until he becomes unable to really know what is the safe and right course to pursue.

The church comes with light; to remove gloom, and to dispel pessimism; no child of God need be downcast, for we were all created by the Most High. It comes and places within reach of man that which will enable him to travel safely along life's uneven road; light is provided that will enable him to see many of the rough places and avoid dangerous pathways.

There are many who go through this life and do not see God in it; just as there are some who go on a journey and see only old rocks and barren fields. Another taking the same journey sees every shade of green, flowers growing by the wayside, wonderful sunsets, and hears the songs of birds—everything is beautiful. Along the same highway one found beauty, and another saw only unenticing fields and barren rocks. So it is in life. With a knowledge of God and of his Son Jesus Christ, one can see marvelous movements directed by God's hand, the working of his power, the effects of the Holy Spirit in the lives of his people, the achievements of his church, the beauties of the gospel, the divine pedigree of man, and possess a glorious hope pertaining to the life to come. Along the highway of life the church assists in discovering divinity.

A violinist strikes his instrument to bring it into harmony with what is in his mind. Jesus Christ sees what can be developed in humanity, and he asks for permission to draw his hands over the chords of human hearts that life may be turned into harmony. Then one will be enabled to see in humility, mercy, purity, justice, and love, qualities of character to be prized most highly, all of which assist in an acceptance of the truth in its fullness revealed through the Lord. Man being made in the "image of God," and in his "likeness," is capable of reaching the heights to which the Savior calls.

The church has been established in this city to disclose to all, in a practical manner, such an understanding of the possibilities of man that all may be encouraged. What wonderful possibilities are wrapped up in every person! Who has fathomed the soul of man?

When we look upon a babe we know not upon whom we look; lying before us may be one who will be a statesman who shall save his country from disaster; before us in miniature may be one who will fill the world with music; there may lie before us in embryo one who will go to unknown parts of the earth and blaze a pathway for civilization; we may be looking upon one who will be a mother of distinguished sons and noble daughters; we may be gazing on one who some day will be a messenger of the Lord, and there may be before us one who will be incarcerated behind prison bars.

The church is intrusted with an important mission. We may define the church as a society which brings men into covenant relationship with God through Jesus Christ, relies on his promises, teaches his doctrine, possesses a certain kind of organization, enjoys marvelous blessings, has a ministry holding priesthood, i. e., the right to officiate in the ordinances of the church—the whole being under the direction of Jesus Christ. It will be seen from this that in this building which we dedicate to-day it is intended that there shall be an exposition of New Testament Christianity. The church comes to provide mankind with a means of salvation from sin, ignorance, intolerance, bigotry, selfishness, indolence, misery, and poverty. It is not an invalid organization, but it is a divine institution. It is called upon by the Lord, collectively as well as individually, to carry into effect the commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

It comes to establish such relationships in society, and between man and God, that men will feel it is not necessary to meet the world on its own level, to return evil for evil. The church comes to reveal and keep men informed of their latitude and longitude while sailing on the sea of life—when one does not know where he is on life's tempestuous sea, he is lost. As a mariner who does not know where he is, is in danger of getting on the rocks and suffering the wreck of his ship, so with one who does not know whether to yield or resist, whether to go forward or backward, he is lost. The church which is the "pillar and the ground of the truth," places in the possession of one the means of salvation that will enable one to be more than merely religious. It is not enough simply to be religious, people can be in that condition without belonging to the church of Jesus Christ. One can be religious, and not be a Christian at all. It is not enough simply to eulogize Christ and pass encomiums upon his perfect law; there is a necessity for responding faithfully and fully to the teachings of the Master of men.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints does not permit Christ to be displaced by anyone in any sense whatsoever. Its members permit no book to supplant the Bible. The devotion of the church to the Scriptures amounts to an acceptance of them in their entirety. Our services are designed to bring joy to the heart, and understanding of the times in which we live, strength to pursue the daily routine of life's work, power to overcome the evil, and a better understanding of duty to God and to our fellow men.

The Lord commissioned his ministry to "Go . . . and teach all nations." Not knowing enough is the cause of much of the misery of the world. Many differences would not take place—often of a serious nature—if persons only knew a little more. The church is in favor of education that will enable the husband to give the support to the home to which it is entitled; that will enable the mother to contribute that which will give her sons and daughters the feeling that they would rather be under the roof of their home in the companionship of loved ones than along side of a bar or in the company of associates of questionable character; that will assist one to use one's God-given powers to greater advantage; that will fit its ministry to understand and perform their work as servants of God more efficiently; that will help one to save oneself physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.

I may say the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter

Day Saints was organized in 1830; established, we believe, in this, the eleventh hour, to prepare a people for the midnight announcement, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him:." The gospel in its fullness was restored in these latter days to bring light and comfort to the world in the midst of the terrible conditions which were to prevail, and this has been accomplished in fulfillment of prophecy. In the twenty-fourth chapter of the book of Matthew it is recorded that Jesus was asked: "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" He answered that there would be wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places, men's hearts failing them for fear for looking after the things coming on the earth, signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity. He also said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." In the midst of all this trouble and distress, the gospel as taught in the days of Christ was to go forth to all nations until all shall hear. Heavenly light was to shine resplendently among men in the last days. The church is the divinely appointed refuge for mankind, the ark of safety ordained for men in the latter days.

The branch of the church in Windsor is to be congratulated for what it has achieved. Willing hearts inspired by a lofty purpose have made possible this building. It is evident sacrifices can be made without being accompanied by sorrow. We feel like one who has gathered in the harvest; before the day of harvest there are times that are filled with more or less fear as to the future; sometimes the dry weather threatens the crop, then a cloud comes from the west and the winds blow with terrific force and it looks like the labor of the year has to go unrewarded; at times hailstones fall and it appears as though all was lost, but finally the day of harvest comes and under the blessing of God all labor is rewarded. To-day is a day of rejoicing. Whatever fears there were have been resolved into joy. The building is completed, and free from debt. This has been accomplished by the efforts and aspirations of a people who have had a vision of God leading them forward in a grand and glorious work.

May God bless the church in Windsor, and may the faithful labors of the past and the activities of the future lead to a spiritual harvest, an ingathering of precious souls into the kingdom of God. May the church be as a city set upon a hill, the light of which cannot be hid.

TAKING UP COLLECTIONS

An article on "the passing of the collection plate," appearing in the HERALD for November 13, 1918, contains some good ideas.

My predilection is against the passing of the plate, yet I don't agree that it is "vulgar"; and am quite sure the freewill offering box is inadequate, for my observation is that few people patronize it, and not altogether because they can evade it, although this may be true of some, but rather because it is inconsequentially obscure, and requires special effort, and generally at a time when the spot is crowded with people going out of the church.

It is probably universally true that we all need reminding of our duties and privileges.

There is one financial method essential in all cases, commercial and philanthropic, and that is, it must be made easy for people to pay. Perhaps any method which is easy is better than one which is difficult.

I believe in purely voluntary giving, because I believe that the purpose of giving is to develop character. It will be remembered that the rich young man, who had lived almost a blameless life, turned sadly away when the Savior required him to sell all he had and give to the poor, if he would be perfect. It was not that Jesus wanted the money; it was not the paying of the money that should make him perfect; but the personal power to give up even all he had would enable this rich young man to take up his cross and follow Christ, e. g., to do like works.

It would appear, then, that the power to give is essentially one of development, and provision for that development must be had in the church, primarily for the sake of the personal character, and only secondarily for the needs of the church. Giving must be a divine quality inasmuch as "it is more blessed to give than receive." And this quality is subject to growth like any other divine essence. One who systematizes his giving, which the tithing principle affords, must necessarily make steady growth in unselfishness which it habituates, until giving will become a pleasure. Christly living must become a pleasure ere we can be said to be fit for the kingdom of heaven.

I do not believe the passing of the plate is ethically wrong. It may possibly be that it is ethically right, for it enables a sensitive one to give his mite who, by reason of it being only a mite, would perhaps otherwise be prevented from giving at all if he were compelled to hand it over to an official and obtain a receipt for it. In this event, the divine principle of giving would lay dormant, and as "mighty oaks from little acorns grow," who can say but what such a person might be permanently prevented from the development of this gift, and the cause of Christ lose a liberal and large donor?

I think, however, we might advantageously use envelopes (distributed in the pews) bearing a suitable inscription, advising strangers that we do not solicit their gift only in the event their feeling is that our work in the community is worthy; and such other inscription as might be considered appropriate for our own members. Then the passing of the collection plate, it appears to me, would not be objectionable, because it is simply an accommodation, an easy facility, for the transmission of the payment; and the time could be attractively employed by an organ voluntary by the organist, or by anyone else having the necessary skill who might be specially appointed. This would be an added feature to the service; and the passing of the plate would afford the means for systematic giving and be a constant reminder of our privilege; for giving is a privilege, a means of spiritual development, from which we should not turn sadly away.

Personally, I never go to any church without a desire to pay what I regard as my legitimate share of the expenses incurred in holding the service. While it is true I am invited, in common with all the community, to attend the service, that is no reason why I should not pay, on the same principle that I go to an entertainment to which I am invited and pay the charge asked.

Our first duty is to provide the money with which to pay our local expenses (on the true principle that charity begins at home) in which each and all should participate, however poor, but each according "as the Lord hath prospered" us. Our second duty would be to provide for the bodily needs of a missionary or missionaries who may be laboring with us, but such support should be given to the beneficiary impersonally, that is, he should not be made acquainted with the names of the donors, for a missionary is only human like the rest of us, and the common natural tendency is to give attention to those who support us financially rather than to those who do not, and yet the probability is that the latter need ministerial attention more than the other class; and the Bible says "a gift doth blind the eyes of the just."

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE, FROM THE VIEWPOINT OF THE MINISTRY

(Address to the priesthood of Detroit, Michigan, August 14, 1918, by James D. Gault.)

It is with some hesitancy that I approach this subject, knowing well that I do not measure up to it, but regardless of this diffidence, we will try to present some things that we trust will be educational in their nature. The Lord has said that we must be humble and full of love, and possessed of faith, hope, and charity, with an eye single to the glory of God, to qualify us for the work. So here are the rudiments or ground work of our preparation.

We must couple with these spiritual requirements some amount of study, as well as application. There is no doubt a great deal of anxiety upon the part of those who have the weight of responsibility and general care of the work, and we believe that every man if he is trying to be humble, senses keenly his own need of preparation in various ways.

We will never be successful in our ministrations, of whatever nature they may be, unless we are willing to rectify our mistakes when they are pointed out to us. Many a man has lost his usefulness by reason of not taking heed to friendly criticism.

Real service is not measured by the number of baptisms or the number of sermons we preach, but by the amount of good we accomplish; so no matter how much we do, we will never know, until the rewards are meted out, how much real service we have done.

We forget very soon the many acts of kindness and tokens of love that are bestowed upon us by our friends, but the Master has said that not a hair of our heads shall fall unnoticed.

Ordination. Let us consider for a moment this setting apart; what does it mean? Simply an expression upon our part that we are willing to accept the office; or should it not be, that with the office we accept the responsibility attached thereto, namely—to function in the office, to honor and respect and to elevate its place in the organization we represent. In order to do this we must be men willing to be taught, willing to make wise use of our sense of observation, and above all, be an exemplary man in our person, as well as in our habits and conversation. Here we wish to emphasize the old saying, "think before you speak."

If we will select our words in an ordinary conversation, it will help us to improve our grammar in our pulpit work, and also have an elevating effect upon those with whom we are conversing. I do not mean by this that we should use words that we do not understand.

Department. Here, too, we can make an impression that will be lasting in its nature, as well as giving dignity to the priesthood we hold. But here also we must be careful lest we try to give dignity to ourselves rather than to the priesthood that clothes us. In short, if we are to be approved workmen, we must add to our faith all the graces that will make for the success of that we claim to represent.

It perhaps will not be necessary to say much about cleanliness, but there are times when we can by a little forethought add a great deal of dignity to the service in which we are occupying. We have it within our power (God-given) to make our services much more impressive as well as sacred, if we but observe the most common rules of etiquette.

Hence, if we wish to prepare for service, we must be willing to observe the ways of others and thereby be able to assimilate the good. We should set our ideal high, and try to attain it.

Let no man be our ideal, but learn from all good men.

Let us acquit ourselves like men that we may expect the confidence and esteem of sound-minded men and women.

JAMES D. GAULT.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

DEDICATION OF THE HOLY LAND TO ISRAEL

[The following extract from the dedicatory prayer of Orson Hyde in 1841, taken from his journal is of timely interest and worthy of special consideration at this juncture.—EDITORS.]

On Sunday morning, October 24, a good while before day, I arose from sleep and went out of the city as soon as the gates were opened, crossed the brook Cedron, and went upon the Mount of Olives, and there in solemn silence, with pen, ink, and paper, just as I saw in the vision, offered up the following prayer to him who lives forever and ever:

“ . . . O thou who didst covenant with Abraham thy friend, and who didst renew that covenant with Isaac, and confirm the same with Jacob with an oath, that thou wouldst not only give them this land for an everlasting inheritance, but that thou wouldst also remember their seed forever! Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, have long since closed their eyes in death, and made the grave their mansion. Their children are scattered and dispersed abroad among the nations of the Gentiles like sheep that have no shepherd, and are still looking forward for the fulfillment of those promises which thou didst make concerning them; and even this land, which once poured forth nature's richest bounty, and flowed, as it were, with milk and honey, has, to a certain extent, been smitten with barrenness and sterility since it drank from murderous hands the blood of him who never sinned.

“Grant therefore, O Lord, in the name of thy well-beloved Son, Jesus Christ, to remove the barrenness and sterility of this land, and let springs of living water break forth to water its thirsty soil. Let the vine and the olive produce in their strength, and the fig tree bloom and flourish. Let the land become abundantly fruitful when possessed by its rightful heirs; let it again flow with plenty to feed the returning prodigals who come home with a spirit of grace and supplication; upon it let the clouds distill virtue and richness, and let the fields smile with plenty. Let the flocks and the herds greatly increase and multiply upon the mountains and the hills; and let thy great kindness conquer and subdue the unbelief of the people. Do thou take from them their stony heart, and give them a heart of flesh; and may the sun of thy favor dispel the cold mists of darkness which have beclouded their atmosphere. Incline them to gather in upon this land according to thy word. Let them come like clouds and like doves to their windows. Let the large ships of the nations bring them from the distant isles; and let kings become their nursing fathers, and queens with motherly fondness wipe the tears of sorrow from their eyes.

“Thou, O Lord, did once move upon the heart of Cyrus to show favor unto Jerusalem and her children. Do thou now also be pleased to inspire the hearts of kings and the powers of the earth to look with a friendly eye towards this place, and with a desire to see thy righteous purposes executed in relation thereto. Let them know that it is thy good pleasure to restore the kingdom unto Israel, raise up Jerusalem as its capital, and constitute her people a distinct nation and government, with David thy servant, even a descendant from the loins of ancient David, to be their king.

“Let that nation or that people who shall take an active part in behalf of Abraham's children, and in the raising up of Jerusalem, find favor in thy sight. Let not their enemies prevail against them, neither let pestilence or famine overcome them; but let the glory of Israel overshadow them, and the power of the highest protect them, while that nation or kingdom that will not serve thee in this glorious work must perish, according to thy word—‘Yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.’”—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 553, 554, 555.

THE CHURCHES AND THE RED CROSS CHRISTMAS ROLL CALL

The church is usually the first organization upon which men call when a long-time, unselfish service, requiring personal effort and money, is to be rendered. For the church has the equipment in organization already established, in buildings already furnished, and in men and women already trained to tasks demanding service and sacrifice.

The church has rendered a superb service in pushing Red Cross activities. Workshops have been established in its buildings, and busy women have given their time without stint as calls were made for materials and equipment.

Other service has been gladly contributed—in the spirit of patriotism and religion, and often with the spirit of the modern crusader.

The high standards set for the church by itself, and its splendid record of work already accomplished, impels the American Red Cross to again appeal to the churches of this country to help make the response to the Christmas roll call the finest thing ever done by the American people—not so much in the terms of money contributed as in their expression of loyalty to its ideals, by pledging themselves to membership in the Red Cross.

Roll Call Week will be observed from December sixteenth to twenty-third. An eight-page pamphlet, giving suggestions as to how the church may most effectively help during this week, will be sent to about 150,000 clergymen of all denominations from the national headquarters of the American Red Cross.

AN AMERICAN IDEA

Now that the war is over, public attention in this country and in other countries is being centered upon the chief idea the war has developed, the league of nations for the prevention, or at least the discouragement, of war. This idea is an American one. That is not to say that it is wholly original. Something of the sort has been suggested before. But in its present form and application it is exclusively American. In his address at Christiania, Sweden, May 5, 1910, Theodore Roosevelt suggested that the great powers should form a league of peace, "not only to keep the peace among themselves, but to prevent, by force, if necessary, its being broken by others." Apparently he carried the thought no further, nor sought to apply it to the United States. Perhaps Hamilton Holt, editor of the Independent, should be given the largest share of credit for beginning the movement which promises to turn an academic theory into a living reality. At the meeting of the third American Peace Congress at Baltimore, in May, 1911, Mr. Holt read a paper on the subject of a league of peace, and soon after the beginning of the present war he took up the question and began to interest public men in it. The result was a series of meetings of scientific men at the Century Club in New York, in January and March, 1915, at which the subject was discussed in all its bearings and the outline of a plan agreed upon. These men—there were about twenty of them—then called into consultation a number of men of larger practical experience, including William H. Taft, James M. Beck, and A. Lawrence Lowell. The plan was further considered, some changes made, and the modified agreement was given to Mr. Taft, who himself drafted the four articles which have since composed the platform of the league to enforce peace, which was formally organized at a convention held at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, in June, 1915.

This, briefly, is the origin of the league to enforce peace, from which has grown the world movement for a league of nations for the purpose of peace enforcement. The American society has advocated nothing more than an international compact for the preservation of peace, with provision for the use of joint force against any signatory nation going to war with another without first submitting its case to arbitration or conciliation. It has never contemplated the enforcement of judgments, the sole purpose of its plan being to compel calm and judicial consideration of the merits of the issues involved, the theory being that in the vast majority of cases time and deliberation will alone prevent conflict, and that the moral force of adverse decision, backed by the public opinion of the world, will be, as a rule, sufficient to deter any nation that is disposed to go to war without just cause. There can be no reasonable doubt that the war just ended could have been prevented if such a league as this had been in existence with all the great powers members of it.

It was not until February 1, 1916, that President Wilson gave any public indication of his attitude toward the league of peace. On that date, in a speech at Des Moines, Iowa, he said: "I pray God that if this contest has no other result, it will at least have the result of creating an international tribunal and producing some sort of joint guarantee of peace on the part of the great nations of the world." Since then he has frequently discussed the idea and, with some additions, has made it his own. His advocacy has caused it to become the foremost question before the world, but a glance at its sources shows that it is not in any sense a partisan question. It is an American idea, backed by American good will toward men, and if the league of nations becomes a reality, as it seems now certain it will, it will con-

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Beyond

I am not dead,
But have enlisted in that pulsing throng
Which, pressing onward, where the battle led
With screeching shells, and choking battle smoke,
Paid the great price, and stepped within the vale.

I range beyond,
O'er plains of light where living waters flow,
And know the rest from wound and battle smoke.
The heat and cold, and all that harass man
Are known no more, for God has dried all tears.

There is no death!
What seems so to our tear-dimmed, aching eyes
Is but a step beyond, where God awaits.
The thrill of youth, the joy of heart and mind
Possess me wholly—now I truly live!

Then mourn me not,
As one whose course was broken ere its end;
But know I breathed the fragrance of the flowers,
The springtime scent of new-turned earth, and grass,
And loved them all, and thrilled with joy of life.

Each daily sun
Gave some new joy, some taste of things unknown
Before that hour—and then the great day came!
I marched away with other souls who dared.
I felt the thrill that comes from noble deeds.

And so, rejoice!
For I have longer lived, than those who drag
Through years, which bear scant service to mankind.
Ready was I for that last "muster call,"
And greater love man never had than this.

The New Jerusalem

As the night is slowly passing, a vision I behold,
Such as was shown the prophets, as they lived in days of old.
Israel's captive days are ended, and Jehovah's power is shown,
That the Jews shall build their city, and claim it as their own!

Jerusalem, the city that has slumbered many years;
The cause of many battles, and the source of many tears;
Thy sorrows now are ended, and the prophets' words are true,
Thy people now are gathering, and are coming back to you!

Hail to the New Jerusalem, the city built anew!
Where Gentiles will be welcome, in the city of the Jew!
Where the men of every nation shall join in singing praise
To the God of Father Abraham, in these, the latter days.

And while the vision lingers, I see them once again,
In countless numbers, gather on Canaan's fertile plain,

With songs of joy and gladness, their home again they view,
Through tears they sing, "Jerusalem, we're coming home to you!"

With a Bunch of Pansies

Thought is parent of the act,
So if we would do good we think good,
And with good on evil make attack.

To be, not to seem, is worth;
Thinking only without working, too,
Is laugh and smile without the mirth.

Thus do pansies say to you:
"I represent thoughts, both good and bad;
On rose and thorn we find the dew."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Unity in the Home

There must be unity between the members of a home for it to be durable and prosperous. A true home is not simply a boarding house where people come and go, are glad or sorry, prosperous or unfortunate, as it happens. It is not a place where people live for themselves alone, without affection.

Sometimes we see a home where the children are not taken into the home councils, the parents excusing themselves with the plea that children will betray such confidences accidentally. Thus they deprive their children of many valuable lessons in economy, and a real training in trustworthiness. Also, children deprived of the confidence of their parents usually seek it elsewhere, often in associates whose influence is undesirable.

Some say these home affairs do not concern the children, but we have observed that where parents explain frankly to their children any business entanglement which may distress them, the sympathies of those children are instantly enlisted and they will aid materially in the retrenchments necessary, submitting to privations and denials cheerfully and without grumbling.

Some say that it is unkind to compel or permit children to thus share in anxiety and responsibility; but who knows but what this is God's very way for training them for large usefulness? The Scriptures say: "Blessed is the man who has borne the yoke in his youth." It is not always the best kindness to indulge children, or to soften every spot of their journey. Strength comes through resistance to trial.

By making children feel that they are integral parts of the home and confiding to them mutual affairs, parents will encourage like confidence upon their part, and they will come with everything that concerns them, and ask about the things they want to know, and which they have a right to understand. Has another than mother a better right to give a child the information he needs upon the subjects pertaining to his life?

Don't have your children afraid of you, dear mothers! Let them feel your sympathy and your interest in their affairs, and above all do not drive them from you, into the streets, to learn the fundamental truths about their being, a correct knowledge of which will be to them a saving grace!

I have talked to girls in the past, who have been cruelly left in ignorance about the matters which closest concern their health and their purity, just because their mothers had a mock modesty which hindered the establishment of frank confidence between them. The lessons of life can be presented in a beautiful, pure light to our children. It is not wise to tell them one word which is untrue, for when they grow up, they will wonder why they were deceived, and they will attach some shame to the facts, which is contrary to the truth. No law given by God is ignoble, and this should be impressed upon the young. It is the abuse and perversion of law which has caused untold misery and shame.

The Book of Covenants tells us to bring up our children in light and truth, and to set in order our homes. Let us counsel often with our children, teach them love and obedience, reverence and truth, so that they shall love the light rather than darkness. The tendency of the day is to be disrespectful to old age. The Scriptures tell us to rise up before the aged and honor the face of old men. No mother can outlive her usefulness to her children if she has always shared her best thoughts with them, and tried to train them righteously. Life, with all its burdens and its bitterness, is behind the old, and we should, by our example before our families, render them due reverence, and try to make their declining days their best days, full of peace. We are all moving towards that time, and all of us desire to "grow old gracefully."

By examples and precept, then, by principles and practice, children may learn from their parents the valuable lessons of patience, love, and justice to each other and all men. Let us try to establish in our homes as perfect a unity as is possible for us.

Four Little Studies in Character Building

1. MATERIALS

In the arena of life we are all builders. In a material sense, we are not all mechanics, carpenters, or masons, erecting wonderful structures to delight the eyes of beholders, but, in a spiritual sense, we are all using similar talents to build something which will bless or curse our own lives and those about us. That something is "character," which not only proclaims our true selves, but acts powerfully upon others. A noble character is one of the greatest motive powers of the world, for it expresses human nature in its highest development—man at his best.

Men of good character are the conscience of society. The prosperity of a country depends not on the abundance of its revenues, nor on the strength of its fortresses, nor on the beauty of its public buildings; but it rests upon the number of its learned citizens, its men and women of integrity and education, its units of enlightened and developed character. In these are to be found its real resource, its chief strength, and its greatest power.

Character is being built continually, and under every variety of circumstances, but always under the control of the builder! Mark the fact! Not a day passes without its discipline, whether for good or evil depends upon ourselves. There is no act, no event, however small apparently, but has its consequence, and plays its part in the structure of our beings. Every thought, every deed contributes to the molding of the temper, the habits, the will, and the understanding, and exercises its influence upon all the events of our future lives.

The greatest and most potential instrument we can use in the building of our character-structure is thought! It is the force which determines the nature and worth of the materials we use. Of what primary and fundamental importance then, is what we think! Shall we not be concerned about this? If we think jealous or hateful thoughts or those of malice or anger, we are putting into our building ugly and perishable material, for nothing but good is stable and eternal in its nature. Evil thoughts make for an unworthy temple, one destined to ruin, inevitably. They poison life, blast hope, destroy principle, and in countless ways contribute to utter failure, both as regards our personal happiness and our responsibility to others. One act performed while under the dominion of an ugly or evil thought, may divide friends for life, may wreck homes, destroy happiness, and perhaps blight a budding spiritual life.

This great and terrible war which has caused the shedding of rivers of human blood, and the suffering of untold thousands of God's oppressed children, was brought about by wrong and evil thinking. Ambition and greed for power were built into the character of a man placed in authority over millions of others; the results no one can measure. The settlement may come sometime, somewhere, after the tears of ages have been shed, and we all reach the higher planes of thought and character, which time and place may not be reached this side of the great beyond.

But, thank God, there are other thought-materials with which we build, and the palaces which result are those of love, sympathy, kindness, and patience. With the power of our thoughts we build the kind of homes in which we dwell. Do any of us desire surroundings of malice, harshness, jealousy, or hate? Let us be careful, then, to choose and use the shining materials of love, pity, patience, and appreciation. "As a man thinketh, so is he." How very true! For we first indulge the thought; then it is clothed in words, and finally, is expressed in action, and the thought has become character!

Yes, plainly from our daily thoughts we are framing and erecting the temples of our character, although we sometimes are able to gloss over the exterior in a way which deceives our associates. Many a hideous temple, dedicated to the rites of sin, is whited upon the outside, sometimes in a manner to deceive the very elect. Our associates may not know the nature of the material we are using in our building, but God knows, and the fact is being recorded without error. Our thoughts are being photographed in the very expression of our faces, the very intonations of our voices, and even our very manner and carriage convey to the initiated an indication of what we are.

Do not confuse character and reputation, however. Character is what we are, and what God knows us to be; reputation is what people say and think we are. The latter is not a true estimate, for our friends ever give us a reputation which makes us appear much better than we are, while our enemies usually give us one which makes us appear much worse than we really are. Character is the real thing—the house we erect for ourselves, out of the thoughts we cherish!

