New Year's Greetings to the Church

As the church enters upon the work of a new calendar year the Presidency extends cordial greetings to the Saints, in the hope that the developments of the year may bring happiness, prosperity, and good cheer to all. We trust, too, that when adversity shall come to some, every Saint so afflicted may be fortified by a sublime faith which softens the asperity of trial and bitterness of grief.

Before the church lies need of greater activity, greater devotion to service, closer communion with God, and a deeper vision of the objective of the church.

May God's grace attend, his peace abound, and the New Year be a happy one for the church and its members.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Congratulations and a Prospective View

A joyous New Year is the wish we express with the happy Christmas greeting.

We might muse as to what extent the New Year salutation was first inspired by the spirit of Christmastide; but I believe that all will concede that the glad New Year toward which we are journeying will only be realized when the spirit that moved our Savior—when the "word was made flesh"—determines man's every thought, word and deed.

As we consider the development made during the past year, measured by the increasing contributions of tithes and offerings, our faith in the ultimate redemption of Zion is strengthened.

We observe that those who have complied with the temporal law regularly for a number of years are not only the strongest advocates of this feature of the gospel, but most consistently exemplify the law of Christ in other respects.

One of the contributing factors to the financial success of the church during the past three years has been a definite aim—

"Liquidation of indebtedness within a specified time.

"Fixed amount of free will offering to be raised by the Sunday school scholars by Christmas each year.

"Every member a tithe payer."

Another factor has been the almost universal response.

The realization of the joyful New Year is dependent upon the operation of those principles of life which alone will produce it.

"Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."

The testimony of life's experience, scientific research, and the word of God is, that if we expect to produce something we must have something in hand with which to do it. It is equally true that this "something"—capital—must be available.

This principle applies to every phase of life.

If then we would build up Zion we must have the wherewith to build. This can only be secured by thrift—in producing material wealth, healthy bodies, well-informed minds, and pure hearts; frugality—in using sufficient for our just wants and needs, and investing the saving or surplus in such a manner as shall afford opportunity to others, enlarge our field, and bring blessing to mankind and glory to God.

Let then our New Year greeting be extended with the deep resolve to improve every school advantage; every business opportunity; every missionary opening; more alert to better our social, industrial, and divine relations. Is there one who cannot in some regard toil more assiduously; consume less; and spend his surplus time, means, accomplishments, and energy more usefully; thus developing the character that inclines ever to do more good?

Our heavenly Father capitalized the gospel enterprise when he sent our blessed Lord into the world. Let us as wise stewards employ the means at hand to demonstrate the manifold grace of God; and by thrift and frugality let each be a producer that there may be wherewith to redeem Zion.

Highly valuing the earnest cooperation the past year—yet recognizing the effort required for further advancement—in the light of the foregoing comments, I wish the Saints of God everywhere a very prosperous and joyous New Year.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Big Men Needed

Another year has gone from us, and we view in retrospect either the achievements with joy and satisfaction, or the failures with sadness and disappointment.

Some of our energies may have been dissipated in unprofitable activities; if so, from the results we may learn the lesson that our ideals shall only be reached by carefully well-planned, conscious direction.

With swift strides we are approaching the day of which the prophets have spoken. As it nearer draws, our responsibility as a church is increasing. Cries of distress of a world stricken with sin daily reach our ears and in the anguish of our soul we call out, "How long, O Lord, wilt thou permit these things to be?"

To carry on our work we need big men—not in avoirdupois—but in soul qualities:

Men too big to become offended at a word.

Men too big to knowingly wound another.

Men too big to tire of their task.

Men too big to seek self-aggrandizement.

Men too big to permit discouragements to devitalize them.

Men too big to be turned away from the Lord's work by the glitter of gold.

It Is Written

"Let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him."

ACCORDINGLY

The Bishopric submit—

Every member should be a tithe payer.

Men too big to shun the sacrifice of gospel service.

Men big enough to step out as volunteers in the cause of Christ, both in ministerial endeavors and as pioneers in a demonstration of the principles of stewardships.

Men of wealth, ability, and judgment.

To such we call, "Why stand ye idle waiting?"

Confidently and hopefully,

Your brother in gospel service,

JAMES F. KIER.

A New Year's Message to Religio Workers

Arouse, ye Religians! Arouse!

The contest 'twixt right and wrong is still on!

The warfare wages more tense each passing hour!

Christ, to-day, is numbering his hosts. He is marshaling his army. He asks that you stand up and be counted. Are you for or against him? The whole world awaits your action. What, then, your reply?

There is no conscription in the army of the Lord. Those who serve with Christ must do so because they love him. We call for volunteers, men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls. Enlist!

Herewith our program for the New Year.

Religio slogan for 1920: All for Christ.

Religio objective for 1920:

Every member—a religious experience.

Every member of the church a member of the Religio.

Every member of a Latter Day Saint family over eight years of age a member of the Religio and of the church.

Every member—of the Religio a member of the church.

Every member—a recipient of the new birth.

Every member—a witness for Christ.

Every member—a tithe payer.

Every member—a full consecration of body, mind, and spirit to the service of God and man.

Every member—an acceptance of the divine plan of stewardship.

Every member—a total abstinence from the evils of the world. Our own recreational activities.

An intensive and definite program for social service.

A one hundred per cent increase in membership.

T. W. WILLIAMS,

President Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

From the Sunday School

I am glad, because I believe that never before has the whole matter of the instruction of the children of the church received such earnest attention from as many of our men and women of ability and scholarship as at the present time. It is well, and the times demand it.

My chief desire just now is that the workers of our department throughout the world shall share with the leading officers and quorums of our church the deepening, heartfelt sense of the necessity for more thorough preparation for the accomplishment of the great work that lies before us.

The problems now perplexing the whole world may well remind us of the divine program concerning "the time of the end" and stir us to fruitful activities such as we have never known before. These words of the Master seem to press for repetition:

"I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt should lose its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted?"

"It must needs be that ye have salt in yourselves and have peace one with another." (Inspired Version.)

The Desire for Twelve O'clock at Eleven

John Spargo comments on what he terms the desire of humanity for twelve o'clock when it is only eleven.

An impassioned speaker may implant in some heart a noble ideal. To accept and properly appraise the ideal is a matter of moment. To live up to it and bring it to fruition may be a work of years. There comes the test of character. Will the man weakly indulge in the wish that the time of fruition had come? Or will he wisely use the time in ways calculated to make his dream real.

The boy or girl in high school or college looks longingly toward commencement day. How splendid will be the hour of graduation. The desire for twelve o'clock when it is only eleven becomes very keen. But there are those two, three, or four years yet remaining before graduation. There is geometry, latin, physics, and many other giants to be overcome. Will he (or she) use every minute of the time to advantage and win out to graduation with honors? Or will the desire for twelve o'clock when it is only eleven consume all the energy that is expended.

The young nurse in the sanitarium looks longingly toward the day when the course of training will be ended. How fine it will be to don the uniform of a graduate trained nurse! But there are those long months of toil. There are those disagreeable, revolting, menial tasks to be performed, those long vigils to be kept, those problems to master, that discipline to acquire. There is not a moment to waste wishing it were twelve at eleven. If time is wasted, the twelve o'clock of the girl's ambition will never strike.

There is the young elder just beginning his ministry, or perhaps just preparing for it. How he looks forward to the day when he shall prosecute a successful foreign mission, or preside over an active branch, or as an evangelist move throngs to repentance by his eloquence.

But wishing will not make it twelve o'clock for him when it is only eleven. He must use that hour in preparation—study, prayer, experience—these will equip him for twelve o'clock when it really comes.

A member of the class in religious education in Graceland College said: "We don't seem to be getting anywhere!" Another added: "They expect too much of us. When we get up to speak they expect a wonderful sermon, better than an old, experienced minister could preach."

True, perhaps—possibly the boys have been wishing for twelve o'clock at eleven. Perhaps the church has expected them to bring forth noonday fruits at eleven. It would not be fair to expect that, at graduation, after only one year of preparation, each man should come out a Heman C. Smith in logic, a Joseph Luff in eloquence, a Charles Derry in piety, and an E. E. Long in polemics. Don't expect twelve o'clock at eleven.

The whole church has caught a vision of Zion redeemed. We get it from the revelations and from the impassioned appeals of our orators. It only takes a short time for the desire to grow in our hearts. It takes a long time to work out its fulfillment. So little has been done! Shall we sit down and lament, or scold, as our temperament may be, because Zion is not yet realized—idly repine because it is not twelve o'clock at eleven? Or shall we set ourselves to use those sixty minutes that remain?

We cannot find a short cut past the rigid discipline, the renunciation, the sacrifice, the remodeling of thought, habit, character, the consolidation, the socialization that must come before it is twelve o'clock in Zion. Let us use the hour.

The Pay of Missionaries

There has appeared much in the papers the past year concerning the inadequate pay of Protestant ministers, the greater part of whom are paid much less than is common labor. This is not of primary importance, providing they are paid sufficient to meet their just wants and needs. But in many instances this is not the case.

As an instance, the Kansas City Star of November 11, 1919, states that the Baptists issued an appeal to increase their pastors' salaries to prevent them entering other fields of activity. More than one third receive less than $1,000 per year, and probably one half of this one third receive less than $600, according to this appeal.

The Literary Digest of November 22 gives the salary of the clergy in the Episcopal Church: twenty-eight received less than $500; fifty-three received from $500 to $750; eighty-four received from $750 to $1,000; five hundred and six received between $1,000 and $1,500; while forty-three, most of whom are bishops, received $3,000 a year, and fifteen received more than $7,000.

Adverse comment has been made at times of those who preach for hire. It is interesting to note the relatively small percentage who receive the higher salaries. The plan laid down by the Lord to govern his ministry is an excellent one. Those who labor in his ministry shall receive a just recompense for all of their labor. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:19.) They receive their just wants and needs in like manner with the bishops, the bishop's agents, and those who labor in temporal affairs. The principle of equality in temporal matters govern. The Saints pay their tithing, their consecrations, their freewill offerings, and their surplus to the general fund of the church, and from this the minister's family is provided for, even though he go out without purse or script and is largely dependent upon the good will of those among whom he labors.

The plan as outlined, however, should produce and does produce greater independence. Upon this the church is to be congratulated upon the willingness of the Saints to do their share to support the work of God.

We are fortunate in receiving a summary of our missionary force, and the amount of their allowance. In the first place, quite a number of the list are self-supporting, having sufficient means to meet their family needs, they voluntarily donate their services to the church of God. They endeavor to give their best service, as do also those who are supported from the church funds.

To secure the following figures there is added to the family allowance, sixteen dollars a month for the elder's board, which is the amount supplied the general church officers, when their work keeps them at home all the time. This board is supplied to our missionaries, either by the branch or Saints with whom they are laboring, as the case may be. To this is added also the nominal sum of ten dollars for elder's expense. This includes clothing, laundry, books, papers, and miscellaneous items, but does not include the traveling expenses. With the majority of elders the amount will exceed this.

On this basis there are twenty-six, who receive less than $66 per month, or $792 a year. One hundred and eleven receive between $792 and $1,002 a year. Of these over half (fifty-eight) received $792; twenty-three received $912; ten receive $852; and eleven $972. The remaining eight are scattered, one or two to each sub-classification.

There are next sixty-six who receive from $1,032 to $1,248 a year. The largest number, seventeen, receive $1,032; nine families receive $1,092, and a like number $1,152 a year. Seven families receive $1,068, and a like number, $1,212 per year. Six families receive $1,116. The rest are scattered, only one or two to each sub-classification.

In the next group twenty-four receive from $1,284 to $1,428. Eleven of these receive $1,392; five families $1,284; four families $1,332.

In the next group, there are twenty-two families who receive from $1,512 to $1,692. Of these, twelve receive $1,512. The rest are scattered, not more than two families in any one classification. There are four families that receive from $1,746 to $1,890 inclusive; four that receive from $1,932 to $2,232; and one family receives $2,520. This gives a total of 258 families.

In fixing these allowances, a family budget was prepared in each case, and considered by the budget committee. An effort is made to secure a fair and reasonable allowance, taking into consideration the responsibility and necessary expenses because of position, situation, purchase of home, or for any other reason. The list includes the general church officers, the members of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, as well as the seventies and elders who are in the field. Some of them have much entertaining to do, and that necessarily increases the family expense, and yet is part of their ministerial work.

An effort is not made to pay them according to their worth from a worldly standpoint. Some men who are drawing but little are content because their necessities are met, and feel no jealousy because another is receiving more. The plan provides for a saving on the part of the missionary, and the assistance extended to the worthy family in securing a home. It provides also that the surplus should be turned over and consecrated to the church at the end of the year.

When comparisons are made with the allowances of twenty and twenty-five years ago, we should remember that careful estimates show that the cost of living is from three to four times as great.

The church is to be congratulated upon the fact that its debts are paid, and that its membership are willingly providing the means for carrying on the work, and for an adequate support for those who devote their whole time to its ministry.

There is and should be, throughout, the spirit of sacrifice. And it is of interest to note that under the plan laid down, which we believe to be in accordance with the law of God, the laborer in Zion is better cared for than are others under different conditions.

Again, our list shows none of the top-heavy allowances to a few. It shows a real consideration of the just wants and needs, and the law of equality between man and man, so that all may labor together for the success of the work intrusted to all.

The Next Missionary Class

Have you read President F. M. Smith's call for the next missionary class as published in the HERALD for December 17. If so, read it again and consider it very carefully.

The present plan, so far as we are informed, is to extend the purpose of the class so that it will no longer be for foreign mission exclusively. In addition to this they desire that the names be in the hands of President George N. Briggs of Graceland College, not later than March 1, so that the list of names with the action of the committee may be presented at the joint council this spring and those who are to take the course selected and approved. It is an excellent opportunity to spend a year in special preparation.

Those who are permitted to come in contact with members of this year's class cannot fail to be impressed with the devotion and inspiration of their efforts. We cannot but rejoice that it is planned to extend the work to include domestic as well as foreign workers, and that it is planned to enlarge the size of the class, so that at least forty will be enrolled, if a sufficient number of qualified and consecrated young people make application. The class may be made larger as circumstances appear to justify. The general church authorities will make the decision.

It is nearly eight months until Graceland College will open; probably fully seven and a half months before work will be started in the new class in August or September, 1920, but there is less than two months within which application may be filed to be sure of its being in shape to be presented at the joint council this spring.

The church needs consecrated, prepared workmen. It is a time of urgent need. The experiences of the present year mean improved methods of instruction for the coming year. We hope to see a large body of young people next year, possessing in equal measure with this year's class consecration to the service of God and the inspiration of his Spirit.

Now is the time of decision. May the Spirit of God, and not self-interest and ambition determine our decision.

Continued Revelation

It is very surprising in this day and age of the world, still to find ministers who tell the people that the Book of Mormon must be rejected because of the last verse of the Bible:

"For I testify unto every man who heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."—Revelation 22: 18, 19.

In the first place it may be noted that that which is forbidden is that man should add. It does not say there shall be no further revelations from God. That there shall be is plainly shown by Holy Scripture. As far back as the time of Moses a similar declaration was made:

"Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you."—Deuteronomy 4: 2.

"Every word of God is pure; he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar."—Proverbs 30: 5, 6.

It may be noted in the second place there is also forbidden the taking away. The so-called Christian churches of to-day will tell us that much of the New Testament is not now in force and effect; that the gifts of the Spirit were only for the earlier age, and we do not need them now. Also most of them take away baptism; and practically all of them present-day revelation.

It is plain from the two preceding statements that this passage in the book of Revelation has only to do with man. It does not prevent God from continuing to reveal his will; it does forbid man attempting to change his word. The above two constitute one fundamental reason. Still both points should be noted.

The second fundamental reason is that the book of Revelation was not always in its present place at the end of the book. The New Testament was not handed down verbally; was not revealed from God, just as we have it, with every book in its place. But these books were written at various times by different men. No Christian church in the first and second centuries had all of these books.

The western half accepted the book of Revelation, but inserted it in the middle of the New Testament. It was not accepted for some time by the eastern church. There were other books that were accepted by the eastern church and not by the western. But in the course of the early centuries, the canon of the New Testament gradually took its present form. What was the test? It was the spirit of inspiration. The degree of inspiration shown by these writings exceeded that in any other writing extant. Its free use was hindered by the fact that every book had to be copied by hand. But modern critics agree that the test was a good one, and was closely and critically applied.

It was not until about the very close of the fourth century (some state the Council of Carthage, 399) that the New Testament took its present form with the book of Revelation at the end. It is evident then, that it is accidental that these two verses appear in this position at the end of the Bible. Evidently these two verses apply, not to the Book of books, the Bible, but only to the book of Revelation. Read these verses again and the application becomes entirely clear.

But there exists a third reason. The early Christian church did not believe that the canon of the Holy Scripture was closed. That is one reason why different booklets were copied and passed, and were kept among them as their sacred records. They expected to receive other revelations. It was only when it was seen that, despite their learned men, despite the apologetics of the fathers, nothing had been written since the days of the apostles of equal spiritual value, or showing the like spiritual and inspirational power, that they decided that their canon was closed.

The above points can be easily verified in most of the good general encyclopedias under the subject, "The Bible." We may also refer to the Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, and others of the religious encyclopedias, such as the New Schaff-Herzog.

It was the result of a departure by the church. The church had departed from God, hence heard from him no more. God had not withdrawn, but as they went into apostasy, their spirituality certainly declined.

To say then that Revelation 22: 18, 19 prevents further revelation to-day, shows first, an ignorance of the contents of the Bible itself. Second, it shows ignorance as to how the canon of Holy Scripture was formed, and ignorance of the history of the books of the Bible. Third, it also shows ignorance of the history of the early Christian church, and beclouds the fact that they believed in continued revelation from God.

The Herald's New Dress

On account of the usual difficulty in securing mechanical supplies, we are not able to present the HERALD in all its new dress this week, but we hope to complete the change in a few weeks. We trust our readers will like the changed appearance and believe they will when they become accustomed to it.

The change from larger type to smaller in part of the issue seemed necessary under present conditions, though we hope some day we may improve this feature. EDITORS.

A certain rural community in Illinois discovered that something must be done affirmatively to keep their young people from drifting to amusements which were not for their best good. Plans were made and rapidly developed, resulting in the erection of a community building, including a large hall for general assemblies, gymnasium facilities, reading, and other conveniences. The building looks very much like a modern villa. When the building was erected, they determined to dedicate it as a memorial to the boys who had lost their lives in the great war. It is significant as another instance of a building of large public usefulness being made a memorial building, instead of attempting to erect a conventionalized type of severe temple style of architecture.

The Prophetic Conning Tower

An Outline—Part 1

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

This article will furnish valuable material for reference later. Preserve your copies as they are read.—Editors.

How thrilling and grand it is to live in an age of political redemption with all the concomitants of the rebirth of nations! The waves of prophecy tossing up the program of the inexorable, and divine, like castles of pearl on the confused and desolate beach of the billow-swept sea. Such an age is this present one, with the noise of conflict all around. We seem lost in the whirl of the great agitations. We are stunned by the roar of exploding elements. Yet in the midst of the din and shock, truth is asserting its power in an independent sphere.

The Man for the Place

In the onward sweep of the world, the proper figure seems to be raised up for the occasion; the occasion, in its volcanic outburst, directed by, and staged in, wisdom beyond the ken of mortals. Sometimes the world's great necessity is the embodiment of active benevolence, the incarnation of humanity, and sympathy to carry light—the blessings of righteousness, justice, and joy in peace to the regions of vice and crime. At other periods, it is men of action whose ceaseless energy is the voice which arouses and shakes the nations. Then again, it is men with the courage of heroes and the faith of martyrs, to hurl down the thrones and temples of iniquity with the stroke of the battle ax, and to meet the forces of wrong on the field of strife. But whatever the wants of the ages, the overruling power has placed to the fore, characters to meet the demand.

In the great machinery of human brotherhood, every bolt and every intricate link is adjusted by wisdom superior, and with a view to an ultimate purpose. So in the circle of creation not an atom is to be spared from earth's magnetic zone to the bindweed round a hawthorne.

But not Redeemed

It will not follow that because special men with appropriate endowments have been "raised up" and carried along in the "chariot of decrees," providentially to occupy the highest peak of world glory, and play the conquering role, that they are entitled to celestial honors without forming characters by celestial law—a spiritual regeneration. But to the contrary, they may be "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction," as was Pharaoh whom God "raised up that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout the earth." (Romans 9: 17-24.)

Witness the successive kings of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, with the medieval and modern potentates whom the Almighty "promoted," and with whose world-dazzling exaltation and career his hand is concerned (Psalm 75: 6, 7), and if unrepentant and unregenerated, prophecy is their guideboard to the descending plane with the following inscription:

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Isaiah 24: 21, 22. See also Ezekiel 32.

The Gentiles, in contradiction to those through whom the Almighty would direct earthly affairs, have ruled the globe since the dawn of history, and on the basis of a leading principle that deity has never in the past, in the present, nor will he in the endless future, eliminate the power of choice from man, or responsible agency, to make of him a mere automaton, this Gentile division has not pursued the highway purposed in the original program, but he will overrule their administrations, "bringing good out of evil," and "causing the wrath of man to praise him," to the end that the proper regime shall come into its own. This divine and triumphant result we will consider in the light of inspired prophecy and enlarged vision.

Demosthenes once offered the following prelude to one of his orations: "Every address should begin with an incontrovertible proposition." My topics call out certainties. It is "incontrovertible" that the ideal—the divine original, is not yet attained. It is a strategic certainty that it will be an accomplished and finished fact.

Prophets

Out from the inspired prophecies gush the potencies that outline, as Niagaras from the brink of God's palm. We employ the terms prophet and prophecy, not in the sense of orthodox parlance, as a "common teacher in the church," or expounder and his pronouncements, but in the sense indicated by the Bible, by him, who, as the "light of the world" affirmed that it is "the Spirit of God which speaketh in you" and "will show you things to come." (John 16: 13, 14.) "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1: 21.) As Doctor Buck says in Theological Dictionary: "Prophet, one who foretells future events, applied to such inspired persons as were commissioned by God to declare his will and purpose to the people." "Prophecy, a word signifying the prediction of future events." It is thus defined by Witsius: "A knowledge and manifestation of secret things, which a man knows not from his own sagacity, nor from the relation of others, but by an extraordinary revelation of God from heaven." For instance, no man could have foretold four hundred years ago that in the island of Corsica from a lawyer's family living there, would come forth in three centuries a man of extraordinary military powers, and political skill, and by a succession of brilliant exploits, exile a dynasty from France, exalt himself to imperial dignity, affright the monarchs of the Oriental world, and after dazzling the world with the success of his overvaulting ambition, should by a sudden descent and overthrow, die an exile in a remote Island.

In the reign of Queen "Bess," no man could have foretold that, in less than two centuries would arise from the colony in Virginia, the firm and undaunted supporter of his country's rights, and who by heroic achievements after seven years of struggle, would detach thirteen colonies from British dependency, and establish a new world of republics. No man by common or human sagacity, could have thus predicted of Napoleon and Washington.

Even so, with human sagacity, the "holy men of God" in ancient years could not have stood forth in the midst of earthly limitations and almost national chaos, and poured forth the messages which take on life, and form, and work with superhuman power. They must have possessed the projecting compass of infinite survey that the Almighty had in the beginning when in the rayless expanse of darkness he threw the "outlines," and mapped the vast plains of the revolving universe.

So the prophets, by the power of that Spirit which sees "the end from the beginning," have thrown the "outlines" of the manner, methods, agencies, as well as the time, when his (God's) "plea" should be heard (Jeremiah 25: 31), and when he should "controversy" with the nations for the success and triumphant rise of "Zion." (Isaiah 34: 8.) The design of God is wonderfully manifest in the developing marvels of the world, and the developing marvels at once show the hand of God in history, and strongly fortify the prophecies along the staging route.

Renaissance

What was the design of God in touching the keyboard and sending out such splendor of light at the special time suggested:

First. The redevelopment of the magnetic properties of the lodestone—the mariner's compass—enlarging the science of navigation by which America leaped to the gaze of nations.

Second. The invention of the art of printing.

Third. The revival of letters.

Fourth. The revival of the arts.

Fifth. The opening of the globe by Columbus.

Sixth. The opening of the sidereal heaven, by Newton.

Seventh. The renovation of science, by Bacon.

Eighth. Republicanism, by Cromwell.

Ninth. The Protestant reformation.

Tenth. The great restoration—the opening of the celestial heavens, by Joseph the Martyr, comprehending a series of brilliant angelic ministrations from 1820 to 1830, culminating in the inaugural splendor of the latter day "Marvelous work and a wonder," that in its progress will "shake all nations." There will the "desire of all nations" return to earth to reign. (Haggai 2: 6, 7.)

Nine of the foregoing furnish the pioneer work and pedestal for the tenth. The whole structure informs us that the periods constitute "the time of the end," where "many run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (Daniel 12: 4.), and the cooperation of the heavenly powers in filling the earth with "intelligence." (Revelation 18: 1.)

Prophecy outlines his tenth stroke of the divine keyboard as the final yet eminently successful one on the part of the Almighty, for his purposes to reach the salvation of man through Jesus Christ (Ephesians 1: 10), and chose Abraham's posterity, as earthly instrumentalities, to be the leading representatives. Thus: "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, "and said, By myself I have sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice."—Genesis 22: 16-18.

The Gentile grown to the hauteur of a Pharaoh, cries "who is God?" Their "times" have been grand, brilliant, but God-defying. In all their governmental, religious, economic, and industrial measures they are saying, "the Lord (ruler) delayeth his coming" (2 Peter 3: 4; Matthew 24: 48, 49), and "willingly," but not "knowingly," constituting themselves as evidence of his soon return. (Matthew 25: 37, 39; 2 Peter 3: 5.)

Logically, the topics array in mind as follows:

Jewish Signs

First. Israelitish or Jewish signs of "the end of the world;" prophecy pointing thereto.

This topic comprehends the fortunes, preservation, reassembling, renationalization of the posterity of Abraham, and the restoration of "the kingdom of Israel." "All the kindreds of the earth" are to be "blessed" in Abraham's posterity. They will occupy a position—a locale—from which blessings will radiate the earth's remotest bounds, with Jesus Christ as the supreme representative of the line (Galatians 3: 16), and with all those adopted into the family of Abraham.

(Galatians 3: 27, 29.) The locality is "Canaan," "Palestine," "the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed" (Genesis 28: 13), "by an everlasting covenant," "for an everlasting possession." (Genesis 13: 14, 15; 17: 6, 7, 8.)

This domain will be enlarged in time, and the house of Israel "will possess greater nations, and mightier than themselves." (Deuteronomy 11: 23-25; Joshua 1: 2, 5.)

This accumulation of territory is further delineated, as follows: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: Spare not, lengthen thy cords, and straighten thy stakes: for thou shalt break forth on the right hand, and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." (Isaiah 54: 2, 3.)

"I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers."—Psalm 89: 25.

This is the time or reconstruction of "the desolate cities." The tide of prosperity and renationalization rolls on in such favor that the Apostle Paul affirms "Abraham to be the heir of the world." (Romans 4: 13.) The record of title is lodged in the supreme head of Abraham's seed, who has "many crowns" gracing his brow, the insignia of a conqueror. The record is as follows: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen [Gentile] for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possessions." (Psalm 2: 8.) By the "decree" of the great God, Christ and "Israel" will be given a valid title, and the saints appear as "joint heirs" "with Abraham." Verily, this will be "possessing all the gates."

But lamentation and misfortune make sad music along the pathway of this, the monumental nation of Israel, since the Lord made the promise to his "friend"—Abraham.—B. C. 1860.

In Deuteronomy 28 is found the prophetic highway of "blessings" and "cursings" over which Israel has traveled, contingent on "obedience" and "disobedience." Proceeding on the disobedient course, 721 B. C., the king of Assyria with armies captured nine and one half tribes as prisoners of war, and they were sent into captivity, from which they have never returned, cast out from the knowledge of nations, and called by prophecy the "outcasts of Israel." Ancient prophecy locates them in the "north," and modern prophecy informs us that "the ice," is between us and them.

"The history of the nine and a half tribes subsequent to their captivity by Shalmanezar is buried in utter obscurity."—Worcester's History p. 342.

Shalmanezar took Samaria after three years siege, and carried the nation into captivity from which it never returned. Hence they are called, "The ten lost tribes."—Scholar's Hand Book, p. 51.

But while they are "lost" in this captivity, and "their history buried in utter obscurity," the prophecy of the record of Joseph agrees with the historic fact, but adds, that, at the time the "Lord makes bare his arm," and "in the eyes of all nations," "they [Israel] shall be brought out of obscurity, and out of darkness." (1 Nephi 7: 17-24.) All of them are to be "brought into the wilderness of the people," in the day of the Lord's "plea." (Ezekiel 20: 35.)

"Therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight" (721 B. C.—Scott), There was none left but the tribe of Judah only." (2 Kings 17: 18.) The Bible deals with the history of "Judah only," since 721 B. C. Hence it is prophetically termed, "The Stick of Judah." Judah, as the "only" full tribe left in Palestine, "walked in the statutes of Israel which they made," until one hundred and twenty years after their brethren had been captured, they were swept into the Babylonian captivity for seventy years, and under the famed proclamation of King Cyrus they returned to Jerusalem and repaired the city and temple, were at home when Jesus "came to his own, and (as a nation) his own received him not." Who were his own? "For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood." (Hebrews 7: 14.)

Fall of Judah

"Weep not: Behold, the lion of the tribe of Judah . . . hath prevailed to open the . . . seals." (Revelation 5: 5.) Judah rejected the overtures of the message of Jesus and after the utter dissolution of the Jewish state, were swept into the bondage of the Gentile nations by the Romans, A. D. 70. A few items of Moses' and Christ's prophecy will give emphasis here:

"The Lord will bring a nation against thee from afar, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth, a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor shew favor to the young; and he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land which the Lord thy God hath given thee."—Deuteronomy 28: 49-52.

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"—Matthew 23: 37.

"And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24.

This nation "of fierce countenance"; "understanding dark sentences," is identified as the Roman military nation by the terms of the prophecy. No nation ever made so formidable an appearance in war-like array as did the Romans. Besides, the Jews understood the languages of their previous captors, and it could not be said of the Babylonians, Persians, or Greeks that the Jew did not understand them, for it is a matter of history that the Chaldean and Greek languages were used, to a greater or lesser extent in Palestine. But the Latin of the Romans, was "sealed" to the Jews.

But are they, as a nation, to remain forever in subjection to the nations without a home and without a country? Is "the arch of Titus," at Rome, to become a veritable monument of perpetual dishonor and slavery for "the chosen people?" Nay. Their servitude may be set forth, during their wanderings, from the fall of their capital city, until recent times, in few words.

Oppression of Jews

We have an inexhaustible mass of evidence at hand, but two or three testimonials are sufficient:

Doctor Thomas Scott: "The unjust and cruel exactions and oppressions, accompanied by every token of contempt and abhorrence, with which the Jews have been treated, in almost every nation, and during every age, since the time of Christ, can scarcely be conceived, except by those who are conversant in their history; but it is impossible, within the limits of this exposition, fully to elucidate so compendious a prophecy; and it must suffice to say, that no people on earth have been so long and so generally insulted, oppressed, and crushed, as they have been, according to the testimony both of their own writers and of others."—Note in loco.

Bishop Thomas Newton, D. D. Only oppressed and spoiled

evermore: and what frequent seizures have been made of their effects in almost all countries? How often have they been fined and fleeced by almost all governments? How often have they been forced to redeem their lives with what is almost as dear as their lives, their treasures? Instances are innumerable."—Dissertations on the prophecies, p. 39.

Sir Walter Scott: "They were a race which, during these dark ages, was alike detested by the credulous and prejudiced vulgar, and persecuted by the greedy and rapacious nobility. Except perhaps for the flying fish, there was no race existing on the earth, in the air or the waters, who were the objects of such unremitting, general, and relentless persecutions as the Jews of this period. Upon the slightest and most unreasonable pretenses, as well as upon accusations the most absurd and groundless, their persons and property were exposed to every turn of popular fury; for Norman, Saxon, Dane, and Briton, however adverse the races were to each other, contended which would look with greatest detestation upon a people whom it was accounted a point of religion to hate, to revile, to despise, to plunder, and to persecute."—Excelsior edition of Ivanhoe, p. 96.

The divine legation of Moses and Christ is established, and if more authentic evidence were needed, consult Hallaur's History of Middle Ages, volume 1, 2: 33; Gibbon's Decline and Fall of Roman Empire, volume 6, p. 97; Basnage, the elaborate historian of the Jews, book 6, chapter 1, 21; book 7, chapter 21, and Evidences of Prophecy, pp. 70 and 74.

Such should convince the most skeptical that being tossed about as a national football during the course of so many centuries has begotten within the Jew the spirit of "madness" foretold by Moses (Deuteronomy 28: 28) culminating in the judicial "blindness" that demanded the innocent blood of the Christ to be upon themselves and their children. They will remain enveloped in this "blindness in part," until the regensis—"the fullness of the Gentiles come in," and "the deliverer goes out of Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Then the same blood they demanded in imprecation will cleanse them in benediction, through the everlasting covenant—the gospel—which that blood ratified.

The Israelitish Nation Never to Become Extinct

"Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The Lord of hosts is his name: if these ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the Lord; if heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord."—Jeremiah 31: 35-37.

"Therefore, fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."—Ibid., 30: 10, 11.

The duration of Israel is thus measured by the eternity of the "ordinances" of sun, moon, and stars. Israel as a distinct existence of that people, is the thought contended for.

"Fear not thou, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure."—Jeremiah 46: 28.

Dr. Thomas Scott: "God has made a "full end" of the Egyptians, Syrians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Medes, and Persians, and Macedonians, and of the pagan Roman Empire, which successively scattered or oppressed Israel; so that each of them has been inseparably united with the conquering nations: yet the Jews, by an unprecedented interposition of Providence, after all their oppressions and dispersions, are preserved a distinct people to this present day. How wonderfully do undeniable facts demonstrate the Divine Inspiration of the Scriptures!"—Note in loco.

Bishop Newton: "The preservation of the Jews is really one of the most signal and illustrious acts of divine providence. They are dispersed among all nations, and yet they are not confounded with any. The drops of rain which fall, nay, the great rivers which flow into the ocean, are soon mingled and lost in that immense body of waters; and the same in all human probability would have been the fate of the Jews; they would have been mingled and lost in the common mass of mankind; but on the contrary they flow into all parts of the world, mix with all nations, and yet keep separate from all. They still live as a distinct people, and yet they nowhere live according to their own laws, nowhere elect their own magistrates, and nowhere enjoy the full exercise of their religion. Their solemn feasts and sacrifices are limited to one certain place, and that has been now for many ages in the hands of strangers and aliens, who will not suffer them to come thither. No people have continued unmixed so long as they have done, not only of those who have sent forth colonies into foreign countries, but even of those who have abided in their own country. The northern nations have come in swarms into the most southern parts of Europe; but where are they now to be discerned and distinguished?"—Deseret Prophet.

Moses predicted that these misfortunes visited upon the seed of Israel should be "for signs, and wonders," (Deuteronomy 28: 46) or rather "a sign, and a wonder." The idea is, that something of the miraculous would be connected with their football experience through the ages. Even so it is found in the "law of resistance":

"The preservation of the Jews as a distinct people during so many centuries of complete dispersion, is a fact standing nearly, if not absolutely, alone in the history of the world. It is at variance with all other experience of the laws which govern the amalgamation with each other of different families of the human race. . . . It is not surprising, therefore, that the preservation of the Jews, partly from the relation in which it stands to the apparent fulfillment of Prophecy, and partly from the extraordinary nature of the fact itself, is tacitly assumed by many persons to come strictly within the category of miraculous events. . . . An extraordinary resisting power has been given to the Jewish people against those dissolving and disintegrating forces which have caused the disappearance of every other race placed under similar conditions. They have been torn from home and country, and removed not in a body, but in scattered fragments, over the world. Yet they are as distinct from every other people now as they were in the days of Solomon. Nevertheless this resisting power, wonderful though it be, is the result of special laws, overruling those in ordinary operation. It has been effected by the use of means. Those means have been superhuman—they have been beyond human contrivance and arrangement. . . . In their concatenation and arrangement they seem to indicate the purpose of a Living Will, seeking and effecting the fulfillment of its designs.—Reign of Law, p. 20, by Duke of Argyll.

For what purpose this "miraculous" preservation? How overruled? What has divine Wisdom envolved therefrom? Answer, "World building," and the salvation of the Gentiles. "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more than fullness?" "Through their fall salvation has come unto the Gentiles." "The casting away of them . . . the reconciling of the world." (Romans 11: 12-15.) "Leah, and Rachel . . . did build the house of Israel," (Ruth 4: 11) and the reassembling, and renationalization of the distinct people, gives incontestable answer as to time, manner, and agencies of the regensis outlined in the following prophecies:

Time Fixed

Fulfilled A. D. 65-70. At the time Jesus told them they would be "carried captive".

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth, a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor shew favour to the young: and he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land which the Lord thy God hath given thee. And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind. And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee: and thou shalt fear day and night, and shall have none assurance of thy life."—Deuteronomy 28: 49-52, 64-66.

After Judah's dispersion; after A. D. 70:

"And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edem and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them. And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry-shod. And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."—Isaiah 11: 10-16.

Israel is to be Saved Everlastingly

"But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end."—Isaiah 45: 17.

His salvation to come out of Zion:

"Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad."—Psalm 14: 7.

The Lord sets Israel's salvation in Zion.

"Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted, that are far from righteousness: I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory."—Isaiah 46: 12, 13.

Israel not saved when Paul wrote, A. D. 60.

"And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called, The children of the living God. Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved: For he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth. And as Esaias said before, Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrah. What shall we say then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith: but Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumbling-stone."—Romans 9: 26-32.

"For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery (lest ye should be wise in your own conceits) that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."—Romans 11: 25.

ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Romans 11: 26, 27.

"And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."—Luke 19: 41-44.

The Apostle Paul's teaching "Let every one of you" is quite similar to the teaching of latter-day revelation that "None are exempt from this law." So also his instruction "to lay by him in store" is in harmony with the statement of Malachi, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse."

When we were convinced baptism was essential, knowledge of what is written did not suffice; we were not disobedient to this injunction of prime importance. Often have we since gladly related that God was not slow in verifying his promises.

The lad that tries to accustom his new watch to hammer and pliers, does not realize the purpose of a timepiece, nor should he have bestowed upon him another of greater value.

As a church we are looking forward to the time when we shall, in deed and truth, in all things administer as stewards of the manifold blessing of God and enjoy the more abundant life.

"If ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

PALESTINE AND THE JEWS

Earnest, faithful, work in colonization is being planned by the Zionist organizations. The problem is a big one, but will be solved.

"It is a literal fact," declared a recent report of the Zionist organization of America, discussing the desire of Jews everywhere to emigrate to Palestine, "that, at the present moment, a large part of the Jewish people is possessed with an irrepressible impulse to strike its tents and march." However this may be, it certainly appears to be true that large numbers of Jews, from almost every country in the world, have already taken the first necessary measure to emigrate to Palestine as soon as the way shall be opened for them. It is indeed a world-wide movement, and the most hopeful feature about it is that the would-be emigrants are not restricted to a limited number of callings. Zionist organizations, in a number of countries, are receiving applications from men and women representing every conceivable vocation. Farmers, it is true, at present head the list, but the first 5000 applications to the American organization showed 134 occupations, including all forms of manual labor and professional and administrative callings.

Everywhere, the work of classification is being steadily carried on, and each week that passes sees additions being made to the builders, carpenters, bricklayers, joiners, locksmiths, blacksmiths, and all manner of skilled artisans, besides engineers, teachers, specialists of all kind, and civil servants. And, as has been said, they are coming from all quarters. No better illustration of the wide dispersion of the Jewish people could well be afforded than this recent report of the Zionist organization of America. In the United Kingdom, the United States, Russia, Poland, West Galacia, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Germany, Morocco, Algiers, to mention only a few countries, almost at random, the Jews are making earnest preparations to take advantage of their regained heritage. Some 500 farmers in Chile, Nicaragua, Venezuela, Mexico, and Brazil are represented in the groups that are preparing to emigrate.

In these circumstances, the report recently brought from Palestine by Doctor Solomon Lowenstein, head of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, is particularly interesting. Doctor Lowenstein does not allow himself to be betrayed into any undue the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

Before we can occupy upon this higher plane and receive the "golden" blessings of stewardships and consecration, we must appreciate the "Ingersoll" of tithes and offerings.

Thousands of Saints each year have demonstrated their belief in the law of tithing "by laying in store" as God has prospered them.

We are pleased to inform the Saints in the closing article of this series that many more not only know "it is written," but already this year have laid in store as God has prospered them, and from the reports received, we are assured that others will be not only hearers but doers of the word.

Our earnest prayer to God is that he will richly bless those who are laboring and sacrificing that his work be not hindered but be carried to the ends of the earth.

With an increasing number appreciating the privileges of assisting with their earthly substance, we move confidently forward with the assurance that our prayer will be answered.

expatriation as to the prospects before the country. Whatever is going to be achieved in Palestine is going to be achieved by earnest, faithful work. The land offers, he declares, no temptation for exploitation by foreign capitalists "eager to wrest great fortunes from undeveloped countries." Palestine, he insists, is indeed a land of great possibilities, but it is so essentially for "an industrious, thrifty folk, not desirous of large financial returns, but satisfied with moderate results and peaceful security of life."

Nothing, of course, can alter the natural fertility of Palestine. It is still, to-day, as it was 3,000 years ago, a land capable, at any rate, of being made to flow with milk and honey. Hundreds of years, however, of Turkish rule have brought about the reversion of whole stretches of country to their original desert state. As Doctor Lowenstein reports, terraces carefully built along the hillsides in ancient days, so that every available spot might be utilized for cultivation, have been ruined; irrigation works of great antiquity have been destroyed; whilst so utterly without any progress have been the centuries that, to-day, the fields are plowed and the crops are sown and harvested in the same primitive fashion that obtained in Bible times.

Already, however, the little outpost Jewish colonies which exist, organized on modern lines, are showing to what account the land can be turned. Increasing crops of oranges and lemons, of grapes and olives, of almonds and walnuts, and of many fruits and vegetables are to be seen on all hands; whilst simple but comfortable houses, schools, and synagogues, spring up wherever a colony plants itself. And this is only the beginning of things. Once the Palestine question is settled so as to render possible an actual movement toward realizing Mr. Balfour's message to Lord Rothschild, two years ago, favoring a national home for the Jews in Palestine, the world is likely to see some wonderful changes in a country which holds a unique place in the history of the human race.—Christian Science Monitor, December 18, 1919.

NEW FARM BUREAU

Farmers are insisting that the Department of Agriculture serve them; that it become a service bureau rather than merely a teacher or policeman. The result is that a new triangle of bureaus is being developed to meet the farmer's business needs. Three bureaus—Farm Management, Markets, and Crop Estimates—can together furnish the facts that will help farmers to answer the eternal questions: "What shall I grow and when and how shall I sell it?"—Barton W. Currie in The Country Gentleman.

COLLEGE WOMEN WILLING TO MARRY

Twenty years ago, the college woman was looked upon as a highbrow, and rightly so. Most of the college women entered a "career" rather than matrimony, so that some came to the conclusion that going to college unfitted a woman for marrying.

In a recent issue of The Delineator, Catherine Fullerton Gerould reports the returns from a questionnaire which she sent out to six hundred young women in the senior class of various women's colleges, and in reply to her questions received the following proportions of answers:

1. Do you plan to live at home next year?
Yes—247. No—361.
2. Are your plans for the future in harmony with those of your parents for you?
Yes—481. No—75. Partly—22.
3. If you could do exactly as you wanted, what occupation would you follow: Stage, business, writing, editing, law, medicine, etc.?

Business—130. Teaching—25. Writing—74. Medicine—58. Editing—62. Stage—72. Social Service—22.

4. How much money, approximately, did it cost you to dress, per year, in college?

Can make no estimate—41.

5. At how much money, per year, do you estimate the value of your service as a wife and housekeeper, provided you sacrifice a "career" to home-life?

Less than 1,000—79.

$2,000-3,000—50.

More than 3,000—11.

6. Which of the monthly magazines do you enjoy the most?
Atlantic—205. Others scattering.

7. How much money do you think a man and girl need to marry on?

Less than $1,000—7.

$2,000-3,000—260.

$3,000-4,000—75.

$4,000-5,000—13.

$5,000 or more—14.

8. How many children do you want?

More than 5—63.

9. If you follow a professional or business career, would you attempt marriage and motherhood in addition, if you met the right man?

Marriage but not motherhood—26.

10. Provided you could not have both marriage and a business or professional career, which would you sacrifice?

Undecided—22.

11. What do you think of women smoking?

Approve—122.

Disapprove—249.

Wrong for both men and women—74.

Individual matter—111.

Women as much right as men—47.

One fact that stands out in the above is that most women are acting in accordance with the wishes of their parents. Also that they are not planning to remain at home as parasites, but whether at home or away from home, they will undertake serious work for self-support and self-development.

But the most prominent factor is that 85 per cent of them are willing to give up a career for marriage and motherhood; while forty per cent are willing to attempt marriage and motherhood in addition to their professional or business careers.

Twenty-six said they would marry and continue their work, but would give it up and not attempt to continue in the case of motherhood.

Mrs. Gerould calls attention also to the number of children desired, and makes a comment that the figures are somewhat misleading, for those who answered one or two, added that they would be glad to have more if the family income justified a reasonable support.

This factor is clearly set out in the comment added to the questionnaire, that motherhood will depend upon the number of children which can be reasonably cared for and provided for properly.

This is clearly a different conclusion than that which would have been reached fifteen or twenty years ago. College education is becoming more of a matter of course.

College life better fits for home life as a wife and mother. At the same time it helps one to enjoy the life of the community and of the church and to add thereto.

We note a disposition to secure if possible the heavy manual work which any person with physical strength can do, to be done by others, and to give more of their time to social service, the church, and family life.

Why would it not be better for society as a whole, and for every part of it, if in addition to this family service the time of mothers be released to assist in other work for which they are especially prepared.

They are willing to sacrifice all for the generation to come. They are willing to perform all of the work of housekeeping and of service for the family. Is it best for the social order that they do so?

WHAT IS A CHURCH?

The Omaha Bee has been running a questionnaire on "What is a church," either a building, an assembly, a minister, an ideal, or what. One writer takes the position that it is the sermon, and continues:

"We can hear organ music at many of the moving picture shows. We may go into the church building almost any day, but when we know a man called of God has a specific message for us, yes, for me, a message that he has worked hours on, then one realizes that he is missing something if he does not catch every thought.

"This message sent by the Almighty God through his servant to his children here on earth, has for its foundation some great truth, some law of nature. It is the explanation and expansion of some important principle which deals with our very life, a principle which concerns principalities, rulers, and every form of government. The Bible was the first law, and every code of law formed since the Bible was first published is successful directly in proportion to its resemblance to the laws of the holy Scripture.

"The true minister of the gospel shows the relation of the Scripture to our every-day living. He points out the way of true success in this world, and aims to lead his audience to higher planes of thinking. The permanence and strength of any nation depends upon the percentage of its citizens which attend church.

"If you wish to do your neighbors and your community the most good, by all means be in church next Sunday morning and bring some one with you. The church is for you, not just for the saints, highbrows, and theological students. The church is the means by which we will control the foreign population. They should be ruled by the law of the Holy Nazarene and not by the policeman's club.

"In regard to the faults, there is no organization in existence which is perfect because they are all formed of individuals who are imperfect, but this should not prevent anybody from joining the church. It should, on the other hand, be a reason for anybody seeing this fault to join immediately, and after serious prayer and thought on the matter, talk it over with the minister and stewards, and try and correct it.

"Since the duty of the church is to elevate the mind to higher ideals, it can hardly encourage dancing, card parties,

HYMNS AND POEMS

A Backward and Forward Glance

BY FRANK E. CRANDALL

As I sit at my desk to-day,
I cannot but wonder why
That I have done as I have
In the years that have glided by.
Yet God in his infinite mercy,
His tenderness, truth, and love,
Knoweth whether I've done my best,
If I'm fit for the realms above.

Many times have I wandered away
From the path of duty and right,
Gone into the deepest darkness,
The darkness of blackest night.
But God, knowing my struggles,
And seeing my lonely way,
Has ever come to my rescue
And brought me the light of day.

I thank him many times over,
Yea, from the depths of my heart,
And now I trust that from hence
I shall always be doing my part.
My part in his infinite plan,
Though very small it may be,
Yet I know that God is e'er watching,
And trusting, and guarding me.

To duty, to friends, and to God,
More faithful I'll try to be;
And with the aid of his Spirit,
That more clearly my way shall see.
Then when my life shall be ended,
And I go to receive my reward,
I trust it shall be life everlasting
In the presence of my Master, the Lord.

It Is New Year's Day

BY A. H. ADAMS

It is New Year's Day.
And once again within our land
The home fires burn.
The sturdy manhood
Who responded to their country's call
Are home again.
And yet, not all.
For lying over there on Flander's field
Silently sleep the honored dead.
The sacrifice supreme they made
Will ever be a sacred monument
While time shall last,
And in the halls of memory and drinking as long as these are made a medium in which the workers of the underworld operate. There is nothing bad about dynamite and firearms in themselves, but they are not the safest things with which to amuse one's self.

"In conclusion, I might say the purpose of the church is to assist us in traveling successfully this rough road which we call life and to make us able to reach our goal—Eternal Life—and enable us to receive the inheritance incorruptible and undefiled that fadeth not away."

As the years shall come and go
Ever shall we honor them.

It is New Year's Day.
And once again the summons comes
To sturdy manhood.
Not to be marshaled
To the hell of war
By bugle sound.
But from that Higher Power
The call goes forth
To all the sons of Christendom
That we shall love; and live
Among our fellow men,
"To be to you as you should be to me."
The call is low, the words are sweet,
Spake by him who was
The Prince of peace.

It is New Year's Day.
And shall we not
With hope divine,
During the days of this year to come
Build as we never built before
Within the hearts of men?
Let each day bring forth
That which is worth while.
May envy, hate, and discord cease,
And virtue in each thought,
Give service to both God and man.
Let confidence once more restore
Where passion ruled, And from this day,
Forevermore love our fellow man.

Those who are interested in the Children's Home, which includes all of us, will be glad to learn that through gifts from various individuals, the children had a most successful Christmas. A year ago we were present and noted that there was scarcely a single substantial toy or plaything, and that there was very little of value for the children. This year, at the Christmas tree which was held on Christmas Eve, there were from four to six articles for each child, and all of them were of a substantial nature. The playthings that we noted were several games of ring toys, a doll for each little girl, additional gifts for the older girls, two sets of ten pins, tiddle de winks, authors, and other games; in fact a good supply of the things that children delight in. In addition to this mixed candy, a big stick of Christmas candy, mixed nuts, and an orange were among the gifts sufficient to supply each child. There were also substantial gifts of wearing apparel given where it was needed. There was not an excess, but a sufficiency for a good Christmas.

Over 100 American colleges and universities are either conducting or have conducted a campaign for the purpose of securing a larger endowment. Harvard has already raised $10,000,000. The purpose of these endowments is to meet the increased cost of living, especially on behalf of the faculties of these institutions, so that they may receive a more nearly adequate remuneration. Among other colleges conducting this campaign are such well-known institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, and Cornell Universities. In no instance, so far as known, has any of them considered raising the tuition rate. The reason for this is that they are determined to keep their doors open to rich and poor alike, and hence to keep the cost of education as low as is possible. Thus it follows the only solution is the endowment plan.

PASTORAL

The Sure Foundation

BY W. M. AYLOR

We have been intrusted with a special mission, and consequent responsibility. Our progress must be real and not a delusion.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 3: 11.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John 9.

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein."—Jeremiah 6: 16.

"Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

"And upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16: 18.

Notice the importance of these scriptures. Other foundation can no man lay. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son. Ask for the old paths and walk therein, and you shall find rest for your souls. No man can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity. Upon this rock I will build my church.

The nations have been prone to leave the commandments of God in all ages, and it would seem by this time that it should not require much argument to convince Bible believers that only God's way will be a success in building up the kingdom of God on earth. The past history reveals to us the mistakes the people have made in departing from God's plan, and when they did they were soon in darkness. God would let them wander in the wilderness a while, then send a messenger to call them back, start them out right again. This has had to be done a great many times. We notice when God speaks and calls them back he always points them to the same principles and doctrine, no change.

We as a people have been intrusted with this latter-day message, the restored gospel, and given a special commission to go into all the world with it, a preparatory work for the coming of Jesus the second time, a greater work not in the hands of any people, to preach the doctrine of Jesus Christ restored to all the world. And when I say "doctrine" of course I mean it in the fullest sense, and when it is fully preached it pertains to all that it takes to establish the kingdom of God upon earth. To know all about this subject it will take the best minds and study that can possibly be had. We must know the doctrine built upon the same foundations Jesus built, being full of love, having faith, hope and charity. Any man that makes a success of this work will have to give all the power, might and mind he has at his command. This is the highest type of education and progression. We must take the gospel to the world and not let the world come into the church.

Some think it is progression to pattern after the world. This kind of progression will lead the church off the rock, and the gates of hell will prevail against it. When Jesus was here in person he gave the people a pattern of the church and its works and commanded them to walk therein. But soon they

THE FORUM

The Gathering

BY E. L. KELLEY

"And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."

The idea of the gathering or settlement of the Saints in a proper part of the country was presented through divine instruction in the revelations as early as the first part of 1831, and in such wise and judicious language that there was no necessity for any one to have been misled by the instruction. The reading is as follows:

"Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord shall also be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 45:12.

This instruction is a general one given to the Saints at that early time touching settlement in the western country if they could do so in a proper way, and in connection with the instruction thereafter given they were directed not to be in haste with reference to this but move as people would in changing from one part of the country to another part where it was proper for them to purchase lands and make their homes.

There was given at the same time the suggestion that it would be for the blessing of the people in the future if they lived according to the law of Christ that they had received, for in the thirteenth paragraph the statement is made:

"And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee to Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."

Settlement Large and Extensive

This language shows without any doubt whatever that the settlement of the Saints called for is a large and extensive one and a place not merely a couple of miles square or a small city, but where accommodation is had as referred to in the text, "and there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."

I call attention especially to this because it indicates the nature of the gathering referred to and the settlement of the people and whatever has occurred in the past since the language was given out could not defeat the purposes of our heavenly Father in calling his children to the part of the country indicated by the language and of making settlement as provided and definitely stated at this time. In the year 1833 additional instruction is given making a little more definite the duties of the Saints and the manner and places of their settlement in the western country.

Section 98:9 continues this statement:

"A commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed, nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you; and in order that all things be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my Saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand."

This is the specific instruction touching the manner of settlement and the beginning of the gathering. It is not left to a particular town or city, it is made broad and this is in accordance with the first thought presented, relating to the gathering and settlement of the Saints. Now the instruction is "to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the Land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my Saints." Then more definitely placing the location, the statement continues: "All the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand." This is designating the counties round about Jackson County as proper places of settlement for the Saints, and but a thought on the part of the individual will show how wise the suggestion is and how much it must be to the Saints if they will follow it out.

In paragraph 10 we have the further instruction as to the manner of purchase and this is in entire keeping with the broad and definite statements referring to the location, "And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto got the spirit of worldly progression and commenced modernizing. About the year 312 the church had gotten so much like the world, Constantine concluded he could cast his lot with the church. He did so. The Christians greatly rejoiced at the wonderful gain they thought they had made, but history says Constantine brought the world into the church and paralyzed it. The highest type of progression is to stand by the doctrine of Christ, and if we make a success of this we won't have much time for worldly subjects.

"Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's." We have God's work to look after, not Cæsar's. Let the sectarian preachers follow these subjects of the world; that is their mission; we have a more important work. I stand for the restored gospel in the fullest sense, and believe there is no man in that church that has so much talent but that he can use it all for this work and then he will find he has not exhausted the subject. If he gets to dividing his talents with the world he will be a failure. Right now there is a great demand for Zion and its benefits. Where are we and who is able to solve the problem, and who is making the preparation for the people to gather? I think it is time for us to quit the worldly subjects and come and follow Jesus and his ways and the problem is solved. Don't be too anxious to get a title to pattern after the world. They don't count for much in the sight of God, but the title to be known by the church is to be full of love and filled with the Holy Ghost. "For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." "For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." By the wisdom of men you cannot find out God.

this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion." One year after this instruction was given to the Saints, Section 102, paragraphs 7 and 8 further instruction was given to the same people, in which they were also directed not to "talk of judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people; and behold, I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety, while you are saying unto the people, "Execute judgment and justice for us according to law, and redress us of our wrongs."

It is evident from the language that the Saints themselves were partially to blame for evils coming upon them. They had not looked upon the question of the gathering as an undertaking that was for the good of all people, if they would hearken and listen to the divine instruction of the Lord in their time and generation; but they were selfish and worked too much simply for themselves and so they are commanded again touching the purchasing of the lands and the statement is made: "All the lands of Jackson County, that can be purchased, and in the adjoining counties round about; for it is my will that these lands shall be purchased, and after they are purchased that my Saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given."

The Situation in 1902

The same broad and extensive thought is kept in mind with reference to the counties round about and in the adjoining counties. January 1, 1902, there was published in the official church organ beginning with page five, an article by the Bishopric calling attention of the Saints to the special duties required under the law of each and every one and specially setting forth the fulfilling of the law relating to surplus properties and the gathering up of means wherever it could properly be done among the churches of the Saints and placing the same in the hands of those who have been appointed to receive for the purchasing of the lands as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 63:10 and hereinbefore already set out. The Bishopric were in entire agreement touching the article. In the publication, Brother Blakeslee's name does not appear, but it is on account of the fact that the return of his signature to the publication was not received before the printing had been made.

Considerable controversy arose over the question at that time and it was discussed by the leading quorums of the church and finally settlement of the question was had by the revelation given April 18, 1902, and entered in Doctrine and Covenants 126:10. In this we are instructed as follows:

"In regard to the gathering, and the work of the Bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."

Four Years Later

This places the question of gathering just where the revelation directed previously, and the manner of settlement and gathering as previously outlined would be proper in the present time. Four years later we have additional direction touching this question and the application of the law as formerly stated and set forth in section 127:7:

"As the Saints have heretofore been instructed in reference to the gathering, they are now again admonished, that the gathering must not be done in haste, not without due preparation, and must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing River and in accordance with council and advice of the elders of the church whose duty it has been made to counsel and advise the Saints. The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided. It has the appearance of evil. Heed should be paid to the admonition of those who from time to time preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the Saints and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church and its ministrations abroad."

Not in Haste

The instruction then of our heavenly Father at the present time is that the gathering shall not be in haste and we should be careful not to mislead the people by presenting the matter in such a way as to misrepresent the object, instead of presenting it as our heavenly Father has directed in his word. His wish is that it may conduce to the good and salvation of the honest in heart everywhere, and we must have broad thoughts and feelings in our work to be looking after the children of our heavenly Father and for their safety and good whether they are called Saints or whatever name they may be under, for the promise is made in section 108:4 that the Gentiles may flee unto Zion and those of Judah unto Jerusalem and the mountains of the Lord's house, so that our heavenly Father is interested in all of his children who are willing to move in holy and righteous ways.

Another thought that all should be particular to move in accordance with is that expressed in the instruction found in section 58:12:

"And again, inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen sent forth, of all kinds, unto this land, to labor for the Saints of God. Let all these things be done in order. And let the privileges of the lands be made known, from time to time, by the bishop, or the agent of the church; and let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time."

Do not overlook the thought that it is not simply Saints or elders as they travel around that counsel touching the gathering, but the people are counseled by the Bishop or the agent of the church and we can all see how quickly contagion and disaster would come and anybody and everybody moving out and talking with reference to what people ought to do and agitating the mind to at once start and enter upon the gathering. They may be persuaded or induced to enter upon it possibly at the wrong time and at a time when it will injure the work of the church for them to gather instead of doing good.

To avoid this, instruction was given in that early time that some could gather or go up to Zion if they would arrange with the Bishop, but some could not go up unless it was by direction of the Lord through the president of the church. This will show that before any gather it must be done under divine direction and influences and all should be careful to move in such lines as they will be a help in the gathering instead of a burden, because if this is not done as is stated in the revelation it will bring contagion and destruction instead of building up the work.

Without Fear and Excitement

No member of the church will be justified by the Lord in moving to Zion through fear and excitement. Our heavenly Father does not wish the Saints to be drawn together under a spirit like that, hence we are taught that we shall not speak about judgment, that we shall not be in haste, but all things shall move in accordance with the direction given from time to time by officers immediately in charge of the work, or the elders in the conferences. This is to avoid running together from excitement. We should not overlook the fact that this work is the first work that is to be done toward the redemption, when the Saints shall have been prepared fully for settlement, the purchase of the lands properly located and arranging to enter more fully upon the work of redemption.

In carrying on the work of the church none of the rules laid down by the Master must be violated. Whatever others may do we are bound in our lives to carrying out the principles enunciated in the first discourse laid down. "In all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." In the instruction given June, 1829, the following statement is specifically urged:

"And now, after that you have received this, you must keep my commandments in all things; and by your hands I will work a marvelous work among the children of men, unto the convicting of many of their sins, that they may come unto repentance, and that they may come unto the kingdom of my Father; wherefore, the blessings which I give unto you are above all things. And after that you have received this, if you keep not my commandments, you cannot be saved in the kingdom of my Father."

In going out into the world as ministers representing the true faith, Jesus urges that it be done in this kindly spirit that he directed borne out in the lives of his children as before referred to. In the meeting of other church societies and working with them, the method of peace and good will to men is urged carried out. Section 16:4 in this language directed that the work be carried on: "Contend against no church save the church of the devil."

It is not the thought that in moving out in the world the minister should not represent the faith that he has to present to the people in contrast to the faith of other churches which he may meet, but it is the spirit of contention that we are warned against. Even earlier than this, the Lord instructs the people upon this kind of work. In 1828, section 3:15, the statement is clearly made that his gospel is being brought before the people in its fullness and for the purpose of establishing it that there may not be so much contention. The statement is made:

"Yea, Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention, concerning the points of my doctrine; and in these things they do err, for they do wrest the Scriptures, and do not understand them; therefore, I will unfold unto them this great mystery; for, behold, I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts; yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely.

"Behold, this is my doctrine; Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church."

Responsibility of the Eldership

The eldership in their work of preaching the gospel necessarily meet with all classes. They are sent out to reach all classes. To do this they are to preach the word. This is according to the direct instruction of the Apostle Paul in his time: "Preach the word." If a society or people should band themselves together and make direct attack upon the word that is preached, using all kinds of means to destroy it, that people and church would prove to be the work of Satan because they are moving on the lines adopted by Satan to establish his work. The elder who goes out must defend himself against attacks coming in that way. That is contending against the work of Satan or the church of Satan wherever it is found; but it in no wise authorizes the elder to present anything outside of the law that our heavenly Father has given for the overcoming of these errors and such spirit of contention. Meet the attacks of the adherents of the message of the evil power; overcome, but do not follow after the lines of opposition and contention that is to be found with the adherents; but in all things the minister of Christ must present his work in accordance with the divine injunction both in reference to other societies of religion and people of the world; as well as in urging against their methods of work by reference and in the spirit that he would have others do unto him.

The work of opposition to the true gospel of Christ is to be overthrown. The Saints are not the power that do this, however, neither are they to be afraid by reason of the things that they may hear concerning such work, for the destruction of the powers of darkness and evil is to be brought about directly by the hand of the Lord. We do not have to be alarmed for he has promised that his people will overcome if they are faithful; simply let them carry out the work of the promulgation of the gospel and the redemption of Zion as our heavenly Father has directed us to do.

The Spirit of Speculation

BY A. CARMICHAEL

Iowa is the center of a wild land boom. Prices have been soaring unusually high the past year. The warning here is timely.

"The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain, is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided. It has the appearance of evil."

So commands the Lord to his people.

What is speculation? Webster defines it as follows:

"Speculate—to enter into a business transaction or venture from which profits or returns are conjectural because the undertaking is out of the ordinary course of business. To purchase or sell with expectation of profiting by anticipated but conjectural fluctuations in prices."

Years ago the Lord said that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow: another way of stating the economic fact that for whatever we receive we must give an equivalent.

There is no such a philosophy in the Lord's plan as getting something for nothing.

"Thou shalt pay for that which thou gettest" is the law for every normal person.

Speculation is outlawed so far as the gospel plan is concerned. No Saint should be found engaging therein. Such who do may be certain that their ill-gotten gains cannot receive the approval of their heavenly Father.

The writer while away from Lamoni this last summer, was pained to hear of the speculation in land in the middle west, including Lamoni Stake—speculation, frenzied in its nature in farm land.

Every sane-thinking person cannot but decry such conditions for only trouble and sorrow follow in its wake.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, District of Columbia, sensing the gravity of this speculating in farm land, sent eight investigators to make a survey of the situation. The Government is alarmed, knowing that when the time comes for the final payment on such transactions that some one is going to suffer.

Wonderful, indeed, that the Lord should forewarn us! In all his administration he is tender and full of mercy!

No person can do wrong but he or some one else must pay the penalty. No person can get something for nothing, for sooner or later the law of compensation claims its own, and some one must pay the bill. What right has any person to do any act, the consequences of which will fall upon some innocent person?

If I receive $500 an acre for land worth only $300, I am getting $200 an acre for nothing. Some one must lose this amount. Who is it? The consumer as usual, for having paid $500 an acre I must make the acre bring me interest on my investment instead of upon $300, so am forced to charge the consumer a price high enough to make my investment pay. Or I can refuse till the acre of land for fear I may lose. By so doing I am helping to cut production and thus cause higher prices on account of scarcity. Again the consumer pays the bill.

There is no difference ethically, nor should there be legally, between profiteering in land or in food. In both cases the extortion ultimately falls upon the consumer.

Most speculators purchase a piece of land and pay down a small payment, hoping to sell before an important payment becomes due. The Department of Agriculture has advised the farmers who have land to sell to demand one third down as an initial payment, believing by this means to check the frenzied speculation in land. They also advise the farmer before selling to become thoroughly informed as to its value.

To the Saints holding land in the region round about, the Lord has spoken as given above. They should not speculate. This does not say that they should not buy nor sell. They can do both, but in so doing the element of speculation should be found wanting.

In such transactions the Golden Rule should obtain.

Let all who buy, whether from any of the brethren or from one not a member of the church, be willing to pay the owner its full value. If the land is worth $200 an acre, be willing to pay this amount. Give its equivalent. Do unto the seller as you would wish to be done by if you were the seller.

Then remember that the Lord has told us to claim and hold claim on our land. By so doing we shall be enabled to eventually redeem by purchase, the land of Zion.

The Farmers Union

BY J. E. WILDERMUTH

More about the Nonpartisan League which is stirring the Nation with its accomplishments in the Northwest.

The most successful Farmers Union ever known came to prominence first in the great wheat State of North Dakota, formed under the name of the Nonpartisan League, but it is not now Nonpartisan for it has actually stolen the whole of the Socialist party that used to be quite strong in the State, holding State and county conventions and having a regular separate State ticket together with the Republican and Democrat parties at the elections but since the birth of the Leagues, the Socialist ticket has been left entirely blank at the elections.

If the original intention of the league was to be nonpartisan, it has since become the strongest political party of the State.

This is a great age for organization and combination, the former being developed from the principle of usefulness with material things, and is necessary and even proper in the past of men and women for united effort. An organization does not become a combination until it uses its organization for the benefit of its members in such a way that it causes loss to those not of it and still keeps them outside.

The farmers of North Dakota felt that there had been organizations formed that had become combinations, and were not giving them the proper fruits of their labors so they formed an organization much like any labor union, but in this case they have gone so far with it that they have captured the politics of the State, and the reason is no secret, for in this State about eighty five per cent of the voters are farmers, and when they decided that the laws had been made by men who were not farmers, they decided to put men in the offices of the State who were farmers and would make the constitution and the laws to fit the farmers needs.

It was an easy task, if the farmers could be unionized like other kind or labor has been organized, so that they would actually stick together. But they were about the last of any special class of workers to find a kind of organization that would hold them together to any great extent or purpose. And the reason is apparent, for some of them are actually capitalists, some landlords, and many of them are employers hiring one or more men, many of whom already hold membership in some labor union.

Just as long as the farmers of North Dakota hold together they can control the politics of the State and most everything else they wish, and the measure of the real usefulness of their organization will be told by the extent that it proves to be an organization working for the benefit of all classes of people, but wherever it forgets the rights of others and becomes a combination there it will prove a detriment.

Under usual conditions a single State can hardly arbitrarily take over the banks, flour mills, packing plants, etc., in its limits. But in this case the constitution has been revised, making it possible for the State to buy or establish such mills and plants, and establish a great "Bank of North Dakota" with its subsidiary banks throughout the State.

The great bank has been established and the work of its extension begun. One—though not large—flour mill has been purchased. That is about as far as this part of the program has gone. State hail insurance has been inaugurated for the past season, though no losses settled as yet, as money will need to be borrowed to do so or wait until taxes are paid. A new system of taxation is to begin with this year, which proposes to make the speculator holding land for higher prices pay as much as the man who has valuable improvements and building on his land, and the city people pay a larger portion of the taxes.

Much more power is given the governor of the State than under the program of the old parties; in fact he is made a part of almost every important board of control.

The new program has not begun to operate far enough to date to find if it will prove a lasting benefit or not. So far about all the results obtained have been the bitter attacks of other and outside politics and combinations, and increased taxes because of the expense of putting the changes into operation.

Only two things can destroy this organization of the farmers of this State; one is, if it shall become a combination, and which may take a long time; and the other is traitors in its own ranks, especially among the leaders, which would be a much quicker process.

In Leslie's Weekly for November 8, Paul V. Collins discusses the Nonpartisan League. He points out clearly the manner in which the farmers were exploited by those controlling the grain monopolies and the various serious grievances which they had. This was taken advantage of, he states, by A. C. Townley and others, who in 1915 organized the Nonpartisan League. The first part of this article is devoted to the discussion of the trial of Townley by a jury of farmers in Jackson County, Minnesota, at which last June he was found guilty of sedition.

OUR PUBLICATIONS

AT THE FRONT

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

Not often is an author accorded all the privileges in the process of getting out his book that Brother J. H. Anthony has had as author of Birds of a Feather recently put on sale.

As his own typist he wrote the story directly on the type-writer. Needing illustrations, he used his own camera to get the photographs for the pictures. When it was being set for book form after running serially in Stepping Stones he operated the keyboard of the linotype (being an expert operator and machinist) for an hour or so. As foreman of the composing room of the Herald Publishing House he had to do with the making up of the type into pages, arranging contents, locking the forms, locating position of illustrations, selection of cover stock, etc., to the completion of the book—details seldom within the capabilities of the average author.

He is a son of the late R. J. Anthony, one of the well-known missionaries for the Reorganization. As is typical of a missionary's son, he is a versatile young man, playing several instruments and capable of teaching any band or orchestra instrument. Is a competent harness maker, having worked several years at the trade. He is leader of the local band and of the Latter Day Saint orchestra, which plays at each session of the Sunday school and on other special occasions.

In the last issue of December and the first one in January, Stepping Stones will carry a story from his pen entitled, "The awakening of Thad."

Most of his literary efforts have been confined to Stepping Stones, though he has done some excellent musical compositions. One time he noted an offer in a pet stock journal for a prize of a New Zealand Red rabbit for the best article on raising that particular kind of hare. Though he had never had anything to do with the handling of such creatures he wrote a fine article on the subject and won the prize.

THE ENSIGN FOR 1920

Late announcements for Zion's Ensign promise us the best missionary volume ever issued by the church. The first issue of the new year begins with one of a series of four excellent articles on angelic ministrations, by Elder Isaac M. Smith. The same writer will treat other vital subjects in his unapproachable way throughout the year.

Church news will be featured. Condensed branch and stake letters from principal locations, of interest to individuals and the church in general.

Editorial articles will be placed before the readers, from such men as John W. Rushton, Walter J. Haworth, Isaac M. Smith, Walter W. Smith.

Gospel sermons selected from those of leading and powerful preachers on timely and interesting topics, and sermons of a nature to educate towards belief in the most essential features of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Missionary authorities will contribute each week an article giving the news from the field and the developments of the mission work—a most interesting department.

SANDHEDENS BANNER

Sandhedens Banner is a little magazine issued in the interests of the Scandinavian Saints in the Norske language for the benefit of those unable to read English. Its editors are Peter Anderson and Peter Muceus, the latter having active oversight and responsibility.

Its price is fifty cents a year, those wishing to see that

RAIN SENT IN ANSWER TO PRAYER

In connection with my visit to Hilo mentioned in my letter to you of yesterday, I may say that its purpose was to join with the Saints in offering prayer for rain which the part of the island where I am staying was sorely in need of. In fact, the cattle on this ranch where I am temporarily living were beginning to die and the situation was beginning to look desperate.

At my request, Brother McConley changed the preaching meeting to a prayer service. Elders McConley, Etzenhouser, and the writer, occupied the stand. The opening prayer was offered by the writer and a few verses selected by me were read by Brother Etzenhouser from the Book of Mormon. After a word or two by Brother McConley, I addressed the meeting briefly stating the purpose of my visit and describing the conditions on the ranch and in the district whence I had come. I then asked the members to occupy the time or a good portion of it in prayer beseeching the Lord to send the much-needed rain. There was a fine spirit present and fervent prayers were offered the members entering right into the spirit of the meeting. Four prayers were offered by sisters and five by brother members besides Brother McConley and Brother Etzenhouser. Some of the members were on their knees fully thirty minutes. I exhorted them to continue praying at home and also to come fasting and praying to the Wednesday evening prayer service. I also tried to do my part here. This morning when I awoke at 5 o'clock the first thing I heard was the rain falling on the roof of the house and it rained steadily for four or five hours thus saving the situation for this ranch on which there are about twenty thousand cattle. Brother McConley told me over the telephone this morning that Brother Hapai the branch priest had said in the fore part of the week that rain would fall here on Thursday,

AUTUMN LEAVES

In the December number of Autumn Leaves is an unusual article on Yellowstone National Park, by Augustine Dwyer, profusely illustrated, and told in his charming manner.

STEPPING STONES

"Nipmuk" is a pleasing combination of Lamanite local color and Latter Day Saint sentiment, a story that will appeal to every red-blooded boy. It is running serially in Stepping Stones, written by Fred W. Smith.

In the last number of December and the first one in January are pleasing little articles on Indian mounds and western wrens.

OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO CANADIANS

In the January number of The Journal of History is the beginning of a series of articles on "Memoirs of experiences in the work in Ontario, Canada," by Elder John Shields. It is reminiscent in character and contains much to delight our readers in the Dominion on the north.

that is to-day. So we are feeling thankful and rejoicing in the goodness of the Lord.

I go down to Honolulu next week to await the arrival of my son who is due there from the coast on December 22.

(From a letter addressed to President F. M. Smith by G. J. Waller, dated at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, December 4, 1919.)

FAVORABLE IMPRESSIONS IN THE ISLANDS

I have just returned from a trip to the lower islands, in company with Brethren Rushton, Hanson, and Ellis, on which we were privileged to visit the islands of Kaukura, Niau, Fakarava, Takapoto, Apatuka, and Aratua. I am very glad that I had the privilege of seeing so much of the mission at such an early date as it gives me a clearer insight of the conditions now existing upon which I can begin to plan future work. I am favorably impressed with the high character of the people, considering their environment and opportunities, especially of the priesthood.

I fully appreciate that the mastering of the language is a matter of early consideration, yet there are other important matters which claim our attention, such as the improving of Mission headquarters, etc., in regard to which my position is clearly set forth in a letter directed to the Presiding Bishop. I am glad that in the consideration of these important matters we have had the association of two of the members of the Quorum of Twelve.

The means of transportation is sorrowfully discouraging. The waiting for boats often occupies more time than that required to do the work in hand, and the venturing out at sea in a four or six ton cutter is not a position to be envied. However, I am not troubled with seasickness, which is certainly a blessing to one laboring in this mission.

Wife and I are comfortably located for the present in a two room apartment which we have rented partly furnished. We begin to realize the opportunities for service and confidently expect by the help of our Heavenly Father to help in the great cause of humanity.

Community plans are rife and are one of the signs of the present time. One being organized in Omaha provides for the raising of a large fund for the purchase of a large tract of land on which two hundred couples will be placed, to each of whom will be assigned one hundred acres, so all the community will combine in operating the whole farm in a joint venture. This will provide in addition to homes, food, clothing, and a small amount of cash; educational facilities, including farm management and special instruction in farm progress. It is intended that within ten years at most each couple will have paid for their hundred-acre tract, and it will then be valued at approximately twenty-five thousand dollars. When it is paid for they will receive a deed. This is of interest because of some similarities it possesses to the plan laid down in the Doctrine and Covenants, by which the whole community will help the individual, and the individual works for the community, and will in the end receive his inheritance, which he has been continually assisted to secure for himself.

A plan is on foot to have college faculties and students vote on the League of Nations and peace treaty. Six separate questions are submitted. It is expected from thirty-five to forty thousand will vote simultaneously in the various colleges and universities on January 13. This should show an interesting aspect of public opinion.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Have You Heard Our Study Plans?

For some time past, the executive committee of the Auxiliary has recognized the need of an additional course in child study which would feature strongly the normal development of the child, year by year. The course we have been using, based upon the Forbush textbook, is an excellent one, and is more and more appreciated; but it treats largely upon the psychology of the child. This is most necessary for all mothers to study, and we urge it upon them, but it is also necessary that we go farther back and begin with prenatal conditions, since it is the conceded right of every child to be well-born.

We are now prepared to offer an additional course in child study, which we believe will be received with enthusiasm because of the timely and scientific information it contains, and the very convenient form in which it will be issued.

No less have we felt the need of a prescribed course of training for relief and service workers, and we feel very fortunate in having secured the course we can now offer, dealing as it does with relief work that is constructive, and adapted largely to the peculiar conditions and needs of our church work. The plan heretofore used, suggestive of such activities as the social needs of a branch require, will be supplemented by this special course of training. The latter is designed to be used by women somewhat relieved of home cares, and consecrated to the uplifting of humanity, both in the church and out.

It is hoped that in these main courses, study will not be confined to simply the lesson provided, but that in every branch there will be one, two, or three members, who will use thoroughly the reference books listed with each lesson, qualifying themselves as teachers, and preparing to answer the call of the church for such service.

Other features for study classes have been suggested, and we now call your attention to the various subjects to be treated, and the form in which it will be available. In the new year book which is being prepared, all courses will be placed with their respective bureaus; but we have arranged them in the outline presented below, in a manner to assist you in selecting that for which you wish to subscribe.

Outline of Study Courses

- Group 1. Study Courses in Leaflet Form.

In Explanation of Our Outline

a. Child Study: May we try to impress upon your minds the importance we feel should be attached to the universal study of childhood? The greatest heritage we can bequeath to the next generation is sound bodies, and in consequence thereof, sound minds. When you read the above outline, and notice the courses in child study, please do not turn away and say, "I am not interested in that now; my children are in the teen age," or, "My children have grown up and gone away." Such a vision of our mission in life is too small. Rather let us be equipped with knowledge that we may disseminate, either in conversation, or by putting our literature in the hands of those who need it. For the sake of her who may be neighbor or friend, for the sake of the one whose ideals may not be high, will you not equip yourself to be teacher and friend? Can we not all look back and see the mistakes we have made? Do we wish that others may avoid the errors of ignorance which are responsible largely for the appalling rate of infant mortality? Think of it! "One out of every eight babies born, dies during its first year of life." "Half the deaths of babies under one year are preventable, and, at the last analysis, the chief cause of these deaths is ignorance. For every baby who dies, five endure unnecessary sickness, and many are handicapped for life as a result." "No fact has been more satisfactorily and conclusively proven than that a marked decrease in the number of infants' deaths has followed intelligent efforts directed to the education of mothers."—From American Association for Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality.

"A baby who comes into the world has less chance to live one week than an old man of ninety years, and less chance to live one year than one of eighty."—Bergeron.

Make a survey of your branch, and enlist the mothers to join in this most important of studies. Invite all women to come, and to those mothers who have little children and find it impossible to attend your class, see to it that the secretary of the class sends regularly, the lessons you receive. Subscribe for enough copies to provide for this need. Without doubt this course will be a most valuable collection of facts upon the subject of the child. It is the result of extensive research work, and adaptation is made to the needs of our church women. Every conclusion has had the searchlight of truth thrown upon it, and we feel it is destined to bless not only the children of to-day, but those of generations yet unborn. The course has been prepared by a trained teacher, mother, and withal, a consecrated Saint, who has received a vision of the needs of young parents in properly caring for their children. She makes the suggestion that each lesson, as it is received, be placed in a ring notebook binder; perforations will be made in the leaflet for this purpose. A little later we will advise you where the notebooks of proper size may be obtained, and the price.

b. Latter-Day Motherhood: No mother should miss the inspiration she will receive from the reading of these articles, which will deal with the high and holy calling of motherhood. To be a mother in these troublous and pleasure-mad times is a task which calls for the persistent maintenance of ideals—ideals which are the outgrowth of the adoption of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In a late book by Margaret Slatery, called "The Second Line of Defense," she says: "The conflict to-day is not a conflict between men and men, nation and nation. It is far more than that. It is the deadly struggle between ideals. For the sake of the "second line of defense" every intelligent parent should join heart and voice, in a mighty call to the nation to educate, to train, to guide, and when necessary, to compel all parents to do their full duty by the children they have brought into the world." In the ranks of the "second line of defense" are the boys and girls of to-day.

Shall not the mothers in Israel arise to the demands of a great crisis as did Deborah of old and manifest to their children that "the Lord he is God"? Youthful hearts and minds need the fortifications of character which must be builded from childhood up.

c. Training in Relief and Service Work: The proper investigation of the conditions of those unfavorably situated in temporal matters, discloses more avenues of real help than does the immediate relief spontaneously afforded. This course is applicable to the use of workers in our largest branches and must be adapted by those working in smaller branches. Where the need of financial or domestic adjustment is in evidence, any information obtained should be turned over to the division of the branch or the bishop's agent or bishop. Friendly visiting, tactful teaching of sanitation, personal cleanliness, cooking, home management, etc., may be carried on with good results by relief and service workers.

It is not improbable that the need of a social worker with a corps of assistants will become evident in every branch. Such services should in no way conflict with the duties of the branch officers.

Real social investigation work should be carried on by a very small committee, but a number of assistants may be assigned certain phases of the work on which to report.

d. Food and the Body: A course teaching the nature and uses of foods. All women training for relief and service work should take this course in connection with the relief and service course.

Group 2:

a. "Mothers and Teachers Problems," and d, "Home Economics" are accompanied by typewritten questions drawing out the various points of the lesson. b and c, "Home Nursing" and "First Aid." We have but to reflect upon the conditions of a year ago to be convinced of the necessity for every woman to "be prepared" to care for the sick should another epidemic visit our country, or sickness of any kind enter our home.

a. Parliamentary Law. Since the home and its individual members are directly affected by civic conditions, state laws and the national administration, it is necessary for women to be alert in public affairs, for largely upon them rests the responsibility of the welfare of the family. Organizations of women are a necessity. They serve as a medium through which the individual woman may register her protest against, or her support to, any cause. Every woman should know how to call a mass meeting and conduct an orderly procedure of same, how to affect a permanent organization and carry on its business to the accomplishment of the work undertaken. She should learn how the rules of parliamentary law are applied in the transacting of business of an organization. This course has been especially prepared for the Woman's Auxiliary.

b. "Woman in Politics." If we would have a change in world politics, it can only be brought about by the combined efforts of both men and women. The entrance of women into politics should add a superior quality of social thinking. Since they will soon be called upon to demonstrate their capacity for political responsibility, there should be a preparation for it. This course is prepared by one of our women of the church who is well qualified to give us an insight into the political situation of to-day. We urge all classes to use it the coming year.

c. "Physical Culture." We have been asked to supply a course of this character and have been able to secure one of our professional women of the church to prepare it. Every woman should understand what intelligent exercise does for the body. The daily routine of housework involves considerable activity, but it is not properly distributed among the various organs of the body. The blood-making and blood-purifying organs should have exercise as well as the limbs. "The most effective and essential service that exercise renders the body is the building of vitality and the increase in reserve energy that attends it." (From Physical Culture.) Subscribe for this course and maintain the equilibrium of well-rounded lives.

d. "Social Hygiene." To help promote a purer public sentiment and a knowledge of ethical, biological and vital truths is the object of this course.

Group 4:

The papers outlined in this group may be used in any class, open meeting, district convention or reunion. They are all especially prepared by our own church writers.

Group 5.

We feel, and we are sure that you feel, that every woman in the church needs as broad an education as her time and capacity will admit, and therefore we offer you the services of an educational advisor who will, upon your request, direct you, and recommend such courses, books, readings etc., as will meet your need. May we here emphasize the thought that is being so often expressed, that the great need in the church is for leaders—specialists—in various lines of service for the preparation of the building up of Zion? If you have the willingness to qualify along some line but are not situated so that you can attend school or college why not begin with the Woman's Auxiliary and continue until such time when larger opportunities will open for you? Make an honest survey of your capabilities and that for which you think you are adapted and then start to qualify therein. Do not feel however that you are restricted only to that for which you are adapted; be governed by what your convictions tell you is needed. The joy of the service you will be able to render later on, will bring you compensating peace and satisfaction.

The name of the educational advisor will be announced soon.

Our Monthly Programs

Once a month a program for one meeting will be published in the Woman's Auxiliary column of THE SAINTS' HERALD. It is desired that all local organizations will arrange to carry it out, even though it may require an extra meeting. The popular courses will receive due attention but there are other subjects that should interest us as well and some of these will be used in this special program. Send for material for this program.

The program as outlined will vary as to length of time to complete it. It will depend on the number of courses taken simultaneously and the frequency of meetings, etc. It is presumed that every class will have a meeting, at least, once a week. Classes may select the courses they will take up and make their own arrangements as to time of study. In large branches where there are several classes, more than one subject may be taken at a time, but it oftener occurs that all present wish to study the same subject. Subjects may be alternated from week to week.

For our young girls the third edition of the Oriole Book is ready. This contains some revisions and a new department devoted to indoor and outdoor games. These are often wanted for frolics, socials, etc. For the Temple Builders a manual will be ready, we anticipate, very soon. Are the girls in your branch organized for development and devotion to the church service? Have they been impressed with the thought to look after "some other girl"?

Where to Send for Study Material

All material will be in charge of Mrs. J. A. Gardner, publicity chairman. Address 711 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri. We would prefer to send out material once a month which would contain lessons and subject matter for four weekly meetings.

Cost of Material

A small price is charged for the Courses contained in Group 1. All other material will be sent without charge. Group 1, courses in leaflet form, ten cents per dozen per lesson. Price of text books as follows: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush, $1.25. Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick, National Red Cross, 60 cents. First Aid, National Red Cross, 40 cents. Foods and Household Management, Kinne and Cooley, $1.10.

How to Introduce the Work of The Woman's Auxiliary.

First obtain the consent of the branch president to organize, then write to the organizer of your district, stating your desire. She will either come to you, give you advice, or send you printed instructions on "How to organize." Should there not be an organizer yet appointed in your district, write to the publicity chairman, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, for the printed instructions. When you have organized, advise the organizer at once, or the general secretary, Mrs. A. Morgan, 1221 South Noland Street, Independence, Missouri. Please note following organizers who have been appointed thus far this year.

Shall we not with a definite course before us, take up our work with earnestness and all diligence, moving forward with "knowledge that is power," to the accomplishment of the great work before us?

For the executive committee,
MRS. D. J. KRAHL, President.

LETTERS

Society Island Mission News

[Following are some brief extracts from an epistle by Apostles Rushton and Hanson to the mission conference of the Society Island Mission, at Apataki, Tuamotuas December 17, 1919.—EDITORS.]

To the President, Ministry, and Members of the Church in the Islands Mission Assembled in Conference at Apataki, Tuamotuan Archipelago; Greeting: The late World War, in which so many nations were involved, causing much bloodshed, sorrow, and desolation, was generally accepted as being a fulfilling of many of the prophecies contained in the Word of God. In these events, which the Latter Day Saints had been taught to expect, there was seen the nearness of the coming of the Lord. With the close of the war and the signing of the armistice, the acceptance of the terms of peace brought not only the period of reconstruction but opened up the beginning of a new era. The church was awakened to the need of preparing much more earnestly and energetically to meet the new conditions and demands, developing and pressing on all sides.

The work of the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric and the late General Conference was largely concerned with these matters, and arranging a program which would prepare for the establishment of Zion in a practical way, and educating the people generally for the work of advancing the interests of the Kingdom of God. To reach this end, it is highly imperative that the Saints everywhere shall cultivate a deeper spirituality, a fuller consecration to the will of God, and devote themselves more strenuously to his service.

With the opening of doors of opportunities in various places, the redemption of Palestine from age-long misrule, and the growing spirit of brotherhood among the nations, there comes the call for more laborers, for bigger programs, for a more accurate understanding of the problems and questions before the church both at home and abroad. In order to be ready for such a development the Bishopric has worked very hard and supplemented by the splendid response of the Saints the world over, the church has been placed in a position to carry on the work of evangelizing the world on a more efficient scale than ever before. In addition to this, an effort has been made to put the church institutions upon a basis which would produce more effective results. The foundation for the redemption of Zion has been laid, so that this much looked-for event is no longer a dream of prophecy but begins to assume practical form; and, the "set time to favor Zion" is at hand.

There has also been put into operation a scheme for preparing young men of the priesthood for work in the mission fields. The joint council has sent men to Europe and Palestine, and the undersigned of the Twelve, have been sent to these islands, New Zealand and Australia, for the purpose of helping the work, stimulating faith and action, and becoming acquainted with the needs and opportunities for the advancement of the cause of Christ in these places, and also investigating new openings in other points, as the Samoan Islands, calling finally at the Hawaiian Territory.

Bishop Albert V. Karlstrom has been appointed to take charge of the financial and temporal affairs of the work in this island mission. We heartily commend our brother to you and ask for him your faith and confidence as he shall perform his duties among you.

Since our arrival in Papeete, September 21, we have visited Tahaiti, Moorea, Kaukura, Niau, Fakarava, Takapoto, Apataki, and Arutua. We hereby express our heartfelt thanks to all the Saints of the mission for the many kindnesses and generosity which invariably have been shown to us. Your various gifts are deeply appreciated and we have received them as tokens of your love and confidence for and in us as servants of Jesus Christ and his church. We assure you that we are sorry that our duties call us away and prevent us being with you in your coming mission conference. However, we take this means of greeting you and wishing you God-speed in his work. We also convey to all the Saints and friends of the church in these islands the love and goodwill of the church in America, especially from the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and bear witness to you of the deep interest of all in your welfare and their anxiety for the advancement and success of the work of the Lord. We have already written and told of your kindly reception of us as representatives of the church.

We also express to you the feelings of grief and distress we have towards all who have suffered because of the late way and the succeeding epidemic. We honor and esteem the memory of the fallen heroes and extend our sympathy to those who have been bereaved. The whole church was moved with pity when the news of the death of Sister Ellis reached us, and at this time we desire to pay tribute to her splendid work, her loyal devotion and heroic sacrifice. We have had many evidences that she has not worked in vain, and though dead, Sister Luita is yet speaking in this mission. We also express the church's heartfelt tribute to our sister's work in life and death, and extend to our Brother Clyde the universal sympathy of the church in the loss of his companion and also the thanks of the church for his brave stand by the post of duty in the face of such overwhelming sorrow.

As we have moved among you the evidences of the good and substantial work of the many devoted men and women whom the church has sent to these islands from the early days, have been seen. We are glad to know that their names and works have a place in your hearts and homes.

Many of these servants of the Master have long since passed to their reward and others are still with us and are laboring in other places, and we are sure that the knowledge of your affectionate remembrance of their splendid work will be encouraging to them. . . .

As a result of our visit and a consideration of the needs and opportunities of the work here in the islands, we have developed the following program of activities to which we invite your attention and for which we ask your support.

First. There is urgent need of new headquarters for the church in Papeete.

Second. A new printing press and adequate equipment by means of which the news of the restored gospel can be spread abroad not only through the Society Islands and the Tuamotuan Archipelago but to all the Polynesian peoples more effectively.

The Presidency

TO GENERAL CONFERENCE APPOINTEES

The First Presidency desires that all General Conference appointees who contemplate attending the next General Conference shall be in Independence on March 22. Our purpose in making this request is that the conference appointees shall attend a series of lectures to be given at the rate of two or three each day, which lectures shall cover the ground covered by the lecturers before the class in Religious Education at Graceland College, with some additional matters provided for by another course of lectures.

The Presidency issues this call after due consultation with other church authorities concerned, and we are pleased to say that the proposition has met with a hearty response from all who have been consulted.

The Presidency also desires that all conference appointees

Third. A new hymn book is very much needed so that the growing talent for music may be developed and the native ability directed to the songs of Zion instead of the old tunes and songs associated with past days and events separated from the gospel of Christ.

Fourth. With the attempt to organize the mission on a more effective basis, by the appointment of Bishop Karlstrom, we are hopeful that the church will be able to appoint several more missionaries to work in this field. We also look forward to the time when the native ministry will be able to take their place with the above brethren in this wider and more serious missionary enterprise. To do this, it is very necessary that all should qualify by more diligent study and especially by personal consecration to the ideals of our gospel.

We earnestly invoke the blessing of God upon your conference services and trust all the attending people will receive grace and strength and as they return to their home branches they will carry with them the influence of the conference associations for good.

Again expressing our thanks and appreciation for the many tokens of your love and confidence, with best wishes to all, we remain, your servants for Christ's sake, who contemplate attending this course of lectures shall notify them at the earliest opportunity.

By concurrence of the Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric, Elder E. L. Henson has been appointed to the Southwestern Texas District, local.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Mrs. Maggie Macgregor as an unordained missionary to the State of Iowa for the balance of the conference year.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

The Bishopric

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT

Due to the transfer of Bishop A. V. Karlstrom to the Society Islands Mission, we hereby appoint Brother F. L. Freeman, 1013 West First Street, Webb City, Missouri, as Bishop's agent of the Spring River District.

Brother Freeman's business training is an added qualification for this work.

Branch solicitors will kindly send their January and all future reports direct to Brother Freeman.

We feel confident that the Saints of the Spring River District will be glad to learn of this appointment, knowing the interest which Brother Freeman has manifested in the Master's work.

Christmas Offering Returns: Sunday schools will kindly forward at as early a date as possible the returns for their 1919 Christmas Offering effort to the undersigned. Canadian Sunday schools will please send their Christmas Offerings to the Bishop's Agent of their district, giving him the name of the Sunday school as it is to appear in the Blue Stepping Stones.

We urge all schools to begin their 1920 effort immediately, as the schools which make an early start will be the ones that will run up the best returns.

The Christmas Offering has opened a channel for the accomplishment of great good. None are called upon to do much; but by the cooperation of all, the results are surprising.

Fraternally yours,
B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Church Secretary

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents of stakes, districts, and branches not in districts. These officers are requested to have their secretaries forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1920 to President Frederick M. Smith, box 255, Independence, Missouri, as soon as practicable, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed by conferences held in the fall or winter should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in stake, district, or branch, and names of its delegates and alternates, signed by the president and secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are unnecessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; scattered and absent members may be included in the number; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the Presidency's office. Credentials should be made upon the official blank, for proper filing and ready reference.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restriction of delegates voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

Apostle William Aylor is now in Texas, where he will spend most of the time between now and General Conference. He expects to visit San Antonio, as well as other points in Texas. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths is now in Independence, in connection with his work in the quorum and joint council. He has visited and labored at various points, including Saint Louis, Missouri. Apostle J. A. Gillen expects soon to return to Michigan and continue the work which was interrupted by his return to deliver a series of lectures to the missionary class at Graceland College, in the early part of December.

We have recently heard the report that as a result of President Smith's visit to Oklahoma, several hundred Indians have offered their names for baptism. We must recognize that this would mean a great responsibility on our part. Baptism alone is not enough. Instruction must follow. And in addition to that, work to protect their interest. We cannot but rejoice at the progress being made.

Work is now under way for the early completion of a book on the organization and general details of the Temple Builders. On the 30th a meeting was held in Lamoni looking to that end. Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, general supervisor, with Alice Myrinda Smith of Kansas city, and Estella Wight, of Lamoni, official "mother" of the local organization, are working as a committee to formulate the necessary statements, attend to the mechanical details, etc. We wish them abundant success, for such a book will have the same sustaining effect as does the Boy Scout manual for the boys, and the Oriole Book for the younger girls. The local Temple Builders have recently organized among themselves clubs for sewing, home decorations, cooking, and dramatic art. It is likely that in the new arrangement the first three will be combined under the head of home builders' department.

The General Religio Society is planning a Religio Exposition during the coming General Conference at Independence. A program is to be rendered each evening from the 7th to the 15th and speakers of the best possible type are being secured to stimulate interest and inspiration in subjects which broaden and deepen the soul. The slogan of the event is "Meet me at the arena."

The young people of Omaha and Council Bluffs have united in a New Year's watch party for the evening of December 31, at which time they will indulge in the usual social activities of our young people. By request, a letter was sent them by Floyd M. McDowell, to be read on the occasion.

H. S. Salisbury, recently assistant church historian, was elected on the library committee of the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of Missouri, at the twenty-sixth annual meeting in Saint Louis, November 13.

Sister Abbie Horton, of Independence, recalls in her girlhood seeing General Tom Thumb and his wife, in Boston. Also she recalls seeing Louis Kossuth, and hearing him speak on the Boston Commons on behalf of Polish independence.

During the college holiday season Elder Floyd M. McDowell made a trip to visit his parents at Plano, Illinois, and on the evening of the 26th delivered a lecture at that place on "Religion and the social crisis." On the way he stopped at Davenport, Iowa, preached in the morning and lectured in the evening, besides holding some round table meetings on church problems. On his return trip he stopped at Burlington, where he preached and lectured. He reports excellent responses at these places, and much interest in the problems before the church.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Toronto, Ontario. A. F. McLean has again been elected president of the branch. The theater meetings at the Allen Theater are proving a success again this year. On the 21st the Saints were agreeably surprised to find the attendance above the average, even though it was the holiday season. The versatile T. W. Williams waxed eloquent on "Why Christmas?" and at one stage in his lecture the whole audience arose en masse and greeted each other with a handshake.

Everyone seemed to enjoy it. California lost a good politician. (Los Angeles papers please copy.) R. C. Russell was present on Sunday the 14th and delivered an excellent address. He created confidence by his faith in those at the head of affairs. Since print paper is scarce, we must desist and come again.

Lamoni, Iowa. The series of gospel sermons being preached each Sunday evening is being well attended. J. W. Wight preached his third and concluding sermon on "The Restoration," and other subjects will be taken up. The Religio is officered for the coming year by F. M. McDowell and Paul N. Craig and Forest Roberts, all reelected. The plans for the year, as outlined by the president, are that in conformity with the recent suggestions of the general Religio executive, all social and recreational functions of the branch community are to be under the auspices of the Religio. Under this general responsibility, the Religio in Lamoni will hold sessions at 6.45 each Sunday evening at the church for lesson study only. A very large number voted in favor of this. Each Friday evening moving pictures or other educational programs will be provided at the college, paid for by subscription. (The present course of seven subjects in from three to eight reels cost about seven cents per individual per evening.) Each Tuesday evening there will be Boy Scout meetings and each Thursday evening gymnasium work at the high school building in conjunction with high school authorities. Those who are interested in only one feature of the Religio will be encouraged to support it and may allow the other to become incidental if he likes. There is no disposition to minimize any one phase of the work. The latest report on the Christmas offering is $2,288.21—over $3.50 per member.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

Due to the cost of living, clubs are forming, especially among the women of the country, and data is being secured on what they consider exorbitant prices. The shopkeeper is entitled to a fair profit, so is the man who produces, and so is the jobber who takes care of transportation and distribution. But every time an exorbitant price is paid, it increases the cost of general living.

There has been some hesitancy on the part of the mine operators in accepting the settlement made by President Wilson in the coal strike. Nothing was said or done until the committee was appointed, then it was objected that the memorandum did not agree with the statement made by President Wilson. They urge that a committee of nine should be appointed, with five representing the public. They also urge that the committee should be only advisory, while that appointed by President Wilson possesses full power. A later statement is made that the coal operators welcome thorough investigation and will cooperate with the commission appointed by President Wilson. While they criticize the powers granted, they have not formally refused to cooperate.

The Church and Strikes

In the midst of the numerous strikes occurring and threatening, some have raised the question, What is the position of the church in regard to strikes? That is, what attitude should we take in accordance with church principles, if the situation existed among us such as has been the underlying cause of the various strikes to-day.

In the first place, where the economic system laid down by the Lord is fully working, the cause could not exist. The cause is unfair provision for labor and an unwillingness to consider its wants, needs, and difficulties.

Under the system organized according to divine law, provision is made by the group or organization for the benefit of all against old age, and also in case of sickness or death. In addition thereto, adequate provision will be made for living expenses, in order to permit a suitable vacation and cause of the various strikes to-day.

Those who are placed in charge as managers will not be actuated by the idea that they are an especially qualified boss, that their stewardship is their own private concern; but they will consider those with whom they work to be their collaborators in the common cause, and Christian consideration will be given their needs, and courteous treatment at all times.

Of course, it may happen that a person may be in a department for which he is not specially qualified. The work then of the manager should be to ascertain its fitness and to secure his employment in that place for which he is best fitted. While those who work under the direction of the manager should feel themselves bound to render the best service possible and to seek to qualify themselves for better service.

Of course where one is found who shirks his work, and who, after a sincere effort is made to find a place where he can work to advantage, yet fails to make good, such a one should be released. The idle man has no place in Zion, nor has the idle woman. In such cases, we will remember that we have responsibilities, both as Christians and as men, as to the manner of our conduct in terminating the issue.

When a difficulty arises and cause for dissatisfaction exists, there is a need that it be not only the privilege, but the pleasure of those directing the financial work of the church and in charge of its various institutions to see that such want is supplied, or such error corrected as promptly as is possible. It is well recognized that prompt action is fully as important as a right decision. A right decision too long delayed may be worthless or less than worthless.

When the law is rightly administered, when those who administer apply in all things the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ, there will then be need for collective bargaining, for the unity will be of the whole body, and not of those who are devoting their time to one particular work, under a manager.

It appears that we are a long way from that ideal at present. But progress is being made. Those who are devoting their time to service and to work feel strongly for the interest of the work as a whole, and are not only willing but anxious to assist, and do so through severe and sometimes very severe self-denial. Of course, it is difficult for anyone, no matter how he tries, to do his best under conditions of nonsupport, but there are many who are earnestly trying.

At the same time, undoubtedly there are a number who are not in the position to render their best and most capable service; and there are possibly some who are not competent workmen; and there may be even a few who are not willing to render their best service. We hear sometimes of such, in a general way. So far as we know they are very promptly eliminated, and are very few.

But the question is raised how would such a condition be met through the economic and social plan of the church? We have strikes on every hand and threats of strikes. How would this condition be met if it did arise, and what would be done to prevent such a development?

The economic plan laid down in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants provides that every man should receive a just remuneration for all of his services, or else a stewardship. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19.) It necessarily involves that he should earn what he receives, and this is confirmed by the teaching that the idle man in Zion shall not eat the bread of the laborer (This necessarily assumes that he is able to work). The plan provides protection in the case of the able and willing workman. This is given as a matter of justice and of right. Receiving such, as a matter of course, there will be no need to strike, for every need receives just attention.

Of course the worker should be devoted to the cause in which we are all interested. He should feel, and he does feel as a general rule, the spirit of sacrifice, and a willingness continuously to see how much he can give and what he can do to help, rather than what he can get from it.

But this willingness on his part should be not unduly exploited. If he is willing and able he should receive adequate support, and should be willing to give all his surplus to the church and thus to those in need. As we read the law, he should receive sufficient to be able to provide for most events, if not for all within the family, and should receive the advantage of the solidarity of the group, which in this case is the whole church.

Collective bargaining in the ordinary case could not properly arise, because the collective body is the whole, and not those engaged in only a limited form of work.

While the common business principle of transferring a man who is not making good in one place to somewhere where he will have an opportunity to make good applies, yet it does not mean that every transfer is for this reason. It may be for promotion, or because some one is specially adapted for a particular work. The good of the whole should always be considered. When one is found who is unwilling to do his share and produce a fair amount for his recompense, such a one should be courteously released.

When one is found who is unable to produce, proper provision should be made.

Under the gospel plan there would be no need for a strike or a threat of a strike. Every man, regardless of his position would consider himself his brother's collaborer, and so would give immediate, prompt attention to his brother's need.

If conditions which would warrant a strike should arise because of some oversight, the difficulty would receive prompt attention and be corrected.

If the strike was based on a determination to secure more than a just recompense, to the injury of other workmen, an effort would be made by proper labor to remove so unfair a spirit. In any event the body could not be exploited for the benefit of the few.

Church Union

There has never been a time when there has been so many movements for cooperation and union among the various churches of Christendom. There are so many different movements, with slightly different purposes in view that most people are more or less confused.

There are few and comparatively only slight evidences of a desire for a complete fusion and union but rather for an alliance. There is a movement on foot looking toward church unity, but even within that movement there are those who oppose the movement itself, and others who oppose anything that would dispose of the various sects or weaken their control. But the strongest note for unity is that they should ally to carry on the joint work before them.

Now it is quite plain that all organizations having in mind the good of the community may properly work together for community interests and the establishment of community centers; for improving the moral tone of the community, and for social service and health work. This is all quite in accordance with the mission of Jesus Christ. But it should be evident, in our work, that in the carrying out the will of God, and the appointment of his ministry, he must speak, or else we work in vain, and there can be but one plan fully accepted by him, and that is his plan.

But this does not mean that we cannot or should not cooperate to the limit of our power in every good work, for we should do so. But we should also work under Him and under his direction.

Blue Pencil Notes

Professor Porta, who was to have the world come to an end at a certain date in December, now says that he never said any such thing. He says that what he said was this: "The location of these seismic occurrences depends on the Epicenter, which calculation implicates the transformation of the planets' heliocentric coordinate into geocentrics and geographics, a very sturdy mathematical work."

As an example of simplicity and beauty the language just quoted is superb. How thankful man should be for speech. With it learned eccentrics utter the unutterable—while ambiguity vociferates through the maze of verbosity in pursuit of lucidity. It is a gift. With perfect clarity the professor drops his exact meaning into the most opaque intelligence like a ton of coal. We will remember some of his words at the next General Conference when everything is going wrong and some delegate noncomprehends the rulings of the chairman, and there seems to be a failure to coordinate the Presidential heliocentrics with the Apostolic geocentrics and geographics, which is a very sturdy ecclesiastical problem.

What seed are you sowing? A General Conference appointee writes: "Just received the HERALD for December 10 and have read the editorial, 'Advance the ball.' It was said that in one branch every effort was being made to frustrate the work. I have met similar experiences in my district. Too much faultfinding. It hampers the work and causes one to feel sad, and one cannot go ahead and work as well under those conditions. There is a lack of interest among the Saints here, and it is caused largely by some who are sowing seeds of distrust." Evidently a sower went forth to sow; but from what bin did he get his seed?

The Independence Examiner has the following: "A monument has been erected in the Shelburne cemetery over the grave of J. D. Rich bearing the inscription, 'In memory of fifty years of faithful service as deacon of the Shelburne Baptist Church.' Many a man who has served as deacon knows that some congregations wait until a deacon dies before they express appreciation of his services."

Probably it never occurred to any of our congregations to erect a monument to a faithful deacon—"only a deacon." It may be that an occasional man who feels an unexpected draft on a bald head, of a Sunday morning, at a time when he is more bilious than religious, feels that he would donate a lot in the cemetery for the local deacon, or even dictate his epitaph; but probably few would think to erect a monument in grateful memory. But why not remember gratefully the man who watches over the comfort and maintains the order of the congregation, or better still, as suggested, express a little kindly gratitude while he is yet living to appreciate it.

Who Keeps the Church Clean?

Question: If there are no branch expense funds in the treasury, whose duty is it to scrub the church and keep it respectfully clean? When the church furnishes the money, a janitor is secured or person to keep it clean. When there is no money or janitor, whose duty is it?

Answer: This question is clearly answered in Duties of Branch Officers, a booklet on sale here, written by Elbert A. Smith; also in numerous editorials by our late President Joseph Smith.

There is no passage in any of the three books which specifically states this question and answers it, but in General Conference Resolution 471, adopted April 21, 1900, we note:

"The right to carry the keys; open the doors; conduct visitors—either those belonging or not belonging to the church; to see that the floors, doors, windows, pulpit or stand, seats, table or stand, lamps, and other fixtures are clean and in good order; to open the doors at the hour of gathering for preaching, fellowship, prayer, or business meetings; to see that the lamps or candles are trimmed, lighted, and burning, in time for evening meetings; to see that the members coming in find seats; to keep watch over the Saints during meetings, repressing loud talking, whispering, and laughing, repressing the thoughtless, and rebuking the giddy; putting a prompt stop to rude, indecent, and boisterous acts, by which the propriety, solemnity, and peace of the meetings may be disturbed; to exercise kind and diligent supervision over the health and comfort of the Saints while in meeting, by securing a proper ventilation of the room; to light and keep burning the fires by which the room is kept warm; to have charge of the treasury; to receive, disburse, and account for the contributions of the Saints, intended for necessary and incidental expenses of the association of members; to keep, preserve from damage, and account for all personal effects of the association; to visit the poor, ascertain their needs, and report the same to the church; and in fact, to perform any and all of those necessary duties by which the welfare of the Saints is secured through a careful administration of the outward ordinances, a faithful employment of the talents entrusted to that man. It follows then of a necessity that the right, the duty of the performing of these acts—these unwritten but essential things of the law, devolve upon the office of deacon."

According to this it is clear the responsibility is on the deacon to see that the church and all parts of it are kept clean, both within and without. Particularly is it the responsibility of the one appointed in charge of the church building. It does not follow, however, that he must do all of the work with his own hands. He may call upon the other deacons to assist him, and he may properly call upon the members of the church to assist him in doing that work.

In many places the members of the churches come together from time to time, and give the building a thorough scrubbing. The deacon should not be backward in doing his part, but we should not sit back and refuse to help and demand that he perform all the labor, then find fault if it is not properly done. But it is the deacon who is responsible to see that it is done; and it is his failure when it is not.

European Conditions

A GERMANIC ADMISSION

The Federal Council Bulletin reports the Reverend Worth M. Tippy stating on behalf of the commission for interchurch world movement, on social conditions in England and on the continent, that he found the whole of Europe, except Holland, in a very serious condition, and industry disorganized.

British labor he found distinctly socialistic, but not revolutionary. The leaders of British labor, he states, were many of them lay preachers, and have a strong religious sentiment; while there is a growing recognition of the responsibility of British labor to the public; and a recognition on the part of the people of Great Britain, that the workers must have higher standards of life and a greater place both in political and economic control.

He states he found social service fairly developed, in England, but the effect on public life and social reconstruction largely paralyzed by the attitude of the Church of England. On the continent he found but little social or community work.

Of tremendous significance was an incident at the International Trade Union Conference at Amsterdam when the Belgian delegates complained of the treatment accorded Belgian workmen by the German Government during the war, and expressed themselves unwilling to proceed until some statement had been made by the German delegates. After two days discussion, the German representatives made a complete and self-respecting disavowal of the atrocities in Belgium, and of the action of their government.

Again at the Hague Conference of the World Alliance a like situation arose upon a letter by Doctor Monod of Paris, who said that the French and Belgian alliance could not meet in fellowship with the Germans until they had made a disavowal of what their government had done in Belgium. The letter, he states, was extremely courteous and generous, and made no reference to France. Herr Spiecher, chairman of the German delegation, and formerly director of the great Allegemeine Electrical Plant, arose and stated with great emotion that his delegation had unanimously agreed that the action of Germany was morally wrong. The delegates, Belgian, French, and German, then met together and joined hands in opposition to war and to any spirit of revenge.

To this we add, undoubtedly the church should redouble its efforts to lift an ensign of peace, and an aggressive campaign should be made to this effect. The church has a tremendous problem before it. We must first of all preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. That leaves no room for revenge. We have a responsibility of carrying the gospel to the nations of the earth. We have also a responsibility to lift an ensign of peace and do all in our power to prevent war.

We have a responsibility to do everything possible to forward industrial justice and stand firm against wrong and oppression. In other words, the church should stand firm for righteousness between man and man; between city and city; between nation and nation; and justice to our fellow men. But this is not apart from, but is a part of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The church should be to the front in all work of reconciliation and healing of old wounds, and in bringing to pass a new world which is also a better world.

Science and Religion

The following is an extract from an editorial in The Christian Science Monitor for Christmas Day:

"Huxley once said of the word religion that there were probably as many definitions of it as there were definers; and, though it ought to be the most exactly defined word in the whole language, the same may be said, in a general way, of the word science. Originally it meant little more than knowledge, but gradually it came to be narrowed down to formulated knowledge, knowledge reduced to a system. The word, of course, is derived from the Latin scire, to know, and something of the same sort had preceded it in the Greek, gnosis, knowledge, had been developed into epignosis, full or exact, and so scientific knowledge. The two words are used with careful differentiation in the New Testament, culminating in the phrase e epignosis ton theon, which, if it means anything at all, means a full, exact, and so scientific knowledge of truth and principle.

"Something of this nature must have been in the mind of Thomas Aquinas, who, surely, rather than Duns Scotus, should have been named Doctor Subtilis, when he insisted, in the "Summa," that the only absolute science was theology, the science of the word or language of God, for here he comes, in a moment, in exact coincidence with the philosophy of the New Testament, in, to take an example haphazard, Paul's exhortation to the Colossians, that of 'being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God,' the actual Greek word being epignosei, which, as has been already said, is exact or scientific knowledge. Thus when the newspapers, in the light of the Einstein theory, begin to discuss, yet once again, the age-long theory of the fabric of the universe, a concomitant of that discussion, in any Christian country, should inevitably be a clear apprehension of Christian philosophy, a scientific knowledge of God, principle."

The editorial continues with a short exposition of the Einstein theory which makes an attack upon present dogmas of natural science, and makes a return to ancient idealism, placing the idea as the reality, rather than substance or matter, and raising a serious question as to the reality of matter.

"All this may be called the romance of natural science; it may be termed the evolution of natural science, any name and any explanation the world likes may be given to it, yet the fact remains that after centuries of human speculation, observation, and experimentation, the question of the fabric of the universe, and the laws which govern it, remains practically as much as ever a mystery to man, and this theory gives way to that theory with the same regularity with which day follows night."

After a comment upon the two schools of Plato and Aristotle, there is a brief reference to what Christmas Day stands for and the establishment of a new philosophy and science, and then continues:

"Everybody, that is to say, entering a Christian church this Christmas morning will do so to subscribe to the teaching of Jesus the Christ; and with the papers and the magazines which he is daily reading, redolent with abstruse discussions of the new philosophy, he may well ask himself how all this squares with the philosophy of the Sermon on the Mount, and the scientific demonstrations on the hillside and in the streets of Capernaum.

"For, let it be said at once, there is no implication whatever of the supernatural in either of the Greek words translated miracle in the New Testament. The word miracle at the time it was first introduced, that is to say, late in the fourth century, was in ordinary philosophic use in the sense of the word demonstration to-day. The difference between the demonstrations of Jesus the Christ and Professor Einstein is this, that the one was based on an absolute understanding of spiritual causation, and the other on a very hazy one of physical causation. As a result the one was entirely and irrefutably complete, the other rather an indication of a suspected law than anything more definite. For supposing the truth of the Einstein theory to have been overwhelmingly demonstrated, what has been proved except that the theory of gravity must be modified, the theory of space adjusted, and time accepted as local instead of universal. For the purpose of his daily life the common-sense philosopher may still accept the propositions of Euclid as demonstrated, may still safely get up and go to bed by his clock, and may still regard the distance between the church steeple and the stars as space. . . .

"Eighteen hundred years ago Jesus of Nazareth demonstrated the fact that gravity was not even a local law, by walking on the Sea of Galilee. It may be said that no man can walk upon the Sea of Galilee to-day. But, as Huxley long ago remarked, the breaking of an accepted law is not the proof of a miraculous interference with the workings of nature, but rather the revelation of an unsuspected law. Icaus, attempting to fly, fell into the sea and was drowned, but Alcock flew the Atlantic. The difference is something more than that between a mythological personage and a British officer: no one flew the Atlantic before this year because no one knew how.

"Orthodox theology has, of course, met this difficulty frankly by the argument of the divinity of Jesus, as contained in the dogma of the trinity. But orthodox theology has never been able to account for the direct command of Jesus the Christ to his followers, in all times and countries, that they should repeat and, indeed, surpass his demonstrations, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.' When, therefore, men came to discuss the colossal changes in natural science to be wrought by the acceptance of the Einstein theory, they might well remember that this theory is only the latest of human speculations, negative rather than anything else in its tendencies, and that the riddle of the universe, so far as it is concerned, is as distant as ever from being read."

Much of this is quite in accordance with the ideas held by many of our readers, that God works in accordance with his law, and does not arbitrarily set aside his own law. Jesus walking on the water is a fact, but it is a demonstration of a power over nature through a more complete knowledge of God and his law.

By the power of the Holy Spirit and faith in God, Enoch was able to turn rivers out of their courses, to cause the mountains to move, to defeat armies of men.

We have long been of the opinion that this was done through his superior knowledge, that which he was taught by the Spirit of God. For knowledge can be gained by faith. It may be seriously questioned if God arbitrarily sets aside his own law; but rather he works always in accordance with law.

We hold also very strongly for the belief that God is not indifferent to humanity; but that he governs in the affairs of men and causes even their mistakes to praise him and to bring to pass his work. He is concerned also in the healing of his children, and in their protection. This may involve the apparent suspension of laws known to us, but it is not a destruction of the law of God, or the laws he has made to govern in nature.

Speculation and theories, ideas and conclusions of men of serious thought are of great value, and have done much for the conquest of the known world, and within the past and within very modern times have brought to pass wonderful things.

But it is well that we also remember that the Spirit of God is working among humanity as never before, and that the great truths of his law are firmly established; whether we choose to call the wonderful things done by Jesus miracles, demonstrations, or knowledge and power, supernatural, or natural, we should stand firm in accepting their historicity, and the writer is firm in the belief that all these things were done in accordance with the laws of nature and nature's God.

Important Work on Sunday School Lessons

In 1913 the Sunday school undertook fully graded lessons, beginner, primary, junior, intermediate, and senior—each with a cycle of three years, the intention being to make the course permanent, getting it in such shape as to meet our needs, and publishing in book form. The course started at the age of four years, and ended at eighteen.

The course was reviewed and parts of it rewritten, and repeated 1916 to 1918. We are now for the third time going over the same work with some minor changes, 1919-1921.

The matter has been discussed several times, of coordinating and rearranging the courses, so that all the essential principles of the teaching of the church were covered, and undue repetition avoided. This required an editor in chief, as the editor of each of the Quarterlies had acted somewhat independently.

Finally, November 14, executive council decided to release the present editors, after the completion of the Quarterlies to June, 1920, and to appoint Sister Christiana Salyards, as editor in chief, to clip the remaining lessons for the year and a half, and to start work at once correlating the five Quarterlies. Associated with her is an advisory committee: S. A. Burgess and Floyd M. McDowell of Lamoni, and Sister Eunice Smith of Independence. As consulting board, she will have the right to confer with them beforehand and at any stage of the work, and would act as a lesson committee. And considerable responsibility is placed upon them to see that the work is properly done.

On January 2 and 3, the editor in chief, the consulting board, general superintendent, met, and upon invitation, A. M. Carmichael, superintendent of the Lamoni Sunday school, and of the public schools of Lamoni, was also present. The consulting board has appointed several subcommittees, to make an immediate survey of modern research in child study so far as it is published, giving especial attention to the best works of Bible schools, for the purpose of ascertaining the fundamental principles, as the board realizes that while we are human beings and develop much as other human beings, still we have a peculiar responsibility.

Second: To make a survey of the result of the past teaching of the Sunday school.

Third: To conduct an investigation to ascertain what questions children spontaneously ask, their knowledge, skill, and attitude at various ages. This to the end to ascertain as fully as we can, in the observation of our own children and the study of others, how best to adapt our course to meet their needs; and at the same time to see that every essential principle is taught, with such repetition of the most important as is advisable, and with the elimination of unnecessary duplication.

The board plans to use the present lessons so far as possible.

These meetings proved very interesting, as they were ap-

The Prophetic Conning Tower

An Outline—Part 2

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

An article dealing with the marvelous fulfillment of prophecy and the development of God's plans.

The Lord is to "set his hand the second time" to regather Israel, when he saves them. What is the Lord's called and authorized ministry. Second, advice, revelation, manifestation, and a display of power, and offer the following:

The lady who went into the "wilderness" (of Revelation 12: 14,) and poised on a scarlet-colored beast, herself decked in the draperies of Babylon, with a complication of superstitions, and abominable doctrines woven into her crown, held in her hand a golden cup, this cup, the nationalized creed, containing a propaganda intoxicating. Her hand would be her ministry, ministering the doctrines for her ecclesiastical body, as your hand ministers for your physical body. Now the Lord says of his work with Israel, in the latter days:

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face."—Ezekiel 20: 33-35.

Of Israel's redemption from Egyptian bondage, a similar term is used in the following:

"And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the Lord brought you out from this place: there shall no leavened bread be eaten."—Exodus 3: 3.

Regarding Revelation, we have:

"And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them."—Ezekiel 20: 11.

"And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God: In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt, into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands."—Ezekiel 20: 5, 6.

These two citations develop our definitions in strong color, but there is more of the finished product in the following:

"They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone. In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote. Then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another."—Daniel 5: 4-6.

"Then Saul, (who also it called Paul) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, and said, O full of all subtilty, and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? And now behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand."—Acts 13: 9-11.

"But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come upon you."—Matthew 12: 28.

"And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you."—Luke 11: 19, 20.

The Lord's Authorized Ministry

In the symbolic terms of prophecy, the wicked constitute the sword of the Lord, and men of the world, his hand. If the Lord uses the wicked, and men of the world, as his servants—hand and sword—to administer affairs of Gentile state, then these fishers and hunters, is the hand of the Lord for the gathering and conversion of Israel.

"Arise, O Lord, disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, which is thy sword: From men which are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life."—Psalm 17: 13, 14.

"Therefore behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers. Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks."—Jeremiah 16: 14-16.

"The hand of the Lord," is additionally explained by New Testament terms; so far as the fishers are concerned:

"And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him."—Matthew 4: 18, 19.

These fishers of men, were apostles:

"And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would, and they came unto him. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach, And to have power to heal sickness, and to cast out devils."—Mark 3: 13-15.

Hence the Latter Day Saints have a prophetic commission, as the hand of the Lord, including the apostolate as fishers of Israel, as set forth in Jeremiah 16.

Fall of Jerusalem

During the personal ministry of Jesus, 1900 years ago, we have seen Jerusalem invested with armies; the house of Israel left desolate. The slogan was, "We have no king but Cæsar," and they had no king but Cæsar; and leaving only for a time the fantastic shadow of a local and contemptible royalty. Cæsar after Cæsar outraged, tyrannized, pillaged and oppressed them, till they rose in wild revolt against the Cæsar they had claimed, and a Cæsar slaked in the blood of its best defenders the red ashes of their burnt and desecrated temple, July 15, A. D. 70, and the foundations were plowed up, August 10, of the same year. They had accepted the guilt of blood, and the succeeding pages of their history seem glued together with the wanton flow of their own blood.

Plunged into bondage among the Gentile nations, where, socially ostracized, and politically proscribed, they have been despoiled, hitherto. But they are to be liberated, converted, and initiated into the bond of the everlasting covenant, and saved, by the agency of authorized fishers, and hunters, bearing upon their ensign the wonderful plea of the Lord, the controversy of God.

"And I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul."—Jeremiah 32: 39-41.

"Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."—Ezekiel 20: 36-38.

This work not performed when Jesus ministered in Judea; no covenant-making with them, as a nation; no rejoicing, but the opposite; no planting, but a plucking up; no regeneration, but were from beneath, of this world, and would die in their sins.

"And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."—Luke 19: 41-44.

"Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come. Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come. And he said unto them, Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world, I am not of this world. I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."—John 8: 21-24.

During the exile of the children of Judah in the bondage, or quasi-bondage of the Gentiles, the covenant Jesus ministered, and which they rejected with its life-giving terms: "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," (John 4: 40) was broken by the inhabitants of the earth, and must be renewed, during the continuance—sometime—of the curse, the burning, the desolateness, and defilement, as a consequence of the breaking or Israel can never accept it.

"The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the Lord hath spoken his word. The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left."—Isaiah 24: 3-6.

Apostasy

This prophecy was fulfilled during the "joyride" of the woman decked in the many-colored robe seated upon the beast of the wilderness (Revelation 12), at the period when the vows of her wedlock were violated, and she was in alliance with the government of state. The everlasting covenant is the gospel of salvation ratified by the blood of Christ, and broken by the inhabitants of the earth. Israel broke the covenant given through Moses on emerging from the Egyptian captivity, but wholly rejected the everlasting covenant. When this everlasting covenant is renewed, and carried to Israel, it will unify them, as the Lord says he "will give them one heart, and one way that they may fear me forever, and for the good of them, and of their children after them." (Jeremiah 32: 39.)

After the excursion through the wilderness—the apostasy, the swallowing up of the church, as a frame-work, by the flood, which the dragon belched out of his mouth (pagan spokesmen) "darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people," how was the mandatory message to be borne to Israel proclaiming: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee"? (Isaiah 60: 1.) Who can say to Israel, "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising?" (Verse 3.) As a nation, the great work compassing Israel in the latter days, is to be intrusted to the Gentiles, to whom the hand of the Lord is lifted up, resulting in the exaltation of the Jew to his own, and the power of his standard.

"Thus saith the Lord God, behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons to their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders."—Isaiah 49: 22.

He lifted up his hand to the Jews 1900 years ago, saying; "I am sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and when sending out the apostles in the short commission, Christ commanded: "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, but go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." (Matthew 10: 5, 6; 15: 24.)

Restoration

But at this latter period he reverses, and puts the Gentiles in the front rank, but later, another change is enacted. In the renewing of the everlasting covenant among the Gentiles, we continue the manner, prophetically, of the marvelous work in the initial phases.

How was the covenant to be renewed? By angelic revelation:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people; saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

In the part of the book in which this prophecy is found, the approximate time of fulfillment is pointed out, as follows:

"The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw."—Revelation 1: 1, 2.

"After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard, was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter."—Revelation 4: 1.

The chronology of the Common Version of the Bible has this revelation given to John A. D. 96. The Anglo-American New Testament Revision Committee, gives the date as A. D. 94. After these dates, then, the "diatheke"—constitution, covenant, league—was to be recommitted by angelic ministrations, leaguings heaven and earth by divine authority. So far as every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, are informed, the last seen of the grand old gospel, by inspiration, was in an angel's possession, and the angel flying in mid heaven, so high and far away that no founder of any church, from John the revelator, down to Joseph Smith, could ever reach up to pluck a feather from his wing, providing he had wings and feathers, which is very doubtful.

And if that heavenly messenger has not arrived at this earthly station yet, with his precious message, then, no man, nor combination of men, have the gospel. It is yet in the keeping of the angel. The beautiful personage that visited Mr. Smith in New York, September 21, 1823, revealed to him that this prophecy in Isaiah 11 was about to be fulfilled, also the prophecy of Joel 2:28 to last verse, was soon to be fulfilled.

"These prophecies include the restoration of Palestine, the rehabilitation by the scattered sons of Israel soon to regather, and the falling of the genial and refreshing 'rains' so long withheld, as also the establishing of the 'priesthood' in the earth again. So far as these items are concerned they are fulfilled, and constitute history now. And that brilliant series of angelic ministrations from 1823-1830, and later culminated in the restoration of priesthood authority, the re-establishment of the church, the leaguings of heaven and earth by the authority empowered to put the band on, connecting the machinery on earth with the motor power in heaven. (See Church History, vol 1, p. 38.)

When Restored

Other prophecies of the manner and time when the covenant was to be renewed, and embrace the house of Israel with its saving power:

"Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."—Malachi 4:5, 6.

"And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."—Luke 1:16-17.

"Elijah," the Hebrew, "Elias," the Greek, are the same person. Who was he? Answer—Matthew 17:

"And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes, that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things: But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed: likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."—Matthew 17:10-13.

"Elias truly shall first come and restore all things." When Jesus made use of these words, John was basking in the beam of eternal intelligence, having been beheaded by Herod, who did "unto him whatsoever the Jews listed." But was the work of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers performed in John's mission, and was that day, the dreadful day, of the Lord?

"Think not that I come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household."—Matthew 10:34-36.

No, this one heart and one way, is to be given to Israel in the latter days, after John's second mission. (Jeremiah 32:39.) John the Baptist's mission did not close with his martyrdom, according to the foregoing, and also the following prophecies of Holy Writ:

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."—Isaiah 40:1-5.

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years."—Malachi 3:1-4.

The preparation for the Lord's first coming did not accomplish the wonderful events compassed by these predictions. It did not include the comforting testimony: "Cry unto her [Jerusalem] that her warfare is accomplished," and that she had "received from the Lord's hand double for all her sins." It did not include the leveling of mountain and hill, the exaltation of valleys, the straightening of the crooked, and smoothing the rough places. It was not followed by "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together." The offering of Judah and Jerusalem, was not "pleasant" at his first preparation.

When John as a restoration angel shall perform his second mission this will follow in an all glorious sequence, for says the Apostle Paul: "He will finish the work and cut it short in righteousness." During the time of its being performed:

"In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve."—Jeremiah 50:20.

Fulfillment of Restoration

The stagings in the fulfillment of these beautiful predictions are set in the following events occurring in the lives of the men chosen as first actors in the developing wonders of the great latter-day work:

"We still continued the work of translation when, in the ensuing month [May, 1829] we (Joseph and Oliver) on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord repeating baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us: 'Upon you my fellow servants in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.'"—Church History, vol. 1, pp 34, 35.

This was John the Baptist, of whom Jesus Christ affirmed:

"But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in king's houses. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet."—Matthew 11:8-9.

"For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."—Matthew 10:10, 11.

More than a prophet? What more was he in his first mission in old Judea? But he is to be greater than Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, David or anyone claiming the prophetic calling, born of woman (verse 11), previous to that period of the world's history. The twofold mission, therefore, of John the Baptist, invests him with the authority to lay the foundation of a greater, more far-reaching, more comprehensive work, than Moses, for of this later work it is so stated:

"Therefore behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; But, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."—Jeremiah 16: 14, 15.

Even the "ark of the [old] covenant" will be forgotten:

"And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord: neither shall it come to mind: neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it, neither shall that be done any more."—Jeremiah 3: 16.

And the apostle says this work will consist of greater and better things, based upon greater and better promises, than the work they entered into, on coming out of Egypt. (Hebrews 8: 6, 13.)

COMPILED BY J. A. KOEHLER

Some striking observations from a large class of young men in the Lamoni Sunday school. Let us hear from others in like manner.

There are two phases or aspects to our plan of salvation—the individual and the collective.

What use is it to ask men to become saved without at the same time teaching them what salvation consists in?

A majority of Latter Day Saints do not understand what the real problem before this church is; neither do they sense its seriousness.

No nation can endure as a nation predominantly of hired men.

Many of our social wrongs and maladjustments spring directly from the weaknesses of human nature, such as malice and greed.

We cannot legislate goodness into the human heart. Our plan cannot succeed unless men are good at heart.

The great trouble with the world is that it has divorced society and the church.

The world is working to-day in an endeavor to do the thing we have been talking about.

How many of us saw that in President Smith's message at last General Conference we had outlined one of the biggest pieces of social reconstruction ever heard of?

Make a survey of our church and see how many of our men are lined up with the opposition.

We will never redeem Zion until we get behind some leader and back him up.

How much of our criticism of our leaders is due to our indisposition to surrender to the will of God?

Many of the men who are talking loudest against our leaders are the men who are not willing to do the thing God wants this church to do.

There is nothing to lead us to suppose that labor would be happy if it got four times as much as it does to-day. Labor, like capital, is selfish.

Practically every economic attempt to solve the problem of the ages has been a religious undertaking.

The long-lived communities were all religious.

If I would live, I must die. Moreover, I must die for others.

Man as a social being has always had before him the problem of harmonizing his personal selfish interests with the interests of the group.

We must show how there can be a brotherhood of man and at the same time an opportunity for individual development.

What Shall Be Done With Turkey?

BY EDNA HOWLAND KOEHLER

Unless controlled by stronger powers the Turk will grasp everything within reach and exterminate subject races

Having labored in the interests of the gospel in Palestine before the war, I shall always be interested in whatever concerns that place and its people. On Sunday evening, December 14, 1919, I was privileged to hear Doctor Herbert L. Willet, jr., a teacher in the American Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, lecture before the New Bedford Forum on conditions prevailing in that country during the war and at the present. He dwelled principally upon problems concerning us at the present time. The speaker referred to the three great aims of Turkey at the beginning of the war—their inherent desire to acquire all lands and property of their subject races; to get hold of all the ready money in the country, (we can bear witness to this) and last but not least, the extermination of those subject races. All this Turkey did with a high hand.

He spoke of the sure but slow rise of the Turk to power, and how he had maintained this level of power for three hundred years. Yet all the efforts put forth by Sultan Abdul Hamid were not sufficient to stem the downfall of Turkey when the time came, for she had already become a prey for European nations.

He cited to-day's problem as being whether or not by slow deviating policies of the allies, the Turk would be permitted to rise again, and to continue their dastardly conduct.

He said already the Turks had sensed this weakness on the part of the allies, and were attempting to build themselves up once more. He called attention to the fact that France and Great Britain, practically worn out and without necessary funds to continue their work there, were looking to America to definitely settle upon something, and to come forward with new workers, supplies, and money.

Like Doctor Barton and others who are so familiar with conditions there, he felt that the one thing for the United States to do is to adopt the Peace Treaty, accept the mandate of Turkey, get on to a working basis, and lend a friendly hand to those struggling peoples whose very existence has been about crushed out.

He mentioned that the treaty possibly had its mistakes, but since America had pledged herself as not going into the war for material gain, why harangue so continuously now the war is over to win for ourselves a seeming place in the sun. The speaker made an appeal for mission workers and teachers, who would be willing and ready to go as soon as conditions permitted.

He also spoke of the great need for nurses, doctors and

WHAT IS A GOOD NEWSPAPER?

Fifteen tests by which a newspaper may be judged. And in large measure other periodicals may be likewise scored.

The publisher of the New York Globe has made an extensive examination and comparison of the prominent sectional newspapers of the country with a view of judging the relative merits of each. As a means of making the test, fifteen points were set down, and percentages noted. The points are:

1. General appearance first page.
2. General make-up of the entire paper.
3. Editorial freedom, independence and sanity.
4. News merit.
5. Loyalty.
6. Human interest.
7. Information departments.
8. Construction initiation.
9. Household grip.
10. Children departments.
11. Business and financial interest.
12. Policy toward advertisers.
13. Service to advertisers.
14. Promotional advertising.
15. Willingness to honestly co-operate with other newspapers.

In his opinion, the Kansas City Star has the highest average as an evening newspaper. The New York World and the Chicago Tribune are given first place as morning papers.

We are pleased to see encouragement given to quality in newspapers, for in these modern times they occupy a large place in our literary field, hence have a considerable responsibility regarding the shaping of the ideals as well as providing information for the public.

It would be interesting to see a set of tests evolved for judging religious weeklies, there being some very good ones available and some shamefully poor ones.

A CRUSADE FOR CHRISTIAN STEWARDS

We are receiving numerous clippings from all over the country concerning the state conferences in the Church World Movement. We note in a clipping from the Boston Post there was a meeting held in Boston, to be followed by similar meetings in Springfield, and in Providence. They expect to hold a conference in every county around January 20. One part of the crusade is to enlist millions of Christian stewards, the drive to culminate on February 22 as steward enrollment day throughout the nation. Coupled with this is a big financial drive in the interest of the work to take place next spring. This is in addition to the survey of every city and rural community.

Doctor Cushman is represented as urging the necessity on behalf of the church, of social service in hospitals, schools, and general goodwill throughout the world. Of course he is mistaken when he states there is not a church in America medicine, as cholera, typhus and bubonic plague were rife of those countries to-day. This would also aid in checking the spread of these diseases into Europe, and even into America, which as he said, would be far worse than the pneumonia or influenza we experienced a year ago. The speaker mentioned his being obliged to leave clothing behind, and to carry his own food and water from Beirut to Constantinople when he left to come home, in order to escape contamination from these diseases.

that maps out a financial program that requires the old Jewish one tenth of income for religious purposes. What he may mean by stewardships is shown by the following quotation:

"This same thought regarding giving out a "tithe" of income for religious purposes was brought out by Doctor Cushman in the forenoon in an address on "Stewardship," and pledge cards distributed which contained the acknowledgment that God owned all things, together with a promise by the individual to give such portion of his income as he recognized to be in accordance with the will of God, and to regard the rest as being held by him in trust."

AMERICAN LABOR IS CONSERVATIVE

It is only fair to note in discussing the labor situation, that there is little real evidence to show the tendency on the part of American Labor to extreme positions, such as are designated as "Red," Bolshevistic, or I. W. W. It is true a great deal has been printed in the press to this effect. It doubtless is true that the laboring man has in many instances shown an extremely selfish attitude, and that some of the leaders and many of the laboring men are frankly extremists. We are speaking, however, of American labor as a whole.

It doubtless is also true that in the past agitators, promoters, and officers, have taken an unfair advantage not only of the employer and the public, but also of the laboring man, and have exploited him for their own ends. There have been unfair dealings, and an intolerant attitude assumed on the part of labor. But this is not the general rule with laboring men as a whole, nor with labor union officials.

On the other hand, it is pointed out by some that railroad hands, and large employers of labor, in many instances show an extreme attitude, if they have not in their own way practiced sabotage. We have noted recently such an accusation brought against some of the lumber men of the northwest, and still more recently against some of the railroad executives by the laboring man.

But we do not believe that that is the general condition. The larger part of business men want to be fair, and are fair according to their understanding.

Still the fact remains it is only through a cooperative effort that the problem can possibly be solved, having a due regard to the rights of the other, and both giving due consideration to the rights of the public.

BURN OR EAT

With all due allowance for profiteers and other abnormal factors, the much discussed "high cost of living" is largely a question of supply and demand.

Food supplies ordinarily pass through three stages before they reach the consumer. The first is that of the farm; the second, that of wholesale storage; and the third of retail storage. It has been the public's custom to assume that the amount available is entirely a question of original production; attention has been focused upon the farm, with wholesale and retail storage considered as merely points of transit. This view is most incomplete, as one must realize. Food-stuffs actually produced and started toward the consumer's table frequently are destroyed in enormous quantities at point two or three because of the wholly preventable fires. Such fires constitute a definite and inexcusable factor in the ultimate shortage.

Therefore it must be a matter of reassurance to learn that a comprehensive campaign is undertaking to make fire hazard inspection of approximately 50,000 points of storage in the United States. Food must reach the consumer and fire must no longer be the consumer reached.

THE FORUM

Should Children Vote?

BY LEONARD S. RHODES

This question is addressed to the delegates of the next General Conference, it being an item of postponed business.

A petition was presented at the General Conference of 1919, signed by four elders, one of whom is the undersigned, in which it was requested that an age limit should be set under which children should not be allowed to vote at branch business meetings or conferences. Action upon this petition was postponed until the General Conference of 1920. We believe such postponement was wise, owing to the importance of the proposed legislation, as it gives time for consideration and discussion.

The reason for this proposed age limit is obvious. Children as a rule are not sufficiently qualified nor responsible, and are therefore too easily influenced to pass intelligently upon the legislation that comes before these church bodies. The laws of the land do not extend the right to vote to citizens under twenty-one years of age for the very apparent reason that they are, as a rule, not qualified to vote intelligently under that age. True, it may be argued that some people under twenty-one are better qualified to vote than others are at any time in life; nevertheless twenty-one years is considered a good dividing line for practical purposes. On the other hand the church, whose mission is of far greater importance than that of the state, is found in the absurd position of extending the right to vote to babes of eight years, or from the time of baptism. Is this in harmony with wisdom? Is it consistent with common sense? Has it worked out well in practice? We reply with an emphatic no!

It will not do to urge that because they are held intelligent enough to obey the principles of faith, repentance, and baptism they are therefore eligible to vote. An American is a citizen of the United States of America at the moment of birth, but he cannot vote until twenty-one years after. An infant may die at twenty-four hours and be saved by the atonement of Christ, but he cannot enter the church by baptism unless he lives until eight years of age. Children are not ordained until late in the teens; yet they are allowed to pass judgment by their vote upon propositions submitted by the priesthood. So far as the writer is informed, children have never been sent as delegates to the General Conference. But why not? They are eligible according to church law. The answer is obvious. The issues involved are too momentous to trust to the unformed judgment of children. But how about the work of branches and districts? Is it so much less important? This question is addressed to the delegates of the next General Conference: What good reason is there for continuing the right of voice and vote to children in branches and districts at the expense and detriment of gospel business?

If child voting is a good thing it will work out well in the branches and districts. There may be localities in the church where the uncertain influence is skillfully eliminated, but that does not help the balance of the churches, nor destroy possibilities.

The writer knows of instances where individuals, ambitious for a place in Moses' seat, have used artful methods, such as auto rides, treats, etc., to gain the children's vote. Parents with large families have been solicited to bring their children out to vote at elections. On one occasion it was publicly urged that all the children attend the coming branch election.

At another time the same men brought children to the district conference in his auto to secure his election, and he secured it, too. Technically speaking, his action was legitimate. But even if he had been qualified to serve in the position to which he aspired, the illustration shows what mischievous, if not evil, possibilities there is in the child vote.

It is granted that wise parents may influence their children's vote according to wisdom; but on the other hand unwise parents will influence theirs unwisely; and in either case it gives them an undeserved power. A number of cases have come to the writer's knowledge from several branches where children's votes were used by faction leaders to the great detriment of the work. This is a species of ecclesiastical bossism more disgusting than any found in the political world.

We do not pretend to say at just what age children should be given the right to vote; preferring to leave this question for higher authorities. However as suggestive we would say somewhere between fifteen and eighteen. As a closing statement, we will ask: Just what good work can the church hope to accomplish by continuing the right of the children to vote?

Are Moving Pictures Necessary?

BY A NEW ENGLANDER

This brother and his flock are disturbed over the present tendency, and asks if the gospel is not sufficient for all our needs.

I have been a reader of the HERALD for a number of years, and have been greatly blessed by the messages that it has brought. I never have felt to contribute to its pages until I read the item in the issue of December 3, under General Interest, "The movie into church." The statement seemed to stir my conservative New England blood, and my mind felt to express itself.

I therefore beg a little space for a few thoughts that have arisen since reading of this step, taken by the Saints in Zion, although it seems that they are not yet all of one heart and mind.

Until recently we have felt that to dwell in Zion meant peace and harmony. We have presumed that it was the place where God was present by his Spirit, and where everything was done according to its leadings. But the past year has brought to us rumors of disagreement, contention, and strife, the last expression of this coming in the statement "The movie into church."

A Step in the Wrong Direction

I feel safe in saying, that as a whole, the Saints in this district feel that it is another step in the wrong direction. Of the membership in this branch quite a few are regular attendants at the movies. Doubtless this is the same in all branches. Now if the question came up here, as to whether we should install a picture machine for the purpose of illustrating sermons, etc., we feel sure that every movie fan would vote for it with both hands. But, would we want to be moved in that direction by a class of Saints who pass directly by the prayer meeting to attend the movies? We do not mean to say that that is the class that carried the motion in Independence.

We understand that the object of this move is to educate the Saints. Is this a manifestation of the presence among the Saints of the enemy of all true faith, materialism? Is it, that in the presentation of the message of life that the power is lacking, that in order to hold the attention of the audience it has become necessary to give them that which appeals to the eye? There was once a time when the interest of an audience could be held by an appeal to the mind through the sense of hearing. That was when the message was preached with power. Now it requires the sense of sight added to that of hearing to hold the attention. What will the next step be?

God Means to Instruct Through the Preached Word

The means ordained of God for the instruction of his creatures in things unseen and eternal is through the preaching of the word. Luke, in the fourth chapter of his Gospel, reports Christ as saying, when standing in the synagogue of his home town, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Thus it shows that preaching occupied first place in the work of the Christ and also it held last place. He instructs his apostles to preach and thus it was handed down. But, if it was not accompanied by the Spirit of God it would have no power to attract or to hold.

It is simmered down to this statement, which no man can gainsay. The gospel of Christ, accompanied by his Spirit, is sufficient for the spiritual needs of his people. If the spirit of the gospel is absent, then something else must be substituted. Is this why the movie has been installed into the church?

It will no doubt contribute to the interest of the people but it will do so through a wordly method in the hands of a people who should be in possession of something higher. The tongue that has been touched with the coal from the altar needs no supplement from the world.

We Should not Care What Others are doing

You may say that all the sects are doing it and consequently we must do so, if we are to maintain our standing. We have no standing with them and will have none with God if we copy after secterianism.

"The truths can well afford to wait, but errors cannot brook delay" is a truism spoken by the poet. What is God's mind on this move? Don't know? But we know his mind on preaching the word. If we require some addition to this, he knows it. Let us hear from him. Truth can wait.

If the Saints have reached the point where they must have this now, regardless of what God's mind is on the matter, I tremble for the future of this church.

In all dispensations the decline of God's people dated from the day when they began to copy after the world. Each step brought them farther from him until they became a friend of the world. Can we be a friend of the world and still maintain our standing with God? Jesus tells us that to be a friend of the world is to be an enemy of God.

Regardless of this action by the large majority of Saints in Independence we feel to say that we would be of the large minority.

Zion Seriously Needed

A missionary writes: "Talk about the times demanding quick action towards Zionistic conditions! If it's as much in evidence there as it is here, the home Saints will certainly be stirred to action. I never saw so much graft and profiteering. We have a family of Saints here now at a hotel because they cannot rent a house, yet there are a number of houses vacant, but the real estate agents have gotten control and will not rent them at any price. You must buy or move on. You see the rental business is not nearly so profitable as a commission on a sale. Another family of Saints came in, and in order to get a place in which to live they had to buy. But everyone seems to have money, as the stores are packed with buyers of everything. I know it to be a fact that two

AT THE FRONT

AMONG THE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

An account of President F. M. Smith's visit to the Indians of Oklahoma was well written by himself, so will content myself by saying that he did a great amount of good. The Indians are anxious for him to return, especially the Omahas and the Otoes where he spent most of his time. He did some real missionary work. His personality, frankness, and easy plain manner of saying things so they could understand him, surely has won their hearts.

I am very anxious now to have some of the Twelve visit these points. I wish at least two of them could come. We need more strong team work, such as Jesus did with the twelve.

I hope to have a definite program for Indian mission work ready by conference time.

Our work Christmas week, near Kingfisher, among the Cheyennes did much good. Brethren Harvey Syckle and Daniel B. Sorden were with me, each speaking a part of the time. Brother Syckle went to the Otoes for Christmas Day, where several hundred were in camp. He reports having had a splendid meeting, and was pleased with his trip.

At Kingfisher we were at the Sorden home and found a welcome, as we always do. Our Christmas tree was on Christmas night. They had a nice tree standing in one end of the tent. It was decorated with stars, which Sister Pitzenberger sent us five years ago. The Indians have taken care of all the decorations and use them every year. They had strings of popcorn, Christmas bells, candles, and other ornaments. Dolls were in the tree and on the ground, the treat was a generous one: two bags of candy, nuts, oranges, apples, and popcorn mixed. This is the first tree where we have had a Santa Claus. He furnished much amusement for both old and young. I spoke about thirty minutes before Santa Claus came, to two large tents well filled with Indians. Brother Syckle reports the Otoe tree a great success, he and others speaking. I was glad to have Brother Reuben Taylor and Philip Cook do some preaching every day for a week.

At present I am holding a meeting at the Head schoolhouse, where brother J. R. Lambert held the first meeting any Latter Day Saint ever held in Oklahoma. The interest surely is great. The house is not only full, three in a seat, but some stand in the aisles. I am at the Rowland home, one of the best I have ever found, and yet none ever equals our own home, sweet home.

To-day Brother Rowland took me to the Caldo Indian School where we desired to meet a few Indians. Our visit to the primary room where Mrs. Scott teaches, was the most interesting of any. The little tots did well. She had them go over their Christmas program for our benefit. I wish our Lamoni and Independence primary teachers could have seen it. The school now has Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Cherokees, and Pawnees in attendance.

Mack Hoag has invited me for New Year's Day to preach to the camp near Calumet, at Coyote's place. Brother R. D. Weaver says he believes Gentile's times are closing. Surely that day is here, and that is why the Lord is working with the remnants of Jacob.

I was very much interested in the letters from the islands by Brethren Hanson and Rushton, the latter paying high tribute of praise to the sisters who have endured the perils of that island mission. I am glad the brethren were there.

women alone bought $140 worth of linen handkerchiefs at once, paying from one to two dollars apiece for them. The higher things soar the wilder they buy. Some stores can't go as fast as others in raising the prices, for in one window I saw pecans marked ninety cents a pound and in another only fifty cents. We will have to eat black walnuts I guess. They are only ten cents a pound."

The emphasis would have been much stronger if they had remained and traveled in small boats for a series of years. Words cannot express too much praise for the courage of all of them from Sister Helen Smith and Devore, down to the present ones who are there. Just think of Sister Lake burying her husband on one of those small coral Islands. She with Brother Ellis have my most sincere sympathy.

Sincerely your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

AT THE DEDICATION OF A MORMON TEMPLE

[One of our brethren reports the following concerning the dedication of the Utah Mormon at Laie, Hawaiian Islands.]

As reported in my last letter, Elder Puuohau and I left Hilo on the S. S. Mauna Kea, on Monday afternoon, November 17, arriving safely next morning about 7 a. m. It is about thirty miles to Laie from Honolulu, and Brethren Waller and Eitzenhouser had arranged for an auto excursion of the Saints who wished to go through the temple. Most of the priesthood availed themselves of the opportunity, and altogether there were seven autos of our people went over.

Our car with seven members of the priesthood in it left Honolulu about 11 a. m. The weather was fine, and as we passed over the mountain range which forms the backbone of the island, from which both shore lines are visible for many miles, it was indeed an inspiring sight. This point is known as the "Nuuanu Pali" and has been pronounced by tourists as one of the most beautiful panoramas in the world.

We arrived at Laie where the Mormon sugar plantation and mission headquarters are located, at about 1 p. m. and at 1.30 our party was conducted through the temple. This was the next to last day that the building was to be open to the public and quite a number of other people were also on hand to go through. Only a limited number, however, can be taken through at one time as all the rooms are small.

The site for the building is well chosen, and the scheme of harmony in the building, both exterior and interior, and the grounds is quite complete. But the place has a peculiar appearance from a distance and makes one think of some millionaire's tomb. The construction and plans are such that when once closed to the public it will be very difficult for any except those who have permission to enter.

The attendant who showed us through was an old man who came from Salt Lake and who stated that he had been engaged in temple work for upwards of twenty-five years. He volunteered to answer questions and we kept him busy.

On entering the building, both ladies and gentlemen must remove their hats and hang them in a vestibule. On the left as one enters is the office of the temple superintendent and a fireproof vault where the records of all the temple work are kept. Those wishing to take temple work come with blanks which have previously been furnished them, all filled out. Certain days are designated for certain kinds of work, and those taking the same kind of work are grouped together.

While in Maui recently, I found that blanks showing the members who are worthy to enter the temple have been made out by the presidents of the different branches and individual recommendations given those who were considered as worthy. The qualifications which were especially inquired into were these: Tithing, use of tobacco, intoxicating liquor, tea or coffee. No tea or coffee toppers are going to be allowed to pollute the building. If they carry out the above qualifications, from my own personal knowledge of their membership by having been here for seven years, few of their members will be able to go through.

In the vestibule of the building are notices in both English and Hawaiian requesting the removal of shoes. This, however, did not apply to us "gentiles" who were only visitors.

Next a room is entered where candidates are given instructions as to the work they wish to take. The attendant explained that a short prayer meeting was held in this room. From here candidates go on to an adjoining room where their temple robes are given them. We visited the room but received no robes. The candidates then go to the dressing rooms and don their newly received garments. A dressing room for gentlemen is on the north side of the building and one for the ladies on the south side, each being fitted with toilets, shower baths, etc., in first-class style.

From here we visited the room where the baptismal font is located, resting on the backs of twelve stone oxen. Here baptisms for the dead are performed and at the side of the font are chairs for the witnesses to the baptisms.

While the building is small, it has several stories with unique winding stairways connecting the different floors.

From the baptismal room, we went to the creation room. There are six different scenes on the wall supposed to represent the six different periods of creation which the attendant stated were each one thousand years long, or six days, one day being a thousand years according to the Lord's measurement.

The next room was the garden room, representing Eden. The walls are covered with peaceful scenes supposed to represent the beauty of Eden, but after the beautiful panoramic view which we had seen from the Nuuanu Pali coming over, those paintings looked pretty tame. This room has an altar with a kneeling place in front of it. It would appear that oaths are administered at the altar. A Bible is on the altar and just behind the altar in the wall, is a curtained aperture. We asked the guide what it was, but were not informed, as he said it was just a hole in the wall. Evidently used to conceal some of the persons who take part in acting out the events which transpired in the Garden of Eden.

The next room is the Earth Room, representing by the paintings on its walls scenes of rugged mountains, animals fighting, etc., typifying the curse which had come upon the world because of the fall. The altar here is like that in the Garden Room, but both the Bible and Book of Mormon are on it. The attendant claimed that the gospel was preached to the candidates here.

The next room is called the Terrestrial Room and no scenes are on the walls. It is nicely furnished and has an altar like that in the other two rooms. In addition to the Bible there is the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, and the Book of Mormon on the pulpit. Here additional laws revealed in the revelations to the church in these last days, are presented, including, of course, Brigham Young's "New and Everlasting Covenant" in which the doctrine of polygamy is presented. This room is separated from the next room by a silk velvet curtain of a golden color which is called "the veil." Passing through this, one enters the most sacred room of the building, the Celestial Room. It is the largest room in the building and we were told that the dedication ceremonies would be held in it. In order to accommodate the large number who wish to attend the dedication, the attendant explained that the ceremonies would be continued for a number of days, thus giving all a chance to be present. So the dedication will be by installments.

ECHOES FROM THE LAND OF SALT

Oh! who's to blame, and where's the fault?

We find recorded in the Ogden Standard of Ogden, Utah, a speech of President Brigham H. Roberts, one of the seven presidents of Seventy of the Mormon church; in which some plain language is used in setting forth the conditions of the young people of the said church.

The Standard says: "President Brigham H. Roberts, valiant defender of the faith and famous orator, who declared he had found the youth of Zion to be blasphemers of the name of God, foul in their thought and speech to an extent that was revolting. . . . "We thought it would be natural for our children to slip from the cradle into the Sunday school and other church organizations, and that all is well. And yet he had found the youth of Zion to be strangers to the new birth. They know nothing about it. They know nothing about Jesus Christ and did not know him as their personal Savior. They were not conscious of the fact that they were sinners and were in need of a Savior. . . . When we have only fifty per cent of our church members active in church service we have no right to boast of our superiority over other people. . . ."

We wonder were the trouble lies? Can it be possible that this great student of the Bible has failed to read that wonderful truth as taught by the Apostle Paul and recorded in the Galatian letter? (6: 7, 8.) Or if he and his people have read it, did they fail to make a personal application? So it would seem to one who has been an observer of conditions as they have been, and are to-day in Utah and the dominant church.

Paul says: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

When we learn the fact that the carnal nature of the young people of the Mormon church has been and is being appealed to instead of the spiritual, is there any cause to wonder at the lamentable conditions depicted by Mr. Roberts?

As your writer has traveled from one place to another in the States of Utah and Idaho one thing has appealed to him as being rather characteristic of localities where the Mormon church dominates.

That is: whenever and wherever there has been a plot of ground set apart for the use of the church, to build a meeting house upon, the first building that has gone up is almost invariably an amusement hall instead of a church or place of worship. Of course this building is used for a place of worship, but at the end of the religious service, if they so desire, the seats are moved back and a dance or frolic of some sort takes place. Generally the bishop and others church officers lead in the sport.

You may ask children of nine years old and up what the doctrine of Christ is, and it is seldom if every they can tell you, but just ask them to give a demonstration of the latest dance steps and I assure you they will be able to tell and show all about that part of their teachings.

Again, Saltair bathing resort, with all of its allurements of pleasure and mixed bathing has reaped its harvest of young people till almost every one old enough to walk knows how to swim. Also the picture shows in the ward houses and theatres on every corner and street to further amuse the young people. All of this sanctioned and in many instances directed and controlled by the church. Why bless you, the young people haven't time to learn to serve God! No wonder the conditions are as deplorable as Mr. Roberts portrays them. And if the open sins of the young people that come under the observation of the Presidency of the church are of a nature to cause such a scathing rebuke as given in the above by Mr. Roberts, what may the secret sins of those same young people be who have been tutored under an atmosphere of worldly pleasure, that constantly appeals to the carnal passions? Ah! it is painful to merely think of the proposition.

With all their knowledge of Scripture can it be possible that the leaders of these young people have failed to call their attention to the fact that Paul says: "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Romans 12: 2.)

James 4: 4 also says that "friendship of the world is enmity with God." It would seem that the poet in the following verses explains:

The church looked down at her plain white robes,
And then at the dazzling world,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip,
With a smile contemptuous curled.
"I will change my dress for a costlier one,"
Said the church with a smile of grace;
Then her pure white garments drifted away,
And the world gave in their place

Beautiful satins, and fashionable silks,
And roses and gems and pearls;
And over her forehead her bright hair fell
Waved in a thousand curls.
"Your house is too plain," said the proud old world,
"Let me build you one like mine,
With a kitchen for feasting, and parlor for play,
And furniture ever so fine."

So he built her a costly and beautiful house
Splendid it was to behold;
Her sons and daughters met frequently there,
Shining in purple and gold.
And fair and festival—frolics untold
Were held in the place of prayer;
And maidens bewitching as sirens of old,
With world-winning graces rare.

Bedecked with fair jewels, and hair all curls,
Untrammelled by gospel or laws,
To beguile and amuse, and win from the world
Some help for the righteous cause.
The angel of mercy rebuked the church,
And whispered, "I know thy sin."
Then the church looked sad and anxiously longed
To gather her children in.

How long, Oh, how long will mankind be learning a few gospel truths? Is it not written that the kingdom of Jesus Christ is not of this world? Why is this truth so hard for people to learn?

For the past months the papers have been full of articles suggesting ways and means for a proper control of the dance halls, etc. Too late I fear! Because the amusement end of the Mormon religion has grown larger than the worship end, therefore controls, and will control the activities of Utahism.

If only fifty per cent of the membership is active under present conditions, I wonder how many would be active if the "amusements" were taken away from them?

Ah, President Roberts if you would save your young people there are some steps to retrace, some things to do, and some things to leave undone.

Begin to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and cease to cram the heads, and the lives of your young people full of the things of the world.

May the Lord help us to avert a similar calamity, is my prayer.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Signposts

On one of our cross-country trips by auto we were quite interested in the various markings on the telephone posts and sign boards along the way. So plentiful have these become that it seems almost useless for anyone to lose his way nowadays. Occasionally we noticed the "O-K." signs, indicating the Omaha-Kansas City trail. Evidently a small member of the party had also noticed the same letters, for, after the passing of some miles, she remarked with a sigh which betrayed some hitherto repressed anxiety on her part:

"Well, I think it was real kind of some one to put those marks on the posts!"

"Which signs do you mean?" she was asked.

"Why those O-K signs, to show us we are on the right road!"

We laughed, while her mother explained the real meaning of the sign, but we have often thought of the incident, and have been wondering of late, whether or not some of the very evident "signs of the times" may be construed by us as "O-K." signs, placed along the path by Some One, "real kind," who wishes to reassure us. Certain it is, that we of all people should be able to read them aright, if, as we believe, God is in the work of this church.

If God is with us, if this latter-day restoration of churchly authority is a gift to the world direct from his beneficent hand, then there is no enterprise on earth which can near approach it in importance, nor which is worthy a primal thought or interest as an objective of life. It is evident that there is no other plan conceivable by which mankind may reach the heights of spiritual development intended for him, than that represented by the church organization. If there is, Christ's mission was futile, and his plan simply a chimera of false hopes.

This none are willing to concede, and thus we find the church organization is the arena for spiritual development, the environment best adopted for nurturing the embryo of eternal life which exists in the soul of every human being.

What then should be our attitude towards this church organization—this vehicle, upon which rest our eternal hopes? Should it be one of critical flaw-picking, of faultfinding, of aspersion or suspicion? All of these have to do, largely, with simply the element of human frailty which must be reckoned with in every problem of earthly life! Why, then, make of it a bugaboo, which frightens us finally, away from our opportunities? Did we but allow it, the mistakes we see in our brethren are sufficient to accomplish our own ruin; but, if the mind of Christ be within us, we should be able to see past mistakes to motives, past objectives to subjectives, past methods to principles. Would we not be able to read the signposts more clearly, and to find, even in the ones marked "war," "calamity," "commotion," reassurances that, though with growing pains and pangs, God is bringing humanity upward towards him, that he is still in his world, and his "O-K." plainly stamped upon the path of human progress.

That quality of the soul which will not be crushed, which seeks under all conditions and repressions, to burst restraining bounds and to soar to higher spheres where limitations will be removed and perfect freedom attained, is inherent in every human being, and is the best proof of our sonship to the Creator, the "Father of our spirits." Can any power directed against this ultimate desirable condition prevail for any length of time? Can any diverting stick or stone in the path of the descending mountain stream keep the waters from reaching, finally, their home in the great sea, can any metal confine the ascending vapors? Why not accept the situation as it is, and concede now and positively, that however crooked and unworthy our trail through life, it leads eventually towards a divinity unescapable? Free agency is ours regarding the path. We may turn to the right or the left, at every fork of the road. We may turn back, and loiter in the valleys of degradation when we might be climbing, but sooner or later the spark of life revives, the yearnings of the soul become too strong to resist, and the things "of the earth, earthy," lose their allure, and the feet turn, with regret for time lost, to the upward climb, made oh, so much harder and more painful by unprofitable habits and memories!

" . . . But I have always had one lode-star; now,
As I look back, I see that I have wasted,
Or progressed as I looked toward that star—
A need, a trust, a yearning after God,
A feeling I have analyzed but late,
But it existed, and was reconciled
With a neglect of all I deemed his laws,
(Which yet, when seen in others, I abhorred.)
. . . And I can only lay it to the fruit
Of a sad after-time, that I could doubt
Even His being—having always felt
His presence—never acting from myself,
Still trusting in a hand that leads me through
All dangers; and this feeling still has fought Against all my weakest reason and resolves.
And I can love nothing—and this dull truth
Has come the last—but sense supplies a love
Enriching me and mingling with my life."—Browning.

Attain we but to this consciousness, that God's love is the most powerful influence in the universe, and, consequently the greatest influence upon our lives, may we not come to see him and his loving designs everywhere—in every event, every individual, every truth—and, "seeing, believe"? Thus trusting, implicitly, that love which only designs and guides for our ultimate victory over wrong, shall we not "take heart of grace" and find comfort and encouragement in every sign along the trail?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

A Note from the Editors

The following article on Latter-Day Motherhood is the first of an important series which Sister Audentia Anderson has prepared at the direction of the Woman's Auxiliary for the young motherhood of the church. They will appear weekly in this column for some months to come, and it is planned to issue them later in book form as a convenient and readable text on the subject.

They are timely and well correlated, providing a much-needed collation of the best ideals evolved by the studious among ourselves as well as those in other circles who have made a study of this very important subject.

We hope our readers will bring this series to the attention of young mothers and prospective mothers, that the utmost good may come to all. They will appear exclusively in this, the official column of the Woman's Auxiliary.—EDITORS HERALD.

Latter-Day Motherhood

I. The Glance Forward

"Who can find a virtuous woman? For her price is far above rubies."—King Lemuel.

It takes but a casual glance over the conditions of the present day to convince one, that if virtuous women were scarce and "above par" in the days of the old Jewish king, their value to-day would be about out of sight. This statement does not concern itself with the meaning of the word "virtue" as applied to purity or chastity alone, but has to do with its larger meanings relative to strength, power, and efficiency, such as was evidently in the mind of the Biblical writer, who goes on to describe in detail, many of the excellencies of the rare creature he apostrophizes.

