Lectures to the Ministry

As elsewhere indicated, the attendance is good, including several of the Quorum of Twelve, as members of that quorum had asked that this series of lectures be given prior to General Conference.

The interest is intense, as was shown in the opening session when the speaker said religion was an evolution, not that God changes, but he adapts his teachings to man's development.

Of course, there is a spiritual evolution in the case of the individual, as "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 John 3: 2.)

Also the Master told his disciples, he had much to say unto them but they could not bear it then.

Evolution is an unfolding of the divine character in man. We may grow in knowledge of the truth.

It is also clear God adapts his teaching methods to our capacity, as witness Israel at Sinai, and after.

But there appeared a strong objection to the idea that religion has evolved in the race from minor beginnings, as the gospel was taught to Adam, Abraham, and others.

The second lecture, on the existence of God, was very well received. Though the outline based an argument on the extreme idealistic philosophy that nothing exists out of thought, still he qualified this by Doctrine and Covenants 90, that matter and spirit are coeternal.

As the third and fourth lectures followed, on the nature of God and the trinity, favorable comments grew greatly in number. Elder Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake, and Church Historian had given the course of lectures the advantage of a favorable beginning.

This continued through the fifth lecture, on the attributes of God.

Wednesday afternoon, J. A. Koehler, formerly of Independence Stake Presidency, and now manager of the Herald Publishing House, continued by discussing the free agency of man, and free will as a characteristic of man, not of the animal creation. Thursday morning he spoke on free agency and its relation to human conduct.

Free discussion follow each lecture. It is not yet the school of the prophets, but it certainly is a school of the elders, and a big step in advance.

A heavy rain fell all day Wednesday and Thursday, March 24 and 25, but attendance at the lecture continued good.

The comments on the opening lectures by Elder Walter W. Smith were decidedly favorable. The subject was a difficult one, hence some objections. He met objections clearly and in a good spirit. The attention was of the closest. As one man expressed it, "Walter quite outdid himself. His lectures were fine from beginning to end."

The eighth and ninth lectures, beginning Thursday afternoon, should have been given by Elder John F. Garver on the Atonement. But in the absence of Elder Garver, President Elbert A. Smith delivered his lectures on the Gifts and Fruits of the Spirit and Elder Garver is to be present later. Despite the bad weather, the attendance was large, and the spirit of the meeting very good.

He presented the historical setting of the gifts in the church as Christ left it, in Book of Mormon times, in the restored church, and in the future church.

The gifts are:

1. Qualities of mind and soul, as wisdom, knowledge, and faith.
2. Miraculous gifts, as healing and working miracles.
3. In the realm of revelation, as prophecy, discerning spirits, tongues, and interpretation of tongues.

These gifts are subject to law, and the spirit of prophecy is subject to the prophet.

These gifts are given of God, not gained by excessive striving after. There are dangers as well as benefits in these gifts, and also danger of spurious manifestations of man or devil.

A gift is given, fruit must be worked for and developed. We have several lists, as Paul's (Galatians 5:22, 23), Peter's (2 Peter 1:5-7), Doctrine and Covenants 11:4. The life of Christ is the best exegesis.

The fruits are:

1. Christian humility, the quality that binds us to humanity.
2. Faith, the trait that binds us to God.
3. Hope—the simile of courage and optimism.
4. Charity—the pure love of God, the crowning virtue, the necessary accompaniment of all true sacrifice.

T. W. Williams from Toronto, G. H. Wixom, Myron McConley, who has been located in Hilo, Hawaii, George W. Robley, Sister and E. B. Hull from Massachusetts District, Philip Cook and others of the Indians are noted among those present. In fact men who have labored in every part of the world are in attendance, and the number steadily increases. The basement was well filled for President E. A. Smith's lectures.

Friday, the 26th, proved a fine day. President Elbert A. Smith is in charge of the lectures. All the office force from the Presidency's office are in attendance.

Some of E. A. Smith's Sayings

Hell is full of pessimists. If you are not planning to go there, why qualify for membership?

There is nothing that will separate a man from his flock quicker than the "big head."

If to your faith and virtue you add knowledge, it is a good thing; but an education without these is dangerous.

When a man becomes a living negative, he is of no further use to the church of God.

We are going to be judged by our doings, and not by our professings.

A crab apple tree has all the potential qualities of a Jonathan, but it doesn't produce the fruit.

If you are a pastor and don't love your congregation, you do not have to tell them. They know it. S. A. B.

Farm wages in New Jersey averaged in 1910 $19.50 per month, with board. In 1919 they were $46, an average increase of 150 per cent.

An Indian Paper

Wassaja, an Indian paper, published by Indians, makes it plain that the Indians want citizenship, rather than wardship. And why not? They certainly did their part in the recent war, yet had not the rights of citizenship, nor even of an alien, as they were wards of the nation.

Again, being raised as wards, or as infants would tend to make any man incompetent. In the 50's they were competent to attend to their own affairs, and make treaties. If those treaties are kept the Indian is satisfied.

The Indian has long had his own traditions and civilization. Naturally he wants to preserve the best of his own, and accept the best that the nation can give him.

Of course there are exceptions, as there are with every race and people—a few who choose the wrong course, and evil rather than good. But a race is not to be judged by such.

The Indian Bureau is a great advance over the previous persecution and warfare in the theory that the only good Indian was a dead Indian. But citizenship, capable men and women, should be our ideal. The recent years have fully disproved that old slander, as the Indian has proven himself again and again capable and ready to uphold the right.

Of course the purpose has been to protect the Indians from abuse and exploitation. But it seems strange when one cannot buy even a liberty loan bond without permission of Congress or the agent.

This is the special theme of this little paper under the motto: "Let my people go." S. A. B.

The Series of Evangelistic Services

The subjects used simultaneously by the preachers at the various churches in Independence the past week are as follows:

Sunday, March 21, "The necessity for a church."

Tuesday, March 23, "Necessity for a restoration."

Wednesday, March 24, "The restoration of the gospel."

Thursday, March 25, "Worship God."

Friday, March 26, "Obedience."

Sunday, March 28, "The Church of Jesus Christ—its organization."

Monday, March 29, "The Church of Jesus Christ—its doctrine."

Tuesday, March 30, "The Church of Jesus Christ—its practice."

Wednesday, March 31, "The Church of Jesus Christ—its blessings."

Thursday, April 1, "The Gathering and Zion."

Friday, April 2, "The Invitation."

Each day a new-four page leaflet is circulated, announcing the list of subjects and giving some information concerning the church and its policies.

At the Stone Church the speakers advertised were J. F. Curtis and U. W. Greene; At the Second Church, E. E. Long and J. W. Davis; at Walnut Park, Lee Quick and D. T. Williams; Enoch Hill, J. R. Grice and J. E. Yates; at Liberty Street Mission L. G. Holloway and E. J. Gleazer; at Central Church, Daniel Macgregor.

School Mortality

Iowa ranks very high in educational matters, in the number of colleges, and the large number who attend high schools and colleges. Iowa is a little inclined to boast, yet the fact remains that fifty per cent drop out by the time they reach the sixth grade. Seventy per cent of the boys and girls who enter the primary grade never graduate from the eighth grade. Sixty per cent of those entering high school will never graduate. Ninety per cent of the country children who enter the primary grade never reach high school. This would seem to indicate that about four per cent pass through high school. The average for the country is probably not over two and one half per cent.

W. L. Kuser, superintendent of the Iowa Training School for Boys adds: "Our job is to teach people different habits, to keep the boys in school longer. I hope to see the time come when every boy and girl capable of taking a high school education will be required to take one."

We may urge rightly that many gain their training in the world of work outside of the school room. That is quite true. Yet of the young men twenty-one to thirty-one years of age, it was found that ten per cent were not fit to fill any position in the United States Army in France. Another fifteen per cent were a bit higher and measured up to about eleven or twelve years of mental age. Seventy per cent of a million and a half of men examined were below high school intelligence.

This seems to check with the Iowa figures that seventy per cent do not graduate from the eighth grade. But when one considers that Iowa is much above the average, it still allows a small percentage who in the ten or fifteen years out of school gains the equivalent of the eighth grade and some of high school, for the simple reason that taking the country at large more than seventy per cent of the children do not finish the eighth grade.

These Government figures show that sixteen and one half per cent were of high school intelligence. Then there were nine per cent of college intelligence, and four and one half of very unusually intelligent men. From this very small percentage, eighty-five per cent of the officers were chosen.

These figures would clearly indicate that a much larger percentage could take high school and college work with profit, because the general average has been estimated at two and one half per cent who finish high school, and about one fifth to one quarter of one per cent finish college. Even if the highest percentage stated are used, five per cent for high school and one half of one per cent for college, it is apparent that a great many have advanced into these classes without having the school advantages. On the other hand, it is undoubtedly true that seventy per cent are not defectives, but only lack an opportunity to develop.

Doctor Witte of the state hospital for the insane, Clarinda, Iowa, states that he can thoroughly believe that ten to fifteen per cent have defective organizations, whereby they cannot raise themselves, no matter what their opportunity may be, above the level of their tribe. He continues: "But I do believe all others are capable of development."

They should have that opportunity.

Olive Oil

It is an old story to our readers that olive oil has more important uses than as a salad dressing. In fact, probably very few use it in that way. It is true that it possesses marked food value, and is excellent in the case of wasting diseases or anemia. In such cases patients have been urged to take a tablespoon three times a day, if not oftener. It is equal if not superior to cod liver oil for use after lung diseases and other wasting diseases.

It has been used with excellent results as a dressing in case of wounds, especially after the use of a good antiseptic. Those who find it difficult to take directly may find it palatable mixed with fruit juice. It is also used advantageously as a massage after a hot bath. It should be kept in a cool, dark place and kept scrupulously clean.

Anointing with oil means rather more than moistening a small place on the top of the head. We have known the sick to be saved for further service, when it seemed their case was hopeless, by being given, first an alcohol bath, and then a thorough rubbing with olive oil several times a day. It is rather surprising how much is absorbed in this way, when it is needed.

Its use is also advised by beauty specialists for use on the hands after dishwashing, and in the hair when it is too dry. But its medical use is that which now appeals to us. It may be used both internally and externally in the case of a sore throat, and may be used as a liniment in case of stiff joints.

In many forms of disease it may be used with marked advantage in anointing with oil more than just the head, and this anointing is usually best done by those of the family, and is best done with gentle rubbing.