We must see the things of life in true moral perspective if we hope to build our characters on broad and useful lines. We must recognize the value of material—see the "diamond in the rough." It is from the rough quarry of the hard outside world, of adversity and sorrow, of suffering and experience, that we must fetch the precious stones for the building of our best and truest manhood and womanhood. We must have clean thoughts and desires for the foundation of that structure. We must learn to distinguish, to brush aside the filth and cast out the unseemly dross, even if it must needs come through much severe trial and fire.

Each of us lives a life within himself which is hidden even from our nearest and dearest. Thoughts, feelings, impulses, emotions, and desires—many things of many different natures are constantly passing through the human mind. How great the need for light, for guidance in selecting that which is good, and cleaving unto that and nothing else! From infancy to old age we need help in dealing with our thoughts that we may eliminate the evil unerringly, and entertain and cultivate only those which are worthy a place in our character temple. Books, associates, conversation, experiences, all yield their harvest of training and influence; and thus we should seek to select only the best of these, that our minds may be in a condition always to record the noble thought and make it our own.

Success will wait upon every soul which truly strives to follow the master builder of character. It will take an untiring hope, an infinite patience, an indomitable courage, but grace is given for every trial, strength comes with the struggle, and the reward will be most glorious when we are able to present our structure to the kind Architect, as workmen, indeed, who need not to be ashamed.

Training Little Children

SCRAPBOOKS

We have been intensely interested in watching our little daughter with her first books. In addition to their educational value, they are a source of great pleasure and have grown to be her daily companions. When she was about fourteen months old she was given her first book, a small linen one containing pictures of animals. These we would call by name as we pointed them out to her, and as they became familiar she would point them out herself. After she had learned to talk, she could say the names also. Linen books containing pictures of objects in colors were next given the child and when she had become acquainted with these, group pictures were added to the collection.

By counting the objects in the various groups—not over five at first—and by calling attention to their color, the child learned both number and color. Emilie Poullson's book on "Finger Plays" is an enjoyable supplement to pictures of this kind.

We found simple, home-made, indestructible scrapbooks most satisfactory and attractive. Anticipating the book stage, we had collected a number of colored pictures from magazines. For the leaves of these books we used brown paper-muslin, cutting a number of pieces twelve by twenty-four inches and, after laying them one on top of another, stitching them through the center, thus making a book twelve by twelve inches when closed. On the pages we mounted the pictures with paste.

One book contained pictures of fowls, turkeys, chickens, ducks, geese, guinea fowls, and some pigeon and crow pictures also. In another book we pasted pictures of four-legged domestic animals. Many of the pictures showed the family life of these in their natural surroundings. They proved most interesting as the child's experience is confined almost exclusively to the family of which he is a member, and animal families naturally appeal to every child.

Our little girl is now nearly two and a half years old, and she has never tired of her scrapbooks. Through them she has become acquainted with the different animals and the sound made by each, and is able to connect the animals and their calls.

The number of books of this kind which would be of great educational value to the child is almost limitless. Birds, flowers, vegetables, trades, farming, and history might all be presented to the child in this form. As our little girl grows older we have planned books of harvesting pictures showing the various stages in the growth of wheat from the preparation of the soil, planting of the seed, and so on, until it passes through the hands of the miller and baker and finally reaches the child in the form of her daily bread.

Another interesting process is the building of the home from the trees to the finished product. This book will contain pictures of the forest where the trees grow, the man felling the great trees, the horses and wagons which haul the trees to the saw-mill, the cutting and planing of the boards, the train which transports them to the lumber-yard, the boards piled high in the lumber-yard, the carpenter at work putting the boards together, the house in the process of construction, and lastly the finished home and the family who lives in it. From these process books, the child can be led to realize that it takes rain, sunshine, and warmth to make the trees and the grains grow, and that there are many people to thank for providing our simplest food and that above all, God is the great source of everything.

"Mother Goose Rhymes" and the child's favorite, "The Night Before Christmas," are always welcome diversions, and after repeated readings the child is able to supply words, lines, and later whole verses, thus incidentally developing the memory.

With the exception of a few simple books which are really story-telling pictures, I would advocate the telling of stories rather than the reading of them to small children. The primary object of story-telling is to stimulate the imagination of the children, cultivate a taste for good literature, and guide them to the best books. An Earnest Student

Lincoln, the great emancipator, was an earnest student during his entire life. From the time he did his figures on the old wooden hearth shovel, until elected to the Presidency, we read of the hardships he endured to improve his education. There were no splendidly equipped public libraries available and books were at a premium, yet he was constantly reading and studying and as a result rose rapidly to a station of prominence and esteem.

What are you doing for yourself in the way of self-improvement? Are you taking advantage of the public libraries, our splendid magazines, and profusion of books and correspondence courses dealing with your trade or work?

Our opportunities are sometimes so great that we are inclined to overlook and sacrifice them for the idle pleasures of the times. Later on, when it is too late, comes our regret of neglected opportunity to progress. Seneca, the great Roman writer, once said, "If a man would read and study but half an hour each day, he would in a lifetime accumulate a vast store of knowledge."—Exchange.

Between Us

Learn one new thing each day. If this plan is adhered to for one year your brain will have received and recorded three hundred and sixty-five new impressions.

It probably will not be given to you to learn a big truth each day, but the average will be well worth your while.

This is a good habit to acquire, as it is one that will grow upon you, and you will learn to seek out the more important things.

Suppose you but open the dictionary and learn the meaning of one new word, you have added that much to your vocabulary, and to your understanding.

If you are passing a store window and see displayed some article with which you are unfamiliar, step into the store and ask what it is, and what it is for.

If some one with whom you are conversing makes use of an unusual word or phrase, ask the meaning.

Do not be like the old woman of Whitechapel, who threatened to sue a man for libel because he called her a "hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle."

Learn one new thing each day.—Selected.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Marriage in the Garden of Eden

Yes, there was a marriage in the Garden of Eden, in which God gave away the bride, and Adam pronounced the marriage ceremony.

In Genesis 2: 22 to 24, we read that when the Lord God had made for Adam a helpmeet, he brought her to Adam. Adam recognized her as being a part of him, belonging to him, when he said, "This I know now, is bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh. . . . Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh," (which has been a portion of the marriage ceremony of all ages). Adam recognized her as his wife. She certainly was a God-given wife. And God sanctioned their marriage by blessing them, and saying, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth," as found in the previous chapter. And from thenceforth she was called his wife. Therefore as husband and wife, given to each other of God in person, there certainly could be no reproach or transgression in their union. E. B. B.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

WATCH IT GROW

Up to this week there have been twenty-eight of our schools reported for the Roll of Honor. Has your school reported?

We wish that we could publish all of the good letters that we are receiving, in place of only publishing a small portion of each one, for we know it would inspire all of you to greater efforts. Some of these good letters are five and six pages long, and all good, enthusiastic reports of the efforts in the school, or telling us how their offering has been raised. We are taking almost too much space as it is or we would ask for more so as to give you more details.

There is very little suggestion in any of these good letters that influenza and the closing of so many of the schools will cause them to drop 'way under their goal. Not a single one thus far has stated they cannot reach their goal, even in the face of these difficulties. Is not this rather remarkable? Does it not show that our workers are made of the right material, that Brother McGuire chose wisely when he looked to the Sunday schools for the money to wipe out the church debt? Well, read over the following letters, see if you can find a trace of despondency or any suggestion that we should give up.

Boise, Idaho. Sister Frances C. Booker, superintendent, reports: "The epidemic of influenza has caused a ban on all public meetings since the tenth of October. We expect to hold services next Sunday. Perhaps we can make up in our offering what we have missed in the ban. Our Sunday school has an enrollment of about 50, and our offering is now $169.50. We set our aim at $225 and expect to 'go over the top.' Hoping the offering this year will go beyond the $100,000 mark." Not a trace of give up here, is there?

Windsor, Ontario. Sister Millie Reynolds, secretary, reports: "We are proud to state that we have gone 'over the top' with an average of $2.80 per member and we expect to make it $3 per member by the end of the year. We feel that we have done well under the circumstances, for we had a heavy debt on our local church and the call on each member has been great, but we are glad to state that this debt has just been wiped off, and next year our efforts will be entirely for the Christmas offering, when we intend to lead in our district and win the banner." Sister Reynolds also tells of three members of the junior class in their school who have entered into a friendly contest—two boys and one girl—one of the boys is leading with $43, the other boy follows with $31, while the girl has turned in $28.25. Right here is something for us to think about. If these young boys and girls can work and save this much for this great cause—what can we do? Think this over with a little serious thought.

Mallard, Iowa. Brother Benjamin Fish, superintendent, reports: "Our school has passed the $2 mark, and we do not expect to stop there—we hope to do a great deal better yet." No lamenting because of influenza here, no sign of giving up, is there?

Central Chicago. Brother John J. Oliver, superintendent, reports: "Do not know of a better way to wind up a day of thanksgiving than to write and tell you what the Central Chicago is doing for the offering. We are way over the $2-per-member mark, and we are not done yet. We have set our mark for over $4 per member, and as the Central Chicago has always made good, why not now? At the teachers' and officers' meeting last week I asked if there was any doubt about the offering; the answer was: 'No, we will reach our aim.'" Surely you will agree that there is no weakening here. Brother Oliver also sent in a very good number of nice suggestions as to how offering might be raised—things they have tried out and found to be good. We cannot publish them at this time, but we shall keep them on file for anyone who might want them later.

Carson, Iowa. Sister Lewis Hotze reports: "Like many other schools ours has been closed on account of influenza. The crops here have been very poor and some have feared we might not be able to reach our mark, however we are striving to do our best. We have something over $4 per member now, including cradle roll, home class, and five members of the branch." This good school set their mark high—poor crops, influenza, and other difficulties have not hindered them—no suggestion of give up here, either—is there?

Lees Summit, Missouri. Sister E. J. DePuy writes: "We hope we are not too late to be placed on the Roll of Honor, just reached the mark last Sunday or you would have heard from us sooner." No, indeed, you were not too late, for we shall continue to report the Roll of Honor until all have had a chance to send in their reports.

Bevier, Missouri. Brother J. L. Williams, treasurer, reports: "The influenza ban held us five weeks. The girls did not get to hold their "Girls' Day" exercises until November 24. By denying themselves many things, and taking several Larkin orders, they were able to turn in $53.22, thus beating the mothers and fathers. The boys will show their metal December 15, and they expect to make the girls sit up and take notice. Our minimum is $300—no limit to the maximum." This good school is "over the top" now, and the good spirit prevailing means they will have much more before the end of the year. We like that suggestion, "no limit to maximum," for that means they are not going to stop at any figure, but going to do all they can.

Magnolia, Iowa. Sister E. J. McDowell writes: "We have observed mothers', fathers', and girls' days, and boys' day will come December 1. We are over the $2-per-member mark and aiming for $300." The main school of Magnolia numbers 35 members, and we think they are aiming well and feel sure they will not fail to get the amount they are after.

Woodbine, Iowa. Charles L. Hyde, superintendent, reports: "On account of conditions we were slow to get started, and on November 24 we had only $25; at present we have $300, and we expect to add to this until Christmas time. We have a live bunch of workers and are now planning for next year's offering. We hope our plans will prove successful, and if they work out as we expect, we will pass them around." We like the good suggestion given in this letter—start now to plan your work for next year—a late start always hinders and makes double effort necessary at the close of the season. Let us all do as Woodbine, plan for next year now, and start the plan working the first day of the New Year.

Fort Scott, Kansas. Brother J. W. Strader, superintendent, reports: "On account of the influenza we had to close our school, but as the ban is now lifted we are trying to make up for lost time. We were compelled to postpone our Girls' and Boys' Day offering. We have also found it necessary to make official calls in soliciting for the Christmas offering and we have done well, as a whole have no complaint to make, as we are 'over the top.' Our membership is 59, including cradle roll and home department, and we now have $149. Our aim is $200. We have tried to get in touch with all the Saints, and think the offering should not be confined to the Sunday school, but ought to be extended to the entire membership. We have a board hanging on the wall, and have all the names of the members and the amounts given by each on this board. We find it rather stimulates interest." There is a suggestion here that we like: "personal visits to the members and talking about the offering, soliciting their help." We can do a great deal this way, especially when forced to close the school. We might also state that it is not expected that the offering be confined to the Sunday school members. The offering is simply in charge of the Sunday school officers, and we expect them to reach every member in their branch and district.

May God bless the good workers and prosper them in their efforts to build up the work. Let us lift this debt from the church by the first of the year—we can do it.

Yours for the $100,000,

A. W. SMITH.

There can be no substantial triumph but it is woven out of the gossamer fabric of a dream.—Ambition.

Independence Items

Some very important meetings of all kinds have had to be postponed on account of the passing scourge of sickness. All religious gatherings, together with the schools, have received orders to close again.

The Religians have the promise of a contemplated course of war lectures by three young officers, namely, Sergeant W. S. McBirnie, Major Robert Carnie, who has seen savage fighting in the Anzac Field Artillery, and Sergeant Major Hairs, of the South African expeditionary forces; and also a Mrs. Harriett Bird Warren, an American ambulance nurse. These lectures afford an opportunity to know how the soldier lives, how he fights, his surroundings, and his care in the stations and hospitals.

We hope to be able to hold these meetings, which, if conditions will admit, will take place the first of the coming year.

The Thanksgiving service, at the Stone Church, conducted by Brethren Elbert A. and Walter Wayne Smith, was one long to be remembered. We have also been pleased to hear excellent sermons by Elders Hale W. Smith and Joseph Luff.

The Spirit of the Lord has been present at all the meetings of late, and there are strong indications of an increased awakening among the Saints at the center stake.

The scourge that walketh at noonday, to be sure, is doing its deadly work here as elsewhere, and there is sore need of help, to take care of the afflicted at the Sanitarium and in several homes, but in the preparation necessary in order to successfully combat the hard conflicts yet to come, the Saints must gird on the armor of faith and good works, keep close to the Master, and, taking courage from what the good Lord has always accomplished for his people, lean on his almighty arm.

Your sister in the gospel,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

A Vision

About three years ago while attending prayer and sacramental service at the Stone Church, in Independence, I had an experience which meant much to me at the time, but of which I have not often spoken.

I sat in the east wing and was in a spirit of prayer and meditation just before the service began, feeling particularly thankful and happy to meet with the Saints after having been isolated from the church for a number of years.

I glanced across the church to the west wing and my eyes were drawn to President Frederick M. Smith and his wife. At once the congregation, which was quite large, seemed to grow very dim, and President Smith appeared to stand erect, seeming taller and more imposing in stature, while the people remained seated. A soft, misty light seemed to encircle and cover him, so that he could be discerned but dimly, as one would appear seen through a thin, shimmering veil. Quite distinctly I heard these words, "He is a worthy successor of his father and his grandfather." Then everything appeared as before.

I pondered these things for long afterwards, desiring to know why it should be made so clear to me when I felt that I believed it as much as it was possible for one to believe anything; but being careful about relating any experiences which come to me, I spoke of it to only a few people. However, I have felt for some time that I should write of this experience, and sincerely trust it may fulfill its mission, for

I am convinced such a beautiful experience was not meant for me alone.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's people everywhere, and for the redemption of Zion,

In gospel bonds,

MRS. CHARLES F. DAVIS.

The Origin of Polygamy

Editor Daily News: In many of the daily papers of late appears an account of the death of Joseph Fielding Smith, the late head of the Mormon church—so-called—with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mention is made of Joseph Smith, the original prophet, telling of his death at Carthage, Illinois, at the hands of a mob, going on to say that this occurred soon after he began to preach polygamy.

Three times the courts of the United States and the Dominion of Canada have exonerated Joseph Smith, the original prophet, of being the author of this monstrous doctrine, and the church over which he and his posterity presided, namely his son, the late Joseph Smith, who died December 10, 1914, and his grandson, Frederick M. Smith, who is now president of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Independence, Missouri.

Besides this, the Reed Smoot investigation in the United States Senate, a few years ago, examined masses of evidence—argument both pro and con was considered—and two of the senators—Messrs. Burrows and Dubois—in presenting the findings of this investigation, absolutely vindicated Joseph Smith, the original prophet, and laid the origin of polygamy at the feet of Brigham Young, who camouflaged this doctrine off on his followers, eight years after the death of Joseph Smith.

It is not only surprising, but absurd, that the public persists in remaining ignorant relative to the origin of this teaching, that levels the virtue of the home to that of the barnyard.

Having submitted this question to those of judicious ability, it is but fair to take the position that the decisions of the courts already referred to must stand until reversed by some higher tribunal.

(Elder E. H. Bennett, in Minneapolis Daily News, November 26, 1918.)

Children's Home Notes

It has been about nine months since we took charge at this place and we have been too busy to do much of any writing, but feel that a few words concerning this institution at this time would not be amiss from us.

Many express surprise that we are not "in the mission field," but we feel that this is a "mission field" of itself and one where we may serve as fully as in Utah or New York.

We have fifteen boys ranging from two and one half years up to fifteen, and thirteen girls who range from seven up to fourteen or fifteen years old. This is our number at present, though this is not a stable population as there are constantly some being taken out and others brought in. Our numbers range from twenty-four up to thirty-eight or forty.

The problem of making this institution a real home—instead of a place where children are institutionalized instead of humanized—is one that requires some thought and a great deal of human life and sympathy or heart work. I think that Sister Chase, or "Mother," as all the children call her, furnishes more of this article than I am capable of doing though I do my best to answer in kind to "Father," as the title I carry here.

The many calls on our people for war activities, including the Red Cross work, has taken, of necessity, a good share of the attention and effort of our Saints here and elsewhere, but now that this calamity has come so near to an end perhaps we can spare a share of our energy in remembering the children here as we near the Christmastide.

We have just come successfully through a siege of the "flu," and while we had twenty-five cases within two weeks, at the end of the third week all were up and ready for work or play, as well as their usual rations. But at this season of the year there is need for shoes, overshoes, and rubbers, as well as raincoats and other winter clothing, and, while the Bishop will furnish these necessaries, it is possible and practical for the Saints to meet many of these demands out of outgrown (not worn out) clothing, and also by interesting themselves to the extent of some sacrifice of selfish want, not "just need." An organized effort of this kind would go far to assist in this expense, besides helping those who so seek to benefit these little ones.

Besides these prosaic needs of everyday life there is the usual looking forward to the holidays and anticipating the good things that usually accompany childhood in such times. Can you not do something to help meet this natural demand in these times of self-denial, and so relieve the matron of the necessity of explaining to the many who call her "Mother" that this Christmas must of necessity be rather bare of the usual good things?

The past nine months have been rather hard on both the superintendent and matron on account of a scarcity of suitable help, and sixteen hours' labor each day has been about the usual thing, but within the last two weeks we have had a very welcome addition to our numbers in the person of Brother D. H. Schmidt, of Far West, who is now installed as foreman and is rendering very effectual assistance in our farm work.

This position of foreman here is no sinecure, and one to occupy acceptably must be of exemplary habits and have full control of his temper, in fact be one who compels the respect of the children, especially the boys. Brother Schmidt seems to be able to qualify in these respects as well as being capable help in both counseling and doing the necessary labor of the place.

Our plans for the coming year include a hot bed for the place as well as largely replacing the orchard which has fallen into a rather dilapidated condition, but which we have tried to restore to the best of our ability insofar as time and effort would accomplish this effect. We have taken out many dead and dying trees as well as pruning and spraying the others.

We hope to make this bit of ground as productive as it is possible for us to do, and largely raise our food on the home farm. To this end we have increased our dairy herd, and this coming summer hope to have at least nine cows giving milk for the "kiddies'" diet. At present we are largely making our own butter as well as getting milk enough for their meals, and we are looking forward to more of it in the near future. In fact we're trying to make this more of a home every month and think we're succeeding in a measure. Do you want a share in this work? There is room for all to have a part. "Come over into Macedonia and help us!"

LAMONI, IOWA, December 5, 1918.

A. M. CHASE.

Live to Exemplify the Truth

"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

I have often wondered what Paul meant by that expression. If faith is "the evidence of things not seen," and it is to bring "hope" to the possessor, then it is to bring desire with expectation, and that would imply that the person's mind should grasp such a conception of the thing to be desired that it would infuse into him such a strong desire that all things else would be secondary to that one thing. It will become the paramount object of life.

No person will desire anything unless he recognizes it to be of worth to him. If a man desires to enter into business, he very carefully considers it in all its details before he makes the venture. He goes into business for the profit he expects to gain. No person will desire to enter any business or profession unless he thinks it will be of benefit to him, and he must have a good reason for thinking so.

If a person is to have "hope," that means he is to have expectation; therefore he must have a clear perception of what to expect. And as all things in life are worked out by specific process, is it not reasonable to think that the product of faith will come in like manner? It is not reasonable to believe that when he asked the question he intended to convey the thought that some cling to, "just to believe that he is the Redeemer of the world." If he is the Redeemer, the redemption will be brought about by a divine process, for he said, "Why do ye call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

It is the doing that counts. A man might have an idea that he could succeed in business, but if he never made the test he would never know.

Jesus, speaking of his Father, said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know." Is there any other way to know? If so, his words were worthless. He said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." But that rest could not come only by process. He said, "Learn of me." We have to learn of him by a study of his teachings. He could not hand you rest; it must be acquired by "learning of him."

"He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him." What about the one who does not keep them? Then you are more especially loved, aided, and blessed. What about the one who just lives an indifferent life? The gift of God is eternal life, if you keep (observe) his commandments.

Jesus Christ came to give eternal life to all who accept the terms upon which it is promised, and no other way. God is just, and what he asks of one he asks of all. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Notice that this is the means, and there is no other.

"I know that my Father's commandments are life everlasting." Can we get the result if we never follow the means to it? There are three steps to be taken to get into the kingdom of God. If a house has three steps, can you get in and not take the steps? And can you stay in if you do not observe the rules of the house?

"Oh, well," one says, "I had nothing to do with my coming into this world; if I just do the best I know I'll be all right."

What did Jesus come here for then? He says, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me," the means he brought.

The three steps to be taken are: faith, repentance, and baptism. "You must be born again." "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." You have to get the "heaven" of life to give you the "more abundant life" Jesus spoke of. To those who are members of the "militant" kingdom of Jesus Christ, will he find the faith in you he spoke of? If he does not, where will you or I go? Have we any better claim than those who have been blinded by traditions of their ancestors? What think ye?

Of us he expects a living, active faith shown by our works. To whom much is given, of them much will be required. There are no furloughs granted. The law of the Lord is perfect, and to bring man to perfection he must observe the whole law. Ninety per cent of the law will not do it, but the whole law will, if demonstrated in our lives. If we are a part of the body of Christ we must bear our part of the burden of the body.

We are to show by our works what kind of a faith we have, whether it is a living or a dead faith. Do you think a person who pays no tithing has the kind of faith Jesus asked if he would find on the earth?

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves." (2 Corinthians 13:5.)

Look into the divine mirror and see how you look. As I understand we are to be wedded to Christ; to do what he did as an exemplary character. "Let no man deceive himself." We will not get what we are looking for if we do.

"Wherefore, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby."—1 Peter 2: 1, 2.

How can we grow unless we follow the instructions given to tell us how to grow? We are "to go on to perfection." Can we ever reach it unless we follow the road that leads to it? Do you think a boy would ever acquire an education if he just went to school and played all the time? "No," you say. Then can you gain eternal life just because you are in the church?

When you entered the church you were a "newborn babe," born into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and now you must do as he did—make your life an example of love, for he says, "Love your enemies."

In the church, we are one for all, and all for one. When one suffers, all suffer. We are to be as much interested in our brother as in ourselves. Zion is to be built up. Who is to do the building? Some say, "Oh, the leaders." While it is true they are to supervise, can they furnish the means? If they did, you and I would have nothing to do with it. Where is my glory coming from if I do nothing? To get eternal life I must be worthy of it.

The man and the men who stand at the head of the church are to supervise and direct the "building up of Zion," but all the church are to furnish the means. The men who stand at the head of the church are as much inspired as was Peter, James, or John. Frederick M. Smith is as much a prophet, seer, and revelator as was Joseph the Martyr, or as any of the ancient prophets were. The truth is true, no matter who falls.

Those who do not know this work is true had better examine themselves and find where the fault really is. Paul says, "Let no man deceive you."

Do you think Jesus will find faith on the earth when he comes? Yes, he will. He will find those who have given their all.

To live and be exemplars of the truth should be our aim, our strenuous aim.

May God help us to do it—and he will if we put forth all our powers according to his direction.

C. A. PARKIN.

Observations

The most contrary man we ever knew argued everything with everybody, until he won the distinction of being "a crank." In his later years, with failing health, we visited him. He spoke of his opposition in a general way. We asked him his purpose in so doing, when with a smile, he said, "I had no schooling; I learned by opposing," and, said he, "Don't you know if you agree with a man, that ends it. If you oppose, you get the best he has, and will learn his strong points if he has any. And I've had a lot of amusement in seeing the other fellow roiled."

So there was method in his madness.

It always struck us as inconsistent when our people enjoyed hearing "our ministers" give other churches, creeds, and reformers "particular fits," and then get "hopping mad" to hear a "minister of another church" assail some feature of "our doctrine, or church."

A GAME OF HIDE AND SEEK

The first year of our ministry we were invited by the daughter (a member) to go with her and her husband to visit her parents, and talk "our faith." She sent them word—we went. We found the "man of the house" had made his "get away." The mother kept busy in kitchen and dining room. We felt our responsibility, duty, or what we were expected (?) to do. We would go to kitchen; the mother would go to the dining room. We leisurely followed. We sought opportunities for talk, but she was an expert at keeping busy elsewhere. It finally struck us that though we might be tolerated, our purpose was not, and she faithfully kept away, even at the dinner table.

Not long after, we were invited to visit another parental home, by another daughter, to convert them. Our first question was, "Would our visit and belief be welcome, do you think?"

She replied, "No, but that is what I expect you to do, overcome their prejudices."

We went—not. Another brother did go, and he, too, was converted to—"go when wanted." ALMA.

OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, July 6, 1918

Elder F. M. Smith,

Dear Brother: With regard to the Military Service Acts 1916 and 1918, your statements given in the SAINTS' HERALDS numbers 20 and 23 are not correct in saying ministers of religion have been called to the colors.

There was a clause in the 1918 Man Power Bill but it was finally dropped and the ministry are left free of military service by the act of 1916.

When any minister of this district receives a calling-up notice, they send it on to me, and I return it with an official letter stating that the brother is a minister. Some cases have a fair amount of correspondence and others have none, after the first. Attached is a list of ministers I have had excepted according to the act, they having received calling up notices. I had eighteen months' correspondence in one case before it was settled.

I will write again next week and report the conference.

Sincerely yours in bonds,

JOHN W. TAYLOR.

21 Stamford Street.

[Excerpt from a letter from "Somewhere in France," to President F. M. Smith, dated October 28, 1918]:

Dear Brother: I have made several starts to write you, but the shell firing has been so fierce that I only got as far as addressing your envelope. We are on a very lively front, considered the hardest one. We are on the constant go ahead, and General Pershing thinks sure a heap of us, too much so I think at times. On my march I have been in towns about the size of Independence, Missouri, and have found the entire towns completely wiped out, with the exception of the crucifix of Jesus Christ. Certainly impressive to note this in the many places I've been. The enemy has taken everything that is metal even down to door knobs. I again wish to assure you that "our church boys" are loyal to their "gospel cause," and so much so that a greater revival is present than ever before, and beyond any belief of those at home.