It seems astonishing, in the light of the advancement which has been made in education and human conservation, that so little attention has been, and is still being given to the proper preparation and qualification for parenthood—the highest function and divinest privilege accorded to mortals. Everywhere and everyday, can be witnessed the mating of ignorant young people, who, in the course of time, will be called upon to care for the precious body, and immortal soul, of a child! What has been their opportunity to know how to intelligently perform this most important and sacred task?

A writer in a most excellent book on the subject of motherhood, tells of the extensive study in the schools and colleges of the land, of her mastery of Greek, Latin, and higher mathematics, but speaks deplorably of her total ignorance of the duties of parenthood until, later in life's experience, they were thrust upon her! She says she does not remember hearing a reference to motherhood during her entire college experience. When the time came that she was to become a mother, she bought all the books she could find which dealt upon the matter of the new occupation which was coming to her—kindergarten books, books on child psychology, feeding, training, and the like—and tried hard to become a wise and efficient mother in spite of her lack of definite preparation therefor. At that, she feels sure that the life of one of her babies could have been spared, if she had had the knowledge, when needed, that was her right to have, and which came to her through bitter experience. She feels, too, that much valuable time was lost through having to study to learn about the things necessary to successful motherhood, after its care and responsibilities were upon her—things she could have known long before that time.

It is to offer help along these needed lines to the young women of our church, that the leaders of the Auxiliary are arranging various courses of study. It is desired that these courses shall be of a nature to attract the mothers who need the study, and will impress them with the real need for light and knowledge along these subjects, in order that they may rear their children acceptably before God. This means that the little bodies shall be properly nourished, the little minds given their proper and wholesome bent, and the immortal souls be prepared for God and his eternity. A task for superwomen and supermen, is it not? But need it be a task too great for Latter Day Saints, who shall strive to have the enlightening of God's Holy Spirit with them continually, and they shall seek to understand his purposes, shall sense their divine mission, and shall, with all patience and love, contribute their mite to its complete fulfillment?

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," is an old maxim well worth adoption by the parents of to-day. It has proven much easier to intelligently prevent undesirable complications than to correct them after they have appeared. This is as true spiritually as it is physically and morally, and it is to be hoped that parents of Latter Day Saint children shall become fully aroused to the duty of preparing the Zion's pioneers of the church, recognizing that the task becomes easier and more delightful as definite education along these lines shall remove many of the obstacles, and prevent many of the disasters and wrecks too common in the past.

Since contemplating the writing of these articles on motherhood, we heard an elderly member remark that God qualifies mothers to rear their children and that they should be spending their time in working for their children rather than in reading books about them all the time. You will smile at this we know, recognizing that it expresses the thought of a generation far in the rear. Thank God we have outgrown the idea that ignorance is the only condition of mind he can use as soil for his inspirational planting! Thank him equally for the light which is spreading over the world—light which is revealing the weak spots in human thought and enterprise, the cause for the sad failures of mankind!

"And this is condemnation—that light has come into the world, and man love darkness rather than light!" Are Latter Day Saints justified in preferring to shut their eyes to any light, and choose to continue to stumble along in the darkness of their ignorance or indolence? The shoddiness of a piece of cloth, indiscernible in the semi-darkness of a poorly-lighted shop, is revealed with certainty and distinctness when taken to a window, where the bright light of day streams through—in "condemnation"! So the methods of child-rearing, child-teaching, and child-nurturing followed by thoughtless parents, when examined under the white light of God's spiritual purposes for his people, often show defects and blemishes, which may be eradicated by proper thought, study, and prayer. A modern writer on the subject said: "It now seems about as rational for a woman to learn by experience with her own children to be a good mother, as it would be for a doctor to get his education merely by practicing on his patients. The time is coming when women will no more go into physical and spiritual motherhood unprepared, trusting to 'mother instinct,' than they will go into law, or medicine, trusting to their sense of right, or of sympathy with the sick, to guide them."

In the present series of articles, we have hoped to keep in mind the spiritual responsibility which rests upon mothers, and we present thoughts which will be of real help and encouragement to the young women of the church. We begin with the maiden, because it seems evident that to be well-born and well-reared, every child should have as mother, a woman who, from early training and right thinking, shall have ideals commensurate with her divine work as parent. That this inherent right of the child does not stop with the mother, we admit, and we hope to see the day when Christian men as well as women, shall see the necessity of understanding the principles of real parenthood, of child-nature, and of spiritual responsibility involved, to the extent that in study, in intelligent cooperation, and unity of thought and purpose, the desired objective may be reached by their offspring.

Beginning with the young woman, is not, as we know, really getting at the root of the matter. One cannot take a young woman and reconstruct suddenly her habits of life, her ingrained nature, her tastes and ideals (and these are the things which equip or handicap her for motherhood); to do that, one must go farther back, to her childhood, her infancy—nay, to the parents that went before her, the ancestors in the dim and forgotten past, and, in fact, the entire race of men!

We do feel, however, that thoughts which "inspire to do good," which cause a young girl to pause and contemplate a bit more seriously the meanings of her life, her relation to humanity at large, her oneness with the universe and unity with her Creator—these will, at least, have some influence for good upon her thought, her decisions, and the large events of her existence. If we can persuade her that the chances for a useful life, for a worthy passage through this sphere of action, will be greatly increased by a definite contemplation and understanding of the mission of motherhood in the world, we have not striven in vain.

In the words "latter-day motherhood" we see a field of expansive study before us—not only of the best revelations of the many organized forces in the world of to-day, consecrated at the betterment of the race, but of the responsibilities conferred by our latter-day gospel, which is one of hope, of love, of enlightenment, and of spiritual insight. We desire to be ever guided by the wonderful principles which have been committed to us in these "latter days," to the end that steady and upward development shall be made possible for those to whom our message shall come—those mothers who are trying to be mothers in very truth—earnest, devoted souls, who are striving to present their children, unspotted and unblemished, as worthy offerings to the Lord!

"Master, to do great work for thee, my hand
Is far too weak. Thou givest what may suit

Some little chips cut with care minute,
Or tint, or grave, or polish. Others stand
Before their quarried marble, fair and grand,

And make a life-work of the great design which thou hast traced; or, many-skilled, combine
To build vast temples, gloriously planned;
Yet, take the tiny stones which I have wrought,

Just one by one, as they were given by thee,
Not knowing what came next in thy wise thought!
Set each stone by the master-hand of grace,

From the mosaic as thou wilt, for me,

And in thy temple-pavement, give it place!"

Questions

Is "virtue" becoming obsolete? Why? and what the remedy?

What qualities did the virtuous woman of Proverbs 31 possess?

What does modern education of girls lack to prepare them adequately for life's most obvious duties?

When is the proper time to teach "mothercraft" to girls?

Why is "mother instinct" not a sufficient guide in rearing children?

What is implied in the term "spiritual motherhood"?

What should be included in an adequate and comprehensive course of study for parents?

What principles and habits should be trained into our young in order that they may be ready for Zion?

What instructions are contained in our books on the duties, mistakes, opportunities, and responsibilities of parents?

Mid-Term Queries

1. Have you a Woman's Auxiliary in your branch? If not, why not? If so, what is it doing, and how may its work be improved?

2. Have you an Oriole Circle? Does it include every eligible girl? If not, why not? If so, what are you doing to help those girls make their best development?

3. Have you a Temple Builder's organization? If not, are your young women interested in something you consider better? What? Why?

4. Have you a Boy Scout organization in your branch? Is its leader in touch with Brother McDowell, of Lamoni, the appointed supervisor of the activities of our young? What results have you observed?

5. As parents are you providing the necessary social activities for your children, including abundant amusement of a proper kind? As branch officers, what are you doing along this line for the young people of your flock? Are your methods holding them, and interesting them in the church? Why? How?

6. As church members, are you giving systematic religious instruction to your children in your homes? Are you leaving this entirely to the Sunday school, Religio, or other church departments? Why?

7. Have you carried out a health program in your home? In your branch? Community? If so, with what result? If not, why not?

8. Is there a group in your branch, including the deacons, seriously studying modern relief methods, and the Christ-like science of social service? If not, why be content to lag behind the times? If awake, what have you seen, felt, experienced, visioned?

9. As women, having received, or about to receive the sacred privilege of suffrage, how are you prepared to discharge its responsibilities? What are you doing to qualify as voters of this great republic? What reforms do you wish to assist in making? What wrongs assist in eradicating?

Replies to the above queries will be gladly received by the editor of this column. Address, Audentia Anderson, 5020 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Jadadia Chendra Rose, of India has invited a crescograph. In it a magnetic lever, a needle, and a small mirror are combined with other elements in such a way that it gives a magnifying power a hundred thousand times as great as a high power microscope. A moving point of light represents the movement of a plant to which it is attached, in the process of growing, multiplied that many times. The result is that its growth thus becomes visible. It is expected that by the use of this instrument it will be discovered both that which increases the rate of growth, and that which decreases the rate of growth of a plant, and so that it will in the end be of great benefit to agriculture.

LETTERS

Follow the Ball

A sequel to the recently printed editorial on "Advance the ball." A letter to Elbert A. Smith.

Just a few lines to tell you how much I enjoyed your splendid editorial in the HERALD of the 11th inst. entitled "Advance the ball." When I say that I enjoyed it I really mean it. Having had my share of this great American game, I can appreciate very thoroughly what you endeavored to bring out in this editorial. The idea of the game is truly to "advance the ball" and nothing can be added to what you have already said:

I think, however, that the point that you are driving at can be very aptly illustrated by another motto or teaching of the football field. One of the things which is drilled into the football player from the first training period is "Follow the ball." You will always find a good football player right on top of the ball in every play, and many a game has been won by a player who had followed the ball closely and thereby managed to pick up a fumble and make the touchdown.

My idea is this. This football as an illustration of life represents to us the principles of Christianity and Latter Day Saintism that should animate our lives, and consequently if we are playing the game of life in the proper manner, we will never lose sight of this particular football. We will be constantly found where this football is found and we will be enabled to win the victory of life by this manner of skillful play.

This motto of "Follow the ball" I have for years believed a splendid one and in every way applicable to the game of life. Life is really a game and the man who gets the most out of it is not only the man who puts the most into it, but more especially the man who plays the game strictly according to rule. It must be played absolutely clean. There must be a certain amount of strength, of energy, of sacrifice and devotion put into the game. It must be expected that hard knocks will be received; but, as in the game of football, that wonderful splendid moment when the final whistle blows and the knowledge comes to you that you have won, that knowledge more than compensates for any sacrifices that have been made and any hard knocks that may have been received.

This idea could undoubtedly be amplified, but I have no doubt but that you have been able to see the idea in mind. Team work is essential. All must pull together in order to insure success, but the underlying foundation of all football successes and of all success in life in the real sense of the word is that found in the ability to "Follow the ball."

Faithfully and sincerely yours,

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

In All Things God Was True

[The following letter from Patriarch John Shields was written in reply to a letter of condolence on the death of his son by drowning in Lake Kenogami.]

I thank you, dear brother, for your further expression of kind sympathy in our trial, which is increased by being unable to locate the remains. However, we believe that your prayers, with that of others have been answered on our behalf, and we have indeed received "comfort and consolation, as well as strength of both body and spirit," as you have desired.

You say: "We marvel that you have been able to continue in your church work, preaching and administering to the Saints, while bearing up under the strain and anxiety due to your loss."

I will say, that when for hours I walked the rugged shores of Kenogami Lake to see if perhaps the body might rise to its surface or as I tended the fire for the men to come and warm at, as they willingly endured the wet and cold in their search, I have pondered over and again in my mind the thought, "Would it have been otherwise if I had remained home, and there cared for the family and their interests, and have sought to build myself up in the temporal way rather than have devoted myself as I have done to the service of the church?"

I can not say I heard a voice in answer, but as oft as I have asked the question, the answer to my mind has been, "Did not the Lord open up the way, and were you not wrought upon by his Spirit to enter the mission field when a priest in the church? Were you not soon called to the office of elder and the promises made to you in your ordination verified? When your children were small and needed a father's care as much as any time, were you not called to be a seventy? and later a high priest? and later still a patriarch? Were you not satisfied with your call each time? Did the Lord ever fail to give you words with which to confound the adversaries of his truth? Did he leave you in the hands of your enemies when surrounded by mobs? Did he permit you to suffer for food or raiment when there was not a dollar in the treasury of the district? Did he condemn you when you were unjustly dealt with by your fellow men?"

My answer to these and other questions had to be: "Just and true are all thy ways, thou King of Saints, and I thank thee, that thou hast counted me sufficiently faithful to permit me in the ministry of thy church, and thou canst do much better for my family, whether in life or death, than I possibly could without thee."

Very truly yours in appreciation of, and thankfulness for your letters.

Far West Stake

The First Saint Joseph Branch, by conference with general authorities, has imported Brother John Jerusalem Gospel Cornish from Saskatchewan to hold a series of meetings. He came in December, but because of the fuel condition was limited to Sunday services at the church and weekday cottage meetings, in which he pleased his hearers with his clear-cut, forceful gospel discourses. He spoke also at the second and third branches.

Accompanied by Brother E. F. Robertson, Brother Cornish held a ten-day meeting at Guilford. John came back to his old form again and the people found it impossible to withhold attention. Attendance was good and the people were stirred throughout that section, the general consensus of opinion being that they "never before heard so able a preacher in this town." He "makes it laughable at times but there is always a good logical point in his jokes." He went to Bedison to preach the funeral sermon—he did not preach a "funeral" mind you, Mr. Editor, but a funeral sermon—the occasion being the death of Brother Hans Froyd.

The First Saint Joseph Branch will hold a series of meetings, with Brother Cornish as speaker, beginning Sunday, January 4, to continue indefinitely. The Saints have been urged to attend and to bring others. We look for a revival of the people and hope for additions to our number.

The First Church choir is doing fine work. Their late singing of carols on Christmas Eve was greatly appreciated by Saints and friends. They will be ready to "sing the gospel" just as soon as Captain Hoxie gives the word to forward march. Hurry up, Albert, with the songs and the army regulations!

In a late letter to the stake president Brother E. F. Robertson said, "I am impressed that the first qualifications for an officer in the church is a desire to work, and the next essential thing is to know how to go about it. We have some who are sufficiently educated, and who could make a good showing for the work if they only would, who lack the ambition to take hold and push. There are others who may not show so much grace and dignity in what they do but who are deeply interested in the work, and the Lord blesses their ministrations more."

Brother Salyards made a trip to Denver during the early part of December. He left R. S. Salyards, jr., and family better located and in good form to continue residence there, to which place the wife and children removed from Independence in October. Richard, jr., though obliged to give up studies at Denver University for a time and again take up and chase the cure, is in good condition and hopes soon to be able to resume his college work. He is improving rapidly. Brother Salyards, sr., spoke four times for the Denver Saints and appreciated their hospitality. They are doing well under the competent administration of brother E. J. Williams, the branch president.

We saw the following in a Denver store: "A Bolshevik is a person who believes in giving you anything he's got—and hasn't got anything. An I. W. W. is an industrial Worker of the World—who is not industrious, is not a worker, and does not properly belong in the world. A real American is almost any American who is neither of the above things."—Irvin S. Cobb.

The late tour of Bishop E. L. Kelley through part of the stake was profitable to the work and pleasing to the Saints. We hope to see Brother Kelley with us again to complete his labor among the branches, which was prevented by fuel shortage. He was well received and will be welcomed by the people at any time.

Brother Samuel Twombly held a series of meetings in the Maple Grove Branch, north of Stewartsville, in the months of November and December.

Brother V. M. Goodrich took charge of the Third Branch in the absence of the former. The latter baptized a young man from Iowa of late in the front of the First Branch.

The election of the First Branch Sunday School placed Brother H. D. Ennis in charge, as superintendent, and Brother Stone, formerly of Seattle Branch, as assistant superintendent. Sister Ruby Hitch was obliged to decline nomination as superintendent because of her husband's impaired health. She will help as before, according as conditions will permit. Brother Hitch, we are glad to say, shows some improvement.

The Christmas cantata and general exercises by the children of the Sunday school on Christmas Eve were very well presented. The children did well and the audience was pleased. Those in charge deserve credit for working up the program and furnishing the decorations.

Brother J. W. Roberts is busily at work, as usual, among the branches of the stake. He recently visited Ross Grove, Guilford, Delano, Cameron, and Far West.

Brother R. D. Weaver has been preaching of late at Trimble and Edgerton Junction. There is call for his labors in Richmond, Lexington Junction, and adjacent points.

It is a pleasure to note the steady upward trend reflected in the HERALD and Ensign. We are gratified to note improvement in the general conduct of our church papers. A very encouraging feature is the number of contributions from young people in various branches which manifest the necessary combination of brains, spirituality, and mental development—a combination devoutly and genuinely to be wished. Let the good work go on. The work is being more ably represented.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, it seems to us that efficiency and initiative are demanded in every man and woman who forms part of the body of Christ. Can we ever get anywhere within sight of our high purpose without consecrated moral, and spiritual, and intelligent energy of the people called to be the children of God? Can we ever succeed without concentration and application by our membership in the various branches?

We are glad to see evidence of clear-cut organization and spiritual and mental development, which form a substantial basis for hope of success in the work intrusted to all.

The Independence Sanitarium

The following letter was handed us by a physician who had advised a patient to go to the Independence Sanitarium for X-ray examination and operation:

"About three weeks ago I called at your office, and you examined a lump which had appeared on my right limb. A few days later I came to the Independence Sanitarium, and had an operation. The tumor was given a thorough test in the laboratory, and Doctor Harrington assured me that I need not fear that it would return.

He also gave a very rigid examination for indications of tumor or cancer in other parts of the body, but found nothing.

I was greatly pleased with the kind, gentle, and efficient care bestowed by the nurses; and the skillful care, and truthful counsel of the physicians.

Christmas Offering Developments

The following items are extracted from news letters to our office regarding the Christmas offering, and should be encouraging to all who have striven so faithfully to maintain our record as consecrated givers.

Macon, Missouri, set their mark at $75, but reported recently they had about $113 and still at work.

Saint Clair, Sunday school, in Michigan, had $2.60 a member when last heard from. They used a clock of home design to record their progress.

Second Detroit has something over $3 per member, an addition to $200 voted for church debt.

Sister Luda E. Smith, of Mason City, Iowa, reports $9 as a result of the children saving their pennies.

Middletown, Ohio, with a membership of about 100, had about $500 on hand at last report.

Spearfish, South Dakota, had about $100 by the middle of December.

Walthill, Nebraska, with a membership of about 32, had $49 and was trying to raise it to $60.

Fennell Sunday school, near Fort Towson, Oklahoma, had $56, with average attendance of 25.

Saint Mary's Ontario has gone over the top with $132.75 and expected to reach $250.

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

Responses to Greeting

Your letter addressed to the General Conference appointees received, and I assure you it warmed my heart as I read its greetings. It breathes the fragrance of the splendid fraternal spirit, which must reach the soul of all those to whom it is addressed, and will prove a stimulus to the faithful servants of the Christ and his church. I thank you all as a council for this cheering message at this Christmastide.

The year now waning has been to me the most joyous I ever spent in the Master's service, and I feel sure I have found the secret to this experience.

I have been enabled to throw to the winds cares and responsibilities which I have hitherto tried to carry, which belonged to others, and thus have been enabled to give more close attention to my work and its responsibilities.

I am assured God the eternal Father holds the reins of government pertaining to this his work in his own hands, hence as an infallible guide, will lead all who are loyal to him and his work to victory.

May the New Year dawn upon the church full of hope and assurance, with the star of promise ever bright before us.

With the season's greetings, very sincerely your brother in Christ.

May I send greetings of this time-honored and custom-endear'd season, in response to your very fine and feeling letter of greeting received to-day? Please accept my hearty good-will to you personally, and also in behalf of the quorums, represented in your good, and very worth while, greetings to the General Conference appointees.

If the thoughtful words of your letter find as pleasing responses in the hearts of the brethren as at the instance of your kindness leaps within my own, surely your good cheer is a very contagin, spreading, and spreading afar, and all to the increase of good deeds. And I am very sure that it is so, and that all the brethren who receive your letter will feel the same; for good souls are never unresponsive to good, even though they may not find occasion to say so.

May our great King, in whose honor Christmas festivities are given, continue to delight much in the unsullied royal commission he has given you; and may he bear with our infirmities, and rebuke us all sharply upon every very probable occasion of our deserving, and at the last give us, as brethren, a place in joint heirship at his right hand, is my prayer.

May the expiring year bequeath to you, not only its measure of happiness which is composed of the knowledge of work well done, but also its wealth of experience with which the new born year may be the more enriched, and by the means of which happiness may continually abound.

This is my most sincere wish and good will to you and to all your associates in the most high calling of the gospel, for this joyful season.

Your seasonable greeting, reaching us this morning, was surely appreciated, and some of the things referred to in it have been fully realized the past year. Disappointments and regrets have been among our experiences.

But in spite of the fact that these things have come, the past year has been one of the most satisfactory years of my ministry. Thousands of people have listened to the word of the Lord, in the house of the Lord [Kirtland Temple]; day after day have I ministered in the old place of sacred memory, and in addition to that it has been my privilege to minister in many ways to those creatures less fortunate than myself.

I have enjoyed a wonderful degree of spirit in my ministrations and truly the year's work, when viewed from our present position, makes us feel that we did what we could, from the early hours in the morning to the closing hours of the day our hands and our head were kept busy, and God knows it was not for any selfish motive, or purpose, but for the good of all.

I realize that there is no room in the gospel of Jesus Christ, or in the hearts of any of his ministry, for selfishness, for that naturally brings a state of callousity which impairs the better judgment of the individual, and makes pigmies of the otherwise giants of the kingdom.

[Extract from letter of A. E. Stone to the Presidency, December 19, 1919.]

The invention of the marimeter will possibly do away with the heaving of lead at sea to ascertain depth. It works on the principle of the echo. The sound is sent from the keel of the ship to the botom of the sea, coming back as an echo, the time of both being automatically recorded on a dial. Knowing the rate of speed of sound waves in salt water, the depth is readily estimated. With the use of this instrument, four soundings can be made in a minute, and thus it is much more rapid than the older method.

A Letter to the Bishopric

We quote below from a letter just received from a brother in the Northwest.

"Inclosed find draft for three hundred dollars ($300) which is about half of what I owe the Bishop or church for this year. You will see by your record that I promised to give to the church what I made above expenses for two years. The Lord has prospered us this year that we have made about $600 clear, though I have not got an exact account as I have invested the income in young cattle and am not able to send all the money at present but will send it as soon as I can get it gathered up. I think that will be next April or May.

"Dear brother, I did not expect to be able to send so much when I signed the paper you sent me but we believe the dear Lord has blessed our efforts so that we are or will be able to place $900 in the Bishop's hand in two years which is above our expectations."

What a splendid result could be accomplished if every member of the church would be actuated by the same unselfish motive and consecrated desire that has prompted our brother in this action. This brother is working for the Lord in his every day affairs just as much as the man who is devoting his life to ministerial activities. We are hopeful that this spirit shall become contagious, and that many may be led to thus assist in the Lord's work.

It requires faith to step out as our brother has. Are you ready to follow his lead?

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: The year is almost at a close and as we reflect on the work done, it makes us feel that during the period just past the Lord has abundantly blessed us in our efforts to reach the honest in heart in Utah. While we cannot point to hundreds having come into the fold, we can and do sense that some who do love righteousness and peace have accepted the pure gospel of Christ.

Our forces have been small, but most of the time has been spent in the active work either preaching on the street, in halls, or church edifices, or talking the gospel in the homes of those who were willing to listen. There are many who are honest and want the truth, who in the due time of the Lord will break off the shackles that have bound them these many years, and find joy and freedom by accepting the truth. The time is not far distant when a change must come. Agitation is a splendid thing, and after a long and hard conflict the fruits will begin to appear. We think we can see the breaking of day to many who are and have been enslaved in priest-craft.

Our experiences on the streets of every town in which we held services in the valleys of the mountains, convinces me that men and women are ready to listen to our message. It is no longer a question of getting people to come out and listen for at least two or three hours. Hundreds have stood for that length of time while our missionaries have propounded the "differences". After each service an opportunity is given for the people to ask questions and many avail themselves of that privilege, so that in some cases the meeting does not close until after the midnight hour. We hear remarks that indicate some have the kindest of feelings for our work, but others are embittered against us.

During the month of November, in company with Brother Ammon White, we held a series of meetings in Herford, Oregon. We expect to see some gathering into the church in that vicinity in the near future. Brother and Sister Penrod and family have made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in that place. They took care of the missionaries, and are alive to the work. We could mention other Saints living in that section, who are also an honor to the name they bear, but space forbids us doing so.

Eastern Oregon presents a splendid field for missionary work, as well as Idaho. The demand for workers has been greater than we could supply. Looking at the opportunities that present themselves it causes us to feel that we need many more to help carry the gospel to a dying world.

It affords us no small degree of pleasure to see some of our bright, energetic young men and women preparing for usefulness in the church. Some have felt that it was a mistake to place these young people in Graceland for a proper course in religious instruction. It seems to me that the church can do no better work than to provide proper equipment, in giving to those who are to become our standard bearers in the future the necessary instruction so that neither the individuals or the church will be embarrassed by their not having a knowledge of the church and what it stands for. I speak from experience. Many of us who are now in the field were taken from the farm, workshop, and factory and as a result were sadly handicapped in our work. It has taken some of us years to learn that which might have been given us in a few months. It has not only taken us years to gather this information, but many times it has caused us to almost cease the conflict and many bitter experiences that might have been otherwise prevented had we been given the proper attention. No Latter Day Saint can afford to begrudge the time and money it takes to give to our young men proper training.

The church in the past has asked of its representatives to go out and meet the scoffs and sneers of the world, and some of those who were well informed in the wisdom of men, without properly providing those called to meet the issue with the necessary weapons. It is true God has sustained us in a very large measure, but who will say we could not have done even better had we the opportunity of qualifying as our young men do to-day? I am thankful indeed that we are now giving those who desire to be of assistance in carrying the gospel message to mankind, an opportunity of acquiring knowledge that will make them even more efficient as representatives of the Master. Recently, as I was in the class room of those who are training for missionary work and could see the earnest, sincere expressions on the face of each, I lifted my heart in praise for such a body of young men who were ready and willing to lay their lives on the altar of service, and thank the Lord for them. We expect to hear from these as well as other of our boys in their future work in the church. It is true I have wandered far from what I intended to say when I started this letter, but I have no apology to offer for what I have said. It makes me feel sad indeed when I hear any opposing such a noble work that the church has undertaken in behalf of its future representative men. The Spirit of Christ is a mighty force in converting men as well as equipping them for gospel service, but let us never forget that God will never do for us that which we can do for ourselves. If we refuse to use our talents the Lord must refuse us that which we have the potential powers within us to acquire.

We rejoice to see the onward progress of the work, and may the day hastily come when the honest in heart will gather out preparatory to the coming of the Lord, is our prayer.

In the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

[T. J. Elliott, of the presidency of the Kansas City Stake, writes the First Presidency as follows]:

We are pleased to submit an outline of report, mentioning some details of the work in the Kansas City Stake for the past quarter.

Since the consolidation of the branches everything has been working harmoniously. At our stake conference we made appointments of the men who preside as pastors over the different churches, and we believe they are giving very good service at the present; and with our help and direction we think the churches can be developed more rapidly under the new rules adopted.

We, also, have been successful in placing at the head of our different auxiliaries, active people who can represent the work and successfully supervise it as its different needs

AT THE OFFICE

Our local bank has received the following letter from its Chicago correspondent, and suggests that we advise our Canadian patrons of the heavy discount and consequent loss, requesting that they remit by post office money order or drafts drawn on some bank in the United States. We feel that all we need to do is bring this to the attention of our Canadian friends, and they will save us unnecessary loss and inconvenience in the matter of converting Canadian checks, drafts, and currency into United States money. The letter from the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago, is as follows:

"Owing to the abnormal conditions which at present exist in the foreign exchange markets, Canadian funds are now costing $150 per thousand to collect.

"Because of this excessive discount and the violent fluctuations in the market we regret that we are compelled to handle all Canadian items subject to adjustment after final payment. As such items received from you are paid we will send advice of the charge thereon, which will represent the actual cost of collecting.

"We assure you that when conditions become normal it will give us great pleasure to take care of this business as heretofore."

We received a minimum carload of print paper this week, representing an investment of over two thousand dollars. We also placed orders for one car of print to be delivered within forty-five days and a car of book paper for delivery in four months.

For the first time in three months we are able this week to get some of our tracts on the presses, which have been running overtime for that length of time.

We want an experienced linotype operator at once. Might also take on an apprentice if we can find someone who can learn quickly and become thorough.

Our viewpoint is necessarily different from yours. We are on the inside of the business and therefore have special opportunity to know what is essential to its success.

The Herald Publishing House is your business—rather it belongs to all of us joined together—it is our business. Our sense of honor and of responsibility to fulfill our trust compels us to see that individual obligations to the group are fulfilled. Please don't be offended when we refuse to require. This has taken some time, but we have moved slowly, and yet have tried to move with precision so if we had the endorsement of the conference we could be sure the work would be successfully carried on.

Our last stake conference was the best we have held in the experience of the stake. The concluding service Sunday night, our auditorium was crowded to its capacity. We have been working assiduously to develop an interest in our stake conferences, and are happy to say that the Saints have responded and now realize that these sessions are theirs and their active participation is necessary for the development of the whole work.

We are proud to note that our stake membership has passed the 2,000 mark. Our report showed a gain of 199, net gain of 125, the present number being 2,057.

Also, a motion prevailing looking to the further and thorough advertising of our church work, giving the stake proper representation, having a full list of the church officers, the church office, etc., listed in the city telephone directory. Another resolution prevailed requiring the advertising of all our church locations in the Saturday evening papers, both the Kansas City Star and the Kansas City Post.

What is a Refund Check?

It is a form of remittance made to purchasers to cover small balances due them on individual orders.

Because no concern that sells goods in small quantities to a large number of customers can afford to carry individual customers' accounts on ledgers.

When Is a Refund Check Issued?

Every time an order is received for which the remittance exceeds the value of the goods shipped or ordered.

This means that no two orders are combined on our books. Each is treated separately and without regard to the other.

What is a Debit Memorandum?

It is a notice to customers of balances due us on orders filled.

Why is a Debit Memorandum?

In the main, for the same reason that a Refund Check is. We do not open up individual customers' accounts on the ledger.

When is a Debit Memorandum?

Every time goods are ordered that are not fully paid for at the time they are ordered. This means that you may receive several debit slips showing the several amounts due us on your several orders. We do not combine the amounts in one debit.

If you do not remit the balance due us in a short time after your order is filled, we will keep on reminding you of it until the amount is paid.

Thanks to those who do not ask us to do what they do not ask Sears Roebuck and Company, or Montgomery Ward, or any other mail order house to do.

Listen! Two thirds of the orders we have placed with other supply houses during the last year have been returned to us marked, "Out of stock. Will ship as soon as convenient."

This is a sample only of a multitude of obstacles that are encountered to-day in business circles.

Don't forget that business houses are run by men, not angels. All men are fallible.

Thanks.

Christmas Offering Returns. Australian Sunday schools will please send their Christmas offering to Bishop George Lewis, Metcalf Station, Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, while the Saints of the English Mission will please send their Christmas offering to Bishop Roderick May, giving each of these brethren the name of the Sunday school as you wish it to appear in the Blue Stepping Stones.

Saint Louis District. Owing to the many duties devolving upon Brother Russell Archibald, he has felt under the necessity of resigning from the work as Bishop's agent, and we hereby appoint as his successor, Brother Walter L. Wehrli. He has the confidence of the Saints of the Saint Louis District, and his experience will qualify him for this work. We feel assured that with the diligent efforts of Brother Wehrli and the undivided support of the Saints that pleasant surprises may be in store for the district as to its possibilities along financial lines.

Brother Archibald has served long and faithfully as the Bishop's agent of this district, and with his retirement we desire to express our appreciation of his cooperation with, and support of, this department of the work.

Sincerely yours,

B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

The Church Recorder

To All Branch Clerks: We desire again to call attention to the proper way of sending in your old branch records. Under no circumstances should they be sent by mail unless the sender pays first-class postage. It matters not what the postmaster in your place says about it. Every record which reaches Independence is marked up with the amount of postage due if only parcel post rate has been paid by the sender. Therefore, always send in by prepaid express or else pay first-class postage on your book. This department has already paid out a considerable sum of money for those who have failed to observe this instruction.

Further, we wish to ask that any branch which has not received the new loose-leaf branch record and forms, will please notify us at once, giving name and address of branch president or clerk and the number of names enrolled in your branch, and we will be pleased to supply the new record immediately.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS,

Religious Education—Graceland College

The question has been raised as to the reason for the early call by the President of the church for applications for enrollment in next year's class in Religious Education in Graceland College which will begin its work in September, 1920.

This early call is due to the fact that it is expected to submit, during March, all applications to the committee appointed by the First Presidency to pass upon them so that the committee's recommendations can be forwarded to the Joint Council for final action during the annual conference in April.

In view of this plan those interested or those who know of others who should be interested in making this very important preparation for the Master's work are requested to communicate at an early date with The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Help Wanted at Church Homes

The church needs on its farms connected with the homes for the aged and Children's Home two or three energetic and capable men who have had experience in farm work, particularly the feeding and milking of dairy cattle, who understand or can readily learn the keeping of records and work reports and who like farm life.

To those interested in the temporal side of the redemption of Zion, who are qualified for this line of work and desire to have a part in the advancement of the cause, this is your opportunity.

List of Delegates Omitted

On account of the many demands on the space of the HERALD, the editors have been observing the rule of not printing the names of delegates for Sunday school and Religion districts to the General Conventions. These are so extensive on account of the basis of representation that to publish all of them would overwhelm us. Names of delegates to General Conference will be published, if district secretaries feel they have no better facilities for notifying those elected. But a personal letter is often more effective.

"Some people make their money go a long way, while others experience considerable difficulty in letting it go at all."

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

A letter from Heatherdown, Alberta, says Brother J. D. Stead has held some excellent meetings, beginning November 23. Conditions were unfavorable on account of threshing and bad weather, but a great deal of interest was stirred up, and the community has had abundant opportunity to hear of the gospel.

Plans are under way at Graceland College for the annual oratorical contest, which for the past few years has been held at General Conference time. Evidently a goodly number will try to gain the coveted honor and receive the reward of an annual scholarship. Some interesting definitions of religion, salvation, and faith were evolved in the religious education class recently and are submitted for publication elsewhere in the HERALD columns. In order to secure a consensus of opinion of the colleges of the United States regarding the proposed League of Nations, Graceland, along with the other colleges of the country, has been requested to express its opinion on the question by vote of the student body and the faculty. The vote will be on the 13th. Heman Hale Smith is delivering chapel lectures on the subject, in order to give everyone a clear conception of the issue at stake. The local photographer has been busy recently securing a large number of pictures of students, singly and in groups for the college annual, The Acacia, which promises to be better than ever this year. Frederick M. Smith is to deliver lectures soon at the college to the religious education class on "Revelation," and much interest is manifest.

Heman Hale Smith recently lectured in Chicago, Plano, and Kewanee on his return from a trip to Chicago and Cleveland. His wife and two children have located in Kansas City to provide medical attention for their eldest son who has throat trouble as a result of diphtheria. In Chicago he attended important meetings of the Association of Labor Legislation, and in Cleveland meetings of the American Historical Association and the American Political Science Association.

On Monday evening, January 5, the Lamoni Order of Enoch held its annual meeting for the election of officers. The four trustees whose term expired, A. Carmichael, J. F. Garver, C. E. Wight, and J. E. Anderson, were all reelected for a three-year term. The treasurer's report shows—assets of about $12,800, and liabilities of $900; leaving a present worth of over 11,900. The Order of Enoch has not been so active the past year and a half, awaiting the decision of the bishopric as to in what way they desired it to function. Still expenditures were made that exceeded $1,400. The Order first started the mill in Lamoni, which was later turned over to the bishopric, on their request, as part of the storehouse.

The Periscope in The Gospel Standard for October states that they were expecting Apostles Rushton and Hanson at an early date. We have not been informed, however, if they have arrived in Australia. They expected, however, to go on directly from Papeete December 1.

Elder William Kelso, President of the Higbee, Missouri Branch for over sixteen years, was accidentally shot on December 27, and instantly died. He was very well thought of in the community and the local paper devoted nearly two columns to him—his life and high character.

Apostles J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell have started on a missionary tour of Alabama, Florida, and other Southern States. Apostle Griffiths is to visit Salt Lake City, Denver, and other western points.

Associate Editor S. A. Burgess went to Des Moines on the 9th, where he is to lecture on one of the dates of the lecture course they have provided, and address the priesthood of the branch.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Lamoni, Iowa. The branch sustained the stake presidency as the presidency of the branch at its recent annual meeting. It was decided to hold business meetings quarterly instead of monthly. The joint system of having each organization elect an auditor for auditing all local church accounts was abolished, and the branch president and the heads of the auxiliary departments are to appoint one auditor each year. A budget of $3,600 for branch expenses for the coming year was adopted, and it is planned to secure cash and pledges for the amount early in February. The group or district system of priesthood work continues and with some modifications in attitude and understanding will be pushed harder than ever this year.

Waterloo, Iowa. The branch was visited recently by Brother and Sister Fisher, of Nashua, Iowa. She is editor of the All Outdoors Department in Stepping Stones. One eighteen-year-old girl was baptized recently. The young people as a whole are enthusiastic and loyal. The Orioles are to have a New Year's party January 1, all the young people being invited. The branch is only a little over a year old but has secured two lots and prepared a cozy little church. God is given the praise for making this possible.

Burlington, Iowa. Two Graceland students, Clara Williams and Jennie Kunz, spent the holidays at home. F. M. McDowell, of Graceland, spent the 28th here and was kept busy. He addressed the Sunday school on some of the essentials of teaching, lectured at the morning hour on "church problems," had a round table on social work at the Religio, and lectured in the evening on "Religio and the social crisis." His visit was thoroughly appreciated. The district bishop, George P. Lambert, attended prayer service here on the 21st. The Woman's Auxiliary is beginning active work in the relief and service work and report interesting monthly programs.

Buffalo, New York. The harvest home festival during Thanksgiving week brought a number of new friends to the cause. T. W. Williams and J. E. Bishop spoke, and during the time the largest crowd in the history of our church attended. The church was bountifully decorated with fruits, vegetables, and flowers. Following this, Joseph Luff and proached with open mind, and in an attempt to ascertain the essential principles. Particular topics were also referred to special committees, to make our work as adaptable as it can be to our special need.

Sunday school work is of great importance to the church. What is studied in this course is religious education and Sunday school work does much towards making the citizens of the church and of the kingdom of God. It is a work of great responsibility, and one which should receive the best interest of the church officers. It is quite probable the work will be extended to include one year prior to the beginner grade, and it will also include the arrangement of adult classes for advanced study afterwards in teacher training, Bible research, church doctrine, the Book of Mormon, church history, missionary class, a review of the fundamental principles, and other topics of special interest.

One of the greatest needs at present is for competent teachers who are prepared to handle the work of the Sunday school. And the board especially urges upon the executive council that immediate steps be taken to provide better qualified teachers. This does not mean the removal of the present teacher, but a more earnest effort for their training and preparation for class work.

G. Wellington Robley held a series of meetings, the latter also holding a series of cottage meetings during the week. All these were extensively advertised through the mail, street car signs, and from house to house. We hope they will come again. The ladies of the church remembered the Children's Home at Christmas time by sending a Christmas box. Elder William Landes, of Niagara Falls occupied on the evening of the 28th. B. R. McGuire and wife dropped in to see us. A number of our members attended the conference and church opening at Sherrill. We congratulated Brother Mesle and coworkers on the good work done.

Gulfach Goch, South Wales. The branch is without a place of worship as the place they were using has been sold. About fifty attend the Sunday school. The Saints were disappointed because President Smith did not visit the British Isles, believing much good could have been done. There have been three weddings in the branch: Rees Jenkins and Catherine Allen, J. G. Jenkins and Beatrice Maud Allen, Samuel Beachman and Jennie Jenkins. Some conditions are very discouraging, and an appeal is being made to the authorities of the church for special consideration of the situation in Wales.

Toronto is still in the struggle. Last night at the "Allen," Brother Williams preached to a large, attentive audience, including about seven hundred nonmembers. Subject: "The world's will." A masterly effort. The deity was presented in a new light standing just behind this shadow projecting his will into the world that man through experience might learn to say, "Not my will but thine be done." G. E. Harrington, district president, was the third elder on the platform. Despite Toronto's "special feature" (smallpox: 2,000 cases), Joseph Luff has appeared on the scene. We wish him luck.

Fayette City, Pennsylvania. Elder Alma Booker, district missionary, recently finished a series of meetings in the community, baptizing two, and more greatly interested. R. H. Winship, district superintendent, has organized a School near Belle Vernon. Richard Baldwin was a welcome visitor not long ago.

Joppa, Illinois. Elder F. L. Sawley, of Springerton, has just closed a series of meetings lasting ten days at this place, where he had splendid interest and good attendance. The Saints are alive to the work and the work moves. Sunday school, prayer meetings, and preaching services are held regularly. Brother Sawley is doing a fine work and it is hoped he may find it possible to return. T. C. Kelley gave a passing visit and preached three welcome sermons. About sixty per cent of the members of the branch are tithe payers, and the Christmas offering looms large. L. M. McFadden came by on his way home from Kentucky and Tennessee District. We are always glad to see the elders and have them preach.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

President Wilson has deferred the railroads back to private ownership until March 1. The reason for this step is to allow sufficient time for the passing of remedial legislation necessary to the transfer.

The railroad administration has ordered grain to be put ahead of all other commodities in the movement of freight from the West and Northwest. This has resulted in a lower market in Chicago, but in a better market to the farmers. But a lower price is better than no price, and seeing the grain rot.

The Presbyterian, making comment on the Interchurch Conference states that they are a very fine company of people, moral, cultured, and devoted to their question, but they state that the conference must mean big expense without commensurate results, and adds:

"We cannot speak so highly of the program. It appeared to be a great promoter's scheme incapable of execution. It is too general and inclusive, and becomes unavoidably superficial and erroneous. It substitutes petty details for principles. Political interests supplants spiritual necessities. Economic theories take the place of great Bible facts. The whole program takes on the appearance of an attempt at world management rather than the proclamation of God's way of saving and upbuilding men. There is always a danger when a few men try to manage too many things, and world-management belongs to God alone."

The United States Supreme Court, on January 5, handed down a decision upholding the right of Congress to define intoxicants, and to prohibit by law the sale of any beverage containing one half of one per cent alcohol. This practically settled the subject of constitutionality of prohibition for the United States, though the decision was by a divided court—five to four. The decision before the holidays concerning the Wartime Prohibition Act was the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court.

A survey is being made in Omaha by the Lutheran Church, who will canvass every member. It is stated: "The laymen of the church will do this work, going forth by twos as did the apostles of old."

THERE SHOULD BE

A Herald in Every Church Home

WILL YOU ENLIST TO PUT IT THERE?

The campaign is on! The objective has been set! All the available forces have been thrown into the field! We are now recruiting volunteers! Missionaries, local officers, members everywhere—you are all called to the colors, and your church asks you to serve in the great cause of publicity for Christ.

HERE IS THE PLAN OF ACTION

1. Sell yourself. If you are not taking the HERALD subscribe to-day.
2. Unless you are keeping a file, pass every HERALD along and let it do the maximum good.
3. If you have children absent from home, subscribe for them.
4. If you would convert your neighbors, spend $2.25 and let the HERALD preach to them for a year.
5. Send us names of prospects and let us sell them.
6. Talk HERALD from the pulpit and in the home when occasion warrants.
7. If you could act as agent send for instructions, discount lists and supplies.

*The HERALD is the official organ of the church. In extending its circulation you extend

Receiving Revelations

The ideals of the church are clearly set forth in the following statements of President F. M. Smith at the Independence stake conference, October 6, 1918.

At a certain time of my life it became necessary for me, especially since I was asked to accept a position that is unique among all the organizations of the world, to give considerable thought to this question of how God shall reveal himself to his people. There was a disposition at one time on my part to limit God as to how he should reveal his will. But I passed this point and have been able to say, If thou, O God, art desirous of revealing thy will to us, or to me, be it far from me to say how. If it be that thou desirest to write across the arch of thy heaven those words that thou shalt see fit to transmit to thy people, then give me the wisdom to read. Or if thou dost choose to manifest thy power in the thunderous tones that thou art capable of giving, so that they will ring through all the arch of heaven, let my ears be open. Or if, in the still, small voice that comes from within, thou shalt choose to reveal thy will to me, then let thy Spirit attune my spiritual ear to the reception of thy word. Or if thou dost choose to utilize those powers with which thou hast by nature endowed me, quickened by thine own processes of development, to transmit through them the message that thou hast to give to thy people, then my pen shall be ready. Or if thou dost choose to bathe my soul in thy Spirit until my spiritual vision shall behold what thou dost desire thy people to accomplish, even then shall I endeavor as thy instrument to transmit the message to thy people.

Strange to say, at times the very last of the ones that I would have believed probable, in trying to express his will through me to this people is the one he has chosen to use; for I have felt that quickening of spiritual vision until my spiritual eyes were enabled to see almost as a panoramic vision extending over the years yet to come, not in detail, but in one grand, general ensemble, the work to be accomplished by this people. And when I have thus seen the work yet to be done spread out before me, I have been at times suddenly turned from contemplation of these splendid things, and with my own natural eyes and powers have looked upon the work already done, I could not but exclaim, "How long, O Lord, how long!"

So, when there arise persons claiming that they have had the will of the Lord revealed to them, that such and such is wrong in the church, and that such and such would be right, the safeguard that God himself has placed before you is always available for your protection, and you have the right, and not only the right, but the duty to weigh that which shall come, and be alert to the fact that God will reveal himself in the way that pleaseth him best; but always and at all times shall that will be in harmony and consistent with his revealments in the past, however they may have come.

So we still stand for one of the fundamental ideals of the church, and that is not only belief in God, but a sure and secure belief that God will reveal his will to us, and speak to us in our own language and in his own way.

President Frederick M. Smith spent four days of the past week in Lamoni, addressing the missionary class five different times, the whole college at assembly twice, and the church membership at the church building on Thursday night. In all he spoke some eight times. The meetings were open to the public, and several from town took advantage of the opportunity to attend. We are informed that President Smith intends to return later to deliver at least two lectures on revelation, its necessity and its mode.

But he took occasion in one lecture to the college assembly, to emphasize that the highest inspiration comes in the course of intelligent development, and as a result of the most thorough preparation we can make; that it represents the highest manifestation of the powers of man.

He emphasized also, one morning, to the missionary class, the great necessity of revelation in the church, and the great necessity of the church with revelation to the world. And again emphasized his clear position on the subject. As we understand it, his position is, that the highest inspiration does not come through making the mind vacant, and going into a sort of a trance, but that revelation comes when a man is concentrating his best intelligence on the solution of the problem before him, and the spirit of God reaches down and illuminates his intelligence, so that he receives, whether by audible voice, by vision, or by a more direct means of communication, knowledge from God. Such is received when his critical faculties are at a maximum, and it carries with it the fullest conviction of which the intelligence is capable.

His address at the church was upon Zion, its necessity and what it means and a rousing call to prepare. His addresses to the missionary class were principally upon the church, its origin, organization and administration. These were assigned topics by the committee that outlined the course.

In the college chapel he discussed the necessity of thorough and critical preparation.

It is difficult in a few words to convey the deep spirit of consecration and of devotion that was manifested in his work.

Two Editorials on Moving Pictures

In this department will be found two editorials this week which discuss phases of the moving picture propositions. These were written independently of each other, and both being completed at the same time, the assistant editor acted as judge as to their respective merit and sent both of them in for use this week. They are sufficiently alike yet sufficiently different, to merit a careful reading.

Can the Church Use the Picture Machine?

The violin was not of the Devil; it had merely been prostituted to the Devil—Howie redeemed it. Have we grace within ourselves to redeem the motion pictures?

The use of the picture machine in the service of the church, and particularly in church buildings dedicated to divine service, has elicited some discussion. It might perhaps be a subject that some would like to take up in The Forum.

One active missionary in a western field has written the Presidency and Twelve petitioning them to take steps to arrange and provide motion picture films and stereopticon slides for use in missionary propaganda. He suggests as subjects: early church scenes, scenes from South America, Central America, and Mexico, illustrating archæological evidences supporting the Book of Mormon; and pictures of our present-day church institutions, church leaders, etc. Some recent gatherings, such as the one at the Kirtland reunion during the past fall, were filmed, we are told. How much of a legitimate field is there for the picture machine in such work? Will it come in time to be a valuable assistant to our men in field work?

What field has the picture machine in educational work? Is its use in our church buildings for such purposes legitimate? At a conference of the Independence Stake some two months ago a motion prevailed to install in the Stone Church the picture machine that had previously been used on the church lawn for summer evening services, mostly on Friday and Saturday nights.

That action has been made the subject of some criticism. The newspaper headings at the time reported that the "movies" had been admitted to the Stone Church. The "movies" were not admitted, as the term "movies" is commonly, if not universally understood. The resolution provided for the installing of a motion picture machine, it is true, but its use was restricted by the terms of the resolution to lectures on archæology, sermons, and scenic or travelogues. At this writing the machine has been used twice since it was installed, once for a lecture by Doctor Egbert, of the University of Columbia, on Roman archæology; once by Doctor Hewitt, of the American Archæological Institute, in a lecture on the American Indian (the Lamanite).

Those who supported the resolution argued that the use of such pictures in sermons, lectures, or travel talks, is quite as legitimate as the time-honored use of charts for similar purposes. Were they right? The movies are welcome to the motion picture for purpose of pleasure, and for pandering to vitiated public tastes in diverse matters; but shall we take it also for our own purposes in religious and educational work? Is there danger in the use of the picture machine? If so, is it of such a nature that it will absolutely prohibit the use of the machine? Or can the machine be used in such a way as to avoid the danger?

To our way of thinking the question hinges entirely on the use that is to be made of the picture machine. A picture machine in itself is neither good nor bad, neither holy nor unholy. It could not of itself desecrate a church, more than a coal hod, or a steam radiator, or a violin could desecrate the sanctuary. What is it to be used for? What is the nature of the pictures and what the purpose of their exhibition? Those are the questions.

If the picture machine were installed and used to display pictures of train robberies, questionable sexual liaisons, "Max Sennet's bathing beauties," and daughters of eve minus the fig leaf, as in the "movies," then we would concede that it had no place in the church. But used to illustrate lectures on archæology, in which we have a vital interest, or to illustrate sermons, on the life of Christ, for instance, or to illustrate scenic or travelogues, as for instance a trip through the Holy Land, a visit to the General Conference, ten days at Kirtland, or something of that kind, the situation is vastly different.

It is alleged that no argument is now urged against the motion picture in church service that was not at one time in substance at least used against the violin, and at an earlier date against the organ. The violin ought not to be allowed in the church if it is to be used as the world sometimes uses it—for dances, etc. Used in the orchestra or choir it does not offend. It was said that the introduction of the violin would pave the way for dances in the church. The dire prediction was evidently not inspired. The violin was not of the Devil—it had merely been prostituted to the Devil. Hoxie and others before him have redeemed it. Have we grace enough within ourselves to redeem the motion picture—or is our spiritual power so emancipated that we dare not attempt such a task lest we be overcome.

The organ used to be a matter for controversy. The Christians were divided, and the "nonprogressive" branch of the Christian church to this day will not tolerate the organ in the church. We ourselves made it a matter of very lively and at times acrimonious debate. But now that phase of our development is an all-but-forgotten incident. It is so clearly obvious now that the piano or organ, used as they are used in dance halls or saloons, would be a desecration to the church; but used as we use them they are a help rather than otherwise.

The same general principles are involved in the discussion of the picture machine, excepting that the motion picture is much more vital, more potential for good or evil. It is said that seeing is five times as impressive as hearing. If that be true, the suggestion in a bad motion picture will be five times more potent than the same suggestion set forth orally or in writing. But the obverse is true also, the suggestion contained in a good picture will be five times as effectual as the same suggestion would be made orally. The moving picture is here. Is it a thing that we must leave alone? Is it a thing that we can leave alone? Is it an instrument that we can use for good in any way? If so, in what way?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Moving Picture

In the discussion of whether we should have a moving picture machine in the church, the issue is almost necessarily confused by the fact that moving pictures were first offered as the poor man's theater, and hence were associated in the public mind with the theater. They were offered merely as a form of amusement, and usually of rather a gross, melodramatic character. There are many yet who think the only use of the moving picture machine is as a form of amusement.

As a form of amusement we have absolutely no defence to offer; no more than for the theater or opera. As such they may be considered simply in their relation to recreation.

But the moving picture itself is not a personality possessing ethical standards. It is merely a machine that is used by mankind. The piano has been used in the dance hall; it is not therefore banned from the home, even though it is there a source of enjoyment. The organ, and instruments of string and brass are worldly amusements. Yet they have rightly contributed their share to the service of the church of God. Instruments of music were used in the temple at Jerusalem and the early Saints sang hymns. Should we to-day confine our service simply to preaching, and perhaps an opening and closing prayer? It is but a short time since the churches were not heated. Is it a sin to have the church heated and have comfortable seats on which to sit? There have been and probably still are people in the world who think the more we suffer the better is our religion; the more uncomfortable the seats, the colder the room, the longer and drier the sermons, the more piety is shown by those who enter. But is that true?

We do not recall any revelation on any of these subjects that the church should be heated and comfortable seats should be acquired; the building should be adequately lighted, or that a floor covering be therein. These have been subjects of controversy, but none of these conveniences have hindered, but rather have increased spiritually the opportunity for divine worship.

But the Lord has said that we can do much good of ourselves. He gave us our intelligence for the purpose of using. The mere fact that the world now rides on electric cars does not prohibit our doing so. The mere fact that the world now uses the railroad trains, and the telephone, does not mean that we are following worldly ways or after sectarianism because we utilize these same instruments. The mere fact that sectarian churches are lighted by electricity does not prohibit us, under the awful accusation of following after sectarianism, from using electric lights in our church.

At one time the controversy became so strong concerning musical instruments that the Lord had to speak, as will be found in Doctrine and Covenants 119:6. But he also tells us it is a slothful people that wait to be commanded in all things.

Why should it be thought that every new development or advancement of intelligence is necessarily of the Devil? What reason is there in Holy Writ to draw such a conclusion? Yet it appears to be quite an ancient error. The general church officers are using wireless to communicate with the officers at Lamoni. If the glory of God is intelligence, and "light and truth forsaketh that evil one," (Doctrine and Covenants 90), we are led rather strongly to infer that every new development of intelligence is of God, and not of the adversary. Why should not the instrumentalities of God be used in his services?

As to the moving picture machine, it is well recognized by students of pedagogy that the eye is many times as effective an instrument for teaching as is the ear. The teacher who can show a child, the speaker who can show his audience, is more effective than one who merely reads or delivers an oral lecture. This is so well recognized that before the moving picture, universities and colleges purchased stereopticon machines to show pictures of various parts of Europe or scenes of history.

When moving picture machines were perfected institutions of learning secured them. Graceland College has had one for some years; not as a source of amusement, but for the purpose of giving illustrated lectures. We know from our own experience and observation of others it is a tremendous power in the giving of proper instruction.

We have seen such instruments used repeatedly, and yet never used for any other purpose than one of giving valuable instruction. Why could not such an instrument be dedicated to the service of God? Bringing the history of the church before the people, not only as a picture, but as a moving picture, as a representation of life itself, should prove tremendously effective.

Certainly those who go to a moving picture show and thereby neglect the service of the church are doing wrong. Certainly those who would bring it into the church and use it to divert their minds from the divine service are making a mistake; if it should be there are any such. There may have occurred an occasional mistake—a picture that was not all that it was hoped to be. But that is not a matter of intention so far as we have been able to observe.

But at the same time, with discriminating judgment, there is valuable information to be secured, even on occasion in moving picture houses. We confess they are frankly commercial, their prime aim being to make money. The number of really good pictures there is not large. But it is rare indeed that one cannot find in our larger cities, some time in the month, at least one such picture.

Nor is this offered as justification for promiscuous attendance, for it is not. But this instrument is used not only for the purpose of giving instruction on a variety of subjects, but is capable of being used directly in the teaching of religious stories and religious history.

At the same time, we must clearly recognize that its utmost scope is to picture that which is physically visible. It cannot picture abstract truths. It cannot present that which is invisible to the human eye. Nor is it intended to take the place of the teachings by the man of God under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. It is not and cannot be on the same high plane as a good prayer service. But neither is the organ, the piano, the violin, the electric light, seats, or furnace.

So far as our observation has gone, the proper use of these material instrumentalities does not decrease spirituality, but in many cases quite the reverse. The greater our intelligence, other things being equal, the greater is our basis for spiritual growth. The moving picture cannot take the place of spirituality, nor has it had that effect.

Contention, which is at times unseemly, has done more in one day to decrease spirituality than have all of the instruments of brass, of string, and of reed, all of the chairs, carpets, furnaces, electric lights and moving pictures combined.

Why not use it in its proper place and manner?

Democracy on Trial

We fought one war to "make the world safe for democracy." But democracy has yet to vanquish its most dangerous foe. It faces its most alarming crisis. Will it be able to resist the foes that are within?

The situation is not greatly different in all democratic nations. The church is not national or provincial. Its message is for all people. But for the reason that the gospel first came in the last day to English-speaking people, and for the further reason that Zion is to be in America, we notice first perhaps those dangers which menace the English-speaking peoples.

England faces the danger of which we speak. Australia is torn with turmoil. Sedition has been sown in Canada. While in the United States we are fast awaking to the new peril.

We who were born of American parentage, and in the free public schools imbibed national traditions, felt that our institutions were of such character that they would command respect and allegiance for all time. It did not occur to us that they would be challenged or could be challenged.

As church members our convictions were strengthened by the divine statement that God had established the Constitution by the hands of wise men raised up for that very purpose. We were accustomed to seeing thousands come from all lands, because they felt this to be the land of promise. They sought opportunity and liberty. They came prepared to support our institutions and to become loyal citizens.

But now the conditions are changed. Thousands slip into the land who come to destroy. They hate democracy as badly as they ever hated the Czar or the Kaiser. Their object is to overthrow all government. The things that we hate they love; the things that we love, they hate. For the first time since the Civil War the Federal Government is in peril.

Just now these radicals, under whatever name they may masquerade, are endeavoring to win a position of power in organized labor. Organized labor has won about all the gains that have come to working men in the way of higher wages, better working conditions, and shorter hours. But these radicals who are seeking the ear of organized labor, do not foment strikes to win better wages or shorter hours of improved working conditions.

They regard every strike, no matter how small, as an incipient revolution. They work toward the final general strike, which they forecast, and which they intend to make a revolution for the overthrow of this government and all governments. Consequently pretexts, just or unjust, are seized by them to foment discord, and if possible to embroil the working man with the government and embitter him against it. No agreement sufficiently equitable to satisfy them could be devised. They do not want agreement—but mastery—mastery by a class over all—as in Russia.

Unfortunately the blind and insensate greed of employers has given sufficient ground for grievance in many instances. In others an appeal to cupidity prevails. About the same process is going on in many lands. Will Democracy be able to meet and control this schism within herself? Or will civil war, or rather class war, come, followed by chaos? Russia is an ominous portent. But there the change was cataclysmic, from autocracy to unbridled licence. Are we so well traditioned and disciplined that by orderly constitutional processes we can make needed reforms to meet the new era?

The duty of Latter Day Saints is rather clear, in the main, though the details in individual cases may seem obscure. We are citizens. Our government is representative. This is in accord with our belief. This representative government all goes back to and rests upon the Constitution. And it, we are told, was prepared, to an extent at least, under divine direction. Furthermore, we are admonished that we obey the law of the land; for we are told that he who keeps the law of God has no need to break the law of the land.

It is true that the courts may err at times. Our legislators may err. Our executives may bungle a situation. This is to be expected. We must bear with these abortive incidents in democratic government, and trust that in the end, by the usual constitutional processes, redress will be made and justice be done.

We must support the government and the Constitution. We must refrain from participation in mob violence, or in scenes or acts of violence. We must eschew all that contravenes law and order. In the struggle that is going on between the desperate, cunning, and unscrupulous apostles of anarchy, and the organized forces of democratic government everywhere, we should cast our moral influence in the favor of law and order.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Lift up Your Heads and Sing

We have many times commented upon the remarkable work done by Albert N. Hoxie in Philadelphia during the war and since. There has just reached our attention a copy of the University Extension Bulletin, for December, published by the American Society for the extension of university teaching. This work includes lectures practically every night in the week, and some nights two lectures, in different parts of Philadelphia. It also includes such special musical numbers as the New York Symphony Society, Walter Damrosch, conductor. On the same night that this concert is advertised, the University Extension Symphony Orchestra gives one of its weekly concerts. Of this latter, Albert N. Hoxie is director.

On the inside page of the cover, is a letter covering the whole page, from Fullerton L. Waldo, editor of the Public Ledger. He remarks upon the wonderful service that is being done by the community singing concert:

"Here was the genuine democracy—making the world a safer and lovelier place by this vocal unison which preludes spiritual accord. Every audience Mr. Hoxie energizes and inspires."

On the inside of the back page there is a full column, "What the papers say," and it is entirely taken up with the discussion of the symphony orchestra and Mr. Hoxie's work, which is a satisfaction not only to the audience, who are also the singers, but also to the critics, and the critical standards of what constitute good music.

Then on page two of the bulletin there appears nearly a full page by James Francis Cook, the editor of the Etude. Mr. Cooke comments upon the fact that Albert N. Hoxie has the proud distinction of having been the song leader who taught the marines who "turned the war" at Chateau Thierry. The marines went forward on that famous day to the battle line singing the songs that Hoxie had taught them.

"With the ending of the war there came a demand for more and more singing. In Philadelphia Mr. Hoxie had had more experience than all others, it was quite natural that he should be engaged to conduct the University Extension Symphony Orchestra at the concerts of which the 'Everybody Sing' idea is now being introduced as a part of the program. Mr. Hoxie is a violinist and a business man who believes that every man has a civic debt to his fellows and should devote part of his spare time to some work for the welfare of his fellows. More than this, he enjoys every moment of his programs and makes the audience enjoy them. He has ideas and likes to do things differently from other leaders. The University Extension Symphony Orchestra and the mass singing movement does not even enter into competition with other symphony orchestras; it sets out to do a very different thing. The masterpieces played will not be deep, abstruse works, but the most interesting numbers of the masters, and they will be done by an orchestra of famous soloists. The community singing part of the program and the new educational features introduced by Mr. Hoxie give the whole evening an intimate character, a "getting together with music" idea which is impossible in the formal concert. The entire audience literally becomes a kind of choral society and when at the first concert "The lost chord" was taken up and sung by the audience, the people who did the singing were so enthusiastic at the end that they followed their own singing with applause."

There has also come to our desk the editorial page of The North American of Philadelphia, for November 29. A double column editorial, the principal editorial of the day, is devoted to "Singing for democracy." A brief reference is made to the fact that at the Academy of Music special soloists were brought from the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. No names are given. The whole editorial, except these few brief lines, is devoted to the work of Albert N. Hoxie and the Symphony Orchestra. They quote Mr. Cooke as follows:

"Perhaps it is more important we should sing now than during the war," says Mr. Cooke, who, as editor of a music monthly of national circulation, is qualified to speak in this regard. "A good, healthy sing has a purifying effect. It gets you closer to your fellowman. It makes for real democracy. It makes Bolshevism difficult, if not impossible. Not to be identified with this great movement is to neglect one of the really useful and beautiful things bequeathed to us by the great war. Not until you have forgotten class and realized the true brotherhood of man will you in this age be able to take up the huge job that confronts us."

Now some may think we are giving too much attention to this subject. Some may consider it a personal boost. It is not so intended. If we thought that Brother Hoxie were looking for free advertisement, it would not be given. But in this time of stress he is doing a tremendous thing for cooperation and for democracy. When people sing together they feel more kindly one towards another. We venture the suggestion that if the coal operators and miners could have been brought together in some such chorus, the strike would have been settled long before it was.

That he is doing a big thing musically is only incidental. But he is doing a big thing for society—something to bring people together and create between them a better understanding is not to be lightly passed over.

Again, some six years ago, Brother Hoxie expressed his purpose to direct an orchestra in Philadelphia. Though he lived in a city of a million and a half inhabitants and more, yet this fact did not deter him from setting his aim high, and going ahead to its accomplishment. We are free to say that we think the accomplishment exceeded his early

An Outline—Part 3

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

The hand of God shown in the rediscovery of this western land as a part of his divine plan.

Where Restored

The place where the hand of the Lord is to be seen, beginning the regeneration outlined in the preceding prophecies, is pointed out with perspicuity in Isaiah 18; with further suggestions as to the time when—“Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled! All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye. For so the Lord said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will consider in my dwelling-place like a clear heat upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest. For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning-hooks, and take away and cut down the branches. They shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them. In that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts of a people scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the mount Zion.”—Isaiah 18: 1-7.

Jerusalem is the place the prophet stood delivering this prophecy. Ethiopia, at that date comprehended the interior, and southern portion of Africa. Ethiopia was situated between Jerusalem and the oceans.

There are only four rivers of any importance in all the Ethiopian territory—Niger, Senegal, Grande, and Meourado. These flow southeast and into the south Atlantic and Indian Oceans. The only “land shadowing with wings” beyond the rivers, is the continent of America—stretched out like the wings of a great bird, connected by the Isthmus of Panama. The United States with the wings of the great eagle symbolizes the protective power of the Republic over all, north and south.

On this land the Almighty was to lift up an ensign to the nations, and blow a trumpet, inviting the world to see and hear. The instituting of the ensign and blowing the trumpet was to eventuate in the Gentiles bringing Israel as a present to the Lord. It is a movement inaugurated after the Lord “takes his rest.” (Verse 4.)

For nearly 2,000 years has the Lord taken this “rest”—no pure gospel, in light by spiritual gifts, no revelation by the Holy Spirit, no miracles, signs, nor ministration of angels, no working the works of God, no prophets, nor apostles, no priesthood of God administering the ordinances—all chaos, all darkness.

Yet God, while taking his rest in this period, and refraining the divine regime, has considered in his dwelling place and shed forth such general beneficence of a temporal character, “like heat upon herbs”—to give food—and “dew in the heat of the harvest”—to preserve life, in such manner as will comport with his universal Fatherhood.

On the time of the harvest or end of the world we read:

“The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall prevail against his enemies. I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself; now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and devour at once. I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools. And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.”—Isaiah 42: 13-16.

These considerations and prophecies bring America into the field as the land of promise and purpose. The following is also in point:

“And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth; and behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: none shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed; nor the latchet of their shoes be broken.”—Jeremiah 5: 26-27.

“From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.”—Zephaniah 3: 10.

America

Not only does the ancient prophecy exalt and magnify the western domain, but enlarged vision has directed pæans of victory toward this occidental star. Doctor Burrell, D. D., of New York, when addressing the World's Parliament of Religion at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, 1893, left this paragraph at the head of the list:

“At the very outset we trace the hand of God in the discovery of this land. All things in the divine economy occur in fullness of time. Up and down along the coast of this western world cruised many a bold mariner; but the terra incognita was waiting for its hour. When all the burdened lands were groaning for deliverance from their surplus population, the hour struck; the hour struck, and God's man appeared. The cruise of Columbus was a missionary enterprise. The conquest of America, was a conquest for Christ. . . . The hand of Providence is traced in the settlement of this country, and in the development of our American life and character. In glancing at the successive emigrations hitherward, one is reminded of that old-time Pentecost, when strangers came from everywhere, Parthians, Medes, Elamites, Greeks, Arabians, and dwellers in Mesopotamia, all seeking a place to worship. It is our belief that the baptism of fire and power has rested upon them all.”

The place of honor is accorded to the Puritans, who, disgusted with religious mockery, and intolerance in the old world, resolved to traverse the ocean to the American wilderness and risk icicle and savage, where they might have freedom to worship God in the way which appealed to them as right. We cannot resist noting the harmony of Doctor Burwell's thought with the prophetic vision in the record of Joseph as to the discovery of America:

Christopher Columbus

“And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.”—1 Nephi 3: 147.

The discoverer of America, on the occasion of his second voyage, and after weary hours spent on the lookout for land, threw himself prone on deck in despair.

“Then,” says Columbus, “I heard a familiar voice speaking to me compassionately, ‘O, unbeliever, who will not serve thy God—ever since thou wast born he hath had thee in charge; as soon as he saw that thou hadst reached the age of thy destiny he filled the world with thy fame. . . . He hath given thee the keys of the ocean, bound as with strong chains before. Stand up as a man and acknowledge thy error. Thou callest for an uncertain success, yet God hath never been false to his promise. Surely he will recompense thee for thy fatigues and perils thou hast undergone. Fear not; do not complain, for all these tribulations shall be written in marble." Hearing this, overcome, I could only weep for my errors."—From Is the End Near, by C. C. Ruthrauff.

Again the record of Joseph:

"And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles: and they went forth out of captivity upon the many waters. . . . And I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise."—Nephi 3: 148-150.

Here we note that Doctor Burrell's conclusion is in line with prophecy as to the discovery, immigration, and settlement of the western continent by his polygotic company, so pentecostal in reminiscence.

Irving gave us his conviction that "heaven-commissioned" Columbus was "to plant the banner of the cross upon these shores, which as yet appeared to exist but in his own imagination." The prophetic language of Lehi illumines the pathway over the sea:

"Wherefore, I prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord. Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring."—2 Nephi 1: 10, 11.

God "determines the bounds of man's habitations," (Acts 17: 26; Deuteronomy 32: 8) and these statements develop the thought that those permitted to find these shores, would be people of pure, unselfish purpose, and surely this was the type of our forefathers. In a sermon preached by Cyrus D. Foss, Pastor Saint Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York, 1867, he expressed the following:

"This country was discovered by a religious navigator, sent out by a religious queen, and the ruling motive in the minds of both of them was a religious one. Isabella and Columbus both intended to give the gospel to the natives of any land that might be discovered. Now who shall settle it? Papists? They found it. Spaniards? Frenchmen? Both wanted it. No; God's plan will be imperiled unless colonists of a certain language and of a certain religious faith shall be the first settlers of the land. The settlers must have the truest religious faith there is on earth and must speak only the language which, more than any other language, is full of the inspirations of liberty. They come and for what? With the noblest motive that ever inspired the bosom of an emigrant, see them land from the Mayflower upon the frozen beach, amid the storms of winter, dropping tears which freeze as they fall, and yet tears of gratitude. . . . They had the utmost simplicity of manner, the utmost reverence for the Bible, and the utmost detestation of tyranny, whether in the church or state."—Methodist, December, 1867.

Colonization

It is a historic fact, that in the colonization of America the spirit of personal independence and religious liberty was the star around which different nationalities rallied.

First: Gustavus Adolphus designed his colony of Swedes for the benefit of "all oppressed Christendom."

Second: Penn, the Quaker, established Pennsylvania as "a free colony for all mankind," where the settlers should be governed by laws of their own making.

Third: The first charter of the Jerseys—which were largely peopled by Quakers and Scotch and Irish Presbyterians—declared that, "No person shall at any time, in any way, or on any pretense, be called in question, or in the least hurt, or punished for opinion in religion."

Fourth: Ogelthorpe's colony of Georgia was founded to be a refuge for the distressed people of Britain and the persecuted protestants of Europe; then came the German Moravian, and settled side by side with the French Huguenot, and the Scotch Presbyterian under the motto: "We toil not for ourselves, but for others." (See History of the United States.)

Thompson says (United States as a Nation, Page 29), "the religious spirit was a vital and earnest element." Also, this spirit in the movement of the colonists "prepared the way for the revolution." So jealous were they of any interference with the rights of conscience, that their religion was fitly described by Burke in his speech of conciliation as, "A refinement on the principle of resistance, the dissidence of dissent and the protestantism of the protestant religion."

The record of Joseph presents us with prophecy centuries ago, that America should be a land of liberty, both political and religious. Enlarged vision vindicates the truth of such prophecy. Mr. J. M. Foster in a sermon before the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, November 30, 1882, bore an explicit testimony, as follows:

"Let us look at the history of our own nation. The mediator long ages ago prepared this land as the home of civil and religious liberty. He made it a land flowing with milk and honey. He stored our mountains with coal, and iron, and copper, and silver, and gold. He prepared our fountains of oil, planted our forests, leveled our plains, enriched our valleys, and beautified them with lakes and rivers. He guided the Mayflower over the sea, so that the Pilgrim Fathers landed safely on Plymouth Rock. He directed the course of our civilization, so that we have become a great nation."

We wonder if Mr. Foster did not have in mind the following:

"And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, And for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills. And for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."—Deuteronomy 33: 13-17.

About 298 years ago the Mayflower landed one hundred voluntary exiles on the coast of New England. "Here," says Martyn, "New England was born, and its first baby cry was a thanksgiving and a prayer." The spirit of freedom and toleration like the "leaven" was working in conflict with monarchical dictation until colonization and confederation, when the clash of arms with Great Britain evolved the last analysis, but was the hand of God stretched out in behalf of the colonists? The prophecy in Nephi 3: 154, 155, says:

"And I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters and upon the land also, to battle against them. And the power of God was with them; and also the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle. And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity, were delivered by the power of God out of the hands of all other nations."

Does history verify this prophecy? Even during the dark and cloudy day of the Revolution, when a few poor, weak colonists were ranked against an old, rich, and powerful military organization, Washington could be found away from camp, in the shrubs, on bended knee, under the quiet stars pleading Heaven's aid in the righteous cause. Was his plea availing? Secular history states that after a defeat of one of the British armies, when Cornwallis heard of it—

"He burned his baggage, and pursued Morgan who was now joined by Greene, and the main army. The Americans had just crossed the Catawba when the British came in sight, but night, and a heavy rain checked the pursuers. Next morning the river was too deep to ford, and Cornwallis was delayed three days. Greene pushed on to the Yadkin and secured all its boats. Cornwallis followed, came in sight just as the Americans crossed the stream. Again, sudden and violent rains rescued the Americans, and discomfited Cornwallis. Two days later a similar race was begun for the fords of the Dan, and a third time America was saved by the interposition of Providence. In spite of poverty, suffering, and the frightful odds that were yet to be encountered, the brave people took heart again, and believed that their country was destined to be free."—Eclectic History, United States.

"When the watchman's cry rang through Philadelphia, 'Past two o'clock and Cornwallis is taken,' early the next morning Congress went in solemn procession to church to render thanks to God for the deliverance of the nation."—Ibid.

Nephi predicted nearly 600 years B. C., that "the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity did humble themselves before the Lord."—Nephi 3: 152.

Thus does prophecy illumine the pathway of national intelligence.

Cyrus D. Foss, from whom we have the expression of divinity in the building up of the colonies, further states with reference to the Almighty's hand in the mutation from colonial dependence, to a free nation:

"The God who instituted the colonies, moulded their history—he kept them connected with the mother country until they were strong enough to stand alone among the nations, and then he overruled the manner of their breaking away, so as to inspire them with a perpetual hatred of all oppression. . . . England was judicially blinded in order that America might be free."

Released from the swaddling bands of colonial dependence to run an independent career of unparalleled freedom to man, the formulation and adoption of a constitution in order to insure a "more perfect union," and its stability among the toppling governments of modern times, would argue the power and "wisdom" of God. We are not startled to learn that Joseph Smith put the "cap sheaf on," in the following seer language:

"Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10, A. D. 1833.

The Signs of the Times

BY D. AMOS YATES

To look present developments squarely in the face is not an indication of pessimism. Prophecies are being fulfilled, and we should be alert to all the facts.

In Matthew 24: 3, we find Jesus' disciples asking him this question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" That was a very pertinent question then and should be even more important for us to consider now than it was for those who asked it because we are living nearer the end of the world by several hundred years.

Jesus prefaced his answer by saying, "Take heed that no man deceive you." He realized that it was possible for his disciples at that time to be deceived. It is possible that we may be deceived in our day also. Therefore the admonition to "take heed" is applicable to us as well as to them. To what must we pay heed, then? To the word of God that he has given us through his Son and through his prophets of old and of modern times. If we pay heed to anything that is not in harmony with the word of God, we will be deceived.

What are the signs of the coming of the Lord? Some are teaching that through the efforts of man in national and international affairs in the forming of laws and governments of the world, mankind, in a short time, will have reached the high standard of righteousness, equity, and justice to such an extent that peace will reign supreme throughout the world. They tell us that mankind the world over is "getting better" and will soon recognize the "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and by accepting the teachings of Jesus will shortly usher in the time spoken of by Isaiah when they shall "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." If we are not careful, we may be deceived. Let us "take heed" to the word and see if these doctrines measure up to the statements of Christ and the prophets.

Sometimes we are told that we should be optimistic to such an extent that we preach that everything is lovely, that the world is getting better every day, that all will continue well, if we only think and say so; just shut our eyes to the evils in the world, however real they may be, and say they do not exist. Anyone holding opposite views are classed as pessimists. Of course we want to be optimistic, those who understand the gospel of Jesus can afford to be the most optimistic people in the world for it points them ahead and gives a vision that reaches through the mists of the present and establishes a hope in God for the final triumph of his great plan. We cannot afford to put a strained construction upon the term optimism, however, and blind ourselves to the real conditions that confront us. We ought to be able to look propositions squarely in the face and be optimistic enough, because of our faith in the gospel, to keep our equilibrium and not become unbalanced because we see bad conditions and woes in the world.

If seeing the evil among mankind and foreseeing the calamities that are coming upon the world because of iniquities is pessimistic, then Jesus was a pessimist. In giving the sign of the coming and of the end of the world, Jesus did not say: "When ye see the world getting better every day and mankind expressing love for mankind and good laws being established that bring about equity and justice and show the brotherly love of man to man; when ye see peace established in all the world, all men well fed and clothed and every one happy, no hatred, no enmity and strife, but every one so unselfish that he will lay down his life for his friend—when ye see all these things coming to pass, know ye that I am near at the door." What Jesus did say, however, is clearly set forth in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew. He said we should hear of wars and rumors of wars, that kingdom would rise against kingdom, that there would be famines and various kinds of pestilences, that men would hate one another and betray one another, that because of iniquity (not brotherly love), the love of many should grow cold. An editor of a certain prominent paper on the Pacific Coast, in speaking of the conditions that are prevailing since the war, recently made this statement in one of his editorials, "The war after the war is on, . . . friends are to be forgotten and favors ignored." What a contrast to the idea that the world is going to get into a lovely state to welcome the Master when he comes!

Our modern-day revelations are not silent on these important matters, but speak boldly concerning the things that are coming upon the earth because of the iniquity that shall abound therein. The Latter Day Saints were pioneers in preaching these things to the world years ago when almost all else were teaching that we were becoming so highly civilized there would never be another war of consequence. The men who paid "heed" to the word of God then were not deceived although they were often called worse than "pessimist". We cannot now with consistency—if we "take heed" to the word—say that the past great war was all that was meant by the prophecies relative to these things nor can we cease to warn the world of the troubles yet in store for it. Nay, the Master declares that when these things begin to be fulfilled it is only the beginning of sorrows, call us pessimists if you will.

In Doctrine and Covenants 1:3, we have the following language: "The anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances and have broken mine everlasting covenant, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol. . . Surely the anger of the Lord is not kindled against the inhabitants of the earth because of their righteousness, but rather for their iniquities, because they have broken the everlasting covenant and will not give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles who are the servants of the Lord. How many of the population of the world to-day are giving heed to these servants of God? We do not wish to discredit the good men of the earth nor the work they are doing, but surely they, as a whole, are not complying to the commandments of the Lord in the full sense of the word. Nichodemus was a good man, yet he lacked in some way essential obedience to the word of God.

In Doctrine and Covenants 1:16, the following is found: "Peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst." Are we a part of the world and under Satan, or are we Saints of God and under the power of protection of the Lord? There is no protection promised to the world, and if we are not Saints of God, it will stand us in hand to become such and we ought to be willing to make progress in that direction as soon as we can find out the road to saintliness.

Further reference to what is yet to come upon the world is found in Doctrine and Covenants 28:4, 5; 38:6; 45:4-6. Read these. Here we are given to know that the wicked will not repent, iniquity will abound and vengeance will be visited upon them as a result. Instead of brotherly love and good will toward men being the condition just prior to the coming of the Lord we may expect to see "blood and fire and vapors of smoke."

According to Zechariah 14, the Lord is going to find the world engaged in a terrible and bloody battle at the very hour of his appearance. Therefore we cannot conceive of an idea that the world is going to establish laws and governments that will bring peace to us yet awhile. Christ knew the world would not accept his doctrine of peace, and therefore he sweat drops of blood in the garden of Gethsemane. He knew that mankind would not "stampede" themselves trying to get into his fold. He knew his gospel would not become popular until the time spoken of when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that he is the Christ. There may be lulls in the upheavals of the world but there can be nothing permanent in the way of universal peace until he comes whose right it is to rule over the nations of the earth as their king supreme. (Zechariah 14:9.)

The statesman of the world, the rulers, the politicians, the law-makers, and the contending forces of capital and labor are but wasting their efforts, time, and finance in vain endeavors to establish equity and justice to mankind, simply because they are trying to do so independent of the gospel of Jesus Christ. For six thousand years men have made failures along this line and those who are expecting such great things to come through the strength and wisdom of puny man to-day, are doomed to disappointment. History records nothing but failures along these lines of human endeavor when God has been left out of the matter, but history does tell us of one people who succeeded and became perfect, by obedience to the laws of God, and were translated. Many profess to be living in harmony with God's plan and believe in a divine providence, but profession is not demonstration to the fact and belief is not works. Zion of old did not convert the world, but they set a splendid example to those of their day as well as to us. We have no promise from the Lord that his gospel is going to become so popular to-day that it will take in the rank and file of the men of the world. We are promised, however, that Zion can be redeemed even though it be in a wicked world, if those who have espoused its cause will adhere to the laws of God—it might have been redeemed even now if God's chosen people had done their duty, irrespective of what the world does.

The church has been and is now teaching that Zion is to be a place of safety where God's people may flee from the woes that are to be visited upon the world. If the world is going to reach such a high standard of morality and love from man to man, then why the need of fleeing and a place of safety to go to? It would be safe any where and Zion would not be necessary and we would have to concede, in that case, that God made a mistake, which we are not willing to do.

The time is surely coming when the conditions set forth in Isaiah 2:4 will prevail, but not now. Joel 3:9 gives us a better description of the times in which we are now living than does the citation from Isaiah. We are living in a period of the world's history when the materials that should be used for making tools for peaceful industry, are going to the manufacturing of implements of warfare. It has been stated authoritatively that during the late great war, plowshares were actually used to make swords and bayonets.

Our faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ should be such that we can see these things as they really are and yet look with hope and joy to the future—to the beautiful condition that God has prepared for mankind through his gospel—when that new heaven and new earth shall have come and there shall be no more pain and no more sorrow, no more death; where everything will be joy and peace and happiness. (Revelation 21.) May the Lord help us to be true to the gospel, that Zion might speedily be redeemed, and God's own elect, who are willing to obey his laws, can come together and set an example to the surrounding world as they did in Enoch's city so long ago.

Special investigations made by the Children's Bureau in three American cities show how babies have suffered as a result of the advance in the price of milk. In Baltimore of the 728 children between two and seven years of age, only 29 per cent are now having fresh milk to drink as against sixty per cent a year ago; in Washington, half of those between two and seven years visited by the public health nurses were receiving no fresh milk to drink; and in New Orleans conditions were even worse. Add to this, the statement made by Doctor William R. P. Emmerson that about one third of all American babies and school children are malnourished and that from twenty to forty per cent of those graduating from elementary schools are physically unfit and you have a situation that demands attention.

HOW TO THINK STRAIGHT

Doctor Frank Crane, following his usual process of dividing his points on the decimal system, attempts to define accurate thinking.

First, is definition. It is undoubtedly true that many discussions would be dissolved if each party were inclined to give clear definitions of the words used. A fair definition definition demands the use of a really good up-to-date dictionary.

Second, is time. In other words, the process of thought—a going into the silence to clear the nonsense out of the mind.

Third, honesty. Do not say you know a thing if you do not, nor that you believe anything without sufficient foundation.

Fourth, humility. That is a willingness to learn. Emerson once remarked, "When a man becomes a bishop, his mind shuts with a click." We should be open to the opinion of others.

Fifth, balance. Most decisions are not between clear right and wrong. There is necessity of deciding between two goods, or to choose the lesser of two evils.

Sixth, write. By attempting to put our thoughts into written language, they become clarified. An idea that we cannot express in less than a couple of hours, if we knew it better we could define it in a few minutes. Bacon said: "Writing maketh an exact man." It is a craft that anyone should learn for the purpose of improving the quality of his mind.

Seventh, talk. If you think better when you can talk things over do not argue, but discuss. When you argue you are not willing to listen as you are all the time trying to think what you want to say next, in order to prove yourself right and the other man wrong. One great purpose of discussion is the stimulation of thought.

Eighth, read. Reading is a cultural exercise. We may give practical advice about what you ought to read. That is not what you will read. "I know what you will read. You will read newspapers, novels, magazines. . . . What you ought to read is what you ought to like." By acquaintance with the best literature you will come to like it. Do you like Shakespeare? Of course you have Shakespeare's plays, but do you read them? Do you read Macaulay? Emerson? or Maeterlinck? There is no use to say you do not like them. The human race has passed upon them. It is what you should like. If you do not, read it. Wipe the dust off of your Shakespeare. Read one of the plays through. Do it thirty nights in succession, "Then if you do not like Shakespeare, you better go back to the livery stable. There is no hope for you." The same is true of the Bible. Do not read it as a matter of duty, but learn to like it. It is one of the tests of culture.

Ninth, faith. The most important element of one's intellectual contents comes through faith. We do not know what electricity is; we do not know what life is. It is the most important thing in the world. It cannot be made by anybody but God. The Bible tells us to live by faith. Do not set yourself up as great because you do not believe a thing.

Tenth, love. This is not love in a sentimental sense, but as an intellectual qualification. "Hate does not know anything. Hate is stupid. They say love is blind. That is a mistake. There is nothing else that can see. Love alone can see. Thank God it can see things that nobody else can. That is the only way that people can afford to live together. When you love a woman you can live with her."

Dante is a good authority on hell. When he got down far enough he was frozen in the ice. It was cold. That is hell. Warmth is love.

VALUE OF RESPONSIBILITY

An announcement of the Department of War stresses the educational and recreational work of the army. While it is called a university, the subjects treated appear to be primary, to fit them for such practical work as carpenters, blacksmiths, pharmacists, mechanics, draftsmen, stenographers, telegraph operators, radio operators, etc. In addition to this, it is stated, the best method of developing the mind is by placing upon the man as early as practicable as much responsibility as he can stand. This placing of responsibility stimulates his self-respect and pride and urges him to better effort. This is applicable to all kinds of training. His character building, frequently called moral training, stimulates self development and the development of that leadership which is necessary.

The above, though a rapid paraphrase conveys a valuable thought also for us in the work before the church. The most rapid progress is made by placing responsibility upon a man, and making him feel that he is respected and should maintain his own self respect, giving him freedom for the joy of accomplishing some definite work. That applies to industrial activity, to school work, to practical affairs of life, in society, and in the church.

INCOME OF FARMERS

In one of the leading newspapers of the East, there has appeared a series of advertisements concerning the farm papers of the country, and the purchasing power of the farmer. On December 7 there appeared the following:

"The average annual income of the farm family is $3,434 (1917 Government figures), no doubt over $4,000 now, while the average annual income of all families in the United States is $1,494."

This seemed so surprising a statement that we wrote for its confirmation, and learned that the Government figure on which it is based is that the farm products of America for 1918 were 25 billion dollars. This was divided by the number of farms in the United States, seven and a quarter million. In fact, the income from farm products for 1918 was a little less than 1917. Frank C. White, managing director of the Agricultural Publishers Association adds:

"In compiling agricultural figures the farmer's living is scarcely ever taken into account. If that item were added to the commercial value of crops, it would greatly exceed the figures given. Credit has never been given the resourcefulness of our farmers. The value of farm crops is always questioned, and sometimes the guesses are so unreasonable that some of the reports have to be thrown out, thus lowering the general average. However, this may be, we feel that everything we have stated in our literature or in our advertising is fair and reasonable. The Monthly Crop Reports furnish some totals. Get the December, 1917 issue, compile the staple crops and allow a reasonable addition for the minor crops, and you will find figures appalling enough to satisfy the most skeptical. You know, of course, that here are influences at work in opposition to our agricultural contentions, and we must make due allowances for that phase of it."

THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

Too many people think of the cooperative movement merely as a plan for operating stores on a profit-sharing basis. It is that, to be sure. And that is a marvelously beneficial and instructive phase of the movement, a phase which has long been familiar to Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Russia, and has of late been exemplified in fifty or sixty successful stores in the heart of New York City. But the cooperative movement, in a larger sense, is team work for the common good. No one can benefit without contributing, but all who contribute benefit. It puts an end to the delegation of work to special individuals, while certain others enjoy idleness. It is in line with that declaration of the workers who assembled at Atlantic City a few months ago, that "to attain the greatest possible development of civilization, it is essential, among other things, that the people should never delegate to others those activities and responsibilities which they are capable of assuming for themselves."

It has long been evident in the United States that only as the people share the direct responsibility for government is good government attainable. Similarly it is now being discovered that only as the people share the direct responsibility for right economic conditions can right economic conditions be made actual.—The Christian Science Monitor.

A DAY OF SPECIALISTS

Growing out of economic conditions to-day we have a number of specialists who are able to do only one thing in their trade, and in the end possess neither knowledge nor interest in the work as a whole. This means an undermining of the creative impulse necessary to all good workmen. As another result the apprenticeship system has broken down or disappeared.

Large corporations have attempted to meet it by the corporation schools, for the benefit of some of their employees; but these have never proven popular, for the very reason that their primary interest is the good of the corporation, rather than of the individual.

Vocational and educational law approved in 1917 by President Wilson, requires a representative board; the Secretary of Agriculture, of Commerce, of Labor, and United States Commissioner of Education, together with three lay members, representing agriculture, commerce, and labor. One of its provisions is that aid is limited for vocational training to public schools. This does not include the purely elementary grades, nor those of college rank. Agricultural schools have been already separately provided for. One condition of the federal aid is that the state make a right appropriation and provide associate workers. Provision is made for day school, part time school, and evening school, so as to make the training as useful as possible.

THE FINANCIAL COMMANDMENTS

Now a financial magazine, published in New York, contains ten commandments for a man's financial life, by Walter W. Head of Omaha, vice president of the National Bank Section of the American Bankers' Association, as follows:

1. Make a budget.
2. Keep an intelligent record of expenditures.
3. Have a bank account
4. Carry life insurance.
5. Make a will.
6. Own your own home eventually.
7. Pay your bills promptly.
8. Invest in war savings stamps or other Government securities.
9. Spend less than you earn.
10. Share with others. Thrift without benevolence is a doubtful blessing.

The plan of the church provides for all of these, on the part of individual endeavor, life insurance being provided by the community; that is, the church as a whole through the storehouse and consecration. Mr. Head is a member of the Omaha Branch of the church.

PASTORAL

A Time that Will Test the Souls of Men

BY LAMONI STAKE BISHOP RIC

A circular letter sent out to members of the stake at the end of the year, of interest to all who profess the name of Saint.

Dear Saint: Fear with its blighting influence is gripping the world. From the crowned monarch to the lowliest peasant its curse is felt. Right and wrong are embraced in a grip of death and the inhabitants of the world are waiting with dazed minds, wondering what the final outcome shall be.

To the Saints comes the voice of the Master prophetically, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give unto you his kingdom."

The time has come when "peace shall be taken from the world." It is a time that will test the souls of men—a time clamoring for loyalty of all men to our government and to our church. No true Saint can do less. Loyalty is not defined in words alone; such allegiance is cheap. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," is the true index of our fealty, both to church and state.

For generations men have defiantly, and in a great many cases blatantly, been traitors to the ideals of the Master. They have sown to the world and are now reaping the whirlwind. They have scattered recklessly the seed of selfishness and have learned that "every seed [produces] after its own kind." Well did Dante in his Inferno assign those guilty of this crime of selfishness to the lowest hell. From it springs every crime in the calendar.

To-day—right now—man made in the image of his Father God—made a little lower than the angels—has so stultified and degraded himself that class is arrayed against class. Hatred rules. The Golden Rule is almost forgotten and every man's hand is against his neighbor. The end of it all! What must it be! "Watchman, what of the night?" Thank God for the answer—"The night cometh, also the morning."

To the unregenerated it is truly "the night"—"the night and darkness"—but to those who have followed the Master in the waters of regeneration, it is morning.

"The morning breaks, the shadows flee,
Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled,
The dawning of a better day
Majestic rises o'er the world."

The rays of the eastern skies are radiant with the signs of the near approach of the Master. He cannot delay his coming much longer.

We come to you with a message surcharged with hope. Every indication points unerringly to the imminent coming of our Lord and Savior.

"Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,
Cast aside your doubts and fears!
He who calls you to his kingdom
Soon will reign a thousand years."

Out of the gloom shines the light of revelation telling us just what to do to be ready for the emergency. Our safety, our progress, is depending upon our reception of the instruction given us by God. Let us "take heed how we hear." The Lord has solemnly promised that the wicked shall be destroyed; that famine, pestilence, plagues, earthquakes, fires, wars, etc. shall continue until mankind gives heed to his commands.

HYMNS AND POEMS

THE FORUM

To Mothers of Men

BY MARY E. GILLIN

Mothers, or mothers of men, to-day,
Do you understand your work?
Do you labor with faith and oftentimes pray,
And never your duty shirk?
For, mother, into your hands to-day,
A living soul is given,
And you may fashion and bind for aye
And never the cords be riven.

'Tis only thou that couldst take the child
So fresh from heaven above
And bending o'er with a face so mild,
With heart so full of love
That the hardest task becomes a joy,
The night turns into the day;
Though all men turn from thy "wandering boy"
Thou wilt love and care away.

Mothers, oh, mothers of men, rejoice!
Thy work is surely divine!
So train thy child that he make the choice
Of all that is good and fine.
And 'tis only now thy task may be done;
Childhood's days speed quickly away;
But all the bright hours of to-day are thine own
In which to work and to pray.

To-day, thy babe sleeps close on thy breast;
But soon will he stand at thy knee;
The added years may bring thee rest
If true to thy trust thou wilt be.
No work, for thee, so great as thy child,
So urgent to be "well done"!
Be not drawn aside, nor thy heart beguiled,
Cease not, till victory's won.

We wish very briefly to outline the method of procedure instituted by God. We expect to do this in a series of short and, we hope, interesting letters to you. That you may be able to get a true understanding of the law, we kindly ask you to keep these letters as a whole.

May the peace of the Master be with you.

Tearing Down the Church

BY F. S. BRACKENBURY

"Most trouble comes from members who pull back, lie down, or kick up their heels in the harness."

The way some members oppose the church you would think it was some one else's church. But it is their church just the same.

You would be led to think that the presiding officers were all to blame if there were any lack. Most trouble comes from members who pull back, lie down or kick up their heels in the harness. If members find cause for complaint they should set about removing the cause by lodging their complaint where it belongs. The best way to get what we need is to present a solid working front. Be a constructive critic. If you are a dead member don't kick and thereby spoil your

Coordination

BY PETER ANDERSON

Cooperation is suggested as a better word to describe our work, it meaning "joint labors."

Just now a few thoughts about coordination may not be amiss. We have talked about it a good deal lately. What does it mean? And is it applicable in the church?

According to Webster, coordination means a "state of being coordinate, or of equal value; coordinate, holding the same rank or degree."

Considering our church organization, where could that apply? We may agree that all parts of the body are of equal value, but an admission like that is vague and gets us nowhere. To say that the different quorums are of equal rank or degree might be in a sense, but in another it would not. It might apply in their own sphere of action, providing all are working harmoniously, and in accordance with law. Where such is not the case, a superior authority may step in and regulate. This would seem to disprove the idea of coordination.

There are no two quorums in the church of equal rank, or degree, in all things. While each quorum and department in the church has its sphere of action in which it is responsible, and should be permitted to use its own initiative and talent, there must be a degree of interdependence between all, so that there may be harmony in the work of the body.

Authority to direct, regulate, and set in order implies superiority. No coordination in that case. The lesser is regulated by the greater. But the law of the church provides that, in case of necessity, the lesser can officiate in the office of the greater. And the body itself, being greater than any part thereof, can delegate to the lesser, authority to regulate the greater. Thus making the body secure against autocracy and injustice.

The word cooperation would seem to be more suitable to depart. Keep still and more than likely no one will notice how small you really are. The success of the church depends on the workers of its membership. You can help destroy the church without using the ax. Here are some ways it can be done:

Don't attend meetings. If you do, go late.

If the weather isn't fine, don't think of going, as they will be few in number, anyway.

If you go find all the fault you can, especially with the officers.

Don't accept an office, as it is easier to criticize than to do things.

Nevertheless, get offended if you are not elected to some office, or at least appointed on a committee, but don't attend priesthood or committee meetings.

If asked by those in charge to give your opinion regarding some important matter, tell him you have nothing to say; after the meeting tell everyone how things ought to be done.

Do nothing more than is absolutely necessary but when others roll up their sleeves and willingly, unselfishly use their ability to help matters along, howl that the church is run by a clique.

Hold back your tithing and offering, or don't pay them at all.

In fact don't bother about the burden of the work anyhow; let others do that.

scribe our method of work. That means "joint labor." Cooperate, "to work together; to act jointly with others." Our church work is preeminently a work of cooperation. There is no such thing as an independent quorum or department provided for in the law. All parts have a sphere of action, distinctively their own, in which they are the directors of their own work, in accordance with all other parts and the law governing. All are necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes of the Lord.

Paul recognized this fact. He said, "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. The members should have the same care one for another." (1 Corinthians 12: 18-26.) Again: "From whom [Christ] the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Ephesians 4: 16.) Each member or part furnishes its own quota to the extension and development of the body of Christ. This must be done freely and willingly.

Coercion and subordination is no part of the gospel economy. The idea of one man or set of men in the church being in all respects subservient to another man or set of men in service, is entirely foreign to the doctrine and Spirit of Christ. No man has a right under the authority of the priesthood to subject another to his will in the service of Christ. He may secure his cooperation, if he pursues the proper course, but he has no right to coerce or force him into subjection to his will. The moment he attempts it he is violating the sacred trust imparted to him by ordination and the principle by which alone he can correctly represent and serve the Master.

Jesus, our example, said, "I am among you as he who serveth." (Luke 22: 27.) Again: "Whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all." (Mark 10: 44.) True greatness in a Christian sense is manifest in humility and service. Authority does not mean the right to "lord it over the heritage of God," but rather the right to serve and of "being examples to the flock." He only who serves in this way can hope for lasting success and to hear the pleasing words from the lips of the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant." "Be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." (Matthew 23: 8.)

The Redemption of Zion

BY WILLIAM A. FRANCE

A delineation of some sweeping things that must come to pass ere a place is made ready for all who will gather.

Every true Latter Day Saint is looking forward to the redemption of Zion, or the building of the city the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the Saints. But there seems to be considerable difference of opinion in regard to some things pertaining thereto, such as the place, the plan of building the city, the preparation of the land, the people who shall do the work, and the time when the city shall be built.

We believe the books teach these things quite plainly if we take them as they read, so we quote some of these passages.

The Place of the City

"A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant Joseph Smith, jr., and six elders, as they united their hearts and lifted their voices on high; yea, the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouth of his prophet, and for the gathering of his Saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built, beginning at the Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the state of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, jr., and others, with whom the Lord was well pleased."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1.

"And, behold, there is none other place appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the gathering of my Saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them, and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion."—Ibid., 98: 4.

"But verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place. I the Lord have spoken it. Amen."—Ibid., 87: 8.

We see from these quotations that the city of Zion and the New Jerusalem are one and the same, that the location was definitely fixed, and cannot be changed.

The Plan of the City

This plat contains one mile square, all the squares of the plat contain ten acres each, being forty rods square. You will observe that the lots are laid off alternately in the squares; in one square running from the south and north to the line through the center of the square; and to the next, the lots run from the east and west to the center line. Each lot is four perches in front, and twenty back, making one half acre in each lot so that no one street will be built on, entirely through the street; but one square the houses will stand on one street, and on the next another, except the middle range of squares, which runs north and south, all of them; because these squares are forty perches by sixty, being twenty perches longer than the other, their greatest length being east and west, and by running all these squares north and south, it makes all the lots in the city of one size."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 297.

This description goes on to tell where the storehouses, temples, houses of worship, schoolhouses, barns, and stables shall be located; also the farm and agricultural lands, and also says, "when this square is thus laid off and supplied, lay off another in the same way, and so fill up the world in these last days; and let every man live in the city, for this is the city of Zion."

It also tells us that "all the streets are to be one width, only one house to a lot, all the houses to be twenty-five feet back from the street, and all to be built of brick and stone."

Now as the location is not to be changed, it would seem necessary to change the plan, or make some changes in the present arrangement of the city of Independence; but the Lord is able to do his work.

"Yea, woe be unto the Gentiles, except they repent, for it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Father, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots, and I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strongholds."—4 Nephi 9:101.

"And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee; so will destroy thy cities."—4 Nephi 9:104.

"And he had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fullness of his wrath should come upon them."—Ether 1: 30.

"And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness comes, that ye may not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done."—Ether 1: 34.

Can we say that the inhabitants of this land have repented, and are serving the Lord, and are righteous, and are worthy to possess this land, or must we look for them to be punished in the near future except they repent?

On January 4, 1833, Joseph Smith wrote to Mr. N. E. Seaton, editor of a New York paper, saying:

"And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 261.

How many years of that generation are now left? We cannot count a generation more than one hundred years. How soon will this destruction come? We are to understand that this destruction will be so general, or so near complete, as to make room in the United States for the lost tribes of Israel from the north country?

Who Will Build the City?

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, thus hath the Father commanded me, that I should give unto this people this land for their inheritance."—4 Nephi 7: 42.

"And the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land, for your inheritance. And I say unto you, that if the Gentiles do not repent, after the blessings which they shall receive, after they have scattered my people, then shall ye who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, go forth among them; and ye shall be in the midst of them, who shall be many; and ye shall be among them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—4 Nephi 9: 50-52.

In Doctrine and Covenants 52: 1, the Lord there speaking of the land of Missouri says it is "the land which I will consecrate unto my people which are a remnant of Jacob, and those who are heirs according to the covenant."

"And that a New Jerusalem should be built up upon this land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph—wherefore the remnant of the house of Jacob shall be built up upon this land; and it shall be a land of their inheritance; and they shall build up a holy city unto the Lord, like unto the Jerusalem of old; and they shall no more be confounded, until the end come, when the earth shall pass away."—Ether 6: 6 and 8.

"And behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob; and it shall be a new Jerusalem."—Nephi 9: 58.

"But if they [the Gentiles] will repent and hearken to my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come into the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem."—4 Nephi 10: 1-2.

From the foregoing quotations it would seem very plain that the seed of Lehi, to whom the Lord gave this land for an inheritance, are yet to come into their inheritances, and that they are the ones who will build the city of Zion or the New Jerusalem; and that the Gentiles who will repent, shall assist.

How Will Zion Be Redeemed?

After the Saints were commanded to gather to Jackson County, and buy up all the surrounding country, and build the city of Zion, and refused to obey God's commands, and polluted their inheritances, and were driven out, then the Lord said:

"Behold, I say unto you, the redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore, I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption be; therefore let not your hearts faint; for I say not unto you as I said unto your father, mine angel shall go before you and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land."—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3.

Lehi, in blessing his son Joseph, after telling him of the promises and covenant the Lord made to his forefather, Joseph of Egypt, says:

"Wherefore, because of this covenant thou art blessed; for thy seed shall not be destroyed, for they shall hearken unto the words of the book. And there shall raise up one mighty among them, who shall do much good, both in word and deed, being an instrument in the hands of God, with exceeding faith. To work mighty wonders, and do that thing which is great in the sight of God, unto the bringing to pass much restoration unto the house of Israel, and unto the seed of thy brethren."—2 Nephi 2: 45-47.

There is only one people where this man could come from—the American Indians. Jesus when upon this continent speaking of the restoration of this people upon this the land of their inheritance says:

"Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high. As many were astonished at thee; (his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men.)"—Nephi 9: 81-82.

"But, behold, the life of my servant shall be in my hand; therefore they shall not hurt him, although he shall be marred because of them. Yet I will heal him, for I will show unto them that my wisdom is more than the cunning of the Devil."—Nephi 9: 96-97.

Some tell us this refers to Christ, but this cannot be; Christ refers to him as "my servant." And when was the visage of Christ marred more than any man?

Now turn to Church History, volume 1, page 260:

"And it shall come to pass that I the Lord will send one mighty and strong, holding the scepter of power in his hand, clothed with light for a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words, while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God."

Now it makes very little difference whether these quotations refer to one man or several, the fact is very evident that there will be some power made manifest in the redemption of Zion. When the Indians have become converted, then the Lord will raise up one to lead them to the land of Missouri; to the place appointed, and they, the seed of Jacob, shall build the city of Zion, or, the New Jerusalem, assisted by as many of the Gentiles as are worthy to assist.

What Is Babylon?

BY E. D. BROWNLEE

Some say it is the Roman Catholic Church or apostate Christianity; while others think it is some autocratic government, such as Germany was before the war.

But Babylon was to have power over all nations.

"For I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen. . . . For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies."—Revelation 18: 1-3.

"For thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived."—Revelation 18: 23.

The Commercial System Worldwide In Scope

Is it not a fact that this commercial system is worldwide and reeking on every hand with the most abominable fraud and deception imaginable?

Now read Revelations 18: 12, 13. Here are the articles of commerce which this woman called great Babylon deals in.

Now read Revelation 18: 15-19, and we see the merchants, transportation companies and all the grafters howling and wailing, casting dust on their heads and pawing the air when they see the smoke of her burning.

Again, Revelation 17: 15. The waters where the whose sitheth are peoples and nations. The rulers of this earth are to give their power to perpetuate this system until the words of the Lord are fulfilled. (Revelation 17: 16, 17.)

This system (Babylon), John says is responsible for all the blood that has been shed on the earth (Revelation 18: 24), hence must have emanated from the Devil. So we read in Revelation 13: 1, 2 that the beast that carried the woman, mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abomination of the earth, received his seat and power and authority from the dragon or Devil. Hence this system must have been established when the Devil by fraud and deception beat Adam out of his dominion to this earth, and will continue until the Devil is bound.

Chattel Slavery, Feudalism, Capitalism

Now this system has existed under three different forms: First, chattle slavery, then feudalism. Now under commercialism or capitalism. In revelation 17: 8 we read of the beast that was, and is not, yet is. But some say that this beast was, first, pagan Rome; then Christian Rome; and now papal Rome. But let me ask, When was Rome Christian? I have understood that when the union of church and state was consummated that he priesthood or authority was taken away, and about that time also the spiritual gifts ceased. Am I right? If so, this position would exonerate Jesus Christ from all corruption and iniquity connected with old mother Babylon.

We are commanded to come out of her; that we be not partakers of her sins, and that we receive not of her plagues. (Revelation 18: 4.) In order to obey the voice from heaven, we will have to know what Babylon is.

This system is worldwide, having power over all nations, and has all the marks of the beast, and is the antithesis of the gospel of Christ. Under this system it is every man for himself. But under God's law we are collaborators with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. There are but two spiritual powers, and but two economic systems—the cooperative system which is the law of God, and the individual competitive system which has pauperized the world.

The Kingdom of God First

But it will be different under God's law, for we read the teaching of Christ in Matthew 6: 24-33, and we are instructed not to seek after the material things of this world in the way the Gentiles do, but first seek to establish the kingdom of God and all these material things would be added unto us. For our Father knoweth that we have need of all these things.

Why, Lord, are we required to establish your kingdom in order to possess the material things of this earth? Because ye cannot serve God and mammon, and the methods by which the Gentiles procure these things is an abomination in the sight of God. (Luke 16: 13, 14.) For in my kingdom there is a law of equality. You will cooperate—all work together for the work intrusted to all, and you will be equal; and this law when observed will be your security for all material blessings. (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3, 4.)

Can this church get away from Babylon through an observance of the law of God?

I have simply touched on this subject. These few words are written solely to stimulate thought, realizing that this is a critical subject.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Special Courses in Leaflet Form

(The following outline for one lesson of each of the courses printed in leaflet form is being placed in the column at this time with the hope that the subject matter may attract many of our women and they will subscribe at once for at least one or two of these valuable courses. The price will be ten cents per dozen copies of each lesson. It may be well to send money for four or five lessons at one time to save expense in mailing. If single copies are desired send two-cent stamp for each lesson. The price per course per single copy will be published later when the courses are completed and it is known how many lessons each course will contain. Send to Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.)

How Music Helps in the Life of the Home

A few instances of what has been done in some homes through the power of music will, I know, tell you more than the mere advancement of theories.

A little girl who was very miserable and managed to make mother or nurse most unhappy all through the process of hairdressing and getting into bothersome clothes, would submit most graciously if mother sang:

"My mother bids me bind my hair,
With knot of fairest hue;
Tie up my sleeves with ribbon rare,
And lace my bodice blue.
For why, she says, sit still and weep
While others are at play?"

an adaptation of Haydn's beautiful air.

Another mother learned to help her little boy work off some of his stormy fits of temper by going to the piano and playing some stormy impetuous bit like Schumann's "Wild Rider." The boy did not know why this was done, but he felt the mood of the music because it exactly fitted his own, and he would career around the room like a veritable wild pony, until his emotion, which might have worked harm to himself and others, had spent itself in this harmless way.

My sister remembers that even as a child she recognized this power of music to bring sweetness out of temper. She was very angry one day with a sense of some injustice done her and in this mood started to play her beloved piano. As she did this she realized that if she played she would soon cease to be angry, and not being ready to give up her resentful mood, she rejected the gentle ministry of music and went to her room to nurse her unhappiness.

As an incitement to bravery music has often been used in the home. A little boy much afraid of the dark would go upstairs to a dark room for mother when she played a strong march for him as he went.

If mother could realize how many times a bit of music would be of greater service than even the kindest remonstrance, they would have crashing chords ready for the angry boy, nonsense song to drive scowls from the face of little daughter, and jolly jig to set lagging feet and drooping spirits dancing; while a gay little tune improvised or adapted for the occasion, would often bring cheerful obedience in response to the request to pick up playthings or perform some other unwelcome task, where a stern command would start an unhappy time for all concerned.

One of my childhood memories is of visiting in a country home where the mother would often get up from the breakfast table and say, "Come let us sing a little before we do the work." Bad housekeeping, perhaps, but good homemaking, for I have since learned that this method was always resorted to when the morning atmosphere of the home threatened to be gloomy or quarrelsome; and the singing never failed to drive away the clouds. Of course, this use of music is most effective with a child who is either endowed by nature with the ability to respond to musical influence or has been trained in ear and heart to feel its effects.

A child who has always heard good music and has early learned to love and produce it, has great advantage over one to whom it comes as a later and more foreign achievement. Responsiveness to the atmosphere of music is not, however, dependent upon the ability to create it, although of course, made stronger by it. A little four-year-old child who had no natural ability for either singing or playing, being deficient in both rhythmic sense and sense of pitch, nevertheless was so sensitive to musical impressions that she described the tunes which were played to her as being pink and red and blue like the sky, and one which had strong chords with a staccato melody above them as the green tune with red berries. These interpretations of music in terms of color were later explained by the development of an unusual degree of talent with pencil and brush.

Another memory of my childhood is of a visit to a dear auntie who, on Sunday afternoons, took her little visitor to the west pasture, and amidst the splendor of the sinking sun read from a volume of sacred poems. The cadence of her sweet low voice will always echo through my memory.

It is truly a part of music's ministry to speak through the charm of a well modulated pleasant-toned voice, lending itself freely to the various moods of the fine nature it serves. It is truly one of the duties of the mother and the kindergartner to be a model for her children in this respect as in many others, for children are very sensitive to voice quality.

While the kindergartner's opportunity comes later than that of the mother, she has the same responsibility to see that the children under her care are given the opportunity for "full and all-sided development" to use the words of Froebel, "to enable him to see man in the universality of his nature and particularly to enable him to understand and appreciate the products of true art." Many children will come to her without having experienced in the home any of the life of music which might have been theirs, and to her will fall the duty of arousing the first idea, of awakening the first emotion for sound.

Who that has ever witnessed the delight of a little kindergarten child in this new way of expressing his joy in life can doubt that music should be regarded as a beneficent influence in life, and not as an accomplishment to be cultivated only by those of more than ordinary endowment? When the kindergartner says, "Who will sing our new song for us alone?" how often it is the little fellow who cannot yet carry a tune that eagerly responds, especially if mother is there to hear. If teacher and mother are wise, there will be no expression of surprise or dissent; for the right trueness or untrueness of the tune just now is nothing to the inner urge which makes the child want to express himself in this new and delightful way.

To sing the lilting measure when the heart is gay, to give thanks for cherished blessing in the glad hymn of praise, to send up on wings of song a prayer for strength to bear the burden and grief too heavy to be borne alone, this is what God's great gift of music should mean to us. Let us help the little children to enter into their heritage of song.—Mrs. Jean N. Barrett, in Government Bulletin.

A Busy Department

Through Sister Beth Winger, the Relief and Service Department of the Pontiac, Michigan local, sends the following summary of its work in 1919, which we think is a very creditable showing indeed:

Number members, (including 6 new ones) 16; average attendance at meetings, 6; number meetings, 35; dinners, 23; quilts made, 8; cushions, 3; aprons, 24; socials, 6; rompers made, 2; gowns, 2; underwaists, 1; skirts, 1; caps, 1; entertainments, 2; bazaars, 1; yards gingham sold, 4; tatting, 1½; 1 day's relief work donated; given for relief, $5. Proceeds, $873.37; expenses, $70.90; paid to building fund, $800; balance on hand, $2.45. We are all hoping to do as well or better in 1920.

Fragments Gathered from Busy People

Before the first Congress of Nebraska Farm Women, Miss Noble, of the Omaha High School of Commerce, in an illuminating address on "How to buy clothing," said, in part:

"In buying clothing, consider the purpose of the gown or material to be purchased, and buy with that in mind. If your figures are large, buy material of low luster instead of shiny satin, for example. Black and blue reduces one's appearance of size, as do also the bisque, tans and soft green shades.

"A suit having a dividing line just below the waist is good for slender figures only. Tall people can wear light shoes because they tend to cut the appearance of height.

"Suitability and appropriateness are other important considerations for the purchaser. In buying separate garments one should plan to match the sweater, separate skirt, top coat and hat.

"A heavy woman should buy a heavy hat and slender, lighter woman should have a hat giving appearance of light weight in order to give the effect of balance in the costume as a whole."

Concerning the civic responsibilities which confront American women, Mrs. Jessie B. Bacon, president of the Congress above referred to, said: "Women's votes will be one of three kinds: an intelligent vote, an illiterate vote—of which we have 20,000,000 in the United States—or a careless vote. And shame to the woman who casts a careless ballot. The women must be educated and must study in order to cast the intelligent vote which is needed from them. Not by blood and iron, but by the votes of the people, will our nation succeed."

In her address on "Americanization," Mrs. Thomas G. Winter discussed the soul, and not the mechanism of the work. In part, she said:

"The appeal for this work must be made through the individual and to the individual. We can't make laws, establish courts, schools and churches which will do this work for us. It is your work and my work. Valuable as our institutions are, the Americanization problem is one of human relationships. The woman is the heart of it all. She controls the emotions that exist in the family. The family is the unit in our civilization, not the individual. Whenever you find a floating individual without a home, you find a sore spot."

Miss Georgie Bacon, first vice president and chairman of thrift in the general federations, said there will not be a woman in Nebraska, Iowa, or the United States who will not learn much about the thrift movement in the next few months.

"A nation begins to decay when such extravagances are indulged in as we see in this country to-day. Next to schools, women's organizations are the most potent force in the thrift movement. Eighty-five cents out of every dollar are spent by women. Eighty-eight per cent of the men who reach 65 years of age are dependent upon charity or their children. Eighty-two widows out of every 100 have to work for themselves and families are dependent upon their children. Keep accounts, save and invest," advised Miss Bacon.

"Let us all be friends together and never more have snobs," pleaded Mrs. George Plummer in urging a continuation of community service and the "spirit of comradeship," which she named as one of the gains derived from the war.

Proposed Amendments

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Article V (constitution) shall be amended by striking out the word three and inserting the word two, making the last paragraph read:

"This constitution may be amended by a two thirds vote at any General Convention, providing not less than two months' notice of the proposed changes shall have been published in the press columns of the association."

Section 1 (by-laws) shall be amended by striking out the word Educational and inserting the sentence, following the words "Young Woman's": "An educational advisor shall be appointed by the executive committee to unify the educational work of the Woman's Auxiliary; to coordinate the work with the other educational institutions of the church and to advise with individual members or classes," making the section read:

"Section 1, Bureaus and Supervisors. In order to carry out the object of this association the following bureaus shall be established: Home and Child Welfare, Relief and Service, and Young Woman's. An educational advisor shall be appointed by the executive committee to unify the educational work of the Woman's Auxiliary; to coordinate the work with the other educational institutions of the church and to advise with individual members and classes. Supervisors and editor in chief shall be appointed, etc.

Section 3 (by-laws) shall be amended by striking out all after the word secretary in the third and fourth paragraphs and inserting the words:

"Shall perform the duties of a recording and financial secretary. She shall keep the minutes of the general meetings and of any action taken by the executive committee. She shall keep a directory of all clubs, classes, circles, etc., with their officers, which are affiliated with the general association, and shall send out such notices as are required by the general officers. She shall require an annual statistical report from each organizer and each club, circle, society, etc., in unorganized districts. She shall collect all dues annually, notifying district or stake organizers the first of December of each year. She shall make a monthly financial report to the treasurer and an annual report to the general association.

The Treasurer shall be custodian of the funds of the association which shall be paid out only upon warrants signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary, and shall make an annual report to the general association.

Section 4 (by-laws) shall be amended by striking out the words general treasurer in the third paragraph and tenth line, and inserting the words financial secretary, making the sentence read:

LETTERS

Elder Gowell Asks Our Prayers

"I am indebted to the church heavily, as I conceive. Have so expressed myself at times, orally and in writing. It is not my wish to go too deeply in debt, however. Would rather be a creditor. I am in debt for the gospel first of all. I am in debt for spiritual and physical blessings through other prayers than my own. I have been healed and helped, strengthened and built up. Independently, I could not have survived till to-day. If I am not a monument of God's mercy, I am perhaps a stone of small dimensions. I am again at the parting of the ways; one leading to the physical death and things beyond the veil; the other to physical life and activities here. It is not entirely as I will. My faith is in the church, that if the prayers of the faithful are offered in my behalf, I shall remain on the course of life, for yet some time. But I do not ask it, if not with strength to render some service. It will as I realize, put me still further in debt before I can hope to pay the debt already contracted. In the hope of doing more, and of being ultimately less obligated, I ask, though disliking very much to put any to the trouble my asking would incur, the prayers of the faithful, or of those who have faith. This is the only way forward as I see it, and I have studied some time before coming to my conclusion. My faith is, that the prayers will be offered, and I shall be going again.

I would like to accomplish more in a few years, than I have in many. I have hopes that my experiences, yes, even my mistakes, may prove to be stepping-stones for successes. Perhaps my effort has been proportionately as great, as of some who have more to their credit.

I hope by my attitude, to be a greater help to those who are in authority, and no hindrance. God forbid that I should fight any man; any servant of God in this church. I may see it necessary to oppose some measures at the proper time, but it will be with good will to the man back of it. I prefer now, an attitude of confidence in the authorities, to one of suspicion.

My prayers are that the quorums will be sufficiently humble and prayerful, charitable and patient, and long-suffering, that they can come to a unity through the assistance of a greater endowment of the Holy Spirit, and that in humble and earnest seeking, obstacles to them and the church, may be moved out of the way. My opinion does not amount to much. It is very liable to be wrong. Why should I project it in season and out, especially between conferences? Why should I not refrain from strife and division or contention?

There is a time for everything, it is said, and no doubt this applies to standing for a principle, but many an argument might be avoided by a more prayerful habit and attitude. We are to "call on the Lord in mighty prayer." Can we get through as quorums without it? Must we smash our way through, to obtain the right? I hope, while I did not attend the last conference, that the next we will be approached in such a way that the problems will largely be solved before the opening session, and the sailing will be smooth and swift over the whole course. Perhaps I am intruding my advice. No ill will is projected at least, to anyone. This is a time for "peace on earth; good will to men," or is supposed to be.

They shall send to each club, circle, etc., within their districts or stakes such notices as shall come to them from the general officers, and supervisors of bureaus, and shall instruct each club, circle, etc., to remit to the financial secretary, the dues provided for in Article 4, etc.

Section 4 (by-laws) shall be further amended by striking out all after the words editor in chief in paragraph 4 and inserting the words, "shall have supervision over all matters for publication connected with the press columns of the general association."

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,
MRS. JOHN GARDNER,
MRS. WILLIAM MADISON.

Hope it will abound in the church, and that love for every principle of right couched in the latter day evangel, may grow till nothing can stop its crystalization into action such as the times and conditions of men in the world call for, and the written word demands of us. I hold myself responsible to it. I hold the church responsible to it, and do not propose that side issues shall obscure the real and main issue, so far as I am concerned. Am I in the faith? Whatever medicine is needed to put and keep me there, let me have it. No quack remedies, however; no vaunted cure alls by irresponsible, self-constituted authorities. The everlasting gospel in power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit, is the only sufficient remedy for all the ills of society. Hope I will soon be able to talk as well as write, or render some service more than is possible at the present time. Your brother in Christ,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI. M. F. GOWELL.

From the Kansas City Stake

At this, the close of the year 1919, I am forwarding to you [First Presidency] my yearly ministerial report. The statistics will give you an idea of the amount of work performed, and under the head of "remarks" I briefly outline additional work that does not show up in figures.

I am happy in the thought that this has been the busiest year of my life in church work, and I am more happy to know that the good Lord blessed me physically so I was able to stand up under the grave responsibilities that rest upon me. It is very gratifying to me, and I know that you will be pleased to learn that the work is in a more advanced and better condition in Kansas City to-day than at any time during my ministry here. This is brought about by organization and cooperation upon the part of the local priesthood who have been pressed into service through such organization of the work as has been effected.

Since we have converted ourselves into Kansas City Stake proper and branches are not now known, there has been a number of things adjusted where our church divisions exist. Much interest is manifested in some of these divisions, and considerable inquiry is being made by nonmembers of the church.

Our group is proving successful in the majority of places, and our greatest need is men to take care of the groups. A number of these groups have to be cared for by just a priest and teacher because we do not have other men to place in charge, but are trusting in the Lord to call out men into the work in the near future with a hope that they may develop into competent and successful workers. We have a number of brethren holding the Melchisedec priesthood who are so tied up with their labor and the inconvenient hours in which they have to labor that it is quite difficult for them to give the service they would like to and, hence, we do not get the best that is in them, but they cheerfully do all they can.

Our stake council has met a number of times during the past year, and when not taking up matters of business or court work, we have employed the time in trying to educate ourselves. I have delivered a number of talks to the brethren on high council work, the method of conducting cases, regularities or irregularities in procedure, also, proper and improper evidence. The brethren have manifested an intense interest in these talks, and claim that they have been quite helpful to them, not only when they may sit in counsel, but should they have occasion to give advice, or exercise judgment touching matters of law with reference to personal conduct, they feel that they could do so more satisfactorily than heretofore.

We are starting out the new year with increased activity in missionary work, and now have a number of cottages where preaching service may be held by our missionaries in the very near future. We are also starting a missionary propaganda in some of the groups, with a special effort of advertising and working up to this point. One will be started January 11 at the Grandview Church followed by others in different churches, with probably a wind-up in Central Church just before the convening of the General Conference. Brother U. W.

Greene has been informed of our purposes, and is cooperating and going to help us in the pushing of this work.

J. A. TANNER.

From the Lamoni Branch President's Report

[Excerpts from the annual report of J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake and Lamoni Branch.]

It is with a commingling of emotions that we undertake a report for our 1920 annual meeting. Looking back over the efforts of the past year and years, and forward to those of the year ahead and years to come, and measuring the great work yet to be performed and our inadequate qualification for same, we are made to tremble for the cause we love.

Yet God has called us as a branch. He stands ready to qualify us to the uttermost. And this he will do when we place unreservedly in his hands our all, and, yielding to his divine purpose, perform faithfully our part. We essay therefore with some show of courage the task, not only of summarizing past work and suggesting future, but also the responsibilities of leadership and direction in this day of preparation for Zion's redemption. . . .

Elder D. T. Williams has rendered service in the branch as his other duties have allowed. . . .

The year has brought to our assistance the splendid service of Elder C. E. Wight, on June 15, 1919, ordained a High Priest and set apart as a counsellor in the Presidency of the Stake. . . .

Auxiliary Departments

In the report of last year we anticipated a closer cooperation between the auxiliary officers and branch presidency. The Sunday school and Religio have each in this matter gone one better. The Religio both last year and this by formal vote requested that the Presidency nominate for the presidency of the society, which was done. And the Sunday school this year by vote requested the Presidency to nominate for superintendent, and with the superintendent for the remaining elective officers, which was also done. And in each instance the officers nominated were elected. Our relations with the auxiliaries have always been pleasant. They should continue to be so. And under the splendid spirit of cooperation exhibited we feel sure they shall be so, and that we shall realize results.

The Sunday school continues its good and efficient work with a support quite universal.

The Religio is venturing into new fields in the providing of recreational features thought to be in harmony with the unfolding of the work of this worthy society, and in demand in the interests of our young people. In these later undertakings the brethren directing have met with some opposition. We counsel moderation, bespeak for the society an unhampered opportunity to demonstrate such wisdom as has appointed its endeavors in this regard, and hope for its success. And let it be known that in the matter of general policies the branch presidency is quite in sympathy with the religio officers and effort.

Presiding Aaronic Officers

It will be recalled that at our last annual meeting it was determined to dispense with the custom of selecting a presiding priest, teacher and deacon, leaving to the presidency the organization and immediate direction of the work of the various departments. This system has worked satisfactorily; and we feel sure it is well that we have determined as a branch to continue definitely thereunder.

Deacon's Work

The department for which the deacons have been held responsible and as organized for the year has been conducted with vigor by those directly in charge of the work. As a result, the comfort and care of the Saints at the services have been all we would ask for; and we have made improvements about the church building, especially in the matter of enlarging the choir loft and the installing of an additional furnace, and have begun improvements in the way of beautifying our lawns and park which when completed will conform to our ideal in this regard and heretofore referred to in our reports. We commend these brethren, and bespeak for them the cooperation and support of the Saints. . . .

We have arranged for a slight change of method for the solicitation and collection of funds, which, if we may secure the full cooperation of all deacons and the support of the people, as we hope to do, should insure against a like deficit under like conditions.

Budget System

Out of various considerations looking to such basis, there has developed the unanimous conviction that we should establish for the branch a permanent budget system, with a standing committee to be known as the budget committee, to take under continuous advisement financial needs of the branch. Such an arrangement taking into consideration as it would each need as related to each other need, together with the ability of the branch to provide for each and for all, would make for a businesslike direction of the work of this department. And consultation with the stake bishopric in the matter of the annual budget, as we would advise, would insure due consideration for the general interest of the church, which should always be had. In this entire matter the custodian deacon, the finance deacon, the local deacons' quorum, the stake bishopric, and stake high council concur. With said concurrence, therefore, we recommend:

1. That branch finances be hereafter handled under the budget system; and
2. That the president of the branch, the finance deacon, and the custodian deacon constitute a standing budget committee, authorized and directed to prepare and submit annually estimates for current branch expenses, and for such improvements as may be deemed desirable.

Anticipating the adoption of the above recommendations, we have taken the liberty to advise the submission of a budget for the present year. The president of the branch, the finance deacon, and custodian deacon have conferred in this matter and the custodian deacon has for this meeting said budget, in all of which, including this 1920 budget, the stake bishopric concurs. . . .

Business Meetings

The Saints will have noted order by the general church authorities that membership transfers be thereafter made not by branch action, but by the general recorder. This arrangement, together with the fuller organization and the consequent better working order of our local forces, have left us with less business for our monthly meetings than heretofore. It would seem then that the branch might do with less of these meetings. We therefore, and with the concurrence of the stake high council, recommend that instead of a meeting each month, we have hereafter our regular branch business meeting quarterly, or on the first Tuesday of each January, April, July, and October.

Branch Visitation

Turning our attention again to the matter of individual labor done, we may observe that we have heretofore and ordinarily stressed failure on the part of the deacons, for the reason perhaps that when these have not performed in connection with our finances their work as we may have thought they should have done, debt has accrued. We should keep in mind, however, that the collecting, disbursing, and accounting for branch funds is the lesser work of these men. We feel that the time has come when they should have opportunity to move out to qualify for their graver responsibilities as standing ministers among the Saints. We believe the general organization of our forces already developed, together with modifications thereof, will permit of such effort this year. And we shall endeavor so to direct.

We have further to observe that certain of the deacons are not the only ones who have failed in the performance of duty. And may we not suggest that too many of us have had too little regard for the work we refer to as that of the visiting officers. Saints sometimes complain when the deacon fails to get money; but too often among these same there are those who are unmoved under the inactivity or inefficiency of the visiting officer; and sometimes visiting officers themselves, though themselves failing to meet the issue, complain when the deacon fails to get money.

A combination of circumstances, among them being the brief time this year elapsing between the last reporting day for the brethren and the time for the annual meeting, have made it impracticable for us to furnish in this address a summary of visiting done during the year. Data in hand indicates, however, that in this work we may not have done so well as on the year before. We acknowledge in this connection lack on our part and due mainly to the hesitancy of your presiding officers to spend further his physical powers in directing and urging work in this department. And we have not yet in Lamoni reached a development under which without urging, all of the brethren do all they can all of the time. In fact, the average man among us yet needs considerable encouragement to do even reasonably well. It is, however, due the brethren to say that many of them are making efforts as never before to perform work as assigned. And these are they whose development is marked and rapid. It only remains for all and each to so endeavor.

All this prepares the way for us to say that as never before we are determined to undertake during the present year to persuade our brethren to qualify and to serve the Saints. We have to propose a closer organization of our local forces for this work, and purpose that there shall not be a man under appointment left to say that he is without opportunity, or without time in which to do the work requested.

Recalling statements of former reports, we may add that this present year should be the test for some of our ordained brethren who have heretofore been inactive. We are as a branch committed to a policy which when executed will eventually eliminate from the ministry the unworthy, the inefficient, the idler, and any combination of these disqualifications. In this matter your presiding officers feel that they rest under a solemn and a sacred charge. It is clear to us that God's people can never be led to Zion by a stumbling or a faltering ministry. The men who would inspire this people to Zion's endeavor and who would go on before them in Zion's development must be men of God. And men of God, i. e., men of God's choosing, and hence men able for the great work incident to Zion's redemption, must be first worthy, then efficient, and finally actively engaged in the good cause. To this work then shall we bend our every energy: that of persuading the brethren in need of such to a fuller worthiness, a greater efficiency, and a broader service. And this year should reveal such as are unwilling to respond to this the call of God, and the cry of the church.

There is for us and just before us as God's people a brighter day. If we would come under its light and consequent blessing, we must move forward as a people, courageously undertaking our full duty. May God bless us, and he will to the extent of our worthiness and our need. With his guidance and sustaining grace we shall triumph.

Christmas Offering

I am sure that you have been deeply interested in the Christmas Offering reports we have been publishing each week in the HERALD. It must make your hearts bound with joy, as it does ours, to read of the excellent work being done by the various schools. It is very inspiring to know of the great efforts that have been put forth, but more inspiring to learn of the splendid success and of the many ways in which the schools have been blessed because of their sincere efforts. Those who have been faithfully working in this cause surely have something to tell us regarding their efforts and the way they have been blessed. Will you write and tell us of your experiences? for your letters will be an incentive and help to other workers.

One of the letters states that the year 1919 was the first one in which their school really tried and I am sure that all will be gratified in seeing their wonderful success. This good brother recommends that all the schools make a real try in 1920, and I sincerely trust that every school and every member of each school will look at this matter in the same way. Let us make a real try, concentrate and consecrate our efforts. Let us not look for excuses as to why we should not help, but let us look for every help and every reason for helping and let's go strong all the year with our hearts attuned to that which is right and just, and with the desire to do our part in making a success of the offering movement.

Have you started your work for the new year? If not, will you not start next Sunday and divide your efforts into fifty-two separate parts, for there are fifty-two Sundays in the year. Do not wait until the last month and try to pile up your efforts in one or two hard tries, but divide them up, make them easy and make them regular. Each Sunday that you miss makes your work just that much harder.

Has your school one of the large clocks that are being furnished free to all of the Sunday schools? If not, let us know immediately, giving us the enrollment of your school and the number of classes and we will see that clocks are forwarded to you.

Watch the papers for announcements from now on, regarding the letters received from schools as well as the total amount of offering received to date.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. SMITH.

St. Louis, Missouri, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

Kellogg, Idaho, has remitted $138.26, with an enrollment of 25, a goodly number of whom are not members of the church. That is $5.23 per member—an excellent record.

Chelsea School, of Kansas City, Missouri, with enrollment of 91, raised $391, more than $4.29 apiece.

The Pioneer School, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, raised $72.50.

Long Beach, California, reports $93.62.

Senlac, Saskatchewan, sends in $23.24.

Beardstown, Illinois, raised $146.54 more than $2.50 per member.

Piper City, Illinois, with a membership of 25, raised $492.07, about $19.68 each.

Walnut Park, Independence, Sunday school raised $430.20, and the home department $53.30, a total of $83.50, which is about $200 more than last year.

Wellsburg, West Virginia, has pushed up from $9.50 in 1915 to $155.17 for last year. Of 58 members, 34 are children, and 17 nonmembers.

Armstrong school, Kansas City, Kansas, has sent in $226.67, with a membership of 83.

Hamilton, Missouri, raised $350, with an enrollment of 93.

The very old custom of legal adoption in the Hawaiian Islands, which originated when there were many tribes often at war with one another, was intended to bring peace among them. The cause has long since disappeared, but the custom still persists. When a child is "spoken for" by some relative or friend, the little baby, as soon as it can leave its own mother, will be given to the foster mother, and will be regarded as a sacred trust. A Companion contributor tells of one woman who was the mother of eight children, seven of whom had been adopted by friends. When she was asked why she gave them away, she replied sadly, "It is a superstition, I know, but if they were 'asked for' and I refused I fear some harm might come to them." The poor soul let them go just because she loved them so much!

The custom leads to very amusing complications. One of the native princesses now living has given her baby to her own mother. The little girl is legally adopted, and therefore has become the grandmother's daughter and the mother's sister.—The Youth's Companion.

Three most instructive little leaflets for mothers have recently come to our desk from the United States Public Health Service. They are: Motherhood, Breast Feeding Her Baby, Bottle Feeding Her Babies. These and many others on the care of babies and children can be secured of your health officer or from the United States Public Health Service, Washington, District of Columbia.

The composition of the working force at the Herald Office at present is as follows:

We are still receiving letters at the Herald Office for Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

One of the publishing houses writes us this week as follows: "Advances in printing and binding costs make it absolutely necessary to increase prices. Every time we go to press, we are put against a higher schedule of prices."

Another one writes as follows: "We have to hold up your order along with many others on account of shortage of books."

The Gospel Trumpet announces an increase in its subscription price from $2 to $3 per year.

A lady writes us asking why she should send us $2.25 for the HERALD when she might spend $6 for something not one quarter as good. Her remittance for the year included an extra one for another.

By shifting the offices to the second story, we have greatly improved our facilities for getting certain kinds of work done with less effort and fewer delays.

We are anxious to standardize our literature and forms, and in this way to lessen the cost of production and insure a continuous supply. Now then, who has a good suggestion to make?

The new editions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are being gathered now. The next process is to sew the forms together; after that, the binding.

The mill owners in the valley running north from Providence have been in the habit of closing for the balance of the week after New Year's, because as a rule so many did not return for work until Monday, spending the intervening time is wearing off the effects. This year, with prohibition, they were able to continue work immediately after the holidays.

An instance of what modern surgery can do, was shown when a stable boy in England had his nose cut off by a falling glass. He was hurried to the hospital, where the surgeon asked for the nose. Another boy rode back and found it in the straw and gave it to the surgeon who restored it to its place.

It is estimated that strikes in the United States during 1919 cost labor directly one billion dollars, and the employers about two billion. The greatest loss is represented by the coal miners' strike, as that entailed loss to other industries. Direct loss is estimated by the United States Coal Association as being $60,000,000 to the miners, and $12,000,000 to the operators. The United States has represented also a production loss of 40,000,000 tons.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—At the conference of November 15 and 16, at Higbee, Vernie D. Ruch, F. T. Mussell, Benjamin S. Tanner, and Sisters Carrie Richards and Vernie Ruch were elected delegates to General Conference. Alternates: Sisters Kate Rogers, Luke Sharp, Ethel Harris, and Brethren John Harris and William C. Chapman. William C. Chapman, secretary.

MOBILE.—At Mobile, Alabama, January 3 and 4. T. J. Booker in charge, assisted by N. L. Booker and A. G. Miller. Edna Cochran, secretary. Preaching by N. L. Booker and A. G. Miller. Sister N. L. Booker gave an interesting talk on Sunday school work. Delegates elected to General Conference. Adjourned to meet at Vancleave, Mississippi. H. Hough.

Convention Minutes

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Sunday school at 6600 Honore Street, Chicago, Illinois, December 5. Officers elected: C. B. Hartshorn, superintendent; J. J. Oliver, assistant superintendent; La June Howard, secretary-treasurer; Ella M. Whittemore, home department superintendent; Earl D. Rogers member library board; May Horton, cradle roll superintendent; Ethel Williamson, normal superintendent; J. A. Daer, member gospel literature board. Motion prevailed that the district favors the use of Stepping Stones being used as the official Sunday school publication instead of Autumn Leaves. Also moved that the matter of institute work of the winter be left to the district president, the Sunday school superintendent, and the Religio president, with power to make arrangements for such sessions as found advisable. An appropriation of $50 was set aside for expenses of district officers for coming year. Delegates were elected to General Convention, and empowered to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. Adjourned to meet day before and at same place of next district conference, and time left to district officers. La June Howard, secretary, 12055 Parnell Avenue, West Pullman, Chicago.

General Publicity Manager Appointed

After consultation with the Twelve and Bishopric, the Presidency some weeks ago appointed Brother Arthur E. McKim to the position of general publicity manager of the church.

Brother McKim will have charge of all publicity work, and a tentative outline of his program includes:

Making a survey of church literature to determine what is best usable, what is most particularly needed.

Creating an advertising series for missionaries in new fields, special meetings in small branches, city preaching, street meetings, and reunions and General Conferences.

Providing electros for paid or complimentary newspaper space for the use of missionaries or local men.

Enlisting good literature workers for distribution of literature.

Advertising church publications and boosting subscription lists.

Developing tourist interest at Kirtland, Nauvoo, and Independence.

Advertising church institutions such as Graceland College, Sanitarium, Childrens' Home.

Carrying on special campaigns as needed.

Our Departed Ones

GREEN. Herminia Green was born in Turbentall, Canton, Zurich, Switzerland, December 17, 1856. Died December 24, 1919, at her home in Los Angeles. Sister Green came to America in 1864, arrived in California in 1870. Married Frederick Adam in 1875. Six children were born to them, 3 still living; Fred Adam, Hermina Badham, and Viola Bougoue, all of Los Angeles. After the death of Mr. Adam, she married Mr. Morris M. Green who has also preceded her in death.

Sister Green was one of the active workers of Los Angeles Branch and was loved by a host of friends. Funeral from the home. Laid to rest in beautiful Rosedale Cemetery. Sermon by George H. Wixom.

RAFERTY.—Katherine Raferty was born August 11, 1844, in Michigan. Married William Hawkins in 1860. Baptized at Blue Rapids, Kansas, in 1882 by George Beebe. Was faithful to this covenant till death claimed her Monday December 22, 1919, after a short illness at the home of her daughter, Mabel Schweers, 726 North Union Street, Independence, Missouri. KELSO.—William Kelso was born February 2, 1866, at Achongree, Ayrshire, Scotland. He came to this country in 1894, his parents locating at Braidwood, Illinois, where he married Jane Dagan, December 24, 1888. About 1890 they moved to Higbee, Missouri, where they resided till his death, December 27, 1919. His widow and 13 children, mother, 5 sisters, and numerous friends survive him. Baptized in 1879 by Frank Lofly; president of the Higbee Branch since 1903. Funeral services were conducted by W. B. Richards and F. T. Mussel, the latter preaching the funeral sermon.

RYERSON.—Mary J. H. Kelley was born near Vienna, Johnson County, Illinois, January 18, 1843, and passed from this life November 22, 1919. In 1855 her parents moved to Mills County, Iowa, and in 1864 she married John L. Ryerson, at the time a soldier late from the Civil War, and they settled on a farm in the county, where they raised a family of 4 girls and one boy. The husband died some twenty years ago. To mourn she left, besides her children, 16 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren. Of her brothers, 4 have passed to the other side, and 3 are living; E. L. Kelley, Independence; Judge George T. Kelley, Pierce, Nebraska; James M. Kelley, Independence. Walter W. Smith was in charge of the funeral service, preaching the sermon. Interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

BEAN.—Jacob E. Bean was born at Caratunk, Maine, April 6, 1834. Died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. B. Constance, near Cameron, Missouri, December 19, 1919. Married Eliza Holmes, July 12, 1857. To this union 9 children were born, 4 sons and 5 daughters, 7 of which together with 22 grandchildren and 5 great-grandchildren are left to mourn. His wife and 2 children preceded him in death. Baptized December 23, 1894. Remained faithful till death. Funeral at Delano church, near Cameron, Missouri, in charge of B. R. Constance, sermon by J. W. Roberts. Burial in Delano Cemetery.

WHORLOW.—Edward William Whorlow was born September 11, 1840, in Whilstable, Kent County, England. Died December 23, in Allendale, Missouri. Came to America April 26, 1869. Married Mary Ann Saunders, January 5, 1865. Seven children were born to them. Baptized many years ago and lived the life of a true Saint. Funeral at Allendale, Missouri; sermon by L. G. Holloway, interment in Allendale Cemetery.

OLMSTEAD.—Martha J. Olmstead was born February 28, 1878, in Hamilton Township, Harrison County, Missouri. Died in Saint Joseph, where she had been taken for an operation, December 17, 1919. Married Benjamin F. Lowe, who died several years ago. Later she married Eugene Olmstead. She was the mother of 4 children, 2 sons and 2 daughters. Funeral at Lone Rock church, sermon by D. T. Williams; burial in Lone Rock Cemetery.

EDMUNDS.—Daniel Edmunds was born February 29, 1857, at Muscatine, Iowa; died at Vevier, Missouri, December 21, 1919. Married Lydia Perry, March 27, 1879. Four children were born: Charles, Miles, Sophie, and Christina. Baptized by T. W. Smith, at Bevier, May 12, 1876; ordained a priest in 1894. Funeral services in Saints chapel, Bevier, sermon by F. T. Mussell; W. B. Richards in charge.

CLAUSEN.—Sister Mina F. Clausen died on December 18, 1919, after a terrible baptism of suffering, at the hospital in Seattle, Washington. Was in her fortieth year and leaves a husband, 3 children. She believed the gospel and received comfort from prayer and administration but had not obeyed. The service was attended by many friends and the singing.

was beautifully rendered by Eddiva Irwin, accompanied by Sister S. Barney. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

BEECHAM.—John James Beecham was born near Saint Johns, New Brunswick, November 28, 1841. Moved with parents to Chicago, when 5 years old, and lived there until he enlisted in 1861. Served three years and eleven months. He was in many hard fought battles, and was with Sherman on his march from Atlanta to the sea. He came to Little Sioux, Iowa, in 1866 where he married Harriet Cobb, September 13, 1870. Two children were born, Amy J., wife of P. A. Silsby, and Bertha O., wife of George J. Meggers, both of Pisgah, Iowa. After a lingering illness departed this life November 19, 1919, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Amy J. Silsby. Baptized and has lived a consistent Christian life. Services in charge of Joseph Lane, sermon by Sidney Pitt sr., buried in Little Sioux Cemetery.

The Presidency

Because of ill health Elder Nephi T. Chapman has resigned as president of the Portland District, and his associates in the district presidency, elders C. E. Jones and M. H. Cook, are hereby appointed to look after the work of the district until the convening of the next regular district conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President of the Church.

Another Call for Radio Operators

Graceland College has just received another urgent request from the United States Shipping Board for radio operators. The wages being paid are unusually high; beginner operators receive the equivalent of $150 to $175 per month. There is also a great demand for radio operators by commercial companies; monthly salaries of $135 and expenses are commonly paid beginners.

Our own church radio communication service will also need several more expert operators in the near future. Here is a real opportunity for a number of young men interested in mechanical and scientific lines to be of service to the church.

Two courses for radio operators will be offered by Graceland next semester, one an intensive course for first grade license training, the other a two hour per day course for a second grade license whereby the student may also take other college work.

The second semester begins January 26, so that all interested in taking these courses should enroll at once.

Corrections for Senior Sunday School Quarterly

Take your pencil and mark the following corrections in Senior Quarterly for January, February and March, 1920:

Page 8, fifth line under heading, "Bondage in Egypt foreseen," the word opposed should be oppressed.

Page 10, twelfth line, their is misspelled. Under "Summary of the lesson," last line, the word friend should follow last word his.

Page 34, in the lesson text we have a double negative. Strike out word not.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

The Des Moines Dispatch announces their district conference, February 6, 7, and 8, at Des Moines. They state that an effort is being made to have President F. M. Smith with them at that conference, and that the prospects are favorable.

Elder Alvin Knisley says the post office at Morrill, Nebraska, burned recently, and the postmaster informs him that some of his letters were in the conflagration. He asks that those who might have had mail there at the time write him at Torrington, Wyoming, which will be his address for some time to come.

The result of the vote at Graceland College, on the Treaty Referendum resulted as follows: In favor of ratification of the league and treaty without reservations or amendments, 143; opposed to the ratification of the league or treaty in any form, 5; in favor of ratification but only with the Lodge reservations, 13; in favor of a compromise between the Lodge and Democratic reservations in order to facilitate the ratification of the treaty, 49. This is a combined vote of students and faculty.

Graceland College has had its wireless in service since before the opening of the school year. There has been some delay, however, in having the station reestablished at Independence, but this has been finally accomplished and we have been in receipt of several wireless messages the past week, the news in which we are passing on to our readers. We trust and expect that this will mean more prompt and active news service.

President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle U. W. Greene, and Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake, are preparing a program for a concerted missionary effort in all the church buildings in Independence prior to the conference, and during the lectures as contemplated. There will be at least five teams of missionaries, with two men in each team, and musicians to go with these teams. It is proposed that the actual administration of the work will be left in the hands of members of the Twelve, they having immediate charge of the missionary work.

The Independence Stake, pursuant to action of General Conference last spring, has organized as a stake of one branch, in the ordinary sense of the term. For two years they have been divided into groups, with an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon in charge of each. A further progressive step has been taken to organize a number of groups under the supervision of a high priest. A meeting of these high priests who are superintendents of the larger divisions of the stake was held on Monday morning, January 12, and proved a complete success. The meeting was held with Elbert A. Smith for the presidency, and no doubt also with the members of the stake presidency, Walter W. Smith and R. V. Hopkins.

A telegram from A. F. McLean, Toronto, on January 14, informs us that the decision in the case of B. R. McGuire versus R. C. Evans et al was on that date handed down in the favor of the defendants, on all points, and the action dismissed with costs. As bishop of the church in Toronto, Mr. Evans had made settlement according to his books; he also admitted having on hand certain reunion funds which he was ready to turn over. A suit was brought for an accounting of various other funds, such as the tract fund for distribution of tracts, the book fund, theater meeting fund, building fund, and various auxiliary funds. The case has been under advisement ever since last May. This is an unusually long time for a court of original jurisdiction.

King's Counsel, Wilkie, advises that the judgment is weak and gives good grounds for appeal, with excellent prospects of success, we are informed in the same telegram.

Early last summer a suit was brought for injunction to prevent the church using the reunion grounds at Low Banks, Ontario. Hearing was deferred until September. We have just been informed very recently that the case was settled without hearing, by the payment of the nominal amount of $140 each to Mr. Evans and the member of the trustees associated with him. As near as we can learn, this is by far the most important of the financial interests involved in the various suits in Canada.

Sister F. M. Smith came to Lamoni Saturday to bring a young girl to the Children's Home. She returned to Independence Sunday.

dreams, because as the years have passed he has grown and has a larger vision now than he had six years ago. This should be of encouragement to all of us.

It is not for personal gratification, for if he or any other man does his work in that way, he is bound to fail. But we are given a great responsibility to be a light to the world, not to stand in darkness, but to move forward earnestly and faithfully. We should have large dreams and ideals, and carry them out, for the sake of the community, for the sake of the church, and society at large.

We cannot do this if we simply build ourselves a small shell house and creep into it. To do it, we must move out and meet people. The work should not be done for the sake of personal glorification, but with the sense of service. With inspiration of the Spirit of God we should lead for the benefit of humanity.

Yet all too often when some man does step forward and does a good work well, and there are so many little carping critics to find fault, and fret, and try to discredit his work. Undoubtedly it is true that all are not equally capable in every way. Undoubtedly it is true that some of us are not as able public speakers as others. Where a man can step forward and be a leader in business, a leader as a public speaker, we should encourage him to do so; nor should we be perpetually at his heels because he is not using every opportunity to preach in the way we would like to have him preach it.

The vision should be larger than that. It should be for a community service. Giving himself for the sake of the work of God, the return will be a blessing not only for him, but for the work he represents.

We should encourage our able men, not try to hold them to the same narrow track in which we walk. We should ourselves strive to get out of our old narrow pathway, not for the sake that we may take another man's place, but that we may become more able and so render better service to the cause of Christ and to his children—humanity.

We should lift up our heads, lift up our hearts, yet with humility recognizing our weakness before God, move forward for the sake of the work intrusted to all. A light set on a hill cannot be hid. Let us not hide our light under a bushel.

ings. A new carpet on the platform and in the aisles is made possible by the kindness of the aid society. Closer discipline is being pressed for Zion conditions. Can we stand it? is asked. Inheritance and stewardships was the topic of Bishop Keir's sermon recently, and H. S. Salisbury gave a digest on the preparation of a diamond—in the rough and the finished product. Like flakes of snow the Saints are coming and locating in Independence and nearby territory. Zion is taking on size, if not growing as fast spiritually as she might if all would do their best.

Fourth Detroit, Michigan. The branch was organized some two years ago and has had many difficulties to overcome. At present, though, prospects are good. The Sunday school has of late doubled in attendance on account of having a centrally located place for services. The Saints look forward to the securing of a church building. Interest on the part of nonmembers is reviving.

Independence, Missouri. Zion is still on the map. While the coal shortage has affected the cottage meetings, yet efforts have in nowise been abated. Joseph Arber has just closed a series in the city resulting in the baptism of three adults, two heads of families. It is expected to begin a series of meetings on the Kansas side the first of the year, with U. W. Greene as the speaker and big efforts are going to be made to bring the gospel to the people.

Newcastle, Pennsylvania. In January of this year a half dozen or so of the Saints decided to hold meetings and as a consequence rented comfortable quarters in a hall where Sunday school was held. On August 20 a branch was organized by T. U. Thomas, with Elder David H. Jones president. On October 18 and 19 a church educational conference was held, the Youngstown-Sharon District being represented. A Religio has been organized and a ladies' aid society. Twelve new members have been added to the branch during the year by baptism and the number augmented somewhat by transfers. Now there are over thirty members. The new year is faced with confidence and the spirit of humility.

Moorhead, Iowa. Among the young people home from school for the holidays are Audrie Strand, Edna Rawlings and Blair Jensen of Graceland; Ruby Strand from Iowa City; Anna Larson and Nellie Larson who have been teaching near Cedar Falls. Dale Wilson and Emma Southworth were recently married.

Wigan, Lancashire, England. Elder Abel Hall began a series of meetings on November 30, continuing ten days. The Saints rallied wonderfully. He lectured five nights on the Book of Mormon; many questions being asked and ably answered. During the daytime he visited the Saints and friends with good effect. On Saturday night a hot pot and social meeting was held, with John Jones as chairman. Five-minute addresses were given by a number of the brethren, with appropriate solos and other music. On the following Sunday evening Brother Hall preached to a capacity house, leaving a good impression on all.

Glasgow, Montana. After the district conference here early in December, Brethren Eli Bronson and George W. Thorburn remained for a few days and organized us into a branch. James C. Page and Walter R. Hillman were chosen president and priest, respectively. The Religio and Sunday school work are on the road to success. The place of our meeting, which we rent, is commodious (40 by 80) which is an aid to our work. The enrollment of the Sunday school is 47, many of the smaller members from homes of nonmembers. Preaching is held each Sunday evening after Religio, and we are successful in getting a number of nonmembers to attend.

Toronto, Ontario. The "lid is off" in Toronto. The war Measures Act, prohibiting "booze" is lifted, and forty carloads of John Barleycorn are staggering Toronto. Last night at the Allen, Brother William's subject was "Why the Devil?" which drew an appreciative audience. Did God make the Devil? No; he lives as the ultimatum of his own decision, was his characteristic reply to the question. Across the street at the Shea Theater the subject was, "The Devil, his origin, come and hear him." Brother Joseph Luff preached at our morning service on "God manifest in the flesh"—a soul-stirring appeal to the Saints.

On the 11th a capacity house (1,500) greeted Brother Williams to hear his "Mormonism Exposed." This lecture was made necessary by the advent in our city of one Nephi Jensen, an elder of the Utah church, who is preaching every Sunday night in one of the small motion picture theaters of Toronto. The dominant church in Utah apparently believes this a fertile field on account of our recent trouble, but they are wasting their time. Their tenets are well known here. On the 7th the following resolution prevailed: "Resolved, that the branch appoint a committee to take into consideration the advisability and possibilities of the sale of this church building and the purchase of a more suitable building." We wish the committee every success, as this old hay repository requires the breath of Vesuvius to keep it warm.

Of Course You Do Not Want to Quit
It's the Only Church Magazine

"History is really very much more than the record of events as they may have occurred."

So writes Church Historian, Walter W. Smith in this issue of

JOURNAL OF HISTORY

There is a philosophy of history as well as a narrative of it according to him, and that aspect of our church development will be treated in the Journal throughout the coming year.

Do You Read the Journal of History?

DO YOU THINK IT WORTH WHILE

To Place a Herald in Every Church Home?

So you believe in publicity? Are you converted to the idea that printer's ink can be consecrated to the service of God quite as effectively as it serves the interests of men?

Have you not often observed the powerful influence of printing in all of our lives? How we eat, wear, do and think what the advertising man suggests?

Is there any reason why this same power cannot be exerted in Truth's cause?

Should our missionary work be limited to the effort, splendid as it is, of our comparatively few missionaries?

Would it not be possible to multiply the eloquently spoken word so that thousands might read what only dozens have heard?

Blue Pencil Notes

No one can be indifferent to the signs of the times. They very clearly presage impending disaster. It is not sufficient to say that Labor and Capital are organized, they are also armed or arming.

Basing a forecast entirely on known conditions it seems not at all improbable that eventually, Labor will take over the reins of government in all the world. That was Marx's prediction, and it does not seem so improbable now as it did then.

But we cannot suppose that such a condition will be allowed to materialize without fierce resistance and a terrible struggle. Preparation is now being made for that struggle—not alone in far-off Russia where it is actually in progress, but also in America.

The manager of a very large concern in the Middle West assured the writer within the past few weeks that his concern had purchased arms and ammunition and proposed to drill and arm two regiments of men for the protection of their property rights when the clash comes. Another person reported that a concern with which he has a certain connection has ordered equipment, including two carloads of army cots. On the other hand, large sales of arms to persons representing labor interests in the Middle West are reported.

Everything points to a struggle—it may be long delayed, it may come sooner than we expect. And we must not forget that scattered throughout the ranks of Labor are many whose immediate aim is revolution and overthrow of government. Deportation may deplete the ranks, but not to a very appreciable extent. Revolution is a new word in America. But, alas, we must acquaint ourselves with its possibilities.

The spread of Bolshevism in Europe alarms Great Britain and France. Simonds, whose war articles attracted so much attention, says that the nations must soon make peace with it or war upon it. Its triumphal progress encourages all classes of radicals and revolutionists in all lands.

One of the most dangerous theories of Bolshevism is that a well-organized, well-armed, well-led, and aggressive minority can overthrow the government of any land whenever it may choose to do so. (Majority rule means nothing to this philosophy.) And their theory comes very nearly being correct, because most of us are busy about our own affairs, and if taken by surprise, unarmed and unorganized, would be helpless.

Moreover, if we were to attempt to look beyond the possible seizure of the reins of government by labor, which seems a possibility, to say the least, and by the most radical forms of Socialism at that, as in Russia, we would predict, just on our own human judgment, that having achieved ascendancy and seized the reins, Labor will be unable to administer the affairs of the world, and chaos will ensue. Indeed, both the capitalistic and the socialistic systems seem to have within themselves the seeds of their own destruction.

We need not be surprised at this, because we do not hold that the hope of civilization and humanity lies in any human scheme of politics, or industry, or sociology. It lies solely in that well-ordered government that will be set up by Jesus Christ when he comes again, to which government we are assured there will be no end—a reign of right and justice, conforming to divine, not human laws.

If there is to come this fierce struggle and this period of chaos, we can readily see that the organization that maintains its solidarity when other institutions break down will be able to bless and provide for its members. That evidently was what the Lord had in mind for the church in Zion. Hence the need for every compact and well-ordered organization that shall be prepared to administer to physical as well as spiritual needs.

The question now arises, Will the church be able to maintain its solidarity? If so, it will do the work of God. If not, dissensions and suspicion and discord will scatter it to the winds. There is a terrible significance to the words of Jesus, "If ye are not one ye are not mine." In other words, if we do not maintain our unity we cannot do the work before us and so will not be recognized as his.

We believe that the church as an organization will maintain its solidarity and do its work. But many who fail to catch the vision, or who partake of the lawless spirit that seems about to wreck the world will fall. The Lord did not talk about the "sifting time" and the "hastening time" for nothing. Perhaps many will fall away. The Saints will be sorely tried by conflicting rumors and cries of, "Lo here! and Lo, there!"

But let us move forward carefully, not easily turned aside by idle tales, trusting God, trusting the church, trusting the word of God contained in the three books. The revelations contained in the Book of Covenants, particularly, are receiving vindication by daily developments.

We have a divine program. Our comprehension and statement of it may be imperfect. But if we are all agreed, as touching this one thing, God will be there and that to bless. The program will work if we are agreed, even though our present statement of it may be imperfect. But if we are not agreed, the best thought out plan will fail.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Davis City Reunion

Last August President Frederick M. Smith attended the Davis City reunion, about seven miles from Lamoni. This is an old settlers' reunion, and is not connected with our church. He was one of the principal speakers, and also acted as master of ceremonies or platform manager, introducing the other speakers, one of whom appeared each of the first three days of the reunion, and included the governor of Iowa and Congressman Towner of the district. President Smith was spokesman on the fourth day.

As this was not a church reunion, considerable adverse criticism arose. As a result of this we wrote one of the prominent citizens of Davis City, a man who had an active part in arranging the reunion—the more intellectual part of its work—to learn the effect of his visit upon residents of the town, if he cared to express an opinion.

Almost by return mail the following reply was received:

DAVIS CITY, IOWA, September 6, 1919.

Mr. S. A. Burgess,
Lamoni, Iowa,

My Dear Sir: Your letter of September 5 at hand and noted will say in reply that I was not a member of the general committee, but was the committee of one appointed by the general committee to secure speakers for them and secured President F. M. Smith to act as master of ceremonies during the reunion, and also make an address on Friday.

In regard to criticism of President Smith, or his address, I heard none unfavorable. But I can say frankly that I heard much very favorable comment from many people not only members of the L. D. S. Church, but from members of other churches. I also want to state that I heard his address and it was one of the most masterful addresses I ever listened to from any rostrum, and I heard many other people express the same opinion.

As to the effect of President Smith's visit to Davis City, I will say there can only be one effect of the presence of such men as President Smith in any town or community and that is for the betterment of mankind, morally, socially, and in every way. I never had the pleasure of President Smith's acquaintance until August 12, 1919, the day he arrived here to act as master of ceremonies, but I was quite closely associated with him during the four days he was here, and I regard him as one of the purest, noblest, and most Christian men I have ever met.

We were present the last day and heard a large part of his address, which was a strong appeal for higher moral standards. He presented his subject in a clear-cut manner, which should prove effective.

One serious regret we have is that his effort there could not have been made more strongly the initiating of a religious and moral movement in the county. We should stand forth more emphatically as representing the highest moral and spiritual standard, both by our words and also by our lives. We hope to see much more done in the near future on the part of our church representatives, assuming a rightful leadership in that which concerns the spiritual and moral affairs of the community.

S. A. B.

Every once in a while some one gets angry and stays away from church by way of revenge. This, of course, is injuring only himself. We are reminded of a conversation alleged to have taken place between two colored men. One remarked: "There are some people all the time getting their backs up; they think if they stay away from church that the church will absolutely go to pieces. But the church goes right on." The other replied: "Certainly; you never saw an orchard hurt yet because the rotten apples fall off the trees."

School of the Prophets

In every age the priesthood of the church have looked forward with great hopefulness and interest to the school of the prophets. But we think in the Reorganized Church there is greater interest and a greater feeling of need now than there has been any time within our personal recollection. At the same time, there are better prospects, we believe, of arrangement being made by the Presidency for the establishment of such a school.

There are many moot questions to be decided, and many questions on which there is lack of information. If they are to be solved we must approach them, not in a spirit of contention, but in a spirit of brotherly love and confidence. Otherwise there is no hope of progress.

We note in the early church that the school of the prophets was defeated because of contentions which arose. Jealousy will also defeat it. We note, that the Master warned the early church in this age, that if they kept his commandments his Spirit would be with them, and they would be able to establish the school. If they did not keep his commandments, then the love of the Father would not be with them, and they would walk in darkness. (Doctrine and Covenants 92:3.)

There are indications of a school of the prophets as early as the time of Samuel. (I Samuel 2:10; 19:20.) As to the nature of these early schools, there seems to be some uncertainty among Bible students. The Popular and Critical Bible Encyclopedia declares (volume 3) that they were institutions for training prophets.

However, it is by no means certain that they first arose at that time. But it is of interest to note that they had schools of the prophets then. So far as clear explanation of their nature is concerned, we will find it principally in the Doctrine and Covenants and Church History.

In the early church, on Monday, March 18, 1833, a school of the prophets was organized, and Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams ordained counselors in the First Presidency. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 282.) In the fall of 1834, we find them making preparation for the school of the elders, wherein they might be more perfectly instructed in the great things of God. A building for a printing office was nearly finished, and the lower floor was set apart for the purpose of the school. Thus the Lord opened the way for its holding. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 523.)

November 1, according to Millennial Star, volume 15, page 204, the school of the elders was being well attended and lectures delivered on theology. In the following month of January, 1835, we find Joseph Smith still engaged in delivering lectures to the school. (Page 539.) In the last week of March the school was closed. (Page 553.)

In November of that year we find Joseph Smith again attending school. (Pages 596, 597, 600.) On January 4, 1836, a Hebrew school was organized, and an outsider, Doctor Seixes was engaged to teach. The school appears to have met regularly.

At the end of that month Joseph Smith organized the quorums of high priests, elders, seventies, and bishops, and blessed each quorum. (Page 822.) On February 2, they met in regular meeting to receive the seal of their blessing; the high priests and elders in one room; the seventy and twelve in the second room; and the bishops in the third room.

In the Reorganized Church an effort was made in 1869 to revive the school of the prophets, but it was unsuccessful. They certainly did not seem prepared at that time to undertake it.

It is of interest to note how strongly impressed were the early elders of the necessity of studying grammar and rhetoric. When one does not understand the meaning of language, and it is difficult indeed for him to read the word of God and understand it, though he may do so through the revelation and inspiration of God.

There is a great necessity for men prepared to teach. There is a necessity for men who are prepared to hear, and discuss wisely that which is presented.