The Kansas Agricultural College has announced that beginning April 1 it will furnish the weather forecasts to every Kansas farmer by wireless telegraph. The farmer will be required to install an amateur wireless set with which to receive the forecast. These sets cost about $35 each and can be operated by any person. They cannot be used for sending messages for any considerable distances but they will receive the powerful messages of the big plants. The forecasts are to be sent out at 9.55 each morning under a standard code and on the wave length of 375 meters, short enough for any amateur set to take. This wave length is also long enough and the college plant is powerful enough so that the message will reach every point in the State. The forecast will be sent at the rate of 18 words a minute and then repeated at 10 words a minute. The service is to be given free to every farmer, high school, or to any other person or institution having a wireless set. The high schools in the small communities are to distribute the forecast to the banks and stores and to the telephone companies. The knowledge of the probable weather is of considerable importance to farmers during the harvest and haying season, and to stockmen during the winter, for they can make preparations for feeding and sheltering stock upon knowing of an approaching storm.—Christian Science Monitor.

The American Express Company is planning an airplane express service between several large cities, especially New York and Chicago. It is expected that a nine-hour schedule between these places will be maintained, cutting in two the present time required to carry express between the places on the fastest trains. It is hoped to get it into operation within the year.

As we have explained in recent announcements, some of the features of this number are simply invaluable to a studious Saint. The biographical index of all our church periodicals itself is worth more than the price of a year's subscription, but the statements of Joseph Smith on common consent and similar topics are included, as well as the autobiography of Henry A. Annual Financial Report of Presiding Bishop

In submitting this report it is assumed that bare figures as to the financial condition of the church are not all that is desired. Besides the making of certain deductions from the receipts and disbursements so as to show the present trend, the work performed during the past year is set forth at some length, and an outline of method to be employed in the future to discharge the various obligations imposed is given:

The subjoined summarized report covers only the period from January 1, 1919, to June 30, 1919, inclusive. This was occasioned by the action of the 1919 General Conference changing the last day of the fiscal year from December 31, to June 30.

The following is a statement of receipts and expenditures for the calendar year 1919 compared with the years—1918 and 1914:

RECEIPTS
Tithes and offerings	$170,048.58	$425,941.33	$464,266.11
Special offerings	22,023.42	41,885.53	32,811.71
S. S. Christmas offerings	9,947.73	71,564.29	78,639.94
EXPENDITURES FROM GENERAL FUND
	1914	1918	1919
Elders' families	$111,705.50	$168,679.11	$206,383.61
Elders' expenses	23,017.43	43,163.74	44,600.20
General administration (including Presidency, Bishops, and other Office expense, etc.)	9,166.71	16,997.99	28,508.82
General expense	1,711.33	3,204.73	4,850.05
Graceland College	4,128.66	20,214.67	23,864.75
Homes for the Aged	7,181.14	13,222.20	20,967.19
Children's Home	5.00	5,260.00	8,415.50
Sanitarium	2,504.69	607.00	8,735.80
Aid to poor and needy	29,098.84	26,025.51	25,402.43

These figures reveal an increase of tithes and offerings in 1919 of eight and nine tenths (8.9) per cent over 1918, and one hundred and seventy three (173.0) per cent over 1914.

An increase of Christmas Offering in 1919 of nine and nine tenths (9.9) per cent over 1918, and six hundred and ninety and five tenths (690.5) per cent over 1914.

During the six-year period, 1914 to 1919, there has been only slight changes in the number of missionaries and general church officers. A comparison of the total amount expended in 1919 and 1914 shows, however, an average increase, viz:

For elders' families in 1919 of 84.7 per cent over 1914.

For elders' expenses in 1919 of 93.7 per cent over 1914.

For general administration in 1919 of 211.0 per cent over 1914.

For general expense in 1919 of 183.4 per cent over 1914.

For Graceland College in 1919 of 478.0 per cent over 1914.

For Homes for the Aged in 1919 of 191.9 per cent over 1914.

For the Sanitarium in 1919 of 248.7 per cent over 1914.

On the other hand, the amount paid for aid to the poor and needy in 1919 shows a decrease of 12.7 per cent over 1914.

These figures would seem to indicate that while the members have responded very generously to the call to observe the temporal law, thus making possible the payment of the general church debt of $270,000 in less than three years, the increased operating cost incident to all business enterprises, (and the church is no exception in this regard) has prevented a large increase of the present worth.

The working out of the new bookkeeping system installed a year ago—complicated to some extent by change of fiscal year—the new elders' monthly financial reports, adaptation to overcome high foreign exchange rates, have increased the work of the office, and required the services of additional office help unacquainted with this class of work, and made necessary an extra effort to bring our books up to date. These difficulties were not lessened by the influenza epidemic. Office assistants and representatives in several districts upon whom we are dependent for the success of the work, and whose hearty cooperation we cheerfully acknowledge, were not free from attack.

The experiences of the year have shown wherein system may be improved by making it more simple in operation and comprehensive in report; and toward this end we are working.

In organizing the work of the office to meet the increasing demands for service, we are constantly confronted with the lack of adequate office quarters. We have not felt warranted, however, in proceeding with the erection of an office building as authorized by action of former General Conferences owing to what we considered were more pressing demands. Need of the space in the general office building was one of the reasons for placing several hundred volumes from the Presidency's, and Bishop's library in the Library Building adjoining the Stone Church. This question of a new office building must, nevertheless, have early consideration if the work of the several departments of the church work is to be efficiently performed.

During the year, under the able supervision of Brother R. T. Cooper, the compilation of the church real estate records have been practically completed. To be of value this must be kept up to date—and this is being done.

REPORT ON CHURCH BUILDINGS AND REAL ESTATE AS OF JUNE 30, 1919.

There has been no material change in the church property valuation since the report to the Conference in April, 1919.

A large amount of work is under way, checking up the old disorganized and abandoned churches throughout the country. A number of buildings are projected and in prospect which will enter into the report for 1921, and by that time the church register will be completed and an accurate statement of the value of all the church property throughout the world can be rendered.

A large amount of work is still needed and in course of completion to properly vest the titles to the church properties. The work is steadily progressing, and when finished the existing defects will be cured and the titles so vested that the title to all the churches will automatically pass from one Presiding Bishop to his successor in a perpetual trusteeship; excepting, of course, the titles which are vested in the corporate name of the church.

The matter of the church carrying insurance on its buildings referred to the Bishopric by the General Conference has been given consideration, but the details have not been fully worked out.

The needs of the Homes for the aged, and Children's Homes, have been looked after by Bishop M. H. Siegfried as general superintendent of these institutions. His report, and the report of the Children's Home Trustees, included herewith set forth not only the cost of carrying on this part of the work; but calls attention to future needs, and should receive the thoughtful examination of all.

GRACELAND.

The report of the Graceland College trustees mentions new college buildings now in course of construction. This work was approved by the Presiding Bishopric pursuant to resolution of the 1919 General Conference. The funds to complete this work are available.

The other building needs of the college are apparent, and if the funds can be raised for the purpose without injury to other equally important demands, they should be authorized.

SANITARIUM

The Sanitarium report shows a deficit in operation. This has been supplied from general church funds. While an annual deficit is to be expected, the measure of service furnished by this worthy institution will continue to be limited until additional buildings and equipment are secured. These should be furnished as soon as the funds can be spared for this purpose. Many times during the past year we have been unable to help the physically and mentally afflicted for want of proper facilities. The Sanitarium needs, as set forth in the report of the Board of Trustees, are urgent.

The Sunday School Christmas Offering reached the sum of approximately $98,000. As recommended by the Order of Bishops, in addition to the 583 acres of land purchased last year, the Christmas Offering has been invested in 649 acres of as good land as there is in Jackson County. In one plot are 848 acres, and 384 acres are in another. The total cost has been $215,550, averaging $175 per acre.

Deducting the mortgages on the land amounting to $85,400, leaves a cash investment of $130,150. $98,000 has been supplied by the Christmas Offering, $29,828.50 by special consecrations for the land fund, and $2,321.50 from general funds.

All of this land at the present time, except a few acres of woodland, is under cultivation.

Leases of tracts of various sizes have been executed for one year, pending the determination of a definite policy of operation, having in view the creation of stewardships and inheritances.

The Independence and Lamoni Storehouses report a very satisfactory year's business. Uncertain business conditions have suggested caution in expansion. However, plans are under consideration at the present time looking to the supplying of a wider field of service.

The Lamoni Laundry, now conducted on a stewardship basis by Brother R. J. Wildey, (Brother Stoff having entered the general ministry) has had to overcome many obstacles. However, it seems to be upon a solid basis and an assured success.

During the year the members of the Presiding Bishopric have visited a number of branches, and attended conferences and reunions as occasion required and opportunity afforded; the detail of the office in our absence being cared for by Brother Vernon A. Reese, and other competent office assistants.

The increasing volume of work of the bishopric, "to do the business of the church," in administering all temporal things, is reflected to some extent by the total amount of receipts for 1919 of $582,846.46 as compared with 1915, of $244,953.58.

Another index is the number of letters received and answered: During the first two months of 1920, or in fifty business days, there were received exclusive of regular financial reports of elders, bishop's agents, and bishops, circulars, papers, packages, etc. 3,404 letters requiring answer.

During the same period there were mailed 4,437 first-class letters, and 304 second class and parcel post packages.

Increase of present worth and increase of membership of the church, particularly in the stakes, require additional service from this department. In order to discharge these obligations imposed, it is essential that the work of the office of the Presiding Bishopric be departmentized so that:

First. The membership of the church may be made more fully acquainted with the law regarding temporalities. The missionary force may be furnished information upon this subject for the seeker after the truth; and

That the general public may be correctly informed relative to the economic program of the church.

Second. Contributions may be received and properly credited.

Third. Funds and properties be carefully invested and used.

Fourth. Expenditures be wisely made.

Fifth. The "gathering," be not in haste . . . that all things be prepared.

The First means not only preaching by the bishop and elders, but the preparation of necessary literature for distribution.

The Second means not only a book-keeping system, but an accounting department, under the supervision of an expert accountant and efficiency engineer—one who is looking after leaks and breaks and weakness in the system, and devising ways and means to simplify the work, oversee issuance of letters of instruction to bishops and bishop's agents regarding bookkeeping, and to carry into effect the detail of financial measures adopted. The services of a brother qualified for this work have already been engaged.

The third and fourth mean:

(a) A department to manage church property—to buy, sell, rent and improve real estate—collect rents, interest secured by real estate—and furnish appraisals for application for loans, etc. This department is now fairly well developed under the management of Brother R. T. Cooper.