One evening last week within range of gun fire, and overlooking this "inferno" battlefield over six of our church boys with about twelve outsiders held a prayer and testimony meeting. You may say impressive, but those meetings would play upon the "harp strings of the human soul." I find the outsiders are really broadening themselves out more, and am safe to say that our church can gain many, in fact some even ready now.

Brother Gold and myself are constantly stirring up some meetings and find a hearty cooperation with all the boys. Truly our church will make great strides soon, for these men are thinking. It truly makes us boys laugh how so many are starting a church back home of their own. If they were only here undergoing the supreme sacrifice of life, and living in mud and water at times, besides constant shell firing, and then to emerge through it all well and sound, their hearts would turn to him and utter up the prayer of "thanksgiving."

I am again promoted, this time to a noncommissioned officer, a corporal, and like my work. I am still in hopes of hearing from the Government about my instrument plans which I sent in some time ago.

Brother Gold is sure a fine chap. We are just like two sweethearts for we are never very far from each other, in fact all our church boys stick close together. We are bending every energy to end this fuss soon, as you see by your papers, and truly hope that the peace may come in which all shall enjoy the freedom of this world.

I must close my letter, although I could write you a letter of a thousand pages of my experiences, but the shells are coming again and me for the dugout. Ha! Ha!

Your brother in gospel bonds,

A. E. F., A. P. O. 761. CORPORAL ALBERT A. RALL.

WELLSVILLE, NEW YORK, November 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are regular visitors at our house, every week. We enjoy reading them very much, and could not do without them for they come each week, filled with the glorious message which we could not get in any other way, as we are isolated and do not have church privileges nor the association of the Saints. The only preaching we hear is when the missionaries come through this part of the country.

We have been very fortunate this fall. Elder George W. Robley and Brother George F. Robley have been here holding a series of meetings. The meetings were very successful, for which we feel grateful. It was the first time we have been able to get our friends out to hear the blessed gospel which the servants of God have to present to them. Now they seem to be interested in this latter-day work.

An act of yours is not simply the thing you do, but it is also the way you do it.—Phillips Brooks.

We hope and pray that the Lord will reveal his work to them so that they may know that it is true, and that in the near future there may be a branch organized here. We have a small Sunday school here—eleven members. We trust that the Lord will answer our prayer and that many more will be added to our school, and the work of the Master go on.

At times it looks dark and discouraging, but we pray that the Lord will be very near to us and give us more faith and encouragement, that we may always be found ready to do the work of the Master, for where two or three are gathered together in his name, there will he be to bless and comfort those who diligently seek him.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister in the gospel,
NETTIE E. POTTER.

LOGAN, IOWA, November 24, 1918.

Editors Herald: In compliance with the request of the patriotic instructor of the State, and in keeping with other churches, the Latter Day Saint church of Logan, after the ten o'clock Sunday school, put on a patriotic program of exceptional merit, reflecting credit upon those appearing on the program, and Mrs. Rose Adams, Elder W. R. Adams, and Mrs. Frank Hill in charge of the program; Sunday, November 24.

The church was profusely decorated in national colors; the American flags, banners, and pennants were artistically arranged. The exercises of the morning were opened by the congregation singing the "Star-spangled banner," Mrs. Daniel Whitehead gave a piano solo, and Lula Whitsett gave the reading entitled "The Americans come." She was followed by a vocal solo by Dale Gamet, and the glee club singing "The Marseillaise," and the congregation standing as when the "Star-spangled banner" was sung. The reading, "The little English drummer boy," by Miss Hortense Hill, was followed by the vocal solo, "Will there be any sweet home after the war?" by Olie Dungan; "Nearer, my God, to thee," a piano solo, was given by Mrs. Maynard Peckenpugh. Elder W. R. Adams followed with a Scripture reading, and then Elder Amos Berve gave an eloquent tribute to the American soldier boys. "Hymn of patriotism" was sung by the glee club, and then "America" was given by the congregation, the choir leading, and W. R. Adams pronouncing the benediction.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA, November 24, 1918.

With Elder J. F. McDowell in charge of the exercises, the dedication of the service flag at the Latter Day Saint church took place here this afternoon. "America" was sung by the congregation. Elder J. F. McDowell offered prayer, then the "Star-spangled banner" was sung, and Professor H. W. Fearing of the Magnolia high school gave an interesting and instructive talk on "camp life." Miss Jeannette Gilkerson sang "When the blue star turns to gold." "Rally round the flag" was sung, then Miss Hortense Hill, of Logan, gave the reading, "Tribute to the flag."

Elder Sidney Pitt, sr., made the address of the afternoon. He was historical and patriotic in his remarks. Elder J. F. McDowell paid a glowing tribute to General Pershing and General Foch. The exercises of the afternoon were completed by the congregation singing, "Hail, Columbia."

The Latter Day Saints of Iowa, in general, and Harrison County in particular, have been public spirited and patriotic in all matters relating to the success of the great international war: enlistment of boys for the army, subscription to Liberty Loan bonds, support of Red Cross, and other worthy causes have received their loyal support—all of which looks good to observers of all other church organizations, and non church members, regardless of county, State, or national lines.

CHARLES L. CROW,
Non Church Member.

[Excerpt from a letter to the Presidency from Augustine Dwyer, Jonesport, Maine, November, 1918.]:

I find the war changing the hearts of men and women everywhere. It is driving them to their knees. How true it is that the soul, when facing immediate peril, throws itself back upon God. This war has established the family altar in many homes, in which, before the war, prayer was not so much as thought of—in which parents and children went in and out, with no thought of God. It is as true today as it was when the Hebrew poet wrote the 107th Psalm, that when men are overtaken by disaster, they cry unto the Lord in their trouble.

When this war came upon us I was interested to know just what effect it would have upon the worldly-minded. While traveling in the large cities of Europe, as well as in the large cities of the United States, I saw the leaders of society, in large numbers, building altars to strange gods, and multitudes of people were eating and drinking with no thought or fear of their Creator. But in the twinkling of an eye all was changed. Thousands of men and women, who looked at life in the light of dollars and cents—in the light of sensual gratification, are in supplication now before the throne of the Almighty because their hearts are wrung with grief and sorrow.

I am pleased to see this spirit of prayer coming over our people. The testimony I have received from some presidents of our branches is that the prayer meetings are having an increasingly larger attendance. Multitudes of hearts are sorely troubled. The human spirit is wounded and depressed. Were it not for our faith in the gospel I believe the best of us would stagger under the weight of this weary and unintelligible world.

Only to-day I sat with the parents of one of our boys who died in France. He was a member of the Jonesport Branch, and was highly respected by all who knew him. A comforting letter was sent to the parents from France, testifying to his fidelity to the last. I don't believe we have in our church better people than the parents of that boy. The father is a man of rich mental endowments, as is manifested in his inventions which have received recognition in the scientific world, of financial profit to himself. The hearts of these parents are lacerated over the death of that only son, in whom they had centered all their hopes. It is the noblest spirits who are most depressed; it is the most sensitive souls who suffer most. But how good it is to see the parents of that boy turn to the gospel for support and relief. And they will not turn in vain. The gospel meets the instinctive cry of the soul with the assurance that our God is a Father—and he pities us as a father pities his children.

The mothers of our boys! God pity them. When Germany killed the son it killed the mother. No mother ever lives after war has taken from her the boy of her dreams and hopes. She may go on existing through the years, but she does not live. Her heart is dead. It is in the grave with her boy. But that blessed land in whose sky there is no cloud, and on whose shores there beats no storm, and where war and death are no more, is very near her.

I notice, dear Brother Smith, in the goodness of your heart, you see something in my letters you deem worthy the dignity of the printed column. I am receiving letters from the Saints in various parts of the country thanking me for writing you these letters. The only merit they have is their sincerity. They were intended for your eyes alone, for I

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

This work is in two small volumes, and covers church history from the childhood of Joseph the Martyr down to the present. It does not fill the place of the four volume History of the Church, but is primarily intended for the young of the church who wish the church's history in a lighter form, and in less detail.

Volume 1 of Young People's History has been before the church for two years and has found place in the home libraries of many of the Saints. It has given many a young man and woman considerable knowledge of the rise of the church in the last days.

Volume 2 has just come from the bindery of the Herald Publishing House, and covers the period of reorganization, and from then to the present. It is even superior to its predecessor, both in text and in mechanical execution.

ILLUSTRATIONS

From the frontispiece to the last illustration in Volume 2, there are upward of thirty-five good illustrations, some of them occupying a full page, among them being a reproduction of one of the best photographs of President Joseph Smith. The illustrations alone are worth many times the price of the volume.

CHAPTER SUBJECTS

There are fifty-three short chapters of the history, treating such subjects as "Young Joseph Takes His Place"; "The First Press and the Zion Movement"; "The First Long Revelation"; "The Church in the Islands of the Sea"; "The Gospel Boat"; "The Work in Wales"; "The Jubilee Meeting, 1910"; and more than forty-five other equally important and attractive subjects.

All of these are in such form as to be entertaining, attractive, instructive reading. Your children will read them and will be telling you church history if you will give them access to these two volumes.

THE PRICE IS $1 PER VOLUME

Bound in dark green cloth, postpaid.

A desirable Christmas season book, and its value will increase as its age advances. It is your chance to place an interest producer in the hands of your boy or girl in the teens.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT

Effective January 1, 1919, Elder Eli Bronson has been appointed to labor in the Eastern Montana District, local, for the balance of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

The Bishopric

SOUTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT

Beginning January 1, Brother W. O. Robertson of 2806 Duncan Street, Louisville, Kentucky, will act as Bishop's agent of the Southern Indiana District, thus relieving Brother James B. Welch, who has so faithfully and well performed this task for some time.

Brother Robertson comes to us well recommended and we feel to commend him to the Saints, and trust that they may not only receive his teachings with regard to temporalities, but that they may support him in order that the Lord's work may move forward.

While we sense the necessity of receiving funds in order to carry on the Lord's work, yet we appreciate in an even larger measure the fact that the giving of these funds by the individuals means for their development and increases their love for their fellow men, for they realize the benefits the gospel offers to mankind and in this way they are extending a helping hand that the message of glad news may be carried to them.

May the peace and blessings of the Master attend the Saints of this district.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Notice

To Whom It May Concern: In the SAINTS' HERALD for May 22, 1918, (and on page 509) there appeared a letter written by the undersigned regarding the death and burial of our beloved Brother Laval Stoner, wherein mention was made concerning him being misunderstood and hindered in his labors.

And whereas some of the officers of the branch have thought said statement would reflect upon them, and to relieve them of this, I confess I made an error in making the statement for publication, and ask pardon of all concerned.

Religio Pins

We desire every one who is a member of the Religio to wear the official pin. Through a contract which has recently been placed with the manufacturer for a large number of these pins, we are able to reduce the price from 50 to 35 cents each. Our idea is to have every one who is a member wear this pin.

Addresses

Elder L. C. Moore has changed his address from 209 McDowell Street, Mount Carmel, Illinois, to Marengo, Indiana.

Our Departed Ones

ATKINSON.—Dorothy Hamilton, daughter of William and Catherine Atkinson, born August 7, 1912, died November 3, 1918, at Elk Mills, Maryland. She leaves to mourn, father, mother, sisters, and brothers, also a host of friends who all loved her. Services at the home in charge of Henry Carr. Interment in Cherry Hill Cemetery.

COUNTRYMAN.—Henry Glenn Countryman was born April 4, 1897. Baptized by F. J. Ebeling. Died October 20, 1918. Leaves a young wife and baby, father, mother, brothers, and sisters. Cause of death was influenza. He was a good boy and of a cheerful disposition. Buried at Miamisburg, Ohio. Services at the home of the wife's parents. Sermon by F. J. Ebeling.

MOFFIT.—Len Moffit was born in Brown County, South Dakota, April 2, 1894, and died at Killdeer, North Dakota, November 7, 1918, from pneumonia. Baptized by Joseph M. Roberts. Married Sister Lydia Hecker June 10, 1914. To this union were born 2 sons, one having already passed over. Ordained a priest in July, 1918. He leaves a wife and infant son, mother, 4 sisters, 4 brothers, and numerous relatives to mourn. Funeral services conducted at the grave by Ferd Hammel. Interment in Dunn Center Cemetery.

DAVIS.—R. B. Davis, son of Brother John T. and Mary E. Davis, of Poteau, Oklahoma, was born at Windfield, Arkansas, December 12, 1913; died November 25, 1918, leaving father, mother, brother, and other near relatives to mourn the loss of a sweet child. The service was conducted at the residence, funeral sermon by J. C. Chrestensen. Interment at the Oakland Cemetery.

LAUSTEN.—Died at Santa Rosa, California, November 26, 1918, Grethe Lausten, a native of Denmark. Born November 12, 1866. Baptized at Council Bluffs, 1884. She leaves a loving husband and 6 children to mourn. She had 7 children; one son preceded her to the other world. She was a faithful Saint and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. She was loved by many. Funeral services conducted and sermon preached by C. A. Parkin.

SINCLAIR.—Elizabeth Sinclair, widow of Peter Sinclair, born January 31, 1848, at Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire County, Scotland. Died of pneumonia at the Eleanor Moore Hospital, Boone, Iowa, November 29, 1918. Leaves to mourn her loss, 3 sons and 2 daughters, with a host of relatives and friends. Baptized by J. S. Roth, June 22, 1884, at Boone, Iowa. Funeral services from the Methodist church, at Fraser, Iowa, conducted by Joseph Arber, assisted by Henry Pratt. She awaits the morn of the first resurrection. Interment in the East Linn Cemetery, Boone, Iowa.

WADE.—Errol Alvin Wade, son of Sister Frank Mosher, born January 3, 1900, at Moingona, Iowa; died November 30, 1918, of pneumonia. Married Miss Mildred Eleanor Wright, October 3, 1918. He leaves to mourn, his wife, mother, stepfather, one brother, 2 stepsisters, and many other relatives. He was always a gentle, affectionate boy, and never forgot his mother. Funeral services from the home, conducted by Joseph Arber, assisted by Reverend Higbee, of the Presbyterian Church. Interment in East Linn Cemetery, Boone, Iowa.

WILSON.—Ann, was born at Hissam, Devonshire, England, on January 9, 1840, and was baptized August 10, 1888, by William Newton. She passed from this life October 13, 1918, at Heavitree, Exeter. Interred at Heavitree Church Cemetery. Funeral services in charge of Thomas Jones. This sister has been truly a mother in Israel amongst the Saints at Exeter. At a ripe age she passed from us with a strong testimony of the Lord's work. She had 8 children, 6 of whom survive, with 15 grandchildren and one great-grandchild, most of whom belong to the church. Her end was the sleep of peace.

BAKER.—John Arthur, son of Brother W. W. and Sister H. L. Baker, born March 25, 1899. Baptized at Logan, Iowa, at the age of nine years. Enlisted in the regular army June 25, 1916; assigned to Company A, Eighth Cavalry, at Fort Bliss, Texas, and served 1 year and 1 month on the Mexican border, when he was selected with eleven others of his troop and sent to France about August 8, 1917. Assigned to Company A, Ammunition Train, in active service till his death, October 5, from wounds received in action.

FROM HERE AND THERE

THE INFLUENZA SITUATION

In spite of the numerous cases, and one death directly attributable to the disease, the Saints of Lamoni feel the situation has many encouraging features and are constrained to give God the praise for so general a deliverance. In common with thousands of other communities, many sacrifices are being made to care for those who are ill, but through administration many cases of partial and complete healing are reported. We are informed that at Independence not only public gatherings are prohibited, but a strict quarantine is enforced in every home where the disease is known to exist. All members of the family must either stay in or stay out until the quarantine is removed. Graceland College is continuing its work, though most of the faculty and perhaps more than half of the students have been afflicted. There is a possibility that the issuance of the church periodicals may be affected, but we do not think it probable, since most of us can do more than one thing, and when necessity arises, step in and help out the department most crippled. Please be as patient with us as possible until we get our force all back at work again.

WAS THE HERALD MISTAKEN?

We are just in receipt of a post card with the following comment. As possibly some others were bothered, we answer it here.

"You are off on your arithmetic about ten per cent reduction in the size of the HERALD. Eight pages less is thirty-three and a third per cent. Ten per cent would be 2.4 pages. What arithmetic are you using?"

If the brother had read the paragraph more carefully he would have seen that the Herald Publishing House has to report for the quarter beginning October 1. To take 2.4 pages off of each issue would make an odd-looking paper and be out of the question as a printing problem for the saving of paper. Hence it is necessary that the reduction be made in a smaller number of copies, rather than each week.

There are thirteen copies to the quarter, or 312 pages. Eight pages out of one number is about two and a half per cent saving. Eight pages out of four numbers would be ten and a quarter per cent.

The restrictions on the HERALD and Autumn Leaves have been withdrawn, so our readers will only lose the small eight pages or two and a half per cent for the quarter.

Sister Julia M. Rohde desires to have her testimony recorded as to the wonderful blessings God has bestowed on her and desires to live faithful to the end.

A request is made for prayers in behalf of Willie Rogers, who had an accident shortly after going into camp last year and is still in the hospital at Camp Beauregard.

ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

Excerpt from letter to the Presidency from Elder F. F. Wipper, Collinsville, Oklahoma, November 29, 1918: "I believe that the people have discovered by this time that we are not here to entertain them, but that our business is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I received a nice supply of the 'Angel Message' tracts and feel exceedingly pleased that we have succeeded so well in standardizing our literature. I can submit these tracts to the public with a feeling of real pride, knowing that they correctly represent us in doctrine, composition, and workmanship."

Elder J. W. Peterson is in the Independence Sanitarium. He was obliged to leave his field owing to a severe attack of heart trouble.

Elder Joseph Arber wrote from Boone, Iowa, on the 2nd, stating that he had been holding services at that place, with fair attendance, considering the difficulties encountered on account of the influenza epidemic. The branch has had seven deaths and a number still ill. Meetings closed on the 1st and he has gone to Perry.

"The hunter who goes in search of trouble never comes home empty-handed."

The closer we hold our troubles, the bigger they look. Let us keep them at arm's length.—Ambition.

CRITICISM AND TEACHING

A recent letter reminds us how often we have observed the fact that the man, hold what place that he may, who is to find fault with those on whom rests the burden of the church, his brethren who are doing their best to carry on the work, if he spends his time seeking out parts of the law, in which he claims they are not correct—how often has it happened that his own children come up outside of the church. His attitude discredits the church as a whole; it discredits his own position as an officer in the church; finally it very near discredits the existence of a Supreme Being, and its practical effect is to turn his children—not only from the church but from religion as well. This spiritual loss to his children after all is the result of his own practical teaching.

The man who is seeking continually to build up the work, to win souls to Christ, to get men in the priesthood to do better work, by a personal effort on his own part, will gain his brother, at least, and by his own life is teaching his children and others the gospel of Christ.

The man who opposes all the time, who is continually looking for fault to find with branch officers, with district or stake officers, with the general officers of the church, a little fault here and a little fault there, is teaching, regardless of what his public testimony may be, his disbelief. It is not surprising then, that he succeeds in converting his own family.

This goes to indicate the difference between constructive and destructive criticism. On the other hand, we have a man who is striving to build up the work. He criticises his own faults and the faults of others, but to the end of better work, and so his criticisms are made kindly and alone they will help. He spends his time in trying to reconcile men to Christ. He lives and teaches the law, but does not make his own construction of the law to be the final criterion.

His supreme thought is to win men and women to better living. His main hope is to interest young men in the service of the church; and of those who have accepted the priesthood, to secure their most efficient service wherever they are called to labor. He looks first, to the practical result rather than to his own personal construction, and so teaches, first—the religion of Jesus Christ. He wins many to better service and teaches also, by example, his own family.

On the other hand, the man who continually finds fault, to whom there is never a time but what he can point out wherein the local officers, his brethren in the priesthood, the officers of district or stake, and the general officers are making a mistake; who assumes always a critical, cynical attitude, is really whatever his public testimony in prayer service may be—however earnest he makes family prayer, practically teaching against the church and against the religion of Jesus Christ.

The latter man makes religion dry and harsh—is more concerned with practical construction than practical results. The former man is more concerned in living, and makes of religion a living entity.

This only emphasizes again the difference between constructive and destructive criticism. How many times have we seen well-meaning brethren of the priesthood converting their own family to agnosticism.

Grant that we here before thee may be set free from the fear of vicissitude and fear of death, may finish what remains before us of our course without dishonor to ourselves or hurt to others, and, when the day comes, may die in peace. Deliver us from fear and favor: from mean hopes and cheap pleasures. Have mercy on each in his deficiency; let him not be cast down; support the stumbling on the way, and give at last rest to the weary.—R. L. S.

ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

"Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."—John 16: 13.

With the above verse we might associate many others concerning the breadth of knowledge our heavenly Father wishes his children to possess. Certainly the scientific realm is not closed to us. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) There is a duty upon the church to understand things on the earth, over the earth, and under the earth, things past, things present, and things to come.

Essential to the work of the church in the fullest and most complete sense are the life and teachings of Jesus. But we need and require something more than knowledge, even the wisdom that comes by the spirit of God.

Learning, study, should be where the law of the church places it "that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21). It is preparation for service, and the need of the church and the work of the church is very great.

A study of sociology and social reconstruction gives a clearer insight into our problems. Within the past decade there has arisen a new agitation in government and a new discontent among the citizens of this country. For many years the man who was discontented could go west and grow up with the country. The man with means exploited the resources of the country.

But that time is past, and now men are growing rich through exploiting of humanity, of human labor and human needs. In the early days, until after the Revolutionary War, this country was essentially devoted to agriculture. About 1870 to 1880 the manufacturing industry had increased to such an extent as to very nearly equal and then to exceed the value of agricultural products. We began then to create a city proletariat. But the last ten or fifteen years has marked the third era referred to above.

On the side of government we see it manifested even before the war in the great increase of governmental powers, the creation of commissions to regulate and restrict transportation and other large industry in the interest of society as a whole. To this period belongs social legislation, minimum wage, eight-hour law, child labor law, restrictions on the labor of women, industrial insurance, health insurance, mothers' pension, play grounds, recreation centers, and the like. We still find many instances of reactionaries who wish to return to the period of limited governmental powers, when that government was considered best which did the least and interfered least with individual effort. But especially the last few years their number has grown less.

This condition, which has arisen recently in this country, confronted the nations of Europe fifty years and more earlier. So we find in England in 1844 the organization of the first cooperative society, the Rockdale weavers. They were working-men and felt keenly the pinch of necessity, of high prices with relation to their wages. They therefore combined, used an old shed without rent, opened it once or twice a week, combined their purchases so as to buy as one instead of individually, did their own distributing and so cut down rent, heat, light, clerk hire and other expenses of the middle man. But they did this because they worked for themselves for nothing. This movement has since grown until in recent years the sales exceed $100,000,000.

We have not the figures at present as to the number of members, number of stores, and the exact amount of business. We do know that they have established several wholesale houses, a few factories and original sources of production. Dividends are minimum and limited. Each one has but one vote regardless of his number of shares. Dividends are put on a basis of purchases.

In this country some such efforts have been made, but most of them have failed, because there did not exist at the time an overpowering pressure of necessity, also, because allowance was not made for rent, heat, light, clerk hire, telephone, delivery, and other incidental expenses.

But before this necessity was realized even in Europe the Lord in 1831 and 1832 gave the financial law to govern the church, and to meet these very conditions which are now arising in this country. We consider the solution then laid down, in the light of present conditions, surely bespeaks divine wisdom.

A condition of increasing gravity is confronting us as citizens and as Christians. It is now well recognized that whatever may have been the occasion and responsibility for starting the great war abroad, economic stress was at least one great underlying cause.

If we are to be priests of God, we have a responsibility not only to ourselves but to others as ministers, not to inflict but first to understand the law, to understand and study carefully the present needs, the mistakes of the past, and the best that can be learned of conditions to-day, and then apply the law among ourselves and finally to teach it to others.

We have heard some criticism that an effort is being made to move too rapidly. But the Spirit of God is moving upon the nations. The voice of the Spirit has been given many times that this is the hastening time, and if we are not faithful the Lord can and will raise up others to carry on the work. Of ourselves the problem would seem too much but we are not left to labor alone, for we have the spirit of truth to guide us into all truth. We are called to be laborers together with God.

Now the war is over these conditions are intensified and the need of an economic solution is increased. The details of consecration, stewardships, and inheritances in their temporal aspects we are leaving to the Bishopric to expound. But the great underlying principles belong to the gospel of Christ.

If the church is not to lag, we must move forward. The world is moving. If we individually are not to find ourselves left behind while the church moves on to its consummation, we must individually be preparing.

LOCAL PROPHECIES

In 1913 the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, the collection of prophecies and statements other than those which are accepted and approved by the general church, claiming to be of spiritual origin, some of which may be of doubtful character, and the records of what may be regarded as miracles, and the publishing of such in books or pamphlets and so parading them before the public, partakes of the nature of boasting, which is contrary to the instruction of the Master: 'But a commandment I give unto them, that they shall not boast themselves of these things, neither speak them before the world; for these things are given unto you for your profit and for salvation' (see Doctrine and Covenants 83: 11; 102: 4); and,

"Whereas, we believe that such publications are detrimental to the best interests of the church and encourage an undue desire for such experiences; therefore be it,

"Resolved, That we look with disfavor upon such publications and recommend that the resolutions which are already on record have the respectful consideration and observance of the brethren who are affected thereby. (See General Conference Resolutions, numbers 288, 268, 550, and Conference Minutes of 1912, page 1622.)"—General Conference Resolutions 709.

This is one reason why a great many should not be printed, because we are not to boast of these things. They are given for our instruction, edification, and blessing, and not to be boasted of before the world.

Another reason has already been indicated, because they have not stood the test of revelation presented to the church.

A third reason is, that some present such, which they consider spiritual manifestations, which evidently are not so, or are not from above, and present them as an experience for admission to the church. There are many spirits in the world. We should deal justly and rightly.

Then that which is presented should be for the edification and benefit of the Saints.

CORONATION

I saw her first in a great base hospital in the north of England. She was leaning over a bed that held a fearfully broken lad from London's great East Side. In half a dozen places the shrapnel had sought his vitals, and quite as many times the kindly cruel scalpel of the surgeon had searched out the creeping poison. When she touched the boy, he smiled. He could not see her—his eyes were covered—and he could not move his head. Even the smile must have caused him pain. But I never knew before that a man's mouth could be so beautiful. It was as if the lips had responded to something electric in that white-gowned woman's touch: it was as if her fingers had healing in them. I found myself whispering, "And the child was cured from that very hour."

I saw her next in France, and not far behind the lines. I never learned her story. I prefer to remember her in the spirit of the words of one her hands were laid upon:

"I wonder what she did before she went to war—for she has gone to war as truly as any soldier. I am sure in the peaceful years she must have loved and been greatly loved. Perhaps he was killed out there. Now she is ivory-white with over-service, and all her days are spent in loving. Over dying men she stoops and is to them the incarnation of their mother, or of the woman, had they lived, they would have loved."

I shall not see that woman again. In the air above a red cross, a winged-monster paused and let loose his fury. She is not dead, but gone to her coronation, this woman with healing in her hands, this greatest mother in the world.—Daniel A. Poling, Associate President the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

"A man must first of all be himself. What he is to do with that self is another question. This question belongs to the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ."—Volunteer Gazette.