We have been attempting of late years to lay the basis, but this has met with much opposition, because of some who fail to understand the necessity of making ready. They seem to think that in some mysterious way the Presidency simply call for them to meet, and at once they become a school of the prophets, endowed with all wisdom. They lack sufficient faith in God, as well as in his representative to prepare.

Now it is undoubtedly true that through faith and prayer the word of God is wonderfully open to our understanding. He has also provided the means of a solemn assembly, which is called a "school," and should give us a hint that it is for the purpose of teaching.

So we find it plainly presented in Section 85 of Doctrine and Covenants, not only that we should teach one another, but also that one be appointed who shall be the speaker of the hour (Doctrine and Covenants 85:37.)

All of these passages may be read with profit, beginning with 85:19; also 87:5 and 92:1-3.

Evidently all should be done in order; evidently all should be done in the spirit of humility and brotherly love. Evidently also there are to be prepared teachers who will speak and discuss at length as a teacher, the subject before the school.

Some years ago, we are informed by Elder Frederick A. Smith, now the presiding patriarch, that the method in the old school of the prophets was that after the matter had been presented by the teacher of the hour, that the president called upon each one in order; and that each one then arose, if he had aught to say. But that each one spoke affirmatively and did not refer to that which anyone else had said, let alone attempt to reply to it or attack; but each one presented the texts of the scriptures and explained how he understood them, attempting to throw further light on the matter before the school.

No negative argument was permitted; no reply to what another brother had stated. The purpose was not to destroy what another had said, but to affirmatively ascertain the truth and so present it as clearly as one could. After each had spoken in order, he who was in charge as president then summed up the matter.

This is evidently in accordance with Doctrine and Covenants 85:37:

"Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesmen at once, but let one speak at a time, and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified of all, and that every man may have an equal privilege."

This is certainly in accordance with the best methods of teaching, that after the lecture the class be expected to take part and freely discuss the question, throwing all possible light upon it, and then a summation should be made by the one in charge, who would thus speak last.

We wonder often how many of our elders are aware how much Graceland College has had to do with preparing us for the school of the prophets. It is not a matter that can be introduced by the private will of man, but only under the direction and with the approval of our heavenly Father; and only under the immediate direction of those who are appointed to take charge, the First Presidency. Yet it is necessary that we get ready.

As soon as we are ready, the church will move forward and the school of the prophets will be established. And we hope and believe that that time is very near at hand. The spirit of criticism will not help, will not hurry, but will rather delay that accomplishment.

S. A. B.

An Open Sea

In the present political unrest, it is interesting to note an article by an Englishman, stating that there is not only a necessity for restriction of government expenditure in England, but also presenting a practical plan. As matters stand at present, the United States is rapidly developing its merchant marines, possessing as it does a large part of the commerce of the world, and it possesses a navy adequate to protect its commerce against any other nation save one. In an attempt to compete with that one means a ruinous competition between English-speaking nations. The war has left the two in a predominant situation on the theme.

The point that is made is that a defensive naval service be maintained by each, consisting only of coast defense by submarines and small crafts; that this defensive division will be at the service of the national government.

That all of the deadlocks call for submarines and cruisers, and fly the international flag, the flag of the League of Nations, and will be held at the disposal of the League of Nations, and to be available only as a mandatory to open the sea lanes. Finally that England and the United States will seek to make common cause if either one is attacked.

This would put an end to blockade and war use of the fleet, since it can only be used for international purposes. It is urged that only such a blockade can after all ever be effected; that is, one which receives general national approval, such as would be given through a league. The sea power would then be used, not however for selfish ends, but only for the common ideals.

Industrial Justice

The present industrial situation raises several important issues. Some of these are freely granted.

First: The right of labor to organize and to discuss its own problems freely.

Second: The right of labor to be represented in industrial disputes, by men of its own choosing.

Third: The right of labor to take an interest and share in industry; the value of their representation upon the board of directors.

But, Fourth, the objections are raised: That the man laboring in the shop should not suffer loss because of the mistakes that are made in the front office through the man who orders the materials. But it would follow from this that if they are to suffer no loss, then they should receive no profit from close and careful buying, or from management; hence the objection would be rather untenable.

Yet this is seen in the railroad proposition called the Plumb plan. The deficiencies are to be met by the Government. Profits are to be divided with the working man.

Fifth: Another objection has been raised, that the working man is unwilling to take chances—is very conservative, so that as it becomes necessary to open up new fields, new branches, it has been found necessary to buy out the interest secured on profit sharing plan by the working man, because he will not take the chances which are necessary to success. This is worthy of consideration.

It is because of this risk of loss, the chances that must be taken if real development work is to be done, that a fair rate of interest must be paid.

It is in order to encourage saving that a fair rate of interest should be paid to capital; otherwise all that is produced would be consumed; machinery would wear out, and instead of progress there would be decline.

However, we note in the cooperative plan in Great Britain, a small percentage is paid to capital; the bulk of profit is paid to the consumer. There is thus a conflict between the interests of the consumer and the men who conduct the business.

A small rate of interest is paid as a rule where the risk is small. But every new venture has meant serious, heavy, and continued loss, as a rule, until it is developed; because of these risks that are run, there is reason for a larger rate of interest in developing industry.

Children's Homes

Close students of child psychology and of adolescence emphasize the fact that a baby is distinctly an individualist, though later he takes more interest in others. But not before adolescence comes the period of the group, when boys form gangs, and girls are always banding together. This precedes the larger group of society, the mixed group of young men and young women.

It is doubtless important for every child to have individual attention. But for the baby it is essential for proper, healthy growth. Children of school age have by no means the same need for individual attention. It is good for them to have a home of their own, providing they can have a good home where they really are cared for; not simply taken for what the adopting parents can get out of them. But for the baby, almost any kind of a private home is a gain.

It is a great advantage, that those who care for a child from infancy have their interest and love fully aroused, in a way that is much less like with a child taken in later life.

Of course great care should always be taken and is, before anyone is allowed to adopt a child, and careful investigation made as to their fitness. This becomes all the more necessary when we remember that some of the large state institutions shown that of those in the orphan asylum, less than two per cent are orphans, having neither father nor mother living.

The great majority of those in State institutions have both parents living, and may have even stepfathers and stepmothers of two, and three, and sometimes even four times removed. But the state finds it necessary to take these children past infancy and care for them in the orphan's home because they are dependent children, as the parents do not give them the care that is necessary.

A good private home is better for a child than a good orphans' asylum. An orphans' asylum is better than a poor private home. But for an infant a private home is very nearly a prerequisite.

It may interest our readers in this connection to know that there are no babies or infants in our Children's Home. The youngest children are close to four years of age, and each of them is given individual attention; that is, that one adult is to each one of them, mother. They live with her, and sleep in the same room with her, and their individual needs can be promptly cared for.

Nearly all the children are of school age. The number not so large but that they can be given personal attention and can call on mother, (Sister Chase), at any time, for their needs; and on father, (Brother Chase), when a father's advice and help is needed. Both of them help the children with their lessons, and both of them, as well as all of them who remain in the home, not only love the children but do everything possible to make it as much like a real home as they can. The number of children range as a rule, from twenty-five to forty, and are not too numerous for careful attention.

Think It Over

One of the missionaries writing to Elbert A. Smith says, "Your article on 'Get Together and Advance the Ball' was great. How is this?"

Following his inquiry he appends the following clipping:

Can you imagine the antics of your body if the various members should suddenly develop individual brains and each ignore the stimulus from the nerve centers of the brain?

One foot would want to go down the street, the other up. The left eye would wish to be reading, the right to look at pictures. The stomach might crave for meat and the kidneys refuse to act as a filter for anything but water. One ear might long for the music of a cathedral, while the other insisted on burlesque jazz.

What a time we'd have, trying to satisfy all the impulses and we'd finally end by begging that control be given again to one central, intelligent body.

It is impossible for any organism or any institution with more than one part to exist without a recognized and controlling factor. Think it over.

Editorial Notes

Spiritualism is but the outgrowth of the yearning of the human heart for communication and for a life to come.

The Christian church has always taught the immortality of the soul; and more than this, the Christian church has taught that eternal life is possible; that is, that we can not only live forever, but that we may attain to companionship with God, our heavenly Father.

That God lives and that there is a life beyond the grave, and that the soul is immortal and continues to exist after death; and that this same soul will again be reunited with the body at the coming of Jesus, we are fully convinced. Human love, human knowledge, human desire to know and do reaches far beyond the possibility of this present life on earth.

Why They Don't Go to Church

The reporter for the Omaha News interviewed a number of people to find out why they do not go to church. The reasons given were diverse. Some had to work on Sunday, as the restaurant keepers; several wanted to sleep on Sunday morning; some felt themselves superior; all considered themselves as good or better than those who go to church, selecting the worst examples of those who have gone to church with which to compare themselves. In other words they compared their best acts with the worst things done by people who go to church. A few men thought the church was just for women; and one woman had stopped because a favorite preacher was no longer there.

But we do not need a reporter to tell us the flimsy excuses made by different people, most of them, however, in good faith. A large percentage have simply got out of the habit.

Ex-Ambassador Walter Hines Page used to be an editor, and like all editors he refused a great many stories. A lady once wrote him:

"Sir: You sent back last week a story of mine. I know that you did not read the story. For, as a test, I had pasted together pages 18, 19 and 20, and the story came back with these pages still pasted, and so I know you are a fraud and turn down stories without reading same."

Mr. Page wrote back:

"Madam: At breakfast, when I find an egg is bad, I don't have to eat the whole of it in order to make sure."—The Shur-On Chronicle.

The Prophetic Conning Tower

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

An Outline—Part 4The Civil War

Mr. Smith stands alone, save in the degree of inspiration which gave clearer conception, and stronger assurance. The Civil War in the United States (1861-1865) emphasizes the divine element in the constitutional law of the land, which previously had been antagonized in the whole world, and the theory that God was dead, and man incapable of self-government.

This theory is the Esau of the race; is as old as the history of wrong and oppression. It has been the standing plea—the never-failing resort of despotisms. The great Julius found it convenient when he restored and exalted the power of the Roman senate. But it was an act on his part which destroyed independence. It was the tomb of constitutional liberty.

It was adopted by the South, discussed in the Senate, aired on the stump. But the nation arose to sublime heights, and by clash of arms, emerged from the smoke of conflict with the star of freedom full blossoming on her forehead.

"Incapable of self-government" justified the atrocities of the Inquisition; it gave utterance to the stifled groans from the "Black Hole" of Calcutta. It was written in tears upon the "Bridge of Sighs," and pointed to those dark recesses, upon whose gloomy portals there was never a returning footstep. But to-day, the world is hanging on the lips of the United States.

The Constitution

When the convention for framing the Constitution of the United States met in 1787, "It was in session four or five weeks," says Bancroft, "without progress." Benjamin Franklin, who had represented the colonies in England and France proposed as follows:

"In the beginning of the contest with the British, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of establishing our national felicity, and have we now forgotten that powerful hand? I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. . . . I therefore beg leave to move, that henceforth, prayers imploring the assistance of heaven and its blessings on our deliberations, be held every morning in this assembly, before we proceed to business, and that one, or more, of the clergy of this city, be requested to officiate in that service."

Note: In session for four or five weeks, and blocked—not a cog moved until Heaven responded to their plea. Then what? Why, "the Virginia plan," by Madison, "System of government," by Pinckney, and "the sovereign federal system," by Hamilton—three young men, under thirty years of age, strangers to each other, for the more part, and their systems combined, practically, the same principles were taken up and analyzed, system, organization, and formulation crystalized, and the Constitution of the United States shot up like a planet of fire against a dark cloud.

In Burnaby's travels through the middle settlements of North America, published 1775, this sentiment is expressed:

"An idea, strange as it is visionary, has entered into the minds of the generality of mankind, that empire is traveling westward; and every one is looking forward with eager and impatient expectation to that destined movement when America is to give the law to the rest of the world."

John Adams, October 12, 1775, wrote:

"Soon after the reformation, a few people came over into this new world for conscience's sake. Perhaps this apparently trivial incident may transfer the great seat of empire to America."

On the day after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, he wrote: "Yesterday the greatest question was decided which was ever debated in America, and a greater, perhaps, never was, nor will be, decided among men."

In 1776, Galiani, a Neapolitan, predicted "the gradual decay of European institutions," and in 1778, in reference to the future ruling power of the world, he said, "I will wager in favor of America."

Governor Pownal, an English statesman, predicted, 1780, that this country would become independent, and a civilizing activity, beyond what Europe could ever know, would animate it; and its commercial and naval power would be found in every quarter of the globe." Yes, our prophetic text in Isaiah 18 intimates as much, and "sends ambassadors by the sea, in rushing vessels."

Again, David Hartley wrote from England, 1777:

"At sea, which has hitherto been our prerogative element, they [the United States] rise against us at a stupendous rate; and if we can not return to our old mutual hospitalities toward each other, a very few years will show us a most formidable, hostile marine ready to join hands with any of our enemies."

Count de Aranda, one of the first of Spanish statesmen in 1783, wrote:

"This federal republic was born a pygmy, so to speak, It required the support and forces of two powers as great as Spain and France in order to attain independence. A day will come when it will be a giant, even a colossus; formidable in these countries."

Sir Thomas Browne published "Miscellany tracts," in 1684, one entitled "The prophecy," containing "reflections on the rise and progress of America," of which Doctor Johnson says: "Browne plainly discovers his expectation to be the same with that entertained lately with more confidence by Doctor Berkley that 'America will be the seat of the fifth empire.' It is in verse:

"When New England shall trouble New Spain,
When America shall cease to send out its treasures,
But employ it at home in American pleasure;
When the new world shall the old invade,
Nor count them their Lords, but their fellows in trade."
—Duyckinck's American Literature, vol.1, p. 179.

Governor Pownal, American Literature, vol. 1, p. 179, referred to, speaking of the establishment of this country as a free and sovereign power calls it "a revolution that has stronger marks of divine interposition, superseding the ordinary course of human affairs, than any other event which this world has experienced."

In 1773, the Bishop of Saint Asaph, Wales, before the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, said:

"The colonies of North America have not only taken root and acquired strength, but seem hastening with accelerated progress to such a powerful state as may introduce a new and important change in human affairs."—Duyckinck's American Literature, Volume 1.

De Tocqueville, a French historian, speaking of our separation from England, says:

"It might seem their folly, but was really their fate; or rather the providence of God, who, doubtless, has a work for them to do in which the massive materiality of the English character would have been too ponderous a dead weight upon their progress."

But the prophecy of direct inspiration, given centuries ago, and re-revealed in 1833, that the building of the Gentile nation should be under the superintending wisdom and power of God; that it should be great in the eyes of God, is the star towards which the statesmen of both Europe and America were both dimly groping their way. Thompson, in United States as a Nation, quotes Edward Labonlaye, a publicist of France, on the superiority of our Constitution as follows:

"They [the Americans] organized liberty, the success of which was due to that mysterious conjunction of men and events that makes the genius of an epoch akin to inspiration."

Again, "a leading organ of opinion in England" pronounces the Constitution of the United States "the most sacred political document in the world." (Page 160.) Doubtless the paper was defending Gladstone, who said: "The American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

The speaker of the House of Representatives declares: "The Constitutional Convention was the wisest set of men that ever met under one roof." (Congressional Record, September, 1917.) This superior wisdom is manifest in their work of dividing the governmental machinery into three separate departments—judicial, legislative, and executive, and the Congress into two branches, also placing the system of checks and balances on the wheels of such power.

"All governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed," is one of the wise propositions on which our system is based. The Honorable A. H. Cragin of New Hampshire, in speech delivered by him in the House, said:

"When our forefathers reared the magnificent structure of a free republic in this westernland, they laid its foundations deep and broad in the eternal principles of right. Its materials were all quarried from the mountain of truth; and as it rose majestically before an astonished world, it rejoiced the hearts and hopes of mankind. Tyrants cursed the workmen, and their workmanship. Its architecture was new. It had no model in Grecian or Roman history. It was a paragon let down from heaven to inspire the hopes of men, and to demonstrate God's favor to the people of the new world."

Colonel Watterson, Louisville, Kentucky, in an address at Frederick, Maryland, on the occasion of dedicating the Francis Scott Key Monument, August 9, 1898, said:

"What was it that singled out these two men (Washington and Franklin) from all others, and designated them to be the chiefs of the military and diplomatic establishment set up by the provincial gentlemen whose declaration of Independence was not merely to establish a new nation, but to create a new world? It was so clearly the inspiration of the Almighty, as a century later was the faith of Lincoln in Grant whom he had never seen, and had reason to distrust. It was as clearly the inspiration of the Almighty as that every turn of fortune, God has stood by the Republic."

The leading thought of the world places the Constitution and its legitimate outgrowth on an inspired basis, and while we have just emerged from the fiercest and most unparalleled conflict that ever reddened the face of the world, and tested the stability of government, men now turn to the inspired words of Steven A. Douglas: "God forbid that any one should even make the attempt to subvert the Constitution of the United States. Let the Constitution ever be trodden under foot and destroyed, and there will not be wisdom and patriotism enough left to make another."—Congressional Record.

President Wilson, in a speech during the recent conflict, said: "The Constitution of the United States is not a mere lawyers' document; it is a vehicle of life, and its spirit is always the spirit of the age."—Ibid.

From the modern Sinai (Washington, District of Columbia) while the earthquake of war was rocking the nations of the earth, we caught the flowing cadence of the following prayer in the Senate:

The Chaplain, Reverend Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we know that every part of human activity leads to thy throne; that to think out the problem of life is to think back to thee. Thou art still the ruler of the universe. Thou dost still sit in judgment upon the conduct of men. We come to thee in the midst of the Nation's alarm, in the midst of the great crisis that is upon us, and pray thee, O God of our fathers, thou who didst establish us, thou who didst give inspiration to the founders of this Government to erect a government upon the principles of thy revealed word, to hear us this day. Give success to our arms. Lead us to victory. May brute force and hate not prevail over justice and truth and right. Grant, we pray, that the outcome of it all shall be for the glory of thy name and the permanent establishment of a real peace and brotherhood in all the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.—Congressional Record, March 26, 1918.

These glintings through the rift in the clouds show that political sagacity support divine and direct inspiration. As to the great national building under the developing power of the wise compact, prophecy is most clear and explicit:

"For it is wisdom in the Father that they [the Gentiles] should be established in this land, and should be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things [things declared by the Holy Ghost] might come forth from them to the remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he has covenanted with his people, O house of Israel."—Nephi 9: 89, 90.

Gentiles Established

The Gentiles were to be established, set up, in this land, as a free people, that God's power might be manifest with a view to the overshadowing result—the fulfilling of the covenant to Israel. Let us inquire as to the relative attitude and value of this Gentile nation as an organized commonwealth, among the galaxy of the peoples of the world:

"Nevertheless, after they [Israel] shall be nursed by the Gentiles, and the Lord has lifted up his hand upon the Gentiles, and set them up for a standard, and their [Israel's] children have been carried in their [Gentile] arms, and their daughters have been carried upon their shoulders, behold these things of which are spoken, are temporal; for thus are the covenants of the Lord with our fathers; and it meaneth us in the days to come, and also all our brethren who are of the house of Israel. It meaneth . . . that after all the house of Israel have been scattered and confounded, that the Lord God will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles, yea, even upon the face of this land."—1 Nephi 7: 13-15.

This mighty nation is set up, established, by the power of God, for a standard. A standard is the ensign or flag, especially a national ensign; that which is established by authority as a fixed rule or measure; established rule or model; criterion. Here is the idea; a model or criterion. A model republic, the mission of which is to enlarge until all despotisms of the earth kiss the silken folds of Old Glory.

From the day Washington, on Yorktown's bloodstained heights made good the unborn declaration, thrones have been crumbling, crowns have been tumbling, and dynasties have been fleeing away. When our patriot fathers proclaimed this republic, at Philadelphia, on July 4, 1776, there was but one other republic on the face of the globe—Switzerland—and the fathers were not certain that it would live until Christmas. It was an even break whether it would or not.

Republics

Now, the Almighty be praised, up to the time the world's conflict began, there were twenty-six republics in this world. From eight to twelve will probably emerge from this holocaust. In a very large sense we did it, not wholly by the mailed fist, or conquering armies, but by the wholesomeness of example and by the beneficence of our republican institutions founded in the wisdom of God, and which had no model in Grecian or Roman history.

The teachings of ambassadors sent out in rushing vessels, to the foreign courts of the habitable world, and to all creation are that representative government, with its spirit directed of God and made manifest in the flesh, is the manhood of youth, the marriage of courtship, and the fruit of the flower. The challenge of armed autocracy demanded courage. America met the test.

The long lines of red-blooded young men facing the dark countenances of despotism on the hillside and seaside, on mountain crest and in rye fields, or on the deck of battered ships, reflect the golden truth: greater than any terrible machine of destruction that the mind of man can conceive, is the model which would have been erected with the posterity on the industrial power, failed to reckon with.

The Gentile government on this land, we doubt not, is the model which would have been erected with the posterity of Joseph, had they not dwindled in unbelief and forfeited the blessings. For we learn (2 Nephi 1:24) that the Gentiles were to inherit the blessings of the Nephites because of unbelief and consequent estrangement from God.

2 Nephi 7:18 gives the following prophecy:

"And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles; and there shall be no kings upon the land who shall raise up unto the Gentiles."

Every attempt to enthrone a king since the establishment of the "model" republic, has resulted in ignominious defeat up to date, and the wall of defense, grows thicker and higher. "And I will fortify this land against all other nations." (Verse 19.)

It was supposed at one time, that power descended from on high and alighted on the heads of a few tall men, and that a little of it trickled down to the great mass of people below, but this is reversed. The Monroe Doctrine, considered as the "Eden sword, swinging back and forth," fortifying against the encroachment of foreign powers, and kingcraft. The secretary of state, empowered by the body politic, lifts his hand, and the attempts at autocracy dissolve away.

Louis Napoleon, the Emperor of France, concluded it was a good time to smash the Monroe Doctrine, sent over here from Austria, Maximilian, the Brother of Franz Joseph, of the Hapsburg House. He set him up on a tinsel imperial throne, clapped a tinsel imperial crown on his head, and backed up the imperial effort with 80,000 French bayonets under Marshal Bazaine, on the soil of Mexico, in 1866. (History World, by Lardner, p. 636.)

William H. Seward, Secretary of State, threw this protective, fortifying shield squarely in the usurper's face; told him to get, and not to wait for another order. The result was Maximilian's trial on three charges—rebellion, murder, and brigandage—by court martial, and condemned, being shot by the Austrian court surrounding his paper throne

The prophecy says: "He that raiseth up a king [on this land] shall perish." It is a historical fact that Maximilian's wife, Carlotta, assisted in making her husband a toy king, and she, returning to France in 1866, sank into retirement—lost to the world, until, during the world's war, the associated press copied from the foreign papers that Carlotta was found, in an old castle in Belgium, a maniac, and the old wrecked remnant of the Hapsburg house—perished. This prophecy as a whole asserts plainly that this is the period of the world when the theory of the divine right is reversed; that men and women, to rule derive their right and title, not from the accidents of birth, but from the will of the people.

As early as 1807, Pedro I was hurled from a petty throne in Brazil, South America, and recently James J. Strang was assassinated in erecting a small royal affair on Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan, and placing on his head the symbol of imperialism.

ELDER S. W. L. SCOTT

Elder Scott has for years been a profound student and expounder of the prophecies and their fulfillment.

During Cleveland's term of office as president of the United States another attempt to violate the Monroe Doctrine occurred, in that a foreign power undertook to purloin a piece of Venezuela, South America. Cleveland dispatched orders through the secretary of state, and the threat was withdrawn.

Germany, a little later, attempted negotiations with Ecuador to purchase the Galapagos Islands, and it was about to be a success, when the United States stepped in and informed the parties that such sale would be a violation of the Monroe Doctrine, and the incident was closed.

All these failures on the part of foreign powers, and domestic discontents, makes strong the prophecy and points out the pathway of the government without a throne, without aristocracy. The Monroe Doctrine is not international law, but it is a part of the fundamental features of our government. Monroe went to Jefferson, and placed in his strong hands the mighty task of defining the place of the New World in the family of nations. In its essence the famous declaration was this:

"The concert of Europe must never be permitted to interfere in the affairs of America, North or South, because she has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe, and peculiarly her own. She should, therefore, have a system of her own, separate and apart from Europe."

This is the substance as we see it.

Such system of "fortifying" a nation is clearly seen in that while Central and South America possess the most seductive field for colonization that exists, there is never likely to be the scramble for it among the powers of Europe that there has been to secure and slice up Africa. The Monroe Doctrine has rendered this service to the world's peace, and if Article 10 of the Constitution of the League of Nations is interpreted in the light of the cause contributing to make a "mighty nation," the expansion of the doctrine and its acceptance by the great powers of the eastern world only establishes more firmly that the Gentile nation of the prophecy is a standard.

This mighty nation is set forth in prophecy as a guardian to Israel—the posterity of Joseph (1 Nephi 7:13) to nurse them, and there stands Mexico. As she has been so shall she remain, the stepdaughter of our republic. Though prostrate by oppression, stripped by her despoilers, and even profaned by her ravishers, she shall still be the charge and the care of this, her protecting mother. The large population of almost pure blooded inhabitants, with the mixed tribes, both in Mexico, Central America, and South America, argues the work of the Father directly, by the gospel covenant also. Through the sanctity of the civilizing elements of guardianship and the gospel covenant they will build anew to the future and the splendor of Zion. This promised land is the land of Zion, and the inheritance of freedom is her state. We read the prophecy thus:

"And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them."—Ether 1:31.

"And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God."—1 Nephi 7:18.

Ah, how this prophecy rose into the horizon during the Spanish-American War, 1898! We can see Spain with altars of tyranny and superstition erected on the four corners of this continent in the days of discovery and settlement, struggling for supremacy. We see her possessions, her power and authority dwindling away, and down to a small colonial dependency, out in the ocean—Cuba. Then the fullness of wrath swept the last vestige of Spanish jurisdiction from the western world. Spain served not the God of this land. Her regime, considered divine, stood erect in her own land, but simply crept into America.

COMPILED BY J. A. KOEHLER

[The student class from which these echoes are gathered is taught by Cyril E. Wight of the Lamoni Stake Presidency. They are attempting to find out what is wrong with society, and to ascertain which of the proposed measures of reform will effectually cure existing evils. Naturally enough, each "ism" comes in for criticism and for comparison with the doctrines and institutions of the church.

If the same kind of work that is being done in this class were carried on throughout the church under capable leadership, we would soon have a body of men ready to prosecute the work of building Zion.—EDITORS.]

Socialism leaves out of its consideration the fatherhood of God. Thus it ignores the one great restraining and moralizing influence.

Business without cooperation is like sound without harmony.

Fixed responsibility is the spur to action. Men will perform the duties which they know the public hold them responsible for.

Men must be built to build industry.

Until Socialists recognize the fact that "without me you can do nothing," their endeavors will be in vain.

The time has come to quit talking about Zion, and to go to work and demonstrate that Zion is a reality.

We must demonstrate the practicability of our economic theory. If we are not faithful the world will take our place in the solution of the world's problem.

A thing is not bad because it is revolutionary, provided that we make sure before we destroy what we have that we have something better to fill the place.

The relationship of the farm or factory to the temporal steward is no different than the relationship of the office to the spiritual steward.

Is not Latter Day Saintism revolutionary in comparison with other religions of our day?

If socialism uses force against existing governments, the cults of socialism are likely to use force against each other.

It does not follow that because the manner in which socialism proposes to administer public ownership is destructive to individual initiative, that therefore group ownership and control of the tools of production is inherently wrong.

The vital question is the manner in which the group administers its resources.

Socialism tends to give rise to and to accentuate the feeling that "the world owes me a living."

The American Farm Bureau Federation, according to its secretary, will take a decidedly conservative position, and declares its entire independence of all other organizations, and that it represents a majority of the farmers of America. They oppose government ownership of the railroads, but stand for strict regulation. They ask for government regulation and supervision of the packers, and that this extend to wholesale grocers and commission men. The primary purpose of the federation is economic betterment of the farmer, increased production, business efficiency, and profitable marketing. In three thousand counties in the United States, twenty-five hundred now have county farm bureaus and agriculture agents. These bureaus are linked together in state federations. The state federations sent representatives to the national convention at Chicago in November. A second convention, however, will be held also in Chicago, March 3, 1920, for the final ratification of the federation.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

EVIDENCE OF USE OF METALS BY ANCIENT AMERICANS

The following is from the Montgomery (Alabama) Journal of January 11:

A very interesting collection of Indian relics was brought into the State museum Saturday.

During the recent flood, the Tallapoosa River washed through an aboriginal cemetery in Macon County, some miles east of Montgomery. The discovery of bones protruding from the ground caused the tenants on the plantation to get in touch with the Department of Archives and History and P. A. Brannon, Chief Clerk of that department spent Friday at the point and uncovered a number of burials.

All of the skeletons had relics deposited with them. A very interesting fact was noted, in that they were practically all of a European trade nature. In the collection are beads and ornaments of silver, bronze, copper, and glass. Several arrow points made of copper were found with one of the skeletons. Another was accompanied by a small iron cup, a cowbell, and a rifle.

Doctor Thomas M. Owen, of the Department, is anxious that, should there be any other finds of this character made along the rivers, that reports be made to him in order that the investigations may be conducted.

WAR RISK INSURANCE

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the Treasury Department calls attention to the new and more liberal benefits allowed ex-service men and their relatives and beneficiaries, which became effective December 24, 1919. For total and permanent disability, there is now allowed $100 per month. The amount ranges between $80 and $100, the lower figure being when there is no wife and child; $10 is allowed for each—dependent father and mother; $5 for each child in excess of one. The policy may also be made payable to a wide range of beneficiaries, as the insured may choose. It may include adopted parents, sister through adoption, stepbrothers or sisters, or even a nephew, niece, brother-in-law or sister-in-law, or may be left to some adopted parent or grandparent. A number of additional provisions are made, specifying the disabilities which are considered total, and provision is also made for double, total, permanent disability—$200.

Those interested should inform themselves concerning the more liberal provisions now in effect.

INDIA TO AUTONOMY

At last, after two and one half years of consideration, investigation, and legislative action, on December 23, 1919, the Government of India Bill, granting to India her first installment of responsible government was signed by King George, who is also Emperor of India, and so becomes the India Act. This is a forward step of tremendous significance. A full review here can hardly be made. An essential feature is the central government remains responsible to the British Parliament, and in the last resort supreme. The whole theory is that practical autonomy is given, as from the new provincial assemblies will be drawn the ministers who act as advisers of the governor-in-council, directly responsible to the elected assembly. Upon them and the governor devolves the local sub-government, education, agriculture, development of industries, excise, and various public works. In the assemblies, at least 70 per cent of the members will be elected, and not more than one fifth of them are to be officials. This removes the power of the official block. The electorate has been increased from 33,000 to about 5,000,000, and power is granted the various legislatures to extend the franchise to women on the same basis as it is now enjoyed by men.

This is recognized as a big step in advance with the expectation that it will lead to yet greater development in democracy. It is a practical beginning.

WAGES OF IOWA FARM LABOR

The rate of wages of male farm labor in Iowa during 1919 were as follows: Average rate per month when hired by the year, with board, $55.65; without board $71.43; average wage per day for day labor for harvest work, with board, $4.46; without board, $5.20; average wage per day for day labor for other than harvest work, with board, $3.46; without board, $4.24.

The average number of cords of firewood burned per farm, 1919, is estimated at nine cords, with an average price of $5.91.—Wallace's Farmer.

One interesting feature is the allowance of $16 a month for board when a man boards himself. This is the amount allowed by the church to those ministers whose work keeps them at home, as general and stake officers, etc.

WHAT THE FARMER WANTS

The Iowa Farm Bureau, at its meeting in Des Moines, January 8, expressed in various terms the necessity for both capital and labor recognizing the fundamental character of the farming industry and dealing justly with their requirements. Some extracts following the trend of their opinion follow:

"If capitalistic monopoly wants enough food produced that it may be feasted; if organized labor wants enough food that it may be fed; if the do-nothing dawdler wants food produced so he may eat, let them all stand forth at this time when the farmer must determine his 1920 food production program—and declare by deeds—cutting out of profiteering in goods and wages; by going honestly to business; by going honestly to the job of doing a full day's work for a full day's pay—their willingness to cooperate with us, the producers. . . .

"The wool speculator is largely responsible for high prices of wool. They have even gone so far as to try to discredit the wool growers' association and hurt our market.

"There is in your suit of clothes, wool for which the producer received approximately $4. Does this make that suit worth $80 on the market? Who is responsible for the profiteering in this instance? Not the wool grower, for but little of the $4 he received represents net profit. Who got the balance? How much did the speculator get?

"Whenever all industrial and labor interests are ready to get their feet under the table, and say that they are ready to back up, they will find the farmers ready to meet them. The farmers in the state and national federation will ask only that which is fair and just between men. There is no room for any radical element in either state or nation. There must be a satisfactory adjustment between men, an adjustment fair to one and all, the producer, the manufacturer, and the laborer."

FEDERAL COUNCIL IN MEXICO

At a recent meeting in Baltimore, Maryland, the Federal Council of the Church of Christ in America, claiming to represent twenty million Christian citizens, entered a protest against any course in regard to the Mexican problem which might be considered unfriendly by them. They held that any action other than friendly conference would be disastrous to

Rocking the Boat

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

They charge me with trying to "steady the ark";
 But listen, my friend, and take note,—
 The thing that I've tried to do for some time,
 Was merely to steady the boat.

There are some of us found, of definite type,
 Who like to sit tight when afloat;
 But others there are of a specified class,
 Whose pleasure is rocking the boat.

So listen, my friend, and do not forget,
 In all that the wise men ere wrote,
 They never got Uzza confused at all,
 With fellows who steady the boat.

And if you are looking about, my friend,
 For a sort of nautical goat,—
 Observe you, I pray, decide what to do
 For men who still joggle the boat.

His Star in the East

BY ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY

O thou whose earthly advent brought
 Light, hope, and love to men;
 Who all the lost and fallen sought,
 To lift them up again.

Light that the nations wait to see
 Ablaze on Zion's hill;
 Hope of the world that is to be
 When love all hearts shall fill.

Oh, love divine! embracing all
 Of every tribe and race,
 Around us from the dark they call
 O'er land and sea and space.

A list'ning ear may hear them pray
 Out of their gloomy night:
 "Shine on us, O star, and lead the way,
 Ye who have seen his light."

Zion awake, arise and shine
 Arrayed in glorious robe,
 Send forth thy beams of light divine,
 Illuminate the globe.

Rise from the dust, thy garments shake,
 Fair city of renown!
 Lest opportunity may take Away thy waiting crown.

Need of a New Valuation for the Local Ministry

BY LEONARD S. RHODES

Some printed observations on matters of vital concern to all members of the priesthood.

An observative old brother at one time remarked to the writer of this article: "You will observe that when a man gets too old for missionary work they ordain him an evangelist or a high priest." Whatever of truth or error there may have been in this remark, we believe that as the church is increasing in numbers it is sensing more and more the need and value of well qualified and highly efficient pastors. As pastors we should include not only branch presidents but the entire body of the local ministry, for they are all true under shepherds to whom Christ has intrusted the work of "the perfecting of the Saints," after the missionary has given his converts the name whereby they might be saved.

It is significant of progress that in recent years more interest has developed in this very important department of church work, until now we have not a few men of towering personality and extensive ability listed as high priests and pastoral elders. They are not men who have passed their years of greater usefulness, but vigorous, active men, brilliant and consecrated, whose influence for good is being felt throughout the church, and the results of whose work shall be indispensable to the Saints.

In like manner the value of the evangelists' work as revivalists is beginning to be understood. When we came to this city a few months ago and observed the results of the work by Evangelist Ammon White a new meaning and a new value for the work of an evangelist came to the writer's mind. Truly, the work of the revivalist is needed in the church.

A Vitalized Local Ministry

But there yet remains a large body of under pastors yet untouched by this new sense of valuation. By them the approach of a new life or vitalization from the body or church is beginning to be felt; just as the life giving sap comes up in the vines and branches in springtime and finally animates their entire being. But the work of vitalizing the local ministry has only begun; it has not reached the local elders, priests, teachers and deacons to a considerable extent. Please understand—we acknowledge a great many noble, consecrated men in their ranks; but as a class they have not comprehended the extent and importance of their work; nor has the church at large sufficiently appreciated the value and need of their work as visiting officers and under pastors.

As a result of this failure to grasp the broad vision of their calling we witness conditions that are not pleasing. Many enter their ministry without that deeper consecration and loyalty to their callings so necessary to a successful ministry.

One is ordained a deacon, and in a few months after his election resigns, or perhaps moves away and isolates him-the friendship of other nations, especially South America. A committee was appointed to interview the State Department, and take immediate steps for wide publicity of the diplomatic questions involved for a settlement both in the United States and Mexico.

But the Presbyterian for January 1 calls attention to the fact that the Federal Council means only cooperation in religious and spiritual activities. It does not even attempt to touch specific doctrines of the churches, much less to represent constituent membership in matters of politics.

Undoubtedly such a body of Christian citizenship if fully organized, should bring to bear a very large pressure in matters of diplomacy and of politics; especially on questions possessing a large moral element. It may rightly be seriously questioned how far a church or a church organization as such should attempt thus to interfere.

self from the church the remainder of his days. Was he called of God to the standing ministry only to become isolated? Has he been loyal to his calling? Why did he accept ordination? The teacher finds his work a thankless task and quits, or concludes he is not wanted and moves away. Before his ordination he knew, in theory at least, his calling would be trying. Did he hope for love and praise from the reprovéd and the wayward? As a father ought he not to love, pity and seek after God's erring ones; and look for his reward in the promise; "Blessed are the peacemakers"? The priest finds it difficult to deny himself the pleasures of home at evening; he waits for his pastor to come and escort him to his work of visiting the Saints in their homes. Somehow he forgets that the great red lights of sin never cease to shine on and on, luring the Saints to indifference and destruction. He has not observed that God's people are a forgetful people concerning family prayer. Why did he accept his call if he did not first choose to pay the price of visiting the homes?

The elder who is not chosen branch president feels no sense of responsibility for work to be done. Does he not know that elders too are to visit the homes of the Saints and instruct them? Is there no place he can find to raise the voice of warning with the gospel message to the people? We feel a deep conviction that men who do not strive to spend their lives in gospel work are not loyal and true to their calling as standing ministers, no matter what their office may be. The covenant of the priesthood is eternal; can the service be less than our fullest measure? But the fault for these conditions applies only half to the local ministry; the other half belongs to the church.

The church should place a higher valuation upon the whole work of the local ministry, give them broader recognition, and demand more of them. They should be urged to make a more extensive preparation for their important duties. The deacon should learn more of ventilation, heating, sanitation, ways and means, how to enforce decorum, and how to help the needy. The teacher should study tact, diplomacy, the art of appeal to the best in erring ones, and how to make them feel that his confidence in them is not misplaced. He should know where mercy and patience ends and slackness begins. He should bind and lead men by the cords of love.

A course in college would not more than cover the work of a priest. He should inspire faith in God, and by a prayerful life lead all to love prayer. Marital unity, the proper care and teaching of children, how to win their love, respect and obedience, and social purity, are all in line of his study and work. The Woman's Auxiliary column contains many valuable suggestions for the priest in his work.

The elder should study church policies and laws and how to make them effectual, parliamentary and court procedure with regard for reformation, justice, and mercy, not omitting nursing, public speaking and theology. He should possess the spirit of wisdom, and be humble and full of love. And the elder, priest, teacher or deacon, who neglects to magnify his calling, unless prevented by age or infirmity, should surrender his license.

Sustaining Local Officers

The church should require greater efficiency on the part of the local ministry; and simultaneously the local ministry should require greater consideration and respect on the part of the church. This includes not only the membership but also the general authorities. Too often general authorities have hindered local men in their work instead of helping them. Instead of requiring local authorities to adjust difficulties they have stood in the way of adjustment, not because they have approved of transgression and discord, but because they have assumed that the priesthood were having a quarrel, and desecrating their sacred offices as positions of vantage in the quarrel. We admit this may have been true in a few places, but it does not follow that such is the rule. In the world high officials will protect even in extreme measures their subordinates who have been assailed while discharging their duties; but often in the church the fact that a man possesses authority to act seems to be good reason to suspect that he will use it with unfair advantage against an opponent. Regulating authorities have sometimes been so fearful of taking sides in a so-called "quarrel" that they have refused to investigate a condition; the effect of their aloofness has been far more demoralizing than a fearless investigation and determined stand. Priding themselves on their ability to observe and to remain neutral they have failed to be observative and ceased to be neutral.

Several incidents will serve to illustrate: A local pastor, conscientious almost to an extreme degree concerning his high and holy calling, was forced to take action against an offending member. The "regulating authority" dismissed the court before it had finished its work, and appointed an arbitration committee to adjust the difficulty. It was very plain that he regarded the action as a quarrel between two jealous rivals. But his instructions to arbitrate were given while ninety miles away without investigation of any kind. One whose duty it is to "see that my law is kept" required to arbitrate with an offender! The humiliation to the local pastor was so great that he can not again so implicitly trust these authorities as he formerly did.

On the plea that there must first be unity in the local priesthood ordinations have been delayed for months to the detriment of branch work, because some one objected. When the obstructor, tired of hampering, gave the signal, the ordinations were permitted and the work allowed to proceed. The point is, the majority were neither sustained nor told why they were not sustained.

Again, the presiding elder has been directed to return licenses to those who refused to act in their office. He has been keenly criticized in public by the regulating authority for so innocent a thing as suggesting subjects for prayer meetings.

These cases have been cited not only because they sustain the point that higher officials do not properly sustain subordinate officials, but because in every instance subsequent events have vindicated the local authorities. Partial investigations, assumptions and irresolution, or the fear of "taking sides" on the part of general officers of the church, is unjust to the local officer and his work, and has brought havoc when firmer measures would have saved much sorrow, discord, and perplexity.

Official Gossipers

Another fault that seem to be quite general on the part of the ministry is their failure to hold as strictly confidential information which they obtain by virtue of their positions. When responsible officials of worldly organizations conclude that certain information must not become public all the skill of the press and its agents can not obtain it. No leak is permitted until they are willing for the public to hear it. Not so with many church officials. Undesirable conditions found in a home by visiting officers; a plan for laboring with the transgressing by the teachers; confidential talks by members with their pastor; and many like bits of information become branch or district gossip overnight. The writer was once asked by his district president for a report, the very nature of which was confidential. In a short while this report was public property, having been told by the district president to the member who had least right to the information. The gossiper is guilty of betraying the confidence imposed in him by the Lord and his kingdom. There are some things the ministry learn by virtue of their positions which ought never to pass their lips to anyone—not even their wives and other members of their families.

We hope the observations reported in this article will in some measure aid the church in placing a new valuation upon the work of the local ministry, and that their work shall be held more vital to the increase of righteousness. Local men often grow up in the branches in which they labor, and are employed in the commonest walks of life. This is as it should be, but often because of this and because their work is not viewed with proper regard their position as leaders and pastors is not esteemed as it should be by the members and general ministry. The fault lies with all: with the local men because of a lack of loyalty, preparation, and conservation to their tasks as a lifelong calling; and with members and general ministry because the local men's calling is not taken seriously enough, nor held with respect and confidence as vital to local progress. Let us close this with a prayer expressed by Elbert A. Smith in an editorial several years ago: "Lord give us men; not millions in finance, but men."

A Pastor's Resolution

At my age of life, and after so many years of experiment and experience, I have become more or less fixed in opinion as to what ought not and what ought to prevail, in branch affairs. I am not prepared to trifle, to coddle, to beat time, to fuss and fool. At the same time, let me be long-suffering.

Human nature is the same everywhere; but it seems to me that if we are not ready for the Book of Mormon standard we never will be; and I believe that if this city is not willing to acknowledge (at least) the righteousness of Christ's standard, she will sink with Capernaum into hell. That is the way I feel about it. I do not know what the outcome will be here.

Life is funny. I get some of the men started into service—vital, telling, the only kind that counts—and then I hold my breath to see whether or not they will bring forth the fruit that will go into eternity in its immortal state. What is the result? When they get close to the things that count, the only thing that counts, in the final analysis, the actual bringing forth of the fruits of service, they waver and "flunk," in many instances.

I thought I had an elder here rounded up for service. The work was divided into groups. He was placed in charge of one, took his assistants out one Sunday, then dropped from sight. The next thing I knew he was helping at some sectarian mission in the slums. His priesthood assistants come to priesthood meeting and report nothing done. A month is lost. A teacher, working for years in a tobacco factory, gets some enthusiasm, leaves the job for something else, does teacher's work for a few weeks, then slides back into the cigar rolling business and apparently dies in his office. Old members show some signs of life in the priesthood meeting while under the influence of the leader's life which he is pouring out to them, but their effort dies before it is born, in many instances. It is a case of everlasting prodding, as some might call it (but it is not prodding), if service is obtained, and then this service is not voluntary since it is forced.

This is the thing I have experienced in my pastoral life, and I am wondering if there is no end to it, no solution of the problem. I am willing to use the key if you have it.

Then I look about. I see our men moving picture fiends; non-tithe payers; careless in their home lives; without working idealism; not active in prayer service, and forever seeking excuses for their idleness. What is to be done? I have decided.

I shall preach and try to live by a perfect standard. I

Movies in the Church

BY J. W. WIGHT

An argument that, properly directed it is a good thing to have a picture machine in the church.

In consideration of any question one should not allow prejudice to interfere for one's previous conclusions may be wrong. Our early training might have been wrong hence we should ever hold ourselves open to conviction and thus be able to eradicate the "wrong" that had been imbibed.

The whole question hinges upon whether it will do more harm than good, or vice versa, shall the movie be permitted in the church building. For fear that the argument may fail to make clear my belief it may be well to say that I am fully convinced that properly directed it will be a good thing to install a machine in the church, believing it to be an opportunity for increased good both spiritually, morally, mentally, and physically.

As an instance in promoting the most effective kind of preaching that which will produce such a lasting impression as to carry the deepest conviction, the film may be prepared by actual demonstration so as to portray the act of John going into the water and immersing Jesus, Philip and the eunuch both going into the water, the latter being immersed, with shall call for consecration of the life; I shall entreat, exhort, rebuke; I shall warn of hell and hold open the door to heaven, etc. This means misunderstanding; it means that persons looking for excuses to drop off the tree will find them and let go. It means that when the test is given that some will "turn away sorrowing" (a few will make good). It means that men will begin to find fault with my method; they will accuse me of "nagging," "fault-finding," opposing the young, insulting the old. It means that members of the priesthood will refuse to follow the call to consecration and will become active enemies in order to carry out the purposes of the Devil they list to serve. It means all this, and more. Am I prepared for it? I am. In fact, I am already facing it. I have cast the die.

Years ago, Charles Lake went to Boston from Lamoni. He had worked in the Herald Office. His eyes could see nothing but human imperfections, he went away disgusted, and his voice was never heard in the church services. Then he turned, and died in the harness in the islands of the sea. But several years of his life were wasted. To-day men come from Independence and manifest the symptoms of spiritual disease with which they have been infected.

I do not know whether I am the man for this place or not. I certainly am not if you have not confidence in my ability to reconstruct it. I realize that I have been insulted, abused, misunderstood and misrepresented. I endure this as my present heritage; I find fault. Anything for the sake of the people's salvation. But, as I have said, though I may be a fool, yet may it be said of me, "He is an honest fool." Perhaps I am a cynic—but a sincere one.

A missionary that has beat it through this church in the ministry for eighteen years, has seen enough to make him cry out in his soul that if the day ever comes he will lift a voice that will ring from the housetops—a voice calling, "Repent!"

This is my blue Monday, and I am beginning to realize that such occasions are about the only time I state things as they ought to be stated.

numerous other passages of Scripture as clearly shown in this practical way, with the various Scriptural statements governing thrown onto the screen in good clear type and preceding such incident. Who but would go away with a clearer conception of Bible statement with reference to this, or for that matter to any one of the fundamental principles of the gospel. And in fact if felt to be necessary a man could stand beside the screen and clearly enunciate the facts appearing by "preaching" while the "show" was in progress.

And then there comes the question of the right kind of entertainment. Of course as the years are multiplied upon us we are apt to forget the "gladsomness of youth" or that we ever had other desire than to be so upstanding that we exercised naught but sober second thought when young, hence every young person to-day should follow our goodly example and have never a thought of anything but attending church, listening to the preacher, forget all about the hard seat and the tired feeling—in fact just be so goody, goody that inclination to have other kind of recreation than that found within the compass of our own narrow conclusion would immediately land one on the toboggan slide of eternal condemnation! Long years ago James hurled forth the eternal fiat: "There is one Lawgiver, who is able to serve and destroy: who art thou that judgeth another?"

Then again the question of preaching. Is it to be solely confined to the thought of verbal pronouncement from the sacred desk? And are we to accept all that we thus listen to as the very acme of divine thought and wish? There have been times when listening to the thought from the stand that all one had to do was to open his mouth and the Lord would fill it that I have permitted the avenues of intake to gather the material that formulated itself into this thought, that if God was actually filling that mouth with that which was being hurled forth, the very best that could be said in his favor for so filling was that he was in the exercise of scooping in a lot of "stuff!" Is such "preaching" as that to be taken in preference to the film portrayal of the gospel truths, or even to that which becomes educational, such as depiction of various countries and their beautiful sceneries?

The fact is, the movie is here to stay and is a means of profit in a commercial sense. And people both old and young as well as middle-aged will attend. Were it not better to dispense with the commercial fact and put the demonstration where it will both draw and yet be freed from the contamination of the immoral exhibition now so rampant? To me such a course would be both the means of weaning the appetite from its present pandering and turning it into avenues of moral uplift that would make for good. To sit and howl against the movie rather than make an effort to remit its present sins and thus divert it into channels of righteousness is a much greater show of weakness on our part than to become an advocate of putting it into the church with a desire that in its regenerated operation it may make for human uplift. It is not so much the use of a thing that results in harm as it is the abuse of it. And it is because this innocent machine has been so much abused it is thus in disrepute. But after all it is having no harder struggle, if so hard, to gain church admittance than had the reed and stringed instruments in times gone by, and yet to-day with their sweet and dulcet tones they are honored members of all churches, nearly. Even the loud and tooted horn is now clothed in sacerdotal garb and finds honored place in the church house. In this matter, however, we should go to neither the extreme of complete prohibition nor yet to the other extreme of admitting the promiscuous exhibition of present commercial usage, but the rather seek to find and safely occupy upon the foundation of the golden mean by permitting the entrance only of that which shall make for the betterment of all. Used in such a way it is believed that it will prove a means of helping to convert the world to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

What Shall We Eat?

BY W. H. DEAM

We should not strain at a gnat and swallow a camel in keeping the Word of Wisdom.

The above is a very potent question at the present time, for two reasons at least. One reason, and a very important one just now, is that the high cost of living makes eating with every other necessity for the comfort of our physical natures, a serious problem, especially with those with little income. What can we eat that will nourish the body with the least amount of outlay, is a question to-day hard to solve, because there is nothing that will sustain life in man or beast that has not gone skyward in price.

There is one way that will help those living in towns some, those who live where they can make use of ground for garden. Every foot of ground available should be planted with wholesome vegetables—not novelties, but staples, necessities such as potatoes, cabbage, beans, onions, etc. This was advocated for the "winning of the war," and at that time many plowed up their lawns to raise vegetables for the war. It was necessary then and it is necessary now to make war on the high cost of living.

Those who do not understand how to garden successfully should get Government bulletins. These bulletins treat on everything connected with agriculture, horticulture, floriculture, home gardening, poultry raising and many other subjects. They are free—no "high cost" attached to them. Simply write to the Agricultural Department, Washington, District of Columbia. Each bulletin is numbered. Not having the list, simply request that bulletins be sent on potatoe raising, or cabbage culture, as many kinds as desired, and they will be forthcoming.

"What Shall I Eat?"

Now for the second reason, or part of the question, "What shall I eat?" In the preliminary part of the Word of Wisdom there is a reason given why we should be careful as regards what we eat and drink. The reason is as follows: "In consequence of the evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you and forewarn you."

Evils and Designs of Conspiring Men

What could possibly be the "evils and designs in the hearts of conspiring men"? It is in relation to what we eat and drink. The general Government and some of the States found out what the evils and designs were, but not until they had developed to alarming proportions, and there were passed what is known as pure food laws. These laws have been effectual in checking to an appreciable extent adulterations in food, but have not eliminated the "evils and designs in the hearts of conspiring men." It may be that He who gave the warning to the Saints knows the extent the adulterations would have reached if a check had not been put on them, but I venture to say that there would not have been an article of food compounded and put up in package, carton or can free from dangerous adulterations. Fortunes were made by the "evils and designs . . . in the hearts of conspiring men," in selling people not only worthless but injurious stuff to eat and drink.

There are people who "live out of tin cans" and never make any effort to put up fruits and vegetables, and others who live on ready-prepared food. We have a Word of Wisdom from the Lord, not a command, nevertheless given for our benefit because of the "evils and designs which do and will exist," etc. Do and will exist.

Keeping the Word of Wisdom

Some of our people conscientiously keep the Word of Wisdom, but it is hard for others to keep it; those living away from home, where they may have to eat what is set before them or get nothing. Then again some "strain at a gnat" as regards one part of the Word of Wisdom, and "swallow a camel" as regards other parts. I remember an incident told me by the late Elder E. C. Briggs. He was on a mission with another brother, and one afternoon this brother was taken with a very severe headache and said if he had a cup of tea it would relieve him. Brother Briggs said he told him to leave it with him, and he went and asked the sister of the house where they were staying if she had any tea in the house, and after being informed in the affirmative he requested her to make a cup of tea at supper time for the other brother.

When the tea was brought to the brother the host of the house began to chide him for not keeping the Word of Wisdom. It was a hot day in midsummer and he himself had a piece of fat pork on his plate as big as his hand. Brother Briggs told him that he was the one who was breaking the Word of Wisdom, for says he, tea is not mentioned in the Word of Wisdom, while it says it is pleasing to the Lord that meats should be eaten only in winter, or cold, or famine. He was "swallowing" the proverbial camel and at the same time straining at the gnat in the perhaps justifiable presumption that "hot drinks" meant tea and coffee.

Thus we find Saints who seem to think they would be considered as denying the faith should they drink tea and coffee and yet will eat meat the year round—in the summer the same as in winter, and in face of the fact that the Word of Wisdom says "they should not be used only in times of winter, or cold, or famine." If that language does not speak against using meats in summer I confess I do not understand plain English language. They should be used sparingly and only in winter, or cold, or famine. No doubt there are many ideas as to what would constitute sparingly, but there can be no doubt as to the time of year or condition in which they may be used.

Sparingly means not lavishly, not abundantly; temperately. Some people use meats three times a day; they seem to think they can't eat a meal without them. Others use meats once a day. Others once or twice a week. Suppose we strike a medium, and say once a day, and then temperately and not gluttonously, would not that be sparingly?

Tea and Coffee as "Hot Drinks"

Now, let us go back to tea and coffee. To my mind there are good reasons for believing that the "hot drinks" mentioned refer to tea and coffee (and it may be that it includes all hot drinks). But it is not my purpose to argue that part of the question. My purpose is to show the warning from the Lord and the inconsistencies of some of our people. The reason for the warning is because of "the evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men," and these conspiring men make substitutes for gullible Latter Day Saints. I am not ready to believe that the consciences of men making substitutes is any better than manufacturers of other foodstuff, and I would class them among the "conspiring men."

If Latter Day Saints must drink "hot drinks" they had better get the green coffee bean and roast it and know what they are drinking than to gulp down substitutes that they know nothing about, which are put up by conspiring men to get gain. I would rather drink pure coffee than Postum, Jaffee or any other substitute for coffee. Thousands can testify to the benefits derived from a cup of tea or coffee taken as medicine, as in the case Elder Brother Briggs told of. Who can testify of benefits derived from drinking substitutes?

Evidently the Lord intended coffee and tea for some purpose, as much so as he did tobacco, which he says is "for bruises and all sick cattle," but he has had nothing to do with mixing up substitutes. They are compounded by "conspiring men" to make money. It is not the good of the people they are concerned in. The stores of the Independence Storehouse keep a nicely browned barley. This is in harmony with the third paragraph of the Word of Wisdom, which says that one use of barley should be for "mild drinks." I have not bought any of it because I have not felt the need of "hot drinks." If I feel the need of it I will get some. I am sure it would be far better than any coffee substitutes.

Meat to Be Used Temperately

We should be consistent. It is not in the line of consistency to denounce the sale and use of tea and coffee from the Word of Wisdom basis and at the same time both sell and eat meats by the wholesale throughout the hot months in spite of the fact that the Lord said we should use them sparingly and that it is pleasing that they be used only in times of winter, or cold, or famine. I take this to mean if a famine should cut short the grain one would be justified in eating whatever he could get to sustain life, otherwise one would not be justified in eating meats in summer, because they are limited to winter and cold and famine. Be consistent.

The warning as regards eating meats is not because of the evils and designs of conspiring men, but the prohibition remains the same however the meats may be obtained. Then it may be asked, Why such prohibition? Long before medical science found it out the Lord knew that eating much meat was not good for the human system, that it caused rheumatism, neuralgia, neuritis, kidney troubles including Bright's and kindred diseases. A friend of mine who was a great meat eater, would get finely chopped beef and eat great quantities of it raw. His little boy craved raw meat and was allowed to satisfy his craving. He never had any use of his lower limbs and his father died of Bright's disease when quite a young man. Had he known of and observed the Word of Wisdom he might have been living to-day.

Are We Afraid, or Do We Lack Faith?

BY EDWARD RANNIE

The time for soothing words and vain resolutions is passed, and we must give a practical demonstration of our theory.

It is needless to write of the turmoil, discontent, strife and suffering in the world at the present time. All who read the daily papers and current magazines have a surfeit of what is going on, and in the midst of these conditions the words of Jesus Christ are significant and valuable: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation. (John 16: 33) and that Zion would be a place of "refuge" and a place of "safety." (Doctrine and Covenants, 45: 12, 13.)

It is of what God has told us to do that I wish to write. Do we show by our works that we are afraid to do what he has told us to do that we might escape the things that are in the world at present and those that are yet to come?

We Have the Solution of the Problem

The following incidents were told to me at different times as having happened with two of our brethren while in their travels as representatives of the church. One of the brothers became acquainted with one of the faculty of one of the educational institutions of our country and at different times in their social intercourse had the opportunity to present the views of the church on the great social and industrial problems of the day as they are revealed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the learned professor replied, "Elder, you people have the solution of the problem and I would like to go to — and see how it works out in practice."

The other became acquainted with another American educator and a great writer on social problems, and had the opportunity to present our views of the great problems before us for solution and he said: "I will watch you Latter Day Saints and see what success you have." Those men are still watching and waiting for our people to demonstrate that the teachings of Jesus will bring peace when put into practice. The church was not a year old when our Lord gave us the first important instructions about the relief of the poor which was to be brought about through the law of stewardships. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9.)

In 1832 (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4) the law of equality was given, and stewardships was the way marked out to bring about that happy condition, for which the poor and humble have hoped and prayed for in all ages and only twice been realized: by Enoch and his people and among the Nephites on this continent after Jesus Christ had given them the gospel plan.

About 1834 (Doctrine and Covenants 101) instructions were given about the organization of the Order of Enoch, and the plan given how to carry the work on.

In 1831 the Lord gave command to purchase land (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2; 58: 11) that the Saints might be helped to get homes, and have farms, the basis of all wealth, and a sure way to eliminate poverty. In 1894 (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6) the Lord informs the church that he had not changed his plans concerning Zion and the gathering of his people. In 1873 (Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11) the command was given for the Saints to "gather into the region round about." Then many of the ministry began to tell the Saints to scatter out to give a place for the missionary to stay, while he was preaching the gospel. To-day in many of the communities, "in the regions round about" there are not as many Saints as there were forty-six years ago, but the Saints are scattered, and out in the world away from branches and spiritually starving for the bread of life.

In 1909 (Doctrine and Covenants 128) the Lord spoke again to the church and told us to purchase land, form colonies, establish industrial institutions and form organizations. An order of Enoch was organized in Independence and one in Lamoni. That command was given to us ten years ago and can we as a people look an honest man in the face and truly say that we have made a commendable effort to do what we could to carry out that command?

The faithful, patient poor cry for work, for bread, and relief in sickness and what has been our answer, "wait, wait, be patient," until the hearts of the poor become sick and weary.

The homes for the aged, the home for the children, the Sanitarium, and Graceland College get most of their food products on the markets where the prices are fixed by extortioners, profiteers, and gamblers on the various boards of trades, and there is abundance of rich land on which most of the products needed could be produced, and we still pursue the policy of "watchful waiting" while the price of land continues to go up.

Graceland College ought to have a dairy farm of five hundred acres. It would be a great help to the students, and all the institutions of the church could be supplied with butter, and some of them with milk; instead of having to ask the church to make up deficits it could be helping it. A good farmer of average intelligence given $5,000 when Graceland College was started would have earned five hundred acres by this time.

At various times the Lord has spoken to the church about storehouses. (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4; 82: 2; 58: 7; 77: 1; 122: 6) and also the General Conference spoke in regard to their establishment in 1881. (See General Conference Resolutions 238, under subheading "Principles and rules of action, paragraph 6.) The Lord intended those places for the storing of the products of the land so that we would not have to be entirely dependent on the outside world for the necessities of our physical life.

The Lord in the interest of the physical well-being of his children and to give relief in times of sickness, commanded that a sanitarium should be built at Independence, and surely the wisdom and love of God had consideration for more people than just those living in Independence, and he had also other things under consideration, the need of a spiritual environment (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 2) and the extortionate prices, that are sometimes charged for medical and surgical work.

Professor Elwood in his work on the social problems of our time says that about forty per cent of the poverty in our country is caused from sickness, and that condition makes the care of our sick one of the great problems of the church. The Sanitarium must become the center from which light will radiate to the entire church telling how our people should live to prevent a great deal of the sickness that comes into their homes, and providing a place to go when medical and surgical service is desired.

The rich can pay any price; the poor, if so desired, can get help from the church or state, but the middle class, the one with a fair income, is like the wheat between the two millstones ground to powder, and kept in a state of anxiety and sacrifice to meet the expense. This condition is not the result of unfair prices at the Sanitarium, but because we have not devised a method that will lift or equalize the burden. It is a conservative estimate to say that the average daily cost to care for a patient is $2.50, and that does not take into consideration the expense for the service of a physician or surgeon. All the men and women who are in the service of the Sanitarium are receiving a compensation much less than what they could get for a like service in other institutions.

Several of the physicians and surgeons of Independence are our brethren. They seek to be fair and just to their patients. Should any believe that they have been treated otherwise, it could only be looked on in the light of being the exception and not the rule. Because it is only simple justice to say that the people of the Sanitarium, and some others, are consecrating their lives to the service of the sick, believing that under the Lord's rule that they are among those who are called into his service (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

What is the matter with us as a people? We speak of our work as a "marvelous work" and we sing "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and we talk about "Present-day revelation" and "Beautiful Zion" and in song and testimony tell of our love for the work. Sometimes we go so far as to say that we are willing to die for it. Is my conclusion wrong when I say that collectively and individually we are afraid to try to put into practice what we talk, preach, and write about? Are we not in the same condition that Israel was when Moses urged them to "go forward" and they were scared at the "giants" in the land of Canaan? Are we not afraid that there are giants in our way? Are we afraid to put God's promise to a test, for he said his presence would go before us and in time we would possess the land, that he promised to his people on condition of obedience? Are we afraid?

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Being a Good Mother

The education of young girls should prepare them for the greatest work in the world—wifehood and motherhood, and I wish they could all have courses in home nursing, domestic science, and kindergarten training.

My training as a kindergartner taught me many things among them keeping strictly to a schedule; so my baby was fed, bathed, and put to bed regularly. Habit is formed early in life, and can help to make or mar character depending on whether habits are good or bad. This carrying out of a regular schedule was not always easy, for it meant sacrifice of many pleasures. But I wanted to be a good mother first of all, and I was rewarded by having a happy, good baby. Even now at six years old there is no fuss at nap-time or bedtime. One of the things taught unconsciously in the kindergarten is regularity and promptness, and these can be taught in the home just as well.

Long before baby could talk she knew the little play for the fingers, "Here's a ball for baby."

"Here's a ball for baby,
Big and soft and round.
Here's the baby's hammer;
See how he can pound,
Here are baby's soldiers,
Standing in a row.
Here is baby's music—
Clapping, clapping so.
Here is baby's trumpet:
Toot! toot! toot! toot! toot!
Here's the way that Baby plays at peekaboo.
Here's the big umbrella
To keep the baby dry.
Here's the baby's cradle:
Rock-a-baby-by."
—Emilie Poulsson.

The ball is made with the two hands rounded together the hammer by doubling up the hands and pounding, one on top of the other. Baby's soldiers are made by holding all the fingers up straight. The hands are clapped together for the music, and doubled up, one in front of the other, for a trumpet. For peekaboo the fingers are spread in front of the eyes so that baby can see between them. The umbrella is made by placing the palm of one hand on the index finger of the other, and the cradle by putting the two hands together; inner sides of the palm touching and outer sides open.

As I said the words of this little play and made the motions, baby would try to make the motions too. She also knew, "Five Little Squirrels", "Good Mother Hen", and "Little Squirrel Living Here." Of course, she could not play them perfectly, but she loved them and wanted me to play them for her over and over.

Baby also loved music, and even when very tiny would stop crying to listen to soft music. She has always loved stories also. First we took up "Mother Goose Rhymes." I would repeat them over and over to baby as I set sewing and she played on the floor, and before she was two years old she knew a great many of them. She also knew the words of several little songs, such as "Rock-a-by Baby." It was enchanting to hear her say them in her sweet baby way. I never actually taught her the songs, however, simply singing them over and over again.

Baby played with two other little girls from the age of three until over four. One was younger and the other older than she. The little girls did not have much home training, as their mother was a society woman and left the children to the care of a maid. They almost lived at our house. When the children grew quarrelsome, I usually suggested a party. The little table and chairs were gayly set on the piazza, weather permitting, and milk, graham biscuits, and dates were served or grape juice and arrowroot biscuit. Sometimes an apple or an orange was carefully prepared for the occasion. Such a party always stopped the quarreling. Sitting down rested them and eating quieted them. Then after they had finished I left my work and told them a story. Oh, how eager their little faces were!

One day, the younger visitor, who was very spoiled and selfish and consequently quarrelsome, was making things very unpleasant for the other two. I entered the room and quietly took her on my lap. She knew she had been naughty and was a little afraid of me and also curious as to what was going to happen. The other two children watched with awe and wonder on their little faces. Very quietly I told a story my grandmother used to tell me about "Naughty Spotty." It made a great impression on them all, and, as I had foreseen, it was not necessary to say one word of direct censure to the naughty child.

Both of our little visitors were story hungry. Their mother said she could not tell stories. By reading a story over several times and getting its meaning and spirit, anyone can tell a story. Don't be afraid to put expression into your voice and face. No stories should be told which may frighten a child. The children may dream about them or lie awake in fear; such stories also make them afraid in the dark.

Then there are pictures. Good pictures and picture-books are very necessary for children. One or two pictures that are worth while are better than many poor ones. Since babyhood my little girl has known and loved pictures. She learned nearly all of the animals in that way. She has also learned how to handle a valuable book and now she can be trusted to go to the bookcase and take out and replace a book after looking at the pictures, and asking about them. Good pictures are an education to all children and they love them.

In kindergarten children play with blocks, among other things, at first with the simplest kind, then with more complicated and larger sets. They are directed and taught how and what to build, and it trains the eyes and hands, teaching accuracy and construction. At home most children have blocks and can build on the floor and love to build for hours. My husband builds castles and all kinds of wonderful houses with our little girl, and in this way the building becomes more and more instructive and worth while.

Crayons have played a large part in our daughter's life. She loves to draw and can really draw well. I have drawn simple things for her and she tries to copy them. She also tries to draw what she sees and thus in these two ways she is acquiring another medium of self-expression.—Mrs. Isabell S. Wallace, in Government Bulletin.

Auxiliary Officers

When you wish to communicate with the head of our Woman's Auxiliary, having some message of encouragement, suggestion, constructive criticism or the like, address, Mrs. David J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri.

If you wish pamphlets, lesson leaflets, reunion material, etc., etc., write Mrs. John A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Reports of your activities, and your yearly dues should be sent to Mrs. A. Morgan, 1221 South Noland Street, Independence, Missouri.

When your historian gets her records in shape, she should communicate with Mrs. Mark H. Siegfried, 1417 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri.

Mrs. William Madison, one of the vice presidents, is still in charge of reunion work, and should you desire help in planning for your reunions, conventions, or conferences, you will do well to consult her. Address her at 306 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

LETTERS

The Economic Program

BY THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOP RIC

One of a series of letters being sent to the membership of the Lamoni Stake.

If there ever was a necessity for an excuse for presenting Jehovah's plan for "The divine sonship of man," that necessity surely does not now exist.

From every progressive pulpit the message of eternal life is enriched as never before with the dynamic proposition of the "Brotherhood of man."

The "Fatherhood of God" must still retain its exalted position in the telling of "the old, old story," but added thereto the divine relationship of the great human family must take its God-given position and prominence.

The current press is finding space to devote to this all absorbing topic. The editorial columns of all our great dailies are pulsating with problems—the solution of which makes mankind "touch elbow to elbow."

The, if possible, more mature and academic discussions found in all our magazines, devoted to the review of the onward march of the twentieth century civilization, are laden with discussions, suggestions, and recommendations that bespeak for a careful consideration of this interesting theme.

The staid and conservative courts of all civilized nations are straining the bonds of their conservation with the best of prospects of removing the same. In their judicial findings the golden thread of "equality" is found to predominate more and more, giving assurance that in the near future "equity" will regenerate the cold "letter of the law."

And last but not least, the mighty political upheaval among the peoples on every part of the surface of our old Mother Earth emphasizes, in a manner not to be misunderstood, the sublime fact that the day of the real emancipation of the race of mankind has been ushered in.

In the exalted language of the prophet Habakkuk: "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

Anticipating all this, the Lord over eighty years ago succinctly gave to the world, in renewal of what he had already given centuries before, the only true economic program which would fully bring to pass the long hoped-for "Golden Age," the "Federation of the world."

The Plan

The plan in brief as outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 101:2 of the law of temporalities, as God intends it to be performed with the penalty attached for disobedience thereto.

1. God's supremacy. "I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; . . . yea, I prepare all things . . . for my creatures."
2. What God purposes to do: "It is my purpose to provide for my Saints."

dressed to Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight, Lamoni, Iowa, will receive kindly attention.

Mrs. Henry C. Smith, 701 South Fuller Avenue, is the supervisor of the relief and service bureau, and will be glad to give helpful counsel along these lines.

For Oriole and Temple Builders work, address the supervisor of the Young Woman's Division, Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa.

And if, by any accident you have some inspiring message which you wish to "pass on," send out into the world of thought to influence for good, to cheer, or comfort, or counsel the women of this church, young or old, kindly send in to the editor, Audentia Anderson, 5020 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

3. How God purposed to provide for his Saints:

- (a) "This is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints.
- (b) "It is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, . . . therefore, . . . ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account with me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him."
- (c) "That the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low."

4. The guarantee of the means with which to do this. "For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare."

5. Our right to except or reject this program: "I . . . have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves."

6. The penalty for disobedience: "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made; and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

The plan, then—God's plan—is briefly included in the word "stewardship." We are to be active stewards for God.

In our next letter we shall show why we are "stewards" and not "owners."

Too Much Encouragement to "Lovers of Pleasure"

I have been absorbing the many good things contained in the HERALD and feel like apologizing for not writing oftener. To give evidence that the work of God is advancing and that my faith is unshaken in the church of the living God and the revelations accepted as law to that church.

I am persuaded that some of the methods proposed to represent the principles of "onward and upward," are very questionable, and some of them have already retarded the development of a Godlikeness that is so necessary.

A man or woman who enters into this work of God must repent of all his sins and be humble and full of love, but it appears that we are too anxious to compromise with the institutions of the world without repentance. I recognize it is a hard matter to keep unspotted from the world in this evil day. I fear we are giving encouragement, at least to a degree, to pleasures, and encouraging those who are "lovers of pleasures" without considering whether the love of God and his will being done is first considered. It seems to me that it is not so much whether we are advancing towards God, or to gratify the lusts and affections of the flesh, which we, being Christ's, should have crucified.

My desire is to see the will of God more fully represented on earth, and in this day of Satan's despairing teach our people the greater value of and pleasure in the spirit of prayer and of righteous doing.

In Book of Mormon times they were strict to purge out iniquity, and in latter-day revelations we learn that to perfect the Saints through the gift of Christ by which some are made teachers they are to see that there "is no iniquity in the church," and since "the elders are to see that the law is kept," they are compelled to see that the teacher does his duty. What a change this would bring about in the church, if every member would give information when they knew of iniquity, backbiting, or hardness existing in the ones who are to "perfect the Saints," and that these officers would in meekness and love of God execute their duty.

I have hopes that in some way Zion will be redeemed, and am trying to recommend to the Saints to purify themselves, "even as He is pure," since we have faith in his soon coming. We are clearly taught that there is only one way to build up Zion, and that is by the laws of the celestial kingdom. May we become better informed as to what these laws are and take greater pleasure in their application.

A Testimony on Tithing

In looking over the HERALD for November 12, I saw so many testimonies about tithing, I thought I would like to tell you of a little experience I had when I first began to pay my tithing. The narrative dates back twenty-three years ago. I was just a young married man, starting in life as a farmer.

Up to this time I had never paid any tithing, though I always thought it was right to do so; but on account of certain contentions then going on in the church about how the money was used, some contending the money was misused, others that it was not right to pay in under these conditions, I had not done so.

To make a long story short I moved from Lamoni to Canada, on father's farm, near the city of Chatham, Ontario. The first crop I raised I told my wife I was going to give the Lord his portion. The first load of wheat I marketed, I paid the tenth to the Lord. Brother James H. Tyrrell of Chatham, Ontario, was the Bishop's agent. I stepped in his office and said, "Brother Tyrrell, I want to pay a little tithing." He said, "Good," and wrote me out a receipt for the amount paid.

I was not expecting anything special to happen, but as I stepped out on King Street, the Lord spoke just as plainly as one person talking with another, and said these words: "You are now helping to roll this work along." I want to tell you that I had to cry "Hosanna in the highest." I could not help myself. Everything I turned my hand to do would cry aloud, "You are now helping to roll this work along." As I would plow my ground, it, too, would cry aloud. I want to say here, that as long as I was paying tithing I was prospered. And when I was not, I was going behind, and continued to go behind until I lost all I had. I am now paying my tithing again, and the Lord is blessing me again as he did in times past.

The things that I have been able to accomplish this year are really miraculous, for which I give God all the glory, for it is only in and through his good will that I have been able to succeed. Your brother,

MORONI TRAXLER.

Urging an Expression of Views

A patriarch writes to President Smith:

"Brother Smith, I do hope you will urge the Bishopric to move out and occupy and also that you will no longer withhold your views upon the practical application of the law. I perhaps only look to the accomplished work and not enough to that which is to go between now and then, or the leading up work.

"Here and there I pick up humors of what your critics are doing and some of it I feel is not made to bring more light, but to show resentment or to boost the critic to the front into the eyes of the people. You are certainly in the limelight and the bean shooters, as well as the sharpshooters, pepper away at you when they cannot see anything else to do, but I am glad you are headed in the right direction, so be courageous, for I feel that you are gaining rapidly the confidence of the Saints."

Would Like to See Zion First in the Field

I feel that I am almost a stranger to your pages, where once in the years past Sister "Eleanor" was so well known. I can assure you that it is not from failure of interest in all that concerns the progress of the church, but circumstances, with advancing years make it difficult to use the pen as much as formerly. I am a close observer, however, and watch and pray constantly for success. Looking back over the thirty-nine years of membership, and noting the advance made in that time, it seems wonderful, and I am filled with gladness because of the growth that I can see, not alone in numbers, though that has trebled, but the great advance in spirituality and church activities. It has not made any spectacular showing to challenge the attention of the world, but so quietly that at times it has not seemed to move at all. But its work has been as the leaven hid in three measures of meal, though unseen, it has been slowly permeating Christian thought in the world until we have seen many of the New Testament doctrines advocated by us, and for which we were formerly persecuted, now adopted by other churches, such as the healing of sick by anointing with oil, with laying on of hands and prayer by elders of the church, as part of the gospel of Christ, spiritual gifts, and tithing. I hope it will go on until we have leavened the whole lump.

Looking forward, there comes to my vision the glorious triumph of the fullness of the gospel of Christ, though the progress made does not always appear to keep pace with the way opening up before it. For instance, the missionary class at Graceland should have been in training years ago, and be ready now to go on duty.

It may be that my vision is limited, and that they will be ready as soon as the nations are ready to receive them, but I grow jealous for Zion when I see the preparations being made by the religionists around us to do the work that Zion should be doing. I should like to see her first in the field, and not following after those who go out to spread their man-made plans of salvation.

In sight of my home the Seventh-day Adventists have a large theological seminary to which they have lately added a costly addition for normal training of young men and women for foreign missionary work. A number of other churches have started a cooperative movement for a like purpose. It is a consolation, however, to know that their work will accomplish little if God is not in it.

With prayer and heartfelt wishes for success in endeavors for good.

We have entered into the new year of 1920, and just what will be realized during the year for us as a church or as individuals is hard to contemplate. The Nation seemingly is looking for a change of some kind, but who knows just what? Shall it be peace or war; shall it be a compromise between capital and labor, or shall it be a struggle for supremacy to be continued until the life of the nation shall be taxed to its utmost, and we as a people are made to see as never before that the words of the prophets, ancient and modern, are about to have utter fulfillment?

Surely the church is in need of an endowment that will enable her to take her place in the world as a benefactor, a harbinger of peace and of good will. God knows there is but little of it in the world to-day. May he hasten the time when every ordained man will recognize that the responsibility resting upon them is of such magnitude that God will require we answer to him for the manner in which we have conducted ourselves and just how we have influenced those with whom we have been permitted to labor.

Brethren, you have my prayers, and also those who stand next to you in authority, that God's wisdom may be yours, and his purposes be the purposes of the officers of his kingdom, that she may rise and shine, and the glory of God be manifest to all the world.

I think I sense your positions, both of you, standing at the head of a nation so to speak, Israel, the church that Jesus Christ died for, the institution that your father and your uncle gave their blood to establish in this age of the world; and now you are to maintain its integrity, you are to direct its destiny, as men of God. How great is your responsibility! The eyes of the church are upon you, and your name has become a household name.

May God in his infinite mercy grant you a dispensation of power, such as was the privilege of the prophets of yore to enjoy, that God may be manifest unto his church as he was in the beginning of this dispensation.

(Part of a letter to Presidency by A. E. Stone, Willoughby, Ohio, January 2, 1920.)

What About the Winter Institutes?

Has your school sent requests to your district officers for institute sessions in your school? If not, will you not do so immediately?

If you are an officer in any department it is your duty to urge this work be given attention. If not an officer, it is your privilege to call attention of officers and school or society to the matter.

Be a live officer—a live member. Get behind these educational efforts and support them. Let us advance to a higher standard in our work. The institutes are for our betterment, to educate us in the church and auxiliary work.

We have asked the following district officers to meet and agree on a team of at least three members to handle the institute in their respective districts: President of the church district, of the Religio, superintendent of the Sunday school and organizer of the Woman's Auxiliary. When the team is appointed, it will meet and select its manager, who will notify A. W. Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, of appointment, also name and address of each member of the team. Outlines for the institute will be forwarded to the team. These have been carefully prepared and will give a comprehensive understanding of each subject.

If your local is small, get some of the other locals to combine with you in a joint session. Ask your district officers to help. If you do not get response, write us, and possibly we can help you.

A portion of the responsibility of this work rests upon your shoulders, whether you are an officer in local or district, or a member. Much depends on you. Are you alive to your opportunity? Ask yourself this question—not only once, but a hundred times in a day—keep asking until you have roused yourself to real action.

Put this slogan some place in your meeting room:

An Institute Session in Every Branch of the Church

Then start right at home for a good example. Another good slogan: "A district institute session in every district."

Remember this: the live schools are going to advance, and if you are not watching for and taking advantage of your school's opportunities you will soon find the other schools have left you far behind. Now, come on, everybody, boost for the institutes, and keep on boosting.

Yours for a successful institute in every district and branch.

Wanted, Orchestral Players for General Conference

The Liberty Orchestra, thirty-five pieces, of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, with the approval of the proper stake officers, have petitioned the First Presidency for one evening at next General Conference for a program of orchestral music and received favorable reply.

This organization has already done very creditable work throughout the stake and at various public institutions of the county with favorable results toward church influence.

With the associate musicians attending General Conference this body of players should be at least doubled or even raised to the proportions of a symphony orchestra at General Conference time, and in connection with the contest now being conducted by the Religio for the encouragement of musical compositions among the church membership such an evening of music with the attendant associations and practice should exert a distinct incentive to the orchestral interest throughout the church.

To successfully carry out such an effort it would be necessary that all players taking part should thoroughly familiarize themselves with the music beforehand so that after arriving at the General Conference a couple of rehearsals would integrate and blend the whole body of players and for this purpose a set of parts for all the numbers on the program will be furnished each player immediately, at cost.

There already exists a need for reed instruments, flutes, clarinets, oboes, and bassoons, and any member performing one of these instruments is specially requested to respond. The string section, violins, violas, cellos, and bass welcomes indefinite expansion while the brass section would need a proportionate development.

In order to enable us to properly arrange and provide for the event all players expecting to attend General Conference and desiring to participate are requested to furnish the information requested below and mail at once to R. T. Cooper, care Box 256, Independence, with check for $1.50, and music will be sent and your name enrolled on the section of the orchestra to which you may be assigned. Music so purchased to belong to the individual.

Necessarily, the right is reserved to the director to maintain as near a proper balance in the orchestra as possible, and if there should be a surplus of any one class of instruments only the requisite number to fill out that section could be accepted and selected, such overabundance is most likely to occur in the brass section.

Advance Notice of "Journal of History."

The Journal of History for January contains three articles of such special interest that we believe every representative of the church will want a copy. The opening article contains a reproduction of the map of Nauvoo to which is added a description of the places of interest by Brother Mark H. Siegfried in such a way that any visitor to Nauvoo with this map and description in hand may readily find every historic place.

Another article from the pen of the late Heman C. Smith deals with the legal points involved in church succession, and is the right answer to thousands of questions upon this point which constantly pour in upon us.

The third article is a directory of the principal quorums of the church since their first organization. With this in hand the exact time when any man occupied the office of president of seventy, apostle, or bishop's counselor, can be readily found, as well as the exact way in which each of these offices were vacated. We believe these three articles to be invaluable at the present time.

In addition to them is an article on the Cowdery genealogy, showing the relationship of the different members of that family who had appeared in our church history.

There is also a continuation of the "Memoirs of John Shields" which ought to be of especial interest to Canadian Saints.

"The official statements of Joseph Smith are continued. The ones in this issue are dealing particularly with his policies on duties of Presidency and the Bishopric.

The reprint of the article in the Missouri State Historical Journal of the "Troubles on Grand River" is continued. This is as fair a treatment of our history in Missouri as has ever appeared from an outside source and may be quoted freely as the Missouri State Historical Society is back of it.

There are also the usual departments of Local history, current events, and With the Exchanges.

This January Journal of History is a special edition in so far as it is twenty-five per cent larger than any Journal heretofore published and is liable to be sold out very shortly after its appearance from the press. The October issue was sold out and several Saints who wished to buy copies were disappointed. A year's subscription would bring no disappointment. The January issue is only the beginning of a number of special articles of present-day interest which ought to be in the hands of ten times the number of people now subscribing to the Journal. Heman Hale Smith, Assistant Editor.

Our Departed Ones

SHIMEL.—Sophia Shimel was born in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, August 16, 1839, moving to Iowa with her parents in 1865, where she resided until twelve years ago, when she moved to Holden, Missouri. Baptized in 1881. Died January 1, 1920, at residence of her brother, Alexander, north of Holden. Three brothers and 3 sisters are left to mourn. Funeral at Saints' church, in charge of D. J. Krahl, sermon by J. W. A. Bailey, of Warrensburg. Burial in Fairview Cemetery.

JOHN.—Mary A. John, widow of Thomas A. John, was born at Merthyr Tidvil, South Wales, February 18, 1841. Married in April, 1858. This union was blessed with 14 children, 6 of whom survive and were present at the funeral. Died November 18, at Lucas, Iowa, having come to that place about 40 years ago. Interment at Fry Hill Cemetery, services from Saints' church at Lucas. Sermon by E. B. Morgan, assisted by J. A. Dowker.

BADDER.—J. W. Badder was born at Wabash, Ontario, May 20, 1862 and resided there all his life. Baptized September 12, 1880. Married Margaret Kelley, October 10, 1883. Died November 12, 1919. Funeral services held at Saints' church, Wabash, sermon by A. Leverton, with J. C. Dent in charge. He was an active church member and superintendent of the Chatham District Sunday school a number of years, also president of the Wabash Branch for 17 years, as well as interested in municipal matters. Leaves to mourn, wife, 4 sons, one daughter, a brother and sister and a host of friends.

PEARSALL.—James Pearsall was born at Bradwell, Buckinghamshire, England, October 22, 1842. In 1870 married Miss Harriet Spillet. Came to America, making their home in Texas until 1880 when they moved to Gallands Grove, Iowa, residing there 33 years. He was a devoted member of the church, baptized by D. H. Baysin, Texas. Served the church in various capacities. Was the father of 12 children: Mrs. Annie E. Gunsolley, of Independence; Mrs. Nettie Smith, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Kathryn Gillum, Los Angeles, California; Joseph H., Nebraska City, Nebraska; Fred W., James E., George A., Mrs. Nellie Justice, and Mrs. Margaret Hoefler, all of Dow City. Sarah R. died at the age of 14 and Blanche died in infancy. In addition leaves 19 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren. Sister Pearsall died in 1916. He died at the home of his son Mark on December 28, 1919. Funeral from the home of Joseph Seddon, interment in Gallands Grove Cemetery.

QUINN.—William J. Quinn, born at Wilstown, Pennsylvania, August 15, 1850, died December 27, 1919. Married Susan Evert, July 4, 1893, at Defiance, Ohio. Leaves to mourn his wife, one son William L., and one daughter, Mrs. Cora Pierce, both of Marion, Indiana. A younger son James Cloe preceded him February 3, 1919. Also leaves an aged mother, Mrs. Ellen Starr. Funeral from the house with good attendance.

BARNES.—Lela Bell Barnes was born in Covington County, Alabama, July 8, 1876. Married James Barnes December 29, 1897. Leaves to mourn husband and eight children. Baptized about fifteen years ago. Died January 7, 1920. Funeral at the Cold Water church, Botts Florida, M. M. Turpen officiating.

CRUMLEY.—Sarah E. Crumley was born at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1850. Married William Crumley, May 8, 1870, at Allegheny, Pennsylvania. Came to California in 1893 and on April 18, 1896, united with the church and has since been a loyal member until her death which occurred November 12, 1919. Sermon by David Dowker.

BEAN.—Charles L. Bean, born January 20, 1888, Grundy County Missouri; died December 31, 1919, at Rupert, Idaho. Married Eula Goodman, October 2, 1910. He leaves to mourn wife, 4 children, father, 2 brothers, 4 sisters. Services at the Christian church in charge of R. C. Chambers, assisted by J. L. Benson.

LAWN.—Jasper H. Lawn was born in McDonough County, Illinois, April 9, 1839. Was baptized September 14, 1873, later ordained an elder and did missionary work in Central and Northern California, and was always a defender of the latter-day work. Died in Hollister, California, December 18, 1919, after a brief illness of pneumonia. Was the father of 11 children, all of whom were members of the church. His wife, and 2 of his children preceded him in death. Funeral from the Methodist Episcopal church, which was filled to capacity, showing with what respect he was held in the community in which he lived. He was an old pioneer, having driven an ox team across the plains in 1849, when only ten years of age, bringing his widowed mother with him. Funeral services in charge of C. W. Hawkins, assisted by Eugene Holt.

BROWN.—Emma, daughter of I. J. Moore, was born at Montrose, Iowa, February 18, 1859. Baptized September 13, 1906. Mother of one son, Charles Conn, of Moar, Iowa, and 2 daughters, Brace Rockelmaun, of Moar and Mrs. Orpha Thornton, of Keokuk. Leaves 8 grandchildren. Died of heart disease, was sick but 2 hours, passing away on January 16. Funeral by James McKiernan.

Married Miss Anna Connely, September 5, 1869; 9 children were born, 5 of whom survive, one son and 4 daughters. Also 9 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren as well as 2 brothers and 2 sisters and a host of relatives and friends. Baptized March 14, 1880. Funeral at home, F. J. D. Earle officiating, interment in the old cemetery.

BASSETT.—Emily A. Bassett, wife of Nathan Bassett, aged 68 years and 4 days. Died near Lamoni, Iowa, January 12, 1920, the cause being gall stones. Mother of 10 children, 9 of whom survive. She was baptized in Nebraska in 1902 by S. D. Payne. Funeral service at the residence by H. A. Stebbins.

ATKINSON.—Mrs. Harriet Atkinson, daughter of George and Martha Blackburn, was born in Borton, Lincolnshire County, England, September 11, 1841. Died January 11, 1920. Married David Atkinson, November 8, 1858. Seven children were born, 4 sons and 3 daughters. Her husband and 3 sons preceded her. Baptized by J. W. Peterson June 3, 1894. Surviving are 19 grandchildren, 9 great-grandchildren, a large number of nephews and nieces, 2 brothers and one sister. Funeral from Methodist church in Lancaster, Wisconsin, conducted by B. C. Flint, who preached the sermon.

LYLE.—Ethel Lyle, daughter of Robert and Addie Lyle, born April 28, 1919, near Butler Missouri, died January 1, 1920, of diphtheria. Funeral sermon at the cemetery by H. E. Moler. Two sisters with the parents are left to mourn.

BAILEY.—Frederic Preston Bailey, born February 16, 1844, at Province Hill, Quebec, Canada, died January 7, 1920, near Delta, Colorado. Was a Civil War veteran, and a faithful member of the church. Married Clara E. Hite, July 19, 1866. To this union 4 children were born. Leaves his wife, one son, O. H. Bailey, and several grandchildren to mourn. Funeral sermon by M. L. Schmidt, January 8, 1920, interment in Ash Mesa Cemetery.

CRAMER.—John H. Cramer was born in Blicktown, Ohio, January 6, 1848. Baptized by G. T. Griffiths, May 3, 1885. Later ordained an elder and his work in the church and community was always greatly appreciated. Died December 25, 1919. Leaves wife, one sister, 10 children, and a number of grandchildren. Funeral services conducted by James Carlisle, sermon by L. W. Powell.

CUDNEY.—Laura Anna Vaughn was born at Buell, Michigan, April 14, 1860. Married S. D. Cudney in 1875, and 5 children were born, 3 girls and 2 boys. Baptized October 4, 1888, by J. J. Cornish. Died at Marion, Michigan, January 16, 1920. Leaves to mourn, husband, 3 daughters and one son. Services at the home, interment at Marion cemetery. Sermon by W. D. Ellis.

We have had several inquiries in as to the amount of Christmas offering to date. From February 20, 1919, to January 23, 1920, we have received $66,754.52. This is a little less than at the corresponding date for 1919, but is doubtless due to the fact that we have requested the Canadian and British Isles schools to send their offerings direct to the bishop or Bishop's agent of their district in order to avoid the heavy exchange rates, and their reports have not yet reached us.

From all indications the 1919 Christmas offering will equal, if not pass, those of previous years. Every school is now awake to the possibilities of the Christmas offering, and is expecting every other one to do its part in 1920. I know that you will live up to the reputation of doing things which you have established in the last few years.

Individuals or Sunday schools who have not yet forwarded us their offering should do so not later than February 15, if they desire to have it appear in the next blue Stepping Stones.

Watch for next week's report and call the attention of your Sunday school to it. Sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Special to HERALD by Wireless:

Bishop McGuire in office again following trip east. G. T. Griffiths to be at conference at Boise, Idaho, last Saturday in January; and conference at Ogden, Utah, February 7. Last report J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell were at Mosspoint, Mississippi. President Frederick M. Smith arrived home the 23d from a visit to Lamoni, Lincoln, and Woodbine. Appeal in Evans case to be entered by church at once.

Conference Minutes

SPOKANE.—At Spokane, Washington, December 13, District President W. F. Yates, presiding. Branches reporting: Spokane, Valley and Sagle. On account of confusion in the minds of some caused by the changed methods in the department of statistics, some branches failed to report. Resolution prevailed that we continue having and reading statistical reports from the branches to the district. Report of committee selected to revise district resolutions was read, to the effect that the work was under way but had not been finished. Report adopted and committee continued. Tabulated ministerial report read. W. W. Fordham, bishops agent, reported receipts, including $365.73 on hand at last report, $1,116.78; disbursements, including $809.69 sent to Presiding Bishop, $99.32. Delegates to General Conference: J. A. Bronson, George Leach, S. N. Gray, George Thorburn, W. F. Yates, Pearl Reed; alternates: Grace Hufferd, Grace Fry, George Wilcox, Dana S. McDole, Oliver Shirk, and Eli Bronson. W. F. Yates sustained district president six months. Charles Hufferd elected member auditing committee. Couer d' Alene, Idaho, selected as place of next reunion and conference. J. A. Bronson, Bert Hart, William Woods, L. E. Holmes, William Ahern and Pearl Reed elected reunion committee, and together with district president to appoint time of holding reunion. Peter Klaus ordained elder. Preaching by Eli Bronson, George Thorburn and J. A. Bronson. Oliver Turnbull, secretary.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

Brother and Sister James Scott have located in Washburn, Missouri, and want to know if there are any Saints in that community—if so communicate with them.

Brother Bert Cooper, of Detroit, reports increasing attendance and good interest, with meeting well supported by the Ridetown Saints, in meetings at Morpeth, Ontario.

Brother P. W. L. Roberts, box 11, Hastings, Nebraska, taking vocational work at that place, would like to hear from any Saints near.

Signals have been received by the Graceland radio station from practically all points of the globe. One evening recently the operator heard a ship in distress on the Atlantic calling the Arlington station for aid, with news of the progress in life saving. Distance makes little difference, as calls from Alaska are heard even more distinctly than those from neighboring towns. Special communication is had with a station at Roswell, New Mexico, and the operator there reports that Graceland's 9YO signals can be heard as far as thirty feet from the receiving phones. The sending and receiving messages from Independence and Kansas City is the chief business of the station, and very acceptable service is rendered.

On the 17th a fire was discovered on the roof of the girls' dormitory at Graceland, and by the prompt efforts of the boys with the house hose and fire extinguishers, it was under control when the local fire department arrived with their new auto fire truck. The fire started from sparks from an overheated stove using a chimney built large enough for furnaces, but which are displaced on account of steam heat.

Graceland College.—Cupid has made inroads into the missionary class at Graceland, with one score to his credit, and good prospects for others. Keith Rogers, of Utah, was married to Sister Helen Danforth, of Missouri, who has been here teaching in the public schools the past two years. The Athenian Literary Society held its semester election recently and chose Daniel Needham, of Lamoni, as president. The usual brain-racking examinations are driving the students to the depths of their resources, all classes being required to pass semester examinations to continue the year's work.

A letter from Elder Hubert Case informs us of the great interest among the American Indians. Hundreds are nearing the Kingdom. He also advises us that Brethren Griffiths and Greene expect to visit them in February. Brethren Long, Peterson, and Smith also report great interest among the Omahas.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Indianapolis, Indiana. Ninety-one members are reported, with Ira Benham chosen president of the branch. J. E. Warne intends to move to Independence or Kansas City in June. His work has been greatly appreciated. A nice clean hall is had at 973 West Twenty-eighth Street.

Butler, Missouri. This branch is composed mostly of farmers south and east of Butler, and numbers 61. Meetings have been held in the public school buildings but a committee is at work soliciting funds for a church. J. A. Marsteller was recently elected president. A good Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary, and Religio hold usual services.

Jacksonville, Arkansas. Attendance is about fifteen but usual services held. J. W. Jackson has been doing some work in southwestern Arkansas, southeast Oklahoma, and northeastern Texas. J. C. Chrestensen and E. A. Erwin made a call and preached for us for a few days, but interest was not good.

First Chicago, Illinois. Chris Hartshorn was reelected branch president. The issuance of the branch bulletins every two weeks was continued. Brethren Pitt and Christy and local officers have been dispensing the word, with Apostle Gillen making a flying trip and delivering one sermon. The Sunday school and Religio, under the leadership of Axel Edstrom and Louis Goucher, respectively, have bright outlook for the coming year. The motto of the social committee is "Something doing all the time." The Religio is well patronized.

Pontiac, Michigan. The Religio is considering strongly doing something with the boy movement. William Sage, district Religio superintendent, recently visited this place and offered some spicy advice.

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin. Elder L. O. Wildermuth held a series of meetings here just before Christmas, of much value to the Saints. Then after Christmas he and Elder A. Davenport went to Readstown and held a series with considerable good done.

Toronto, Ontario. Despite coming out second best in the McGuire-Evans suit, a large audience—quite above the average—gathered at the Allen to hear Brother Williams on "Crumbling creeds." "Creeds are whipcords that compel men to bow to the dictum of a thesis," was one of the speaker's definition. The Sunday school has passed the $2 mark in the Christmas offering, due to the fact that we have been "released from bondage." Our "grandfather" in the gospel, J. J. Cornish, is coming to visit us in the near future.

Detroit, Michigan. The bishop's agent reported on January 6 that he had collected $490.86 from December 18, 1918 to January 6, 1920. The branch numbers about 71 but the average attendance has not been over 25 at the Sunday services. The Sunday school average about 26 and raised $128.08 Christmas offering. With new officers elected for coming year and prospects good for a new church building, the branch is hopeful.

[Will correspondent from places having more than one branch be sure to mention which one they are reporting.—EDITORS.]

Plano, Illinois. The Saints and friends of Eli Wildermuth and family recently went in and helped them celebrate his eighty-third birthday. A small purse was given each of them. The visits of James F. Keir, Floyd M. McDowell, and Heman Hale Smith were especially appreciated.

South Boardman, Michigan. F. S. Brackenbury has returned from his Eastern Michigan field of labor. Because of the condition of health of his wife, B. H. Doty will remain at home for sometime. The branch adopted coordination at the business meeting recently. One of the young men was ordained a priest.

Flint, Michigan. The year just past has been a prosperous one for the Saints of First Branch as is witnessed by the increase in both the number of tithe payers and also the amount of tithing paid. In addition to this we have cleared off a mortgage of about nine hundred dollars and the church building has been dedicated. About three months ago the priesthood of the three Flint branches formed a class under the name "Flint Union priesthood" research class with the idea of taking up a systematic course of study, not of doctrine, but of purely educational subjects such as would better fit them to occupy acceptably behind the sacred desk. Under the guidance of our city missionary, Matthew W. Liston, we are now beginning a series of cottage preaching services to be taken care of by the local priesthood. There will be about six or seven in the city and about five in the surrounding country and we are looking forward to great things from these services as it was from just such efforts as these that branches number 2 and 3 result. The Sunday school is pressing onward. They have chosen for the Christmas offering superintendent Sister Emmeline Belleisle and the aim for the year is fifteen hundred dollars. January is to be a sacrifice month, with the idea of raising half that amount in the month. We have a very healthy looking normal class, taking the Book of Mormon and Religio Normal under the able tutorage of Brother Samuel A. Thiel. Several of our number have recently moved westward. Altogether conditions look very good for the coming year, the Saints as a whole are on a high spiritual plane, although we shall still need to strive hard to remove all the dross. We expect to see greater strides taken in 1920 than in any previous year.

Boston, Massachusetts. An interesting program announcement of dedicational services of the Boston Branch has reached us. The event was announced for January 4, at which time the church edifice at 10 Sewall Street, Somerville, Massachusetts, was dedicated, with dedicatory prayer by Patriarch Richard Baldwin and sermon by Bishop Richard Bullard. A dedicational service held at 3 p. m. in charge of the president of the branch, E. L. Traver, with prayer by C. Edward Miller, president of the district. The history of the branch was by Bishop M. C. Fisher. A ladies' quartet rendered the Lord's Prayer, and a solo was given by Ennanora Whiting. Preaching in the evening by C. Edward Miller. The choir supported the meeting with an anthem.

Walnut Park, Independence. Group services are proving a success. As many meet in one group as would meet all together in the church, and it affords better opportunity for closer observation as to spiritual condition of the branch. As we see it, as we approach Zionie conditions, the disciple will become more effective by reason of stricter application and enforcement. When those in charge are compelled to know when and where we say our prayers there will be no doubt as to the advisability of the innovation." Coordination has worked well and given entire satisfaction, so far, and have much to learn along that line yet. G. T. Griffiths recently preached one of his practical sermons. Three have been added by baptism of late.

Sawyer, Idaho. Regular meetings are held, Sunday school on Sunday, preaching twice; Doctrine and Covenants class on Monday evenings; prayer meetings Wednesday evenings; Religio Friday evenings. J. A. Bronson spent New Year's at Valley, baptizing a young man from Canada. All meetings are well attended.

Lamoni, Iowa. The Religio is functioning under the new idea of being responsible for all the social activities for the church community, and is gratifyingly successful. The moving picture films shown at the college on Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, at small cost, are well patronized, while the study classes at the church are excellently attended by earnest students. There has been a reorganization of the classes till now there are thirteen. Some of them are taking advanced work, such as teacher training, (standard normal course) with Floyd M. McDowell teacher; a class in community civics, A. M. Carmichael, teacher; two classes in industrial Zion, taught by H. C. Burgess and E. D. Moore; one on the financial law, S. A. Burgess, teacher; and one on Boy Scout work, Forrest Roberts, teacher. Some classes are taking Quarterly work and some of the younger ones are doing story work. During the past week, the Religio was attended, in its various activities, by 782 people. The series of gospel sermons on Sunday evenings are being continued by F. A. Smith, on authority.

East Jordan, Michigan. Religio and prayer meetings are being held from house to house. The Christmas exercises were successful.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in convention in Saint Louis, in November, adopted resolutions indorsing the League of Nations, urging world prohibition, and also urging a single standard of morality for men and women.

During the war the world consumed and destroyed more than it produced. Since the armistice there has been new excesses of extravagance and wanton profiteering, according to the Christian Science Monitor, for which reason the cost of living does not come down. This accounts for the reasonable demand for higher wages on the part of labor, while high wages are largely accountable for the high prices.

The conference of the Southern Methodist Church in South Carolina, recently, is reported to have resolved that they want nothing of German militarism, even though it bears the name of America, hence opposes universal military training, on the grounds that it will foster a spirit of militarism and war.

At present the immigration for the first five months of the year from July 1, 1919 to 1920, is over 120,000. It is the opinion of the immigration commissioner that it will equal if not exceed 400,000 for the year, to the port of New York alone.

The 1920 Standard Is Raised! Enlist Ye Religians!

THE RELIGIO has come into its own. No longer need it struggle by itself. As a department of the church it has all the prestige and power of the church back of it and no effort will be spared in the achievement of its task.

A great task too, is the one offered the Religio. The people drawn into the kingdom are as various as the classes of men may vary, yet all are drawn to the same Christ and may be welded into a social unity that can defy the disintegrating forces of the world. The social unification of the church, nothing less, is the task of the Religio.

First the problem, then the plan. The problem is clear, the plans are rapidly taking shape. The April Conference affords opportunity for a practical demonstration of our methods and a chance to put our ideal to work. The big government Battery Building in Independence has been obtained for conference week and this building will be transformed into a Religio exposition. Exhibits of Religio work throughout the world will be displayed; model gymnasiums, playgrounds, etc., will be shown; rest rooms and reading rooms will invite the conference visitors to make their headquarters with the Religio, and concerts, musicals, lectures and programs will not only make the conference a pleasure, but will awaken an enthusiasm in Religio work that will be an active force throughout the coming year.

As a Religian come to Independence next April. Come prepared to enter into the Religio spirit and to learn methods that you can translate into service for Christ. If you have suggestions, inquiries or exhibits to offer, write the committee:

How Many Man Power?

Here is an easy little problem in mathematics. Suppose you have a heavy load to haul, and have four horses with which to haul it. If all four horses pull in the same direction, how many horsepower do you develop? A child can solve this problem, and will answer, Four. But suppose one horse pulls in an opposite direction while three attempt to go in the desired direction. What have you left? Two horsepower. And if two pull in one direction and two in the opposite direction, you have nothing but grief and broken gear.

The writer knows, having seen it tried. On one occasion in company with Bishop Carmichael we drove from Garden Grove to Santa Ana, in California. We started out with one good horse hitched to a single buggy. En route, a neighbor hailed us and asked us to lead a horse to town for him. He tied the second horse to the rear axle of our buggy with a strong three quarter inch rope.

All went well until we drove into Santa Ana. Then Bishop Carmichael, wishing to enter in style, flourished the whip over the back of his faithful but erratic equine. Immediately the horse that we were driving took fright and started forward, and simultaneously the horse that we were leading took fright and bracing all four feet lunged backward. During a part of the time immediately ensuing we were going into Santa Ana, and part of the time we were going out of Santa Ana. Finally the whiffletree broke, allowing our horse to pull out of the shafts. She turned squarely around facing us, and we pulled the harness off over her head—the first time we ever saw a horse disrobe on the public highway. After we had repaired the wreck, we drove on, sadder and wiser. We had learned a lesson, and sometimes have used the story to point a moral.

The same rules that apply in the problem of the horses will apply in our problems of man power. If in a certain branch we have four good men working in agreement and all pulling one way, the church can develop four man power there to move the heavy load up the steep grade that confronts the average branch. But if three pull in one direction and one in the opposite direction we have only two man power left. While if two pull in one direction and two in another all we have is wreck and ruin—without even the humorous side that saved the situation on the road to Santa Ana. In fact sometimes it is a spectacle to make the angels weep.

Since we began this editorial we read a letter addressed to the Presidency from a brother in a small local congregation, who says, "The branch at this place is in hopeless confusion. Every meeting ends in a quarrel. The brethren are hopelessly divided. We have given up our place of worship—and it is just as well that we did."

Horses are governed only by horse sense—unless they have a driver who can force obedience. And horse sense is not very logical even if it does have such a wonderful reputation. But men are supposed to have man sense—or common sense, as we call it, despite the fact that it is so uncommon. They can think. And it will pay us to think—in branch, district, stake, and in the church as a whole.

What chapters would it not take to tell the story of wasted effort—men pulling against each other. What numberless wrecks left by the road for the world to laugh at and scorn—wrecks that came because men used only horse sense. Jesus says, "If you are not one you are not mine." He does not for one moment intend to assume responsibility for these roadside debacles.

How much man power can we develop if we get together and pull together—using plain, common, man sense, and operating under the Spirit of the Master? ELBERT A. SMITH.

Blue Pencil Notes

About this time of year the weather-wise begin to tell us that we are to have a very stormy Conference. These predictions appear annually from six to eight weeks before the first robin and about two or more weeks before ground hog day. They are a never failing harbinger of spring. Looking back as far as we can recollect, we cannot recall a year when we heard such predictions, that spring did not come. And we can recall only one year when they were not heard—and that was the year when there was no conference. These thoughts are very comforting, much like the reflections of the old man who said that he had observed, as a neverfailing rule, that when he lived through March he lived through the rest of the year.

Rain fell in Missouri last year on an average of every fourth day. An almanac prophet who predicted rain in Missouri for a certain day had, therefore, one chance in four to make a hit. One hit is sufficient to start a reputation and will offset three misses. Assuming that the ratio of stormy conferences is about he same, and admitting that the man who predicts a stormy session has one chance in four to make a hit, and that a miss or two ought not to be mentioned between friends, the enterprise seems reasonably safe. There is only one danger—a man is generally tempted to do his best to make his prophecies come to pass.

The editor of the Kansas City Star, who is a Republican, and very caustic, says that Democrats always put up a better fight among themselves than they do against their opponents. We have feared that it might occur to some of our antagonists to make such a charge against Latter Day Saints, and we have no adequate rejoinder worked out as yet. However, this year, two weeks before the conference begins, a concerted missionary drive is to begin in Independence and Kansas City. Six teams of two missionaries each "two by two," will conduct a series of affirmative gospel meetings in our five Independence churches, and in Central Church, Kansas City. They will be backed up by missionary choruses. And each day each house in Independence will be visited and a tract left—a series of twelve tracts in all. If we turn our batteries loose on sin and the Devil for two weeks, we may run out of ammunition, or something, before conference, and it may be more peaceful than any time we have had since the year when there was no conference.

Ten years ago the attitude of the masses of humanity, in the so-called enlightened nations, toward spiritism, was that of amused incredulity. Men were mostly materialistic in their attitude of mind. They did not reckon with any supernatural forces at all. True, the cult of Spiritualists was busy here and there, and a good many simple-minded persons would cross the palm of a medium with fifty cents to hear from the departed; but they did not expect to hear much and did not take it seriously.

But now the attitude of mind seems to have become very credulous. Spiritism has gained converts by leaps and bounds and is taken very seriously. All sorts of phylacteries with the spirit world are indulged in with the aid of ouija boards, table tippings, rappings, and the usual paraphernalia and phenomena. Some very notable recruits, like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and Sir Oliver Lodge, have come forward to assist in the propaganda of Spiritism. Doctor Hyslop, secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, is credited with saying that many insane persons are merely "suffering from an invasion of their consciousness by the spirits of persons who have died." After trying for a long time to explain away the saying of Jesus concerning casting out evil spirits, the world seems to be coming frankly back to a belief in demonology, spirit possession, etc.

Far be it from us to intimate that there is nothing in this spiritual upheaval. Allowing for the inevitable admixture of fraud and fakirs, there is still something to it, but nothing good. John said in his day to not believe every spirit, for many false spirits had gone abroad. In the Doctrine and Covenants it is said: "There are many spirits which are false spirits, which have gone forth in the earth, deceiving the world." There is something in it; but there is nothing good in it. Spiritism has given the world nothing good and will give it nothing good. Beyond furnishing some collateral evidence of continued existence after death, it has nothing for us.

We feel that there must be some connection between the outbreak of anarchy in so many quarters in the political realm and this contemporary eruption of spiritism in the spiritual world. The forces of evil are rallying for the struggle in all fields of human thought and activity. Latter Day Saints will do very well to refrain from dabbling in Spiritism. We can not expect to get much from it until we first assume a passive attitude and call in the outposts of reason that guard the soul. To get results, one must open the door and say, "Come in"—and take a chance on the unseen and unclean thing that may cross the threshold. We cannot afford to do that. Only one Spirit has legitimate place in man's heart (which is God's temple) and that is the Holy Spirit. It has given and will give us all the revelation that we need concerning the future world.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Ideals of Education and the School of the Prophets

From time to time there has been discussion in these columns both pro and con, on the subject of education. With the ideals of Zion before us, it may be well that we undertake a reevaluation.

There was a time when there was considerable opposition in the church to schooling of any kind. Those who are still young in years can remember that time; when to go, even to a business college, was presented as a grievous thing. Yet as we look deeper, we realize frankly that there were many men of college rank in the early church. There were men of broad view in the early and later reorganization. As early as 1869 in the Reorganization, a motion was made to establish a suitable school for the instruction of the young men to go forth into the mission field. In view of a limited opposition even at this time, it may be well to present again the preamble and resolution, the latter of which was adopted by the conference:

"School of the Prophets.—The need for an educated, intelligent, and sincerely devout body of seventies to promulgate the gospel, and high priests to preside over the churches, has been and now is, felt very sensibly by very many who have the salvation of souls and prosperity of the church at heart.

"Etiquette is not taught in the camp, nor the art of war in the nursery, neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of genuine Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by the schools of the Gentiles; as well might we look for the sturdy oak in the hothouse, or the orange in Lapland, as for thorough, devout, self-abnegating elders from the popular schools of fiction and fashion; 'tis contrary to the common course of nature—the child clings to the breast from whence it derives its nourishment, and the faith of the pupil is tinctured with the mind of his professors.

"Church property contributes to the stability of the work, and we need a school wherein to educate our own young men.

"As discipline detracts not from the courage of the soldier, neither would a proper ministerial education detract from the piety and earnestness of the ambassadors of truth; but on the contrary would give confidence, couple wisdom with their knowledge, and judgment with their zeal.

"Suggestions.—A quarter section of land could be purchased, a building erected, the land fenced and broken, professors elected, and the land worked conjointly by professors and students. Four or five hours a day of farm labor would contribute to the health of body and mind, and by this means a school could be made both efficient and self-sustaining.

"In keeping with the above, I respectfully offer the following: Resolved that this conference recommend for the consideration of the Twelve and the general church authorities, the feasibility and advisability of establishing a school for the education of our own young men, with a view to the ministry; and that the question be brought up at the next sitting of the General Conference.

At the succeeding conference in the fall, the matter was again deferred. At the general conference in 1870, the resolution was made as a substitute, that the school of the prophets be organized with Joseph Smith as its president. Although adopted, it was later rescinded on President Smith's statement, he was not prepared to enter into his duties connected with such a school.

Before a school of the prophets is possible, preparation must first be made by the presidency and by us. It has now been made by them.

Education, meaning personal development and proper preparation, is one of the vital issues before us. It is one of our great and present needs. As we have stated before, schools are the best methods yet ascertained of securing this training. It is true that the schools of to-day are not perfect. The requirements that each one must serve a certain term of years regardless of the intellectual capacity and ability has proven at times unfortunate.

But despite the mistakes of individual teachers, despite the handicaps which have arisen at times in the system as a whole, the schools and colleges still remain the most effective method, and the most speedy in which to achieve adequate preparation.

We were very much pleased to note lately a statement by President Briggs of Graceland College to the effect that the prerequisites for work in the missionary course was a high school training or its equivalent; but that this equivalent could be secured in many ways. Many have recognized this for some time, that a school or college is not the exclusive method by which to secure proper training and preparation.

Education signifies in its original sense a leading out with the idea of development or unfolding; that is, that the capacity of the individual, his natural talents, and capabilities, are developed or brought out.

Education should be broad enough to consider the physical and spiritual needs, as well as the intellectual. The very best method for the teaching of ethics or morality, and for the development of the right powers of man, that is known to humanity, is religion. Spiritual experiences prepare a man for his best and greatest work.

But if this ideal of education is correct, it follows of necessity that each individual should not receive exactly the same training. The ideal should be to develop on the part of each individual his natural talents and capabilities to the fullest extent.

We have seen good mechanics spoiled by a college education. They thought they had to be professional men. We have seen men kicked out the front door, instead of the back of a college, with a degree but not possessing the capacity. These are some of the incidental occurrences.

True education should not make a man vain. It should cause him rather to realize wherein he is strong, wherein he can best serve humanity, and wherein he is weak. As he gains a view of the field of human knowledge, and realizes his own limited knowledge, he tends rather to become humble, than the reverse.

The old idea in the grammar school, and even in the high school, of cramming in set statements of facts for knowledge, has tended often to create a superciliousness, as is the case with nearly all dilettante instruction. Since it is superficial it is worn strongly on the outside.

Some one has suggested that college education emphasizes the relation of knowledge to life, the taking of a broad view of life; while university education deals with specialization, trying to learn one thing well and exhaustively.

The value of education may be measured by the motto at Hampton College: "The purpose of education is preparation for life; the test of life is capacity for service."

Every man and every woman should receive all the education, all the training that he or she is capable of using to his or her own advantage, and to the profit of humanity. We consider in this connection the group to be too narrow a term. Education must then differ, according to the capacity to assimilate. It is only that which is digested which becomes profitable. That which is given back in the same shape in which it was received, always just the same, may sometimes prove as disgusting as sea sickness. That which can be received and digested and utilized is profitable.

The Master, in the parable of the talents, indicated a greater responsibility on the part of those who have greater talents, and intimated that there exists a real difference. Modern thought and research confirms this thought. Some children are backward; some are brilliant; some need to be held back; some need to be urged forward; and many need special instruction.

It is true in connection with criminality and psychiatry, that many times the distinct statement is made that an idiot or a defective cannot be trained beyond a certain limited point. The idea of Mephistopheles as a remarkably brilliant, able, and yet wicked personality is open to serious question. Against it may well be placed the decree: "Light and truth forsaketh the evil one." This is confirmed by modern research. (Holt: The Freudian Wish.) The criminal is usually found to be a defective, morally or mentally, or both.

Defectives are graded according to their mental capacity, to which grades are usually ascribed peculiar names, ranging from imbecile and idiocy up to the high grade moron and the sociopath.

It is strongly urged, and with much apparent reason, that there is a limit to the mental advance in such cases. Continued schooling does not take them far beyond a limited capacity.

With morons and sociopaths, as compared to other defectives, the great difference is that morons or sociopaths may learn and repeat rules, but cannot do a great deal of original thinking. Another great direct criterion is, that they can usually handle an ordinary problem if they are only given time enough, but they are literally slow witted. With plenty of time they will eventually get at least the approximate answer. Speed of reaction is one vital intellectual test.

As able a man as Doctor G. Stanley Hall, in his lecture on pedagogy suggested that there is a limit to the educational capacity, and some individuals reach that limit in the grammar school, others in the high school, still others in college. The number who attend college with profit to themselves and society is relatively small. The number who can go on to university and post graduate work is still smaller. (At present over 95 per cent are below college intellectual standards, but many more than 5 per cent could attain that standard with great profit—probably 50 per cent could do so.)

These facts should be kept in mind. It is no gain either to a school, or to the church, to urge a person into a course from which he or she does not retain real benefit. The ideal will be attained, when every man and woman is developed to his fullest capacity, receives all the intellectual training that he is able to digest and utilize, and then uses that training for the benefit of society and humanity.

We note in Doctrine and Covenants 85 the suggestion that those who inherit the celestial glory will receive a fullness thereof; those who inherit the terrestrial glory will also receive a fullness thereof; and those who receive a terrestrial glory also receive a fullness. But we must remember that as one star differs from another in glory, so do they differ.

One of the keen recollections of our early life is a sermon on this text. The speaker, after reading concerning the celestial glory, paused and remarked: "A fullness thereof—well, it takes more to fill a bushel measure than it does a pint cup."

There is no instance of pride in this. There is, however, grave responsibility; for to whom much has been given, from him shall much be required, and rightly so. It is worthy our thought in considering the problems of education, how much one is able to receive and digest.

All of us have seen cases where a little learning has been marked with an unusual vanity. Yet, in our own experience the most conceited people we have ever met have been the most ignorant. Extreme pride is after all an attribute of ignorance. For if our knowledge is broad enough, we can only be humbled with the realization of what we do not know, and of our own limitations.

But that does not challenge the splendid advantage of proper schooling, nor the great mental and spiritual gain of real education in the preparation of life.

Some of our opponents have accused us of being an ignorant people. These are unfortunately those who do not know the church people. If there is one primary distinction between this and other churches, it is that this church calls for serious thought, and not an emotional conversion. There is no mourner's bench. Its appeal is more distinctly to the intelligence than is the rule with the other organizations.

It contains within it many men and women who have taken advanced collegiate work. It recognizes the value of proper intellectual preparation, but it does not lose sight of the need and value of spiritual development, of the teaching that is given by the Spirit of God. (John 14: 15, 16.)

There probably never was a time when there is as keen a realization as there is to-day of the value of proper schooling and proper training. Nor has there ever before been more keenly realized the necessity of proper preparation if we are to move forward and do the work that we have undertaken in the establishment and administration of Zion. The ideals of education are those set forth by the Master in the parable of the talents. Talents are given us, not to hide, but to develop. In other words, to gain usury upon them; to utilize, and through use to grow and gain other talents, or greater ability, and then to use these talents in the service of our heavenly Father and humanity.

All that has been said or may be said does not remove these fundamental facts. S. A. B.

Heber J. Grant's Record

We have had several letters asking us whether the present head of the Utah church, Heber J. Grant, was a polygamist or not. We readily ascertain in that according to Joseph F. Smith's testimony in the Reed-Smoot case, before the Senate committee, that Mr. Grant was at that time a polygamist:

"Mr. Tayler. Heber J. Grant is one of the twelve apostles?"

"Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Tayler. Is he a polygamist?"

"Mr. Smith. He so acknowledged, I believe, a few weeks ago.

"Mr. Tayler. He so acknowledged?"

"Mr. Smith. I believe so. It was so reported in the public prints.

"Mr. Tayler. Is that all you know about it?"

"Mr. Smith. Well, I know that I have seen two ladies who are reputed to be his wives.

"Mr. Tayler. You have stated that an apostle could not be a polygamist without your knowledge.

"Mr. Smith. I have not denied that he was a polygamist.

"Mr. Tayler. No.

"Mr. Smith. Not in the least.

"Mr. Worthington. The witness said an apostle could not be a polygamist without his knowledge, unless he violated the rule of the church.

"Mr. Tayler. Where is Heber J. Grant now?"

"Mr. Smith. He is in Europe.

"Mr. Tayler. For the church?"

"Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Tayler. Do you call his mission an important and honorable one?"

"Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Tayler. Do you know which of his wives, if either, went with him.

"Mr. Smith. I am not posted.

"Mr. Tayler. You are not posted?"

"Mr. Smith. No, sir.

"The Chairman. You do not know, then?"

"Mr. Smith. Sir?"

"The Chairman. You do not know which one of his wives went with him?"

"Mr. Smith. I could not say that I know positively, but I believe that it is his second wife.

"Mr. Tayler. That is, you mean his second living wife?"

"Mr. Smith. That is what I mean.

"The Chairman. Do you know how many wives he has?"

"Mr. Smith. Who?"

"The Chairman. Grant.

"Mr. Smith. Mr. Grant?"

"The Chairman. Yes.

"Mr. Smith. I think he had at one time three, but his first wife, then living, died.—Reed-Smoot, vol. 1, pp. 140-141."

It would seem according to the above statements that his first wife was dead prior to 1904.

We have made further inquiry in Utah, and are advised of the following status:

"He was first married to Lucy Stringham, then later on he was married to his second wife, Gusta Winters, and finally married his third, Emily Wells. He lived with all three for a time but later his first wife died, then the third one died, and at the present time he has only one left, Gusta Winters."

Also the following extract is part of an interview with Heber J. Grant, president of the Utah Church, as printed in the New York Herald for October 27:

"President Grant has had three wives whom he loved with tender and equal devotion, he said. This was before the Supreme Court decided that polygamy was unlawful. Since that time the church has put a ban on it, and it has become a dead issue, he said. President Grant very sternly quoted section 58 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

"We are a law-abiding people," he went on, "and we ask only to be judged by our fruits. We have a high birth rate—the most valuable crop of Utah is its babies; we have a low death rate, a low disease rate, a negligible crime and insanity record, and we rank second in education and very high in music and the arts."

"But, putting aside all moral argument, I can't see how this doctrine of polygamy ever works out happily in practice," said The World reporter, who was a woman. "It seems to be that women have a jealous instinct for putting a high fence around their property, and keeping the fence well mended." The head of the Mormon Church laughed.

"I am myself the product of a plural marriage," he said. "My mother left her affluent home in New York and went to be my father's sixth wife. My father died when I was very young, but my mother and one of my father's other wives remained lifelong friends. Whenever one visited the other they used to talk long past midnight, and I used to lie awake in the next room and listen to them. When I grew up and went away from Utah for the first time, one of my father's wives took me in her arms and told me that she had always loved me next to her own son, better than any one in the world.

"When I married my first wife I told her that I was born in plural marriage, and that I expected some time to take other wives. And her reply to me was that she wouldn't marry me unless she thought I would, that if I were not good enough for more than one wife she wouldn't want me.

"You see, in our church only men who could obtain the highest recommendations for honor and uprightness could get permission to have more than one wife. These requirements were so high that the number of Mormons amenable to the Edmunds-Tucker law was never larger than two per centage of the whole number of our faith. And the stories which have been printed—one of them was printed only recently—to the effect that Mormons are importing young girls for wives, or in some way using the slightest coercion to induce plural marriages, is absolutely absurd. As I said before, plural marriage is a dead issue since the decision of the Supreme Court."

We think the above may be interesting to our readers in view of the testimony of Joseph F. Smith, in the Reed-Smoot Case. It is clear that both Joseph F. Smith and Heber J. Grant continued to live with their polygamous wives after the Supreme Court decision, which was handed down April, 1879. Also it has been demonstrated that several hundred additional plural marriages have occurred even since the date of the manifesto in 1890.

We fully agree with, "Let no man break the laws of the land; for he that keepeth the law has no need to break the laws of the land." Heber J. Grant possesses too much ability not to know that in continuing to live with his polygamous wives, he was guilty of breaking the law of the land.

As to the testimony he gives with regard to his first wife, now dead, of course she is not here to present her side. Against it may be placed the statement by Brigham Young, in the Journal of Discourses, (vol. 4, pp. 55-57) and J. N. Grant, father of Heber J. Grant. (Ibid 4-50.) This shows plainly that the women were not happy under polygamy.

The Prophetic Conning Tower

An Outline—Part 5

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

Babylon

Forget not "the work of the Father," "preparing the way" for the covenant and the regeneration of Israel in the perplexing vicissitudes of the times, when ancient faiths are disappearing, governments are crumbling, institutions bowing to the tread of mad hosts of disorder. Israel, the golden thread running through the ages, around which gathers the world's bewildering activities and brilliant achievements dominated and directed by Him who "never slumbers nor sleeps." The voice prophetic informs us of the latitude and longitude in which we poor mariners are sailing on the ocean of life, and furnishes the nautical instrument as well as indicating the location of the hands on the face of the world's great timepiece.

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, inasmuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake to me, saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made his people, who are of the house of Israel."—1 Nephi 3: 232-237.

All who are conversant with the history of that power which sprang out of the Roman Empire, especially the Western division, known as the "eleventh horn" of the fourth beast (Daniel 7: 8), the power combining both civil and ecclesiastical authority (2 Thessalonians 2: 4; Revelation 17: 3; Isaiah 24: 4, 5), that abandoned and apostate church power, that donned the robes of temporal dominion donated to it by Pepin, 754 A. D., consisting of "cities and provinces," that religious power which, in further extent of "dominion" appropriated the terms "supreme head of the church" and rightful, divinely appointed suzerain of all temporal princes, the "earthly king of kings," (General History, Myers, pp. 404, 414), in fine, that "vine of the earth," the odor of whose blossoms lulled to "sleep" the nations by corrupting the word of God (1 Nephi 3: 169-175), by subtractions, alterations, retrenchments, changes, and accretions, upon mere conjectures (Dupin, Historical Canon, Old and New Testaments, vol. 2); know that the temporal power has rapidly frittered away since 1809, when the states of the church were incorporated into the continental system of Napoleon, and the supreme head of the church, the king of all temporal princes arrested, and dragged over the Alps into captivity, a prisoner. (Myers's History, p. 681.)

Daniel's prophecy voices the time of the destruction of temporal power as "the end," "the time of the end"—the "harvest."

"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion

He also makes a virtue of the small per cent who entered polygamy. The number of men and women is so nearly equal in the world that the percentage who can enter polygamy is necessarily small. It means that just so many men must go unmarried. This is even more true of a frontier community, as Utah was then. All that was really necessary was that the leaders, without regard to moral character should be permitted to enter in, and they control the rest of the community. At best a small per cent would be sufficient to that end.

The address of Orson Pratt explained the matter very readily. Some of the leading men were in a bad fix, having too many wives. This purported revelation was brought forth as a method to extricate them from difficulty. A few men were of sufficient ability to have upset the scheme, hence they were included.

But further than this, if as many as two per cent of the church were men who entered in to this condition, the question may arise how many of the whole church were men of marriageable age? If one in four were of such age, these figures would mean about 8% of the marriageable men entered into that relationship.

Jealously

An editorial in Every Week refers to the unfortunate habit of discussing some one who is absent, who has done perhaps a splendid work.

"Yes, he is certainly a wonderful chap, but—," and that leads up to a bit of criticism tinged with jealousy.

It adds that in one of the most critical periods of the war the President was interrupted by a man of national reputation in government service. The President received him, supposing it to be a matter of vital importance. He was much surprised to learn that the great man had come, not to make a constructive suggestion, but merely to register a petty complaint.

"He had been improperly seated at an official dinner, and he wished to protest at what he considered a reflection upon his importance and rank.

"Even in a moment of national danger, the man's patriotism was not great enough to conquer his jealousy.

"I think that jealousy is the most widespread of human frailties: certainly it was among the very first to make its appearance.

"The world was very young indeed when Cain, the son of Adam, went to lay his sacrifice on the altar, and, seeing that his brother Abel had made a more acceptable offering, slew his brother in a fit of jealous rage.

"From that day to this, hardly a son of Adam has been entirely free from this corroding influence. All through the arteries of the world's affairs it runs. I have seen a suggestion of it in great philanthropic organizations, working ostensibly for the same unselfish ends: and even in churches standing side by side, their spires pointing upward to the same heaven."

The editorial refers to the disposition shown in some church circles, and to the jealousy of Halleck and McClellan against Grant.

Jealousy, therefore, he concludes, is not an attribute of subtle minds. It is an unfortunate blot on many characters.

It certainly is worthy of serious thought how often such an error is to be observed. If we are honest and trace it back, we will find often just a touch of jealousy at the root. It is a pity.

This we find in the affairs of the world. The church is engaged in one of the greatest and most vital works under the sun. Let us hope that jealousy is not permitted to mar the good we might have done, nor our energy be fruitlessly wasted in carping criticism of one another. S. A. B.

to consume and to destroy it unto the end."—Daniel 7: 25, 26.

So Saint Paul predicts its complete abolition: "whom the Lord shall [destroy] consume with the spirit of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."—2 Thesalonians 2: 8.

In 1870, the Italian Government extended its authority over the papal states, and Victor Emmanuel with an army entered, and possessed the Eternal City. France no longer sustained the papal power. (See Myers's General History, p. 713, 714.) When she burst into the infidel revolution, she had 18 archbishops, 111 bishops, 150,000 priests, having under their control a revenue of five million sterling annually, besides 3,400 convents. The tithes and revenue of the clergy were taken away by decree of the constituent assembly. The possessions of the church were declared to be the property of the nation; religious orders were abolished, the monks and nuns ejected, and their immense wealth seized for the nation. (See History of the Church, by Goodrich, pp. 183, 184.)

The same policy was carried out in Brazil and Mexico. The compacts existing since, between the church and state, are being served. In 1906 the Concordat between the church at Rome, and the French Republic, was broken by the law of separation. The law does not recognize the right of a bishop to administer the property of their dioceses in trust, in fee simple, in a corporation, or in trusteeship with laymen. The Concordat stretching from Italy to the Philippine Islands, is the only one existing now, that we are aware of, and under its influence the United States paid the Roman Church $20,000,000 for the destruction of property, and occupancy of the Islands. (Outlook, October, 1916.)

Wars and Rumors

To-day, while "wars and rumors of wars," sound their dread tocsin, among all the nations which belong to this anti-Christian Confederation, we note a prophetic finger pointing to a characteristic. The Angel Message, "Fear God," worship him that made heaven and earth." The nations, kindreds, tribes, and people, have been worshipping Thor, the god of war. They have been indoctrinated with the religion of state worship—church and state religion. They were stereotyped in military autocracy. Imperial governments were honeycombed with "whatever is for good of the state is right, the right of the state is founded upon might."

"Life is a struggle for the existence with a survival of the fittest, and the strongest is the fittest; military organization constitutes the true strength of a nation; that there is no higher power in human life, certainly none in international life, than the physical force; that only the strong nation has any right to exist." Bernhardt quoted in New York Sun, Sunday, September 20, 1914.

Saturated with the doctrine of a kind of evolution, that big fish live off the little ones, and war is a biological necessity, the nations of the orient logically dash for balance of power, the isolation of smaller peoples to die off through senility, or be swallowed up in a world sovereignty. The construction of the military machines to the point of perfection, accuracy, and efficiency, has engrossed the religious and civil interests, and energies of the eastern world since the downfall of the Roman Empire, and the masses of the people have worshiped and feared the deeply rooted hatreds, and overvaulting ambitions of kingcraft.

To establish the prophecy of Nephi, we append a tabulation of 51 wars—half a hundred and more—in the last 100 years, one every two years. The list was furnished Senator Reed, Congressional Record, February 22, 1919. Forty-three of these wars have occurred since the prophecy of Nephi was given to the English-speaking world:

MOST IMPORTANT WARS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY (1812-1919), EXCLUDING AMERICAN

- Napoleonic Wars (1792-1815).
- Revolt of Spanish colonies (1810-1820).
- Revolution in Naples against their ruler, King Ferdinand (1821).
- Insurrection in Piedmont against Austrian rule (1821).
- Revolution in Spain against King Ferdinand VII (1822-1823).
- Revolt of the Greeks against Turkish rule (1821-1827), known as the war of Greek Independence.
- War between England, Russia, and France, as allied against Turkey for the independence of Greece (1827).
- War between Russia and Turkey (1828-29).
- Revolution in France against Charles X, followed by the establishment of the Orleans dynasty (1830).
- Revolt in Belgium against the union with Holland—ending in independence of Belgium (1830).
- Insurrection in Warsaw—revolt in Poland against Russia (1830-31).
- Insurrection in the Papal States (1831).
- Civil war in Portugal (1828-1833).
- Civil war in Spain (1833-1839).
- War between Egypt and Turkey (1832-33).
- War between Egypt and Turkey (1839-40).
- War between Turkey aided by Russia, England, Austria, and Prussia, and Egypt (1840-41).
- Revolution in France and the proclamation of the Republic (1848).
- Revolution in Vienna (1848).
- Revolution in Hungary—practical independence of Hungary (1848).
- Revolution in Bohemia against Austrian rule (1848).
- Insurrection in Lombardy against Austrian rule (1848).
- Insurrection in Venice against Austrian domination (1848).
- War between Austria and Piedmont (1848-49).
- Revolution in Berlin (1848).
- War between Denmark and the German Federation (1848).
- War between Austria and Hungary (1849).
- War between Denmark and Prussia (1849).
- Crimean War—England, France, Turkey, and Piedmont against Russia (1854-1856).
- War between France and Piedmont allied against Austria (1859).
- War between Piedmont (really represented by Garibaldi) and Naples (1860).
- Revolution in Poland against Russia (1863).
- War between Prussia and Austria allied against Denmark, relative Schleswig-Holstein (1864).
- Seven Weeks' War (1866).
- Franco-Prussian War (1870-71).
- Ashantee War (1873-74).
- Serbian-Turkish War (1876).
- Russo-Turkish War (1877-78).
- Afghanistan War of 1879.
- Zulu war of 1879.
- Egyptian War (1882).
- Serbo-Bulgarian War (1885).
- China-Japanese War (1894-95).
- Cuban Insurrection (1895).
- Greco-Turkish War (1897).
- South African or Boer War (1899-1902).
- Russo-Japanese War (1904-05).
- Italian-Turkish War (1911-12).
- Balkan-Turkish War (1912-13).
- European war (1914-1918).
- Total, 51

To omit the wars in which America was drawn in this list hits the bullseye, as it entails a loss of 5,117,100 men. But note the prophecies pointing to the great World War, which has ebbed into the quiet, so far as hostilities are concerned.

Second Coming and Wars

Of the signs of the second coming, Jesus predicted:

"But when ye shall hear of wars, and commotions; be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by. Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom."—Luke 21: 9-10.

Just at the time the world seemed to be reposing under the protecting wings of international law and fraternity, when peace convocations with seemingly helpful arms encircled the nations, and under the delusive spirit pervading, the cold, proud, watching, and calculating image of autocracy took weight and measure critically. She thought the Queen of Isles indolent, trade-loving, and non-militant. She looked upon the gallant French Republic as decadent; Italy was flighty and frothy; Russia, drink-besotted; America, selfish and afraid. Then the lunge of barbarism against civilization was made, but the former reckoned against the material, and sordid only, leaving out all spiritual assets. But the Lord proceeds to turn on the light:

"Therefore, wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent."—Zephaniah 3:8, 9.

"Woe to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters." The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. And behold at evening-tide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us."—Isaiah 17:12-14.

Zephaniah leads our minds to the unparalleled mobilization of the world, in this gathering of nations, and assembling of kingdoms, and it is just prior to the restoration of one pure language, and universal service, by understanding, seeing eye to eye, the institutions of God's house, or serving with one consent.

Isaiah points to the times of speed, rapidity, and military in action, of nations in haste like the rushing of many waters—"mighty waters."

The angel told John the Revelator that "waters" in his symbolic prophecy signified "peoples," and "multitudes," "nations and tongues," (Revelation 17:15), and if this huge conflict did not embrace just such a polyglot agglutination in military array, then we fail in discerning the characteristics of more than thirty-three nations engaged.

Moreover, the Associated Press was inclined to adopt the terms used in this prophecy. Of the engagement at Verdun (pronounced "Verdoon"), the press eloquently describes:

"Hour after hour, day and night, the thunder of the big guns, in what is the greatest artillery duel in the history of the world, rolls in from around Verdun like the ponderous roaring of gigantic waves continually breaking on a rock-bound coast."

Again:

"On Wednesday the enemy gained a footing for less than an hour but they could not withstand the cyclonic rush with which the French counter-attacked. . . . Each time it was like an unusually gigantic wave had broken there on the cliff."

"And at evening time trouble." No cessation for night. Ceaselessly as the great guns poured out their angry fury, so did men pour out their indomitable will. Not for an instant did the roar diminish, nor for a second was the kindly veil of night left unrent by a fissure of vengeful fire. The speed with which the imperial Teuton army came ("rolled") to the gates of Paris, the mass formation in the attack, like the old Romans, "wave after wave" in "cyclonic rush," brings to mind Isaiah 17 most vividly, and impresses the fact that the enemy of civilization was chased, finally, as the chaff of the mountains before the wind.

In the thirty-fourth chapter of Isaiah is a more tragic portrayal, and we cite the attention to the first eight verses: the appeal and warning to the whole earth:

Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter. Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their hosts shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness. For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion.

The terms Bozrah and Idumea in verse 6, need not stagger us. Bozrah is a term, or name applied to more than one place. It is from the Hebrew, and signifies "fortification, restraining" (see Analytical Concordance), and is now most appropriately applied to military powers who have so strongly fortified their domain by impregnable (?) forts. (See also Smith's Bible Dictionary.) Idumea is also taken from the Hebrew, and was the name applied to those who dwelt in trenches—very appropriately applied to modern military organizations. But inspiration interprets the word in Doctrine and Covenants 1:16, as "the world." We will not be far astray in either application, for the same definition occurs in Isaiah 34:1.

A digest of the prophecy would bring out the chief points as follows: First, the fury of the Lord is upon all the armies of the nations. Second, The time is in "the end of the world," and synchronizes or agrees in time with the signs predicted by the Savior, as occurring before the second coming—"The heavens rolled together as a scroll," "and their hosts [stars] fall down as the leaf." (Mathew 24:29, 30.) Third, A conflict should be inaugurated, led by the chiefs of the nations, in which there would be great sacrifices. Fourth, Their land should be melted—soaked with blood. Beasts, in prophecy, are symbolic of kings, rulers, potentates. King and kingdom are correlative terms.

"The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia. And the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king."—Daniel 8:20, 21.

"Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces." Daniel 7:23.

With this explanation, we would write, the unicorn or one horned beast—rhinoceros—is a one-man power, in whose hands, according to article 12, of imperial constitution, is lodged, legislative, judicial, and executive authority, above whom is no responsibility. The rams are kings; bullocks, bulls, and goats, being crown princes, and subalterns. Of course the world's great conflict, was "a king's war." Certainly all the potentates "came down to be with their armies," visiting the battle front, and their land was soaked with blood. (Verse 7.)

Miss Anna Laing, a graduate nurse of the Bridgeport (Connecticut) Hospital, contributes the following to the columns of New York American, 1914.

"I was in Liege (Belgium) when the great forts were bombarded (Liege and Namur), and Belgian officers took me to a house practically out of range of the shells that were being hurled at the city. As evening approached, I was permitted to go out and view the battlefield, but, my God! may mine eyes never behold such a scene again. The bodies of men and horses lay piled up everywhere, and the trenches were choked—filled to the top with them. The little hillocks over the battlefield had furrows washed by the blood of man. The ground was literally soaked with blood. Bushes were spattered with blood as high up as eight feet above the earth."

Reader, with the sentiments of arbitration and peace sent out from the pulpit, press, and forum, had you been gifted with prophecy six years ago, to foretell that thirty-three countries, including our own, would engage in such a war with weapons of such a type, and great armies unparalleled in the number of men engaged, confronting one another year after year, a jury of de lunatico inquirendo would have set on your case, and the verdict would have been "an asylum."

Early Protestant Evangelization of the Society Islands

BY CLARA KELLOGG ELLIS.

The following excellent article was crowded out of the Society Island number for lack of space. We are glad to use it here as an evidence of the sister's sterling worth to the church.

For unnumbered centuries the beautiful little island of Tahiti lay under the tropic sun, unknown to the world and undisturbed by the tread of a white man's foot. Her own brown-skinned natives roamed the mountains, fished in the sea, waged their tribal wars, worshiped their graven images, all unnoticed and unchronicled by the scribes of the world's history.

Just when the island was first discovered by white men is not definitely known. Some have even thought that Magellan saw Tahiti in his famous trip around the world in 1521. The first definite date, however, of its discovery is placed at 1607 by De Queros, a daring Spanish explorer.

One hundred and sixty years passed before the natives were again disturbed by the pale faces, except, perhaps, for an occasional shipwrecked sailor. This time the dauntless explorer was in the person of Captain Wallace, from England, in the year 1767. However, in connection with the exploration of this group of islands, most fame has been attached to the name of Captain Cook who came two years later, having been sent out by the Royal Geographical Society of London to observe the transit of Venus, which was visible at Tahiti that year. Captain Cook later wrote an account of his voyages and explorations in the South Sea Islands, which was widely scattered and read in England.

In this way quite an interest was aroused concerning the inhabitants of the far away isles, until in the year 1796, eighteen missionaries were sent out from England to Tahiti under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. After a long, tedious voyage of six months by way of Cape Good Hope, they arrived at Tahiti to commence their labors among a nation of idol worshippers, who had never heard of the one true God. Whatever we may feel or think concerning the teachings, doctrines, or authority of these pioneer missionaries, we cannot help but respect and admire their bravery, zeal, and earnestness in their self-sacrificing efforts among this darkened people.

Islanders as Ideal Worshipers

Let us take a look at the Tahitians as they were found by these London missionaries, that we may better appreciate the situation. At that period they were at the height of idol worship, accompanied by human sacrifices; tribal wars were common and numerous; immorality, polygamy, and infanticide prevailed among them; yet with it all, they were light-hearted, generous, lovable people.

It was such conditions that the early London missionaries met. They were, however, well received by the natives, the latter seeming glad to have the missionaries among them, not for the teaching or spiritual good it might be to them, but for the temporal benefit they were hoping it might be to them by way of acquiring instruments of war, knives, etc. One old native priest later said that the missionaries gave them plenty of parau (talk) and prayer, but very few knives and axes.

After sawing their own lumber, putting up a more or less comfortable house, and furnishing it with homemade furniture, the missionaries set about the most difficult task before them, that is, the learning of the language. We, who have learned the language with difficulty, with a Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, translated into Tahitian, and a Tahitian dictionary and grammar as aid, can well appreciate the enormity of the task confronting these pioneer workers, who had absolutely nothing in the way of printed matter to help, no alphabet, no spelling book, no grammar, no dictionary.

The fact that the Tahitians are remarkably loquacious and love to talk, was a distinct advantage to the missionaries. At the beginning of each week they would go separately, notebook and pencil in hand, among the natives, trying to learn the names of different objects through gestures and signs. At the end of the week they would meet and compare notes. It had been said that they were here five years before they understood the use of the word, ahiri, if. Thus it went on from week to week even into months and years. Finally, they were able to translate portions of the New Testament into Tahitian, and then they began teaching the natives of the one true God.

Many discouragements were met. They lost favor with the king and four missionaries were stripped and dragged in the river by the natives. Another cause of trouble was the frequent wars between the districts of Tahiti. At one time they were forced to protect themselves by building a stockade from bread fruit trees around their house, and placing four brass cannon obtained from a wrecked ship, in the upper rooms. At about this time King Pomare died; he had been a savage king, it having been estimated that during his reign he had sacrificed over 2,000 victims to the gods. His successor seemed little better.

Finally, after eight years of nearly fruitless labor, a part of the missionaries decided to leave Tahiti. Shortly after, another fierce civil war broke out, during which the missionaries' home was destroyed and their printing type melted for bullets; all missionaries fled but two. But during these dark and troublous times, light was about to dawn; some were becoming interested in the readings from the New Testament, and even King Pomare II began to attend preaching services regularly. Later the conversion of the king himself marked the beginning of their success.

His conversion came about in this way. He decided to make a test of the gods. It had always been the custom, before eating a turtle or any other sacred animal to offer a portion of it to the gods. One day Pomare commanded that the usual offering should not be made, but all the turtle should be set before him. The natives watched him eat the "unconsecrated" food with horror, expecting every moment that the king would suddenly die, or that the wrath of the gods would be poured out upon him in some other horrible way. No harm came to the king, and several, including the king, were converted to a belief in Jehovah and his Son, Jesus Christ; the missionaries who had fled, returned and from that time on their work was more or less successful.

While it is not our intention unduly to extol the efforts of these early Protestant missionaries, yet it is just that we should appreciate the work they did and the difficult conditions they met. It is to them that we must give credit for giving the Tahitian language an orthography and a printed form, for formulating the Tahitian-English grammar and for the stupendous task of translating the English Bible into Tahitian.

While we regret that not all have received the light of the restored gospel, yet when we recall the days of human sacrifice to a multiplicity of gods, we feel glad that they have been led to accept even a portion of the greater light.

The Law of Adoption

BY P. R. BURTON

We should be very thankful to be found worthy of being members of the family of God.

The matter before us this evening is very fitting for the Saints of these latter days, as few of us really understand the importance of being one of the adopted children of Jesus Christ, or the duty that rests on each of us as a part of the gospel family. Do we all realize that we were strangers and foreigners previous to our obedience to the doctrine of Christ? Such is the case. Perhaps the Apostle Paul gives us a better understanding of this law of adoption than any other writer. In writing this letter of admonition and encouragement to the Ephesian saints, gives them to understand that before their adoption they were strangers and foreigners. But that they were not to be lost altogether. For it was predestinated that the Gentile nations should hear the gospel of Christ, or the law of adoption, and by it we should become the children of Jesus Christ.

Paul in introducing the thought uses these words:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and the faithful in Jesus Christ: Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: [Notice now, please.] According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved: in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.—Ephesians 1: 1-14.

Paul wanted these Ephesians to understand fully that they were the children of Jesus Christ and had duties to perform. Are we not some of these same children? Do not the same duties rest on us? Yes, we are the same family.

The Civic Law of Adoption

How plain the gospel is! Paul had a wonderful gift of making his thoughts plain. Should we not follow after his pattern? Suppose I should desire to adopt a child from the "Home" at Lamoni: Here in Illinois there is a law governing the adoption of children. This law is definite and binding, both on the one being adopted and the adopter. When all points of the covenant have been complied with, this child becomes a part of my family, having the same rights and considerations that any other member of the family may have. This child takes upon himself my name and is to be really a part of my household. At my death he will come in for a share of my estate as his inheritance. This law of adoption gives him all of the rights and privileges.

Again this law places some responsibilities on him also. He must be subject to the laws governing the home; he must do well the work that is allotted to him as his share in the upkeep of our home. He must cheerfully accept the labor that falls to his lot and help build up the home. That in time he may have an inheritance in the same. Now let me ask. Can a child be adopted by any other method? No, there is no other way.

Again, my father was not a citizen of the United States. He liked the democratic laws of this country, and he wanted very much to become a citizen of it. Now there is a law governing the adoption of foreigners, and making of them citizens of the United States. In the covenant he made with the commonwealth of this country he agreed to keep the laws, to do his part in the paying of taxes (tithes), and in times when the honor and dignity of the land of his adoption was at stake he would shoulder arms and defend the same.

Then he in turn should have some blessings in the way of protection, a home, and the rights that belong to any citizen. But remember, friends, he must obey the law, the whole law, not a part of it. Suppose he had said to the judge: "I want to reserve the right to steal or to kill a man if I should take a notion; and I don't want to pay any taxes; or go to war to defend this country. And judge! I don't like the way you swear people into citizenship. You just let me dictate the covenant and I shall be pleased to become a citizen of your country."

The judge would have said: "Get out, we don't need you here." You all smile, I notice. Well, these are facts. Are they not? I am glad my father was not such a man, for he has been a staunch defender of the land of his adoption these many years.

Paul, Seeking Citizens for Christ's Kingdom

According to this predestinated plan Christ came to establish his kingdom among men, and adopted to himself children. (Or citizens. See fifth verse.) He brought with him the law of adoption, which he called the gospel, and he promised that everyone who would obey this gospel should have a place in his kingdom.

He called Paul by his Spirit and sent him out as a servant and an apostle to gather citizens for the kingdom of Christ. Paul took with him the word of truth, the gospel of salvation. (Verse 13.) It was to be the standard by which he was to measure men and women. If they did not and would not come up to this standard, they could have no part in this government or family of Jesus Christ. I often wonder why some people desire to take away a part of this beautiful standard. Do you not know that to lower the standard is only to lower the value of men and women? I say let the law be in its fullness just as Christ intended, then it will be the power of God unto salvation.

Paul went down to Ephesus, and he found some people there who thought they were citizens of the kingdom. (Acts 19: 1-6.) But it seems they had been deceived. Was it not a fine thing Paul had with him the word of truth, the gospel of salvation, and by it he was able to measure the standard of those honest people, and convince them they had been deceived. These baptists at Ephesus were far different from the Baptists of to-day. They did not get offended when Paul told them they had been deceived and want to run him out of town. No, sir! When they had listened to the preaching of Paul and were convinced that the government of Christ was a good government, one in which they would have rights, and would have an inheritance with Christ himself, and be blessed with wisdom, knowledge, understanding, prophecy, and all the spiritual gifts, they expressed a desire to be adopted into the kingdom or family of Christ. Paul knew just what had to be done. For Christ the King had already set the example, by going himself down into the water and being born again in the River Jordan at the hands of John the Baptist.

Paul had the same experience at Damascus when he became a citizen of the kingdom, and he had been told there to go and teach this very same thing. So he knew just what to do to make these honest men citizens of Christ's kingdom. He took them down into the water and baptized them, and then he laid his hands on them and confirmed them citizens or children of the family of Christ, and he bestowed on them that Holy Spirit of promise by which the spirit of prophecy came to them and bore witness that Christ was the Lord. Think how remarkable that is. We are adopted into the family of Christ by the gospel of Christ. We become citizens of the kingdom of God by the laws of God. We become members of the household of faith by the covenant blood of Christ. This is plain, is it not?

Our Home Duties

It is very easy for us to look away back to the times of Paul and think how easy we could have done then. What about to-day, here, and now? Most of us are the adopted children of Christ, just like these Ephesians. We have become members of his family or church; and I say we have not come this far save it is by the covenant blood of Christ. What are we doing to make this family a success? What are we doing to build up the kingdom. Say, let us each one of us set a powerful mirror in front of us, one that is strong enough that we may look down into our very soul. Let us see each one ourselves as others see us. Am I doing my part?

Do you see these words written in big letters "IT IS WRITTEN"? Do they mean anything to me? Have I fully paid my taxes in the kingdom of God? Have I filed with our good Bishop my inventory? This great Government of the United States can not exist without an income. The taxes must be paid. In California the officers can sell the coat off a man's back to pay his taxes. And we think it a good law, for the Government must have the money, or it cannot exist. But not so the gentle law of Christ. How kind and good his laws are. You are the steward or keeper of the property, and he places you on your honor that you will not rob him of that which is rightfully his. See, he has perfect confidence in you and me. He trusts us to do our part in the upkeep of the family, and why should he not trust us? Are we not his children living in his house?

There may be some who will try to excuse themselves because we have so little to schedule. In that case would we stand condemned a thief before God for ten or fifteen cents?

Again a man will say: "I have much goods." Can he not afford it much better than the widow who washes by the day? What would you think of one of your children that would try and hide away part of the things that would add comfort and cheer to the home? Suppose your son would not render a true account of the money he earned at Brother Brown's, mowing his lawn? Suppose he would refuse to tell you anything about it at all, how would you feel? Still he is a child of your household and enjoys the comforts of the home. Let us ask ourselves, Are we standing in his shoes relative to our duty in the household of God, or the family of Jesus Christ? "It is written," pay your taxes.

Do I Go to Church?

Did you ever see a child that would refuse to play with other children and would sulk, make ugly faces, and pout, if he could not have his way about everything? Did you feel as if a little hickory oil applied would do some good? Did you ever notice how such a child could detract from the pleasure of the others? Are you such a child in God's kingdom? Do you stay away from church and sulk on your front porch, because you are offended at the branch officers?

Dear brother, dear sister, if you are in this class get out of it. No matter how you have been treated, hold up your head; be patient; meet your trials with a smile. I tell you it takes the best there is in a man to grin when he is hard hit. A boy smiling with a pair of black eyes and a bloody face, may not be pleasant to some people, but there is something mighty manly about it some way.

So if you don't like the way things are run, you had better come to church and help run them better. I tell you it's a pretty good thing to meet with your brothers and sisters often. The Lord said for us to meet together often. He knew we needed the cheer and comfort we would find in the company of one another. And then you see, when the family is all there the Lord can be there also at the head of the household. We should be there, for he might have something he wanted to tell us regarding our duties, and how could he tell us if we were not there?

I tell you we have a lot of things to think about in this latter-day work. We should be very thankful that the gospel of Christ found us worthy to be numbered with the family of Jesus Christ. And we should always come and eat at his table, where the sacrament of the Lord is served. It is our right, and we should in no wise neglect this important service, for it means life to us and life to our home, the church. How many Saints have died and branches have died because of their neglect along these lines!

Let us do the duty that falls to our lot and it may be said of us as Paul said of the faithful Ephesians:

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the buildings, fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord.—Ephesians 2: 19-21.

It has been estimated that the direct cost of the war was 186 billion dollars, and the indirect cost by loss of production 151 billion dollars, making a total of 337 billion dollars. This has greatly increased national debts on the part of all the participants. It is estimated that the national debt of Great Britain is now 45 per cent of her wealth; that of Russia, 63 per cent; of France, 55 per cent; of Germany, 58 per cent; of Italy, 50 per cent; and of Austria-Hungary, 96 per cent. Of the United States it is only a little over 10 per cent, but even this represents a tremendous burden.

WORLD MEETING OF PROTESTANT CHURCHES

A call has been issued for the meeting at Geneva, August 12, 1920, of delegates from the commissions representing the different Protestant churches preparatory to the World Conference on the Faith and Order of the Church of Christ. This preliminary conference expects to be in session two weeks, and discuss where the world conference shall be held, as well as what subjects shall be discussed, what preparation shall be made for discussion, the basis of representation, and the executive direction of the preliminary arrangements. Not more than three delegates are to be presented and to be named by any commission. Personal expenses will be met by the delegates, and the commission and churches which they represent. General expenses, it will appear, are to be met by the American Episcopal Commission. This includes preliminary cablegrams, the hire of halls, committee rooms, printing, salary of clerks and interpreters. It is another sign of the times showing the appreciation of the need of greater unity, and appreciation of a return to the primitive Christian church. Robert H. Gardiner, secretary of commission states that nearly all of the invitations to churches throughout the world which accept the fact of the Incarnation to unite in arranging for a world conference have been sent out, and most of them have been accepted, the Church of Rome being the only one that has refused.

CHURCH UNITY IN INDIA

The United Church Herald, published in India, comes out strongly in favor of church unity and the episcopacy which has come down from the Christian church. Not an autocratic episcopacy, but a constitutional one with councils, synods, and general assemblies, to direct, advise, and help. It states that the divided church in India does not possess the problem that it does in the western countries, since the divisions mean nothing to the Hindus.

The Bishop of Madros states four conditions of unity:

1. The acceptance of Holy Scripture as the ultimate standard of doctrine.
2. The acceptance of the Nicene Creed.
3. The use of the two sacraments of baptism and Holy Communion in accordance with our Lord's command.
4. The acceptance of the historic episcopate.

To this program our most serious objection would probably be the latter. We recognize clearly the priesthood as established by God, and do not accept the episcopate as handed down through history, as it has long since lost its authority.

SOCIAL UNREST

Charles A. Miller, in The Outlook for January 7, has an excellent article on the reasons for the underlying unrest. He is, himself, a manufacturer, and he is a capitalist, and confesses that he was at a loss for sometime to understand the reasons for dissatisfaction. He could find many incidents of injustice, but not sufficient to justify the attitude taken. He finally finds the explanation in a statement of Herbert Hoover, to the effect that the impulse is a demand for a better division of wealth from industry. Starting from this point, Mr. Miller notes that the contest between capital and labor has been unfair, because capital can always wait, while labor cannot, not having an accumulation of old capital to fall back upon. If labor waits, it means starvation, not only for labor, but also for the children of labor.

Because of this fact, capitalists have secured labor at the lowest possible price. They have also done so for the economic reason of competition, and they cannot afford to pay more than a growing wage, as otherwise they would necessarily go under.

A third reason is, that capital is as a rule, only vicariously represented by superintendents, managers, and officials. The real capitalists are not present at the meetings, hence the representatives of capital have felt it a duty to those who paid it to have to labor as small a part of the new wealth produced by them both as it could.

For these, and other reasons, labor has only received as much as was necessary to get the work done. If sometimes it has received a good wage providing luxury, it has been because of the small number competent to do the work, so it has been a competitive price and only what was necessary to get the work done.

In readjustment, the other extreme would be to pay to capital only that which is necessary to continue it in business, and develop it, and for all the rest to go to labor. If it go below that point, capital will withdraw, as it has in India. Still capital, must at is peril recognize the necessity and demands of labor, giving the greatest good to the greatest number, and producing stability and progress in industry.

With the increasing intelligence and solidarity of labor, the old advantages of capital are equalized, except only the power of pure inertia, the ability to wait.

This defines the limits of the industrial department. Mr. Miller concedes and urges that an adjustment is needed. The remedy must lie in the spirit of industry. He presents clearly the real difficulty of the problem in the following two paragraphs:

"The danger in this problem is greed—greed on both sides. There is the danger that capital, trusting in its legal rights and in its power to wait, will refuse to labor what labor ought to have. There is the opposite danger that labor will overestimate the share of the new wealth which it can take from capital and will ruin industry. The right of collective bargaining, the open shop, and all the other munitions of the labor war are, after all, but expressions of rights claimed on one side and attacked on the other because of greed on both sides. So fixed has this habit of greed become in this controversy that each party is proclaiming as a virtue the very thing which by unbiased eyes can be seen to be a vice. And so difficult is it to introduce a spirit of altruism where altruism is regarded as bad business that I should almost despair of the outcome if it were not for our experiences in the last five years."

Then he continues:

"For five years we learned the lesson of altruism. . . . And this it is which gives me hope in the present crisis. Only genuine unselfishness, enlightened altruism, will enable us sufficiently to see the point of view of the other man to bring ours into harmony with his. Only by the sacrifice of much to which we are accustomed can we hope to adjust production to new and inevitable conditions. This, unfortunately, we do not yet understand. The clouds will have to grow darker and yet more threatening before either side will realize that the time has come for self-sacrifice. When that time does come, I cannot doubt that the same clear-minded business sense that has enabled our capitalists to surmount every difficulty in our history will combine with the same lofty patriotism which the war disclosed, and bring about such a change in production that the interests of labor and the interests of capital shall both be taken care of with impartiality.

"At the same time, labor has much to learn if its purposes are to be accomplished without disaster to itself. Restriction of output, discouragement of initiative, indifference to the success of the enterprise—these and other outgrowths of the war between labor and capital must go, for the benefit of labor itself, when we have peace. That we shall have peace in the end I do not doubt, whether it be in this generation or not. When it comes, it will simply be the product of the most elementary rule of morality that we know."

PASTORAL

"Oh, My People, Heed My Warning"

(Given by the Spirit through Elder John L. Burger, at London, Ontario, October, 1919. Tune: "My Redeemer.")

Oh, my people, heed my warning,
For all power is in my hands,
And the powers of earth are shaken,
Troubled waters, trembling lands,
Wars, contentions, and commotions,
Scourges, famines, and distress;
'Tis the hour of God's dread judgment,
Caused by human wickedness.

Know ye not that time is hastening?
Can ye not discern my hand?
In that Israel soon shall gather
To their cov'nant promised land?
Israel soon shall hear my gospel;
Gentile times are near the close;
And the Lamanites shall blossom
As the lily and the rose.

Like a lion soon shall Jacob
'Mong the nations proudly tread
Suck the milk of Gentile kingdoms,
Filling them with fear and dread.
So their armies then shall gather
Thinking thus the spoil to gain,
And the city shall be rifled,
And the hosts of Israel slain.

Then from Zion the Deliv'rer,
Who was slain on Calvary,
Shall appear among his people
Leading them to victory.
Israel then shall hail her Master,
And shall hasten to obey;
And the fount for sin shall open
For the nation born that day.

See the temple in its beauty,
Built by consecrated hands;
And lost Israel with her prophets
As they come from foreign lands.
Soon amid the clouds of heaven
Joyous shouts of praise shall ring,
As the angel hosts of heaven
And the ransomed greet their King.

One of the many questions frequently discussed before the war as a problem of ever increasing interest, was the necessity for afforestation. New forests are needed, both for the sake of the wood, the primary consideration, and also to secure the indirect influence on the rainfall.

It is urged that a heavy forest keeps the air cool, both in the forest and above it, hence increases precipitation, while the protected ground and leaves hold the water, so that it sinks down instead of quickly running off.

The results of the war have made this a question of vital interest, since great forests have been destroyed, and the need of reforestation is keenly felt.

Hence it is no surprise to note the organization of a festival of trees in Italy, for the purpose of restoring first, the forests used in the war, and then extending it to other bare places.

A Pastor's Notes

The need for the gathering with conditions under our control looms large

I have just read your editorial, "Consecrated and able men," and I think it is splendid. I think that we agree on the fundamentals, in most things. I have recently advanced, I trust, along a certain line, regarding theater-going; it is that Saints must abandon them entirely. I have been many years coming to this point, and I know that my position is radical; but the standard must be high and much advanced, in order that the "mob" may not lose sight of it.

It is said that David Hume's mother said to him, on her day of death: "David, you have taken from me my hope in Christ; what do you give me in this day of death?" The young will ask of me the same question, concerning my denying them the right of the "show." And what shall I answer? I feel that many, many things can be given them, but it is a problem to know how many can be taken into the house of God. "There is the rub." What we seem to need is to have our family gathered into stakes, where we can have assembly halls, and without disturbing the "atmosphere" of church rooms, supply every need of the social instinct.

This gathering business is looming big as a crying need of the age. It is probable that, as with the baptisms for the dead in the river, God will permit things in scattered branches that he will not favor when we are gathered and able to provide halls for our social gatherings.

To-night, we introduced the lantern at the Sunday service. We have over forty slides (colored) on the life of Christ, and have also Brother Griffiths with us, who, doubtless, will speak on some of the scenes. This is young people's week. We have voted to make the last week of each month distinctly emphatic in the service of the young people.

No fears possess me here. There is chance for much improvement, but many testify that we have improved at least fifty per cent. There should be no effort on our part to minimize the awful opposition arrayed against us; we are certainly fighting the world, flesh, devil—and these three are one.

As a church we are far below the standard, in operation at least. It seems that we have had the age of learning the gospel, of preaching the gospel, and now it is the age of living by the gospel. The last war gave the acid test to the veneer of so-called Christianity, and there is none left—no veneer. Even a bishop of the Church of England is crying out that there is no morality in England. We know what this country is like.

From a District President

In some of the branches we have discovered some politics being resorted to in order to keep certain persons in office, it seems to be the idea that certain families were the only ones who could do the work, the result being that others have become discouraged and stay away, feeling that they are not needed. It has been our effort to get new material into the offices in the auxiliaries, and thus break up some of these little family circle monopolies. In most of the cases the changes are taken kindly.

We notice that a great many times factions in the branch have their origin in the Sunday school and Religio elections, so we have given special attention to these functions and believe we have prevented some at least. Thus far we have been invited to preside at all the business sessions when present and have accepted, though always requiring the regular presiding officer to open the meeting, state the nature of the business, and get the approval of the body for his invitation for us to preside before taking the chair.