(b) A department where application for relief may be referred, properly investigated, assigned to the agency to supply the need, followed up, and a record of each case kept so it may be determined whether or not the applicant is, or is not, an idler.

This would mean, in a given case, one or more of the following conclusions:

- Financial assistance to be temporarily supplied.
- A regular periodical stipend allowed.
- A loan made, (secured or unsecured).
- Employment provided.
- Stewardship assigned.
- Educational advantages furnished.
- Admittance to Children's or Old Folks Homes.
- Admittance to Sanitarium.
- Help of medical attendant or social worker; or possibly—
- A sermonet.
- A denial of request.
- Reference to church or civil authorities.

This work is peculiarly the duty of the Bishopric, and has, and is being provided for; but in order that each case receive continued proper attention it must be systematized and such agencies used as are essential to gain the desired results. We have spoken to, and are hopeful of enlisting the services of, a brother who is specially qualified to assist us in this work.

Under this heading we might properly mention the fact that improper form and execution of last wills and testaments, wherein the church has been made a beneficiary, have in a number of instances during the past year given rise to the claims of the church being contested by disappointed relatives.

Wherever an appeal to the courts of the land could be honorably avoided, claims have been settled out of court; but where such settlement would seem to be manifestly contrary to the testator's will, or would compromise the church, legal counsel has been employed. A question of this kind means an expenditure of thought, time and money; and can by anticipation in the majority of cases be avoided.

Members desiring to make a bequest to the church can be more certain of having their wishes carried out if they would consult a member of the Bishopric prior to making their will.

While we sense the importance of the gathering, past history, as well as present experiences constrain us to emphasize the statement: "Let your gathering not be in haste. . . . Have all things prepared."

No strange occult force will operate in a twinkling of an eye to transform present human hearts and minds, and social and industrial organizations into a condition where the Saints will be of one heart and one mind and dwell in righteousness with no poor among them. It can only be accomplished by operation of the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. It is hoped that the Saints will not become impatient by seeming delays. The Bishopric are not unmindful of the situation. The problem is not only daily; but hourly, constantly, before them. Precipitate action only brings confusion. "God will hasten his work in its time."

Then let the forces of God in his way do the hastening and let us not try to resort to human power and human methods to secure divine results.

We feel encouraged by the spirit of consecration manifested throughout the church, and press forward with you to the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Respectfully submitted,
 BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
 INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256. Presiding Bishop.

THE STAFF

Edited by Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short St., Independence, Mo.

The Professional

In the last issue of The Staff we wrote at some length about "The amateur," believing that much misconception was prevalent concerning him. We trust that the article was fruitful in disabusing many minds of the misunderstandings that exist, and that the place and value of the amateur in art is better understood.

In this issue we will take up for serious consideration his companion in art, the professional; fully aware that he, too, is misunderstood, both for good and ill.

The professional is he who, whether from imperative necessity or productive desire, follows as a chief calling and for a remunerative income the pursuit of an art. He may give to it, as may the amateur, the deepest love of his heart and he may be as deeply conscientious and devoted, and yet be driven to the pursuit of his art that he may obtain his daily bread. It is the application of an art to the business of it that constitutes a profession. The professional regards his knowledge and experience as so much merchandise which he can market for money.

There are so very many standards erected by art practitioners and tacitly accepted by the nonthinking public that it is difficult to describe what may properly constitute the well prepared professional as compared with the tyro. No public requirements have been enacted into legal statutes; no definitely prescribed attainments have been formulated and made the basis of a standard. The uneducated public demands so little in the way of academic, scholastic, or vocational training in art that the musician who has given a large share of his life, the painstaking labor of years and the vast outlay of means necessary finds that he must stand on the same footing with the public at the start of his career as the vain, conceited tyro, who has essayed to trade in art before he has any art to trade with. In every state in the union one who would teach in the public schools must have finished some certain prescribed course of study and have attained to some definite standard of proficiency in classified knowledge before he will be permitted to accept a place in the schools; but any superficial, ambitious youngster may take a limited amount of instruction in music, "put up his shingle" as a teacher and go after pupils and patronage. Our lawyers must graduate from a recognized school and submit to a rigid examination before being "admitted to the bar" and allowed to practice; nurses, apothecaries, dentists, physicians, all must go through a rigorous, prescribed course of training and discipline, involving years of hard unremitting study and work, and then submit to a rigorous examination as to their fitness before being admitted to practice; yet our aspiring music student may "take a few terms" under almost any instructor his fancy may dictate and then boldly launch his frail bark upon the sea of professional life with nothing to stand between him and a clientele but his own prowess in winning favor and pupils. Many times the one successful in getting a goodly patronage by means of his engaging ways has but a mere smattering of attainments; and it is an unvarying truth that a smattering in anything can have no real merit. Pope, in his Essays on Criticism, was superlatively right when he said,

"A little learning is a dangerous thing;
 Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
 Their shallow drafts intoxicate the brain,
 And drinking largely sobers us again."

It is astonishing in how many ways may the professional life of art be attempted by those aspiring to enter and dwell in its domains. This list ranges from the devoted intelligent student who has given serious thought, conscientious labor and long periods of study to his preparation, down to the brazenly inefficient scavenger of the public taste, who prospers because of the ignorance of the people among whom he preys, and who is thankful indeed for such lack of intelligence, that his failures may not seem so glaring in the mists of their ignorance. Some instances will serve to illustrate how, in the midst of such ignorance on the part of the public who employ them, such incompetents are permitted to thrive.

There is to be found in practically every community several of which the following is an exact illustration, and it will serve to show how the irresponsible, illy prepared, inefficient but superlatively self-confident tyro may thrive upon the credulity of the ignorant and uninformed. Miss Brown (we call her that for the reason that it is not her name) was a comely maiden of some nineteen gay rollicking summers and she felt to the utmost the delicious zest of life and her important place in it. She had passed through all the successive stages of an adolescent girlhood career of tomboy, flapper and coquette without anything serious enough happening to prevent her from following the bent of her inclinations. The grades of the public school and two years of the high school course had been "passed," but not in such a way as to proclaim her a pupil of unusual gifts or exceptionally studious habits. She had always been considered as being "musical," such quality consisting of an especial dexterity in playing in a showy, dashing style, the popular stuff of the piano, although somehow, when in a certain emergency she was asked to supply the place of the missing pianist at the church, and accompany the choir and congregation in the hymns (a task that frequently tests many a pretender's ability), her powers seemed to miserably fail her. But when it came to playing at fashionable evening parties, or accompanying kindred spirits in the tintinnabulation of "rag time," sentimental songs, or the sinuous measures of "fox trot," "hesitation," or "tango," she was "right there" with a verve such as would amaze all spectators and tend to convince the credulous that surely the gods had graced the earth with another wizard of the keyboard and that another genius was resident among mankind. "My! can't she make her fingers fly?" said one, unmindful of the fact that mere dexterity is the cheapest and most often employed imitation of real art. "Don't she just make that piano talk!" said another, equally unmindful of what the piano might be "saying" or of the fact that "talk" is the cheapest of all commodities.

What more natural than that, when the years of decision as to an avocation arrived, our showy, superficial dilettante should seemingly find her calling ready to her hand and take up seriously the profession of teaching the art of music.

But how well was she fitted for so sacred a vocation? A few "terms" under local teachers, themselves scarcely more scrupulous, were all that she had had in the way of schooling. These, united with an abundance of assurance, a smooth "front," a skillful play upon the credulity of others, the adroit use of flattery, were her "stock in trade" with which she started out to make merchandise of an art in whose debt she was already bankrupt and at whose shrine she had never given sincere worship. Did she succeed? In terms of pupils secured and money gained she succeeded, for her "class" was always full and she always collected all bills due her. But in terms of honest instruction given and intelligent musical scholarship imparted she was a culpable failure. Her pupils would soon acquire her showy dexterity; scarcely had they time to become acquainted with the ordinary rudiments before they essayed the dashy, spectacular things of the popular class. But the simplest Sunday school song would have been beyond their ability in the emergency of the Sunday school pianist's absence.

Reader, the above illustration is drawn from life and is not in any sense an exaggeration. The "woods are full" of "Miss Brown"; her name is legion. Every community has its ample supply of her in the way of incompetents, traffickers in that in which they have no legitimate investment; common despoilers of art and mankind. The safety of the people and the dignity of a profession are in the hands of those who practice that profession; but such as Miss Brown not only fatten on their victims but degrade their calling as well.

Another illustration will serve to complete our exhibit; and we will state in preface that it also is taken "from life" and that the individual pictured is even now "practicing his profession" among the credulous. This individual's attainments, if we may judge from his claims, are something extraordinary, and his abilities, if the same claims are accepted, place him in a class far above what ordinary geniuses of the past have been. He understands and teaches, so he says, all branches of music, the piano, violin and all the band and orchestral instruments, as well as singing and voice culture. In fine, according to the rapt exclamation of one of his infatuated followers, "he can just do anything in music!" Some genius, that! History does not record that any of the world's masters in music were able to do nearly as much, but it has remained for the twentieth century to produce such a remarkable assemblage of erudition and genius in one being! But what can be said of his pupils? Can it be that fickle Fortune has perversely determined to thwart such a gifted person by allowing him as pupils only the dullards and the untalented? For not one of them evidences having come in contact with genius. But getting down to a cold blooded analysis of this man and his claims, what have we? Time is fleeting but art is broad as eternity. It is an acknowledged fact that any one of the principal branches of music, or any one of the principal instruments, such as the piano or the violin or the mastery of the voice and its culture, requires years (not months) of absorbing study and the absolute conquest of two of them is the attainment of but few men in a life time. It therefore "goes without saying" that he who pretends to have mastered so many branches and so many instruments does not know any of them more than superficially. The old adage is a true one and has a most excellent application here, "A Jack of all trades and master of none."

The ease with which people are deceived by show and glittering pretense is a matter of both wonder and concern. "All is not gold that glitters" is an axiom so true that it is worthy of the belief of all; yet how often it is forgotten. The showy, pretentious teacher, who fascinates and flatters and whose chief asset is in his ability to make people believe he is the summum bonum of the profession will so often forge ahead of the conscientious, painstaking teacher, whose chief aim is rendering the honest product and who scorns subterfuge and pretense. But fate has ordained its compensation, for it is the honest minded one whose days are longest in the land and whose work will demonstrate his fitness to survive. He survives, not because he flatters and is popular, but because the fruits of his labors entitle him to survive. The popular teacher is not always the worthy one, for popularity and true worth are not synonyms.