SHOULD BRANCHES BUY HERALDS?

A recent letter suggests that the HERALD and Ensign be purchased as the Stepping Stones is and distributed by the branches, just as the Sunday school paper is by the Sunday school. Certainly this would be an advantage to the publication interests, as the HERALD should be in every home. One advantage would be that the very poor families would have as good a chance to have the paper as those better to do, and it would doubtless secure more general reading of the church papers.

At the same time anyone desiring to do so could secure a personal subscription, the same as is the case at present with the Quarterly and Stepping Stones. But such a move would properly come from the branches and some plan would have to be put in force by which the money would be secured for purchasing a sufficient number to be sent to one address.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS FOR INDIA

It is of great interest at this time of growing rights of self-government to learn that on August 20, 1917, the announcement was made in the House of Commons of a definite policy of the increasing association of Indians (Hindus) in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of self-governing institution with a view to the progressive realization of responsible government in India as an integral part of the British Empire.

In carrying out this policy, Mr. Edwin Montagu, secretary of state for India, Lord Donoughmore, Mr. Charles Roberts, M. P., and others, went out to India last fall to make a careful investigation in association with its viceroy, Lord Chelmerford.

Six months' diligent inquiry was made, and the result was a report of three hundred pages, dated April 22, 1918, and presented to Parliament.

This report proposes a great extension of local self-government, so as to train electorates; self-government in the provinces of India; developments for better representation of Indian needs and desires in the government of India and the all-India legislature; machinery for fuller knowledge in Parliament; and means for continuously enlarging, in light of experience and at regular stages, the element of responsibility to Indian electorates.—Summary of Constitutional Reforms for India.

Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmerford join in the report, which leads up to the conception of India as eventually a sisterhood of states, self-governing in all matters of purely provincial interest and presided over by a central government, increasingly representative of, and responsible to, the people of all of them, dealing with matters of common interest to the whole of them.

Attached are supplementary papers expressing general assent of Lord Donoughmore, Sir William Duke, Mr. B. N. Basu, and Mr. Charles Roberts; also of the government of India and Council of India, with reservations as to the details of the school, though they support its general policy.

They recommend that the few remaining racial discriminations be abolished, making appointments to all branches of public service without racial discrimination.

The services of the Indian Army make it necessary to grant a considerable number of commissions.

This means that India will be developed as a nation. It will have its effect on caste. It should lead to responsible government. The plan calls for gradual, but as rapid development as possible of full self-government. Parliament had not yet acted at date of recent announcement, but prospects are very favorable.

There is no study so fascinating and absorbing as the study of mankind. No book can beguile the hours of waiting at a depot, on the street, or in any public place, with such varied amusement and information as is gained in the mere watching of men and women. From outward manifestations, as individuals meet different problems, we come to an understanding of the inner man, the man that often seeks concealment; from what we see, we judge of that which we do not see. Yet we must ever bear in mind that our own defects may render our judgment faulty, and we should exercise a sweet and wholesome charity toward the objects of our scrutiny.—Elbert A. Smith.

In our living and dying there is either the shattering or the building up of the ideals of others, and I am living for the maintenance of the state only in so far as I am assisting everyone to live a happy, healthy life. This is maintenance of the state, that every individual in the state, and under state control, and within state jurisdiction, shall be "living," and not existing. Let us be careful of terms: Existence only is an insult to God, and an insult to man. Living is the only thing that God has a right to expect from us, and health and happiness are the immediate blossoms and fruitage of our living. In living I am an asset; in existing I am a debt of the race.—John W. Rushton.

GAMBLING

[A letter of inquiry was referred to Brother Fry for an opinion. An extract from the query follows, together with Brother Fry's answer.]

Query.—In leaflet of instruction No. 1, by the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, for 1916, a brother writing of organized classes tells of playing basket ball, the losers to pay for a banquet. Do you approve of that kind of gambling? I think it is wrong to send out such literature. We teach that gambling is wrong.

Regarding the subject of gambling referred to me in the above letter, I offer the following comment:

Gamble is defined by the Standard Dictionary thus:

"To play a game, especially a game of chance, for stakes; risk money or other possession on an event, chance, or contingency; pretend to buy or sell, depending upon chance variations in prices for gain; as, to gamble for drinks; to gamble in wheat."

The subject may be considered according to the four modes by which gambling is carried on, viz., betting, speculating, buying chances, and treating.

BETTING

The practice somewhat prevalent in the world of betting money or other consideration on an uncertain issue, as the result of a game, a race, or other contest, or on the date upon which, or before which, a specified event may or may not happen; and of staking money by a number of person, the whole to go to one or more who may be the winners of a game or contest, are unquestionably gambling and are indefensible, the evil effects of which are generally acknowledged, and of which little need be said. Such practices tend to draw men away from honorable labor, causing them to depend upon luck, so-called, for the support of themselves and families, in frequent cases resulting in extreme loss and distress. Those who follow them do not by such things produce wealth, but seek to acquire by illegitimate and dishonorable methods that which the labor of others has produced. Municipalities generally have ordinances forbidding them, and gambling contracts are commonly not binding in law, and cannot be enforced by suit.

SPECULATING

Speculating, as a mode of gambling, does not bring the speculators into the same degree of disrepute as does that of betting, and by some persons is looked upon as both legitimate and honorable. The laws do not forbid the practice. It is defined as "a more or less risky investment of money in expectation of considerable gain, or any business or commercial transaction involving such a use of money, as buying commodities to hold them for speculation; a speculation in railroad stocks." Speculative purchases are not made because of any need of the commodity bought, nor with a view to put the commodity to any useful purpose, but solely with the view to obtaining unearned gain by selling again at an advanced price. Frequently the speculator does not even come into possession of the commodity he buys.

Some men make large gains by this form of gambling but always at the expense of others, and the numerous financial wrecks found among the venturesome manifest the evil of the practice. Whatever may be its standing under the law of the land, it does not measure up to the moral law, and is inconsistent with the spirit of the gospel. A revelation given some years ago said, "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church and should be avoided."

BUYING CHANCES

Buying chances is a mode of gambling including investing in lotteries, participating in raffles, depositing money in slot machines for chance returns of greater amount, paying for chances for prizes by numbers punched from holes in boards known as "punching-boards," and other similar schemes. Lotteries are held by law to be gambling and are prohibited in the United States and some other countries, and are not permitted to be carried on through the mails. Raffles are little different in principle, the difference being that usually the values involved are smaller and they are made a part of social activities. Slot machines where permitted draw the young especially to deposit their small coins to their loss, thereby laying the foundation for other practices with still more serious consequences. Punching-boards provide a modification of the raffle and are numerous in some sections, especially in restaurants and other places where people frequent. They are especially enticing to the young. To keep them within the bonds of the law which prohibits gambling devices, a trifling article is given in return for each "purchase."

In a few cases I have found that the practice of raffling has been indulged in by Saints usually for the purpose of raising money for church purposes. These instances were due to ignorance of the Lord's way of raising money on the part of the Saints doing them, and failure to see the evil in their own way. In speaking against these practices I have urged an observance of the gospel plan for providing means to carry on the Lord's work.

TREATING

Treating may or may not come within the definition of gambling, according as it may or may not be determined by chance by previous agreement. To treat is "to amuse or gratify with some unusual pleasure; furnish entertainment without expense to the recipient; pay the expenses of entertainment, food, or especially drink for as out of compliment, or good fellowship."

Treating is a social custom followed the world over, and is an expression of friendship and good will, bearing no relation to gambling unless the treating has been made an obligation by a previous agreement partaking of the nature of a bet or wager. It is of this obligated treating only that consideration is given here.

When two persons, or two groups of persons, agree that the losing one in a game, contest, election, or other similar event, or the mistaken one in a matter of fact, shall treat the other to a drink, cigar, new hat, banquet, or other similar form of entertainment or enrichment, they technically enter into a mode of gambling, though it may be far from their intent to do so. The social features in these practices are generally the dominant ones, and the thought or desire for gain (which is the leading characteristic of the gambling spirit) is nearly, if not entirely absent, so while the practices are technically gambling the motive is social.

As to how far Saints can go in holding to certain customs of the world without danger may be a question, though he who carefully observes the Scriptural warning to "shun the very appearance of evil" will be upon safe ground. One may do some of these things and see only the social side, but another may find in them the first steps toward the path of evil. Since they are not necessary to social enjoyment, they can be avoided by the young people of the church without irksome restraint, and at the same time the high ideals set forth in the gospel will be more fully exemplified.

The line between good and evil, right and wrong, truth and error, is not sharply drawn in the world, and many times partake of the nature of both, so that it is not practicable in every case to say that this thing is absolutely right and that thing is absolutely wrong. The item raised in the preceding letter of inquiry, viz., the giving of a banquet by the losers in a game of basket ball, is not without its good features, for which reason it cannot be wholly condemned, but it contains that element which is drawn from the world and which is so closely allied with things recognized as evil that the whole event appears to some to be tainted and somewhat dangerous. It is better, therefore, in all conduct to follow those lines which are clearly right

CHARLES FRY.

WITNESSING FOR JESUS

"Are you shedding light for Jesus? Are you witnessing for him?" These are beautiful words and our people sing them sweetly, too. True, the poet puts them in an interrogative form: simply asks the question and leaves everyone to answer to his own conscience as to whether he is witnessing for the Lord or not.

But there is food for thought in the question and, when we come to answer it, we may well hesitate and think long and seriously before we decide to answer in the affirmative. I sometimes wonder if we fully realize what it means to witness for him. You may say: "Yes, the word witness, as it is used here, means the same as the word testify; hence, it means to testify for him." Very well, and are you testifying for him? And I imagine I hear some one saying: "Yes, I testify for the Master every time I have an opportunity." You do? And what do you mean when you say that you testify for him every time you have an opportunity?

Do you mean that you stand up in the prayer and testimony meeting every time you have an opportunity, and tell of your love for the Savior? Well, that is good, so far as it goes; but we must remember that there are some men who "profess that they know God; but in works they deny him." (Titus 1:16.) Hence, I am fully convinced that witnessing for Jesus means something more than simply saying, with the mouth, that we love him; it must have a deeper meaning than that.

My understanding is that when a witness is brought on the stand, in the courts of our land, and testifies to one thing and then, before he is through, contradicts what he has said, his testimony is set aside and is not accepted as evidence, that is, it is not to be relied upon as being good testimony. And it is the same in witnessing for Jesus: If I testify, with my mouth, that I love the Master, and then testify by my works that I do not love him, my testimony is contradictory and cannot be accepted, because I have testified on both sides of the case. And the testimony borne by my works must stand, for the Savior said: "If a man love me he will keep my words." (John 14:23.)

Now that statement is either true or it is false. You would not like to say it is false, would you? I am sure I would not like to say so—I don't want to say so—and yet when I stand up in the prayer meeting or in the pulpit and testify, with my mouth, that I love Jesus, and then refuse to do what he says for me to do, I am witnessing to the world that the words of the Master are not strictly true; that I can love Jesus and not keep his words; and, when I do that, I am surely not "witnessing for him."

No, in that case, I would be witnessing against him; and, more than that, I would be witnessing against myself, too, for I would be contradicting myself; testifying with my mouth that I love him and, at the same time, testifying by my actions that I do not love him. Or, putting it in other words: my words say that I love him and my works say that I do not love him. "If a man love me he will keep my words." "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings."

I may bear a false testimony with my mouth, but my actions will speak the truth, that is, my works, as a whole, will tell whether I love him or not; and that testimony will be believed, as a rule, by those with whom I may associate, whatever they may think or say of the testimony of my mouth. Hence, that is the testimony which I am really bearing to the world, and also to my brethren and sisters of the church, whether it be for him or against him. When I do what he says for me to do, I am testifying for him; and when I fail to do what he says for me to do, or do what he says for me not to do, I am testifying against him.

Now, my dear brother, are you sure you testify for him, every time you have an opportunity? Do you love God with all your heart? Do you love your neighbor as you love yourself? And do you show that love by your works? Do you do unto others as you would have them do unto you, at all times? Do you always return good for evil? Do you love your enemies? Do you bless those who curse you? Do you pray for those who despitefully use you and persecute you? Do you seek your neighbor's good the same as your own? Do you prefer your brother in honor before yourself? Do you exercise that charity that suffereth long and is kind? that charity that envieth not? that charity that seeketh not her own? that charity that is not easily provoked? that charity that thinketh no evil? Do you abstain from the very appearance of evil?

Do you do all these things, with all others which the Master has commanded, every time you have an opportunity? These are the things which really count in the Christian life, and these are the things which really witness for the Master, too. It is an easy thing for some people to say, with the mouth, that they love God, and it is a good thing to say, too; but it is still better to testify to the world, by your works, that you love him, and it makes a deeper and more lasting impression, too, than words alone.

How "are you witnessing for him," in word or in deed? You may say: "Oh, I shall not bear my testimony to-day." But you will. You will bear your testimony to-day; you will bear your testimony to-morrow; and you will bear your testimony every other day, as long as you live. You may not want to bear your testimony; you may not mean to do so; and you may possibly deceive yourself to that extent that you are not really conscious of the fact that you are bearing your testimony; but, just the same, you are bearing your testimony: "witnessing for him" or witnessing against him. Which shall it be?

Isaiah says: "For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us." —Isaiah 59: 12.

Jeremiah says: "O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake." —Jeremiah 14: 7.

"And the pride of Israel doth testify to his face." —Hosea 5: 5.

Our transgressions, our iniquities, and our pride, will testify, even though we might close our mouths and never utter a word, either for or against him. Even though we might not commit any special sin, our very silence may become a sin. "To him that knoweth to be good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin," says the apostle.

Hence, we may sin in refusing to speak a word for the master, or in refusing to do something he requires of us; and that sin would be witnessing against us and also against the cause of our Savior. We sing: "I'll go where you want me to go," "I'll say what you want me to say," and "I'll be what you want me to be," and then we sometimes refuse to either go where he wants to go or stay where he wants us to stay; and most of us fail, too, to be just what he wants us to be. When we refuse to do what we tell the Lord we will do, does not that inconsistency testify? Does it not speak much louder than words? Hence it is that we witness against him by refusing to witness for him: witness against him by refusing to say what he wants us to say, and by refusing to do what he wants us to do.

Did you ever stop to think that, in refusing to do what the Master wants you to do, in refusing to say what he wants you to say, you are testifying to the world and to the church that you do not love him? "If a man love me, he will keep my words." You may say: "I will put a padlock on my mouth, so that my words cannot testify; then I will cover up all my deeds, so that they cannot testify; and then I shall not be compelled to bear my testimony to the world at all."

Are you sure of that? No, you are not sure, even of that. If you think you are sure, you are simply deceiving yourself, or allowing some other power to deceive you. Israel thought, no doubt, at one time, that their deeds were all covered and that their mouth service must stand as their only testifying witness; but the Lord said of them: "The show of their countenance doth witness against them, and doth declare their sin to be even as Sodom, and they cannot hide it. Wo unto their souls, for they have rewarded evil unto themselves."—2 Nephi 8: 47. (Quoted from Isaiah 3: 9.)

No, you may put a padlock on your mouth; you may cover up all your deeds; but, if you live in sin and disobedience, the show of your countenance will stand as a witness against you and will proclaim you a sinner. Your sin will write itself upon your countenance, and you cannot hide it, try as you may. This principle holds good on the other hand, that is, it holds good for the child of God the same as for the sinner. Listen to this:

"Have ye spiritually been born of God? Have ye received his image in your countenances? Have ye experienced this mighty change in your hearts."—Alma 3: 27-29. Please note that this change in your countenance, this receiving "his image in your countenances," comes with "this mighty change in your hearts." In other words: when one is born of God and God gets into his soul, then he will show himself in that man's countenance, just to that extent that man becomes "partaker of the divine nature."

Paul evidently understood it in the same light, for he said: "But we all, with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory."—2 Corinthians 3: 18. But it is only when Christ is within us and is permitted to shine out through us that we can reflect the glory of God, and it is only then that we can be "transformed into the same image;" and it is only then that we can receive "his image in your countenances." Hence, whether we are for him or against him, the show of our countenances will testify, either for or against, "and they cannot hide it."

Your words may testify falsely; your works will testify truly, but you may possibly keep them covered and in the dark, so far as your fellow man is concerned; but the show of your countenance will testify, truly too, and you "cannot hide it." You must testify. Just as sure as you allow hatred, envy, jealousy, pride, vanity, covetousness, carnality, or even indifference, an abiding place in your heart and in your soul, just that sure it will engraven itself upon "the show of your countenance," and you will not be able to keep it from witnessing against you injuring your influence; and, to the extent it weakens your influence, as a worker for and with the Master, to that extent it is witnessing against him.

Yes, you will witness for him or you will witness against him: there is no alternative. Your freedom of choice lies in the fact that you are permitted to decide for whom you will testify, or against whom you will testify; but you must testify: your words will testify for you, your works will testify for you, and the "show of your countenance" will testify for you, that is, they will all testify, whether it be for you or against you, and whether it be for him or against him.

Joshua said to Israel: "Choose you this day whom you will serve." It was not left for them to decide whether they would serve or not. "He that is not for me is against me," said the Master; hence, all must serve, either for him or against him. Hence, the freedom of choice with Israel was that they were permitted to decide whom they would serve. So it is with us in witnessing: we must witness, whether we wish to or not. We may refuse to witness, either for him or against him, with the mouth; but we cannot do that with our works nor with the show of our countenances: they will testify, will witness, and we cannot prevent it; and their testimony will stand, too, and proclaim to the world whether we are for him or against him.

"Are you shedding light for Jesus? Are you witnessing for him?"

SERVICE NOTES

SERIES FOUR

November eleventh will be one of the greatest days of history, for this was the day when the great world war came to an end by the signing of the armistice between the belligerents engaged in the titanic struggle which for over four years had filled the world with woe and ruin.

The Teutonic or central allies acknowledged defeat and accepted the terms offered by Marshal Foch which were similar to those offered to Bulgaria and Turkey except they were even more severe. To all intents and purposes it was unconditional surrender." However the terms of the armistice be regarded, it is beyond all dispute that the collapse of the German powers, together with Austria, is even more complete than would appear upon the surface of the military situation. Not only was Germany stripped of her allies, because they were beaten and incapable of further resistance, but they were made aware of Germany's incapacity to save herself and could not offer any help to them.

Besides the humiliation of the great armies which had set forth under such favorable conditions to win the world for Germany, and now are straggling back to their homes bereft of everything which could make them an "army" in the military sense; the navy so long cooped up, by the vigilance of the allied navies, that the money and energy represented in the equipment and men, were for all the period of the war practically useless, has been turned over to the victors. In this hour of defeat it is not chivalrous to remind ourselves of the foes' humiliation, but we cannot forget that no army ever went forth with greater preparation, with more elaborate and surprisingly efficient machinery. They had the advantage of knowing the time, the point of vantage, and the prearrangements of attacks; while their unsuspecting victims were left in complete ignorance and nearly without any means of defense. It is not too much to say that Britain's magnificently manned navy saved the day in those first years of grave anxiety. We regret to say that all the foe has to remember their naval power by are the tragic acts of piracy, murder, and cruelties such as besmirch the record of no other nation. To-day it is clearly evident that there is another power on the universe than that of brute force; that moral principle not only is a real factor in the affairs of men, but is superior to all the arts and machineries of "flesh." We agree with Nietzsche:

"It cannot be helped: the sentiment of surrender, of sacrifice for one's neighbor, and all self-renunciation, morality, must be mercilessly called to account, and brought to judgment; just as the æsthetics of 'disinterested contemplation,' under which the emasculation of art nowadays seeks insidiously enough to create itself a good conscience."

But what is the verdict? In the vanquishing of the truculent armies and navies of the most unsentimental, un-altruistic powers the world has ever looked upon, in the shattering of the colossal empire which sought to make itself the world's political power and utilize every agency which, in the growing Christianizing of humanity, had been discarded as inhuman and dishonorable, and even agreed to by themselves, those powers and empires are lying prone and smashed to pieces, bearing tragic witness to the emphasis of the verdict which has been rendered.

"Self-surrender," "self-sacrifice," "self-renunciation," "morality," and "disinterested contemplation" have made a triumph which forevermore vindicates the Christian's hope in God.

The philosopher's snarling criticism of the English because of their "morality," "general utility," and "happiness of the greatest number" ideas, the ingredients in their national philosophic code, which Nietzsche describes as "tartuffery" and "cant," seems very incongruous to-day. His sarcastic denial of the philosophic spirit and temper to the English people and his pillorizing of some whose names have been held in high esteem, Bacon, Hobbes, Hume, Carlyle, and Locke, for what he calls: "English mechanical stultification of the world," must be very galling to those who have made this apostle of gloom their "seer and revelator." And may we not ask, with much justification, of the Christianity which he alleges to be the great need of the "gloomy, sensual, headstrong, and brutal Englishmen," characterized by "taint of spleen, alcoholic excess, coarse mannerliness, and rustic demureness," is not after all efficacious in its redeeming power? And finally, the "sentiment" which underlies Christianity which this critic asserts is "pantomimed by prayer and psalm-singing, and the herd of drunkards and rakes who learn moral grunting under the influence of the Methodists and the Salvation Army as a sort of dementis following the penitential fit," vindicated in the victory which has followed England and her allies who have persisted in dying to save the oppressed, sheltering the outcasts and victims of the fiery devastation which swept across the civilized world, and still would succor the very enemies who, with mad fury, would sink passenger and hospital ships, bomb the hospitals and helpless cities, by feeding, clothing, and even shriving them?

The Englishman may not have "even the desire for rhythm nor dance in the movement of his soul and body, not even for music." And the men's "speech as well as the woman's walk all may be indescribably offensive," but after all there has been the vital quality in these men and women and those who were with them which defied the worst which Teutonic "kultur" could devise, and now is still valiant enough and sentimental enough and—thank God—Christian enough to listen to the leading advisers of the allied powers when still smarting under the unspeakable cruelties, bowed down with a grief that will live through the ages, bearing burdens of "body, mind, and estate," which as "the sins of the world" they are "bearing away," complete victory and has put such a foe at their mercy. They respond to the advice that the peace which is sought must not be a "revengeful peace," not a peace which will be vindictive, not a peace which will follow the lead of the German peace when she had France prostrate and at her mercy, but a peace which will be passed upon "stern justice."

Well, the storm-clouds have broken and once again the blue sky and the golden sunshine are speaking of better days and brighter times. We shall think of the dark days of the past four years as an awful trial in which together, Belgian, French, Italian, Serbian, and British, with American, went down into the "dark valley of the shadows" and even into the "gates of hell" to save for the future that which the past had given to us of the present as the priceless treasure in which immortal worth alone has been found. Differences in geography, caste, sentiment, training, and ideals have been submerged, and in the dreadful holocaust of war we have been fused into a brotherhood which we pray may be a nucleus around which all the nations of the earth may yet gather and so realize the hope of the Christian church, when the family of God upon earth will join with the family of God which is in heaven. And with the cessation of hostilities, and the passing of those who were responsible therefore, there passes the thought and ideals of which the war and all its impedimenta were but the incarnation, and the thoughts and ideals of the victors are now in the ascendancy.

While it is true that the war involved grave responsibilities which put to the test all engaged therein, and we have cause for profound thanksgiving that it is now over and for us victory has brightened the gloom, yet the peace which looms up before us brings even greater and vastly more important responsibilities. The problems of peace are many and serious, and around the table there will be gathered the wisest and noblest statesmen of the world whose duty it will be to lay down such principles and devise such processes as will not only make for the removal of the wreckage and debris of the war, the apportionment of the proper liabilities and punishments to those who may be adjudged guilty, and attempt to so develop legislation and agreements which will make such an event as that which is now closed an impossibility in the future. But, over and above all of these features there will be the need of reconstruction—the reconstruction of life. What this means can be seen by a brief consideration of the meaning of the word peace.

"To be perfectly joined together" is the philosophic meaning of this word. Practically, it means to be in a state of voluntary harmony with that which is the prevailing sentiment or power of the universe. If it is true that "righteousness as the basis of power," is the principle which the allies have fought for and foundation of their triumph, then it is not enough to secure acknowledgements, indemnities, and pledges from the vanquished, but the victors owe it to their erstwhile enemies to demonstrate the desirability of their principles and so bring them into harmony morally and spiritually as well as mechanically, with those principles. The Christian ethic is still ours to obey. "Love your enemies." This love of our enemies means that we shall so treat and educate them that all which has been incompatible with our view and ideals of life shall be voluntarily expunged from the life of our foes, and instead there will be cultivated a love of that which is lovable; and admiration for that which is admirable. It is the duty and privilege of the allied nations to make those who once were our enemies, our friends and that can only be secured by the cultivation of a mutual regard for and obedience to the highest good, which is described in the old but ever impressive dictum of heaven: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

In the language of Dante, "In his will is our peace."

Our church boys who have been in ranks of those who have served the country in the hour of direst need, will come back to the church with a better and clearer vision of the world's great needs. We shall be glad to welcome them into the ranks of the army of God and share with them the splendid work of achieving this ideal so briefly and faintly outlined. We hail them with acclaim as the world's heroes, but this must not make us deaf to the urgent call for still higher and nobler service.

What the future holds for us we cannot say with definiteness, but we do know that doors or opportunity are going to be swung wide open and avenue hitherto prohibited to us are going to offer their invitations. The biggest and most important epoch of all time is just before us and we must be preparing to accept the invitations and improve the opportunities. As a church we are subject to "the law of the survival of the fittest," and the great test to which we must be subjected is upon us. Origins will not obscure the destinies. Our past will not save us if we weaken or fail in the hour of the present call.

May God bless all who shall labor for the up-building of the world and the preparing of the way for new conditions; may it please him to utilize all the heroism, sacrifice, and loving effort of all peoples in the passionate work of building up the "highway of the Lord;" and may we see the fulfillment of the many promises which shall culminate in the manifestation of the kingdom of God.

Since our last writing we have gathered a number of names representing further contributions to the roll of honor which we herewith append. I received news of one young man, Ralph Rogers, who died in a hospital in Paris, France, September 30, 1918, who in one of his letters written February 5 of this year said:

"Camp life is hard and temptations are many, but I am trying to do what God would have me to do, and that is about all that one can do. It is a great privilege to be engaged in a work like the latter-day work, while so many seem to be wandering in the dark and care nothing about the life to come, where we will be free from trials and strifes of this life."

This boy had the vision and lived up to it, so that in the hour of his passing the light of that new world illumined his soul and he is enjoying that "life which to him has now come."

I had a beautiful letter from Brother A. J. Keck, the father of Merrill Keck who died a few days ago. He says:

"The day we celebrated the signing of the armistice it seemed to me that I would go mad with joy. It was not all selfish joy, but I rejoiced with and for all the world. But overflowing all my sorrow was a wonderful joy that my son had sacrificed his natural pacificity, his horror of bloodshed, his preference for spiritual pursuits, and had gone joyously to do his part. He had given his all quickly, we had given all we could, and thank God it was not in vain. I bought a flag like the one that lay upon his casket. Every morning I put it up and every evening I take it down with tender touch and feelings of love and reverence. Then I think of others in this land, and the multiplied thousands overseas—so touching their national emblem and all our hearts together, saying, 'Praise God it was not in vain.'

"So we are brought nearer to humanity and nearer to God."

Words of this kind must bring the blush of shame to those who have tried to escape their responsibility or selfishly withhold their part in the great conflict. May God bless the many mourners and sufferers through the world and give them comfort and grace as their need may be.