Our effort is to the end that every ordained man shall be made to feel that so long as he carries a commission from the church, that he is expected to give service in harmony with the calling indicated in his license. In the letter we sent out last month, among other questions was this: "What can we do to help you? In response to this we are receiving such replies as this: "You have done more to help me by answering questions pertaining to branch affairs than anyone I have worked under."—A branch president. "You have already helped us, all of the priesthood, by the timely instructions you have given us."—A deacon. "Since your visit here and the thought being impressed that the local priesthood are not especially called to preach, it has seemed to open up before me a broader field of opportunity, etc."—A teacher.

From our correspondence with these men we learn their mental as well as spiritual standing, their capacities and limitations, so we can be of greater help to them in finding for them the thing they can do and make good.

An excellent discussion on an important subject. Everyone who has tried it, realizes the difficulty of holding the attention of children.

Of all things that man can do, the most blessedly fruitful is wise talking to children. This is the supreme art. No sculptor molds a statue so superb as a growing life. No artist has ever painted a picture that compares with a lovely character. The architect cannot rear a building, the poet cannot write an ode, the inventor cannot design a machine, that is worthy to stand for an instant beside the completed, living, loving, achieving product of wise teaching.

If this is true—and it is true with an emphasis that men are only beginning to feel—then no art is so well worth learning, so well worth the spending of time and the taking of pains, as the art of talking to children. And how little the art is studied! How much attention, even in the training of ministers and of secular teachers, is paid to the things that are to be taught, and how little is paid to the vitally important means of getting the things that are to be taught into the minds and lives of the boys and girls! How much weak, flabby and uninteresting talk is addressed to the poor innocents! But they have their happy and appropriate revenge. They do not listen to it, or pretend to!

I suppose the first of all faults in talking to children—as, indeed, is commonly recognized—is the fault of "talking down" to them. Why down? If we must all become as little children, if their characteristics are, on the whole the standard of the kingdom of heaven toward which we profess to be striving, why not talk up to them? Would not reverence be a more appropriate attitude than condescension?

Profound Respect the First Essential

The first essential for all successful talking to children, is a profound respect for them. We are to respect their purity, the keenness of their fresh, unspoiled minds. We are to value their good opinion, and count their love a very crown of glory. We are to enjoy them, to like to be with them, to love them dearly.

I have heard persons say, without at all realizing the depth of their confession, "I cannot seem to care for children. They tire me." And I have heard those same persons complaining peevishly because children would not be influenced by them. Men and women of brilliant intellects are sometimes complete failures as talkers to children, just because they do not care for children; and the children, in about one fourth of a second, find it out! Not to care for children is not to care for the first essential entrance into the kingdom of heaven. One who does not care for that cannot talk helpfully about religious matters to children or anyone else.

The first essential, then, for talking to children, is to like the children. The second is to like to talk. If your tongue is stiff, if talking is awkward for you, if you shrink from it and do not leap toward the chance for it, then you will not get in touch with the children. They have no trouble in talking, and they cannot understand yours!

The cure for this very real difficulty is just talking. As Edward Everett Hale says in his advice to those that would become public speakers: "Make a speech whenever anyone is fool enough to ask you to." Lose no opportunity of talking to children. Talk to them at their play. Fling little bits of talk at them as you pass them on the street. Talk with them one by one and in groups. Watch yourself. Watch others that do it better than you. Learn from your failures. If the children draw away from you, if they are reserved in your presence, or, if they persist in showing you the worst side of their natures, the fault is not in them, nor is it in you if you really love them; it is in your manner, and manners can be changed. Be satisfied with a little improvement, however gradually it comes. Art is long, and this is the greatest of all arts.

Have Something You Want to Say

The third essential in talking to children is to have something you very much want to say. It must be something very definite; you must know exactly what it is, and you must be on fire with impatience to get it said. Is not that the way the children talk? The child is fairly bursting with his news or his thought. He quivers with eagerness to speak it. He cannot be repressed. If compelled first to raise his hand, that hand is waved excitedly. That is the way children talk to one another, and they will not respond to any other manner in you.

Here is a teacher without any clear-cut idea of the lesson to be taught, without any clearly discerned climax toward which the lesson is to be conducted, and without any ardor of longing to make a certain impression and produce a certain result. Can this vagueness, this indifference, attract the business-like children? Watch a girl rush in to her playmate's house. "Oh, Belle! Something's going to happen! Guess what!" Then compare it with the way you go at the teaching of the Sunday school lesson, and draw your own conclusions.

Know How You are Going to Say it

If the third essential for talking to children is to have something you very much want to say, the fourth essential is to know just how you are going to say it. To be sure, the children form no plan for their talk with one another; but here that talk ceases to be a model, for it is scrappy, interjectional, communicative, but not constructive. It is a whiff here and a whiff there, and in the meanwhile they are racing all over the house. Our Sunday-school talk with them must be something far higher and more difficult. The plan of it cannot be trusted to the inspiration of the moment.

The best talkers to children, those whose talk moves most easily and brightly and with the least apparent effort and premeditation, have meditated the most earnestly and carefully upon it beforehand, have perfected their plan and drilled themselves in all its details with a minuteness and an assiduity that would be the marvel of the poor teacher or even the average one. They leave nothing to "the inspiration of the moment." They know that moments have inspirations quite in proportion to the moments of thorough preparation that have preceded them. Their seemingly off-hand remarks are thought out and led up to. They leave nothing to chance. No art leaves anything to chance.

This ardor of plans and preparation is what saves a man when he is called upon suddenly to talk to children entirely without preparation. I remember visiting a Sunday school once with Hezekiah Butterworth, and I shall not forget my trepidation when asked to speak to the children in the presence of that master of the art. But my long habit of planning talks to children came in play. Fumbling hastily and despairingly in my pockets for some object that might give me an idea, I hit upon two lead pencils. "What does the lead pencil do?" I asked myself. "It expresses something," I answered; and I had my talk. With my hand still in my pocket, I broke off the lead in one pencil so that it did not show at all, while the other was left well pointed. Then I stepped confidently before the children.

"What is this?" I wanted to know, holding up the maimed pencil. It was a pencil. They were sure it was. I had my doubts. What does a pencil do? It writes, they told me. So I took a piece of paper from my pocket and showed them that the little stick of wood could not write. Then I proposed that we ask the stick of wood itself. They agreed, and I began to hold a conversation with the pencil, placing it close to my ear to get its replies and pass them on to the children. The pencil's name, it appeared, was Mr. Brokenoff. He came from a Russian family. He was a lead pencil, but his lead was far down in the wood, where it did no good. But he wanted to know why the children were laughing at him. Some of them belonged to the Brokenoff family, too. I asked the children if they wanted him to explain. Of course they did. So the pencil in a faint little squeak that I had to interpret, told about the child that never said "Thank you," to human beings or to God; and the child who "knew it, but couldn't tell it," and the child that didn't answer when spoken to, and other children that may have had good thoughts and kind thoughts in them, but did not get them out on their tongues. The children admitted that all such folks belonged to the same family as poor Mr. Brokenoff.

Then I produced the sharpened pencil, and introduced him as Mr. Pointed. A similar dialogue was held with him, with more hopeful results. He belonged to the bright, happy family of those that speak out the gratitude and love and knowledge that are in their hearts. The children all wanted to belong to his family.

That simple little talk, to which the children listened with all their eyes, ears, and brains, I have since greatly amplified with the aid of a jackknife and other apparatus; but the essence of it came to me in that flash of suggestion as I felt in my pockets for something to talk about. I describe it as an illustration of the extemporaneous ability that is the result of long planning and practice, and that never, never comes otherwise.

I describe it also as an illustration of one or two essentials of effective talk to children about which I wish next to speak; and the first of these—the fifth of my list—is animation. I do not mean that nervous, Jack-in-the-box sprightliness which so many affect when they come before the long-suffering young people, but I mean the same sort of animation which the children themselves so abundantly exhibit—their faces shining with interest, their eyes sparkling, their hands gesturing, their minds alert. The children are themselves so much alive that they endow with life everything that they touch. You must be and do the same. If you give such a pencil talk as I have described, you must handle that pencil, not as if it were a bit of dead wood, but as if it were a tiny little man.

Picturesqueness

The sixth essential is akin to that, namely: picturesqueness. Talk concretely and not abstractly. Of course it helps wonderfully to have some object in your hands, if only a broken lead pencil; but what I mean just now is the translation of truth into life. For example, I did not make Mr. Brokenoff speak of "the lack of self-expression," or even of "a failure to manifest gratitude." He squeaked out, "There's a girl down there, and someone gave her a piece of candy yesterday, and she never said "Thank y' ma'am." Don't talk to the children about covetousness; talk about old Mr. Grind, who holds a dime so close to his eyes that it shuts out all the rest of the world; or, talk about Mr. Mean, who keeps the deacon waiting with the collection box while he hunts for the smallest coin in his purse.

A Bit of Fun.

From that same pencil illustration I deduce also my seventh essential, namely: a bit of fun. The life of the little talk was the pretended conversation with the pencils, the holding them close to my ear, the requests that they "speak just a little louder, if they can," then asking the children if they could hear. All children are fun-loving, and a little whiff of play or joke will wash down their minds a deal of wholesome truth. For example, I have one talk which I call "Jimmie's Shoes." It is a piece of moralizing—stiff moralizing—from beginning to end; but the children never suspect it, because with almost the first sentence I trot out two dirty little shoes—boy's shoes—with stuffed red stockings rising out of them as natural as life, and through all the talk they are performing their antics just as if the live Jimmie were in them—kicking, stamping, running away from school, loitering on errands, scuffling through the dust and mud, and the like, until, after suitable experiences, Jimmie's shoes begin to walk in the right way.

Such a bit of fun will carry any talk, however serious inherently, to a triumphantly successful conclusion. But what if—as some folks say—you "have no fun in you"? What if fun is not natural to you? Then change your nature! Just make a beginning at it, and see, to your delight, how the ability will grow. At first your fun will be elephantine, very likely; but in time it may become—well, even kittenish!

The eighth essential for talking to children, and the last I shall name is, that it must touch life in its eternal interests. Children are idealists. We are to be practical in our talk with them, but it must be a practicality that takes hold of heaven. Through all our fun must run the golden thread of an earnest purpose. All our planning must have one goal, and that is character.

"This one thing I do" is the secret of success in talking to children, as in everything else; and the one thing is soul-saving. To that one end Paul used many means, and so must we; but always in strict subordination to the one end. Many, when they set out to talk to children, make the talk itself the virtual end. It is too elaborate, it has too many points, it confuses with its chemicals and its drawings and its stories and its acrostics. No real impression is made, but merely a sort of rainbowish blur. A talk to children should be simple and clear, and brief enough to admit of repetition and emphasis. Every Sunday school lesson has one teaching which should be made to stand out like the Matterhorn. Don't make of it a perplexing mountain range.

Keep yourself out of sight.

And above all things, keep yourself out of sight! Talking to children is not a matter of talk, but of children; not a matter of showing off your own skill or tickling their fancy, but a matter of life or death, for time and eternity. It is, as I said at the beginning, the most serious and important work in

THE FORUM

Is the Church Becoming Worldly?

BY T. W. WILLIAMS

Some of the devoted and earnest members of the church are alarmed lest the church become worldly in its aims and purpose. They note the various changes taking place in the church with apprehension. They fear that worldly innovations and customs will be introduced into the church to the utter overthrow of the foundation principles on which the church is builded.

I do not share this fear. I believe that God has established the church for the last time; that it will not "be thrown down" or "given to another people." I am assured that God has more interest in the church than I can possibly have and that any tendency looking to the end anticipated by my brethren will be circumvented by him. I have faith in God; faith in his church; faith in the men whom he has selected to look after and care for the interests of the church.

We are not called to be hermits. God does not demand that we withdraw from the world. He does desire that we be not partakers of the evil of the world. He expects us to avail ourselves of every means and instrument which will assist us in our work. It is not required that we become so fanatical that we will refuse thus to avail ourselves simply because said instrument or means did not originate with the church.

Let it be borne in mind that a great many things which are now used by the church to further its work and worship originated with the world. The organ is a product of the world. The church had nothing to do with its invention. It has been used in saloons and theaters for centuries. It has kept time for the brothel and the show. Does it follow that we are getting worldly minded because we have taken this wonderful instrument of melody and made it a part of our church worship? The piano comes to us from the world—not the church. It has the same history as the organ. Shall we discard it lest we become worldly minded? The violin has been dubbed the "devil's charm" and not without reason. Its music has helped to fan the flame of lust, and unholy passion. It has lured unsophisticated youth to sin and destruction. It is altogether a product of the world and for centuries was excluded from all religious services. Are we becoming worldly minded because we have converted it into an instrument of the church? Are we really deceived when, under its spell, we feel, or think we feel, communion with God? It will take much more than apprehension to convince us of this.

Most of the hymns in our Hymnal and Zion's Praises are the product of men and women who were never affiliated with the church. Take such hymns as "Abide with me," "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "Am I a soldier of the cross," "Come thou fount of every blessing," "My faith looks up to thee," "My God how wonderful thou art," "Jesus lover of my soul," and a host of others which are constantly used in our services; all of them are the product of the world. Are we worldly minded when we use them?

If we are to discard everything which has emanated from the world we will be under the necessity of discontinuing our church worship until such time as we have found (if it be possible to do so) satisfactory substitutes.

Are not some of our people straining a point here and allowing their fear and apprehension to warp their judgment? I think so. I am unalterably opposed to the use of any medium which will, in the remotest degree, intrude upon our devotional life, or weaken our spiritual purpose. I am in favor of taking advantage of every opportunity which will intensify this purpose, regardless of what use it may have been put to by the world.

We cannot altogether judge the present by the past. We cannot do so if we admit progression. If the church is moving forward it follows, of necessity, that we will occupy in new fields; that we will require added facilities to occupy therein. We can not hark back to the days of our fathers and cry, "What was good enough for father is good enough for me." This is the sin of sectarianism. Let us not become "worldly" and emulate them in this. We will not discard the essential things of our religion. We will improve upon our human makeshifts. The present must be tested in the light of the present and not with the light of the past. The light of the present embraces the light of the past with a plus. The Jews judged Jesus by their distorted concept of the law of Moses and hanged him to a tree in fanatical zeal lest some one would say something or do something in a different way from what their fathers had done. I venture the opinion that Jesus said and did many things for which there was no warrant or provision in the law of Moses.

Jesus was considered exceedingly "worldly" because he ate and drank with publicans and sinners. When he went out and plucked corn in the fields and ate it on the Sabbath day his act was unforgivable on the part of those who thought they understood the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Some may be "worldly" in refusing to go ahead. They may be "worldly" in hugging the shore. They may be "worldly" in standing still. They may be "worldly" in clinging to traditions. They may be "worldly" in being so blinded by their prejudices that they cannot recognize a good thing when it appears. It is an unfortunate situation when men become followers of the world in standing still and indulging in self-satisfaction and decry their neighbors who are going on to perfection.

Early last summer, I prepared the manuscript entitled, "Mission of the Religio." This appeared as an article in the "Arena" department of the Autumn Leaves. It was subsequently published in pamphlet form. Each district vice president of the Religio has received a copy. Several thousand copies have found their way into the homes of the Saints.

The article was prepared to meet the new conditions confronting the Religio department resulting from the action of the General Conference of the church. Necessarily, it did not follow the beaten track. It could not well do so. It covered a wide range. Several things were only briefly touched upon. We spoke in epigrams. The tersity of language left more to be desired.

It was apparent to the writer that there were divergent opinions within the church. The article was written with a view to focus the thought of the people on this most important subject. In this we have evidently succeeded. The great majority have indorsed our position; in some instances our position has been entirely misinterpreted. Some have written me expressing fear that "the bars are down." They think we are saying to the world "come in and occupy" and to the young of the church "go the limit." It seems needless to say that this was neither contemplated nor yet suggested. In order that the Saints may understand the scope and character and purpose of the work of the Religio Department I am presenting the following.

which man can engage, and, if it is successful, it is the most blessed and fruitful. May we be guided in it by the Spirit of Christ, who spake—to children as well as their elders—as never man spake!—From a leaflet by Amos R. Wells, published by the David C. Cook Publishing Company.

Paul, in his letter to Timothy, a young man just starting out in life pointed out that in the "last days" men would be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." (1 Timothy 3: 4.) This prediction is being markedly fulfilled in our day, as witness the crowds of men and women, young, middle-aged, and even the aged who flock to the various places of amusement on the Lord's Day. Sunday is fast becoming a national holiday. The people are given over to festivities and frivolity and amusement. The moving picture shows and theaters are crowded to capacity. Sunday baseball draws record crowds. Sequestered resorts, of easy access by means of the automobile, find remunerative patronage.

It is estimated that forty-five thousand innocent girls are lured to the brothel every year in the United States through the public dance alone. The moving picture shows pander to sensation and sensualism. Many of the pictures are suggestive and vulgar. Some of them are vile. Such things appeal more readily to the eye than to the ear. Every kind of diversion and innovation is resorted to in order to enlist youthful support. The manufacture and use of the cigarette are alarmingly on the increase. So lax has the world become that otherwise wholesome recreation and clean social diversion has become perverted and it is almost impossible for a person with worthy purpose to find that expression which nature demands without being contaminated.

Church Moves On Behalf Of Her Young

Realizing the great danger to our young people in the indiscriminate and intemperate indulgence in pleasures of this kind the church is endeavoring to supply the wholesome recreation and social activities which, while allowing the greatest possible freedom will, at the same time, protect and shield our people from contamination with those worldly pleasures which draw them from the church, do irreparable harm to themselves, and necessarily mar the lives of others.

We are not doing this to ape the world, but to circumvent the world. We propose to remove every possible excuse for any member of the church resorting to the pleasures of the world. We do desire to conserve the pleasures of religion—the pleasures of good health—the pleasures of happy hearts and joyous spirits. We desire to assist our "aged" people to not forget the "gladsomeness of their youth" and to assist our young people so they will not prostitute their youth and thereby become "old before their time."

God Should Have First Place

I realize, as never before, the imperative necessity of every member of the church, both old and young, having a religious experience. Without such an experience the danger of "going wrong" entirely transcends the possibilities of "doing right." It is the sheet anchor of the child of God.

Above everything else we should love God first. We must sense our relationship with him. It is a grave mistake to decry a religious experience even though some of our religious contemporaries make it the alpha and omega of religion. A religious experience is the heritage of the child of God. Jesus said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." Again Paul referring to the religious experience of the disciples in olden days said, "Ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." (Romans 8: 15, 16.)

Jesus very aptly portrays the divine and human relationship. A lawyer once asked him: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus made answer: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first great commandment, and the second is like unto it—thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." (Matthew 22: 38-39.)

Every boy and girl, every young man and woman should, as early in life as possible, make these two commandments the governing principle of all action. The person who does this will not go far afield. In every human experience he will know how to proceed. Any act which quickens his appreciation for God and his work, which inspires reverence for and devotion to the institutions which God has designed for human uplift, a wise and proper use of those agencies and means which he has provided for the pleasures and happiness of mankind, is commendable. The impulse which inspires men to give themselves to conserve the glory of God and to bring a more abundant life to others is right altogether.

There is urgent and imperative need that the young people of our church sense and appreciate the divinity of this latter-day work. If they would succeed they must experience God in their lives. Without this experience they are not able to combat the evils of the world. The most urgent work before the Religio at the present time is to work for a great moral and spiritual revival among our young people. We should not cease our effort until assured that every possible member of the church can bear his or her testimony to a knowledge of God, the divinity of Jesus Christ, and the truthfulness of the gospel. They should be enabled to relate such an experience as will evidence the new birth and the reception of the Holy Ghost. We will make a serious mistake if we run off on a tangent in other things and neglect this vital feature of our work. Would it not be an excellent thing for each Religio local in the church to make this the aim for 1920?

Anything and everything which detracts from or retards the devotional character of our work should be eschewed. If recreational and social activities are going to lessen the attendance at the prayer meeting; if culture halls, gymnasiums, reading rooms, libraries, and tennis courts are going to reduce the interest in the other activities of the church then we do not want them. I wish to say positively and emphatically that there is nothing to show that these things, when properly administered and participated in, will produce this effect. They will, on the other hand, quicken the spiritual life, stimulate a more intensely devotional spirit, and inspire greater and more unselfish service for others. It is for this very reason that I am advocating the recreational and social activities.

Religio a Normal Experience

Many people hold to the theory that to be religious one must be abnormal; that he must deny himself expression of those desires and impulses which the Creator has endowed him with, and also that his spiritual standing rises or falls in the estimation of God just in proportion as he suppresses or expresses the same.

As a church we do not believe in total depravity. We do not believe that a baby's laugh is sacrilege to God. We do not hold that a boy's whistle even on Sunday is a sin. We have never yet gone to the extreme as to affirm that the only permissible and natural expression for children on the Lord's day is to visit the graveyard and read the verses on the tombstones. We do not believe that children who romp and play in the proper time and place are displeasing their Father in heaven.

Religion makes men normal: the absence of it makes them abnormal. The man who is normal is Godlike. It follows that religion will intensify the normal expression of those faculties of mind, passions and appetites of body, qualities of heart and soul, which the Almighty has implanted in every human being. Religion gives poise and purpose to all of these. The object of religion is to direct rather than to suppress; to conserve instead of to dissipate.

It is a serious mistake to confine religion to devotional purposes. One should make his work conform to his religion. He should make his recreation conform to his religion. This is correspondingly true in all human activities. It is not irreligious to play. It is irreligious to play during devotional services. It is distinctly irreligious to deny to childhood its rightful expression.

Simply because the Holy Spirit is promised as an abiding comforter and compensation for Saints giving up the world it does not follow that every physical and social desire should be suppressed. We have to eat, wear clothes, build houses. It is not a sin to make the food palatable, toothsome, and even delectable. I do not consider it necessary in order to maintain our identity with God that we refuse to cook our food in the same way that the world does. Our clothing should be pleasing, comfortable, and attractive. It is not required that we adopt a garb which has no semblance to the fashions of the world. Sunbonnets and shirts that are not "biled" are not necessarily marks of religion.

Reverence for the House of God

As a people we do not have sufficient reverence for the house of God. We have held the sanctuary of God too cheaply. We have not fully sensed that a church duly dedicated to God becomes his dwelling place. Many, many times in the past my heart has been pained and my mind shocked when I have noted ribald, loud, and boisterous talk both before and after the services. We have, at times, allowed grotesque and unseemly presentations in our Christmas entertainments and socials to the extent that it left no place for reverence and devotion. I have attended business meetings where men and women have indulged in words and actions which were a desecration to the house of God. We must not permit anything to take place in our church houses upon which we can not heartily ask the blessing of God.

One of our leading young men has said, "More is lost by using the church for any and every purpose than is gained by the economy of so using it." This we concede. The auditorium where preaching and prayer were wont to be made should be given over largely, if not altogether, to this purpose. Every man and woman, every boy and girl, should, on entering, feel a reverence for the house of God. At a risk of being considered worldly, I will suggest that we can well emulate the Catholic membership in this respect.

We have been too lax in commending and demanding respect for God's house. Young people should not be permitted to sit in the rear of the church and whisper and giggle and laugh. We should not bring our children up with the idea that they are to run up and down through the aisles of the church during church service. It does not follow that the church house must be closed to those activities which conserve our religious purpose. When I said, "We summon your laughter, your mirth, your joyousness, your hopefulness, your lightheartedness, and your wit, to the service of the church" it was a call to bring all of these qualities under the divine influence. I said, "Come and dedicate all of these splendid youthful propensities to Jesus. A young man or woman who has really been "born again" will understand this. Religion does not make children unnatural or stifle their innocent propensities.

I would much prefer to have the walls of the church building echo and re-echo to the merry laughter of our young people engaged in innocent diversion, at the proper time, than to close the church house and have these same children "running the streets."

It would not be advisable to use the baptismal font for a swimming pool or bathing place. It would not be quite right to lower the Lord's supper to the level of a children's supper party. These are extremes not included in our purpose. Let us hope that the appointment of our church architect will obviate much of the difficulty in this line, at least in the new structures to be builded. The modern church is not built with an audience room and a vestibule. Again I run the risk of being called "worldly" and suggests that we could, with advantage, emulate some other churches in this respect. A church building can be erected so as to conserve the sanctity of the devotional room or rooms, and still provide for other activities. This may be done, not necessarily under one roof, but with a group of buildings suitable for the purpose. A church gymnasium, or library, or reading room, or music hall, should not be far removed from the main structure.

We must not go to the extreme and maintain that because these latter activities are not housed in the church proper that we therefore have license to forget God, even there. It is quite necessary that we maintain a high spiritual regard for every department of the church work.

Cheerful in our Warfare

The Lord speaking to the church some years since said: "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gift of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth, and let them aid and assist as far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph." The Psalmist has said, "Happy is the people, whose God is the Lord." In this sense, "happiness and religion are synonymous." The more true religion I possess the more happy I become. Laughter, at the right time and place, is not sin. Much laughter is sin. The seeking of fun for fun's sake is not the mission of the Religio. We do summon the boys and girls as they are to the service of the church. We call for complete consecration of heart and soul and body. We do not ask them to become abnormal or to stifle innocent purpose or desire.

The person who seeks pleasure for mere pleasure's sake will not find it. The person who seeks pleasure for himself alone will be disappointed. One cannot have anything worth while unless he first give it away; and the more generous he is in the giving the more replete will be his own supply. All real pleasure is intensified to the extent that we share it with others. Happiness multiplies with diffusion; husband it and it dies.

There are pleasures which incite to passion, pleasures which dissipate energy, pleasures which poison and burn, which consume as with fire. These are to be avoided. There are pleasures which are to be cultivated, such as the pleasures of good books, the pleasure of good companions, the pleasure of wholesome recreation, social happiness, and congenial fellowship. True religion meets the demands of men in all of their activities. It gives poise and purpose to pleasure as well as to work.

I am told that Plato and Socrates taught that good is the first purpose, not pleasure or happiness. Granted! But in seeking good we realize the only real pleasure and happiness. Communion with God is the highest good. Young people should possess it. Possessing this communion, they may carry it into all of their activities.

It is not wise to hold children down on the theory that they should "be seen and not heard." Young people should not be impelled to form the opinion that religion is only for old people and dispeptics. The way to avoid this conclusion is for those of us who claim to have religion to cease being old and get rid of our dyspepsia. As Brother Burgess has said: "The man of God should not be one who seeks to save his own little soul and so gets off on the top of the mountain where, from lack of bathing he surrounds himself with the odor of sanctity and claims purity because he is not in contact with his fellow man."

The only genuine and lasting pleasure comes from doing the things which are right. Right thinking leads to right doing. Right doing leads to right feeling, and this is true happiness. True joy is to be found in service; it is to be found in study; it is to be found in preserving one's body, in mental and physical diversion, in following the paths of the Lord.

The joy of youth is a wonderful thing. It is the very main-spring of life. And yet youth is serious. It has lofty purposes and high ideals. There is not so much abandonment here as with age. It presents a desire for serving and doing. Will we stifle this joy, and thereby deflect this purpose from the church? The religio says, no!

Abstain from the Very Appearance of Evil

Sin is the doing of anything which injures myself or my fellow man, or which profanes the name and prostitutes the gifts of God. Every wrongful act reacts on the doer. We cannot harm God. We cannot add to his goodness. We can, and should, conform to his purpose. Every command of God is instituted to conserve our welfare. When man sins he alienates himself from God. God loses nothing. Man is the loser. He creates a condition which fortifies God's help and blessing. Sin alienates men from God. Right doing brings us into his presence.

The law of God is not a divine fiat, having no relation to the intent of those who conform or the results which flows from the doing. We do not comply with the command of God simply because we recognize that it is the province of God to command and the duty of man to obey. Duty, in this sense, is not a part of the curriculum of God. Every divine law is the sequence of deliberate consideration on the part of God. He recognizes that certain actions cannot obtain unless the intent of the individual is bad and the effect is injurious and therein lies his restrictions.

Sincerity alone is not an infallible guide. Conscience is a creature of education. But the only thing on which God can work is a man's consciousness which embraces mind, heart, and soul. There is no place in the universe for an autocratic God, and still less place for an autocratic moral law. Actions are not right or wrong according to the mere dictum of God. They are right or wrong in the nature of things. We are asked to obey God for thereby we conserve the unity of the universe, and preserve the right and privilege of all.

Then let us not hark back to Puritanic standards. Denial and sacrifice have their place. There is enough of agony and pain and sadness in the world without our adding thereto. The purpose of the Religio is to displace the sadness, to dissipate the pain and agony and make good the angelic announcement, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men." Suppression and coercion are hindrances rather than helps. Let us emulate God in our treatment of the young. We must show them the right way. We must lead them in the paths of peace, not by coercion and denial, nor by arbitrary harsh discipline, or autocratic domination, but by loving and helping them to find themselves. A child thus educated and trained will feel the urge of self discipline which eventuates in the greatest good.

Perfect Faith Casteth Out All Fear

Apprehension is abortive of faith. The man who trusts God has no fear for the future. A long face, a sour face, a sordid face, a face which registers anxiety and dejection is a sure sign of disconnection from God. Trial and disappointment and difficulty and even age sobers one, but in the midst of all of our trials there is a supreme realization that God rules and governs, and this must banish worry and distrust. There is a vast difference between concern and worry.

Are we to be adjudged "worldly" because it is the purpose of the Religio to cultivate these faculties which make people happy instead of sad? Are we to be charged with apostasy if we seek to be cheerful in our warfare? Again let me say, "The Creator has placed the faculty for joy and mirth and happiness in the breasts of men. One may as well attempt to dam Niagara as to suppress the fountain of perpetual youth."

Children will play; they should play. Young men and women will find diversion and recreation; they should be permitted to do so. The middleaged must have respite from incessant work and service. The aged need those experiences which help them to forget their cares. Our work then is to establish a firm foundation of faith in God, couple this with a genuine religious experience and then proceed to dissipate the clouds, drive away care, abolish worry, and let the joy of living have perfect sway in body, mind, and soul.

Evil Effects of Worldly Amusements

You ask: "Where are worldly attractions leading men and women?" I answer, To the Devil! You will find all too many of our own young people in the procession. You have only to go to the towns and cities where the church is not taking supervision of the social and recreational activities of our membership to learn that it is not an uncommon thing for our young people to visit public dances, whist parties, and sometimes immoral and suggestive bathing resorts. It is because "worldly amusements" are drawing many of our people rapidly to the Devil, that the Religio is insistent in providing suitable and necessary recreational and social activities.

We are not dragging our people back into the chase for fun. We are not seeking to substitute gymnasiums for prayer meetings, or swimming pools for Sunday School. There is no desire to contrast these various activities. Nothing will take the place of the prayer meeting. Every physical and mental activity is secondary to the time of divine communion.

Some Objections Answered

Here is my answer to some of the strictures which have been placed upon our work.

We do not propose the letting up of any part of the devotional work of the church. We do not intend to lower the moral or spiritual standing of the church membership. We have no desire to lessen reverence, either for the church building, or for the institutions of the church.

When we suggest a gymnasium it does not follow that this is to be installed where the people assemble for prayer or preaching. When we suggest a bowling alley some of our people have a vision of a down town pool hall with foul tobacco smoke and an abundance of profanity. This is not contemplated. When we speak of the swimming pool some of the people see half naked girls and almost nude boys lounging on the sand together. It is an illusion. When we speak of the other sports they immediately "see" the young people all filing out of the church and off "for a good time." This is a fear, not a fact.

Each and all of these will be under the supervision of safe and sane Latter Day Saints. When conducted with a view to conserve the morals of the young and the honor and glory of God we will have no such results as depicted above.

Suppose we accord to the wishes of some, and cut out all recreation, and confine our activities to prayer meetings and study classes! What then? You will find many young men and women following after the ways of the world, not because they are innately bad, but because they are expressing normal functions for which you have made no provisions. If the church does not care for this phase of work, the moral destruction of many of our young people must be laid at the door of the church.

How does this work out in practice? In some places, where the work has not been really understood, and where the young people have not had the right kind of a leader, they have gone off on the tangent and neglected the devotional work. I have one letter from a district president of a Religio where for an entire summer, they dismissed the study hour and confined their activities to rambles. He deplores the results! Certainly? Whose fault was it? The district president's fault or the local president's fault? The ramble was all right. Why did they not arrange so that sometime during that ramble, or at its close of it, the young people could gather together and, under the exhilaration resulting from the walk, study the lesson in the Quarterly. Why?

I found the very opposite results in two reunions which I attended this year. The young people were up at six o'clock in the morning ready for prayer meeting. Seventy-five per cent of the young people on the ground attended. The majority of these testified to a knowledge of the truthfulness of this work. At times, there was scarcely a dry eye in the assembly, which was held out in the open with the sky as the dome of our meeting house. These same young people never missed the regular services. They also vied with each other in washing dishes, waiting on the tables, and cleaning up the grounds, etc. Why did they do this? We entered with zest into their social and recreational work. We arranged the time and occasion for these things. They reciprocated. As one of the leading men of the church has written me: "When our young people have their time for recreation at our reunions the prayer services are improved." This will be the case when our church leaders enter into cooperation with our young people.

Brother Joseph Smith had a commendable "worldly" (?) habit. He used to pitch quoits at conferences and reunions! He was never above umpiring a game of ball even after he was too old to participate! We have no man in the church who has a greater capacity for real wit than Elbert A. Smith. I do not believe there is a more spiritual man in the church.

I will have more to say at a future time as to the character and scope of the work contemplated.

Unlearned : Despised

BY E. G. HAMMOND

In the matter of gaining knowledge you can overdo the thing, and it's the excess that damns."

[In the following article, the writer is apparently under some misapprehension as are possibly others, as we have published several letters in favor of unlearning, and against education. We have published, we believe, everything we have received giving that viewpoint. We heartily agree with him in the hope that the discussion will result in bringing us closer together and to a better understanding. We are not sure what he considers the real point at issue. Probably it is near the close of his article, that one can get too much of knowledge.—EDITORS.]

The HERALD has given much space to the question of education for some time, and it hardly can have escaped the attention of any that every view which finds utterance here comes from one side.

This cannot be because there are no different views, for every article bears a strong implication, and many make the open assertion that among the Saints runs a pronounced current of opposite opinion.

If they who entertain different views could get some expression of their notions it might serve as a vent to relieve their feelings some, and it might make the issue a little more specific. Also, I can think it possible for them to make some suggestions that will be of value to anyone who is willing to come to just conclusions.

The Exact Point of Difference

When differences between citizens are examined in the law courts, it is the aim of the court to ascertain the exact point in dispute—the exact point. Then it often happens that there comes some zealous attorney with an array of fine evidence and argument, but all his fine things are excluded because they are not applicable, not sufficiently related to the point in issue.

Well if we could determine the exact objection that makes the difference among us, it seems likely that a lot of fine and beautiful argument, which in itself makes a very pleasant sound, might very well be eliminated, and the matter more readily determined, and the difference healed, in a possible modification of all views. But if we desire to heal the difference, we can make no progress by criticizing people for views they do not at all entertain.

No one, I believe, objects to people studying. Everyone, I think appreciates the word that saith, "Study all good books," etc., but it seems queer that every sermon that urges this scripture on our attention should so adroitly avoid the important qualifying clause that was spoken as a basis for these words.

Supplying emphasis to indicate the point, the entire sentence reads as follows:

"Call your solemn assembly as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 6.

It is not intended to imply by this that no one but the faithless has a right to study but to suggest that there are two ways to come to understanding; by faith and by study. And the reader may consider as we proceed which means has brought the greater light to the world.

So, while we agree that one may come to understanding, to some understanding, by studying books, we do not want it taught that they are the only ones that ever reach that exalted condition. In fact we think they who have made the highest flights have been little cumbered with books.

Learning Without Books

Again, it should not be thought that men cannot study who do not have books. Perhaps the most profound mental engagements ever known to men have been in "some sessions of sweet, silent thought," which were quite independent of any and all books.

I knew a young man who, on being urged to read many books, replied that he had some thoughts of his own he desired to think.

O. W. Holmes says: "There are times when every active mind feels itself above any and all books. When a man can read, his paroxysm of feeling is passing. When he can read, his thought has slackened its hold."

We condemn none for reading, but ask that we be not condemned for venturing a little independent meditation that does not get all its stimulus from the thoughts of other minds, pressed into books. John Baptist lived among the wild beasts in the wilderness, and had not many books, not even the scriptures, probably, and yet Jesus said there were not many greater.

If he were to come to some settlement of the Saints, clothed as he was, with camel's hair and a girdle, barefooted, bare-headed, etc., preaching as he did and everything as it was with him but his identity unknown, I wonder how many of the Saints would be willing to recognize him as one of their elders?

No one objects to our people being learned—under conditions. Perhaps most will agree that "to be learned is good, if they hearken to the word of the Lord." But in the use of this statement it should be remembered that it is only a splash, a spray thrown off from that deeper, major current of feeling, which found deep and groaning utterance in the scripture that saith;

"Oh the vainness, and frailties and foolishness of men! When they are learned they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves."—Book of Mormon, p. 109, vs. 58, 60.

Certainly no one should condemn a man merely because he is learned, and certainly God would not condemn a man for that. But the word says:

"The wise, and the learned, and they that are rich, who are puffed up because of their learning, and their wisdom and their riches: yea, they are they whom he despiseth."—Book of Mormon. p. 111.

Not Many Wise Chosen

It is true, not only that not many wise, and not many learned have been chosen of God, but that they have been despised and rejected, and held in contempt as a class, with a few exceptions.

Paul himself, who was a learned man, and one of the exceptions, said that the wisdom of this world was foolishness before God, and useless. He did not use it himself (1 Corinthians 1-17) although there was considerable demand for it among the Greeks, and he recommended that they who had it would forget it and become fools, as to the wisdom of this world. "For the Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise that they are vain."

His mind resembled that of one who, within the last few years said that the thing we most needed in America was an "institution of unlearning."

One objection to too much worldly learning is, that the mind heavily charged with it is apt to approach every question on lines of the world's thought, when there are better lines. One said:

"We may be very dull folks. But we get a glimpse, now and then, of spiritual possibilities, where we, dull as we are . . . may sail in vast circles round the largest compass of earthly intelligence."

Tendency of Learning to Engender Pride

Another charge against learning is its overwhelmingly general tendency to make people proud. When Saints get it, if they develop the pride that so usually attends it, the first symptoms are apt to show a pronounced tendency to apologize for the doctrine of Jesus Christ, followed by strained efforts at twisting the scriptures so as to come into harmonious relations with the cultured, the erudite, the masters of the earth, the bullies of infidelity. They may try hard for a time to render devotion to both lines, but presently they rely on science more than revelation, and love the lofty more than the humble.

Think it not impossible for this class to be thick among us. Paul warned against them as though they were in the church, "oppositions of science . . . which some professing, have erred from the faith."

Isaiah makes an interesting reference to God as one who "frustrateth the tokens of liars, and maketh diviners mad; and turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish." (Isaiah 44 25.)

Liars, diviners, wise men distinct in the points of attack, but all of one class in the tactics of their opposition.

The wise say they are not opposed, and that the science of to-day believes in God and the scriptures, when you understand.

The diviners say, "We are not opposed, either. We believe in God and in Jesus Christ. We are mediums—so was Jesus, the greatest medium ever."

Then cometh the liars, with the same charming suavity of manner to say,—"Well, it is hardly so." "Ye shall not surely die." . . . la, la . . . "I am the son of God," too, "Worship me"

Shakespeare certainly spoke with great accuracy when he said: "The prince of darkness is a gentleman."

It should help us to get proper bearings if we would reflect that when Isaiah spoke of the coming forth of this work, hundreds of years before, and of the words of those who had slumbered, he said, "The wise shall not read them, for they have rejected them.—Isaiah 29: 22.

God's Use of Unlettered Men

We should be careful of any tendency to become too proud to have the work represented by unlettered men, for it was certainly God's design that it should come forth, and be carried on and continued to the ends of the earth, and spoken before kings and rulers by the weak and the simple, and that the weak shall break the wise. (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 3.)

"Wherefore I have called upon the weak things of the world, those who are unlearned and despised." (Doctrine and Covenants p. 78.)

Let us not suppose that He chooses to start a work, and accomplish the most difficult parts with ignorant men, and then all of a sudden come to a point where he cannot proceed to consummation with the same class. He was talking of and rejecting the service of the wise when he said, as he committed it to the unlearned, "I am able to do mine own work." (Isaiah 29: 22.)

Its continuation and consummation seems to me very likely to be an example of the weak confounding the wise. (Doctrine and Covenants 324.)

The weak, the unlearned, the common man: this is the class of people that God has seemed always to love most; and if anyone feels ashamed of that class, or thinks them unworthy to bear the vessels of the Lord, let him go back to his mother's knee and learn the Lord's other prayer, saying:

"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."—Matthew 11: 27.

Really, God wants a part in our conflicts, and in our triumphs, too. But when Goliath meets Goliath the match is equal, and there is no need of God. When scholar meets scholar it is so.

But when Goliath meets a shepherd boy, and the scholar a fisherman, there is occasion for God to take a hand, that the meek one should not stand alone.

Pride is our sin. We cannot stand it to be different from the world, nor inferior to their elegance. We want our preachers to look like peachers, and there is beginning to be considerable demand that they have some attainments.

Cannot by Thinking Find Out God

But the knowledge we have above what the world has we did not attain. It came not at all by the attainment of any, but by the gift of God. You cannot by thinking find out God, nor by abundance of study, in books or out. What we have, and all we have come to us as a message from the skies, and our chief duty is to transmit.

It would not have required much culture for the man who was in the city when the news came to run to the village and announce that the Germans had quit, the war was off, and ours the victory. And whoever had a son, or husband, or lover exposed to the danger of war's continuance would appreciate the news none the less for the annunciator's being a rustic from the hills, with his staff, who used poor grammar and wore queer clothes. It is the message we want, not the messenger.

It is so with God's message. And it may be necessary for him to send it in tolerably plain vessels, so that our hearts become engrossed, not with the messenger, but the message.

Our message will appeal to common people mostly. "The common people heard him gladly."

A common man can best be appealed to by one of his class who pretends to no attainments that could give root to feelings of any superiority. If the great majority of mortals belong to the common class, and the weak and unlearned are to carry the work before the kings and rulers, it looks like there is some reason to suppose that the bulk of the Lord's messengers will be of the common kind.

Overdoing Our Search for Knowledge

To be sure the desire for knowledge is a good and legitimate desire as the desire for food, and raiment, and riches, and love are good desires. But like as is the case with all these, so in the matter of gaining knowledge you can overdo the thing, and it's the excess that damns.

We should seek knowledge somewhat warily, therefore, reflecting that it is, perhaps, the most dangerous subject man ever meddled with, and that it was the tampering with this same subject that brought the original fall. Bacon very well says:

"The desire for power in excess caused angels to fall."

"The desire of knowledge in excess caused men to fall."

You can certainly get too much of it.

Recent years saw the advertisement of a book, the title of which was Wander-Lust. And that there can be such a thing as knowledge-lust I have no doubt at all. It seems fairly implied in Doctrine and Covenants, I think, in some statement to the effect that we should ask for proper information, of God, and not to consume it upon our lusts.

Wherefore it seems that we should develop no spell for the world's wisdom, and that, indeed, it is possible to overstress its real importance. Nevertheless we should be careful not to condemn any man merely because he has learning, for they have not all been condemned. Even if a brother should have learning and the affliction of pride that sometimes follows, we should give him time to outgrow his fault, even as we hope for time to outgrow and overcome our own countless, perhaps ranker faults. We should not condemn too readily, as we hope not too readily to be condemned. Then this disposition of indulgence will soon ripen into love, and they who can attain to that state will have no need that any should teach them how to behave towards each other—no, nor towards those who do not attain to it.

The Christian Science Monitor states International Commerce is estimated above 70 billion for the year just closing, against 60 billion for 1918, and 40 billion for the last year before the war. Doubtless high prices have much to do with the figures. England still leads, closely followed by the United States, each doing a business of close to 12 billion dollars. The report states that over 60 per cent of this represents exports.

THE STAFF

Edited by Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short St., Independence, Mo.

What Constitutes a High Degree of Talent?

The possession of real musical talent of a high order, which, in reality, the gift of genius, is a difficult matter to determine. Take for instance the musical child. Many people imagine that if a child can readily "carry a tune," or has a good sense of pitch, or "takes" readily to some instrument, thereby showing some particular facility upon it, or in some other way shows natural aptitude for some of the many branches of music, that therefore such a child is a real musical prodigy and as such should undoubtedly pursue a musical career. The world has been deprived of many a good merchant, or mechanic, or professional man, simply because the parents mistook the child for a musical wonder and forced his life work into musical lines.

As a matter of fact, while the ability to carry correctly a tune and maintain a correct pitch, or the natural aptitude of adaptation to some instrument or the voice, is necessary to the pursuit of any musical career, many a person possessing them may fall far short of being a genius or be able to ever rise above musical mediocrity. The ability to stand high in the musical profession, or to become a composer of eminent merit requires more than merely the talent of musical facility or dexterity. It requires gifts of a high order; a communion with the greater spirit of music, that keeps itself hidden from only the chosen few ordained to be its oracles.

It is hard to classify musical talents or gifts, for there are almost as many divisions of the classification as there are individuals. There is only possible a generalizing; a grouping into a few classes comprising the chief types.

There is the class who have talent for musical appreciation to whom nature has denied the talent for musical expression. Then there is the talent for simple expression of rudimentary musical forms. Next there comes the talent for expression of the higher forms of music, with perhaps the creative instinct manifesting itself in a feeble manner. Lastly, there comes the talent for high and intense appreciation and comprehension of music in its greater spiritual phases, and the ability to express that appreciation and comprehension in both the reproduction of the works of others and the creation of original works. This last is more than mere talent: it is genius. To such God has granted the powers of penetrating the higher mysteries of music; the right to hold communion with not only her visible forms but with the invisible and more spiritual forms as well; to become the high priests of musical service; and to enjoy the divine right of creating for the world its musical masterpieces.

So often is the mistake made in children of gauging them as musical geniuses or prodigies when they but possess simple elementary talent; sometimes of no mean order, but also sometimes of a very mediocre quality.

In analyzing the musical ability of a child one should go deeper than surface indications of a mere liking for music. The subtler qualities of musical appreciation should be thoroughly tested and one should penetrate deeply into the child's nature to see if the soul of music has residence therein. A few simple tests will sometimes satisfy one as to this. Very few children are without a strong and ardent love for music for itself alone. Almost invariably a child likes only the simplest and most direct treatment of a musical theme or melody, with no intricacy of harmony, what harmony there is clinging closely to the three fundamental chords of the scale and their corresponding minor equivalents. An accompaniment of simple thirds or sixths that a cultured musical adult would find too cloying in sweetness is eminently satisfactory to such a childish nature. But as the harmony becomes more complex the childish enjoyment wanes; and when counterpoint, with its interwoven melodies, is employed, the merely musical child finds repugnance and dislike for such music. When, however, a child is discovered who finds beauty and interest in contrapuntal treatment, and real enjoyment in the intricacies of harmonic progression and resolution, and prefers them to a series of uninterrupted consonances, then one can begin searching for the other marks of the genius in embryo.

New Methods

Sister Audentia Anderson, of Omaha, Nebraska, one time active in the work of the choir movement and editor of The Staff, and who has evidently lost none of her interest in the progress of things musical in the church, sends us a very interesting article clipped from the Omaha Bee describing, as its title reads, "A novel way of teaching piano in the Lincoln, Nebraska, public schools." This novel method was then in process of demonstration at the Nebraska State Teachers Convention, held at Omaha.

According to the published account of this new method, it consists of giving to the children of Lincoln schools actual piano instruction, in which much of the work of study and practice was done away from the piano itself. Children of eight or nine years of age were taken in classes of about a dozen to the class and were taught the principles of note reading, accent, rhythm, tone production, and the other indispensable fundamentals of musical instruction in a novel and unique manner, appealing to the child mind and readily comprehended by such. In this way the children were enabled to grasp those too often elusive factors of initial musical training that are so important and upon which so much depends for the child's later welfare in the art. As for the pupil's contact with the keys of the piano itself, he was placed at a table upon which was a reproduction on cardboard of four octaves of the piano keyboard. Upon this the pupils "play" their exercises and pieces, according to the system of the method, confirming their work later on the keyboard of a real piano. In doing this "practicing" they are usually accompanied by some one playing the piece with them on an actual piano, or having it rendered on the phonograph. In this way little girls and boys of very tender age are trained to play some of the easier composition of Kuhlau, Bach and Schumann.

The Kinscalla method it is called, after the name of its originator, who is an instructor in the University School of Music at Lincoln, and who is very enthusiastic and optimistic as to its future. Miss Kinscalla has not only demonstrated her method before the state teachers convention at its last meeting in Omaha, but in the past summer she held two institutes in Lincoln to prepare teachers to conduct classes in her method in other localities. Teachers came from many states to attend this institute, and departed ready to pursue her method in their several stations.

It is, of course, not yet time to determine the degree of success or the permanence of value of the Kinscalla method, for like all methods it must win and maintain its place with mankind. In the brief description of a newspaper article not all can be given and not very much understood concerning it. It appears however, that the method is largely an adoption of new ways of teaching old principles. The description states that much care is given to such things as hand training, position, fingering, rhythm, tone production and quality, perception, etc. This is right. No method can succeed for long that departs from fundamental principles that have won their standing by the tests of time.

But what is the suggestion we should receive from the brief consideration given this new method? The recital of the various features and principles of this new method may be sufficiently interesting to "adorn a tale," but what can we glean from it worthy to "point a moral"?

It is this, and briefly put: All over the church we have choir leaders who are using the same time-worn methods in their work that have served for many years, and are in consequence securing the same meager results. These should strive to find new methods, newer and better ways of doing things, that their work may increase in worth, beauty and efficiency.

Dictum sapienti sat est. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Orchestral Plans for Next General Conference

Brother Robert T. Cooper, director of the Liberty Orchestra, Independence stake, has evolved a plan for orchestral work at the coming general conference that is not only unique but is worthy of support and success.

The object Brother Cooper has in the promulgation of his plan is to provide an illustration of orchestral music for the conference; an exhibition of the value of orchestral music in the church; a working model of orchestral possibilities. In this his plan holds out not mere entertainment alone but an instructive object lesson, as well. If his project meets with success (and we hope it will) it should stimulate orchestral thought and conception throughout the church, and should present both ideas and ideals to orchestra workers.

Just a word as to the Liberty Orchestra. It is an organization of thirty-five musicians of the Independence stake, most of whom are giving their services in the various orchestras of the stake. We have watched this orchestra for some time and have seen it grow steadily in both balance and numbers, as well as in quality of attainment. It is filling a very useful mission in the Independence stake, which mission should grow in both scope and character with time.

Brother Cooper's plan and his published announcement, which will have appeared in both HERALD and Ensign by this time, has the sanction of the First Presidency as well as that of the officers of the general choir movement. It should commend itself heartily to all orchestral workers of the church, and we urge its serious consideration and wish its greatest success.

"Cultivate the Gifts of Music and of Song"

"The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me," saith the Lord, and we are told to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song." Do we fully comprehend what this means? To cultivate means to study and become acquainted with and proficient in the thing studied.

When we are singing in harmony and unity of spirit we know it is acceptable with God; and they that hear are blessed. When our heavenly Father gave this commandment to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song" he did not exempt any. He made mention of "the young men and the maidens", and said, "let not the middle aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them assist so far as their cares will permit." I wonder if we as a people are striving to keep that commandment?

When we are singing harmoniously in our assemblies we feel the spirit of God floating over us and with united effort we are pouring forth praises to our heavenly Father; but if there is discord in our singing it causes confusion. God is not the author of confusion and our singing would then not be pleasing unto him. We have all experienced times when we have sat under the sound of voices of those who have cultivated "the gifts of music and of song," and could almost feel the presence of the angelic hosts joining us with their beautiful songs of praise.

This great gift of song only comes to us in its perfected state through study, qualifying ourselves to be of service to others.

We realize how music calms our fears, soothes our troubles, and gives us a foretaste of that celestial glory in which shall be "songs of everlasting joy." How much better our congregational singing would be if all understood music and how our voices would blend together, rising as one prayer unto God. We should indeed study to show ourselves approved and put forth our best efforts in song. As we are the chosen people of God we should never be satisfied with our present state

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Latter-Day Motherhood

II. The Maiden.

"This girl I sing in naught uncommon,
And very far from angel, yet, I trow,
Her faults, her sweetnesses, are purely human;
Yet she's more lovable, as simple woman,
Than any one diviner that I know!

"Therefore I wish that she may safely keep
This womanhood, and change not, only grow
From maid to matron, youth to age may creep,
And in perennial blessedness still reap
On every hand of that which she doth sow!"

—D. M. Craik.

Daughter mine, you cannot know the feelings with which I am sending you out into this new school life of yours! I have sheltered you so long and so tenderly, close to my side, jealous of everything which would tend to separate you from me, guarding you with every power of my being, from every breath of harm or sin. Now you must be far from me—stand upon your own feet, face your own problems, carry your own heartaches! Oh, that they may be few, and not more grievous than will be for your own strengthening! You know, do you not? that God permits trials that purity and strength may become part of our natures, developed through struggle and triumph. He only asks that we do struggle, that we keep on trying, never give up, or be discouraged.

After all, it is the struggle that is the sign of nobility of soul. Only low natures are content to grovel. We read much of the "divine discontent"—the stirrings and aspirations which lead, by paths fair or rocky, the human soul towards its Great Source. One has said: "Achievement is the pursuit," and another puts it, "The battle is the victory!" One is never beaten so long as he still has the spirit to fight, even though momentarily overthrown. And it is this stanchness of soul, this determination to overcome which is developed of efficiency but continue to study and improve our talents until that great day, "when the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy."

All children should be taught music in some form. It is just as essential as the education of the public schools. The very best music should be placed before them that they may develop a love for good music; and singing should be encouraged in their early childhood.

To more fully appreciate music we must understand it, and to my idea it is food for the soul. I have often wondered why we do not strive in this age of the world to develop our talents in the arts of music and song, as did ancient Israel. Did they have a greater inspiration or appreciation of the value of music than we?

Music and song are the language of the emotions. Many times our hearts have given expression through song. When we are called to pass through sickness and trial, and our faith does not waver in God, we find ourselves bursting forth in song: "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink." And again, in our prayer meetings, when we feel the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, we break forth in praise, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Surely God was good to the human race when he gave to it the gifts of music and song.

Let us then all strive to cultivate these gifts. Not that we all must come to a high state of proficiency, but that we may all understand and appreciate music as it is written, that our songs may rise in unison to God, in praise and thanksgiving for his wonderful gifts to mankind.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND.

through vicissitudes. The trees which bear, through years, the brunt of heavy gales, are the ones whose timbers are stanch and true, trusted to serve well wherever placed. It is the slender trunk of the sheltered which is apt to snap under the first adverse strain.

Doctor Holland, in Bitter Sweet, reminds us "God seeks for virtue, and that it may live, it must resist!" Human souls are strongest which have met most and vanquished most. Temptations faced, difficulties overcome, trials patiently borne, mistakes and vanities put behind, faults bravely eradicated—one by one these experiences will bring to my girlie a strength of character, a clarity of vision, a sweetness of nature, and a nobility of purpose which will make her a blessing and an inspiration to those whose lives touch hers in passing.

I would be with you, dear girl, in your new life I would that I might share in the experiences which come to you; but I know that to be impossible, and not in accord with the purposes of nature. You will be the braver and better for learning to stand alone. My heart's yearning for you is that you may never lose sight of the beautiful ideals we have, in love, set up for you. They have shone brightly through your young girlhood. Many times they have been to you strength and guidance, when your way was not quite easy or quite clearly marked. The many little talks we have had together, when, with reverent hush, we have felt the thrill of God's blessing and approval as we sensed our contact and identity with all life, our oneness with humanity, our inevitable destiny towards Him, the Father of our spirits—these will continue to be towers of comfort and shelter for you, I am sure. You will go back, in memory, over those wonderful moments in your child life, when in reply to earnest questions, you received glimpses of the majesty of your being, the immortal nature of your soul, and the meanings of your life here upon earth. These memories, I pray, shall ever bless and strengthen you.

None of us can answer the age-old questions concerning the soul—its "whence" and its "whither." Of this we may be sure, however, our ultimate end shall be good. It is a movement of all mankind which we cannot resist, however much we may, for the moment, seem to be going downward or backward. Else the power of God's love is not supreme. The swirls and eddies of life, which seem to take us from our course or hinder our progress to the boundless freedom of God's great good, come to seem what in reality they are: brief, transitory and of the moment. By hard and severe experiences sometimes, we are being drawn to see that only that is permanent which is good. Only truth is eternal. Falsity and subterfuge may serve some fleeting moment, but sooner or later are laid low, their futility and impotence made manifest.

Perceiving these things, you, my daughter, will be extremely careful to weigh every thought and impulse before giving it outward expression. You will be putting everything and everybody that comes into your life, under the powerful microscope of this fine discrimination, and thus be able to sense quite accurately, the real natures of the things and people with whom you have to deal. I often think how safe our young people would be, if they could always peer under the mask of formality and veneer, and see everyone as he is seen by the Creator! That of course is impossible to us mortals, and perhaps a foolish wish, born of the desire to shield the innocent from the ungodly.

It is possible, however, for our young people to have such a high conception of worth, such a true perception of values, that they may be reasonably safe from many of the insidious attacks evil is making upon them to-day. Wrong too often comes disguised as right, evil as good, vulgarity as modesty. "What is the harm?" "Just this once," have been the downfall of many. Poor blinded creatures, who cannot see that the "harm" is in violated principle, "once only" being sufficient to shatter the beautiful vase or one smudge enough to destroy the whiteness of a soul. Scientists tell us that every single thought leaves an inerasable track upon a human brain. The record of every act is written, irrevocably, in the book of one's personality, and, in reflex and transmitted influence, upon that of the far generations of the unborn! Isn't that enough to cause us all to ponder well our ways, and see that we line up with the laws of rectitude and right-living set forth by our Great Ensample?

So I am pleading, my daughter, that you will be enabled to walk with innocence and purity, the difficult pathway of youth. Be sure that you may do this, if you will keep in memory the things taught you from your childhood, the impressions you have received for good from many sources, and the urgings of your own spiritual nature.

"Be good, sweet maid, and let those who will be clever;
Do noble things, not dream them all day long!"

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Questions

How is the greatest strength of character gained? To what extent should a child be shielded from care? Responsibility? Disappointment? Temptation? Experience? How may young people be assisted in forming high ideals? To what extent should the serious question of human life and responsibility be discussed with a child? A youth? What is the value of the quiet talk and prayer?

Our Girls

Are we properly interested in our girls? Please note the adjective. If you don't, you are apt to reply, instantly, "Why, of course we are!" In spite of the indignant tone we notice, we again say, "Note the adjective?"

What is proper interest? Evidently it involves some things beside the verbal championing. Christ said, "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." He seemed to recognize the fact that love requires more than words for proof. Is it not so with our interest in things?

We have known of branches where it was almost impossible to get a woman of the desired mental and spiritual caliber to act as monitor for a group of girls. "Let some one else do it" was the response with which most of them met this serious demand. And "some one else" hadn't the time; and "some one else" couldn't give up other activities; and "some one else" preferred other work, etc. And yet, not one of these women, if asked the question "Are you interested in our girls?" but would indignantly say, "Of course I am!"

If the effort to convert souls is worthy the serious consideration our church gives to it, if it is true that in our young lie the hopes of Zion's redemption, if it is true that the members of this church are devotedly consecrated to the work of saving souls and demonstrating to the world the truth of the latter day message, what greater branch of that work could be taken up, in what line could we be justified in throwing greater zeal and enthusiastic support than that which involves the proper guidance, the proper teaching, the proper enlisting for the cause of Christ, of the young of our church? Christ said to Peter, "Feed my lambs." Shall we let them go unnurtured?

Accompanying is the little folder the leader of the Oriole work sent out to the various reunions? How did you receive it? How did you act upon it? Have your young girls benefited by your efforts? To what extent? Are you finding them lined up, a loyal, active, unit, consecrated to the good of their branch? If not, why not? A. A.

LETTERS

God the Owner of All Things

Fourth of a series of letters to the Saints of the Lamoni Stake, by the stake bishopric.

Dear Saint: We have learned from our last letter that God's way of bringing equality was by making every man a steward.

This means that God is the owner of all things. In proof of this we submit the following revelations:

Ownership—God Owns Everything

1. Time: God set apart certain of our time for rest and also for work. This recognizes the fact that all time is God's.

2. Silver and Gold: "The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord."—Haggai 2: 8.

3. All Living Creatures: "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle on a thousand hills . . . all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the fields are mine . . . the world is mine and the fullness thereof."—Psalm 50: 10-12.

4. Souls: "Behold, all souls are mine."—Ezekiel 18: 4.

5. Bodies and Spirits: "Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."—I Corinthians 6: 20.

6. Land: "The land shall not be sold forever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me."—Leviticus 25: 23.

7. All Things in Heaven and Earth: "I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

"Behold, all these properties are mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

"It must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9.

"Let not any man among you say that it is his own."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.

These texts prove beyond a controversy that ownership of everything resides in God.

While under the enlightening influence of the Holy Ghost, the Saints understood who was the real owner. We find the record reads as follows:

"Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own."—Acts 4: 32.

Why? To keep in step with progress of the church and with the other girls, and to help others more efficiently.

Organize a Circle. It takes only five girls and a monitor to form a circle.

Do you need help? Ask the district organizer to help you in organizing your circle.

Can you earn a dime? That will pay your fee for this year.

Oriole Book.—Contains the necessary information for organizing and developing the Oriole work, also the song which every Oriole should know. (Price 20 cents.)

Uniforms.—The uniforms are made of khaki, a serviceable, inexpensive cloth, recognized as best for outing costumes.

Embroidery Thread 3 cents
Orange and black for embroidering the symbols on the uniform.

Other supplies:

Beads in six colors, each indicating a particular group of points in the Oriole work 1 cent

Oriole Pin. Sterling silver back with safety clasp. Face of pin enameled in orange and black. 70 cents

"What we are is God's gift to us.

What we make of ourselves is our gift to God."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

What then is our relationship to things and values?

What has God committed to us?

Nowhere does he say that we "own" anything.

He has time after time stated that he has given the land unto us to possess it.

Possession without ownership makes us stewards.

In our next letter we shall discuss stewardship more fully.

A Remarkable Dream and Vision

One of the brethren well known to many in the church furnishes the following for publication in the "Herald."—Editors.

About four years ago this month, in a dream the late President Joseph Smith appeared to me as a man dressed in working clothes, with black beard, and upright as he was in the vigor of his manhood, when I first saw him as a boy. He appeared as one who was going to work, and who had business to attend to. He greeted me and shook hands, and I remarked, "Brother Joseph, it looks as though you were working some over there."

He replied, "We are. We have no time for foolishness. The hastening time is upon us. You are not working half fast enough on this side." Then he said, "You should hasten the work to victory." And as he turned to leave he looked back and said, "Did you write down the vision you had twelve years ago?"

I told him, "No."

I was very much surprised at his asking this question, for I did not know that he knew anything about my having had such a dream or vision. I had never stated it publicly, nor had I ever told it to him.

The vision that I had twelve years prior to that time, which would be sixteen years ago this February, was as follows:

After returning home from a session of the joint convention of the Sunday School and Religio in Lamoni, I was thinking seriously of the church, wondering what would be the outcome of the work. That night in dream I saw a very beautiful building. The personage who seemed to be with me took me in the building. There I saw Joseph Smith, lying in state in a coffin. At the head of the coffin stood Frederick M. Smith. The personage who was with me said: "Frederick M. Smith will now have to take charge, and undertake the leadership of the church."

Immediately the church took on a new activity. Frederick M. Smith went out and sent out among the branches and districts of the church, and insisted upon a higher standard for the priesthood. The first work appeared to be one of cleansing the church. Those of the priesthood who would not come to this higher standard were released.

The priesthood took on new energy. Many young men were called and placed in positions of responsibility. I saw the work then pushed energetically under President Smith's direction, preparation being made for the establishment of Zion. Young women as well as young men turned to the work of the church. But before they undertook the same they went through a preparatory work, being then sent out. The work continued in preparation for Zion, the church making ready for the coming of our Lord and Savior.

I felt impressed at the time that Frederick M. Smith would do this work; and as it appeared to me he would continue till the coming of the Lord.

I again saw the beautiful building that appeared to me in the first part of my dream. The Saints were gathering, and attempting to enter the building. While some entered, others walked up as though they were about to enter, and then seemed to be suddenly stopped, turning around and walking away.

I was rather surprised at this, and asked my guide what it meant. He replied, "None but the pure in heart can pass the threshold. Those who are purified as though by fire can pass over with safety; but those who have not cleansed their garments and washed them with the blood of the Lamb, those who have not kept their garments free from the blood of this generation, those who are not pure in heart, cannot pass over, as this place of entrance is to such as a consuming fire."

All those who tried and were permitted to enter were very fair, being clothed in white robes, pure as the lilies.

I was very vividly impressed with the necessity of cleanliness and preparation for the reward of the faithful.

I was made very happy in the experience. It has remained with me, vividly pictured as when presented. And I have many times in recalling it been strengthened. Especially in times of stress as these have come to the church I have been stayed and hopeful of the final outcome.

I have lived to see a part of the vision fulfilled. Whether I shall live to see its complete fulfillment I do not know. But this much I do know, the vision is of God and I have hope of its final and complete fulfillment.

From the Massachusetts District

A couple of the branches in the Massachusetts District have been doing some financial "stunts" recently. Boston has paid off the mortgage on its church. The money to liquidate the indebtedness was raised practically in an afternoon.

The Providence Branch planned to raise $1,000 Christmas offering this year. The branch has a scattered membership of around 300, with an average attendance of 65. A thousand dollars was an ambitious program, and many thought it could not be reached as there are no wealthy members to give several hundred dollars casually and repeatedly. When the "bankbreaking" took place, lo and behold! it was found they had over $1,200! One class of boys raised over $300.

Brother A. B. Phillips found it necessary to again call upon the Providence Branch to prepare the baptistry for additional baptisms. He sowed the seed years ago and some of it fell on good ground and it has not been lost.

We held our first of the four winter institutes at Attleboro, and I believe it was the opinion of all that it was a successful gathering. We have a number of specialists here who are well qualified by special training for the work.

The Attleboro choir and members of it added additional prestige to their branch by the way the song service was conducted. We are also fortunate in having a live district chorister, Herbert Johnson holding the position. He is in charge of the Providence choir. We have some talented musicians here. Dutte Halls is a young violinist who can make you feel wonderful things when he plays. I hope your Boston correspondent will tell you about "their" violinist.

Sincerely,

C. EDWARD MILLER.

When Buying Moving Picture Machines—

Before any branch or district buys a moving picture machine, an investigation should be made as to the kind of a machine required. Many of the advertisements of "safety" machines are misleading. I doubt if there is a single State in the country which will allow any make of machine to be used in a church or hall without a specially built safety booth large enough to enclose the machine and operator, if the regular standard film is used. This celluloid film is highly inflammable and subject to an explosion when not properly handled, hence the safeguards demanded by the fire laws of the States.

The United Projector and Film Company of Buffalo, New York, handle a machine which uses noninflammable films only. The standard theater, Government, etc., films cannot be used on this machine, consequently films of this character must be rented from this concern. No booth is required where the non-inflammable film is used. There are a great many subjects, handled by this concern, but there is no free service, as can be obtained by using the theater style of machine.

Don't buy a moving picture machine of the standard kind using the standard films and expect to use it in the church or hall without booth and wiring approved by the fire marshal.

For further information on this subject consult the Graphic Arts Bureau, Albert Knowlton, secretary, 622 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

More Loyalty to the Church

One of the patriarchs writes: "I firmly believe we want more loyalty to the church, and confidence in each other. It makes me feel bad to find men in the ministry holding responsible positions fault-finding and sowing seeds of contention among the ministry and members. We should unite our strength to fight those outside the church, and that will keep us busy and prayerful."

News from Switzerland

Things are looking much better now. The silver lining is appearing. I paid 450 francs rent in advance for three months on the hall. Brother Halb and I signed a lease which runs for one year. The landlord is doing some special plumbing, putting a new sink in the place and also tacking onto the gas, building a coal and wood bin, putting up a new partition to hide certain exposed water pipe drains, redecorating the entire place, and last, but not least, will permit us to use a beautiful oil painting of Christ being carried from the cross, about four by five feet, with a hand carved mahogany frame. I am certainly delighted with the place and so is Brother Halb, and he is glad we have it now. I hope I will be able to find a place as pretty and clean at Jerusalem. We will hold our opening service one week from Sunday.

I rented the apartment at 13 Petergasse and have moved into the front room. We put in the last day of the old year by renovating this room and if any bedbugs can live in it after the present fumigation, I am willing to resign from it. I believe we will be contented here now because we know we cannot find anything better.

As soon as the lettering is completed on our hall (or as they call it in German "a Laden") I will take a picture of it and send it on to you. I will inclose a beautiful view of the Rhine River showing the second bridge taken from the Klein (little) Basel side and showing many of the buildings on the Gross (big) Basel side. If it ever lets up raining I will try and take some good pictures of the mountains and will send some prints on to you.

We have had no real cold weather since coming here. The temperature to-day is about 45 degrees, but it rains some every day—regular Jerusalem weather. Your brother of like faith,

HARRY PASSMAN.

BASEL, SWITZERLAND, Petergasse 13.

Christmas Offering

The following items will be the last given mention in this manner—except unusual instances—till we print the tabulated list to show comparative results. The chief element of the success attained by the schools throughout the church has been work—hard but interesting and profitable work. Without joyous and persistent effort, the best possible schemes fail.

At the time this is written the Presiding Bishopric have received about $68,000 exclusive of Canada, which is totaling about the same as this time last year, for we then had $70,000 with Canada's offering. On account of the high rate of exchange Canadian Saints are remitting to their bishop's agents, but their totals will be counted just the same.

Chelsea, Kansas City, has raised $421.

Bevier, Missouri, in spite of the coal strike which seriously affected the Saints, raised $374.57.

Pike Lake, Saskatchewan, with 37 enrollment, raised $92.50.

Middletown, Ohio, with 76 members, including home department and cradle roll, raised $526.19.

Tulare, California, enrollment 62, sent in $528.50.

Mitchell, Ontario, enrollment 20, remitted $800.

Pontiac, Michigan, with 70 members, raised $276.94.

Moundsville, West Virginia, sent in $34.96.

Saint Clair, Michigan, with 75 members, raised $250.

Pasco, Washington, sent in $27.

Moorhead, Iowa, with an enrollment of 86, raised $512.92.

Myrtle Point, Oregon, 43, raised $111.37.

Sharon, Pennsylvania, has 42 members, and remitted $301.40.

Davidson, Oklahoma, 25 members, raised $78.50.

Fort Scott, Kansas, 49 members, 12 in cradle roll, and 4 in the home department, raised $278.71.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, with 7 members, raised $72.32 and expect to do better next year.

Dunn Center, North Dakota, evidently a small school, sent in $215.54.

Biglers Grove, Iowa, with 51 members, remitted $200.

Wiley, Colorado, 49 in main school, 10 home department members, and 11 cradle roll, $507.50. They bought three pigs with Christmas offering money and one donated, the four of them netting $58.60. A box supper netted $146.75.

Hilo, Hawaii, sent in $201.10.

Honolulu Branch sent in a nice offering of $400.

From Jerusalem

(Excerpts from a letter by Brother Aziz Elias, of Jerusalem, Palestine, to Brother and Sister H. A. Koehler.)

I have thought of you many times. While I was in the Turkish army I had a very hard time. I had to go through many trials, and not only myself, but all who served. I met many of the school boys in the army, and we passed many pleasant hours talking about the good times we had before the war.

Brother Solomon's family is very well at present. Sister Olinda is working in the government office as clerk, and Brother Aziz Solomon is working as driver of a motor truck. I am working as storekeeper in Kantora, and have signed for three months.

Sister Jenkins is still in Jerusalem awaiting a ship from Port Said direct to New York.

Mordecai died last September. We were all so sorry. I can tell you he was one fine young man. During the war he helped Sister Jenkins very much.

We are enjoying good times in Kantora at present. Meetings are being held in the Y. M. C. A. hall. The preacher is the son of an English lord, and gives very good sermons.

(Note. Mordecai Simcha was one of the most interesting young men of the school. He was a good friend to us all, and had entertained us in his home. He was the son of a well-to-do Kosher rabbi, and the family visited us at the mission house.)

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, January 14, 1920.

Dear Brethren of the Presidency: Your call to the missionaries to meet, March 22 meets my hearty approval. If all will attend and you keep on as you have been doing you will yet have a ministry who will be wise in the things of the kingdom of God, who in their work can instruct others to be diligent in their calling, and all who will may learn what it is to labor with an eye single to the glory of God. God speed you on. The Lord willing I will meet you the 22d.

M. M. TUREN.

LYNDHURST, GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, December 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: A few lines to let you know we are still endeavoring to represent the church in this city. We have reason to be very thankful to our heavenly Father for having spared all our brethren here who were called upon to serve their country in the army. All five of them have been in France, one having been gassed while in the trenches, others having miraculous escapes from death. God surely remembered his promise to us, given in the early days of the war.

We had a social on the 26th instant, which proved highly successful. The children came in for a good time, "Santa Claus" being in evidence with the usual good things on the Christmas tree, much to their delight.

Sometime ago the photographer saw our brethren together in their khaki. The outcome was that each was presented with a framed group during the social. Our branch president, E. J. Trapp, with fitting remarks made the presentations.

The people here are beginning to understand more clearly our position as a church and not a few are interested. Our meetings are well attended; the Saints generally are alive to their responsibilities. The prospects for 1920 are favorable.

We hope to write more frequently in response to the invitation sent out to the young people.

Wishing you every joy and happiness in the New Year,
Your brother in the faith,

A. T. TRAPP.

The Doctrine of Election. Our readers are undoubtedly aware of the Presbyterian doctrine of election, where certain individuals are elected to be saved, and certain individuals to be damned.

In the following article this is explained in a much more acceptable manner:

"In some of the Southern States the negro ministers and congregations are segregated into separate colored presbyteries, and they proceed in all matters according to the formulæ of the Presbyterian law. Such a presbytery met, and a candidate was under examination for ordination to the gospel ministry. At the end of the examination a brother rose and said, "Mr. Moderatah, Ah suahly hope dat dis motion will not be sustained. De candidate am mighty weak on de doctrine ob election." Whereupon an old gray-haired brother rose slowly and said, "Mr. Moderatah, Ah suahly hope dat di motion will not prevail. I'se been preaching de gospel for nearly three sco' years and I'se a little weak on dat doctrine mahself." Whereupon a young mulatto in the prime of life sprang to his feet and said, "Mr. Moderatah, As sho'ly am surprised. Dat doctrine ob election am as plain as de nose on yo' faces, and Ah can splanify it to dis presbytery in about three minutes. De way ob date doctrine am dis: De good Lawd, he votes dat a man go to heaven, and de Debbil, he votes that a man go to hell—and de way de man votes—dat carries de election."

Presidential Elections. With the political kettle bubbling in response to the increasing warmth of interest in the next presidential election, somebody has made the assertion that "no senator has ever been elected president of the United States." It was perhaps meant that no president had been elected direct from the Senate, for various editors have plunged into their reference books and discovered at least eight presidents, beginning with James Monroe, who served in the Senate; and President Harrison, Senator from Indiana from 1881 to 1887 and elected President in 1888, seems to have traveled a straight route and made close connections. The excursion into political history, however, is the more worth while because it recalls to a writer in the New York Evening Post Thomas B. Reed's dream of how the Senate failed to elect a president. As the dream went, the choice of president had been given over to the Senate by constitutional amendment, the ballots had been cast for the first time, and the teller arose to announce the result. "No choice," he said, "one vote for each senator."—Christian Science Monitor.

Didn't Interest Him. A gentleman here from Georgia says the labor situation in the south this year reminds him of this story:

A negro applied to a cotton plantation manager for work. "All right," said the manager. "Come around in the morning and I'll put you to work and pay you what you are worth." "No, suh, I can't do dat," replied the negro. "I'se gittin' mo' dan dat now?"—Commerce and Finance.

On With the Strikes.—It is evident that people will never be satisfied in this country until everybody has more pay than everybody else.—Literary Digest.

Prices having increased during the war and since the war, as they did also after the Civil War, and wages having risen in many instances, sometimes in proportion to the increased prices, men receiving the higher wages have felt that they could afford luxuries which they previously denied themselves. The purchase of such luxuries makes an enlarged demand, hence increased prices. But with wages increased in proportion to the purchase of extra luxuries will of necessity leave a shortage in the family budget. The real wage is not the money wage, but what goods can be secured in exchange for the wage.

Conference Minutes

MINNESOTA.—At Frazee, December 6, 1919, H. M. Curtis and W. E. Shakespeare in charge. Attendance small, weather cold and snowy. Visitors in attendance from Wisconsin and North Dakota. A good spirit prevailed throughout and some good sermons preached. The name of the Audubon Branch was changed to Frazee Branch. Total membership of the district is 553, a large percentage being absent from branches, one branch reporting 140 absent from a membership of 185. Delegates to General Conference: W. E. Shakespeare, E. H. Bennett, C. A. Kress, D. A. Whiting, Lester Whiting. Alternates: J. E. Wildermuth, Leonard Houghton and wife, W. F. Perry and wife. Lester Whiting, secretary.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—At Lincoln, January, 15-18, J. L. Parker in charge. Verbal reports from president and vice president. Statistical reports from Wilbur, Lincoln, and Fairfield. Bishop's agent reported and it was referred to auditors. Elmer E. Long, as one of the editors of The Arimat, gave a brief account of the progress of the paper. Besides covering this district, it is going into other districts and states, and some being sent to Canada and Australia. The matter of purchasing reunion grounds for the four districts was taken up, and a motion prevailed in which this body went on record as looking with disfavor on such a plan at this time. At a later meeting a general discussion of The Arimat prevailed, after which the following motion was read and adopted: "Whereas, The Arimat circulation having extended far beyond the bounds of the Southern Nebraska District, and whereas, there is some opposition to a district paper circulating beyond the limits of its home district, and whereas, the Arimat Publishing Association having been organized with a view to taking over The Arimat and continuing its publication as a private enterprise, therefore, resolved, that we favor the project and hereby relinquish all claim on The Arimat as a district paper." The conference decided to give the Arimat Association a subsidy of three dollars a month in return for one page of news items of the district. C. H. Porter and J. R. Croft entered protests against this action. The following officers were elected for the year: J. L. Parker, president; he chose Samuel Broliar as assistant; H. A. Higgins was sustained as bishop's agent, M. A. Smith elected secretary, C. H. Porter, historian; Grover C. Wall, member library board, Sister J. L. Parker recommended as chorister; M. A. Smith sustained as district recorder. Delegates to General Conference: H. A. Higgins, E. E. Long, J. H. Croft, Samuel Broliar, C. H. Porter, W. A. Blodgett, G. C. Wall, Sister Andrews. The conference by formal motion petitioned the appointive powers to appoint a high priest to preside over the district. Time and place of next conference left to officers of the district. It was recommended that the bishop's agent have the care and general supervision of the district tent and property belonging thereto. The priesthood were addressed on Sunday morning by President Frederick M. Smith on the quorums of the priesthood and the duties of the priesthood. He pointed out the necessity for unification of policy in presenting the gospel to the church, which could be done only by educating the priesthood to their duties as organized in the quorums of the priesthood, presided over by the higher priesthood. O. Salisbury preached Saturday evening, and President Smith Sunday morning and evening on Zion and the gathering. M. A. Smith, secretary.

Conference Notices

Southern California, in the Saints' church corner Flower and Fifth Street, Santa Ana, California, February 21 and 22, opening at 10 a. m. the 21st. All reports should be sent to the district secretary, Mrs. Anna Crum at 1168 Thirtieth Street, Los Angeles, California, at as early a date as possible. All attending the conference should report to N. Carmichael, pastor of the Santa Ana Branch that provision may be made for them if possible. G. H. Wixom, president.

Southwestern Texas, with the First San Antonio Branch, beginning February 23, 2:30 p. m. Carl F. Wheeler, secretary.

Ohio, with First Columbus Branch, March 10 and 11. Let all branches have their reports in the hands of the secretary, Sarah Batchelder, The Plains, Ohio, in ample time. A large attendance is anticipated. F. J. Ebeling, president.

Far West conference and conventions with First Saint Joseph Branch, Seventeenth and Faraon Streets, March 12, continuing over the 14th. R. S. Salyards, president, 517 North Twenty-second Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Youngstown-Sharon, at Newcastle, Pennsylvania, February 21 and 22. T. U. Thomas, president, 17 East Earl Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio.

Kansas City stake, February 22, 23, 24. Note change in order of services: In keeping with majority opinion manifest in our last conference and among priesthood especially, Sunday, the 22d will be the first day of the conference, and fully devoted to religious and devotional services. Monday, 7:45 p. m. will be regular business session, and we believe this hour will make it possible for the members of the priesthood and more men of the conference to be able to attend. Thus we hope the way will be opened for many to support the conference sessions who have not been able to do so for years. Tuesday, 7:45 p. m. there will be a joint institute session of our Sunday school and Religio under the supervision of our auxiliary officers. A very important and pleasing program has been arranged so all interested workers and especially the young are asked to be present. T. J. Elliott, secretary of the presidency.

Pastoral Notices

To the Missionaries and Saints of Holden Stake: This is to give notice that the writer takes the liberty to ask Brother Evan A. Davis, of the Holden Stake mission, to act as our assistant as supervisor of the stake missionary activities during the absence of the undersigned from the stake, or until the General Conference.

The gospel field in every place of my recent labor and travel presents a rich waiting harvest.

The Holden Stake is filled from border to border with noble, good, God-fearing people, in the church and out.

It has been a great pleasure to labor with, and among so many lovable people whose dominating ambition is fealty to Christ and to his cause.

Then there is the Indian mission, where I have recently spent some time; a great field for rich spiritual blessings.

And now dear old Arizona, place of our former labors, place of many tender gospel ties that bind all our hearts in a fraternity and fellowship known only among Saints, this too is a broadening field. The gospel progresses here.

The call everywhere is for consecrated workers. The fields stand rich and waiting for the blessed harvest.

Let us all thrust in our sickles and reap, while the day lasts. May the gracious Holy Spirit be our constant monitor, that the great name of our Redeemer may be magnified in all the earth through his servants, is our prayer. Sincerely,

JAMES E. YATES.

Addresses

James E. Yates, changed from Sedalia, Missouri, to Phoenix, Arizona.

Quorum Notices

Priesthood of the Eastern Colorado District: Please send a report of all your ministerial work done in the last six months to Coral E. Willis, secretary, Wray, Colorado, not later than February 15, 1920. James R. Sutton, president.

To the First Quorum of Seventy: The members of the First Quorum of Seventy are requested to send in their annual reports, from March 1, 1919, to March 1, 1920. Do not wait for blanks to be sent, but use the usual blank form. Send these reports to my address, 2014 H Street, Bellingham, Washington. Those not calculating to attend General Conference should include the sum of 25 cents, the usual quorum fee for the year. Those who have acted in any other capacity besides that of missionary, please state. It is hoped the brethren will be prompt in sending these reports the first of March, that a complete report may be given to the General Conference. S. S. Smith, secretary.

The Bishopric

Northern Michigan District: On account of the many other church duties devolving upon Brother A. E. Stark, at his solicitation, we are accepting his resignation as bishop's agent of the above district, and hereby appoint Brother Allen Schruer of Gaylord, Michigan as his successor to become effective March 1, 1920.

Brother Schruer is well known to the Saints in this district and we feel that any words of commendation that we might add would be unnecessary. The Saints are to be congratulated in having a man of his ability and devotion to the work act in the capacity of bishop's agent for their district.

We trust that by application on the part of the Saints to their daily affairs they may be prospered and being prospered may be moved upon by our heavenly Father to comply with the temporal law, thus supplying means to carry on the work of the Lord, and while doing so that there may come to them a development of which they shall be conscious, thus causing them to appreciate the wonderful plan of God under which men are made to grow in his likeness. Fraternaly yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

To the Saints of the Owen Sound District: We wish to send congratulations for the noble way in which so many of the Saints contributed in paying tithes. Upon looking over the records of tithing paid for 1919, I feel glad to announce that the money paid was considerable over six thousand dollars. But let none of us become weary in well doing for probably only a few of us have done our share. If we paid the tenth on all we possess, we have only paid the debt due to God, thus the only portion we can call true giving is that which we pay over and above the tenth. To you who have accomplished this we might say "Well done," and to you who are endeavoring to pay to those who are contemplating making a start, we wish to say "Do not rest until you are out of the Lord's debt," for that is the least we can do in compensation for all God and Christ have done for us. I sincerely believe that money kept back from God is the greatest cause of degeneration to-day. Therefore let us not degenerate, but as we have entered into a new year and as this is the time to make resolutions, let it be resolved to set our standard at ten thousand. Let us make 1920 the banner year of our district. Let us become the leader of the Canadian districts, to stand at the head and not at the foot. This can easily be accomplished if we all make a start and do our part, thus helping on the Lord's work by becoming collaborators with him.

You are well aware of the great desire of the church to reach out and enter new fields of activity and labor. To advance this aim, the bishopric has made its slogan "Every member a tithe payer." This may seem a high standard but it is none too high for what our church represents.

I have made up my mind that I shall not rest nor think my task satisfactorily complete until every Saint in our district who is a wage earner, voluntarily becomes a tithe payer. I fully realize that this standard cannot be reached without the help and cooperation of the priesthood and every faithful Saint throughout the district.

As a people, we have been looking, longing and praying for the redemption of Zion, the gathering of Israel from the ends of the earth. These have been our desires but they cannot be realized until this gospel which we love be preached in all the world so that the dispersed of Israel can have the opportunity of hearing it. The fishers and hunters mentioned by Jeremiah 16:16 must be sent out and sustained while they bring Israel from the east, west, north and south. These tasks and responsibilities rest upon us as a people and how can they be accomplished unless we put forth every effort available on our part to support this great cause? We have no time to lose. The hastening time is upon us. Do you not discern the times? If we fail, we will be rejected. If we do our part, God will do his and we will be blessed. Therefore let us resolve that we put our shoulders to the wheel and push with power and might, both old and young, great and small, rich and poor, saint and sinner. Let us bring our tithes into the Lord's storehouse, "And prove me therewith," saith the Lord. Let us do our part and become collaborators together with God and Christ for the advancement of their great work.

Wishing you health, happiness and prosperity and trusting that God's directing hand may guide you in all the tasks imposed, I remain,

Yours for ten thousand tithing for 1920,
HARRISTON, ONTARIO. F. B. STADE, Bishop's Agent.

To the Members of the Northeastern Missouri District: The undersigned has been appointed recently as bishop's agent in the district to succeed W. B. Richards, who is now laboring in Winnipeg, Canada. We enter upon this work sensing the importance of the duty to which we have been intrusted. In our perusal of God's word we find that there are financial laws to be kept as well as spiritual laws, and that the financial are just as binding as any other. Latter-day revelations inform us that none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God. (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.) There is also a stronger statement found in section 101:2: "Therefore if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." A strong statement, is it not? It would indeed be lamentable if we kept all the commandments of our heavenly Father from our youth up with the exception of the temporal law, and then when too late come to the realization that we were consigned to a place of torment.

We are not attempting to frighten anyone into paying tithing as God does not want our money from fear, but he wants us to give because we love him and his work and consecrating our lives to his work.

The law says that a tenth of our increase belongs to the Lord. (Leviticus 27:30; Doctrine and Covenants 106.) In paying our funds into the storehouse we are simply paying our debts to God. When we obtain money that does not belong to us we must turn it over to its owner. We must give God his money and avoid Malachi's challenge: "Will a man rob God?"

The slogan of the Presiding Bishopric for 1919 was "Every member a tithe payer." That ambition may not have been realized, but it should be in 1920.

What are the members of this district to do about it? Let each one of us ask ourselves the question and resolve that we are not going to prevent its attainment. Send in the small amounts, not waiting for the large ones to accumulate. With a strong desire and determination to keep God's law for "me and my house," let us succeed.

The following brethren have been chosen as solicitors of tithes and offerings in the places named, and will be glad to receipt for amount given them: Carl Weeks, Bevier; Albert Brooks, Higbee; Irvin Grey, Macon; C. W. Miller, Menefee Branch. May God's richest blessings be yours.

HUNTSVILLE, MISSOURI.

V. D. RUCH.

Notice

Notice to the officers and members of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association:

At the coming conventions we propose to present resolutions abolishing the Gospel Literature Boards as at present constituted. (Signed) Arthur McKim.

Notice to Subscribers

As we go to press to-day nearly one fourth of our crew is away from the plant on account of sickness. We hope however to keep up to our schedule with our periodicals. It is the usual thing these days for publishing houses to be out of much stock that in normal times is had in abundance. But we will do the best we can. Paper and supplies are difficult to get, and the printing of some things must be postponed on that account.

J. A. Koehler, manager.

Religio Secretaries

Please be advised that all annual district Religio reports should be in my hands not later than February 15 if they are to be included in my printed report to the General Convention.

HOWARD W. HARDER,
General Religio Secretary.

Our Departed Ones

KELLEY.—James Kelley was born in Carroll County, Ohio, March 14, 1843. Baptized in 1869; married Julia Copeland in 1868. She departed this life one year later. In 1870 married Mary Moss. To this union 4 children were born, 3 of whom, with the mother, are left to mourn. Brother Kelley moved to Crescent, Iowa, after the close of the war in which he served, lived there till 2 years ago, when he moved to Council Bluffs, where he died January 1. Services in Crescent, sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by John Adams.

BARRETT.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, on January 22, 1920, Brother William H. Barrett, aged 75 years, 9 months, and 15 days. He suffered many months from cancer in the stomach, and longed for release. He was born near Kirtland, Ohio, April 7, 1844. Married Mary Ella Dillon in 1873. Came to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1875. Of 9 children born to them, 8 are living, and 6 of them were present at his death and funeral. His wife also survives him. Services in charge of William Johnson, president of Evergreen Branch; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

GOREHAM.—Rhoda Louisa Wade was born June 7, 1844, in Courtland County, New York. Died at home of her son, L. W. Goreham, near Jamaica, Iowa, of a complication of diseases. Removed with parents to Lost Nation, Iowa, at age of 9 years. Married William M. Goreham, June 19, 1862, he preceding her to the other world. Four children were born, one daughter and 3 sons, all of whom survive, and were present at the last sad rites. They are: Edith M. Bullard, Hamilton, Missouri, Salem E., of Des Moines, Lewis F., of Panora, Iowa, Walter E., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. In addition are 20 grandchildren, 11 great-grandchildren and 2 brothers, Charles Wade, Yale, Iowa, and Salem Wade, Lost Nation, Iowa. Both she and companion were members of the church and have labored faithfully. Services at Union church in Jamaica, in charge of E. O. Clark, of Des Moines. Interment in Richland Cemetery.

TARTER.—Samuel P. Tarter was born, July 19, 1860, in Pulaski County, Kentucky. Married Eliza Manley, March 7, 1883, and to this union 2 girls and a boy were born. Baptized July 7, 1918, by H. E. Winegar. Died at Springfield, Missouri, January 13, 1920. Leaves wife and 2 children, Gracie Mae and Farris Rodolphus. Funeral from home near Springfield, in charge of B. E. Brown, sermon by H. E. Winegar. Interment in Brick church cemetery.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

A letter from Elder H. Arthur Koehler, dated at Rockland, Maine says there are numerous openings for the spread of the gospel message, including West Surry, Lanesboro, Kenebec, and South Addison. During September he was operated on for hernia, after which he joined A. B. Phillips at Rockland. Services were well attended by nonmembers but half our church members would not assist. As many as five sectarian ministers would come to hear Brother Philips. At least six persons have expressed a desire for baptism, which will be a sufficient number with the others to organize a branch. Branches organized to hold the Saints together are suggested as the only method to obtain permanency for the work. Two thirds of the members are now scattered into places where they have gone to seek employment. Some have been baptized in other places and there continues to be plenty to do.

Sister J. L. Mortimer writes from Manitoulin Island, Manitowaning, Ontario, that Elder Mortimer has been covering a considerable territory in that island with an auto, addressing the Saints frequently. The people are very sociable. The sisters at Sandfield have been organized into a local of the Woman's Auxiliary by Sister Mortimer, and she hopes to effect other organizations. The need of the district is for instruction on various phases of organization work. Brother Mortimer finds the branch workers willing but needing instruction.

Autumn Leaves for February contains an excellent article by President Frederick M. Smith on "The Youth of the Church and Zion." There are, in addition to this, a number of other very interesting articles.

Elder J. J. Cornish, who is holding successful meetings in Saint Joseph, Missouri, will go to Toronto about March 1, to assist Brother T. W. Williams and be prepared to relieve him when he leaves that place the latter part of March.

By Wireless from Independence: January 26—Hubert Case sends word from Kingfisher, Oklahoma that he had met with an accident which resulted in a broken arm, from cranking a Ford car. He had just completed a four-day drive among the Cheyennes. He contemplates working up an Indian exhibit for General Conference.

FROM THE BRANCHES

It would be greatly appreciated if our correspondents from the branches would try to condense their items to the briefest possible limit. We have about 700 branches to hear from and our space is limited. We want all matters of general interest, told as briefly as possible.—EDITORS.

East Syracuse, New York. A Sunday school has been organized, with fourteen members, Brother Richardson, of Providence, recently moved in, and being a priest, it allows sacrament services to be held, and Wednesday evening prayer services. Services are held at the homes of Morris Whitehead and Brother Richardson.

First Chicago. The branch meets in the lower auditorium, the furnace being repaired. There is considerable illness, which affects the attendance at all meetings. Last Sunday was "Suggestion Sunday" at Sunday school. Every member was asked to write a suggestion for the improvement of the school. These are to be posted or read aloud next Sunday. The normal class has completed the Seven Laws of Teaching and have begun work on the story-telling course. The Religio recently held a successful social time, which included a taffy pull. This is but one of many such events the society is planning. A Book of Mormon normal class has been started, in the Religio with Chris Hartshorn as teacher. The program recently was given by the Boy Scouts, Axel Edstrom being in charge.

Ravenwood, Missouri. The branch is growing in numbers, two more families intending to move here in the spring. The Sunday school went over the top in Christmas offering.

Pontiac, Michigan. The brick work is progressing nicely on the new church, and it is hoped to occupy the basement soon. Mildred Jowett, district chorister, visited the branch recently and organized a junior choir. A poverty social was given by the Religio recently, and the fines given to the social committee for future recreation work.

Bentley, Michigan. Four have been baptized lately, making 17 new members in 1919. Walter Wilcox has been chosen branch president. The orchestra has purchased a piano, which is greatly appreciated in the meetings.

Waterloo, Iowa. The slogan of one of the members here is "A branch in every county," in the district, so those in the northern half of the district may expect some help.

Lamoni, Iowa.—A very successful coordinated conference was held at Lamoni, continuing over February 1. There were five ordinations: H. C. Burgess, elder; W. E. Prall, elder; L. S. Wight, priest; Edward Downey and Dewey White, deacons. During the past week the Religio has served 790 people; this includes the lesson work Sunday evening, moving pictures at the college Friday and Saturday, and Boy Scout work during the week.

Toronto, Ontario. "A challenge to the churches," was the subject by T. W. Williams on the 25th. "Bolshevism is the result of centuries of social injustice and religious intolerance; as a man soweth, so shall he reap," said he in the course of his lecture. On the 22d Joseph Luff preached on the use and abuse of spiritual gifts. He is still there with the "punch" that never fails to reach the heart. Influenza has arrived to give smallpox a battle for supremacy. Total number of smallpox cases 2,429, deaths 6.

Stockton, California. The branch boasts of a set of stairs inside the church building, leading to the basement, the pride of the branch. Brother and Sister Hawkins, district president and wife, spent a few days here recently. Sister Rhea Davison and Mr. Cannon were recently married.

Stewartsville, Missouri. J. W. Roberts, of the stake presidency, is holding services here and will continue throughout the week. A. E. McCord left on the 7th for Macon City, after spending holidays with home folks. The choir and orchestra are both doing good work, directed by Madge Head and Hubert Pederson, respectively, the latter from Saint Joseph.

Wheeling, West Virginia. Industrial conditions are normal again, after several months of contention in the steel and coal industries. These conditions make us feel to urge that Zion be redeemed—we have been talking of it for years, why not realize it? Hundreds of the brethren would gladly render their services free if their families were clothed and fed and sheltered. The missions that were started at Bellair, Ohio and Moundsville, West Virginia, have developed into branches, which are progressing nicely. Six converts from the Bellair Branch were baptized in our font recently.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The United States Supreme Court is rather consistently upholding national prohibition, and refused recently to entertain a suit by liquor dealers to challenge the constitutionality of the amendment. They intimated, however, that it could be raised by a State, and the State of Rhode Island has filed such a suit, which will doubtless put the matter squarely and finally at issue.

A man in Omaha fell twenty-five feet and alighted in a sitting posture. The result was one fracture and two dislocations of his spine, shortening it more than two inches. By the use of weights in a new treatment, it was restored to within one-twentieth of an inch of its former length. The treatments were taken daily, and the result was that in ten weeks he was able to walk out of the hospital.

Doctor William Mayo, president of the American College of Surgeons, is quoted as stating that since the Civil War, fifteen years have been added to the length of human life, and in the next twenty years it is certain ten years more will be added, so that to-day the older men are great assets to the country. He also states that it is the good drinking water that has made possible prohibition in America. France and Italy have not palatable water, hence must continue wine drinking, as Germany will continue beer drinking.

Home economic workers in Missouri report: In 645 homes in the country they found only 27 homes lighted by gas lights, and only 28 by electricity. And over half of these homes had automobiles.

President Frederick M. Smith's Views on Revelation

It is of first importance to the church that communion with God be maintained at all times. The ideals of the church in this matter are clearly set forth in the following words of President Smith at the Independence Stake Conference, October 6, 1918

At a certain time of my life it became necessary for me, especially since I was asked to accept a position that is unique among all the organizations of the world, to give considerable thought to this question of how God shall reveal himself to his people. There was a disposition at one time on my part to limit God as to how he should reveal his will. But I passed this point and have been able to say, If thou, oh God, art desirous of revealing thy will to us, or to me, be it far from me to say how. If it be that thou desirest to write across the arch of thy heaven those words that thou shalt see fit to transmit to thy people, then give me the wisdom to read. Or if thou dost choose to manifest thy power in the thunderous tones that thou art capable of giving, so that they will ring through all the arch of heaven, let my ears be open. Or if, in the still, small voice that comes from within, thou shalt choose to reveal thy will to me, then let thy Spirit attune my spiritual ear to the reception of thy word. Or if thou dost choose to utilize those powers with which thou hast by nature endowed me, quickened by thine own processes of development, to transmit through them the message that thou hast to give to thy people, then my pen shall be ready. Or if thou dost choose to bathe my soul in thy Spirit until my spiritual vision shall behold what thou dost desire thy people to accomplish, even then shall I endeavor as thy instrument to transmit the message to thy people.

And strange to say, at times the very last of the ones that I would have believed probable, in trying to express his will through me to this people is the one he has chosen to use; for I have felt that quickening of spiritual vision until my spiritual eyes were enabled to see almost as a panoramic vision extending over the years yet to come, not in detail, but in one grand, general ensemble, the work to be accomplished by this people. And when I have thus seen the work yet to be done spread out before me, I have been at times suddenly turned from contemplation of these splendid things, and with my own natural eyes and powers have looked upon the work already done, I could not but exclaim, "How long, oh Lord, how long!"

And so, when there arise persons claiming that they have had the will of the Lord revealed to them, that such and such is wrong in the church, and that such and such would be right, the safeguard that God himself has placed before you is always available for your protection, and you have the right, and not only the right, but the duty to weigh that which shall come, and be alert to the fact that God will reveal himself in the way that pleaseth him best; but always and at all times shall that will be in harmony and consistent with his revelations in the past, however they may have come.

And so we still stand for one of the fundamental ideals of the church, and that is not only belief in God, but a sure and secure belief that God will reveal his will to us, and speak to us in our own language and in his own way.

The Missionary Paper of the Church!

The Ensign is the missionary paper of the church.

In its columns, the finest missionary effort of our ministry is presented every week, and the preached word is multiplied a thousand fold in the printed word.

The gospel is set forth in all plainness and editors and contributors all unite to make clear the plan of salvation.

Sermon after sermon is reported just as preached by the leading authorities in the big Stone Church at Independence.

There is both instruction and enjoyment for you in the Ensign, particularly if you are isolated.

But the great mission of the Ensign is missionary. Wherever sent it will teach the gospel and there is no more effective way to reach your nonmember friends and relatives than by means of this paper.

We want to place the Ensign in 10,000 nonmember homes this year. To what extent can we depend on you?

Send the Ensign on a Mission! Subscribe for a Friend

THE HERALD HIT BY THE INFLUENZA

All last week seven to nine of our crew were absent on account of the prevailing epidemic of sickness. And to-day as we should go to press, all pressmen are ill. Necessarily, under such circumstances, we must utilize our limited man power to the best advantage. Some delays will occur in changing addresses, answering letters, filling orders, and entering new subscriptions.

We are sorry that we must put the HERALD on the press as it is, one form less than usual size, with a little shifting of type to let you know the cause of our action. THE MANAGER.

CHURCH NEWS

By Wireless from Independence, February 3: Jacob Halb writes from Basel, January 15, reporting first service in our newly opened hall, Sunday, January 11. Elder Passman preached in the morning in English, with an interpreter, and Elder Halb spoke in German at night; about 30 out in the evening. Apostle Peter Anderson in Council Bluffs first Sunday in February, and expected to be with the Omaha Saints the following Sunday. Apostle Greene expects to be there also. G. J. Waller returns to San Francisco from Honolulu, February 15. Apostle Griffiths visited at Portland, Seattle, Boise, and other points in West. Will visit Denver about February 9. Later will join Elder Hubert Case to work with Indians in Oklahoma.

By Wireless from Independence, February 3: Christmas offering: February 20, 1919 to January 23, 1920, $66,754.52. January 23 to January 31, 1920, $8,919.17. Total received $75,673.69. From all appearances we are going to pass the record of 1918. This tells the story of perseverance and determination. These traits of character should be thoroughly instilled in the life of every Latter Day Saint child. To lack them means a purposeless life. Fairness shall be written on every page of life's day book. One of the chief objects, therefore, that every Sunday school officer, teacher, and parent should have is urging the child to assist in the Christmas offering.—B. R. McGuire.

By Wireless from Independence, February 5: Apostle Gilen was called home from Michigan on account of serious illness in his family. Influenza conditons in Independence, continue bad; more sickness being reported than for many years past but most influenza cases lighter than last year. Augustine Dwyer is to engage for Armenian Relief Association. He will visit Washington soon, then return to Portland, where he will be stationed till he leaves for Europe, probably early in the summer.

By Wireless from Independence, February 4: Apostle Curtis has been called home from the Southern Mission by the severe illness in his family. President F. M. Smith was called to Lincoln on Monday, the 2d, was to visit Omaha on the 5th and 6th, and Des Moines on the 7th and 8th.

By Wireless from Independence, February 6: Elder M. A. McConley will leave Hawaii early in March to attend General Conference. His wife and new baby girl are in Denver. U. W. Greene had to cancel his visit to Omaha on account of sickness in his family.

Graceland College. A fine man-to-man social purity talk was given to the men students recently by A. Carmichael, and one on the same order to the girls by Vida E. Smith. The debate at Greenfield was successful for Graceland in a unanimous decision in favor of our team, who were: Charles Sandage, Mary Tennery, and Addie Belle Chappelle. Influenza and mumps have been making inroads into the student body and faculty, though with no serious results so far. Lincoln Day will be observed on the 10th with a program by the Athenian Literary Society.

We are in receipt of an interesting letter from Apostle John W. Rushton, from Australia, he and Brother Hanson having arrived safely and without trouble over passports. They did not stop in New Zealand, though in the harbor they met Brother H. W. Savage for a short time. At the mission conference A. W. Craig was ordained a bishop.

We learn that the general church offices at Independence are badly depleted on account of the generally prevalent illness sweeping over the country. Fortunately there are few serious cases. The Herald Publishing House has been operating under special difficulties on account of the epidemic.

Brethren U. W. Greene and Joseph Arber were each ill about a week but expected to be able to return to their successful meetings on the Kansas side at Kansas City where three had been announced for baptism. Bennington Heights was also included in the places. Some excellent advertising cards were prepared by A. E. McKim the new bureau of publicity manager and circulated widely. These meetings and other special meetings will continue till General Conference in Kansas City and Independence stakes. Tracts will be distributed daily during the close of the series to every home in Independence.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy was in Lamoni recently, by invitation, and addressed the religious education class at Graceland College. He elucidated his views on education; loyalty, etc. He distributed considerable literature.

The Sunday school executive council met in Independence on the 25th and extended the time limit set for completion of the Quarterly revision and rewriting. The consulting board and editor-in-chief had asked for sufficient time to do considerable research to determine a number of methods ere beginning the work of writing. They hope to have this done by January 1, 1921.

A letter from Ward L. Christy informs us that they have thirty cases of influenza in the Central Chicago Branch alone. It is keeping him very busy administering to the sick. But he adds: "We are thankful that while we have so many cases, there is no one dangerously ill at this time. Chicago is hard hit just now with the epidemic."

The Presiding Bishopric are fulfilling their pledge as to use of the Christmas offerings, having bought four hundred and twenty-five acres since the first of the year. This should encourage us for the 1920 offering.

The Volunteer Student Convention

BY MARGARET DAVIS

A brief interpretation of the meaning of the international convention held this year in Des Moines, Iowa.

Four members of the Woman's Auxiliary were privileged to attend the Volunteer Student Convention held in Des Moines, Iowa, about January 1, 1920. We did not go in the capacity of reporters, thinking some of our representative men would be in attendance to do that.

This was perhaps the most remarkable convention ever held in our city, primarily because there came to it delegates from every land where Christianity has entered. There were eight thousand delegates in all, hundreds of them coming from foreign lands, but the majority were students from the colleges and universities of the United States and Canada.

One was immediately impressed with the seriousness of this splendid student body. One could see that they were dominated by some mighty purpose and that they were resolved to attain a high achievement.

China had a larger representation than any other foreign land. As we studied their faces, manners, and dress, the term heathen seemed unsuited to these intelligent men and women. We felt that much tribute was due some missionary who had heard the call of humanity from far-off China and had taken the hope of Christ to that nation.

Chinese Expect Returning Students to Have Christ Ideal

A young Chinese, a doctor of philosophy, in addressing a class of his countrymen who had completed their education here, and who were about to return to their homeland, told them that the people back home would expect in them the Christ ideal. He told them that they could impress upon their fellow men the stamp of Christ only as it had been impressed upon them. He told them that they could touch their friends with the love of Christ only as they themselves had been touched. In other words, he said, "You cannot teach what you do not know, and you cannot lead where you do not go."

He urged them to remember that they could call themselves the younger brothers of Christ only when they had learned to sacrifice for their fellow men as Christ had sacrificed for them. He attributed the supremacy of western nations to the religion of Christ.

How a Japanese Preached Christ

A speaker of the Japanese delegation was also very interesting. He related how he had been warned and now he considered it his high duty to warn Japan. He has gone from village to village, city to city, ever since he entered the ministry. His nightly audiences average from eight hundred to three thousand. He has a unique manner of warning his people. By previous arrangement his services are advertised. He has but one sermon which lasted three hours. The first hour he dwelt upon the fallacy of oriental religion; the second hour upon sin; the third, salvation through Christ.

At the conclusion of his discourse, he asked those who liked his remarks to stay away the next night, and to send their relatives and friends. After the first night his house was filled to its capacity, and he had a new audience each time. He did this every night until he felt that the community had been sufficiently warned. After him came other Christian workers who followed up his efforts. As he was past fifty, he explained that he had not the time to preach more than one discourse to an individual, as he felt it his call to warn his entire country.

It might be interesting to know how he spent his days in preparation for his nightly work. During the mornings he ministered among the people whom he felt needed him the most. In the afternoon he closeted himself and refused to see anyone. He spent the rest of the day in fasting and prayer. He considered the success of his services due to his daily communion with God.

A Woman Missionary in Armenia

A missionary to Armenia related her experience during the war. In her district there were only women and children. All the men had gone to the front. One night they saw the village to the north of them in flames. They knew that they would receive similar treatment next. In a few hours a telegram came to her from the American ambassador telling her that an escort would be sent the next day to take her out of the country. When the women learned of this, they begged of her to stay with them. They told her they did not care if they lost all they possessed of material things, neither did they mind being driven from their homes, if only she would stay with them.

After praying about it, it occurred to her that she had not been sent out by her government, neither would she be recalled by it. So she decided to stay by her post of duty until the Lord should withdraw, even if she paid the supreme sacrifice. The next day the Turkish army passed through, but nothing was burned, and no one was harmed.

In a little while a terrible epidemic passed over the country. There was no doctor within a hundred miles. As she knew something of medicine she became their only physician. She nursed the Mohammedans as readily as the Christians—even caring for one high official in the Turkish army. The result of it was that in her ministrations she found opportunity to speak of the goodness of the Divine Healer. She now has enrolled in her mission school eighty-four Mohammedan children. Before the war she had none. Her district was one of the few not ravaged by the Turks.

Women Better Missionaries Than Men

A Belgian delegate told a similar story of loyalty to his mission in a time of much perplexity. Because of the aid they rendered to the native women and children in their distress, the Belgian Government has given the mission fifty acres of ground near the capital for mission schools and other purposes.

Statistics of missionaries proved that women make better missionaries than men, being more persevering and enduring. It was estimated that one woman was worth two men in foreign fields, the reason given being that much of the work must be done in the homes and through native women.

Statistics also showed that only one out of four thousand of American Christians enter foreign fields. One out of sixty-five ordained ministers go.

The Work in India

One very successful missionary to India was asked to what he attributed his marked success. He answered, "Service and consecration." He had been in India twenty-four years, this being his first furlough. When asked if he was enjoying the convention, he said, "Yes, but I am eager to get back; I fear my people need me."

In all these years he had been on duty every day, working from twelve to sixteen hours. When asked why he had never taken any vacation, he explained that he had never read anywhere of Christ taking a vacation. When he felt that he required recreation, he took a walk in the jungle. He considered recreation a word to be handled with care, as there are some people who are apt to go off at a tangent on it.

He gave as the reason why so many missionaries fail, that they do not recognize that their first and highest mission is to win souls. Bread-winners work eight, ten, and more hours a day, so why not soul winners. Some men he said go out and become so absorbed in committee work and organization that they forget that the greatest tribute ever paid the Christ was that he went about doing good, and that they were supposed to do likewise.

Bring Others Up to Higher Levels

He impressed the students that they were not to go out to be leaders but to make leaders. He said, "potentially anyone is as good and as capable as you and it is your duty and your problem to develop leadership in your converts."

In Northern Bengal there is but one missionary to every two million inhabitants. In one district of six million there is but one minister, and yet by the force of his character, he is making the Christ felt.

He explained how he conducted his evangelistic campaigns. Accompanied by five of his converts he would go to a city, pitch their tent and begin operations. He never used tracts, but went from house to house in the immediate neighborhood and gave a personal invitation to their services. He preached afternoon and evening. They began their operation in the heart of the city, and then worked out until every neighborhood of the city and every suburb and town within a radius of five miles had heard the message of the Christ.

For twenty-four years he has arisen at five, and retired at eleven. From five to six in the morning, and from ten to eleven in the evening, they observed as watch hours, which time was spent in communing with God. The rest of his time was given to winning souls, and the remarkable thing of it is that after all of these years of strenuous work, he looks like a boy yet.

It seemed to be the usual thing that they who had given most of their life in foreign lands were the most eager to return. One delegate had spent thirty years in China; another twenty-three. One had been twenty-seven years in India; another fifteen, and they were all returning this spring. This work, with all of its hardships, seems to have a strange fascination for these workers. One delegate explained that the greater the sacrifice the greater the spiritual compensation.

Cannot Serve Christ and Confucius

One member of the Chinese delegation felt that American missionaries sent to China made one outstanding mistake when they told the natives that they could believe in Jesus and Confucius too, for their teachings are diametrically opposed. He left this cheering thought, that Confucianism will soon be an antiquated religion in China. The wave of advanced thought that is sweeping the empires is causing the downfall of the doctrine of Confucius. The people are demanding something more, and only the ethics of Christ can fill the demand.

This seemed to be the sentiment of all foreign workers. The Orient is imploring the western world for something higher than Buddha, Mohammed, or Confucius has given them. The only philosophy that will satisfy these hungering people is the teaching of the Nazarene.

It was indeed inspiring to see the multitude of boys and girls who are preparing themselves for a life of service for their fellow man. It was gratifying to sense the depth of character of these young people, as was expressed in their talks. One young man from Columbia University said he had a year's work yet before he could assume his responsibility over there, but that he meant by righteous living to make the Christ force felt through his large circle of collegians.

No matter how consecrated one might be he must be well qualified for his particular work before the American board will sent him out, and then he must get results or he will be recalled.

Study of Spanish Urged

The young students were urged to study Spanish, as there is a tremendous field for usefulness in South America. One speaker said that there was much virgin soil in South America, where the banner of the Christ has never been unfurled. Further than that, he estimated that two thirds of the world had never heard the name of Jesus.

We were reminded of the message that the Lord has repeatedly given the church—"The harvest is white, thrust in your sickles and reap."

The Prophetic Conning Tower

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

An Outline—Part 6

Causes of War

The continuance of power is intoxicating, and for many years an awful vision hovered upon the mental horizon of Europe. Her statesmen were disappointed. They knew in what unstable equilibrium peace had been maintained in the armed camp, and had some forebodings that there would come a turn of events which would upset the delicate balance of international relations, and bring on a clash of arms, but their disappointment was in the source of the disturbance, as they held Turkey as the keystone of the arch of nations. But their temperament is developed by prophecy in the time of the end, before the kingdom is the Lord's, thus:

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth."—Revelation 11:15, 18.

"For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them."—Jeremiah 25:15, 16.

Statesmen have assigned their seasons of state; have sent broadcast their profound ideas of the cause for the world war, and the Bible has also thrown into the balance prophetic opinion. Both are correct from respective standpoints. We pursue the divine cause or explanation. In the 31st verse of Jeremiah 25, as cited, the Almighty says:

"A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord."

Israel Gathered

And in Isaiah 34:8, after the prophetic cast of the great conflict, he tells us:

"For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion,"—Israel included. We are down here in the harvest, face to face with the crackling artillery of scientific and religious facts, now, and we shall assign, as an explanation of the upheavals, the breaking up and marshalling of nations, the distress and commotions and the visitation of physical judgments of plain as well as incomprehensible character, the regenesis of Israel, and the set time of his development under the covenant everlasting; holding forth the divine proposition that the Almighty promised to perpetuate the seed of Israel as a nation forever; that the national existence of the seed of Israel shall never cease:

"My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven."—Psalm 89: 28, 29.

"My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah."—Psalm 89: 34-37.

The continuance of the covenant is measured by the duration of "sun, moon, and stars." (Jeremiah 33: 24-26.)

"He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance."—Psalm 105: 8-11.

"Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people."—Ezekiel 37: 26, 27.

There were but forty-two generations from Abraham, the date when the promise was made 1897 B. C.—to Christ. (Matthew 1: 17.) But God remembers this "everlasting covenant to a thousand generations." The curses pronounced upon Israel in Deuteronomy 28, by Moses, have followed and, so to speak, temporarily knocked their status quo out of commission, yet God "will not alter the thing that is gone out of his lips," and "if I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." (Psalm 137.) The hand of the Lord is now, and has been, set among all nations for more than a century, for Israel's recovery from political disabilities, and social ostracism—the outer darkness into which, the inspired utterances of Moses, Christ, and other prophets say they shall plunge. But in the present period of time we look at the condition thus:

"And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it: and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee."—Deuteronomy 30: 5, 7.

Here is a transfer of misfortune from Jew to Gentile. The "fevers" and "burning," "pestilence," "rebukes," "vexations," "astonishments," "rheumatism," "blastings," "famine," and "war," all to pass over to the nations which persecuted Israel. God holds his people in sacred remembrance:

"For thus saith the Lord of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you; for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye."—Zechariah 2: 8.

Did you ever have the pupil of your eye struck by a splinter or sharp mote? You know then, the nervous reaction of pain; how it shoots through the entire body. Can you institute a comparison between yourself and God? He sees to it that those nations who persecute his chosen people must be "contorted." Have you noticed during the world war that those nations most anti-Jewish have suffered most? Where now is Russia? Most intense has been her hatred and maltreatment of Israel. But she is nothing now, but a seething mass of human protoplasm, to be reorganized again, according to prophecy.

Jesus predicted the captivity of the Jews into all nations—Gentile nations (Luke 21: 24), and they have been the prey of those European peoples ever since; prostrate in dust has the daughter of Zion posed under the heel of aristocracy, and the ponderability of autocracy—"the mighty." But now:

"Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered? But thus saith the Lord, Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children. And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob."—Isaiah 49: 24-26.

Shall Israel be taken from the mighty? Yes, the captives of the mighty, the prey of the terrible, shall be delivered, and note how God contended with those nations in 1914-1918. Note how those who oppressed Israel gave "their own flesh" as food for the forty-two centimeters, and how the shedding of blood increased their anger, or intoxication.

Again:

Israel's Punishment

"Thus saith thy Lord the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again: But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee; which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over; and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over."—Isaiah 59: 22, 23.

Basnage, book 6, chapter 21 says: "In the 5th century their synagogues were abolished, prohibited from worshiping in caves, their testimony rendered inadmissible, deprived of the right of bequeathing their property, and their property confiscated, and so bloody an execution prevailed, "all the Jews of that country trembled." (See Deuteronomy 28: 65.)

"The cup of trembling," is transferred. Israel drinks it no more. This cup of trembling is placed in the hands of those who afflicted them; those who said, "Bow down," and we will walk over you. The nations have used the captives of Judah as stepping-stones to financial and industrial power; as a foot bridge from the desert marsh of poverty, over to the golden plains of popularity and wealth, while the clash of arms signify the thralldom as breaking, and the notes of Israel's release and regeneration.

Basnage de Beauval, book 8, chapter 21, records:

"It was the policy of kings to employ them as a sponge to suck their subjects' money, which they might afterward express with less odium than direct taxation would incur. It is almost incredible to what a length extortion was carried—of money from the Jews. Philip Augustus released all Christians in his dominions from their debts to the Jews, reserving a fifth part to himself, and afterward expelled the whole nation."

Kings, princes, and caliphs "practiced this extortion, until at last, by most unscrupulous and unsparing measures, they defrayed their extraordinary expenses with their spoils, and impoverished the richest among them."—Evidence from Prophecy, pp. 70-74. But now:

"I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him: With whom my hand shall be established: mine arm also shall strengthen him. The enemy shall not exact upon him; nor the son of wickedness afflict him. And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him."—Psalm 98: 20-23.

"The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath."—Deuteronomy 28: 12, 13.

The Money Changers

No more exactions, extortions, nor afflictions. The beginning of their modern accumulations in the fulfillment of these prophecies is wonderful. To-day their incomes move with the tides. Their commercial connections embrace the globe. They are involved in the well being of the planet. Their prosperity has run into simile. A recent writer expands their wealth thus: "Every ship that is lost, every crop that is gathered, affects directly or indirectly their enormous exchequer. When the sea rises off the coast of New South Wales, when the frost bites on the steppes of Russia, when cholera begins its march in India, the Jews' income moves with these." Yes, "they are to possess the gates of their enemies."

A century ago their name was seldom heard on European exchanges. History tells us that the modern founder of the house of Rothschild, a humble, but financially capable Hebrew, kept a dingy office, the sign of which was a "red shield" (Rothschild) over the door, in the dirty quarters known as the Judengass, in Frankfort-on-the-Main. There with keen eyes, questioning beak, and acquisitive fingers, he stood behind a dusky counter, changing money, discounting bills, pinching coin, buying cheap, selling dear; sordidly happy in the consciousness of daily accumulation. The Gentiles sat as noblemen in the palaces, gorgeous halls, and gilded chambers, with luxurious banquets before them, and listening beauties at their feet.

Mayer Anselm Rothschild (the family's name was Bauer, but he changed his cognomen to suit the emblem of his father's trade) early became a man of mark. Being a banker, he had William IX, the Landgrave of Hesse, as a depositor of $20,000,000 with which Frederick II furnished George III the 17,000 Hessians to fight against our colonial ancestors. This sum backed up with as much more, was put into the hands of the cunning knight of the red shield.

Nathan Mayer Rothschild was following the English Army at Waterloo, 1814. He kept close to the commander in chief, watching the swaying of the fortune of battle. He actually saw the English army pressed back the first day. He also sat on his horse, on the hill Hougoumont, and through his glass watched the struggle of the nations. The next day when Wellington was joined by Blucher, he saw Napoleon's army shattered, and in full retreat. He saw in the awful carnage the shimmer of gold. He dashed into Brussels, was whirled to Ostend in a carriage.

At dawn he stood on the Belgian coast; paid 1,500 francs to be ferried across the channel; landing at Dover he engaged the swiftest horse, and with the wind rode into London. On the morning of the 20th of June he was on the stock exchange, leaning against a pillar, the embodiment of gloom and despair. He controlled the "bulls and the bears" by his looks. He knew Wellington was beaten on the 16th and 17th. He knew Napoleon was routed on the 18th. The whole picture which he drew was half true and half false, and was calculated to deceive. His doleful whisper spread the plague. The funds tumbled like an aerolite. Public and private credit wilted before the simoon of calamitous report. 'Twas black Friday, but this crafty Israelite had his agents buying secretly at the lowest notch, all the consols, bills, and notes that he could buy.

Next morning the news came by the regular route that Wellington was victorious, and merchants and bankers shook hands, while Nathan Mayer, the Jew, pinched $6,000,000 to the good. (See "The empire of the Rothschilds," in Cosmopolitan, March, 1905.)

"Why," says one, "that beginning of money accumulation looks like 'treachery,' and is God committed to that?" No, God is not committed to that any more than he is committed to the eighteen crimes predicted by Paul in 2 Timothy 4, to characterize the "last days." God inspired men to see, by inspired vision, the sceneries, conditons, and events of unborn time, and caused them to be noticed in written history, and these things occur as based on the agency of man. If wrong, the actors suffer, but the act is overruled to the purpose of God. So this event is foretold by the prophet:

Gentiles Brought Down

"Woe to thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee."—Isaiah 33: 1.

In this prophecy the Lord is addressing the Gentile nations who have spoiled, and dealt treacherously with Israel; that when the time arrives for the Israelites regeneration, the misfortunes occurring to Abraham's seed will be transferred to their enemies. Following we append another prophecy of the same import:

"And all the trees of the field shall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the Lord have spoken and have done it."—Ezekiel 17: 24.

"Trees" are nations. "The field" is the world. The "high" and "green" tree is the Gentiles "brought down." The "low and dry tree," that of Israel "flourishing." In the humiliating process of lowering the enemies of Israel, we can observe the same purpose of God as was revealed in the inflictions of the plagues upon Egypt.

Like Egypt

Egypt appears in the outermost verge of history, overvaulted with polytheism—a plurality of gods. The River Nile was a god; hence, the blood-stained waves. The frog was a god, the creator of animal life, and with the tadpole, were used in the hieroglyphics of a million and the titles "Lord of life, and Lord of the land." The beetle, or fly was a god venerated as formator of the world, called the sacred scarab. The bull-god suffered with all his bovine tribe. Aphis, the most popular deity in all Egypt, who bleated oracles and was fed from golden plate. Hence the plague of murrain. The Egyptian priests who treated diseases by incantation were powerless to cure the plague of boils. Isis, the moon queen of heaven, the state goddess of the sky—controlling the material heaven, let loose hail storm and lightning, so that Pharaoh disowned this divinity. The vegetable gods were devoured by locusts. The sun god, symbol of eternal light, and worshiped as Amun Ra was veiled in darkness three days—a threefold curse to the threefold claims.

All of these inflictions were intended as a divine blow struck at the very root of Egyptian theogony. The Almighty informed Moses: "Against all the gods of the Egyptians I will execute judgment, saith the Lord." (Exodus 12: 12.) Even so, in the latter days the people have "strayed from mine ordinances," and—

"They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

From Autocracy to Democracy

During the great mutations from autocracy to republicanism, in the latter days, Jeremiah predicts:

"Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee."—Jeremiah 46: 28.

Where has God driven Israel? Among the Gentile nations. To make a full end, is not to destroy individuals, as we now see it. But to bring down the power-crazed autocrats with their fabrics of kingcraft, their skeleton forms of government, prohibiting the subject coming into their own. It is not plain from this prophecy that the flaming banner of "just governments derive their power from the consent of the governed," is floating out from the model republic over the globe? The dream of world dominion obsessing, heretofore, the mind of monarchs is fading into infinitesimal distance. Several kings have abdicated in the eastern world since the beginning of the great conflict. We see in the great overturning, from prophecy, more than the "wrath of jagged flame," "the splendid charge," "magnificent pageant," and "conquest." Down deep we see the struggle conducted between two conceptions of divinity—the conception of a God without a Christ, a crushing and vengeful deity allied to kings and murder. The other is God with Christ breaking up institutions of caste, breathing more potential influences away from slaughter, and into wider fields of peace on earth, to men of good will, while Jacob's children "fill the earth with fruit."

Palestine

"But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid."—Jeremiah 46: 27.

This prophecy pointing to Palestine, is elaborated by the following:

"The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. And it shall come to pass in these last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: And they shall beat their swords into plough-shares; and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."—Isaiah 2: 1-5.

"Concerning Judah and Jerusalem." "Mountain" in prophecy signifies "government." When modified or appropriated as in this prophecy, by an expletive, it signifies the government of the "Lord's house"—the church—the "restoration of the kingdom of Israel." "Mountain" is representative in prophecy of political governments also. Thus:

"Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain."—Jeremiah 51: 25.

In this, the Babylonian empire, or rather, the Chaldean monarchy, and second Babylonian administration, is called a "destroying mountain." Isaiah's prediction has never till now received its accomplishment, for—

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

"Bishop Newton.—And accordingly Jerusalem has never since been in the possession of the Jews, but hath constantly been in subjection to some other nation, as first to the Romans, and afterwards to the Saracens, and then to the Franks, and then to the Mamelukes, and now to the Turks.—Dissertations on the Prophecies, p. 366.

But the initial rays of light begin to illumine the eastern sky, since General Allenby conquered the "Crescent," and ran up the banner of Christian national significance. I dare say you remember the Prophet Joel, whose credentials are just as regular as those of Isaiah, or Micah, brought in a minority report on this subject: "Prepare war. Wake up the mighty men. . . Beat your plowshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears."

The planting of Israel as a distinct nation has begun. "The mountain of the Lord's house" is to be established in the tops of the mountains—the highest government—modeled after a constitution overtopping all gone before it. The Gentile horn lifted up over Judah—the fourth horn—is now broken, (Zechariah 1: 18, 19) "the four carpenters"—constructors—are being marshaled to back up the "measurement," and rehabilitation of Palestine, as certified by the angel to the "young man." (Zechariah 1: 20, 21; 2: 1-5.)

As to the kind of government eventually erected in Palestine, on its land, we read:

"And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord; and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Delightful, and thy land Union; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married."—Isaiah 62: 2-4, I. V.

There is now a strong sentiment in favor of placing the proposed republic under the protectorate of the United States and Great Britain. The plan including the distinct, independent nationalizing of the Jews is in the program of the Anglo-French Commission, and is found as Article Ten of Overtures.

Fall of Turkey

With the fall of the Mohammedan power, the last Gentile abomination was swept from Palestine. The waning of the Turk's dominion was fated by prophecy, and doomed by chronology. Revelation 16: 12 photographs thus:

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

The Euphrates flows through Turkey. "Waters are peoples," said the Angel to John. The water then, "drying up," clearly points to the withering of the Ottoman power. "In" these waters of the Euphrates were four angels bound (Revelation 9: 14) four sultanies of which the empire was composed, located in the very country through which the Euphrates flows—Aleppo, Iconium, Damascus, and Bagdad. The angels—agencies—were loosed in 1449, and for "one year, one month and one hour" prophetically, 391 years and 15 days, they filled the world with carnage, or until 1840, since which time, they, or it, Turkey, has existed by the sufferance of other powers. John says:

"And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire, and smoke, and brimstone."—Revelation 9: 17.

We identify this power by history, in military array, as the Turks. After the "four angels were loosed," they came upon the stage, army and horsemen numbering "two hundred

THE FORUM

Who Owns the Stewardship?

BY J. A. KOEHLER

A most graphic discussion of one of the most important questions before the church.

No excuse need be offered for discussing the question of how titles to stewardship properties must be held. The fact that there is no common judgment on this very vital question is reason enough. There is no more important question before this church than the question of stewardship titles. Everyone should be concerned because the outcome of our whole economic life is determined largely by the manner in which titles are held and the methods according to which properties are administered. The interest of the membership at large, the power of the group to develop, protect, and perpetuate its institutions and to make them serve the common good of all depend upon how this question is settled.

Three Views Concerning Titles

Some hold (1) that the steward should have a title in fee simple to his stewardship. (2) Others maintain that the title must be vested in the order, or organization, or group, that promotes the stewardship. (3) And last of all there arises the spectacle of a hybrid scheme which proposes a sort of joint ownership in the factory, store, farm, or what not, between the steward and the group. This latter is a sort of "middle-of-the-road" or "straddle-the-fence" proposal; it is in effect an attempt to effect a conciliation between two irreconcilable positions.

The main argument advanced to support the idea of private ownership of social wealth is that it is essential to incentive to individual effort. All other arguments, from a Latter Day Saint viewpoint, are insignificant in comparison, because, as we say, our goal is "the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ."

Group ownership of stewardship properties is maintained on the ground (1) that it furnishes the greatest incentive to wholesome individual enterprise; (2) that it is according to the law of God; (3) that it is ethically, sociologically, and economically sound; and (4) that the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man demand it.

Those who advocate the hybrid scheme find their best defense in a supposed need and right of adequate protection to entrepreneur stewards in case of their own infidelity, of their dissatisfaction with the social order, or in case of social disintegration or the collapse of the social structure. In judgthousand thousand." They go into battle on horses. The "breastplates of fire"—uniforms composed of "red, or scarlet, blue, and yellow." Out of horses nostrils or mouth issued fire, smoke and brimstone, a combination of three—saltpeter, charcoal, and sulphur, and by the combination of these three making gun powder, "was men slaughtered." The Turks were the first to use this explosive in battle, and according to Gibbon and Barnes, used it in battering down the eastern wing of the Roman Empire. They held the carbine down to the noses of their horses, and the explosion to the eye of the revelator would resemble fire, smoke, and brimstone emitted from horses' mouths.

That was one source of their power, (verse 19), and another was in the "horses' tail," which is a well known Turkish standard, and symbol of official authority, and these tail-banners directed and concentrated their power.

ing any of the principles involved in either of these three doctrines, we should be careful to ascertain their inherent natures, and not to judge anyone wrong because some method results in little more than a prodigal waste of social resources. No principle may be judged by any particular method according to which some have only attempted to operate or apply it. But a rule is established once its workability is proven by experience, by reason, or by experience and reason, notwithstanding any number of previous or subsequent failures to get results.

Socialists and communists may have failed to achieve any sound reforms by their plans for administering group owned and regulated properties or enterprises. The thing to do is to search out the causes of their failures; and in doing this we may find that they had no adequate ways of fixing individual responsibility or of inspiring fidelity to trust and not that the doctrine of common ownership of social concerns is inherently wrong.

Is Private Ownership of Productive Properties Essential to Individual Incentive?

Let us see. It is commonly admitted by Saints that our ministers are the only ones who, in practice, subscribe to the stewardship doctrine. For the sake of argument, let that be granted.

Foremost among our stewards then are our honorable presidents and their worthy colleagues, the presiding bishops.

Now then, if we find that these men have conducted the affairs or businesses intrusted to them industriously, if they have been devoted to their tasks, if they have sought faithfully for ways and means of accomplishing the work of their several offices, then we have proven beyond question that a proprietary interest in the things men work at is not essential to individual incentive.

But the question is: Are these representative stewards faithful? Are they industrious and proficient? Are they searching out and employing ways and means to make their efforts count for the common good? To these, all answer with one accord, yes! Next we ask, are their businesses privately owned? Do they have titles in fee simple to their estates? Do they own their stewardships? And again all must answer, No! Then it follows as a necessary conclusion that private ownership is not essential to individual enterprise.

But our proof is not limited to the testimony of the lives of the aforementioned men, for we have the cumulative testimony of history, and particularly of the life work of hundreds of faithful and efficient workmen in this church, many of whom never even hoped to acquire a proprietary interest in even a home.

Workmen's Protection

Much has been said by the defenders of the hybrid scheme of stewardships about the protection of the entrepreneur steward in case of social collapse or of dissatisfaction with the social order. In view of the possibility of either or both of these, it is urged that the temporal steward has a right to and will demand the protection that private ownership of productive enterprises affords.

But why should one class of workmen ask for or be given guaranties which are not given to other classes of workmen? Is industry a matter of direction of business affairs only? Does the wealth of society arise from managerial ability alone? It is known and admitted universally that managerial ability is of little consequence unless there is added to this ability the productive effort of a corps of competent and faithful workmen. Moreover, the labor of skilled workmen is the greatest factor in wealth production. Since this is true, if any class is entitled to protection against loss from social collapse or individual infidelity, certainly the workman steward is.

But let us consider the outcome of the special privilege proposition involved in the hybrid scheme. First of all, what one class gains for itself another loses. If social wealth is brought into the possession and control of the managerial steward it certainly must pass away and out from the control of the workman steward. Therefore, the hybrid scheme would protect a small class, and do it with the product of the joint efforts of a few managers and a large body of workmen, and in this way take away the only possible protection of by far the largest producing class, the workman steward.

Moreover, what do the facts of experience argue? What is the one thing that threatens to break down our whole social order to-day? Is it not the consciousness of the workman class that they are not protected in their right to a proper share of the rewards of industry? Is it not because a few own what many have labored to produce?

What is needed is not guaranties to some, but guaranties to all of participation in the benefits of cooperative effort on a basis of equality. Protection to the workman as well as the managers, and to all others who add their share to the productive effort, is the only ethically or sociologically correct principle. But this very process of reasoning drives us to the conclusion that common ownership of social enterprises is the true doctrine. The method of administering these properties will be set forth under "The stewardship regime."

Social Laws for Social Beings

Man is by nature a social being. Is anyone so foolish as to propose that being can be maintained by a process that is not in accord with nature and being? Since man by nature is a social being, it follows that social means must be employed to effect his salvation or redemption.

It is true that each person is a separate and distinct individual, but that does not mean that a man may live a separate and independent life. His birth is the outcome of social relations; his health and existence are dependent upon parental care, and throughout his whole life man looks to his fellow man to supply the conditions of physical, mental, cultural, moral and spiritual growth and development. The interdependence of social functions is so analagous to the interdependence of vital functions that it seems almost incredible that the doctrines of individualism should be set forth as a reflection of the divine mind. Man is social by nature, therefore, the law of human progress must provide for social adjustment.

Individual and Social Rights

Much has been said about individual rights. But what are individual rights? The individual requires that and only that, that is essential to a complete and normal unfoldment of the powers of his being. To this each man has a right.

On the other hand, the social group requires that and only that, that is essential to its existence, development, and perpetuity. And to all this society has a positive right. Now make comparisons. Individual needs are fundamentally and necessarily consumptive and expressive. That is to say, the individual requires only that his present needs be supplied—he must have food, raiment, an habitation (a home or inheritance), physical exercise, educational direction and cultural opportunity. Having these, his just demands are supplied. His anticipations of future satisfactions should find their realization in the experiences of the future and in the prosperity of the group. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth." On the other hand, society, which is the sum total of activities of individual men, in the nature of things, should have the power to define the relations which men must sustain to each other and to properties of common concern, to require and regulate production, and to command its resources for the common good. Society's rights then are fundamentally and necessarily creative, possessive, and administrative. There is quite a difference between individual and social rights, though of course they must harmonize one with the other; in fact they are complementary; the reconciliation of individual with social aims presupposes this. Private or individual rights cease where common or collective rights begin, and vice versa. Society owes its origin to individual needs and to the cooperative effort to supply them. The individual finds his protection and satisfactions in the relations he sustains to other men, and in the relations all men in common sustain to properties or things; and it must be obvious that if each and every individual is to enjoy rights in common with every other person that all matters of common concern must be distinctively group matters.

Group concerns are social concerns; and social concerns, both with regard to persons and to properties, must be maintained in proper combinations and proportions if human needs are to be supplied. The power to direct individual enterprise so that each individual's personal opportunities to possess property, to enjoy liberty, and to realize a full expression of the powers of being shall exactly equal those of every other person presuppose a proprietary interest on the part of society in all concerns arising from social activity and upon which the interest or wellbeing and perpetuity of society depends.

The Law of God

"To the law and to the testimony."

"Every person who belongeth to this church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the Church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 21.

The law of God bears directly upon the question of personal liberty. It is urged that stewardship relations take away men's personal liberties. Yes, that is true—it does. It takes away all liberty to do anything the law prohibits, namely, everything that is not good for man to do. And it also takes away personal liberty in that it obliges all who ask the privilege of membership in the church of God to act in a very definite way, with reference to both material and immaterial things. "He shall do with his moneys according as the law directs."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7. He "must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3. These provisos do not destroy agency; they do not destroy the freedom of will; no man is obliged to join this church of Jesus Christ; he may go to hell if he chooses; he is free to act for himself; but when he chooses to accept the privileges and liberties of communion in the church he at once obligates himself to fulfill the conditions of church membership. Just so, one of the conditions of church membership is this: "Behold this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, . . . none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

What is a Steward? Is He the Owner?

A steward is "a person who is intrusted with the management of estates (properties or possessions) or affairs; (anything to be done; business of any kind; public or private concerns) which are not his own." —Standard Dictionary.

That the steward is a manager most people admit. Some of these same men will admit that the steward's estate is one of "trust." But don't you see that the proposition that stewardship concerns are matters of trust implies at once that the concerns must belong to or be owned by some other than the steward himself individually? So declares the law: "If the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are not stewards."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:10. Thus the law clearly decrees the principle from which stewardships arise—the property or concern must belong to another.

Now comes this retort: "Surely, everything belongs to God, and we are stewards before him and therefore must answer to him." To this we agree. But this repartee falls short of its purpose, namely, to establish the right of individual ownership. We are not only answerable to God for the whole of conduct, but we are to be stewards before men (the whole body of the church organized for stewardship purposes), as indicated by the command "organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship" and therefore answerable to man for our conduct with relation to things in which all men have a common interest.

We speak of a man's stewardship as if it were his own. Well, it is in one sense, and it is not in another sense, for a steward may be "removed out of his place and another . . . planted in his stead."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12. Just so the law states, that a man is to be "a steward over his own property, or that which he shall secure by consecration," Doctrine and Covenants 42:9, or, in other words, according to or under or by the law of consecration. Now let us briefly survey the field already covered before going further: First, all are to be stewards. Second, to be stewards we must be trustees. But third, we are not now trustees of our own properties, but owners. And therefore, fourth, if we are to be stewards, some change must take place in property relations. That change is called a "consecration."

To "consecrate" means to set apart as sacred, to dedicate to sacred uses. That is to say, that of our own free will, we are to make disposition of our own properties (that which is under our own control) in such a way as that thereafter and in consequence of this "consecration" we shall be stewards and not owners of our own properties. "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, [as] a steward over his own properties."—Doctrine and Covenants 4:20. Note carefully—if he were already a steward, the provision would not be made that he shall "be made" accountable, a steward.

In pursuance of this "consecration," each man is "made" a steward by appointment of the group as further provided in the law: "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Here again the purpose of this consecration and covenant is made clear, namely "that [or so that] every man may give an account unto me [as a steward, or] of the stewardship which is appointed unto him."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

This is clearly a provision for a change from private ownership of productive properties to common ownership. Every man individually is to be a steward. Therefore no man can own individually stewardship properties. Therefore stewardship properties must be owned by men in common. And this common ownership is what gives rise to and makes possible the action of the group in "appointing every man his stewardship."

The authority of a group always arises from its law-enforcing power. And laws are made not only for guidance, but for protection, and also to prevent designing men from subverting the common welfare. Even if there were nothing in the stewardship regime which is by nature essential to the development of manhood, the economic and political considerations would still vindicate the provision in the law for the common ownership of productive enterprises.

And such is the provision of the law. "The bishopric [is] authorized to bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing . . . [that they may thereby] lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized."—Doctrine and Covenants 128:1. With this agrees Doctrine and Covenants 101:1: "Concerning all the properties which belong to the order;" and both of these harmonize with the provisions of Doctrine and Covenants 81:4 that "you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships."

New Form of Ownership

We cannot afford to overlook the implication of every provision providing for the establishment of stewardships which is that the ownership is to be changed from private to common. If there was to be no change in ownership (as some try to make themselves believe) then what sense is there in directing the bishop to provide for special organizations under which property could be held "lawfully"? Was private ownership ever unlawful in any portion of the United States? What is the sense in providing for a common fund with which the agent of the group is to purchase lands "for the public benefit" of the church if land is to be owned in individual right? (See Doctrine and Covenants 58:7; 58:11; 42:2, 10; 98:10.) And especially when it is through the possession of its lands that the independence of the church is to be brought about. (See Doctrine and Covenants 63:8 with 77:3.)

And if the land was to be sold, as some propose, where would the authority of the group come in so that it could "send forth" workmen "of all kinds" to labor for the Saints of God? (Doctrine and Covenants 58:12.) Do you find any individualist surrendering his right to say who shall plow his privately owned land? No; but if we would utilize our man power and other resources, we must have group ownership of productive properties.

Human experience tends to confirm the decrees of God. Society is fast coming to see even more clearly than some of our own priesthood that private ownership of productive enterprises is fatal to society's interests.

The Fear of Self

Some are afraid that the church will get its members by the throat and choke the life out of them. Well, who is the church? Are not we the church? Are we afraid of ourselves?

First of all the church as such has nothing to do with this property ownership affair. The several "orders" of Enoch are voluntary associations of church men in the several localities where their relations geographically and otherwise make stewardship relations practicable. (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1.)

Each order conducts its own affairs; "they shall be organized in their own names, and in their own name; and they shall do business in their own name and in their own names." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:9.) Each organization is in a way separate and distinct, and owns its own properties. The terms of association specify that the common good or the building up of Zion and her stakes is the aim; but even at that no money can be taken out of any treasury of any order "only by the voice and common consent of the order." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.) So what is there to be afraid of? Nothing but ourselves.

Minimum Stewardship

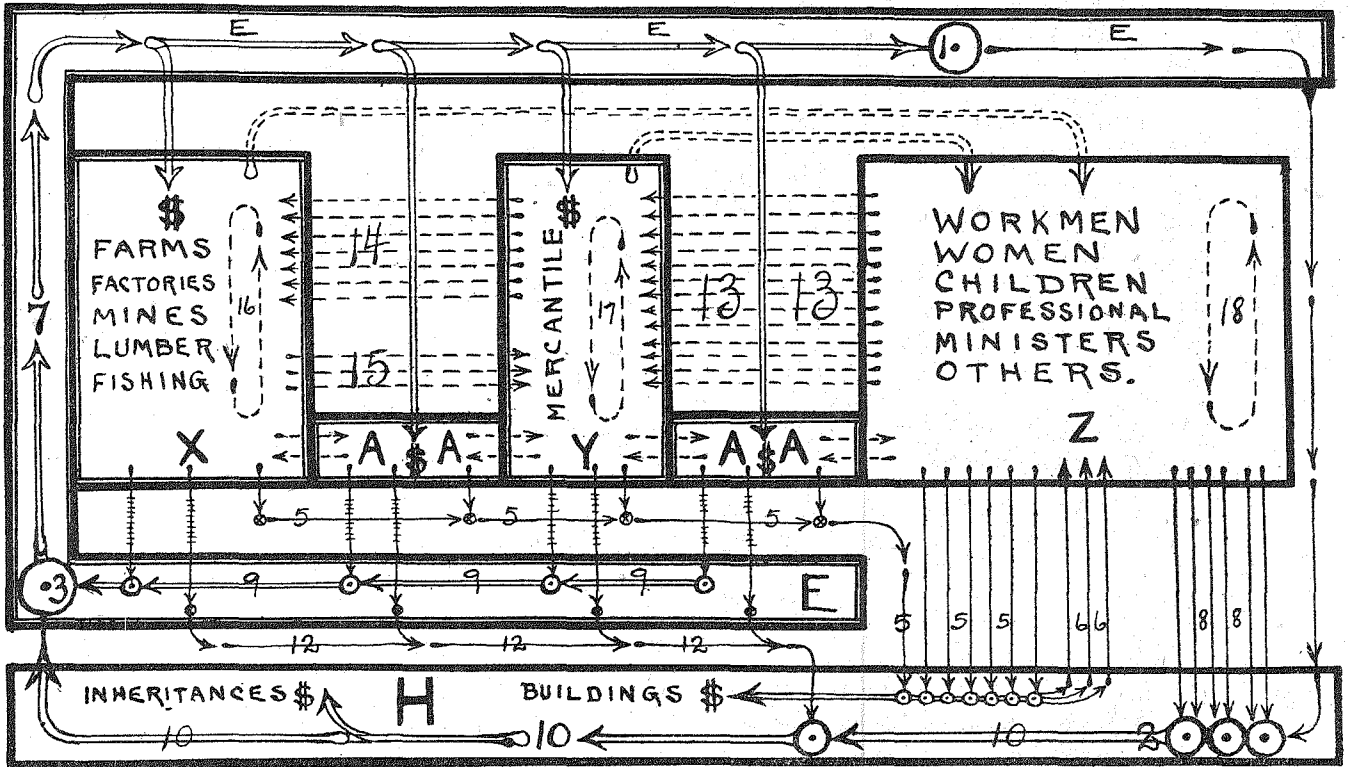

"Inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:9. The provisions of God's law must form a consistent whole. The grounds for the above provision may be better understood if we refer to other portions of the law. "You are to have equal claims . . . and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talents, that every man may gain other talents [the tokens "of wealth"] . . . to cast into the Lord's storehouse."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

Here are two purposes set forth. First, to secure to each individual the full enjoyment of his right to develop his powers of being, and second, to create surplus wealth so that social progress may be possible. Now let us ask, since one purpose of stewardships is to create surplus wealth, what should be the minimum extent of properties intrusted to anyone for stewardship purposes? Would it not be "inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family?" Can any steward add to the surplus product until the necessary expenses of production are met? And do not these expenses include the needs of his family? Therefore, when a man consecrates, under the terms of this consecration there should pass back to him for stewardship purposes an estate large enough to supply the hybrid notion of stewardship titles. Inheritances relate to and arise from individual rights; but stewardships relate to and arise from collective or group rights, powers, and necessities. One is essential to the life and freedom of the individual, the other is essential to the integrity, solidarity, and perpetuity of the social structure as a whole. A man and his family by themselves might attack nature and eke out a bare existence, but only when his neighbors come to his assistance and when all together organize their activities, can man rise in the scale of civilization. The highest civilization cannot be attained unless individual interests become identified with group interests, "except ye are one, ye are none of mine." "I pray that they may be one."

With the aid of the "key" the purpose of the accompanying chart may be easily understood. The lines portray what is

KEY. --- = EXCHANGES. - - - - - = RETURNS FROM STEWARDSHIPS. ← = FLOW OF CAPITAL. ⊗ = LOCAL BISHOPS
KEY. $ = PERMANENT INVESTMENTS. ○ = POINTS OF ACCUMULATION OF FUNDS. ← = PAYMENTS TO AND FROM BISHOP

needs of himself and family. Otherwise he would become a dependent upon the community, and that by the group's appointment.

The right of residence inheres in man? Man could not be without a place of residence, and hence this is his right by birth. And man's social nature argues that that right of residence should be enjoyed in the midst of and in common with his fellows. To deny that would be to pervert our natures. Hence this right of inheritance shall be secured to a man absolutely, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1: "Shall have claim on that portion only that is deeded unto him."

Man has domestic needs as well as productive, and in each case the portion allotted should measure up to the needs of the man and his family.

But let us not confuse stewardship relations to property with inheritance relations. Inheritances belong absolutely to each man; they are not estates of trust; but stewardships belong to another and are therefore estates of trust. The failure to discriminate between stewardship rights and inheritance rights accounts in part for the origin of the actually going on in society, what the hybrid plan of stewardships proposes, and also what we believe the law of God and the testimony of experience and reason compel us to adopt as the only right plan of social reconstruction.

With the industrial chart before us, let us observe a few fundamental facts. The first fact of society is that it is man's effort to get what he needs and wants. The second fact is that this endeavor gives rise to different classes and grouping of workmen or social units. The third fact is that the more complex and highly specialized industrial activity becomes, the more dependent men are one upon another. The fourth fact then is that the social product is the fruit of the combined labors of all the industrial workers joined together or taken as a whole. And last of all, the most imminent fact, as proven by current events, is that in order to maintain this social structure there must be a proper distribution of parts, a faithful performance of the several kinds of work in each part, and such administration and distribution of the concerns and benefits of the joint activity as will satisfy the demands of the cooperating units.

Let us contemplate the chart from a Latter Day Saint standpoint. With the end in view of building up Zion, of developing an industrial society that will guarantee the welfare of each and all on a basis of equality, and thereby affording the greatest freedom for individual development, the membership at large, (Z) workmen, women, children, and all—send first of all their tithes (5) into the common storehouse (H). This storehouse is in charge of the Bishop whose business it is to administer this fund for the good of the whole. Moreover, there flows into the common treasury (H-2) from this same source (Z) offerings, consecrations, and surplus (8). This the membership at large contributes for the same purpose, namely, to build up institutions (including stewardships) for the common good.

These funds coming in as tithes (5) and offerings (8) are invested by the bishop (line 10 indicates the flow) in stewardships (X,Y,AA, but not Z), some of which are farms, some stores, and some are other industries; all of which are permanent investments ($). Now it should be remembered that every man is first a member of the church at large (group Z). If he wishes to consecrate (line 8) and is to receive a temporal stewardship, he would by that act become classified as a member of the "order" and would occupy in one of the fields indicated X, Y, or A. Now the law provides that "you are to have equal claims on the properties" (Doctrine and Covenants 81:4) for stewardship purposes. This means that the common fund (2) in flowing out (10) as investments in stewardships (X,Y,A) still remains common property and cannot therefore be privately owned in any sense, but must be owned by the whole group whose contributions and activities give birth to and perpetuate the industrial concern.

Man needs food, clothing, shelter, and opportunities for profitable employment. All of these concerns (X,Y,AA) are nothing more or less than the product of man's collective efforts to provide for his needs. They are therefore social concerns, and upon them group independence depends, and to these the group has no right to relinquish its claim. "My people . . . hold claim upon that which I have appointed unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 78, 13. The implications of the law make "my people" a collective term.

We have already said that it is proposed that as a necessary guarantee against social breakdowns the small groups of men in X, Y, AA shall be given deeds to the stewardships made possible by the joint contributions (both in money (8) and in effort) of the vast body of members at large (Z). We would like to ask what the ethical grounds are upon which it is proposed to give guarantees to one man (X) when the very act by which he is favored is the very thing that robs a large body of men (Z) of the same protection to which they have an equal right. Certainly this program is in violation of Christian ethics which say that "that which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man. . . but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another. . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.)

Investing Private Capital

But some say that X, or Y, or A (see chart) has money enough to provide himself with a stewardship and some to spare; why should he not hold it as absolutely his own? The answer is, first, because money does not build factories nor give value to farms. When a factory is built it is built out of materials which are given shape and place by the labor of productive workmen. "Capitalist" do not build factories, but they are built by workmen. The real capital invested is not the bundle of gold certificates by which a few men draw on the resources of the many, but the real capital is invested by those who put their labors and skill into the work of construction. Nearly all economists define capital as "the product of past labor set aside to further production." Capital then is a reward which is due labor, but which the laborer foregoes in order that his future effort may yield him a greater return. The answer to the foregoing inquiry is that a man does not invest his own capital, but men do invest their labors; and this converted labor we call "capital."

The fact that as man labors to provide his wants, he divides himself into different classes of laborers, furnishes no grounds for rewarding men according to the class of work done. But the Christian ethics declare that "it is not given that one should possess that which is above another," but that "in your temporal things ye shall be equal."— Doctrine and Covenants 49:3; 70:3. All wealth (aside from natural wealth) is so much concerted labor. The power to command labor (money) does not transfer the rightful ownership from the many to the few.

Buying Inheritance

The hybrid scheme provides that the moneys which X or Y or A receives from Z through the bishop or the order by means of which he diverts social wealth into a concern that is misnamed his "inheritance," shall be paid back (see line 12) from the profits of his stewardship. Here is where one needs to grasp the significance of exchange (lines 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, also the double broken arrow leading from X and Y to Z). This is what happens (it did happen in the beginning of society, and has continued to the present, and this plus private ownership in common concerns is the root of about all of our economic evils) this is what takes place: The mass of humanity try to supply their needs. In doing this men enter into an active exchange of commodities and services (see the broken single arrows 13 to 18). The workmen in Z exchange their labors with A, X, and Y and receive back their pay (so called—not wages) as indicated by the two broken double line arrows leading from X and Y to Z. Next, Z takes his pay and exchanges it with Y in an endeavor to realize his reward for his industry. But in the exchanging of money for commodities and services, a portion of the reward due the workman (Z) remains in the hands of X, Y, or A, and is called the earnings of the stewardship. With this accumulated fund, which is the product of labor which is not returned to labor as wages, the hybrid scheme proposes that X, Z, and A shall pay back to the combined laborer "Z" (through their representative or agent, the bishop in H) the moneys which Z had contributed as a means of securing his interests; and that when a specified sum of money gathered from the members at large has been paid back, that then the stewardship (which is erroneously called an inheritance) shall become the property of the individual steward. In other words, it is proposed that society shall sell its birthright for a mess of pottage and that the one who buys the birthright shall eat the pottage.

But what does the law provide? Simply this: "All moneys that ye receive in your stewardships by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle . . . shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys . . . and let no man say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it . . ." —Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12. This presents a problem in mathematics. If the steward must place all earnings into the common treasury as fast as he receives it, and none of the earnings shall be his by any individual right, how long will it take him to pay for his stewardship (or what some call an inheritance) out of the savings or earnings of his enterprise? Can he pay for it in eternity? No, evidently the proposal is in error; individual stewardships nor inheritances are purchaseable by the individual out of the proceeds of collective effort. If inheritances are matters of purchase from profits, I wonder where the ministerial steward, or even the workmen steward will come in.

A study of economic history we are sure will show that in order to maintain the social structure there must be a proper distribution of labor; each class must do the share of work intended, and properties must be administered under terms which will guarantee a perpetual equitable distribution of the rewards of industry.

Private ownership has been given a fair trial; and it has all but disrupted society.

Mutually profitable social relations can never be hoped for until society shall do as we have been commanded to do, namely: "to organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship," to have the properties "belong to the order:" to hold all surplus earnings from social activities at the command of the group; to make every man a "steward" over his own property.

"After all these things do the Gentiles seek." "But seek ye first to establish the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Man's business is to effect a full and normal development of his inherent powers of being. Self interest is to be served; but that interest does not consist in private ownership of the surplus product of cooperative effort. It does consist in establishing right relations—"the righteousness of the kingdom."

The self interest of each and every person should be served, but the interest of all cannot be served under the rule of private ownership of productive enterprises, for that rule always has and always will serve only to partially satisfy the selfish ambitions of a few. Private ownership is synonymous with a conflict of interests, it engages the attention upon, and directs the energies toward the accumulation of wealth, instead of the improvement of talents.

The above statement of Jesus implies that individual ends may best be served by that form of industrial society in which the individual finds his security in the prosperity of the group and not in private possessions. And evidently his immediate followers caught the force of his example and precept, for "they had all things common," and of course under that rule no man said "that aught of the things which he possessed were his own." (Acts 4: 32-35.)

The Christian religion aims not at property possessions, but at perfect manhood; it aims to bring men to love God and to love man. He loves that best to which he willingly gives most. The stewardship law brings men into relations which leave but one incentive before man, namely, to honor God by doing the most possible good to man. Under this law the greatest incentive to wholesome individual initiative is found: "that every man may improve upon his talent," his peculiar aptitude for some special kind of useful work. No greater incentive can be placed before man than the promise of being honored by both God and man because of achievements which have blessed humanity. If a man needs private property to stimulate him, he is unfit for a stewardship trust.

We have a right to certain guaranties. But all men have that right in common. And inasmuch as it is admitted that those guaranties arise from ownership, it follows that all men in common should own the things upon which their common welfare depends.

The State Board of Education of Iowa has opened the doors of the various state colleges to all graduates of a four years' high school course. There are no formalities. All that is now required is a certificate properly filled and signed showing 15 units of high school credit in any subjects whatever. This plan is in accordance with the effort to make the schools more democratic, providing equal opportunity and wholesale encouragement of learning.

Moving Pictures from a Biblical Standpoint

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

According to this writer the teachings of Christ and the book of Revelation are great panoramas of moving pictures.

Thomas Jefferson when discussing radical and reactionary forces said. "Error is not so dangerous where truth is free to combat it." A permanent authority has enjoined: "While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." (John. 12: 36.) An opposite policy would destroy equilibrium and open the way to disaster.

We can appreciate the attitude of the ancients as they, with ear attuned, listened to "the voice of many waters." "And the voice of him [Christ Jesus] was like the voice of many waters." (Revelation 1:15.) Each graceful wave, or boisterous breaker a separate force or individual voice, and meeting afar, the tones melt into one deep and solemn sound pouring into the soul of the dreamer on the coast. What degree of pathos and divine scenario—"the moving pictures" thrown to the screen by the inspiration of God! The panorama of "much people in heaven," church, state, earth, hades, "the dragon," "scarlet colored beast," new heaven, and new earth, holy city—New Jerusalem, temple, river of life, trees, fruit, the sceneries and enactments of past, present, and future dispensations. (Chapter 1: 9.) These include angels, the restoration of the gospel, Babylon, her downfall, illustrated by a millstone dropped from an angel's hand, the harvest of the earth, the white cloud and he that sat upon it, the sharp sickle, and so on, ad finitum.

At the greater number of these scenes, a special lecturer was present to explain the meaning of the pictures as they were flashed upon the screen. "Symbols," did you say? Yes, "the revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." (Revelation 1:1.) Yet more—"John bore record of the word of God and of the testimony of Jesus Christ and of all things which he saw." The scenes and enactments were to come upon the stage of time, "hereafter." (Chapter 4: 1.) The ancient Egyptian priests would call the method the Lord used "hieroglyphic" or "picture" method.

When it is affirmed upon the authority of the Christian revelation that "there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets [Daniel 2:28.] and maketh known to the King Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days," how can it be denied that the "God in heaven" put a "slide" in Nebuchadnezzar's dome, and threw the great metallic image on the screen and sent a "little stone" with irresistible power to crash his iron-clay feet and toes, thus prostrating the terrible image into dust in the latter days? The electric fingers which dashed the awful and mysterious inscriptions on the wall of ancient Babylon, wonderfully symbolic, yet signified as a "moving picture" the downfall of a kingdom upheld by injustice, impiety, and crime.

Among the "movies" shown to the prophet of beautiful character—Daniel, was one featuring a "ram and goat." When he saw the goat "from the west" run against the ram "in the fury of his power," who shall say that it was not a "movie" enabling Daniel by the spirit of inspiration to see the downfall of the Persian Empire and the rise of the conquering Grecian? Every one possesses spiritual organizations articulating with the spiritual. There are five spiritual senses corresponding to the five physical senses. Preception does depend very largely on physical sense. In a sense, everything is symbolic. Words are signs of ideas. Notes are signs of musical ideas. "I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps," said the revelator. His spiritual ear was attuned. "I saw the dead small and great stand before God." His spiritual eye was opened. "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good," exclaimed the Psalmist. His spiritual gustatory nerves of taste "hungered and thirsted after righteousness."

For David, the brilliant-colored, gorgeous, fire-and-sun-illuminated manuscript of nature—the universe, was a ceaselessly unrolling screen, vast expanded, manifesting the "excellencies" of its Creator.

Thus spiritual perceptions are developed by physical means, and our heavenly Father flashes the screens before us. The "films" are a little more mechanical now than when used for ministerial propaganda in the days of Paul, John the revelator, Enoch, Isaiah, Daniel, and Joseph the Martyr. During the Mosaic regime, a font of types was cast, a series of "moving pictures" was instituted—object lessons, to aid Israel to "see Christ," "and as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." (John 3:14.)

While I hold no brief for the bloody distinctiveness of the Mosaic institution, yet we are told that "the law was a shadow of good things to come." What will we find under the substance?

We inform the world of our dissatisfaction of reading or hearing read the scenes and experiences of ancient men of piety. We want to see the same thing—draw from the same source—tap the same fount. But do we remember that God used the "moving picture" method to their spiritual eyes?

Applying this to our physical and intellectual powers, even the printing press has been called "the tongue of the eye." Now, since the office of imprimatur has been abolished in the revolution of 1688, why not institute a mild censorship, and animate the gospel propaganda, assisting the preacher by a living process, even though it be a kindergarten to arouse the dormant, lethargic, unopened minds, to see?

Having given a series of fifteen lectures from the "Pathe films" of the "life of Christ," "John the Baptist," and the "Prodigal son," I can speak with assurance. Although errors are manifest in some respects, representing the Bavarian idea, we had opportunity to correct, especially where John administers the sacred rite of baptism to Jesus by pouring water on his head from a cup. Concerning one lecture we gave to the children of the state school on the "Passion films" we can specialize. Professor Montgomery said: "The children learned more in that hour of seeing and hearing than they could have learned in two months from the cold type with quarterly or oral explanation only."

The pictorial method of imparting instruction has been deemed the acme in our educational system. Diagrams, outlines, analysis, programs, blue prints, maps, charts, blackboards, and globes with all apparatuses, are elemental, including "the movies." But may we share the opinion that the time will come when art practice will be worship—"on the sea of glass." If the Holy Spirit can now touch the spark of divinity which God has woven into the minister's being, with the flame of sacred fire which shall illumine his mind, clarify his thoughts, bringing him into closer communion with the powers of heaven, enabling him to draw, with the inspired pencil, a picture, and send it to the sensitive surface of mind for impress, will the animated picture or "movie" itself, before the physical vision, weaken the Spirit's effort, the power of transit or impress?

The phonograph reproduces, and the stronger the forces which originally impress upon wax or amberole discs or cylinder, the stronger will be the reproduction. Intellectuals move slowly. Delegates may travel to a convention or a congress in the Twentieth Century Flyer, or with greater speed in an airplane, yet their intellects lumber along in a slow ox-cart. How slow they go.

We do not advocate the use of movies that develop and edu-

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Young Women

Announcements are being made of the forthcoming of the manual for the Temple Builders? We are very glad that this much-needed and long-desired book is about to materialize, for young women all over the church will be glad to receive its help and counsel.

"In unity there is strength." There is something peculiarly valuable in unifying the interests of young people. The inherent craving they have for association with those of their kind, is a pointer we adults would do well to consider. It seems fundamental with them. Have you never noticed how well a boy or girl works when he or she has the company of another boy or girl? There is stimulation of best efforts; there is cheerful compliance, and a sturdy disregard of fatigue or dislike for the duty assigned. Besides, one gains by very numbers. Ten boys can annihilate a woodpile in quicker time than one, and the branch who has its young people well organized, has assets unknown by those who have allowed that force to be dissipated and undirected.

Many will ask, we are sure: "Who are the Temple Builders?" A pertinent question, and one we hope every Latter Day Saint can soon answer. Are they going to build the temple—that beautiful edifice to which we all look forward as exemplifying to us the near approach of our Savior? Well, we hope so—and they hope so—that is, in this way: they want to do their part in that wonderful work! But they also recognize the fact that all of us are building temples every day of our lives! The temple of our souls, and it is truly a matter of much concern to each of us, that our building shall be both permanent and beautiful.

The young women of our church who are banding themcate the wrong passions or powers. Not the inspired sentimentalism of the world, not sophomoric vaporings, but the moral, the intellectual, the divine, that will turn the voluptuous tide which now engulfs the millions, that which will root out the wicked cells from the organic body of society, and replace with cells growing righteousness, justice, and joy.

The universe having come from an infinite being, will unfold as man shall unfold, and the growth of the human mind is the growth of all beauty. After quality has come, we wait for quantity. A few drops falling through the trees reveals little poetry, but a vast shower falling on a thousand acres of dense forest produces a bordering on the grand. Even so, a good idea must become multitudinous.