What constitutes the true professional of worth? Many things; as well might we try to answer, what constitutes the true man worth, or the true disciple of Christ. But our readers should have concrete examples as well as abstract principles; and although we despair of trying to enumerate all the qualities that constitute the true disciple of music, we will at least try to give some of the things that go to his spiritual make-up. Bear in mind that we are dealing not with the amateur, who worships at the shrine of his art from pure devotion only, but with him who practices that art that he may live. This is the man that takes your dollars in exchange for the musical warmth and food you have a right to expect. He, of all men, should give value received.

1. Moral Equipment. The musical instructor should be morally inferior to none and his ideals should be of the highest. Low associations and high ideals are not compatible and do not exist in the same heart. He should scorn to receive payment for that which he cannot conscientiously give.

2. Mental Equipment. The time is past when the world believes that mental inferiority is no bar to true musical attainments. It is now recognized that the musical art is so comprehensive and so absorbing in its character as to demand man's highest powers, of mind, body and soul.

Musical Equipment. That he be talented is indispensable and that that talent be of a high order is imperative. He who does not have the true flame of musical genius alive within him should not essay to serve as its apostle of culture.

4. Scholastic Equipment. Here we cannot speak too plainly. He who essays to instruct others must himself be a master at what he teaches. Should singing and voice culture be the branch of art selected, or one of the principal instruments, as the piano or violin, the course of study and time involved should be extensive. From four to six years are usually little enough to accomplish the modicum required and then it should be but the beginning or a period of progressive application. This course of study should be had in either some well established school of music or conservatory, or under some masters of known worth and standing. This study should be both exacting and exhaustive. The student should bend his every energy and his entire soul to the work (for he will find it work) of acquiring an education in his chosen art. He should not only assiduously study the instrument of his selection but he should study many things that contribute to it. Thus, the piano student should not only perfect himself in piano playing but should study the theoretical branches of music, together with the history and analytical treatises of his art. The great aim of this is to make the man bigger than the instrument he plays and teaches. For this same reason we require our doctors to pursue exhaustive studies in all branches of medical science, that the practitioner may be a bigger man than the dose he administers. Why should not our professional musician be a man of broad training and culture?

5. Pedagogical Ability. The really good instructor is none too common; most good teachers being like poets; born, not made. The talent for teaching is innate within them; they teach because they have the gift of teaching, and they love to teach. Such instruction is invaluable; money cannot recompense it when it is given from the heart. Realizing the great need for the development of the teaching ability, all our prominent music schools give courses in musical pedagogy, with the intent that our future teachers may be trained to teach. We should look well to the teaching ability of those we employ.

6. Progressiveness. A true disciple of art is always progressive for he realizes that his safety lies in growth. The musician who rests content upon laurels gained is deceiving himself, for he who fails to go forward will inevitably go backward. The unprogressive teacher should be shunned.

There are many other things that define the character of the professional musician, and we feel that we have but touched upon a few of them. But if we have succeeded in inducing thought within the minds of parents and students, leading some to a proper consideration of the qualifications of those who essay to follow the profession of instructor in music, we shall rest content with our accomplishment.

Let us judge well character and qualifications of those to whom we intrust the musical training of ourselves and children.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Choir Presents Celebrated Oratorios

In presenting the oratorios, The "Messiah" by Handel and The "Creation" by Haydn, the local Latter Day Saint choir gave the music-loving public of Lamoni a genuine treat. The packed house Sunday evening, [March 21] when The "Messiah" was rendered, manifested clearly the interest of the public in music of the better class, and though the weather was somewhat threatening Tuesday evening when The "Creation" was rendered, the attendance was almost equal to that of Sunday.

The choir, numbering one hundred voices, was in fine form and under the baton of their efficient and enthusiastic conductor, Paul N. Craig, they rendered the difficult choruses in a manner which reflected well-earned credit to the individuals composing the choir as well as to the work of Director Craig.

An outstanding feature of these entertainments was the excellent work of the soloists, upon whom fell the task of providing the desired variety of a much appreciated program. Mrs. Harold Burgess, soprano, delighted her listeners both evenings with her interpretation of the beautiful soprano solos from these oratorios and Mr. George Anway, our local baritone, handled the heavy parts assigned him with a spirit that would have done credit to singers of more extensive experience. Mrs. Francis Norris, of Hartford, Iowa, contralto, has ever been a favorite before Lamoni audiences and the general comment on her work in the "Messiah" evidences that she has lost none of her prestige. Much was expected in the renditions of Mr. L. Eugene Christy of Independence, Missouri, and he left no room for disappointment. He is undoubtedly an artist of ability with a voice far above the average in quality.

The accompaniments were effectively played by Miss Belle Patterson and Miss Florence Thompson. Lamoni and the choir are to be congratulated on their ability to so successfully produce entertainment of so high an order.—Lamoni Chronicle.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Latter-Day Motherhood

VI. THE ENGAGEMENT

"It is the ideal which we seek; and when, in the course of events, the divine laws have attracted to you your own, it is still the ideal man or woman to whom you must cleave. In your inmost heart hold fast to that, for the embodiment will ever fall away, . . . while the spiritual man alone stands firm!"—Stanton Kirkham.

I wish I might convey to you, my daughter, the spiritual truth which illuminates the above passage. It would be one which would elevate the relations you have assumed with your chosen one, to a plane far above the petty quarrels and disagreements which so often mark an engagement. These days are days of adjustment—indeed, possibly, of mere trial and probation. In the first glamor of this new adventure in love, your eyes may have been somewhat blinded. Perhaps you have been hardly conscious of this glamor, and have wondered why all things have seemed so rosy and beautiful, why people have been so kind and adorable, experiences so interesting, and life in general so well worth living! You have been looking through the magic glass of love, my dear, and all objects on this mundane sphere have been glorified through that age-old witchery!

Now follow the weeks and months of planning, of getting used to the idea of having decided your future, of having chosen your fate. These are days of trial and test, when without doubt some things will arise which will make you wonder if you have been altogether wise—if, after all, your idol is but clay! My dear, do not be unduly disturbed at these qualms; they are for your guidance, only. As the rosy glamor fades, and you are able to weigh with unbiased judgment, you will find, if your mating has the approval of God, that your love is unharmed by the discovery that its object is, after all, merely human! Would you have it otherwise? Would you undertake to be wife to a god? Nay; you bring but humanity attended by humanity's common frailties, and would not be justified in demanding more than you bring! Thus it is for you to cling to your ideals, remembering that all human creatures are but in the days of their unfoldment, and none have, as yet, reached the stage of infallibility or perfection.

However, it will do no harm to warn you that if you find your love is weakening through a lack of respect, if you find the object of your affection is less worthy in principle, less kindly of heart, less noble in thought, less reverent, or less loyal and true—then it is well to remember that these are days of probation, and it is not too late to save your life from wreck or ruin, or from a step which will destroy its earthly usefulness. "It is never too late to mend" may be true of some experiences; but a patched-up, too-often mended marital confidence or regard is a sorry affair indeed! It is better to have faith utterly shattered before marriage than afterwards. No happiness can come from a union based upon a foundation so frail as mutual distrust or disrespect. Differences of opinion may be adjusted, and present but small barriers to mutual peace, if both parties are generous and charitable in attitude, and these need not destroy the foundations upon which domestic felicity is built.

I am happy to believe, dear girl, that you will pass through no bitter ordeal of disillusionment in regard to this man you have accepted, and with whom you are planning to walk the pathway of life. While it brings a twinge of pain to my fond heart to contemplate our beautiful flower being transplanted from the home garden to another all untried and unknown, still I am trying to be patient and reasonable, remembering that life would not be complete for you were it to be otherwise. I have committed you and your future to the care of our dear Father in heaven, to whom you are even more precious, and I believe my faith in him has been justified in events, as so far made manifest. We honor and respect the man of your choice, and we feel that this engagement will be but a prelude to a happy song of life which shall echo down the years.

Do not demand or expect too much. Keep maidenly reserve intact. Remember that a noble man ever reverences the instincts of true womanliness. It is soul-harrowing to see how lightly some girls enter into engagements to marry, apparently for the sole purposes of kisses, embraces, gifts, and attentions. As butterflies flit from flower to flower, so such a girl dissipates here and there her charms and graces, until it is but a poor, wasted, futile, and sorry thing she has to offer the man who meets her at the altar!

For the girl who has taken the church covenants, undertaking to follow as closely as possible in the footsteps of the Master, an engagement to marry takes on the sanctity of any other soul sacrament. It is regarded as a promise only, and in no way implies any earnest of marital privileges or obligations. At the same time, it is invested with all the gravity and seriousness with which any honorable and sacred agreement is attended. A broken promise to marry is a pitiful thing, evidencing either a promise too hastily given without time for proper consideration or prayer, or else one given too lightly, without due recognition of its sacredness and its governing principles. At that, the pain and suffering caused by a broken engagement is, at times, preferable to a life time of unhappiness and unprofitable existence. Girls with true conceptions of life and its highest purposes will enter into a betrothal thoughtfully and with a careful searching of their own hearts and desires, and those of their suitors as well, followed by an accurate analysis of what they there find. After the promises are exchanged they will go happily forward, seeking to build wisely upon the foundation laid, to plan and work with the chosen one for a future life together of usefulness, worth, and beauty.

I do not favor extremely long engagements. Too brief a one is as bad. A year is perhaps long enough, if the couple can see each other often enough to discover their adaptability and congeniality. Sometimes separation is good, too, for a heart that cannot remain faithful under those circumstances is not well anchored. During the time of engagement a frank and full interchange of thought and conviction upon the essential things of life is preeminently desirable. Things of real value should be discussed, high purposes, soul-perspectives, and definite objectives considered freely, for in no other way can a wife or a husband be assured of perfect understanding and confidence.

That this discussion and understanding should include a frank consideration of the material aspects of life, is unquestionable. Many a union has been a failure because the wife did not clearly understand the business and financial standing of her husband. In foreign countries this question is given preeminence over the impulses of the heart, and the first thing that is ascertained about a suitor is his attitude towards the material responsibilities to be assumed. Usually a bride is given a dowry, a portion of money set aside for her personal use through the years to come. In this country, perhaps unfortunately, it has been considered mercenary to consider these things before marriage. Many a disappointment and disruption might have been avoided by a fair, frank, and mutual agreement during the days of planning. Some girls who have had money of their own before marriage have fretted themselves into unhappiness over the apparently thoughtless, or deliberately negligent, attitude of their husbands in money matters. As it is to be a partnership, involving all the most essential elements of human happiness and attainment, surely it is only good business to have all titles made "clear" before waves of strife and distrust wreck the matrimonial bark.