We salute the memory of those whose names are written in honor and starred with gold.

A BULLETIN SERMON

ON THE TEMPORAL LAW

[The following was typed by Brother R. W. Farrell, on ordinary white sheets, and with ends pasted together, making it one continuous sheet, it was hung in a prominent place in his meeting quarters and labeled, "Read the Bulletin Sermon." While it begins with a notice of the Onset reunion, one soon finds it treats on a more extensive subject.—EDITORS.]

The reunion of 1918 ought to be the most serious and profitable and spiritual of any eastern reunion. The times cry out to us. Let all who can arrange, go. Let those who remain at home, work for the church. If those who attend reunion do not come back with a better understanding of God, with more spiritual power, they have missed a great opportunity and wasted sacred moments. There will be three Sundays of reunion.

Persons who have autos should see to it that they go to reunion with every seat filled. These autos should work for God and humanity. The wear and tear and gasoline and oil bills should be paid by those who reap the benefits of the machines. The law says: "Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14.) Which means that that which belongs to my brother is not mine; it is his, and I have no right to take it without giving in return the equivalent (in value).

That which he does not need, is not his; it belongs to God who desires to distribute it to those who do need. My brother is entitled to his "just wants and needs"; I have no right to take them from him; and on the other hand, he has no right to hoard that which is needed by another to supply "wants and needs" that are just.

My brother needs a home—it is a just need. He needs food in sufficient amount and proper quality and variety to keep his body and mind and spirit in a state of health. By "food" is meant the matter which goes into the body, the brain, the spirit. What my brother needs, so far as food is concerned, I need, every brother needs—there is no exception; food is a need in common.

A home is a need in common. Therefore I should not take my brother's food or home or clothes or spiritual opportunity or mental opportunity. To do so would be robbing my brother of his needs. On the other hand, he should not take these things from me, lest he be a "robber."

In the household of God (which is the church) there is cooperation. All are "workers together with God." And the object of this work is to bring about equality among the members of the common family which meet around the common table and worship the common God. In the Father's house (which is his church) there is no idler, for every member is working "at his trade" according as God has called him. The distinction between "temporal" and "spiritual" things is only for convenience—with God there is no distinction, for all things are spiritual. Hear the statement of God: "Verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal." (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.) Hence, the brother in the mill, in the laundry, in the bakery, in the iron foundry, in the store, in the school, in the field, in the pulpit, in the Sunday school, in the other marts of life's work, is working with God, provided he is a steward. If he is not a steward he is not entitled to the promises made to the steward—if he is half-hearted he will receive like reward; if he is full-hearted he will receive full reward.

The sermon is often heard only to be forgotten—but the words on a bulletin board are before the eyes of the reader as often as he desires to look. "He that runs may read."

Again: The question is asked, "What will become of me if I give up my property?" Answer, "You would not be under the promise of God if you gave up your property. No wise steward would give up his property. God does not require it. He asks you to make over what you do not need." Could anything be more fair than this? Will we accuse God of unfairness?

Does he want to make one man poor in order to make another man rich? No. But he does intend to take his own from the man who is hoarding and give to the man who has not—provided that man is faithful in his stewardship. Is not this fair?

What is meant by the word "hoard"? In a gospel sense it means to keep back more than is necessary for our just wants and needs.

What are our just "wants and needs"? I cannot answer for you, neither can you answer for me. It takes several factors to enter into the solution of this problem, which is easy if we really desire to see it solved.

What does the law state? Read:

The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance to other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and in- struction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and pure in heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

The lesson of life is easy to learn—it is we who make it hard and complicated. The "yoke" of Christ is easy; his "burden" is light. Our life is often hard to bear because we do not live it with him. Do not misunderstand God.

Do you ask, "How am I to pay my tithes?"

Have you been in the church so long and do not know what the law of tithing is?

Is not this "odd"? Why not ask the Bishop of the church?

On the day of Pentecost, three thousand souls cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answered: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) And on that day there were added to the church three thousand souls. But these souls were simply added to the church—they would not "go on unto perfection"; they would not "grow in grace" if they did not pay their tithes, for tithing is a law, a commandment (Malachi 3), and we cannot live properly unless we keep every word (Luke 4: 4). It is a spiritual law.

It is a wonderful thing to play the game fair!—and with God.

We have been baptized—so have the Baptists been dipped into water.

We have been confirmed—so have the Episcopalians had hands laid on.

We have prayed, spoken in meeting, read the Bible. So have other men and women who belong to other churches. So had the Pharisees done all these things. But our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the Scribe and Pharisee. We must go on till we have attained the righteousness of Enoch, of Melchisedec, of Nephi. We must go on. Therein is the difference in the true and the false Christian—one goes on and on to the sunlit hills, the other stands chilled at the water's side, a reed shaken in the wind, spiritless, dying, because he will not "live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." (Matthew 4: 4.)

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me. . . . But who may abide the day of his coming? . . . Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." (Malachi 3.)

He that "climbeth up some other way," into the sheepfold, "is a thief and a robber." And he will be cast out. For he has not kept the law which entitles him to a wedding garment. Who shall abide the day? "He that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.)

We do or we do not believe the word of God.

Four Little Studies in Character Building

2. UPWARD TENDENCY

The tendency of character forming is upward, if we take humanity as a mass. To stop this march is as impossible as to stop the ocean tides by moral suasion. Paul speaks of having Christ formed within us. Who, having him for an ideal, and working to emulate his character, can doubt the ultimate outcome? We never rise higher than the object we adore, or the goal we strive towards; this fact justifies us in selecting an object transcendently high and noble. Such an object we find in the Christ, and with him "within," truly our path of development leads upward towards the perfect Light of which he was the greatest human expression.

He who never forgets a friend, and always forgives a foe, is making no mistake. The soul grows and expands by services of love to those that hate you. "Overcome evil with good," pleads our brother Paul, and following this counsel, we find a real test of character. Revenge is the desire of the untamed animal nature within us. It deadens all that is good and ennobling, and excites that which is carnal and selfish. In doing "good to them that hate" us, we develop strength, and rise master of those impulses which drag us down to the level of beasts. Doing good because it is right, regardless of what has been done to us, is an approach to our ideal, and such acts become demonstrations to the unbelieving world that the Christ, whom we hold up to them as an example worthy of emulation, is working in and through us—a living reality, a power unto salvation, a Master Builder indeed.

Character is not made in a day or a month. It is a slower process than that. It is more like a continuously deepening channel, which eventually touches all the shores of human activity, leaving upon them the impress of divine love and vitality. Great rivers were at one time and place, but little streamlets, the first wee impressions made by tiny drops of rain. Gradually deepening and widening, they became the great arteries of commerce, bearing upon their bosoms the lives of nations. So character begins with little thoughts and impulses, tiny streams of love and sympathy, kindness and good will. Gathering strength as it flows, watered by many deeds of charity and helpfulness, it deepens and broadens into a powerful river of good influence, bearing a nourishing service and blessing through many lands and unto many people.

Touching the life of another, one strong character inspires to noble deeds and uplifting thought, which, in its turn, develops from the small streamlet to the mighty current, and thus the whole world receives the impulse to do good, the tendency to which none of us can escape.

Character is not a gift, nor altogether the result of parental influence. It, like other human acquirements, may be obtained by thought, study, meditation, and persistent practice. Ruskin says, "Talent is developed in solitude—character in the stream of life." Sousa, the famous band master, well said: "If I stop my practice for one day, I will notice it for two days; my friends will notice it for three days, and the public will notice it indefinitely." So it is with the development of character. Its practice must be continuous if we desire a well-rounded result in the short time allotted us. We cannot afford to stop doing right for one single day; the penalty is too costly. It is constant resistance and struggle, never relaxed, which counts. The railroad companies reject the great oaks that grow so stately in the valleys, for the wood will not stand the heavy strain to which it is subjected in holding up the heavy trains. Instead, they take those trees which have developed upon the mountain tops, where, during years of tempest and storm, they have grown sturdy and tough through resistance to the elements.

So it is with our characters. They are made strong and useful by living upon the mountain tops, enduring the storms and tempests of life, each one triumphantly met and conquered making us stronger and more adequate for the next. We are likened to a "city set upon a hill," whose light (intelligence, character) cannot be hid. On the heights, too, we can more fully sense our nearness to our Creator, and our dependence upon him. Thus we are able to understand that all things, even the storms and the tempests, work together for our good. Paul puts it: Afflictions worketh experience; experience, patience; and patience, hope that maketh not ashamed.

So step by step, by means of the great experimental machine of life, we rear our character building, ever upward in beauty and worth, and always towards that joyous time when sin will be no more, and we be permitted to mingle with the pure and the good—truly our "beautiful Zion, built above."

Success for Sale

These questions are put, by an unknown author, to every seeker for success:

You want success. Are you willing to pay the price for it?

How much discouragement can you stand?

How much bruising can you take?

How long can you hang on in the face of obstacles?

Have you the grit to try to do what others have failed to do?

Have you the nerve to attempt things that the average man would never dream of tackling?

Have you the persistence to keep on trying after repeated failures?

Can you cut out luxuries? Can you do without things that others consider necessities?

Can you go up against scepticism, ridicule, friendly advice to quit, without flinching?

Can you keep your mind steadily on the single object you are pursuing, resisting all temptations to divide your attention?

Are you strong on the finish as well as quick at the start?

Success is sold in the open market. You can buy it—I can buy it—any man can buy it who is willing to pay the price for it.—Hello.

Training Little Children

KINDERGARTEN METHODS AT HOME

Kindergarten training is often begun at home unconsciously by both mother and child. It has its beginnings in the answers to the first questions familiar to every mother, such as, "Mother, what color is this?" "How many are there?" "Which is my right hand?" "Which is heavier?"

If mother will take a little time to play with her children, as Froebel urges, the first question about color can be made the nucleus of a little game. Let the child find something of the same color as that which first interests him, then something in each of the six standard colors; count the articles found; classify them as smooth or rough, heavy or light, and so on.

In the same way the three type forms of solids—the sphere, cube, and cylinder—can be shown the child, and articles around the house classified as cubical like the cube or block, round like the sphere or ball, or cylindrical like a barrel. The size of objects should also be noted.

Color, form, and number can easily be made into games if mother has time to play with her children.

When mother is busy with the pressing routine of housework, perhaps a box of cranberries and a long thread in a coarse needle would entertain a dear little meddler, and give mother a free hour to work. Cranberries may be scarce, but buttons flourish in every home; also inch pieces of macaroni which can be combined with circles or squares of colored paper cut out of bright advertising pages.

When baking is under way, and little hands have to be kept from interfering, a piece of colored string one yard long with the ends tied together, will afford much delight. Wet the string and make as perfect a circle of it as possible on a flat surface. By pushing a point in the circle to the center, we change what looked like a full moon into a crescent; pushing in three places makes a clover leaf. The variations are endless. And the child can learn with an occasional suggestion from mother, to make many familiar symmetrical outlines in this way.

Perhaps it is bread that is being baked. What possibilities in a small lump of dough! It can be made into a loaf just like mother's, or rolled into tiny biscuits.

Toothpicks have many possibilities as play material. With them pictures can be made in outline of houses, fences, furniture, boats, or stars, and it is material that can be used over and over again.

Chains of paper are made by slipping one short strip within another and pasting the ends. Colored strips may be alternated with the white strips that have been saved from rolls of narrow ribbon.

Coloring with crayons, cutting out pictures, and pasting are all kindergarten activities that can be carried on at home.

A blank book in which pictures of furniture have been pasted for each room of a house gives delight that I have seen last all summer. How eagerly the advertising pages in magazines are searched for the kitchen cabinet, bathtub, parlor suite, crib, or bed! How carefully the selected pictures are cut and pasted on the proper page!

With a hatbox as the frame for a doll house, and cardboard partitions making four rooms, a child's interest and attention may be occupied perhaps for several months. The house can be furnished as to occupants and rugs from the magazines while curtains can be made for the windows from paper lace used in candy boxes. The furniture can be made from folded paper or built with small blocks or dominoes.

These suggestions only touch the rim of activities that kindergarten training opens up to the little child. What the mother may do at home will be helpful, but what the kindergarten does every day for three hours, will be far more so. In kindergarten the child is a member of a social group and learns the valuable lesson of consideration of others and the spirit of team work.

May I say to mothers who are not within reach of a public kindergarten, that your best course is to agitate and cooperate to have one if it is a possible thing. If that cannot be done and some kindergarten materials can be purchased, a catalogue from Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Massachusetts, or E. Steiger and Company, 49 Murray Street, New York, will be helpful in selecting the list of materials desired.

However, the spirit is more important than the material. "Come, let us live with our children," says Froebel, and, "Come and play with us," say the children themselves.

Look back in memory to your own childhood. What are your dearest recollections of your mother? Her unceasing care for your food, clothes, teeth, eyes, health? Or is it not rather that happy day you took your lunch, mother, and the rest, and went for an unexpected picnic? Did the shopping trips, the church-going, the calling, the occasional matinee, leave the deepest impress, or the quiet hour when mother was alone with you and read or told you stories?

Dear mothers, cumbered, like Martha, with many cares, can you not see that the practical and necessary services which you render your child minister to the physical, which passes, but the hours of play and mental effort which you share and encourage and the ideals you set up for emulation, these are the meat of the spirit of your child, which nourish the very essence of his life, developing in him that intangible something we call personality, and forming his contribution to the race.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

The Old Log Church

WHEN YOU AND I WERE BOYS

Our church was thought a blessed place,
Where every Saint, with smiling face,
Would meet to sing, and talk, and pray;
In that log church, from day to day.

That church was small, the fire bright;
The snow outside was pure and white;
Their lamps were clean, and burning bright,
And oft they prayed till late at night.

The old elm tree its branches waved:
The bubbling spring its waters gave,
To quench the thirst of youth and sage,
As each Saint read the sacred page.

The place was rustic and most new;
The seats were plain, not varnish pews;
The truth they taught was old and new,
And each Saint tried the right to do.

That olive tree did thrive and grow
Until with life it was aglow;
And much good fruit did form and grow,
To feed the sons of men below.

Its life it spread from shore to shore—
That holy life that dies no more!
From north to south, from east to west,
It spread that truth which is the best.

Though tossed on billows' foaming breast;
And long from home they loved the best;

Though scorched by suns, and wet with dews,
They loyally taught these sacred truths.

They did not faint, they did not die,
They kept that standard still on high,
When ice against their vessel crushed,
In God they had a living trust.

The years have passed since we were boys,
The tree is gone, the spring is dry;
The old church burned, a new one's here;
Some Saints are gone, yet some are near.

Those gladsome days will soon return—
That sacred truth within us burn;
The fount is stirred, the life will come,
And we with Christ shall all be one.

I mean when Christ in glory reigns;
And no one in the cold remains;
When each dear Saint shall rest at home,
And never from its bowers roam.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

The Master's Spirit

When our burdens bear us down, and wild billows o'er us roll;
When the flame of life burns low at the altar of the soul;
'Tis then kind words of hope will make these burdens less a strife;
'Tis then kind words will still the waves that quench the fires of life.

When the heart with anguish aches, and the bitter cup runs o'er;
When the vision's overshadowed, and the soul is sick and sore;
'Tis then great hearts can comfort, and make sweet this bitter cup;
'Tis then the light shines through the mists to heal and raise us up.

When hope and prospect vanish in the darkness of our night;
When beyond depression's sphere we can see no gleam of light;
'Tis then that earnest faith and hope can make our course less drear;
'Tis then depressions flee away, and light becomes more clear.

Each life has its Gethsemane, stern trials that each must bear;
Each life can make another strong, when burdened down with care;
'Tis every little kindness strewn along each passing day;
That makes a heart beat stronger, and drives the clouds away.

Thus the suffering soul that's felt the kindness of another;
Has felt that deep affection of brother unto brother;
This is the test of tenderness, the badge of sympathy;
"As to others you have done it, you've done it unto Me."

GEORGE REEVES.

Can you be high-minded and happy in the meaner drudger-ies of life?

The most enviable of all titles is the character of an honest man.—Abraham Lincoln.

A Song of Praise

Lord, hear our song to-day—
Pæans to thee we raise
For sending peace.
Jesus our King shall be,
To reign from sea to sea.
To thee all praise shall be,
For blessed peace.

For those across the sea,
Still suffering poverty,
For them we pray.
Keep them beneath thy care.
Help them their burdens bear.
Build up their countries bare—
Lord, hear our cry.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Providence Branch Items

There seems to be a spirit of unity prevailing among us. At our fall business meeting we made one change in the branch services. The evening service was resumed to take the place of the afternoon mission service which was held at four o'clock and was for the fall months only.

We think we have an excellent Sunday school. It is a real church department, and to be anything less would be to fail in fulfilling its mission for the branch. Brother Charles Brown has the work at heart and is assisted by a corps of willing officers and teachers. We think that the secrets of a good Sunday school are: first, a spiritual branch; second, a spiritual leader of the school; third, which naturally follows the first, a willing people. How could a school be a success if it lacked any one of the three?

A word should be said concerning the lively interest manifested by the branch in awakening to the call of the financial law. Not that it has arrived at perfection, but that it is on the way to the goal. Our ideal is that every member shall be rated one hundred per cent loyal to this great spiritual law of the church. There are two great experiences that come to the Saint, one is the privilege to partake of the Lord's supper, the other is the honor of having the Bishop write us that we have discharged our financial obligation to the church. To carry the analysis to a final query, it may be asked: Are we worthy to partake of the sacrament if we have not kept the financial law? Think it over.

The membership of the branch has been divided into five groups with an assistant presiding elder over each group. In each group is a deacon, a teacher, and a priest. The move has advantages, provided the pastor takes the leading oversight. The work of the deacons has been somewhat enlarged in that each has charge of the branch covering a period of one month, and other deacons assist as occasion requires. Our collection box has given way to the better system of financing the branch, that of figuring a budget, receiving pledges from every member, collecting weekly in dated and addressed envelopes. This system if worked will put dollars in the treasury where now cents are found.

Our prayer meetings are good but not so spiritual as they were last year. The whole world has been unsettled this year. We hardly realize that the war has closed. As it is we are not going to be caught crying "peace" when there is no peace. Peace has been taken from the earth and is found only in the hearts of those who serve Christ.

The outdoor preaching has closed for the season. What the harvest will be time alone can tell. Pride seems to stand as an impregnable barrier between the souls of men and the gospel of salvation. It is awful in its destructiveness when once in the church. The second chapter of Alma furnishes us with reading that is both sorrowful and astonishing. It does not seem possible that in one short year people could be changed from humble followers of Christ to vain and pride-bound creatures. The Providence Branch is free from the curse of pride, in the main.

What shall we do this winter aside from the routine of branch work? Since taking charge of the branch the pastor has introduced nearly everything that offered advancement to the cause. Two summer schools were held, a boy scout troop started, club work introduced, socials in the church held, monthly concerts of a high order given, street, park, and noonday preaching held three seasons, a monthly paper printed, tract distribution on the wholesale order carried out, visiting of interested parties, special mission meetings in church and cottages, and many other efforts made. No doubt all of these movements were helpful in their place and time; some might have been given up too soon, others may have had no profit in them. Who can tell? A good attempt never was a failure, and the experience derived will be invaluable in days to come. One thing sure, the fundamental phases of branch work were not neglected and the persons who worked were the persons blessed spiritually. It is far better to miss the nail occasionally than never to attempt to drive it at all.

The Sunday school and Religio conventions were held in this place on the 16th and 17th, inst. The program features could have been better, but the interest aroused and the unity expressed were commendable and indicate an effort on the part of the workers to make good. When the time of election came, Providence was conspicuous. Brother E. F. Yerrington was chosen superintendent of the Sunday school, Brother Charles Brown assistant, Brother H. A. Chel-line president of the Religio. All of Providence.

The plague of influenza touched our branch lightly. Only a few members suffered though the disease was about them and death seemed everywhere.

The pastor received his second Thanksgiving surprise. On last year the Sunday school loaded a large clothes basket filled with fruits and, as a surprise, presented it to the president of the branch. This year an offering was received from the members of the school, in which the pastor gave his bit of nine cents. The total amount was over twenty-one dollars. This amount as a token of love and a thanksgiving to the Lord was given to the pastor's family. Providence can keep a secret, work a perfect surprise, and act its part generously.

BRANCH CORRESPONDENT.

The Lamoni Stake Bishopric

[Though local in purpose, this letter should appeal to all.—EDITORS.]

In the tremendous excitement incident to the conclusion of a world-wide war, we sincerely hope that the peculiar significance of this unparalleled event, to the true follower of the Christ, will not be lost. Events of the past few years have unmistakably authenticated the angel message. Prophetic utterances of the servants of the Lord, centuries ago, are being so literally fulfilled that argument is no longer needed to prove their truthfulness.

Long since the Saints have been told that "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, until he revealeth the secret unto his servants the prophets."

We have believed this and our faith has not proved barren.

Who of us can truthfully say that we have not been warned and forewarned of what is now at our very door?

How fitting it is that Joseph's land—the land of promise—should fulfill its destiny. Unto this land the God of Jacob gave the angelic message—the restoration of the message of salvation—as well as noble, inspired men who gave us political and religious freedom.

True to its trust the land "choice above all other lands" has sent its "swift messengers" to the wide world proclaiming the tidings of peace to mankind, and to-day, as never before, we can say with the poet, Proctor, "Earth's crammed with heaven and every common bush is afire with God."

What a wonderful blessing to be living in such an age—to take our part in aiding the Master to consummate his work. But what does it mean to us, we who are supposed to be walking with God!

We unhesitatingly announce that this stake has responsibilities to meet—responsibilities which it never has had before.

The Lord has plead with us, exhorted us, and commanded us to do his bidding. Shall we do it?

No work in the wide universe is so important to us as that of doing our duty toward our God. The necessity of an early and strenuous preparation for the properly placing in their homes of many who will want to come to Zion is too apparent to be misunderstood. The need of funds for this as well as for the proclamation of the gospel in foreign lands presses itself upon us.

While we have given cheerfully, we hope, to aid in the great emancipation of the human family politically, can we not as cheerfully—yes, more so—do our part as a coworker with God?

Yours for the establishment of Zion,

LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC.

Prayers Asked for Strength for Greater Service

I am much more indebted to the church than I desire to be, that is, I would prefer to put the church under obligation to a greater extent than I have, but do not know what I can possibly contribute or offer as an offering, of myself or aught I have at the present time, that would greatly change the account from the debtor to the creditor side. My ambition long has been to help mankind, and use, to the best advantage, the time and small talent given me; and the greatest disappointments have been the limitations put upon performance, whether within or without myself.

This question of salvation, as given to each one to work out and which each individual must sometime face and somewhere accomplish for himself, if at all, resolves itself into a matter of mental attitude. So much depends upon ourselves. "As for God his way [his part] is perfect." (Psalm 18:30.) No tears or prayers can change it, or his attitude toward us. The gospel will save no one, only as the mental attitude is adjusted to it; but "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." Whenever the adjustment is made, the law of life will prove itself effective unto salvation.

Why do we wait for God to come to our terms, or to us? He says, "Come unto me." Where does it begin, but in our process of thought? Where does it end, but in our process of thought? Why do we not work upon and reason with ourselves unremittingly, unceasingly, to bring and keep ourselves in alignment with the forces of righteousness that always were, and always will be?

Then our appeal must continually be to ourselves, after all, but the expression of desire will help the individual. The drawing out of our souls toward God brings us into nearness with him, especially if this is with and for each other. "The fervent, effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

The effort of mind and heart, whether vocalized or not, makes the blessing, the communion with those we desire to reach, possible.

The church, by a solicitous attitude towards the spiritually, physically, or temporally needy, may set in operation the forces that a defective attitude of the body would hinder. God is not without his limitations in doing good, as put upon him by the agency of man. Unbelief hindered Jesus in his own country and among his own people. An angelic messenger, perhaps the Son of God himself, was hindered for three weeks from delivering the message he had at the beginning of Daniel's supplication, but could not, immediately, being withstood by the prince of Persia, whoever that might have been. (Daniel 10: 12, 13.)

Man can hinder and man can help his fellow man, at least, but not if an entirely distorted mental attitude or spiritually unsound condition of mind refuses to help. The individual must save himself from all the limitations of a defective mental attitude towards principles, towards men or things, and must allow the celestial law its perfect sway over mind and body, over the entirety of life. This calls for considerable mental effort on the part of every individual. It is do or die; sink or swim; survive or perish. But we are not independent of each other, with the fullest effort.

I am not independent as to the spiritual part, or to the operation of the gospel in its diverse gifts through and to many members; and that I may more perfectly realize my desire and have greater power in performance, to the benefit of mankind, I solicit, at this time of giving, not gifts of gold or silver or those purchasable by such, but if there be a will to give, through the gift of faith, that physical help which would make possible spiritual giving to a greater extent than now, or a more extensive use of time and talent than now seems possible. I would appreciate the prayers of the church, believing that they will avail, and will reach more and farther than my own unaided desires and prayers. I am not desirous of increasing my indebtedness to the church by this asking, but as it seems to be the only resource, I have adjusted my mental attitude with reference to it, if by any and every means known, I may place myself in reach of that which is needed in my case, being willing to meet others' needs more fully and completely. With and of myself it is not possible. To those that believe, nothing is impossible. We have been told that the time is here, when "according to men's faith it shall be done unto them."

I ought to apologize for the length of this quite personal letter. I dislike to tax your columns so much. I cannot say so often. I hope in the end it may not prove amiss. The church's gain is what I seek, if through my own present benefit.

Yours sincerely,

M. F. GOWELL.

Spanish Class in Philadelphia

This coming Friday, December 5, 7.30 p. m., I get a class for the study of Spanish organized. I have secured the services of a very competent instructor and teacher—reared in Chile, and Spanish and American by blood; taught several years in Porto Rico; a middle-aged lady. The charge is twenty-five cents a lesson for each pupil. A number of young Saints and several outside friends will take it up. If we ever carry the gospel to the peoples south of the United States, who are a Spanish speaking people, this class may help carry the gospel there.

Toronto News

We have now held three meetings in the Allen Theater. The results thus far exceed expectations. We had about eight hundred the first Sunday night; two hundred more the second, and a still further increase the third night. This, despite gross misrepresentations and malicious opposition. Certain vicious influences at work here have resorted to the most reprehensible methods to poison the public mind. The enemy, knowing full well the inevitable sequence, is frenzied.

We are not disturbed. We are going ahead in constructive service. God is on our side. He will vindicate his work. The Saints are united. They are consecrated. They are untiring in service and patriotic in purpose. They are confident and happy.

The people attending our theater meetings are orderly. The attention is excellent. During pauses in the lectures one can almost hear the people breathe. The questions are of a high order showing thought and research. Our first two lectures, "After the war, what?" and "Problems of peace" laid the foundation for our winter's work. Last Sunday night the subject was, "Up-to-date religion"; next Sunday, "Who is my neighbor?" Christmas week, I will speak on the subject, "Humanity of Jesus," and for the last night of the year, "Time and eternity."

Our annual business meeting held last night resulted in few changes in the official personnel. The reports show a healthy growth. One significant change over former years, financial reports covering the different funds of the branch were presented. Every penny received from all sources was accounted for.

I have called upon most of the editors of the various city newspapers and am satisfied they will understand our position in time. Some sensational articles, inspired by a party who knew better, have appeared charging us with polygamy and kindred evils. The Toronto Star last week contained an article which did us justice. One has satisfaction in knowing that he is in the right and that he is doing right.