To aid the voice in reaching the limits of a vast audience or throng, or to throw the voice beyond, a megaphone or telephone is used. To aid the divine worship and bring the soul into rapport with the serenity of heavenly atmosphere, the reed string, and wind instruments reek with joyous melody and concord. To impress, express, and simplify the lecturer uses stereopticon slides. Jesus, the Master of men, held up a little child, a flower, a lily, a house, a sheep, a lamb, a dove, a vine, a branch, a door, a fig, a thistle, a tree, a stream, and many other moving, growing, acting, and intelligent pictures to express and impress, and render perspicuous the doctrine of the kingdom. He used the physical universe as a program of the spiritual, and Paul the apostle affirms that "the invisible [spiritual] things from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." (Romans 1:20.)

The essence of this coordinating principle may be expressed in the following words: Whoever can make two ears of corn, or two blades of grass, grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, deserves the consideration of mankind.

selves together under the significant name of "Temple Builders" are setting for each of us inspirational examples to "go and do likewise." Not that we would interfere with or appropriate their particular plans, but we want to be also known to the Great Architect as "temple builders"—building each day, more and more "stately mansions." Here is the folder sent out by their supervisor; read and mentally resolve to "boost" for every good effort made in this direction. A. A.

Temple Builders

"Build thee more stately mansions, oh my soul!"

A club for the young women of the church and their friends, after they have completed the Oriole ranks or are over fifteen years of age.

Business of the club: To band together the young womanhood of the church and help them to find themselves—morally, mentally, and spiritually.

Are you fit to take a constructive part in Zion? This organization is a step Zionward.

Health, social training, good times, mental development, and spiritual uplift are our watchwords.

No red tape. Only the simplest organization is required. Organize your friends into a chapter, elect a leader and a recorder and report to us. Ten cents is the membership fee, payable yearly.

Get together and discuss your mutual problems of good dressing, vocation, business.

Read something together that is both interesting and good and discuss at club what you have read at home.

Get somebody to tell you the things you want to know. Have lecturers for various topics.

Entertain your friends together. As a club you can make it more worth while and lots of fun. Learn to do such things together; it is valuable training.

What do you want to do? What do you want to learn? We place very little restriction upon the local chapters, only a very general requirement of service, outdoor exercise, and social life.

Organize for better service.

"Come Let Us Live With Our Children"

I am a mother of three children; Betty, aged six, Bob, four, and Jack who is two. Up to the time Betty was four years old she had always been a very nervous child and needed constant entertaining. I hesitated to send her to kindergarten, but after reasoning with myself, I finally decided to send her. The concentration required in the two years she spent in kindergarten made a different child of her, and she can amuse herself now for many hours at a time.

Bob entered kindergarten about three months ago. He is a quiet child and needs to be brought out of himself. He seems to be getting needed help in the kindergarten, for in the short while he has been there, he has become more talkative and active. He now enjoys being with other children whereas before he preferred to play alone.

There is nothing more necessary in bringing up children than to have them feel that we are interested in them. Try always to answer their questions. If you cannot satisfy their curiosity, they will surely go elsewhere for their information. When the children come home from school, I ask them what they did, what song they sang, what pictures they looked at, etc. They live the two or three hours spent in kindergarten over again by telling me what they have done. I had to leave the children for a week not long ago. When I returned they could not talk fast enough to tell me all that had happened.

A story at bedtime is always welcomed by the children, and I find that it is not only enjoyable and beneficial to them, but also to myself. They never tire of fairy stories. Nature stories are always interesting, too. My children will choose the same stories over and over again until they almost know them by heart.

Several nights ago I was called away and could not read a story, so I promised one for after breakfast next morning. When breakfast was over and I thought of all I had to do, it seemed as if I were wasting time to sit and tell stories. However, as the children became absorbed in the story and their happy faces looked up into mine, I realized that time could not be better spent. The story was that of Hans and the Four Big Giants, the keynote of which is helping others. I knew that the children had got the point of the story when they helped me afterwards to clear the breakfast table.

The kindergarten is a great help in making children independent. Each child is taught gradually and in a playful way to help himself. In a class of forty, John does not like to be the only one who cannot put on his rubbers or button his coat. Perhaps you will say you can teach independence at home. Granted, you can. The trouble at home is that we too often do too many things for our children. At home, too, we lack the group work so beneficial in the kindergarten.

Orderliness is another aim of the kindergarten. It should also be the aim of every household. In kindergarten all the material is kept in order. It is given out and collected in an orderly way and each child is taught to pack up his material after he has finished with it. There is always a place for everything in the kindergarten, and the child learns to put everything in its place.

If your child is not orderly at home, do not blame him until you first put yourself in his place and see if you are expecting the impossible. We have discovered in our family that by making things convenient, the children will keep things in order. In our coat closet we have a box for rubbers and another for toys. We have put within reach two hooks for each child's clothing. On the door there is a bag of several pockets for gloves. Even the two-year-old boy puts his things away and I have never taught him to do so. He learned by observing the others. Just the other night he cried while I was undressing him because he remembered he had not put his train away. Let each child have a separate place for his toys for they so enjoy being owners. If one is neat and another careless it would be very discouraging for both to keep their things together.

Not long ago I spent a most enjoyable afternoon coasting with the children. A neighbor who saw me, said, "You surely are a child with your children." She unconsciously paid me a compliment. If I can only make my children feel that I am interested in everything they do, I am sure I will have and keep their confidence.—Mrs. Ethel C. Young, in Government Bulletin.

A statement from the treasurer of The Outlook to its editor-in-chief, Lyman Abbott, sets forth that the increase in the cost of paper for The Outlook is 100 per cent, so that paper which three years ago cost $100,000, will for 1920 cost $200,000. The cost of typesetting, printing, binding, mailing, has increased over 50 per cent, which means a further increase in the mechanical production of $50,000. In addition, the zone postal law has seriously increased the cost of postage. On these accounts, The Outlook is raising its price. All the reasons above set forth except the one with regard to postage, applies to the church publications, the HERALD, Ensign, Journal of History, Autumn Leaves, Stepping Stones, and Hope, and also to the Sunday school and Religio Quarta.

It is one of the very unfortunate aspects of the law of England, that while adultery alone is good cause for securing a divorce by a man from his wife, his adultery is not sufficient cause alone for his wife to secure a divorce. There must be adultery with cruelty, or with some other element. We note in a recent news item that the result has been a large number of such unions in England, which are in fact practically polygamy, except that the man is not married to the second wife. It states that this condition also exists in other parts of Europe, part of it at least growing out of the world war.

A Report from Lamoni Stake

Excerpts from the report of the stake presidency to the recent conference at Lamoni, Iowa.

... The work of the presidency as now carried on is under three departments, and under the immediate supervision of the brethren named: J. F. Garver, administration; C. E. Wight, office; D. T. Williams, field. Lines of demarkation are of course more or less flexible, yet so defined as to make practicable definite assignments to the various departments. And the work is so conducted as to have in each department the full and active concurrence and cooperation of the remaining members of the presidency. . . .

The Bishopric

The work of the Bishopric continues under the administration of Bishop Albert Carmichael and his one active counselor, Elder A. J. Yarrington. Elder R. J. Lambert, removed to Independence, Missouri, in June, 1918, is still of the Bishopric. Under the circumstances just mentioned, however, he can have to do with the work of this department only indirectly, and on occasions of convenience or necessity.

In our report of one year ago we forecasted an increase in receipts in the office of the Bishopric. We are pleased to note that in this we have not been disappointed. A change in the fiscal year closing the books June 30 instead of December 31 as heretofore, makes necessary the report of the Bishopric to cover the first six months only of 1919. The figures of this report indicate for the full calendar year a considerable increase in receipts over the year 1918.

Total receipts for 1918, including cash balance of $6,124.43 were $57,573.14. Total receipts for the first six months of 1919 including cash balance of $6,322.67 were $35,774.64; or for the first six months only, about sixty-two per cent of the total for 1918. Recalling that the heavier receipts of the office have heretofore come near the close of the calendar year, we would consider this an excellent showing. . . .

High Council

The High Council continues to function as an advisory board in all affairs of the church within the Stake. In the important developments we anticipate this body of men is to become of increasing value to the cause. This means that the brethren of the council if they would continue as such must of necessity grow with the work so as always to be qualified to serve the church in the important appointment to which they have been called. We bespeak for these men in so far as they qualify the confidence of the Saints, and if in anything they lack, we trust they may make ready.

The Ministry

Efforts to lead the men of the ministry to a fuller devotion and a greater activity are bearing fruit. Especially is this so in Lamoni, where special attention has been given to this necessary work. Our plans are being so shaped that we may from this time move more directly among the brethren of other branches. And we hope by immediate personal contact to inspire the brethren of these branches to the effort at this time considered necessary in our preparation for the hastening of God's work which we feel is upon us.

The unworthy and the indolent of the ministry are in various of the branches fast coming into ill repute among the Saints. We shall be glad when this is so in each community of the stake. The times are so perilous we cannot stress too strongly the need of a fuller qualification on the part of all, not only by the ministry but by the Saints as well. And we are very positively of the opinion that this preparation for the work and immediately before us should begin with the ministry. We are glad therefore that the Saints are come to demand with us a reckoning of these men upon whom should rest the burden, yea, upon whom does rest the burden of leadership, of tutorship, and of deliverance in this the hour of our need.

Loyalty

May we not refer to a matter which is by your presiding officers considered fraught with danger to our interests as a people? We would not encourage a tendency to blindness as to the weaknesses of men and of institutions. But may we not urge our people to exercise care in their conversation one with the other, and especially before our young people and children, lest they engender in both these as well as in themselves seeds of distrust and rebellion?

We are come upon a very critical time in the world, in the nation, and in the church. The air is charged and surcharged with unrest, and even with anarchy. Apostles of discontent work upon every hand for the overthrow of world society, and which would overthrow the nation and make very difficult if not impossible the work of the church. In our own country there is in this regard a peril of which the alert among us must surely be well aware. No man can this day forecast the future, not even the immediate future. And we observe even in the church these workers of discontent. No name, no department, no interest is to them sacred. Let us beware of such, for their end is destruction.

We do not say our people should not be critical. They should be critical. As the people of God they should permit themselves to be led only in paths divine. They should remember, however, that leaders however consecrated cannot perform the work of direction necessary in this hour's crisis lest they have the confidences of the people. And these confidences they should have until it becomes apparent they are no longer worthy. And finally, when found unworthy the way of escape for the Saints is not the way of slander, for there is open to them the way of release of the unworthy. And surely there are in this body both local and general men of sufficient number and of sufficient strength to rid the body of the unworthy or of the autocrat.

Let us give to the nation and its leaders our confidence and our moral support in the things right and needful, and let us do this regardless of party affiliation.

Let us give to the various communities where we reside and to the worthy leaders thereof the benefit of our active support and moral influence. And if we are without worthy community leaders, let us work to the end that we may secure those who are worthy.

And finally let us give to the church our full and undivided allegiance. And let us keep in mind that if our leaders in the various lines of church activity are to be free to perform their work they must be free from the innuendoes, from the whisperings, and from the open slander passed from man to man, carried from lip to lip, very much if not quite all of which is either a distortion of the truth or without even foundation in fact.

We plead for wisdom in these things. And in doing so we recall the old adage, A wise head makes a still tongue. Let us be careful of the reputation of the men God has called to serve us. If and when these men or any of them go astray, let us act, and that without fear or favor; and the law clearly directs the manner in which this action shall be had. We plead for wisdom along these lines, not that we would shield men, but that we would save the cause we so dearly love from the consequences of the ill-advised talk and sometimes foolish babbling to which our people too often permit themselves to listen. Let us then be wise servants, and when we are, we will be as harmless as doves.

Lifting the Veil

We cannot unveil the future. But may we not lift if ever so slightly the veil, and venture an observation? As your presiding officers we have already attempted this. With eyes straining toward the light of Zion's rising; with ears eager to register the voice of God; with determination heightened by the leaving off of every other ambition, we have endeavored to foresee, and thanks be to God we have visioned in degree the things immediately before us; and with the courage born of the terrors of long hours of vigil, we have undertaken to call the people to points of vantage thought to be necessary unto our forward movement, our movement toward God and on behalf of his work. And if we would have our part in this work we must move. Already is the call reaching us, Make ye ready, for soon shall the cry come, Go ye out to meet him!

Let each in his place make first ready himself; then shall we all together be ready. And when fully ready, God will reveal to us his way, and give unto us of his wisdom and of his strength, that unwaveringly we may walk therein, even unto his Zion.

The Saints Are Developing

In reviewing the years that have passed since I began the work of the ministry, I observe there has been a development in the church that is quite wholesome. But relatively speaking, we have a long way to go before we reach the ideal condition. Of course I take it that the church in general is, as I am, gradually raising the ideal. The goal I had set fifteen years ago cannot compare with the one I have now, and perhaps in ten years from now I will blush to think that any ideal of the present time was not higher. It is well, evidently, that it is so, because if our ideals could not be raised, we would soon cease to develop.

To me, the church is, spiritually and intellectually, far in advance of what it was seventeen years ago, when I entered the ministry. This, of course, doesn't argue that there isn't room for improvement now, to the contrary, it suggests the idea that we are on the way and should make more rapid strides in our approach unto the Zion condition.

Quite naturally the Saints are awakening to the present need and are beginning to impart more fully of their means for the forwarding of the cause. I am inclined to believe that the church is more and more beginning to understand that the financial part of the work is just as essential as the preaching of the word; and that by the combined forces we are and will be, able to meet with success.

In my work in the ministry I have tried to present the gospel in such a way that it will have a lasting effect for good, upon those who hear. Personally, I have no time in which to negate or assail the work, or the belief of other religionists; but I do find time and opportunity to teach my fellow men the beauty and excellence of other religionists.

My fondest ambitions are to be able to present the message of life to people in such a way that they will develop within themselves the likeness of the perfect Man. I have unbounded confidence in God, and in the work of the church. If all will function as the Lord has intended we should function, our work would triumph. I have confidence in the membership of the church that they will arise and meet the emergencies that arise, so that in the not far distant future our dream of Zion will become a reality. J. E. VANDERWOOD.

The true grandeur of humanity is in moral elevation, sustained, enlightened, and decorated by the intellect of man.—Charles Sumner.

This [the invasion of Belgium] was the biggest miscalculation made by the general staff in the whole course of the war; for if Belgium had not been invaded and France not attacked, the war might well have been over soon after the first Christmas. England might not have come in; France, if her territory had not been invaded, would have been very lukewarm in the war; and Belgium would not have attacked, or, without a struggle, allowed anyone else to attack through her territory. We know from Lord French's book that one of the worries of the French and English General staffs before the war was to know what Belgium would do in the event of attack. Belgium remained a dark house up to the last, and, most unfortunately, she could never be persuaded to decide upon her attitude in the event of a general war. "The idea of attacking Germany through Belgium, or in any other direction," writes Lord French, "never entered our heads."—Herbert Sidebotham, in The Atlantic Monthly.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

We note an announcement recently made to the effect that Robert H. Goodard of Clark College, Worcester, Massachusetts, has invented and tested a new type of electrically charged, high efficiency rocket, for exploring the unknown regions of the upper air. The claim is even made that it can be sent beyond the earth's atmosphere—possibly even as far as the moon. One would have thought mankind satisfied with being able to fly, but one thing apparently leads to another.

Probably the feeling of the country is fairly represented at the meeting of the American Library Association at Chicago, January 1 and 3, when they declared that while the executive board should be authorized to collect money to carry on an enlarged program, the meeting was opposed to drives of any kind by which a certain pro rata was assigned to certain district, and an effort was made to "go over the top." Because of the success of the liberty loan drive, first one institution and then another has attempted the same method, until in some instances one drive has been scarcely finished before the headquarters of the next were fully established, and its work started.

The Canadian Board of Commerce has brought action against two Toronto coal firms. The basis of the action is that 52 cents is too much clear profit in sales of wholesalers, and that when coal costs $12.24 a ton, including all expenses, to sell it to individual consumers at $15.00 is an unfair profit, and is neither reasonable nor just.

The public schools are endangered by the departure of many of the teachers for other work. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior states that 43,000 public-school teachers resigned their places in the United States last year. It is stated elsewhere that the number is quite large. The number, in fact, represents one in four of the school teachers. The result is they have less efficient teachers handling the work.

Mr. Basil Manley, formerly joint chairman of the War Labor Board is quoted as stating that 185 out of 405 coal operators earn profits ranging from 100 to 785 per cent. Prices paid by the public in 1917 were so high that nearly one half the mines were paid profits equal to their entire capital, and one mine paid profits equal to 78 times its capitalization. He states that in the last three years the American people have paid a net profit above every dollar's worth of stock in the coal companies. In the meantime, Mr. Manley states the meat packers were making profits as high as 4,200 per cent; canners of fruits and vegetables, 2,000 per cent; woolen mills nearly 1,800 per cent; furniture manufacturers nearly 3,300 per cent, clothing and dry goods stores over 9,800 per cent, and steel mills as high as 21,000 per cent. In manufacturing necessities none made less than 100 per cent.

Alexander H. Turnbull of Wellington, New Zealand, has given his library of 30,000 volumes to the people of New Zealand. The library is remarkably valuable because of its full collection of works on Australasia, and has been valued at $400,000, but is declared to be almost priceless.

A remarkable action of the tri-centennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Detroit, was the asking for episcopal ordination, as presented by Doctor W. T. Manning of Trinity Church, New York. Eminent Congregational ministers have come forward asking episcopal ordination to the priesthood. They are willing to be examined as to their soundness in the faith, to be confirmed, to be ordained deacon and priest, to minister the sacraments thereafter according to prescribed forms, and to remain always in communion into and under the discipline of the bishop. And they are to do all this with the consent of their own ecclesiastical authorities, and of their congregation. This action is commented on very favorably in The Congregationalist, of Boston.

EDITORIAL

"For Men Shall Be—"

Paul declared, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." Why perilous? What are the signs of the last days? Paul passed by wars and famines and pestilences, and designated as the most ominous portent of the days of peril the fact that men shall be selfish, fierce, unholy, truce breakers, incontinent, and lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

Having conquered wild beasts, subdued the wilderness, obtained dominion over the forces of nature—in a word, having put all things under his feet—man finds himself faced by the last great struggle, the conquest of himself. The peril of to-day is in the human heart itself. From there are the issues of life—and from it to-day spring discontent, treason, rebellion, evil passions, and all manner of false philosophies that threaten church and state.

Some years ago we wrote an editorial entitled, "Paul, you were right!" More now, even than then, we realize how apt the caption was. We were told for a half century that man was becoming more gentle, more civilized, more humane, more truly religious—that the great era of law and order and justice and peace was at our very door—and one denomination, surpassing all others, had the Devil bound and the millennium well under way.

Then came the world war with its tragedies. In its wake follows worldwide disorder—terrible passions are let loose. Men are ungovernable. So, after the scenes enacted in Omaha, Washington, Chicago, Boston, Centralia, (not to go so far abroad as Russia) we soliloquize, "We were told that men were growing better, but Paul said that in the last day they would be fierce, treacherous, and godless. Paul, you were right!"

The full text to which we have referred reads like this:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."—2 Timothy 3: 1-5.

Those verses used to furnish the usual textual basis for most sermons on the signs of the times. They are quite as true now as they were twenty years ago, but events have given such a lurid exegesis that there seems little left for the preacher to say. The charge that Paul brings against the world of to-day seems self evidently true.

Are men fierce? Ask the mayor of Omaha. He has not forgotten his experience at the end of a rope. Ask the citizens of staid old Boston what happened when for even a brief time the rule of force was suspended. Recall the atrocities on the battlefields of Europe and all the devilish inventions and mechanics used to make the war terrible for the civilian as well as for the soldier.

In a lecture in the Stone church at Independence a few weeks ago, Doctor Edgar L. Hewitt said: "We are accustomed to think of the Indians as bloodthirsty murderers. But the Indians were never half so savage as we have been during the past five years. No people were ever so savage as we have been."

The Literary Digest for January 17 chronicles eighty-two lynchings in the United States during the past year, and makes this comment:

"The classic crime which provides the excuse for lynching was alleged against only nine of the whole number. The rest were put to death under circumstances of unmentionable cruelty, and in many cases with a hideous injustice, on such allegations as 'talking too much,' 'writing letters,' 'deceiving a mob,' 'making boastful remarks,' or 'discussing a lynching.' Seven human beings were tortured to death in the South in 1919 against whom no charge was even reported. One luckless individual was burned to death because he had been acquitted in the courts of shooting a policeman; one because he ventured to appeal from his sentence of ten years in prison for attempting the life of another, and one because the courts had reduced his sentence to life imprisonment. Sometimes we wonder what the Bolsheviki think of us."

Are men truce breakers? One whole nation, with her allies, repudiated a solemn treaty on the ground that it was but a scrap of paper. And now, where autocracy left off, anarchy begins, and one of the cardinal principles of the I. W. W. and all forms of radicalism is that no contract or covenant should be respected—covenants may be made, as a matter of strategy or convenience, but are not to be kept; right and wrong matters of supreme indifference, the end justifying all means that may be available. That sort of doctrine is quietly preached now wherever an audience of one or two or a dozen discontented men will listen to it.

That is the reason Lloyd George, speaking in the House of Commons, February 11, said:

"The dangers are not all in Russia; they are here at home. I speak with knowledge, with apprehension and responsibility, and I warn the house that in the face of things which may happen we must use every legitimate weapon."

Are men (and the term is generic, men and women)—are men lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God? Captain Albert E. Mowry, M. D., of the Chicago Medical School, and surgeon to Provident and Fort Dearborn Hospitals, says: "I sincerely believe that the masses have tired of morality, and deliberately and willfully seek immorality. Just why this is so is a mystery, but there seems to be a tendency to tear down moral standards and the usages and customs that ages have built up."

The masses reject morality and turn to immorality because there is the promise of pleasure—and they love pleasure more than they love godliness. Karl Kitchen says: "New York to-day is infected with the bacillus voluptuosus. The entire city is obsessed with an excess of sexualism. The popular sex plays on Broadway, the shimmy and the jazz with its close-fitting dancing, the present fashionable attire of women, the flood of sex literature in our books and magazines, are simply manifestations of this sexual obsession . . . the women of our best families dress as only the most brazen women of the underworld abroad would think of dressing. They leave nothing to the imagination."

As New York goes, so goes the country, to an extent at least. The Statue of Liberty lights the way to license. In a small community, where a few are given over to corrupt thinking and evil deeds; they must spread their propaganda quietly by personal influence in conversation and by example, more or less under cover, for fear of public sentiment. But in the larger communities where thousands think and live that way they openly utilize many very powerful agencies to corrupt the masses and win recruits—the theater, the restaurant, the cabaret, picture shows, dance halls, literature, and dress—or lack of dress. So the great social centers become missionary headquarters for the spread of all that is anti Christ throughout the entire country.

We have often read Paul's classic statement regarding the last days, but now more than ever before are we struck by the significance of his statement that "in the last days perilous times shall come, because men shall be" so and so. Evil philosophies concerning standards of life, all manner of evil passions, license, selfishness, lawlessness, anarchy, dissipation, godlessness—these are the real perils of the day.

If these things characterize the latter-days, more than ever before we should be "Latter Day Saints," putting away all such things—being sober, law-abiding, virtuous, loyal, trustworthy, obedient, humble, truthful, faithful, and godly.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Best Industrial Plan Will Serve All

Whatever may be our opinion as to these particular strikes we see all about us, it would seem reasonably clear that originally labor unions were purely selfish, and that in this they reacted to a purely selfish corporate organization of the employees. There have been some unfair things done on both sides. There is probably to-day much of extreme selfish interest on the part of capital, and also on the part of certain labor interests. But it is of interest to note that there is a changing disposition to-day. Employers are coming to recognize clearly the interrelation of capital and labor.

We note in the Des Moines Register the statement that ten of the largest industrial corporations in the United States have adopted the principles of profit-sharing and representation of employees in industry. These companies employ several million men and women throughout the world. They are making a systematic study of the situation, meeting every two weeks, and expect to continue so to meet indefinitely. These meetings, it is stated, represent billions of invested capital, and hence represent a tremendous power. The plan of cooperation on which they are working has been submitted to the employees and heartily approved. One case is mentioned where ninety-nine per cent voted to approve the plan submitted.

This illustrates that the workingman and working woman are apparently willing to meet an honest effort half way. At least that large groups of working people are willing to do so. The early labor union secured increased wages, improved working conditions, and a minimization of abuses. But the improvements were not permanent. Pure selfishness entered in and caused dissatisfaction. The things won were more than offset by the increased demands of capital, so that the cost of living increased. The very amounts conceded as wages were then relevelled in the form of increased prices, and even a little was added to the price level.

A study of economics proved invariably that wages is the last element in the cost of production to go up and the first to come down. The workingman has, under the old regime always had the worst of it in that particular.

But simply raising wages will not solve the problem. For if a raise in price follows every raising of wages, then the corresponding raising of prices means that the public at large suffers; other laborers must have more if materials increase thereby, which of course reacts upon the laboring man. The consumer must be considered, as well as the other two elements of the problem. If we try to grab all we can, a few manage to get more than their share, but it is not a permanent gain.

The interests of humanity are one. That which is best for labor is best for capital. That which is best for labor and capital will in the end prove best for the consumer.

Gradually we think we can see a tendency of moving a little nearer to the plan laid down by modern revelation, under which every man does his fair share of the work, and every woman considers herself privileged to assist in the community movement. Every worker is provided a just remuneration for all of his services, permitting right living conditions. Every man receives a just remuneration for all of his services, and a fair living wage. Yet as consumers, both men and women seek joy in denying themselves all unnecessary want, and with consecrated purpose move forward to the accomplishment of the joint work.

Before the income tax was provided, the plan was laid down by which a man turned over his surplus property to the common fund, and paid over the title of his increase each year, but when he possessed another surplus it was devoted to the body. The body in turn works for the common good of each individual.

Each workingman is paid, when the plan of God is carried out, a just remuneration. He receives the results of his labor, and is left as a free agent then to make his own disposition of that which he has received. If he denies himself as he should of that which is frivolous and that which profits not, and uses what he can for the common good, he is then protected from that great dread of all who become old, that they be left in poverty or have not sufficient to last until the end of life.

He has no possible objection because he receives the just remuneration for all of his services. As a free agent he then makes his own disposition; but desiring that which is good, he does not delight in spending that which he has gained, frivolously or uselessly. By protecting the common interest, the common interest protects him and his loved ones, both in case of his death, and also in case of old age; so he is relieved from that great anxiety of all who feel their powers failing, yet they have not enough accumulated to last until the end of life. He and his, by his efforts, are provided for as they should be, liberally but not wastefully, in justice for their own needs and the needs of others. This surplus or excess over that of which they have need is devoted to the common fund, for the benefit of those who stand in need—the widows, orphans, and those who are no longer able to work. But these, as well as the workingman take pride in keeping their expenditures as low as is reasonable, consistent with the service they are able to render.

Such a plan combines the best of life insurance, the best of accident insurance, and the best insurance against old age and sickness, for all have a joint interest. It also provides the best system of cooperation of which we know, between capital and labor.

The entrepreneur, or one charged with the active management, is recognized as manager. His individuality is given full play. He takes pride in being associated with those who work with him and under his direction, to secure desirable results for the whole body. He encourages that spirit of cooperation which will secure best results from those who labor. Yet his responsibility as manager is clearly recognized. The law of the Lord Jesus Christ of brotherhood between man and man suggests what might otherwise become a difficult situation.

There could best be the closest cooperation between the capital interest, labor, the man charged with active management, and those who will consume or use the proceeds of the labor. And the ideal is that plan which works for the best good of all, jointly and individually. And if we understand it right, it is the plan laid down by the law of God, in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Industry Is Trying Profit Sharing

A growing number of large industries are putting into operation various schemes whereby the worker is allowed by special provision to increase his income and more fully share in the management of the concern.

Profit-sharing is a most interesting phase of our industrial situation, since an unqualified success from its operation might seem to dispense with the necessity of stewardship operation and at the same time emphasize the value of our present competitive system.

On the other hand, an understanding of the causes of failure—when it does fail—may furnish excellent contrasts for our plan of cooperation and stewardships in the management of large industries and affairs.

Most of us who have not specialized in the study of economics, sociology, and industrialism must depend on what the various magazines bring us in the way of current developments along these lines, and those articles are almost invariably written by the employer rather than the employee.

We appreciate the growing number of our young men and women who are not only studying these subjects but seeking the application of the fundamentals of successful social schemes to our lives as Saints of God. We count on their newly acquired knowledge and enthusiasm along with the mature wisdom and experiences of those who have studied the matter for years, to put into operation the law which God gave to the church long before profit-sharing had been considered as it is to-day.

And we know the church will appreciate hearing from them in the columns of the church papers along these lines, that we may come to a common understanding concerning the demands of the hour for us. We are not worrying over the past nor concerned unduly over the future, but we do wish we might so nearly agree that there might be inspirational things done from which we might work as well as ideas evolved. But until there are enough who understand and will be willing to comply, no plan can be effected among us.

But speaking of profit-sharing in industry, we hope we may not be counted as pessimistic nor presumptive when we offer predictions of failure. In the first place, when the worker gets to thinking of it, he recalls that the proposition came first from the employer. Then he discovers that in each of the plans, from the simplest to the most comprehensive, there is a provision whereby it is most difficult for him to quit his job and still be in good standing with his firm. The very liberty which the increased income gives him makes him resent this infringement on his rights.

Furthermore, why should there not be a real division of profits rather than mere sharing? Depending on his viewpoint, his education, his environment, these questions generate divisions among his group till sovietism, I. W. W.ism, Socialism, and unionism are all augmented.

It is true that in some instances the employees are given a definite share in the management. One of the most radical is the Leitch plan, in which there are three departments of coordinate jurisdiction. A cabinet is made up of the executive officers of the concern. Then there is a senate made up of foremen and superintendents of departments. The house of representatives is composed of members elected from the membership by themselves.

Yet in spite of all, the man who merely puts his life and ability into the concern as a workman remains in a different class, while the man who perchance has inherited the business from his father without any effort on his part to amass the wealth, is in another, more favored. The social distinction still exists and will exist under our present system.

It is a fact that business interests are much concerned over present tendencies and are looking for something that will change the attitude of labor toward them. Only recently the press dispatches carried an item to the effect that a number of large concerns with a total of billions in capital stock were expecting to establish profit-sharing schemes as soon as they could find those most suitable.

One most apparent thing about the plan is that while there is a sharing of profits there is no sharing of losses. When the present shortage of production is displaced by the old conditions of supply being ahead of demand, what will become of profit-sharing? Just now labor is in demand. The world needs more than it can get, and labor may dictate its terms. Yet withal it is suspicious. It wants to solve the problem from its own standpoint, and be assured that in the shaking up it will not come out of the little end of the horn. Therefore, in spite of all that is being done along the line of profit-sharing, unionism is on the increase. And collective bargaining is being demanded and obtained. Capable men who study the matter are acceding failure in the profit-sharing idea.

Until suspicion and distrust yield to charity and good will, we may expect no permanent results from any economic plan, especially in these days. In the gospel plan only do we find the basis for the operation of any industrial condition which may hope to succeed, for in it class distinction is eliminated. In it men accept the principles that God is the owner and we are his stewards. As to management, we shall divide that so that profits and losses adjust themselves. Contentment shall come from the fact that our needs and our just wants shall be supplied. Incentive will arise from the fact that we are free to serve many by the product of our individual and united labors, and that there is no profiteering, either over our ability or our products.

So we shall not be disconcerted over the apparent successes of the various schemes the world works out. We shall be grateful if from the many who study the problem thoroughly and find something lacking, we may draw to us those who are honest in their search for real economic redemption. We know that they will then appreciate the plan in which the source is reached: the hearts of the individual.

E. D. MOORE.

Pictures Not a Substitute

In a recent editorial on "moving pictures" we made the statement that it could not possibly take the place of a prayer service or the preaching of the word of God. For some this has doubtless seemed an admission of the whole question at issue, but it is not so.

Having very little of ritualism and also very little of the emotional elements in religion, that is, such as is manifested in revival services and the mourner's bench, (of which we have none), but preaching the invisible things of God as a sacred mystery, such cannot possibly be presented through an image to the physical eye.

"And no man hath seen God at any time, except he hath borne record of the Son; for except it is through him no man can be saved."—John 1: 19.

"Inasmuch as you strip yourselves from jealousies and fears, and humble yourselves before me, for ye are not sufficiently humble, the veil shall be rent, and you shall see me and know that I am; not with the carnal, neither natural mind, but with the spiritual; for no man has seen God at any time in flesh, except quickened by the Spirit of God; neither can any natural man abide the presence of God; neither after the carnal mind."—Doctrine and Covenants 67: 3.

This conveys for us a wonderful thought in the possibilities of divine communion, in our prayer services, in our preaching services, and in our family prayer, and in our secret prayers. A prayer service cannot take the place of family prayer, nor of our individual secret prayer.

The eating of physical food cannot change the fact that we need also spiritual food if we are to grow into the stature of a man in Jesus Christ. "Blessed is he that hungereth and thirsteth after righteousness."

The physical clothing we wear protecting us from the cold cannot take the place of the spiritual clothing and enfolding by the Spirit of God.

The learning of the schools can never take the place of the inspiration of Almighty God.

The fire in the church or in our homes cannot remove the necessity of the glowing flame of the Holy Spirit, such as came upon the apostles as tongues of fire.

The use of even the best electric light cannot remove the necessity for that illumination of the Holy Spirit.

The music of the organ or the violin, or of any other instrument, cannot compete with the music of the heavenly choir and with the harmony of the created universe when our ears are attuned to hear it.

But because these things are true is no reason why we should go unclothed, unfed, untaught, unwarmed, groping in the darkness. Everything has its place and its use.

In considering any special instrumentality, the only question we need ask is not, Can this take the place of something else? but, Can it be used for the onwards progress of the work of God, and a better and greater result be achieved? If so, however others may have abused it, take and use it rightly.

The Call to Prepare for Efficient Work

The time for enrolling with the class in religious education at Graceland College is short, and those who wish to be among those who by special training are to be fitted for work in the church should make application soon.

The present class is a standing testimony of the value of such a course. Instead of being submerged in a chaos of unrelated facts and developing single-track minds, they are learning more than ever to discriminate between that which is true and that which might be fallacious.

In addition to a well-planned and carefully-executed course in class work and extensive research, they have the special advantage of lectures from some of the very best talent the church affords along various special lines, and discuss these in their classes afterward.

The contrast of this method of coming to a common understanding of the principles and teachings of the church over the old method of sending out men and women without preparation, without advantages, alone and unassisted into foreign fields, as the church has had to do in the past, is worthy of special consideration.

Many of the brethren who have gone into church work in distant fields have expressed themselves as lacking just these things. The years of isolation from the centers of the church's activities are trying enough, without the added disadvantage of being unprepared at the outset.

There is a widespread interest in the movement, and there should be a loyal support of it the coming year. From far-off Australia Brother J. W. Rushton writes: "We have a list of eight young men who would like to know what, if anything, could be done for them to take up the course offered to the ministry of Graceland so they could be more efficient in their work."

Brother Rushton says the dominant type of missionary in that country is the young man, between twenty-four and forty years of age. We can see the result now. They are making a success of their work, and as a consequence others are inspired to do likewise.

We need all the workers we have, of all ages, and in addition, many more. We need men who are able to go out into the world and succeed nobly and be in demand. We need women who have vision and ability, for they can do a specially important work in the homes of the people. In fact an observation made at the Volunteer Student Convention at Des Moines recently was to the effect that women make better missionaries in foreign fields than men, because much of the work must be done in the homes and through native women.

Those interested should write to President G. N. Briggs, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for application blanks. Those who know of ones who should be interested should take it up with them. Later these will all be passed on by the proper authorities, and arrangements made for taking the work.

Personal Views Are Represented

A reader of the HERALD has written suggesting that we should state the position of the church on all subjects, discussed in letters or articles. We know that this would not meet with approval of most of our writers, so we have contented ourselves with emphasizing again and again that each article only represents the position of the writer. There are some things published in The Forum, for instance, which we personally consider radically wrong, but it is printed because it presents information which should prove of interest and value of our readers, or presents a viewpoint which may arouse thought.

The Prophetic Conning Tower

An Outline—Part 7

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

The Time of the End

Succeeding the drying up of the "waters of the Euphrates," is a period of worldwide "deception," (verses 13 and 14 of chapter 16), located by Christ (Matthew 24: 3-6) as "the end of the world"—the fullness of Gentile times—"the harvest" (Matthew 13), and more graphically to impress, we cite Revelation 10: 14-16:

"And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped."

Yes, we are in the reaping time, for:

"The Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth."

It is a gradual consuming, involving nations and individual units, with many agencies to accomplish. Turkey as an ally of imperialism fought against and oppressed God's Israel, and she has gone down to defeat, fulfilling the prophecy:

"And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord. And all that fight against Zion, shall be destroyed."—1 Nephi 7: 15, 16.

This harvest-of-the-earth period, is characterized by "a voice of trembling," of "fear," "distress of nations," and "no peace;" it is "the great day of the Lord, so that none is like it":

"For thus saith the Lord; we have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him."—Jeremiah 30: 5-8.

It is noted in the divine revelation, as an age of tidal wave deceptions, and the great anti-Christian Confederation which grew up in the dark night as "the vine of the earth," is made largely responsible for same:

"For thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived."—Revelation 18: 23.

And this vine with its clusters is found ready for the harvest:

"And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God."—Revelation 14: 17-19.

The juggling with the conscience and interests of the masses, is manipulated by "the great men of the earth":

"Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burden thereof is heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire: and his breath, as an overflowing stream; shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity: and there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err."—Isaiah 20: 27, 28.

"For the leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are led of them are destroyed."—Isaiah 9: 16.

With this "sieve of vanity," this arrogance, this exorbitant claim; overbearing and lordly contempt, the whole world is rattled about in the dice box of destiny, and recompense is due:

"Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogance of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible."—Isaiah 13: 9-11.

They have chosen their own way, but do not feel inclined to choose results:

"Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations. I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear; but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not."—Isaiah 66: 3, 4.

Delusion of the People

The "bridle" of "delusion" in the jaws of the people, fabricated by the calumniator of the race, and placed in the hands of those susceptible to the unclean spirits, for adjustment to the "jaws of the people," develop the delusions just before the coming of Christ, and will be wonderfully confounded by him:

"Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie."—2 Thessalonians 2: 9-11.

Truce Breakers

The 3d chapter of 2 Timothy reveals the characteristics, both national and individual, of "the end of the world," so vividly by inspiration, that we are convinced that Satan has thrown the nineteen indictments contained therein, for a wicked solvent to put latter-day civilization in a fluid state. Listen:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."—2 Timothy 3: 1-4.

Without detail, the "deceptions, treachery, and covenant breaking" comprehended herein, is visibly amplified to national units, and especially radiated during the "world war." A state of international lawlessness was inaugurated; compacts and obligations were rent asunder like tow cords touched by the match. "Truce breakers," mean "covenant breakers" (Romans 1: 31), and signatory honors to the covenant of The Hague, with many postulates of international law were over-vaulted by some of the autocratic nations, and considered unworthy the parchment containing the autography.

It was agreed to, in the conference of The Hague, 1917, and signed by national delegates that "arbitration is recognized by the contracting parties or powers, as the most effective, and at the same time, the most equitable means of settling disputes which diplomacy failed to settle." Now in order to facilitate immediate recourse to arbitration, an arbitral tribunal was established, but the contract was broken, and the tribunal ignored with contempt. No necessity in confining the fulfillment of this especial item of prophecy to the "divorce mills" or surrogate's court.

Another item signed, and broken nationally was: "Prisoners of war shall not be employed in works that had any connection with the war operations." Violated continuously. Again;

"All necessary measures shall be taken to spare, as far as possible, buildings devoted to religious worship, art, science, and charity, historical monuments, and places of assembly of sick, and wounded."

Another:

"The honor and rights of family, the life of the individual, and private property shall be respected. Private property shall not be confiscated."

And more:

"Contributions in money in occupied territory shall be levied only for the needs of the army or of the administration of said territory. Looting is positively forbidden. Hospital ships shall be respected. The bombardment of undefended cities or villages is forbidden. It is forbidden to lay submarines off the coasts, and ports of the enemy with the sole object of interrupting commercial navigation."

Long before these conventions were conducted at The Hague, it was a principle of international law, that "a merchant vessel should not be captured without giving to the passengers and noncombatants on board an opportunity to depart in safety." The foregoing principles were all adopted and duly signed as a "covenant," yet from the commencement of the great conflict, including its inauguration to its close, every one of these sacred rules were persistently violated by nations intoxicated by conquest, "heady," high-minded, "the only nations claiming to exist by divine right."

As a complete vindication of this prophecy from a national viewpoint comprehending the treachery, and perfidy outlined, note the following excerpt from the speech of Honorable W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the United States Treasury, at Atlantic City, New Jersey, September 28, 1917, page 6:

"Each and every American life and each and every American vessel destroyed by Germany during these two years was an act of war upon the American people, the consequences of which were avoided from time to time by the plausible assurances and excuses of the German Government, each and every one of which was perfidiously and insincerely made, and each and every one of which was deliberately disregarded.

"But this is not all. Germany, while professing friendship for America, and while her ambassador, her representatives, and her citizens were enjoying our hospitality and receiving our protection, was plotting against the domestic security of the United States by blowing up munitions plants, fomenting strikes and disturbances in the labor world, disseminating false information and poisoning the minds of the American people against their own Government, plotting its downfall, and seeking to influence our Congress, as evidenced by Von Bernstorff's dispatch of January 22, 1917, to the Berlin foreign office, in which he said: 'I request authority to pay up to $50,000 in order, as on former occasions, to influence Congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war.' And while Von Bernstorff was busy upon our own shores with intrigue through his spy system and through the corrupt use of money to influence public opinion and the national policies of the American people, Zimmermann, the foreign secretary in Berlin, had sent a dispatch to Mexico urging her to make war upon the United States and begging Mexico to invite Japan to join her in this dastardly work, promising Mexico that California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas would be restored to Mexico in the event of success."

All of this on top of the bitter cries of outraged humanity should cause the multiplied millions to observe the prophetic delineations of the "Book of books"—the distress and perplexity of nations, the pestilence and famine following on the march of wars and rumors of wars.

Why, "over here," in the land of promise the conditions succeeding the clash of arms affected us with near famine. It reduced us to a healthy diet of bran muffins, toothpicks, and scenery. We are not changing our dietetical creed to any extent at this late date.

The spirit moving back of Saint Paul's catalogue of latter day evils, enmesh society, and renders it perilous—dangerous—in all departments. Commotions predicted for the latter days, resulting in "distress of nations with perplexity," (Luke 21:25; Doctrine and Covenants 45:4) brings unrest and doubt into every chance of existence; the whole earth shall be in commotion. "Commotion" means agitation, like the surface of the ocean struck by a storm.

It means instability, nothing fixed or definite; no guiding compass; no fixed standards. All this augurs a new day; a new earth, if you will, new conditions, the old is being folded away. Lines are cancelled, boundaries broken down, and many run to and fro. Nothing is steadfast or approved outside of God's self-vindicating law, and those who keep it. Established ways are lost, new roads perplex, and widening fields stretch beyond sight. Doubt stalks amid confusion; the great ecclesiasticism is besieged without, and betrayed within. Trade is restless in the grasp of business evolution. A pronounced and malignant hatred fosters the discontent that increases the distance between the extreme rich, and the extreme poor. The agencies at work are Bolshevism and sabotage, both traitorous, and destructive, foreshadowed in the following prophetic statement:

Honest and Dishonest, Rich and Poor

"Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's gods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with your own hands! But blessed are the poor who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs."

This prophecy sees new stratifications of society rise up as the old disappears, and divides human life into four, instead of two classes; namely, the honest rich, and the dishonest rich; the honest poor, and the dishonest poor. The hands of the dishonest rich are willingly stayed from the necessities of the poor, and by "fraud" honest wages are held up. (See James 5:1-4.) Their day of visitation is near:

"Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbor's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work."—Jeremiah 22:13.

"Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!"—Doctrine and Covenants 51:5.

The dishonest poor arraying themselves under the destructive banner of disordered hosts, soured on life and its environments, make mad battle on the brotherhood of man and predatory wealth, with all the indirect methods of destruction; and the honest poor—well, waiting for the salvation of God.

Covetousness

While "covetousness" of both the ancient and modern prediction has been the tap-root feeder of the evils that afflict society, it is the foundation of war individually, in the family, in the state, and in nations, "Take heed, beware of covetousness," said Christ, when besought to divide an inheritance. (Luke 12.) Dreams of world domain based on illegitimate ambitions to acquire, was the inordinate spirit of covetousness that let loose the choking gas, the flame-thrower, the saw-tooth bayonet, the bomb, the torpedo, the "Brummers," and "Busy Berthas," 42 centimeters, and 75 millimeters, which plunged millions into ruin, entailing billions of capital thrown into the mighty caldron which, in the end, impoverish rather than enrich the battling legions. Even England's poet bewails the spirit of aggression and conquest:

"We have fed the seas for a thousand years,
And she calls us still unfed;
For there's never a wave of all her waves,
But marks our English dead.
We have starred our best to the weed's unrest,
To the sharks and the shearing gull;
If blood be the price of admiralty,
Lord God, we ha' paid in full."

Changes Are Upon Us

The inevitable social, ecclesiastical, and political changes are upon us. The old political systems in Europe are molten. The Constitution, inspired, on the land shadowing with wings, is proved to possess the highest melting point. Can cold, hardened caste long resist the softening influences? No; the molds are furnished. Now will the divine regime established here by angels visitation—the kingdom of God—with equal opportunity mold the social elements now seething, and thus rejoice in the dawn of the regeneration?

We conclude this item with an excerpt—a paragraph from some advanced pages from a book by Mr. Walter Rathenau, one of the leading business men of Germany, head of the great General Electric Company of Berlin, the man generally credited with having organized Germany's industries for the war. The book is entitled The New Domestic Economy, and these paragraphs are quoted in the New York Times of March 11, 1918. The book is also quoted in Congressional Record, Tuesday, April 2, 1918. Some minds can retain an understanding of, and apply the law of average in the midst of much agitation and excitement, and Mr. Rathenau seems to be one of those possessing such mind. His words are—

"What is the event, the waves of which are breaking around us? We call it war because it has the form of international war, because the convulsed nations are openly and apparently struggling in earth, water, air, and fire. Coming generations will recognize it. What we are experiencing is the revolution of the world, the volcanic upheaval of the mighty, burning lower strata of the abode of mankind. It is not taking place in the disorderly form of a mass uprising with pikes and scythes, as its early prophets thought. That would have been of small account and would not have thrown the world from its axis.

"Made deaf and made by their inner tension, intoxicated by the last and highest distillations of the old order of things, trembling with nationalism and imperialism, nations must hurl themselves upon nations, in the splendor and discipline of their State and military orders, completely equipped by their industries and their sciences, with the fury and the grief of their souls and hearts.

"In reality, however, the old economic order is burning down and the time is drawing near when the old foundation of the social order will catch fire.

"Two pillars of the old order will project from the ruins—the monopoly of the great landed estates and of the mineral treasures. But they will gradually lose, no matter how much their property power may grow at first, the legal basis to which they are indebted for their footing. For this flood has not overtaken the world so that the treasures of the earth may be washed up as flotsam upon some blessed Mount Ararat."—New York Times, March 11, 1918.

A similar voice from England, somewhat suppressed, but audible, presages in a quiet but determined way a new institution, as construction comes by destruction:

"We need to beware of patchwork. The view of the labor party is that what has to be reconstructed after the war is not this or that governmental department, or this or that piece of social machinery, but, so far as Britain is concerned, society itself. At such times it is easier to slip into ruin than to progress into higher forms of organization. That is the problem which presents itself to the labor party. What this war is consuming is not merely the security, the homes, the livelihood, and the lives of millions of innocent families and an enormous proportion of all the accumulated wealth of the world, but also the very basis of the peculiar social order in which it has arisen. The individualist system of capitalist production, based on the private ownership and competitive administration of land and capital, with its reckless 'profit-eering' and wage slavery, with its glorification of the unhampered struggle for the means of life, and its hypocritical pretense of the 'survival of the fittest,' with the monstrous inequality of circumstances which it produces, and the degradation and brutalization, both moral and spiritual, resulting therefrom may, we hope, have received a death blow."—Ibid.

The hopes and enlarged vision of men will be realized by and by, being illumined and blazed by prophecy. Leaden instincts will be transmuted into the gold of an ethical civilization by destroying the iron and creating the gold, by the gospel, and the civilization will be under Christ and Israel—the millennium!

"Let Reason Stand Aside"

BY ELMERE E. LONG

In spite of all efforts to prevent it, the doctrine of the second coming of Christ before the millenium is finding many advocates in the world.

One of the most noticeable features of Protestant activity incident to the war is the revival of the second advent doctrine. Beginning in London, England, it spread to America and soon attracted nation-wide attention. Ministers and university professors of the highest repute and scholarly attainments have thrown themselves in the wake of the storm in a frantic endeavor to stay the "flood of delusion," but all to no purpose. The "prophetic fire" continues to burn with unabated fury, and "missionaries imbued with the new evangel, and having a burden for souls," brushing opposition aside, have gone to the four quarters of the globe to bear witness to the heathen of the approaching end.

May 28-30, 1918, a prophetic conference was held in Philadelphia, filling the Academy of Music auditorium with its seating capacity of 3,300 to overflowing. A "white-clad choir of three or four hundred women singers, with a sprinkling of men singers," sang songs of coronation with renewed fervency. Stirring addresses were delivered by some of the ablest preachers in the United States and Canada who eloquently portrayed the crowning glories of the latter days when the Master comes to occupy David's throne and rule the nations in righteousness. The declaration of one of the speakers, "I am looking for him any day," seemed to be the prevailing sentiment, and the earnest expectation of a speedy fruition of premillennial hopes fired the "missionaries" with a burning zeal to be about the Father's business and carry the gospel of the "blessed hope" to the heathen as a "witness" of the coming consummation.

The great gathering was nonsectarian, all who loved the Lord, and his second bodily appearing being welcome. Among the prominent speakers present we note the following: the Reverend John MacInnis, B. D., Ph. D.; the Reverend Mark Matthews, D. D.; the Reverend William B. Riley, D. D.; the Reverend James M. Gray, D. D.; the Reverend Cortland Myers, D. D.; the Reverend J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D.; and others whose scholarly attainments will not be questioned. The Reverend MacInnis, speaking on the subject, "What is prophecy and why study it?" among other good things said:

"You may be surprised to have me mention this—that those of us who hold the idea of the second coming of Christ are accused of ignoring the plain teaching of history. On the contrary, I am convinced as never before that it is impossible for a man to get the right perspective of history apart from a true appreciation of the significance and meaning of the truth of the coming of Christ. We are accused of bringing the truth into disrepute and turning the minds of careful and scientific scholars against the study of the Bible and especially of the last things, because of the narrow arbitrary way in which we present this truth. One of the main objections is that we are so materialistic and literal in our interpretations, that we deny that God can accomplish his great moral purpose through spiritual means, and that we dishonor God in suggesting that he is not able to accomplish his ends through spiritual means. Now, a thorough study of prophecy and all the prophets would have made such a statement absurd. If modern scholars had lived in the days of Micah or of Isaiah and could have heard them speak about God giving us a Son, and of a child born, and of a suffering servant coming, and of a Savior being wounded and dying for the sin of the world, they would have rebuked these prophets, giving them to understand that to suggest that God would have to do these things in order to accomplish the redemption of the race was to dishonor him, because it was to deny that he was able to consummate his great ends in a spiritual way."—Light on Prophecy, pp. 47, 48.

How often Latter Day Saints elders have had to meet and refute the foregoing charges of materialism! But as to that we desire to speak farther on. The Reverend Mark Matthews, Presbyterian, in a stirring address on "The doctrine of our lord's return," said some pertinent things in defense of doctrinal preaching, to which some of our own "philosophers" will do well to take heed. He says:

"My friends, this doctrine is the stabilizing doctrine of the church and ought to be preached by everyone. I have recited history to prove the historical points mentioned, and the Scriptures just cited reveal the fact of the stabilizing, evangelizing effect of this doctrine. Wherever the church of Jesus Christ has been true to his infallible word, his vicarious atonement and his return, and has unfolded all the steps he has taken and is yet to take, souls have been born and have been daily added to the church. I appeal to the history of the church to prove that whenever she has been true to the gospel of Christ and to his infallible word, she has always prospered. I appeal to your experience. Wherever ministers of the gospel have preached Christ and him crucified, and have indoctrinated the people, their pews have been filled and their ministry has been honored of God. Wherever they have preached philosophy and a "social program," made by Pharisees and unregenerate parasites, they have found death in the pews and cobwebs in their church buildings. No minister nor church can prosper when God and his infallible word, the deity of his Son, the vicarious atonement and his blessed return have been left out of the preaching. History proves the truthfulness of that statement."—Light on Prophecy, pp. 66, 67.

The foregoing castigation of some popular theories will not take well with some among us who are so vehemently urging a "social program" to save our young people. But these men of the highest learning and experience have seen these things, denounced in such caustic language, put to the test, and have seen the disastrous failure—"empty pews and cobwebs." If we must go to the world for wisdom, why not stop right here and take a few notes? This Reverend Matthews is said to be one of the most successful preachers in the Presbyterian Church, with the largest congregation of Presbyterians in the United States. If the Lord's return is a stabilizing doctrine with the sectarian churches, how much more so should the whole doctrine of Christ be! The second coming of Christ has always been a favorite theme with Latter Day Saints, but it is by no means the only one. Latter Day Saints were preaching the doctrine of the Lord's return before any of these men were born, and the very prophecies used by them have been presented over and over again. We are not jealous of any man or men who may be approaching the light. On the contrary, we welcome every advance step, and we note with pleasure that these second advent people are making an extended and searching examination of the prophecies bearing on the subject, with a literal interpretation. In this, and in some other matters equally important, the Saints have, and still are, leading the van, though handicapped for lack of means, and barred by popular prejudice, we have not been able to make so much noise, or attract so much attention.

But of one thing we are not forgetful. Shortly after the Restoration, and when the doctrine of the second advent had been carried to Europe by Latter Day Saint elders, the sectarian churches took up the topic and preached it far and wide much as they are doing now. Led by William Miller, a Baptist, a searching study of the prophecies was begun with the result that the time of the advent was figured out to the day. So certain were some of them that the Lord would come October 22, 1844, that they gave their property away and watched the clouds. The disappointment was bitter, but the lesson learned was valuable. They are not setting the date this time. After the passing of the memorable day, the doctrine of the Lord's return became decidedly unpopular, and never gained much headway with sectarian preachers until the war shook the cobwebs loose and opened the eyes of a few "laymen." It was a Philadelphia business man back from London who brought about the aforementioned conference in 1918, and it is admitted by the preachers that they have been tardy in accepting the doctrine. It stands to the credit of the Latter Day Saints, therefore, that they have steadfastly preached the doctrine since 1830, nor were any of them carried away with the time-setting delusion in 1844, having, as they did, a larger store of information from which to draw whereby they were not deceived. There were certain features accompanying the message which the Saints bore that met popular disfavor, because, forsooth, they were unreasonable. In the first place, the supernatural aspect of the message was disagreeable to the popular taste, and in the second place, like the Galilean message, it condemned without reserve the churches of men. It is no more popular to-day in that regard than it was in 1830. That God would speak to and call an unsophisticated youth like Joseph Smith to usher in the "latter-day glory" was altogether too much for their reason—and pride. It is interesting now to note some of the argument advanced by those men in defending themselves against the attacks of their brethren who clamor about reason. Pastor William L. Pettingill of Wilmington, Delaware, using Hosea 3: 4, 5, as the basis of an argument, says:

"Well, now, here is some prophecy which has been fulfilled, and fulfilled literally. Humanly considered, it was unbelievable, it was incredible, it was contrary to reason and it was contrary to common sense; but it has come to pass. Everything that God does is above reason, human reason. I met a man the other day who said he would not believe anything in the Bible that was contrary to reason. 'Whose reason?' and he said, 'Mine!' Well, of course, according to that man we all ought to bow down and worship his reason, for his reason is different from mine, different from yours: and if his reason is the final appeal in these matters, his reason is greater than God, and we ought to worship his reason, instead of God. Listen to me: Do you call it reasonable that God should come into the world in the form of a little baby, without a human father; that he should grow up in the world to be a man; that he should take upon himself the form of a servant; that he should humble himself; that he should become obedient to death, even the death of the cross, in order to save you and me? I say to you that this is above all reason; and yet I believe it with all my heart; I revel in it with all my soul; I rejoice in it with all my being. Let reason stand aside and give place to faith in the revelation of God."—Light on Prophecy, p. 104.

Now suppose a Latter Day Saint missionary should meet Pastor Pettingill and offer him the Book of Mormon! Shades of ye martyrs! Believe the Book of Mormon! Never! Why not? Contrary to reason, of course. Well, why not "Let reason stand aside and give place to faith in the revelation of God"? Is the coming forth of the Book of Mormon any more unreasonable than the birth of Jesus Christ? But the birth of Christ was foretold by the prophets, and he came in harmony therewith. Certainly, and so of the Book of Mormon. This premillennial preacher and his fellows are preaching that Israel will be gathered to Palestine "in unbelief." The Book of Mormon says it is here to "convince the Jews that Jesus is the Christ." Oh, but the Bible says the Jews will not be converted until Christ descends on the Mount of Olives at the "time of Jacob's trouble." Now it does not read that way. That argument is based on Zechariah 13: 6. But notice: it says "one," "one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands?" Not the whole nation, but "one." That Israel will be gathered in "unbelief" is doubtless true, but that he will remain in unbelief until the Lord comes is not so likely. But of one thing we are quite sure: Israel will not be converted to sectarianism, either before or after the Lord comes. Israel will not be converted without a "thus saith the Lord" in the same way that Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Amos pronounced it when "moved by the Holy Ghost," and the sectarians have nothing of the kind to offer. They have long ago cut the line of communication by their own "unbelief" and they, themselves are in the same condition Hosea says Israel would be in, "without an ephod," (priesthood), and without a prophet. They have steadfastly rejected the Book of Mormon, and all pertaining to it, but its genuineness is being verified daily, by the fulfillment of some of the very prophecies these premillennial people are so jubilant over.

Let us look at another picture as it presents itself to our view to-day, through the prophetic lens of a man who was moved upon by the Holy Ghost.

In a great metropolis a large gathering of people met to study the Word of God. They come from far and near. They come on purpose to hear what is the word from the Lord. Their most eloquent and learned ministers are there to instruct them. Three or four hundred singers, trained and white-clad, portray the Lord's majesty in songs of praise, accompanied by the skillful art of those who can "play well on an instrument." The preachers proclaim the matchless love of God and the wonderful sacrifice of his son, and the crowning glories of his triumphant second coming when he shall reign as King of kings, and Lord of lords. Yet, these same people, so enthusiastic, so filled with a fiery zeal that they would carry the message to earth's remotest bounds to enlighten the heathen, so positive that their anchorage is secure; these same people refuse to do the first things the Lord said was necessary to become his people. Baptism for the remission of sins is just as clearly taught in the New Testament Scriptures as the Lord's return, but these people do not believe it. The laying on of hands as a gospel doctrine is as plainly revealed as the gathering of Israel, but these people will not do it. They can see Israel's fall, but they cannot see their own apostacy. They can find numerous prophecies portraying the downfall of the Jews, but they are blind to the ones that record their own condition. They are there just the same. Listen!

"Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord. And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not. And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them."—Ezekiel 33: 30-33.

Where in all the Scriptures will the sectarians find a prophecy fulfilled by Israel any more literally and completely than the Gentiles are fulfilling this one? If "blindness in part" happened to Israel, what shall we say of the Gentiles who have fallen after the same example of unbelief? Responsibility for the war is traced primarily by these preachers to the teaching of German theology which has permeated and honeycombed modern Christianity to the center, until many of its leading scholars and professors are little more than infidels. Did Jesus have a vision of the same time and conditions when he said: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able?" (Luke 13: 24). Who are those doomed to disappointment? Surely not the rank and file of humanity who make no profession. Undoubtedly it will be some who have a "blessed hope" of a triumphant entrance into his kingdom. The doctrine of Jesus Christ comprehends much more than preaching his second coming. It embraces our covenant relationship with him by baptism. It includes the organic structure of his church, and it has to do with the temporal welfare of his people.

The capture of Jerusalem by General Allenby has been characterized by some of the speakers at this conference as the "Climax of the ages." By another as "The turning point in history." Nor would we detract in the least, but we do want to remind those men that Joseph Smith, whom some of them despise as they would a copperhead, is on record to-day with clear-cut prophecies relating to the restoration of Jerusalem and the return of the remnants of Jacob. The Book of Mormon is full of promise to Israel, but the premillennial people will have none of it. It also contains a warning to the Gentiles, but it has gone unheeded, because the witness had no standing in court. But it is decreed—mark it well—that the Gentiles shall yet acknowledge their mistake when the Lord shall be "glorified in his saints." The following fatal admissions are in line with what the prophets have declared:

The Reverend MacInnis says, "It is really pathetic to read a lot of the stuff that is written in the name of scholarship, trying to mix people up on these simple statements that were written for the common people who heard Jesus and his disciples gladly."

The Reverend James M. Gray said: "Nine tenths of the trouble and worry in the visible church to-day is explained by the fact that to a great extent we are working in opposition to God, instead of cooperating with him."

The Reverend P. W. Philpott quoting Paul, "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith," remarks: "That is what a great number of our preachers have done, and the result is, to-day we have a form of godliness without any power."

Now let Jeremiah speak and confirm Ezekiel's prophecy: "The Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit."—Jeremiah 16: 19.

And this from the Book of Mormon:

"And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another; and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance. And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people, Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; For behold, there is no God to-day, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men."

How is that for a description of German theology? Worst of all, after near two thousand years of missionary effort, with over 400,000,000 Christians in the world at the present time, and missions in every land, it is declared that "there is not a Christian nation on earth to-day." Of what avail, then, is the preaching of the second coming of Christ? The Reverend B. B. Sutcliffe said, "The world is in deeper spiritual darkness to-day than ever before." That being true, it occurs to us that repentance and baptism for the remission of sins should be the absorbing theme. That is precisely what Jesus and the apostles preached to apostate Israel, and the heathen Gentiles, and Jesus said, "this," the same, "gospel shall be preached" just before the end. The premillennial people, and all others, have those words of Jesus in the "Blessed book," but they will not do them, and calamity has overtaken them. Their peace has been taken away, precisely as Joseph Smith said it would be, if they rejected his message. Listen to the following words from the lips of the "prophet . . . among them" whom they murdered for his testimony:

"And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

Can the premillennial people find a prophecy anywhere that is more direct, clear-cut, and to the point than that one, which was contrary to all reason at the time it was published to the world in 1835? If the testimony of these Bible conference men is to be relied on, the Devil has "power over his own dominion" to-day as he has never had it before. That peace has been taken from the earth is admitted by the Reverend MacInnis in these words:

"Men are gathering from all parts of this nation and other nations to consider a peace program. Those of us who understand the Scriptures and the truth involved in the high priesthood of Jesus Christ know that there can be no peace in earth until he is recognized as Lord and King. We know that we cannot have peace until he comes."

And this from the Reverend P. W. Philpott of Hamilton, Ontario:

"Why are you a premillennialist?" asked a brother the other day, and I replied, 'Because Jesus said that at his coming he would find the world in a condition similar to that of the days of Noah and Lot.' We all know that those were days of moral midnight. What are the facts to-day? Are we growing better? Are we becoming more Godlike? Now, friends, many of our brethren say that we are improving in spite of all that is transpiring. Where they get the evidence of the improvement is a great puzzle to me. You talk about the gospel saving the world. I have yet to find a city or a town, a village, or even a hamlet, that is entirely Christian. If we go back to the very country where Jesus lived and died and rose again, where the church had its beginning, what do we find? That not only is that country still in darkness and the shadow of death, but there is hardly a trace of Christianity within its borders. No, when we look the world square in the face, there is only one verdict and that is, that the very sins that made the judgment of Sodom a necessity, that corrupted the whole world in the days of Noah, are rampant and working mightily in our midst. . . . I sometimes wonder if my brethren in the ministry who oppose these teachings have taken the trouble to find out what grotesque and mischievous things are being preached in the name of Christ, these days—how that Spiritism is spreading at an alarming rate. This is especially so in England since the war. I fear that many of my brethren do not realize the magnitude and menace of this movement. It is essentially a doctrine of demons (1 Timothy 4: 1-3; Revelations 16: 14). It is the recrudescence of those frightful forms of evil that made the flood a necessity (Genesis 6: 2-5), and also brought destruction to the Canaanites (Numbers 13: 33).—Light on Prophecy, pp. 200, 201.

So Joseph Smith's prophecy, which he said was soon to come to pass, is being literally fulfilled. Spiritism, of which the foregoing complains, made its appearance nine years after Joseph published his revelation to the world. The wars and calamities which he so graphically described have come and taken their terrible toll, and the industrial unrest which he depicted so accurately, is one of the worst things confronting us to-day. But Joseph Smith was not permitted to live to see the fulfillment of his predictions, and, so, he was a "false prophet." So it was said of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Jesus, Peter, Paul, and all the rest, whose testimony was a rebuke to the carnal taste. As early as 1831, Joseph said the Lord told him this:

"Behold, I, the Lord, utter my voice and it shall be obeyed. Wherefore, verily I say, Let the wicked take heed, and let the rebellious fear and tremble; and let the unbelieving hold their lips, for the day of wrath shall come upon them as a whirlwind, and all flesh shall know that I am God. . . . I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked; I am holding my Spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints shall hardly escape."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 2, 9.

Joseph Smith's prophecies abound with glowing description of the crowning glories of the Lord's return, and his victory over all his enemies, but of the conditions prevailing before that day it is written:

"And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. [Precisely what the postmillennial advocates argue.—E. E. L.] And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. And there shall be earthquakes, also, in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another." Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.

Tell me that Joseph Smith was a false prophet! Nonsense! False prophets there have been, and are, but their folly has been made known to all men by the failure of their prognostications to come true. Not so with Joseph Smith. He described future events with an uncanny precision that marks him as a seer of no mean ability. We care not for the stories circulated by his enemies who sought to destroy the force of his message. All the prophets of the past have had the same kind of opposition to meet, and instead of militating against him, the frantic efforts of the opposition establishes a fine point of identity in his favor. (Matthew 24: 9.) We have seen the wars, we have heard the rumblings of the earthquake, we have passed through the desolating sickness, the influenza, we hear the rumors of war on every side, despite the League of Nations, and all realize the terrible commotion and unrest of all grades of society to-day.

Let them preach the second coming to the ends of the earth, if they will. But why lay so much stress on what ancient prophets have said and deny the things proclaimed by a modern seer, whose testimony confirms the older ones? "Let reason stand aside and give place to the revelation of God."

Faith

BY DANIEL B. SORDEN

"The nature of all endeavor," says this writer, "is a conflict between faith and prejudice."

Faith is man's assurance of the existence of things which by their very nature are not seen; and if men were duly to consider themselves and turn their thoughts and reflections to the operations of their own minds, they would readily discover that it is faith, and faith only, which is the moving cause of all action in them. That without it, all activity, both mental and physical would cease. If we ask what incited us to action, we would say that it was the hope which we had, in consequence of our belief in the existence of things which we had not as yet seen.

Would we ever exert ourselves to obtain wisdom and intelligence, unless we believed that we could obtain them? Would we ever have sown, had we not believed that we would reap? Or would we ever have knocked, if we had not believed that it would be opened to us? In fact, is there anything which we possess, which we have not obtained by reason of faith? You can only answer "No"? Then, we will infer that faith is the principle of action in all intelligent beings.

"Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith is the sincerity of purpose, the high instinct, the apprehension which is one of the fundamental qualities of a great man. The adventurer, the explorer, or prophet has this devotion to some object, this desire or hope. He has this vision which is replaced or supplemented by ambition and expectation, which is finally realized in success, for success surely comes to men with these qualities.

It is faith that makes the great man a leader. Now the great religious leader is the man best denominated as a "saint." His life is the external expression of the complete dominion which the "idea" has over him. There is nothing hypothetical or impossible in his life: his vision, his faith, explains all: supplies all gaps in knowledge: makes possible and actual even the most abstract idea. Saint Francis was a man of vision: his pious thoughts were "little flowers" of devotion which influenced the world. He conceived a great order of men whose lives would be devoted to charity and teaching. The Franciscan friars were social workers: the good Samaritans of the Middle Ages. It required a vision, a positive faith to define, to encourage, and to achieve a purpose, at once religious, but human enough to transform a half-barbaric Europe.

Thinking in Broad Terms

The nation builder or real statesman is the man who thinks in terms of national movements. He conceived governments as means to material wealth and economic advantages. He sees with eye of faith, future possibilities as present realities, under disguises strange and unthinkable to the average man. Cavour saw clearly a united Italy, capable of carrying the benefits of mild law and high civilization to Moslem-ridden Africa. Bismarck saw Prussia supreme in Germany, and predominant at the council tables of Europe. On the marshy banks of the Neva, Peter the Great built the capital of a new Russia. Who but Pitt could have seen the British Empire in India coming as a result of a hundred years of war with France?

In the modern world, the great conqueror has been the geographer; the man who by exploring unknown corners of the earth may be said to have conquered them by knowledge. He has seen opportunities for development both in raw lands and in uncivilized peoples: his faith in the unpromising present is sustained by a vision of the future.

Clarifying Effect of Zeal and Vision

The history of every epoch is a conflict between abuses into which the old way has fallen, and the demand for reform. Every epoch has been dominated by some one who saw clearly the new steps to be taken to secure better conditions of life. The reformer has been endowed with a cleared vision of the needs of human life as it advanced in complexity. The nature of all endeavor is a conflict between faith and prejudice. The fact of anything great being accomplished allows us to infer that somewhere the inertia of self-satisfaction and prejudice has given way before a zeal and a vision.

"Let us not be content to be mud when we are all able to be marble! Let us not be content to be charcoal when we are capable of being diamonds! Cultivate a sanctified self-conceit. As Ruskin puts it, our sin and danger is that we will be content to gossip with the housemaid and the stableboy, when we might have been holding high converse with the kings and queens of literature."

The great man is he whose faith pierces the superficial and finds the reality in the ideal or spiritual. This inner vision has dominated the great work of the world. This devotion to an ideal means a vision of something of future good to be accomplished, and a passionate desire to accomplish it and make it actual. He whose aim is beneath the stars will never startle the world. The Greek word for man, anthropos, means the upward-looking one. Man is not man unless he has the upward look, a purpose ahead of him. To live nobly and grandly, a man must live as if seeing the invisible.

Many are they who have testified to the inner vision, to the necessity for following the gleam. Tennyson speaks truth when he says, "We needs must love the highest when we see it." Let us trust and follow our noblest ambitions, our loftiest ideals! Rest content with nothing but the possible best.

Vision and Resolution Inseparable Twins

The artist said, "One thing I possess, and I never remember the time I was without it, and aim toward the highest, the best, and a burning desire to reach it," and Watts, as though this were not enough, painted the figure of "Hope." A woman of noble features is sitting on the height, her face turned upward: She is "on the summit." The picture is a symbol of the artist striving for what is as yet unattained. There was, undoubtedly, in the soul of the man a yearning for the heights of his artistic imagination.

The vision and the resolve must go together each supports the other; and either without the other is futile. But he who has them must prepare to sacrifice much that he holds dear, and happy will he be in his flying, he treads not on the hearts of his friends.

The young knight Gareth is ambitious to follow the king in his adventures of reform. His mother tries to dissuade him from his heroic purpose; urges him to stay at home, live a life of ease, follow the deer and marry the maid he loves. But the vision of life ahead is more real and valuable than the sequestered ease of the commonplace forest home.

A Decision of the Young Man

A young man is trudging through an Alpine village toward the higher summits. He sees a vision and hears voices calling to manly endeavor. But there are opposing influences that would keep him in the valley of mediocrity—

"Oh, stay," the maiden said, "and rest thy weary head upon my breast." It was a very wooing voice and the resting place attractive, but the young man resisted, for the heights called him. Then, the supplication took the form of warning: "Beware the awful avalanche." There is danger on the heights; stay in the quiet valley. And so Gareth answered his mother:

"Man am I grown, a man's work I must do
Follow the deer? Follow the Christ, the King,
Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the King
Else wherefore born?"

What is the reward for the king's servant? How much and what may he expect? If the reward is not in kind with the expectation, it is faith alone which has the power to transform defeat into a species of success. We see that Gareth had a passionate desire to follow the King in his service to humanity. This is another vital characteristic of all who have this zeal—that they desire to assist in the world's work. They work for no reward; they expect others to get the glory. They hope for no human sympathy or encouragement. They overcome the desire for personal, material benefits and have the desire to accomplish for all men. But above all, they follow the gleam:

"I will search for what was never found,
For the height and the light, and the glow
Of impossible things, I am bound;
For glory comes so."

In delivering an address it is well to talk concretely. If the subject is abstract, at least bring in concrete examples. This may be illustrated by the story of the after-dinner speaker—a lawyer, who started an involved argument, whereupon one of the diners spoke up and said, "Talk concretely; we all have concrete heads."

The interest in the return of our Lord is rather clearly indicated in the Christmas catalogue of a denominational publishing house. Nine books are advertised for Christmas under this one heading, ranging in price from seventy-five cents to a dollar seventy-five. Apparently all give the matter affirmative consideration.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE KIRTLAND SAFETY ANTI-BANKING COMPANY

The Toledo News Bureau publishes nearly a column from Elder J. F. Mintun, on the Mormons in Ohio. It evidently is in reply to some attack published in the same paper. Special consideration is given to the Kirtland Safety Anti-Banking Company. It is a fact that many such banks flourished at that time. So far as we have been able to ascertain, there are no good grounds for the criticisms sometimes raised, the criticisms based on comparing methods of that day with methods of to-day, without explaining that such is the fact. The statement of Brother Mintun, with quotations is as follows:

Joseph Smith never claimed to have a "revelation directing him to enter business ventures." Individually he did not organize a bank, but was one of a number who met and organized the Kirtland Safety Anti-Banking Co. to be governed by "the superintendence of 32 managers, to be chosen annually, by, and from among the members of the same; each member being entitled to one vote for each share," the capital stock "to be divided into shares of $50 each." Of this venture and the causes of its failure, I. P. Axtell, a director in the First National Bank of Paineville, Ohio, in February, 1880, says:

"I know about that bank they started in Kirtland. These parties went into the banking business as a great many others in the state of Ohio and other states. . . . Had the people let them alone there is no reason that I know of why the Kirtland bank should not have existed to this time, and on as stable a basis as other banks."

He further said in answer to the question:

"What do you consider the prime causes of the expulsion of the Mormons from Kirtland?"

"The ignorance and fanaticism of their accusers did it; they thought public sentiment would tolerate it, and they did it."

In 1838 the church sent Oliver Granger to Kirtland to settle up the unfinished business that was left when persecution drove them from that place, and to show the satisfaction with which the business was settled, the following card was issued:

"PAINSVILLE, October 19, 1838.

"We, the undersigned, being personal acquaintances of Oliver Granger, firmly believe that the course which he has pursued in settling the claims, accounts, etc., against the former citizens of Kirtland-tp, has done much credit to himself and all others that committed to him the care of adjusting their business with this community, which also furnishes evidence that here was no intention on their part of defrauding their creditors.

PRESERVING A PREHISTORIC CITY

Lying almost forgotten, and long neglected, in the foothills of Sleeping Ute Mountain, a short distance west of Mesa Verde National Park, in the State of Colorado, are the remains of the ancient city which has come to be known, in recent years, as Aztec Springs. All that is left of the buildings which once occupied the spot are the crumbling walls of two great structures known as Upper and Lower House, and numerous smaller buildings, once forming an extensive Indian village. Recently, by proclamation of President Wilson, the Yucca House National Monument was created, and the first definite steps taken to preserve, for the present and future generations, what many regard as a significant relic in American history and perhaps the earliest civilization, if so it may be termed, of the western hemisphere. It is explained that the name selected for the monument, Yucca House, was decided upon as one more definitely descriptive of the ancient village than the name Aztec Springs, by which it has long been known. The impression has, it is said, prevailed that the city was built and peopled by the ancient Aztec Indians from Mexico, but that research establishes the fact that the Montezuma Indians were the builders, and that the village took the name of the mountain near it, Sleeping Ute having been known to the inhabitants as Yucca, so called because of the abundance of the yucca plant found growing on the mountain sides.

The establishing of this monument, and the setting apart, under governmental supervision of this tiny tract of land, embracing only about ten acres, in the Montezuma Valley, is chiefly significant, it would seem, because it so definitely accords with the policy of the people of Colorado of preserving and perpetuating the scenic and historic beauty spots in their great State. No commonwealth in the Republic of which rugged and beautiful Colorado is a unit can, perhaps, boast of a more romantic and stirring early history.

The little spot which is marked by the prehistoric relics of the Indian village is but one of many of a somewhat similar character which have been discovered in other parts of Colorado. These, for the most part, are not unlike the remnants of Indian villages and cities found in New Mexico and Arizona. The determination to preserve such places is, from many points of view, commendable and worthy. The inclination all too often, when considering a project of perpetuating some ancient relic, is to regard it as sentimental merely, or unnecessary and useless. It is not difficult, if one regards the accomplishments of the present day as all-sufficient, to imagine that all of history, really worth writing, is already written, and that the record which will be of informative value to those of the future will be the history, not of the seventeenth century, for instance, but of the twentieth. The tendency seems to be to lose sight of the somewhat important consideration that comparison will be made, say three hundred years hence, of the civilization and progress of that time with the civilization and progress of what is now regarded as the all-important present. Is it not as well, therefore, that the student of some century of the future may be able to compare twentieth century progress with the progress of the seventeenth century? If this is to be made possible, those of to-day must do their part in preserving and passing on, as those of future generations will no doubt be generous and wise enough to pass on, the available evidences in tangible form. Yucca House, in itself only a dot among the Montezuma foothills, but once the pride of a proud race, may seem insignificant in the great scheme, but it is a heritage to which the people of to-day have no exclusive title.—Christian Science Monitor, January 6, 1920.

MOTION PICTURES IN CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS

In connection with the peace program of the American Red Cross, it is announced that the organization will develop a broad education program by means of the motion picture. According to a statement from Washington Headquarters the Red Cross will furnish not only pictures depicting its own work but will expand its film activities to include subjects pertaining to governmental, industrial, scenic and such other pictures as may properly be made parts of a broad program for a healthier and happier America.

The Red Cross states that in entering the educational film field its work is based on a definite demand for pictures of this character which are not provided in sufficient quantities by commercial concerns. Distribution will be made through

Again the Moving Picture

Excerpts from a strongly favorable letter on the subject.

BY ENNA JAMES

We are ever ready to instill in our lives all modern appliances and conveniences, all modern inventions and machinery; anything and everything that will make our temporal affairs a success, that will add attraction and comfort to our homes. But when it comes to the presentation of the gospel, to simplifying and beautifying the delivery of the message of salvation, to adding to the power of the preached word, an element so pleasing, so attractive that it will draw sin-laden souls from the darkness of pool hall, gambling den, and dance hall, showing unto them the better way—ah, that is something quite different!

We use pictures in our little tots' Quarterlies to emphasize and to impress upon their minds points we wish them to remember. The child grows into a youth and we use maps in the Sunday school and Religio that the mind of the student might the more clearly and readily grasp locations and events. Is there such a great step then from the picture in the Quarterly, and the map on the wall, to the picture on the screen? Is it like the step between youth and manhood—merely prothe thirteen Red Cross Divisions and 3,700 chapters throughout the country.

Catalogues describing available films, suitable for churches and schools, will be sent to such institutions as send their addresses to National Headquarters, American Red Cross, Washington, District of Columbia.

gress—a development? Try to picture the route of Paul's missionary journeys without a map. How vague and indistinct your conception of them are! How infinitely more wonderful than a map would be a moving picture film showing Paul on his journey incidentally bringing in the architecture, customs, manners, and appearances of the different peoples he visited? Could there be any possible harm for our youth to witness such a film? Would it not rather be gospel, education, and recreation combined?

If the young man of to-day who is preparing for foreign missionary work could study from the moving picture screen the country in which he expects to labor, could learn from it the conditions existing there, the customs and manners of the people he must labor among, think you it would lessen in his estimation the power or value of the preached words? Would it not rather lend added zeal and zest to his determination?

Let us be broad-minded, not looking out upon the universe with a narrow judgment, but applying a wide perspective, a broad vision, remembering that many seeming evils may have been holy inspirations in their beginning, and might again be restored to righteous use if turned into the proper channels.

Brother Dwyer has done more to remove prejudice with his moving picture accompaniment to his wonderful lectures than many ministers could have done in a much longer time (with all due respect and reverence for our missionaries).

Let us take a stand for fair play, generosity, and progress, keeping always before our mind's eye a vision deep and broad and long, that we may be zealous workers not easily overcome by evil.

Pictures Should Make Us More Efficient

We members who are scattered so far apart that we cannot get together often in the winter do not know much about the movies. They have been looked upon by some as things of amusement and many of us are loath to attend them, but no doubt it is mostly because of the character of them. We who cannot profit by them will look to you who do, for greater wisdom, greater efficiency, greater development, etc. I think it would be well to have a committee to first view the films before showing, and discard all that are below par.

According to the Kansas City Post, the old Whitmer building, in Richmond, Missouri, is being torn down to make room for a business building. It was built in 1843. The correspondent mixes in a great deal that is false into his account of the early experiences of the Whitmers, one statement being that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon finally went into the hands of the Utah church. The Reorganized Church has this manuscript.

There was a national meeting of college students at Des Moines during the holiday season. The purpose was to organize the college students, who are Christians, on behalf of missionary work. John R. Mott declared that the need to-day is for leadership and for consecration to meet the world's need.

The Eighteenth Constitutional Amendment providing for prohibition in the United States is now in full force and effect. One feature of the law often overlooked is, any person injured in person, property, means of support or otherwise by an intoxicated person, or by reason of the intoxication will have a right to bring an action for damages against the individual who sold the liquor. This should have been the law long ago, before prohibition, so as to have a deterrent effect upon bootleggers.

We of the Clinton District, while having no great successes to report, feel that we are still interested in the cause of righteousness and endeavoring to keep in the faith.

A visit with the Butler Branch, about the first of the year, found them renewing their efforts to secure a house of worship. We hope they will succeed, as the need of a meeting house is becoming more and more obvious.

The writer was called to Cross Timbers to meet E. E. Davidson who was attacking the faith of the Saints, daring and defying us to come, and he would divide time with us. When we attended his meeting and asked privilege to speak, we were absolutely refused. If we would affirm that Joseph Smith was a prophet and received a revelation in addition to that given by Jesus Christ we could have half the time, but not in that meeting; it must be in the daytime.

We had previously left a standing challenge to any Campbellite minister who should attack our faith at that place, to discuss church propositions, but his Mr. Davidson had refused to accept. His daring us to come and accept his offer to "divide time with us to defend Joseph in the face of his opposition" was given out to the people to leave the impression that he would divide the time in his meeting—the "opposition" was already going on. When he saw that his bluff failed he turned us down flatly, not allowing us to speak one word to his audience.

We then secured a hall and advertised a review and expose of Davidson, with an especial invitation to Davidson to be present and defend himself. We had a big hearing, but our opponent was not present. Our challenge to these people still stands. They have done so much persecuting and abusing of the Saints in that part that we thought best to leave it with them whether or not they will be bold enough to meet the issue.

The Saints there are encouraged. They are isolated and have made a noble endeavor by keeping up a Sunday school for years. They meet at the Oak Grove Schoolhouse. While in that locality we preached a few times at Oak Grove, and at Jordan. At the latter place we were assisted by Elder H. L. Bansell. We were cared for at the homes of S. O. Mawhinney, Hugh Campbell and Alfred Driscoll. Brother Williams and three others had come all the way to Sedalia by automobile to meet us.

We spent Sunday, January 25, at Clinton. Very few of our members remain there, and no meetings of any kind are being held.

From January 27 to February 1 we were with the Taborville Branch. Bad roads and much sickness were against the attendance. One thing we were pleased to notice there was a number of young men who are showing great interest in the church work. Among these are numbered Lester and Clive Heath, Kenneth Ingalls, Odess Athey, and Troy Oehring. There are not many girls, but we notice Irene Heath, Edith Oehring, and Lila Paxton as the "standbys." I only wished that our young folks in every branch were just as devoted to the church as are those at Taborville, and especially the boys.

Am now in the regions of Eldorado Springs, in the vicinity of Vere, Eldorado Springs, and Coal Hill Branches. There is a great deal of influenza in this section, which hinders our work.

The good news reaches us that Elder C. W. Keck, president of the Nevada Branch, has been appointed postmaster. He has held the position of first assistant postmaster for a great many years. That he is worthy of this trust, all who know him bear witness.

Our next conference is billed for Nevada, February 20-22. We hope the influenza will not hinder. H. E. MOLER.

Latter-Day Motherhood

III. HEREDITY

"The sins of the father shall be visited upon the children even unto the third and fourth generation."

This great law of nature, by which our actions and our thoughts affect not only ourselves but coming generations, has been much in my mind of late. I am wondering if I have given to you, my treasured daughter, a tenth of the priceless heritage it is in my heart to-day to have bestowed upon you. I was so young, so illy prepared, so thoughtless, when you came into my life. My opportunities to study concerning the laws of being, had been so few, and I did not realize just how important it was that I, myself, should be all that I wanted my children to be! It is not that I was evil-minded, or that, as a young girl, I violated prescribed customs of proper living; but I now feel, that if I had known more about the great principles of heredity, I would have made greater effort to eliminate my faults, and to have substituted more definite graces of character. For your sake I should have tried to be more gentle, more patient, more careful to bring sunshine into dark corners. For your sake I should have had more faith, more quiet trust put my hand with greater confidence into that of my dear Leader, feeling sure he would lead me to the fountain of real life!

Too often, dear one, we "forget to remember." We forget to ponder on the great Love which gives us love, the great kind Heart that bestows upon us every good and perfect gift—everything which makes life worth while.

I say, if I could live it all over, knowing and seeing as I do now, I should try to establish more definite purposes, even in my youth, that he legacy which I should bequeath to those dearer than life to me, shall have had the touch of the life divine, with ingrained principles of eternal truth, clear vision of human potentialities, and undimmed confidence in the Ruler of the universe!

It is not for me, now, to live over those years of development. The only good that can come from retrospect, is that, from the mass of varied experiences, we may cull out lessons of value to ourselves and others. I cannot undo the past, nor change the heritage I gave you; but I do want you to understand that you, now, in your life, day by day, are laying the foundation of that which you will pass on to those who come after. You are like a collector of rare art, selecting here and there, that which will add to the value of the whole. Take a care that you collect only that which is desirable! Perhaps you are indulging a foolish habit—do you care to pass it on? Perhaps you cherish a grudge against some thoughtless mate—do you wish your children to be unforgiving and uncharitable? Perhaps you permitted a false impression to go uncorrected—do you want, some day, to be anxious over an untruthful child?

You see, I am sure, how necessary it is for you now to establish high ideals, to see the importance of even trivial tendencies, and to mark out for yourself and for those who will pass this way because of you, a pathway of righteousness, trodden for the sake of humanity and God's eternal purposes. Try to vision the serious meanings of life itself, and hold fast to the truths which will be unfolded to you. Help will be given to you, in every patient effort to hew to the true line, to follow the Beacon you see afar, and to reach the worthy goal desired. Perfect success is denied us, owing to the limitations of this earth life, but that you may attain that degree of success possible to your very highest and best self, is all that even a mother could wish for you!

These are the days of your unfoldment. Some day the "sweetest story ever told" will be whispered into your ears, and find an echo in the deepest recesses of your pure soul.

Unto that day, keep your faith bright, your banner high, and your spirit attune!

Romance

"I wait for the day when dear hearts shall discover,
While dear hands are laid on my head,
'The child is a woman, the book may close over,
For all the lessons are said!"

"I wait for my story—the birds cannot sing it,
Not one, as he sits on the tree;
The bells cannot ring it, but long years, O, bring it!
Such as I wish it to be."

How may young people be taught to discriminate between good and evil?

How may a child be impressed with the everlasting nature of his thoughts and acts?

How can the thought of future posterity and their responsibility therefor be made a powerful influence for good in the life of a girl or boy?

Sturdy Bodies for Working Children

The imperative need of physical tests for children about to enter employment and of continuous supervision over the health of children at work has received national recognition in the organization by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor of a permanent committee to determine physical standards for working children.

Little has been done up to the present time in the United States to prevent children from going into work for which they are physically unfit, and practically no study has been made of the effects of early labor on the growth of the body. Yet the children who begin work between the ages of 14 and 18, and in many instances as early as 12 or even younger, are the children of least resistance in the community. They are in general the children of the poor, and in consequence, are likely to be the ill-nourished, the undersized, and the anemic. Already handicapped, their growing bodies can put up no resistance to the exacting demands of industry on muscle and nerves. During these maturing years they are peculiarly liable to injury from overstrain and peculiarly sensitive to all sorts of industrial hazards.

A great deal of the work done by children is, moreover, totally unfit for them. It often involves too much sitting, or too much standing, the carrying of weights beyond the child's strength, the overexercising of one set of muscles at the expense of another, and, in certain occupations, the loss of sleep. Foreign investigations have shown that the sickness rate among juvenile laborers is alarming, especially during the second year of working life when the injurious effects of early labor upon already undeveloped bodies have had time to make themselves felt.

A "physical minimum" for children entering employment was provided in the standards adopted by the Children's Bureau Conference held in Washington and other large cities in May and June, 1919. This minimum declared that "A child shall not be allowed to go to work until he has had a physical examination by a public-school physician or other medical officer especially appointed for that purpose by the agency charged with the enforcement of the law, and has been found to be of normal development for a child of his age and physically fit for the work at which he is to be employed." It provided also that "There shall be an annual physical examination of all working children who are under 18 years of age."

But what constitutes "normal development" for boys and girls of different ages, and what indicates that a child is "physically fit" for the employment which he is about to enter? Only through exact observation and measurements can it be demonstrated that a child is unfit for certain kinds of

News from Australia

Apostle Rushton sends good news from the land of the Southern Cross.

Considering the prominence given to the mission undertaken by Brother Hanson and the writer, because of the difficulty anticipated with regard to passports, it will be a surprise to many to learn that we are in Australia and engaged in the work to which we were assigned.

Before leaving San Francisco for the Society Islands, we had our passports vised by the French consul. On our arrival at Papeete we called upon the American consul, Mr. Layton, by whom we were received with courtesy, and made welcome at the office. We were also introduced to Doctor Williams the British consul, to whom we related our business, and asked him if when we were ready for leaving he would sign our passports so that we could proceed to New Zealand and Australia. He assured us that he would be pleased to do so, and that there would be no trouble at all on our arrival at these places.

We closed our work in the islands after a very interesting and enjoyable visit, though our work was very strenuous, and the traveling not without its inconveniences and dangers.

On our return from the outlying islands, to Papeete, we learned that the steamer we expected to travel on was delayed because of strikes, and would not be in port until the end of the month. We therefore had time to write up our reports, and get our mail ready for the Tofua which would leave November 22 for San Francisco.

We had a few days in which we could enjoy a well-earned rest, and also take in some of the very fine scenery of the islands. So in company with Brethren Karlstrom, Brown and Ellis we visited several points. One day we motored out to Point Venus passing around Matavia Bay where Captain Cook first anchored, visiting the lighthouse and then the monument erected to commemorate the transit of Venus observed by Captain Cook June 23, 1769. We also visited the place where the French Government is putting a bridge across a river with a view to completing the roadway around the island. The scenery on this drive was very impressive, the combination of rugged mountains, heavy white clouds, the deep blue sea and the line of white surf fringing the island, together with the green foliage and waving coconut palms, produced the typical scenery of the tropics.

The next day we traveled in the opposite direction to the isthmus which unites the main island of Tahiti with a small island, called Little Tahiti, and while the scenery was not so rough and majestic as on the previous journey, it was full of interest and charm and showed many of the pastoral qualities. We had the pleasure of calling at the little branch of "Tiona" work, or that too early and to exacting labor is endangering his physical development. The standards to be applied constitute a vitally important part of the problem of child labor.

The committee appointed by the Children's Bureau will undertake to provide these standards. The committee consists of: Doctor George P. Barth, Director of Hygiene, City Health Department, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Chairman; Doctor Emma M. Appel, Employment Certificate Department, Chicago Board of Education; Doctor S. Josephine Baker, Chief, Bureau of Child Hygiene, Department of Health, New York City; Doctor C. Ward Crampton, Dean, Normal School of Physical Education, Battle Creek; Doctor D. L. Edsall, Dean, Harvard Medical School; Doctor George W. Goler, Health Officer, Rochester, New York; Doctor Harry Linenthal Director of Industrial Clinic, Massachusetts General Hospital; Doctor Anne E. Rude, Director, Hygiene Division, United States Children's Bureau; Doctor Thomas D. Wood, Chairman on Health Problems and Education, Columbia University, New York City.—Government Bulletin.

(Zion) where we have the oldest church building of the Reorganization in this mission. The church stands on the summit of one of the foothills, and nestles amid coconut palms and mangoes. Around are scattered the graves of those who have gone to their rest, among which is the grave of Brother Hawkins who gave many years of faithful work to the church in these islands, and some of his posterity are with the church to-day, whom we met during our tour.

The epidemic of last year thinned out the congregation so that now but very few are left.

The steamer Moana which had carried us safely from San Francisco to Papeete was due to arrive early on the morning of November 28, so we spent the time in preparing for our journey, packing trunks and satchels also securing the visee of the British consul. We were awakened early in the morning by hearing the raucous call of the steamer's siren, announcing her arrival in the harbor. We were soon dressed, and at the wharf as she berthed and began her preparations for unloading and loading as well as taking on a large supply of coal.

As soon as possible we approached the purser for our berths but our disappointment may be imagined when we were informed by him that there was no accommodation for us. However in the course of the day we were informed that if we cared to take second-cabin accommodation we could sail and enjoy the first-class privileges of the dining table and deck. We gladly accepted the offer and had our baggage removed from the mission house to the cabin.

On Sunday morning services were held in the church, at which Brother Hanson and myself gave our final addresses, and after lunch we boarded the ship, and at about 3.30 in the afternoon the cables were loosed and the ship moved slowly away from the wharf and soon the little band of Saints became unrecognizable as the distance between us and the shore widened. Soon we sailed through the pass and were upon the restless bosom of the Pacific. On our left were the rough mountains of Tahiti crowned with white fleecy clouds, on our right the saw-teeth-like mountains of Moorea, gilded by the rays of the westering sun, standing out as sentinels of our path. While glad to be on our way for the fields we were not without feelings of sorrow to leave our friends of the islands.

In two days time we reached Raratonga of the Cook group where we spent a few hours. These islands are under the British control and show signs of care and nurture which were lacking in the French possession.

This island also is evidently of volcanic origin, and the mountains seem to be portions of a crater which at some remote period had been blown to pieces, and in the distance the ragged mountains reminded one of decayed teeth in some colossal jaw of an extinct monster.

It was very, very hot in Raratonga and both of us felt the heat much more in this place than at any time on our journey. The ship lay just outside of the reef, and passengers were landed in large broad-bottomed boats towed by steam tugs. In rough weather it is very dangerous to make the landing and even in calm weather the feat is not without its dangers. Upon the left was to be seen the wreckage of the steamship Maiti, which is a grim spectacle reminding one of the dangers always threatening "those that go down to the sea in ships." The bow of the vessel lies on its side, the stern is heaved up into the air, while some of the boilers and cylinders of the engine are in between and seem to provide a means of sport for the restless sea which surges over and about them, as though incapable of the destruction and tragedy exhibited in the wreck.

We left Raratonga with still more passengers added to our number, and about two o'clock in the afternoon, were on our way to Wellington, New Zealand. We found our fellow passengers to be a very sociable crowd, and under the leadership of some enterprising spirits, games and concerts were arranged, in some of which we took part. The time slipped by very quickly, and gradually the weather grew colder, the sea rougher, and the wind more boisterous.

About half way between Raratonga and Wellington, we retired to bed on Saturday evening, and when we awoke it was Monday morning. Somehow and somewhere we had lost a Sunday. The crowd did not seem to be much concerned about this and went on with their games and pleasure as though nothing had occurred. We effected a sort of compromise, spending the morning in reading and meditation, and in the afternoon played several of the deck games. So in one day we united Sunday and Monday.

On the morning of December 11 we entered into Cook Straits and came within sight of Wellington. The government doctor came on board, also the government officials, the passengers were marshaled for examination, and to go through the necessary routine of having our passports examined and registered by the police. We experienced no difficulty whatever in our examination, and about two o'clock in the afternoon we went down the gangway. We were delighted to meet our Brother H. W. Savage who had been expecting us on this steamer. We regretted to learn that we should have to leave for Sydney that same day on board the steamer Manuka, consequently we were kept busy in moving our baggage to the ship which was to be our new home for the next few days, and also securing our passports from the government officers and arranging for our berths on the new steamer. However, the Manuka was not scheduled to sail until ten o'clock, so we had time to call upon Brother and Sister Leberz where we were received with welcome, and spent a little time in conversation and offered prayer at the bedside of our sister, who was very sick.

At midnight we were on our way to Sydney. A number of passengers who had been with us on the Moana were our fellow voyagers on this occasion. We had a pleasant voyage, and within a day's steaming of Sydney were glad to run into warm, fine weather once again.

About nine o'clock on Tuesday morning December 16, we passed through the heads of Sydney harbor, and were keenly interested in the many and varied sights of this harbor, which is admittedly one of the finest in the world. Soon the doctor and the government inspector and the water police boarded the vessel, and after undergoing the customary examination, our passports examined, and being registered by the police we were allowed to disembark.

Brethren Haworth and Corbett met us and soon we were located in the home of Sister Heinrich, where we have made our headquarters during our stay in this place.

The following evening the Saints of Balmain and Leichhardt united to give us an official greeting and we were made the recipients of a warm welcome, for which the Australian brethren and sisters are already famous.

We went up and registered at the local police station and then waited upon the American consul and found that our passports had been received at the office, and were informed that they would be taken care of and be renewed for two succeeding periods of six months.

At no time have our passports been questioned by anyone, and each experience we have had so far has been pleasant and enjoyable.

The mission conference was advertised to convene on the morning of December 25, but several days before this the brethren and sisters from various points of the mission began to assemble, among whom was our esteemed coworker, C. A. Butterworth. We were very pleased to meet him and especially to find his health much improved, also Edwin Nixon whom we knew in Manchester, England. We received a hearty greeting from all of the Saints, many being in suspense and anxiety because of the news that we would be unable to land in the country.

The conference came to a close last evening. All of the services including the prayer and preaching meetings, the various programs consisting of musical items, elocution and addresses have been of the very highest order. The priesthood meetings of which several were held, were among the most enjoyable and profitable of all the sessions.

The general feeling is that the conference has been a source of encouragement and blessing to all who have taken part. Some clouds which have been hovering low for some time have been dispelled. Some wounds have been healed, and some gaps have been closed up, so that the future for the mission is bright with promise and all have been stimulated to greater activities, many enjoying a greater vision of the church and her great mission. It was a great pleasure to witness the unity and good will exhibited by the Saints without exception.

The splendid greetings given to Brother Hanson were strong testimony of the good work which had been done on his previous visit, winning for him the high esteem of the people.

The feature of the conference which impressed me the most was the splendid array of young men and women, who in the several departments of the work, exhibited talents of exceptional quality. In the musical programs some ambitious numbers were rendered not only with fine enthusiasm but with delicacy of interpretation, showing at once sympathetic interpretation by the leader and heartfelt interest in the work by the performers.

The missionaries are largely young men still on the sunny side of their fortieth year whose reports were expressive of their devoted service, and intelligent application of same, and their desire to do their very best and take every opportunity to improve their efficiency.

We heard no complaint of hardship, or sacrifice, or suffering, or disappointment, though in the very nature of things all have endured these common experiences.

We hope to begin our tour through the Island Commonwealth in the course of two or three weeks and become acquainted with the actual problems of these men as well as the opportunities the field affords so that at the conclusion of the investigation we may be able to develop a program which will bring the activities of the church in this country into more intimate unity with the church in the States.

The Sunday afternoon sacrament and prayer service was of exceptional quality, and in this service Brother A. W. Craig, whose call to the office of bishop was approved two years ago, was ordained under the hands of Brethren Butterworth and Hanson, the writer voicing the prayer.

To those of our friends who may be interested, we wish to say that our address while in Australia will be care 65, Nelson Street, Rozelle, Sydney. We shall appreciate letters as it seems to be a long way home, and so far news appears very sparse and letters very few.

It would take too long a letter for publication to tell at this time our impressions concerning the country and will leave this for some future time. It seems strange to us at this Christmas time to move in mid-summer weather among the crowds of people clothed in white and ourselves perspiring though clad only in palm beach suits, while we remember in the home land there will be frost and ice and snow and people will hug the radiators with a fervency that shows something more than ordinary affection. We find that Santa Claus is as welcome in Australia as in the United States of America and seems to bestow his favors upon the antipodeans as lavishly as he does upon those of the northern hemisphere.

We regret to find that so far the Australian people have not seen fit to recognize in strong drink the national enemy which robs his victims of health, virtue and spiritual power, and reduces its dupes to a pathetic state of ineptitude, filling the purlieus and haunts where it reigns with poverty, tragedy and crime. We could not help but feel glad that America had set the example to the world at large, and deported this enemy from the country. A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year are impossible of realization wherever such an evil is nurtured.

To all of our friends we extend a hearty greeting, and pray that under the blessing of God the New Year may bring to the church militant greater and bigger events, and to us encouragement, satisfaction and contentment.

Last evening we had the pleasure of attending the closing session of the Woman's Auxiliary of the mission, and found that the days' program had been of the highest order and enjoyed by all those who had been privileged to attend. Brethren Hanson, Haworth and the writer made addresses in the evening meeting, when the church was filled with a fine congregation. The work of the sisters being received very sympathetically.

We hope that under the leadership of the sister who arranged the program this year, that the work will spread through each district and branch.

Altogether the conference work impressed us as being comparable with anything we have been privileged to enjoy in the home land.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

From Icy Streets to Orange Groves

With typical missionary work en route, where some good testimonies were borne.

Editors Herald: On January 23, Mrs. Yates, two of our children and I, stepped from the ice-covered streets of Sedalia, Missouri, aboard a westbound train, and on the 26th, disembarked among the verdant gardens and orange groves of the Phoenix Valley. The sudden change from a cold climate to a warm one in the dead of winter, the great difference between the barren winter landscape and the green gardens and palms make it seem almost like the story of Aladdin and his magic lamp.

The wonderful inspiration by which the Prophet Daniel was able so many hundred years ago to penetrate the future, is well exemplified in the text: "At the time of the end, many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." As the great power horse of iron, and steel, and steam, sped our coaches across the miles during the day, and flashed us rumbling through the night, past towns and cities and mountains, we thought of Daniel's word of prophecy, and wondered how men who read those things can doubt the word of the Lord.

Wife has a fine faculty wherever she may be, of finding out, "who's who and why" and we were not many hours out of Kansas City till she had found a lady from Oklahoma who is a reader of the Ensign, though not a member of the church, and was acquainted with the name of the writer through her reading; and who expressed the desire that she may unite with the church when settled in her new location in the west.

It was of course pleasant to find that among supposed strangers, were acquaintances, (plural in number, for others were discovered by that good wife of mine) and persons whose interests were favorable to the same gospel cause that claims our own interest.

One lady whom we met had been a former resident of Lamoni, Iowa, having been a teacher in the schools there. Her name was Bell Randall, but is now Mrs. Evans. Her husband was with her. She is a Methodist, and has nothing but good words for the Lamoni Saints, naming many of our people there, and making mention of their worthy qualities. This lady stated concerning her observation of the life of our late President Joseph Smith, who resided in Lamoni while she was there, that although her religious belief was not in accord with that of Joseph Smith, yet she considered him one of the best men she ever knew.

She and her husband have recently sold their property in Arkansas, and are locating in California for Mr. Evans's health. He is a member of the Baptist church, but told me he could not indorse some things taught by that church, and that his real preference was the Latter Day Saint faith, but that circumstances had drawn him into the church which seemed convenient.

Gospel conversation being contagious, we soon found another lady in the same coach who gave the following testimony to us and to the circle of friends.

Said she knew some little of the faith of the Latter Day Saints, knew the difference between the Reorganized church and the Brighamites, etc. Then she went on to say that she at one time had a sick child which was given up by the doctors to die, and that an elder of this church came in and administered to the child and that it was healed within half an hour. This testimony was entirely unsolicited, and was volunteered in all earnestness and sincerity.

So having had these gospel talks along the way, the occasion was very fitting for the regular gospel service which we engaged in with singing and prayer and preaching to all the people in the coach on Sunday afternoon as the train was speeding over the desert, barren, rocky, wastes of western New Mexico and northeastern Arizona on the Santa Fe line. Two other preachers spoke, making three sermons in all, and our preaching was well received by all in the coach except a few who were engaged in card playing who did not seem to like to have their game disturbed, but who could do little else than merely pretend to play their game, while they were really listening to the preaching.

Our service closed just as we were approaching the base of the San Francisco peaks and entering the pine lumbering city of Flagstaff, Arizona.

We are sure that this day of travel was well spent, and that inasmuch as the words of truth are prolific in their very nature, and contain the embryo of spiritual life no such words are ever entirely lost, and will not return void unto the Lord, who indites the expression of his truth.

Arriving in Phoenix the capital city, now grown to the population of 40,000 inhabitants, we learn that the gospel work, practically pioneered by a woman, (Sister C. M. Sturges) seconded by her daughter Elva, who is the very likeness of her mother in beauty of character as well as personality, and supported by such good people as Sister Mary Putman, who is also a charter member of the branch, is still making progress.

Mr. Sturgess, who is not identified with the church, has always honorably sustained his wife and daughter in all their church activities, and commands the highest esteem of all who know him; and will doubtless be credited by the Lord for all his kind and generous works.

Some of the ministry who prior to our appointment to this State in 1914, were Elders W. S. Pender, Alvin Knisley, J. E. Vanderwood, W. H. Mannering and others.

In the spring of 1918 we were called to labor in the Holden Stake and Brother A. True Gray was called to the eldership, ordained by the authority of Apostle J. F. Curtis, and was elected president of the Phoenix Branch. This position Brother Gray has to the present time, being energetic, zealous, and constant in the duties of the office.

The Branch membership has increased with the growth of the city, and now the Saints have a new church building in the course of construction.

Brother Gray and Brother Snell being builders by profession, make a splendid team for pushing the work of building a church; and if all the Saints continue their efforts as at present, it will not be very long till they will have their new church ready to occupy.

Phoenix also has a lively Sunday school, superintended at present by Brother J. E. Duckett, who with his family has dwelt here for a number of years. Young Brother Doss is President of the Religio, and, taking the sum of all these church activities into account, we think this band of faithful workers, many of whom I cannot mention in this letter without making it to lengthy, are to be congratulated upon the measure of success attained in the face of such difficulties as usually beset the progress of the work of righteousness in the earth.

With greetings on behalf of the Phoenix Branch, the Olive Sunday school, and with Cactus Religio, to all the household of faith, Yours sincerely,

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

JAMES E. YATES.

In the fall of 1620 the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock—what is now Massachusetts. The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has asked that November 28, 1920, be observed as Mayflower Universal Bible Day. This is principally in honor of the publication of the Bible, and its declaration throughout the world. The American Bible Society has been in existence for over 100 years, and has published the Bible in 150 different languages and dialects. Literature for the day, and information in full, will be furnished by the American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York City.

Willful Waste the Same as Murder

We ought to feel proud of the official publication of our church. It is read with real interest every week, and has been a companion to the writer for the last seventeen years.

I am glad that our Presiding Bishop has published short articles on the financial law, of which, we as Latter Day Saints, ought to be very careful in carrying out to the full extent. This is not a time for wasting money as there are so many chances for doing good with it in the world. To the writer's mind, willful waste is nothing short of murder, whether it is done by us as a people or as single individuals. At the present time there are ten million people on the verge of starvation in the famine countries of Europe. Think of the lives that could be saved by the food which could be bought, with the money that is wasted in this country. According to recent statistics millionaires are increasing at the rate of over 2,000 per year, here in the United States. Will not we hasten the death of innocent babes, and others if we withhold that with which we can feed them?

To-day, both capitalist and working man think only of themselves. I heard only to-day a man express his opinion to the effect that it was wrong to help those starving people.

As a deacon of this church I am trying to call our people to the seriousness of wasting our surplus. The time is near at hand when Zion will need to be redeemed and that will take considerable capital. Let us pay our tithing and turn over our surplus to the bishop as the Lord has commanded us. That is not a duty, but a privilege, which God has allowed us to carry out. If we do not do that, we are no better than the churches of the world. Just as surely will we fall when she falls.

Our late president, Joseph Smith, received in revelation in which it is stated that we should not engage in extravagance or build expensive churches or other buildings which would cause unnecessary debts to be contracted.

Let us obey the precept of our Lord which says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." There is something in those words which should cause us to do some deep thinking, thereby controlling our actions. EDWARD DORSETT.

Indorses Moving Pictures

I am glad that the Saints of Independence have taken such a move. It signifies that they are trying to enlighten and educate themselves to greater extent and in an honorable manner.

The moving picture machine is an efficient instrument in propagating a more thorough knowledge of religion or anything that is beneficial for the welfare of the community. Of course there are films that could and may be used as a detriment to our cause, but the same is true of a testimony in a prayer meeting. After all anything is good only when in harmony with the great purpose in view.

As people require more than faith to be saved we require more than preaching on our bill of fare for propagating this work in the most efficient and systematic manner.—(A brother from Canada.)

A certain coal dealer in Montana allowed himself a margin of $4.50 for handling, hauling, dumping, or unloading, losses and net profits. This doubtless included two handlings, hauling to his yard, then from his yard to the consumer. The Chamber of Commerce complained on account of the high price charged and there developed the wide margin he had allowed himself. The matter was then turned over to the United States district attorney, who gave him the alternative of refunding $1.80 on every ton of coal so far sold or being prosecuted for profiteering. He chose the former course.

In order to keep down the expense of administration, we note the statement that there are no counties in Saskatchewan or any of the Canadian Northwest. There are electoral districts, and certain boundaries for administration purposes, but no counties, all the business being handled at the general headquarters.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

Reports from New York state that fewer are asking charity this year, and the result is ascribed to prohibition and the general prosperity. Bird S. Coler, the commissioner of public charity ascribes the decrease in equal measure to these two factors. He states he had not favored prohibition, but the figures tell the story.

The State of Kansas has no public debt, but the State of Wyoming bids fair to be a State without taxation. While other States have sold or given away their land, Wyoming has held hundreds of thousands of acres of public land on which oil has now been discovered. The oil lands are leased, as would be by any other land owner, and will doubtless in the end make several oil men wealthy. But in the meantime the State itself is receiving two dollars a minute, with prospects of this amount increasing.

A surprising statement in the recent National Geographic Society Bulletin is that fifty separate dialects are spoken in Mexico. The differences of race and speech are much larger than has usually been supposed.

As stated a month ago, the vote of the colleges and universities, including members of the student body and of the faculty, on the question of the treaty of peace and league of nations, is of great significance. Last week the figures were given for Graceland College, and there was posted on the college board the figures for some of the colleges in Iowa. We learn now that out of 29,910 votes, through the United States only 3,163 or less than one ninth and only a little more than one tenth were in favor of total rejection. The Lodge reservations fared somewhat better, but they were also decisively beaten, receiving 6,563 votes. There were 9,002 votes in favor of unqualified ratification, and 11,102 in favor of a compromise.

J. W. Osborn, Chief of the Academic Division of the Bureau of Education for the Philippine Islands states that 700,000 children are attending school there. This is about one half the number in the islands between six and eighteen years of age, but all that can be cared for with present facilities. George N. Briggs, now president of Graceland College, was instrumental in establishing the school work there.

The Des Moines Register has a full page ad of the American Farm Bureau Federation. It tells of the middle man paying the farmer one dollar for a bushel of potatoes, then the retailer selling it to the consumer for $3. The middle space is black. The question is, what happened in the dark? This is one of the gravest questions confronting us, the great disproportion between the amount paid the producer and the amount paid by the consumer for farm products and staples.

During the week of February 14-22 the Protestant Churches of America plan to secure ten million stewardship pledges from their members. The plan is rather simple: the member is to recognize God as the owner of that which he holds, therefore he must return a definite amount to the church, preferably a tenth of the total income.

Of the fifteen States yet to vote on national woman suffrage, eight must favor the measure or it will fail. But so far 28 have stood in favor of woman's right, and 5 against, namely: Georgia, Virginia, Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Nevada is the latest to indorse, the senate being unanimous, and the assembly with but one adverse.

The Intercollegiate Poll of students and faculty on the Treaty of Peace and League of Nations in 418 colleges showed a total of 158,078 votes cast, divided as follows: For unqualified ratification, 48,232, 30.5%; against ratification, 13,933, 8.8%; for the Lodge reservations, 27, 970, 17.7%; for complete reservations, 81,494, 51%; for the Knox proposal separating the Treaty and League covenant, 6,449, 4.1%. It is evident that some must have voted for two propositions, as the total vote is 171,627. The very heavy vote for ratifications is noteworthy.

Zionists are preparing for immediate work on the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, the foundation stone of which has already been laid on Mount Scopus. A beginning is to be made with a Hebrew institute and a general course in arts. Plans for extensive buildings are formulated and will be published shortly.

Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, of the United States, has served notice of resignation on March 1, after having served in public office for twenty-one years. Our readers will be especially interested in the character of the successor in this office, he having to do with the policies and management of the Indian question.

Cooperative mercantile projects among the ranks of organized labor are becoming more and more popular. The success of the American Brotherhoods of Trainmen has inspired others to unite their forces along the same line. Now the labor unions of Lynn, Massachusetts, a part of greater Boston, have adopted resolutions favoring the establishment of a bank to be owned and controlled by organized labor.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Richmond Victoria, Australia. The branch in this place is progressing well in a number of ways. The church debt has been reduced from three hundred pounds to about sixty in two years, with about thirty spent in renovations. Two things have contributed to this: annual "Consecration Day," and annual "Sale of work," the latter by the Woman's Auxiliary, which realized nearly sixty pounds. Four have been added by baptism and good prospects ahead. A. W. Craig is now bishop, ordained in Sydney during December. Brethren Rush-ton and Hanson were at the conference and both greatly appreciated. The former, in his initial visit, has made a great impression on the Saints.

Brooklyn, New York. Pastor C. H. Rich spent the holidays with his family in Davenport, Iowa. Visitors of late have been B. R. McGuire, Brother Bullard and C. Edward Miller. Zion and round table discussions on tithing and gathering were discussed.

First Columbus, Ohio. The Second Columbus Branch are welcome guests during the winter months, they having sold their church and purchased a lot where they expect to erect an up-to-date brick structure in the spring. The lot is in a promising location, and under the leadership of their enterprising and wideawake pastor, High Priest H. E. French. The Saints of the Second Branch are looking forward to a bright future. In the meantime the Saints are enjoying a sort of reunion, finding pleasure in recalling the days only a few years ago when all the Saints in Columbus, a mere handful, met in a small hall. Truly the work in Columbus has prospered in the last twelve years. The First Branch meet in their newly dedicated church at Medary and Thompkins. This building is a monument to the zeal and enterprise of Elder Arthur Allen, as well as the Saints of Columbus. The president is the capable pastor Elder C. W. Clark. A series of meetings began on the 18th and will continue till February 8. Elder J. A. Davis has been secured and the meetings well advertised, resulting in a good attendance of nonmembers.

Pontiac, Michigan. A box social was given not long ago under auspices of the Woman's Department. In the past year they have paid $800 to the church building fund.

Montrose, Iowa. Elder P. R. Burton, special missionary to the Nauvoo District, just closed a very successful two weeks' meeting at this place. Brother Burton's very strong personality gains for him friends among every one with whom he comes in contact. There were no baptisms at this time, but we feel sure that he has sown seed which with his very efficient "follow-up" method will bear fruit. Not only did the town people learn about our gospel but the Saints of Montrose were very much edified and strengthened through his very thorough defense of its principles and the men who are at its head. Elder Layton, who has charge of the church property at Nauvoo, rendered very good service in these meetings, assisting Brother Burton at times. We feel proud to be associated with men of such character, and know that the church is receiving invaluable service, both along spiritual and material lines, through the efforts of Brother Burton and Layton in Nauvoo. Brother Layton is a splendid carpenter, and while not spreading the gospel message to the hundreds who come to visit the historical places at Nauvoo, he is working hard to repair the buildings, which he has been able to reclaim from their years of neglect. We hope they both will be returned to us next year.

Dallas, Texas. The branch continues to progress. The Saints who move into the community are soon at work with the others, enjoying the privilege. Any others will be welcome. H. H. Dann is the new branch president, and his methods appreciated. The branch enjoyed the discourses of H. C. Smith, of Independence, for about three months. Though he is eighty-three years of age, he preached some powerful discourses. Gospel literature work, under the direction of Mrs. J. N. Nicoll is doing much to inform the people of our work. The priesthood take turns occupying. The Sunday school, with D. N. Fuller, as superintendent, is doing nicely.

Toledo, Ohio. Northwestern Ohio conference met here January 31 and February 1. Good attendance, especially from the new members of Bradman. Sylvania also had a good crowd. Sunday morning the gifts were manifest. An interesting feature of the conference was in the talk by F. G. Pitt on his trip through Palestine. We have lost some active members recently, Brother and Sister Ulrich, and Brother and Sister Guy Mintun, the latter having moved to Kansas City.

Collins, Colorado.—We have a membership of 85 with an average attendance of 60 or 65. We are fully organized and the usual meetings held. We have been favored by many visits from the ministry in the three years since we have commenced the church work here. We are situated at the corner of Meldrum and Magnolia Streets and are making an effort to purchase a church of our own. We extend an invitation to all Saints passing through our city to worship with us. Collins is between 70 and 80 miles north of Denver on the Denver and Rio Grande Railway.

Peoria, Illinois. The branch has a membership of 49, with about 30 attending regularly. We have a fine Sunday school, and in the evening a study class with Sister M. E. Gillin as teacher. The sisters of the Auxiliary have taken up the relief and service department. Each month a social gathering is had, called the "social unity club" meeting at the different homes. There are not enough of the young people to carry it on, so all ages help. Games are played and a social time enjoyed. C. I. Carpenter, district president, visited one Sunday and encouraged us, but was called home on account of sickness in the Moline Branch.

Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania. A Sunday school has been organized and since we have been isolated so long, a cordial invitation is extended to those who would like to become a part of our community. There is a population of about 20,000 and plenty of work for all. The correspondent is Emmett B. Simpson, age nineteen, superintendent of the Sunday school, and will do all he can to help those who desire it to get work. Address West Fifteenth Street.

Black River Falls, Wisconsin. About eight years ago there were two members here, but now there are some thirty, made up by baptisms and removals from other places. Four years ago a branch was organized with Brother Lewis Updike priest, and Horace Scafe teacher. Last November Irving Bowen was ordained elder and is now president of the branch. We have a neat church about five and a half miles north of town.

Toronto, Ontario.—“The Old Jerusalem gospel” drew a large audience to the Allen on the 8th. T. W. Williams gave one of the finest dissertations on faith we have ever listened to. “Faith is a consecration to an ideal, regardless of consequences,” was one of the speaker’s definitions of that principle. A notice of appeal has been registered in the McGuire vs. Evans lawsuit, and Israel Smith is again on the job. Better luck this time. Judge Falconbridge who sat in judgment on the case died Sunday morning of influenza complications. We have 20,000 cases of influenza.

Toronto, Ontario.—[Delayed in office.] Branch President, A. F. McLean, delivered a logical address on the 1st on “Rebaptism.” “Christ said concerning those who had been cut off from the church, ‘Let them be to thee as the heathen and the publican.’ How do the heathen and the publican enter the church? Through the door of baptism,” said Brother McLean. Rebaptism is a much-mooted question in the Toronto Branch. A goodly number gathered for the evening service at the Allen, to learn from Elder T. W. Williams “Which is the true church.” “If the enemy of souls wished to throw an anesthetic into the world to benumb the sense of man, he could not choose one more effective than, ‘It does not matter to what church you belong,’” was one of Brother Williams’s remarks. At our next quarterly business meeting the advisability of financing our branch on the budget system will be considered.

CHURCH NEWS

In The Ottawa Journal (Ontario) for February 7, Elder Philemon Pement has an extensive, two-column reply to an attack on our church by Elder Jense, of Utah. It is evidently paid space, but it is well located and right to the point. We believe it is a good investment to spend money for newspaper space, when it is used wisely.

“I would like the Saints to pray for my husband, that the Lord may heal him, if it is his will.”—Mrs. S. W. Howell, Malin, Oregon.

Christmas Offering. February 20, 1919 to January 31, 1920, $75,673.69. January 31, 1920 to February 7, 1920, $4,607.94, total $80,281.63. The returns of the past week increase our hope that last year’s record breaking offering will be surpassed. Many schools are yet to be heard from, including the majority of those in Canada, who are sending their offerings to their bishops’ agents in order to avoid payment of the heavy rate of exchange. This will delay announcement of the total receipts. All are urged to turn in their offerings by the fifteenth of this month. Hopefully yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

A letter from William Shaub, Ray, Indiana, reports death of George A. Smith, February 3. He was for some years member of standing high council and at death president of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District.

On the evening of the 9th Sister Birdie Sterritt, of Independence, died of pneumonia. She was a graduate of the 1919 class in nursing at the Independence Sanitarium.

“Herbert Spencer Salisbury has accepted an appointment as assistant in the department of geology and entered upon his duties here this week. Mr. Salisbury did graduate work in geology at the University of Illinois and has a broad practical experience in field work, both in the mining districts of New Mexico and in the oil fields of Oklahoma. His headquarters for the past few years have been in Kansas City, Missouri, where he has represented two large petroleum companies in geological work. In New Mexico he was representative for the Calumet-New Mexico Mining Company. He comes here from his home at Independence, Missouri.—The Daily Bulletin, College Station, Texas.

From report of W. J. Haworth, mission historian, Australian Mission, to the church historian: “Since last report the mission has passed through some trying experiences. Notably, the influenza epidemic may be mentioned. This entailed restrictions applicable alike to our individual lives and our public gatherings. For some time meetings of any character were prohibited in the state of New South Wales, but were, later on, permitted in the open air. Masking was resorted to in the church in Victoria and for a time also in New South Wales, Street services had to be abandoned during the period. Though some of our members in the mission contracted the disease, fatal results did not follow in more than one or two cases. . . . The mission has, during the year, been under the presidency of Apostle Butterworth, who has endeavored efficiently to discharge his onerous duties under the trials incident to severe illness and other discouraging circumstances.”

“I wish you would mention that we are living on Second Street, near Eighth Avenue, Yuma, Arizona, and if there are any Saints near would like to get in touch with them.”—A. M. Taylor.

“I am feeling well and doing what I can to advance the angel’s message. I have tried the latter-day message by every truth I have been able to know, and it has stood the test and grows brighter every day.”—M. M. Turpen, Pensacola, Florida.

From Sister Julia Roos of Switzerland we learn that traveling on the trains in Germany is still quite dangerous. They have gone for a visit into Germany, driving in, both for safety and because it gives them an opportunity to teach by the way. She states that the picture of the Prophet Joseph Smith is hung in the dining room of the hotel where they are, and she expects soon to have it in many vicarages. She hopes that they will soon admit that it was his task to restore (Acts 3: 21) and fulfill the work announced by Luther to be accomplished by some one who would follow him, as he (Luther) could only be a way prepared.

R. C. Smith and David Hopkins, both attending the university at Iowa City, have been admitted to the Commerce Club of the city in special consideration of their work in the school. They are both from Graceland College, taking junior work this year.

R. C. Shultz, writing from South Brisbane, Queensland, Australia says that about seven were baptized the last half of 1919 with some marriages. He believed President Smith did a good work for the church in his trip to Washington regarding passports. He recalls that in 1913 Apostle Griffiths when in that country said peace should be taken from the earth which has been literally fulfilled.

A letter from Brother Hubert Case says he has arranged with Brethren Griffiths and Greene for a series of services among the Indians in Oklahoma from the 17th to the 23d. Prospects are good for the work.

The Coming Sunday School Convention.

At the next General Conference the time granted to the various auxiliaries, is based on the average length of conference. If the conference should be prolonged, more time will be available, if needed.

Two forenoons for business and one night program in the main building has been allotted to the Sunday school. In addition, we have been granted a separate room near by in which to make an exhibit of Sunday school supplies and hand work from beginner, primary and junior departments. Here we will have daily consultations for the workers who wish to meet the general officers and delegates from other states. We want to make it a “clearing house” of practical experience. These privileges will be found on the historic old Temple Lot and will be just as profitable as the delegates wish to make it.

Meet us at the Temple Lot.

G. R. WELLS,
Superintendent.

The Lord in the Doctrine and Covenants forbids speculation. We are also commanded to love our brother as ourself. Working under this, according to the plan of Zion, every man will receive a just remuneration for his labor, neither more nor less.

Quorum Notices

First Quorum of Priests of the Eastern Michigan District will meet during conventions at Port Huron, February 21 and 22. All members of the quorum urgently requested to be present. Some very important business, and as we will not be able to meet again until the fall conference we hope to see a good representation. Fred W. Cadow, secretary and treasurer, 418 Huron Street, Port Huron, Michigan.

The Presidency

Credential Committee. Notice is hereby given of the appointment of F. A. Russell, C. I. Carpenter and P. G. Fairbanks to serve as credential committee for the coming General Conference, subject to approval by the conference.

On account of ill health Elder Nelson Wilson has resigned as president of the Winnipeg District, and Elder W. B.

Richards has been appointed in his stead for the balance of the term. Those concerned please take notice.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

The recent death of Elder George A. Smith of Ray, Indiana, has made vacant the office of district president of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. After proper consultation, notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder F. F. Wipper to fill the vacancy until the convening of the next district conference.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
For the First Presidency.

The Bishopric

Eastern Oklahoma District. Since the resignation of Bishop Short, this district has been without a Bishop's agent.

We have succeeded, however, in arranging with Brother B. F. Brown, Fort Towson, Oklahoma, to act in this capacity. He enters into the work willingly and cheerfully and we solicit for him the undivided support of the Saints of that district, feeling that mutual benefits and blessings will flow not only to the giver but to him who stands as the agent for the Lord's storehouse in this part of his moral vineyard. The Master has said that we are laborers together with him for the accomplishment of his purposes, and as we move forward keeping his commandments we may rest assured that his fatherly hand may be over us for good. Fraternaly,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Department of Statistics

To All Branch Clerks. We wish to urge all branch clerks who have not yet done so to give immediate attention to the work of making up their new loose-leaf branch records. Please see to it that all names entered in your old record, which are not marked dead, removed or expelled, are copied to the new pages and your old record sent to this department at earliest possible date. After names are all copied, please destroy any remaining individual pages. We send all new pages ready to file. If old record is sent by mail, first-class postage is required. Express is usually cheaper.

Transfers

In asking change of enrollment, transfer requests should always be used. Send direct to this department, not to some other branch. Branch clerks in preparing these requests should always be certain that request has approval of branch president. Do not send in a "request" without giving the new address of the one concerned. We must have that. At present but two kinds of transfers are acceptable, i. e., from one branch to another; from a branch to the "unknown" group of names. Many branch clerks find names on their record, of people living far from any branch. Please retain these just a little while longer. Provision will soon be made for handling such names and notice of the plan will be published.

Branch Reports

The needs of the district officials and the desires of those concerned should guide the branch clerk in preparing a report for the district conference. Until blank forms for this purpose are in hand, we suggest the following items be included: number gained by baptism; by transfer; total gains; number lost by death, transfer or expulsion; total loss; net gain or loss; and present enrollment.

We greatly appreciate the cooperation given in our effort to improve the work in this department, and our reason for publishing this notice is that we want every branch clerk to understand that the success and real value of this department depends in a very large measure upon your promptness and carefulness. Now, clerks, will you please speed up a bit and get your branch books in, that ye may check up with our records? Watch the church papers for announcements.

F. A. RUSSELL, Recorder.

Notice of Proposed Amendments to Religio Constitution

Due notice is hereby given that at the next convention of the Religio which will be held during the sessions of the general conference at Independence, Missouri, commencing April 6, 1920 amendments will be proposed and considered dealing with such revision in the constitution as will conform to the action of the convention in adopting the report of the coordinating committee. It is also desired to further extend the work of coordination so as to make of the Religio a department of church work in fact as well as in name.

The amendments are so comprehensive and numerous that it will be impractical to publish in full. A mere statement of their import is sufficient to conform to the spirit of the constitution. The amendments will embrace a change in the name of the organization; change in the title of the leading officers in general, district, and local organizations; dispensing with all substitution in the various departments of the church; incorporation of our constitution into the Rules of Order of the church and providing for the transaction of all business relating to the department in the business sessions of either the general or district conferences or local church business meetings. Respectfully submitted,

T. W. WILLIAMS,
General Superintendent of the Religio Department.

About Normal Diplomas Overdue

We have had many requests from normal superintendents and teachers of classes for diplomas long since due. This department is now a part of the extension work of Graceland College. Every student who passed in the examination can have certificate showing work done in any division of the course, or diploma if the course was finished, if the one conducting examination will write to the college certifying the name of student, grades made, section of the course, and time of examination if possible. Inclose twenty-five cents for each one and give address to which the certificate or diploma shall be sent.

Address Garceland College, Normal Division, Extension Department, Lamoni, Iowa.

On behalf of Sunday school and Religio.

Wanted: Help to Save the Boys

An Open Letter to Religio Workers and Leaders of the Boy Movement Throughout the Church.

Dear Religians: No doubt you have already been informed that the Religio is planning to hold an exposition at Independence, Missouri, during the coming General Conference. Notices which we have received recently lead us to infer that this will be by far the most important event in the history of the Religio. No effort has been spared to make this plan a success. Are you ready to boost?

Those of you who are especially interested in the boy movement will be glad to know that one entire floor of the Battery building in Independence has been given over to the boys. The question immediately arises can we use this space profitably? The answer depends upon us. Are you willing to help? If so, here is something that you can do immediately:

1. See to it that your district Religio elects a second vice president to have charge of the Boy Scout Movement in your district.

2. See to it that your local Religio elects a second vice president for the same purpose.

3. Report the name of such officers, together with the name of your district or local immediately to the general director of the boy movement.

4. Encourage the organization of Boy Scout troops wherever possible.

5. Report the name and addresses of scoutmasters having charge of Latter Day Saint troops.

It has been very difficult for the general director to keep in touch with the progress of the boy movement throughout the church, hence this open letter.

We are very anxious to make a good showing at the Religio exposition. This cannot be done when our reports are at best very incomplete.

If each reader of this letter who has any information about the boy movement in his locality or district would take the trouble to drop the undersigned a card or letter much better results will be secured.

We are especially desirous of securing at this time the name and address of every Latter Day Saint scoutmaster throughout the church.

If you are really anxious to help save the boys of the church please sit down immediately and drop a letter to F. M. McDowell, General Director of the Boy Movement, Lamoni, Iowa.

January Journal of History Wanted

The thrift train is now leaving for the land of success - Will you climb on?

Industry and Thrift are the Watchwords of Temporal Zion!

There is no royal road to prosperity. By work alone can wealth be created and only by thrift can it be accumulated. This is decreed by the law of life and by the law of the Lord. It is also decreed that the idler shall not have place in Zion, so Zion is designed for workers, and work is the portion of those who would share there-in.

The task of the Church is a Herculean task, and only consecrated hearts and willing hands can achieve it. In the midst of a world clamoring for short hours and long pay; for many luxuries and little production; for maximum return and minimum output, in the midst of such a world we must rally our forces, and build Zion.

We must build Zion, and Zion means a community where every man puts to with all his might and where the common ideal is service and not gain; we must organize a people that can demonstrate the principles of Christ so visibly that their light may be as a light set upon a hill and their solution of the social and economic problems that beset the entire world may be sought by men everywhere as the remedy of untoward conditions. Zion must translate all our high ideals into practical reality.

And Zion must be built by human hands and human wills. God can inspire, God can protect, but the task itself is ours. Wherever you are, your heart is set on Zion and you will have part in her building.

Will you join hands with your brethren in the mighty task? Will you produce and will you save that there may be wherewith in the Lord's storehouse to accomplish his work?

Revelation

It is interesting to note from our study of ancient records that humanity has believed in prophecy and revelations from God from a remote period.

In the Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics, under the title "Bible" this fact of a belief in revelation is not only set forth, but also that the revelations were submitted to the people in those early days, for their acceptance or rejection. Under the Mosaic law it was provided that at regular intervals the law be read, and that the people answer whether they will keep the law of God or not, and accept it for their guide.

When the law was lost, and was found, the king caused it to be read again in their hearing, and called for a vote of the people, and they accepted it. It was only in the Old Testament times when they found that no longer was the will of God being received by them, that the canon was closed.

Sunday, in the article above referred to, states that inspiration, the moving power of the Spirit of God, was the test, both among the Jews and among the early Christians. He also makes it plain that the early Christian church did not expect an end to revelation, or to the canon of Holy Scripture, and that they voted directly and indirectly upon these various communications. The test again for them was the degree of inspiration, and it was only when several hundred years had gone by (about three hundred), when nothing else of equal spiritual value had been received, that the canon was considered to be closed.

Sanday, in his "Christology—Ancient and Modern," in the last chapter, discusses this question of prophecy in ancient and in modern times. Even though we do not accept everything that he says, still he presents some excellent thoughts from the viewpoint of earnest Bible students of to-day.

In these latter times, again was the gift restored by God to man, the right of communication with him. Joseph Smith, as a lad, saw God in an open vision. Later an angel appeared to him. Still later he used at times the Urim and Thummim to receive revelations. After they were taken, he still continued to receive the inspiration of Almighty God.

That the church does not claim this privilege for him to the exclusion of all others may be seen from the last verse of the 67th section, though it is true that to him was given the right to receive revelations for the whole church. We also note the revelations given to Oliver Cowdery, giving him a similar right, though he was not to receive by way of commandment to the church. This was necessary to prevent extreme confusion. Every man has the right according to his responsibilities and duties.

The testimony of Orson Hyde, in the Times and Seasons, that the revelations must be presented to the quorums and then to the people, is of value, because it is a confession against interest; even though it was stated after the death of Joseph Smith, it is still against the interest of the church, with which he affiliated, and it was confirmed by the action of the general assembly, as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, accepting these revelations quorum by quorum, and then the assembly as a whole accepting.

We know the effect of divine inspiration in the life of Joseph Smith the martyr, and while he started as an ignorant boy, he became a well educated man before his death. We know the expression in the revelation to Oliver Cowdery is capable of misconstruction by those without experience. Revelation goes beyond that which one who has never experienced it can determine from those few words.

Joseph Smith made again the significant statement that he was not always a prophet, but only when acting under the inspiration of Almighty God. The fact that Oliver Cowdery was directed to study it out in his own mind indicates clearly that there is concentration of purpose and thought, and that in so reaching out, when the mind is most active, the Spirit of God bears witness to that which is true. It gives an illumination and increases the intelligence.

That it is beyond the intelligence of man is indicated in the first part of section 67. There were many learned men among them, yet not one could produce the equal to that which had been given by the Lord through Joseph Smith.

Coming to later times, in the Reorganization, our late President Joseph Smith expressed clearly his views, in quorum and at conference, and on other occasions, but never in a boastful spirit. In General Conference Minutes 1906, pages 919 and 920 is a statement already published and again published in SAINTS' HERALD, May 14, 1919. It will bear repetition, and so we again quote it:

"I never was taken in a trance: but the influence of revelation upon me has always been to quicken, to make vivid and clear. And my understanding of revelation as we have it, is that every man stands before God upon his individual responsibility, and his individuality never will be taken from him unless he himself consents to it. And if he does, he opens the avenues of his soul for the incoming of a spirit that will ruin him.

"I would like to repeat that so you will understand it. The inspiration of the gospel of the Son of God, and the inspiration of his Spirit quickens, revivifies, and puts a man nearer to the influences of life, nearer to his Maker and the Savior than in any other period or periods of his existence. And every man standing before God and receiving of this inspiration, whether it is in the stand, or wherever it may come, or upon what occasion, his increased vitality and vigor of life spiritually is before God and his identity, his individuality, will never, never be taken from him unless he willingly opens the gate to the incoming of other spirits. And if he does that he does it for his ruin."

That is not the only occasion, of course, on which he expressed himself.

As to the present head of the church, who has been acting as president of the high priesthood and of the whole church, and as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church, it is quite natural that during the lifetime of his father he should have refrained from making public declaration of his views, as that naturally rested with his father.

He has expressed himself very clearly on many different occasions, in print, and has, it is true, manifested a growing sense of devotion and consecration, and a constantly increasing degree of inspiration.

He has received many personal evidences for himself. We know that this was true at the time he completed his work at Graceland College. It was true when he entered the Presidency in 1902. It was true when he entered the mission work, and especially upon his return from Utah. It was true when he undertook and completed his work at the State University of Kansas. When he was at Clark University, he received a special degree of inspiration. He received added knowledge from the lectures he received there; in addition to that he received marked inspiration from his heavenly Father, and so declared plainly in private, and so intimated also in public. Later he made a clear statement at a stake conference in Independence, in October, 1918, which has already been set forth in the editorial columns of the HERALD and Ensign. Finally he expressed himself very plainly at Graceland College, during his lectures in January, 1920.

These are by no means his initial public statements, and by no means indicate a beginning. They represent the fruition of many years' experience (at least twenty to our knowledge.)

His broad education has not prevented his spiritual growth, as all who know him are aware, but has provided a wider foundation for his faith; because of his years of study, because of his earnest prayers, because of the sincere desire of his heart, and his belief in the absolute necessity of revelation to the church, and through the church to the world, as representing the very highest aspect of humanity.

To say this may seem to many unnecessary, and it is so in a sense. It is not offered in any way as a defense, but rather for the inspiration of our people, and is that which we have seen and do see through personal observation and experience.

It is offered also as to some young men and some young women the processes of education has brought an element of doubt. We hope that to them this assurance will be valuable. Having studied deeply for many years it has brought to this man, as well as to others, a tremendous, deep conviction, far beyond that which was possible before, of the reality and the truth of our religion that God does speak to us to-day and that his direction is essential to our success. S. A. B.

Spiritualism as a Moral Opiate

Reams of paper are being used in these days to spread the propaganda of spiritualism. Because such men as Sir Oliver Lodge and A. Conan Doyle insist that they have received evidence that the spirits of the departed live and communicate with relatives and friends here, great impetus is given the movement, and half of England is said to be seizing upon the cult with great avidity. Because half the families of England have lost some member in the war, the desire to communicate with the departed is a natural one, and it becomes a dominant note of national life.

We can sympathize with this yearning of humanity for some expression of immortality from beyond the vale, but when such a desire is developed to the exclusion of vital principles of human endeavor we feel to add our feeble voice to the great shout of warning lest it overshadow all else.

Invariably there comes a sort of smug satisfaction from such a belief with its circumstantial or real evidence to back it up, which shuts out everything else. Herein lies the danger. To believe in immortality is natural. To believe that the spirits of the departed are active and possibly at times close at hand is logical, but when those beliefs are made a full spiritual menu instead of a garnish for a salad, we are much concerned.

There is no need to deny spiritual manifestations. The evidences are strongly in favor of the fact that there are manifestations of some kind among these masses, else the testimony of strong, noble, men and women is valueless. We may well question some features of the manifestations and of the conclusions derived from them, but any believer in the Bible must admit that in all ages there have been spirits which have brought message of some kind to mortals on this sphere.

But we quote from a recent article by a Mark Sullivan in Collier's, which is a straight-out assertion from a journalist who knows he cannot say such things without proof to back them up:

"Another conclusion which can be accepted safely is that nowhere in all the voluminous and painstaking literature of psychic phenomena is there any unmistakable case of communication coming directly from a dead person. There is clairvoyance between the living, and telepathy between the living, both of them mysterious phenomena, and deserving of serious consideration, but nowhere is there any satisfactory record of a communication from a dead person."

Though we as members of an organization which for nearly a hundred years has preached latter-day revelation, have received them from God as a church and as individuals, any thoughtful person must know it is easy to abuse such privileges. Those who blindly and to the exclusion of the principles governing such manifestations plunge into such things often become the victims of spirits which are not from God who is a being of light and intelligence. Those spirits may be of an evil source, or merely of man, but always harmful when they displace the true and mislead the unwary.

For weeks we have had in mind the writing on this subject, and when just ready to crystalize it the article by Mr. Sullivan, quoted from above, came to our desk, and he is saying so many of the things we wanted to say, that we are going to bring him in, now and then, and let him speak. Here is the real basis of our objection to spiritualism in his words:

"It is spiritualism, but it is not spiritual. Its devotees speak of it as a religion, and think of themselves as having been through a religious experience when they have embraced it; but embracing spiritualism is a long way from any true religious experience of the sort that is likely to do much good to the world in its present need."

His argument that the world needs a definite spiritual movement that involves self-sacrifice and self-discipline rather than self-indulgence is very pointed:

"This spread of spiritualism throughout England has one true and legitimate characteristic of the formal religions: it does affirm and even emphasize belief in a future life. But that is about as far as it goes toward religion, and that standing alone, is not going very far. Even the most primitive forms of religion among the savages include that. Seen truly, and standing alone, spiritualism, in its more common form—the form in which all cruder minds cling to it—is a kind of self-indulgence. The thing which at the moment you want more than you want anything else is to hear from your dead, and so you embrace a cult which promises to give you that. That is very far from the thing that I am talking about as a religious revival, or some other form of spiritual movement, following the war.

"What I have in mind is a movement which would call out and coordinate and give expression to the common good in man, a movement of self-discipline and self-sacrifice, not of self-indulgence.

"If this world is to get any benefit from the war in the shape of a spiritual phenomenon, it must come as a movement which calls for the giving by the individual of something to this world, not the receiving of something from another world regardless of effort or deserving on the part of the individual."

From the devotees of this movement we do not find the highest expressions of religious impulse. The self-satisfaction felt seems to overshadow all else. Sullivan says: "What the world calls for just now is moral energy, and indulgence in spiritualism may often be a kind of moral opiate." On the other hand, from such men as H. G. Wells, whose mind is also groping after the Infinite, we are indebted for the following, as quoted by the same author:

"Perhaps the kingdom of God is nearer than we suppose; perhaps it needs but the faith and courage of a few, and it may be that we may even live to see the dawning of his kingdom; even—who knows?—the sunrise. . . Let us pledge ourselves to service; let us set ourselves with all our minds and all our hearts to the perfecting and working out of the methods of democracy."

From all these human yearnings after God we may expect something to come. The line of cleavage between the church of God and the church of the Devil may become more sharply drawn, and the division of a different character than we had supposed.

With the development of our economic plan whereby we can offer not only spiritual solace but industrial satisfaction, we may hope to offer to an honest-hearted minority something of transcendent value beside which the pettiness of mere table rappings and mediumistic seances will be as child's play.

The glimpses that have been given to a number of our members, whereby the situation in the other life were revealed, have all been satisfactory. Activity, preparation for the constantly arriving spirits, special assignments of duty, have all been noted. We may well be satisfied over their state but be concerned over our own, and our present responsibilities. And we who have been given these assurances should accept the responsibility of exerting a sane, wholesome, positive influence regarding spiritual manifestations and the whole gospel plan which they affect.

E. D. MOORE.

Foreign Missions

In 1901, the following was given as a revelation to the church:

"It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and others, as the missions may require; these tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the presidency before being published. They should be short, clearly stated, and a sufficient number should be printed to furnish the traveling ministry with the qualities desirable for them to distribute.

"The missions abroad other than those in the land of Joseph which were opened officially during the lifetime of the martyrs shall be considered as having been opened unto us, whether they were at once undertaken and prosecuted during the lifetime of the martyrs, or whether subsequent to their death they were prosecuted in righteousness—whenever they were sent. Other missions not thus opened, it will be requisite that the twelve shall either go, or in the exercise of their missionary authority send, as provided in the law, of the seventy."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11, 12.

The following may also prove of interest, from the appendix of the original Doctrine and Covenants, given November 3, 1831:

"Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles; and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord."—Section 108: 3.

"Many a man grows hair waiting for a chance which some other fellow has gone out and grabbed."

A Layman Who Heals the Ministry

Considerable is being said in the sectional press of the healings of one James Moore Hickson, a so-called "Miracle-man" of the Episcopal Church, at Dallas, Texas.

According to the Dallas Dispatch "there were no immediate cases of healing. Hickson cautioned his audience in advance not to expect the spectacular or even immediate results."

He is reported to have laid on hands and prayed over all who came, there being many, operating outside the sanctuary rail, but in the case of Bishop Garrett he entered the chancel for the ordinance—a place from which are excluded even all clergymen not of the church.

It is a little strange that the pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian Church, which is one of the leading churches of the city, should go to this man and this church to have an ordinance preformed which is not indorsed by his own organization.

According to the New Testament pattern, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church."

We are not surprised that people are demanding the ordinances of the gospel, for they are all human necessities, but it does seem strange how a ministry that has so strongly opposed those same ordinances in this latter-day restoration will grasp, like drowning men at straws, at a shallow imitation of the demonstration of God's holy power.

At the close of his engagement at Dallas, he was besought on many sides for engagements, some prominent pastors in the West making personal solicitation to this end. So the demand is not merely a local outburst, but a manifestation of the yearning on the part of the people for a restoration of the gifts and blessings that should go with the gospel but the power of which has been insistently denied to these many years.

He is scheduled next for Council Bluffs, Iowa, and the pastor who secured him is pleading with the newspapers of the city to spare them some of the publicity given the work of this man elsewhere.

The Church Is One

[On October 21, 1872 the church was first incorporated at Plano, Illinois, according to articles of incorporation adopted by the previous semiannual conference. Concerning this, President Joseph Smith wrote as follows, and as was often the case, he gave some good advice which is still worthy of our earnest consideration.—EDITORS.]

The affidavit of the appointment of trustees, and the Articles of incorporation, as adopted by the Semiannual Conference of the church, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, September, 1872; and as also adopted by the church at Plano, October 21, 1872, were filed in the office of the recorder of deeds, in Kendall County, Illinois, on the 5th day of February, 1873, and the church is now an incorporated body. The several branches of the church are by the terms of the constitution, parts of the general body corporate; a record of their organization on file in the office at Plano, or in the hands of the Church Recorder, in evidence of their connection with such corporation.

The property of the church held by the several respective branches, becomes the property of the body corporate, and the title should be made to the Bishop in trust for the church. While a bishop remains a faithful man to his office, he remains the trustee; but when he becomes unworthy of trust, the church should impeach him and appoint another.

We must learn that our duty to the well-being of the whole body demands of us a hearty, unreserved approval and sustaining of each other; but that sustaining must only be in good and correct acts; if our public servants prove to be weak, inefficient, or unworthy, we should suffer no false delicacy to prevent us from abasing them if guilty of wrong, or of choosing more earnest, stronger, and more efficient men to occupy their places. Right minded, unselfish, true men will not object nor be offended if others are thought to be more efficient; those who love self more than the good of all, or who love office for office name, will as a usual thing be partially unfit for great trusts, and will be wounded if others are preferred to themselves for those trusts.

Now that the church is in a condition to begin to carry on its temporal affairs with legal safety to the people's moneys, we hope that those who are able and have the disposition to help the storehouse and treasure chest, will do so.

The history of the early Christians, as handed down to us by well-accredited tradition, shows that hundreds gave their earthly substance that the work of the church might be carried on, and those really needing aid could know where to apply, with reasonable certainty of receiving it. Men of other faiths are giving their labor, their time, and their means in liberal supply, that the work of those faiths may not be crippled for want of the sinews of war.

The Saints have long wanted (so they have said) to become one; and roods of paper have been written over; and thousands of cubic feet of breadth have been expended to lay before the Saints the beauties, and glories, and grandeur of this condition of oneness when it should be arrived at; but the number who have really schooled themselves into the condition of temper to become one is impracticably small. The usual understanding with the majority of those loudest in their professed desire to become one is, that others shall become one with them not that they shall become one with others. Thus their theory is a failure because of a lack of practicability.

The church is now legally one, every branch of it has a legal unity with every other branch; and that legal unity is, as we understand it, in accordance with the spiritual law given to the church for its guidance, found in the Book of Covenants. It now remains for us to avail ourselves of that legal oneness to the enhancement of our spiritual unity and the advancement of our spiritual interests.

Those who now feel like it can make a consecration "with a bond and deed that cannot be broken." The church itself in its corporate existence can receive gifts, donations, consecrations, legacies, and bequests for the specific uses of such purposes as such things may be devised for; and when properties are so devised and so used it is an irrevocable deed—it cannot be broken.

We often hear of "one mighty and strong," who shall do wondrous things—as a man—no one believes that he is, or is to be other than a man. In what is his strength to be? His own person or the prestige of his name?

Is he to do a work so wondrous that it is to be outside of and independent from the one great work of God, and still to be held accountable by and to that work? Is it to be a strength inherent in himself, or the reflected strength of another? Is there anything stronger than truth, the truth; God's word, the word; the word which giveth life? He then that abideth in the word, the truth, is strong—"mighty and strong."

In unity of the truth there is strength. This unity of truth is only to be found developed and developing where men say, "I am desirous and willing," and are performing. "He who saith he loveth my work and my cause, and who doeth nothing to establish my cause and do my work, shall not have peace in eternal life," saith the Spirit.

There are many truths which go to make up the unity of the truth; and some of them are very strong, but are not strange truths; the corner stone of a building is neither the threshold, lintel, nor keystone of its arched doorway nor the pediment, nor capital of its principal pillars; but all may be of one kind of material, hewn from the same quarry. So it is with those who may erect the building. He who quarries the marble slab, is not he who carves the elaborate arch; nor is he who lays the stone in its cemented bed, the one who paints the exquisite designs on the frescoed walls and ceiling, yet these may all be members of one family, bearing one name, or be those bound together for the accomplishment of one common object.

So in the church there will be diversities of labor, and in that diversity of labor there is now supposed to be an unaccountable and reprehensible inequality, that must be abolished—if needs be—by power. There is no power that will ever do this but the power of truth, the unity of the truth; unless—and the alternative is fearful to contemplate—there be a complete destruction of all and singular the properties of the Saints. But the work which is to be done cannot be done if the alternate occurs; hence we must conclude that the lines of inequality must be voluntarily thrown down, by those having the privilege abasing themselves, thus assisting others to be elevated.

We shall be glad to take by the hand in fraternal regard the men who will now begin to work practically for Zion's good; helping each other, thus by concentration and unity, forming a band mighty and strong. So shall we be spiritually one as we are now legally one.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 20, pp. 144-146.

In the plebiscite to determine whether its inhabitants chose to be under Germany's or Denmark's governmental care, the first zone of Schleswig was overwhelmingly in favor of Denmark. The figures given are 75,023 in favor of Denmark, and 25,087 in favor of Germany. Voting in the second zone will take place March 14.

Reliable news sources inform us that in the recent Armenian massacres there have been as many as seven thousand deaths in Cilicia, in spite of the fact that the French are in control. It seems the region now being harassed by the Turkish and Kurdish troops is a mountainous district and hard to protect. It is reported that only immediate protection can save 150,000 people from extermination.

The Holy Scriptures—Inspired Version

BY FREDERICK A. SMITH

"I have been surprised to find how few of our missionaries and local ministers are using the book."

I have been asked a good many times what Bible I was using and I have answered for something over fifteen years, "The Inspired Version." I have found in our work that it is in harmony with the other books of the church which makes it much preferable as a book of reference. Further than that, it is much clearer on so many points that are of vital interest; really correcting many of the errors that have given skeptics an opportunity to criticize. I have been wonderfully surprised to find quite a number of men, ministers of other churches, who had the book and have conceded that it was an excellent version of the Scriptures. On the other hand I have been quite surprised to find how few of our missionaries and local ministers are using the book.

This version of the Scriptures is strictly the product of this latter-day work and probably worthy of as much confidence and credence as any other version that we may have at the present time. In talking with some I have found they hesitate to use it because they seemed to think that when preaching to outsiders, if they quoted from the book the prejudice of the outsiders would work against them and their argument. I have not found this true. On the other hand, I have met with the peculiar accusation that we did not use this book, but used the King James Version or Revised Version, in order to deceive. And I have found this last accusation as hard to answer and satisfy the outsider as it was to allay their prejudice against Joseph Smith giving us a version of the Scriptures. In fact, I prefer to meet the former.

In section 42, paragraph 15, we are told that these Scriptures should be kept in safety, which evidently was not understood at that time but which time has demonstrated was true. They have been kept and finally given to the church. Farther on in the same paragraph we are told that we should not teach them until we received them in full, and we are commanded when this time comes that they shall be taught to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

The book was given us in full, and in compliance with law or command of God I have used this Bible. I have told them that I was not quoting from the King James or Revised versions, as a rule telling them where to find what I was referring to. I also explained that I liked the version much better because it made clear many things that were hard to understand before, and frequently show them the difference between the two in some one or two points. And I have found as a rule the people were not only glad but willing to accept the better rendition of the Inspired Version. Its plain statements, correcting as it does many things that have been called in question is a great help to us in presenting the teachings of the other two books, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, to the membership.

I appreciate the fact that one of the great drawbacks that has prevented it from coming into more general use had been that it was printed on an enameled paper with very fine print and no references or Bible helps of any kind. The paper makes it very hard to read unless the light is especially good, which many times is not the case in traveling in the world and holding meetings in school houses, on street corners or other places where we are required to preach and must do some reading. We have longed and hoped to see the day when a new edition of this version of the Scriptures should be issued having references and proper helps for its study, but it seems to be in the misty future, though the research work has been completed, it only awaiting passable reversion and then printing.

I hardly think it necessary to give any great number of instances in which the difference is strong, as I believe the most of our missionaries are acquainted with the fact that there is quite a difference in the reading. In the Book of Genesis, the story of creation and the introduction of the gospel at that time is made so much clearer that it is a wonderful help in considering those features. In many other places we find readings so much clearer, making so much better sense, that it seems unnecessary to have to make an argument in favor of the book. Further than that it does seem to me that as the servants of God, conscious of its superiority, recognizing the command of God, we should not hesitate to use the book.

I have found that the concordance and Bible helps; such as, Cruden's and that in the Oxford Bibles, or any other good teacher's Bible, may be used to good advantage even with the Inspired Translation, though we frequently find it necessary to read to some extent in the Inspired in order to locate just what we want. And I have used these so far in my ministerial work. The Revised Version has corrected some things until they are very nearly the same as in the Inspired version. The getting out of this version was a recognition of the weakness and errors that existed in the King James. Hence it seems proper and good that God should give to us by the Spirit of inspiration and revelation the corrections that we have received which puts in our hands a better rendition than anything that the world has received up to the present time. And I have no fear in using the book either outside the church or inside the church.

I believe that the time has come when moving in harmony with the command of God, it should be in general use in the church, and if put in more general use would be the means of helping to get our new edition with its references and such helps as may be desired to use. May God hasten the day when moving along the lines that God has asked, not only in some things but in all things, we can come to a better understanding and receive more of the divine light and favor than we have in the past.

A Day When the Church Must Sound a Clear Note

BY "MASSACHUSETTS"

In the church is found a basis of unity which will unite all our forces for a common purpose.

"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."—Matthew 12: 25.

"Let the dead bury the dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 60.

The human race has always had its troubles, from the day when sin first entered human life; but never have the children of men been so completely dumfounded as they are to-day, vainly striving to think their way through the immediate future, to say nothing of distant time.

Questions springing forth are delving to the roots of the world's destiny, and involve the validity of nearly every system of every kind which has been produced. Men of national and international prominence are calling into doubt everything in sight, from Congress to the courtroom, to the college, to the schoolhouse, to the banking house, yes, until it has reached the very foundations of Christianity itself, and churches of various beliefs are awakening to find themselves unable to cope successfully with these problems and are vainly striving to change their forms, etc., in the battle for their very existence. Yes, wonderful questions are alive to-day.

Will war come again, and if so, will it be as much worse than the last, as that was worse than the one before? Will the theory of the extreme Bolshevist sweep the world and destroy all the present base of government? Will class hatred and riot become the normal and expected method of securing adjustment? Will men grow tired and discouraged with the struggle, and yield to the rule of the strongest regardless of right and wrong?

These are common questions to-day heard in the railroad trains, shop, street cars, and on the corner, yes, at any place where men congregate.

Many Formulas, One Remedy

The internationalist is confident a world court and a League of Nations will quiet the turbulent unrest.

The politician is sure a law or laws can be passed which will meet the situation.

The soldier says an army can be organized strong enough to untangle the whole mass.

The educationalist believes the school can teach a code of ethics high enough to surround the entire problem.

Economists galore know how it can be done, and the whirl goes wildly on, but nobody seems satisfied.

We must and do respect the good in all of these, and greatly admire those men and women who are sincere, and, wrestling with these questions, are gallantly fighting for supremacy over the situation, but this old world needs to be told in clarion notes, heard and understood by all, that the Church of Jesus Christ with the Old Jerusalem gospel has and is the only real permanent solvent for this restless, peaceless world.

The world must have its mind disabused of the fallacy that the Church of Christ is the center for preferred Saints, who for the most part are unattached to issues here and now upon the earth. The world must understand that the most important part in the establishment and development of the kingdom of God upon the earth is the colossal task of spreading justice, righteousness, brotherhood, and love here and now, as we understand it to exist in heaven.

The personnel of the church of Christ must realize and have complete knowledge that this is their business; the Church is well aware of this already.

The church of Jesus Christ is the exponent of the only faith that ever dared dream of a world made morally right. Search where you will, go through all the courts and legislative assemblies where men have striven for the best they knew, and the result is only a prophecy of a patched up, partial remedy. The highest results obtained have been on a "banking of fires" of the world's wrongs.

But here, listen! look! the scene changes and we enter into the assemblies of the matchless church of Jesus Christ, where really great men are in action, and we hear them tell of the day when the kingdom of God shall reign on the earth as it is in heaven, when the lion and lamb shall lie down together, when every mountain shall be made low, every valley shall be filled up, and all rough places shall be made smooth. Our vision is suddenly opened and extended; there is a burning within every soul, and we then know we are listening to the unchanging philosophy of Him who walked by the shores of Galilee.

We have had our opinions, processes, etc., but all true Christians look confidently forward to this consummation which it is written, "shall come to pass."

The Hour of the Church

The hour of the church has struck; it is a great epoch of the world's history. We look out to see these bewildering conditions to be righted, questions answered, yes, and unnumbered thousands anxiously waiting for a solution of these problems, and the prayer comes to our lips that you and I as individuals will help the church to be worthy of the hour.

The church will arise until she becomes a beacon of light and is seen afar off. She is presenting a bulwark of cooperation and strength. God is working with his people along the same harmonious, advanced line of work. East meets West, to find each have had special direction in the same things. North meets South to find new work of the same character has been outlined to both. God is placing his spirit and gifts upon his sons and handmaidens. Yes, we shall not be found wanting. Her message has rung out until it has reached the hearts of our young men and women who are responding with that service which is the grandest of life's attainments. Men and women willing to suffer inconveniences and endure hardships for a noble cause.

The whole field of human life and endeavor has been plowed and made ready for a great advance in a way not known to this or any other generation. The church will rally her powers, release her energy, declare with a note of authority more ringing than anything ever heard in the realm of religion, that she is exponent of the gospel of Jesus Christ and stands prepared to answer every vexed issue of human life and destiny.

This is a task big enough, grand enough, and worthy enough for which there must be no shrinking, or need be no apology given.

If you and I support her as we ought, there is a day not so far away, when war will not reign, and Bolshevism will not sweep the earth. Riots and class hatred will not prevail; and men will not grow discouraged and give up to the baser refrains of life. The hope of a vexed, weary, and bleeding world shall be realized. "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

The Perfect Law of Liberty

BY EARLE R. BRADSHAW

"No age of greater moment than this has existed from the dawn of creation; no time of greater opportunities, within and without the church of God."

Latter Day Saints have always laid claim to the fact that the gospel was preached before Christ came among men in the middle dispensation of the world's history; in other words they teach the antiquity of the gospel. Like the priesthood, it is without beginning of day or end of years.

The gospel is eternal; if not, why is the priesthood eternal, for one without the other is useless. All truth is eternal. Jesus, speaking of his Father said, "Thy word is truth." It is the law which existed in heaven before the foundation of the earth was laid, unto which the angels of heaven were subject. Thus the gospel law is eternal and the only law which shall be given for the salvation of men.

Lucifer was subject to that heavenly law, and when he refused to obey it and tried to make a law unto himself, he was cast down from heaven. He was a mighty angel, one of power, a prime minister, if you will, with God as King and Jesus Christ of heaven, who rebelled with him, he was allowed to set up his own kingdom in another sphere. Julius Caesar once said, "I would rather be first in a little Iberian village than be second in Rome." It was that ambition which caused the downfall of Lucifer and has caused the downfall of more than one man in this church.

Paul tells us that, as it was with Lucifer, so will it be with any man who attempts to advocate any other law than the eternal law unto which heaven and earth are subject. He says they shall be accursed. This law was given to Adam and to the generations after him until the days of Moses. There were ordinances supplied which man must obey in order to place him in line with the perfect, heavenly beings, as a subject in this great kingdom, and which gave him the right to participate in the privileges to which this law entitled him.

David said, in Psalm 19:7, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." In his day the gospel was not upon earth. He was subject to an inferior law and yet he understood that the law of the Lord is perfect. He certainly did not refer to the Mosaic law, for we know that was imperfect and incomplete. Knowing then, that the "perfect law" was not given to the people in David's time, that he was under the inferior code, the question arises, Was it possible for him to understand the perfect or gospel law by the ordinances of the imperfect one? If so, possible it will show in their temple worship. I like the thought expressed in our Sunday school Quarterlies sometime ago that the Mosaic law was a series of acted prophecies.

Israel was chosen of God to be the teachers of the world; a nation of priests, bringing salvation to the Gentiles, but they rejected the law they were to teach, or rather, they were not in a condition to endure it, hence an inferior one was given to bring them up to a condition whereby they could endure it. But the history of Israel is a sad one, for in every age they are "weighed in the balances and found wanting" and God could not use them. Jesus came, in the meridian of time, to the house of Israel only, in the last attempt to bring this privilege (saviors of the world) to them, but they rejected the law again, and killed him, and so the servants of Christ turned to the Gentiles.

Now if the Mosaic law was a series of acted prophecies let us try to find the fulfillment of a few of them at least, that we may learn just how thorough this "Schoolmaster" was, and how clearly it pointed to the gospel law.

Just inside the court of the temple stood the great altar of burnt offerings on which were offered all the sacrifices but one, the sin offering. These sacrifices or offerings were generally animals which were killed and burned on the altar and their blood poured either on, or at the base of the altar. It is hardly necessary to explain what this "prophecy" was a type of, but we will refer to one passage of scripture found in Hebrews 10: 8-10.

Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldst not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo I come to do thy will, O God; he taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

Thus we see that in Christ's sacrifice once for all, was fulfilled the acted prophecy of those ancient burnt offerings, showing that the way toward redemption of men was complete.

Further in the court, stood the laver, a large fount kept filled with water, where all the sacrificial washings and purifyings took place. This is a type and has its fulfillment in the ordinance of baptism, an act whereby the soul of man is washed clean and purified of every sin. Paul, speaking of these washings and carnal ordinances says they were only imposed upon them until the reformation, or until these should have their fulfillment and a more perfect system should obtain. (Hebrews 9: 10.)

Entering into the temple, in the holy place stood the table of showbread containing twelve loaves of bread. Jesus told his apostles, "Feed my sheep." This suggests food, although spiritual food was meant, and they were intrusted with the gospel which is the bread of life, hence Jesus who had given them the power to dispense this food, said, "Feed my sheep." Now in this table are twelve loaves, representing the twelve apostles having within them the spiritual food. We also learn, in Numbers 1: 1-16, 14, that Moses was told to choose out twelve men, one from each tribe, and these were to be princes in Israel. As the counterpart to this, Jesus told his apostles that when he came into his kingdom they should sit upon twelve thrones and judge the tribes of Israel.

To the left of this table is the golden candlestick with its seven branches, each branch bearing a lamp. This may well represent two things. The first is spoken of in Revelation 1: 20 when John, who had seen a vision in which was a candlestick with seven branches, was told that they represented the seven churches. These were the bearers of the Holy Spirit, lights of the world, and in Revelation 2: 5, speaking to the church at Ephesus, the Lord said, "Unless you repent I will remove thy candlestick out of his place."