With two pure souls contemplating wedlock, out of which relation nature designs to perpetuate the race, a frank understanding in regard to offspring is also desirable. This does not need to be indelicate or immodest, for the most beautiful and chaste thoughts of a womanly girl will center in and around children, and this fact is understood and appreciated by every noble man. The man or the woman who "hates children" is to be shunned, for very abnormal and inhuman is such a being. The woman who "does not intend to have any kids around" is a travesty upon her sex, and should be left to spend her life alone, with the cats and dogs she prefers! The man who is unwilling to take upon himself the responsibility of the care and nurture of children is not a safe man with whom to trust the life happiness of a good woman. For the sake of the future, the peace and harmony which should dwell in the home-to-be, these vital matters should be talked over and understood before entering into the most important contract of life.

Do not keep late hours, little girl. There is vitality taken from you when you sit up late. Keep yourself fresh and wholesome, that life may be full of zest and interest at every point. Your lover will respect you more highly, delight in you more completely, when you do not see him too often, nor for too long periods. The modern habit of "spooning" for long hours every evening is to be deplored, for physical and moral reasons. The young man is not fit for his best work next day when he has gotten only a modicum of rest and sleep. Neither are you. I want you too keep the roses in your cheeks, the sprightliness of manner which has endeared you to all, and, above all, your fine poise and clear judgment on all matters that affect you.

Be full of joy and gladness, for these are wonderful days, and their radiance will extend far down the years ahead. The influence of their truth and beauty will soften many a burden, smooth away many a care, enlighten many a corridor of pain, and illuminate the way to perfect understanding and perfect trust and joy. Memory is storing away her lovely and priceless jewels for you these days, and I know my own girlie is having a jealous care that not one shall be dimmed by any cloud, by any thought, word, deed, or desire, that is not holy, sweet, and fair!

"The little hand I hold in mine, holds all I have of life
To mold its better destiny, and soothe its strife;
'Tis said that angels watch o'er men, commissioned from above;
My angel walks with me on earth, and gives to me her love!"—Don Piatt.

A Radiant Memory

Some characters which have been developed here upon earth have been so sweet and pure, have looked upon life with such clear eyes of faith and gladness, that the radiance of their memory, as they pass on, still shines brightly, illuminating, for those who follow, the sometimes difficult path towards divinity.

Such a one was our Sister C. B. Hartshorn, of Chicago, who but a short time before her call home prepared a paper concerning the mother's relations to the Sunday school and other organizations for good. This paper her devoted and appreciative husband has sent to our columns, in the loving wish that her influence may live on, accomplishing good which may not be measured in words. We present it to our readers, feeling sure that every one who peruses the article will be touched by the spirit of love and consecration which breathes throughout, and will, through knowing that the writer has passed from the vestibule of life into the wider reaches of the eternal temple, appreciate the beautiful thought of her sorrowing companion in giving it to us through these columns.

The Possibilities of a Mothers' Association

To a greater extent throughout the world is growing the realization that "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." Mothers of to-day are beginning to realize the real importance of the first years of a child's life and that his physical, moral, and spiritual strength of maturity depends on his early training. Mothers of to-day may make a study of the proper training of the infant's natural instincts. Froebel, the founder of the kindergarten, calls this study, "The science of motherhood."

To fully understand this, it demands of every woman her highest endeavor. If a mother fully understands her boy or girl as a child, and has learned the art of training the instincts pertaining to or of the mind, the body, and soul, she has accomplished what Froebel refers to as "the science of motherhood." Mothers in Israel! Who of us could ask more recompense than this, that we were masters of the science of motherhood!

No doubt there burns within each honest-hearted mother the desire to fully understand the requisites of being a mother,—who knows her resources and environments and also understands the mind and character of her children, thereby gaining their complete confidence and respect.

No doubt the first question which confronts most mothers is, "How can I find time to devote to the study which is required of me?" In order to become an accomplished mother I would necessarily have to be a physician, kindergarten teacher, a poet, or even a philosopher. Remember, heaven is not reached by a single bound, but we mount the ladder round by round. Surely every mother could devote at least three hours each month to the accomplishment of this design—"the science of motherhood."

The mothers' association composed of earnest-hearted mothers whose hearts burn with that love which is next to heavenly, and who are willing to sacrifice anything for the good of the little buds of promise entrusted to their care, holds out a splendid opportunity to help the mothers in the home, and also help the Sunday school and the church and Nation.

We all realize that no home is complete without the influence of a true Christian mother, who has been educated in the proper training and development of her children. From this home circle may come honorable characters who will be an honor to the home, the State, or the Nation which they represent.

We may ask, "How could a mother's association be of help to the Sunday school?" The Sunday school is the only school which teaches the principles and doctrines of Christ, occupies only one hour out of the week, and should be brought up to the highest standard possible. Who should be more interested in the progress of the Sunday school than the mothers of the children in the cradle roll and Sunday school. A united effort on the part of the mothers might help to lighten the burdens resting on the shoulders of the Superintendent. For instance, a well-equipped cradle roll and beginners' room, consisting of sand table, table and chairs, blocks, scissors, and a variety of kindergarten supplies, with a few pictures pinned on a screen and folded when not in use. Would not these be a great help to the teachers and pupils of the primary and cradle roll departments and Sunday school as well?

A covering for the floor, a comfortable crib, a rocking chair, and a box of toys might be added at the close of the

The Great Jerusalem Blizzard

Sister M. J. Floyd writes from the Holy Land, with news of a record-breaking rain and snowstorm.

I must send a few more lines to tell you we are not frozen, though had a job to keep ourselves comfortable, as Jerusalem has had a real snowstorm and blizzard, such as the oldest inhabitants never heard of before. The snow was so heavy on the housetops that many roofs fell in. I feared very much for ours, but thankful to say it still stands. We were not without loss, for the stable, or what the church turned to a workshop, fell in, and the zinc awning over the back door, and zinc covering of one of the balconies; and it looked as if the olive grove had turned a somersault, for the stumps were sticking up, and the branches on the ground. Had a man bringing up the branches all day, and did not get through—will take him another day. But I am thankful the stumps remain standing and will branch out again. Of course it is a big loss, and we will miss the shade they gave. Such is life; when you think you have something, a puff comes and away it vanishes, quick enough to make us think treasures on earth are most temporary. So let us be after treasuring some in heaven.

Sister Jenkins and I had a little coal oil stove to huddle around, which would not work before the storm, but took a good fit and helped us over the tide; and I have a little old phonograph with a few Turkish records—two are Turkish

Sunday school session, thus converting this room into a nursery.

For no time in life does a mother need spiritual help more than when the habits of her little ones are being formed and foundations for character building laid. Yet how often, when a mother is surely in need of spiritual food obtainable through the prayer services, sermons, etc., is she deprived of these life-giving forces. She leaves the services feeling that her child has been the means of disturbing the others of the congregation, as all experienced mothers can testify, as a result of trying to force unoccupied minds to sit still and look wise while their elders are being entertained. Would we not be restless if placed under similar conditions?

Could we not overcome these obstacles? Just a little united effort on our part again and we could have all the necessary equipment to make the kitchen or perhaps only a corner in the basement fitted for a comfortable nursery and beginners' room. What an incentive it would be for cradle roll-mothers to attend the services, if they could leave the service fitted with the bread of life and renewed strength of mind and soul to face the responsibilities of a dutiful mother the remainder of the week. Often we hear children say, "Mamma, I like the Sunday school, but I can't like church." Is this not a golden opportunity to make the church services as profitable and full of pleasant recollections for the child as the Sunday school?

Was it not Lincoln who said, "What I am I owe to my mother"? Your child may become an elder in the church, a general in the army, or a Red Cross nurse; above all he or she has a character that will stand the test of the fiery dart of the adversary and be worthy of the commendation "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Thy mother helping thee, thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many."

There will be greater opportunities and possibilities for the coming generation than ever before. Let us as mothers do our part right now in educating ourselves to train and prepare our children for usefulness in the work of readjustment after the war and the establishing of Zion here on earth.

marches—which I turn on, and we get up and march around the table to get our feet warm.

It is clearing off and so in time the snow will all melt, and all will look normal but the trees.

I will inclose what the Jerusalem News of February 13 says about it:

The Great Jerusalem Blizzard

February 11 was the coldest day Jerusalem has known for twenty years, the mercury dropping to 26 degrees. On the same day there fell no less than 3.386 inches of rain and 20 inches of melted snow. Records of rainfall have been carefully kept by the American Colony ever since 1860, and therefore the fact is indisputable that this blizzard is the worst within modern memory. There is no record of greater snowfall or worse weather at any time.

At the end of the storm there were 29 inches of level snow on the place selected for accurate measurement, where there could have been no accretion from drift; measurements were taken in about a dozen places for greater accuracy, and the figure can be accepted without reserve. The only other storms on record that approached this even remotely in duration and severity were one in December, 1879, in which 17 inches of snow fell, another in January, 1884 in which there was a total fall of 15 inches, and a more recent one in January, 1887 that covered Jerusalem to an average depth of 12½ inches. Compared to the 29 inches that had fallen on February 12 the earlier figures seem inconsiderable, although at the time, no doubt, Jerusalem imagined herself the victim of a cataclysm.

The blizzard began on February 10, the mercury dropping to 30 degrees, with a maximum of 32, and a cold wind out of the West bringing down 1.488 inches of rain. That was uncomfortable enough, at a time when one normally expects the fine February weather that should precede the latter rains. Seven inches of snow that followed the rain turned discomfort into misery, and drove away the homeless beggars from the chilly precincts of the Jaffa Gate. What followed almost beggars description, for Jerusalem was not built with a view to snowstorms, nor are its inhabitants so familiar with them that they can take the right course in such sudden emergency.

The first people to be on foot to succor the poor were the American Colony, and their first efforts were directed toward Siloam, where the Gadite colony of Jews, whose protectors the Americans have been from the first, might be expected to be in difficulty. The journey of three miles took three hours, though the rescuers were mounted on skis, and made better time than would have been possible otherwise. Always forehanded, they had made those skis seven years ago, but had had no opportunity to use them until Wednesday last. They found the Gadite Colony with three roofs crushed in under a weight of snow, but no one injured, and the supplies of bread they had carried out were ample to tide over the immediate need. Meanwhile the American Colony bakery turned out another hundred two-pound loaves of bread, which they distributed from house to house.