This Christmastide finds my heart full to overflowing with gratitude to God for the wonderful things which he has done for all of us.

Sincerely your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Christmas Offering

We are constantly stimulated and greatly encouraged, from time to time, to receive such letters as the one which we publish below, and I trust that the experience of this sister, and the splendid results which she has accomplished, will prove as helpful to others as the sister to whom she refers encouraged her to put forth an effort which resulted in such a splendid showing.

We are rapidly approaching the end of the year, and I trust that those who have not yet done all that they might have done may awaken to the fact that there lies before them a golden opportunity to cooperate with others in an undertaking which will cause us all to rejoice when our task is finally accomplished. When we have closed our activities for the present year we should each and all begin at once to do our part for the year 1919. In dealing with human nature we find that with the beginning of every undertaking or proposition there is a splendid spirit of enthusiasm, but as time goes on here and there there are those who drop out, but it has not been so with the Christmas offering. It has gained momentum as we have traveled, and we are hopeful that the experience of last year, and the results of this year, will have so added to our strength and our knowledge of how to do things, that we shall set about the task for 1919 in a most energetic manner. And while we work do not forget to pray.

We thank God daily for the splendid support which the Saints have rendered this department of the Lord's work, and we earnestly petition him that he will still direct the energies of his people, and so touch their hearts that they shall be made to realize the importance of his work, and that while endeavoring to supply themselves with the necessities of life and the comforts thereof, that they will be liberal in their contributions to his work.

While a degree of pleasure comes from material blessings, yet those who have been blessed more abundantly with these things have realized that there is a satisfaction that comes from the receiving of spiritual blessings that far surpasses anything that we can enjoy along material lines. To such as have been blessed with material blessings, and who freely impart of them to the Lord's work, the Lord has promised a more abundant spiritual blessing. May this be our happy experience.

Yours in gospel bonds,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Dear Brother: I saw in the HERALD last year how a certain sister saved money for the Christmas offering fund, so I thought I would try the same this year. I have been able to save with my eggs $20, which I am sending enclosed in this letter for Christmas offering fund.

We are isolated, being about fifty miles from the nearest branch, Wray, Colorado, over the State line from us.

I trust that next year we will be able to make more so as to be able to send in considerable more if possible.

Brother May has been here with us during the year, and at present we have Brother Hale W. Smith. Brother Prettyman was here also during the year.

We are all well and happy in the work.

Yours in Christ,

MRS. F. W. SCOTT.

A New Branch

A short message from this part of the Lord's vineyard will inform your readers of the prosperity of the work. About thirteen months ago a Sunday school was started in the home of Brother and Sister W. H. Graham. They soon found that there were other members in the city, and with others moving in, the home became too small. They purchased a lot with a store building on it, and, with their own labor and money, soon had a comfortable place in which to worship.

The cost, including inside fixtures and furniture, was about $750, which represents the work of five families, which is a good lesson of what can be accomplished by a few when they work in unity. They had leaders but no bosses. Among their number was a priest, W. A. Connell, who took the lead in spiritual matters and was their shepherd.

El Reno is about twenty-five miles from Oklahoma City, and connected by an interurban railway which makes it convenient for the brethren of Oklahoma City to give them assistance. During the year Brethren R. M. Maloney, F. W. Kueffer, and Ed Dillon (there may have been others not known to the writer) have been filling appointments. In July the president of the district made them a visit.

Some of the friends of the Saints, who occasionally attended the services, were members of the nonprogressive part of the Christian Church. They became anxious for a debate, and arrangements were finally made for one to be held between Brother J. F. Curtis and Reverend A. W. Young. The usual church propositions were discussed for eight nights. The first half was held in October. It being necessary to quit on account of the epidemic, it was resumed on November 20. The latter sessions were not so well attended as the former ones because of the unfavorable weather and the after-effects of the "flu."

The results were as usual; the Saints were strengthened, encouraged, and satisfied with the results. Two were investigators and regular attendants at the church services. The debate put them "over the top," and on Monday, November 25, James W. Millner and wife were baptized by J. F. Curtis.

On Sunday, the 24th, the church was dedicated and a branch organized, and the following-named brethren were ordained to the offices named and selected to occupy as such in the branch: William A. Connell, elder; William H. Graham, priest; William A. Millner, teacher; and Herbert D. Zuber, deacon. Sister Mattie Millner is clerk of the branch. The branch starts on its career under very favorable conditions.

Christmas, 1918.

Dear Friend: With what full hearts we send to you our greetings on this occasion of cheer and good will! Tiny Tim's Christmas prayer is ours to-day: "A Merry Christmas to all and God bless us every one."

How vastly different is this Christmas from the four preceding ones! The war is over, thank God, and many hearts are lightened and many homes are glad. Once again the spirit of peace and good will is with us and not as a memory of a long, long ago, but very near and very real.

And while we rejoice in the peace with victory which has crowned the heroic work of the allied armies, we think with deep sympathy and reverent mien of the many thousands of brave men and women who have literally given themselves in order to make this Christmas a day of rejoicing for us. We pause in the midst of our festivities to think of them and the aching hearts, the empty places, which to-day chasten us and hallow our joy. They have not died in vain, as they did their heroic exploits in the dark days of struggle and retreat in the firm faith that their death would prepare the way for victory, we rejoice that now their faith, courage, and heroism stand justified, and forevermore they have been immortalized as world redeemers and humanity's saviors. With reverent silence we hail these immortal hosts in their march to triumph.

We are profoundly grateful for the readjustment of values which this war has resulted in, and while many have been fearful that religion was being seriously threatened and the church stood in danger of dethronement, we have seen the day in which a new creed, if we may call it such, has been given to us; born under these dreadful conditions, and yet so simple and strong that its appeal is to all.

Courage, cheerfulness, generosity, self-effacement.

The cardinal sins are the opposites of the above:

Cowardice, grouchingness, selfishness, boastfulness.

We face the future with cheerfulness in the light of this strong faith in these abiding qualities which have been sublimated in the holocaust of war. We have faith in you that having won the war, a new world and a new humanity which will be one of brotherliness, and in which men will see the kingdom of God, will be born.

On behalf of the church,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

[The following letter was received by the First Presidency from Brother Augustine Dwyer, dated November 27 and written from West Somerville, a part of Greater Boston]:

From the seclusion of the sheltered coast of Maine to the busy life of this great city, is a startling change. My long stay with the Saints in Maine was refreshing to the soul. The enforced suspension of my lecture work, brought about by the influenza epidemic, afforded me time to assimilate some of the mental food which I have stored away from years of travel, observation, and study.

I am thankful to be back in my home city—Boston. Its very atmosphere has an educational tone. Indeed, as I write you, I am in a setting of educational activities. North of me, and separated from me by a short walk, is Tufts College; to the east of me is the renowned seat of learning: Harvard University, and west of me is the wonderful Somerville Public Library, where I spend six hours of every day. Before me is the great capital with its historic buildings and hallowed memories. It quickens one's breath and gives one a thrill to be amid scenes, and in a place, where in the seventies history was made which to-day is transforming the world.

I am charmed with the company of Saints I have met in the Somerville Branch. Rarely have I met a more hospitable body of people. The more I visit their homes, the more I am impressed with the fact that in the education of our youth nothing is more powerful than environment. The young people of this branch have imbibed the culture of this great city, and show it in their conduct. It is so good to see our people, wherever they are, reaching out for educational advantages. Ignorance and illiteracy are the most costly things in our social life. The splendid way in which you are championing education is, indeed, a source of satisfaction to all who have the future interest of the church at heart. In later years, the rising generation of Saints will raise their voices in thanks for what you are doing to lift the church above reproach, and fit her for the great future which God has opened out to her.

I believe the sending of Brother Baldwin to this Somerville Branch was the divine leading. Quietly, without ostentation, he pursues his work and makes his power for good felt in every home he visits. One cannot know him many days without being impressed with his apostolic zeal, and his earnestness in the work. I am led to think that he does as much good by his prayers, in the pulpit, as he does by his preaching. His prayer phraseology is free from stereotyped expressions, and full of the unction of the Spirit.

One of the many encouraging signs among our people is the spirit of prayer. Both east and west, I have heard testimonies, at our sacramental services, extolling the power of prayer. To me it seems, in our church life prayer should be given as important a place as preaching. I am impressed with the words which Paul wrote, in his first epistle to Timothy: "Know the truth for every creature of God is . . . sanctified by the word of God and prayer." Through prayer God can supply all our needs. Through prayer he will magnify our littleness and make up for our deficiencies. Mind culture, character building, is one of the popular notions to-day. Psychology, which has from its rebirth in the early nineteenth century been recognized as a science, is becoming an art, and the Saints in many of our branches are ransacking its stores in the interest of mental and moral efficiency. All of this is commendable and deserves encouragement, yet we must not lose sight of the fact that whatever by art or man's device may be accomplished in the soul, God can do even more. When we have close communion with him, by the mighty power of prayer, he tunes all our faculties to concert pitch. This accounts for the many beautiful characters we find in the church. Ten minutes of silent communion with God every day invigorates the memory, reason, powers of concentration, and even our utterances, as no psychology and no art or device of man can ever do.

Sometimes in our branches when I see a great and blessed work done and then look at the little company of Saints that brought it about, I am impressed with the mighty power of the spirit of prayer. When I ask the Saints how they ever brought it about, the invariable answer is: "Prayer and work." As my mind is now on the thought I cannot help recalling that brave band of Saints in Oklahoma City who beset with obstacles, yet, by prayer, persevered and built a neat church in a most desirable part of that beautiful city. They worked, but they prayed while they worked, and the difficulties that stood in their way became for them doors to the heart of God, because they were true Saints and had the spirit of the gospel. I know of nothing that so encourages me, in my own work, as the blessed recollection which I cherish of the days spent with that prayerful company of Saints in the branch at Oklahoma City.

The more I study our Doctrine and Covenants the clearer it becomes to me that God has ordained that the working force of our church should be prayer in the Holy Spirit. The last promise the divine Founder of our church made to the first disciples before he gave himself to death, was a prayer promise. In the midst of his last discourse as they followed him to the garden of agony, he said: "In that day ye shall ask in my name. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name. Verily, verily I say unto you if ye shall ask the Father in my name he will give it you."

You will be pleased to hear that the lectures are meeting with great success in Somerville. The lecture upon church decorum had a transforming effect upon the branch. The order and reverence that now prevail at the services are truly commendable and are a cause of much rejoicing among the Saints of the branch. God blessed our effort.

We have many outsiders attending and some of them have begun to show a deep interest in our work. A few are already making inquiries. On Sunday evening the seating capacity of the church was taxed. Many had to stand. After the lecture a gentleman, evidently of an intelligence far above the average, approached me and said he was weary of man-made creeds and could find no soul food in the preaching of the sectarian churches. He told me that his wife was in the same frame of mind. He seemed deeply in earnest. He went on and asked me how he could know the truth of our gospel, how could he test its reliability? I answered him: "By experiment. Practice the teaching and it will vindicate itself as divine." I used the method of Christ in dealing with him. You remember what John tells us of the day a company of Jews came to Christ and asked the frivolous question, "How knoweth this man letters having never learned?" The question was not whether there was anything in his teachings worthy their attention, but the trivial inquiry as to how he came to his knowledge. Christ quickly turned their minds to a weightier matter as to whose the teaching was, saying, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." When they pressed the inquiry as to how they should know if his teaching was the truth he not only put practice before knowledge, but made it a means to knowledge. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." He plainly said that the first step toward knowing the gospel is a submissive will, and a readiness to test it by practicing it.

My intelligent inquirer then asked me with some wonder in his eyes, "Must I not know a doctrine before I can begin to practice it?" I answered, No. Theory does not precede practice, but practice precedes theory. Children do not study grammar first and then learn to talk. Men do not analyze soils first and then practice agriculture. I finally made it clear to him that the first step is willingness. There can be no doing without willingness to do. To me it seems quite clear that if the will is steadfastly fixed on the gospel, the understanding will of itself discover that it is true. I am leaving this honest searcher after truth in the hands of the Saints.

As I close this letter I am anticipating a visit to one of our wounded boys, who is just out of a base hospital. His condition is, indeed, a sad one. We are living in days when many hearts are benumbed by grief, and to many life is very crushing. Thank God we can hold up to all who weep. One who can meet their condition with the unspeakable comfort of his sustaining strength.

Fraternally yours,

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

[Excerpt from letter to the Presidency, written November 24, 1918, by Elder Philemon Pement, Ottawa, Canada]:

I wish to let you know how things are shaping themselves here. We are still stemming the tide of prejudice and opposition which has been running quite strongly ever since I have been in Ottawa. We are still holding meetings and Sunday school. To-day we had a return of some children whose parents (the father) wanted them to go to the Presbyterian church and they would not do it; they would come to ours or none, and last night I met some of the boys and the father, and talked to them; this morning the children came back.

I cannot see why this must be such a continual fight, unless it is that the Devil is using men and women as his agents to oppose the truth.

I am glad to tell you that, notwithstanding all the opposition which is manifested against the work here, six were baptized into the church on Sunday, the 10th, and I feel that more are coming in the future. There were four heads of families among them, and one young lady, and the eight-year-old son of one of the members. We had a splendid service and I rejoiced greatly. On occasions of that kind (and it seems that here the members come in groups, six and seven at a time) I feel the need of other assistance. But all I can do is to press on, and on, and on. May God help me.

[Excerpt from letter to the Presidency, written by Elder D. J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri, November 26, 1918]:

We have been endeavoring to arrange for two-day meetings in the branches in the stake, but on account of this influenza scourge we have not been able to carry out our program. We are endeavoring to make these meetings of an educational and reviving character, touching all phases of church work. It will undoubtedly be looked upon by some of the Saints as a departure from the old methods of two-day meetings, where two of the ministry occupied in preaching services on Saturday and Sunday. We have a working team composed of the stake presidency, superintendent of the Stake Sunday school association, president of the stake Religion society, and organizer of the Women's Auxiliary for the stake; with the stake chorister and other stake officials which we may secure from time to time. But those mentioned are the regular working force of the team. We held services last Saturday and Sunday at Lexington with gratifying results, going across country in cars. We had planned also to make Marshall on this Sunday, but received word that the quarantine was still on there. For next Saturday and Sunday we have arranged for services at Lees Summit and Grandview. These points are so connected by rock roads that the workers can occupy at different times at these two places. I believe that this plan will do considerable towards bringing about a coordination of work as the church is now endeavoring to do.

[Excerpt from a letter by M. A. McConley, Honolulu, November 20, 1918]:

Elder Miller and I temporarily traded places, as I wrote some time before coming here, that we planned on doing. I think the change was mutually enjoyed by us all. They report that during the five Sundays I was here the attendance has been much better than usual, and Brother Miller reports fine attendance and interest in Hilo.

The only hitch in our plans has been an attack of appendicitis on Sister McConley on her first arrival here. The doctor said an operation was necessary, but we thought to put our case before the Great Physician. After being in bed two weeks and finally, when we had set a certain day for submitting to an operation, upon the arrival of that day relief came. Our faith was sorely tried but now is confirmed more than ever by the experience. So now, I think Sister McConley is going to have a new lease on life after months of pain and suffering—so we will have much to be thankful for as we meet together again with our Hilo Branch on the 28th, for we are planning on returning to Hilo the coming Saturday.

There have been a few cases of influenza but no epidemic. It seems to be less severe in this climate. I trust it will soon cease among the people in the States. We received word but yesterday of the death of two of our former Sunday school boys (now young men), of the Denver Branch. I trust this, together with other happenings of our day, may cause the world generally to ponder the way of its path and move them to much needed repentance. And that within the church, as we see the fulfillment of prophecy, it may induce a closer walk with God.

My mind turns constantly toward the European field which seems to be saying as did Macedonia of old—"Come over into Macedonia and help us." And I hope that the church may be able to send a goodly number into that field soon. Maybe I am too ambitious, but I would like to see at least fifty men sent to that field from the next conference.

My prayer is that we may awaken as a church to the needs of the hour and not be found wanting in this great need for the bread of life which I feel exists in those lands.

Praying that the Lord may bless all according to their respective needs,

Sincerely,

M. A. McCONLEY.

[Excerpt from letter received from Elder Thomas Jones, Worcester, England, September 4, 1918]:

Brother Phillip Price of South Wales, who is a sanitary inspector six miles from here, is a man who claims to have taken seven elders home from a conference in Wales many years ago and gave them a dinner off a sheep's head, and had meat to spare. He was a man of great faith; and at a colliery explosion, at food time he dozed and had a vision in which an angel appeared and told him to leave the mines—the pit was afire. He told the vision to those present and escaped. There were others in the same district who would not listen and were lost, suffocated by the after-damp, or black damp. He spoke many times and called on the men to testify of the vision—on the streets of the Rhondda Valley. His wife, whom I knew, was asked why she did not go to the pit-head to see about her husband. Her reply was, "My Phillip will come home presently"; and she kept his food and bathing water warm in expectation. She was not disappointed.

[Excerpt from letter received by the Presidency from Bishop Roderick May, London, England, under date of November 17, 1918]:

Dear Brother: The past week-end has been an eventful one as you already know. I thank the Lord for his preserving care over us in these islands. Not a church member who was permitted to remain at home has suffered the slightest injury on either land or sea during the whole period of the war.

By request of several of our Canadian soldier boys, I went to Camp Witley last Sunday morning, about forty-five miles south of London. The news of the armistice reached the camp the night before which made the camp in an uproar Sunday morning. Finally, about two p. m., we got all the known church members together and retired to a grove, sat down on cushion seats of native heather, and held a meeting. There were seven in all. The meeting lasted about one and a half hours. I read the 15th chapter of John, commenting on parts of it with an exchange of views, then we held a prayer meeting, each one taking part. I opened and closed with prayer. They all expressed themselves as delighted with the results. Some of the boys were very anxious for this meeting to take place as they expected to be transferred to France the following Wednesday.

The boys were all from western Ontario, the most of them are children of men whom I knew at my first acquaintance with the church. They had been requested by their home folks to be sure and come and see us here in London, and some of them have been to our place. It did make my heart glad to know of their loyalty to the church and faithfulness to God. They have only been in this country since last mid-summer. The majority of them no doubt will yet be of service to the church. One among them, a Russian, who has only been in Canada since just before the war, is a clean, fine-looking young man and can talk English as properly as the others.

From my acquaintance among our soldier boys, as I see and learn them and compare them with many others, I believe our men will stand, as a whole, a higher test in goodness and morality than any others in the army.

Yours in gospel bonds,

RODERICK MAY.

WASHINGTON, OKLAHOMA, November 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have just read Brother K. H. Rogers' letter and it makes me want to write my testimony. While I was reading Brother F. M. Smith's address, "Will he find faith on the earth?" it seemed such a fine gospel sermon. I sat down that morning and took up my HERALD, and as I had read all the letters I turned back to the front. As I looked at the heading I thought of the dream I had had the night before. I thought I was with a friend in a strange building, and going from room to room, when we came to a hall. I looked at the person near me who I realized was an enemy, in a sense; then I looked up into the face of a large man who was passing, our eyes met, and he, looking at me in a sympathizing way, called my name and said, "You are in a darkened condition." And I said, "Yes, but I still try to stay with the church." When I awoke I knew that my dream was true. As I sat here with the paper in my hand, I felt to repent if I had done anything to cause the condition, and as I began to read the most peaceful spirit took possession of me and I could read with understanding. As I was reading along I thought, "Oh, if I could just attend such a good meeting as that must have been, and enjoy those Pentecostal showers that those people had at those prayer meetings." But no, I was isolated and hadn't heard a sermon in over a year. Reading is all that keeps us alive, and I craved a spiritual feast.

As I finished the sermon I started to rise from my chair. I was almost lifted from the floor and began to sing:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge hath fled."

And as I sang that song through, it seemed to fit the sermon. I saw Brother Smith and I saw the people to whom he preached, and it seemed I could see the words as they came from God to him and then to the people, and some of them drank it in as though it was what they wanted, and I was made to know that he was an instrument in God's hands.

When I had finished the song I felt I wanted to be alone to pray. So I went aside and prayed, and it seemed I was talking face to face with the Lord and I knew he was close by. I felt I could touch him if I would try. As I arose from prayer I thought how I would love to enjoy such a Spirit at our family altar, and I wished for the Spirit to stay with me and it did for some time. I felt so happy. The Lord had removed everything that was dark and I felt to rejoice in the knowledge that the Lord had accepted me, as weak as I am, as his child.

This, dear reader, is something that seems so grand, to have testimonies of God's work. I would be glad to know every Latter Day Saint had read that sermon and then sung that song. I feel that they would receive a blessing.

I want to ask the Saints to pray that God will direct me in trying to teach my three little girls the gospel, and help me to have patience and be able to endure to the end. We will be glad to have an elder come any time to hold meetings with the Saints, if not to the unbelievers, for they really need the counsel.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

This work is in two small volumes, and covers church history from the childhood of Joseph the Martyr down to the present. It does not fill the place of the four volume History of the Church, but is primarily intended for the young of the church who wish the church's history in a lighter form, and in less detail.

Volume 1 of Young People's History has been before the church for two years and has found place in the home libraries of many of the Saints. It has given many a young man and woman considerable knowledge of the rise of the church in the last days.

Volume 2 has just come from the bindery of the Herald Publishing House, and covers the period of reorganization, and from then to the present. It is even superior to its predecessor, both in text and in mechanical execution.

ILLUSTRATIONS

From the frontispiece to the last illustration in Volume 2, there are upward of thirty-five good illustrations, some of them occupying a full page, among them being a reproduction of one of the best photographs of President Joseph Smith. The illustrations alone are worth many times the price of the volume.

CHAPTER SUBJECTS

There are fifty-three short chapters of the history, treating such subjects as "Young Joseph Takes His Place"; "The First Press and the Zion Movement"; "The First Long Revelation"; "The Church in the Islands of the Sea"; "The Gospel Boat"; "The Work in Wales"; "The Jubilee Meeting, 1910"; and more than forty-five other equally important and attractive subjects.

All of these are in such form as to be entertaining, attractive, instructive reading. Your children will read them and will be telling you church history if you will give them access to these two volumes.

THE PRICE IS $1 PER VOLUME

BISHOP'S AGENT

Portland District, Oregon: Owing to the condition of Brother C. E. Jones, who has been acting as the Bishop's agent of the Portland District, it has been thought wise to arrange for Brother L. B. Shippy to act as permanent agent of the district, relieving Brother Jones from all responsibility in connection with this work. Scattered Saints throughout the district, together with the solicitors in the branches, may mail their remittances direct to Brother L. B. Shippy, care of The Northwestern Steel Company, Portland, Oregon. Brother Shippy comes to us well recommended, and is a man with considerable experience in office work, and I feel confident that he will prove a valuable helper in the interests of the department of the Bishopric in the Portland District.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Florida District conference will convene with Santa Rosa Branch, near Catawba, Florida, Saturday, January 11, 10 a. m. We hope to have reports from all branches and all members of the priesthood. We expect T. C. Kelley to be in attendance, and we look forward to a good conference. E. N. McCall, district secretary.

Conference of the Southern Missouri District is indefinitely postponed on account of the epidemic.

Our Departed Ones

HATTERY.—Solomon, son of James and Mary Hattery, born at Canton, Ohio, June 30, 1849. Died November 12, 1918, aged 69 years, 4 months, and 10 days. He is survived by 5 children and 16 grandchildren. Funeral services near DeLoit, Iowa, November 13, 1918, in charge of D. R. Chambers, assisted by Carl Winey.

MILLER.—Thelma E. Miller, born at Kansas City, Missouri, January 2, 1918; died December 8, 1918, of pneumonia. Interment at Mound Grove Cemetery. Funeral services at C. D. Carson's undertaking rooms, conducted by J. C. Foss.

SHAFFER.—Tillie Shaffer was born November 20, 1885, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; baptized October 26, 1913, at Scranton, Pennsylvania, by T. U. Thomas. Died October 9, 1918. She was a consistent Saint, living a pure, devoted life, and passed peacefully to her rest, leaving a husband, two little boys, and a sister to mourn.

MOORE.—Platt Moore was born April 11, 1829, in Smith County, Virginia. Settled in Crawford County in 1874. In 1877 he was married to Mary Laughery, who with two sons and one daughter is left to mourn. He died November 11, 1918. Funeral services at his home in Deloit, Iowa, November 13, in charge of D. R. Chambers, assisted by Carl Winey.

ELLIS.—Ivor Henry, son of Elder Henry and Rosina Ellis, of Llansamlet, Glamorganshire, Wales; born at Lydney, Gloucestershire, England, June 11, 1896; baptized August 30, 1907, by his father. This young brother went to France joyfully, full of hope and comforting words to his parents, five sisters, four brothers, and the young lady to whom he was engaged. He was killed in action, November 1, 1918, having been gone less than a month.

KENDALL.—Jane Harrington was born in Burlin, Connecticut, February 13, 1834. Married Andrew J. Bird, July 7, 1853. To this union 6 children were born, of whom 4 survive her. Widowed June 3, 1871. Married George Matison Kendall, February 23, 1879; widowed March 30, 1891. Baptized September 3, 1899, by J. H. Houston, of Independence, Missouri. Departed this life at Barns, Kansas, November 16, 1918. Funeral sermon by Benjamin F. Jackson, assisted by Reverend Rookstool, pastor of the M. E. Church.

ANDERSON.—Elizabeth Pidd, born April 28, 1833, near Whoplade, Lincolnshire, England. Died in Lamoni, Iowa, December 10, 1918, leaving three daughters, one son, nine grandchildren, and twenty great-grandchildren to mourn. She and her sister (the late Sarah Pidd Smith, of Sandy, Utah) were baptized in England, and for the sake of their religion came to America about 1853, and crossed the plains. She was married to James X. Allen, February 11, 1854. They escaped from Utah about 1860 and came to live at Saint Joseph, Missouri, removing after the Civil War to Saint Louis, where she was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, March 3, 1868, by Elder Mark H. Forscutt. Later in life she married Bishop James Anderson, who also preceded her to the other side. For several years they lived in Kansas City, Kansas (Chelsea), but for the last fifteen years their home has been in Lamoni. She was a gentlewoman in the old country, and always preserved the best of that qualification. She has always been a faithful member of the church, active in Sunday school work, and her great regret of recent years has been her inability to attend church. Her life has been a very hard one, but she has been faithful.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Those not receiving personal replies to letters to the editors of the HERALD should know that on account of the illness from the current disease, both Brother Burgess and Brother Moore are unable to respond for a time. Even the stenographers are off duty on that account. The editorial rooms are closed.

Brother H. W. Savage writes from Auckland, New Zealand, that they are continuing there with good success, interesting many people in the true doctrines of Christ as presented and believed by this church. Many who have been entangled in the Utah system of faith, including polygamy, Adam-god worship, blood atonement, etc., are now getting a vision of the pure system and are on the verge of obedience.

An appeal is made for a Christmas effort for War Saving Stamps by the Government. We are urged to give war stamps instead of cash or other gifts.

The Red Cross drive for membership is on this week, December 16-23. There are at present 22,000,000 members and 3,854 chapters, but annual memberships expire this Christmas. There is much yet to be done abroad, and much to be done here, against epidemics and against tuberculosis. This latter has been a long fight of the Red Cross.