Again, the seven branches may well represent the seven quorums of seventies in the church, and like the twelve princes referred to, there were seventy elders appointed by Moses to act in the service of the temple (Numbers 11: 16.)

Further in the holy place, just in front of the veil which hid the holy of holies, stood the altar of incense, where the sin offering was made. Incense was burned upon the altar, the smoke ascending as a pleasant remembrance before the Lord. This betokens prayer, which is the greatest asset to the development and spiritual growth of every child of God.

That the prayers of God's people came before him as a sweet incense we learn in Revelation 8: 4. John, in that wonderful vision, saw "the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God." So by prayer, man may get into communion with God and receive from the source of all good.

"Ask and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you, "the Master has told us, and what greater thing could he have said? Heaven will be opened to us and light, truth, and knowledge will be given. What a blessing; what a privilege to be in favor with God, that we may talk to him, knowing that our prayer is reaching beyond the bounds of space even unto the throne of heaven. How truly did the disciples of Jesus speak, when he asked them if they too, would leave him, and the answer came, "To whom can we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." So we say, how beautifully does the burning incense on the holy altar illustrate the deep meaning of prayer.

Just in back of this altar was the veil which hid the holy of holies. In seeking the fulfillment of this mute prophecy (the veil) in the gospel plan I wish to examine three passages of scripture and summarize the three. The first is 2 Corinthians 3: 14, 15. "But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament; which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart."

Here we learn that the veil is done away in Christ and when Israel accepts him the veil shall be removed from their heart which is clouded with unbelief and tradition.

In Ephesians 2: 14-18 Paul tells us that the veil was broken down in the flesh of Jesus Christ, who was the final sacrifice for sin.

Again in Hebrews 10: 19-20 we are told that the veil is his flesh, hence, in summarizing the three we condense them to the one thought, that the veil represents the flesh or body of Christ, and that while it remained in its present state, that is, before it had been offered up, the door of redemption was closed, but when that body had been placed upon the altar and sacrificed, the door was opened and redemption was complete. This was clearly shown to the Jews when the veil was rent in twain.

Thus it can be seen that when the high priest entered into the holy of holies he, symbolically, must pass by Jesus Christ. There is an oft-repeated argument that it makes no difference as to what church you belong for they are like the spokes of a wheel, they start at different points but all reach the same place. Now, keeping the above illustration in mind, let us represent the hub of the wheel as Jesus Christ and I believe it will show the true state of affairs. All are traveling toward Jesus Christ who would be saved, and all must pass by him, for he is to bid those who are entitled, to "enter into the joy of thy Lord." Those who make their start at the circumference of the wheel must reach the hub before they can make their true start to the celestial kingdom, for Jesus is the beginning and the end and "the only name given among men whereby we must be saved. Thanks be to God that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ had its start at the hub, even Jesus Christ who is the author and finisher of our faith, and thus we are so far ahead of those who have made their start elsewhere.

So in studying the old law of Israel we cannot help but praise God for the gospel plan and for the wonderful ways which he has of teaching mankind and yet we marvel how slow man is to see the good that God holds out to him. How clearly was it portrayed to Israel the divine plan by which he wished to save them and through them, to save all mankind and yet when the Son of God came to reveal it to them they killed him.

So in fulfillment of that which is written, that the first shall be last and the last shall be first, we Gentiles in these last days have received the same heavenly law known as the gospel of Christ which was held out to Israel in the ages long since past, and through us God purposes to accomplish that work for which he designed to use Israel—to preach this gospel to the world, and also to bring it to Israel who was first but who shall be last.

Shall we, as latter-day Israel, do like Israel of old: neglect the privileges which are ours? Shall God weigh us in the balances and find us wanting? Surely the experiences of the past will help us to set our course more clearly; surely we will profit by the mistakes of Israel's past and give heed to the sufferings which those mistakes brought upon them. God grant that we will not fail him but that his great church, as a whole, even as one man, may arise, and like Israel of old say, "Here am I, Lord."

No age of greater moment than this has ever existed since the dawn of creation; no time of greater opportunities, within and without the church of God. No time has ever seen more wonderful things than have and will transpire in this age. The angels in heaven, we are told, would like to be in our place. The prophets of old looked forward to the closing scenes of the world's drama and their hearts were made both sorrowful and joyous: Sorrowful because of the wickedness so widespread and so great. Sorrowful that it would be even in the church itself. Remember the parable of the five wise, and the five foolish virgins. But through the cloud they saw the church of God go on in triumph with the faithful holding fast to the truth which had been revealed to them by angelic messengers.

O Saints, if you have never fully appreciated the wondrous gospel before, think of these things, and like David of old, meditate upon it day and night and try to realize the privileges which are ours. Millions are in darkness; thousands of these are "the sheep" who are waiting to hear the Master's voice. Will you help them to find him or will you stand in their way.

Tune: "How gentle God's Command."

My people trust in me,
Though dark the way may seem;
The hand that led the prophets through,
Will surely lead thee too.

Be honest with my word;
Expound it to mankind,
And God will place a blessing there,
And they the truth will find.

My sheep will hear my voice,
And they will gather in;
So be thou faithful in my work,
And thou a home shall win.

The Prophetic Conning Tower

An Outline—Part 8

BY S. W. L. SCOTT

Daniel's Vision

An unexpected agency preparing the way:

"Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."—Daniel 2: 45.

"Thou sawest still that a stone was cut without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."—Daniel 2: 34, 35.

This prophecy introduces on the stage of the world, the sixth revolution in the kingly sphere which will reach its finality and culmination point at the battle of Armageddon. The downfall of the Roman Empire (legs of iron) gave to the European and eastern world, ten comparatively pretty sovereignties in A. D. 476, and subsequently developing the ten toes of the great metallic image.

"In the days" (during their administration) of these contemporaneous kingdoms represented by the toes, God breaks his "long time rest," (Isaiah 18: 4) and goes forth "like a man of war," to "make waste mountains." (Isaiah 42: 13-15.)

While I might express my belief that just powers derive from the consent of the governed, and cannot be disassociated, as an eternal principle from the divinely constituted ecclesia, or regnum, the stone has been doing some work on those toes in recent years preparing the world for democracy.

Because of the fact that on the soil—blood soaked—and between the very dynasties represented by the toes, two civilizations met, history must pause and square her shoulders to bear anew the burden of her tragic pages. It was the rock of destiny for the two forces, and against it the mightiest assaults of which mankind has record, were rolled back again and again like waves beating on the very shores of time. But while the final stroke will be given at the coming of Christ, this little stone, must be considered in its three principal stages:

1. It is a stone when cut out of the mountain—government.
2. It is a stone while rolling.
3. It is a stone when smiting, and—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

4. After it smites, it, the stone, becomes "a great mountain"—government—and "fills the whole earth." (Verse 35.) The three stages are in agreement with Christ's teaching on the parables, thus:

"And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."—Mark 4: 26-28.

"Another parable spake he unto them: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."—Matthew 13: 33.

This stone did not smite the image on the head, nor upon any of the sections representative of political government except the "toes." The empires represented commenced in Asia, and have crept westward into Europe. No government either civil or ecclesiastic, was adapted in Asia, or Europe, out of which could be carved such a stone. This stone must roll from some mountain—preferable a government on the land shadowing with wings, "to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," (Isaiah 18 and Genesis 49) where the Zion of God was to be the ensign, and judge of the nations; (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8; 103: 11,) and strike the feet of the image, then retrace the route of the succession of the empires, that is, from the feet to the head, or in other words, commence where the toes are found, where the remains of the ten kingdoms are, from thence to Asia, till the image is destroyed.

It is not our intention to be understood that this work of the little stone is to be accomplished by the physical force of the people of God, for the preaching of the gospel is followed by phenomena above the reach of mortals. John the Baptist overthrew the kingdom of the Jews (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4) not by force of arms nor political intrigue, but by preaching the words of life and salvation; calling upon them to repent of evil ways, and return to the Most High. But rejecting John as a servant of God, and his message to them as the (prophetic) voice crying in the wilderness, laid the ax at the root of the tree of Jewish nationality, and they were given up to civil dissension and strife; to the sword at home, and to the sword of their enemies; to famine, pestilence and plagues—the four sore judgments predicted (Ezekiel 14: 21) until their nationality fell under repeated strokes of "the ax" and they were dispersed in bitter bondage in all the earth.

"In the hour of God's judgment,"—the hour of the restoration of the gospel, "the eleventh hour," (Matthew 20) the "one hour" when Babylonian riches are brought to naught (Revelation 18: 17), after the latter-day proclamation of the everlasting gospel, and following its testimony, we quote:

"And after your testimony cometh wrath, and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voices of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgments of our God is come: behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

It occurs to us that this prophecy indicates a little work down in the toes of the image, by the little stone, ere it completes its work at the coming of Christ. (Revelation 19.)

The beauty and reasonableness of the gospel, the nations will not see; its spiritual influence and softening graces, they will not open the many bolted doors of cold and hardened caste to receive, and with them and upon them is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah's hallowed lips:

"Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them."—Isaiah 26: 11.

They will not see the evidences of the gospel as proclaimed, but they shall see, the testimony of physical evidence, and of course, cannot resist.

Restoration of Israel

But in the midst of all conflagration, let us not forget the "red cord" running through the cable—the redemption and reinstatement of the house of Israel. The Almighty expresses his purpose thus:

"Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel. Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff. Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and thou shalt rejoice in the Lord, and shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel."—Isaiah 41: 14-16.

In this prophecy Israel stands related to the fall of national fabrics—the autocratic web work of governments—the chaff grown around the grain.

Secretary Baker says of the nearly 2,000,000 men from America whose gallant help thrown into the balance contributing to the downfall of so many despotic structures in Europe, between 75,000 and 80,000 were blooded Jews. But we do not place this item in the account, when we consider the purpose of God in contending with those nations who contend with Israel and to feed them on their own flesh, and increase their madness by being compelled to shed their own blood—pushed in the advance to screen the enemy lines. We would leave both out of the account when considering the decrease of national power, as mountains, governments, when Israel "shall suck the milk of the Gentiles," and "inherit them," (Isaiah 60: 16; 54: 3), even "nations greater, mightier, than yourselves." (Deuteronomy 11: 23.) Moreover, it is in the time when fear is upon all people (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25), that the Lord breaks the yoke from Israel's neck and bursts their bonds asunder. (Jeremiah 30: 4-11.) In their redemption; a struggle is outlined in which men will pay the price in freedom or life:

"Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honorable, and I have loved thee; therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life. Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west."—Isaiah 43: 4, 5.

This condition is made more prespicuous by the prophecy of Joel:

"The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border. Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompense upon your own head: And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off: for the Lord hath spoken it."—Joel 3: 6-8.

Following this commercial deal, is the proclamation of war: Prepare war, make up the mighty men, proclaim it among the Gentiles, etc. Joel informs us that this is the time certain physical events, called phenomena, will transpire causing the nations to see the hand of the Lord—"they shall see"—

"And I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."—Joel 2: 30-32.

He says in first verse of chapter 3, that these events occur in the same days,—they stand relatively.

There was no deliverance at Jerusalem 2,000 years ago, or when it was besieged by the Romans. Jesus, in his prophecy of its downfall warned: "Let those in Judea flee to the mountains." (Matthew 24: 16.) But when God "creates Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy" (Isaiah 65: 18), and her land called "union," and her people "delightful," then deliverance can be extended. Joel declares that there will occur signs in heaven above, then, "in the earth beneath; blood, fire, vapors, or pillars of smoke." What is known as the smoke screen in modern warfare is productive of both blood and fire.

It is the result of great pillars or clouds of smoke, we must look to, even if caused by forest fires, which hang in clouds hundreds of miles long, and make necessary the touching of the electric button, or turning on the light, as has been done in many instances. These forest fires have sent out clouds of smoke too thick, too dense, for engineers to see signals, and the results were collision and the death of many people. It is stated that germs which are set afloat, and carried with the vapors of smoke inoculate thousands with contagious diseases, pestilences, and epidemics. But putting down a land smoke screen, or barrage, in modern warfare surpasses the marvelous, and when they synchronize in sectors, which is necessary to an assault all along the line, the curtain of fire and smoke rises in stupendous pillars—clouds charged with phosgene, chlorine, hydrocyanic (prussic) acid and mustard—choking, sneezing, burning, and deadly gases hurled from tanks that produce literally liquid fire, and enables those who send it out to advance, hidden from the enemy, and concentrate a mass drive upon the almost helpless enemy. It was at first faulty, in that it would float slowly upward, but:

"To offset this lifting of the fog belt, the Americans have resorted to England's second discovery—the greenish smoke that hugged the ground. So a combination barrage of the greenish and brownish smokes assures a thick smoke screen that will float upward for a thousand feet or more, offering ample protection to the troops that advance behind it."—Illustrated World, September, 1918.

Smoke screens are also in evidence among the fleets. Great pillars of smoke separate enemy fleets, and protect big battle ships, but here is one instance of gas clouds on land that show results:

"On April 22, 1915, British troops in the vicinity of Ypres saw great, greenish balls of vapor rolling toward them under a terrific tornado of shells. It was gas. Thousands of men in the trenches and in the dugouts staggered about for a moment, gasped for breath, and fell, asphyxiated by the stifling fumes. The Allies had no gas masks. If it had not been for the brave Canadians who rallied on the left, and advanced through the partially dispersed gas clouds over a field on which lay six thousand British, either dead or dying, the Allied line would have been smashed. Thus did gas become a weapon of war."—Illustrated World, August, 1918.

President Wilson authorized the gas and flame warfare, October 15, 1917, and the first surprise the Yanks gave the eastern warriors was in laying down a smoke pillar. The account says:

"In the midst of that smoke curtain was a heavy veil of deadly gas, which, with the opportunity afforded for concentration in bayonet attack crimsoned the earth with blood."—Illustrated World.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AN INDUSTRIAL COURT IN KANSAS

The State of Kansas has led in establishing an industrial court. After stating that the law was opposed by representatives of the employers and representatives of labor unions, The Christian Science Monitor sums the matter up as follows:

"The history of past industrial disputes in the United States, and elsewhere for that matter, indicates but slight, if any, regard for the rights of the public in maintaining or resuming necessary production. Capital, it seems, usually cares little about producing a maximum output, even of the necessities, unless that production can be made with a satisfactory profit. Labor, on the other hand, has seemed equally stubborn, preferring not to operate the industries, the mines, and the transportation systems of the country unless such operation is under conditions of labor as nearly ideal as those who work believe they can be made.

"It cannot be claimed that the realization of both these conditions should not be desired and sought. But the theory of the Kansas law, as also appears to be the theory of a somewhat similar measure recently introduced in the Congress of the United States, is that the desires and wishes of capital and labor, concerning the so-called vital industries, at least, are not paramount to the necessities, the convenience, and the rights of the public."

This is one of the signs of the awakening realization that the public is vitally concerned in every industrial dispute.

BOLSHEVIK ATROCITIES

When Governor Lowden spoke on Pilgrim's Day in New York City he was criticized for referring to the "socialization" of women as one of the manifestations of official bolshevism in Russia. It was claimed that socialization had been merely a local outbreak of lawlessness, and was in no way sanctioned by the great leaders of the bolshevist movement. This criticism was offered by newspapers of standing.

In this connection it is of interest to read the story of How philosophically true, even if outside divine revelation that "whatsoever a nation sows, that shall it reap." History records that about 75 years ago, western European civilization brought to the orient Bible and bullets, mitres, and mitrailleux, godliness and gatling guns, crosses and krupp cannon, Saint Peter and salt peter, and the orient lisped out in the tones of Shylock: "The villiany you taught me, I now execute, and it will go hard, but I will better the instruction." They have learned the lesson so well as to play with deadly effect the awful diapason of the cannonade. But where are some of those nations to-day? Daniel "beheld until thrones were cast down." (Daniel 7: 9.) David predicted:

"The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies: he shall wound the heads over many countries."—Psalm 110: 5, 6.

The logic of events is vindicating the revelation of God—the impregnable position of the latter-day work, and like the hands upon the dial plate, point to the present day as the one destined to witness these stupendous developments, their progress, glorious culmination, and the master wisdom and power moving the world along in complete subordination to a supreme end. And in the great system of divine cooperation and coordination, there are no dependencies more closely and intimately linked than those the nations are working out in a self determining manner.

socialization as it is told by the London Times, which connects the outrages of the village of Ekaterinodar directly with Trotsky. It would be contrary to all the traditions of the Times office to give such prominence to such a report unless there were the most compelling reasons to accept it at its face.

The Register republishes the report in the Times in full:

"In the letter published in the Times on November 14 from a British officer in south Russia to his wife on 'The Horrors of Bolshevism,' mention was made of the outrages on young girls in the town of Ekaterinodar, in northern Caucasia. We are now able to give a striking confirmation of these unspeakable atrocities in the report of a special commission of lawyers who held an investigation after the bolsheviks had been driven from the town. The atrocities were perpetrated by the bolsheviks in the spring of 1918. The inquiry was held this year after the recapture of the town, and the report was issued on June 25, 1919. It is a tale of unbridled license, brutality, and the rape of young school girls. The investigation was carried out in accordance with the regular procedure of the Russian Criminal courts. The report read as follows:

"Report of Investigation

"Concerning women as public property in the town of Ekaterinodar, by order of the soviet administration.

"In the spring of 1918 the bolsheviks issued a decree in the town of Ekaterinodar, which was published in the soviet government's official organ, the Isvestia, and was placarded in the streets, according to which women between the ages of 16 and 25 could be declared public property (socialized). Those who wished to avail themselves of this decree had to apply to the proper revolutionary departments. The originator of this idea was the commissary for home affairs, Bronstein (Trotsky). It was he, too, who issued the authorizations (mandates) for the said "socialization." Similar authorizations were issued by his subordinate, Kobsireff, the commander of the bolshevik cavalry division, by the Commander in Chief Ivastscheff, and by other soviet authorities, the authorizations being stamped by "The Staff of the North Caucasian Revolutionary Troops." The authorizations were given both to the red guards and to various persons of high standing in the soviet government, such as, for example, a man named Karaseeff, who was commandant of the palace in which Bronstein (Trotsky) lived.

"This authorization ran as follows:

"Mandate

"The bearer of this certificate, Comrade Karaseeff, has the right to socialize the women between the ages of 16 and 20 in the town of Ekaterinodar, according to Comrade Karaseeff's own choice.

"Signed,

"(Commander in Chief) Ivastscheff.

"Stamp."

"Armed with similar certificates of authorization, the red guards seized over sixty of the youngest and prettiest women, mostly of the bourgeois class and pupils from the local schools. Several of them were seized in the town park, which was conducted by the red guards. Four of the captives were outraged on the spot in one of the sheds in the park. About twenty-five other young girls were carried off to Bronstein (Trotsky) at the palace, and the rest to the Commercial hotel and the Hotel Bristol, where they were all outraged by sailors. Some of the captives were afterwards released. For instance, one young girl was released who had been violated by the chief of the bolshevik militia levy, Prokofieff. The other women were carried off by red guard detachments in their retreat, and their fate is unknown. Finally, some of the women, after various horrible tortures, were killed outright or flung into the Kuban or Karasun rivers. Thus, for example, one of the young girls, a pupil in the fifth class at the gymnasium, was raped in the course of twelve days by a whole group of red guards. Afterwards she was bound to a tree, burned, and finally shot. The names of the victims are not published, for reasons which are easy to understand.

"The materials for this report were collected by the special commission in accordance with the prescriptions of the statute of the criminal court. The report is written on June 25, 1919, in the town of Ekaterinodar."

If this gross crime can be traced to Trotsky, then it is plain that socialization of women has been confined to limited area only because of other compelling reasons rather than because of its innate viciousness.

It remains for those who protest against connecting the bolshevik leaders with socialization to meet this report in the Times and prove that Trotsky was not involved in the assaults of Ekaterinodar.—Des Moines Register.

PLEASED OR DISPLEASED?

Many times I have been tempted to write you a long letter of introduction, telling you how to run the paper, for I am like many others, I am sure that I know just exactly how it ought to be run. Why, there is not a column but that would be much better if some four or five hundred of us could go through it, taking out all extraneous matter and filling it with our wonderful ideas of what a paper ought to be. If this could be done we are sure that the Firm Foundation would be a "humdinger" and would be so far in advance of all competitors that they would be unknown in the race. But after all it is very likely that it will be best for all concerned to let it go on as it is, and let all this wisdom die with us. If it should be turned over to us, no two of us could agree as to what should, and what should not be in the paper, and in my honest judgment we would all want to be editors in chief, and so there you have it—all head and no body—and very little heads too.—Firm Foundation.

MORMON TEMPLE IN ALBERTA TO OPEN SOON

The Mormons of Southern Alberta are completing arrangements for the dedication of their new temple, which has been in course of erection at Cardston, Alberta for five years. It will be dedicated by the head of the church, President Heber J. Grant, some time this spring. The structure is one of the religious wonders of Canada. From an architectural standpoint it stands unique, as it is an original design by the Salt Lake architects who designed the Mormon temple there. None of the classic types of architecture have been followed. The design may be said to have been suggested by the ruined temples of America. It is massive, simple and impressive. The marble walls reinforced with steel, have a chaste beauty that seems to harmonize with the purpose of the building. The

PASTORAL

Concerning the Attack by W. E. LaRue

The following is a copy of a letter being sent to a number of religious weeklies in the East, that they may have the facts concerning a certain attack being made on the church.

MR. JAMES S. MARTIN,

Editor: The Christian Statesman,

209 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Dear Sir: Through the columns of The Christian Statesman, and by means of tracts which are being published by the National Reform Association, I note the Anti-Mormon activities of William Earl LaRue, now pastor of a Baptist church in Rochester, New York, but from 1900 to 1913 a minister and a high priest in the church whose publicity interests I have the honor to represent. Insofar as any man or organization attempts to denounce polygamy, I have only hearty approval to offer, but from a reading of the above literature I cannot escape the impression that polygamy is not the real object of attack in this instance, but that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the target at which the shafts of LaRue are aimed.

Of course, Mr. LaRue has the privilege of attacking where and whom he will, but when he masks his attack under a mock horror of the religion of the Latter Day Saints, all branches of whom he classes together, it appears as a farce to those who know his record.

That a man could be reared, as was LaRue, in a family of Latter Day Saints, his grandfather a missionary, his mother a devout believer in prophecy (LaRue testifies that he himself was a son promised in prophecy); that he could accept conversion at twenty when his judgment was mature; that he could believe his call to the priesthood which came through the gift of tongues; that he could hear an audible voice calling him to preach; that he could believe that voice and ask temple is the central object of the town of Cardston and presents a magnificent picture with the majestic snow-capped Rockies for a back-ground.

The temple will cost more than a million dollars; the material forming the outer walls, most of which was cut in British Columbia, is said to contain $40,000 worth of gold. The length of the building is 235 feet and the height 110 feet. It is surrounded by an outer court, and the whole will form the center of a beautiful square, in which will be designed lawns, flower beds, lagoons, fish ponds, fountains and walks. It will have its own lighting plant, ventilating and power system. Massive doors and elegantly carved woodwork from distant tropical countries have been assembled. Magnificent religious paintings by artists from a great distance adorn the walls. There is a carved baptistry, fashioned after the molten sea of Solomon's Temple, supported by 12 brazen oxen plated with gold, symbolizing the 12 tribes of Israel. There are numerous other rooms: the sealing room where the marriage ceremony is performed, and others for various rites, anointings, washings. The building is open to the public, but after its dedication it will be closed to nonmembers and no one will be permitted to enter unless he can show a recommendation signed by the bishop. The dedication ceremony will extend over a week and will be attended by thousands, by the president, the twelve apostles, the presidents, counselors, the presiding bishopric and presiding patriarch.—Toronto Daily Star.

for a mission; that for thirteen years he could preach the Latter Day Saint gospel in many States and abroad; that he could accept ordination as teacher, priest, elder, and high priest in the Latter Day Saint organization; that he could study all church and anti-church literature and still write in defense of Joseph Smith for thirteen years—I say a man who could go through all these experiences and spend thirteen years in this ministry before he discovers the menace and horror of the Latter Day Saint religion, is either dull of perception or untrue to his knowledge, one time or the other. As a witness is discredited who comes into court and testifies to the honor and integrity of a man, only to come back next day and besmirch the same man with slander, so LaRue lays himself open to the judgment of all honest men. I have before me many pages of his writings wherein the virtue, honor, and prophetic calling of Joseph Smith are extolled by Mr. LaRue to an extravagant degree. I cannot consistently get alarmed now that he chooses to deny all that he then averred to be true.

Perhaps, Mr. LaRue has told you, and his other new-found friends, all this long ago. Perhaps he has shown you his autobiography in which this is written. If not we would gladly let you read it for what it's worth.

Perhaps he told you that in the SAINTS' HERALD of May 20, 1908, published at Lamoni, Iowa, he wrote:

"The sublime truths that have come to our knowledge by research and by experience give this great latter-day message a value in our estimation that cannot be reckoned by dollars and cents."

Or again in the HERALD of March 12, 1902:

"Reader, in accepting the teaching of the Latter Day Saints, you will not have to lay aside any true things you now believe; only lay aside the errors, step out into the sunlight of God, continue to observe all that is right and true, and then you shall know and be made free by the wholesome influence of truth divine. And doubt and darkness will be dispersed and the illuminating light of God will shine in to redeem, comfort, and save your soul."

The quotation below, even if taken from LaRue's writings while he was still in Latter Day Saint thralldom, is interesting reading. It will be found in the HERALD of December 22, 1909, after he had had nine years of the ministry he now repudiates:

"Had Joseph and Hyrum Smith joined hands with the gay and popular world; had they indorsed its ways and courted its praises at the sacrifice of their convictions; had they denied the truth of the message which God sent them to declare, there would have been no tragedy at Carthage. From the standpoint of the Bible, it is certainly nothing to their discredit that they had their enemies. We read, 'Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.' (Luke 6: 26.) In the beginning of his career Joseph had testified that the angel of the Lord had informed him that his name would be had for good and evil throughout the world. Thus it was with our Savior and with all of the true servants of God, they have been loved by those who knew them best and hated and despised and killed by those whose imagination and evil designs were inspired by ignorance and prejudice. Since these men were killed there have appeared before the public a number of men and women who have claimed that they were prophets and messengers of the Lord; some of these movements have not survived the test of time, others are flourishing to-day and are far from being considered as insignificant. What one of these pretended prophets has been slain for his religious convictions? The world loves its own and therefore, receives them with open arms, and praises their great works. Jesus said, 'But because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.' (John 15: 19.)"

Mr. LaRue has had many and various opinions at different times. Has he ever told you if or not he still believes as he wrote in the HERALD of July 6, 1910, that "It is deplorable that in summing up the character of professional men, ministers of the gospel, so-called advocates of modern sectarianism, supposed to be examples of what our manhood should be, should have such a poor rating. In many instances their moral standing is not equal to that of men of no professed faith at all. Search the pages of history and out of the great army of clergymen of sectarian tendency you will find an exceedingly small percentage of those who have distinguished themselves as real benefactors of mankind. Many of them have distinguished themselves as champions of their creeds, and many of them have been known for their intolerance, narrowness, and injustice toward their fellowmen, while occasionally the world has felt the thrill that has come from a great heart filled with compassion, with charity and love for all mankind, who has wrought for justice and equal rights for all and special privileges for none, who manifests real devotion to God and seeks the welfare of man."

Does he still hold the same kindly sentiments toward the Baptist brethren that he did in 1901 when he acted as a moderator in a debate between a Baptist and a Latter Day Saint? Writing of that debate he says of his Baptist friend:

"For nine evenings I sat and listened to the 'nastiest, most foul-mouthed' tirade of abuse that I ever heard from a pulpit. I never heard anything more blasphemous fall from the lips of mortal man. With other Saints and friends we tried to endure it for Christ's sake; and if you will allow me the expression, I almost caught myself thinking it was fortunate for our opponent that it was for Christ's sake. The world, it seems, will not be content with the act of requiring the innocent life of Joseph Smith; nor will they let his body rest in peace. But his stainless testimony is a 'stickler' to them all; for behold, he hath 'endangered our craft,' he hath shown up our man-made doctrines and where are we? And as in former times, they withstand it by hiding in a refuge of lies. The Son of Man says that we are blessed when men shall revile us and shall say 'all manner of evil' against us falsely for his sake. And may God help us to endure it for his sake so that in the 'Sweet by and by' we may all be vindicated and glorified together with him.—HERALD, vol. 48, no. 35."

I have one suggestion to make, and since Mr. LaRue is a friend of yours, will make it in his words so that it will have added weight. If you are really fighting polygamy, why not avail yourself of the most effective ally that you can call to the colors? I mean the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In an article which he wrote in the HERALD of August 5, 1908, he says:

"Fortunately there are those who have written on the subject of Mormonism who have had the manhood to see and recognize whatever of good may be in evidence. I quote the following from a book written by one John Codman, entitled A Solution of the Mormon Problem: 'Good men and women, here is your opportunity. Throw aside for the occasion, your sectarian prejudices; contribute liberally your money to sustain these worthy men [Reorganized Church missionaries]. Send hundreds of them to carry their tracts and to preach in every city, town and hamlet of Utah. Whatever danger there may have been in time past to those who would "beard the lion in his den," there is danger no longer. Anybody and everybody may now go anywhere and everywhere, and preach what they please, without let or hindrance. At all events these 'Josephites' are willing to incur the risk. They will accomplish a work beyond the powers of all other Christian sects. By preaching the Mormon doctrine as they claim that it 'was once delivered to the Saints,' they will convert men from the great sin which we all deplore, without driving them into atheism and despair."

LaRue says further—"this man takes a consistent, reasonable view of the situation, and while he may disbelieve in our church and its doctrine, yet he knows what has been demonstrated as fact, that we are the only church that has accomplished anything worthy of mention in the fight against Utah Mormonism."

We can still say "amen" to Brother LaRue's comment, and the offer still holds good on our part. If you would avail yourself of it or any other help that I can render, please feel free to write.

Need of the Gathering More and More Apparent

A General Conference appointee sees need of cohesive qualities in our local church officers.

At — there are enough members and enough officers to form a strong active branch, but they lack the cohesive qualities. A few are faithful in duty but others are drawn away by the pleasures or business cares and ambitions of the world. Some yield to the sins of extravagance, dishonesty, infidelity to friends, the pleasures of the dance, and other things until they have no desire to attend the worship of God in his house and should they come cannot feel any real interest in the service. The conditions described in 'A pastor's resolution' in a recent HERALD will very largely apply here. Frequently officers will work well for a time but drift back into the world and become dormant as to the things of God and their salvation.

These conditions of worldliness and sin with consequent indifference toward the church exist in some degree everywhere I have ever labored in the church and it has seemed that the labors of the faithful have but the smallest effect in correcting them. I have tried to see the cause and the remedy, and have come to this conclusion that with our members scattered as they are in and with the world as a few among the many, the world holds the dominating influence, while many of the members have never discerned the strength and importance of the church and, having failed to attain the spiritual experience that the gospel provides, are easily susceptible to the attractions of the world and the church does not hold them. The only effectual remedy that I can see is the assembling of the Saints together in more or less compact groups under the principle of the gathering where the church influence will be dominant, and the necessary recreations and pleasures will be of a character to aid spiritual development rather than to hinder or destroy, and where the church's strength will be developed and its work performed in a manner to appeal more strongly to its members.

It seems to me the need for something to be done along the line of the gathering becomes more apparent every day, the economic need being not the least. By cooperation as provided for in the law the gathering would result in conserving the wealth of the members among themselves, saving millions annually. May the day be hastened.

The day of secretive methods is passing rapidly. The day of publicity is at hand. The change is a perfectly natural evolution due to broader education and improved intercommunication and has also come about because it is second nature to be less suspicious and afraid of that which is known than of that which is unknown.—Profit Sharing or the Worker's Fair Share.

WHAT WE BELIEVE

Items from our epitome of faith, with scriptural passages in support. An elaboration of these principles will follow in the series.

We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 28: 19.

"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen."—2 Corinthians 13: 14.

"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."—1 John 5: 7.

We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27.

"Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is."—1 Corinthians 3: 13.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Revelation 20: 12.

We believe that through the atonement of Christ all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures."—1 Corinthians 15: 3.

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit."—1 Peter 3: 18.

"And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day."—Luke 24: 46.

We believe that these ordinances are:

1. Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John 3: 36.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."—John 14: 1.

"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

2. Repentance.

"From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 4: 17.

"And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 15.

"And the times of this ignorance God winked at: but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."—Acts 17: 30.

3. Baptism for the remission of sins.

"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Mark 1: 4.

"Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38.

"And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22: 16.

Immersion is the mode of baptism.

"And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing."—Acts 8: 37-39.

"And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him."—Matthew 3: 16.

"Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."—Romans 6: 4.

4. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

"Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost."—Acts 8: 17.

"And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts 9: 17.

"And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."—Acts 19: 6.

5. We believe in the resurrection of the body; that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired.

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."—Isaiah 26: 19.

"And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 29.

"And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts 24: 15.

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with a voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 4: 16, 17.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection: Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20: 5, 6.

6. We believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished, according to the degree of good or evil they shall have done.

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27.

"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Corinthians 5: 10.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Revelation 20: 12.

We believe that a man must be called of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority, to entitle him to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof.

"And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4.

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."—John 5: 16.

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."—Acts 13: 2, 3.

"Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them."—Acts 6: 6.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery."—1 Timothy 4: 14.

We believe in the same kind of organization that existed in the primitive church; viz, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."—Ephesians 4: 11.

"For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I have appointed thee."—Titus 1: 5.

"Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons."—Philippians 1: 1.

"Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrach, and Saul."—Acts 13: 1.

We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly. We believe that the canon of scripture is not full, but that God, by his Spirit, will continue to reveal his word to man until the end of time.

We believe in the powers and gifts of the everlasting gospel; viz, the gift of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, healing, visions, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, wisdom, charity, brotherly love, etc.

"But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."—1 Corinthians 12: 7-11.

"And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 17, 18.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Corinthians 13: 13.

"Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."—1 Corinthians 14: 1.

"That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Ephesians 1: 17.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."—Galatians 5: 22, 23.

We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression, consequently we believe that the doctrines of a plurality and a community of wives are heresies, and are opposed to the law of God.

"And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him."—Genesis 2: 18.

"Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2: 24.

"Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make thee one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a goodly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."—Malachi 2: 14, 15.

"Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6.

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

"And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

We believe that in all matters of controversy upon the duty of man toward God, and in reference to preparation and fitness for the world to come, the word of God should be decisive and the end of dispute: and that when God directs; man should obey.

We believe that the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, county, and state, and consequently better fitted for the change which cometh at death.

We believe that men should worship God in "spirit and in truth"; and that such worship does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land.

"But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit: and

THE FORUM

"Fee Simple" or "In Trust"?

BY FRANK E. ALMOND

A very comprehensive summary of one of the vital issues in the stewardship plan.

There is much agitation at present in Zion on the question of stewardships and inheritances. Some hold that inheritances are the properties deeded to members, and stewardships the principle upon which these inheritances are worked. Others claim that the inheritance is simply the home of the member, while the stewardship is the special work assigned to him, by which he pays over to the church all surplus over his just wants and needs. The question involved is: Should the stewardship be held in fee simple (that is, that the individual working as a steward should own his stewardship outright without having any "strings attached" to his title to the property) or, Should it only be held in trust for the common good?

Let us give a concrete example: A man comes to Zion with $20,000, which he lays before the Bishop, and receives in return a stewardship worth $5,000. Under good management he might in a few years develop this stewardship to one worth $50,000. Supposing that he were to leave the church at this point, what can he take away with him? One says nothing except his inheritance, which is his home. The other says he should take the original stewardship of $5,000, which (according to this idea) had been deeded to him in fee simple in the beginning. Which of these two ideas is right, and in conformity with the law?

The following are the arguments and counter-arguments for each theory:

The "Fee Simple" Method

That a member should hold as his own and as an inheritance, the original stewardship deeded to him by the Bishop is right because:

(1) It prevents laziness. A member who is forced to buy his inheritance (for such is implied by this method) will not squander the talent, since he will lose out by such a procedure.

(This is refuted by the argument that Zion is not a place where an individual is forced to be good, whether he wants to or not. The law of the gospel is not one of force.)

(2) It strengthens the character of the race. This argument is inferred from the fact that individuals and races have developed only through competition. If an individual has property of his own, it is certain that he will put forth all his energies to make it pay. Thus he will cultivate the power of will and strength of character which the race requires for its existence. If a man has no responsibility (as the other plan suggests) then he will always fall back on the church for assistance, thus weakening his character and contributing to the deterioration of the race.

they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."—John 4: 23, 24.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, allowing all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

The above matter may be had in convenient tract form from the church publishing houses, at 10 for 10 cents, 100 for 75 cents. It makes an excellent tract for initial distribution.—EDITORS.

(This is answered by the argument that competition has been the root of vast labor and social troubles, which we do not want in Zion. We want cooperation, and not competition, such as is understood by this plan. If a man is forced to make good in order that he might live on his stewardship, there is a probable chance that he may make his inheritance pay but at the expense of his brother. Further, it is not true that when the church stands behind a member in his efforts to make good that he loses his stamina; witness the ministry, the managers of the various departments, and the college professors, all of whom are putting forth every effort, without the expectation of any material gain.)

(3) It develops individual initiative. It is a proved fact that private ownership increases individual initiative, while common ownership has not. Inventions are the results of private initiative, and by developing inventive genius in this way the stewardship will become of far greater value to the church and to Zion.

(This is refuted by the statement that it is not true that common ownership has failed to develop initiative. Industries working under the cooperative plan have developed to a high degree the initiative of their workers. Given a high ideal, as was the late war, and we find that with Government control and care private initiative and genius have been developed far more than under any other method. It is then claimed that the gospel provides this high ideal.)

(4) It offers opportunity to men with money to come and buy stewardships and thus help build Zion. There is little chance of wealthy Saints coming to Zion only to receive a stewardship which will deprive them of opportunity to make it pay well to the church, when they can stay out in the world, and at the same time turn over to the church more money.

(This is answered by the statement that this is fallacious. First, it is opposed to the law which expects every member to lay everything before the Bishop and receive a stewardship, according to Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9. Furthermore, it is drawing a distinction in favor of a class, and will fall down in view of the fact that the time is to come when all must flee to Zion for safety. The question then will not be one of money, but of equality.)

(5) It is according to the law. This argument is based mainly on section 51: 1.

"Let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong in the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that it deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land."

From this is inferred, first, that a stewardship is an inheritance (to be his own and to be handed to his children—section 82: 2), and, second, that his stewardship is to be held in fee simple, and if he leaves the church and his stewardship has developed to a greater value, he forfeits all except the original value of his stewardship.

(This is refuted by the argument that what is deeded is the inheritance and not the stewardship. This inheritance is the home, and this inheritance is something which all members may have, whether they happen to be good money makers, or ministers and professors. Along with this inheritance is given the stewardship, both of which constitutes the "portion in Zion.")

(6) It is the opinion of the Bishopric. It has been stated that it is the consensus of opinion of the Order of Bishops that the stewardship should be held in fee simple. It is therefore against the law of God (see section 126:10) for a member to oppose such a ruling, and the holding of inheritances or stewardships in fee simple is the law which should be acceded to.

(This is answered by stating that no such opinion has ever been published or examined by the church in conference assembled, and until this is done no member is bound by such opinion. Until the report is shown to the church it must be concluded that there is no such report.)

Holding "In Trust"

That a member should hold his home as an inheritance, but that his stewardship should be held "in trust" for the common good, is right because:

(1) It develops the cooperative spirit. It is argued that with this method a common ideal will be effected, that instead of a steward trying to make his stewardship pay at the expense of his neighbor, that he will cooperate with him to the good of all.

(This is refuted by the argument that the common ideal can be developed under private ownership just as well as when the stewardship is held in trust, that if a man is actuated by the gospel spirit he will not in any event wilfully injure his neighbor.)

(2) It makes for equality. The argument is advanced that since all are not money makers by nature, it is necessary that those whose talents are along other lines should receive an inheritance equal to the money makers. Since their stewardship may not be in money matters (see section 42:19) they should be guaranteed an inheritance which they may call their own, and which can be given to them by a deed. Such inheritance is the home, which all stewards are privileged to receive. While one man may have money to purchase his inheritance, another has talents to consecrate to the church, and to be equal each should consecrate all that he has, and then receive his inheritance and stewardship as the law requires.

(This is refuted by the argument that it is unfair to the man with means to expect him to come to Zion and give up all that he has made, while another man who may have squandered his living receives an equal share in inheritances.)

(3) It prevents cheating the church. If a man is given a stewardship which is deeded to him, there is a possible chance that later he may prove unfaithful and use his own stewardship to hurt the church. For instance, if a man is deeded eighty acres of land besides his home for an inheritance, and he later proves unfaithful, there is nothing to prevent him making a social menace of his land, or selling it to an outsider, thus spoiling the work of the church in that district to an immeasurable extent. If, however, he is simply guaranteed a home (not the land) he cannot under any circumstances do harm to the church.

(This is refuted by the argument that if the Almighty is in this work, it would be impossible for the fallen Saint to harm the work of God. It is assumed that when the inheritances are assigned, that the Holy Spirit will direct the work of choosing, and it is expected that no one except those who prove themselves faithful will receive an inheritance.)

(4) Is direct in its procedure. According to the article on "Who owns the stewardship?" in the HERALD of February 11, it is argued that it is absurd to expect the steward to pay into the treasury all his surplus over his just wants and needs (according to the law) and at the same time pay for his stewardship in order to have it as his own. It has been questioned whether it is wise or right to take part of the surplus every year and reckon it as a just want in order that he might pay off his debt on his stewardship, and later on to still let him have his just wants and needs, whereas if it was deeded to him outright at the start some of the surplus could be used in improvements on the stewardship. It is contended that the right method is to make him a steward in trust only and guarantee him his just needs and wants as long as he is a faithful worker, and at the same time deed to him a home for his inheritance.

(This argument may be answered as follows: First, since the surplus is given to the church, as well as the price on the land (if such is the stewardship), out of the allowance for just needs and wants, there is nothing lost, since the church can use the money on improvements after the transaction, if necessary. Second, if a man is given a home as his inheritance before he occupies and proves a faithful steward, he might prove faithless at once, and so get a home for nothing.

(5) It is in harmony with the law. It is claimed that it is in harmony with the law because, First, it is necessary for everything to be held for the common good (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1; 101:1; 81:4); second, a steward is to have only his just wants and needs, third, that all are to receive equal opportunity (51:2, 81:4); and fourth, that the stewardship is something that can be taken away (101:2). If, then, a stewardship can be taken from an individual and given to another, it stands to reason that it is not held in fee simple, although the inheritance may be (51:1).

(The argument used to controvert this, is that the inheritance is part of the stewardship, and that while the stewardship may be taken away, yet there is a part of it left which no one can take from the individual. This is claimed to be the original stewardship, without accumulations.)

I have thus far tried to be free from any unwarranted bias, and have presented the arguments as they have appeared in discussion. Since it is very probable that the question will come up for a settlement in the near future, it is to be hoped that many will be able to grasp the fundamental points at issue by this very brief review. The arguments could have been extended to make two or three articles, but the aim has been only to present the argument and counter-argument as they have appeared to the writer.

In the recent sessions of the All-American Farmer-Labor Cooperative Congress at Chicago, some far-reaching conclusions were reached. A program was adopted which provides for a cooperatively owned press, which would eventually include a string of daily papers reflecting the views of the organization. They would even secure control of and establish cooperative paper and pulp mills for the production of print paper for their newspapers. They plan to organize their own cooperatively owned banks and establish credit unions. Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is chairman of the committee on banks, with him are associated the president of the Nebraska Farmers Union, the president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and the secretary-manager of the Trade Union, of Seattle, indicating the scope of the membership in the congress.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Should Women Organize, and How May Such Organizations be Effected?

To have better babies, better children, consequently a better nation, physically, mentally and religiously, is the reason why women should form organizations. Paradoxical, as this statement may seem, it is, nevertheless, true. But why should it appear paradoxical? Because custom and prejudice have drawn the confines of women's activities within the walls of her home, at the most no further than her front gate. Such prejudice has no rational basis. It is as logical to say that the mother bird should confine her care of her fledglings to the nest, and should not follow them out while learning to fly to warn of the approach of strangers. Happily, however, the battle against this custom and prejudice has largely been won and victory is in sight. It is not generally accepted that women's influence should extend beyond the confines of her home to enable her to properly raise her children.

But how should this outward looking influence be expressed? Should it be by individual effort, or by organized effort? We answer, both. It is only the organized effort that concerns us in this article.

Here, again, we run against prejudice. Women's organizations are held in light regard by many. The liquor interests and other similar interests have, of course, tried to belittle the efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Equal Suffrage Leagues, and similar organizations. With regret, we must admit, however, that prejudice against women's organizations is not confined solely to disreputable interests. Many public spirited men and women are imbued with this prejudice. The liquor interests have been able to play upon this prejudice of the better element, and use it to their own advantage; hence, women's organizations have had a severe struggle for proper recognition.

What has been the foundation for this prejudice existing in the minds of good men and women? Some of it lies at the door of women's organizations, themselves. Many of them have been aimless, purposeless, without a comprehensive motive, centered around a few local women who are without any great social vision, and who are seeking to justify their existence, as an organization by "doing something," as disdainful men will say, whether that "something" has any beneficial value or not. That "something" which they do, does, perhaps, serve to bring these women prominently before the community, and in such prominence they will get their reward, and not in the worthiness of the act performed.

But the misuse of a principle does not argue against its right use. The bulk of women's organizations have amply justified their existence. As women's political privileges are increased, her civil and public interests, especially those that affect the lives of her children, will increase. Women, too, are becoming more adept to organized effort. The fight in the past has been to get women to organize, to act together. The fight is still on.

Most of all; women should organize to protect their children. Mother, did you ever stop to figure up just what per cent of the day you and father were the real parents of your adolescent child, and just what per cent of the day some one else was the real parent, in reality? Let us present a common daily routine of an adolescent boy. He is awakened in the morning at seven. He may have some chores to do, or may not. He may have some healthful toilet habits to perform or he may not. But at least, he is under your jurisdiction until 8:15, when he departs for school. He is now legally under the jurisdiction of the school-teacher, who stands in loco parentis (in the place of the parent); but as the school teacher has little supervision of the journeys to and from school, he has practically no influence on the child during this part of the day. The child is really under the influence of the street morals and government. Whatever the police force allow on the streets is that which now influences the child. In fact, the police force becomes his parents.

At 8:35 the child arrives at school. The teacher now becomes his parent. The average school has little or no supervision of the child's time from 8:35 to 9:00, the time for the opening of school. The boy is left to organize his own time, which is generally whiled away with some of his companions, in some sort of desultory conversation, the trend of which may be beneficial or harmful. The school should be prepared to meet this situation, but usually is not. Should parents be interested in this situation?

The child is directly under the supervision of the teacher from 9:00 to 12:00 noon, and from 1.15 to 3.30 p. m. Are we sure that this supervision is as efficient and effective for good, as we, the parents, should desire? Forty minutes of the noon hour are spent on the street, twenty-five minutes under the parents at home and ten minutes under the same casual supervision of the teacher, as we found existed in the morning.

After school, the time is spent in a variety of ways, but we may presume, for the sake of illustrating our point, that our boy does somewhat as follows: From 3.30 to 4.30, he is under the care of the school athletic director; from 4.30 to 5.15 he loafs around the street, into the pool hall or restaurant. At 5.30 he finds himself at home with a few chores to do. He consumes forty-five minutes in doing these chores, and preparing his toilet for the evening meal. Half an hour is spent at the table. From 6.45 to 7.30 he spends his time at home reading the American Magazine. From 7.30 to 9.30 he is away from home, on the street, or in the pool hall, or in the restaurant, or in the moving picture theatre, either with other boys or with his lady friend. At 9.30 he is home, and ready to retire at ten o'clock.

How many different parents has he had during the day? How many different influences has he been under? How many systems and policies of discipline has he undergone? What per cent of the day has he been under your influence? Let us analyze his time.

Under parents;	4 hours, 10 minutes;	17.35% of the time.
Under school;	6 hours, 50 minutes;	28.48% of the time.
Under the street, pool hall, res- taurant, or mov- ing picture;	4 hours;	16.67% of the time.
Asleep;	9 hours;	37.5 % of the time.

Are the four hours of influence of the street, moving pictures, etc., in harmony with your influence, or are they diametrically opposed? Do not these four hours outbalance and destroy all the good influence that you yourself may have during the four hours that the child is directly under your supervision? Are you satisfied that the schools are doing all they can to train your child in the right direction, especially the athletic coach, whose influence over the boy is generally far in excess of any other teacher?

No matter how we, as parents, may feel about it, it is all too true that the influence of the schools is greater than that of the home; it is all too true that the influence of the street, pool hall, restaurant and "movie" far exceeds that of either the school or home. The adolescent child comes to view his father and mother as "out of date." Every good influence that the school or home can exert in one day may be many times overbalanced by the bad influence of a single "movie." In fact the multifarious influences for evil at work on the adolescent child may be fast neutralizing every good habit, and influence that the parents have been able to inculcate into the life of the child since birth.

What is the remedy for this situation? Shall each parent try to meet it single-handed when many of the strongly organized forces of society are opposing his? Obviously, to fight organized effort, the parents must organize.

Before proceeding further, we should like to stop long enough to establish in our minds one main principle of child training. Briefly stated, this principle is that every child should be raised under a policy; definite, permanent, unchanging, one quite prescient in its nature. The parent should not decide "yes" or "no" to the requests of the child upon the spur of the moment. He should not permit too immediate and momentary factors to influence his decision. One great underlying principle should pervade all these decisions. The more all parents of a community are united on this common policy of supervising their children, the better the results. But can even a single family practice such a policy, when many of the social institutions of the community are opposing it?

Union among parents, especially among mothers, is the best step to solve the problem. This union should be motivated by one great, inspiring policy of child training. Such a union would meet with the approval of all right-minded citizens in the long run. It should have for its purpose, first, the spread of propaganda tending toward the breaking down of wrong social institutions. Propaganda must necessarily precede action. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a good example of his kind of work. Its second purpose should be to gain control of all institutions affecting the lives of our children, and to make their policy conform to the policy of the parents.

We have gone a long way toward unity of policy between schools and parents; but this is yet subject to improvement. But we have a long way to get other community institutions to conform. The boy, whose day we delineated above, is subject to many kinds of discipline during the day. The parents, by organized effort, should seek to control the daily life of this boy, especially his leisure hours. The community institutions, the restaurant, the recreation room, the moving picture, are not to be abolished, but to be controlled. Let's do it. Only by getting together can we do it.

But how shall we get together. The first requisite to a successful organization is a great unifying purpose in its existence. This we have already stated. Second, we must have harmony in the methods pursued to obtain our purpose. This will necessitate the giving up of many of our individual notions in favor of the one great object we are after. This many of us are unwilling to do. We fly off at some little difference of opinion. We indulge in the rights of free speech and free conscience too much; all the while our boys and girls are becoming more and more under the control of institutions which are unified for the purpose of making money, whether the children are benefited or not. We must then, be good followers. Have you already allied yourself with women's organizations existing for good purposes? If you haven't, don't expect to get other women to follow you. We must learn to play the game together. Women have been slower in this regard than men. As we said in the beginning, this is our chief problem; we must get women to see the necessity for organization. When that is accomplished, then they must learn to work together. When that is accomplished, then we can go after actual results.

To the woman who wishes to see something accomplished along the line of this article, we should say, first, be a good follower of the clubs already formed for good purposes. Learn to follow others. Then start to preach the necessity of further organization. Don't give up because mothers do not flock to your standard as fast as you think they ought to. Every great and good cause is born in a manager, and needs to pass through many trials of self-sacrifice before it is honored among men.

Educational Advisor

We are pleased to announce the appointment of Sister Lucie H. Sears as educational advisor of the Woman's Auxiliary. In securing Sister Sears we are fortunate in being able to present one so well qualified for this important office. She is at present organizer of the Massachusetts District, a consecrated worker, and an experienced teacher.

The mission of the educational advisor is to assist the women of the church in the selection of courses of study and direct them in their work of preparation for service. We solicit those who desire these advantages to communicate with Sister Sears at her address, 23 Sherman Street, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL.

For Executive Committee Woman's Auxiliary.

This Means You!

Our secretary has sent in the following report blank, with the request that every local auxiliary, every district or stake organization, and every other women's organization in the church, of whatever name or nature, fill out the spaces in such report, and send to her direct, as speedily as possible.

This means you, and it means now! If you were ever in the trying position of having to make out reports of the activities shall be in your hands prior to such report. We are sure how imperative it is that information concerning such societies shall be in your hands prior to such report. We are sure that every woman in the church who is identified with any study class, aid group, or other circle, will desire that she be included in the general report which shall indicate to the heads of our church and auxiliary organizations, just what the women of our church are doing, just what efforts they are making towards the fulfillment of that longed for time, when the "glory of God shall envelop the earth!"

This is not only a time of doing, it is also a time for united doing! It is a time when, if ever, the truth of the old adage "In unity there is strength," is being demonstrated. We see it all around us—in the organizations effected in every line of industrial activity. Why shall we not understand that many things are possible to us when united, which are impossible when attacked singly?

So let us line up, solidly, as a most effective, organized force of womanhood, and show our leaders that we respond to every upward suggestion, discharge faithfully and promptly every known duty, even so (apparently) small a one, as reporting regularly and fully to our general secretary. We hope this appeal will bring a flood of responses, that our sister shall feel repaid for the labor she is putting into this good work.

Paper, "The advantages of organizations among women; how may such be effected?" by Professor A. M. Carmichael, superintendent of public schools, Lamoni, Iowa (in this issue).

Current Event Notes

Have you started keeping a financial account for the year? Here is a suggestion borrowed from the advice of the president of a western college, to the students. Include on your expense side a "fool column" in which you will conscientiously list all your unnecessary expenses. Try it, the result in the course of the year, may be one of the surprises of your life. In a Michigan city two hundred business men have organized a "not a nickel" club, meaning that for the year they will not spend a nickel foolishly. The real necessities of life are few indeed, unless it be true that what were once luxuries have become necessities. Where the line of demarcation is to be drawn might be an interesting question.

A large number of women in the East have started a campaign against the wearing of fur. They have proved that for warmth it is not necessary, as many fabrics are warm as fur, and equally as beautiful. They have started this reform for the relief of suffering, as it is said that most of the fur bearing animals are caught in steel traps. Listen to this taken from the Independence, Missouri, Examiner of recent date. "When a steel trap closes on the leg of an animal escape is impossible. The teeth of the trap bite into the flesh, often splintering the bone, and causing the most intense suffering. Often the misery of the captive is prolonged for hours, or days, as the trapper awaits his own convenience in visiting his traps. Every tiny bit of fur which is used for trimming milady's hat or dress, has cost its hours of agony." Are women tender-hearted, cruel, or just thoughtless.

"Teach geography through pictures," is the slogan of the National Geographic Society, and the idea is taken favorably, as educators are learning more and more the value of visual training. Photographs of foreign lands, their peoples, homes, and costumes, are indeed interesting and of untold educational advantage. The geographic society has formed a department for school service, and from their vast collection, experts have culled material suited to the purpose. These series of picture cards, nine by eleven inches, many of them in colors, with about two hundred words of text, make up the sets of the pictorial geography. Four sets have been issued to date, and others are to follow soon as possible. Those available are "Eskimo life," and "Sahara life"—twenty-five cards in each, and "Land, water, and air," and the "United States," fifty cards in each.

VIOLA V. SHORT.

In these days of frenzied legislation to suppress seditious utterances and anarchistic activities, it is well to be careful lest the rights of free speech, one of the sacred liberties of our constitutional government be restricted. In a recent "appeal to the people of the churches of America," signed by twenty-two eminent clergymen of the United States, especially of the East, they "urge the people of the churches of America to use their influence for the return to that old faith in the fundamental principles of our civil liberty." The character of the appeal and the standing of the men who sign it should emphasize the fact that there are two sides to the matter of suppression of opposition.

LETTERS

From a Pioneer in Picture Work in Church Services

The Massachusetts District, of the New England States, is for the picture machine in the church. At the district conference was presented, asking the church to make an appropriation for the purpose of purchasing projecting apparatus, slides, films, etc., for the use of the missionaries and churches. The motion to adopt the resolution carried unanimously.

The New England States are conservative, but they are also progressive. When one true and tried presiding officer after another spoke in favor of the resolution a sister, after the meeting, observed that the resolution must be all right when such careful men were in favor of it.

The editorial on the moving picture machine, in HERALD of January 21 quotes as follows: "One active missionary in a western field has written the Presidency and Twelve petitioning them to take steps to arrange and provide motion picture films and stereopticon slides for use of missionary propaganda. He suggests as subjects early church scenes, from South America, Central America and Mexico, illustrating archaeological evidence supporting the Book of Mormon, etc."

At the last General Conference held in Lamoni, at the suggestion of President Smith, an organization was perfected called the Graphic Arts Bureau, which has adopted for one of its objects providing just what the western missionary asked for. A number of the brethren gave a dollar each to get the bureau established. Its work has largely been of a preparatory character, but the foundation is now laid and, if funds are appropriated, it can do a useful work in the church.

Our plan is to have projecting machines, slides and films circulating throughout the church for the use of the elders and churches.

About twenty-five years ago I bought an oil-burning "magic lantern" for use in the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Sabbath school. The late W. W. Blair was there when the initial pictures were shown and he highly commended the use of the machine in the school. Later, slides were made to defend the Book of Mormon. Brother Myron H. Bond encouraged that effort to the extent of sending to the HERALD and borrowing Stephens and Catherwood's works so slides could be made from the engravings. The president of the branch, George H. Hulmes (later president of the Independence Stake), also, encouraged me in every way possible to continue the use of the lantern. His son, George Hulmes of Independence, is in charge of the moving picture machine there.

Possibly I was the first one in the church to use the stereopticon for this purpose, and I have been almost continuously using it ever since, and I find it a great aid in my work, especially in defending the Book of Mormon and in presenting the coming forth of the latter-day work.

Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths heard of this effort and asked me to take my machine with me to the Wheeling, West Virginia, conference. One of the elders, appointed by the General Conference, heard what Brother Griffiths had done and wrote a scathing letter to me, denouncing the use of the lantern, saying that God did not work in the dark and that it was the work of the Devil. When I arrived at the conference with my outfit, the matter came up before the body for discussion. Vote was taken and I was asked to deliver two lectures, which I did, the city papers publishing them the next day.

At that conference, a sister prophesied that by that method I would defend the Book of Mormon before thousands of people in many places.

W. H. Garrett and the late Rudolph Etzenhouser, after seeing the slides, got up a set of resolutions commending this method of defending the Book of Mormon. Brother Etzenhouser had made quite a study of the book and he said he never dreamed that there was such a wonderful method of proving the Book of Mormon true from archaeological evidence. Later on he purchased a machine and outfit which, at his death, was given to the Graphic Arts Bureau for the use of the elders.

Since that little conference at Wheeling I have given lectures in many places in the United States, the Society Islands, Australia and the Hawaiian Islands and at the present time I am in Boston, giving them here, intending to go around the district, using the machine in all the churches.

Some may say a stereopticon is all right, but a moving picture machine is all wrong. What makes the picture wrong? Is it because it moves and is very realistic? It is what is put in a stereopticon or moving picture machine that makes it right or wrong. I have confidence in the judgment of the large majority of the presidents of the branches, that they will not permit anything improper to appear and, if the conference appropriates funds for projection purposes, no doubt provision will be made for men of good judgment to supply the proper films and slides.

The sectarian organizations are appreciating the possibilities there are in the use of films and slides for wholesome entertainment and education. The Methodist church has appropriated $40,000,000 for projecting machines, films and slides, the Catholic church $10,000,000 and the Presbyterians, $35,000,000. The Congregationalists and Baptists are preparing to make appropriations. The Lutheran Church has in circulation a three-reel picture of the Garden of Eden.

The millions appropriated by these churches has developed a demand for slides and films of a high order. The largest company of actors ever assembled has been sent over to the Bible lands and now the Bible will be filmed from Genesis to Revelation! These films are being specially prepared and every effort being made to obtain historical accuracy so that they will be highly educational and instructive.

We make no objection to having David C. Cook's picture charts hanging in our Sabbath schools. Some made objection to my little, old, tin oil lantern and now some are making objection to the magnificent moving picture machine. Why object to pictures which pulsate with life and interest and which can be made of immense educational value to the people?

C. EDWARD MILLER.

From England to Zion

We appreciated the thoughtfulness of the Saints as they waved us farewell from the station in Manchester, Stockport, and Birmingham. After we left Birmingham we felt we had severed the last tie and went down to Southampton to sail on October 22.

The voyage across was unpleasant, and we were thirteen days on board. We arrived in New York on November 3 and spent one night in the home of Brother and Sister Box, and spent the following day in the company of Brother and Sister George and Jane Baty. You may understand my feelings on that day as I associated with him who was my father in the gospel, and who had tutored me in gospel work for over four years.

From there, a train journey of two nights and one day brought us to Chicago, and we took a local train for some sixty miles, to visit my sister, where she resides with two cousins. Altogether we spent about two weeks there, though during that time I went on alone to Independence to "spy out the land." I must have been a Joshua or a Caleb for I took back a good report, and I did not find any giants. I brought Sister Worth and the family, and Brother and Sister Lewis and boy down here.

We are rejoicing in the fellowship of the Saints here, and each one has done all in his power to make us welcome. Sister Bullard opened up her home and found us accommodations whilst we were furnishing our house.

Our large packing cases containing all the bedclothes, etc., did not arrive for some time after we reached here, so the neighbors around our home came with an abundance of bedding to supply our needs.

We took a house on Enoch Hill, about half an hour's walk from Independence, and a tram car also runs out in that direction. Enoch Hill Church is situated right opposite our home, so naturally we associated ourselves with that group of Saints.

It is an inspiration to mingle with the Saints there. Almost all the homes around there are occupied by members of the church. I was called to labor as soon as I got there, and was appointed the elder in charge of the group, the previous elder having just moved to another part of Independence. Each group has its elder, priest, teacher, and deacons. Brother Fred Lewis labors in our group as the priest, and we have twenty-six families under our care.

I feel far more busy here than I did in Stockport. There are more meetings to attend, (you can attend five on each Sunday), and many calls for visiting and for administering to the sick ones.

I have been richly blessed since coming here, and sensed the blessing and favors of our heavenly Father as I have tried to fulfill my duties. The joy that has come to me cannot be expressed in words, neither can I begin to express my gratitude for these favors; they have come to me in answer to prayer, for the peculiar experiences I had passed through for some time before I left England had discouraged me and almost crushed me out of the church.

Perhaps it was only God's way of bringing about the severance between me and the Saints and friends in England. Had it not been that I was overwhelmed with the depressing feeling that I had ceased to be of use in the Master's cause, I do not think I could have left you all so easily. As it was I was eager to be away, and I am thankful that I have been guided to this place.

The church here is awakening to the momentous times ahead, and is beginning to make preparation for the ingathering of the Saints.

As yet there is no system or organization to assist the Saints upon this gathering, beyond the love and generosity of the Saints here, but in the future I see the need of a large housing scheme, and labor cooperations where the Saints can find employment amidst congenial surroundings.

I have opened a small motor repair shop and am doing a steady business. The tradesmen around assure me I shall do very well once I get properly known, and when spring opens out. We are all well in health, and very happy and contented.

This is "home." Hattie says that a peculiar, homely feeling possessed her the moment she stepped from the train at the station. We are just surrounded with friends the whole time, and if we do spend time to attend the Sunday afternoon service at the Stone Church, it seems almost impossible to break away from the Saints there. We have sensed it in our conferences when we have gathered together from various parts of England, and now we have that grand feeling all the time.

Each day I am more convinced of the need of the gathering of God's people, and our heavenly Father will so work out the way that it will be possible for all who desire to come to take part in that concourse.

I realize the wisdom of the advice given by the bishopric. Let us not move in haste; consult with them, and seek their counsel and above all, let our motives for gathering be of the noblest. We must not come here expecting to find "flowery beds of ease." Each one must "watch, and fight, and pray," determined to do his greatest in the upbuilding of Zion, and in preparation for the coming of our Lord and Savior.

Oh, the glorious feelings that fill me as I walk in this holy place. I passed the Temple Lot the other evening as I was going to visit a sick brother, and I removed my hat and stood in silent prayer, and whilst the sun was just setting with a glory which words cannot describe, I thought of the glory of the Son of God, at whose brilliance the sun would hide its face, and I prayed for wisdom and grace to so conduct my life that I might be counted worthy to stand with him on that great day.

This is indeed a choice land and favored of the Lord. Whilst we read in the papers of extremes of weather and storms in many parts, we have had weeks of glorious sunshine, brighter than any we should get in the height of sum-

Quorum Notices

To the First Seventy. I find by looking over the minutes of our quorum meetings of last April, 1919, the quorum members were authorized to report from December 31, to December 31, and thus making the year's work close December 31, 1919. The brethren will please overlook this oversight on my part, and report to me your year's work, to 116 South Park Avenue, Independence, Missouri. If you are not expecting to be in attendance at the General Conference, please include your dues, and give any information of interest to the quorum.

Respectfully, in gospel fellowship,

S. S. SMITH,
Quorum Secretary.

Notice to Auditors

As General church auditor, I would like very much to get in touch with the auditor or chairman of the auditing committees of each and every district in the church. Will these officers kindly write me at once, Box 256, Independence, Missouri.

R. B. TROWBRIDGE,
General Church Auditor.

Railroad Rates to General Conference. Correspondence with the authorities in charge of the railway systems elicits the information that under present conditions, under government supervision of the railroads, nothing can be done in granting rates to General Conference. However, it is expected that the roads will be turned over to private management on or about March 1 when the matter will be taken up, and if it be possible to secure rates action will be taken. We think, however, that granting of reduced rates to the conference is very improbable.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

Conference Notices

Southern Indiana, with the Louisville Branch, in their hall, Corner Twenty-fifth and Main Streets, Louisville, Kentucky, at 9 a. m., March 13, Good attendance desired. James E. Warne, president; Charles H. Fish, secretary, 216 East Fifteenth Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

On account of influenza epidemic in LaFlore County, Oklahoma, our district conference was called off till quarantine is lifted, which will take place February 22 at midnight. Conference will convene in Fanshawe, March 6, 10 a. m. and mer in England. The cold here does not feel as penetrating as the English cold; although around Christmas it was three degrees below zero, I was only wearing my usual clothes and lightest overcoat, and did not feel the cold at all.

Our boys are nicely settled at day school, and doing nicely there. I have been appointed superintendent of the Sunday school at our branch, and have a fine school each Sunday morning. It is quite a business to study five Quarterlies so as to be competent to visit the various classes to review them in their studies, and to encourage the teachers. We have twelve classes, besides a home department. Another line of hymn pops up:

"There must be no sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord."

And now, my dear friends, I must draw this letter to a close for I fear our brethren at the Herald Office will think it is too long, and yet I want to tell you all the news.

It is not possible for me to correspond with you all, but I shall try to write to the conferences, so that from there you may know how we fare.

I remain sincerely your brother,

WILLIAM WORTH.

The Bishopric

Northeastern Nebraska District. Temporarily Brother Carl T. Self has been acting as Bishop's agent of the above district, but having also the work of district presidency to care for, we are, upon the recommendation of the district conference, appointing Brother Jay Leeka, 6159 Florence Boulevard, Omaha, Nebraska, as Bishop's agent, to become effective March 1, 1920.

It is with considerable satisfaction that we make this appointment, remembering that his worthy father before him served in the Bishopric and that our heavenly Father has counseled the sons of the active men of the church to prepare to assume the burden which, in time, they should lay down.

I know that Brother Leeka shall receive your support. Brother Self's cooperation in the work of Bishop's agent in other ways has been of value, and is appreciated.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Our Departed Ones

GAULT.—Edith Gault, born at Vanessa, Ontario, March 17, 1882. Was baptized in her youth. Married James D. Gault, August 29, 1906. She leaves a host of friends in the church and out. The seemingly untimely death of Sister Wolsey Grice made it necessary for a double funeral, both caskets being alike and the two sisters being chums in life were laid side by side in the Grandlawn Cemetery. Services were at the church in charge of John Shields, R. D. Bennett and J. A. Grant, the latter being the speaker.

FROYD.—Hans Froyd was born near Stockholm, Sweden, January 31, 1844 and came to the United States at the age of 18. Father killed by the Indians in Utah. Married Ellen Hailey, who preceeded him. He leaves 6 children. Funeral at Long Branch. Sermon by J. J. Cornish, E. S. Fannon in charge.

ANDREWS.—Joseph Franklin Andrews was born December 9, 1882, at Lineville, Kentucky; baptized August 1, 1910, by S. H. Fields. Ordained a teacher in 1919. Leaves wife and 5 children.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The general epidemic of influenza seems to be subsiding somewhat in most places, though in some places it has just appeared. It has seriously affected many lines of industry, notably telephone service. In some of the larger cities, where telephone service is usually very efficiently handled, it has been a common occurrence of late that it was impossible to keep enough operators on duty to handle the business.

CHURCH NEWS

By Wireless: Hubert Case reports that Kish Hawkins and wife will have an Indian tepee at the conference, and an interesting Indian exhibit.

By Wireless: The case of B. R. McGuire versus R. C. Evans will be heard on appeal March 1. Israel A. Smith has been in Toronto arranging for the appeal.

A Daily Ensign

will be published and mailed every day of General Conference.

In this daily will be published all the news of the big conference, the minutes of the business sessions, special comment, and all interesting features and news items.

This paper will give you the news almost as well as being there yourself.

The Holden Progress records with sorrow the passing of Miss Anna Frances Moler, daughter of Elder James and Abigail Moler. She was ill only a few days from influenza and pneumonia, and had been employed as stenographer in the office of the stake presidency.

There is an Up and Doing Club at Elk Mills, Maryland, the president of which is Thomas M. Carr. They are a group of alert and progressive young people who meet once a week for debates, readings, recitations, round table talks and general discussions. They want suggestions for debates and discussions from the Herald readers, either sent direct, or to the Herald for publication. Such things being a matter of general interest, we shall be glad to print lists of debate subjects of vital interest to the church, etc., and invite our readers to contribute for the benefit of not only these young people but the other thousands who want to develop their minds and keep abreast of the times.

Elder C. W. Hawkins, president of the Northern California District, has gotten out a news sheet and an appeal to the Saints of the district. It is in the form of a letter, set into type, and printed on one side of the page. It should be appreciated by the Saints.

The elders in charge of the mass meetings of the elders which are held each day during the General Conference sessions are perfecting their plans for some good sessions. Announcements will be made later.

Elder C. E. Irwin, one of the faculty of Graceland College now on leave for further study, is now at Ames, Iowa, with his family, devoting time to the study of some of our economic problems. He is now beginning a series of experiments at the State College under the experiment station, which will likely develop some useful data regarding cooperation among farmers in Iowa and neighboring States.

Have you anything in the way of photographic apparatus that you are not using—lens, cameras and any equipment? We have frequent calls for these articles. If you have kindly write to either C. E. Miller, 742, Broad Street, Providence, Rhode Island, or to A. H. Knowlton, 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri.—The Graphic Arts Bureau.

General publicity manager A. E. McKim, was in Lamoni a day recently in connection with his special work. We are pleased to note the comprehensive plans being developed and put into operation whereby the church may be very effectively served in a most important branch of its work. All departments of church activity requiring intelligent publicity to extend its work will soon come to appreciate this new department, which has absorbed the Bureau of Publicity, taken over the gospel literature work, and will function in some capacities never hitherto established.

Following his trip to Washington recently, Augustine Dwyer writes the Presidency that he will sail on the Empress of Japan for Palestine and Turkey, via Japan, about March 1. He is field secretary for the United States in the Near East Relief, incorporated by act of Congress. His present address is 539 Peyton Building, Spokane, Washington.

The Creston (Iowa) Plain Dealer has been exceptionally liberal with the Saints of that place, publishing in full all but one of a series of seven sermons in a series by the pastor, Elder George B. Hall. The copy we have seen contains about two and a half columns of matter, the sermon being on "The sin against the Holy Ghost, or the unpardonable sin." The subject announced for the following week was "Every one according to his work."

To those who are interested in the making of lantern slides we will be able to furnish an excellent instruction book put out by the Eastman Kodak Company. This will give you complete instructions how to do this work yourself. If you would like one write to C. E. Miller, 742 Broad Street, Providence, Rhode Island, or to A. H. Knowlton, 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri.—The Graphic Arts Bureau.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Independence, Missouri. In spite of the tribulation occasioned by the universal affliction in the homes of the city, from the prevailing epidemic of influenza, the Saints have been richly blessed of late with spiritual blessings. At 11 a. m. on Sunday, the 15th a memorial service was held at the church in honor of Sister Birdie Sterritt, a graduate nurse who gave her life in the serving of others. In the afternoon at a splendid meeting in charge of W. W. Smith, J. F. Curtis, and R. V. Hopkins, the spirit of devotion and service was manifested, and the gifts of the gospel were manifested. Three prophecies were given, one through Brother Hopkins to William Madison, who is chief of the Chippewa tribe of Indians, directing him to labor among his people. Some verses were read, which had been given by inspiration. It was a most pleasing and profitable service.

Lamoni, Iowa. The Religio has been serving the community very acceptably of late. The classes on Sunday evening are large and interested in such subjects as industrial Zion, teacher training, etc., while the evening services following have been occupied by the society with lectures on important current topics. Heman Hale Smith recently lectured on Zion's ideals, and Floyd M. McDowell on the 22d on education and Zion. The first series of moving pictures at the college has been concluded and enough subscribed without effort to insure another. The Boy Scouts are doing good work. The Sunday school has recently been put through various individual tests to determine best procedure in revision of Quarterly course to meet average demands. F. M. McDowell and A. M. Carmichael are making the tests.

Sioux City, Iowa. The branch and auxiliaries elected officers for 1920 and are working together with renewed zeal. George M. Vandell, branch president; Mrs. A. M. Calhoun, president Woman's Auxiliary; P. J. Zimmerman, Sunday school superintendent, and Jay E. Keck, Religio president were reelected, in their respective departments. As a result of "cottage meetings" in one part of the city, captained by Elder Charles J. Smith, seven were baptized, three adults and four children. The second entertainment given by the coordinating committee took place Thursday evening, February 12. Luncheon was served in the dining hall by the Woman's Auxiliary. A musical program, in which our newly organized eight-piece orchestra made its first public appearance, was furnished by Religio talent. The members of the orchestra have been the recipients of many compliments for their excellent renditions. The boy movement is growing rapidly. Our troop known as Troop 17, has grown from twelve active scouts to over twenty, twelve of whom are members of the church.

Sandusky, Michigan. The young people of the branch organized themselves into an orchestra last fall and have been very successful. The town folk are amazed at the progress they have made in so short a time. They have expended $1,800 for instruments, and will likely raise this amount to $2,500. The local papers are profuse with praise over their accomplishment. There are fifteen members now, with a number waiting for their instruments.

Fulton, Iowa. District President Amos Berve closed a three-weeks series of services at Maquoketa, using the German Lutheran church and having large and attentive audiences. I. A. Chamberlain, of Long Grove, assisted him the first week. Many favorable comments were heard and it is believed much good was done and the work strengthened for reunion next August. Many deaths of those not members of the church are resulting from influenza.

Colorado Springs, Colorado. J. Eberling is the pastor, and like a tender shepherd looks after his sheep, the priesthood working with him in spirit of unity. Brother Sade is still very ill and missed sadly. J. Curtis is convalescing after a serious illness.

Fort Collins, Colorado. The epidemic of influenza is not so severe as last year nor so many fatalities. Smallpox, measles, and accidents have rather demoralized things but church services are continued.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S VIEW ON DEMOCRACY IN CHURCH GOVERNMENT

A Call to Build Zion

Extracts from an address by President Frederick M. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, January 4, 1920.

One of the great things that stands between us and progress to-day is a wrong conception of democracy, one which will permit a man, solely because he holds the priesthood and does not happen to think as the superior officers do, to indulge in any kind of an attack that he pleases on his superior officers, in the name of democracy. It is utterly wrong, and in the name of heaven, every honest-hearted, well-intentioned, and whole-souled Latter Day Saint ought to protest against it, because they ought to distinguish between the right of free speech and license of speech, or, in other words, they ought to distinguish between the right to oppose a thing before it has become a law and to protest against it after it has become law. A distinction should be recognized.

If Zion is to be redeemed, if Zion is to be established, it is going to demand a strongly centralized government. I say that advisedly. I would like to burn that into the heart of every Latter Day Saint. It is going to take a strongly organized, strongly centralized government.

I think I hear some of you say "Despotism!" Please distinguish between that and despotism—between an organization with a strongly centralized administrative head, and despotism. I will grant you that a strongly centralized government may become a despotism if the chief is allowed the right to make all the laws; but so long as the glorious rights of democracy are preserved and the people themselves say what are the laws to which they shall be compelled to yield obedience, there is absolutely no chance for that man to become a despot.

Here is a church organization—and I want to say to you that as I examine the government of this church from its various angles and with the benefit of the observation I have made of the experiences of other men, the organization of this church challenges my admiration, because it preserves the rights of the people. Not even the president of the church, functioning as your prophet, seer, and revelator, can present to you a thing for your acceptance that you do not have a right to examine; and you can reject it, even though there comes a "thus saith the Lord." You have the right to examine it and can reject it if you so desire. You may reject the word of God, himself, in doing it; but you have that right. Hence, it is utterly impossible for anyone to fasten upon you a law that you do not approve of. You determine what are the laws that he executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.

A word as to the so-called "recall." You will notice that a number of the States are reading into their statutes the right to recall any of their officers for maladministration. We have that right in this State. It is a very valuable part of the statutes of any State. Has it ever occurred to you that this church has the recall privilege and has had it from the very first? And our system of recall is much more easily worked and much more effective than that used by any of the States, for in our church you do not have to get out a signed petition and get a certain number of signers in order to oust any general officer. All you have to do is to wait for General Conference and if one more than one half of the delegates on the floor say so, not one of your general church officers can hold over for another year. We are not allowed to appeal to a court or to ask a reason, but simply have to yield to the voice of the body. So there isn't very much danger of a despot living over a year, is there? You would not need to suffer very long until off would come his official head.

Now then, Zion is to be established (and this is what I would like to have you carry away as the theme of the afternoon) first by law and order, as God set it down, and it must have a strongly centralized and localized powerful government to administer its affairs, from the head down. It is a government that must work in righteousness, and at the same time it demands that in all righteousness it shall be supported by the people, and that cannot be done if it is being undermined by insidious gossip.

I wonder how long it will be until we have Zion. My concern has been intensified of late. Forces are at work which threaten our Government, and the men at Washington know this well. Discord and chaos are liable to break out over night and the institutions upon which we lean for our safeguard may crumble, and our protection be weakened.

I wish I could tell you some of the things I feel I know; and the great concern that has stirred me at times is, When that time of chaos comes will this people be prepared to furnish the place of safety God has intended that we should? If we are going to prepare that place, we must be up and doing. The time of need may be nearer than you think. Whether it be five years, or one, or whether it be fifty, it makes no difference to us in regard to our determination to do everything in our power to establish the things God has told us we should establish. We cannot do it, let me repeat, unless we as a people present a solid front to the enemies of humanity; and we are not presenting that front, that solid front, because some of the so-called liberties of free speech are being distorted into license that ought not to be tolerated. In injuring individuals, they injure officials; in injuring officials, they injure the body in which the office is held.

We have one of the most admirable forms of government in existence. It is so admirable, so magnificent, so far-reaching, and so splendid in its organization that we do not appreciate it. . . .

I wonder what we are going to do about it all. Are we going to really work in earnest? Are we going to get together?

The Law and Stewardships

In the midst of many theories, it is well to return occasionally to consider what the law says, and what is necessarily and evidently inferred from its terms.

The objection to all industry being held by the church as a body, is first, that every experience of the past has shown that the actual control soon gravitates into a few hands.

In the New Testament church no man considered aught that he had his own. This worked well for the time, but by the Roman Catholic Church it was interpreted so as to encourage the turning over of land and industry to the church. The result was that in the Middle Ages the church controlled the larger part of the land and of the industry.

I wish I could say in the utmost feeling of fraternity, "Let us get together and build Zion; let us begin now; let us start now; let us do something that every day will make us feel that we are working toward the establishment of Zion!" . . .

Perhaps I have spoken enough. I have spoken of what lies close to my heart; I have given it to you as my contribution as your leader. What are you going to do with it? Are you going to support and get behind the movement? We need not only to implore God every night as we go to our secret closets for prayer, but we need also to rise from our knees and say that the morning light that shall come following our night of rest shall find us active in carrying out the thing that shall contribute to the bringing about of the conditions that we prayed for. Let us help God establish Zion!

It was because of this in the time of Henry VIII, the monasteries were confiscated. It was because of this that in recent years the French and the Spanish Governments have forced a division between the church and state, and set aside the concordat, and have attempted to secure again for their people freedom of administration. It is because of this that we find the church prohibited the taking of large quantities of land in Missouri and elsewhere in the United States. Some of those who consider the value of a man owning his own stewardship have in consideration the law of the land, and the experience of past ages frequently repeated.

Some will reply, "Well, we will have a revolution and set aside or change the law," but that does not change the fact that we would substitute for the experience of the past, an untried scheme.

That under the law of God we are all stewards is clear. That we should hold our property, be it more or less, in the interest of the common good is also clear. It is clear that much of the work of the church, including the presiding bishopric, must be done by legal trustees. This includes the various institutions and departments of church work.

It is clear as we look around the world that enterprise and management have much to do with the development of natural resources and in increasing the product of labor. Regardless of the question of a legal trusteeship men should receive an adequate recompense for their labors. This permits of self-denial, of sacrifice, of saving, and of the consecration and the paying of tithing. This makes for the development of individual character.

The law of the church clearly provides that a man may receive his inheritance and his stewardship for his own property:

"Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

Again we read:

"All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

This evidently infers that some parents will have the means to provide their children with an inheritance. Other passages may be quoted but we refrain for the present.

It seems evident that the divine plan calls for individual endeavor and individual possession of property, and for a full and complete consecration and cooperation.

So a man considers that which he has, as held by him in moral trust for God. Such methods will be employed as will secure the largest possible return, and the surplus or excess will be turned into the common treasury of the church.

The Order of Enoch provides for a clear case of trusteeship. But the rules there given apparently are to those who administer that order, and not to the church membership at large. Still it is true that the law of consecration, tithing, and surplus applies to every man, woman, and child in the church, but not of constraint or compulsion. S. A. B.

Cooperation the Keynote of Our Success

When we think of Russia we think of chaos. When Russia turned to Bolshevism we rather universally expected final dissolution and ruin. Yet Russia persists—even to the point of flourishing. The supreme council, representing the allied powers of Europe, are willing to make peace with Russia through the medium of the cooperative societies, of itself a recognition by them of the power by which struggling Russia has been able to maintain her existence.

On the other hand, contrasted with the efforts of the Russian Bear to learn to walk as men, we turn to the city of Enoch and the success attained by them—based on the most wholesome kind of cooperation. We think of the golden era of Book of Mormon times when peace and unity and love brought great riches—all through Christian cooperation.

The possibilities of united effort, interwoven with the love of God toward our neighbors are almost beyond expression. As a mere business proposition the world has demonstrated and is demonstrating what can be done when groups of people cooperate instead of competing. What can we not do when along with the best principles of business organization developed by the thoughtful men of the world we shall combine the true ideals of service to the people of God?

It may be that we shall literally be driven to do the things we have so long contemplated in the forming of colonization and cooperative associations. The economic pressure brought to bear on us by the war, the rising prices, the curtailment of production, the extravagant habits of the people, are all having their effect on us, and as a means of self-preservation we may be compelled to unite our talents and our means to control production and distribution for ourselves. We are sorry it has not already been accomplished and in operation now when we need so many things as a church, but there is no need in wasting our time pining over the past. The failures in communism and socialistic enterprises in the world simply should be buoys to mark the location of ledges or rocks which might wreck our crafts.

We must come to a common recognition of what cooperation is meaning to the world. We should be so intelligently alert that we shall each of us be able to function in a cooperative state of operation, whether our part be as entrepreneurs or the simpler responsibility of caring for the home that shall be necessary to shelter our bodies and provide the necessities of life.

No one can afford to say it does not concern him, for every one of us will be affected, whether we will or not. True, some may have the greater responsibility of caring for the larger industries of production and manufacture or the general spiritual interests of the church, but no democracy like ours can exist and flourish without an intelligent constituency who understand the principles underlying their procedure. A mere blind following of methods prescribed by others may be as good as an example but poor in individual results. We must always be susceptible to development.

We concede the fact that underlying all our social problems is the dominant one of purity of heart and holiness of purpose. There is no doubting the fact that without an overwhelming desire to develop our brothers and sisters to the utmost, we shall continue to develop selfishness and greed and envy.

But we all know how difficult it is to arrive at our ideal state in our dealings with each other so long as we are operating under our present competitive system. We maintain that until we organize ourselves into associations and orders and groups in order to eliminate the evils of our present methods in dealing with each other, we shall not be able fully to develop ourselves according to the demands that will be made upon us. With this is associated the necessity of agreeing on a working basis for our dealings with each other and the holding and development of properties.

A great deal is being said about cooperation and stewardships, but it is not all mere talk. The idea is taking the world by storm. We quote from the New International Year Book for 1918; note the astonishing progress it is making:

"One of the most interesting sociological consequences of the war has been the great impetus given by it to the cooperative movement. This was no doubt due in large part to the high prices and the necessity of greater economy in household budgets; but it was due in part also to the intensification of community feeling which such a great common effort as war induces. From every principal country at war came reports of the increased resort to cooperative forms of economic effort."

In Austria the number of societies increased in 1917, in spite of great activities in municipal food distribution, from 476 to 482 during the year. On June 1, 1917, the French Wholesale Society had 482 members and the total business for 1918 was reported as $8,400,000. In Switzerland the membership in local societies increased during 1917 from 310,000 to 325,000 and had combined sales of $38,000,000, an increase of 20 per cent. A cooperative life insurance society was also added.

"In Canada," we are informed, "the movement has spread rapidly among farmers, miners, and industrial workers. Thus the United Farmers Cooperative Society of Ontario adopted the policy of buying up all the cheese factories in the province, thus putting the business on a unified cooperative basis. The movement in Nova Scotia increased fifty per cent in volume of business in 1917.

And in Russia we find a wonderful example of cooperation. Again we quote from the 1918 Year Book:

"Nowhere in the world have cooperative societies developed so rapidly in recent years or played so great a political and economical role as in Russia. The International Review of Agricultural Economics stated that the retail societies had increased from 10,000 with 10,000,000 members on January 1, 1914, to 18,000 with 15,000,000 members three years later. Since then the growth has been even more rapid; late in 1918 the Russian Cooperator claimed 47,000 societies, with more than 30,000,000 members. In the latter figure, however, were included only 22,000 retail societies, the remainder being devoted to the greatest variety of human interests, though largely agricultural. Thus at Liskovo the society ran a store, a school for weavers, an oil factory, a loan and savings bank, a bath house, and a laundry. There are cooperative societies for building, burial, toy making, fire insurance, life insurance, education, telephones, electric lightning, moving pictures, creameries, libraries, animal breeding, fish propagation, plant improvement, and purchasing, selling, and credit societies for numerous agricultural purposes. All of the multifarious societies are coordinated on the financial side by the Moscow Narodny Bank, one of the largest in Russia. The turnover of the distributive or retail groups in 1916 was estimated at $750,000,000. A very striking feature of the recent development has been the great number and variety of producing societies formed. Thus in one year there were begun cooperative groups for the manufacture of chemicals, soap, candy, tobacco, leather, preserved fish, matches, paper, mineral waters, and sunflower oil."

The Russians are a simple-hearted, trustful folk, hospitable, and easy going. They have faith in each other, and a unifying religious influence easily fuses them into relative groups whose interests naturally pool.

Yet in other countries where commercialism has been developed to a more intensive state and where racial traits are not so simple, they succeed. Note Switzerland, a medley of races, whose cooperative societies in 1917 did a total of $17,900,000 worth of business.

So though we are a composite church, a fusion of many races and religions, we have every incentive to enter wholeheartedly into our cooperative plan. We should be ready in sufficient number to effect colonization schemes in accordance with section 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants. "The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church . . . are authorized to devise methods of procedure," but God demands that we be ready to proceed.

E. D. MOORE.

Patriotism and Loyalty

Faguet, in The Dread of Responsibility, infers that many men of his nation have avoided marriage because of the dread of responsibility. In other words, the reasons are selfish, and in the end would rather be destructive to society itself.

Again, it has been pointed out that to many, family life is very selfish. This is true in some instances, as with the man who prayed for "me and my wife, my son John and his wife; us four and no more." Yet that is no real reason for the destruction of the family.

In the majority of cases, the human affection engendered therein means the highest idealism in the life of the man; his self-denial for his loved ones, and the sacrifice of the wife and mother for her husband and her children.

So with patriotism, or love for country. Some men have appealed to it in order to forward their selfish ends. To others it has meant and still means self interest. It means a disposition to take any means, fair or foul, to forward a national interest, with a disregard, if not a contempt of other nations.

Then some, blinded by this fact, think that honor and patriotism have no real meaning, and lose sight of the high ideals implied in those terms.

The Christian Science Monitor, in an editorial on February 7, rather clearly states the special case as follows:

"Thus the social and political seesaw is weighted at one end with 'divine right,' and, at the other, with the Bolshevik; and thus, whilst the poets analyze patriotism as righteousness, the psychologists dismiss it as a 'reflex egoism.' The whole question of course depends upon what you mean by patriotism, and this involves the entire subject of country. In probing this the poet is apt to lose himself in an emotion, just as the psychologist is to mire himself in the clay of human reason: the one can see nothing but a Curtius, the other only a Tartuffe. It is in just such contradictions that human hopes suffer continuous shipwreck, and this is just because men will insist on steering by a material rather than a spiritual compass. Even Shakespeare, who wrote those lines of wonderful insight and beauty.

"All places that the eye of heaven visits turned the next moment to the composition of the splendid gasconade of Henry V, at Agincourt and Harfleur.

"It is in this very tendency of Shakespeare that the psychologist finds his text, and the moralist his thunderbolt. Patriotism, declares Herbert Spencer, is 'extended selfishness,' and so it is if patriotism is permitted to narrow the affections. The founder of the Christian religion put this perfectly when he demanded, 'Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?' And then, answering himself, after his manner, replied, 'Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.' It is easy enough to understand, then, how it is that patriotism, from the time of the Greeks, has been at once the summum bonum and the 'whipping boy' of society. It has not been for want of definition, but by reason of the perpetuation of the tribe instinct, itself only the 'extended selfishness' of the family. . . .

"The lesson is one specially to be taken by heart, by all nations, in an era of class-consciousness. Reformations have never yet been consummated by substituting King Stork for King Log. The scorpions of Rehoboam were no more efficacious to redeem Judah than the whips of Solomon. The one and the only way, and so the way from which Judah and Israel equally revolted, was the way of Isaiah, 'Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.' Patriotism, in plain English, must begin at home, in the individual consciousness. It is quite impossible; for instance, to be a profiteer and to be a patriot, no matter how loudly you may cheer the flag or sing the national anthem; just as impossible as it is to achieve the same end, while shirking your job or putting sand in the sugar. Clean hands and a clean heart are as essential to patriotism as they are to spiritual salvation, for the simple reason that, metaphysically understood, the one is impossible without the other."

The simple facts are, that nearly every ideal has been abused by misapplication at some time or other. The man of family lives more completely than does the man who lives for himself alone. The man who is a good citizen is a better husband and father. The woman who is a good citizen is a better wife and mother.

It is true that some men and some women neglect the family

Where Our Responsibility^s Lies

BY PETER ANDERSON

"I recognize the fact that I am responsible to Jesus Christ more than to anybody else because I acknowledge him as the Master Builder of the church."

(A sermon delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, January 11, 1920.)

To start with, I wish to read only a part of a verse, found in the sixteenth chapter of Matthew, the nineteenth verse: "And upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." As I said, this is only a part of the verse. I may not use the text, yet I may refer to it if I am permitted to say what I would like to, and I can assure you that I only have the development and the edification and the upbuilding of the Saints at heart.

Most of you are aware that this is the language of Christ. He started the conversation with his disciples, and the subject of that conversation was the son of man, Christ himself. He concludes about as I have read.

There are some things about the work of Christ that are difficult to comprehend. We should not wonder at it. We may have been connected with this church for a number of years, but we are still learning and must continue to learn. Some things that we have learned have to be unlearned; but that is no disgrace, nor should it discourage us—we should continue to learn and where it is necessary we should unlearn so that we might learn as we ought to.

Various Interpretations of "Rock"

Now, I am aware that even among our brethren the meaning of the part of this verse that I have read has been variously interpreted. Some have reached one conclusion and some have reached another, and while it may appear as though they are at variance they might agree quite well if they only look at it right. Some will tell you (and I believe it comes down to us as a tradition of the elders) that revelation was the rock upon which Christ was to build his church, present revelation, continued revelation, etc. And those traditions are not so bad if we correctly understand them; but we may sometimes interpret a tradition in the wrong way, the same as with scripture, and as it comes down to us from generation to generation it may have a different meaning entirely from what was intended in the start.

I agree to that interpretation. I agree to some other interpretations, too, because I see but little difference after all; and I believe that revelation is the rock upon which Christ would build his church if you make it broad enough, but if you confine it to the statement, "Jesus said unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church," etc., and say that in order to build upon the rock we must have a similar revelation, I do not think that is making it broad enough; but if you will take the interpretation of the Apostle Paul in that wonderful statement in his writings to Timothy where he says, "Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh. . . ." I agree with you perfectly that revelation is the foundation upon which Christ would build his church, because that revelation in Jesus Christ includes all that Christ did and all that he said, and it is broad as eternity itself. If you take it that way, I agree with you: if you narrow it down to anything else, I don't.

Others have said that Christ was the rock, and I believe that some of our elders even have had disputes and discussions with some and claimed that that was not true. Now, it is true, and I do not see why we should object to it. Don't we believe in Jesus Christ in the fullest sense? Don't we believe in all he stood for and stands for to-day? Why, we certainly do. Don't we stand for him as a bodily manifestation of God, the Almighty? Of course we do. All those things are included in Jesus Christ as a bodily manifestation of God, hence when the statement is made that Jesus Christ is that rock why should we object to it? There is no reason for it. It is merely a misunderstanding. But when you compare the two statements you will find that they agree exactly, and where one text differs from the other it is simply by reason of narrowing the thing down. They agree exactly if you take it right.

Others have said—and I believe them, too—that the gospel is the rock upon which Christ would build his church. I say I agree to that because it stands for everything that is essential to salvation; hence, the Apostle Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." Can you ask for anything more? Can you get anything more than that, the power of God unto salvation? The manifestation of Jesus Christ, the wisdom and the power of God manifested in the gospel of Jesus Christ, isn't that broad enough?

Now, I say there are at least three different terms or interpretations, if you please, that people may dispute about, yet they all mean the same; there is no difference. "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." You can readily see that after a man has been placed upon that rock and he remains upon that rock there is no power on earth or in hell that can prevail against him. This might be about all I care to say about that. I looked over this question from different angles and comparing one statement with another, found in the three standard books of the church, I find that they all focus in the same thing, and whether you term that thing Jesus Christ, or revelation or the gospel you reach the same point; hence, there is no room for contention, there is no room for argument at all if you just broaden it a little and accept everything as focusing in Jesus Christ.

Plenty of Room for Everybody

But there is something connected with this thought of building that I might add is of far more importance, that is than to discuss as to what is meant by this Rock, and that is the actual working out in our lives as individuals and as a church the great problem before us to-day, and in that working out I believe that every member of the body should have an intelligent part. I believe there is plenty of room for everybody. There is plenty of room to work, there is a sphere of action for everyone, and that should be occupied with the privilege of initiative upon the part of everyone. What is true of the individual is also true of every quorum, is true of every department in the church: they should be permitted to carry out their own work in accordance with the law that has been given for the government, the instruction, and the upbuilding of the church.

I believe a careful study of the Doctrine and Covenants will clearly prove this thought to you. There is no such thing permitted in this process of building up the church as one man lording it over another; there is no such thing as coercion; there is no such thing as subordination, because that is destructive of agency, and anything and everything that is destructive of agency is not of God. We read in the Inspired Version of the Scriptures that the Devil in the beginning sought to destroy the agency of man; and how did he do it? He sought to lead, to persuade men to do as he wanted, contrary to that which God had said. He wanted to do the thinking; he wanted to do the directing; and he wanted man to yield to him and to act in accordance with his thinking and directing.

Now Christ did not work in that way. Here is where we should make the comparison, not between man and man, but the comparison between the adversary of man and the Savior of man, the manner, the procedure in which they work; and this is quite in accord with the text, "Upon this rock will I build my church." That does not mean merely that I will get members into the church, but after they become members of the church I will build them up in order that they may become lively stones in my house, the temple of God.

No Coercion by Christ

There are certain principles upon which this is to be done, and Christ could not do violence to those principles, because in so doing he would violate the mind of his Father. Can you find anywhere in what is recorded about Christ and his ministry among men that he ever used coercion in trying to build his people up in the most holy faith? Can you find anywhere where he says, "You must"? Did he enforce obedience?

There is one incident in the life of Christ as recorded in the New Testament Scriptures that always appealed to me. I believe it has appealed to me more and stronger than any other text along this line. On a certain occasion a number of people who believed in Christ were gathered together, and with him were his principal disciples and representatives and when he sought to teach those people a certain thing that they probably never heard before and it seemed to them unreasonable they turned away from him. I presume the Savior looked upon them with sadness, but he didn't call them back and say, "You must." He simply turned to his disciples and said, "Will you also go away?" No coercion, no forcing at all, but I presume he said that with a good deal of sadness of tone. Finally one spoke and said, "Where shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life!"

That is the point exactly. It must be written deep down in our hearts and in our minds that He has the words of eternal life, and those words of eternal life can help us, can save us, can direct us and bring us eternal life. And unless that dawns upon us and sinks down deep into our souls we are not what we ought to be. It must reach our consciousness; we must sense the meaning—we must appreciate the meaning, and that means we must use our own agency, which involves choice. No coercion, no forcing. And let me tell you, Saints, that is the principle upon which Christ would bring his church.

"I will build my church." I am glad to say to-day that Jesus Christ is still the Master Builder of his church, and nothing that is contrary to the principles that he announced can tend toward the building of his church; hence, I started in the beginning, that while we may be learning right along, some things we may have to unlearn, like a train that gets on the wrong track—they have to back up until they come to the main line switch where they switched off and then go on the main line again.

"This Is My Church"

I might want to read a little from the Doctrine and Covenants, and if possible I want to lay a little stress on some things that I believe have a bearing on this principle of building the church, but first I want to say this, that this church belongs to no man in particular, it belongs to everybody. You may think me selfish, but I don't care if you do, when I tell you that I consider this my church, that it belongs to me as much as it does to any other man living. Now, you deny it if you please. I don't care; you won't hurt my feelings any. I say this church belongs to me as much as it does to any man living, and I recognize the fact that I am responsible to Jesus Christ more than to anybody else because I acknowledge him as the Master Builder of the church. But I am not going to find fault with you if you make the same assertion. I wish you would. "This is my church as much as it is anybody else's." And I want you to feel it deep down in your hearts. My reason for this is that I want everyone of the membership and of the priesthood to realize and sense this fact, that there is in connection with this a responsibility that we want to carry and we want to carry it with honor and integrity before God and man.

I do not know that we fully sense the importance of the work in which we are engaged. I sometimes think that we do not. If we don't, Saints, let's try to. There is a dignity about it that I do not think that we realize or manifest as we ought to, and if you read carefully a number of statements in the Doctrine and Covenants I believe you will be aroused to a realization of it.

I want to read a little from the preface to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In section 1, paragraph 4, reference is made to certain things coming upon the world. Those calamities have only just started. There will be no lasting peace in the world. "Safe for democracy!" You don't need to believe it; it is not going to be. "Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, junior, and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world." Then part of our work is to warn the people of those things that are coming, not to go out and tell them that these things are all passed away and that we should believe President Wilson and others when they say that the world is safe for democracy. With all due regard for the motives and the efforts of these men, I may say that I differ from them. I don't believe it, because the Lord has said differently, and distinctly, "And all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets." Then this work came forth in fulfillment of prophecy, and there is no other work that has come forth in fulfillment of prophecy. The wonderful predictions that have been recorded in the Scripture must have their fulfillment in the work of the later days as established by God, hence you can readily see when I say I wish you could understand and sense the dignity and the importance attaching to this work as being a fulfillment of that which the prophets of old have seen, I believe we should walk more circumspectly and wisely than we do.

Weak Things to Break Down the Mighty

"The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellowman, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world." Can you sense in this connection (I hope so) the statement I made that everyone of us should not only try to understand the importance of the work but that we should recognize the work as ours and that we are entitled to something that must come directly from the Master Builder of the church that will enable us to be lively stones of that temple, each one speaking in the name of God, or the Lord, Jesus Christ. It is our right; it is our privilege as citizens of the kingdom of God by reason of the inspiration that is in the church and must extend, like the life blood that is in the body, to every part and to every member. We are entitled to it; we should seek for it; we should pray for it; we should live for it. There must come to every mind and heart a degree of light, and in proportion to that degree of light we are responsible to God and to the body and I would to God we could sense more fully the responsibility that God has placed upon us in this way. I want to say in this connection, that so far as I am concerned I am not anxious to force my opinions upon anybody—I never was, because I believe it to be wrong. I am not prepared to say that unless you accept my opinions I am going to quit, because that would be cowardly, and I am not a coward.

Now, then, I believe we can apply this all right that every member of the body of Christ, coming under the direction of Jesus Christ through the Spirit as the Master Builder of the church, we must sense the responsibility resting upon us in this wonderful work and act accordingly.

The Development of Faith

Before I go any further, let me call your attention to a statement made by the Apostle Paul. You know, Paul and I agree so far. He is recognized as pretty good authority and I would be in pretty good company by being in company with him. I want to read a statement found in the fourth chapter of Ephesians which is one of my favorite texts. You know we all have hobbies and we cannot get away from them. The sixteenth verse: "From whom the whole body," speaking of the church now, "fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth," and I don't care whether you refer this to the different departments or quorums of the church or every individual member of the body, would apply just the same, "according to the effectual working in the measure of every part," and what does it do? "maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." And the Doctrine and Covenants says "that faith also might increase in the earth."

Under the existing systems, when the church was organized, faith, such as was once delivered to the saints, was an impossibility, because they did not recognize or believe or sense certain fundamentals necessary to the development of faith. The main reason for the introduction of this work was that faith might increase in the earth. Now, that means, as the scripture says, the "faith once delivered to the Saints." "That mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."

God Selects His Own Ministry

I do not know what you are going to make of this. I know what I make of it. I make this of it and I do not care whether or not you agree with me, that God always did claim the right to select his own ministry, and he always claimed the right to call and qualify his ministry, and he always claimed the right to use them in accordance with his own will and purpose, and the idea of our making ministers for him is rather a mistake. God may surprise us in the future, as he has done in the past, but he will always act like himself. There are certain indications in the revelations of the Doctrine and Covenants that certain ones are called; yes, the sons of certain ones are called. But to be called and to be chosen is two different things. Many are called but few are chosen. There may be many called and there may be few chosen. You will notice as a rule that God chooses those who are trying to make something out of themselves, to use their talents and acquire more talents for the service and the use of the Master. That is usually where the calling comes—where the election comes, too.

I don't believe that we can make ministers for God. I sometimes think, and you cannot keep me from thinking—I wake up most every night and for hours I lay thinking about the present condition of the church and the world.

David and Goliath

I read to-day a story in the Old Testament Scriptures that I think is quite fitting when applied in the right way. It is about that shepherd boy, David. You remember the Israelites had war with the Philistines and among them there was a big fellow, a giant. He was a twelve-footer, or more than that, and he was strong, of course, accordingly. He was armed as a warrior and he had all the weapons that were common to warriors in those days. He came out in front of his camp every morning and challenged the Israelites to come out to battle, and all the Israelites were afraid of him. Finally, this little fellow David came along and he was surprised that the Israelites were afraid, and he offered to go out and fight the giant. They took him to Saul, who said to him, "Why, you can't fight him!" He thought David couldn't fight such a giant as he was such a little fellow and the giant was so big and so well armed. But David said to him that he had had a little tussle with some animal out in the field and that he whipped a lion and a bear. Saul asked him how he did it and he replied, "God was with me." When Saul heard that he said, "All right, we will let you fight the giant." They then brought forth all the weapons and things that are necessary for a successful warrior to wear and they fixed him up in good shape, but he couldn't wear them, they absolutely didn't fit. So they took the paraphernalia all off him and he went out to the brook and gathered some little stones, his natural weapons, and went out to fight with the giant. You all know the result.

Wrong Method in Preparing the Davids

I sometimes feel that is just the way we are trying to fit out our missionaries: we must fit them out with all the paraphernalia of a minister according to the world, so as to appear respectable, so as to meet them on their own ground, so as to meet them with their own arguments. That is not the Lord's way, and if it was, why did he establish this work? Because people were doing the wrong thing and were going the wrong way, he wanted them to turn around. That is why he established this church. How did he do it? He called his ministers, and instead of choosing a university-bred professor or something like that to lead his people, what did he do? He chose little David. Isn't that strange? It is just the way God used to do. He chose a young man about fifteen years of age; and he didn't tell him, "Now, you go to college or a university and study psychology, and homiletics, and all of those things, and after so many years come along and I will use you." He put him in a school, and I wish many of us could go to the same school. He told him, "At the end of each year you go to a certain place and there a messenger will meet you and he will open your understanding to certain passages of scripture that will have a bearing on the work that I want you to do."

So much has been said and written about education the last couple of years! But to me it is very much like beating the air. So far as education is concerned, this church always believed in education, and to say that we must get away from the idea that God cannot use an educated man, is bagging the question, but foremost in our lives must operate the education that come from on high, from Jesus Christ, the Master Builder, through the influence of the spirit of revelation, that we may understand the work that he wants us to do among men. These other things sometimes are in the way, and I would to God that every man that is called to the ministry of this church would look inside of himself and discover the natural ability that he possesses, and say, "O God, take me just as I am and help me to develop the natural ability that is in me, and use me as you want to use me in thy service. I may not be according to some other peoples ideas of a minister, but I will serve thee according to my ability."

Eloquence Not Essentially Effectiveness

What was it that made certain ministers of this church such a wonderful success in bringing people into the gospel years and years ago when they could hardly read their texts? They were worse off than I was. It was trying to do this, trying to feel their littleness, trying to realize their responsibility as representatives of Jesus Christ, as preachers of the truth, and they felt their dependence to that extent that they sought diligently and they obtained the spiritual aid without which no man can preach the gospel of Christ.

We have a man in the church to-day, a seventy and a successful missionary, who is worse in language than I am: he is very faulty in pronunciation. I once heard a man say that that very defect was that man's best asset. "God works in mysterious ways his wonder to perform." That man brings more people into his church than our eloquent preachers. I am simply calling attention to the fact that God had his own weapons, and if he selects such individuals to reach a certain class, why should we discourage it?

Everyone has his place in the church. There is plenty of room for work and plenty of room for expansion for everyone if they will just work in accordance with the mind and will of God. Let Christ be the Master Builder of his church, not only the one who founded it, but let him continue as the Master Builder, and let us not try by our own human ingenuity to dethrone Jesus Christ, the Master Builder of his church, in dispensing with the light and power of the Holy Ghost, because without them we are no more than any other church. Our work, and our distinctive work in the world, is not to compete with other people along the line of the sciences and all those things. Our distinctive work is to reveal the saving truth of Jesus the Christ and reveal his character in our lives, preach the truth as it is in Christ and lift up the warning voice of the gospel to a dying world, that those who will may be saved, and in this we must have the power of the Spirit, for preaching without the power of the Spirit, though it may be done eloquently, is not preaching the gospel. I wish you could get away from the idea that because a person makes a nice speech and tells the truth he is necessarily preaching the gospel. He is not. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 50: 5.)

Change Needed in Delegate System

"Upon this rock I will build my church." There are many things that I would like to say, but I see the time is passing very rapidly. I would not like to say anything that might be reflective on any individual. I am not dealing with individuals; I am dealing with the work of Christ as I see it. I want you distinctly to understand that I have been trying to study that work ever since I came into the church, and this year it will be forty years ago. I was young and desirous of knowing the truth, and I do not believe that God misled me or suffered me to be misled; hence my convictions as to what this work is, its principles, the spirit of it, have reached the very bottom of my heart, and anything that is contrary to those convictions would be very hard to accept.

Now, there are a number of things in the law of God to the church that we do not make use of to-day. We say sometimes after the General Conferences that the people had an opportunity to express themselves, to speak their minds and throw all possible light upon every subject that came up. I have never made a speech in General Conference yet. I have yet to make my maiden speech on the conference floor. It may come this spring. I don't know. But I have been very observing and I have watched movements whenever I have been present and I have noticed this, that sometimes members who do not understand the depth and the importance of the questions coming before the conference are appointed delegates just because they are going to conference and they want a seat on the floor. They have no business there. They are simply taking up room that ought to be occupied by somebody else who knows something. I have noticed, many times, that men who are apt at airing themselves will use hours and hours of the conference time, which is always very valuable, and when they have tired out the people, some one hurries to get up and move the "previous question." The previous question carries, and we are told that everybody had the privilege of saying what he wanted to! I have observed that in conferences. Perhaps the best arguments, the soundest reason, were never heard.

Besides, our delegate system is wrong. Let me tell you, in some way in every important move that is made by the church the consensus of opinion of the Saints and the ministry should be had. What are our quorums for? No man has any right, if he has any regard for his fellow servants who are as intensely and deeply interested in the work of Christ as he is, to throw matters before an audience, half of which may not understand or sense the meaning of them, instead of placing those matters before the quorums where the law places them. What is this quorum organization for? I will tell you.

Something took place in the church about 1836. It is called a general assembly. The revelations were adopted as the word of God to govern the church. That, of course, was important, but let me tell you there is a problem before this church to-day of equal importance and that is, How may we proceed to carry out the building up of Zion? How may we carry out the laws even relating to stake organizations, which are not being carried out? Hence, we might, so far as that is concerned, as well have remained as districts. The laws pertaining to stake organizations are not being carried out. In this instance, away back there, the matter was placed before the different quorums of the church. That was building in accordance with the mind of Christ, because the law specifies that this, that, and the others quorums are equal in their decisions in matters pertaining to the church. Read section 104 carefully. After these quorums had had this matter under consideration, the Presidency, the Twelve, the seventies, the high priests, the bishops, the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, considering and discussing this matter, they brought in a decision which was unanimous and which was confirmed by the conference and accepted as the rule to govern, as the law of the church.

Now, if we do anything worth while along the other line, it should come about in the same way.

Settling Things Right

I don't know, but some seem to think that our next conference is going to be a sort of a stormy time. Let me tell you, we can afford to be calm, we can afford to study and read and think and pray, which we ought to do, and behave ourselves as Latter Day Saints should do. We can afford to await developments, and we can afford to adopt the saying that I believe is universally accepted in this democratic country of ours, that "nothing is settled until it is settled right," and though it may be settled wrong and may go on wrong for a while, it will finally be settled right.

Now, so far as our last General Conference was concerned, there was nothing of importance settled. Absolutely nothing! After the noise that we made up there at Lamoni—well, it may have to be all gone over again. It ought to be all gone over again, and then it will be settled right and this church can move on. We must reach the harmony of thought, of feeling, of desire, of action contemplated in the celestial law, not the mind of some individual or some individuals. That is not the basis of union for this church. The basis of union for this church is the celestial law, and that is the only lasting union or the only union worth while. Anything other than that is simply temporary; it is not permanent; it is not lasting. We should recognize Christ as the Master Builder of this church, the directing influence, that through the influence of his Spirit we all may come to that unity, then we can go ahead. Wouldn't that be nice?

The quorums should assemble; the quorums should discuss; the quorums should decide; and then you will have no trouble in getting the right kind of a vote from the people, because they know that the combined wisdom of the different quorums that Christ has chosen and selected and indorsed by his Spirit must be right.

Redemption of Zion as a Problem in Education

BY FLOYD M. McDOWELL

"We shall never be completely endowed with the Spirit of God unless we make every effort to inform ourselves to the utmost in our chosen fields."

Meaning of Terms Used

It is a recognized fact that most controversies arise out of a disagreement as to the meaning of the terms involved, and that when the definitions are given the controversy ends. Of no problem is this more true than the problem of "education" as discussed from the viewpoint of our church. To the writer nothing could be more helpful at present than to get our church people to see more clearly just what the term "education" means in its true sense.

In this article, the "Redemption of Zion as a problem in education," we mean by the term the "Redemption of Zion," the complete working out of the Zionistic plan as provided in the law of God to this church. This would include all the work necessary to bring about the realization of this goal and would include the missionary as well as local effort.

By the term "education" as used in this article we mean that process of change, growth, or development which must take place in order than we both individually and collectively will not only be willing to work for the attaining of the above goal, but also will be willing to live together in Zion in peace and harmony after it is once established. In this sense education includes whatever methods within school or out, in the pulpit or press, in Sunday school, or Religio, in study or recreation, that will bring about this necessary change. The problem of education, then, is one of controlling these agencies in such a way as will most completely and speedily bring about such a change.

The reader must certainly admit that the church is not ready as yet to work as a unit for the redemption of Zion. He must certainly admit that individually we are not prepared for the task we must accomplish, and that neither are we ready to live together in peace and harmony under Zionistic conditions. In other words a change must be brought about, and this task, that of bringing about this change, is fundamentally a problem of education in the broad sense which we have defined above.

It is the thesis of this paper that without this education we shall never redeem Zion, or in other words, the redemption of Zion absolutely requires in us a change which can only be brought about by education in the true sense of the term.

How Is Zion to be Redeemed?

As a point of departure for this discussion we may well ask, "How is Zion to be redeemed?" To this there are three possible answers:

1. God is to do it all.
2. We are to do it all.
3. We are to do all we can, and then ask God's help for the rest.

When put in this form the first two contentions certainly seem absurd. There is absolutely no proof to be found anywhere that God is going to bring down Zion "ready made" for us like a piece of clothing from a mail order house. Notwithstanding this fact, the writer frequently hears the statement "Oh! we shall never redeem Zion until Christ comes to do it for us." Most of our people would admit at once that they did not expect God to do it all, yet in actual practice it seems as though we are continuing to hope that somehow, some way, the work which we have been called to do will be done for us, and all we will have to do will be to move in and occupy. This point of view must be changed and that speedily if the goal of our dreams, the redemption of Zion, is ever to be realized.

The second plan, that of man doing it all, is equally absurd. We do not believe that man alone without the divine help can work out these conditions. Through the countless ages of the past man has attempted many times in his own strength to bring about the much talked of and dreamed of Utopian conditions, but all to no avail.

The writer believes that religion and the guidance of the Divine Being expressed through his Holy Spirit is absolutely essential to a solution of our social ills.

The third of the above methods must then be accepted as correct. Man must do all within his power to work toward the desired goal and in doing such seek divine guidance and help.

As a people we have been very severe in our condemnation of the sectarian world for their view that Jesus did it all. We have constantly pointed out that man must work out his own soul's salvation through compliance with the teachings of Christ. Yet it appears that when we as church people are face to face with the solution of the problem for which this church was established, that we are willing to say: "Let Jesus do it for us," and each day neglect the personal preparation and effort which we must make before we are deserving of asking God for help.

It is absolutely impossible for the writer to conceive how some of our church people, through the pulpit and press, continually attempt to discourage those who are making the effort to train their talents and to make of themselves "Workmen that need not be ashamed." How long, Oh! how long, are we going to continue to ask God to furnish for us what we can furnish and should furnish for ourselves? How can some of our leading men in the face of the instructions in the church books, that we should study all good books, that we should study languages and nations, that we should study the law of God and of man, that we should study things above the earth and under the earth, continue to use their efforts in the opposite direction? Such can only be explained by a complete misconception of either the meaning of the redemption of Zion, or the meaning of education, or both. The writer is convinced that throughout the church there has been and still is on the part of many of our people a gross misunderstanding of both of these problems.

In the remaining paragraphs of this article let us endeavor to see just how closely the work of the redemption of Zion is allied to the problem of education.

The Problem of the Ages

In the first place the problem that we must solve in the redemption of Zion is identical with the historical problem of education. As stated by a modern writer this problem is "How can relationships between individuals, classes, or even nations, and races become settled and harmonious?" Two seemingly opposed elements in this problem are the individual and society. The difficulty is that of finding a proper adjustment between the interests of one and the interests of the other. This has been the question which runs through the whole history of education.

The Greek philosophers three hundred years before Christ defined their task as that of "providing for individuality, but at the same time requiring some moral bonds relating the individuals to his fellows." In a similar way the message of Christ may be defined as an effort to bring about a harmony between man and his fellows.

In modern times the failure to apply Christianity has meant failure in bringing about the solution of this problem. The writer firmly believes that it is the mission of the church to show by redeeming Zion that this age-long struggle between the individual and society can be ended. He believes, in fact, that Zion is the answer to this age-long struggle, that it will be that ideal society towards which mankind has looked, and for which he has dreamed. Shall we ever reach this goal, you ask? This brings us to our next point.

We Must Be Changed

Practically all modern writers are agreed as to the type of social order that we want. They all agree that war, crime, disease, poverty, must be eliminated. Without much difficulty they construct on paper this beautiful picture of an ideal society, but they fail to show us how it can be accomplished. They fail at exactly the same point as does socialism, anarchism, bolshevism, and the various other "ism's" of to-day, namely in that they fail to provide for a change of the individual who hopes to live in this ideal society.

Without this change the writer believes it will be absolutely impossible for the world to reach this beautiful Utopian condition.

In that agency that would hope to succeed in the solution of this problem there must be that happy combination between a means of personal purification and a means of social and industrial organization. This combination we believe we have in the church.

The object of the first principles of the gospel is personal purification. The object of industrial Zion is social organization. Both are absolutely necessary to the solution to the problem of the ages. Both are absolutely necessary to the redemption of Zion. The point we wish to make here is that there must be put into operation along with, and as a part of the gospel plan, all of those agencies which have as a goal the perfecting of the individual, preparing him in every way for the final acceptance in actual practice of the "fatherhood of God" and the "brotherhood of man."

Some one has said that instead of talking about making the world "safe for democracy" we had better talk about making mankind fit to live in a democracy. When we read of the thousands of strikes and of the constant riots and social unrest we are led to wonder after all whether Americans are fit to live in a democracy. If this is true of democracy, will it not be even more true of the ideal Zion which we hope to establish?

The fact is that we are not ready as individuals to live in Zion, if by any miracle it could be established to-day. We must be changed. We must be purified. We must be educated to higher ideals. All of the forces for good in the world must be utilized to bring us to a complete knowledge of the truth, for only such a knowledge of truth will make us free.

Trained Workers Required

The writer believes that the work necessary for the redemption of Zion cannot possibly be accomplished until we get an army of trained workers. If the reader will but think a moment of the fact that Zion must be independent of the rest of the world, and that she must produce, transport, and distribute that which she needs to consume. In this she must compete with the conditions as they exist. How can all this be successfully accomplished without vast armies of trained farmers, manufacturers, merchants, and business men of all classes is impossible to see.

But this is not all, the work of carrying the gospel message into foreign countries involves far more than preaching the written word. Any even partially informed person knows that the social conditions in these countries are many times, very bad indeed. Often before actual preaching can be accomplished disease must be treated, cleanliness and sanitation secured. The Protestant churches of to-day are training hundreds of teachers, doctors, and nurses for this work. They are sending these people out with statistics in regard to the conditions in the country in which they expect to visit. It is impossible to see how the mere handful of foreign missionaries that we have to send as a church can even begin to compete with these other churches in Christianizing the world.

It is absolutely beyond the ability of the writer to conceive why some of our church people will continue to insist that we should send into these foreign fields men and women who have not even learned the language of the country in which they expect to labor. It is impossible to conceive how some continue to oppose the little effort that is being made by the church this year to prepare in a feeble way a little handful of men and women for this service.

What justification is there for the view that it is wrong for those who expect to represent the church in the missionary field to study the languages, the history, the customs, and traditions of the country in which they expect to labor? What justification can be found for claiming that they must be sent out wholly unprepared for the great task of preaching the gospel to all the nations of the earth?

There is another aspect to the problem that must be considered, that of the successful training of our young people to meet the new problems of the church in the new age. It is the writer's opinion that we have come far short in the matter of successful instruction of our young people in the minimum essentials of our church doctrine. For this purpose the Sunday school and Religio must in the future assume a new significance. Under this regime the teacher becomes one of the most important of church workers, providing that she is a teacher who is thoroughly trained in modern pedagogy.

However much we may desire to do so, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the human mind develops according to certain laws, that there are laws of teaching, and in this modern age it is absolutely inexcusable that one should argue that one who expects to teach should attempt to do so without understanding these laws.

We challenge anyone to produce from outside our church books any rational argument to the effect that teachers should remain ignorant of these laws. The writer is of the opinion that we have hardly touched the problem as a church of successfully inculcating in our young people the necessary knowledge, habits, and attitudes, of a wide-awake Latter Day Saint.

An Analogy

We have a church sanitarium, at its head a physician, who is also an elder in the church. Shall we say that because he holds the priesthood that he consequently will need to know less about medicine? Shall we expect him to be ignorant of the most recent facts of medicine and surgery? Shall we expect him to be careless about cleanliness and sanitation? Shall we say that he needs fewer instruments, and that these instruments need less care in respect to cleanliness and fitness? All this because this man is supposed to have the Spirit of God with him in his work? In other words, does the physician of our sanitarium need less training? Can he safely be permitted to violate the established laws? Can he safely be allowed to remain in ignorance of these laws simply because he is a member of the church, and thus has been promised God's Holy Spirit? What one of us would want one of our loved ones to go to the sanitarium for a critical operation, even though we knew that an administration would be possible at any moment, if we were reasonably sure that because he felt that he could rely upon administration, the church physician had been slack in his preparation for this operation, had failed to study up on the critical points in the case, had been careless in preparing a sufficient number of clean utensils, had been careless so far as the cleansing of his own person is concerned, and did not have at hand everything possible in the way of the latest improvements and recognized necessities of a safe, modern, operating room?

Surely administration will help when we do our part, but who would say that a just God would be expected to answer the prayer of our elder under the above conditions?

Are we not doing in our teaching and preaching what we would not allow a physician in our sanitarium to do? Are we not presuming that the Latter Day Saint preacher and teacher, because he is supposed to have the Spirit of God with him needs to know less about the laws of psychology and pedagogy, that he can safely remain in ignorance of these laws, that he can even violate these laws because of the expected presence of the Spirit?

If the church physician expects help from administration only after he has done all he can to safeguard the interests of the patient, is it not reasonable to say that the teacher or preacher of our church to-day may only expect help from the Spirit of God when he has done all within his power to prepare himself to work efficiently in his chosen field?

We have forgotten this fact, that just as there are fundamental and eternal truths and laws which underlie success in medicine and surgery, so there are fundamental truths and laws which underlie success in teaching and preaching. God understands these laws and can control them, but most certainly he expects us to do all within our power to understand these laws and comply with them, in addition to asking his help.

Have we not too long thought that because a man or woman is a good sincere Latter Day Saint that he is of necessity then a successful farmer, architect, bookbinder, miner, teacher, doctor, or preacher? Who cannot point to instances without number of the failure of such an idea? Who would advocate that a Latter Day Saint farmer should remain ignorant of the knowledge of modern agriculture simply because he is a Latter Day Saint, and supposed to have the Spirit of God with him in his work? Who would say that the Latter Day Saint bookbinder should remain ignorant of the most recent and best methods of binding books, simply because he is a Latter Day Saint, and supposed to have the Spirit of God in his work?

Why then should we say that our Sunday school teachers and our preachers need not study psychology and pedagogy because they are supposed to have the Spirit of God with them in their work, and yet this is what has been said, and is being said by some of our church people to-day. They admit that the farmer should have scientific knowledge of farming, that the doctor should have the best available knowledge and skill, but they are not willing to admit that the teacher and preacher who is concerned primarily with the souls of men needs any preparation other than that which God is willing to give him in direct inspiration.

The Task Before the Church One of Education

The problem before this church is fundamentally one of teaching. The man who has not heard the gospel story must be taught. The member of the church who does not yet understand the gospel in its fullness must be taught, and the growing boys and girls of this generation and coming generations must be taught. Is it not entirely beyond the bounds of reason to argue that all of this teaching shall be done by people unprepared from the standpoint of the knowledge of the laws of teaching, and the laws of learning, simply because they represent God in their work, and are supposed to have his Spirit with them?

Why is it that we continually hear from the pulpit and press of our church, either directly or by inference, that which tends to discourage the idea of preparing of our young people and missionaries, for church work? In the church to-day there are those supported by the church who are spending their time attacking the feeble attempt made by the church to prepare its young people to solve the problems of the church. How long shall this continue?

In the recent number of the HERALD there appeared an article by Brother Elbert A. Smith, stating some of the problems involved in carrying on the missionary work in the South Sea Islands. The writer was amazed at the number and difficulty of these problems. Some of them demand not days, but years of preparation, if they are to be solved at all successfully. The Latter Day Saint representative who does all within his power to prepare himself with the fundamental knowledge and skill of his chosen field will solve these problems, and thousand on thousands of these people will be redeemed.

The Latter Day Saint missionary who continues to feel that he does not need such preparation simply because he is a minister for Christ, will not only be lacking in that essential knowledge, but also in the mind of the writer will be deprived of that Holy Spirit which he might otherwise have.

With such representaives the progress of the church will be very slow indeed, and instead of being the light of the world, we will be following in the light of others.

Please do not mistake me, I am saying nothing against those in times past having been called to go on a moment's notice to these foreign fields, they have done a great work; they have done the best they could, and God has blessed them, but who will not say that they might have done far more had they been prepared more completely for this work?

We formerly used the sickle and cradle in harvesting our grain. Our forefathers did the best they could with such crude instruments, and no doubt the Lord was with them, but who is there that will argue that such was good enough, and that the modern reaper should not be used?

Conclusions

In this discussion the writer has endeavored to make clear the following points:

1. The problem which we must solve in the redemption of Zion is the problem that mankind has struggled with for ages. It is, "How can mankind live together in peace and harmony?" The solution of this problem is one of education in the broad sense of that term. If the solution is ever to be found, if Zion is ever to be redeemed, all the agencies for good which are available must be put into operation. The control of these agencies is fundamentally one of education.

2. We are in our present state unprepared to live with our brethren under Zion conditions, in other words a change must be made. The producing of this change is again fundamentally one of education. All spiritual and educational forces which can be mustered must be put to work to perfect the individual so that he will be willing to comply with the conditions absolutely required of one who expects to dwell in Zion.

3. The work of the Redemption of Zion involves a large number of very serious problems. The solution of these problems can be found only through the employment of armies of trained workers. God working alone will not redeem Zion, man working alone cannot, but man working together with God will solve this problem. In this work man will be a partner with God and in the words of Brother Elbert Smith, "We must not expect God to choose an ignoramus as a partner." God has endowed man with certain talents. Throughout our church books we have constant evidence that he intends man to develop these talents to the utmost, and that when man has done all within his power he is expected to call upon God for assistance.

If the farmer cannot expect to get results by merely sitting on his porch and praying, we can hardly expect the teacher, preacher, doctor, or business man to get results in that manner. We must be trained in our chosen field. Anything short of that cannot please God; anything less than that will never redeem Zion.

4. Let it be said once and for all that the writer does not wish to infer that education will in any sense supplant spiritually. Zion will never be redeemed without the complete functioning of the Spirit of God. On the other hand we shall never be completely endowed with the Spirit of God unless we make every effort within our power individually and collectively to make use of the opportunity now available to inform ourselves to the utmost in our chosen field.

The writer takes the position in this paper without fear of successful contradiction that anyone who fails to make every reasonable effort to prepare himself in his chosen field will be condemned of God. This preparation is what we mean by education, and whether or not Zion will be redeemed depends upon our willingness to make this preparation, hence upon education.

"I most earnestly appeal to the women of the land to substitute in their study clubs—at least during these days of world reconstruction, the fundamentals of social and national life, the rights, powers and duties of citizens in a free country, for the always interesting, but far less important study of Greek architecture, Roman philosophy, Browning, Shakespeare, Whitman, or Poe. "Knowledge is power." "Ignorance" is not "bliss," and "wisdom" is not "folly."—Martin J. Wade, in Lessons in Americanism.

The Omaha Bee mentions a colored girl who came and asked for a permit to attend the evening school.

"Do you not attend the day schools?" was asked.

"Oh, yes, but my grandmother wants to go to night school, and I am going to take her."

The permit was granted without further question.

This is an age in which all feel the necessity of better preparation.

At the Student Volunteer Convention in Des Moines in January, Doctor A. M. Zwemer delivered a lecture reported under the title "The challenge and glory of the difficult," in which he cites some notable instances of success under difficulties in foreign mission work. Among other things he said: "Linguistic talent was never in such demand as it is to-day in the great cities of the Near and Far East." He believes there should be preparation for translation of the Scriptures into languages and dialects which have never yet received the imprint of the message.

THE FORUM

The Old Paths

BY H. N. HANSEN

"I am frank to confess that I am for the old-fashioned gospel, and for its promulgation in the Lord's way."

As the precepts and principles of the gospel have never been, and never will be changed to suit the caprices of man, so can we not believe that the God-given method for their presentation to the world can be improved upon. When we seek to pattern after the prevailing customs of the world, we are following the example of former-day Israel, when they sought a king in order to be like the nations around them, instead of being governed by Jehovah and remaining his peculiar people.

These thoughts were revived by reading in "The Forum" a communication under the heading: "Are moving pictures necessary?" I can with all my heart indorse the following statement in said article: "In all dispensations the decline of God's people date from the day they began to copy after the world."

Not long ago I heard from a Latter Day Saint pulpit, that no one could know or understand what spirituality was, or meant, who had not studied psychology. If we must believe that, then the basis for our work is not what we have claimed, as the great majority of the Saints, who have testified in behalf of the latter-day work, knew nothing of what is styled mental philosophy or psychology, and hence could not know what they were talking about. I reject that position, however, preferring to believe with Paul that "the world by wisdom did not know God," and that "our faith should not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." With the Master I feel to rejoice, when he exclaimed, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and the prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so Father; for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

I was impressed with the grand and wonderful opportunity that is ours, when in the thanksgiving sermon by President E. A. Smith, I read the suggestion that among the reasons for which we ought to give thanks was the privilege of being in partnership with God. While the thought was not new, it made an impression which still lingers, and I wonder if we have in reality considered the importance and greatness of our calling? To me comes the thought, What manner of men ought we to be? We have received the instruction: "If you receive not the spirit, ye shall not teach," and it would be folly to attempt to do so in our own wisdom and strength. When the Master sent his servants into the world, he did not advise them to take a course in psychology first, nor in any other of the so-called sciences of the day, but he commanded them to wait for the endowment of the Spirit, giving them the assurance that he would not forsake them.

If we to-day are in partnership with God, why not expect him to do as much for us as he promised to do, and did do for his servants in the past? Surely he is without respect of person, and his power is not limited to any particular age.

We have recently heard much about the elders, who, it is said, did not believe in education, but held to the theory that they need only to open their mouths and God would fill them; but is this doing justice to the men of the past?

I think by such statements injury is being done to the cause, and dishonor to the faithful laborers in the early days of the church, who manfully toiled that they might preach the God-given message, often enduring the scorns and persecution of the world. I have been a member of the church for nearly fifty-three years, yet I have never heard from any of the elders the statement that we did not need to be studious, but "only open our mouths and God would fill them." If such position was ever taken by any, I did not hear of it, and I incline to think it is only an imagination, and that some are simply beating the air, while they may fancy that they are striking at a frightful bugaboo that has wrought serious harm in some quarters.

Let us be fair to the memory of the men who, amidst privation and difficulties, which to-day is not comprehended, labored to establish the church, and let us not misrepresent them. When we seek to belittle their labors, we are striking at the very foundation upon which we claim to stand, for what have we to build upon, if the work of the past is not what it has been claimed to be? If any one of those early elders used to say: "Only open your mouth and God will fill it," could not the ones who now seem to be informed, give us his name, or is there no record by which it can be proven?

The only thing that in any way resembles this oft-repeated statement, as far as I have been able to find, is in the Doctrine and Covenants, but this we have received as the word of the Lord, and surely can not be what the critics of to-day have in mind. This statement reads as follows:

"Verily, I say unto you, that the field is white already unto harvest; wherefore, thrust in your sickles, and reap with all your might. Open your mouths and they shall be filled; and you shall become even as Nephi of old, who journeyed from Jerusalem in the wilderness; yea, open your mouths and spare not, and you shall be laden with sheaves upon your backs, for lo, I am with you; yea, open your mouths and they shall be filled, saying, Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

Here then is the promise that the Lord will fill his servant's mouths, and thus help them declare his word. To be sure, the word "only" is not in the text, and man must do his part. It has ever been so and will continue to be, and I have never heard anything to the contrary from any of the elders of the past.

Again we have the Lord's method presented in the following:

"Neither take ye thought beforehand what he shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour, that portion that shall be needed unto every man."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14.

This was spoken unto the ministry in that early day, and whether it accords with man's wisdom or not, must be regarded as God's plan. It may be said that the Lord, by his Spirit, can assist the minister, days beforehand in the preparation of his sermon, and I would not wish to put any restrictions on the Lord. I think, however, instead of theorizing upon what the Lord might do, the question with us should be: What has he directed us to do, and in what way has he offered his assistance? When he commands his servants always to treasure up in their minds the words of life, promising that he, in the very hour, will give that portion needed for every man, then we must look upon that as God's plan, upon which it would be folly to endeavor to improve.

I would not be an extremist, and do not think that a picture machine in the church, would necessarily desecrate the house of the Lord, if only used to illustrate certain lectures on special subjects, as suggested in late editorials, but to substitute machine preaching for the old-time preaching under the Spirit's direction, I would be compelled to look upon as a gross departure from the ways of the Lord. System Versus Delinquency

"Oh dear! I don't see why we never know what we're going to sing. It seems like our chorister never does make up her mind what we are going to sing until it is just time to sing it, and then we go into it scarcely knowing what we have to do, and we do so poorly for that reason. Why can't she plan ahead for her work?"

This is not merely a hypothetical remark; the substance of it has been heard many times, in various forms. It is concerned with the altogether too frequent tendency of many of our choristers to dilly dally in their work; to wait until the last moment before caring for the thing that should be cared for in ample season.

In the ability to "plan ahead" lies much of the success of life. Choristers in particular should have this quality of mind, for the conduct of their work necessitates it. Yet how often do we find our choristers lacking in this very essential quality and their work rendered less effectual because of it. It will not do to try to account for it on the plea that the "artistic temperament" and the faculties of business and good management do not go hand in hand, for there are too many instances of those who, the highest in endowment of the artistic nature, have been foremost in business acumen and management. Art and system are not incongruous; neither is the possession of genius incompatible with habits of orderliness. The time has ceased when talent must be allied to Bohemianism to command recognition.

We once knew a chorister that lacked the ability to plan ahead, and his case will serve as a concrete illustration of the principles we are trying to teach. Choir meeting time would come regularly, as it had a habit of doing, and would find him unprepared in the line of a selection of anthems for the practice. The members would gather and find him deeply theory may be right that the eye is more effectual as an instrument for teaching, than the ear, but there is a something in man more ready to recognize and discern gospel truths than either eye or ear.

I am making this statement based upon actual experience that I cannot and do not wish to forget. I remember well when the light, power, and blessed influence of the gospel first touched my soul; it came not in word only, but in power, and with much assurance. I was at the time a lad in my seventeenth year, only little more than two years after I had left the land of my birth. I understood the English language only in part, hence it could not appeal to me very strongly through the ear. It was presented to me without pictures, pomp or show, and the men who brought the message were among the humble, and from the lower station among the sons of men, but the inner man was reached in a way that I can not explain, only in the language of one of old, when he said: "But there is a spirit in men, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."

I am frank to confess that I am for the old-fashioned gospel, and for its promulgation in the Lord's own way, and I am not inclined to abandon any of the ancient landmarks, that have done service for the men of the past. The gospel as preached by Peter, James, and Paul, and their associates, is good enough for us, and is just what the world needs to-day, and the Lord's method for its delivery to man, is better than any that man can devise. The Lord's admonition through the prophet seems right to the point, when he said: "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest to your souls."

engrossed in the work of examining anthems, a pile of which lay before him. The time for beginning the practice would arrive and still no selection had been completed. After many moments had elapsed, during which time the choir should have been at work, he would emerge with his selection and the choir would begin their preparation of the work. But what shall we reckon of the valuable time lost that should have been spent in practice; or what compensation could have been made for the loss of prestige and influence which this chorister's example brought upon the choir.

We knew another chorister. In fact we have "known" quite a number of choristers in our time, of various shades and characters. This chorister lacked the faculty of "making up his mind." It is true that he possessed an abundance of that most valuable asset but just didn't seem to have the ability to "make it up." Anthems would be selected and their practice entered upon, when he would from some unexplainable cause decide that that anthem simply wouldn't do and would hastily switch to another, which in turn would be found unsuitable and thrown into the discard. Finally an anthem would be prepared, but when Sunday came it would often be found that his mind had experienced another change and deemed it unsuited to the occasion, and it would in like manner be rejected. Needless to say that the effect had upon the choir by this was anything but good.

Foresight and decision are two very important characters needed by every chorister. First, foresight is necessary to enable the chorister to anticipate the needs of the choir and to understand just what will meet these needs. Many of our choristers have far better hind sight than fore sight and after it has all happened can tell you all about it and why it happened. As to decision, a chorister needs this mightily, for he has not only the destinies of his anthems and himself, but those of the choir members under him, and he should be able to face the course he knows is best with decision and determination.

But in planning ahead will be seen the most effective work of the chorister. Therein lies true "head work," without which no chorister can succeed for long. In all the details of his work a chorister should plan for the future. He should plan with such system that all the parts of his work will fit together in orderly arrangement. His anthems should be planned ahead so that when choir practice night comes around he will have them well in hand, his part of their development well prepared. It would be well in this regard for choristers to have not only the anthem for the present practice selected, but the anthems for the future. One chorister we know of maps out his work and his anthem scheme so that he usually has three anthems under way at the same time: one on which practice is just starting, one that is practically learned but not entirely mastered, and one that is just ready for the finishing touches. This chorister also keeps a record of all anthems sung by which he is able to know the frequency of an anthem's rendition and thereby avoid the ill effect of repeating the same anthem at objectionably frequent intervals.

It pays to conduct the work of the choir in a systematic, orderly manner even though it is a work involving mostly the æsthetic and emotional elements. As long as choristers are engaged in the work of rendering service for the kingdom of heaven they may with profit keep in mind the well proved maxim, "Order is Heaven's first law."

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Cheerfulness in Warfare, Joyousness in Triumph

"What martial music is to marching men, should song be to humanity."—Alexander Smith. (Born 1830; died 1867.)

To this Scottish poet, whom fate decreed but a short span of life, was granted a vision of one of the great elements needed in the life of man. As modern warfare has progressed in the scales of horrid efficiency, leaders have come to appreciate more and more the great, though subtle, influence that music has upon the natures and faculties of fighting men. Music of a certain kind will stir them to vigorous action while strains of an opposite character will quiet and soothe. Even the bugle calls of the army are devised with this knowledge and from the spirited reveille, which prods the soldier to a grumbling, sleepy response in the early morning, to the peaceful, rest-inducing strains of "taps" at night, this principle is well understood and applied.

Men on the march who have been about to sink under their burden of fatigue have been revived immeasurably and enabled to continue their tasks under the strains of a vigorous stirring march by the regimental band. The unfortunate ones who have suffered shell shock or other horrors of frightful warfare, have been in many instances helped towards a normal condition by the soothing strains of appropriate music. The Government has recognized this powerful force and has even surrounded the soldier in his everyday life with the influences of music and song.

But what about the place of music in the church—"The army of the Lord"? Did not God understand the great worth of music in his spiritual army, the "church militant"? How far have we heeded his instructions to furnish his soldiers with their proper equipment and surroundings of music?

There are situations in the church, regarding it as an army, that exactly coincide with corresponding situations in the armies of nations. Our warriors go on long, forced marches in missionary capacities in which their energies become exhausted and they seem ready to drop from the ranks with fatigue. 'Tis often then the music of God's ministrants is heard that again inspires them to action. Or some one who has fought the battle long and valiantly, is sore pressed and wounded, and ready to sink under burdens almost impossible. How sweet then is the music of friendly sympathy and helpful encouragement! Again, in the ordinary affairs of "camp life," when, though the battle may not be raging in intensity, there is still the monotony, the enervating routine, the dull drabness of it all. How valued then the music of companionship and saintly association.

But 'tis not alone of the intangible, spiritual influences that we write about, for we wish to deal with the actual concrete form and substance of music in the work of the church militant.

God knew what he was about when he so urgently enjoined upon his warring saints the cultivation of the gifts of music and song. He did not command these solely that they should have pleasing accomplishments that afford mere pleasure and entertainment. He meant that, if woven into the warp and woof of their fabric, music would have a powerful saving grace in the militant lives of the people. He therefore commanded its cultivation and its engrafting into the great scheme of his army's equipment. By it his army would be made more cheerful in its warfare; consequently more victorious and because of it, more joyous in its triumph. But have we been as diligent as we should have been to heed his commands?

The Amateur

In ordinary usage an amateur is one who pursues any study or art simply for the pure love of it. Too often the word carries with it the idea of superficialness; although marked excellence has often been attained by many amateurs.

Thomas Tapper, the renowned Boston critic and writer upon pertinent musical topics, gives another similar and equally good definition when he defines the amateur as "a student who is not compelled by fortune or the lack of it to call himself a professional follower of what he enjoys as a vocation."

The amateur, if he is a true one, is a valuable asset to society. Whoever voluntarily follows in art a particular line of activity, who puts his best into it and gets good out of it, is a valuable person to self and society. When that activity elevates the mind and gives happiness and good to self and others, thereby making life more than mere existence, it offers true good to humanity.

The term amateur must be rescued from its too frequent misuse. It has been made to do service in describing anything from the merest dabbler in the questionable forms of art to the cultured devotee of art in its more sacred aspects. We cannot recognize as an amateur every trifling dabbler in art; nine tenths of them are only art despoilers who learn to play because it is fashionable or because it affords cheap pleasure for pleasure's sake only and without the benefit of cultural development. Others dabble in æsthetics because they think it is "the proper thing" and they do it about as gracefully as the Asiatic servant who deemed it necessary for him to wear a necktie because his master did; so he added this occidental adornment to his oriental costume, indifferent as to whether the bow should be at the front or back of the neck.

A true amateur is a gifted person who does not make a life pursuit of that which he has the ability to perform, yet he follows his vocation with all the conscientiousness and devotion of the professional. He has many of the gifts and abilities of his professional brother yet does not apply them to the maintenance of life. Nor is he less studious or conscientious than his professional coworker.

A striking illustration of the amateur of rare gifts and conscientious devotion is seen in the career of Oliver Wendell Holmes, the well beloved American poet. For thirty years he carried on his literary work as a "side line" conjointly with the dry teaching of anatomy and did not emerge to the ranks of the professional until at the end of that period. Yet it is not in any sense decrying his wonderful gifts or unduly overrating the ranks of the amateur to say that the products of his literary efforts in that time did not fall below the highest standard of poetic excellence. Although living, in his literary efforts, the life of the amateur he retained at all times his conscience and refused to descend below the high standard he had erected as his ideal.

The true amateur is in every sense a missionary of the art at whose shrine he worships. He carries the light of many beautiful stars to those who, unaided, would never see them. Like Prometheus, he brings the fires of genius by which many are warmed and lighted, yet he himself is not punished. He serves as the intermediary between his fellow men and the high priests and deities of his art and because of his mediation lesser mortals are warmed and fed with divine fire and food. There is so much peculiar to the life of a professional man or genius that makes him somewhat inaccessible to many below him; that forbids him bringing all his æsthetic inspirations, his discoveries of truth and beauty direct to the people. He needs one who can appreciate and understand him; who, also understanding those below him, will spend time in explaining and discovering to lesser minds what he himself conceives as a whole; one who, because of his great love for it, will take a little of the great store of art and carry it where it would not otherwise go. Between the man of few natural gifts and the divinely gifted one, whose mind has been so abundantly enriched by God, there is too great a distance! natura vacuum abhorret; nature will not tolerate the intense monopoly of the one nor the extreme want of the other.

No one deserves a warmer welcome nor a more honored place than the intelligent, conscientious amateur for he brings the beauties of art to the doors of lesser humanity. Oh that we had more true amateurs of music in the church and less of those who thoughtlessly dabble in it. Is not this what God meant when he gave the command to cultivate these gifts? Did he not want his people to stand on higher ground than that of the ungifted; on such ground where they could understand and appreciate the beautiful and the divine, and in so doing could interpret his wonderful attributes to humanity?

A. H. M.

As a field, however fertile, can yield no fruit without culture, so neither can the mind of man without education.—Sen.

If man were an animal and nothing more, he could not sin. It is by virtue of being something more that he becomes capable of sin. Sin is yielding of the known higher to the known lower. It is the soul's abdication of its being to the brute.—Quoted from A. H. Strong, Systematic Theology, by Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

From Headquarters

It was my pleasure to meet with the Independence Stake Council of the Woman's Auxiliary on the 23d ult.

The term "council" is not quite so familiar to us as is "circle," "class" or "society." A council is composed of the "officers of two or more clubs, circles, etc., organized to better conserve the object of the association." (See page 36 of Supplement.)

Church work in the Independence Stake is operated on the group plan; there are about thirty-two groups in the stake, each group confined to certain boundaries. The Woman's Auxiliary find this an excellent plan for carrying on their department of work and organizations have been formed in eighteen of these groups. It is the representatives from these groups that come together in council meeting on the third Friday of each month. The meetings are held in the Woman's Building and are in charge of the stake organizer, Sister Mollie Davis. The forepart of the last meeting was occupied with a few items of business which resulted in action being taken for the installation of telephone service in the home of the organizer in order to facilitate the work of the stake in our department; another matter acted upon was the order for a purchase of a set of books which will be the nucleus of a library for the Woman's Building.

By previous arrangement the writer then addressed the meeting with remarks based upon statements found in the 10th and 11th sections of Doctrine and Covenants. A solemn responsibility seemed to pervade all minds as the great work of the establishment of Zion, and our cooperation therein, was contemplated.

The work in Independence Stake is taking on new activity and Sister Davis, the organizer is one who can overcome obstacles, and has met not a few.

Council meetings in other places of large branch membership where there are two or more classes or societies of the Woman's Auxiliary may be made very profitable and are almost essential to the success of the local work. The character of the meetings may vary. One very good feature to adopt is the hearing of reports from each group. Part of the time may be used in the preparation of teaching the various courses. The council should always be concerned as to whether the Woman's Auxiliary is accomplishing its work in the branch and in a proper manner. It should investigate the courses of study that are now furnished by the general organization and urge upon the various classes or societies, their use.

Very sincerely,

MRS. D. J. KRAHL, President.

The Woman's Building

The Woman's Building at Independence, Missouri, should be of interest, and we believe it is, to all women throughout the church.

Recently, plans have been laid to make the building an active center for systematic social service of both a local and general character, and in addition to this to be the headquarters for visiting women at the coming General Conference.

At present the building is not equipped as it should be in the way of proper furnishings. We ask that all locals of the Woman's Auxiliary, individual members and friends who would like to assist in making the woman's headquarters attractive, comfortable and efficiently equipped for a larger service to please note the following articles that are needed:

Furniture for dining room and one bedroom.

Table linen and bedding.

Dishes and silverware.

Curtains, ten in number; window measurement 6 by 3 feet.

Those preferring may send their donation in money. All contributions should be forwarded to Mrs. Joseph Mather, treasurer, care of Woman's Building, Corner Walnut and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

FOOD AND THE BODY COURSE

(Outline for Lesson 2.)

Overuse of Foods:

- a. Comparison with engine.
- b. Harmful results of too much protein.
- c. Harmful results of too much starch; sugar; fats.
- d. Harmful results of tea, coffee, and chocolate.

The above lessons in the designated courses are ready for mailing, and orders are coming in daily from our sisters who are quick to avail themselves of this opportunity to secure valuable information compiled by our own women.

A subscription for one copy of each lesson, (about 25 cents per course) will place in your hands monthly or weekly, as you prefer, a leaflet containing one lesson. These lessons, including those of "Latter-day motherhood" which appear periodically in this column, will be punched to fit the Irving-Pitt Loose Leaf binder, No. 9085. This binder may be purchased from the Ensign Publishing House, at Independence, Missouri, for 65 cents, postpaid.

One of the patriarchs of the church, in looking over the "Food and the Body" Course, remarked:

"There would be a wonderful improvement in the health conditions of our church members, if all the women would study this course!"

Send your subscriptions to the undersigned.

A Red Letter Day

Our esteemed editor in chief has asked for contributions for our dearly loved column in the HERALD, and I wish to tell you of one of the splendid meetings our local auxiliary has had.

It has been the custom for several years to exchange visits with the Oakland society, and the meeting in question was at the time of their visit to the San Francisco local.

It is a beautiful trip from Oakland to San Francisco; a short ride on the electric train, then a twenty minute sail on a well-equipped steam ferry boat, across one of the most beautiful bays in the country, then a short ride on an electric car—all this for fifteen cents (or believe it is sixteen cents with war tax added).

We met at the home of Sister Bessie Holling, who is a perfect hostess and knows just how to make her guests feel at home. Two long tables were spread enabling all to be seated at one time. There were twenty-five of us.

The delightful luncheon was prepared by Sister Holling and her daughter Chastina, and furnished by the receiving local. At 2.30 all assembled in the spacious parlors where the meeting was opened by our President, Sister Mary Saxe. In a few well-chosen words she welcomed the visiting sisters. The response was made by Sister Stella Neal, president of the Oakland Auxiliary.

Sister Clea Simpson, organizer for Northern California, made a short speech in which she urged that every sister belonging to a branch should be a member of the Auxiliary, and stated the advantages to be derived therefrom.

Sister May Hoogs, of Oakland, district supervisor of the young people, gave a few remarks telling of the success of her work, and urging others to fall in line.

Sister Grace Hartsough represented the "Home and child welfare" work, and told the benefits she had derived from her attendance at the meetings, and how she had put in practice in the training of her little ones the things she had learned there.

We had a nonmember present who has a splendid family of nine children, eight of whom are boys, and they are so wonderfully disciplined that we asked her to tell how she managed them. She gave us a very interesting and helpful talk of her experiences.

We had some fine musical numbers, both vocal and instrumental. Our energetic secretary, Sister Cunningham, was busy and secured five new members for our society. The visiting sisters expressed their appreciation of the thoroughly good time enjoyed, and the nonmembers whom we had invited obtained a better idea of our work and made friends for the cause. Such meetings are not only sociable but are uplifting and helpful and tend to increase our spirituality.

With love for the work of the Auxiliary,

SAN FRANCISCO.

IV. THE DAWN OF LOVE

"That more and more a Providence
Of love is understood,
Making the springs of time and sense
Sweet with eternal good!"

—J. G. Whittier.

I am deeply interested, daughter, in the contents of your last letter, and, oh, so grateful, that you have given me the priceless treasure of your confidence. Dear heart, so many girls have strayed into paths of woe because of estrangement which grew up between them and the ones who bore them. This wall of reserve was built, in most cases, not because any wanted it there, but because, at the tiny beginning of their divergence, some other, (and God alone knows how comparatively insignificant) duty or pleasure was allowed to intervene and check the words of query or confidence. Apparently a small neglect at the time—just a little repression, perhaps, when timidity needed encouragement, a thoughtless reprimand or sharp censure when loving counsel was needed—but they became the tiny hinges upon which a great, separating door swung shut! Oh, that all mothers were as blessed as I! Could all understand what a joy it is to receive sweet confidences from the white, sensitive soul of a little child, there would be more "walking with the angels" here on earth!

You are unfolding to me, to-day, the wonderful experience of the dawn of love in your young life! I do not censure, or reprove, your warm praise of the one who has attracted your fancy. Rather, I am smiling tenderly even through tears, for well I know there is no influence in the world so powerful as love. The enthusiasm it evokes, though to the unthinking silly and extravagant, becomes the mainspring of a new existence, of life seen through new and wonderful lenses which idealize every object. Indeed, I am wondering if the rapturous idealism of first love, investing as it does, its object with all the graces of a god, is not a truer vision of the possibilities and potentialities of that object and therefore a truer representation of the real individual than is the everyday, humdrum, faulty, external more common to our view! If this fancy is not exactly correct, of this we may be sure, that the idealization of the object of our love has a great influence upon ourselves, inspiring us to divine heights of sacrifice and self-effacement, urging us ever to a perfection of thought and deed otherwise unknown or unheeded.

Dear little girl, measure this sentiment which has come into your experience by the effect it has upon you and your highest conceptions of life. Keep in mind the thought that all worthy love is of God, and can but draw us nearer to him, who is all love. Believe in it, and cherish it, and give it a chance to demonstrate itself to you in accordance with those principles of right thought and action which govern you.

While I welcome any "good and perfect thing" which comes to you, I want to help you guard against mistakes and misunderstandings, and so would sound a note or two of warning. In the first place, remember that youth is apt to deceive itself. Life is so fresh, so full of interest; everything contributes to an exuberance of joy and emotion sometimes hard to analyze properly. Emotions are not always rightly understood, or truly interpreted. That is taken to be love, which is oftentimes mere comradeship, a lively interchange of fun and banter, or perhaps, an experience merely reflecting nature's moods, the calm beauty and quiet of moonlight, or the melody of rippling water. Perhaps most frequent of all, mere joy in youth and the magical stirrings of awakening sex emotion, are deemed love. All these things are natural and, in a measure desirable, but a young person must not be deceived into mistaking them for that wonderful thing, true love, which causes two souls to become as one, knit together for all time as one being.

Observation brings to view many sad disappointments. A girl "falls in love," and weds hastily, feeling that her choice is unalterable and unmistakable. She awakens later, to find that she has set the object of her love on a pedestal unattainably high, and that, instead of loving the man, she was loving only an ideal—an abstraction. Often, again, a girl is in love with love itself, with the attentions of a suitor, the gratification of a desire for devotion, admiration, or flattery. Sometimes it is only her vanity that has been touched, or an instinctive desire for a home of her own, or the novelty of changing all pre-experienced modes of life, that attracts a girl. All these misunderstood and misinterpreted emotions lead to sorrow and disillusionment, if any girl accepts them as real love, and I would warn my little girl against making any such errors.

Sometimes love is pictured as blind; he need not be, if he is accompanied by such worthy companions as "truth" and "sincerity." It is not fatal to real love for a girl to find, for instance, that the man of her devotion has a quick temper, if at the same time, she discovers that he is aware of his weakness, and is making an honorable and manly effort to overcome it. None are perfect, and thus none should expect perfection in another. If a girl can calmly weigh her lover in the balance of wisdom, truth and justice, and there find him not wanting in principle, in high ideals, in habits of industry and integrity, she may safely venture forth by his side, trusting to mutual love and esteem to guide them both to higher planes. Marrying a dishonorable man to reform him however, is the greatest of all follies, for if a man has no underlying principles of right conduct before marriage, he is not apt to develop them afterwards.

After all, the success with which a girl makes choice of one to love, depends on the qualities of mind which she, herself, brings to the experience. If she be trivial, vain, selfish, inconstant, she will not look for sincerity, humility, thoughtfulness or fidelity in a mate. If she be superficial, thinking more of her outward appearance than her inward grace, she will likely fall in love with curly hair, an independent swagger, a clever wit, a good dresser, or a graceful dancer. If she be flippant, she will never think to ask herself, "Is he worthy?" or, even, "Has he good, sound common sense?" She will just rush headlong into love, persuading herself, that her fancy caught now, will always continue to be attracted, interested and amused.

Sometimes even sensible girls make foolish selections of husbands. Is it due, do you think? to the success with which suitors manage to mask and camouflage their real selves while in the presence of the girl they wish to attract? Or is it because, in the glamour of the new experience, she is totally unable to perceive real values, mistaking the profligate for the prudent, the rake for the virtuous, the poor for the Chesterfield? Does falling in love dwarf all proper sense of value? Is there no way to protect such a girl against herself and her mistaken judgment, not only for her own sake, but for the well-being of the unborn who shall come to such unhappy union?

It is because I am so anxious for you to see with clear and unprejudiced eyes the real character of the man who is calling to your heart, that I have here expressed so many of the fears which have occurred to my fond love. Many a daughter, as precious as you, has gone forth from tenderly-sheltering arms to the protection of a man who has proven utterly false to the trust so placed in him, false to the best instincts of manhood, and false to the God who expected him to be an honorable mate, and an honorable parent of happy, well-born offspring. Do you wonder that I am praying hourly, that the Center of all Love shall implant that portion of his divine quality in your breast, which shall respond only to the call of your soul-mate? When that happy time comes, may God's will be made known to you in regard to this all-important step of your life. Nothing short of this will make for the real mating which makes of life the thing of beauty God designed it to be.

Love idealizes, it is true, but, to an extent, that is only right and proper; but it should not blind a girl to all important values. She should know that no real, true love can exist without true regard and respect. Unless her mind can place the sanction of its sincerest approval upon the pleadings of her heart, it is best for her to go slow until that approval be won. If it never comes, she must know that it is safest and best to follow the calm, cool judgment of her heaven-bestowed reason, than heated, irrational emotion. The results are less disastrous, and attended with fewer regrets.

I shall be waiting, eagerly, to hear from you again in regard to this "Prince Charming," and to learn, if upon close acquaintance and soul scrutiny, the hold he has taken upon your fancy is increased, securing the support of your best and most discriminating faculties. I want only the greatest good and the highest happiness to come to you, and these I know, can only come from your following, with careful precision, the guidance of your divinest nature and noblest aspirations.

"Love is of God."—1 John 4:7.

Conditions in Utah

The authorities having placed a ban on all public gatherings at Ogden, the Utah district conference met with our branch. The attendance was rather light as there is a great deal of influenza in our branch and also at all of the others, but we had a good conference considering the circumstances. We elected delegates to the General Conference and instructed them to vote to support Frederick M. Smith as president, prophet, seer and revelator to the church.

By action of the conference I was associated with Brother Holloway in the district presidency. Brother Holloway gave us an excellent discourse on loyalty at the closing session.

Our attendance at the regular services is affected by the influenza but so far there have been no deaths and most of the sick seem to be recovering.

(From letter from M. A. Etzenhouser, Salt Lake City, to the Presidency.)

Far West Stake

The First Branch held a Washington social on Friday, the 20th. George and Martha Washington were in evidence, in full colonial costume. Other features made a very nice program followed by refreshments. Mrs. Washington as the first lady of the land and other sisters in costumes of revolutionary days made a fine appearance.

Brother V. M. Goodrich is president of the Third Branch where his experience and general ability will prove valuable. That branch held a successful social gathering the past week, as did also the South Park Mission where Brother Coventry Archibald has charge.

Brother Samuel Twombly retired home for a time seeking recovery from the prevailing illness. We look for his active service soon where his work is needed and appreciated.

Brother J. W. Roberts is working at Far West, Kingston, Oakdale, etc.

Brother S. W. Simmons fills monthly appointments at Trimble and Edgerton Junction. He is also in charge of the Stake Sunday school department.

Evangelist John J. Cornish finished his revival services in Saint Joseph by a series of meetings in the South Park Mission and the Second and Third branches. He then went to Cameron, speaking twice there, thence on to Chicago, Toronto, and goodness only knows where else. He is a platform orator and covers lots of ground, for the way he prances up and down and back and forth before, behind and around those big gospel charts is a caution, to say the least. Then, too, he is an advertiser; for announcing his subject to follow he cries, "Don't miss it! Don't miss it; you can't afford to!" And the people come and listen, and he catches them "comin' and goin'!" Is it right, Mr. Editor, for a man to hypnotize people in that way and just make 'em sit and listen while he fills 'em full of the gospel? He sure does it. Watch that man Cornish; he's gray and bald, but there is lots of snap in him yet. He never ought to die!

We held our revival service just at the right time. The good weather has been followed by clouds and mist and Mr. "Flu." But we are reviving. The gospel spirit is like the fabled Phoenix and rises superior to all adversities. We grow stronger in meeting discouragements, disasters, and the various clouds and conflicts which 'round us press. As Brother W. H. Kelley once remarked: "We are here to cut Gordian knots and to solve problems." Courage, bravery, are splendid elements in Christian character. "If you think you're beaten, you are."

The First Branch has made changes in its order of services: Sacrament service at 11 o'clock the first Sunday, the Saints to observe it in fasting. Religio and general study hour at 6 p. m., preceding the preaching service Sunday nights; this to induce general study and secure larger attendance and increasing interest of young people, with a campaign to increase interest in Wednesday night prayer meeting, already apparent.

Brother E. F. Robertson was called to Franklin, Nebraska, by the serious illness of his father. He has been assisting in maintaining interest developed by Brother Cornish in the various branches in the city.

The orchestra work in the stake was nicely stimulated by the visit of Brother R. T. Cooper, of Independence. Members of various orchestras met him here and with his assistants from the Center City a gathering of about forty-five had a nice practice. We are pleased with the prospect of good work in this department.

Some imaginative or seerlike person reports a robin seen at Independence and thus predicts an early spring. As for us, we shall go to General Conference well supplied with rain togs, also prepared for balmy air and scented blossoms. Some will go looking for orange blossoms; and that's all right, too. Why not? General Conference is a place of many functions; and functions sometimes follow it!

Good Conference at Des Moines

The recent conference of the Des Moines District held in this city on the 6th, 7th and 8th inst. was a success. Despite the prevailing epidemic of influenza the attendance was splendid. The Saints in Des Moines were very much handicapped in preparing for the conference on account of so much sickness, but they were blessed in their efforts and all went well.

The presence of Brother F. M. Smith at the conference was all inspiration. His lectures to the Saints and his heart to heart talks with the priesthood were well received and much good accomplished. In his wake he has left a keener desire for, and more earnest resolutions toward the upbuilding of Zion. We pray and labor that we may contribute our part.

We were pleasantly surprised Sunday morning when Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and his wife dropped in for the day. The absence of Frederick M. Smith on this day was largely made up by their presence and Brother Smith gave us a rousing sermon Sunday evening. Same theme, "Zion." We trust the impetus given will be indeed Zionward.

(A letter from Elder A. E. Warr, to the Presidency.)

Keep Our Heads, and Think Level

Your editorial of January 28, Brother Elbert, is a prophetic indication of conditions which should arouse the zeal of the Saints everywhere in preparing for that which is inevitable under the spirit which is ruling almost everywhere—greed, covetousness, injustice, and in which only strife and contention will result. I used it to emphasize a rather stirring discourse on the "Fulfillment of prophecy" last Sunday morning, having fine freedom, using the Doctrine and Covenants with telling effect, in connection with Isaiah and New Testament prophecies.

The church papers are keeping up with the times, and the editorials and articles are constructive and helpful. This, it seems to me, indicates that the cause of Zion is onward, despite the little trying things that come up, but I have faith that it will all work out right, even the disagreeable experiences, if we are properly exercised by them, keep our heads, and think level. That is the promise of the Scriptures, and will be certainly fulfilled if we do our part in the assimilation.

(Excerpted from a letter by Elder W. H. Garrett, Long Beach, California, to the Presidency.)

A Branch Nurse in Honolulu

Last evening the branch approved of a recommendation made by the priesthood with regard to the appointment of a nurse for the branch. For years I have been hoping that a suitable sister in the church might be found who would be capable of undertaking work of this character and also willing to give her services for such work. Recently a woman named Clancy, who formerly belonged to the Seventh-day Adventist Church, was brought into our work and she has been appointed by unanimous vote of the branch, nurse for the branch. Work of this kind is badly needed, especially among the Hawaiian members, and good results will follow the work of this sister I am sure.

She has been working in one of the hospitals of the Territory and for many years had charge of the children of the family of a British consul in Japan. She is able to speak Japanese to some extent. I consider that we are fortunate in securing her services.

She will work on the stewardship plan and should therefore be considered amongst the unordained missionary class.

(From a letter by Elder G. J. Waller, Honolulu, Hawaii, to the Presidency.)