By Friday there will be three soup kitchens in operation, one provided by the Christians at the Jerusalem Relief Laundry, the Strauss soup kitchen in the Jewish quarter, and that of the Mohammedans will be at Tekiyeh. But the distress meanwhile has been terrible, and ill-clad, bare-footed women and children have been wandering the streets, made as miserable by their fear of the unaccustomed snowdrifts as by the pinch of cold and hunger. It was not possible to do much rescue work at once, for the roads were blocked frequently by drifts of ten and more feet deep, through which animals could not force a path, and there were dozens of houses in the poorer parts of the city in which women and children lay beneath a merciless sky, or shrunk shivering in their rags under the splintered remnants of a broken roof. The Yorkshires set a fine example by setting to work on the snow with a will, and digging great trenches along the streets, most of which were shoulder high; but it would have needed an army to cope with the whole situation.

All the telegraph and telephone wires are down, and will take a long time to repair. In the postoffice is a conspicuous notice to the effect that "until further notice all in and out going service is entirely suspended," and the boldest estimate regarding resumption of railway service is "five days," on whose authority does not transpire. Jerusalem is at present cut off from the outer world, although four Americans connected with the A. C. R. N. E. on their way from Jaffa arrived on foot this evening, having taken the whole day to accomplish fifteen miles from the half way place.

No injuries to man or beast had been reported up to the time of going to press, an unexpected and appreciated blessing, but the hospitals were besieged by destitute sufferers, and the damage to property has been immense. Almost the first buildings to succumb were the Y. M. C. A. huts, followed at short intervals by the Zion Cinema theater, which looks like a total ruin, and the Jerusalem Cinema theater, which seems in hardly any better plight. Other roofs to collapse under the unprepared for weight of 29 inches of wet snow, were that of the Nurses' Home of the Zionist Medical Unit and of the saw-mill opposite Notre Dame. The new gymnasium belonging to the Italian school is completely flattened out.

Terrible havoc has been done among the trees, of which Jerusalem has far too few in any case. Many of the fine specimens in the garden of the American Consulate have broken off short under the weight of snow and ice, and so have the majority of those that were "requisitioned" by Jamal Pasha from the Dominicans, and from any other owners within reach, and planted as a sort of memorial to himself. One solitary tree that no one seems very sorry to part with is the Butmi (Terebinth) tree opposite the building of the East Company, that in the days before the war used to be a Turkish gallows. To its ancient branches they hanged whoever fell foul of their extraordinary sense of justice. There is a legend attaching to that tree. Men said that when it fell at last, then the Turkish dominion would fall, too, and if the accident has come a little late to be in time with the desirable event, the loss of the Butmi seems to be the only bright incident of the blizzard, if one excepts the efforts at relief.

The Clock Is Striking the Hour of Zion

Men and money are available right now to build Zion, says this brother at the Tri-Cities.

Just a few lines to give you an angle on things up our way. We are still moving along with a constant faith in the work and feeling that things are in the making for greater things for our Zion to be. If we are able to interpret the impulse of the hour and the conditions existing, then we are sure that the Saints are getting in that necessary spiritual condition and state of anxiousness for Zion that will make possible its speedy development and we feel that the hour for the opportunity for Zion is striking.

Further, we feel that these conditions are being sensed by the general authorities of the church, which, combined with the growing state of uncertainty of things in the world and the instability of the old order of things and the radicalism that is striving for mastery, makes all the more apparent the absolute necessity of Zion and the fact that the time is here to begin establishing it. And I believe that as a whole we are all together on this proposition and are ready to back up the efforts of the men who must take the lead in this matter. I think that among the Saints individualism of that sort that deters the work is giving way to that of fusing methods and systems and subordinating wills to that which may be deemed by the majority to be proper, and so it becomes the will and system of all. I think the church can be counted on. I find in my discourses to the Saints that there is a ready response to the thought of Zion.

Last Sunday morn at the close of my discourse in East Moline one old brother arose and said that he had a thousand dollars ready to give to the church when it began Zion.

These are tokens of the state of mind the Saints and their readiness to respond when they are sure that something is going to be done.

At night I preached here in Davenport. I impressed them with the fact that Zion will be brought about through righteousness and practical work under the direction of God. They also are much in sympathy with the thought.

One brother here is holding back several thousand dollars that he could invest in a business of big promise. He is ready to help in the purchasing of Zion with it as the church may direct.

I have talked with the Saints that are attending the chiro-practic school here and they assert that they are ready or will be ready to engage in their professional work as chiro-practors on the stewardship-inheritance basis when Zion begins if the church calls for them. They are all without exception zealous and intelligent Saints. There are about twelve here in school.

A Confirmatory Dream

This letter came to the office of the Presidency and was sent in for publication without President Smith's knowledge, as it was the request of the author that the letter should be published.

Dear Brother Smith: I feel impressed to tell you of a dream I had nearly one year ago. It was not long after the General Conference. I had no doubt but that you were the right man in the right place, yet had not received any particular spiritual evidence concerning it. The dream was that I saw you standing in a pulpit preaching to a large audience. I did not seem to be interested in the people about me as my whole thought centered on you. As I looked at you I noticed the peculiarity that you were wearing a pair of white gloves, and a white handkerchief lay in front of you on the stand. Immediately the Spirit rested upon me in the dream, more powerfully than it usually does in my waking hours, and I was given to know that the gloves being on your hands represented your authority and that they were the same ones worn by your grandfather, then by your father, and now by yourself. They were pure and white without a blemish of any kind, as was also the handkerchief, which represented your daily life. I discerned also that while you had faults and could make mistakes in common with the rest of humanity, yet the thoughts and intentions of your heart were pure and good and that you were the one ordained by the Lord to lead us on to victory. I felt to say Amen, Lord. Then I awoke filled with gladness. Yours in Christ,

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO.

The Passing of Patriarch James Baty

Many HERALD readers will learn with regret of the passing of our patriarch, Elder James Baty, on February 25. It occurred very suddenly in the midst of the busy life of our city. He was crossing Oldham Street, a thoroughfare well known to visiting missionary brethren, at the lunch hour (1.20 p. m.), when he fell on the pavement, put up his hands, and passed away without a word or a groan. The cause was heart failure. "He was not, for God took him."

He was laid to rest in the Philips Park Cemetery. Elder S. F. Mather conducted the service, assisted by Elders Joseph Dewsnup and W. R. Armstrong. Elder G. W. Leggott and other ministers were also present.

The service was first read at the above named address, and afterwards at the grave side. A large number of people witnessed the interment, for our departed brother was loved and respected by many people. Those who worked alongside our brother in the tramways offices testified to his honorable life, extending over many years, and in the Lord's work even the children think of him kindly. He will be greatly missed by his sorrowing wife and children.

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

PLYMOUTH GROVE, MANCHESTER, 12 Daisy Avenue.

Conditions Good at Minneapolis

I will drop you a note this morning. We are in the midst of a very interesting meeting here, the church well filled every night, many outsiders coming. Brother William Sparling has done a very fine work here and aroused big interest, he has visited and hunted up everybody he could find and is a fine fireside talker as well as a very enthusiastic speaker, and has the happy faculty of making friends and gaining the confidence of the people. I have never known this branch to be in better condition than now.

Brother Lundeen is the president and is a very fine character and enjoys the confidence of all the Saints and with rare tact has got them all to working together, which is quite a feat when you consider that there are some things here that have troubled the branch for years. I am very much pleased with the condition here now.

I was at the bed of Sister Lucy Gunsolley Glick last Saturday night when she passed from this life. They took her to Lamoni for burial Sunday night. Her husband is Doctor George Glick, in charge of public speaking at the university here, a fine young American-Hebrew.

Enlargement of Stewardships

BY THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC

Seventh of the series of letters being mailed to the Saints of the Lamoni Stake.

The program of stewardships includes as its finality the fullest development and proper use of every man's "ability."

It provides for a maximum stewardship as well as a minimum stewardship.

It recognizes the vital fact that every man, not disqualified mentally or physically, should have at least minimum stewardship, or in other words a stewardship which will produce his "needs and just wants."

Every person, eventually, should have a stewardship according to his "ability." (Matthew 25: 14-31, I. T.) The economic program of God must and does provide for the fullest utilization of a man's "ability."

This "ability" is a gift from God, and as such it is a liability of the person so blessed and as a liability it must be accounted for both in time and eternity. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.)

God is just and he will not condemn a person whom he has endowed with ability and the said person through no fault of his own had not the capital to use his endowment.

Consequently we find that the gospel makes proper provision for the providing of the means with which these various "abilities" may be used. The use being service to humanity.

The first thing then in the development of the stewardship plan is to provide every worthy and capable man with a stewardship which will supply him with his "needs and just wants." These "needs and just wants" to be provided for out of the surplus. This surplus to be received by the church from members who have more than their "needs and just wants," thus bringing equality, having no rich nor poor.

The second step is to enlarge his stewardship so as to enable him fully to use his "ability" in the service of his fellow man and thus be truly serving God. This brings us to the questions under consideration:

A. The Enlargement of Stewardship

It must be conceded that a steward must have a stewardship which will enable him to make more than his bare needs or his actual just wants, otherwise there would be no increase or surplus—a poor business proposition to say the least.

The field of stewardships has definite boundaries. A minimum stewardship or that which will give the steward at the very least his needs and just wants—and in the production of which his business ability may be taxed to its fullest or it may not. If not, then a maximum stewardship or that which will enable the steward to use to the fullest capacity his "ability" as soon as possible. Out of the proceeds obtained from this maximum stewardship the steward should receive only his "needs and just wants." The maximum stewardship should ever be the goal, as that is what God designs and it shall finally prevail.

B. Aid for When Needed

"If there be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied and receive according to his wants. Therefore the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.

"And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward; but so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer that the treasurer shall not withhold."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.

The first quotation clearly outlines just how the steward is to be aided in receiving his needs and just wants or his minimum stewardship. He is to get it from the surplus which has been consecrated (set apart for a sacred purpose) unto the legal representative of the church—the bishop.

The second quotation (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12) tells us the way the maximum stewardship is obtained. This amount is also taken out of the surplus which is held in common. This common surplus is the true explanation of such passages as Acts 2: 44, 45 and Acts 4: 32-35. The only thing held "in common" by God's people is the surplus, including the tithes and offerings.