The Daily Herald of Gulfport and Biloxi, Mississippi, for December 5, makes special reference to Elder Pitt's work as follows:

"The lecture by Evangelist F. G. Pitt of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa, was very much enjoyed by a large attendance at the Presbyterian Church last night. It was in aid of the Armenian relief fund. Stereoptican views were presented and most interestingly and vividly explained by Mrs. Pitt, wife of the evangelist.

"Upon conclusion, a very gratifying collection was taken, there being generous response to Mr. Pitt's appeal, and this was followed by the benediction by him. The evangelist has a splendid voice, and the songs rendered by him were enjoyed very much by the audience which pronounced the entire program one of the most interesting, instructive, and enjoyable of the year."

DEATH OF SISTER ELLIS

By telegram to the First Presidency we are advised of the death of Sister Clyde Ellis at Papeete, on December 5. We are not advised as to the cause of death or details. Sister Ellis was the wife of Clyde F. Ellis, missionary to the South Sea Islands, and was doing a good work there. Her passing is a grave loss to the work.

President F. M. Smith returned to Independence from Canada, December 7, and left on the 9th for San Francisco. He will visit points in the Northwest, en route.

DEATH OF ALLEN BREAKIE

There have been several deaths from influenza in and near Lamoni recently. Among them was Brother Allen Breakie, who was elected president of the local Religio this fall. He was a young man of great promise for future service.

E D I T O R I A L

THE LORD'S BIRTHDAY

Once more the circle of the year brings that day on which we have long celebrated the birthday of our Lord. To many hearts it brings sorrow. To those who dwell in other lands, England, Australia, France, Germany, and our sister land of the north—Canada, this year means an additional toll to the years that have gone before, of loved ones who have laid down their lives on the battlefields of Europe.

To America this year means in an especial sense, the year of sacrifice, for it is this past year that America has suffered his loss. Many homes, indeed, will miss the familiar face when they gather around the festal board on this great anniversary.

Not even second to the loss on the battlefield, is that by epidemic, the scourge that has been and still is passing through our day. Some who will be sorely missed have passed away.

There are others who are not included in the above paragraphs to whom the year 1918 has proven a year of heavy sacrifice and loss. In this, our last issue for the year, it is not amiss that we should sum up something of what the year has been and especially what this day, the 25th of December, signifies to us. It has been a year of great losses and also the year of peace and of great promise.

The greetings of the season we send to our readers—a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year—that joy and peace may be yours throughout the coming year. It is true that much of the paraphernalia of Christmas Day possesses heathen roots, at least, apparently. But it is the opinion of the writer that if what this day means is traced through its seeming roots in antiquity, there will be found after all its real beginning in a true worship of God, founded upon primeval revelation and in a realization of what the coming of the Son of God would mean.

It does not seem to us amiss that it should be a time of great joy and even merry-making, when the heart is free. There should be joy over the giving and receiving of gifts, over the giving to those who are in need, over the giving of our Christmas offering, by which in a special sense we celebrate the day of his birth.

Nor is it amiss that it should be a festival. Where the heart has not been touched by sorrow it is a season of great joy, "And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." And then the mighty hosts of angels joined in with, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

This brings us to the deeper significance of the day. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." This last is shown both through our gifts and through the practical help we may render one another.

For after all of our joy, the holly, the mistletoe, the Christmas dinner and the gifts, there remains still this opportunity of worship—"Glory to God in the highest." The blessing of this little one on the eighth day brought the statement by Simeon of his coming sorrow. He came with a great purpose, with a work to be accomplished, and made himself the forecast of his death on the cross.

This great purpose is expressed by Paul. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Corinthians 15:22.)

Jesus, himself, declared it when he said:

I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10:10.) I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die. (John 7:25, 26.)

In the first, third, fifth, sixth, eighth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and fourteenth chapters, we find this theme of his great divine purpose written. And were it necessary to find it again, it is confirmed in John 3:16, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

So to those who mourn to-day, who look back on the year that is past with sorrow, who look back on other days when they celebrated the Lord's birthday and loved ones were with them, and they look again now, and, lo, they are alone, we would say, Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for even though in Adam all are subject to death, yet in Christ are all made alive. He came for this great purpose. For God so loved the world that he sent his Son that we and our loved ones might have everlasting life.

Hence, we are not alone, without hope. We are not as those who believe not, but as those who have the present, divine assurance of life. For he came that they and we may have life more abundantly. So the day on which we celebrate his coming should be one of joy and of deep peace for this divine assurance.

He was not one untouched by a feeling of our infirmities, but tempted and tried like us in all things. Yet he was without sin and with a wonderful love and sympathy reaching from everlasting to everlasting, and yet able to reach to all. When he was about to be offered up, he spoke of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter that he may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth."

Yet even with that, he does not cease his wonderful promises but adds,

I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.—John 14:18-21.

Read on in this wonderful chapter or better still read all of the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th chapters of the gospel according to Saint John and note how often, he, the Holy Ghost, is called the Comforter.

Then turn and read Ephesians 3:14-21.

For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

Note that "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." It is all one family, we and they, the whole family of God. That is, by the love of God which is in our hearts, we may be able to comprehend the breadth, length, depth, and height of the love of Christ. Then by this present knowledge we may finally be filled with all the fullness of God.

How wonderful does this seem! A comfort, a stay, a blessing, and abounding life runs through the message of the divine Master, our Elder Brother, the Lord Jesus Christ.

To-day is the day on which we celebrate his coming into the world. Before he came, the world was in sorrow and in darkness. Some, it is true, looked forward to his coming with hope. But the world was coming to the despondency of death, when he brought anew the message of light and of love and of eternal life.

It would seem that to-day above all others, should those who sorrow, rejoice that Jesus has come, and that he lives eternally in the heavens. It may be a festival of barbaric splendor. To us, it is a season of spiritual joy and thanksgiving to our Lord. He has sent us another Comforter, yet he himself will come to us. He leaves us not comfortless.

It is the tidings of great joy which is to all people, "For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2:11.)

GRACELAND AND PREPARATION

Recently we were much surprised to note the relatively large number of our young people who have received collegiate training at Graceland, or who have been encouraged to go on and take advanced work.

Doctor Thwing, of Western Reserve College states that about one in seven hundred graduate from college; that is, one out of seven hundred of the population. This certainly would represent a considerable school mortality even after the high school, though it is with regret we note that only two and one-half per cent ever graduate from high school, but drop off or quit high school at an earlier period.

We venture to suggest that the per cent would be larger than this for the church, and many indeed through the preparatory department of Graceland College have been brought into this class of high school graduates. We were counting the number of whom we knew who have received their college work entirely aside of Graceland, and are surprised to note how relatively few they are. It is true that many have received collegiate work elsewhere, and this is right. We do not want the narrowing influence of having all receive all of their work at one institution. But Graceland has given a splendid impetus to our preparation as a people.

We find it rather difficult to count more than twenty college men and women who are members of the church, and who have received none of their school work at Graceland College. Of those who have received their work at Graceland College, there are some who would have gone on to college and secured the same degree whether Graceland were established or not; but this is true of relatively only a small proportion of the number. It is twenty years since the first graduating class of Graceland College, in 1898; that means that the class of last May was the twenty-first to be presented.

As to enrollment for the past ten years we note that the total for the last five years is nearly three times that for the first five years, in the collegiate department.

Graceland has certainly been a tremendous influence in our midst to secure better education, or in other words, better preparation for service.

PROPER DECORUM

The recent epidemic, still with us at this writing, has emphasized the importance of coughing or sneezing only into one's own handkerchief.

But this is important, not only now, while this epidemic is with us, but at all times it is only proper decorum as well as sanitation to do so.

President Joseph Smith often urged the propriety of coughing only into one's handkerchief in a public gathering, if coughing is unavoidable.

Yet as recently as last conference, we noted a man coughing repeatedly and loudly without protection or restraint. Incidentally he interfered with the proper attention of others around him to the business before the house. But especially he was doing all he could to spread his sickness.

If anyone had suggested that he was a man who would bring a loaded automatic into such an assembly and fire it promiscuously, he would probably be insulted. Rotten eggs, are bad, or a throwing of rocks; but it may be doubted if the danger from any of these is as great as the habit of coughing and sneezing without covering nose and mouth.

If you doubt the danger, cough into your handkerchief a few times, then note the effect. Even then you will not perceive the bacteria and particles you are throwing at others so freely.

We have met with men and women who in their own homes cough and sneeze freely, and will even refuse a handkerchief as a measure of protection to others. Yet physicians declare the danger greater than from a Gatling gun.

We are altogether too prone to neglect our own colds and to pass them on to our loved ones.

In a public gathering there is the question of decorum, of the noise disturbing the meeting. But more serious within a public gathering and at home is the danger of spreading disease.

S. A. B.

This is the last day of what was once the new, but now is the old year. And in the much talked of change from the old to new, in the year, thoughts of a like change in myself and life cannot help being suggested. And this is well. It is well that I should be reminded of Time's swift flight, that I may prepare for Life's end; and I am taught by Time, to make a new beginning; and that the idea of throwing off the old and worn, and taking upon myself new qualities and desires, be deep sunken in my mind. I am therefore convinced of the benefit of letting pass away with the old year, all the wrong propensities that I can sever; and am also convinced of the good that will arise by pursuing with new life and resolution, the pathway to knowledge and happiness. Then is the watchword—onward!—Samuel R. Burgess, December 31, 1869.

The National Child's Labor Committee announces that the fourth Sunday in January will be Child's Labor Sunday, Saturday will be celebrated in the cities and Monday in the schools. Its purpose is to conserve child power by preventing child labor, recognizing that in the end it means man power and woman power and health for the race. It is an opportunity not only to consider the evils of child labor, but also it means the care of the children in the reconstruction period now before us. They request that this day be generally observed in the churches throughout the country.

What a strong, glorious, happy creature God intended man to be. All the gifts of God are double. His spiritual good fulfills itself in natural good, and natural good finds its origin and crown in spiritual good. The word of God becomes flesh, and flesh becomes the word of God. God is wholeness, and he requires everything and every creature to be whole. His inward things must put on outward things, and outward things must not be empty things.—John Pulsford.

ZION

In the time of Enoch, Zion was the name which God gave to his people.

The fear of the Lord was upon all nations, so great was the glory of the Lord which was upon his people. And the Lord blessed the land, and they were blessed upon the mountains, and upon the high places, and did flourish. And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2.

Enoch built a city that was called the city of holiness, even Zion. This city was taken up into heaven, God's dwelling place.

In Jerusalem Zion was the name of the hill on which the temple and the royal palace stood; the abode of the Hebrew aristocracy. David in song and prophecy seemed to sense the full significance of Zion, when he wrote:

Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord; sweareth not falsely to hurt any man, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.—Psalm 15, Inspired Translation.

Zion, to the Jews, was the king's home, the royal palace, and the adjacent territory. To live there meant special favors at the king's court, and to be numbered with the nobility. Such favors were not bestowed upon the poor or uncultured. Zion in its broader sense is now being cherished by them. They have organized companies that are contributing funds to colonize their own people in Palestine, thus practicing one phase of Zion as foretold by David. A number of attempts have been made to put into practice the principles of Zion, and utilize them in the temporal activities of men, but not understanding the application of the laws that should govern, failure has followed in the wake of all such movements.

An attempt to establish Zion in the light of modern revelation, did not receive the full approval of the Lord.

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

"Transgression," "have not learned to be obedient," "are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom," are some of the errors mentioned by the Lord for their failure. The Lord says: "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom." He gives us to understand that he knows how Zion can be built and maintained. There is but one plan:

Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands; and this cannot be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3.

"Be prepared," "my people taught more perfectly," "have experience," "and know their duty," "and the things which I require at their hands," are some of the things which the Lord admonishes will assure the establishment of Zion. These quotations show that the greater portion of the Saints had a very meager idea of Zion's conditions. So the Lord gave special instruction that they should be taught.

The Lord had already provided for this instruction of the ministry in a previous revelation.

Behold, this is the tithing and the sacrifice which I, the Lord, require at their hands, that there may be an house built unto me for the salvation of Zion; for a place of thanksgiving, for all saints, and for a place of instruction for all those who are called to the work of the ministry, in all their several callings and offices; that they may be perfected in the understanding, of their ministry, in theory, in principle, and in doctrine, in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on earth, the keys of which kingdom have been conferred upon you.

In this revelation the Lord makes plain what is necessary for the ministry to do that they may be prepared to teach the revelations and commandments of God, and to qualify for applying the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. May we not infer from these quotations that the Lord expects his people to become educated? Would it be considered heretical to believe that the Lord included homiletics? Would it not be pleasing unto the Lord for every individual who accepts the angel message to qualify for efficient service by obtaining the best education that our universities supply? These are questions which every Latter Day Saint must consider, and answer in harmony with the revelations God has given to the church.

The glory of God is intelligence.—Doctrine and Covenants 90:6.

And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 90:12.

The Lord designs that Zion shall reflect his glory, and be a light unto the world. Zion cannot do this if the intelligence of her children is not greater than that of the children of the world. So the Lord instructs his servants to obtain a knowledge of "history," "countries," and "laws of God and man," "for the salvation of Zion." Again the Master said, "What I say unto you I say unto all." (Mark 13:37.)

Then all are to obtain knowledge for the salvation of Zion, that her people may reflect the glory of God, "That the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ." (Doctrine and Covenants 102:9.)

JAMES B. BARRETT.

"LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF"

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.—1 John 4:20, 21.

How often we find individuals who make the above statement, "I love God," and yet every word they speak concerning their brother is but to criticize and find fault, and deep in their heart the only feeling they have toward their fellow man is hatred and contempt.

Contempt naturally implies a man's esteeming himself greater than the person whom he contemns.

In Romans 2:1 we read: "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things."

A man prone to see or suspect evil, is mostly looking to see in his neighbors what he sees in himself.

It is very easy for us to find fault with others, but how blind we appear that we see not our own shortcomings, and how loath we are to acknowledge and depart from the same when we are reminded of them.

But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.—Romans 14:10-12.

For it is written, "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God."—Romans 14:11.

So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

Emerson says: "Every thought which genius and piety throw into the world alters the world."

This must not be taken merely to mean printed thoughts, or thoughts spoken from pulpit or rostrum, or even thoughts given utterance at all.

Our most secret unuttered thoughts go forth and affect the world and the people all about us.

Do not flatter yourself that you are known only by what you say—that you are measured by what you choose to give people about yourself; you create in others the impressions you hold in your own mind.

"What you are speaks so loud, I cannot hear what you say."

How much harm we can do in a single day by casting a dark shadow across some bright life, depressing buoyancy, crushing hopes, strangling aspirations—more harm than we can undo in years.

We should be appalled if we could see pass before us in vivid panorama the wrecks of a lifetime, caused by cruel thoughts. A stab here, a thrust there, a cruel, malicious sarcasm, bitter irony, ungenerous thoughts, hatred, anger, revengeful thoughts, are going out constantly from many a mind on their deadly missions.

But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.—1 Thessalonians 4:9.

We find another passage which reads thus: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; and another, "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven." (Luke 6:37.)

With all our failings and faults does it not behoove each and every individual to live as closely to these commandments as possible?

Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.—Hebrews 4:16.

A morose, gloomy, crestfallen mortal flings out his pessimism wherever he goes and poisons the atmosphere around him, surcharging it with heaviness, depression, and sadness.

Success and happiness are not born in such an atmosphere. Hope cannot live in it. Joy flees from it. Laughter is suppressed. Sweet, joyous faces become cloudy. We feel that life would be unendurable if we had to remain in it indefinitely.

What a relief it is when such a person drags his depressing influence from us. Some people make us feel mean and contemptible in their presence. They call out of us meanness which we never knew we possessed, and make us almost despise ourselves. Some emit a sort of miasmatic atmosphere which poisons everything which comes within its reach. No matter how generous and magnanimous we felt before, when these characters come near us we shrivel and shrink within ourselves; and there is no responsiveness, no spontaneity possible until they go out of our presence. Like a disturbed clam we shut ourselves up as tightly as possible until we feel that we are out of danger. We feel ill at ease until they have departed, then a heavy weight is lifted from us, and we are ourselves again.

Others act as a tonic. They make us feel like new beings. By the inspiration of their presence they stimulate our thoughts, quicken our faculties, sharpen our intellect, open the floodgates of language and sentiment, and awake the poetic within us.

These diverse effects come from the radiation of personality, and we ourselves, "you and I," are producing such on others all the time. If you hold mean, contemptible thoughts, if you harbor revenge, jealousy, and envy, you reflect these thoughts to those about you. If you are selfish you cannot help radiating the selfish thought. Everyone about you will feel your meanness and will measure you accordingly.

Be sure that when you hold an evil thought something is wrong in your heart, in your mind.

Are you one of those who are always radiating success, health, and joy—uplifting, helpful thoughts?

These are the helpers of the world, the people who ease the jolts of life, soothe the wounded, and give solace to the discouraged.

When the world learns that love thoughts heal, that they carry balm to wounds; that thoughts of harmony, of beauty, and of truth always uplift, beautify, and ennoble; that the opposite carry death and destruction and blight everywhere, it will learn the truth secret of living.

In the 39th Psalm David said, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me."

Self-control is the preventative of anger.

Anger because some one has done work wrong does not help matters any. It does not undo the mistake, or make the erring one not less likely to repeat the error than would a careful, patient showing of what is wrong, and the proper method. Your own energy could be far more profitably spent than in a fit of anger.

The wise attitude is that taken by Mirabeau, who when speaking at Marseilles, was called "calumniator, liar, assassin, scoundrel." He said, "I wait, gentlemen, till these amenities be exhausted."

A most injurious and unpleasant way of looking for trouble is fault-finding and continual criticisms of other persons.

A splendid thought is that of Thomas á Kempis:

Endeavor to be always patient of the faults and imperfections of others; for thou hast many faults and imperfections of thine own that require forbearance. If thou art not able to make thyself that which thou wishest, how canst thou expect to mold another in conformity to thy will?

Don't go through life looking for trouble, for faults, for failures, for the crooked, the ugly, and deformed. Don't see the distorted man; see the man God made. Make up your mind in the very outset in life that you will not criticize others or find fault with their mistakes. But look to thyself—you who find fault and criticise your fellow men, be sure you are living in such a way that your deeds, thoughts, and actions will be above reproach.

Fault-finding, indulging in sarcasms, picking flaws in everybody, looking for things to condemn instead of to praise, is a very dangerous habit to oneself. It is like a deadly worm which gnaws at the heart of the rosebud, and will make your own life gnarled, distorted, and bitter.

AUTHORITY

After all has been said, it is a question of religious authority! And the century-old query: "By what authority doest thou these things?" What is gained by beating around the bush? We know that if the claim of the Catholic Church is correct, the claim of the Protestant churches is wrong. Ordination is for the purpose of conferring authority. A thinking person must ask, How can a church give something it does not have? If the Catholic Church had authority, Luther, Calvin, Henry VIII, and other founders of sectarian churches (for all came out of Catholicism, direct or indirect) took no right of administering the ordinances, for the mother church excommunicated heretics.

On the other hand, if the Catholic Church had no authority to impart or retain, then sectarianism must look elsewhere for the "call" to the priesthood. Where? It is not enough to say that no authority is necessary, for Paul said: "No man taketh this honor [priesthood] unto himself but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 1, 4.) Aaron was called fifteen hundred years before Paul's day, and the method was divine revelation through a prophet. (Read Exodus 28: 1.)

Jesus Christ brought the keys of the kingdom of heaven to the earth and bestowed them on his servants. (See Matthew 16: 19; 18: 1, 18; Luke 10: 17; Matthew 28: 19, 20; John 15: 16.) Under the light of God's authority these servants administered baptism, confirmation, and the Lord's supper. Things continued thus till members of the church went into sin, and God took the priesthood from the earth and the church went into the wilderness to remain 1,260 years. (Read carefully Revelation 12: 1-6; Isaiah 24: 5, 6; 2 Thessalonians 2: 3, 4; Revelation 19: 7-9; Daniel 2: 44; Joel 2: 28-32; 2 John 1: 9; Galatians 1: 8; Hebrews 6: 2.)

One needs no special authority from God to do deeds of mercy. The Salvation Army possesses no divine authority more than Jerry McAuley's mission workers, or lay exhorters; but when baptism is performed it must be done in the name of Christ, as the law states (Mark 16: 15-20).

Let us ask the questions, From what source does sectarianism receive authority to officiate in church ordinances? It hisses at present-day revelation (without which no man can be called to the priesthood). Likewise present-day prophets are shot to death. How does the Catholic Church hope that God's authority will be with it when its doctrine is out of harmony with the Bible? (Read Isaiah 24: 5, 6.)

Why not investigate the restored gospel!

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A WOMAN'S SPHERE

The idea that "a woman's sphere is her home" is true absolutely and unquestionably, and the verity of this idea is the foundation of the woman's right to expand her undertakings in the direction in which they now are widening. Of course, when we say "home," we may mean one thing or another. What is home? Where does "home" begin and where end? Does home, and the woman's duties in relation to it, end at the lot-line, at the door of the apartment? By no means.

Throughout all animate nature—especially that which approximates the human kind—the male is the provider and defender of the family; he kills; the mother and her young eat. The human sex relationship includes the primitive, but, it is marred and scarred by conventions devised by mankind. These rules have outgrown from the erratic development of civilization. Primal man was a hunter, a marauder against his kind—force was the only law. The woman was not equipped for battle and was unfitted by the functions of her sex and by the fact that her young required her best. But, now, even in the presence of this greatest of wars, we see that the relativities of the sexes have changed. Prosecution of the war is not on the battlefield alone. More and more it is of the workshop, the hospital. Back of it all is the economic requirement that, if it fail, brings defeat and disaster to the fiercest, the best-trained legions.

The fact is, that the real struggle of life now is for existence—food, shelter, clothing. Woman's primal domain has broadened immeasurably. Let us be more specific.

We have asked, What is "home"? There was a time when the home was a cave in the rocks, when the man dragged home the prey he had captured in the jungle, that the nursing mother and the children might feed. In these, our times, the male goes into the economic jungle and earns what he can and brings it to the support of those dependent upon him. At that point, his primary obligation ends and the woman's begins. Her jurisdiction includes the care of her young and of the food and shelter. It becomes her duty to see to the food, and to do that she has the right and obligation to know about prices and qualities—and, mark well, this gives to her sex, with its domestic obligations, the right to require and compel providing the right sort of food. Taken broadly, this means that the woman's household jurisdiction over food has so expanded—so that she should have at least equal part in creating all of the governmental agencies that regulate the price and conditions of food. And it is the same with other things—fuel, water, clothing, light, everything that enters into the making of the home a home, indeed.

Now more than ever before, the home is the product, the resultant from external conditions. Consider that in former times the mother was the educator, preceptor, the guardian of her children. Now the public school has come to supersede and relieve her. Compulsory school attendance controls, and this means teaching about all the mother taught—household work and arts, sanitation, and sometimes sex-hygiene.

Now then, these things having been taken away from the woman, she has a right to go into the highways and byways of public life, of politics, not only to see to it that they are well done, but in part to do them herself. The same is true of politics, health, and fire-service; they serve the home and are assistant to the woman in the home. And, moreover, no one can find the vanishing point where the interest of the woman of the home disappears in the matter of street and alley cleaning.—The American Journal of Clinical Medicine, September, 1918.

Smiling

When the weather suits you not,
Try smiling.
When your coffee isn't hot,
Try smiling.
When your neighbors don't do right,
When your relatives all fight,
Sure it's hard, but then you might
Try smiling.

Doesn't change the things, of course,
Just smiling.
But it cannot make them worse—
Just smiling.
And it seems to help your case,
Brightens up a gloomy place,
Then it sorts o' rests your face—
Just smiling.

Four Little Studies in Character Building

III. SILENT FORCES

The forces that make for beautiful character building, like all great forces, are silent ones. Such forces are the most powerful in the universe. The great tides of the ocean flow and ebb, but the forces which cause their motion are perfectly noiseless. So also are the forces that draw the water from the earth by evaporation. We see them not, we hear them not, and yet no hydraulic power known, with all its puffing and roaring, can approach its results. The wonders of electricity are not known and admired for noise or display, but their effects daze the brains of scientists and philosophers.

So with character. It makes no noise; does not need to advertise or proclaim itself, yet its effects upon the moral universe are far more powerful than all other forces combined. It is not heard, but felt; not seen, but sensed. It has been cradled in a manger, yet exercised more power for the uplift of humanity, than all the majestic kingdoms of the world. One man with a character patterned after that of Bethlehem's Child, has a greater influence, of an enduring nature, in the world than many armies arrayed in martial splendor. Pomp and blare of trumpets do not bespeak real power. It is oftener found in the quiet strength of the individual who has passed through the fiery trial of life, and, through his experiences there, has been given a vision of the real purposes of life, his unity with all creation, and the part of love he is to play while he is upon this stage of action.

MRS. JOSEPH SKELTON.

Training Little Children

Parents must not look down upon the child and consider his efforts, trials, and sorrows petty; we must try to understand how sincerely they put all their hearts into their play and that the losses that seem so trivial to us are of great moment to them. We must learn to share all their experiences with them if we would develop the fine feelings we wish them to have at maturity.

Children must not be shut off in one part of the house to remain aloof until a certain age, but ought to be a part of the family circle, sharing its joys, work, and minor sorrows. I do not mean that children should be pushed before visitors, have all their meals at the family table or remain up till their elders retire, but there are times and places when it is the children's right and privilege really to be members of the family.

Even when they are very young, children can assume responsibility for certain light tasks about the house, and, as their age and strength increase, more and more duties should be added. The great American idea has been to remove all responsibility from the child and to give him a care-free childhood. I would not take one second of joy away from any child, but I would make it a joy for him to feel that the home is his and that he, too, helps in the making of it by performing certain duties that need to be done for the comfort of all. The child of two can pick up toys, put away dishes and silver, help set the table, dust low furniture, and run many errands upstairs and down, and he loves to feel that he is "mother's helper."

"He brings his daddy's slippers,
He picks up baby's toys,
He shuts the door for grandma,
Without a bit of noise.

"On errands for his mother
He scampers up and down,
She vows she would not change him
For all the boys in town."

(Song for A Little Child's Day by Emilie Poulson and Eleanor Smith.)

Then the child can help prepare for the great festival days, birthdays, Thanksgiving, and Christmas, those joyous days which bring the family very close together; and we can let him share not only in the preparation, but in the joy of the day itself, and here very early he gains a presentiment of the love and spirit of service that make home, and an ideal of the home that he will some day found.

As we would let the child share the labor and the festivals, so we must permit him to share the great family secrets and home joys. Let him know that he must never divulge anything that concerns only the family and I know that a child properly trained will never tell his playmates what he is told is a family secret.

So we begin very early to train him to keep his word and the sanctity of the home. When he has been thus prepared he is ready to share with the mother and father that greatest family secret, the coming of the new baby, and this confidence will bind the little one closer than anything else to the very heart of the home.

Children are so open-hearted and ready and respond so sweetly and quickly to faith and trust that we often miss great happiness by not sharing our hopes and joys more freely with them.

If we keep the bond very close our home will become the great meeting place of all children and this love and companionship between parents and children will be like a powerful magnet whose attraction the children cannot resist.

So from these beginnings the home tie will be so strengthened that we need never fear that the allurements of the world can draw our children from us, but can rest assured that they will always return to the "center of deep repose."—Mrs. V. Oma Grace Oliver.