Expects a Good Conference

I have just completed my series of services, and have enjoyed much spiritual illumination throughout my effort, and the attendance and interest has been most gratifying; and good has been accomplished, as must be the case when the Lord condescends to bless his humble servants. To his holy name be the honor.

I leave to-day for Archbald, about twelve miles south of this city, where I will occupy for three nights, and return to Philadelphia, for district conference, which convenes Saturday the 21st.

I have been well cared for while among these big-hearted miners, and while they have a rather rough exterior, they certainly appreciate the efforts of the Master who labor among them; means have been provided for travel and other expense.

I feel there will be a splendid conference for the people of God, when we meet in April. I am confident there will be a Father's blessing attend the work there performed, as unity to a greater extent will be in evidence, if I am instructed correctly, and I am confident of the source this comes to me from.

(Richard Bullard, Scranton, Pennsylvania, in a letter to the Presidency.)

"What Are Our Farm Boys and Girls Thinking About?"

I attended the annual farmers' week at the State University and was very much benefited. Our stake Religio paid the expense of two of our young people, boy and girl, who are interested in agriculture, and I am sure they will give back good returns for the investment.

Our people continue to be restless—coming and going, buying and selling out and leaving. This is a splendid dairy country and I think land is very reasonable—$150 being about the top, and there is much rough land, good for sheep and dairying, and much of it good for cultivation, at from $30 to $60 per acre.

I believe we should pick out some bright, worthy young people and urge them to study scientific agriculture, and urge them to take a course in agriculture. Our Religio referred the selecting of the candidates for the trip to the university to attend farmers' week, to the stake presidency, and after repeated calls for applications five responded, and not one lived on a farm. What are our farm boys and girls thinking about? It seems to me the stake should, through some of its departments, carry on a campaign of education and agitation, till our young boys and girls would go at this thing of agriculture to win, not just exist.

(W. S. Macrae, Knobnoster, Missouri, in a letter to the Presidency.)

EROS, LOUISIANA, February 9, 1920.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the tall pines of the south land. Another year has passed away, and many wonderful things have happened. But amidst the sad conditions of the world, we are thankful for the beautiful gospel that is teaching the Lord's Saints that the judgments of God are here, and the end is near; and that the long looked for hope will soon be realized by the Saints of God; that is, the coming of our Savior to reign a thousand years.

I have been greatly blessed in my labors the last year, both with the Lord's Spirit, and health of body. I am at present at Eros, Louisiana, having some fine meetings. We have a branch here of about one hundred members, all good Saints, and trying to do their duty. Brother H. Fuller is president of the branch, and he is a fine man, doing all he can for the gospel. Brother Will Hakens is priest of the branch. He is a noble man.

The branch has no house to worship in so we got the Saints together and talked church building to them, and appointed some committees to start the work. A bright prospect is for about a thousand dollars to be raised at once to start the building. This branch bids fair to be one among the best branches in the south land. With care and good work there will be a wonderful interest built up at this place.

We have several bright young men here holding the priesthood, and sometime in the near future, I look to hear their voices telling the gospel.

At present we are located at Brother J. A. Phillips, holding a meeting in the town of Eros. Brother Phillips is looking after the interest of a local lumber company. He is a fine man, doing all he can for the gospel. The prospect for the gospel in Eros is good.

Saints, we had better heed the voice of God in Revelation 18: 4, where he said, Come out of the world, and not be partakers of her sins, and that we receive not of her plagues. That the time is here, and if we don't obey the counsel of God, we will be destroyed with the wicked, for the judgment of God is here and the end near.

So I conclude by giving my heartiest approbation to every measure calculated for the spread of truth in these last days, and all my desires and sincere prayers are for the prosperity of Zion, which must be built up for the safety of God's Saints. Your brother,
E. A. ERWIN.

The practical progressive measures of the church have had a favorable influence upon the Saints in this district, causing them to have renewed faith and confidence in the church and officials; also awakening them to a realization of duty and activity.

(From a letter by T. U. Thomas, Pennsylvania, in a letter to the Presidency.)

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, February 19, 1920.

Editors Herald: In this city of 125,000 population we have a little branch with a membership of seventy-eight. Only about half that number, however, are active or live near enough to attend services. We have been organized four years and had regular services each Sunday morning and evening, midweek prayer service, and Religio Sunday evening before preaching service.

R. M. Maloney is president, E. R. Miller Sunday school superintendent, Sister Gottfried Kueffer in charge of Religio, also president of our Woman's Auxiliary, which meets each Thursday afternoon.

Although our Sunday school is small in numbers—only sixty-three—we were proud to be able to send to the bishop $1,035 for our Christmas offering, $200 of which was donated by the Woman's Auxiliary, the proceeds of our annual Christmas bazaar.

Our district conference was quite a success. The Sunday school and Religio convened on the 13th. While the attendance was light, much interest and enthusiasm was manifested in these departments of the Lord's work.

Conference convened on Saturday and we had one of Brother Griffith's famous parliamentary drills. From his chart he gave us a real interesting lesson in parliamentary procedure. In the evening we listened to U. W. Greene tell Leeka, and Brethren J. F. Redfield and W. M. Leeka. Authorized in case of division to cast a majority and minority vote. Next conference in Thurman Branch, time to be fixed by the presidency of district. C. W. Forney, secretary.

WESTERN COLORADO.—At Delta, February 7 and 8, Amos T. Higdon in charge. Attendance very small, the average being of his experience in the Holy Land, which was very interesting and instructive.

Brother Griffiths and Brother U. W. Greene spoke on Sunday. Our little church was taxed to its capacity. We feel truly thankful to have had these brethren with us at this time. If their visits are appreciated in other parts as they were here, surely their trip to Oklahoma will not have been in vain.

Brethren Hubert Case and J. A. Davis were also with us during the conference. Brother Case left with Brethren Griffiths and Greene to visit other Oklahoma points, and to hold meetings with the Indians.

Brother Davis remained to continue a week's meetings here in the city. On Monday night a priesthood meeting was held at the church, and Tuesday night we listened to a good sermon from Brother Davis on the resurrection. The house was well filled.

MRS. R. M. MALONEY.

TUCKER.—William Tucker, born May 1, 1887, at Broadclyst, Devonshire, England. He came to this country, February 20, 1900. Baptized January 1, 1900, at Broadclyst, Devonshire, England. On December 22, 1906, he married Mary Neolene Lewis in Kansas City, Kansas. To this union 2 children were born. He died February 4, 1920, after an illness of one week, leaving a wife, 2 sons, a father, mother, 5 sisters and one brother to mourn. He was a member of the Kansas City Stake. Funeral service was held at Fairweather's Funeral Home. Service in charge of J. A. Tanner and sermon by U. W. Greene, by request of deceased.

DAVIDSON.—Mary Jane, daughter of Joseph and Sophia Brown, was born August 1, 1838, near Berryville, Highland County, Ohio, and died January 20, 1920. Married November 20, 1856, to Saint Clair Davidson, who preceded her in death August 29, 1911. Baptized August 19, 1894, and has lived a devoted and consistent Christian life. There are left to mourn, her daughters, Mrs. Daniel Turley, Mrs. Isaac Rhoads and Mrs. Benjamin Reed, also 5 grand-children and 4 great-grandchildren. She was buried from the Saints' church in the Highland Branch, Highland County, Ohio. Sermon by Elder J. W. Davis.

CORLESS.—After a painful and patiently endured affliction of some months, Brother Ebenezer Corless passed peacefully away at his home in Seattle, Washington, on January 22, 1920, at the age of 42 years, 5 months and 26 days. He was born at Saint Charles, Minnesota, but spent the last twelve years of his life in Washington. He leaves a wife and 2 sons who weep for a husband and father. Sister Eddeva Irwin sang beautifully at his funeral, accompanied by her mother, Sister Sarah Barney. Prayer by F. W. Holman. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

GREEN.—Mary Ann Green was born in Staffordshire, England, July 2, 1838. Baptized October 10, 1875, by Samuel B. Robinson. Died at Sacramento, California, January 5. Was the wife of Elder Harry S. Green, who was the son of Elder Harvey Green, old time missionary to California. Was the mother of 8 children: Mrs. Mary A. Hook, Mrs. W. N. Dawson, William A. Green, who survive, and the following who have passed beyond: Henry, John, Mattie and Mrs. Alice E. Christenson. In addition are 16 grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren. She came to America at the age of 3, one of the pioneers of the State. Funeral services in charge of Elder C. W. Hawkins, interment in a Sacramento cemetery.

YOUNG.—Jesse Young, eldest son of Anna J. Young, was born September 22, 1868, at Livermore, California. Baptized March, 1892, by Thomas Daley. Married Rose Greeley, November 4, 1896. Died January 26, 1920, of pneumonia, following influenza. There are left to mourn, his wife and 3 children, Rita, William, and Alice. Private services were held at the grave in charge of Reverend Couden. Interment at the Livermore Cemetery.

FREE.—Absalom Pennington Free, born Liberty, Missouri, March 3, 1841, died January 11, 1920, of pneumonia at Joplin, Missouri. Married Mary Jane Gray, March 15, 1866. Three years ago celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. His widow and 5 children mourn his departure. He was a veteran of the Civil War, was with General Sherman on his famous march to the sea. He was severely wounded at Chattanooga; served 2 enlistments, being sergeant in the 59th Illinois Veteran Volunteers at end of war. Was a member of the church 43 years, and many earnest years he spent in the active local ministry. G. A. R. services by comrades, sermon by T. J. Elliott, Charles Fry in charge.

HICKEY.—Flora Etta Hickey was born March 12, 1898, at Port Huron, Michigan, and passed from this life January 27, 1920, at Battle Creek, Michigan. Suffered several months from dropsical trouble, which finally caused her decease. Married Lyle Hickey about four years ago, and to this union was born one son. Husband, son, mother, and father of the deceased survive her. Baptized about six years ago, and was a faithful member. Funeral at Battle Creek, conducted by R. M. Young. Body taken to Fowlerville, Michigan, where another sermon was preached at the church by S. W. L. Scott, and the body was laid to rest in the cemetery at that place, the old home of the departed one.

STUMPE.—Grace Isabella Palmer Stumpe was born at Galen, Wayne County, New York, July 23, 1880, and died at the Swedish Hospital, Kansas City, January 26, 1920. Survived by husband, infant son, mother, one sister, and one brother. Baptized March 22, 1896 by J. R. Beckley and continued a faithful life of service. Funeral service from Stone church. Sermon by Joseph Arber, assisted by George Jenkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SUMMERFIELD.—Ann Horton was born in Gnosall, Staffordshire, England, May 17, 1832. Married William E. Summerfield, September 10, 1850, and came to America the same year. To them 12 children were born, 9 of whom, with her husband have preceded her in death. She leaves G. A. Summerfield, Amy Powell, J. E. Summerfield, and many relatives and friends to mourn. Baptized in 1850 and united with the Reorganized Church in 1866, continuing faithful until her death, February 1, 1920, at Stewartville, Missouri.

STANLEY.—Near Leon, Iowa, January 29, 1920, of blood poisoning, Sister Grace J. Stanley, aged 39 years, 7 months and 10 days. She was the mother of 9 children, 8 of whom survive her, as does also her husband, Homer R. Stanley. She was a daughter of Edward and Frances Brantwait, and was a member of the church from youth. Her body was brought to Lamoni for burial, near her parents' graves. Services in charge of R. A. Ballantyne. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

for what they consider public interest. Such is, of course, a mistake. He who lives more completely will fulfill all of his obligations.

The love of home, the love of the city, and the home state, the love of the nation, are of importance to full living, and lay properly the basis for the full brotherhood of man.

The love of home will cause a man to sacrifice his life if necessary to protect his loved ones from danger. He will feel that he cannot do better than die for such a cause, if die he must.

It is the home altar, the place of his fathers, the temple of his God, that are included within his love of country or patriotism, which is broad enough in the real meaning to include love of his neighbor; realizing clearly the evil of strife, yet when a mad man or a mad dog breaks loose, he will exercise the necessary force to protect his home.

Materialists always ridicule high ideals, but by faith all things are possible.

He who truly loves his home in this age must give his support to the nation and its government. He who truly loves his nation to-day must realize that its safety and peace and prosperity depend upon the prosperity of other men and other nations.

So in the midst of turmoil, he still carries forward the great message of the Master, "Peace on earth, good will to all men," upholding the highest ideals of honor and loyalty to family, to city or country, to church, to the nation, to humanity, and to God.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The Supreme Council of the allied powers has decided that the Turks retain Constantinople and Cilicia. A great deal of adverse comment is appearing in the press from those who urge that Turkey should have been deprived of her nationality. Serious massacres are continuing, the Turks evidently feeling secure because of the decision in their favor.

The recent demoralization of the foreign exchange situation has caused a slump in some provisions, most of which, however, have not affected the retail prices. Exports of meat and meat products have practically ceased, as have shipments of cotton. In spite of the insistent need for cotton, England has ceased buying, and as a result this staple product is piling up at home.

Egypt has profited hugely by the high prices paid for cotton. A report from London says the country is "bursting with wealth" from cotton deals. The most illiterate natives have made fortunes, and are paying off all mortgages that have been held against the family for decades. There is an inordinate demand for automobiles, new houses, jewelry, and luxuries of all kinds.

The Government has recently sent out through the Cens Bureau two volumes containing the census of religious bodies, for 1916. They are books that should be in the library of every minister and studious church worker who care for reliable statistics concerning the churches of the world to-day. The information is from the organizations themselves, therefore considered reliable, though the figures from our own church are evidently old ones as they do not represent us for the year indicated.

On March 1 the railroads of the United States reverted from Government control to private control and operation. A general reorganization of the boards of directors is made necessary.

The annual meeting of the National Education Association held at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, discussed principally three outstanding features: First, was the woeful lack of teachers. During the year 140,000 are reported have left the profession; 35,000 school rooms in the United States are without teachers, 65,000 more filled with teachers with temporary certificates only, and enrollment in normal schools has dropped off 30 per cent. The pay of teachers has been advanced but 20 to 50 per cent, with cost of living doubled. The second feature was increase in teachers' salaries; the third to encourage health programs, Junior Red Cross work and medical hygiene among the children, this third item being conceded as a natural result of the war.

"MEET ME AT THE BATTERY"

When you go to Conference do not fail to meet the Religio people at the Battery. They will have something that you will be interested in, and you will enjoy every minute spent with them. Be sure and see that some one of your local gets to attend. You will want to use the ideas and plans explained there.

CHURCH NEWS

Any member of the church who is a druggist and looking for a location may find a proposition of interest to him by communicating with Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, Box 256, Independence, Missouri.

We have a report of a good conference in the Southern California District, which will be printed next week. The following ordinations were attended to: Albert Starkey, priest; Eldon Whistler, deacon; Wilford Burton, teacher; Jacob S. Prettyman, deacon; Richard Wagnon and William McLeod, priests.

President F. M. Smith went to Omaha on church business February 23. While there he contracted tonsillitis and with some other more or less minor difficulties, such as teeth extractions and boils, is having a painful time. He planned to leave for Washington, District of Columbia, on the 27th to remain a week or more.

Editor S. A. Burgess was taken to his bed some weeks ago with abscess of the ear, which was so painful that it caused him serious trouble. When able, he went to Saint Louis for treatment by a specialist there who is acquainted with the case, and who after a week or ten days of treatment decided a mastoid operation was necessary and sent his patient to the Sanitarium at Independence for the same. Word was received Monday that the operation was successful though more serious than expected.

Graceland College. The academy debating team went to Oakland, Iowa, last week and secured their third victory in a 3-0 decision in their favor. They denied the proposition of compulsory military training. Their coach is Heman Hale Smith, who deserves much credit for the skill displayed in arranging the propositions and effectiveness of disarming the opponents on vital factors in the issue. The team is in a fair way to secure the championship of the Southwestern District of Iowa.

A cook is wanted at the Children's Home, Lamoni, Iowa. Anyone qualified to accept this position should write to Elder Amos Chase, superintendent, Lamoni, Iowa.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Lamoni during the week end and delivered three lectures at Graceland College. Two of his lectures were on the regular course for the class in religious education, on the Holy Spirit, its gifts and its fruits, and at one session he addressed the student body. He preached to large and appreciative audiences at the church twice on Sunday the 29th.

L. W. Weeks, of Independence, is in Lamoni getting ready for work on the basement of the new college building. He is accompanied by wife and children and has rented a house in town. It is expected that work on the foundations can begin early in March. The main excavation is already done. Considerable material is arriving and there will likely be no delay in the work when the season begins.

By Wireless: Christmas offering news: From February 20, 1919, to January 31, 1920, $75,673.69; from January 31, 1920, to February 7, 1920, $4,607.94; from February 7 to 14, $2,599.17; 14 to 21, $11,904.27; total $94,785.07. The above figures represent about $4,000 more than last year's total offering. We may not reach the high aim of $150,000 but we have broken our record and are right on directly into the 1920 effort. "God loveth a cheerful giver" and surely is pleased with the offering raised. The effort put forth to comply with one of the first commandment to his church in these latter days is acceptable to him. May his peace and blessings attend one and all in continued efforts to labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to us.—B. R. McGuire.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Pittsburg, Kansas. Under the efficient pastorship of Elder A. E. Stoff the branch is continuing to show progress. The Saints have suffered more from influenza than last year but no deaths so far. The conference held here on the 13th to 15th was well represented. Brother Charles Fry was forced to return home just prior to it on account of illness. He was greatly missed. Elder Lee Quick was called here to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Mac (Ross) Jones, and while here delivered two excellent sermons. The branch is supplying speakers for the Arma Branch twice a month. There is much activity and interest.

Waterloo, Iowa. The Fisher family, formerly of Chetek, Wisconsin, want their old friends to know that they will make their home at this place from now on. One of the best prayer meetings ever had since the organization of the branch was enjoyed last Wednesday evening. Brother Victor Hall who goes to various places every other Sunday was with the "faithful few" at Charles City a week ago Sunday.

Toronto, Ontario. For a while the city averaged about thirty deaths a day from influenza but it is now on the wane. Very few of the Saints were afflicted, and but one seriously. Elder Joseph T. Thompson, president of the Hamilton Branch, spoke at 11 on the 15th. On that date at the Allen Theater Brother T. W. Williams struck responsive chords on "bread and butter religion." On the 22d his subject was "The coming kingdom," a stirring address on the cause and cure of the world's ills—a wonderful effort on capital and labor. Written questions, from religion to Bolshevism are an interesting feature of these meetings. The winter institute is holding a session here the first week in March. J. J. Cornish is expected here before theater work closes on March 14.

Artland, Saskatchewan. Elders E. Leslie Mogg and A. James Cornish have started on a tour among the branches of the district in the interests of the Sunday school and Religion. They are in charge of the district Religion and Sunday school respectively. Elder W. J. Cornish returned last month from his travels among the branches as district president. A choral society has been organized under the able leadership of Sister Pearl Irwin. The young men have a few instruments and are planning to secure a new organ. A box social brought eighty dollars toward this fund. The ladies' aid society has resumed activities now that the coldest days are past. Our members have not suffered from influenza though it rages to the east and west. Two members, formerly natives of Jamaica, were quite ill this winter and out of reach of the elders. One of them (Sister Ellis) testifies that when she believed she would surely die if relief did not come, arose from her sick bed, knelt, and offered prayer for healing. So implicit and childlike was her faith she was healed immediately and arose from her knees fully restored to health.

Gladwin, Michigan. Branch No. 1 has had a thinning out of numbers, from 50 to about 30. There is a small Sunday school with Henry Waters superintendent. George White is priest and president of the branch. The two-day meeting here last summer was well-attended. The prophecies given then indicated the nearness of the coming of the Savior to be preceded by suffering and worldwide trouble. The Saints have suffered much affliction but through administration have been greatly helped.

San Jose, California. In a letter from C. W. Hawkins, we learn that they are having very dry weather; the whole country except a few coast counties suffering for moisture. The influenza epidemic has broken out again and all places for public gatherings closed, which may affect the conference. He attended the meetings of the Saints at San Francisco and Oakland recently and preached twice, and presided over a priesthood meeting.

Second Saint Joseph, Missouri. J. J. Cornish has been holding meetings, which closed on the 8th. They were enjoyed very much. J. L. Bear has been reelected president of the branch. The priesthood are active and doing good work. The wideawake library board, with G. Foster as chairman, has purchased a bookcase and have a very good selection of books. The Christmas offering was more than doubled over last year.

Pontiac, Michigan. Elder J. J. Cornish held services in Detroit recently and a goodly number from Pontiac attended.

First Chicago, Illinois. (4416 Gladys Avenue.) Repairs have been completed on the furnace and meetings held upstairs again, a much-appreciated privilege. At a recent Sunday morning service Sister Christy explained the various educational phases of the Woman's Auxiliary, urging a reorganization of this work and a new start. She was supplemented by Brother Christy. The Sunday school held a Valentine party, with small attendance on account of the weather. A leap year party will be given by the Sunday school and Religion on the 27th. It is the aim of the social committee to make entertainments of the branch of such a character that they will be the means of attracting strangers to the church. At Sunday school programs are given by various classes, recently one by the class of Brother Hartshorn, and later by Brother Bone's class.

Walnut Park, Independence. There are now 328 members in this locality and still they are coming. The great need just now is more houses to rent and to sell at reasonable prices. Last Sunday we had sermon by the pastor at 11 and Brother J. A. Gillen at night and not many slept while he talked. To-day the pastor gave us a digest on the subject of "continuance" and at night Brother Guinand come with a conclusive argument in behalf of Joseph the Seer being a true prophet. It was excellent. Three baptisms during the day. Peace and love prevails in this part of Zion. Anticipating an excellent General Conference. Influenza has subsided and health generally good. Choir busy getting ready for the series of services commencing March 21.

What Church Books are in Your Home Library?

WE are staunch believers in the Books. We have been taught to challenge every statement and teaching by the question: "What do the books say?" This is a remarkable habit and a safe one. We cannot know too much about the law. "Search the scriptures" is an old injunction and a good one. The church books ought always to be at hand for ready reference. Your children should read them: you are responsible in this point of training. What books are on your library table to-day?

WE are subject to a thousand calumnies. Intentional slander and pardonable ignorance together, have all but wrought havoc with the reputation of our work in its origin.

Error is so prevalent and the sources of news are so tinctured with misrepresentation that many are turned away from the very truth they are seeking, and prejudice bars our message from many an honest heart.

Perhaps we, ourselves, are somewhat to blame. While our detractors have been busy with word and pen, we have often waited for people to come to us. We should go to them, and that without delay.

There are eager messengers waiting to go at your command. Surely you have some friends you would love to inform. Send:

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CLERGY

This little booklet, written by President Elbert A. Smith, and printed in a most attractive form, offers the facts of our history in such a clear, convincing, yet withal a pleasant manner, that few who receive it will cast it aside, and any who read it will be favorably impressed and perhaps interested to further inquiry.

You can be proud to send this message to your friends. None can take offense, all will be flattered by the compliment it implies.

While designed primarily for the clergy, this little tract is the very literature to send any non-member as an introduction. Can you not place a few among your friends? Mail them or give them. 3 for 10 cents; 100 for $2.50.

Theocracy

For convenience of discussion, it is assumed that a pure theocracy is one in which God speaks, and man instantly obeys, without consideration. It is extended then to where one speaks in the name of God, as his prophet or representative, and the people at once obey, God, however, is the real ruler, and the government stands only so long as he personally directs.

It is very often assumed, both by those who believe in the possibility of modern revelation, and those who do not so believe, that when God speaks man must instantly hear and obey. But that is not the plan he gave. It is the plan proposed by Lucifer, as may be found in the third chapter of Genesis, Inspired Version:

"And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning: and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine for ever. Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down, and he became Satan; yea, even the Devil, the father of all lies, to deceive, and to blind man, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice."—Genesis 3: 1-5.

From this we note that it was the idea of Lucifer that he would issue a fiat with the authority of God, and compel mankind to obey and be saved. For this, however, he was cast down, and became the Devil, because he rebelled against God and sought to destroy the agency of man. The Lord then in that early age granted to man his free agency.

This verse at once denies the theory of absolute dictation, and paves the way for the mission of Jesus Christ, showing the greater purpose of God. Man is not saved simply by going through certain motions. He is not saved by being brought to a place called heaven, or a place called Zion. Zion is the pure in heart. Whosoever will may come and drink of the waters of life freely, but man's free agency is still given him.

God's purpose is a greater redemption. He reaches after man, even when he goes astray. Thus when the children of Israel rejected the gospel as preached to them by Moses, and erected the golden calf, as set forth in Exodus 20, the Lord gave them a schoolmaster. (Exodus 34.)

The prophet of the Lord and the First Presidency are placed in a position of general supervision, as a presidency over the whole church. Men have in their own government taken an extreme view and have established a monarchy—of the Lord's anointed. We cannot at the moment call to mind a single monarchy, among any people anywhere, in which the supreme ruler did not claim to be the Lord's anointed.

This also gives, unjustly, the basis for an attack which has been made probably in every age, of one-man power. They who attack overlook three great vital factors: 1. In a theocracy God directs. 2. That the responsibility is not placed on one man, but on three. 3. That their position and work is part of the general plan.

Then it is noted by some that the priesthood form a special order, and by some writers on socialism this is very strenuously objected to as in a sense an aristocracy or an oligarchy, and this is in a fuller sense true, when one considers the authority given to the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishop in his work, as well as to the priesthood.

Paul Called Them "A Royal Priesthood"

But critics lose sight of the fact that the plan laid down by the Master is, "He who would be the greatest among you, let him be the servant of all. Who is greater, he who sitteth at meat, or he who serveth? I am among you as one who serveth." They have the greater administrative responsibility, but become the servants of the whole body. Their responsibility demands a greater service, and in a certain sense a fuller consecration.

But back of it all we have the law of common consent, the right of the branch, as a pure democracy to vote and act; as a republic, the right of the membership to elect their delegates to district, stake, and general conference; the right of the people to sustain or to refuse to sustain any officer in the church, as at least once a year every officer is appointed through the vote of the body in connection with which he serves; the right of the people to initiate legislation in branch or through their elective delegates in the conferences.

And further, there is the right of the people to accept or reject any communication which is given them or is presented to them as coming from God, whether it be the call of deacon or some other local officer in the branch, or whether it be a revelation to the whole church.

Following the teaching of the church, we find the revelation is given or presented to the prophet; it then goes before the various constituent bodies of the priesthood in quorum capacity, and finally to the General Conference assembled. This is not a right that has been grasped by the people, but it is part of the divine plan, that they also have the right to learn of God and know of themselves whether this which has been presented is indeed the word of God or not. And not only is it their right, but their duty and responsibility.

It is the duty of the president of the church to keep himself in that position that God can use him as his minister and communicate his will to him. It is the duty of the priesthood to live so as rightly to represent God as his ministers, and so that when the revelation is presented they may consider it in the light of the law that the Lord has already given, and that they may also receive divine inspiration to confirm the message that comes from God. It is the duty of the membership to keep the commandments of God so that they also may receive this witness of the Spirit as a calm, still voice; not as the emotionalism that is sometimes set forth in the name of religion, that is made to bring many converts to the mourners bench, but in the still hours of the night feeling our individual responsibility.

The Lord has given us this plan, because he desires that we also should learn, that we should develop and learn to know him. He does not at any time force the issue, but instead, as a loving Father, in order that we may learn and give intelligent, moral and spiritual support to his work, he uses instead this principle in which democracy is manifested, that all the people may learn to know.

It is not thereby because of a doubt of the man called and ordained to be a prophet of the Lord, but because we owe to him our intelligent support, and we owe it in a greater measure to our heavenly Father.

Here is a theocracy, as God the Father directs it. The perfect plan is fulfilled when his will can freely be given to the man on whom rests the responsibility for receiving revelations for the whole church, and the whole priesthood is so living that they also receive revelations for their own work, and receive the confirming witness, the Spirit of God when his word is presented, that it is indeed from God. And when the whole people are moved by this same divine Spirit, not only to accept in words that which God gives, receiving within themselves the witness that it is divine, but to go out and do it, to keep the commandments which he has given them. Then no longer need it be said, "I have many things that would say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now," for his people will learn and grow in the light of God, delight to keep his commandments, and give not a blind obedience which he does not desire, but intelligent support to his will, and with faith in him and in his representatives, that which we do not as yet know, is well.

It will be noted that such a plan is not as men define it, a pure theocracy, nor is it a pure democracy, nor is it a pure republican or representative form of government, nor is it a pure oligarchy, but that it combines the best of all; God speaking as the supreme ruler, those who are fit are chosen for special service and given special responsibility for the common good; to the people belonging the right to accept or reject, but also the duty to prepare themselves so as to be ready to receive and understand the word of God, and where they cannot meet because of numbers, they act through their representatives, thus preserving the best of every form of government. After all, the plan laid down by God is the perfect theocracy.

Cleanliness as Prophylaxis

For the prevention of disease and as a protection against epidemics, and even for fumigation at the end of a sickness, nothing is more important than personal cleanliness, bathing and changing of the clothes and especially frequent scrubbing of the hands with common soap and water. Doctor B. C. Steelsmith of the University Hospital, Iowa City, declares that no one washes his hands enough; that no doctor does so in taking care of these contagious diseases. He admits that he does not himself. But therein lies safety, at once on leaving the sick room giving the hands especially a thorough washing. It this is done, even the mask becomes of secondary importance.

If proper care is taken of the patient and of the sick room, to remove and sterilize everything, in fact all infectious material at the bedside at once, then common soap and water and plenty of elbow grease applied to the paint and all such exposed surfaces, and plenty of fresh air and sunshine is the best fumigation.

Strict isolation at the beginning of a sickness is also of the greatest importance. Do not be satisfied with the first diagnosis. If early fever periods the contagion is more dangerous than later, so immediate isolation is the safest course.

In diseases of the respiratory organs, or those that may be caught from the breath, a good mask properly made and worn is a protection; especially if the disinfection of the attendant's hands is religiously attended to.

The Community Church

As a result of the world's survey being made by the Inter-church World Movement there is being opened in various parts of the country community churches.

Bishop Edward Ingham sent us items concerning the work in his vicinity, Berkerly, California. The whole neighborhood was circularized. Preference there is given to the Presbyterian Church. The intention is that one denomination shall have responsibility for a given field, and the stability and resources come with denominational organization. The right of way for one church means that the entire strength of the community will be given for adequate equipment and support. In a membership of 170, eight different denominations are interested. The intention is to make the church a community center, and emphasize the great common truths in which all are agreed. A building is being erected, providing an assembly room, reception room, kitchen, pantry, and office, on the first floor; ladies club room, business club room, boys' room, and four class rooms on the second floor.

One grave difficulty is that when only the common truths are emphasized, as a rule, fundamental principles are neglected. Churches and other organizations can well combine for social, economic, and recreational features, but the church is something more than social, and for the best of ethics and religion there is needed a thoroughgoing conviction of principles.

Foreign Languages in America

The recent war has brought clearly to the fore in the minds of many people the fact that many foreigners in this country could neither read or write the English language, but were able to converse only in their native tongue, brought with them to America. They read only papers in these foreign languages, and were not instructed in American institutions, or American ideals, but often gained their impressions simply from their surroundings in the slums of some large city.

Within the past year, a decided effort is being made for Americanization. This is a continuation and expansion of previous efforts, but is being undertaken more thoroughly than ever before through these federal governments. A conference was held at Washington the middle of May of specialists and of workers.

The problem is shown by a list of thirty-six cities; from Jacksonville, Florida, of which four per cent of the foreign born, ten years of age and over, are unable to speak English, to Milwaukee, in which 35.4 per cent are unable to speak English. There are twelve cities in which 30,500 ten years of age or over, cannot speak English. This includes Jacksonville, Charleston, Washington, Atlantic, Seattle, Denver, San Francisco, Louisville, Salt Lak City, Memphis, Minneapolis, and Portland.

The American Bible Society reports that there is a great need of Bibles for work in Japan. Also that a Brazilian was converted by reading the Bible in his own language. From other sources we learn that the Bible has been translated into over 200 different dialects by the British and American Bible societies.

Knowledge of God Essential to Life Eternal

(Sermon by Elder R. S. Salyards. Delivered at First Saint Joseph Branch, November 9, 1919. Reported by Minnie Scott Dobson.)

In the second chapter of 1 Corinthians we read: (Entire chapter.) The sixth chapter of Matthew, 22d verse: "The light of the body is the eye: If therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light."

And in the seventeenth chapter of John, 3d verse: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

God the Source of Knowledge

We announced that we would speak this morning on the subject of "Knowledge of God essential to life eternal." God is the source of all true knowledge; one of the leading attributes of God is his great knowledge, his great intelligence. He is the first Great Cause, the originator of all things, the upholder of all things by the word of his power; we think of him, we conceive him to be the Supreme Being, perfect in all attributes that pertain to a perfect being. We deduce from our limited knowledge, in our desire to seek knowledge, that there must be a personal, perfect being who embodies a complete knowledge of all things. We are justified in this conclusion from the manifestations of knowledge that appear to us in the works of creation, showing an intelligent, far-reaching conception in the arrangement of material forces, powers, qualities, that appeal to us from a sense of the eternal fitness of things.

The One who presides in the midst of all things works in the mental, the moral, the spiritual, and the physical realm. We therefore reach the conclusion that a perfect knowledge of God, the source of all knowledge, of all wisdom and power, is essential to a perfect life, like his life. The philosophy of the religion of Jesus Christ, indicates, therefore, the deepest thought. It points us to the central figure of the universe, the One in whom, through Jesus Christ, are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Thus when we ask men to believe in God and come unto him to learn of him, to correspond to his divine will, we mean a coming to, a learning of, a correspondence to all these sublime forces which are perfect, which develop and which insure to us a pathway of life based upon real, genuine knowledge.

Man Created to Know

Men were created to know; they have cognitive faculties; they are able to appreciate the things of life about them. The progress of the race has been based upon knowledge and use of the forces of the universe. Man is a knowing being. While his knowledge is limited, while he has made manifest the imperfection and relative character of his limited knowledge, yet he is a being who is designed to probe into the facts of life and to seek a knowledge of the forces which are about him, which move him, which underlie and permeate the realm of life in his universe. We are making, therefore, in our appeal for knowledge of God, from this point of view, a natural, normal statement that man should know; that he ought to know; that he must know; that his highest interests are involved in the matter of learning and of knowing. The Scriptures teach us that man is the offspring of God, hence his faculties are like unto the faculties of God. Therefore he may correspond to the divine will and may know not in part only but may know in fullness; and it is upon this basis, evidently, that Jesus Christ declared that "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, O God, the eternal Father, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent;" Jesus Christ being the embodiment of God in human flesh, being the One who came to reveal the Father, by whom are all things, and who has a perfect understanding of all things he has created with God.

Results of Loss of Knowledge

We know "the things of man as man knows them—in a limited way; but our knowledge is largely confined to external, material things. That has been a peculiarity of humanity from the beginning. We do not deny there is a spirit in man, an intelligence, a heart, a life that has caused him to seek to obtain knowledge of God; to fathom the mystery of life; to touch the great Absolute Being in whom are involved the interests and the life of humanity; but man, by departing from God, became carnal and sensual; became separated from those spiritual forces by which alone it is possible to attain and retain the knowledge of God. Therefore he became largely subject to the influences of material things in this material world of ours; and as a result his knowledge has been very limited; he has failed to discern the God-basis of all things and hence has lost what knowledge of God he possessed in the beginning. His knowledge, therefore, has become perverted, distorted, confused, imperfect; hence we discover the conceptions of man in ancient times concerning God have been greatly distorted; that there have been great departures from the truth as revealed of God in the beginning. We have had men worshiping four-footed beasts, creeping things, animal conceptions; yes even worshiping demons; we have people doing that to-day.

We have a very comprehensive statement of this—it would pay you to read it all, especially as given in the Inspired Translation—and some of it reveals the depravity of human nature to that extent that we will not read it all here; but Paul, that master-mind who comprehended the conditions of humanity and the influences which had controlled them, states here in his letter to the Romans, first chapter, that the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth"—the universal message of God to meet the universal need of a universal world; not local in its character, but a presentation of the wisdom of God, the knowledge of God, the means of obtaining that knowledge: "Therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, the just shall live by faith." He states that "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness [and that would include all false or perverted knowledge] and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them, [it is demonstrated in them, in the right or in the wrong course men take of themselves] for God hath showed it unto them; for the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse."

Paul tells us here that everything bears witness of God and that men, by the things which are about them, should see and should know that God exists, and that in him they have their being. He gives us here the results of departure from God, the effects of a loss of this knowledge. He says:

"Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own bodies between themselves; who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed forevermore."

He follows with a dark picture of the corruptible character of their depravity, the results that came to them when they turned from the knowledge of God and were perverted in their own sins and worshiped and served material things. We discern in the development of humanity in the ages of the past not only the false systems of religion which they developed, but the immorality, the darkness, the heathenism, the superstition, the dark, mysterious fears, and the corruption of true knowledge; so that as a result their political systems, their social systems, their economic life, all phases of their life were perverted.

Inadequacy of Human Knowledge

We are justified, therefore, in warning men to come to a knowledge of the truth, to depart from ignorance and to learn of God, that they may conform to his holy will; for, as remarked before, the tendency of the unspiritual mind is toward that which is sensuous, pleasure-loving, selfish; but under the influence of the knowledge of God man is made to correspond to that which is spiritual, to strive for that which is right, and the light of heaven is reflected upon him, his ways are ordered of the Lord, he is taught, is acknowledged, he is increased. Knowledge is power, knowledge is wisdom, knowledge is that which normalizes and so leads a man that he controls himself and is governed by the law of the spiritual instead of being governed by the natural man.

We read in the word that God's people were "destroyed by lack of knowledge." The facts are, the Jewish people and other peoples really didn't know enough to cling close to the Almighty, to study his ways. The apostle, in the text we read, calls attention to what men did through their perverted, natural, sensual knowledge:

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

"We speak wisdom among them that are perfect, yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to naught, but we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

It is evident that when the Jews consummated the condemnation of Jesus Christ and when the Romans crucified him, they would not have done such a deed had they really known he was the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. We have in some of the statements of the scripture a very clear presentation, a general presentation, of the inadequacy of human knowledge. We are impressed as we read these words—anyone who reads the scripture with a heart sense of what he is reading—that there is a deeply developed heart-nature in the inspiration of these inspired men; that they grasped with a depth of meaning, with a depth of feeling, and with a powerful conviction the things of God; that they really believed. And they expressed in forceful language a living, a heart conception of the things which they state here. In Job, 28th chapter, we have a general statement of the inadequacy of human knowledge: "But where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?"

In this poetic language of the prophet we have this whole subject summed up; Not in the wealth and glory of material attractions are we to find the basis of life. We are not to make these outward, material, sensuous things first, but in and through them, permeating them, and around and about them, and above all, "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." And so we come to the basis of life—that man to appreciate and use and know life must come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in the bosom of God. That is the basis of all true life and happiness.

David expressed the same thought in the Psalms, in his wonderful teachings as an inspired man, Psalm 2: 10: "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

In these statements are involved this philosophy of knowledge of God; that it is basic, and that to depart from it or to ignore it is to lose, to fail, to lack that development, that correspondence to God by which we have life indeed.

In Psalm 107: 43 is a statement: "The righteous shall see it, and rejoice, and all iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

Men shall understand the providence of God; men shall receive of the manifestation of the favor of God, of his love, and shall comprehend, even as we are told in latter-day revelation, they "shall comprehend even God," as a result of their correspondence to his will.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth forever."

The development of the race from the beginning, so far as the development has been right and for good, has been through an understanding of God. We have developed in politics, in art, in science or in anything only as we have looked into the needs of society and in the light of experience have learned what principles should govern and control. Hence in the common experience of humanity to-day is that reflected through which the race has passed in its development. We have learned that selfishness, ignorance, narrowness, the wrong conception of men to rule over one another, are being set aside by the better understanding of humanity; hence the people of every nation are for liberty, democracy; and we have come to that great knowledge after centuries of toil, after centuries of upholding that which has been false, after centuries and epochs and periods of suffering by which men have been robbed of their rights and suffered untold agony, and by which each autocratic and absolute influence has been used to uphold false religions, false political and social and false economic systems. Men, through their experiences, have come to an understanding of that declared by Jesus Christ, that God would have men free: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Thus as we take up any department of science—chemistry, sociology, economics—we learn that things must be used in the way God has ordained, according to the eternal fitness of things. We are not at liberty to depart from the knowledge of God; if we do, we have wrong influences, wrong conditions, and suffering and limitation as a result. We see the statement of Jesus Christ justified, that this is life eternal, to know God; and as we obtain true knowledge we enter into a fuller conception, a fuller joy in life, and are blessed in harmony with the teachings of the word in this respect.

A Heart to Know God

One leading thing has largely kept humanity from a knowledge of God—they have not had the heart, the desire to know of him. It does seem strange to-day that in our own time, as well as in periods of the past, we are so slow to reach out for God; that the race has so little real soul hunger for God, while the fullness of life is for us if we but touch it by coming into contact with the great supreme Being. The Lord spoke of this in dealing with his people in the past, with the departures of Israel. After all his effort to lead them onward, forward, and loving them, as he declared he loved them with an everlasting love and gave evidence of his love toward them, yet they failed to love and to serve him. He had given them the first and great and fundamental commandment to love him with all their heart, with all their might, with all their strength, as declared through Moses. In the 24th chapter of Jeremiah we are told of a time when the Lord will set his eye upon them for good and build them up, "and they shall return unto me with their whole heart."

We need a heart to know God. We cannot know God simply by intellectual processes. We may have clear intelligence, the intelligence may be stupenduous in its strength, but it may be cold, it may lack warmth. We may have heat without light, or light without warmth. Some of the greatest criminals who have ever afflicted society have been men of great skill, wonderful knowledge, highly developed in their powers of deception, in ability to gain their criminal purposes; but they lacked heart. The heart-nature is the real basis of development in life, and that is why God commanded men that they should love him; and love, as well as intelligence, forms the basis of knowledge. If you and I have failed to come to a knowledge of God to that extent we should it is because we have not put enough heart into it, because we have not loved God enough, because we have made first the knowledge of and desire for earthly things, for pleasures it may be, for ease, for that which appeals to the carnal man, the outward entertainment, that which perishes with the using and cannot bring us final and enduring gratification. But the Lord declares that when he shall build up Jerusalem, when it shall reflect his glory and when his people shall reach a condition of favor with him, he says, "And I will give them an heart to know me."

We shall never be able to obtain that full knowledge of God without heart in it, without affection, without love for God, and we may therefore understand the statement of the apostle when he said, "Set your affection on things above, not on the things on the earth." The affections are to be set, to be fixed; the love for God is to be deep, abiding, full, strong, and sincere. Any Latter Day Saint who sets his affections upon God does not ignore the knowledge of this world, because all true knowledge of this world is of God. He is qualified to enter into a larger knowledge, to appreciate things, to understand them in the light in which God has ordained them, and therefore he strives for the mental that he may comprehend the forces and conditions of life about him, that through a knowledge of God he may correspond to the will of God and walk in the light as God is in the light, and have fellowship with him.

In the 6th chapter of John, 45th verse, we have something of this same character, and the scriptures are full of this: "It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me."

So it is necessary for us to come unto God. He designs that we should be taught of him; and God does not desire his people to be limited in their knowledge, because knowledge is power, and it is through knowledge that we shall be able to go forward unto that perfect development by which we shall correspond to the character of God.

"Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—John 8: 12.

God has stated here, through his Son, that through Jesus Christ, who is the light of the world, men shall have the light of life; that that light shall dawn upon them and illuminate all the pathway of life; that in temporal things, in morals, in the spiritual life, man shall be enlightened of God and walk in the light as he is in the light. And so we see the philosophy of the Christian religion in bringing us up to this condition where we may rejoice in the light and blessing of God, our eternal Father.

Jesus said, "Where a man's treasure is, there will his heart be also." If our treasure is upon the fleeting things of this life, if we like those things better than the knowledge of God, we will spend a great deal of our time in pursuing after them; and if we follow after them we will have very little when our earth life is closed. We have people who have lived in pleasure all their lives; the Apostle Paul speaks of one individual being "dead while he liveth." There have been men who have lived for intemperance, for the wealth of this world, for selfish purposes and for physical gratification. Some people live for mere social life; some live, largely, that they may exhibit the beauty of their bodies and fine raiment and jewels, and yet the Savior said, "The life is more than meat and the body than raiment." The real beauty that can come to us, the genuine, enduring beauty is not mere physical beauty, though physical beauty is worth prizing. It is the beauty of soul, of heart, of mind, based upon a developed knowledge of God; and sometimes it is painful to see a manifestation of the the physically beautiful and yet so vain, and so artificial, and so desirous of exhibiting that which is largely empty and lacking the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, the spiritual beauty which is the true basis of all beauty. True knowledge is "not puffed up by the fleshly mind."

And so the Lord, in his parable in the 8th chapter of Luke, speaks of those who in honesty and goodness of heart "bring forth fruit to perfection," who use their talents and powers upon the basis of knowledge, who bear fruit unto God, who contribute to the welfare of the world.

Knowledge to Be Cumulative

Now in this great latter-day work, when we obey it we receive the testimony of the Holy Spirit that God is. I received that testimony when hands were placed upon me, as a boy, and I remember to this day that when one of those two plain working men said to me as they placed their hands upon my head, "Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost," it descended upon me, and it is in my memory to-day, as I saw it descend in flaming, cloven tongues as of fire, which permeated my entire being. I knew, when I stood upon the banks of the river, before entering the water for baptism, by that feeling of great peace, that God was there. I cannot explain all the processes by which man obtains that knowledge, but I received that knowledge. I knew that by correspondence to the ordinances of the gospel, by obedience, by faith in God and in Christ, and by repentance, by presenting myself as one who desired to do the will of God and be born of water, that God acknowledged that act upon my part and that I received something I had never received in all my life before—a spirit of conviction, a spirit of knowledge that God exists, that which placed me, as it places you, upon a firm starting basis of knowledge of God. We do not have in this testimony a perfect knowledge of God, but we have that gift of the Holy Spirit which subsequently is to teach, to lead, to guide into all truth. It is to take the things of the Father and show them unto us and show us things to come. It is to guide us in the spirit of judgment, the spirit of wisdom, the spirit of understanding. It is to enable us to comprehend all things pertaining to life and godliness, not alone pertaining to the future world, but that by which we may work out our problems in this world and discriminate between the true and the false, the desirable and the undesirable, the genuine and the spurious, the light and the darkness; and thus it is placed in our hands as spiritual beings.

We therefore know, because we are taught different principles. We are taught the principles of truth, the principles of moral power, the principles of intelligence, of understanding; and can we not see in these ministrations of the spirit of God a genuine knowledge, a superior knowledge? Certainly we can. In addition to that, we are taught to be steadfast, to have morality, to walk in the light, to be stable in character. And friends, those are some of the best evidences that we have received the Spirit of truth; because an inspiration which did not qualify me to see, an inspiration which was mere sentiment, mere theory, and which did not give me actual knowledge, something I could put to the test, would be of very little value to me.

That is the trouble in this world with a great many people, people who are emotional and can cry and thus show a manifestation of desire to do right, but who fail to obtain a moral character, and a strength of purpose, a continuity of conviction, and thus fail. It is true we may fail even after receiving of the Holy Spirit, but we cannot do thus if we follow the teachings of the Holy Spirit, because we will walk in the light as God is in the light. However, because knowledge is given unto us by the Holy Spirit it does not follow that we are not factors in the development of that knowledge. Hence we are commanded to study and to think, and to pray. The elders of this church were commanded to seek knowledge by study and by faith; that is, as they were to ask God to help them they were to use their own powers. The Almighty will never pour out knowledge upon you and upon me without the effort upon our part to seek it, to appreciate it, to treasure it.

This church to-day could be upon higher ground, we could all be, if we were developed sufficiently by application to receive greater knowledge, wisdom, and power. The Almighty is not to bestow upon us blessings and conceptions which we are unable to appreciate. The true teacher does not begin with algebra in teaching mathematics, he does not take advanced knowledge first; and God has ordained the orderly development of the human mind and spirit by the gradual unfolding processes by which the individual comes under the influence of the Spirit of truth, those forces about him in the world which teach him the desirability of knowledge. He corresponds with them, exercises himself, and loves with all his heart those things that are of God.

We receive blessings of God in sickness, receive manifestations of his favor, outpourings of his love. Have you not been conscious, sometimes, of the great love of God for you, when he has administered to you, blessed and acknowledged you, given you to understand you were a child of his, that you were in his heart and under his care and always in his love, to lead, and watch over and keep you? The people of God have had those experiences. They add to your knowledge of God—they are part of it, because knowledge brings to us a knowledge of the nature of God; and God is love, and he bestows that love, tender and compassionate, upon his children, and through it we are made to know God; made to know that he is deeply interested in us; that he has a heart of love for the human family; that he has a mind of knowledge and that he desires that his people shall love him, and through that love understand him and come to a knowledge of his ways, and not walk in ignorance, not walk in that which will blight them, pervert them, but walk in that which will continue to build them up, and, as the apostle says, "make us wise unto salvation."

We must be wise to be saved. Salvation is not a matter merely of feeling, of love, without a manifestation of wisdom in that love. We are to be wise unto salvation—wise in marking out our course, in making our choice and continuing in the things that bring to us the blessings of God and the overshadowing mercy of his Providence from time to time. Thus we are able through a knowledge of God, to desire those things that are excellent, not satisfied with the cheap things of life, its artificialities, its miserable subterfuges, its cheap substitutions for that which is genuine and true.

Every Latter Day Saint has the pathway of life opened up unto him and he should personally make it a matter of knowledge upon his part and be in touch with God and receive of his Holy Spirit. The Apostle Paul says, "some have not the knowledge of God." He also added, "I speak it to your shame." Therefore the basis of our life is to be in this: Life is eternal, and that life that will endure will be based upon the development of a Godlike character—to know God—"to know thee, O God the eternal Father, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." In Jesus Christ are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge, and they are to be reflected through him. Christ is and is to be the light and life and glory of this world. It is folly, therefore, for men to think they can ignore the means, the appointments and the promises of God, and come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved in his kingdom.

So we believe in working out our salvation on a basis of knowledge. We believe we should be useful in proportion as we develop our talents—whether they be two, five or ten—and that God expects us to add to our knowledge, to our usefulness, to our effectiveness, by study and by faith; and when we come to that knowledge of God and are confirmed in it from day to day we will not be moved by that which is ignorant; we will not surrender that which is priceless for that which is perishable; we will not be satisfied with that which is artificial when we may have that which is genuine through a knowledge of God. We are thus to become enriched, to become larger, and our knowledge is to make us "complete" in Jesus Christ. This basis is the true basis. "This is the true God and eternal life."

What Does God Expect of Me As a Latter Day Saint?

BY ROSCOE DAVEY

We must consider the seed we sow, says this student of the religious education class at Graceland.

What is expected of me as a Latter Day Saint? This is a question that confronts us as children of God. If it does not, there is something wrong. How long would I hold a position as a representative of any firm, when I did not represent them properly, and to the full extent of my ability? So long as I could deceive my employers in regards to my work. This might continue for a time with men, but with God, "who readeth the intent of the heart," we cannot play behind the screens.

There has been one thing that has always seemed odd to me, because of its inconsistency. It is this, some people wonder why the redemption of Zion is delayed, why the times of Zion's conditions are not ushered in, and yet, these same people continue in breaking the laws of God. They still hold to the idea that one can walk with the church in one hand and the world in the other. In other words, serve both God and mammon.

One saying is, "It takes a good mixer to combine business and pleasure." I cannot think of a business that is more important than the one the Saints of latter days are engaged in. And this is sure, the business part will be the sufferer, if not the total loser, when we try to combine that business with the pleasures of the world. The statement has often been made that the Saints are beginning to see the mission of the church as never before. This I believe is true, and I thank God for it. But I often wonder if the Saints, especially the young, fully comprehend the requirements that will have to be met personally before this mission can be accomplished. If we hope to receive God's blessings we must use every thing we possess, our money, our talent, our bodies, to the glory of God and the good of mankind.

There is one quotation that is often used when the sowing of wild oats is being discouraged, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Galatians 6:7.) I believe this passage has a two-fold meaning, it does not apply only to the sowing of bad seed, but also to the sowing of good seed. Let us examine the quotation a little further. Verse 8 reads, "For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." From this we see that he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And yet there is another thing to take into consideration. You ask a farmer if he could raise a crop of grain without planting the seed that would bring forth that grain, he would look at you and laugh. The same thing holds good if we expect to reap life everlasting. We must sow the seed that will yield to us this life. We must then consider the seed. "He that soweth to the Spirit"—how are we going to sow to the spirit? When we find the answer to that question we will find the way to salvation.

In Matthew 5: 43-48, Christ tells us how we can sow to the Spirit:

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good unto them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh the sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth the rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have you? do not the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

From this we may learn what we must do, the kind of seed we must sow. But that is not all, there is something else that is necessary. I refer to a few statements of Christ and the apostles. "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 18, 19. I understand that if we are to be the children of God, we cannot be of the world, for Christ has chosen us out of the world, to be a light to the world. How can we be a light if we are the same as the world? There must be something to distinguish us from others, or our mission will be of no avail.

Again, we have the words of the Apostle Paul, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Romans 12: 1, 2. We are to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God. And how are we to do this? By not being conformed to this world, and by proving what is that good, acceptable, and perfect will of God. Surely this cannot be done by taking the world in one hand and the church in the other. They do not go together. "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Those that wonder why such slow progress is being made, why the fruits of the gospel are not being borne as they should be, why the Spirit of God is not with us in the power that we would like, ought to take this into consideration. "But if the gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." (2 Corinthians 4: 3, 4.) This is directed to them that believe not, but I believe it will apply to some who profess to believe, and in reality do not. They have let the world and the things of the world, blind them to the things God requires of them. The glorious gospel of Christ does not have any meaning to them. They have been trying to go with the world in one hand and the church in the other, and the god of this world has blinded them to the fullness of the gospel of Christ, has blinded them to their duties toward God and man.

What the indulgence in the things of the world will lead to can be found in 2 Timothy 4: 10, "For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica." Here was a servant of God, a fellow laborer with Paul, he undertook to serve God and the world, and the result was as it will always be, failure. And so will we fail if we let the things of this world fasten its poisonous fangs upon us. James has expressed it in this manner, "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) We can see from this that it is impossible to serve God and mammon. Again, 1 John 2: 15, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Then, in the estimation of the writer, the only way we can sow to the Spirit, and hence the only way we can hope to reap eternal life, is by living the gospel of Christ and ceasing to indulge in those things of the world that sap our spiritual vitality and blind us to our duty. I do not want it inferred that a Saint must go around with a long, Puritan face. I believe that we must have recreation, but let it be of that nature that will not rob us of our spiritual growth. Let us therefore present our bodies, our talent, our all, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, and prove that which is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. When we do this, then will God's Spirit be with us in power, and the work of God will progress as it never has before. That we, as the children of God, may show our love for God by forsaking that which is the enemy of God, the world. And then throw our whole being, our whole self into the work of God, having faith in the ultimate victory that shall be ours.

An Outline for the Study of Church History

[For her class of college girls in the Lamoni Sunday school, Sister Vida E. Smith has worked out an outline for the study of church history, and we have presented the same herewith for its value to others who wish to cover the same ground in their studies. It is only a preliminary effort and will be changed largely as conditions warrant.—EDITORS.]

OF GENERAL INTEREST

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIPS

The Christian Standard opened the year with an article on its first page by Robert E. Ellmore, on "Christian stewardship." A few extracts follow:

The popular conception of Christian stewardship calls for reexamination. Investigation in the light of the New Testament will change the emphasis and lift the subject to its proper place of amplitude and dignity. Current opinion limits the matter to finance, the term "stewardship" in church circles, being synonymous with the uses of money.

The teaching of Jesus concerning money is complete and clear, but in no place does he imply that money is the measure of stewardship. There can be no controversy as to the Christian duty of cheerful and liberal giving of money for the maintenance and extension of the kingdom of God, and for the alleviation of human need.

But, primarily, Christian stewardship is not the giving of money. Money is constituent in the subject, but not centrally or fundamentally so.

The connotation of the word stewardship in the New Testament involves nothing less than the administration of "the unsearchable riches of Christ." From this term oikonomia is directly derived our great English word economy, the essential signification of which is "the management of a house." Ruskin's definition is precise: "Economy no more means saving money than it means spending money. It means the administration of a house; its stewardship; spending or saving, that is, whether money or time, or anything else, to the best possible advantage." Christian stewardship is the Christian economy, with the radical, original implications of the word. . . .

The greatest sin of the church is not parsimony of hand; it is sordidness and softness of soul. Many churches and Christians give their money as a substitute for giving their life. He laid down his life "that they may have life." They "Give crowns and pounds and guineas,

But not their heart, away."

Christian stewardship costs money—money and love and trouble. Easy Christians and soft churches shun trouble, the trouble of taking pains, of laborious survey, of finding out, of following up, of personal administration, of "considering" the poor, forgetting that, with God, it is not alone, nor chiefly " . . . what we give, but what we share,

For the gift without the giver is bare."

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS OF 1916

The Government has at last put into the hands of the public the two volumes of the religious census of 1916. The figures are, as near as may be, those of the close of that year. It took the Census Bureau fifteen months to collect the schedules on account of the carelessness of ministers and churches in returning their reports. The bureau had to send out over 175,000 reminders to church officials in order to secure the material. The new census lists 202 denominations compared with the 188 of 1916. It altogether omits the Christian Scientists because they refused to give statistics. Actually thirty-one new denominations appeared during the decade, while seventeen ceased to exist. Among the denominations reported in this census for the first time are the African-Methodist Episcopal Church, the Church of God as Organized by Christ, and the Church Transcendent! New churches appear through immigration—the Albanian, Bulgarian and Roumanian Orthodox Churches, the Jacobite Church (Assyrian) and the Lithuanian Catholic Church. The Jacobite Church is a small Eastern church, whose patriarch resides at Mardin, Turkey. The Jacobite immigrants live in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York and New Jersey. Altogether, the church in this country numbered some 750 three years ago. The Christian and Missionary Alliance for the first time in the religious census appears as a separate denomination. Hitherto most of its churches have been classed as independent. At the time of the census the Alliance reported a little less than ten thousand members, in 166 organizations. For so small a reported membership it does a remarkably great mission work, with 273 American missionaries in the foreign field and a native church membership of 7,500. It spent $140,000 in the last year's report on this foreign work, a per capita foreign mission gift of more than $14. Of course a certain portion of the money going into Doctor Simpson's work comes from outside the denomination.

The new religious census shows that 41,926,854 persons out of the estimated 102,000,000 persons in the United States are church members. This is an increase in church membership of approximately 6,860,000 in ten years, a gain just short of twenty per cent. The rate of increase in the sixteen years from 1890 to 1906 was over sixty-one per cent, a decidedly faster growth than that in the general population. The gain in church membership in the last ten years just about keeps pace with the general increase, which was approximately twenty-one per cent from 1900 to 1910. There are in the country, by the latest figures, 227,000 local church organizations, some 15,000 more than in 1906. The total value of church property is $1,676,000,000, an increase of $420,000,000 in ten years. Three in every eight of our forty-two million church members are Roman Catholic—15,721,815 to be exact. In past religious censuses the statisticians have deducted fifteen per cent from the Roman Catholic figures to make them comparable with those of the Protestant churches, since the Roman Catholics include in their membership all persons who have been baptized. With this fifteen per cent allowance, less than one third of the church membership in the country is in the Roman Church—32.3 per cent, to be exact. Nineteen of every one hundred church members over thirteen years of age in this country are Baptists; eighteen of them are Methodists of one description or another; nearly seven of them are Lutherans; about six are Presbyterians; a little over three are Disciples; three are Episcopalians, and a tenth of a man more than two are Congregationalists. The nine and a half other church members of the one hundred are distributed in fractions among the other communions. The Roman Catholics are stronger comparatively than they were thirty years ago, but their proportion in the total membership has fallen from 40.5 per cent in 1906 to 37.5 in 1919.

While the Roman Catholic Church gained a little over ten per cent (10.6) in membership in the decade covered by the new religious census, the Protestant churches gained more than twice as fast (23.4 per cent). On the other hand, except for small obscure bodies and communions especially nourished by immigration, the Mormons increased faster than any other religious organization in the country. They came not far from doubling, growing from 215,000 to 403,000, an increase of near eighty-seven per hundred. In the whole sixteen years, between 1890 and 1900, they gained only fifty per cent, about the same rate at which the Northern Presbyter-rian Church had grown in the same period. By far the greatest part of the growth of the Mormon Church is due to big families. The people that have children shall inherit the earth. The time will come when the Church in general will teach and true Christians will accept it, that part of real consecration is to bring up good families of children. Of all the great denominations, or denominational families, the Baptists have increased in the highest proportion for the decade preceding the census. This gain has been 26.2 per cent. The Disciples have grown 24.8 per cent, the Presbyterians 23.5 per cent, the Methodists and the Episcopalians at exactly the same rate, 23.2 per cent. The Congregationalists and the Lutherans have increased only thirteen per cent. The fortunes of certain other bodies are of general interest also. The Spiritualists have been decreasing ever since 1890. Today, with twenty-three thousand on their rolls, they have only a little more than half their membership then. The Universalists increased in numbers from 1890 to 1906, but since then they have lost more than five thousand of the sixty-four thousand they had in 1906. The Unitarians, however, who stood nearly still in numbers from 1890 to 1906, have gained twelve thousand members in the census decade, and now number 82,000. The Hicksite Friends, however, are dwindling away, only seventeen thousand of them left where there were 22,000 thirty years ago. Their orthodox brethren have virtually stood still in numbers the last ten days. There are ninety-two thousand of them. Those curiously named sects, the Duck River Baptists and the Two-Seed-in-the-Flesh Predestinarian Baptists are disappearing. But the "Pentecostal" churches are increasing. In 1906 the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene numbered somewhat under seven thousand. Its membership multiplied nearly five times in ten years.

The religious census shows that in almost all the Protestant churches the percentage of men is higher now than it was ten years ago. Including all churches, the percentage as of 1916 was 43.9 compared with 43.5 in 1906. Protestant churches with the lowest proportion of male members are the Seventh Day Adventists with 32.9 per cent, the Free Methodists 34.2, the Universalists 35.2, and the Congregational churches 35.7. But in 1906 the percentage of men for the Congregationalists was only 34.1. In the Episcopal Church the proportion of men rose in the decade from 35.5 per cent to 38.6 per cent; in the Southern Presbyterian Church from 39 to 41.2 per cent; in the United Presbyterian from 39.9 to 41.6; in the Northern Presbyterian Church from 36.5 to 39.3; in the Southern Methodist from 40.9 to 41.2; in the Northern Methodist from 37.4 to 39.2; in the Disciples from 39.7 to 40.6; in the Southern Baptist Convention from 40.7 to 42; and in the Northern Baptist Convention from 36.5 to 37.8. These alterations in percentage mean more in actual figures than they appear to the ordinary reader. In the Episcopal Church they mean that the number of males in the membership increased about 34 per cent, and almost twice as fast proportionately as the number of women. Indeed, the actual increase in number of men and boys reported by the Episcopal Church was eight thousand greater than the increase in women and girls. In the Northern Presbyterian Church the male membership increased 47 per cent in the decade, while the female membership grew a little less than 31 per cent. May this tendency continue until the proportion of the sexes in the church membership are normal.

The churches of America spent $168,000,000 in 1906 in running expenses, beside nearly half that amount, viz, $75,000,000, for repairs and improvements. Their benevolences that year approached $50,000,000 ($47,473,981). The average Northern Baptist spent a little over $2,000, the average Southern Baptist church only $715, while the Negro churches of the National Baptist Convention spent only $418. The regular Baptists and the United Baptists managed to carry on the church's work for an average of $83 a year for the first denomination and of $70 for the second. The average Northern Methodist church spent $1,528 a year, the average Southern Methodist $914. Disciples churches averaged $1,580. Congregational churches $2,531, Episcopal churches $3,295, Presbyterian churches $3,330, Dutch Reformed churches $3,895, Roman Catholic churches $5,273. The Unitarians spent an average of just over $4,000. These expenditures include benevolences. The average Episcopalian invested $22.16 in his church for the fiscal year covered by the census. That was the highest amount spent per individual. Then follow in order the Unitarians $20.06, the Northern Presbyterians $19.92, the United Presbyterians $19.59, the Reformed Dutch Church in America $19.22. The amounts spent per member run down to $2.76 a year, put out by the Colored Free Will Baptists. Denominations whose membership is largely in the country spend small amounts per member for the church.

The most notable revelation made by the census in regard to ministerial salaries is a general increase in the decade covered by the census. In the great denominations these increases run from such a rise as that in the Southern Baptist Convention, from $367 in 1906 to $1,072 in 1916, and in the Disciples from $587 in the earlier year to $1,251 in the later, to such figures as $812 for the Northern Methodists in 1906 and $1,223 in 1916, $714 for their Southern confreres in the earlier year, and $1,037 ten years later. Congregational ministers' salaries rose from $1,042 to $1,343; Southern Presbyterians' from $956 to $1,381; Reformed Dutch ministers' from $1,170 to $1,386; Northern Presbyterians from $1,177 to $1,474; Episcopalians' from $1,242 to $1,632. The salaries of Unitarian ministers average highest, $2,080, having risen $350 in the decade. The census section on salaries would be much more illuminating if it showed the number of salaries within certain limits, as between $251 and $500, between $501 and $750, etc. Then one could discover what proportion of the ministry was clearly underpaid. The figures on salary suggest the question whether the shortage of ministerial candidates is not as great among denominations paying the better salaries as among those paying the poorest. Of course, generally, the more intelligent the constituency of the church the higher the salary it pays, and the higher the natural expenses of the man in its ministry.—The Christian Work, February 7, 1920.

ONE THIRD OF AMERICA'S SUCCESSFUL ARE PREACHER'S SONS

Mr. Roger W. Babson, president of the Babson Statistical Organization, in a recent speech before an advertising club, said that he had found of Americans only 2 per cent who have initiative and vision, judgment and thrift, sufficient to carry on business in a successful way. Sixty per cent, he said, worked just to keep soul and body together, while the rest were the great middle class that were fairly prosperous and ambitious, but lacked opportunity. And he said that business needed to be born again, to get more religion, as he called it, if it desired to go ahead and avoid the labor troubles that have characterized the past. And a most astonishing part of his speech was his telling that of this 2 per cent that was making America what it was, 30 per cent were the sons of preachers, a much greater per cent by far than any other class of Americans furnished to the business world, and he argued from this that the sons of preachers had a better vision and imagination and thrift than the sons of others. There may be a reason for this, for most preachers and their wives must be expert dollar-stretchers to get along in life at all, and this schooling may be what makes the preachers' sons so thrifty in after life.

It has been said on good authority that about 60 per cent of Americans die in poverty and must be buried by their friends or relatives. While it is wrong to live for this world's goods alone, it is well to have enough to make us self-supporting while we live and some to leave to our dependents and to God's cause.—The Gospel Trumpet.

A CREED OF HATE

The following is the creed of those foreigners who were deported. Whatever we may have to say in favor of free speech and the right to deport, we must admit such sentiments as these will poison the very foundations of our existence:

"We hate religion, because it lulls the spirit with lying tales, takes away courage and faith in the power of men; faith in the triumph of justice here on earth, and not in a chimerical heaven. We declare war upon all gods and religious fables. Religion covers everything with fog. Real evil becomes visionary, and visionary good a reality. Religion has always sanctified slavery and grief and tears."

THE FIRST AMERICAN APARTMENT HOUSE

During the three years since the American Museum of Natural History began uncovering the old Pueblo ruin in Aztec, New Mexico, that place has become popular with tourists; the latest bulletin of the excavators mentions that more than a thousand American sightseers made their visits of curiosity last year to what newspaper report has called the "first American apartment house." The term is natural enough; the four hundred rooms included in the ancient ruin sufficiently justify it for casual everyday purposes, and the situation, not more than two hours' ride from Durango, Colorado, makes the ruin a convenient point of interest for motorists. Perhaps it occurs to some of them how the builders would have appreciated automobiles when they built the "apartment house," for the quarries from which they evidently carried blocks of sandstone for the walls are more than two miles away, and the prehistoric laborers are supposed to have had no beasts of burden. Their wood they doubtless rafted down a neighboring river from a cedar forest more than a hundred miles distant, and they probably did their timber work with stone axes, thus leaving behind them a colossal example of patience in building construction which may well make modern American visitors thoughtful.—Christian Monitor.

Yes, we have another kind of Saints (by name), the kind who allow the gospel to reach their hearts, do something and get something in return. They realize the gospel is a divine system; that God is in that system, because he established and ordained this gospel of his to accomplish just that which it was ordained to do, bring his children back to him from that thief who entered Eden, who lied, stole, killed, and destroyed, and who also made a disruption in heaven, and led a number with him before coming here—the real sheep, who hear the Shepherd's voice. They can realize the gospel is a whole, made up of parts; and, though they learned some of the parts before entering the door, they have kept right on going to the same school which taught them the first principles of the gospel, and they pass from one grade to another. As they develop in learning and practice, which makes character, they never find any place or any time to stop the school of learning and the helps furnished for developing.—F. T. Haynes.

PASTORAL

The Duties of the Priesthood

These are many and varied, but always interesting and profitable.

(Written and read by Walter B. Arrowsmith, to the priesthood at Birmingham, England, December 31, 1919.)

The fourth chapter of Ephesians reads thus:

"And God gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 11, 12.

I want us to think about this text this evening, and see what it means to us as a priesthood. It seems to me that the message involves a very great responsibility on the shoulders of those who are called to any grade of the priesthood. I feel confident that we are not yet up to that standard where we can say we are perfect. And I want to bring before you one or two points which may help us even though it may only be a little measure to benefit the Saints and bring them nearer perfection.

We Give Our Best to Worldly Professions

If we take up with some worldly enterprise or profession, which one of us is there who does not want to succeed? The result is, we give it our best thoughts; we concentrate; we sacrifice, and so on. But do we ever think that the calling to the ministry by far outweighs all the professions and enterprises the world can hold out? I have thought very often the priesthood is held too lightly and we don't consider so much the great responsibility which develops upon us.

In 1 Peter 2: 5 we read that this is a holy priesthood, and a little farther on in the same chapter we read that this is a royal priesthood. Now I wonder what effect that has on us as a part of this holy priesthood. Should it not make us consider our position as we stand in the sight of God? I am afraid our calling is not getting the thought, the concentration, and sacrifice that it requires of us, if we are to bring the Saints up to perfection. It is no use saying, Well, I am only a deacon, and if I were only an elder or something higher, I would give better attention. Every office in the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood is necessary for the building up of God's people, and every office needs a man to fulfill it. I firmly believe that the officers in the priesthood of the ancient church must have sadly been neglectful for the church to die away and go into the wilderness.

Who Is to Blame for Lost Members?

And it might be said that to-day there is a lot of neglect when we look at the branch and church statistics and see the number of absent members that are on the lists. Some one, somewhere has been neglectful. Some branch president, some priest, or teacher, or deacon, may be.

Think of it brethren! Men and women dwindling away, instead of being brought up to perfection.

Then if it be our duty to bring the Saints to perfection, what manner of men had we ought to be? The Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3 says thus:

"The elders and men of the church should be of a cheerful heart and countenance among themselves, and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet must they be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech, or in relating of coarse and vulgar stories, or in which the names of their God and Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God who bear the vessels of the Lord be clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of sober character, and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be effectual by your example."

What Impression Do We Make?

In the foregoing passage, there seems to me to be sufficient for our persual to give us somewhat of a position we ought to be in. Think of it, men of God! Do our neighbors know of what sort of character we are? Do the Saints of our branches know that we are his representatives? If not, whose fault is it? I think it high time that we as a priesthood, did come up higher in every respect, especially with regard to our duty.

"Now let every man learn his duty and act in the office which is appointed in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand."

God Wants a Perfect Priesthood

It is our business to learn our duty and see that we carry it out. The branch president or presiding elder must learn his duty; the priest must learn his duty; the teacher must learn his duty; the deacon must learn his duty, and each must work in harmony doing the several duties for the edifying of the body. I have seen officers interfering where they had no right, and I have also seen times when the officers should have stepped in, and done their duties. What does it mean when these conditions arise? Discord, and being out of harmony.

Now the Lord does not want this kind of thing. He wants a perfect people, and if he wants a perfect people, he wants a perfect priesthood to build up for him this perfect people.

We Must Be Spiritual

Then again, we must be spiritual. What is the use of me, if I am not going about my duty of visiting the Saints for instance, if I am not spiritual? I read of a brother who would not do a certain duty in his office because he said he was not spiritual enough; he just asked another brother to go along and do it for him. This should not be our condition; we ought to be in a condition that we may be able to fulfill the duties which come in our line of office. The deacon should be spiritual in going about trying to do what he can for the comfort of the Saints. The teacher should be spiritual, especially when trying to put right cases of difficulty, as if any hint at any kind of threat may shake the confidence of the Saints in him. The priest must be spiritual, especially in his visiting. The elders must be spiritual, especially in seeing that the law of God is kept. In fact, we ought really to get to know the Saints, and by so doing we can better tell how to go about our business in building them up.

What Part Do We Have in Building Zion

We are hearing a lot just of late about Zion. Have we ever thought of the part we are playing in the building up of Zion? If we think a minute, we will find that we have a great part in it, apart from a share in the tithing question. If we are doing our duty and carrying out what the Lord demands of us as a royal priesthood, we shall be building up Zion here; we shall be preparing the Saints for the time when they shall be called to enter Zion.

Let us then, brethren, so live and act and work that we may be as the Lord wants us to be—workmen who will not be ashamed.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Tom, Dick, and Harry

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

Dick:

He rose with a roar, like a rocket,
And burst in a blaze of great glory;
Then fell, like a stick in the mud,
And that was the end of his story.

Tom:

He lighted a lamp on the hilltop,
To guide the wayfarer returning;
He trimmed it, and filled it, with patience—
His light on the hill is still burning.

Harry:

Was dazzled a while by the rocket,
Then darkness came down, and disaster;
But the light on the hill was a beacon,
That led him safe home to the Master.

"Go On in Faith"

BEVIER, MISSOURI, February 18, 1920.

Editors Herald: Would like to make a suggestion in regard to one of our most prophetic hymns, which we are now witnessing the fulfillment of. I refer to "Go on in faith, ye Saints go on," published in Saints' Harp, and in the Harmony. This is a favorite in this branch and district, but only the elders members know the words, and no two of them alike, and each branch its own tune.

Seems to me such an important and inspiring hymn should have a place in the Hymnal. We sing this hymn to the tune, "Hark! Listen to the trumpeter," number 14, in Hymnal. Why not substitute the words of "Go on in faith," for the "Trumpeter" hymn? We already have the "Trumpeter" in Zion's Praises, number 181. We would thereby avoid duplicating, and standardize "Go on in faith," by putting it in new editions of the Hymnal, and without taking up any additional space in the Hymnal. This would give an inspiring tune to a grand old hymn.

I am inclosing the words of "Go on in faith." If the editors will be so kind to publish, we can clip them and paste in our hymnals.

There is an error in hymn number 296 in Hymnal, "O Lord, to thee we come, tho' foolish in thy sight." The manuscript reads, "Tho' sinful in thy sight." Makes quite a difference. We should not admit the implication, and it ought to be remedied in new editions. Yours for better music,

J. L. WILLIAMS.

Go on in faith, ye Saints go on,
Fear not, the cause is good,
The Jews rebuild Jerusalem,
As prophets said they would.
The prophets said in latter days,
The Jews would once again,
Return and build their city up,
Their loved Jerusalem.

Though many years have rolled away,
And generations pass,
The Jews again are gathering home,
Rebuilding it at last.

Said God, "When you see this take place,
Know ye the time is night;
When you shall see your Savior come,
With Saints amid the sky."

"To execute his judgments here,
Upon this wicked earth;
Rejoice, rejoice, and do not fear,
With shouts of joy go forth;
Gird up yourselves and be ye strong,
The chosen time has come,
When Zion shall in beauty rise,
Also, Jerusalem."

The Road Home

BY BESSIE J. ANDERSON

A long narrow way is before you,
Oh pilgrim wandering alone.
A long narrow way is leading—
Upward to a glorious home.
Why should we faint by the roadside,
Give up in utter despair?
When gazing far in the distance,
Beholding our Home bright and fair.

Many the briars by the wayside;
Eagerly grasp to detain.
Brush aside! Push onward! Oh brother;
Let not your work be in vain.
The spirit is willing to serve,
But weak is the flesh to do.
Yet effort and honest endeavor
Will pilot you safely through.

So cheer up and smile with courage,
Press onward and upward you'll go.
The road leading Home will be easier
And never seem half so slow.
Our mettle is now being tested
'Tis the day that try men all
Take courage oh way-worn worker;
Take firmer your hold lest you fall.

Oh, the effort you now put forward;
The best that you can do
Will crown your work with glory;
A brilliant crown for you!
Gaze far ahead in the distance,
Aim for the Gate as you roam.
A glorious welcome awaits you
At the end of the road leading home.

Our present business, in any case, is to divorce morality from dullness. God never put them together. If in the past, for temporary and specific purposes, man has brought them together, it is now man's duty in the service of eternal ends to keep them apart.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

THE FORUM

Who Owns the Stewardship?

BY J. A. KOEHLER

The author presents some clear-cut arguments for group control and argues that the use of some historical facts is a boomerang.

The records that chronicle the events of our early church history, in which it is made to appear that an attempt was made to build up Zion and at the same time stand by the worldwide tradition of the right of private ownership of productive properties (i. e., industrial concerns), is urged by some as proof that stewardship properties should be held in fee simple by the individual steward.

Evidently it is difficult to find any rational grounds for this claim as the evidence submitted is almost wholly documentary. No way has yet been found to answer the arguments of human experience on this question.

We argue, however, that an interpretation of early church facts (I do not mean truths) will reveal the secret of the miserable failure of the early church to develop anything resembling Zion.

The Principle of Group Action

First of all we must have a clear comprehension of the abstract term "the union required by the law." Any association is based necessarily upon a mutual understanding and agreement or covenant or "bond." This "bond and covenant," or "union," sets forth the terms under which or according to which all matters in any way essential to the success of the enterprise are to be conducted. If a partnership is formed, the manner in which the property is to be held, the division of the profits, the conduct of the business, the procedure in case of disagreement, etc., are all specified in the articles of association. And these articles of association, the "bond and covenant" by which these men are united into a whole for the purposes specified constitute the union which unites the constituent parts into a whole. In other words, the "union" is the working basis—the terms of association. With this idea clearly in mind, let us read Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2:

"Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."

It is argued by those who oppose the "trust agreement" plan that the early Saints conducted a "fee simple" plan; in other words they were united by a "union" which is in opposition to the "all things common" plan of the primitive Christian church. (See Acts 4: 32.)

Now join this promise to that laid down in Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2 and what inference are we driven to? Let us see. Reduced to syllogistic form the situation is simply this:

(Minor premise): The fee simple plan was the union according to which the early church was united.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

(Major Premise): But the union according to which the church was united was not "the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom."

(Conclusion): Therefore the fee simple plan is not according to the law of God. So that the very testimony which proves that the early church was united on the fee simple plan is at once the proof that the fee simple plan cannot be used to build up Zion.

Please do not overlook the force of the first proposition in section 102:2 which specifies: "Speaking concerning the church and not individuals." Righteous individuals there were, evidently, who were willing to build Zion on the stewardship plan (the only plan) but "the church," the formal organized effort of the members collectively, the official acts of the official men, were such as could never issue in a Zion. Shall we make this terrible blunder again?

Please do not let the statement that members individually were guilty of "all manner of evil" and further that they did "not impart of their substance" obscure the equally important fact that the organized effort of the church was against the law of God. Individualism and the fee simple idea are very akin to the other sins mentioned.

As against the historical data which aims to support the fee simple idea, it will pay richly to read the historical facts of primitive Christian experience as reported by Rawlins and others. There you will find another story altogether.

The Principles of Economic Righteousness

The only way to come to a clear understanding of the law as a whole, and especially of those portions which are obscure and give rise to "fee simple" misapprehensions, is to set clearly before the mind the Axioms of Christian ethics and then make every interpretation harmonize with those principles.

First, Doctrine and Covenants 49:3: "That which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." This is clearly a fundamental; it is a clear, clean-cut statement of one of the basic laws of Zionian procedure: "One man should not possess that which is above another." This proposition surely implies one of two things: (1) Either the total mass of resources that we call wealth is to be divided up equally between or among men individually, or it means (2) that the resources upon which human welfare depends shall be as much one man's as another's, that is, held in common. But we are not left to guess which of these alternates we must fix upon, for the law provides for the rational course which is as follows:

"You are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.

"And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

This latter rule, (Section 101:12) which declares all the products of industry to be a social product and a social asset by right, is a natural and necessary outgrowth or else a concomitant of the first principle, viz: Doctrine and Covenants 49:3 that "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another."

Now let industry begin (as it ought to have begun) and let it continue (as it must, if we are to have Zion) and then figure out if you can how any factory, school house, post office, grocery store, electric light plant, or what not can ever come to be owned by any individual in fee simple.

As we stated in our former argument, (See SAINTS' HERALD, February 11, 1920) capitol is a reward due labor, but the enjoyment of which labor foregoes (he may be compelled to forego) in order that future efforts may yield greater returns. This of course is the philosophical, ethical, and therefore Christian viewpoint of capitol. "Babylon" has another view point; its legal rights differ from Christian ethics. Moreover the great army of producers are of the workman class. Now we insist that those who insist upon the fee simple plan, and also those who champion the hybrid scheme which subtracts from stewardships and adds to inheritances productive properties to make some men independent—I say, we insist that they fabricate a scheme which gives to the workmen and the minister the same rights and advantages as the entrepreneur steward is to enjoy namely: as a private possession, a productive property equal to his family needs. Are we ready to do that?

If not, who wants to be a workman? Or who wants to be a minister? Shall the ministers be asked to leave a four-thousand-dollar job to donate his energies to the cause of Christ to receive back a bare living, giving to the common fund (in effect) the difference between the salary he could earn and the bare living the church gives in return, while his brother is given a "stewardship," (so called) which he pays for out of the surplus earnings of society and which thereby becomes his own? Is that equality? Does that fulfill the requirement that "one man shall not possess that which is above another," and that "in your temporal things ye shall be equal"? Does it?

Under this scheme the bulk of men, including, the minister, have nothing to show for their talent and labor, whereas the business man has all to show. Equality of opportunity and fairness of treatment demands that the privileges of the minister and workman shall equal those of the business men. This presupposes a community of interests in productive properties.

Private Property

The facts just argued do not mean that absolutely nothing is to be held in fee simple or as individual. They do argue that each man is to be dealt with exactly on the same basis. Certainly some things are peculiarly personal or private. The clothes we wear, the home we live in, the furnishings of the home may easily be regarded as personal property. And for this reason it is provided that inheritances shall be "deeded" to men individually. (Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.)

The right to live presupposes the right of residence, or a place to live, and also the personal right to whatever is necessary to a full and complete life. But the right of association at once carries with it the obligation to make one's presence and actions contribute to the common good. And on these grounds the activities or concerns which affect the common good come rightly under group control. And group control, especially in the case of constituent groups, such as is the church, requires absolutely that the group should control the productive properties.

As already stated, if it is intended to extend personal individual ownership to include productive properties to the extent of the needs and just wants of some men and their families, then let the same thing be done for all men, for "it is not given that one should possess that which is above another, but, "in your temporal affairs ye shall be equal." (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 31.)

In this case, then, each man, whether minister, business man, or workman should own in fee simple a productive enterprise which will meet the family requirements. Does that sound good and sensible? And are we ready to embark on such a fee simple enterprise?

Read carefully the following, which place all men on an equality, both as to rights of ownership, and participation in benefits of stewardship activities:

"And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

"Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them though the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

"And again, there shall be another treasury prepared and a treasurer appointed to keep the treasury, and a seal shall be placed upon it; and all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury: or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward; but so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful, and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer that the treasurer shall not withhold. But in case of transgression the treasurer shall be subject unto the counsel and voice of the order. And in case the treasurer is found an unfaithful, and an unwise steward, he shall be subject to the counsel and voice of the order, and shall be removed out of his place, and another shall be appointed in his stead."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.

What do these argue if not that individual interests are to be secured through group action and prosperity? And what does this imply but group ownership and control? And when these scriptures are coupled with the proposition (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3) that "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another," it leaves the "fee simple" idea and the "hybrid" scheme without grounds, and at the same time as positively establishes the alternate plan, namely that of group ownership.

An Argument for Plain Speaking About Principles

From the correspondence of one of our missionaries of wide experience.

I note that there is a serious break again between the classes which I believe will finally result in war. Now, I hope that the church, especially the eldership will be very careful about taking sides in this matter in public speech or print for it can do little good. It will not convince anyone of anything save the speaker's bias for one to say, we do not believe that a few miners should dictate to the whole nation of citizens. It is a notorious fact that the barons have been doing that very thing for more than a generation. Everyone knows that the laborer has exactly as much right to set the price on his labor as any other man has to get all he can for his wares. The Jews won out on this system some while ago and the learned the competitive system so thoroughly that they put one Samuel Gompers at the head of the union and now he is taking the laborers to the front by precisely the same method that his people won out with, viz, the competitive system. He, realizing that the laborer must have something to sell, obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that a man's labor or ability was his commodity.

Now for us to seize the expedient, the evil deeds of individuals, or a small body of individuals, and use that as an argument to disprove the principle upon which the whole of one side rests, is to adopt the plan which we have decried since men began to use the sophistry, "For as concerning this sect it is everywhere spoken against."

I am not making a plea for one or the other; but a fair deal. I did for years belong to the painters' union and am familiar with their constitution, organization, faith and practice. Then I became a contractor, employer, and owner of my store. Then I was practically coerced into joining the master painter's association. Then I learn their constitution, organization, faith and practice. And everyone knows as I know that every line of endeavor is just as thoroughly organized on both sides, employer and employee, the seller and the buyer, and all know as I know that one side will stoop to as low a deed as the other. I sat in the labor union meeting at a late hour after the better element had gone home and saw them authorize a "strong arm committee." A few weeks later I sat in the meeting of the bosses' union and heard them devise schemes to ruin their competitors, and blacklist laborers. Harry Orchard, a union man, went to the penitentiary for killing a governor, and a detective in the employ of the mine owner's association went to the pen for executing the deed that his employers sent him to do. So I do not think that the elders should avail themselves of an opportunity now and then to take a fling at the object of their hatred, neither get fluffed up when some one gives their favorite a stab.

I think, however, that we may speak as much as we like in an abstract way of principles or go in if one likes as strong as he pleases for a principle but let it cut on both sides without favor if the occasion demands. I suppose that is why the Word of God is a two-edged sword for it cuts both ways.

I have been away from Zion for some time and I do not know what policy the managers of the various industries of the church and the storehouse are inaugurating, but I have confidence that they will not exalt the institution above the individual. In other words, not to endeavor to make the institution increase its own balance at the bank alone, but to endeavor to increase the bank account of those whom it serves so that they may turn over some surplus at the end of the year so that they may partake of the joy.

Sometimes when someone goes on strike for seven dollars for a seven-hour day, we hear a howl of calamity from some of the elders. I used to get four dollars for eight hours before the war and I am quite sure I did not have more than sufficient for my just needs; and now everything has advanced 100 per cent to 300 per cent so I hope the brethren will not be affrighted at the aspirations of the laborers. I sometimes wonder how the church would function if haters of a high wage should get in charge of all the institutions of the church.

James prophesied of a time when there would be a class of calamity howlers and be identified them with the rich. He also tells of the cry of the other side. Are not his words fulfilled to-day? Who can say which cry has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth? Therefore we should possess our souls in patience and pay our labor all that we can and sell as cheap as we can versus to pay as little as we can and sell as high as we can. The latter is the Mormon policy and even though they would give all their profits away in alms the principle would still be wrong.

The turmoils that we see in the world is effect, not cause; and I believe that the trying time of the church—and it has been said it shall be greater still—shall be effect, not cause. This industrial protest that assumes violent forms at times was begotten among the poor but perhaps not by them. This is no new thing that is happening to society, for it has occurred many times before. The cause that brought about the conditions of to-day is the cause that established some upon beds of ivory in their stone houses, within sight of the spire of the temple in the city of Jerusalem; and against which Amos spoke. The Spartans planted the same seeds of rebellion and the reaping came by the Perioeci and the Helots under Lycurgus; from the fifth century, history states, the question of the poor and the rich was continually agitating the Roman state, and the historian that gives this information states upon the preceding page that these troubles had their beginnings in the claim of the patricians that all the public lands belonged to them, to which the plebians objected.

I know quite a number of the ministry who feel called upon to state in effect that a corporation manager ought to be paid $100,000 a year if he is efficient. That theory does not seem to be very near kin to the theory that God's servants should be allowed their just needs, but none to receive more than $2,000.

I know a certain Jew who has made a million in a few years trading, and a good portion of that from the Saints; but I am reminded that he may have to fight for his soil at the gates of Jerusalem when the nations (the discontents) come up to take a spoil. This is his sowing time. I love the Jews and believe that God is prospering them; but that does not justify the syllogism:

1. God is backing the Jews.
2. The Jews buy commodities as cheap as they can and sell as high as they can.
3. Therefore, God backs them who buy commodities as cheap as they can and sell as high as they can.

Just at this time the church is formulating its economic policy, and men are being made stewards over their own property, so I think it very proper that extreme care should be used to assure that no Spartan system of government be installed here.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

What the Auxiliary is Doing for the Church

Woman's work in the church has always had a warm spot in my heart and I have always given it my best effort.

In the past the general woman's organization found an outlet for their energies in the Sisters' Prayer Union and the Daughters of Zion. Now, we have a larger and broader organization known as the Woman's Auxiliary. The woman's movement from its inception was to reach out for better things. To-day it is giving to its women a broader vision, a clearer view, a better impression and understanding of their place in life, in the church and community. It is training the women how to serve humanity. It is offering courses of study in home and child welfare, food and body, relief and service, home nursing, home decoration, public speaking, social purity, hygiene and a number of others.

I am sure that the first leaders of this organization were moved to action because in their souls they had a vision of conditions existing, the unprepared and undeveloped helpmeet, mother and homemaker, the great necessity for better conditions, step by step training and developing our women until they could become as bright lights in the accomplishment of God's work upon earth. This is why I believe we have the Woman's Auxiliary and we know what it is doing for the church to-day and can see what it will do in the future.

There lies a tremendous field of work in the relief and service department. This is a part of the mission of the church, and by the aid given the women should greatly assist the priesthood in looking after its needy.

Another important department is the home and child welfare. Too much cannot be said or done to enlarge upon this subject. Mothers are doing the greatest work that can be offered to God or man. The church realizes we need trained boys and girls for the future and much of this depends upon the mothers of to-day. The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world is not idly said. Our women are playing an important part in the work to-day. They are moving out and taking advantage of opportunities offered to become intelligent and efficient workers. They sense the need of more light and knowledge in order to rear their children acceptably, make of them noble men and women who will be a credit to church and society. In the past little thought has been given to the proper preparation for parenthood. The correct training and proper care of a child's body and immortal soul is a very important and sacred task. A true mother leads a consecrated life. She will always be absolutely truthful, she will have a spirit of loving service.

Department of social purity. Are we living pure and clean lives? Are we striving to stand in holy places and by our lives teaching others? As mothers we should be companions to our children, have their confidence, acquainted with their companions and always instill into their minds the need of their being strong men and women worthy to be called followers of Christ. There should be real relationship between mothers and children. So many things need explanation and should come from the mother. Let us try to establish Zion conditions in our homes and then aid in the establishment upon earth as a dwelling place for the Son of God when he returns.

I have only touched upon a few of the important departments of the Auxiliary. Hours and years are spent by men and women trying to master these subjects for the good of humanity. We should all feel grateful for the band of devoted women who are giving their time and talents for the benefit of womankind. Are we doing our bit to help along? May it be true of each of us that we are willing to bear the burden of the day. Be devoted to duty and hope for the continued progress of this good work.

Have You Hidden Treasure?

A sister writes that, digging into the depths of a trunk, she found some hidden treasures of thought, and, mindful of the admonition "Do not hide thy light under a bushel" (or in thy trunk!) she sends us the following manuscript, prepared by herself "once upon a time" in a psychology class. She has tried to put into practice the theories she advanced, and believes from her experience that these things can be accomplished. She believes the teachers and parents of the church have glorious opportunities for molding character in the young lives about them, and signs herself, "A friend to the thirteen-year-olds."

We are glad to present Sister Grapes's most thoughtful little paper, and it starts a train of thought in our minds, as it must do in the minds of our readers, which cannot but lead to good results in the problems we, as mothers, face daily. Once we all come to think properly, to think along lines calculated to bring before us the great expanse of universal life, the wonderful and important meanings of our existence, or the tremendous responsibility of even the smallest of acts and occurrences, we can but feel that redemption will surely follow. Improve the character of our thinking, and the trivial will no longer appeal or annoy. We will rise, as Tennyson says, upon the "stepping stones of our dead selves, to higher things." We will outgrow the pettiness of yesterday, we will solve today's and to-morrow's problems with a clearer vision of their bearings upon life, and, as parents and teachers, we will recognize that no word of ours, no division, no action, is too tiny or insignificant to leave an indelible record upon the plastic minds and hearts of the young people near us.

Shall we not think right, then, fill our minds, our meditative moments, our inner mental life, at all times with things of value, of eternal worth, that these may reflect constantly upon our acts and bring not only ourselves, but the many whose lives touch ours, steadily upward to heights we are called upon to occupy?

A. A.

A Teacher's Opportunity

A teacher has great opportunities in the critical period of a child's adolescence. When a young soul is striving for truth, the teacher should by careful guidance, direct it to ideals of purity, truth, and trust in a divine Friend. It is a period when the youth yearns for a sympathetic friend to whom he can tell all the emotions and aspirations of his budding life. If the teacher is ever ready with interest, and kindly advice, her opportunity for establishing right thinking in right direction, cannot be overestimated. These confidences should not be treated lightly, or ridiculed.

A love for dress and fashion becomes almost a passion with some young people. Now is the time to establish habits of sense, neatness, and good taste in personal appearance.

Their little love affairs should receive unsentimental sympathy and not ridicule. At this period the boy's respect and protection for womanhood should be inculcated. A girl should be kindly shown that loud manners and indecent dressing do not bring the wholesome admiration, which, at heart, she craves. A pure soul illuminating a clean body is her greatest attraction, and she should be made to realize this.

The soul craves for knowledge, and no matter what may be the source, all is taken in eagerly. A teacher must see, as far as is possible, that all of these sources are pure. This thirst for knowledge can be satisfied to a great extent by reading the best books, and by well-directed study in science and art, under a careful teacher.

All the desires and motives of the young are essentially good if they do not become perverted by carelessness in direction. It is a teacher's privilege to provide the wholesome guidance necessary. It is a teacher's duty, too, to help the young man or woman to the choice of a vocation or profession in which he or she will be happy and successful. It is at this period that the interests for life become fixed so that it is very important that these interests be the proper ones.

The teacher, if she realizes her full duties to the young people in her charge and conscientiously tries to perform those duties, secures their good will, and their cooperation, thus establishing for them, proper interests and incentives through the correct teaching of moral principles. This spells happiness and success for each individual concerned.

Hustlers!

The annual report of one of our locals, having a membership of 24, with an average attendance of only ten, shows that during the year just closed, they earned $1,027.66. Eight hundred dollars had been paid on the church debt through these efforts. This material gain is not the only one made, however. It is impossible to rightly estimate the amount of spiritual good and uplift that was received. Reading from good books through their hours of needle activity, they received many encouraging and stimulating thoughts, and the very fact of meeting and working together, with common interests and love, is preparing these sisters for a devoted consecration to Zion's demands. Not least of all, in their report we note that three hundred calls were made upon the sick. Does this not show how wonderfully the good spirit is working with and developing these sisters? Truly, they are "branches," firmly grounded in the "vine," whose Spirit runs freely through them, bringing forth fruitage worthy such association. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Thrift in the Use of Time

Children should be taught to be on time for meals, for school, for church. Grown-ups should be particular to keep all appointments made with children promptly. Too often they put their own estimates on children's time, forgetting how valuable it may seem to the children themselves. "Turn about is fair play," besides there is the valuable lesson of example to be taken into consideration.—from Thrift Leaflet.

News from Canadian Locals

Under the head of "Mid-Term Queries," in the issue of January 14, the following questions were asked: "Have you a Woman's Auxiliary in your branch? If so, what is it doing?" In reply I would say, "No, there is no auxiliary in the Manitowaning branch, of which I am a member, but one is anticipated."

In the Sandfield branch, where Elder Mortimer and I are laboring for a time, the sisters have been organized for several years, into a Willing Workers Circle. In November last, I visited them, and on the eleventh, they became members of the General Organization. They have only four members, but their meetings are usually attended by several nonmembers. I am now sending in their first annual assessment. They have done a good work in the past, and are now preparing for a sale of their work some time in February or March. I am told at their last sale and concert they cleared $101. This is a good showing for they are members of a rural branch, and all busy farm women. When they hold their sales, they have a box supper at the same time, and realize a good sum from the sale of the boxes, and the extra lunches for those who do not bring boxes. They have a short program, and a general good spirit prevails.

To-day I was privileged to attend one of their regular session, and the Good Spirit was manifest throughout. Five nonmembers were present, one of whom invited the sisters to hold their next meeting at her home, which invitation the sisters gladly accepted. I explained the object of our work, calling their attention to the study courses as outlined in our year book and the late numbers of the HERALD, telling them where to secure them. A number of questions were asked, and answered to the best of my ability.

We are planning to spend an afternoon soon with the sisters at The Slash, a part of the Manitowaning Branch, with

The Work Among the Lamanites

The work among the Lamanite people the past few months is the result of the past years' efforts when Brethren Yates, Christensen and the few local helpers we have had such as Brother and Sister Sanders, Dillons, Sordens, and a few others assisted very greatly to bring in a few hundred of those people, the work of Brethren Shakespeare and Pierce in Nebraska opened up the northern field so now we have a great work and need many men. I hope to see at least 20 appointed this spring.

President Smith has stood for this work all through and a few others have also. The Book of Mormon is very clear in many places pointing out the great work to be done among this people. President Smith stands very high in the estimation of the Lamanite people because he has come to their rescue in assisting them to prevent laws being passed to infringe upon their religious ceremonies.

The trips of President Smith, the two weeks Brother Yates spent in Oklahoma, the work of the brethren of the twelve, Griffiths and Greene the ten days they were among the Indian people in Oklahoma getting acquainted with the people and the needs of that department of our church work, the assistance of the local helpers, coupled with my incessant work since my appointment in July has revived the work and started it on a new firm and stable basis.

In my appeal for this great work I was assisted financially enough to buy a second hand car which broke my arm the second day out. It seems to me, Saints, if we will sacrifice our lives, the home comforts, and give our services, the people of the church should come to the rescue and assist to the extent that we could have a decent conveyance to visit the various camps, go into the homes and occupy as real missionaries, as our Master did. These people live off the railroad and we must have a car to get to them. One sister gave me $100 to buy a picture machine to teach them with, and it is to be a great help.

Our first Lamanite church is complete. Brother Griffiths preached in it once and we hope to build another one at Calumet this spring. We have a membership there of well-to-do Indian members, my dream showing that I was scatter-the object of organizing them. Here at Sandfield there are a number of young girls, children of nonmembers, who attend the Sunday school and Religio. I trust to organize them soon into an Oriole Circle. Thus we are hoping to keep the good work progressing, aiming also at the organization of a study class.

Just received a very encouraging letter from Mrs. William Martin, president of the Owen Sound local. On December 13, they held a bazaar, and realized the sum of ninety dollars. This was their first attempt since their organization of a little over a year ago. The president tells me they have had many trials and were often discouraged, and tempted to give up, but a faithful few held on, and now they are planning a greater line of work for this year such as home-made baking sales, and another bazaar in the spring. Altho their membership has decreased, their zeal has increased, and their blessings in proportion.

We trust these sisters, as well as those everywhere, will realize the fact that self-improvement is as necessary as money-making, and that they will take up some definite lines of study. The opportunities for work amongst the young people are very great, also, and we are anticipating visits to different places, as soon as the boats start running, and we can get off the island for a time. News from the other locals under my supervision will be sent in later.

May the efforts of our local organizations, as well as our general one, receive God's blessing, is my prayer.

ing my efforts too much led to my work in this building of the churches. We must feed the flock of God, and these sheep without a shepherd must be cared for. We are now planning a big reunion on Brother David Pettit's place at Red Rock, Oklahoma, for the Indians and the white people as well. We hope to have a big crowd of both. The location is on the main line of the Sante Fe Railroad and is the tribal camping grounds of the Otoe tribe, but there will be other tribes in the camp.

The work of Zion looms up greatly to me as I visit the stakes and see the moves now toward the building of our ideals. The Lamanite people are to assist in this work. They will be ready, as the conditions now are ripening for the work in the clear fulfillment of the prophecies. All the field is wide open to us for the work among the Lamanite people.

I could write volumes in detail as President Smith wrote up his trips to Nebraska with me also the one in Oklahoma, but space forbids. One evening while at El Reno Brethren Griffiths, True, and I drove two miles north of the town to visit a family of Indian people whom I had met just once and talked about thirty minutes on the Book of Mormon and the great latter-day work, and they were glad to have us call. The lady spoke good English. She is a Sioux. They are delighted with the sound of the gospel and want to read the book. While there at their house we met Brother and Sister John Turtle whom I had baptized seven years before, they are Cheyennes and live at Besse, Oklahoma, where they never get to hear a sermon. The Sioux lady told us they are good Christians for they pray every night and morning and are good people.

Brother Greene and I visited the Iowas and went on to the Otoes where we held a fine meeting. Who will help?

I am your coworker and brother,

From the Land of Sunshine and Good Sleighing

We still have plenty of the beautiful in most parts of Minnesota and the Dakotas, and spring seems a long way off. This has been an unusually long and cold winter, which has made it very hard on both man and beast. But our faith has not cooled with the weather, but our efforts have increased until we feel very much alive in the gospel work.

Elder W. E. Shakespeare held some interesting meetings at Pipestone, Minnesota, recently as well as at Hetland, South Dakota, where there seems promise of some taking the step that will make them God's children.

Elder D. S. Baughman has been holding forth at Dunn Center, North Dakota, with good attendance for several weeks.

Elder William Sparling is trying to stir the Twin Cities, Minneapolis and Saint Paul to the quick, and is meeting with some signs of accomplishing his purpose.

Elder Shakespeare and the writer have stirred the sleepy little town of Frazee, Minnesota, until some of the dead churches are actually showing signs of life.

The Seventh-day Adventists maintain that "tain't so if 'tis so" that the Sabbath has been changed. The Baptist minister is billed to show that the angel of Revelations 14: 6 did not come to Smith, next Sunday morning. A joint revival meeting was commenced the Sunday following the beginning of our services. The Saints of Frazee are trying to do their part to "warn their neighbors."

From here we go to Fargo, North Dakota for a two-weeks campaign against sin and the Devil. It may not be the old fellow's headquarters but we have met some of his trained assistants there, so we expect some difficulty in trying to get the people to come out to hear. The Saints there have been distributing literature, and talking to those who would listen, and advertising the coming meetings for some weeks past. I have discovered that we cannot help others without helping ourselves as well, and that the best way possible to bring the Saints to a unity, and to forget their differences is to get them to work until they are enthused with the "missionary spirit." The influenza has been very light in the Northwest this winter, and the wave seems about past now. Our watchword is: "A greater united effort."

Getting Established in the Islands

A letter to the Presidency from Bishop A. V. Karlstrom, Papeete, Tahiti.

We, Brother Christensen and myself, have just returned from Apataki where we attended our mission conference, coming back by the way of Rairoa and Makatea. We left Brother Ellis at Apataki expecting to return by way of Niau, but he has not yet arrived.

"We feel to praise our heavenly Father for his protection over us, for, at the time of our leaving here, there had been predicted by an astrologer in Australia that a severe storm wave was to sweep these islands, but our people were gathering and some had already gathered and we felt it our duty to go. The tidal wave did not come, but the storm caught us on the second night out as we were on the leeward side of Kaukura where we had unwittingly drifted (yet I believe providentially so, for the island was a great protection to us), and we were carried before the wind many miles out and our sails badly damaged. At the same time on the opposite side of Kaukura where our captain intended to pass Pro Patra suffered severely, being compelled to unload in the sea all of her deck cargo to avoid sinking.

We enjoyed a very spiritual conference and I am quite sure a profitable one, as several advance steps were taken for the development of these people, the details of which I will not here relate as you will have a copy of the minutes. The business though freely discussed was all passed by unanimous vote which was gratifying to those directly concerned. Several inspiring sermons were delivered and the talks that were made indicated that the people had grasped a good understanding of the same.

I was well pleased with the way I was received as bishop of the mission and hope I shall be able to conduct myself so as to be worthy of the confidence they seemed so willing to repose.

I made the selection of one counselor, choosing the one that has been acting as bishop's agent, Tetaku. He is evidently a worthy man, having a good understanding of the laws pertaining to temporalities and has the respect and confidence of the people. The choice was unanimously received by the conference subject to your approval and order. I also selected solicitors for nearly all the branches using as far as practical the deacons for this work. This, I believe, will work good as the natives are pleased to see the law recognized, and the deacons most of whom are young men are consequently more apt to learn readily and as a rule are better educated.

I expect to remain here for a few months now during which time I shall make a strenuous effort to get a grasp on the language on which I have had little time to study, having spent most of the time since coming here in traveling as the peculiar circumstances have justified. I have a vocabulary of a few hundred words and can construct a few simple sentences. I understand enough words to know usually what is talked about but not enough to know what is being said.

EROS, LOUISIANA, February 16, 1920.

Editors Herald: I want the many friends of Brethren E. A. Erwin and F. A. Rawe and Sister Rawe, to know the good they have accomplished among the few Saints in Louisiana. We never felt so elevated in the gospel before but it isn't because we haven't had good missionaries previous to their visit here. But the messages they brought to us caused us to open our eyes wide enough to see where we were stopping.

They have helped us to organize a Religio, and a Doctrine and Covenants class. We have learned that we must have confidence in our officers and give them our faith and prayers that we might grow in this great latter-day work. We have resolved to erect a church and believe our missionaries have spoken by the Spirit and said we would prosper in the work and have many honest hearted people come into the kingdom. Four were baptized this time. Our branch now consists of about one hundred members.

We ask the prayers of all the Saints that we might grow and accomplish great good in our vicinity.

Your brother in the one true faith,

E. C. LARCHE.

Kansas City Stake

The first session of the Kansas City stake conference, with sessions beginning on Sunday, was held February 22, 1920.

A large audience awaited the morning speaker. President Elbert A. Smith delivered a splendid and impressive sermon from the text, "I press forward." It carried great and effective weight with our people, and we feel was an impetus to our work here.

At 2.30 p. m., the afternoon devotional service was very spiritual indeed, the gift of prophecy being manifested.

Immediately following at 4.30 there was a session of the priesthood, and also one held by the Woman's Auxiliary. Doctor Harrington, who was advertised to lecture before the Woman's Auxiliary, being ill, his place was supplied, and very ably filled, by President F. M. Smith. To say his effort was well received would be putting it mildly, the woman's organization being especially gratified with his very pleasing and effective talk to the young people, especially a large number of Temple Builders. The special address to the priesthood was by Apostle J. A. Gillen, and it was a strong and vital appeal to the men, and we are sure will have its effect in prompting them to more conscientious and devoted service. We were especially fortunate in being able to have President W. W. Smith of the Independence Stake, and also Apostle Peter Anderson deliver a brief address before the priesthood.

At 6.30 to 7.30 p. m., a very enjoyable musical program was rendered through a combined effort of the stake orchestra and choir, under the leadership of our stake chorister, Sister Bernice Griffith.

The concluding effort of the conference by Bishop F. B. Blair was an appeal for personal consecration and conscientious application in our work as laborers together that we might accomplish, unitedly, the true and just purposes of God.

There was one ordination at this conference, Brother James W. Stobaugh being ordained to the office of priest.

The business session of the conference, held Monday night the 23d, was gratifying in the fact that the voluminous routine business of the stake was handled with dispatch. A rather lengthy procedure was a new system by which our delegates were elected for the coming General Conference.

The joint convention of the stake Sunday school and Religio was held Tuesday evening the 24th, and business carefully dispatched and their selection of delegates to the coming conference was cared for.

Burlington, Iowa

Since last report, our pastor, Brother D. J. Williams has been serving also as district president, by appointment of the Presidency, succeeding Brother Arthur Allen. He has spent some little time in the district, during which the local priesthood occupied here.

The budget system was adopted by the branch early in February, including the Sunday school and Religio. There bids fair to be greater activity in all departments as a result.

The Nauvoo District conference was held at Burlington February 27 to 29, having been postponed from February 14 because of so many in the branch being victims of the grip. The conference was one of the most enjoyable and profitable for sometime. A joint program was rendered Friday evening by the Sunday school and Religio, the Woman's Auxiliary also being represented. Three educational numbers with music interspersed were the chief features.

Three were baptized Saturday evening, after which Brother P. R. Burton spoke. The seating capacity of the church was taxed to its limit Sunday for practically the entire day; priesthood meeting at 8 a. m., followed by Sunday school and preaching by Bishop George P. Lambert. The sacrament and social service in the afternoon was marked by a message of admonition and promise, and the interest held well through Religio and evening service, when Brother P. R. Burton was again the speaker. The sessions were characterized by a spirit of good feeling, earnestness and devotion.

En Route Home

As I could not come on the S. S. Sonoma second class as planned, I was forced to seek passage elsewhere and left Honolulu on the S. S. Manoa, February 17, at 10 a. m. Due to arrive in San Francisco soon after noon to-morrow, the 24th.

During the week I arranged to hold services at 11 a. m. yesterday. It being Washington's birthday we made it of a patriotic nature. The captain ordered the ship's flag out to decorate the table which I used for a pulpit and he sat on the front row. It was the most distinguished audience I had addressed for years. Many wealthy and highly educated people present. All seemed pleased with the service, and by request I preached again at 7.30 p. m. The passengers are from all different parts of the country and I have given those who seemed interested, tracts about our work. I now commit it to the care of our heavenly Father and hope some seed may prove in the coming years to have fallen on good ground.

I intend spending Wednesday eve at San Francisco church, one night at San Jose, one night at Chico, Saturday and Sunday with Northern California District conference at Stockton, Monday, eastward bound, Southern Pacific.

Sincerely,
(Letter to the Presidency.)

M. A. MCCONLEY.

Southern California

The Southern California District conference convened at Santa Ana, February 21, 1920. Brethren George H. Wixom, Nathaniel Carmichael and W. H. Garrett presided. In spite of the heavy rain most all day there was an excellent attendance from the various branches. The business was mostly routine, and only two changes were made in the district officers. Sister Anna Crum resigned as secretary. She was succeeded by Sister Amy Turner Lewis. Sister Jennie Paulson was chosen member of the library board to succeed Sister Adamson who resigned because she was serving the Sunday school on this board.

A resolution to rescind the present set of district by-laws was laid on the table after considerable discussion until the next district conference. It was proposed to offer a new set of rules as a substitute. The ordinations of Albert Starkey, priest, Eldon Whistler, deacon, Wilford Burton, teacher, Jacob S. Prettyman, deacon, Richard Wagnon, priest, and William McLeod, priest, were provided for. The first four named were ordained on Sunday afternoon.

The statistical and spiritual reports of the various branches showed advancement on the whole. The missionary force though small reported that they were at work and doing what they could.

On Friday the Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Departments held their conventions. Peter Kaufman was elected district superintendent of Sunday school, and Wilford Burton was elected president of Religio. The reports showed a goodly interest manifest and a zeal to accomplish greater things for the future was quite evident. Sisters Amy Lewis and Laurina Bedford has charge of a joint program which

Advertising Suggestions to Local Pastors

One of the first problems tackled by the newly organized Publicity Department of the church was that of "Local Church Advertising." While many of the local churches have been working hard to get proper representation before the people, in many other places advertising has been neglected to the hurt of the church.

At the direction of the First Presidency, the Publicity Department has written a series of letters to all branch presidents and local pastors encouraging them to take up the matter of advertising in an aggressive manner and offering many helpful suggestions to them in their work. The first of this series was mailed this week. Letters to other groups of church workers are in mind, and it is thought to issue a handbook on advertising that will be adaptable to any church need.

The Publicity Department is at the service of the church and if you have special advertising problems on which you need help, you may feel free to write:

Music for General Conference

The following anthems have been selected for rendition by the conference choir at the coming general conference. Experienced singers who desire to sing with the conference choir must provide themselves with anthems, which can be had at the prices noted below, ordering either from some reputable music house or from the undersigned. These anthems, of moderate difficulty, may be mastered by the choir singer of average ability. The list follows, giving title, author, number, publisher and price in the order named.

"As it began to dawn," (Easter), Myles B. Foster, No. 601, Novello, Ewer & Co., 8 cents.

"In heavenly love abiding," W. E. Brown, No. 10910, Oliver Ditson Co., 10 cents.

"Some blessed day," George B. Nevin, No. 11423, Oliver Ditson Co., 8 cents.

was given Friday evening to the satisfaction and edification of all. They were hindered on account of sickness and rainy weather.

At the prayer service held on Saturday morning the Lord was pleased to speak to his people giving words of admonition which was of benefit to the Saints. Brother Garrett was the speaker in the evening, taking for his subject, "Spiritualism." The fallacies and inconsistencies of the modern cult was compared with the Bible and the Spirit of Light.

In the lower auditorium the young people met for prayer service and the older people met in the upper auditorium in like capacity. These services were held at 8.30 a. m., Sunday. Sunday school at 9.30 in charge of local officers. At 11 o'clock Elder D. Amos Yates spoke on the subject of "The far-reaching effects of the gospel." Elder David E. Dowker was the speaker at 2 p. m., the subject being "Spiritism." At 7.30 Elder George H. Wixom was the speaker.

In a characteristic manner the Saints of Santa Ana did all in their power to make their guests sojourn in their city a pleasant one. Hindrance on account of sickness did not discourage them and they are to be commended on the fine way they entertained the conference. The meals were served in the lower auditorium.

An excellent conference was enjoyed and all went home with a renewed interest in the work.

Special efforts are being made to prepare Haydn's immortal oratorio, "The creation," for rendition at the coming General Conference, and those in charge hope to get it ready. The choirs of the Independence Stake are working hard on it under the leadership of Brother Eugene Christy, the stake chorister, that they may prove the properly prepared nucleus of the conference choir for a worthy rendition of this great masterpiece. The edition of the oratorio used is that published by G. Schirmer. Respectfully

To all Gospel Literature Workers

No doubt you have been wondering why you have received no instruction or encouragement from the heads of the gospel literature work this year. As you are aware, action was taken at the last General Conference abolishing the General Gospel Literature Commission and this work was placed under the direction of the Board of Publication. January 1 a Publicity Department was created by the joint council, and among other responsibilities delegated to this new department of church work, the gospel literature direction was included. The Board of Publication took action transferring their responsibility in that matter to the Publicity Department, and since that time no definite instructions have been issued for the reason that the problem was being analyzed and a program being thought out.

The Publicity Department has no desire to make changes in any organization just for the sake of making changes; rather it would much prefer to go ahead on the old lines, but in the matter of gospel literature work, since the process of reorganization had been started, it appeared to be the part of wisdom to finish the reorganization now rather than build up along old lines and later have to disrupt them again. Counsel was taken with the men who have had most to do with the direction of gospel literature work in the past, and with church officials of authority, and all were agreed that the plan proposed by the department was timely and most promising of good results.

The time has come in our church when publicity must take its proper place in our missionary program. For many years the world has been using printer's ink to further all their interests and advertising has become the motive power of modern life. Our church has always believed in printed literature and has always encouraged its distribution, but we must do even more than that if we would accomplish the task enjoined upon us. From now on our advertising must not be a sideline, but must be one of the main activities of our church. If we have not learned, we must become converted to the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ can be taught with powerful effect and with compelling interest through the means of literature just as surely as it can by means of the preached word. It can never take the place of the missionary, but it can pave the way for his ministry and can complete the work which he may at other times have to leave undone.

The church authorities are back of the program of increased publicity and the machinery for the accomplishment of this vital and necessary work is the gospel literature organization throughout the church. The finest tracts that our best writers can produce, printed by tons, will be of no avail whatever unless they are placed in the proper hands. The distribution of the literature is almost everything, and that responsibility rests entirely on the shoulders of the local gospel literature workers. In times past this responsibility has been shared by the Sunday school, Religio, and general church, but in late years, since these great auxiliaries have been recasting their programs with the idea of fitting in as church departments rather than as independent organizations, they have carried this burden more as a duty than as an integral part of their plan. They have done excellent work and it is with keen regret that these organizations are now allowed to relinquish this responsibility, but the time has come when these organizations should be freed to follow their particular calling, and at the same time the publicity work of the church has come to be recognized as of such importance that every branch will be urged to include it in the missionary program and support it as earnestly as they do the ministry.

There are other reasons than these that impel the Publicity Department in asking the general conventions this spring to eliminate the gospel literature organization from their constitutions. They are allowed to give up this work as organizations, but not as workers, for after all, the same good, devoted people carry on all the departments of the church. There is a change of name rather than a change of personnel that the gospel literature work is undergoing.

The plan is this: Instead of having a three-part commission in district and local, it is now proposed that in every branch of the church there shall be one publicity agent appointed by concurrence of branch and Publicity Department and functioning under direct responsibility to the local branch and to the General Publicity Agent. While held directly responsible for the work, this agent may expand his organization to whatever size needed and in addition to having the responsibility of distributing church literature, will be charged with the task of looking after all publicity interests of the church in his locality and will be issued credentials as a regularly authorized agent for the church publications. Every cooperation will be given this local agent and it is hoped to work out a plan whereby every branch will establish a publicity fund and will see that the gospel is advanced in every practicable publicity way.

Until after General Conference, and until the needed legislation is enacted, all gospel literature workers are urged to proceed with their work as before. Do not lose any time; whatever you see necessary to be done, do it, and let no opportunity slip by.

As to reports it will be well for members of local boards to report to their districts as heretofore, and this department will be very glad to receive reports from the districts. Any suggestions that you have to offer will be gladly received and if any question is not met by this announcement, feel free to write and we will give you all the information we can.

ARTHUR E. MCKIM,
General Publicity Agent.

Sunday School Exhibit of Hand Work

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1034 West Lexington Street.

At the coming General Conference, the Sunday school will have a separate building where the workers may meet the general officers for daily consultation. We expect also to have there a display of Sunday school supplies and handwork, of junior, primary, and beginner departments. As space is limited, we ask that only the best specimens be sent, not later than March 25, as we shall have the exhibit in place soon after. Send your exhibit, with name of school, department, etc., plainly marked and attached, to Mrs. Maude Campbell Halley, North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri, who with Mrs. H. B. Roberts has charge of the display. If you wish them returned, kindly enclose postage.

Notice to the Graduate Nurses

I am very anxious to and desirous of getting acquainted and in touch with every graduate nurse in our church. Will you please write me at the address below, and also plan to attend the next General Conference, and make yourself known.

I have in mind some plans of work, to be done in the interest of the church, and as I am sure there are not very many, should they all be numbered. I am very anxious that all respond to this call.

If you should fail to write, don't fail to appear. I am expecting you each and all to comply with both requests. To church officers and members: As nurses are often on cases with which they are too busy to read, will you who read, see that the nurse you know is made acquainted with this notice?

Fast Day in Eastern Colorado

To the Saints of the Eastern Colorado District: In consequence of the prevalence of influenza, and the much sickness among the Saints of a chronic character, (some indeed are in a distressed condition), I would set apart March 21 as a day of fasting and prayer, and would ask that you fast from the evening meal of the 20th until after 2 o'clock on Sunday, the 21st. That at the hour of 2 p. m. on the date mentioned, the Saints all over the district be engaged in prayer at their homes and places of worship, and those Saints who desire it, and can have the elders, be administered to at the hour mentioned.

Dear Saints, let us not forget this matter of so much interest to all.

JAMES R. SUTTON, President.

Conference Party

We are trying to make arrangements for a special car to leave Chicago for Kansas City the night of March 19. Those interested in going please correspond with the undersigned. Matthew W. Liston, 306 Eighth Avenue West, Flint, Michigan.

Conference Notices

Northern Saskatchewan, with the Artland Branch, July 10 and 11. Saints coming over Canadian Pacific Railroad will be met at Senlac, Saskatchewan. Those coming over Grand Trunk Pacific will be met at Artland, Saskatchewan. A small charge will be made for meals. Missionaries will be cared for by the branch. W. J. Cornish, president. Eva Land, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

CRACRAFT.—Grace May was born May 15, 1898 near Mount Ayr, Iowa. Baptized at the age of 13 and graduated from Lamoni high school in 1916. Attended Graceland College half a year when nervous prostration compelled her to stop, from which she never entirely recovered. She died in her 22d year, February 8th, 1920, after attack of influenza and pneumonia, lasting nine days. Funeral at home in Mount Ayr by F. M. McDowell, assisted by James Houghton. Interment at Oakland Cemetery.

GOOD.—Catherine Gibson was born October 15, 1857 at Ashfield, Ontario. Married George Good October 12, 1877. Was the mother of 10 children, 4 sons and 6 daughters. Died February 19, 1920. Her husband and all her children except one son who died in infancy remain to mourn. Baptized October 29, 1899, at Chiliwack, British Columbia. Funeral in charge of Henry Stade, sermon by S. S. Smith. Interment in local cemetery near her home.

HAYES.—Very suddenly the spirit of Brother George D. Hayes passed from earth on January 31, 1920, at Lamoni, Iowa. He lived at the Saints' Home, and his age was nearly 81 years. He formerly lived in Wisconsin, and has been a member of the church many years. Services were held at the Home, Eli Hayer in charge, and H. A. Stebbins preaching the sermon.

ROGERS.—Hannah Alvira Noyes Rogers was born March 3, 1833, at Preston, New York. Married Silas M. Rogers, December 22, 1852. Moved to Illinois in 1856, where they have since resided. Died February 16, as a result of influenza and old age. To them were born 5 children. Belonged to the Methodist church in her youth, but obeyed the gospel and was baptized in 1867, and remained a faithful member till death. Sermon by J. O. Dutton. Interment at Piper City Cemetery.

BARR.—Caleb Barr was born in Canada, July 27, 1846, and came to Michigan with his parents at the age of 15 years. Married Suzzanah Squires in 1865. Baptized April 22, 1917. Died at the home of his son, James Barr, near Whittemore, February 11, 1920. Leaves 7 children. Funeral services at residence of son, James, February 13 and interment made in the Saints' cemetery near Whittemore, Michigan. Sermon by W. D. Ellis.

HILDRETH.—Celestia Melvina Wood was born July 3, 1850, at Hazel Dell, Iowa. Died at her home near Persia, Iowa, December 24, 1919, of paralysis. Married Orson H. Hildreth, June 13, 1865. To this union 13 children were born. Husband, 10 children, 40 grandchildren, 12 great-grandchildren, 3 sisters, and one brother are left to mourn. Baptized in 1859, and remained a faithful member. Funeral services conducted by Joseph Lane at the home of her daughter Mrs. Charles W. Kemmish, near Persia, Iowa, interment in Valley View cemetery.

SHINN.—Malissa Jane Shinn, wife of D. L. Shinn, was born June 15, 1838, in Green County, Pennsylvania. Died February 4, 1920, at her home in Clarksburg, West Virginia. Baptized in 1881, after having been a member of the Utah church a number of years. Husband, one daughter, and four sons are left to mourn, two daughters having preceded her. Funeral services in charge of Thomas Newton.

LIFFIN.—Aileen Pearl Liffin, only child of Dalton and Rose Liffin, was born at Humber Bay, Ontario, Canada, December 31, 1918. Died February 6, 1920, of peritonitis. Blessed by David Pycok and George Whitworth. Leaves to mourn parents, two grandparents, and a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral at church in charge of T. W. Williams. Interment in Parklawn cemetery.

GRICE.—S. Wolsey Grice, daughter of James and Mary Harvey, was born at Carsonville, Sanilac County, Michigan, February 9, 1888. Died February 4, 1920 at Detroit, Michigan. Married John R. Grice, November 18, 1908. To them were born 5 children. We mourn deeply over the loss of one who was a devoted wife and mother and who was always ready to make any necessary sacrifice in order that her companion could present the gospel in the missionary field. Truly her reward is sure. Sister Edith Gault, wife of James D. Gault, died the same day. Good friends in life, in death they were not separated. After a double funeral service at First Detroit Church, conducted by Elder J. A. Grant, they were laid to rest side by side in Grand Lawn Cemetery.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

Elder L. G. Holloway delivered lectures at Graceland College last week, giving five on "The church in succession," before the class in religious education. The developments in Utah, the practices of the dominant church there, with a review of the present situation were given.

Wireless from Independence: President F. M. Smith left Sunday for Washington, District of Columbia to look after church interests. Bishop B. R. McGuire goes to New York City this week, then to Toronto to attend the McGuire-Evans appeal case on March 15. S. A. Burgess is making remarkably satisfactory recovery from his recent serious operation at the Sanitarium.

Brother Thomas G. Whipple writes from Groton, Connecticut, that Elder A. B. Phillips was there recently and held a meeting. He had just finished a series of meetings at Killingly, forty miles north and went on to Rockland, Maine, where he had a good interest.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Lamoni, Iowa. At the sacrament service on Sunday a rather important communication by the Spirit was given through Elder L. G. Holloway, suggesting that if the Saints would support in righteousness President F. M. Smith in his office, the Lord would make of him a strong and mighty leader. The priesthood was admonished that if they would qualify in their various offices and callings the Lord would recognize and bless, but otherwise the Saints would develop the spirit of discernment to know who were the representatives of God. Those who were sowing discord and dissension among the Saints were admonished that unless they desisted they would be relieved of responsibility and the privilege of serving the people.

Toronto, Ontario.—"The immortality of the soul," proven from a scientific and logical standpoint, was the basis of Brother William's lecture at the Allen, Sunday, February 29. These Sunday evening lectures grip and hold the attention of the hearers by the very force of intellectual reasoning by the speaker. The month of March and Brother J. J. Cornish both "came in like a lamb," and we had the pleasure last night, March 1, of listening to the "Old Jerusalem gospel," as presented by Brother Cornish in all its virgin simplicity. March 15 is the date set for the hearing of the appeal case of McGuire versus Evans. "Save and serve."

Chicago, Illinois. The First Branch Sunday school and Religio gave a leap year party on the evening of the 28th and the attendance was the largest had at any social for a long time. Interesting games and contests in connection with leap year were taken up. The costumes were unusually good, and the evening's program very interesting. A "Better Sunday school" contest has been started, the aim being to increase attendance and encourage careful preparation of the lessons. The men are working on one side and the women on the other, the winning side being required to entertain the losers at the close. Attendance, being on time, twenty minutes study of lesson at home, and bringing a new member each count a point. A record is kept of each scholar every Sunday and all those having a percentage of either 95 per cent or 98 per cent (not decided on as yet) will receive a solid silver star with the letters "L. D. S.—1920" engraved thereon. A large attendance marked the beginning of the contest Sunday morning. The Religio has challenged the Sunday school for a debate, to take place in the near future.

Something for the Papers

The coming General Conference will afford a wonderful opportunity for us to get into the local papers with some of our church history. This is the centennial of the angel's first visit to Joseph Smith and the initial step in the Restoration. We feel that these two subjects afford material that is interesting for any newspaper and so have written up two articles based on these subjects that we are prepared to furnish you in the form of electros if you will make arrangements with your local editor to use one in his paper. Proofs of these articles, one of which is half column and the other whole column, (illustrated) have been sent to all branch presidents, but if you are in a town without a branch organization and would like to help in getting publicity for the church, write to this office at once and we will send you these proofs, and if you can obtain space, an electro.

What the Religio Means by Sociability

Sociability is more than a name around which to build a theory. What the Religio means by sociability is that feeling of comradeship which is awakened in the hearts of those who share the same ideals, the same sacrifices, and the same purposes. Latter Day Saints have a basis of sociability such as is found among no other people. Unity of feeling, of thought, and of action is a part of our very religion and is a most important factor in our group development.

The Religio, which for years has been doing a noble work in different fields, has now assumed a new responsibility and has reconsecrated its efforts along the line of sociability. Its program is outlined, its ideals have been stated and the coming conference at Independence gives it the opportunity to demonstrate what it purposes to accomplish throughout the Church. By skillful management and persistence, the largest building in Independence has been obtained for the duration of conference and this big Battery Building will be turned into a Religio Exposition where all the young people that come to conference can meet and can share in the spirit of good fellowship which this organization is pledged to develop. At this Exposition there will be interesting displays, practical demonstrations of Religio plans and every facility will be afforded to make the hours spent there by conference visitors, not only restful but entertaining, instructive, and inspiring.

Every night a splendid program will be given. There will be music, pictures, lectures; in fact, something going on all the time when other meetings are not being held.

Out from this Exposition it is hoped to send hundreds of enthusiastic Religio workers, who will go back into their locals fired by the spirit of this department of church work and filled with plans for definite service in Christ's cause.

The Exposition will not alone be "a place to learn, a place to teach; a place to practice what you preach," but it is hoped its influence will be extended throughout the church and prove a vital factor in the coming year's labor. By all means send at least one good worker from your local to be present at this wonderful demonstration of Religio plans and purposes.

The Formula Used in Confirmation

A symposium from letters secured by the First Presidency.

At a meeting of the First Presidency, Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, and presidents and bishops of stakes held in 1918, a discussion arose as to the use of the formula, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," or "Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Thereafter the Presidency addressed a circular letter to numbers of the elders asking for an expression of opinion. Some of the replies are here quoted, as our readers, and especially the elders, may enjoy their reading. There seems to be rather a general unanimity of opinion, with some slight differences in details. The closing letter, perhaps, rather aptly sums the matter up in a few words:

John W. Rushton says: "In the nature of things the act of confirmation is the official reception of the baptized believer into the church, with a conferring of rights and privileges of such membership upon the candidate; and, also the petitioning of God to bestow the Holy Spirit upon such candidate for the completion of the regenerative process. No man has the power, and therefore not the right, to say, 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost,' in the sense which would imply that such gift was within the power of man or even subject to his disposition.

"The Holy Ghost is the gift of God, and the confirmatory prayer in its nature is petitioning that such gift God might be pleased to bestow upon the baptized believer.

"In all of these rituals the simpler we make our work and the more we keep 'man' in the background and place God to the front, the more effective our work is likely to be."

F. M. Sheehy: "No fixed formula is necessary. We assimilate by association with others certain forms or fads, they become fixed by habit. It is better to be fresh, original, and brief, but not to exclude sense or proper sentiment. The Master is a right example in the matter of prayer in Matthew 6: 5, 15."

D. J. Krahl: "I have your request for expression of opinion relative to use of certain formulas in confirming members in the church, as, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,' or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost.' I do not find any place in the Scriptures where it would indicate that it was necessary to use these formulas. The occasion cited when Jesus revealed himself to his disciples after the resurrection and breathed on them and said, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,' was a special occasion, as is indicated by that which follows, and was stated in connection with a special charge to the ministers, giving them power to remit and retain sins.

"The Holy Ghost is given, I understand, by the laying on of hands, and not transferred by the repetition of certain words. In Alma 16: 17 we read concerning the acts of Jesus while on this continent thus: 'And behold while he clapped his hands on them they were filled with the Holy Ghost.' In the New Testament Simon observed that the Holy Ghost was given through the laying on of hands. In Acts 19: 6, 'And when Paul had laid his hands upon them the Holy Ghost came on them.' In Moroni 2: 11 we read, 'Ye shall call on the Father in my name in mighty prayer and after ye shall have done this ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands ye shall give the Holy Ghost.'

"In the baptism of water we have a formula of words given to be used by the officiating minister; but the officiating minister does not state, 'Receive ye the baptism of water,' or 'Receive ye the remission of sins,' but performs the act, and the candidate is immersed and his sins are remitted. We believe that this would be the same in the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit. The officiating minister acts by authority in this instance as he does in baptism. His authoritative act accomplishes the purpose as much in the baptism of the Spirit as it does in the baptism of water, and we do not see why it is needful that a set formula should be used to make it legal."

G. J. Waller: "The matter brought to my attention in your letter of December 3 regarding the use of certain formulae by elders in confirming members into the church has received my consideration and I would state that personally I am in favor of the elder officiating using in some part of the confirmation the words 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost.' In my ministerial work in the past I have always been careful to use this formula and have noticed that most of the co-laborers with whom I have been associated have also used the same.

"I may say however that the omission of such formula in confirming an individual would not in my opinion prevent the bestowal of the Holy Ghost as I believe that the Lord recognizing the imposition of hands by the elders officiating for the purpose of confirming a member into the church and for the reception of the Holy Ghost would confer the blessing upon the member seeking the gift promised under such authority.

"This question brings to mind a confirmation in Honolulu in which a Hawaiian elder officiated with myself, he being the speaker. The elder in confirming used the Hawaiian tongue and did not make use of the formula that the Hawaiians present knew that I and other elders who had officiated in their presence had been in the habit of using. A Hawaiian priest after the confirmation stood up in the meeting and questioned the validity of the ordinance inasmuch as the usual formula had not been used and I was called upon to settle the matter. I then stated that while I thought it was always better to use the formula 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost' the fact that these words were omitted would not interfere with the bestowal of the blessing promised."

F. G. Pitt: "Touching the question as to whether or not it is necessary, in order for individuals to receive the Holy Ghost, that the elders in confirming shall use certain formulas such as 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,' or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost' will say, after examining the texts cited, also other Scriptures on the same matter, my judgment is that it is not necessary.

"While the words are permissible if one is so led, yet it does not invalidate the ordination if not used. If they were essential the Lord undoubtedly would have commanded their use as he did the words to be used in the ordinance of baptism, also in the blessing of the emblems in administering the Sacrament."

C. J. Hunt: "In regard to the question raised in your letter of December 3, asking opinion on the duties of elders confirming new members into the church, permit me to say that the formulas 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,' or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost,' are not authorized in the three standard books of the church. In John 20: 21, 22, the Savior is speaking to the twelve apostles, not an instance of baptism of course.

"Of the five citations from Doctrine and Covenants you gave I would refer to sections 32: 2, 49: 2, 83: 10. The strongest of all these may be section 85, paragraphs one and two. Yet I would not feel justified, in view of all the other citations, to use the formulas in question every time confirming baptized members. A case in point might be section 125: 15, where the Lord directs the elders when laying on hands for the healing of the sick, that it is not necessary to always say whether they shall be healed or not, but to let the Lord give of the spirit of healing as it shall be in his wisdom so to do.

"In the Book of Mormon, book of Alma, chapter 16, paragraphs 116 and 117, Alma refers to seven of his coloborers who were accepting an important mission under his direction. Alma laid hands on them and they were filled with the Holy Spirit. Also in the book of Moroni, chapter 2, paragraphs 1 to 3, we have the words of Christ which he spoke unto his disciples, the twelve whom he had chosen. He directs: 'Ye shall call on the father in my name in mighty prayer, and after ye have done this ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands ye shall give the Holy Ghost. And in my name ye shall give, for thus do mine apostles.' And it is said that as many as received the laying on of hands the Holy Spirit fell upon them. In these instances no set formula is used, the servants of God administering the ordinances, leaving our Lord to bestow the Holy Ghost as it seems wisdom in him to give.

"We are instructed as a church to administer the sacrament of bread and wine, and those who have prepared themselves to partake have the promise of receiving a forgiveness of their sins. Yet those who administer do not say to them at the time of administering, 'Receive ye the forgiveness of your sins.' It is also true in the ordinance of baptism. It is generally believed that this ordinance is for the remission of sins, yet when the baptismal rite is being administered the minister does not say, 'Receive ye a remission of your sins.' Yet the ordinance implies that, as also in the sacrament. What is true of the last two ordinances named is also true with the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick as recorded in James 5: 14, 15."

Peter Anderson: "Regarding formulas used in confirmation of members, will say, that I know of no set formula and have no evidence that the Lord ever intended such to be used. The usual custom of saying, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost, or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost,' is not, so far as I know, based upon any commandment from God. However, I deem it quite proper for those who confirm to use the above formula, when impressed by the Spirit to do so; otherwise, pray that the parties may receive the Spirit or the gift of the Holy Ghost, using such words as the Spirit may direct."

A. Carmichael: "The Holy Ghost is given as a gift from God, hence in so many places it is called 'the gift of the Holy Ghost.'

"The confirmation is a means unto an end: i. e., bestowing of the Holy Ghost.

"Those holding the Melchisedec priesthood are authorized to give it.

"He (Christ) gave them (his disciples) power (authority) to give the Holy Ghost.' (3 Nephi 8: 71.)

"Ye shall have power that on whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost.' (Moroni 2: 2.)

"And whoso having faith you shall confirm in my church by the laying on of hands, and I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them.' (Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3.)

"From the above you learn that God gives it through the delegated authority of his servants. It is then immaterial as to just the formula used in giving.

"If A gave B a loaf of bread to give to C, B, in handing it to C could truthfully say 'Receive ye the bread,' or 'Receive ye the gift of the bread.' Both mean exactly the same thing."

Henry A. Stebbins: "Replying to your question of the 3d inst. will say that I believe that it is best to follow the example of the Lord given in John 20: 22, and thus say 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost' to those who have been baptized with water, when we lay hands on them in confirmation. Probably in instances the Holy Spirit has been given in answer to the prayer for it without the form being repeated, but I believe it is far safer to use the form the Savior used, or else insert the words 'the gift of.' It was over thirty years after I came into the church before I heard any confirmed without one form or the other being used. And unless the Lord speaks I do not know who can declare with certainty on the matter and the old form used so many years be omitted."

James A. Gillen: "Referring to the question as to whether it is necessary to use the formulas 'Receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, or 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost':

"While I see no good reason why this formula should not be used during the prayer of confirmation, I am of the opinion that inasmuch as the 'laying on of hands' in the ceremony is primarily for the bestowal of the Holy Spirit, or Holy Ghost, the failure to make use of the formula referred to would not do violence to the purpose of this ordinance. For in the nature of things the tenor of the prayer should be to the intent that this gift should be given whether the accustomed expression is used or otherwise.

"The burden of this prayer should be an entreaty to our heavenly Father for this divine gift to be given. And furthermore, that it may abide until it has served its purpose; until the candidate shall stand in the presence of God a full grown man in Christ Jesus.

"Epitomizing my opinion, I would say: It would be well to make reference to the bestowal of this gift in prayer; on the other hand the failure to use the formula does not invalidate the ceremony."

I. N. White: "Replying to yours touching a precise, prescribed formula to be used in confirmation of new members after baptism in order to receive the Spirit, I have this to say: I think it proper, and probably more satisfactory to the convert, for the elders in confirmation to use one of the two formulas that is recorded in the books—to wit: 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost' (John 20: 22) or receive the 'Holy Spirit' (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1); they are used interchangeably, and mean the selfsame thing, no doubt in my mind, and would bring us to the 'unity of the faith' in this matter."

W. A. McDowell: "Touching the question of the elders using certain formulas in confirming new members into the church, such as 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost' or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost,' I do not believe it to be necessary to use the above formula, as it does not add any more to the right, or authority, or power, in conferring or bestowing the Holy Ghost unto another, as that power and authority, is already resident in the elder by virtue of his ordination, as found in John 20: 21, 22, 23, also Doctrine and Covenants 55: 1.

"Thus the Holy Ghost is conferred, or imparted unto the one who has been baptized in water, by virtue of the Holy Ghost and authority resident in the elder, and the laying on of his hands, all things being equal."

C. A. Butterworth: "Certain words to be used in confirmation: I do not believe that anyone acting in authority for Christ is bound to use any set phrases in connection with any ordinance or ceremony. It is always 'After this manner,' 'In the following manner,' 'On this wise,' and then a sample is laid down to follow. In the Lord's Prayer it begins, 'After this manner shall ye pray.' Baptism is administered (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 21), 'In the following manner . . . and shall say', and different words are used from what were used in baptizing Helam (Mosiah 9: 44), and both these differ in words from Nephi 5: 25, but all agree in sentiment.

"In blessing the emblems of the Lord's supper, over which we are so particular in reading, it says 'and after this manner shall ye administer it.'

"Of the prayer in the school of the prophets Doctrine and Covenants 85: 40 says, 'Salute his brother or brethren with these words.' (Verse 44.) 'This is a sample unto you for a salutation to one another.'

"Manner does not necessarily mean the exact words, but custom, kind certain, degree or measure, etc.

"If the one confirming uses such words as these: 'As a servant of the Lord, ordained and sealed unto this power, I confer upon you the right and privilege of receiving the Holy Ghost and may you order your life so as to merit this favor,' I think it should be sufficient."

George N. Briggs: "Touching the matter of formulas to be used in confirmation by elders, I am clearly of the opinion, after having read the passages referred to, and others, that it is not essential to use any such formula as 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,' or 'Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost,' but I do believe that it is advisable to use such expressions. So far as necessity is concerned I believe they can well be omitted."

The Healing of the Sick

It is really instructive to look over the summaries of sermons such as appeared recently in the Los Angeles dailies when James Moore Hickson the Episcopal layman exercised what he terms the gift of healing.

Great crowds were attracted and it appears that there were healings. The clergy dared not deny that there had been results from the laying on of the hands of this man. Yet if they were to indorse his work it would put their churches in the attitude of having been seriously deficient all these years, and to oppose and deny was to go against what their congregations knew to be facts.

One almost feels sorry for them under such circumstances, for there is no way to escape, and to face the situation is extremely difficult.

For ninety years the church which we represent has not only taught that God's power was no more limited now than it was in former ages but has demonstrated constantly that it was being utilized in the healing of the sick, through the administration of its elders by the prayer of faith and the laying on of hands.

During that time healing cults have arisen on many sides. There are churches which have made it a part of their religious creeds. Occasionally persons have appeared who claimed healing powers such as does this Hickson, and have indeed performed certain miraculous things.

But as constant as the changing of the seasons has been the outside opposition to the healing gifts among us as a people. Because we have not heralded them to the world nor even among ourselves, the thousands of miraculous healings performed by our elders go almost unnoticed, or if noticed denied by the opposing clergy who come in contact with us.

But it goes on. We incline to the opinion that we are the recipients of as many miraculous physical blessings through the healing power of God as were the members of the church in the days of the Martyrs. The difference is that we have become accustomed to them, say little of them, and rather stress the responsibility of living a wholesome Christian life to show our gratitude for God's providence in our behalf.

We should be the last people to deny that there is miraculous healing done by others not of our faith. And whether we concede that it is done by the power of God or by some other power, it seems to us the real crux of the situation is in the accompanying features in the system of religion represented.

For instance, this man Hickson says that healing is but a part of a religious life, that the Christian experience as a whole is the necessary corollary. He leaves that to others, and goes on exercising what seems to him a personal gift. He is not concerned over the fact that the ministry do not have the gift as suggested in James 5: 14, 15, nor the power of perpetuating it by ordination of others.

Just as we know conversion is but one part of a religious life, and to be successful must be consecutive, covering the adoption of many conclusions as applying to us, so must a proposition of divine healing be accompanied by those things which will develop character.

It is one thing to heal an infirmity but quite another to heal a sick soul and cause it to function in the higher planes of spiritual existence.

The principles of the gospel, the gifts of the Spirit, the fruits of the Spirit, the administration of the ordinances, are all parts of a complete system which is intended to develop character. We must recognize character as eternal. Its development may be retarded by infirmity of the body, but it may also be clarified by affliction.

Some of the narrowest Latter Day Saints we know are those who have received some special manifestation such as healing of an affliction or receiving a dream or vision, and to the exclusion of everything else harp on that one string till all who come in contact with them are sick and tired of it, and have to make a special effort not to react against anything of the sort. What should have been a blessing is thus perverted into a public nuisance, not because the gift was not divine, nor the person not needy, but because of a perverse short-sightedness which can see no farther than the end of the afflicted one's nose.

This single-thoughtedness arising from healing or anything else spectacular in our religious experience is the bane of our spiritual development. Till we grow big enough to accept these blessings in gratitude and proceed to realize upon them, we shall never even receive as we should.

With a broad-minded appreciation of all that goes with—or should go with—divine healing, we shall have no occasion for mental trouble over the healings reported from various quarters from time to time. We have long ago been warned that a “strong delusion” would be sent. (2 Thessalonians 2: 11, 12.)

This passage from Revelation 13:13, 14 seems to have been written concerning our time:

“And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image of the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.”

And Matthew 24:24 is plainly written concerning the latter days:

“For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect.”

Perhaps we have seen but the beginning of the delusive powers that are to be made manifest, but if we are thoughtful and observant, we will not be moved nor allow others about us to be disturbed, no matter how greatly they shall develop.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL INVITATION

During General Conference the Sunday school will keep open house on the Temple Lot and all visitors, particularly those interested in Sunday school problems, are cordially invited to make headquarters with them.

There will be experts in every line of Sunday school work present to advise with you regarding your special problems.

Handwork exhibits will be a most interesting feature and will give you many new ideas for the younger classes.

Another Faithful Shepherd Gone

Sometime ago we learned of the passing of Elder G. A. Smith, but were unable to secure promptly the items concerning his life. Though not personally acquainted with the brother, one could not read the communications to the church papers from Indiana and Michigan without realizing the profound respect in which he was held. He has been president of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District a number of years, and a diligent man in the service of God.

He was born in Sandusky, Ohio, April 1, 1850, and died February 3, 1920. Baptized June 15, 1873; ordained a priest October 28, 1895; an elder July 1, 1896, and a high priest April 19, 1900. On April 18, 1905, he was ordained a member of the Standing High Council and continued till the reorganization of that body in 1916.

While he had not been in normal health for several years, his death was unexpected. In his passing the church has lost a sturdy advocate of its truths and an able man of special presiding qualifications.

ELDER GEORGE A. SMITH

What Is a Doctor?

It is interesting sometimes to get back to the original meaning of words. To-day in popular usage the word doctor means an M. D., one for whom we send when we are sick, to give us some medicine, and who tries by his advice to bring us through that time of serious trial and illness. Thus they do a splendid service for humanity.

But the original meaning of the word doctor is not practitioner, but teacher. It comes from the Latin docere meaning “to teach.” It may rightly be applied to those who after years of study are qualified to teach. A bachelor of law is permitted to practice law; a doctor of law is a rare title to be conferred on those who are competent to teach the law through their long study and observation. The degree of bachelor of philosophy is rather an anomaly, and is usually placed as an unclassified degree. A doctor of philosophy is one who has a knowledge broad enough to teach philosophy, or the reason of things, both scientific and metaphysical.

A doctor of medicine is one who is to teach medicine. But that, contrary to the popular concept, does not mean one who teaches drugs and their nature, for in the original sense it is derived from the Latin mederi—“to heal”—from which is derived medicus—“belonging to healing.”

Medicine, therefore, in its original sense is the science and art dealing with the prevention, cure, or alleviation of disease. In a narrower sense, it is that part of the science and art of restoring and preserving health, which is the province of the physician.

Judge Righteous Judgment

BY J. A. GUNSOLLEY

There are right and wrong ways to criticize, and we should use our right of free speech in a wholesome manner.

The injunction to "judge righteous judgement" implies clearly that the Savior understood that there is likelihood of our judging the other kind.

In contemplation of this command or injunction, there comes at once the question, What is righteous judgement? For, before one can conform to the injunction, he must comprehend its significance. The writer's thinking upon it has brought him to the following analysis and classification:

Two Kinds of Righteous Judgment

There are two kinds of righteous judgement. The one is the result of one's exercising his God-given thinking and reasoning powers, as a result of which he reaches conclusions in his own righteous convictions. The oft-repeated fallacy to "judge not" is the result of a mistranslation to stultify real development rather than to promote it.

But the right to exercise one's faculties of judging does not imply the right to give expression to that judgment in the presence of others, only as provided for in the law of righteousness. To do otherwise is a violation of the injunction, "Judge righteous judgment."

The other class, or kind, of "righteous judgment" is that rendered by one who is made a judge under the law of Christ. This law provides for a proper examination of the acts of men by certain ones designated as judges, forming courts, authorized to examine evidence touching the conduct of individuals, and upon that evidence rendering decisions or judgments, determining the guilt or innocence of those accused of transgressing the law of righteousness. For one thus to sit as authorized and render decision or verdict upon the evidence in harmony with the law is to "judge righteous judgment."

Citizens of free government jealously guard the right of free speech, and it is commonly understood that the public acts and public utterances of public men, or servants, are public property, and as such are proper subjects for free criticism by every one who has the inclination to make it. The mayor, the governor, and even the president are not exceptions to this free, promiscuous, and public criticism, except in times of grave public danger.

A Distinction in Kinds of Government

Citizens of the kingdom of God reasoning by analogy have wrongfully concluded that this same right of free speech justifies one in openly criticizing the public acts and utterances of those occupying official positions in the church, little thinking that there is a distinction between the so-called free governments of men, and the government of the church established upon principles revealed directly by the God of heaven.

Earthly governments are developments of the wisdom of men, quickened at times, to be sure, with a degree of inspiration from heaven, as in the case of the government of the United States of America, and as such are capable always of improvement. Hence each man's administration is imperfect both as to the execution of the law and the law itself. Investigation and criticism properly and freely exercised logically promotes progress. But in the government of God, established upon the law given by God himself, only the administration is imperfect because of the incomplete development upon the part of those who administer the law.

As one of the provisions of this law given of God we have that which provides how it is to be administered, and how errors in administration are to be corrected. One of these provisions is that God's people must be one, else they forfeit their right to be acknowledged his. Another provision of divine government is that by the spirit of revelation the ministers of God are entitled to direction and comprehension commensurate with the duties and obligations to be performed. Certain quorums and councils are instituted for the purpose of examining and passing upon the duties and acts of individuals acting in the various capacities in the administration of the law and the execution of the various functions in the government of God.

Quorums and Councils to Decide

It is before these quorums and councils that the public acts and utterances of men are to be called in question, and for any individual to openly express his judgment in such a way as to be destructive instead of constructive in to do violence to the injunction, "Judge righteous judgement."

What, then, is the course open to one who takes offense at the conduct or acts of another, in order that in his efforts to bring about a correction of the matter he may not come under condemnation by judging unrighteously? In the first place, it is everyone's God-given privilege to exercise the powers of discrimination, reason and judgment, and reach conclusions as to the right or wrong in the acts of others. The basis for such judgment is the acts of men, for "By their fruits ye shall know them." God looks upon the heart, but man looks upon the outward appearance, and it is the things men do that forms the basis of our estimate of them. The forming of judgment thus based is not in itself unrighteous. It is the use we make of it that constitutes the evil.

In the second place one offended by the acts of another, whether it be a personal offense between individuals, or a public offense, and feeling that a correction should be made, should proceed as provided in the law (Matthew 18:15-18; Doctrine and Covenants 42:23) to take the matter up with the individual alone, endeavoring to get him to see the error and to correct it.

In the third place, if the matter be a personal offense, the offended one is to take one or two more with him, if he has failed in the attempt between the two alone, and make further efforts to adjust the matter and bring about the correction thought to be necessary. Failing in this, or other reasonable attempts, the offended is to lay the matter before the church, not the members, not even the wife or the husband, but before the elders, the presiding elders, of course, when the law may further take its course.

In the fourth place, if the offense be a public act, teaching, or administration of the law, or pulpit mannerisms, the private interview should be had as in the case of an offense between individuals, to be followed, if further steps be thought necessary, by laying the matter before the proper regulating authorities or councils, in order that the law may take its course.

No Justification in Picking Flaws Recklessly

There is no justification under any circumstances for one's going from member to member, picking flaws with the work of another, or pointing out his weakness, no matter who he may be. Such a course could never in the very nature of things result in a correction of the fault of weakness, but must inevitably result in a loss of confidence in the one criticized and in the minds of the thoughtful and discerning also in the critic.

Two wrongs never made one right. It is never necessary to violate one law in order to arrest the violation of another. Cooperation and harmonious effort upon the part of all is the only procedure which will ever accomplish the great work entrusted to the children of God.

Therefore, "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment. For with what judgment ye shall judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

The Interchurch World Movement

BY C. E. WIGHT

A movement of interest to every Saint because of the extensiveness of the program attempted.

In view of our interest as a church in all movements that have for their aim the advancement of mankind, HERALD readers will undoubtedly appreciate a brief report of the Pastor's Conference of the Interchurch World Movement, held recently at Des Moines, Iowa.

Six of our ministers were in attendance at this conference. We were treated very kindly, but this was not strange since among some 1,300 or 1,400 men it was not easy to discover six little insignificant "Mormons." The question of church affiliation was never raised on the floor, although it was indicated on the cards when we registered.

We were in session almost continuously from the afternoon of February 23 till the evening of the 25th. The main points brought out by the leading speakers are given below.

It should be understood that it is not the intention at the present time, at least, to merge the great churches interested in the movement into one single organization. It is expected that all will work together for the purpose of world evangelization, but that the denominational organization will remain unchanged.

The real purpose of the movement as expressed by its leaders is to prevent overlooking and overlapping. This of course involves to a certain extent the feature of federation, since in those communities where several churches are having a fight for their existence, it is expected that the territory will be given to the strongest church and that the other organizations will keep hands off.

In other words, to use the language of the presiding officer of the conference they expect in the future to "stop stealing each other's sheep." This situation applies not only to local fields but to foreign fields as well. In this way it is hoped that far more territory may be covered than in the past.

The churches are really alarmed at the conditions confronting them in many foreign fields. One speaker made the statement that if the churches did not work together in an intensive effort, it would be a matter of only a few years until some foreign lands, particularly Africa, would be almost entirely under the domination of the Mohammedan religion.

To meet this emergency it is contemplated that the movement shall not only make "World Evangelization" its battle cry, but that a tremendous drive shall be inaugurated to provide the sinews of war, this drive to extend into every nook and cranny of the United States. The program calls for the raising of a billion and a quarter dollars in five years time, to provide for the support of foreign missions, colleges, hospitals, etc.

So much for the general program. Of the many speeches and talks, two were of particular interest. One speaker made the statement that the churches have failed because they have limited God. That if God could inspire the prophets in olden days and could place upon Peter and Paul the inspiration necessary for the writing of the New Testament epistles, he can inspire men with a divine message to-day. He also urged that if one of the churches should be blessed with a Pentecostal shower, it could accomplish single-handed the entire program of the Interchurch Movement.

The other speaker whose message was of special import, reviewed the economic situation of the present day and sounded a note of warning. He said that unless we should return to the teachings of the Master, recognizing that we are but stewards over that which we possess, we could look for economic disaster.

Let it be said at this point, however, that their understanding of the true stewardship ideal and plan is very limited. In fact this speaker missed the point entirely by urging that the present system with slight modifications would accomplish the desired results.

I left the conference with added reasons to thank God for the wonderful plan he has given us. It is a beautiful theory. How soon are we going to demonstrate its practicability to the world?

Strange Bedfellows

LaRue and Nutting, once violent enemies, now unite to oppose the church.

Many times in the history of our church we have had the sad experience of seeing those who, at one time, professed to be our friends, later arrayed in the ranks of our enemies and in some cases, these dissenters have raised the most vociferous voice of the crowd of professional agitators who, either for prejudice or for pay, constantly clamor against us.

At first we are surprised and sorry, of course, but we soon became reconciled to even our biggest losses and the incident enters the realm of speculation and we wonder how our erstwhile friends feel after being received into the bosom of our enemies.

We wonder what the basis of the new friendship is and if all past differences are swallowed up in the one hatred against our church.

Take the spectacle of William E. LaRue and J. D. Nutting for instance. Only a few years ago these two men were pitted against each other at Cleveland where Mr. Nutting occupied as secretary of the Utah Gospel Mission and Mr. LaRue, as we all know, represented our church. Writing of an interview which they had, Mr. LaRue, in the HERALD of August 5, 1908, says:

"Reverend Mr. Nutting is a Congregationalist, and I believe he holds to the idea that the Mormons of every rank should renounce their faith and apply at the doors of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or to what is termed the 'evangelical churches,' for admission. This, it is safe to predict, they will never do; there are no charms in sectarianism for Latter Day Saints. While the so-called and self-styled Christians attempt to liken us unto the heathens as compared with them, yet there is nothing in our doctrine or history so heathenish, so unreasonable and unscriptural as infant baptism and infant damnation. Sectarianism has no good thing that Latter Day Saints have not; and the right to be known as a Christian in fact is restricted to those who are disciples of Christ by reason of having done what he has commanded. Could any of the sects of sectarianism prove to the Latter Day Saints that they had more fully obeyed the Lord; could they demonstrate that they are living more closely in touch with him; could they

THE FLAG OF ZION

There is something new under the sun, and it is seen along the coast of Palestine from which region so much of everlasting wisdom has emanated. A ship bearing the new blue and white flag of Zion has been placed in service for the accommodation of passengers and freight in the harbors along that ancient seaboard. Just what the ensign of Zion represents in the readjustment of the nations is not yet distinctly defined, but this is an era quite different from that of the Moslems long in possession, by force of arms, of Jerusalem and Constantinople. On the vessel will undoubtedly be found the Bible and not the creed of the Mohammedans who once so nearly overwhelmed Europe that they fought a great battle for dominion on the plains of France. The crescent is the emblem of a vast menace against the civilization that has become paramount and that represents a benevolence and moral restraint unknown or powerless in earlier times. Peaceful communication and trade are the mission of this little pioneer ship with the strange flag. But what wonderful changes it suggests where Mount Zion lifts its storied crest, no more a monument where Hebrews and Christians alike look in sorrow and ask themselves "How long?"

The flag of Zion is a welcome addition to the flags of all well-meaning nations.—Saint Louis Weekly Globe-Democrat, February 5, 1920.

MORMONS EXPECT TO CONVERT THE INDIANS

Apostle Ballard explains why the Indians have not hitherto accepted the Book of Mormon.

"All the evidences we have that the gospel is true will sink into insignificance when the American Indian as a nation shall receive the gospel, for they will testify that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. God has spoken and it shall come to pass," declared Apostle Melvin J. Ballard in an address to the ward teachers of the Ogden stake, who gathered in quarterly convention at the Weber Normal college yesterday afternoon.

Talk on Indians

The speaker said the Book of Mormon was not given to the members of the church for their particular profit, but for offer any substantial improvement upon our religion, then the way would be clear for them to make some impression upon us. As it is, we think that we can show these professing Christians many things in their creeds, and by many incidents in their attitude toward us, that they are unchristian in faith and practice."

To-day we find Mr. LaRue and Mr. Nutting occupying in the same pulpit, so to speak. In the columns of the Christian Statesman, these men appear side by side as doughty knights bent on an anti-Mormon crusade as they are pleased to call this romantic adventure. We are just wondering what the basis of their agreement has been. Did Mr. Nutting give up his cherished sectarianism, including the noble doctrines of infant baptism and infant damnation? Or, did Mr. LaRue, having seen the light, take on the whole doctrine of sectarianism, including these two inspiring doctrines and admit that his previous testimony was only written in fun? Truly, these are strange bedfellows.

ARTHUR E. MCKIM,
General Publicity Agent.

another purpose. He said, according to the word of God, the book had been preserved and brought forth in this day that the American Indian might receive a knowledge of his forefathers and receive a testimony of the gospel of Christ and in this way, the American Indian would receive his redemption and salvation.

"Why have not the Indians accepted the Book of Mormon in great numbers up to the present time?" the speaker asked. He said it was because the Lord had his own particular way in which to redeem the Indian. The hour he said had not yet come, but would soon come, when the Indian would receive the message of the elders of the church as a nation. Until that time had come all the efforts of the various religious organizations to reform and redeem the Indian would fail. Nothing will redeem the Indian and bring him to a state of civilization but the power of the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints.

Work Against Them

In giving his explanation of what he meant by the Lord redeeming the Indian and bringing him to a knowledge of his forefathers and of the plan of salvation, Apostle Ballard stated that if the Indian had received the gospel as taught by the Mormon church, he would be hated and despised and would not receive the benefits now obtained from the federal government. It was the plan of the Lord, he said, to work upon the minds of the gentiles and cause them to give unto the Indian their inheritances in the form of reservations now provided by the federal government. If the Indian had received the gospel and become a member of the Mormon church the government would not have attempted to educate the Indian, he would have been considered a ward of the Mormon church and thus a heavy burden would have been imposed upon the church. But the Lord has been using the gentiles to educate the Indian and help make him ready to receive the gospel, a subject he cannot understand until he has acquired a knowledge of the English language.

No power on earth can stop the Mormon church from teaching the gospel to the Indians since he is being admitted to American citizenship, the speaker declared. The Indian is becoming a free citizen, enjoying liberties which cannot be taken from him, among which is his choice of religion. . .

Must Have Severe Test

The speaker said before an Indian can be accepted a member of the church, his faith and testimony was put to a severe test. He must show his sincerity by breaking away from bad habits particularly from the use of tobacco, tea and coffee. He did not know why a more severe test was expected from the Indian than from a white man, but such was the case.

The hour has struck for the redemption of the Indian and the elders of the church must preform their duty in this matter, the speaker said in conclusion.

Earlier in the afternoon, Apostle Ballard delivered an address before the members of the high priests quorum of the stake and declared that all the prophecies uttered by the prophets of God in all ages would be literally fulfilled before the coming of the Saviour to reign upon the earth. His coming is night at hand, the speaker declared.—The Ogden Examiner, February 23, 1920.

PLATFORM AND DEMANDS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

1. The World War Veterans (Northwest Division), will not indorse or take part in any so-called national convention of ex-service men before June 1, 1920, if such convention is called for the purpose of making permanent any document that pertains to ex-service men's organization. We do not feel that any state can be thoroughly representative of the ex-service men before the above date.

2. We stand opposed to any form of compulsory military training in the United States of America.

3. We indorse the rights of collective bargaining by truly representative groups of all productive industry; we will not indorse any political parties.

4. We the World War Veterans, individually and collectively, shall at all times of crisis, either local or national, encourage dignity, calmness, justice and peaceful settlements. In time of crisis, either local or national, the World War Veterans will extend the assistance of their organization to the whole peoples of the community, state or nation.

5. We demand for all the people the rights of free speech and peaceful assemblage as written into the Constitution of the United States of America, except that such license must not be used by such persons as would use such license to overthrow the United States Government by violence of force.

6. We indorse the principles set forth in the Woman Suffrage bill as passed by Congress.

7. For the guidance of our elected representatives in the United States Congress, we indorse the fourteen points we fought for and upon which the armistice was agreed and signed.

8. Nationalization of all oil and coal lands and all oil wells and coal mines. We indorse public ownership of unavoidable monopolies.

9. We, the World War Veterans, oppose any declaration of war without first submitting the issue to the peoples of the United States of America, except in case of invasion by armed forces of the territory of the United States of America.

10. In event of war, all profits made by any individual or corporation, over and above such profit made by any such individual or corporation in the year prior to such declaration of war, shall be paid to the United States Government by any and all such individuals or corporations during the period of the said war and become the property of the United States Government.

11. The Constitution of the United States of America to be amended only by a direct vote of all the people. In case of national crisis, the suffrage to be extended to all franchised citizens absent from their place of residence due to Government duties.

12. The enforcement of the Constitution of the United States of America as it is written.

Immediate Demands

1. We oppose exploitation of our patriotism and loyalty by any group of people for their selfish interests, and we object to being used to unfairly keep down wages and the standard of American living.

2. We indorse an honest and fair national bonus for all ex-service men and women not dishonorably discharged from the United States service, and who participated honorably in the recent World War. All bonuses to be paid from funds derived by taxation of all incomes in excess of $25,000 annually.

3. We demand that the proper authorities bring about an immediate investigation and review of all court martial cases.

4. We demand investigation of all war expenditures, the Aircraft program, the Hog Island Ship Yards program. Ammunition and food purchases, destruction of war materials, investigation of wage adjustments by the War Labor Board and the Vocational Training System for ex-service men.

5. We demand that congressional legislation shall be put into immediate effort to care for our distressed comrades in arms who, because of injuries or sickness contracted while fighting for democracy and humanity, should be given more liberal compensation than has been provided for in the past.—World War Veteran, Omaha, Nebraska.

THE CHINESE MIRACLE

A Chinese Miracle That May Change the World, is the title of an article in the Christian Herald, written by Mr. H. C. Reynolds, of the Interchurch Movement, which describes the new fury to read and write which is sweeping the Empire. Old women of seventy mastering the art of reading in four weeks—coolies shouting with glee because in three weeks they had found the key to literature, and business men forced to attend classes under threat of punishment, are among the marvels mentioned. A similar article by the same author also appears in Asia.