Our next letter will continue to discuss stewardships.

In bonds, LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC.

Highest Academic Recognition Accorded Graceland College

President George N. Briggs has just returned from a conference in Chicago with the Commission on Higher Institution of Colleges and Secondary schools where he perfected application for the accrediting of Graceland College by that association.

Previous to the conference the college had been thoroughly examined by representatives of the State Department of Education, the State University of Iowa, and the Iowa State Teachers' College acting as official inspectors of the commission of the North Central Association.

As a result of the official report of these inspectors and the application for recognition, full accrediting was accorded Graceland College. This is the very highest recognition that can be accorded by any accrediting association in the United States and places Graceland in the very front rank as an accredited institution of higher learning.

When it is known that accrediting is only granted after the most exacting conditions as to academic standards are met and a thorough inspection on the part of official inspectors appointed by the commission shows that those standards are maintained over a period of years, and that at the recent meeting more institutions were denied recognition and accrediting than were granted it, Graceland and her friends are to be congratulated on this very high recognition.

Graceland has been fully standardized and officially accredited for several years by the State of Iowa, but her field is so much larger than the single State, students being in attendance this year from twenty-five States, that it was deemed essential to have this further recognition. In this connection it may be of interest to know that the accredited list of the North Central Association is accepted by every institution of higher learning in the United States, so that the recognition which has now come to Graceland as a Junior College is nation wide.

The Christmas Offering Approved

The Presiding Bishop tells why there should be no objection to the Christmas offering.

Occasionally we receive word from some Sunday school worker that objections are raised to the Christmas Offering because the objectors believe that it is out of harmony with the law. Were we convinced that this is true, we would not lend our support, but we most earnestly feel that it is entirely in keeping with the law of the Lord, and opens a most splendid opportunity for all to assist in a most worthy undertaking.

Those who have increase from year to year are required by the gospel law to impart one tenth of their increase, while those who have a surplus may consecrate of their surplus. In addition to the law of tithing the increase, and tithing the surplus, there is the avenue of freewill offerings through which the Saints may assist in various ways by contributing to local branch expenses, by donations to the missionaries; that their traveling expenses and clothing needs may be supplied, by gifts to the various church institutions; such as the Children's Home, Saints' Home, Sanitarium, etc.

Our opportunities find their parallel in the experiences of the children of Israel while under the Mosaic dispensation. In addition to the tithing of the increase they had their sin offering, their meat offering, and various other offerings; a part of which went to care for the temple service and the sons of Aaron.

We are also reminded that when the Lord spoke through Malachi and accused the people of having robbed him, he pointed out the fact that the withholding of the Lord's portion was represented not only by the withholding of the tithe, but of offerings as well. In addition to this, in latter-day revelation, the Lord has recognized the principle of freewill offerings, and in counseling the church to practice economy and the repression of unnecessary wants, he mentioned as one of the reasons why we should do so was that the tithes and offerings might accumulate in the general church treasury for the accomplishment of certain purposes.

The Sunday school has designated this freewill offering as the "Christmas Offering," because it is turned into the Lord's storehouse at the Christmas season. It is, nevertheless, a freewill offering and we believe is acceptable to God and pleasing in his sight. The fact that we may contribute to the Christmas Offering, or any other fund, does not excuse those who have an increase from paying their tithing. Many letters have reached our desk breathing forth feelings of thankfulness for the benefits that the Christmas Offerings has brought, not only to the local school, but to the individual contributors and to the church in general. The time is at hand when, as expressed in the admonition of the President of the Church which accompanied the last revelation to the church, that all should give of their "talents, abilities, and substance for the prosecution of the great work."

May the spirit of the Master unite our hearts that we may be able to establish the high ideals of Zion whereby righteousness and equality may rule in the affairs of men.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

How to Redeem Zion

BY M. F. GOWELL

An appeal to all members to put forth every effort to reach the spiritual and temporal ideals of the church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 18, 1920.

Editors Herald: I have been at home four months on account of affliction, but the tide has seemed to turn in my favor, and I am able to go where I want to go, at least in Independence. Much of the time walking ability was limited to two or three blocks. It's "all in a lifetime," as the saying is. Clouds are as necessary as sunshine; affliction may be as necessary as health at times. Not that weakness is my choice, but our choice cannot always be had. I think I have not been weakened spiritually. My faith is not weaker. My hope is not less. Charity and patience may have been increased somewhat. There is room for development with most, if not all of us. Some think the church is tottering but as I gauge the spiritual barometer, the feeling averages better than I have ever seen it, and I have come in close touch with the situation through the "group" meetings, in the homes, etc.

I have heard some splendid sermons and could see apostasy in none of them. I believe the chasm of deference, if it really exists, will be bridged, and the ship Zion will sail majestically on. The integral strength of the work is such that it must.

I do not think the rank and file here in Independence are very much depressed or discouraged. Those remote from the center need not be. "Fear not little flock; it is your Father's pleasure to give you the kingdom," the Master said. I think these words are applicable to-day.

Forward steps must be taken as has been said. Do we not know it? The past year's publicity campaign on the part of the Bishopric should have brought every one up square with the law, as to tithing, and the Lord who gave it. What a privilege we should esteem it, to be able to invest in a work sure to triumph; to be able to come to the help of the Lord with such as we have to give! His commandment has "the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." It is the only real life insurance. Death insurance; that which goes to another at the death of the insured, may be had of men. We have nothing to say against it, but life insurance (that which may be had of the Lord), is more important.

From a true gospel standpoint, living interests occupies our thought more than dying does. How secure and safe one may feel and actually be, who keeps every commandment. Why should we not be anxious to pay tithing, or what we owe to the Lord and his work? If we have a surplus, why should we not be anxious to use it in forwarding the work, in the Lord's way. The Lord has said, "It must be done in mine own way." Our way might be to retain and control the surplus earnings or profits ourselves, fearing lest they might be squandered or misused. If we are in doubt as to whether we have a surplus or not, the Bishop is a judge in such matters. Our own individual judgment may be good, but it is not official judgment such as the Lord has provided for in the process of redeeming Zion.

God said of old: "Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." And after administering rebuke because these things were not done, he said: "I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies. And I will turn my hand upon thee and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin; and I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning: afterward thou shalt be called, the city of righteousness, the faithful city. Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." (Isaiah 1:17, 24-27.)

We are living in the days of restoration, but do we appreciate our opportunities and sense our responsibilities? There is a growing feeling that the time is here for the appointment of stewardships, or the management of every business and every industry on the stewardship plan. This plan will return to the common fund, for the general good, all over the needs and just wants of the steward who is made accountable in this life to men, as well as to God.

In this plan, individual agency and responsibility is not destroyed, but encouraged and increased. Properties instead of being held and controlled by a few who are worried and harrassed by reason of their cares; or by the group or community to the blotting out of individualism or agency—are held by many, "every man a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration." Individual effort and initiative along both spiritual and temporal lines needs to be increased and encouraged, to bring prosperity to the people of God. No few men holding all the power, and all the wealth can do it for all the rest.

We must have faith in men, as well as faith in God. God purposes to exalt the poor and to abase the rich. Who can or who should hinder his purpose? Why should not all fall in with it? We are hoping that the coming General Conference will take action supportive of the law of consecration and stewardships, so that every business, every industry, every farm, every bank will be recognized as accountable on the stewardship basis. It matters little who holds the properties, so that the profits over and above the expenses return to the people through their officers. There will be no encouragement to any one near to overtax himself in managing. He will be willing to share the burden. The many will take up and carry the burdens of the few, and carry them better. Cooperation will take the place of destruction, and every one will be happy.

Men with means have power to make men happy or miserable; happy in the extension of God's plan: miserable in hindering its operation. They have the power to lead that the comparatively poor do not. But the poor and those of moderate means have responsibilities resting upon them of industry, economy, saving, and giving such as they can, that God would not relieve them of. The honor and the virtue lies in every man doing what he can to bring in a new and better order of things. "To whom much is given, much is required." I cannot require less of myself than God and his law requires of me. I cannot require less of the church in my preaching or writing than the law requires. I know what the law is. Every man should know. It is not left to a few men to know or to do. The problem or problems that are as yet unsolved require the thought of many, the decision of many—all who are involved.

Shall we not attack the problem and settle it just as far as we can possibly settle it in the use of our individual judgment and agency, leaving as little for the Bishop to do as is necessary? We must think out our own individual problems to a great extent before we can be in readiness to submit them to the Bishop for judgment. As to moneys or properties, the Bishop can do nothing more than he is helped to do. Should not the question be with us how much can I help, rather than how much can I retain? No one should cripple himself as a steward by giving. No one should be crippled, oppressed, or hindered from doing the good he has in his heart, and is willing and able to do, because of the withholding of more than is meet. The critical and severe judgment of the individual by the individual is one of the first prerequisites for the successful operation of God's plan of happiness and salvation. Shall we not be active and energetic in self judgment, that the work of judgment and righteousness may be forwarded?

Forward seems to be the watchword given out recently in sermons of those in authority. There is an awakening, but there needs to be a greater awakening to individual and collective righteousness; or more steam in the boilers to take the load over the hill of difficulty. I am not exempt. Are you? Have you gone as far as you can or are able, to make the law operative and effective that will bring Zion, or do you wait for another? Do you make demands upon others; little or none upon yourself?

Don't wait for the church. You are the church; I am the church. Give the church a push. Someway you can help. If you are a Saint, you will find a way to help. Let us all be helpers, "workers together with God." Think toward the mark, the goal that is set, or you cannot reach it. Each day should mark an advance for the individual and the body. It cannot be without thought, or if we slumber and sleep to righteousness, even comparatively.

We need a revolution within ourselves more than any other revolution, and every man must do it for himself. The church cannot do it for you. You must rather do it for the church. Get away from the idea that the church is going to do something. Get the idea that you are going to do something to help the church, be it little or much, just so its all you can do. And let it be an every day thought. You will move the church forward. You will see yourself helping it. Don't wait for the help to come from north, from south, from east, or from west. You will find it in you or about you, if you seek earnestly to help bring the thing that you are waiting, wishing, or looking for—from some quarter or source outside of yourself or your efforts. The whole problem that is up to the church must be attacked by you until you gain a clear understanding of the whole matter and of your individual rights, privileges and responsibilities.

You will never come to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ unless you move toward his stature of intelligent comprehension of law and righteousness. His revelations are for your help.