Freedom of Religious Belief

Editor Pontius writes to the Bee's Letter Box on a somewhat pertinent topic, and in it sets out much of sound sense. He agrees fully with Editor Metcalfe on the main point, their difference arising over a matter of detail. This is one of the peculiarities of any discussion that involves religion. Dissension rages over nonessentials. The one central fact of religion is the common belief of all mankind in a great Original Source, worshiped in every age, under many names and in many forms, never entirely defined, but endowed with the same attributes in every case. Omnipotent, omniscient, inscrutable, he is God, and has revealed himself through the ages in divers ways to his people.

The story of the race is one long recital of struggles for freedom of belief and persecution for conscience' sake. Each individual has his own idea of God; hazy and vague, but generally persisted in. This nebulous knowledge has the stronger hold on man because of its appeal to something back of the imagination, and beyond the grasp of thought. In every way it fulfills Saint Paul's definition of faith, "the substance of things not seen and the evidence of things hoped for." On this faith have risen many elaborate superstructures of dogma and creed, but all point the one way, and eventually merge into the one that leads to the gate called Straight.

Nebraska, among other blessings vouchsafed to its citizens, gives to each and all the right to worship according to whatever form meets the requirements of the individual concerned. And Editor Pontius may be assured the public discussion of religion will never cease.—Omaha Bee.

Hymns and Hymn Singing

At the first blush it may seem to some than an article on this subject is superfluous. We may think that because hymns and hymn singing are so commonly associated with the religious life of the people that therefore we know all about them; as we are supposed to know all about the other common things of life, such as the air we breathe and the water we drink. But we don't know all about them any more than the majority of us know all about the wonderful nature and constituency of these two universal elements, so absolutely essential to all life.

The origin of church hymns may be traced as far back as the history of the music of the Christian era. The statement is made in both Matthew's and Luke's versions of the gospel that immediately following the paschal supper in which Christ instituted the saving ordinance of the Eucharist, that the assembled company sang an hymn and went out unto the Mount of Olives. As to the character of this hymn we are not told; but it was probably in the style of the Hebrew chant of those days. But the development of music received some of its greatest impulses from the evolution of the art in the church. The ardent longings of the Christian faith for some fitting expression of spiritual fervor led to an early development of a form of music suited to the needs of devotion. Thus the growth of music designed for the church and its worship was had, which growth has continued to this day.

Probably the music form that more than all others led to the development of our modern hymn is the choral, which had its greatest incentive in the times of the Reformation. Men had turned from the idolatry of Rome and were seeking new methods and ideals; and the chaste, virile structure of the choral appealed to them. The choral is a cherished music form, composed of a strong, dignified melody set in chaste, correct harmony. In this regard it is not unlike many of our hymns of to-day. Our well-known hymns, "Uxbridge," "Norman," "Hanover," "Old Hundred," "Dundee," all found in our hymnal, are chorals pure and simple. By comparison of them with other hymns you will discern that many of the latter are influenced by the choral style; "near" chorals, in fact.

But an article devoted to the development of hymns would be an exhaustive one, far too much so for this number, and we purpose only to deal with the more practical aspect of our acquaintance with hymns and our use of them.

SELECTION OF HYMNS

The enjoyment of any service and the effect of any sermon may be greatly enhanced by the proper selection of appropriate hymns. Our hymnal, although comparatively small, has a good selection and variety, and appropriate hymns can be found therein for almost any occasion. Yet how often are our services made insipid and good sermons marred by inappropriate hymns. In the matter of rendering our services attractive our choristers should always bear in mind the part of the congregation, which is had in the singing of the hymns. Hymns that are not liked; hymns that depress instead of enthusing; hymns that make a congregation restless or irritated because of their manner of singing; hymns that dissipate the devotional spirit by their improper association; all these tend to harm a service that might otherwise be rendered very enjoyable.

As illustrating how a harmonious selection of hymns may enhance a service and adorn a sermon, the writer remembers an evening at the last General Conference. Just before the sermon the well-known hymn, "Am I a soldier of the cross," was sung. Then the sermon, treating of the Christian warfare, its required endurance and sacrifices, and the worth of trials and suffering in perfecting the true Christian character. It was an inspirational sermon; touching, yet encouraging. At its close the choir and congregation sang with feeling the tender, loving hymn, "Through the furnace, through the heat," and everyone went away with the lesson of the evening burning in his heart. But it is not always that our services are so fortunately arranged. Frequently an otherwise enjoyable service is marred, or made ludicrous, by the use of an incongruous musical number, or a spiritual sermon is spoiled by an ill-fitting hymn. A comic story is told of the country organist who played as the bridal party were approaching the hymeneal altar the music of a hymn, the words of which were, "Onward! let the warfare now engage thee." Later, at the christening of the first child of this marriage, this same organist is said to have played the well known gospel hymn, "Still there's more to follow." The incident is also told of the choir that sang at the conclusion of a long and tiresome sermon, "How tedious and tasteless the hours."

Our choristers should make special endeavor to select hymns that will be in harmony with the spirit of the service. In this they should work in harmony with the ministry who may officiate in the services, and the latter should endeavor to obtain their assistance. To illustrate, if the chorister knows that the service is to be along certain lines, or the sermon on a certain subject, he should select hymns that harmonize as far as possible. The one who preaches may have certain hymns that he prefers; that, in his estimation, fit in more perfectly with his subject, or theme, and he should be given the chorister's cooperation in having them sung. Choristers should ever bear in mind that much good may be done by the choice of fitting and appropriate hymns.

TEMPO OF HYMNS

The word tempo in music means rate of speed. It is in this respect that we are so frequently found lacking; we do not sing our hymns at the proper rate of speed. It is true we sometimes sing them too fast, but we more often err in singing them too slowly. Particularly is this true in those branches where the chorister does not insist upon a proper standard of tempo, and does not "practice" the congregation into singing according to his ideals. We have heard some branches sing some of the vigorous, stirring hymns of the church in such a style as to make us wonder if the hours of the night usually devoted to sleep would not pass and the call for the next morning's breakfast be sounded before the preacher get a chance at his sermon. Needless to say that the spirit of those services was effectually dampened by such methods. It is a self-evident truth that a service may be either energized or depressed by hymns that are sung in proper spirit or tempo, or are hopelessly dragged.

A proper indication of the tempo in which hymns should be sung may be found in the hymns themselves. For instance, "Hark! listen to the trumpeters," is a stirring, vigorous hymn, full of martial spirit, and should be sung with energy and enthusiasm, and in a brisk, spirited manner. As a contrast to it, "My times are in thy hand," a hymn expressive of tender confidence, which should be sung in a gentle, flowing style. Again, "Joy to the world, the Lord will come," voicing intense and joyous anticipation of the coming advent of the Savior, and which should be sung in the mood of jubilation, as compared with the prayerful hymn, "Father, when in love to thee." The majestic hymn, "The morning breaks, the shadows flee," should be sung with a stately grandeur that could not properly be used in singing that immortal prayer-hymn, "Abide with me."

The above will serve as an illustration of what we mean. The character of a hymn should always determine the tempo and the style in which it should be sung.

Choristers should guard against a too rapid tempo for hymns, for the congregation, finding it hard to "keep up," gets tired and quits. A congregation of untrained voices that is not drilled in the work of singing in the mass is always a little unwieldy and allowance should be made for its inertia. We remember an amusing incident where an enthusiastic chorister was leading in a spirited manner, the choir and congregation through one of the stirring songs in Zion's Praises, when, between verses, an elderly brother broke out in remonstrance at what he deemed the unduly impetuous tempo through which the piece was being forced. This led one of the wags of the congregation, who was doubtless thinking of automobile affairs, to inquire if it might not be advisable to establish a "speed limit" for choristers and singers.

But while our choristers are guarding against an excessive rate of speed they should be particularly watchful against the more prevalent mistake of singing our hymns too slowly, for this inevitably endangers the spiritual ardor and enthusiasm of both audience and speaker.

NUMBER OF VERSES SUNG

Very frequently, in the selection of hymns containing four or more stanzas, one or more of the stanzas are omitted. This is done so generally that we fear it is more of a habit than an expedient. Also, we fear that it indicates a tendency to mechanically sing our hymns without a proper regard for the sentiment expressed in them. God has said, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me." All our hymns are poetic effusions of praise and prayer, some of them highly inspirational. We should feel the sentiment expressed as we sing them. But how can we feel the sentiment of a hymn that we indifferently or mechanically sing, our principal object being to "get it over with." Too often the omitted stanzas are left out because we desire to shorten the time consumed in singing the hymn and we exercise but little discrimination as to what we leave out. It is better to sing the hymn entire as written, if possible, because the author has expressed himself in it and we should be chary about denying him his full expression. But if it is deemed necessary to omit a portion, let us be careful to select such stanzas for omission as will least affect the sentiment of the hymn itself, or rob it of some thought essential to it as a whole.

Let us strive to understand the importance of our hymns in our worship and endeavor to sing them so well that God's service will be done. We should strive to sing them so intelligently that we may reflect his glory in them. In this way we will be truly found singing "with the spirit and the understanding."

The Eternity of Music

Music was the first sound heard in the creation, when the morning stars sang together. It was the first sound heard at the birth of Christ, when the angels sang together above the plains of Bethlehem. It is the universal language that appeals to the universal heart of mankind. It greets our entrance into this world, and solemnizes our departure. Its thrill pervades all nature—in the hum of the tiniest insect, in the tops of the wind-smitten pines, in the solemn diapason of the ocean. And there must come a time when it will be the only suggestion left of our human nature and the creation, since it alone, of all things on earth, is known in heaven. The human soul and music are alone eternal.—George P. Upton. (Woman in Music.)

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Northeastern Illinois

Certainly Paul was correct when he said in 2 Timothy 3:1, "This I know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." We have only to note the conditions ripening so fast to see that he was directed by the Spirit of truth.

We had a few weeks respite from the "flu," but now it is returning worse than ever. But during the few weeks of liberty we tried to improve the time and were blessed in the effort. Brother Christy and I were busy in Chicago for three weeks previous to the district conference at Plano, December 7, 8, holding forth in each of the three branches of the city, with some degree of success. There was no great turnout from the outside, but the Saints who were able to attend were well pleased, so we feel that our efforts were not in vain.

The attendance at the Plano conference was all and more than we expected. The weather was fine and that made possible many coming who otherwise could not have attended. Everyone was disappointed that Brother Griffiths, of the Twelve, did not come, and especially Brother Eli Wildermuth who ordained Brother Griffiths, when a boy to the office of elder. Brother Wildermuth informs us that he and two others are the only remaining charter members of the Reorganization.

The district passed a resolution providing for a reunion in 1919, at Plano, to close the Sunday before Labor Day. Let every member in the district take notice and begin now to prepare for the reunion. The war is now over and we should now go to with a will, and have the largest reunion ever held in the district. This will be possible if everyone does his best. A committee of three, consisting of the district president, W. L. Christy, and C. B. Hartshorn, were elected by the body and given power to call others to assist as they may deem necessary. We are glad to note that the district this year was able to send in the most tithes and offerings of any year out of seven, beside meeting the demands of the district. We are thankful to see the Saints thus coming to the front, and meeting the demands of these trying times.

The Christmas offering is also moving forward wherever I have been and we hope for a better one than last year. I am certain that if our church would fully come out of the world, and cease trusting in the arm of flesh, and put our means where the Lord has directed, that there would be plenty for every department of church work. We are truly thankful to see the improvement that is everywhere to be seen, and long for the day when we will see still greater trust and confidence manifested in the provisions of the Lord in his kingdom here on earth.

Your servant and brother,
J. O. DUTTON.

Well, well, not as many as we hoped for, but still forty-nine stars for a starter this week is not so bad—but stop—there are something like five hundred Sunday schools in our organization—up to to-night there are only about one tenth reported—think it over—has your school reported?—are you “over the top”? Are you with us? How are we going to judge? We have some more interesting letters this week—read them.

Sacramento, California. Brother W. H. Dawson, superintendent, writes: “We have an enrollment of 60 and have $268. This is more than $4 per member. We have more pledges, others are helping, influenza hinders. We set a high mark, $500. We hope to go ‘over the top.’”

Thamesville, Ontario. Brother C. W. Badder, Christmas offering superintendent, reports for the Wabash Sunday school as follows: “Our membership is 63, and to date we have $126.60, but before the end of the year we expect to have much more to our credit.”

Marseilles, Illinois. Sister Ethel Williamson, superintendent, reports for the Mission Sunday school as follows: “Our school has gone ‘over the top.’ With a membership of 59, we have an offering of $129 and we have more coming in all the time.”

Tainui, Dunedin, New Zealand. Brother Alfred Lebherz, secretary, reports: “When I placed the matter of Christmas offering before our school and asked them to raise $2 per member, they thought I was aiming very high, but I told them we wanted that diploma, and would get it, so we went over the amount. Our school registers 23 names and we have £10 8s 4d [about $50]. One little chap only six years old gave the entire contents of his savings bank, and two little girls sold flowers for a fortnight after school, thus earning their offering.”

Stevenson, Ontario. Sister Addie Smart, secretary, writes: “We observed mothers’, fathers’, girls’, and boys’ days, and did very well. We have reached our $2 mark. Our members are very much scattered but trying to do their bit, trusting we will reach the $100,000 goal.”

Orion, Michigan. Sister Julia Hammanod, Christmas offering superintendent, reports: “We reached the $2 mark in September. We have 30 members and have an offering today of $169.91, over $5.50 per member, and we still have three Sundays ahead. We gave a supper last Friday evening and sold two quilts, one for $8.50, and the other for $6. Our young ladies made candy and sold, and with the free-will offering received for the supper, we netted $42.50. We hope to reach near the $200 mark by December 31.”

Indianapolis, Indiana. Sister Jessie B. Mast, secretary, reports: “Our Sunday school, with a membership of 29, should have reported in November, as we had over $2 per member—at the end of November our offering amounted to $141.22. We believe and pray that the offering of our school will reach $200.”

Blenheim, Ontario. John Larabee, superintendent, writes: “Believe we are entitled to be on the roll of honor, as we have more than $2 per member. Our enrollment is 17, and we hope to have a good offering to hand in at the close of the year.”

Weyburn, Saskatchewan. Brother James R. Dickson reported as follows to the Herald Office: “The Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Sunday school wish to have their name on the roll of honor for they have more than exceeded the $2 mark.”

Ocean Springs, Mississippi. Sister Susan Yocom reports: “We are five in number and have better than $5 per member now and hope to have more. I wish the best of success to all the Christmas offering workers.”

Rich Hill, Missouri. Sister Dollie Masterson reports: “I believe the Prior Creek Home Class is entitled to the diploma. We have 11 members. We have organized another home class at Caplinger Mills, another school or home class to win a diploma.”

Saint Clair, Michigan. Brother Herbert Lively, superintendent, reports: “We are ‘over the top’ with our offering, regardless of the fact that we were closed for four weeks—then Sunday school was permitted for two Sundays and we are now closed again. I will call on every Sunday school scholar possible and do all I can for the offering in this way. We have 46 members and have now $114, and hope to raise considerable more.”

Bald Knob, Missouri. Sister W. F. Martin reports: “We set our mark for $100, but have already gone ‘over the top,’ as we have now $138.50 with only 35 members. We are still working and hope to have more.”

Santa Ana, California. Sister Emma Burton writes: “The Santa Ana Sunday school has gone ‘over the top.’ We have to date $289.34, and hope to have over $3 per member. Hope the schools will reach the $100,000.”

Bentley, Michigan. Sister Ethel A. Yarrington writes: "We have gone 'over the top' with our Christmas offering and are very anxious to have the Glover Integrity Sunday school listed. We surely are glad for the interest the offering movement has aroused. It not only helps the church but helps us all to bring up our children under the spirit of sacrifice, and surely there is no sacrifice, too great for the gospel."

Kittitas, Washington. Sister Bertha Meinecke writes: "I am not near a branch, so am sending my offering directly to you, and inclosed is my check for $51. Last spring I decided I would give what I made during vacation this summer to the Christmas offering. I also saved all the pennies I could during the year. I trust that I may be a means in God's hands of accomplishing some good, and am thankful for the many blessings he has given me." Though isolated this good sister has not forgotten there is a great work for all. We are indeed thankful for her good support.

Rupert, Idaho. Brother Arthur Condit, superintendent, reports: "The Big Bend Sunday school has done better than $2 per member, so we are entitled to be listed on the roll of honor."

Thus the good work goes on, and we are looking forward to see all the schools listed on this roll of honor. Send in your reports—if your school is over the $2-per-member mark—giving us a few items of interest for this roll.

Yours for $100,000—no less,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, December 6, 1918.

Editors Herald: My three profitable weeks here in this Somerville Branch have come to a close, and I am about to leave for Attleboro. The dear Saints of Somerville are among the most hospitable I have found in the church. I found the spirit of the gospel in every home I visited. Under the pastoral care of Brother Baldwin, the branch presents an edifying example of unity and mutual helpfulness. Brother Traver is one of the most zealous branch presidents I have ever met. The branch has an able expounder of the church books in Doctor Sinclair.

The city of Boston is opening its arms to the returning wounded soldiers. I have had the privilege of meeting many of them, not only in the base hospitals, but in their homes.

The base hospitals I have visited are cheery places in spite of the misery and suffering. These poor, wounded ones hunger for the word of comfort. And it is well when one is able to comfort them, as Paul says, "by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."

It is thrilling to sit by the bedside of one of these wounded men, and hear him tell of the experiences through which he passed while at the front. This is done, not in a boasting spirit, but in a spirit that speaks the valor of the American soldier. One told me he had been two months at the front and in those two months he seemed to live ten years. He told me of ten others and himself burying two hundred and fifty men at one time, and sleeping on the ground for ten days at a time without removing clothes. Their eyes fill with tears when they tell you how they saw the wounded die on the field of battle.

One of them showed me a leaflet containing an anti-swearing pledge which every soldier was asked to make. This wounded lad told me that on the first presentation five hundred men in his company signed it, and within two weeks eight hundred signed it. I am appending here the clipping from the leaflet which contains the pledge. What a blessed thing it would be if all men, the world over, would sign such a pledge. Just read it:

"Knowing that my God, my country, and my home are expecting me to be a true man, and realizing that swearing is not conducive to one's morals, also that it deadens the finer sensibilities of the soul, I hereby place my name on the roll of this organization, to become a member, and I promise before God to do my best to refrain from all manner of language that I should not use before my wife, my mother, my sister, or my sweetheart."

It will, I am sure, rejoice many a mother's heart to find a copy of such a pledge in her boy's Testament when he brings it back or when it comes without him.

Last Saturday evening Brother Traver took me in his beautiful car to visit a wounded soldier in his home. We found a devoted mother bending over him. His case was one of the severest I have yet seen. He had forty-five gashes in his body. I called Brother Traver's attention to the wounds. He lost his right eye and the left limb up to the knee had to be amputated. The dear mother seemed at a loss for words to express her thanks for our coming. After all I have seen of the severe suffering caused by this war, I cannot but believe that the world will move in new channels after this. The heart of humanity will be more tender and we will be less selfish.

We have come to the crowning day of the world. The name of God is written loud as a trumpet over the entire globe. I sometimes dream of a world-wide missionary movement in our church. The changed condition of the world, will, I believe, permit our missionaries to go forth, in all the lands of Europe, and proclaim this latter-day gospel with such confidence as the early apostles had in their proclamation when they went from that chamber in Jerusalem with the heat of the flame of Pentecost on their brows. This is the day for the unfolding of the restored gospel. Every day I pray God to strengthen our zealous missionaries to meet the gigantic task before them. The sectarian churches have failed, lamentably failed. They confess as much themselves. Honest seeking hearts are beginning to understand us, and they are willing to let the restored gospel take the field and break up the fallow ground and bind the waste places.

Our gospel contains that holiness without which no man can see God. There is in it a chance for the worst and salvation for the best. Restored gospel! the expression itself is beautiful. It seems to me it should be the unchanging text of every sermon preached in our pulpits. We should not only preach it, but sing it, and sing it so as to invite the angels to listen. We should belt the globe with it. Oh, church of the restored gospel, this is your task!

I cannot but feel that it would be a tragedy unspeakable if the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ fails to meet to the full the challenge of the day into which we have entered. With the new day of opportunity for the church has come the day of severest testing. A day of testing, the like of which has never come to the church since the time of the great apostasy, when many fell away from the truth, and walked no more with the Lord. We have one great truth to give us assurance and comfort, we know the restored gospel has in it the power to satisfy the demand of the new epoch which every observer of contemporary events sees is upon us. The demand down deep in the heart of the new epoch is for a positive, true revelation of the gospel. The sectarian churches have no such truth to offer. The world has learned that. The war has served a good purpose in this respect. It turned the flashlight of the truth upon the denominations, and showed their shallowness, and the absence of divine authority. The fact is, the war has left us confronted by a world that is imploring the restored gospel but does not know it as such. I pray the great Head of the church to help us to see this. Other agencies, good, bad, and indifferent are getting ready for world conquest. The reorganized Church must gird herself and arise and meet the challenge. If this fact could sink into all our hearts I think it would enable us to take a fresh grip upon all the activities of the church and quicken our hearts for the conquest.

In this day of opportunity our branches cannot live at a dying rate. We must make every community in which a branch is located feel the mighty power of the restored gospel, in the healing of the body as of the soul—"confirming the word with signs following." I think self-examination would be most excellent for all of us at this time, and see if we, in our lives, have a right focus of the gospel. Surely there can be no better way for us to prepare for the challenge of the hour.

These are tremendous days, tremendous in their responsibility, and tremendous, likewise, in their opportunity. I pray that we, as members of the true church of the living God, may not be found wanting.

Fraternally yours,
AUGUSTINE DWYER.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN WALES.—May 18 and 19, 1918, at Nantyglo, Monmouthshire, Wales. District President E. J. Trapp presided, and associated with him was Bishop R. May. The following officers reported: E. J. Trapp, president; Thomas Gould, vice president; Elders E. J. Trapp, A. Jones, branch presidents, same. Bishop R. May reported. Following officers elected: President, E. J. Trapp; vice president, A. Jones; secretary, A. T. Trapp; associate secretary, R. P. Sims; treasurer, J. H. Smith. Sunday was devoted to religious and educational meetings; one being a series of short discourses, a prayer and testimony meeting, and a preaching service with R. May speaker. Adjourned subject to call of presidency. E. J. Trapp, president; R. P. Sims, secretary.

ALABAMA.—Met with the Flat Rock Branch December 7, 1918, J. R. Harper presiding, assisted by G. O. Sellers. Pleasant Hill Branch reported 365 members. Ministers reporting: Two elders, three priests, and one teacher. Bishop's agent reported on hand at last report $842.79. Received since, $1,245.62. Paid out, $1,890. On hand, $198.41. Report was audited and found correct. Conference provided for a reunion at Pleasant Hill Branch in 1919. Conference adjourned to meet with the Pleasant Hill Branch on Saturday before the full moon in March, 1919. D. T. Parker, secretary.

The Bishopric

Pittsburgh District: The Saints of the Pittsburgh District will kindly take notice that Brother L. F. P. Curry, of 906 Carnegie Building, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, has been appointed as Bishop's agent, beginning January 1, 1919. Brother Currie has been an active church worker for a number of years and is an efficient and well-qualified man to act in this capacity. We trust that he may receive the support of the Saints, as we believe he will.

Northeastern Kansas District: Having received the resignation of Brother John Cairns, who has been acting as Bishop's agent of the Northeastern Kansas District, we have arranged with Brother Frank G. Hedrick, Fanning, Kansas, to act as agent of that district, beginning January 1, 1919.

We feel that it is hardly necessary to commend Brother Hedrick to the Saints of this district, but should there be any who are not acquainted with him we can say that you will find him a man of integrity and of high ideals, a man worthy of your confidence and support.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Notice

The Toronto District conference empowered the secretary to choose an assistant.

Brother Martin A. Ware, 78 Morrison Street, Niagara Falls, Ontario, has been so chosen.

FLORALICE MILLER,
District Secretary.

Approved by George E. Harrington, President.

STARLIPER.—Florence Myrtle Leach was born September 3, 1866, at Omaha, Nebraska. Baptized in childhood. Married to John Starliper, July 30, 1893. To this union were born four sons and two daughters; two sons have preceded her. Died December 5, 1918, of pellagra, at Nevada, Missouri. Funeral sermon by H. E. Moler, interment at Nevada, Missouri.

Book Reviews

THE ADVENTURES OF A BROWNIE.—This is a pretty little book by Miss Mulock, published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, 50 cents net. Four full-page illustrations in color. This is one of this company's famous Children's Classics, printed in large, clear type, and of great interest to every normal child. This book is sure to be a favorite in your children's library. Orders received at this office.

KEINETH.—By Jane D. Abbott, illustrated, net $1.25, decorated board covers, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. This is a delightful new book by a popular author, in which she tells how Keineth Randolph, a twelve-year-old girl, kept a secret for a year. It was a war secret, about which her father had an important secret mission for the Government. There is much delightful action, and a story no healthful girl can put down unfinished. Send orders to this office if desired.

THE AMERICAN BOYS' ENGINEERING BOOK.—Cloth, $2 net, by A. Russell Bond, assistant editor of the Scientific American. There are 250 skillfully drawn diagrams, with measurements, which make absolutely clear all the steps in doing interesting things told about in the book. Such things as this are told and shown: Construction of a workshop at almost no cost, survey of a pond, building a dock, a homemade pile-driver, a lighthouse with a flashing lantern, a gravity railroad, etc. Other chapters deal with the making of weather instruments, electrical apparatus, etc., and how to use the telescope. A most satisfactory play book, full of profitable fun from making things. Order from this office.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Sister Abbie Horton, for many years our correspondent in Independence, celebrated her eighty-second birthday recently. She writes that her long life has been fraught with many changes and afflictions, but the days grow brighter, for she can see the Lord is greatly blessing his people.

"Surely there is some one who would like to leave a piano with us as a convenience to all concerned," say the managers of the Women's Building, at Independence. And it would seem reasonable, for in our experience we have known of a number of such instances. If you have one to loan or sell at a bargain, communicate with Mrs. Joseph Mather, Independence, Missouri.

James A. Gillen was in Detroit the 8th; spoke there and at Windsor, Ontario, that Sunday. On Monday evening a general priesthood meeting was held from Detroit, Windsor, Walkerville, and vicinity. This is a monthly meeting. On December 9 Elder Gillen addressed them on coordination. Their union priesthood meeting is proving an excellent plan. Elder Gillen left there on the 10th for other points in Michigan.

Conditions in Lamoni are improving. But the editorial office is still under a heavy handicap, as Brother Burgess is the only one able to get to the office, even part time. Brother Moore took sick the 11th, but both he and his wife are much better as we write. There is a big accumulation of letters unanswered. We hope our correspondents will be patient.

This issue closes the volume for 1918. What it has been, is before our readers. It has been a year of difficulties. The draft and then the influenza has cut deeply into the working forces. Conditions have required the absence from the office of the associate editor near half the time, and so the assistant editor, Elder E. D. Moore, has had at times more than his share of burden. We face the new year with new hope. We have a number of good articles on hand, and we expect further manuscripts from our able writers. The HERALD is the official organ of the church. The first Presidency are its editors. In the stirring times before us, every church member should read it carefully. There are fifty-three numbers in 1919. It is a good time to subscribe. Do it now.

Heroism is simple and yet it is rare. Everyone who does the best he can is a hero.—Josh Billings.