"You may not be able to remember the name—Chu Yin Tzu-Mu," says the author, "but the thing may be more important in the history of the world than the steam engine or the telegraph."

"Missionaries and others had made several attempts to introduce phonetic writing into China, but the conservatism of the people blocked the way. Then the government decided they must promote national unity, and this must be done first by having a national language which every one could read and write. So Chu Yin Tzu-Mu became the National Phonetic Writing of the Chinese Republic.

"The missionaries and old-time foreigners keep discreetly in the background. The Chinese announce that they are doing this thing themselves. It may become the ladder by which China will grow great again.

"Edwin C. Lobenstine, before his return to China to be in charge there of the Interchurch World Movement of North America, in New York recently gave a clear explanation of the new system. The Chinese language is made up of syllables, not of letters. There are only 450 of these sounds, or syllables, in the language as spoken. And as there were between 45,000 and 50,000 words, each sound has to represent an average of 105 characters. For instance "chi" may mean 185 different things when spoken. In writing, there are 185 different pictures or ideographs for these different things. To write 'chi' in all its meanings you must have committed to memory all these 185 ideographs—quite a day's work, or perhaps a week's work. 'Chi,' spoken, has to have another word with it to identify its meaning. The Chinese school boy or girl must learn thousands of ideographs. The child usually has to study five or six years before he can read and understand. The Chinese boy wastes two years. An American boy who has been in a good school two years can read and write fairly well. A Chinese boy, at the end of his first two years, has learned nothing he can carry away with him, if he stops school then.

"Chi Yin Tzu-Mu is being welcomed with enthusiasm. The system was adopted by a special Congress of representatives of all the Chinese provinces, called by the National Ministry of Education, and was officially promulgated November 23, 1918, in Order No. 75 of the ministry. The system uses thirty-nine symbols, twenty-four initials, twelve finals, and three medials or connecting sounds, with which to represent all the sounds of what is to be the 'National Language.' Any monosyllable can be divided into two parts. So a system of phonetics can be arranged so that any sound will be shown by two letters, with or without a connective.

"The 'National Language' is founded on the Mandarin, spoken with great variations of pronunciation in fifteen out of the eighteen provinces. The pronunciation is so varied that natives of different provinces often have been unable to understand each other. The government has set up a standard pronunciation. Standardizing proved very simple. It only had to be decided for about 800 words, and all the other words in the language grouped themselves naturally about these.

"The Christian forces in China are giving away or selling at cost great numbers of pamphlets explaining the new system. Some of the titles strike one unfamiliar with China as curious. Some of them read: 'The Hundred Surnames in National Phonetic Spelling,' 'Chinese Phonetic Anagrams' (including directions for playing), 'The Thirty-nine Symbols, inch square size, Chinese Key Characters.'

The China Continuation Committee, the interdenominational body of which Doctor Lobenstine is chairman, proposes to teach every Christian in China to read and write. A few years ago, this goal seemed far away; now it looks quite near. The committee will be assisted in its work by the Interchurch World Movement of North America. Doctor Lobenstine, a Yale '95 man, who has been twenty years in China, described the possibilities of the new writing as follows:

"Not more than ten per cent of the men and less than one per cent of the women in China can read or write. So you have 370,000,000 people who can't read. Now they are learning to read in from one to two months! Doctor Sidney J. Peill, head of the English Hospital in the Province of Chili, some time ago took up the phonetic system of Wang Chao, of which the present system is largely an improvement, with marvelous results. The China Continuation Committee has decided there are great possibilities in the new system. About fifty per cent of our Christian church members and enrolled inquirers are illiterate. Two years ago there was no enthusiasm for the spread of literacy, even among the Christian Chinese leaders. Now there has been a wonderful change. The Christian Chinese see that the teaching of reading and writing is a great basis for service to their country in its hour of need. With $100,000 or even less to spend on the job, we would push right through the country. It means no less than a revolution in Chinese education. Christian schools in China have 190,000 pupils. We hope to have enough money to let the Chinese Christian forces make the new system a practical issue in a tremendous campaign.

"We foreigners will let the Chinese do everything—we will keep completely in the background. This is a government attempt to unify the language, not to simplify it. It is not attempting to do away with the old language. Nothing published for literary men will be put out in the new style, although all the literati are asked to back the new system."—The Religious Digest.

OUR EDUCATION "IMMORAL"

Another attack upon the theater and upon our educational system was made yesterday by the Reverend Doctor John Roach Straton in his sermon in Calvary Baptist Church at Fifty-seventh Street and Sixth Avenue.

"The notorious infidelity and immorality in many of our centers of learning is a menace to our nation," he said. "The working out of an educational system which will educate the heart as well as the head, which will develop the conscience as well as the intellect and make men and women brighter in character as they grow brighter in brain, is one of the fundamental needs of our country.

"Already the evil results of the abandonment of the church and Sunday school for the theater are being seen. There is a condition of immorality among the children on the streets, and even in the public schools, that is almost unbelievable.

"As a pastor going about I see on every hand, in the well-to-do and in the poorer sections, groups of small boys 'shooting craps,' gambling for money. When I stop near to observe them I hear them using the vilest language, not merely oaths, but the putrid speech of moral degeneration. In some schools there are conditions of insubordination and of gross immorality that are heartbreaking."—New York Times.

THE PREVALENCE OF INDECENCY

Our nation rejoices in the victory of prohibition, and well she may: the traffic was the prolific mother of a viperous brood. But there are other serpents just as deadly, if not more vicious. Just now there is an increasing wave of indecency. Amid the culture of Boston there recently appeared a pageant of Eden, where nudity and semi-nudity reigned. An insurance company recently felt called upon to check this evil in their office by prescribing the dress which was required by their women employees. Each woman employee was given the choice to adopt their proposition of dress or to give up her position. The result was the abatement of the evil and greatly increased efficiency. A contemporary, writing of this matter, says:

"The newspapers featured a certain actress some weeks ago, who, upon the stage, before an immense audience of supposedly decent people, disrobed herself and stood there to the lasting disgrace of her sex. Everywhere we are met with this carnival of indecency, the exposure of the person being so common as almost to fail to attract attention. Is it not about time for the great women of the world who yet respect the laws of decency and virtue to band together and call a halt upon this orgy of impure suggestion which must, in the end, produce immorality and heartbreak?"

It might be well to take the warning of the poet:

"Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
To be despised needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

We seem to be approaching a reign of lawlessness, and what the church needs and the world needs is a visitation from on high. It looks as if a day of judgment or grace was not far off.—The Presbyterian.

Those who school others oft should school themselves.—Shakespeare.

How Can We Obtain a Collective Education as a Church?

BY W. F. YATES

A question: Shall we educate ourselves so we can enjoy equality or become equal, so as a result our righteousness we may receive a true education?

Few are there that would discourage education. The difference among writers upon the subject seems to be, what shall it consist of, and what method should be employed to obtain it?

All Latter Day Saints will agree that righteousness always precedes true education. The kind that has and will bless the world is the kind that can be approved of the Lord, because of its equity.

Every enjoyable thing comes as a result of men knowing and being able to put together truths. We no doubt have wondered about the reason for such a percentage of what is called "the down and out class," who often boast of their years of education and school advantage, and upon the other hand men who have and are occupying places of trust in the nation, whose school advantages are very limited, perhaps know nothing of courses and degrees that are insisted upon these days.

No doubt ancient Babylon attained a wonderful understanding of some things, but her lack of true education caused that she become extinct, and was "plowed as a field." Contrast Enoch and his city with the Babylon nation with all her learning. The difference between the education the schools of the world have to offer, and that comes as the result of righteousness is, that the former is lacking in that it takes so much time and energy to attain it. And only a percentage is ever used. But the latter can all be used to the glory of God. We might term it a hundred per cent education.

When we consider all the time, money, and energy that is used in what the world calls "educating the people," we might ask what percentage of this worldly learning will be used in redeeming "Zion," judging from past history. The writer ventures to suggest that the intelligence coming to people as a result of prayerful "asking and knocking," "hungering and thirsting," for truth and righteousness will be the education that will be the real building kind, whether they ever had a chance to spend a day in school or not, (not to speak disparagingly of schools, however). We are told that intelligence is not created, neither indeed can be; only as a result of righteousness can we expect the same.

The Lord seems to be willing to give those who ask in faith. He no doubt would not give all the degrees that man would feel that he needed, but would impart that which was needful, and that he would have time to use. There have been instances where the Lord has seen fit to give men power to break the stony heart of sinners, and hear them cry out from a repentant spirit, "O Lord, have mercy on me," and perhaps never gave him any more language than the unlearned of to-day. (Good language being appreciated however.)

Sometimes wonderful truths are presented with awkward words, by a soul thrilled by the power of the Spirit. Of course, it might be trying upon one listening to it, if the cloak of the sermon were noticed more than the burning truth itself.

I write this because all along the line where God worked with man in the past, he chose often those who were unlearned so far as the world knew education.

"Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. For we see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. For God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."— Corinthians 1: 25-27.

The reason, no doubt, for men who were unlearned being called in the past was because they were in possession of a few simple truths, not loaded down with so much human theory that they have no room for the plain, workable truth that would make for the true elevation of their race. In the early history of the church the Lord commenced to ask his people to come out of the world and establish themselves according to equality. We find that he (the Lord) puts more stress upon justice and equality than he did for reaching out after human education; that would no doubt follow as a result of equality. It seems the Lord wanted them on an equitable basis then.

Now the question is, what must we do as a church? Educate ourselves so we can enjoy equality, or become equal so as a result of our righteousness we may receive a true education? The plan of the world cannot bring out the good in men. God's plan will give an education to every man accordingly to his ability and talent. To give men such a chance to learn could never exist under any other plan but that of equality. No man whose talent was for farming could qualify for his work, should he be forced by reason of circumstances to constantly run a peanut roaster or sell papers on the streets, neither could the mechanic give to the world his best while plowing corn.

Let us contrast the plan of the world and that of the gospel. Under the former the son at maturity will be granted, say forty acres of land from his father to till, etc. Because of parental love, he allows his affections to rob justice oftentimes, and bear with his neglect to his hurt, until he loses the land and the opportunity. But under the God-given stewardship plan involved in the law of equality, after prayerful consideration on the part of the officers, and counsel with the young man, he will be granted the portion that they feel that he is capable of handling as a steward. Then when his report comes in at the end of the year, (according to the law) were they to find that two hundred sacks of potatoes were frozen while he attended the picture show, and the neighbor's hogs had eaten up his corn because of the bad condition of his fence, under the gospel plan he would have some fatherly advice coming if he retained his claim to the storehouse and common property for supplies. True repentance must be shown. It might be on the part of wisdom that his stewardship would have to be changed or cut down to meet his capacity.

This plan would provide a source of education that is not offered to our young men to-day, and of course would work in all other vocations. Surely this would have a tendency to qualify the initiative in people. Oh, when will be had education that will bring results and give expression in a practical working out of the gospel of Christ?

Our best men who have and are doing good work are men that struggled long at irksome work until they had started down on the shady side of life, had toiled almost a lifetime, until they find the calling that laid the closest to their heart.

False Philosophy

We are told sometimes, that after the day's work is done, we should study—study—study; burn the candle low. Well, the writer was one time a convert to that philosophy or theory, and while he yawned and gapped with a tired and sluggish brain after a long, hard day's work, he began to wonder why he could not make such insistent teachings harmonize with what the Lord said; "Retire to thy bed early and arise early, that your minds might be invigorated," etc. The Lord reproved the elders because of overtaxation of the mind. He has an eternity to perform his work in. Will it not be glorious when we can do our work in the hours set apart by the Almighty, with vigorous minds and bodies, and according to our "several abilities"? The education of the church is a big problem, and the closer we get to the Lord's method, the easier our task will be.

We have many boys and girls growing up who have as natural ability as could be produced, but if my boy were given a two or three year course, while my brother's boy, with as good or better prospects, was denied because he lacked in finances, I have great fear that the selfishness alone would offset much of the effort to be of use to the Lord as pertaining to the establishment of Zion, because we must be full of love if we "assist in God's work." If our experience in the church has developed within us a feeling that there is nothing too good for a brother or sister who will join hands with us, and go forward together to establish righteousness among confusion; I say if it be the case, education is close, even at the door and soon, yea, soon, will be heard the songs of Zion sung with a new meaning, and as the voices and faces of the singers are aflame with the expression of love and appreciation of each other.

Yes, no longer will the weary dreams of a nervous soul toss on the pillow, nor the thoughts of the widow run upon the mortgage, nor the October note; neither will the harsh whistle fall on the ear of the aged toiler, but our education will give room for a happy home, and on the right and left will be heard the merry voices of happy children who have been well warmed and fed, and the harp and the harper will add to the joys of a happy people.

God talked with Enoch. Will he talk with us, conveying intelligence? Yes, yes, when the gospel atmosphere is right.

Cooperate and Coordinate

BY C. A. SMURTHWAITE

An explanation of the differences in the words.

There appears to be some confusion concerning cooperation and coordination in the minds of many people. The purpose of this little article is to try to elucidate—make clear—the substantial difference.

The germane definitions of the words cooperate and coordinate are contained in the following from the Standard Dictionary (Funk & Wagnalls), to-wit:

"Cooperate: (1) To operate together or jointly for a common object or to a common end or result; act or do in company or in combination; as causes cooperate to produce an effect. (2) Specifically, to unite with one another or with others in carrying on a cooperative society, store or the like; combine with others in any enterprise for economic purposes; as, the future will see men cooperate where they now compete."

"Coordinate: (1) To put in the same rank, class, or order, or in classes of the same degree of generality or of importance; as, to coordinate species. (2) To place in harmonious or reciprocal relations; combine or adjust for action or for any end; as, to coordinate muscles; coordinate means with ends. To come into coordination; harmonize; as, this part does not coordinate with that."

The word cooperate seems to signify that you must have another person to cooperate with, and that you can cooperate without being coordinate, as an employee may cooperate with his employer. The word coordinate would appear to mean the placing of things or parts of things in harmonious relationship; as, to coordinate means with ends.

It appears to the writer that a careful and discriminative reading of 1 Corinthians 12: 18 to 26 and Ephesians 4: 16 will disclose that the church is the "body" of Christ. The common error is in confusing this metaphor to be synonymous with a "society." The church is not a society. My body is not a society of mine. It is my body. The members of my body cannot cooperate but they can and do coordinate. In using the metaphor "body" it seems apparent that Paul had in mind the intrinsic idea involved in the term coordination.

It is palpably evident that the members of the body cannot cooperate, neither can they compete. The body is complete within itself. In health the various members of the body (head, hands, feet, etc.,) enjoy perfect coordination. Members of the body can get out of order. A tooth that is aching makes the body uncomfortable, and if permitted to continue will bring disease to other members, cause depletion of the body's powers and perhaps ultimate death. The aching member must be brought back into harmonious or reciprocal relation.

The various quorums of ministers, and the members of the church in their variously organized ramifications, constitute one body, necessarily therefore of coordinate relationship, not subordinate, i. e., they all may function differently yet harmoniously. No member of the church, if it is Christ's body, is or can be subordinate, whether he be the president or a simple lay member.

Paul particularizes by repetition in 1 Corinthians 12 that the "body" is one, having many members, yet all are members of that one "body"; and stipulates the equality of the members by their necessity, e. g.—the foot, the hand, the ear, the eye, the head, etc.; and "Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary; and those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness." If these parts or members are necessary, even to those which seem to be more feeble, they must be "of the same degree of generality or of importance."

If Paul, in this noble and eloquent metaphor, did not mean that the members of the "body" are coordinate, what did he mean?

Thus, if the president of the church desires to coordinate all the various classes of the membership into one harmonious, reciprocal whole, he intends to take away any false superiority or feeling of greater importance (if any such exists) and place them in the "classes of the same degree of generality or of importance." In a sentence, he uses modern terminology to describe and accomplish what Paul had in mind in his eloquent epistles to the saints at Corinth and Ephesus. Does not our president desire that "from whom [Christ] the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, makes increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love"? (Ephesians 4: 16.)

The church is not compacted unless it is coordinated. If it is not coordinated it is not "fitly joined together," and is not effectually working the full measure of every part, and therefore does not make increase of the body to its edification in love.

Our church might cooperate with the other churches at Independence (or elsewhere) in any good work, where perhaps the churches now compete; such as for prohibition, or the elimination of vice from the community, or for the reduction in the present high cost of living; but it is quite apparent that it could not be coordinated with them in that work nor they with it.

Cooperation is a combining of persons where they now compete.

Coordination is joining together and compacting the body, bringing harmony and reciprocal relation to all the members thereof in firm and close union.

The coordinating influence is the Holy Spirit, e. g.—the life-blood of the body, and if any member becomes sick the doctor is called in, i. e.—the priesthood, to bring back the sick member into reciprocal relationship.

All the various subdivisions of the church—the First Presidency, the Bishopric, the Twelve, Seventy, Elders, Branches, Stakes, Districts, auxiliaries (the entire body) must be coordinated (harmonized) in order to be completely adequate and operative; and the individuals of those various subdivisions must cooperate—not compete—to accomplish the desideratum so much coveted.

Zion's Redemption

BY C. J. SPURLOCK

"Truant boy with laughing eye
Chasing the winged butterfly,
Hopes as vain, pursuits as wild
Occupy the full-grown child."

While this is true both in childhood and in manhood of those who follow after the vain things of this world—seeking in vain for that which they never obtain, but for Latter Day Saints seeking Zion's redemption, it is not true.

We shall obtain that for which we seek. True we have waited long for the land to be purchased for stewardships, and inheritances to be granted, and to be equal and have "all things common," as provided in the law of Christ, But we can see where we have made mistakes and these mistakes must be rectified.

Some of us have complained and said what is the need of this, and what is the need of that, instead of working constructively as we should have done. While the book of Doctrine and Covenants says we must "need wait" for Zion's redemption, it does not say once that while "waiting" we are to be idle. Far from it. We are to go ahead, preach the gospel and build up the kingdom. We are not to preach against every church on earth but our own, but we are to preach "the word," "the gospel" of Christ, and let other churches alone.

There are save it be two churches only; one is the "Church of Christ," and the other is the Church of the Devil. All people belong either to the one or the other. In other words they are either in the straight road to eternal life, or in the broad road to eternal death. To single out some one of the many churches of men and say it is the church of the Devil is a mistake. His is all the wicked in every church and in the world, wherever found, and that is what we are to "contend" against—wickedness or the church of the Devil.

Cry repentance, that is the thing! "Say nothing but repentance to this generation." Build up your own house. Why go about with a chip on your shoulder daring some elder or priest or some one in Babylon to knock it off. Preach the word; not self, but Christ. Do a constructive work. Some political parties build themselves up fighting others, but what do they amount to when they are built up—wood, hay, or stubble. We must not so build, but get and keep the beam out of our own eye, and surely the Lord said we can see clearly how to get the mote of our brother's eye.

Then let us while "waiting" hew to the line—keep the

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Latter-Day Motherhood

V. "FROM OUT ALL THE WORLD"

"One whom I believed to be
The noblest man God ever made;
A man who seemed, to my infatuate heart
Heaven's chosen genius, through whose tuneful soul
The choicest harmonies of life should flow,
Growing articulate upon his lips
In numbers to enchant a willing world!"

—J. G. Holland.

And so my girlie has chosen her life mate! At last she has found the one by whose side she would rather walk, even through poverty's vale than to tread soft paths of luxury and ease with any other! I know your transports of delight, dear girl, and feel with you, that Love is the only thing in the world that counts, if it be linked, hand in hand, with true worth!

I am happy that you have found a man of such sterling worth. The world is so full of shallowness and deceit, of coldness and insincerity, that when one is found whose whole life has so evidently been filled with noble sacrifices, with kindness to home people, with honest labor conscientiously performed, one can but think, "Here is a man!"

The words of loving appreciation from his mother, too, must have been as sweet incense to your soul. Many mothers feel that no girls are good enough for their sons, and some of them make life very miserable for the innocent and trusting young brides who have married into their home circles. So I am glad, with you, that you have felt the glow of warm approval from the one whose life shall touch yours so closely. I am sure it will but prove another incentive for you to strive to be worthy your blessings.

You will find your love beginning already to bear rich fruit in your life. In considering the nobilities of the man you have chosen, you will be trying harder to reach your ideals; his patience and kindness will stimulate yours, and you will strive to emulate all the goodness of heart, graces of mind, and sterling attributes of soul, which you ascribe to him.

This is one of the most wonderful effects of loving: this effort to please, to see the beauty in all life the joy in happiness, the pleasure in service. It is because of love the greatest and best of human achievements have materialized. Love is divine, and nothing lifts humanity so closely to God or reproduces so lavishly divine attributes as this wonderful experience. It is a type of the holy feeling which God expressed when he gave his priceless gift to the world. "For God so loved the world he gave his only begotten Son." Loving involves giving: it cannot be true love without it, and one of the most marvelous things about it is, that it is never spent with the spending, never decreased with using, never impoverished with outpouring! It becomes, if we will it so, the mainspring of our every thought, word and deed. It purifies every motive, enlarges our outlook, softens our dealings with our fellow men, clarifies our spiritual vision, and finally brings us to a better and truer conception of the great Perfect Love.

"Cultivate the spirit of love. It is the diamond amongst whole law of Christ, doubting nothing, and we shall not chase a phantom, but instead we shall press forward toward the prize, the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus, and shall obtain it. Away then with bickering and fault-finding, and let us march steadily under the banner of Prince Emmanuel, to a glorious victory, even the redemption of Zion.

the jewels of human character. The other graces shine like the precious stones of nature, with their own peculiar luster and varying hues; but, as in white all colors are united, so, in love is centered every other grace and virtue; love is the fulfilling of the law!"

Looking forward to the establishment of a new home, there is nothing so important to a young girl as that her choice of a life companion shall be a worthy one. He is to become the bulwark of that home, to stand between it and the rough world outside. He is to sweeten or poison every moment of her life, according to the innate qualities of his soul. Further, he is to become the father of her children, to transfer to her offspring tendencies and traits of character, positive and powerful, weak or vicious, according to what he is himself, and what he has been. Bitter indeed, is the lot of that girl who, bringing purity of life, wholesomeness of body, loyalty of soul, and confidence of spirit, to the marriage altar, shall receive in exchange, impurity, disease, infidelity, suspicion, dishonor. Not only is that girl crushed, and buffeted by a cruel fate, but the bright spirits of her children are doomed to imperfections, handicaps of body and soul, over which the angels of heaven can but weep in very pity!

Serious endings often attend trivial beginnings! Girls lightly choose husbands, scorning advice or counsel from wiser heads, and rush into contracts from which they later long vainly to be freed. Heaven itself cannot save them from the inevitable results of the dreadful mistakes they have made. It cannot save their children either, for has not the decree of God gone forth, that "the sins of the father shall be visited upon the children, even to the third and fourth generation?" His law cannot be set aside, or violated with impunity, and if girls just understood how grave a responsibility rests upon them when marriage is contemplated, if they would pray most earnestly for guidance in selection, if they would feel that certain qualities of mind and heart, certain requirements of body and spirit, are absolutely essential in the mate they would choose, we would find fewer wrecks upon the matrimonial seas.

Another element should enter into her choice, if she would be supremely happy. That is that his religion and hers shall be in harmony. Our latter-day instructions upon this point are very plain, you know, and it takes but a little observation to convince one of the wisdom contained in the counsel given. True, sometimes happy marriages result from a uniting of different faiths, but they are the exceptions, and are usually found only between persons of unusually broad and tolerant convictions. At that, when children come and the time arrives for them to be sent to Sunday school, there is conflict or concession there, which often causes trouble. There is strength in unity, and that home is more truly united, in which the husband and wife have religious convictions in harmony, and are pursuing mutual ideals.

From all this, you may be sure, that I rejoice in the fact that my daughter has chosen for her husband, a man who has been brought up in the same church as that in which her own spiritual nature has been unfolded. It promises a united home, a godly home, a home where identity of interests and purpose shall contribute to high achievements, where duty shall be shared because of identity of thought, where love and understanding shall rule to a steady progress upward.

I know you are on your knees in grateful thanksgiving these days. They are golden ones for you, dear child, and whatever experiences life may have for you, be sure that it may never vouchsafe you just such precious hours again. You are consecrating yourself anew to a life of usefulness, of holy identification with humanity, of steady pursuit of ideals which are almost too high and lofty for your complete comprehension. Your soul is being stirred to its depths, and joy pulses in and round about everything. The skies are roseate; sorrow, grief, privation and woe, very far off and remote. This is as it should be, for your fervent thoughts uplift and purify you, and I pray that you may preserve their beauty and blessing throughout all the lift that is to be.

To unthinking, unreasoning minds, it may have seemed sordid that your father looked so closely into the financial and physical status of this young man. Some emotional souls feel that love is cheapened or degraded by being scrutinized with thoughts of material values in mind at all. You, however, know that no abstract quality can supply one with the material elements of life, and that no man, by simply loving a girl, can give her that which makes for useful living. Neither can a man, through affection, make good when his physical condition is below par. The risk is too great, and the law too unyielding. It is not that one should choose a "rich" husband; in fact such are often most undesirable, too often being quite impoverished in those possessions which are eternal in their nature. But so long as we live on this earthly plane, we must use the elements of earth to nurture our earthly tabernacles, and none should ignore the spiritual responsibility which demands that his children should be well-born, and have the opportunities and heritages which are their right. Physical health, and habits of industry, with a well-balanced and wholesome outlook upon life, and innate reverence for things that are holy, a yearning towards things of the spirit—a recognition of the value also of material needs—these are the qualifications which should command a man to an earnest young woman who wishes her life to be one which shall bless humanity.

May you be very happy, dear, and in these warm beautiful days of eager, tender, planning, of high hopes and dreams, of sweet communion and trust, may you feel drawn close and closer to the God of your faith, the God who is with every sincere soul that truly loves Him.

"Love is enough. Let us not seek for gold.

Wealth breeds false aims and pride and selfishness. . . .

Love is enough. Why should we care for fame?

Ambition is a most unpleasant guest:

It lures us with the glory of a name

Far from the happy haunts of peace and rest. . . .

Love is enough. Why should we strive for power?

It brings men only envy and mistrust:

The poor world's homage pleases but an hour,

And earthly honors vanish in the dust.

The grandest lives are oftentimes desolate:

Let me be loved, and let who will, be great. . . .

Love is enough. Why should we ask for more?

What greater gift have gods vouchsafed to men?

What better boon of all their precious store

Than our fond hearts that love and love again?

All else may die; dear love is ever sweet,

And life is fair, and all the world complete."

My Mate

I want love. Give me, God, a vibrant flame of a woman for a mate. Make her, I pray thee, a woman of merriment. Fill her with a master love for the strenuous. Enlarge her vision so that it will see things and make her wise with that wisdom which shall see naught that demands her forgiveness. Give her a body compounded with strength and symmetry. Send surging through her a spirit elemental. Fill her with a love for the open air, the hills, the winding streams, the storms that send snow and sleet across the wastes. Make her vibrate with the joy of the lightning flash and the crash of the thunder. Let her ever be a silent worshiper of the stars.

I would have her frank and fearless and gentle, fit to play her hand in the game of life in the manner of a master. And when, in thy goodness, thou hast given this woman unto me, let me ever find in her something elusive, something that shall ever keep me searching joyously with wonder.

Give me, God, a woman who will demand more of me than I have ever dared to demand of myself. Who will help me liberate that creative energy necessary for the realization of my dreams.

If it be thy will that this woman be not given to me in the flesh, give her to me as an ideal woman who will lead me daily to render to my neighbors the service most expressive of my great love for her, and may she never permit me to find the final goal.—Anon.

Value of Story-Telling

[Some time ago we asked Sister Grace Thompson to outline for us a paper on the value of story-telling in the home. She submitted the matter given below, although we have taken the liberty of eliminating the tabulated form, and presenting it more consecutively. Sister Thompson has had fine preparation for this work in connection with her teaching, and, in addition has put it into practical use with her Sunday school classes, Oriole circles, and other ways, so we feel she is quite competent to write upon the subject of its value to mothers in the home.—A. A.]

The values of story-telling might be divided into four groups: The physical, the intellectual, the moral, and the social.

Of the first, it is observed strongly in its effect of calming the spirits of children, preparing them for renewed activity, or paving the way for quiet and restful sleep.

In its intellectual aspect we find it a valuable manner in which to communicate ideas, stimulate the imagination, reflect life in its varied forms, and by bringing joy and delight, impart mental strength of desirable quality.

Morally, stories help a child to know what is good. Proper stories usually end with good overcoming evil, thus implanting a respect for the great power of the good and the true by arousing sympathy therefore. By stories a child may be made to see the good in his fellow beings, and to understand that virtue and strength of character are not simply precepts. Stories incite to moral thoughtfulness to an extent unattainable except by fastening the interest and attention.

The social value of story-telling is seen in getting groups into sympathetic and harmonious relations. By this means social consciousness is awakened, and children see the importance of working together to accomplish common good.

In the Home

In the home, story-telling gives joy and content, keeping children within its shelter, and happy there. It helps them to forget their small grievances and hurts. Even a very small child will, in interest in a story, forget to cry.

It is a means by which the love and understanding between parent and child may be strengthened. It is also a valuable vehicle by which lessons may be imparted, justice and mercy taught, graces and courtesies established. It promotes comradeship, cementing the home group into a harmonious whole.

It builds a child's ideals, and forms his taste for good literature and pictures. It makes a child alert and resourceful, and helps him to analyze motives, results, and character, fitting him the better to encounter the difficulties and experiences common to life.

Kinds of Stories

1. The Fairy Story. Children love the fairy story, and that alone is enough to make it worth while, and give it a place in the mother's repertoire. Through them, too, truth in the guise of images, may be presented to the child in a way to arouse and hold its allegiance. To omit this lore is to deprive the child of one important element necessary to a full appreciation of mature literature. The style should always be simple, direct and virile: three qualities necessary to successful story-telling for children. Avoid the introduction of too many characters, for that is confusing.

2. The Nonsense Tale. These are told just for fun, and are very valuable for the sake of relaxation, besides teaching a child to appreciate humor, a trait which has carried many human beings through the most trying situations and experiences.

3. The Nature Story. This broadens and multiplies the child's avenues of sympathy. He becomes able to identify himself with all forms of life. By the nature story much important information may be communicated in an interesting way. Be careful in choosing, being sure the things told are really facts.

4. Historical Story.

5. Bible Story. Both are told for the knowledge which can be imparted and the influence they will have on the mind of the child. Ideals of valor, courage, loyalty, reverence, faithfulness, kindness, justice—all may be set up for the child, unconsciously to himself, through the wisely-chosen story.

How to Tell the Story

In telling a story to young children, you may be free to sit, stand, or walk a few steps. You should watch your audience, observing the effect of your words. You should use eyes, voice, and body, in varying gestures and emphasis. You should be spontaneous in delivery, and put your personality into it. The child gets the story plus your appreciation of it.

Do not tell a story that seems foolish to you, or that you cannot appreciate. That story is spoiled for the child because of your lack of appreciation which shows in your face and voice.

For small children, the story should be short. They are not capable of sustained attention. Their interests change with every passing breeze. This is shown by the way they go from one thing to another in their play.

Children like stories that end in a jingle, or have the same words repeated over and over. The Mother Goose rhymes are good illustrations of this.

Stories about animals they know, are always interesting—animals, because animals move and are alive; ones they know, for they have no concept of strange ones. Older children may be told stories about strange animals and different parts of the world, but these should be augmented by pictures to illustrate, thus giving them some idea of what is being talked about. These pictures as all pictures used in illustrating stories to children, should be good in form, color, and likeness. Never should they be caricatures.

Mothers can find many opportunities to tell stories if they try. While dressing a child, while preparing its little meals, while sewing, ironing, kneading bread—the day is filled with precious opportunities in which to use this most valuable teaching accessory—story-telling.—Grace Thompson, Lamoni, Iowa.

Memories

For a tree that was green in the long ago,
And a hundred lights that shone,
I am longing tonight as the blaze sinks low
And darkness broods on her throne,
For one soft croon of an old, old tune
My queen-mother sang to me;
I would give the things that the fat world brings
In the toy-bag of destiny.

I would give the wiles and the witching smiles
That gladdened my quickening heart,
In the wine-blurred days when I trod the ways,
That meet and tangle and part.
I would give my place in the weary race,
To one who stumbles and slips:
For the smile that lies in a mother's eyes,
And the kiss of a mother's lips.

The Management of Stewardships

BY THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC

Sixth of the series being mailed to the Saints of the Lamoni Stake.

A. The true Spirit governing.

"They seek not the welfare of Zion. Behold, the Lord hath forbidden this thing; wherefore, the Lord God hath given a commandment, that all men should have charity, which charity is love, and except they should have charity, they were nothing: wherefore, if they should have charity, they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish. But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—2 Nephi 11: 106-109.

"Let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5.

"And if ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9.

"Think of your brethren, like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all, and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you. But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted."—Jacob 2: 22-24.

"If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled,' notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"—James 2: 15, 16.

But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—I John 3: 17.

"Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing

Oh, the joys are vain in the palace of gain,
And the jester death makes sport;
Though the road is long till we pass the throng,
The rest of the way is short.
And so as I dream by the gate's last gleam,
And gaze at the ashes gray;
I would trade the things that the fat world brings,
For the trinkets of yesterday.

A Mary for His Oliver

It is told of Doctor Oliver Wendell Holmes, says the American Medical Journal, that he was one day strolling on the beach near his summer home when he began chatting with a little girl who was playing in the sand. The child soon slipped her hand in his and walked with him. By and by she said:

"I'll have to go home now."

"Good-by, my dear," said Doctor Holmes, "and when mother asks you where you have been, tell her you have been walking with Oliver Wendell Holmes."

"And when your folks ask you where you have been," said the child, "tell them you were walking with Mary Susanna Brown."

all things with an eye single to the glory of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 12.

No stronger statements could be made to substantiate the very important truth that all stewards must be governed by the Spirit of God. Selfishness must be eliminated. The "Golden Rule" must be the dynamic to insure success. Altruism must predominate over egoism.

B. How to manage—some laws governing. (References are to Doctrine and Covenants unless otherwise stated.)

1. Stewardship to be governed by God's law. (101: 10.)
2. Stewardship to be governed by law of the land. (128: 7.)
3. Stewardships to be used in manner designed by God. (128: 8.)
4. Stewardships should be run in a business-like manner, so stewardship shall support the steward and if possible make a proper gain. (101: 3; 81: 4. Matt. 25: 17, 20, 22, 31. Micah 4: 13. Proverbs 14: 23.)
5. Steward to associate with the world and yet be not of the world. (128: 7.)
6. Steward should not confine business to Saints only. (128: 7.)
7. Should make money in righteousness. (48: 2; 70: 1; 101: 3; 101: 12.)
8. Must "deal justly." (3 Nephi 12: 11.)
9. Must act honestly and honorably. (128: 8; 51: 2.)
10. Must not "speculate." (127: 7.)
11. Must give an accounting of stewardship. (42: 9; 72: 4; 70: 1; 118: 4; 101: 2; 69: 2.)
12. Must be a steward "in deed" as well as in theory. (101: 10.)
13. Stewardship must not be polluted by "jarrings, covetousness, envyings, and strife" by the stewards. (98: 2.)
14. We must use our stewardship wisely, or be condemned. (Matthew 25: 14, 30.)
15. Steward must be diligent; if idle, to have no place in church. (75: 5.)

In our next letter we will continue to discuss stewardships.

An Appeal to the Religio from Society Islands

This is a copy of a letter addressed to the coming General Religio Convention. They want to fight the evils of moving pictures by the use of good films.

In behalf of the Religio of this mission I desire to ask your hearing and consideration while I relate a few of the conditions which make the work more difficult each year in these islands.

The people, you know, are unsophisticated, and anything new is likely to captivate them, and when it does it becomes an absorbing theme to them to that extent that they have not a mind for anything else. This occurred a couple of years ago when the picture theater was introduced in the Tuamotuan Islands where most of the members of our church reside. We, at once, saw that the native young people (and all are young here) were missing all too frequently the meetings of the church to attend the theater. Tickets sell for eighty cents, and you will see that this would soon amount to a considerable sum if fifty or more of our people were to go twice a week as they had done. This is not all. You have perhaps heard that the moral stamina of the native boys and girls will not hold up under a very heavy strain. Now, ice cream was served inside these theaters. This also tickled the palate of the native people of the tropics. Inside these theaters, too, the French traders, ship crews and miscellaneous men were wont to assemble. A Frenchman likes wine. You know it is a wine drinking race.

So you see this beer garden affair was bad indeed for these handsome sons and daughters of Lehi. We fought it for all we were worth but the result was not better than a draw.

Then I remembered an act of my father while I was a child. Here it is:

When I was a small boy we lived on a farm which was bordered on the north by an oak wood. Our farm was fenced on that side with an old stake-and-rider rail fence. Between our fence and the wood ran a little road that led off to town one way and to church the other. It was November and the trees still held on to a part of their brown foliage while the ground below was carpeted with the other part. One night I awoke to find our home in commotion. Father was up walking about excitedly. Mother was wringing her hands frantically, for the woods were afire, which was coming with a mighty sweep across that eighty acres of dry wood. It was light as day, and the crackling, roaring flames dismayed us all as we saw that our stacks and sheds and fences were doomed. Then my father took the rake and the matches and started toward the sheds. I followed at his heels to see what he would do. He climbed over the rail fence, went up and down, the length of our farm, raking out the dry leaves from the roadway, being sure to leave the roadway bare the entire length thereof.

He then went to the haystack and pulled out a wisp of hay, and twisted it and lighted it. With this as a torch he went along the road lighting the dry leaves on the far side of the road at certain intervals. Soon we had as big a conflagration going out as there was coming in. The flames met, there was one great struggle and our enemy lay helpless out in the wood. By this marvelous wisdom my father at once became a hero in the eyes of his little boy, a position which he never entirely lost.

All that remains to be said is that if you the mother Religio will back us up for the moving picture outfit, just tell Brother Trowbridge and Brother T. W. Williams about it and they will ship the outfit at once so that we can get to work this season at the island where the Saints gather to dive for pearls.

If you can loan us the money for this venture I pledge the faith of this mission to refund the same.

With best wishes for the convention, I remain
Your colaborer,

A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

Those Who Wait in the Holy Land

A recent picture of Sister Floyd and Sister Jenkins in native peasant costume will appear in April Autumn Leaves.

Knowing I used to search the HERALD the first thing to see if there was a word from Jerusalem makes me wish to say something.

After an absence of over five years, I found it a great treat to be back home again, and it was very pleasant to have some one to welcome me, which Sister Jenkins surely did, for she had been alone too long nursing her great trouble of being left alone in a strange land.

My properties were safe, but my rooms stowed with household and personal effects were all broken into and the best things taken. If you could have seen the amount of silver there was, as my husband had everything to furnish tents, bedrooms, kitchen and dining room, for from three hundred to five hundred persons, and now have not a silver spoon to my name; even that my mother left me is gone, and the things I prized most. Of course the shock affected me, but soon I composed myself and made up my mind lead ones will do for me the little while I have to stay. Also, I remembered Sister Pitt wrote to me from California that Brother Pitt was impressed my property would be spared, but my effects taken, so for some reason it was to be so. I hope I will know and learn my lesson.

I have been down to Jaffa in the Old American Colony, founded in 1866, to look after the houses. One family refused to move out or pay, except what the government would oblige them to, so I was forced to go to court after my sixtieth year, and the first time in my life. It was a disagreeable job, but they were judged to pay the back rent and remain the rest of the year by paying a certain amount. So I got one payment, and they promised to send in the remainder to the court house, so gradually I hope to get it, for I have spent a big sum on repairs, both here and at Jaffa.

I returned this last time from Jaffa, February 4, 1920, which the Jews called first day of spring, when they all go out to plant trees. The auto had to stop often and wait for a chance to move on, the crowds were so intense, all coming from Jaffa and the colonies round about to plant trees at the first Jewish Colony, and the second one after ours (1866) founded by a Jew by the name of Netter, called Mikveh Israel.

One cannot fancy there are so many Israelites in Palestine. I made the remark to a gentleman who had come from New York to Jaffa the same time I did, and happened to be going up to Jerusalem in the same auto I was in, that enough children were out that day to populate Palestine.

When we got to Calonia Mountain, it was crowded with people from Jerusalem, out there planting trees, with the band playing.

I got home at noon and had lunch with Sister Jenkins, who looked so wistful to see the crowd and Colonia, which she had not been to see, although it is so near Jerusalem. Kuloniah, (some spell it) is the traditional place where David killed Goliath, also once thought to be the Emmaus of Luke 24:13, but later investigations have identified that place with Kababy, west of Naby Samwil or Mizpah.

So after lunch, Sister Jenkins, a young Jewish lady (Synora Simha), and myself took a carriage and went back to Kuloniah, just as they were beginning to break up and start back towards Jerusalem.

After walking round amongst the crowd awhile, and prying a carriage to come back, we also started to return on foot, but met a carriage, when I had walked about enough for me. This carriage was more reasonable, so we got in and drove back again for the driver to get other passengers. The crowd reached from beyond the town, Kuloniah, to the top of the mountain, as far as we could see. We were told that four thousand children were out from Jerusalem alone.

I had been at Jaffa over a month, and in all that time Sister Jenkins had only been to the post office and back, so of course enjoyed the outing tremendously.

Your sister in Christ,
JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

Eastern Colorado

The Eastern Colorado District, held one of the most successful sessions in its history at Trinidad, February 26 to 29. This is the first conference ever held in Trinidad. The Religio met Thursday evening with a program followed Friday morning with convention work, Friday afternoon Sunday school convention, and a program in the evening.

Saturday was devoted to the business of the district. Saturday night preaching by Elder A. E. Tabor, Sunday morning young people's prayer meeting followed by Sunday school in charge of District Superintendent, Louisa Fishburn. Preaching at 11 a. m. by J. R. Sutton, prayer service at 2 p. m. in charge of E. F. Shupe, and James Watson. A splendid prayer service was had. Religio, at 6.30 p. m. followed by preaching at 7.45 by Elder J. D. Curtis. Delegates were present from many of the other branches of the district, and all were royally entertained by the Trinidad Saints. Of the priesthood present, there were 2 high priests, 2 seventies, 5 elders, 2 priests and 2 teachers. A resolution was passed providing for a committee to take into consideration purchasing a moving picture machine for the use of the district, and to solicit money to pay for the same. Thirty-five dollars were collected for district expenses. Adjourned to meet at Cope, Colorado, the last week in August, in connection with a reunion to be held about that time.

E. F. SHUPE.

Preaching Helps the Preacher

Since our district conference I have been laboring in the Perry Branch. We closed a three weeks' series of meetings Sunday night—my first real missionary series. I suppose that, considering that it was my initial effort along that line and that I was alone, no one received more benefit and instruction than I. In spite of inclement weather and unfavorable conditions in the branch, the attendance on the part of nonmembers was good. The daily paper was very liberal in publishing announcements and synopsis of sermons.

But the greatest good was done within the branch, for it seems that many have taken on new life and determination. Five children were baptized last Saturday. Sunday night we rallied the scattered musical talent of the branch and gave a half hour musical program prior to the sermon. A little variation spices things.

To-morrow I will go to Boone for a combined pastoral and missionary effort. As I look out over the needs and the possibilities of the present, I do not understand how anyone can lament the present and sigh for "the good old days." My aim is that by introspection and preparation supplemented by divine power I may meet the demands of present duties.

(Letter to the Presidency by Roy A. Cheville, Perry, Iowa.)

Brother Luff's Itinerary

My itinerary since last writing has included Cameron, Lindsay, Toronto, North Toronto, Hamilton, London, Corinth, Saint Thomas, and Bothwell, as well as this city. In all of these, except the first two named, I performed church work as a missionary over forty years ago. Change is discernible everywhere; but not all for the worse, thank God. Divine as well as cloven-foot-prints are in evidence.

I did what I could to convince all that the story of my former visits was still good enough for me and my vision of God and Christ had enlarged charmingly through adherence to it.

Hope to be home March 31. (D. V.)

(From the letter to Presidency by Joseph Luff.)

Utah Party Visits Kirtland

Perhaps the only thing that has occurred of late that would be of interest to you is the visit of some thirteen members of the Utah church to this (to them a sacred spot) place. It seems that eight of them were in some way connected with the educational side of their work in Utah, one the dean of the University of Utah, another president of the Board of Education, another president of the Boy Scout movement there, etc. And they were in attendance at a convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, and some things gleaned from them were as follows:

"We certainly owe you people a debt of gratitude for the manner in which you receive us, and the way you have cared for and kept this house." I asked them why the debt. Their reply was that they "reverenced the place in connection with the sacred memory of the Prophet Joseph." However, let this be as it may, credit is due them for the way that they conduct themselves while within the confines of the house. They expressed themselves as being wonderfully surprised in the place, and sensed the spirit of solemnity that pervaded it. I wish it could be said truthfully of our own people.

There was one thing that I could not let pass without a reply; while they were talking of the "solemnity" it seemed opportune to call their attention to the fact, that with all the temples, so called, that had been built in the past, and those under course of construction at the present, have not, neither will they receive the full indorsement of God in the sense that this house, Kirtland Temple, has. Never at any time has it been recorded that the Lord accepted with his own mouth, the houses or the people offering, gracing the places with his personal presence.

I learned further from them that in the month of May of this year, there is to be a great gathering at the "sacred grove" at Palmyra. Hundreds are expected to go from Utah to Palmyra, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the first vision given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and en route they will visit Kirtland.

(Excerpt from letter from A. E. Stone, Kirtland, Ohio.)

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, January 5, 1920.

Editors Herald: Brethren Rushton and Hanson have finished their work in the Richmond Branch for the present, and are going to the city of Adelaide in South Australia, to-morrow. Their work in Richmond came at an opportune time, and has been highly instructive and stimulating.

Brother Hanson always has held a very high place in the esteem of the Saints as a courteous gentleman, and a wise advisor and cultured pulpiteer. Brother Rushton also has, in a very short time, captured the affections of the Saints and led them out into new fields of thought by his finely eloquent sermons and brotherly counsel and advice.

They will be absent in Adelaide about three weeks, and return in time to visit the rest of the Victoria District, and be present at our Easter reunion.

We are expecting 1920 to be a great year for our cause here. The church debt is almost cleared, and we expect to fully settle it and dedicate the church in 1920. That, to us, is a great achievement which appeared years off, but thanks to a "Consecration Day appeal," which yielded in two efforts, one hundred and twenty pounds, and three Woman's Auxiliary sales of gifts, which brought in over a hundred pounds, the debt is now only sixty pounds. Hitherto we tried collecting from the members weekly contributions, but that was a slow method, and would have been years in accomplishing our object—if ever.

This is a good plan for others to follow: Circularize all the members and appoint a day for the effort, asking those who cannot attend to send to the secretary.

Trusting the Lord may bless the work and workers all over the world, I am, yours in gospel bonds, 80 Richmod Terrace.

J. H. N. JONES.

A Mt. Ayr, Iowa newspaper notes that by the census Ringgold County has 13, 228 population. The churches have 4,233 members. In this one county alone there are 9,047 people who do not even profess to be Christians. What is it for the rest of the country.

Something for the Papers

The coming General Conference will afford a wonderful opportunity for us to get into the local papers with some of our church history. This is the centennial of the angel's first visit to Joseph Smith and the initial step in the Restoration. We feel that these two subjects afford material that is interesting for any newspaper and so have written up two articles based on these subjects that we are prepared to furnish you in the form of electros if you will make arrangements with your local editor to use one in his paper. Proofs of these articles, one of which is half column and the other whole column, (illustrated) have been sent to all branch presidents, but if you are in a town without a branch organization and would like to help in getting publicity for the church, write to this office at once and we will send you these proofs, and if you can obtain space, an electro.

Our Departed Ones

BOOKER.—Richard Cochran Booker, soon of Brother and Sister N. L. Booker was born May 29, 1916, at Ogden, Utah. Died February 17, at Vancleave, Mississippi, of tonsillitis. Leaves father, mother, sister and half brother to mourn. Was loved by all. Funeral in charge of A. G. Miller assisted by T. J. Booker. Interment in McMillon cemetery.

CHAPMAN.—Francis M. Chapman was born at Franklin, Indiana, August 28, 1850 and died at Hood River, Oregon, February 17, 1920. Married H. W. Chapman, November 14, 1875. Baptized June 10, 1887. Leaves her husband, 8 children, 37 grandchildren, 6 great-grandchildren and 3 sisters to mourn. Funeral services conducted by M. H. Cook. Interment at the Hood River cemetery.

TROTH.—Eva Mae Coiner Troth was born June 15, 1891, at Pocahontas, Iowa. Died February 27, 1920 at Yale, Oklahoma. She was blessed when a child. Baptized in August, 1903 by Samuel Hinkle. Married Harry Fenn Troth, June 14, 1907. To this union one son, Riley William, was born. She leaves to mourn, husband, little son, father, mother, 2 sisters, one brother, and a host of friends. She lived the life of a true Latter Day Saint, and was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Sermon by J. Arthur Davis. Interment in Quay Cemetery.

BOND.—Nellie M., beloved wife of M. H. Bond, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, December 24, 1847, and died at Independence, Missouri, February 7, 1920. Baptized by Charles N. Brown, in Providence, Rhode Island, July 26, 1874. Married M. H. Bond, May 7, 1884. Besides husband, she leaves 3 children, by a former marriage to James L. Oatley, in Boston, August 21, 1866: Mrs. Henry A. Taylor, of Boston, Albert A. Oatley, of Providence, and Roscoe L., of Washington. The knowledge and memory of her unselfish courageous, and insistent gospel life allows no other thing for us than the deep sense of loneliness and loss that covers like a pall the home she honored and glorified, and the companion whose life she permeated with her pure spirit and unselfish devotion to the cause of truth. Funeral services in Stone Church, Independence, Walter W. Smith in charge, prayer by Frederick M. Smith, and sermon by Frank M. Sheehy. A host of mourners were there to mingle their tears with the relatives present.

MCLANE.—Ina Simmons McLane, born in Worth Township, Sanilac County, Michigan, died of the influenza which developed into pneumonia, February 19 at the age of 25 years, 6 months and 19 days. Leaves to mourn, her husband, four-year-old son, mother, father, one sister and 3 brothers. Funeral sermon by Fred W. Cadow.

PACK.—Dan Frederick Pack, son of James A. and Daisy Pack, born September 14, 1919, living but six days. Sermon by J. C. Chrestensen. Interment in Box Grove cemetery.

KELLEY.—Frances Loneta, youngest child of William H. and Nancy Ellen Kelley, was born at Kirtland, Ohio, August 27, 1897, passed from this life at Modoc, Kansas, February 27, 1920. Blessed in Kirtland Temple in June, 1898, by her father; baptized at Lamoni, Iowa, June 24, 1906, by Oscar Anderson. Preceded by father, mother, 3 brothers, Casius, William and James, one sister Mrs. S. C. Elliott, and is survived by 2 brothers, George, of Modoc, Kansas, and L. G. of Lamoni, Iowa, and 3 sisters, Mrs. Oscar Anderson, Mrs. J. E. France, and Miss Mary, of Lamoni. Services at Lamoni, Iowa, in charge of J. F. Garver, sermon by Hubert Case. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery. Loneta was a faithful Saint; She has her reward with the just.

FOULKS.—Charles M. Foulks was born August 31, 1845, at Sandusky, Ohio, and died at the Independence Sanitarium, February 21, 1920. He was baptized about fifty years ago, by John T. Davis, and lived a consistent Christian life. He was first ordained to the office of teacher, then priest, and finally elder. In his official capacity he was faithful, and baptized many into the church. He lived several years in Texas and Oklahoma, moving to Independence in 1908, where he has lived since, with the exception of three years. Funeral from the Stone Church, Independence, in charge of, and sermon by, Hyrum O. Smith. Leaves a wife and 3 daughters.

CARMICHAEL.—Burgess Carmichael, the only son of Brother and Sister John B. Carmichael, passed away at Fresno, California, February 4, 1920, at the age of 19 years, the cause of his death being pneumonia. He was a young man of lovable character—a clean, wholesome, manly fellow, strong in the faith and confident of Christ's power to save and receive him. Father, mother, and one sister, Gladys, are left to mourn. Brethren Votaw and Damron were in charge of the funeral services.

NICKERSON.—Christiana Nickerson, daughter of the late Captain D. D. and Lydia B. Kelley, was born in Jonesport, Maine, May 9, 1855. Died of pneumonia, February 18, 1920. Baptized August 22, 1888, by E. C. Briggs, and lived a consistent life. Suffered many years from physical infirmities, which were borne with patience and Christian fortitude. Leaves husband, son, and 3 brothers to mourn. The floral tributes were a silent token of the esteem in which the deceased was held. Services conducted by J. F. Sheehy.

MORTON.—Lucy A. Morton was born in Jonesport, Maine, January 15, 1854. Died November 1, 1919. She was baptized May 23, 1880, by T. W. Smith, and manifested by precept and example that she was a Saint indeed. Many will remember her deeds of love and kindness to them. Two brothers, relatives and friends mourn her departure. It can truly be said of her, "she hath done what she could." Sermon by J. F. Sheehy.

KELLEY.—Lydia B. Kelley, wife of the late Captain D. D. Kelley, was born in Jonesport, Maine, December 8, 1833. Died March 12, 1919. She was baptized June 20, 1875 by Joseph Lakeman, and continued true and faithful to the gospel covenant. She left a record of good works and loving deeds. Three sons, 5 grandchildren, and many Saints and friends miss her companionship. Services at the Saints' church, conducted by J. F. Sheehy. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery.

NORRIS.—Richard Norris was born in Kewanee, Illinois, June 28, 1884. Married Catherine Bentham June 15, 1910. To this union was born a daughter, Kathlyn Virginia, now 4 years old. Died at his home in Kewanee, February 17, 1920, leaving wife and daughter, father, and 3 brothers to mourn. He will be missed very much by the Kewanee Branch. He was among the "faithful ones," and loved most by those who knew him best. Funeral from the Saints' chapel in charge of Amos Berve, who also delivered the sermon. Interment in the Pleasant View Cemetery.

ASHMORE.—Brother John Franklin Ashmore passed from this life at 2.20 a. m., February 22, at his home in Saint Joseph, Missouri. He was born in Burlington, Iowa, April 2, 1856. Married Clara Dolar, November 6, 1874. To this union 12 children were born, 6 boys and 6 girls, of whom 2 sons and 3 daughters are left to mourn. Besides his companion, there are Robert F. and Harry Ashmore, Mrs. Louis Wieman and Mrs. William Lawson, of Saint Joseph, and Mrs. Richard Brown, of Denver, Colorado.

KELLOGG.—Bertha Kellogg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Hauggi, was born in Naples, New York, July 2, 1891. Died in Mercy Hospital at Bay City, Michigan, February 6, 1920, after several weeks' illness. She was the beloved mother of 3 small children, who are left to mourn, together with husband, mother, father, sisters, a brother, and many friends.

Hence a doctor of medicine is one who teaches the art of the prevention, as well as a cure and alleviation of disease. He is one who teaches the laws of healing and of health.

An M. D. cannot be about a better service than in teaching sanitation and hygiene, and in urging the passing of laws for the protection of humanity and in doing the educational work needed for social reconstruction. A doctor, whether a doctor of law, of philosophy, or of medicine is one who leads in teaching the better way of life. S. A. B.

Conference Party

We are trying to make arrangements for a special car to leave Chicago for Kansas City the night of March 19. Those interested in going please correspond with the undersigned. Matthew W. Liston, 306 Eighth Avenue West, Flint, Michigan.

General Conference Visitors

All General Conference visitors wishing accommodations to be provided by the reception committee will please forward their request at once to J. A. Becker, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, who will be assisted by Elders Arthur Allen and Roy V. Hopkins on the reception committee. Missionaries contemplating being in attendance at the lectures beginning March 22 should send in their requests for accommodations at once.

Room rent will range in price from $2.00 up per week. Assignments will be made in the order received so those ordering rooms early will find it to their advantage.

The dining hall back of the Stone Church is being converted into a cafeteria for the feeding of the conference members and visitors. In addition board may be had in a limited number of homes at $7 and up per week.

Some help as cooks and in other lines of work will be needed. Those desiring to help pay their expenses will please communicate with J. A. Becker at once.

Ample accommodations will be had to care for all who wish to secure their meals at the cafeteria. Brother Arthur Daniels, a man of experience and at present managing the Myron Green cafeteria of Kansas City, is lending his assistance in perfecting the arrangements. We contemplate having competent people in charge of the work so that satisfaction will be assured the conference visitors.

J. A. BECKER, Chairman.

To District Sunday School Secretaries

Though blanks were sent out in December to the latest address of the secretary in each district, to date a goodly number have not been returned. Especially do we need the annual report of the district for 1919, and the list of delegates to the General Convention at Independence. Please be sure that your reports are in.

LAMONI, IOWA.

E. D. MOORE, General Secretary.

Correction

A grievous error occurred in the article by Earle Bradshaw in the HERALD of February 25, entitled "The perfect law of liberty." On page 174, third paragraph, beginning with the words: "He was a mighty angel" should read: "He was a mighty angel, one of power, a prime minister, if you will with God as king and Jesus Christ as prince and heir. Thus with a third of the hosts of heaven, who rebelled with him," etc. On page 176, in paragraph beginning with "Shall

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS

On March 5 we filled all orders for Sunday school Quarterlies for April-June that we had received up to that time. Since then we have filled all orders daily as received.

PLEASE CHECK UP YOUR ORDERS AT ONCE and see that they have been placed properly to meet your needs.

If you have occasion to write us DO NOT FAIL to give complete information stating—

(1) The name and address of the person who placed your order, (2) when your order was placed, (3) the grades and (4) the quantity of each grade wanted, (5) whether Religio or Sunday school, and (6) state specifically, definitely, and briefly the matter to which you wish attention given.

DON'T FORGET that there are three parties to each Quarterly order, (1) yourselves, (2) ourselves, and (3) the carrier. Quarterlies often lie in the postoffice at point of destination undelivered for one cause or another. You have access there; please make inquiry before writing us.

TO SAVE CONFUSION allow plenty of time for delivery before you conclude that your order has miscarried, and give all the information asked for.

we, as latter-day Israel," the word Israel should read Isaiah in the last sentence: "And like Isaiah of old say," etc.

The Bishopric

Bishop's Agent's Solicitors

In order to assist us in keeping proper tithing records we desire to emphasize the importance of issuing receipts, giving the first name in full instead of by initials. For instance in issuing a receipt to John E. Jones, do not write it J. E. Jones or J. Jones. It will be exceedingly helpful to this office if the auditor's copy is a clear copy. See that your carbon is in good condition. By reporting promptly each month to the Bishop's Agent it enables him to forward his report to this office on time.

Appreciating your cooperation in these matters,

B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Railroad Rate to General Conference

A rate amounting to one and one third fare for the round trip has been granted to the General Conference in territory covered by the Western Bureau, which covers the following territory: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana (west of the Mississippi River), Michigan (northern peninsula), Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming. Application has also been made to cover eastern and southern territory but the rate in this territory has not yet been authorized. Due notice will be given, if granted.

Rates are granted on the certificate plan. Full fare will be paid on going trip, and tickets for the return journey will be sold at one third fare via the same route as traveled on going trip to members attending the meeting and dependent members of their families, upon presentation of certificates of the standard form when properly signed with ink by R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, at Independence, and validated by a special agent on April 8 or 12. Certificates will be honored which show a purchase of tickets to Kansas City and Independence, Missouri.

Dates of sale: From points in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, March 30 to April 5 inclusive; from points in other states, April 2 to 8 inclusive; return limit, April 23, 1920.

1. Going tickets are sold at the normal one-way tariff for the going journey.

2. Be sure when purchasing your going ticket to ask the ticket agent for a certificate. Do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt. If, however, it is impossible to get a certificate from the local ticket agent, a receipt will be satisfactory and should be secured when the ticket is purchased. See that your certificate is stamped with the same date as your ticket. Sign your name to the certificate or receipt in ink. Show this to the ticket agent.

3. Call at the railroad station for ticket and certificate at least thirty minutes before departure of train.

4. Certificates are not kept at all stations. Ask your home station whether you can procure certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting. If not, buy a local ticket to nearest point where a certificate and through ticket to place of meeting can be bought. This means tickets and certificates must read Independence or Kansas City.

5. Immediately on your arrival at the meeting present your certificate to the church secretary, as the reduced fare for the return journey will not apply unless you are properly identified as provided for by the certificate.

6. Special agent of the railways will be in attendance on April 8 and 12 to validate certificates. If you arrive at the meeting and leave for home prior to the arrival of the special agent, or if you arrive later than April 12, after the special

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

Beginning with a membership of four thousand, the employees of the General Electric Company at Lynn, Massachusetts have a cooperative organization to provide foodstuffs at cost and plan to extend their activities into other commercial fields. They expect also to help each other build homes, an important feature in these days of house scarcity. It is an all-employee venture, based on a ten-dollar membership fee, returnable when the member leaves the employ of the company. It is expected most of the fifteen thousand employees of the company will eventually become members, and likely similar organizations established by General Electric employees at other places.

The work of the 500 schools in the United States with vocational departments, with one exception (Cincinnati, Ohio,) was characterized recently by Arthur F. Payne of the Uni-agent has gone, you cannot have your certificate validated, nor secure the benefit of the return reduction.

No refund of fare will be made on account of failure to either obtain a proper certificate or on account of failure to have the certificate validated.

7. It must be understood that reduction for the return journey is contingent on an attendance of not less than 250 members of the organization or dependent members of their families holding regularly issued certificates from ticket agents at starting points, showing payment of one-way tariff fare of not less than seventy-five cents on the going trip.

8. Provided these conditions are fulfilled, you will be entitled to a return ticket via the same route as going journey at one third of the normal one-way tariff fare from place of meeting to point at which sale was issued up to and including April 23.

Return tickets issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which such reduced fare transportation is not honored.

The allied council has decided to allow Germany to show her sincerity in bringing war criminals to justice. Certain test cases will be cited, the proposal being that France, England and Belgium each name five who are to be tried on personal charges of criminality preferred by the allies. CHURCH NEWS

Bishop B. R. McGuire was in Lamoni last week and on the 10th and 11th delivered three lectures to the class in religious education on Zion: necessity, factors, and processes. From here he intended to proceed to Toronto and likely to other Eastern points.

The Holden stake conference at Holden is reported as successful and interesting. A budget committee composed of the stake presidency, stake bishopric and executive committees voted $75 each to the Sunday school and Religio and $60 to the Woman's Auxiliary. Bishop C. J. Hunt reported an increase in tithes and offerings over former years and that the present year showed a marked increase. One of the best meetings of the conference was the young people's prayer meeting on Sunday morning. Robert P. Dillon and Virgil E. Bowers were ordained counselors to Bishop Hunt as president of the priests' quorum. The stake presidency nominated and the conventions elected James Williams as president of the Religio and Robert Dillon of Holden superintendent of the Sunday school.

An elder who attended the Interchurch World Conference for the State of Iowa at Des Moines makes the following comment: "The peculiar undertaking of this organization and the strange thing to us is, what a gigantic united effort they are making to spread a divided message. With due respect to their efforts as men, they lack the proper degree of faith in God and His Spirit to assist in the undertaking. This seems to have been recognized by one of the prominent speakers who said, 'We have erred primarily in limiting God—we have limited God the Father, his son Jesus Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost.' 'One of these churches with the Spirit of God could do more than all of them put together.' It may be well for Latter Day Saints to consider this seriously, for while we may not be limiting God according to our belief, we might be doing so by leaving undone works through which his power would be manifested. We trust however that Zion will soon put on her beautiful garments thus consecrating each life wholly to the service of God."

Following the resignation of his superior, Harry E. French, of Columbus, Ohio, member of the high priests' quorum and president of the Second Branch at that place, has been appointed to acting chief of police in that city.

Apostles Rushton and Hanson are reported as having visited Melbourne in Victoria, Australia, and also Parkside, in South Australia. They are greatly appreciated by the Saints and their sermons are attended by capacity houses. Two baptisms are reported from Parkside.

Brother S. A. Burgess continues to make good gain in recovery from his operation at the Sanitarium, but to receive skillful treatment till fully recovered, he may be required to remain in Independence for a month or more.

G. R. Wells, general superintendent of the Sunday school, went to Independence on the 13th to attend a meeting of a subcommittee of the executive council and arrange the final program for the Sunday school convention. A number of unusual features are being planned, in addition to the time allotted the Sunday school at the church.

Great anxiety prevails throughout Lamoni over the disappearance of Elder Thomas T. Forbes, superintendent of buildings and grounds at Graceland College. He was last seen on Thursday afternoon (11th) when he left his home with the expressed intention of taking the train to Mount Ayr to meet his wife, who was returning on the evening train from Independence Sanitarium, following an operation. It was not necessary to meet her, as the train arrives in Lamoni at 8 o'clock, but evidently he was planning a little surprise for his dear one. But in spite of every effort to locate him all efforts have failed to the time of this writing. He has been an exemplary young man in every way, taking an active part in local religious activities in his calling as an elder, and has a good reputation in the Eastern Michigan District from where he and his wife and child came last fall to Graceland. His wife's maiden name was Henrietta Hodgins. There was the utmost amity in the family relations. Some accident must have befallen our brother, and every effort is being made to locate him. His family have the sympathy of the entire community.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Fort Collins, Colorado. The Religio held an interesting debate on whether the church should use the moving picture machine, bringing out many good points on both sides of the question. Our city is not located on the Denver and Rio Grande as previously stated, but on the Colorado and Southern Pacific railroads.

Toronto.—"A nation must visualize God before it can sense its relationship to the universe," said T. W. Williams in his lecture at the Allen Theater on "What Canada needs most." Next Sunday, March 14, Brother Williams closes the theater season with the subject, "If Christ came to Toronto." Brother J. J. Cornish has started mid-week services, and in his unique way is digging up the good old Bible truths. He has our support. The institute held a very interesting session recently. Brethren T. W. Williams and J. T. Thompson and Sister Floralice Miller presiding. "Save and serve."

Caldsac, Idaho. The branch has about one hundred members, many of them not living near enough to attend. W. F. Yates is branch president. There has been an order of Enoch established in the branch. They have at present a membership of thirteen. A class of young girls is soon to be started under the auspices of the Order of Enoch, and they are going to be taught in domestic science. The epidemic of influenza has hindered the attendance at church services lately, several of the Saints having it but all are now recovering.

CENTENNIAL PROGRAM

General Conference Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri

INTRODUCTION

One hundred years ago a young man came from his season of prayer in the seclusion of the forest with an announcement that startled the world. He announced that he had received a heavenly vision, that the Lord had revealed himself, and that Jesus had been manifested to him, with the admonition, "Hear ye him!"

That vision was the initial act of the Great Restoration. That admonition, "Hear ye him," is the keynote of all our message. As this great event was said to have occurred "early in the spring of 1820," it has been thought fitting to observe the centenary at the General Conference of 1920.

As the conference, proper, begins on Tuesday, while many of the elders are expected to be present at an earlier date, the Presidency has decided to include Sunday, April 4, in the program.

Meet Us at the Temple Lot

The Prayer of Anointing

A symposium of the views of various elders on the observance of this important ordinance.

At a meeting of representative men some months ago a discussion arose touching the matter of long prayers while anointing the sick in administration.

Subsequently the Presidency addressed a circular to various elders asking for an expression of opinion. We give herewith extracts from some of the answers received.

T. W. Williams: "Replying to your communication of December 4 asking my opinion in regard to the matter of long prayers when one is anointing and administering to the sick, will state:

"First: I am committed to the thought that long prayers, except under very extraordinary occasions are detrimental rather than helpful.

"The wise man has aptly said, 'Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to offer any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few.' (Ecclesiastes 5: 2.)

"Jesus gives wholesome advice: 'But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking; Be not ye therefore like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.' (Matthew 6: 7, 8.)

"It is well to note that 'the prayer of faith shall save the sick.' The great prerequisite is faith and this does not necessitate long prayers.

"Under all circumstances man must be, to an extent, governed by the conditions, the surrounding circumstances and, above all, the operation of the Spirit of God.

"We cannot lay down hard and fast lines in this matter as this would preclude the operation of the Spirit. It is, however, safe to affirm that the general practice of many of the brethren in stringing out a lot of words with no particular objective, lacking cohesion and purpose, is reprehensible.

"The advice of Joseph Smith, late President of the church that it is not necessary to have two prayers at the time of administration should be accorded to. It is painful to have one man take the bottle of oil, anoint the head of the patient and then offer a long prayer whilst the other brother or brethren are standing by; then to have them confirm the anointing by another brother going over practically the same thing.

"It is well that those administering may, in a general way, know something of the needs of the patient and then let the prayer be directed to that particular need. I would advise that the prayer be short, explicit, and to the point. By all means the elder should refrain from lengthening out his prayer so as to develop a spirit of prophecy whereby he may make some promise to the one administered to.

"The benefit to the sick is not dependent on the length of the prayer. In fact I believe if there was ever a time when the prayer should be short and pointed it would be on an occasion like this.

"One other reprehensible thing is the practice of the brethren in placing their heavy hands on the head of the patient and bearing down in such a way as to make the act absolutely uncomfortable.

"When one is sick he is susceptible to every little thing and it should be the studied purpose of the elders to make their presence as agreeable as possible and conducive to the well-being of the sick."

U. W. Greene: "Touching the matter of long prayers in anointing the sick in administrations, will say that many times in my experiences I have been distressed to note that elders in anointing with the oil would make a long prayer, then turn to me and ask that I confirm that anointing and that prayer. At times I have felt so provoked that I have wanted to say, 'You have administered and I see no reason why I should confirm that which you have done.'

"I believe the oil should be placed on the head of the afflicted one in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; then hands should be placed on the head of the party and a brief prayer offered by the one selected for that purpose.

"I may say that I do not believe in long prayers in blessing children or when ordaining to the ministry. The model prayers, in my judgment, are such as we find in the Book of Mormon as used on this continent after the visit of our Savior."

D. J. Krahl: "It would seem that in the ministry of Jesus while upon earth his prayers in connection with the healing of the sick were always marked with brevity. Could the minister always be filled with this Spirit as was Jesus Christ and have the faith of Jesus Christ resident within him, it is possible that the brief prayer would always be as effectual as when Jesus personally administered. But such is not the case. The ministers who are called upon to anoint come from various occupations and conditions in life. There must needs be a unity in the prayer as well as faith. This perhaps can be secured by those elders who are called to officiate, together with those who are to be present at the administration, uniting in fervent prayer that their faith may be increased and the unity of the spirit may be obtained. If this is done prior to the administration there would be no necessity of a lengthy prayer during the official act of administering. In James 5: 14, 15, it would indicate that there should be prayer in connection with the anointing. Previous to this prayer I believe the officiating ministers should seek through prayer to adjust themselves for the ordinance that the prayer offered may be a 'prayer of faith.'"

Hubert Case: "Surely the prayer of anointing should be very short, and let the man confirming be led to make the long prayer if either does.

"I would like to hear a word also on the line of their saying 'we have no power.' This is frequently said by the brethren and I think we have some power. Luke said he gave them power and authority and if they have authority they have power."

F. G. Pitt: "In the early days of the Reorganization the custom followed was for the one anointing to say a few words or offer a very brief prayer while anointing, leaving the burden of prayer to the one confirming during the laying on of hands. Your father always urged this rule.

MAKE ARRANGEMENTS WITH YOUR LOCAL NEWSPAPERS FOR CONFERENCE NEWS

The publicity office is prepared to send dispatches either by mail or by wire to all papers that will print the conference news as it develops. Go to your local editor and see if he will use any of this material. If so, please notify this office at once, giving the address of the papers, who to address, and the amount of material wanted. "I very much regret to witness of late years a departure from this custom, especially among some of our younger men. In some instances the elder anointing would go so far as to lay his hands upon the sick and in a long prayer confirm the anointing, seal the blessing, and then turn to his associate for him to offer another prayer. An elder in Australia did this upon two occasions. After the first experience, I explained to him the proper method in administering to the sick as I understood it. When he did this the second time and said amen, I said amen and walked away. In explanation, I told him he had done all that I could do, therefore all I could say was amen.

"I believe only a few words should be used in anointing the sick, and that the prayer should be offered by the one confirming, during the laying on of hands of the elders participating."

W. M. Aylor: "As to the question of long prayers in anointing the sick I think it very unwise. I have heard some of the elders pray a long prayer in anointing, pray about everything almost. I have advised against this everywhere I go and get the opportunity. Also advised not to lay hands heavily on the sick."

C. A. Butterworth: "My position is that the prayer in anointing the sick should be as brief and to the point as possible. Calling the person by name, or say sister or brother, as the Lord's servant I anoint you, or your head, with this consecrated oil, and ask God's blessing and directions on your behalf in the confirmation—or something similar. The prayer for the sick or afflicted should be in the confirmation and not in the anointing."

A. Carmichael: "It depends. Some men love to pray long and loud, and some men love to hear them. If this happy (?) combination occurs, let them indulge if said indulgence is necessary to the bringing of the Spirit of the Master. Of this, though, we are in doubt.

"Again it depends. Some men have the very happy faculty of brevity. Others enjoy brevity. If such a combination is found, let them act according to 'their gifts'; i. e. brevity.

"In general. The one anointing should do so with a few well-chosen words, and the one confirming do so as led by the Spirit.

"The one confirming is, in common parlance, called 'the mouthpiece.' We suppose this expression is used because the one confirming should express the message of cheer and comfort, etc., to the individual.

"To the writer one of the things that spoil an administration is to have the one anointing make a long prayer, telling the Lord a whole lot of stuff that the Lord knows already. The same may be said of an opening prayer at a preaching service. In fact, good taste requires that any prayer or religious service, speaking generally, used primarily to 'introduce' or 'begin' a service, should be brief. It lends a proper setting to the main occasion.

"If ever 'brevity is the soul of wit' (wisdom), this 'soul' or essence of wisdom will be found in the anointing of the sick."

Henry A. Stebbins: "I consider that a long prayer by the elder in anointing takes away from the privilege and the right of the one who is to offer the real prayer that is to follow. My own experience is that where two elders officiate, which is a common occurrence, the one who offers the prayer while they are upon their knees seeking help for themselves and the sick one, that he should do the anointing, saying a few words about it being done in the Lord's name and asking the Father to bless the ceremony, and then leaving it with the other elder to finish the service by making a full supplication in behalf of the sick one. If there are three elders each can do a part.

The Standard

BY A. CARMICHAEL

"The law representing the will of the majority may be wrong, but this does not give the minority the right to violate it."

God is infinite—man finite. The responsibility to give finite man an infinite standard, was God's. He fulfilled his responsibility.

This standard must be accepted by man, at least tentatively, or he can make no progress.

The only true growth comes from experienced knowledge.

This standard being infinite, only infinity can perfectly understand it. All mankind are finite, therefore all mankind cannot perfectly comprehend God or his standard. The standard as given by God is perfect, but the interpreter of the standard is not.

When God gave his standard it was perfect, but man, by putting his imperfect interpretation upon it, has changed the meaning of the standard. The result is our Bible with its imperfections.

Our heavenly Father, in his wondrous mercy and boundless love, has again revealed his standard to man. The result is the Book of Mormon.

Yet the problem of a correct interpretation still remains. The finite mind may not interpret this last revealed standard correctly.

What then? Shall we say that "Our understanding of the standard is to be our standard?" If so, then every man has a standard of his own, and the very object of the infinite standard becomes negated—destroyed.

We must sometime and somewhere all understand the infinite standard alike, or we will not come to a unity. How is this to be accomplished?

The state authoritatively states what is the final standard of measurement—such as the inch, foot, yard, etc. By all using this standard with the same understanding, we can come to a unity as to what is a correct measurement.

This authoritative rule or law of measurement by the state is finite. As such it can be perfectly understood by the finite mind. But not so with God's unit of measurement or standard.

What then? Shall we not try to use the standard of God that we may become united? Certainly so, for we are commanded to use this infinite standard.

Then how is this to be accomplished?

The very instant a part of the truth finds lodgment in our brains or mind it is clothed with a finite surrounding, and error may creep in. Otherwise man would be infallible. But, all mankind is fallible.

The truth is never changed, never wrong; but man's understanding of the truth may be wrong.

So even a prophet with his message direct from God may be wrong, because the very instant the message from God comes to a prophet it enters a finite environment.

If I claim that my understanding of the truth is my standard, then fair play will require me to allow this right to every other man. The result being our chance of unity is pushed farther into the background, and we will no more have a common standard, but as many standards as there are human minds. This spells failure in ever coming to the unity desired by God.

How is this unity to be accomplished? Did not God know our limitations? What is the method of interpretation he has given us, by the faithful using of which we may eventually see alike? Did he not in his infinite wisdom provide for some such method?

He surely did. His method was one which, while it would eventually bring us to a unity, would in the interim provide for our growth, recognize our free agency, and preserve and conserve it.

This is provided for in the idea of a majority rule. The majority may be wrong—so may the minority, but the preponderance of chances is in favor of the majority being right.

God's method minimizes the chances to be wrong, but does not eliminate entirely the chances to be wrong. To do this would make automatons of us—mere machines.

The right of "free speech" does not give the minority the right to violate law, sanctioned by the will of the majority.

The law representing the will of the majority may be wrong but this does not give the minority the right to violate it.

Two wrongs never make a right.

"Unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions. All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified," is what the Lord says. The right of the majority and the minority therefore are governed by law. Here it is:

"Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference, should be heard in the conferences and not in the mission fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted."

Here then is the modus operandi by which the Lord expects us to arrive at a unity—his way of obtaining a proper interpretation of his law.

Only here in quorum capacity, or on conference floor, can anything be definitely done toward making a change, if change is necessary, if the majority is wrong. Here the minority have their right.

In all other places they should respect the will of the majority by, at least, keeping silent on the subject in dispute.

The infinite standard gives the minority their "bounds and limitations." If the minority wish to be "justified," they must abide in these bounds and conditions.

If the policy of the majority cannot be demonstrated by reason of the opposition of the minority, we cannot know by experimental knowledge whether the interpretation of the majority is wrong or right. Such an action is not fair to the majority.

When the minority's turn comes and they are in the majority, they would not want the minority to frustrate their policies or plans resultant from their interpretation.

The Golden Rule should obtain: "In all things what ye would that men should do unto you, do ye so unto them."

In spite of the growing menace to our school system in the rapidly decreasing number who stay in the teaching profession, Wayne County, Michigan citizens recently represented a popular antipathy to parochial schools. A petition signed by 114,000 persons has been filed with the secretary of State, proposing by constitutional amendment to abolish all parochial schools in the State. It is expected the proposal will be voted on at the November election.

Thirty-four States have now ratified national woman suffrage. West Virginia, by a spectacular run on the part of one of its legislators who broke a tie vote being the thirty-fourth. There is no doubt that Washington will indorse it, on March 22, and all eyes are now on Delaware, which by special call votes on the same date. The affirmative vote of two States is required to put the law into operation.

Thurlow Weed Speaks on the Book of Mormon

BY R. W. FARRELL

Thurlow Weed was offered the opportunity of being the first publisher of the Book of Mormon.

In the Autobiography of Thurlow Weed, a noted American journalist and politician, and editor of the Rochester Telegraph, in 1829, we read a statement concerning the printing of the Book of Mormon, which I have read in no other work. Mr. Weed tells us that—

"About 1829 a stout, round, smooth-faced young man, between twenty-five and thirty, with the air and manner of a person without occupation, came into the Rochester Telegraph office and said he wanted a book printed, and added that he had been directed in a vision to a place in the woods near Palmyra, where he resided, and that he found a 'golden Bible,' from which he was directed to copy the book which he wanted published. He then placed what he called a 'tablet' in his hat, from which he read a chapter of the 'Book of Mormon,' a chapter which seemed so senseless that I thought the man either crazed or a very shallow imposter, and therefore declined to become a publisher, thus depriving myself of whatever notoriety might have been achieved by having my name imprinted upon the title-page of the first Book of Mormon.

"It is scarcely necessary to add that this individual was Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon creed. On the day but one following he came again, accompanied by Martin Harris, a substantial farmer residing near Palmyra, who had adopted the Mormon faith, and who had offered to become security for the expense of printing. But I again declined, and he subsequently found a publisher in E. B. Grandien, of Palmyra, in 1830."—Pages 358, 359

The value of the foregoing lies in its corroboration of the statement of Joseph Smith. It is said that if our New Testament were destroyed that its entire contents, lacking a few verses, could be replaced from the writings of profane histories prepared in the first centuries.

I am curious to know what chapter Mr. Smith read that appeared so senseless to Mr. Weed. Thousands of persons as well educated as this man have read the Book of Mormon and have found nothing senseless in its pages. Robert Ingersoll and men of like mind claim that many chapters of the Bible are filled with nonsense; but other men fully as intelligent as Mr. Ingersoll have found no fault with the Scriptures. The French say, "Evil to him who evil thinks." And it would seem that it depends on the condition of mind of the reader as to whether the Book of Mormon writings are filled with sense or nonsense, to him.

In this matter of judgment Mr. Weed might have been as much mistaken as he was in his opinion of Joseph Smith's occupation. We read that Joseph entered the office of the Telegraph as one "without occupation." Fact is that Joseph Smith, judged by the work he did, was fully occupied, and this accusation of Thurlow Weed is on a par with the statement of enemies that Mr. Smith was lazy, yet in the next breath inform us that he spent months and perhaps years digging for hidden treasures, turning over acres of earth.

I recall that some years ago I started to review Linn's History of the Mormons; but I discovered so many contradictions on the first twenty-five pages that I realized my book of corrections would be longer than the copy I reviewed. A sample of Linn's accuracy is given in his statement, on one page, that the Smith family could not read and were ignorant puppets, while on the next page he tells us that young Joseph went every week to the post office to bring home his father's newspaper. Every student of anti-Mormon literature well knows that he has waded through thousands of contradictions, beginning with the pen of A. Campbell in 1830 and not ending with the pen of W. LaRue in 1919. But more about the writing of this bachelor of this divinity later.

"If Any of You Lack Wisdom"

BY T. J. ELLIOTT

Much that is of interest and significance in connection with the coming forth of the work of God in the last dispensation is centered in and clustered about the first chapter of James, and especially the fifth verse.

We are told the information conveyed leading to the inauguration and setting up of the work, came about as a direct reply in keeping with the promise made of God. "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not and it shall be given him."

Some one will say, is it not specified in the writing whom the servant of God is addressing in particular, and was it not a special and specific promise peculiar to them in their time?

If so, our position is faulty, our claim unfounded, and our teaching at variance, for all the time in the history of the church, the labor of its ministry, our cry has been that all who need direction and wisdom are entitled to avail themselves of this invitation, "Let him ask of God."

Is it not assured us of God that "He is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that worketh righteousness is accepted of him?"

To the thinking mind this is manifest. The broad attitude

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHY ZION WAITS IN PALESTINE

Immediate establishment of Zionism in Palestine is not to be expected, according to one recent investigator, who finds that conditions are not much improved after two years of occupation by the British, and who is also impressed with the belief that the fault lies partly with the Jews themselves. A resident Jewish writer is, on the other hand, more optimistic, and looks to work as the means of salvation for "Palestina Redempta." In an article appearing in The Christian Register (Unitarian, Boston), and found to be of sufficient interest to be reproduced on the front page of The American Israelite, it is stated that "the cost of living is from five to seven times what it was—in part due, to be sure, to world-wide conditions, but also due to restricted import and taxation." The water supply is inadequate, roads need improving, and wood cannot be cut or transported. There are no horses to be had; there are few carriages and donkeys, and the rolling stock is out of date. Further, "it can not be denied that the decision of the British Government in the matter of Zionism has also had a bad effect upon the public mood." This observer of conditions in the Holy Land continues:

"You will remember that Britain made certain promises to France, to Faisal, and to the Zionists—each in an hour of need—which have found to be, in their execution, mutually exclusive. That is one of the reasons for watchful waiting. A move in any direction brought a crowd from two others. She could not afford to offend France, the Ally. She could not afford to offend the Zionists. Yet why not? That is a mystery. Her promises to them were couched in such vague terms as to mean anything almost, short of excluding Jews from Palestine. Altho powerful and, for different reasons, often pro-German or anti-Russian during the conflict, their resentment would be nothing compared with that of offended Islam. At this very moment the bad feeling among Syrian Christians, Moslems, and Druses—the two latter traditionally pro-British—because Palestine is now surely to be displayed in this principle of the church, not the word of man, not built or predicated upon his assurance, but in all that it is, seeks or claims, in your desire to know of its truth, ask of God, it permits, yea courts that your evidence comes from him.

The reason, if we are to understand God, to be called into his service, to be laborers for him, there can be no more sure or satisfactory condition than that he should reveal and manifest himself unto us.

To be apprised of his will, to understand and know of the doctrine, and to be enabled intelligently to present it before men for the salvation of their souls, bringing them into contact with God, one must have copartnership and association with God such as can come alone in the wisdom that he reveals.

Thus it is the fifth verse and whole chapter appeals to man to seek knowledge and strive to attain godliness, surely conveying comfort in the promise that wisdom shall be granted to all men. This is self-evident from the reading. No man receives merely through the will of the mind or the wish of the heart, nor the vacillating curiosity that inveighs often in the lives of men, but there must be evidenced and manifested powers that surge through the soul, making every wish and desire of the heart and mind blend toward an insatiable thirsting to know God's will. In this way only can we come, nothing wavering, for truly this promise is also given, as the disciple once said, to as many as the Lord our God shall call.

'given to the Jews,' is a factor not to be neglected. The Jews are hated, as all Orientals are hated by other Orientals who wear a different coat. And they are feared by the less clever people of the soil, as all foreign capitalists are feared. Finally, they are a worry to the pious for an apparently opposite reason—the alleged radical tendencies of certain of their number.

"The truth is, there are among the Jews in Palestine at least eight parties. There are the anti-Zionists, pious people who do not want to interfere with God's own plans of restoration. Then the neutrals. Then supporters of the central Zionist organization, mostly Russian. Fourthly, the Mizrahi, or religious Zionist party. Fifthly, the rather comfortable and lukewarm bourgeois party, too comfortable to yearn for residence on barren hillsides or under moldy arches in an atmosphere of sewer-gas, and therefore small in number, and transient. Sixthly, the international socialists. Seventhly, Bolsheviki. Eighthly, the Palestinian party, which is in part a separate entity and in part a tendency throughout the other parties. They are individuals who, as speakers of somewhat better Hebrew, believe that they should have a very large share of influence in the direction of events and shaping of policies. The Jews, of whom there are many, who would abolish Zionism because a menace to their present citizenship, do not, of course, come to Palestine.

"The question now is: In what guise is the 'establishment of a Jewish home in Palestine' to be affected? And the whole land cries out: 'How long? Do something.'"

But a different note, resulting, perhaps, from a closer appraisal, comes from A. D. Gordon, a Palestinian workman, excerpts from whose letters appear in The Maccabean, a Zionist organ. His message is "plain home-talk," for everything in Palestine wears "the same homely work-a-day physiognomy as anywhere else," and "you will find here the same trivialities, the same meannesses, if you like—as anywhere else." This tiller of the soil sees salvation in work, and he urges:

"Congregation upon our own soil means the end of intellectual parasitism upon an alien body politic. For better or worse, we must have our homeland, our own work. There is no tie between men so strong as common work. Nothing but common work can regenerate us—not debates or researches on formulas of compromise. The Jews of every land have their local tasks, but there is only one universal Jewish task: to prepare a corner of the earth for our own national life. With the end of the war we may begin now. Part of the ground is plowed and waiting."

WE ARE BECOMING A HOMELESS PEOPLE

More than 88 per cent of the homes in New York City are rented. In the Borough of Manhattan the percentage rises to 97.

Nor is this condition limited to the metropolis. It is common to most cities. The people of the United States who live in rented homes are in excess of 54 per cent of the population, according to the latest government returns. About 45 per cent own the houses in which they live.

These statistics have been collected for the survey of city life now being conducted by the Interchurch World Movement to provide a practical program for closer cooperation of Protestant churches in America. And the survey already reveals one of the gravest problems now confronting the church.

Rented homes, the survey shows, mean migrant families, for the day of the long lease is passing, and increases in rent cause increases in moving. The migration of families has shifted and changed the congregations of urban churches. And too often the family that moves beyond the reach of one church does not transfer its membership to another, even though it attends that other.

The moving family, say the workers on the survey, leaves the church letter, by which membership is transferred, and the family cat behind. If the church did not have more lives than a cat, these survey workers are beginning to think, it would have been dead long ago, for just as the family "loses" its cat, a church loses members, although another church does not gain them.

One preacher in a pastorate of 13 years noted 3,000 changes in his congregation.

The present generation of the city, the survey reveals, is a generation of wanderers because of the growing number of rented homes and the rising rents. As a result, the family church is becoming an urban rarity. The family in which the father is a founder of the church he attends, married to a member of the congregation, and with children baptized by the family minister, is more and more seldom found, the survey workers report.

Too often the increase in rent has sent the family to another neighborhood. One purpose of the Interchurch World Movement survey of the cities is to determine how, through that efficient cooperation of churches which is the major aim of the movement, migrant families may not be lost to the membership of their respective denominations—Exchange.

KEEP AN ACCOUNT

The following from the pamphlet by F. B. Meyer, on "The stewardship of money" contains some suggestions we might all memorize:

"It may seem needless to insert this caution to those who should use all for Christ. But it is really most important. And for this reason: Our hearts are weak and fickle; and we are in danger of making so good a provision for ourselves that the Lord's surplus will be next to nothing. We remember so vividly the amount we give away that it bulks up largely in our mind; and we imagine that we are generous, until we see in figures how small a proportion our charity bears to our income.

"We must not trust to our memories, or to generalities. We must be minute and specific and careful, some having a bag, others a box, into which the Lord's portion is carefully put; some having a separate banking account, where we may put down what we receive and spend for Christ, that there may be no embezzlement, however inadvertent, of that which is not ours."

RESULT OF THE FIGHT AGAINST THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

The making of history has advanced at such an appalling rate during the last six years that we are prone to forget or to regard as "ancient history" some of the things that happened in the not distant past. Yet it at times behooves us to recall these, particularly where the sour grapes that the fathers ate are to-day setting on edge the children's teeth. Here is an instance of the fruitage of an act of little over a generation ago. It is reported in the Circleville (Ohio) Democrat and Watchman. At a recent teachers' examination, we are told, one of the questions asked was, "Who was the author of the Sermon on the Mount?" Out of forty-two applicants, says the newspaper, "eight did not write on that question at all, thirteen said Christ, six had no idea as to whom the author might be, three merely stated that it was from the Bible, four said Moses, two Paul, one Peter, one Milton, one Browning, one Whittier, and one Longfellow. The successful fight against the Bible in the Ohio public schools came in the Seventies, so that many of these teachers must have been pupils in the schools thereafter, and are now showing their ignorance of the greatest Book in the

PASTORAL

The Need of Pastors

BY ELWYN R. DAVIS

The pastor has an important part in building the kingdom of God.

The need of qualified pastors is great. The missionary arm of the church is one of the most important, and has accomplished, and is accomplishing great things; but many times after a short missionary effort, a number have come into the church, then the missionary has moved on, and this little band have been left to starve for the want of spiritual food, which can only be successfully administered by a qualified pastor.

Not many of our good missionaries are qualified to successfully shepherd a flock, their qualifications running along a different line. Paul saw the need of pastors and followed up the missionary effort by ordaining elders in every branch, as God had called. Many a Saint has drifted away from the church by not having the fatherly direction of a qualified pastor. Hence the need of pastors.

What Constitutes a Good Pastor?

The exhortation of Peter to the elders, (1 Peter 5) covers the ground quite successfully. First he exhorts them to feed the flock of God which is among them. The food here mentioned is spiritual food, and before any pastor can successfully administer this kind of food, must himself feed upon the same, being a student of the word and holding close communion with God.

Next they are instructed to take the oversight of the flock willingly and a ready mind, and not for filthy lucre. No pastor can make a success of his work who accepts the position for the material benefits of pleasures he is to derive from it.

He must accept the position with a willingness to make such self denial of the pleasures and comforts of life as the position may demand. He should not live in luxury and enjoy the many comforts of life, which the members of his flock are denied. Upon the other hand he and his family should enjoy the same necessary comforts of life, and have the same opportunity for education and progress, as those over whom he presides.

He is not to be a lord over God's heritage. The flock is God's heritage, and no pastor has the right to assume the role of lord in the sense that we often see it in those who exercise authority in many of the walks of life. Neither should he show by his actions that he feels the importance of the authority of his office, and never should he forcefully exercise that authority, except when necessity demands.

Our late and worthy president Joseph Smith, while on his deathbed, said to his successor, You can lead this people, but you cannot drive them. Pastors should be leaders, not drivers.

Again Peter exhorts that they should be examples to the World (considered from a literary point alone). It is sad to recall that in that day argument against the Bible in the schools was made by a Presbyterian elder, Judge Stanley Matthews, later Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. We wonder if Judge Matthews were living to-day, and cognizant of the deplorable condition of public morals, if he would still argue against the Bible in our schools.—The Presbyterian.

flock. A pastor who does not set a good example, worthy to be patterned after, before his flock and before the world, cannot make a success of his work. If he cannot be looked up to, in his everyday life, as one whom every member of his flock can pattern after, he will fall short of his mission. They are to so conduct themselves before the flock and before the world, that when the chief shepherd appears they shall receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away. To obtain that crown of glory will require much upon the part of the pastor. How many of us will fall short, or when weighed in the balances be found wanting?

Be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. Humility, then, is one of the necessary qualifications which will enhance the value of a pastor's work, while the manifestation of a proud, haughty, lordly attitude, will greatly hinder his work. Exaltation will come in due time to the humble, while the opposite will come to the proud.

A pastor must be sober, vigilant, and steadfast in the faith, in order to resist the adversary who like a roaring lion is always about seeking whom he may devour. The pastor should exercise a great deal of patience and forbearance with those whom the adversary is seeking to devour. His object should be to save from destruction, and not to help the adversary to destroy. The mission of the chief shepherd is to seek after that which is lost until he finds it. Should not the pastor, or shepherd of the flock exercise a great deal of persistence in searching after the straying sheep of his flock? The principal mission of the pastor is to save, not to destroy. The cutting off process should not be resorted to until all reasonable hope of redemption is past.

Avoid Favoritism

A pastor should not show favoritism, or take sides with any party or faction within his branch, nor should he allow the tales that may be brought to his ears to influence him against any party or faction. Whatever attitude he may assume in such cases, must be against the wrongs committed, and not against the individuals who commit the wrongs.

A pastor should be progressive, an advocate of education and loyalty to church and state. He should endeavor to help and encourage the other members of the priesthood of his branch, to add to their natural abilities, such acquired ability as they may be able to obtain through study. And in this he must be careful not to make light of or offend those who in their early years failed to improve, or did not have an opportunity to improve their talents along educational lines.

To Raise the Standard of Efficiency

He should endeavor to bring his flock up to a higher standard of efficiency, which can only be obtained by study. Study and education of the proper sort is like oil to a piece of machinery, and makes all the working parts of our being more susceptible to the influences of the Spirit. A branch whose membership are in possession of a goodly degree of intelligence, knowledge, and acquired ability in addition to their natural ability, is less liable to be affected by false manifestations, and are in a better position to accomplish greater results under the influence of the true spirit. Hence a pastor should endeavor to get his flock to improve upon their talents by the study of all good books.

If a carpenter, cabinet maker, or mason can make greater progress with sharp tools that he can will dull ones, it stands to reason that the builders in the kingdom of God, can make greater progress by having their talents sharpened on the grindstone of acquired knowledge, to seek learning even by study, as the Lord has told us through the latter-day prophet, who when he began his work was very much unlearned, but who before he ended his work in this life had acquired a great deal of learning, even by study. A pastor who is not progressive, and is content to allow himself and his flock to continue on in the same old rut year in and year out, will never accomplish what the duties of his office enjoin upon him.

His Opportunity to Do

The experience of the past ten years, has taught me that no pastor who has to spend from eight to ten hours a day in earning a livelihood for himself and family, can do full justice to a flock of any size, say from fifty members up. And even with a smaller flock he will be handicapped in his work as a pastor, if the greater portion of his wakeful hours must be spent in secular affairs.

More Full-time Pastors Needed

We need more pastors who can devote their whole time to the work, and greater ability on the part of the church to fulfill the scriptural exhortation, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Under the Mosaic dispensation those who were to spend their whole time in ministering spiritual things, were to have their temporal needs supplied by the body, and in Doctrine and Covenants 119:8, we are told that those who labor in the ministry, and those that toil in the affairs of life are to labor together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

So all are under obligation to God to render a full and complete service according to their calling and the gifts of God unto them. One who is expected to spend his whole time in the work as a pastor, or missionary, or any other office that should require his whole time, cannot render a full and complete service in that particular line of work if he must spend the greater portion of his time in earning a livelihood. No man who is sent out by the church with the expectation that he is to give his whole time to the work, should engage in secular affairs as a side line. If they do they will be hindered in their ministerial capacity, therefore those who are engaged in the affairs of the men of business and of work are under obligation to God, to support the financial arm of the church, both locally and in a general way, follow the bishop's advice, "Every member a tithe payer."

There has been discovered in China a serious situation concerning the growing of poppies for opium production and the wholesale distribution of the product. The Chinese blame Japanese influence for the situation, but at any rate, the illicit business has grown to large proportions largely because of the tacit encouragement lent by corrupt local officials until the whole system of governmental control has become honey-combed with graft and the people greatly demoralized by the increase in the opium habit.

The Chicago Church Federation is bringing a resolution before the Illinois constitutional convention now sitting, to require Bible readings in the public schools of the State. Seven hundred churches and thirteen Protestant denominations of Chicago are represented.

Is one who helps in a home a "hired girl" or a "household assistant"? The women of Sydney, Australia, have adopted the latter, and are trying to overcome the usual distaste for this class of work, not only by new recognition and different social recognition, but in better working hours and higher wages.

THE FORUM

The Real Basis of Stewardships

BY LESLIE S. WIGHT

"The one important change must first be in the heart of each individual, otherwise any plan will be a dismal failure."

If the recent articles appearing in the HERALD on "Zion" indicate anything, it is that the interest of the church as never before, is centering on the one thing which is the reason for our existence as an organization, and that is, "How can we actually establish Zion on earth?"

I have been looking forward to such a condition for some time as I was converted to the Zionite hopes and ideals of this church long before I was converted to all the first principles. Even now, it is the one thing in which my attention and interest is centered, and I firmly believe that, if we can actually demonstrate to the world that Zion is a reality, the presentation of the first principles and the conversion of the "honest in heart" will be a much easier task than it now is. In fact, we will have the world coming to us, asking how it is done.

The articles on the method of reaching that condition have been very interesting. But in trying to fit the plan of "fee simple" or "in trust" ideas to various existing conditions, problems are presented which seemingly cannot be readily solved. While I have my own opinion, I have tried to discover from these articles which plan is actually the divine plan, as laid down in the Book of Covenants, because my interest is in seeing the thing accomplished rather than in just using any statements found in those revelations to prove to some brother that he is wrong while I am right.

It may sound harsh, but some of the arguments I have heard men use to prove that in Zion no one can have any more than anyone else, sound like a plan to build up a huge grabbag from which each of us can take so much, but which each will watch to see that no one else gets more than we do. For my part, I do not care how much more my brother may have than I. If I have equal opportunities to develop all my talents and ability, and to use them for the good of the group, I certainly feel that I would be in Zion.

However, since all that I have read has failed to convince me that either plan is without its faults, I wonder if, after all, we will get anywhere with such a discussion. Then this question naturally arises: Can our failure to make any more progress than we have, be charged to the lack of a fully developed system, or to our unwillingness to comply with the plan we already have?

If we wait until we have a scheme that is theoretically correct in every detail, we will probably wait until doomsday for Zion to be redeemed. Or if we try to put into effect over night, some plan which will revolutionize our present mode of living, there will probably be nothing left of us when doomsday arrives.

If the Lord has given us a plan, surely he must have provided for the administration of that plan. Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10 seems to cover the ground fully:

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy."

The above is from the revelation given in Lamoni in 1902 when there was a question in the minds of some as to the extent of the Bishop's authority.

Again in 1909 another command was given which was a repetition of that given in 1902 with perhaps more emphasis. Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8 reads as follows:

"The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. 'I am God; I change not;' has been known to the church and the eldership since the coming of the angel with the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart."

Clearly then, the methods of working in Zion, that is, the administration of the affairs of Zion, should be left to the decision of the bishopric, and the thing for us to do is to find what instructions there may be which apply to us as individuals.

In the last of paragraph 3, section 72, we find this: "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop of Zion."

Is it not plain then that the first thing for each individual to do who wants to see Zion established, is to follow these instructions, and file his inventory with the Bishop, and then to carry out the instructions received from him? Under such a plan the need for any regulations as to living conditions in Zion, other than those in the "Word of Wisdom," will disappear. Individual initiative is left to its fullest development, and those who are not willing to subscribe to this simple, but effective, plan will soon feel so out of place that they will move to places which will be more suited to them.

Since we already have the plan of Zion waiting for us to but put it into effect, some may ask when the change is to come which is necessary before Zion can be established. The one important change must first be in the heart of each individual, otherwise any plan will be a dismal failure. And with a full desire to live up to the spirit of the law, as well as the letter, the exact method of doing it is really immaterial.

The Lord recognized the human weaknesses with which we contend, so gave the instructions for the bishopric to govern in temporal things. He knew that any man-made plan would have its flaws, and any plan decided on even by the Bishop will probably fail to settle all conditions to the satisfaction of all the people. But here is an opportunity to exercise some of the fundamental principles of our religion, such as charity, etc., rather than an opportunity to condemn the Bishop's plan just because of flaws which may be difficult to eliminate from any man-made interpretation of God's laws.

We have been told that if we do not make use of the opportunity we have, that some one else will be raised up who will establish Zion. Then let us make the necessary changes in self. If we do this with all the energy we have, we will soon have Zion an established fact. It will be the acid test also to find out just who are, and who are not, interested in Zion.

Is There Discrimination Concerning the Preconference Lectures?

BY H. N. HANSEN

A question propounded by one of our brethren, with an answer by one of the First Presidency that there is not.

I am not writing for the purpose of criticizing or faultfinding, but now and then something occurs that seems hard to understand. Perhaps some will think that it is because I have advanced in life to a point where I fail to see as readily as the younger generation, the needs of the hour, yet I do not think that my reasoning faculties have become so blunt that I should not be able to learn.

We have recently been advised that the General Conference appointees are invited to Independence to receive the benefit of lectures upon topics of importance relating to the work of the church. The question that forces itself upon my mind is: Why is this privilege confined to the men under conference appointment? It is, I believe, a recognized fact that, in many places, the work is suffering for the lack of competent local men to occupy as branch and district officers, and ought not the men who are striving to develop as such receive encouragement, rather than to be informed that a line has been drawn between them and their brethren?

We have local men who are doing good work and are being blessed in their labors, and possibly some among them may be doing nearly as well as some under conference appointment. They are not drawing for their support from the coffers of the church, but instead are contributing of their means for the support of their brethren, under appointment. It cannot be very encouraging to them to be informed that they belong to an inferior class, and not entitled to the same privilege as their brethren.

It may be true that not many of the brethren who are self-supporting would be able to attend the lectures, on account of temporal affairs demanding their attention, but if so there would be no danger of too large a crowd. Why then send them word that they are not wanted? We have long cherished the thought that there should be no favored class and that the work was intrusted to all.

I write with freedom upon this question as I am not affected individually. I have labored under conference appointment, both in the home land and in foreign fields, as well as locally in branch and district, and have become imbued with the thought that no matter in what position, we are all laborers together, and in the language of the Apostle Paul, are not to say to the other, "I have no need of thee."

The Answer

The lectures were arranged primarily for General Conference appointees, but local officers will be welcome to the extent of the capacity of the assembly room. We have so written several who have inquired. The idea that an attempt was made to discriminate unjustly or to degrade the local men is purely imaginary. As a class, conference appointees could be called together prior to conference—as a class, local men could not.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Are Moving Pictures Necessary?

BY HYRUM O. SMITH

This writer believes they have a legitimate place in our internal development.

Being one of the number in Independence who voted for the establishment of moving pictures in the church, I wish to say I do not think that either one or the other class can claim the victory here. I am quite sure that there were as many prayer meeting goers voted on one side as the other, hence the merits of the movement cannot be decided in this way. That is so far as Independence is concerned.

As to the merits of the case, we would like to disabuse the minds of the people of one idea, and it is expressed in the use of the word "movie." In all of the arguments against the placing of the machine in the church, the idea has been advanced that we were turning our church into a moving picture theater. The word "movie" signifies that to the average person, and the moment that you state that the Independence Saints have introduced the "movie" into the church it is accepted at its worst meaning, and hence is unfair to the men who suggested its installment, and unfair to those who voted for it.

What led up to its installment in the church is very significant if one wants to render righteous judgment. Those in charge of the work here had made arrangements to have a number of lectures given in the church this winter, or during the year, and those giving them would do so without some means of illustrating them. These lectures were on topics that are very vital to us as a people and as a church. Most of them were concerning archæology, and were to be given by men who had made a lifelong study of the question, and every Saint is interested in this topic, or ought to be. Those who had invited these men to speak had promised an adequate means of illustrating them, not dreaming that they would meet with opposition. To refuse to put the machine into the church by which these lectures could properly be illustrated would necessitate the calling off of all of these lectures, or taking them to some other building or church, thus putting the Saints in Independence in a bad light, placing them in opposition to advancement along the very lines that they have claimed to be superior to others. For we have claimed from the first to be intensely interested in the discoveries in American archæology, and we want all the light upon the subject we can get.

Did the Lord appeal to materialism when he caused Enoch to see the future history of the world? (Genesis 7, I. T.) Here God did not content himself simply with telling Enoch the things that were to transpire in the future, but he showed them to him in panorama; a moving picture, if you please. Did the Lord appeal to materialism when he said to Moses, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass"? (Deuteronomy 32:2.) He certainly used material things to impress great truths. Did Christ appeal to materialism when he said "a sower went forth to sow," "The kingdom of heaven is like a net that is cast into the sea," "The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure that is hid in the field," "The kingdom of heaven is like a pearl of great price?"

Surely Christ had the power to preach the word, and make the hearer comprehend through hearing, but he was the greatest object-lesson-teacher that ever came into this world. He educated the mind through the eye, and hence set his approval upon that manner of teaching. I presume that the brethren who use charts to illustrate their sermons would dislike to have it said that they were teaching that which is "the enemy to all true faith," because they try to reach the mind through the eye, or sight. Read the Bible carefully, or even casually, and one is impressed with the fact that nearly all great messages from God have been delivered first through the sense of sight, and many of them have been presented through moving pictures. All visions are moving pictures.

Nebuchadnezzar saw the wonderful image through which Daniel was able to tell him the history of the future.

Daniel saw the beasts representing the nations of the earth that was to be and already existed.

John the Revelator saw the future of the world in a religious sense through the visions of the angels flying in the midst of heaven.

Joseph Smith the Martyr saw the organization of the church through vision; for he said, "It is according to the vision." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.)

His son Joseph, of blessed memory, was shown the General Conference assembled and in action. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 2.)

All of these were moving pictures just as literally as was ever shown upon the screen. In each instance the picture was shown and a verbal explanation was given as the scene shifted. If the inventions of man have made this possible in teaching the word to-day, is it going backward to use them? Or should we avail ourselves of all the modern appliances to get our faith before the people, or to impress the truth upon their minds.

I have often been caused to wonder at the fact that the Bible anticipates modern discovery. It does not profess to be a treatise on science, and yet if one studies it carefully in the light of modern advancement one cannot but be impressed with its anticipation of the wonderful discoveries of science. Let me present a few instances.

In McClure's Magazine for March, 1910, Burton J. Hendricks quotes from what he calls a celebrated doctor as follows: "The escape from pain in surgical operations," wrote the celebrated Velpeau in 1839, "is a chimera which it is idle to follow up to-day. Knife and pain in surgery are two words which are always inseparable in the minds of patients, and this necessary association must be conceded." But to-day the use of anæsthetics in surgery have made possible operations that before could not be performed. The Bible anticipated this modern discovery something like five thousand years, for it tells us that God put Adam to sleep, removed a rib from his side and made him a wife.

Another one: The discovery of and application of the principle of isolation or quarantine in the controlling of infectious diseases is hardly a century old if we look to the discoveries of modern medicine, but the law of Moses contained the provision that a leper should keep himself isolated, and if he saw one approaching him he was to cry "Unclean, unclean" to warn anyone whom he might meet to avoid him.

These are only two instances among dozens that I might mention in which the Bible anticipates modern investigation, and the world hails them with delight as real advancement, but if we apply modern discoveries to our work in getting the gospel before the people we are accused of taking a step backward, even when those modern discoveries closely approximate God's methods of conveying information.

It is urged, however, that the moving picture machine is used for evil, and some go so far as to say that it is used more for evil than for good, and hence should be banished from our churches. But this might be said of almost anything that is good. We might say that because there is more false religion in the world than good, or real religion, we should not be religious at all. There is hardly a faculty of mind or body but what has been prostituted to evil to a greater or lesser extent, but should we turn these things over entirely to the forces of evil? Not at all.

If the moving picture machine has been used mostly for evil since its invention it is because the forces of evil have beat us to it. The question resolves itself into this: Is there any good in the invention at all? Can it be used for good? If the answer is in the negative, then banish it from the church, and let no Latter Day Saint ever be found countenancing it in any way. If the answer is in the affirmative, then let us proceed to make it an instrument for good and not for evil.

I unhesitatingly say that it can be made an instrument for good, and all of the recent developments of science proves my contention. Under the old methods of teaching surgery thousands of bodies were used as demonstrations, and the student body would gather around the dissecting table and study the methods as they were shown in the actual operation of a skilled surgeon. To-day with the use of a moving picture machine one operation may be produced and reproduced a thousand, yes, unlimited times. Even the operations upon living persons may be taken in all classes of disease, and the students may sit and see this operation actually performed, the teacher explaining each movement as it takes place before their eyes, and these pictures may be shown in a college or may be made available where no college exists, and hence a wider dissemination of knowledge may be obtained.

In a recent article on "Why Germany quit," published in McClure's Magazine this last year, a number of wonderful things are related, and among them was the use of the moving picture machine in the training of our troops. The writer explained that had the old methods of training troops prevailed we could never have brought the war to a close when we did. But the moving picture machine was brought into use. The Government had a trained body of troops at West Point Military Academy. This body of trained troops went through all of the maneuvers of battle before a moving picture machine, and these films were simultaneously shown in every cantonment in the country, and thus thousands of troops were being shown how to go into battle, how to handle their guns, how to throw the bombs, how to use the bayonet, how to dig their trenches and all the work of war. The result of this was that all Europe stood astonished at the efficiency of our troops, raw men taken from the shops, from the farms, and from all vocations and avocations of life, and made into an efficient fighting machine that astonished military men everywhere.

If the moving picture machine has been made an instrument for evil more than good it is because we have slept upon our rights, and allowed the forces of evil to outstrip us in the race. But we have been so afraid that we would desecrate God's house by the introduction of some material things, or the use of some worldly methods, that we have failed in many instances in carrying our work on to a successful conclusion, and yet there is hardly a truth taught in the Bible but it is brought forcibly to the mind by the use of some material thing as an example, or by the use of parables.

I do not count it a step backward to avail ourselves of this wonderful invention, but I believe the forces for good should take hold of it and dedicate it to the service of the Lord, and the dissemination of good, of truth.

The Church's Duty to the Movies

BY MRS. A. MCKENZIE

The Literary Digest of February 21 contains an article headed, "The church's duty to the movies." I will quote a part:

"The motion picture either can be made of assistance to the church and used as a vehicle for religious, educational, and diversional propaganda, or it may be left as an opposing weapon for satanic mischief. . . . As the case stands now, the motion picture is regarded by some church papers in this country and abroad as a more potent influence for evil than for good. But these same papers agree that the church, as she did in the first days of the stage, can, and should, have her share in managing the more modern amusement.

"Coordination by government control and the church are suggested, thus eliminating immoral, and introducing educational and elevating pictures."

The Reverend Ben Clifford Gray Twombly, D. D., writing in the New York Churchman says, "It is the church which must be the leader in the fight. No organization can arouse public opinion so thoroughly and efficiently and quickly as the Christian church if it will."

Some of us can recall the time when public opinion was opposed to having even an organ in public worship, and today in our beautiful song service, many kinds of musical instruments are used. Then why not elevate the movies and make them educational?

Purify them and make a fight for the purity of our American youth, and the purity of American homes, for it is a fight of no small importance, this fight for purity and cleanliness of morals.

The London Guardian, an organ of the Church of England regards this an opportunity for the church. It says:

"The film may educate and elevate, or it may vulgarize and debase. Already it has done too much of the latter."

Mr. Gray also suggests that he would have a state board of censorship. There are four States having such boards, and this would set an example for many more.

There is an organization afoot having for its purpose the stifling of governmental supervision, which proposes to control Canada if they succeed. "At present the people in every province of Canada are saying through their government what they will and what they will not see in their places of amusement."

In speaking of the church, the London Guardian has this to say: "There is little for good or ill that it cannot teach, and to put it plainly the church has no more right to neglect this means of teaching direct or indirect, than it has to neglect the more immediately obvious methods which it employs in its services. The church is the greatest of teachers and propagandists or it is nothing, and here is a method of propaganda at once effective and alluring."

We can stand still if we choose, but we will be left behind if we do, and the world with its progressive movements will pass swiftly along. The door of opportunity is open. The hour has struck. What are we going to do with it?

Millerand, the French premier, has assured the Zionist organization among the Jews that the government is favorable to the establishment of a Jewish national home in the Holy Land.

Talk About Your Neighbor

BY C. J. SPURLOCK

When you have anything good to say, say it about your neighbor.

Let us see what the Bible and Book of Mormon say about it. In Luke 24:17, 18, 19, it says two men were talking about Jesus. As they talked about him Jesus, himself appeared and asked them who they were talking about and they replied as follows: "Jesus of Nazareth, who was a prophet mighty in word and deed, how the chief priests delivered him to be condemned to death." Nothing wrong about that as they not only talked about Jesus to his back but to his face as well. Some one talked about Job and said: "There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job and that man was perfect and upright and one that feared God and eschewed evil." Surely then Job was talked about. Some one also spoke about David and said he was a man after God's own heart. Luke talked about Cornelius, a nonmember of the church and said of him. "There was a man in Cesarea, a devout man, one that feareth God with all his house." These examples of people talking about their neighbors are found in the Bible, to say nothing of the Book of Mormon. (See Alma 21.) "Moroni was a man that did not delight in bloodshed, whose soul did delight in the liberty and the freedom of his country. His heart did not glory in the sheeding of blood, yea; but in keeping the commandments of God."

If all men had been like Moroni, the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever. As such examples are found in the Bible and the Book of Mormon may we not practice the same now and talk about Saints now living and say about Frederick M. Smith that he is to the church of Christ on earth, what Alma was in his day—high priest over the church of God? We sometimes call him head of the church, simply meaning that he is the high priest over it or our earthly leader. The church must have a head, as Paul said: "As the man is head of the wife, so is Christ head of the church. Each living woman has at least two heads. First she has her own head, and second her husband, making two. So it is with the church. Aside from the earthly leaders there is Christ, also. But why not talk about others. Apostle Griffiths is a noble man, wise in his work as president of the twelve. Our patriarch I. N. White—such a noble man. To see him is to love him. And there is T. C. Kelley, my next-door neighbor, who labors so faithfully in the field as missionary, leaving his noble wife who cares well for the home in his absence. Some one may say: "Oh you are all speaking well of your neighbor. Of course; why not? Roman Catholics and Protestants, even infidels, know it is wrong to speak evil of our neighbors, to say nothing of Latter Day Saints.

Let no one therefore speak evil of his brother, but talk in love, let each esteem his brother as himself.

OUR PUBLICATIONS

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR APRIL

This popular young people's monthly comes out this time in a centennial number, commemorating the hundredth anniversary of the vision given to the young lad, Joseph Smith, who in his fifteenth year called upon God to receive the wisdom he lacked.

There are a few specially appropriate articles on this subject, and a number of others of special value to all classes of readers.

There are thirteen illustrations, most of them never before published, including a late full-length picture of Sister Iva L. Koshiway, full-blood Otoe Indian maiden, at Red Rock, Oklahoma, taken from a photograph by Frederick M. Smith on his late trip.

"Through the Turkish guard," is an account of how our missionaries got out of Palestine after the breaking out of the war in 1914. It is a story that it was not safe to tell during the war, lest in some way the Turks get hold of it and cause personal trouble. The "woman in the case" was the heroine.

The recent picture of Sister Floyd and Rees, in the peasant costume of Palestine is interesting and valuable.

The words and music of "His wonderful love," by Elder A. B. Phillips, is another worth-while contribution to the music Autumn Leaves is presenting to its readers this year. It is one of a series which should be greatly appreciated by our musicians.

The second article by the Class of 1920, of the Independence Sanitarium is interesting, and illustrated with photographs.

"Reminiscences of the South Sea Island Mission," is an illustrated article by Elder J. W. Peterson, and is a graphic account of some of the experiences had in that far-off clime as a missionary, yet it is told in such a way that one almost feels he would like to go through it himself, since the response from the simple-hearted natives is so wholesome.

"The church from Christ's day to ours," is a simple historical account of the church and its persecutions by Ida M. Post, one of our very young sisters who for the first time appears in Autumn Leaves.

"A legend of Solomon Valley," is a striking account, told by one of our brethren from Kansas.

"How to get a position and keep it," is a matter of concern to many of our young people, and the extensive book review on this subject in this issue will be of great value to those who really care to advance in life.

These are but a few of the many interesting things one's eye picks up in running through this magazine, which is an altogether pleasing number that should be universally read among our people. The subscription price is $1.75 a year in advance.

APRIL JOURNAL OF HISTORY

"Autobiography of Henry A. Stebbins" will be found in the April Journal of History. His memoirs have long been expected by Saints who have learned to love him and the demand for the April Journal will no doubt be great upon this account.

The April issue will also contain a biographical index of all material effecting Latter Day Saints which has appeared in the Times and Seasons, SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Journal of History, and Church History. We believe this index as a reference will at times be invaluable.

Besides these articles there is a continuation of the "Offi-

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Will You Be There?

Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary: The time is drawing near for our annual convention. I doubt not that many are making the necessary preparations for home-leaving, which usually involves no small amount of planning.

I should like to know how many boys and girls and husbands are helping in the scheme to send mother to the Woman's Auxiliary Convention. Mother, whose hands are never idle—whose heart never fails to respond to the calls of her household—will she be able to renew her strength and refresh her spirit by mingling with other mothers of her precious faith?

Suppose we have been able to make the decision: "I am going," what next? Why, "What will I wear?" We are looking over our wardrobes and saying, "Will this do service once more?" "Can this be made over?" or, "I must have a new suit, some new blouses, a silk dress, a new hat, high and low shoes," etc.

This reminds me of two members of the executive committee who are making their own hats, of another member who writes that her suit has done service, for years and her thin coat is in its "dotage," and protests at the skyward tendency of prices.

Pardon the personal reference to the fact that the writer has worn a black serge and silk dress to four General Conferences, and it would have been five, but unfortunately it was left out one year. Now and then the silk portions have been replaced by new. To be sure, of late years it has served as an "alternate." When on its last visit to Sister — for renewal, prior to leaving town for a few days imagine the surprise to receive a telephone message thus: "Did you know how worn that dress is and that it may fall to pieces?" Assuring her that it must be a mistake, she went on with the repair which proved entirely satisfactory.

cial statements of Joseph Smith." This issue contains his views on the much-discussed subject of "common consent."

"Use and abuses of authority," and just and unjust criticism. There is also a continuation of the "Memoirs of John Shields" and of the article on "Mormon Troubles in Missouri" by Rollin J. Britton.

The subscription price is $1.50 a year published quarterly.

CENTENNIAL NUMBER OF SAINTS' HERALD

The issue for April 7, HERALD according to present plans, will be devoted almost exclusively to a special commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the first vision by Joseph Smith.

The condition of the religious world at that time, with the developments to the present, in the fields of religion, education, etc., will all be treated by some of our best writers, and the result is bound to be pleasing.

Following this number, throughout the year, there will appear occasional articles on various phases of the general subject, informing and inspiring the Saints with the progress we have made and should make.

THE HERALD DURING GENERAL CONFERENCE

The weekly issues of the HERALD during the sessions of the coming conference and conventions will carry a full report of not only the business done, but a general survey of the whole series of meetings and comment on various developments. It will carry in detail a considerable number of the reports to the conference, which furnish a basis for most of the legislation enacted.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

At a time when the Nephites enjoyed their greatest prosperity and spiritually it was written of the women, "they were neat and comely." Let us strive for this in our dress, being assured that more than this is not required.

The convention this year has been prepared with the thoughts of rendering real help to you, you, who live in the small towns—in rural districts—in the cities—you who have struggled with problems to keep the woman's work alive, you who have not been understood! We want to help you if you will let us know your need. How much do you want our help? Are you interested enough to come out to an early morning meeting, at 8.15 or 8.30? That is the only time that now seems available for our problems meetings. Please be thinking about the great objects of the convention, which are not for personal pleasure alone, but for instruction, unanimity of purpose, uniformity of action. We go to give and to receive, to get acquainted with each other, to take a little of Zion back with us and to leave a great deal there. We go to learn what we can do with what we know, to know what we may learn that we can do.

To obtain the help that is afforded by such commingling, we sincerely trust that all will make an effort to attend the problems meetings. Bring a little enthusiasm with you and you will take a great deal away.

All convention and conference guests are invited to the Woman's Building, our headquarters. You will find a matron to receive you, rest rooms for your comfort, a bureau of information for your convenience, a register to find your friends.

Let's all join in, "Meet me there."

MRS. D. J. KRAHL.

Our "Needs and Just Wants"

What We Need

- More enthusiasm.
- Women who will qualify.
- Monitors for Oriole Girls.
- Qualified women to teach our courses.
- One or more classes in every branch.
- An article from you in these columns.
- Your serious consideration of this work.
- Specialists along lines of women's work.
- Your talent to assist in carrying on our work.
- Your faithfulness when things look discouraging.
- A wider acquaintance with the women of the church.

What We Want

- A slogan.
- An increased membership.
- An original song pertaining to our work
- Every girl in the church an Oriole or Temple Builder.
- An organization—progressive, cooperative, dependable.
- The largest attendance at General Convention we have had.
- If you can give, we need you; if you cannot give, you need us!

MRS. D. J. KRAHL.

"Come Up Higher!"

The Independence Stake Woman's Auxiliary is composed of thirty societies and circles, whose officers compose a council known as The Woman's Auxiliary Council, and is the directing head of the woman's organized activities in the stake. This council, of which the organizer is the president, meets monthly for business, consultation, study, and parliamentary drill.

Efforts are being made to form organizations of women in each group in the stake, with the object of enlisting every woman and girl, in study and preparation for larger service. Some societies are accomplishing much, while others are conservative in effort and results.

If space would permit we would like to report the actual work done by some of these groups. Briefly we would mention "relief and service," in caring for the sick, assisting the over-burdened mother, collecting and making over clothing for the needy, visiting and cheering the discouraged (trying to show them that "some one really cares,") uplifting the fallen and wayward, occasional social seasons, creating and fostering sociability and friendliness. These activities have engrossed the attention of many of our good sisters, some of whom have adopted the motto: "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth."

Some circles and classes are studying earnestly in the interest of home, and the welfare of children. Others take up some of the various phases of social work and service.

Our aim is to work in harmony with stake and group church officers, that we may be of real assistance in Zion's cause. We wish to purify our lives, and our homes, and emit the light of truth by example as well as precept.

When the promised leaflet lessons are provided by the general society, we are planning a way to place them in the hands of every woman, with the hope of a large concerted effort in study, in the interests of the homes and the childhood and the membership of Zion.

Many problems confront us, some proving difficult of solution. No doubt many more will come, but we hope to meet them all triumphantly. The thought of bearing a special responsibility brings a feeling of humility. We sense the great need of superior wisdom—that wisdom born of the spirit of inspiration.

The greatest needs we have are more confidence, unity, and cooperation. We need more constructive, and no destructive, criticism. When our homes and children reach the heights to which our ideals beckon, as parents we must have already attained to the pleadings of the Spirit: "Come up higher, O ye, my people!" May we reach those heights!

Do You Know

That one hundred dozen leaflets in the new study courses were sent out the first month after their announcement in these columns?

That the Holden Stake Woman's Auxiliary is the first, of which we have learned, to receive a budget for expenses of the organizer?

That Sister Rosa Tier of London, Canada, has been appointed matron of the Woman's Building in Independence?

That we want you to read again the second article in the Woman's Auxiliary Department of the SAINTS' HERALD, of March 3?

Organization

This seems to be a day of organization in every line, for in union of the right kind, there is great, and far-reaching strength. This is why we women of the Holden Stake are trying to advance our organization into active and efficient work. So much has been said lately on this subject, that some people seem to think the very word is possessed of magic power. This is unfortunate, for organization as applied to club work, or anything else, means only a common-sense division of duties and responsibilities, and then hard work by every unit. Organization is the harness which hitches up available power to heavy loads.

It is doubtful if any other secular organization surpasses in efficiency and size, the Great Federation of Women's Clubs, which is, after all, merely a linking together of clubs of all kinds and purposes, to do such things as appeal to all womanhood. In every locality whether it be rural four corners, or the heart of a big city, there is work which women can and should do. It is quite difficult to accomplish much by individual effort, but many things become comparatively easy when attacked by united forces.

Nothing illuminates more searchingly the character of a state than the methods it utilizes in the upbringing of its young. The same is true of the church. The progress which any nation makes, or fails to make, is faithfully recorded in the history of the rearing of its children. The conditions under which our children are nourished, trained, and inducted into the responsibilities of maturity, compose the indisputable realities of every social order. Likewise the manner in which our children are nurtured in truth and light, is perhaps the best measure of the progress of our church.

The human saving science has not kept pace with the other sciences. We have gathered but a very few facts about eugenics, about the physiology of labor, and about the factors affecting the growth of children. These things are of prime importance for our prosperity and happiness. In our museums are stressed sculpture, painting, and the like—things not nearly so necessary, so vital and useful as the knowledge of humanity itself. It would seem that instead of doing the urgent task first, man has always preferred to begin with the less important.

This is bad enough, but here comes the second point—the utilization of science has not kept pace with its advance. For instance, we know perhaps quite a bit about this human machine of ours, but are we using the knowledge we have acquired? We know with the science the medical men have, we could prevent half the death rate every year. Yet do we prevent these deaths? Will we ever reach the point where we will really govern ourselves, and be able to establish Zion, unless we make our schools and all church activities constructive as well as instructive? The doctrine of the church is very valuable and necessary, but before our children can grasp the fullness of it, there must be a building up of greater human and civic efficiency.

Take for instance, public health. We are told in order to prevent disease we must have a well-balanced ration of food, a comfortable home, and a proper amount of rest. Yet, we are not told, in connection, how to provide these things. It seems to me the greatest public health measure we can introduce would be a minimum wage law—that laborers need never toil hopelessly or in a manner detrimental to their health.

If we were all living on a stewardship basis, would it not be possible for all of us to have well-equipped homes in which to rear our children? It is true, many now have such homes, but think of the many who have only the bare necessities of life! In the establishing of Zion, there seems to be a sort of No-Man's-Land, that we have not been able to conquer as yet. This embraces proper housing, community work and service in its fullness, and, last but not least, to "love thy neighbor as thyself." Here is a wide field for labor, and yet, it is a field which when plowed, seeded and properly cared for will give rich crops in return—as rich as any the church has ever reaped. It will be the solving of the financial and social questions pertaining to the redemption of Zion.

Can we, as women, help to get this field ready for harvest? What is being done in your branch for the betterment of the home life of the Saints?

Sometimes, as mothers, our tasks seem very difficult; but when the labor of the day is done, and we go to our heavenly Father for comfort and strength, let us, as one body of mothers, unite in this prayer:

They are asleep, O Lord. We are tired, and we want the hush and quiet of a half hour with thee. We want to bathe our souls in the Infinite, as workers, covered with dust and sweat, plunge into the sea! Let our hot hearts feel thy cool vastness, our muddy minds lose themselves in thy crystal wisdom. Let our bruised love be healed in the waters of thy love, so pure, so calm, so deep! We could not bear to be mothers another day, if we thought we would be called to account for all our mistakes. We could never seek thee, did we not feel thee to be as forbearing and love-blind as we. But because our own children never come to us without our hearts leaping to meet them, so we have learned to be very bold toward our Father which is in heaven. We feel we are all faults. Our very love trips up our wisdom, and our care breeds worry, and our sense of expediency makes us sometimes disloyal to the truth. One must be very great and very

Two Weeks Among the Lamanites

Apostle Griffiths tells of his first trip among the Indians of Oklahoma.

By request of the president of the church, the writer in company with Brother U. W. Greene, visited many of the Indians in the State of Oklahoma. Doubtless many of the Saints would like to know what impression the Indian made upon us. I will herewith give you some of my observations and permit Brother Greene to write of his own impressions.

Having previously arranged with Brother Edward Rannie, president of the district to attend their district conference, we accordingly spent two days with the Saints in the city of Oklahoma City and we were given a grand reception by the officers and Saints that were present, and we were blessed in our endeavors to instruct the Saints in their duties to each other and to God. On Monday morning following the conference, Brother Hubert Case took us under his wing and conducted us to the Indian reservation. On the way to Calumet the writer stopped off at El Reno and preached that night to an interested audience, Brethren Greene and Case going on to Brother Sanders's branch. The next day I joined them, and together we went to Kingfisher. At this point Brother Case had arranged with the Indians for a big meeting, and on the following day we met at the house of Brother Reuben Taylor where we held our first service with the Indians.

Not having made the Indian question a study in the past, and neither having been permitted to associate with them in any sense, my curiosity was very much aroused and as a natural consequence I was thoroughly observant of their ways and customs for the purpose of discerning as to whether they really possessed religious propensities. Hence I decided that the only way by which I could learn their true characteristics was to remain and mingle with them for a time. So I visited with and conversed with this group, the Cheyenne, for about a week; preaching every day with the exception of one. In our first meeting Brethren Greene and Case were present, and on the next day they left to visit the Iowas and Otoes. The first time that I was called upon to address these Indians I was given to understand, by the Spirit of inspiration, which satisfied me, that the Indians were acceptable to our heavenly Father, and that the time had arrived when the leading church authorities should take a more intense interest in their welfare and put forth a greater and a more systematic effort to bring the Lamanites to a knowledge of the true gospel of Jesus Christ, and that if we did send ministers among them that the Lord would abundantly bless their efforts and that hundreds upon hundreds of those good to be a perfect mother. No one short of God himself could be entirely equal to it; but our love is great, and loving them, and thee, we climb beside thy seat. Teach us thine own wondrous skill and indirection, so that we may learn to wait, and suffer, and by long wisdom to circumvent. We know it is no avail to tell them fair words we do not live. Their little eyes are sharp and they see our souls, and copy them! Therefore make us good—good in our deepest, most hidden purposes, good in our very desires. Make us all we want them to be—strong, and pure, and true, and great-hearted. Save us from the irritation of little things. Give us the long vision, the sense of perspective, so that we may rightly judge between essentials and nonessentials. Let us be real mothers to our children, mending their souls and their fancies, helping to weave their dreams as well as caring for their precious bodies. Help us to learn wisdom from their dear humanities, the secret of trust in thee from their great trust in us. Keep them from harm, and let them grow up sound and sweet and unspoiled, and may they always love us!

MRS. ELIZABETH ROSS,

people would embrace the gospel and become a great power for good in his hands prior to the coming of our Lord and even assist in building up Zion. I discovered that there are some very bright and intellectual people among them. The most of their young people are well educated and speak good English. Many of them have good farms, up-to-date homes and barns and are very industrious, of course, they have some among them who are indolent and indifferent to their own welfare. However, I am confident that under proper instructions by our men and women (because the women can do as much good as the men among them) that in process of time the Indians can be made as the Lord has decreed, a useful and a delightful people. They are already prepared in that they believe in all things common, never suffer any of their people to starve. So long as the Indian has anything he is willing to divide with his brother Indian. The time is coming when all that dwell in Zion must possess that same spirit.

One prominent Indian told me that he had heard that our church believed in the doctrine of having all things common and stated that from what he had observed that it only applied to the white people. For instance he said that one of the Indian elders had been appointed to labor among them, and he was only allowed twenty dollars a month, and he had a wife and two boys to be provided for out of that amount, while the white missionary was allowed twice or three times that amount for the same size family. His view was that the Indian was being left to "root hog, or die." If any of our people have an idea that these people are novices they are making a sad mistake. I was surprised at times at the questions they propounded to me about the policies of our church. I learned that some of them are well informed in our church doctrine, both men and women. They also exhibited great faith in the ordinance of healing. One day we administered to a number of sick people, some of whom were very ill. The next day they were at meeting and apparently well. One sister among them had a cancer that the doctor pronounced incurable and she had been given up to die. She was administered to and was healed. Brother Philip Cook was our interpreter during my stay among the Indians around Kingfisher and, by the way, he is up-to-date as an interpreter and well informed. That I know from many chats I had with him on church doctrine. He is an elder, and should be continued as a missionary, and associated with him should be John Bull, who is also a very capable Lamanite. The wives of these two men are intellectual women and speak splendid English and should accompany their husbands in their missionary work.

At this point we met our grand old brother, Brother Reuben Taylor who is also an elder and is looked upon as a spiritual father by the Indians, beloved by all who know him. To them he is a patriarch. He surely wields a wonderful influence for good among his people, and by reason of this fact can accomplish more good among his fellow Lamanites than most Indians can. As an evidence of the respect that the Indians have for him they have honored him by sending him to Washington, District of Columbia, as their representative, along with other prominent Indians. He has had interviews with President Cleveland and Wilson and possibly others. This brother should, by all means, be appointed to a mission and be supported like other missionaries.

Brother Hubert Case and myself visited another group of Indians at Calumet. It was a wonderful gathering of Indians: old, middle aged, and young were present, and it was a very successful meeting. The brother at whose place we held this service was very wealthy; his home, barns and surroundings modern in every respect. He had ninety-five acres of wheat alone. Many other Indians, present on this occasion, were equally wealthy, possessing as much and perhaps even more material wealth than the brother mentioned. The land that they own is considered to be the richest in the State of Oklahoma. Brother and Sister Sanders who lived near them has performed much labor among them and are held in high esteem by them. An Indian interpreted for us who is not a member of the church, but is one of the brightest Indians in that part of the country and is favorable to our work. It is simply a question of time until he becomes one of us.

On the Sunday that I spent near Kingfisher I consecrated their new church, which is built on the wigwam plan. The building is round, with just one seat running around the sides, the majority of the audience preferring to sit on the ground in the center. From Oklahoma City Brother Case and I in company with Brother Keuffer and wife in their big sedan visited Red Rock where the Otoe reservation is located. However we were too late for the meeting that was held by the leading men of the tribe; nevertheless we had a good visit with the chief and his family. They showed us every kindness. This chief has a fine grove on his place near the river and is very anxious that the two districts of our church that join there should unite in a joint reunion in his grove, and that he was willing to guarantee that hundreds of Indians from the surrounding country would meet with us there in our meetings. We called on another family of Indians a few miles from there who are very fine people and well-to-do. The Indians of this section are very anxious for our Great Chief, (Frederick M. Smith) to meet with them during the reunion.

President Smith is very highly respected by those people. They consider him one of the Indians' best friends. Brethren Yates and Case have performed good work among them, and their efforts in their behalf are highly appreciated.

I am sure that we have the key to the Indian situation. The Book of Mormon is the opening wedge and will be the means by which thousands of those people will come to a knowledge of God and the work of redemption. You claim their attention immediately when you refer them to the Book of Mormon history. One of the Indians told me that the "Great Spirit" brought some of their forefathers across the sea, therefore we have the advantage of all other denominations, in the converting of the Indians of to-day, and it stands the church in hand to avail themselves of the golden opportunity thus afforded us to get the gospel before them, it is said that "a stitch in time saves nine" now is the time to insert the stitch, and if we fail to do so the loss will be ours, and if we neglect to meet the situation the responsibility of neglect on our part will make us answerable to God in the day of accounts.

Personally I am in favor of sending a number of our most capable men and women to do missionary work among them this coming spring. We should not consider the monetary phase of this matter, because the money expended will bring ample returns and that within a short time, to say nothing of the spiritual good that will be accomplished by our sacrifice in their behalf. Therefore I am for the Indians, first, last, and all the time. God bless the Lamanites and all the efforts put forth in their behalf.

Your brother and well wisher in gospel bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Some Difficulties in the Swiss Mission

The following letter reveals some of the troubles Brethren Passman and Halb are experiencing in establishment of the work in Basel. They have put up a plucky fight and we hope they will be victorious.

I went to the police station on February 16 to have my permit renewed, and they asked, "Are you ready to leave?" I answered, "No."

"Why not?"

"My permit has not arrived to enter Palestine."

"When will it come?"

"I am sure I cannot tell."

Then he went into the office of the chief of police and when he returned said he hoped the next fourteen days would bring that permit, and so he amended it to read until February 29, 1920.

We called on the American consul, Mr. Holland, to-day, and he handed us a copy of the letter he wrote. I will copy it word for word:

February 13, 1920.

"MR. TSCHOFF, CHIEF DES KONTROLL BUREAU,
"BASEL.

"Sir: The following people have appeared at this office to obtain certain information for them: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Passman, Bates Interims, Bewilligung No. 919, American citizen residing at No. 13 Petersgasse, with permit to remain until February 15, 1920. Mr. and Mrs. Jacob G. Halb—Skeen, Kant Milchamt V. H. 1163, American citizen, residing at No. 23 Lichtstrasse, with permit to remain until February 29, 1920.

"These gentlemen represent the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. of Lamoni, Iowa, and are doing missionary work for that church in Basel. Mr. Passman and his wife expect to proceed to Palestine, Syria, as soon as their permit is received from the British Government and they are expecting this permit from day to day. Mr. Halb, however, expects to remain here permanently, representing his church. The church expects to organize permanently and keep one man and his family here. They are expecting papers to be received from Lamoni, Iowa, for that purpose very soon. They would like to know what objection there is to their remaining here and continuing their church missionary work?

"They have leased the partierre at No. 7 Rosshoffgasse for their meetings and have put an organ and some chairs in the room.

"They would like to explain to you or to the necessary authorities the principles of their religion and what they teach, as they believe the Basel authorities are under a wrong impression as to their doctrines.

"I shall appreciate your letting me have a reply at your earliest convenience. I regret that I am unable to give you this letter in German as has been my custom, but more than half of my office force is away on account of illness.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"PHILIP HOLLAND, American Consul."

Before the above date the American consul had done nothing for us, but now he remarked that we are stickers and he admires our pluck, and he is taking an interest in our needs and this is going to be a big help to us.

On February 12 we called at Doctor Obersteg's office and Mr. Buttner looked after our affairs in the absence of Doctor Obersteg and returned a gloomy report, viz, that the Regierungsrat had decided that they will not grant our church the right to become established here. To-day we called on Doctor Obersteg and he said if we can only get permits until the necessary papers arrive from America the church could be registered in two weeks' time, then they will be compelled to leave one family here to look after the work. Your cablegram received to-day came in handy. We interpret it to mean the papers are on the way. If the Regierungsrat interfere with the registration I believe we can beat them in a court trial because the constitution provides for freedom of worship, if it is not immoral. Doctor Obersteg is very optimistic.

I intended to remain here until our church was registered, even if I got my permit to enter Palestine, but I was pleased to receive your cable because it can be used to good advantage. Maybe the Lord is delaying the delivery of our permit until the legal end of our work in finished here, then I believe it will arrive.

Mr. Zimmer was baptized last Saturday by Brother Halb. The three of us went out near the German border in a river called the Visar. Just after the baptism I looked and saw the military police running like deer toward us. I wondered what was wrong. When they got near us they were breathless. There were four of them. They told us we were under arrest. I asked if you are not allowed to baptize in the river and the chief of the posten answered that we can explain at the posten (a military police headquarters in the woods). The chief gave orders to the other three to bring in the prisoners. On the way over I said I should think the police would be pleased if people took a bath, and they smiled (I never expected to see them smile.) At the posten they searched one of us and could see we were ministers. They told us we were violating a law by baptizing during the day. We are allowed to baptize after dark. I told the chief that we were here about four months and had not learned all the laws of Switzerland yet, so to be merciful. One of the officers could speak some English and we had a very friendly chat. The next time we baptize there we will notify this posten in advance and all will be well. We were not fined. I heard that the Utah Church baptized at night and I wondered why. Now I know the reason.

I trust that I may be able to write you before very many weeks are past that the church is registered and all is well.

Your brother of like faith,

HARRY PASSMAN.

BASEL, SWITZERLAND, 13 Petergasse.

Some Recent Missionary Experiences

Elder Macgregor relates the spectacular result of a dream.

One year ago as the campaign in Flint, Michigan was nearing its close, I had a peculiar dream. I saw myself in the city of Saint Thomas, Ontario, conducting the funeral obsequies of some person of huge proportions. The coffin was as big as a hearse and was lying out on the street ready for conveyance to the cemetery.

Needless to say I felt as if my services were wanted in Saint Thomas, and, as I thought, to conduct a funeral over some distinguished person.

Heeding the instruction, I departed for that place and unexpectedly to the branch reached there on a Saturday evening. After the usual felicitations were over, I picked up the evening paper and to my surprise read in big bold type that Reverend Patrick Dennison would deliver a lecture the following evening on the subject of "Mormonism Exposed."

Well, it didn't take me long to figure out whose funeral I was coming to, and my particular duties at that funeral.

True to the dream, the coming corpse was a big fellow; was holding the biggest audiences of any minister in town, officiating as the pastor of the Baptist Church.

Next day preparations were made for the burial. A scribe was commissioned to take down the parson's talk while the branch officers engaged the Columbia Theater for the all needful undertaking and post mortem examination. We proposed to give him decent burial befitting the bigness of our Baptist brother.

A great throng jammed the edifice where Patsy conducted his expose, while Columbia Theater was comfortably filled awaiting developments.

His stock in trade was the usual abuse—"Old Joe Smith," and "The Spalding Romance." And isn't it funny how often "Mormonism" has been exposed along this line, but the trouble is that the pesky little thing won't stay exposed, and so they go at it again.

Well, the fun was on. Dan and Pat were at it in deadly earnest. My opponent prepared long range work, where behind the pill box of his private pulpit he felt safer than out in the open. For our part we pressed the attack. We challenged him through the press and we defied him from rostrum. But Pat was not to be enticed from his cowardly retreat. In the meantime we continued our replies at the theater, and the whole city was talking it over. Nothing like a scrap to get people thinking and talking.

For three weeks the artillery thundered, when as suddenly as it commenced, the cannonade ceased. It happened on this wise. The minister was busy hurling his invectives before his usual audience, when upon nearing the close of his remarks, he fell in a heap, stricken down by a power he had not figured upon. Carried from the platform, it closed his ministerial career, and the story of what happened from this time on is told in a personal letter just received from Sister Bailey of Saint Thomas.

"February 17, 1920.

"Of course you remember Pastor Patrick Dennison here. You asked us to mark his career, and we have done so. The reverend gentleman collapsed in his pulpit at the close of a sermon on a Sunday evening and several of his congregation sat up with him all night for he was very sick with some affliction of the heart. After that he became a nervous wreck—so bad was he that his own members could not bear to see him come to their homes. He could not sit still one instant, and his hands and feet kept up a continual rat-a-tat on everything handy. It got so bad that he was given a long vacation—no stated time—in hopes he would recover. After several months spent in New Brunswick he returned and occupied his pulpit for several Sundays, when his wife took sick and died very suddenly, leaving a little girl of five years. He took her body to their former home in New Brunswick and stayed there another couple of months. He returned two weeks ago and resigned his position here and in his farewell sermon to his people said he was leaving the ministry entirely—he had no plans whatever for the future—as he felt like a ship without its compass—he knew not whither he was drifting. My friend the janitor tells me his mind seems to be affected and that he is not himself.

"Of course we do not glory in his downfall, for one cannot help but be sorry, but it is one more evidence to us, of the truth of the things you taught us."

And so it goes. When, oh, when, will humans learn that

"They who do fight against Zion
Will surely be smitten at last."

And now a word in reference to the campaign in Logan, Iowa, drawing to its close. We have had a splendid time, although the weather, the roads and influenza have vied with each other in their efforts to defeat our success.

Words fail me to express my admiration of the magnificent work rendered by Sister Ollie Derry and her responsive choir. Indeed no little part of our achievements must be attributed to their untiring efforts. We may also speak commendably of the branch as a whole, who under the leadership of Brother Frank Hill have done splendidly.

Logan is a good branch, comprised of strong people who will not hesitate to follow anywhere in a work of self-sacrifice and devotion.

Sister Rose Adams and her consort have departed our midst for Omaha and it is gratifying to note the excellent record they have left behind. Sister Rose is a cyclone on wheels, whose energies will be distinctly felt wherever she goes.

Eighteen have been baptized, many of whom are strong men of honor, whose incoming will make for a rejuvenated branch.

But better than all perhaps, is the splendid revival that has been had in all the branch. The best of feeling prevails and throughout the entire campaign not a discordant note was heard. Really it is a rare treat to be among such a big class of people.

The converts are genuine in their profession, too. One brother and his wife turned over $2,100 as tithing the other day, promising the balance of his obligations unto God—$800, in a few weeks.

In a few days I pass on to other parts, sensing already the sorrow of parting from such a humble people. But even thus it must be so—Go ye into the world and preach the gospel to all people.

LOGAN, IOWA.

Sincerely,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Saint Louis, Missouri

From the March issue of "The Branch Bulletin," issued by the Saints of Saint Louis, Missouri, Ralph W. Farrell, pastor.

The pastor thinks it is time for him to be heard from again, through the pages of the Bulletin. There is some misunderstanding which might be cleared away, in the mind of the unprejudiced.

Regarding "common consent." There is not a person in the church who believes in this doctrine more thoroughly than does the pastor. And he practices it to the fullest extent. No chief (or even little) legislation is introduced in this branch without first obtaining the "common consent" of the members of the branch. At comparatively every priesthood meeting the pastor urges the men to present their criticisms, suggestions, ideas for improvement, etc. And a free and full discussion is open to all. For anyone to even hint that the president of the branch uses coercion, is to insult and slander the man accused.

As to authority, or power, the pastor asks that every member of the branch sustain the act of their own voice and vote. He fully understands that it means a great deal to be a leader; he fully understands that it means a great deal to be a follower—and it seems to him that some of the biggest discontents have never learned to be either: and such are attempting to cause trouble in the Saint Louis Branch. But there is a law, and by it let all be judged.

There are people who would make of the pulpit a coward's paradise, and they would not hold up the glorious tradition of the West, "free and frank utterance of honest conviction." The pastor is not afraid of truth, neither is he afraid to utter truth, neither does he intend to do anything more or less. Truth is the only thing that will make us free.

It is really a tragedy (a favorite expression of your pastor) that persons who need the help of leadership most are those who welcome it the least. It always has been so. We have Noah and Moses, Jesus, Jacob, Samuel, Joseph. Why need history repeat itself so often? Why continual opposition? So far as the pastor is concerned he intends to move right forward discharging his duty as it is revealed to him. He anticipates no trouble except that which will come from persons who are not willing to learn their duty and do it. The really busy man—the one consistently working along the line of his calling—never stood in the way of advancement; never had time to attend to any business but his own.

The pastor speaks to all urging them to come on. We are going on. The man who lags behind will be lost from sight!

The New Church

The branch is nearing that day. The members will attend the last service in the hall and find themselves in the real place. How much of that building will we own when we enter it? Only so much as we have paid for. How much have you paid for your church? Says one: "I have paid all that I can spare." Says God: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Members of the priesthood will meet and arrange the initial program and submit it to the branch for sanction. Let all things be done decently and in order.

Building Fund Information

Our total assets including cash on hand, interest, Liberty bonds, Cheltenham property, amount to $16,443.54.

The Bishop has said he would make us a loan of twenty-five hundred dollars. When this amount is added to our assets we will have a total of $18,943.54 available.

Total indebtedness	$22,000.00
Available, including loan from Bishop.....	18,943.54
To be raised by April 15	3,056.46

This means we must raise 509 dollars each Sunday until April 15—six Sundays. We must each and every one share a portion of this opportunity. Decide now that you will sacrifice something and make your offering each week. How much will you pay toward next Sunday's $509.

One of our sisters who is employed every day and makes her own living, subscribed one hundred dollars two years ago; this she paid. Last Sunday she came and paid another hundred dollars in cash. The Lord has surely blessed this wonderful effort. Knowing the case we feel sure it required sacrifice. Let us each give a gift that will be of our first fruits.

The work on the new church is proceeding rapidly. The contract for slate roof repairing and the one for the tinning have been completed. The order for new lighting fixtures has been placed. The decorators have their work well under way and the carpenter contract has also been completed.

Brother Frank Moury donated all his time in his contract for carpenter work. Ivor Cook is surely fixing us a great lighting system; he has the help of William Radford. Charles Peat is the glazier and painter in charge of "bargain basement." Dad Dawson is right on the job seeing that the work of decoration receives the finest treatment. Joe Swift, Dave Archibald, John Wiley, Harry Burch, and Bill Cowlishaw are all working hard on the job. Before we have finished we are going to have a "Ladies' Night." Bring your hand-painted "buckets."

Going to England

I get much strength from reading the HERALD, especially the letters. It seems to me that the Saints are drawing nearer to each other by kindness and love extended especially to the bereaved and suffering. I realize that until the Saints become as one large family, Zion can never be redeemed.

I often wonder if we really do understand that little word of four letters—love—without which our works are unavailing. Love is more than respect, as we can easily respect a person, but could we as Saints willingly lay our life down to save our friend as Christ did? I'm afraid many of us could not. Love stops all idle gossiping and faultfinding, criticism of those holding an office, and above all, makes children of God.

I would like this letter to be noticed particularly by the Saints who are in England, as Brother Glenn Ingleright and I intend (God willing) to visit England about June or July, and we would like to get some of their addresses so that if possible, we can visit them while there.

We intend doing all we can to further the gospel work in England, and we would ask that all who may read this letter will pray that God will bless our efforts along this line, that we may be successful.

As no doubt many of you know, my home is in England, and I am anxious for my people to know the vast difference between our church and the Brighamite Church, as they seem to have an idea that I am a believer in polygamy, which I am not.

My prayers are ever for God's people, and for the furtherance of this pure gospel.

Northern California

The Northern California conference was held at Stockton and a splendid spirit was manifest through it all. A program was rendered on Friday evening, February 27 by the Religios and Sunday schools of the district, and was enjoyed by all. On Sunday the basement was welcome shelter from the rain, and was turned into a picnic ground; those who came a long ways brought their lunches and ate there. A great load seems to have been lifted from our minds, as everything went as smoothly as could be, and this being the first time Stockton has been hostess at a conference, we of course desired to have it one of the best. We now have the three smaller classes in Sunday school installed in the basement and have a sand table, small chairs and a blackboard for the little ones. Sister Mina Davison has been appointed superintendent. Our church has not been closed as yet on account of the influenza. It is much lighter this year than last. One or two of our members' families have suffered slightly because of it, but no deaths have occurred, for which we are very thankful.

Sending Supplies to Palestine

Just returning from Fall River, where I occupied in their pulpit last Sunday. Also saw to the packing and sending of their collected clothing for our people in Palestine. I have made it my business to see to the packing and mailing of the materials at Providence, New Bedford and Fall River. I contemplate going to Boston next week, and if they have not seen to their shipment I shall urge them to let me handle the job. Fall River certainly should be commended for their generosity in supplying materials. We packed nine eleven pound bags, and some of the shoes and clothing they gave were practically new, and if the members in Jerusalem had to buy them they could not get some of the articles for forty dollars a garment. Providence packed four burlap bags—the number they were asked to give—and most of their clothing was exceptionally good. New Bedford was the first to pack their "boxes." One brother contributed a pair of shoes that would cost at least twenty-five dollars in Syria.

I think that some statement should be sent to our people in other parts who contemplate sending clothing to our members in Palestine, in reference to the fact that there has been sufficient collected in the New England States for their disposition for the present time.

(From a letter to the Presidency H. A. Koehler, New Bedford Massachusetts.)

Eastern Iowa

The Eastern Iowa District conference convened at Muscatine on February 7 and 8. Owing to so much sickness the attendance was small. We had a good spiritual conference, and sorry that so many were kept away on account of sickness. The selecting of delegates and alternates was left with the district president. Those present of the delegates were instructed in case of division to cast a majority and minority vote.

CORA B. HART, Secretary.

The Spirit of Cooperation Increasing

Your visit to our recent conference has certainly borne fruit. The Saints over the district are awaking and taking hold as never before. The spirit of cooperation and loyalty is rapidly increasing, as well as the desire to gather to Zion and be of service to the church.

Brother Roy Chevillie just closed a successful series of meetings at Perry, baptized five and building up the work in general.

Your program of lectures to General Conference appointees looks mighty good. Are you going to have them printed so we who are engaged in local work, and are not permitted to attend can be benefited thereby? I am sure they would be very valuable to us.

(Excerpt from letter by H. H. Hand, president Des Moines District to President Smith.)

In the East

Another blizzard in this section [Attleboro, Massachusetts] last week, and it "is the straw that broke the camel's back." All the volunteer work of shovelers has gone to naught. Now the mayor is calling for men to turn out and shovel the railway tracks out again. Most all the roads are tied up completely now. I hope this storm is the last for the winter, as people are suffering for food and coal. There is a lot of sickness around, and the Saints have not escaped, but they have received blessings through prayer and administration.

We finished up a course of seven lectures Sunday night on the "Signs of the times and the second coming of Christ." A number of outsiders were interested in the subject, and attended each lecture, (when the weather would permit).

Now we have a brother who is lecturing in the Religio every Sunday night on church history. He is a young brother, a high school graduate and well qualified for this kind of work. Though frail in body, he has a fine mind, and seems to have a great influence with the young men. He is also a teacher in the branch.

I can say this branch is progressing nicely, although the evil force is trying its best to get in. You certainly need more than one watchman on the "towers" these days. I have tried to impress on the Saints that if they would only watch their own "Temple," it would not be necessary for the officers to spend so much time rocking the "church cradle," and trying to pacify the worrisome spiritual children. Their time should be used in preaching the gospel to those that know it not. We are not much different from the children of Israel.

(Letter from Elder E. B. Hull to the Presidency.)

Developing Local Workers

A district president writes: A short time ago I sent out a special blank to all branch presidents of this district asking for a complete list of all members of the priesthood. Up to the present time the returns are quite encouraging. I expect to be able to get every member of the priesthood of this district located and connected with the different quorums recently organized. Before very many days we expect to formulate plans which if carried out will increase the efficiency of our district force. However, before doing anything definite along this line, I wish to wait for developments during this General Conference. I am hopeful that your office will offer some encouragement along this line.

A majority of the local men we meet in our work, are woefully deficient in knowledge as well as in experience. Blunders are frequently made in the administration of local affairs which hinder the work. The most of these brethren are well meaning and seem anxious to learn. The president of the church certainly has the right idea. I see a new day of bright prospects dawning for "Latter-day Israel" if they will listen to the counsel of our present leader.

Like Bishop Bullard, I have felt encouraged in the thought that our heavenly Father is going to make the coming conference an important one for the advancement of his work, and I am looking for a high degree of unity and power in handling the problems we have to meet. We do not forget to pray for our brethren upon whom rests the burden and care of the work, that they may be under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit and his guidance in all their work. Brother Fred M.'s article in HERALD and Ensign of last week, reflects the weight of the responsibility he feels about the redemption of Zion, and should elicit a hearty response from the membership in doing its part to make Zion a blessed reality now. It is needed, very much."

(W. H. Garrett, Long Beach, California, March 8, 1920.)

"If I remember correctly I have always believed in a brief prayer in anointing, and especially since I saw your father decline to offer the concluding prayer after an elder had covered the whole ground in making his anointing prayer. Joseph said that was enough to answer the purpose.

"Of course if the sick one is in great danger and it is desired that every effort be made, also the Holy Spirit so leads, then each elder may offer a long prayer, but be sure that it is wise to do so. When the one anointing makes too long a prayer weariness results, and faith and hope are liable to become less instead of increasing by the service. I have witnessed such cases in my experience. Others have spoken the same."

C. E. Butterworth: "In anointing with oil in administering to the sick, as in solemnizing of any other gospel ordinance, the most important thing is that the administrator be in possession of the Holy Spirit, for if it directs there will be no mistakes made. However, it seems but proper that the prayer of anointing should be brief, very brief; in my opinion. The one who confirms the anointing should be left free to offer the burden of the prayer, if I may be permitted that form of speech. When the elder who anoints offers a long prayer the elder who is to confirm the anointing is apt to feel that his rights have been encroached upon, and that there is nothing left for him to do but to say, Amen.

"More than this, I very distinctly remember that your honored father while giving instruction to the ministers at one of our General Conferences said: 'In anointing the sick the prayer should be brief, the burden of the prayer being left for the one who offers the prayer of confirmation,' or words to that effect.

"The oil should be used in sufficient quantity that some of it may reach the parts anointed, and, indeed, a free use of the oil is best, in my judgment. The habit some elders have contracted of pouring a limited quantity of oil in one hand and with the fingers of the other hand, after they have been touched to the oil in the other hand, merely stroking the hair of the patient in such a way that it is not possible for any of the oil to even reach the scalp is not sufficient to fill the demands of the law, if I understand correctly. At such times I feel as though the anointing had not been properly done, and I feel embarrassed."

Heman C. Smith: "I will say that as a rule I think short prayers are preferable because just as effectual and less tiresome to the afflicted; but would not be in favor of establishing any set rules in regard to these things. A man must be left at liberty to use his own judgment in each case without being restricted as to time or language used or else his liberty will be affected. I think the elders should study to be as brief as possible, in harmony with the leadings of the Spirit."

J. A. Gillen: "I am of the opinion that a short prayer should accompany the anointing; in fact am not in favor of long prayers, in many instances, in confirmation.

"Many of the lengthy prayers are due no doubt to an intense desire upon the part of the officer to get en rapport with the mind of our heavenly Father and thereby represent him. My further opinion: That where occasion permits this should be done through silent pleading prior to the ceremonial ordinance and thereby obviating the necessity for long prayers, either in anointing or confirmation, and especially the latter."

Frederick A. Smith: "After several years experience along this line, I am prepared to say that we should discourage long prayers, either in administering the oil or the laying on hands in confirmation.

"The prayer should be short, to the point, and encouraging. I think we should take into consideration in administering to the sick, that this administration is for a special purpose—a special blessing—and confine ourselves to these special features, that of healing the individual at the present time.

"I cannot be too earnest in urging that long prayers be discouraged at this time, and that our prayers be confined to the special purpose to which we have been called to the bedside."

Representatives of thirty-four reservations of Indians in California recently adopted resolutions opposing the present agency control and desiring the same rights of citizenship as others.

Lecture Course at Independence to the General Ministry

The general ministry of the church assembled in Independence, Missouri, March 21, at the call of the First Presidency to attend a series of lectures bearing on the work of the ministry.

Independence has taken on the air of General Conference time, with its hundreds of visitors present and what with two lectures and a sermon at the church every day it is a busy course that the men are participants in.

In conjunction with the lecture series the Independence and Kansas City Stakes are conducting a big two weeks series of evangelistic services, and there will be speaking every night until Easter in all the local churches. An extensive advertising campaign is going on, and in addition to daily news advertisements, and posters in every available spot, a specially prepared tract is placed in every home in Independence every day. It is hoped to thoroughly acquaint the people of Independence and vicinity with the purposes, aims and ideals of our church.

Every preparation is going forward for the caring of the conference visitors. Extensive improvements are being made in the church in anticipation of a large attendance.

Conference comes on apace and on Sunday, April 4, a centennial program will be given. The centennial of the first vision of Joseph Smith will be an idea dominating all the programs of this General Conference. Just one hundred years ago the vision was given, out of which developed the restoration in this age.

Journal of History for April

The autobiography of Henry A. Stebbins will be found in the April Journal of History. His memoirs have long been expected by the Saints who have learned to love him and the demand for the April Journal will no doubt be great upon this account.

The April issue will also contain a biographical index of all material affecting Latter Day Saints which has appeared in the Times and Seasons, SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Journal of History and the Church History. We believe this index as a reference will at times be invaluable.

Besides these articles there is a continuation of the "Official Statements of Joseph Smith." This issue contains his views on the much-discussed subjects of "Common consent" and "Use and abuse of authority," also "Just and unjust criticism."

The "Memoirs of John Shields" which has interested so many and the article on "Mormon Troubles in Missouri" by Rollin J. Britten will help round out this quarter's issue of the Journal.

Tickets good for members of the church attending the conference or members of their families. Reduction applies if two hundred and fifty are present on certificate plan who pay going fares at seventy-five cents each or over.

R. S. SALLYARDS, Church Secretary,

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, March 19, 1920.

Conference Party

To all Saints who are contemplating attending the General Conference and who will pass through Chicago we wish to give notice that the Chicago and Alton Railroad will furnish special car to parties of twenty-five or more with first-class tickets or clergy fares from Chicago to Independence. If the Saints who are going will send your names, arrangements can be made here after four-day's notice for the securing of such private accommodations, we would like to have the names of all Saints who are intending to leave here, on April 5 for the conference. The train leaves at 6 p. m. and arrives at Independence in time for the opening session of the conference. Send all names and requests to H. P. W. Keir, 6639 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, Illinois, who will as soon as sufficient names have been presented make definite arrangements for a special car. The car can be secured for any date by two or three days' notice and the securing of the requisite number. Nothing can be done to secure party rates, and the only advantage will be the possessing of a private car from Chicago to Independence.—Ward L. Christy.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The allies have occupied Constantinople with the avowed purpose of defending Turkish rights and maintain the Sultan's authority. But one of the items in the proclamation issued contains this: "But if, God forbid, troubles develop and massacres occur, that decision probably will be modified." In the meantime conditions in Cilicia where Christians are being massacred by the hundreds and thousands are growing worse.

The Department of Agriculture announces that because of wide distribution of seed from an area in Louisiana affected with pink boll worm, there is danger of the cotton industry in the South being ruined. It is a serious situation and demanding urgent action, with a considerable appropriation on the part of Congress. The newly discovered infestations are in Cameron and Calcasieu Parishes, Louisiana, and Orange County, Texas, along the lower course of the Sabine River, near the Gulf of Mexico.

CHURCH NEWS

The community at Lamoni, Iowa, is rejoicing over the safe return of Brother Thomas T. Forbes who was reported in last week's issue as missing. The facts drawn from his statement and from his recent experiences are as follows: Some few weeks ago this man, during the epidemic of influenza, experienced a very severe cold, which from later consideration seems likely to have been an attack of the epidemic, though he did not take to his bed as he was advised by his wife to do. This illness left him quite weak in body, which condition, aggravated by considerable worry as to his wife's condition of health, and his work wrought heavily upon his mind. The anxiety and worry, the physical weakness, his weakened mentality resulting from the epidemic, which is by no means unusual, together brought about a temporary lapse of memory, or moral and intellectual comprehension. Starting out on foot to catch the southbound train at Togo with the expectation of meeting his wife at Albany, Missouri, who was returning from the Sanitarium, he missed the train at the junction. This disappointment was too much for his weakened condition, and he proceeded to Davis City, took the train and went to Des Moines and found work with a firm for whom he had formerly worked a number of years. Seeing the notice in the papers of his disappearance he recovered himself, determined to return to his family and his work, telegraphed from Des Moines on Thursday the 18th and returned the following day. Whatever conjectures may have been formed as to this strange incident, those nearest to this man and most intimate with his sterling character and worth do not impute to him the slightest conscious departure from that which is honorable and upright in the highest degree.

Any Saints in Mills, Fremont, Page or Montgomery counties, in Iowa, not connected with a Religio local, should write Mrs. Jessie Vance, Red Oak, Iowa, superintendent home department.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Lamoni, Iowa. The rendition by the choir of a hundred voices of Randel's wonderful oratorio, "Messiah," on the evening of the 21st, was a most excellent musical effort and well received. The church was packed, many standing. It was directed by Paul N. Craig. The soloists were Mrs. Bertha Burgess, soprano; Mrs. Frances Norris, contralto; L. Eugene Christy (of Independence); tenor; George Anway, tenor. They will give Haydn's "Creation" on the evening of the 23d, as a part of the community lyceum course. The services of the day were all record-breaking in attendance and interest, the Religio being a strong drawing card with its large classes teeming with animation. A number of the elders have already left for Independence, to attend the lectures to the priesthood.