I sense that individual initiative, self judgment and effort must be increased. We do need to "speed up," as President Smith says. Don't you think so? As my experience and reflection teaches me, there is room for every quorum to speed up to where the law is, and to what the law requires. I would not in the least excuse myself for part or present indifference. I would let the law judge me. The law must be paramount, regardless of where it finds or places any man. It will at the last day; why not now? The law is perfect.

Let us pray and work as never before, for its present, perfect, and complete operation; and let us not forget to pray for and sustain all the authorities in their offices and callings, duties and responsibilities.

Far West Stake

The annual conference of the Far West Stake was held with the First Saint Joseph Branch, March 12-14. There was a good attendance and a splendid spirit among the people. Disturbance, contention, unfriendliness and everything of like ilk is unfashionable in this part of the country and out of date, if it ever had a place. There was a spirit of unity, good fellowship—indeed a fine feeling throughout.

We were favored in having Brethren Peter Anderson and J. A. Gillen of the Twelve, Brother James F. Keir of the Presiding Bishopric, and Brother C. H. Rich and Bishop Richard Bullard of the Eastern Mission, together with the forces of the stake, which gave us quite a missionary representation. Brother F. M. McDowell, of Graceland faculty, stopped off Friday evening en route to Independence and gave an able and acceptable address on the subject of young people's activities. He has been engaged to attend the reunion of Far West Stake where we expect him to present the interests of the young people's work fully than this limited effort permitted.

The several departments of work were represented in the conference. The preaching and the social features were uplifting. A message to the saints through Bishop Bullard indicated the good will of the Lord and his purpose to remember Zion, both in this region and in general throughout the church.

A committee of brethren and sisters of the First Branch with the assistance of other branches in the city made ample provision for the needs of both visitors and those residing in the city. Excellent meals were served in the church building.

The choir of the First Saint Joseph Branch on Saturday evening provided a very enjoyable musical, literary, and social program. It brought both the musical and other people into closer touch, which is necessary to increase the bond of union among the people by closer acquaintance.

Word from Brother L. F. Ferguson indicates that Brother R. D. Weaver and wife have done some excellent work in the vicinity of Richmond, Hardin, and Lexington Junction. Brother Weaver and wife have made many friends during their sojourn in the stake.

We are glad to see representatives from the branches throughout the stake.

These are times of uprising, Mr. Editor. When we read of the spirit of disturbance in the world we are reminded of a late definition published in the Literary Digest: "A Bolshevist is a brain storm surrounded by whiskers!"

Motto for long-winded General Conference debaters: There are two sides to every story; my side and the wrong side!

Brother John L. Bear, of the Second Saint Joseph Branch, who has been quite ill at a local sanitarium in the city has returned to his home, much improved.

Brother E. F. Robertson of the stake presidency was called to his home at Franklin, Nebraska, by the serious illness of his sister and his father. They are some better but their condition is such that his presence is needed there. He should be remembered in bearing the heavy burdens which have come to him of late. We regret that we have been denied the assistance of his labors in the stake.

Some people who think they are strong for the constitution live by the shattered remnants of a few antiquated by-laws!

This is enough for the present; more anon.

A BROTHER.

A Case of Healing

The last week was very busy; I was called to go to Terribonne, up the Deshutes River, and close to Bed Oregon, an all day's journey, to administer to some sick folks, and found a very worthy family of Saints, placing their trust in the Lord. While they have been isolated for a number of years Brother A. E. Dyer and family have lived very close to the Lord and are taking the HERALD and Leaves, and also observe their family altar and do not deny the faith. Also he is known as a trustworthy neighbor and an honest merchant, so is highly esteemed by all who know them.

Well, their two youngest, Lena, aged thirteen, and Nina, aged fifteen, took the influenza, and Lena developed pneumonia in both lungs and her life was despaired of by the physicians of the town where they live. So after the girl had several hemorrhages the father told the physician that if he could not do anything more to save the girl he would send appeal to a higher Power than man. The doctor said he had done all that he could do, and the girl was steadily growing worse; he hoped that there was a higher Power. So the father telegraphed me to come at once.

I left Sunday morning and arrived there at 6 p. m. the same day, and hurried to the house and administered to them both and they steadily improved all night. We watched at the bedside all night, and prayed often. When morning broke there was a decided improvement, and when the doctor called that afternoon he found a decided turn for the better.

On the next day when he called he said that he was not needed any more as there was a power or something which had accomplished for the girl that which he could not, for on Sunday night both lungs were closed up tight and breathing was very difficult, but on Tuesday her lungs were almost entirely clear. He told the parents to throw his medicine out of the window and to feed the patient all she could eat and care for her, as a higher Power had accomplished what he could not do so he would not be needed any more. Turning to me he said that he hoped to see more of me and if the time came that we would ever have to work together again he would welcome me. So after some explanations we parted and the girl continued to improve.

JAY, FLORIDA, March 4, 1920.

Editors Herald: There are still a few Saints in the Florida District who are holding on to the rod of iron, and although there are a great many that have become indifferent, I think we are holding our own.

We have been blessed a part of this conference year with the wise and safe counsel of High Priest M. M. Turpen, who has tried by his counsel, both from the pulpit and the fireside, to impress upon both priesthood and members the necessity of living up to our privileges, and I am sure that all who had the privilege of his presence in their homes are stronger in the faith and better prepared to meet and overcome the evil conditions that confront us as a people.

The conference of the Santa Rosa Branch convened last Saturday, February 28, under very trying circumstances. The influenza has again broken out, and a good many of the members were sick, and a good many were kept away nursing those that were stricken. Neither of our branch officers were present, both being at the bedside of the afflicted. Brother R. C. Russell was present, and acted as president. It was truly wonderful the way he got through with the business. Brother E. N. McCall was ordained an elder, having previously held the office of priest.

Brother Russell preached three times in his forceful way, but Sunday at eleven o'clock he outdid himself and preached one of the most inspiring sermons it has ever been the writer's privilege to hear. He is a good mixer and takes well with all classes, and if he should return to this mission, we feel sure he will wake up some of the sleepy places. All who heard him are hoping the presidency will see fit to return him. He is an able and fearless defender of the gospel.

All our missionaries have left for the north, and General Conference. I hope and pray the coming conference will be one of great good, and trust all who are fortunate enough to attend may be made to rejoice. Brother T. C. Kelley was the first to bid us good-by, and it surely gave us a very sad feeling to have him leave us. He carries a good influence wherever he goes, and Saints of this district love him as a father. We all hope for his return; also that of Brother Turpen and Brother Russell, and as many more such men as the conference can send, for Satan is getting bolder and we need all the help we can get.

Ever praying for Zion's redemption, your sister,

ASHLAND, WISCONSIN, March 4, 1920.

Editors Herald: Our Sunday school was organized sixteen years ago, and we have tried to keep it in existence, but it looks very much now as if the Lord wills otherwise. There are still three families of Saints who are interested and living here, but we are so far apart and with small children we cannot get together in bad weather.

Last spring we purchased so we might have public services when missionaries came, but nothing was accomplished last summer. We want to keep it the coming summer, and then if we do not receive help we will have to sell it.

Brother and Sister Pitt promised to come next summer, but we do not know how long they can stay, or if we can get anyone out to hear. We do know though that there are fifteen thousand people here who have never heard the gospel preached in its fullness, and believe if proper missionary effort were made we could get many new members. The trouble here is the same as in all cities of its size—the many other churches do not think we are needed, and they succeed in keeping the people from coming to hear.

Brother A. L. Whiteaker who came here for a few days, (called to administer to the sick) a short time ago, says the only way we could do anything here would be to have some missionary come and stay right here and canvass the city thoroughly—a man suited to city missionary work. He says that is the way they got started in other large cities, and it is our only chance. But then if there is no one to come we cannot help it. We can only pray for the Lord to send reapers into the vineyard as he taught us to pray, or else make a way for us who are here to go to Zion, for we are lonely and hungry for spiritual food, and often need an elder in case of sickness, or accident, or trouble. Our children are growing up among the weeds which overcome them. We are not strong enough to save them, only partly perhaps. Pray for us.

Your sister in the one church,

MABLE M. DENNIS.

ASHLAND, WISCONSIN, 1711 Fifth Street East.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, March 10, 1920.

Editors Herald: The Saints here are progressing very nicely, trying hard to attain to higher planes. The priesthood are sensing as never before the responsibilities that rest upon them and are fitting and preparing themselves for better and more efficient service in the Master's cause.

The long hard winter and deep snows have interfered somewhat with the work being done in the country round about, but we expect to resume in the course of a week or two. The messages that our speakers bring to us are of a high character. Our Pastor, Elder R. A. Harder is held in high esteem and has firmly intrenched himself in the hearts of the Saints by his kindly thoughtful ways.

The times plainly bespeak the necessity of our people shaping their lives after the pattern of him who said, "If ye are not one ye are not mine." If we are not the most enlightened of peoples pertaining to our eternal welfare then it is our fault. We have the mind and will of the Lord given in former and latter-day revelations and the promise of as much more light as we render ourselves capable of receiving. We do not as a whole appreciate sufficiently the light we have received. We call upon God for more revelations when we do not live up to those we have received and place ourselves under the condemnation contained in Doctrine and Covenants 81:1. Let us break away from the snares and enticements of the world and "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

ARTHUR H. DU ROSE.

TOLEDO, OHIO, March 12, 1920.

Editors Herald: Please convey the message to the many readers of the SAINTS' HERALD that I live in the enjoyment of the hope of the gospel, and with the realizing sense that we are in the hastening time.

During February the district conference was held here, and this was followed by a week of excellent sermons by Patriarch F. G. Pitt, who was assisted in all his ministrations by his helpmate, Sister Pitt. Much sickness and extreme cold weather prevented them doing the good that they otherwise would have done. Since their labors the district president, Elder Jesse M. Harden, has been with us, and he leaves such results that the branch is in an advanced condition of unity and activity.

This wicked and adulterous generation has had some influence on those who have borne the name of Saint, the love of some getting colder, and a few yielding to the downward tendencies. The united effort on the part of district and branch officials has been to purge out iniquity, and to perfect the Saints in accord with the law of God.

We are pleased to note the efforts of the Publicity Department in the way of advertisement, but find that every place will have to adopt methods suited to their conditions, and under the direction of the Spirit be guided in the use of just such methods as are suited. We have been painfully aware of the fact that the greatest advertisement is in the lives of God's professed children, and we have been making the development of the Saints our prime work, and we are pleased to testify that in many instances improvement is made.

We have made some advancement in working out the coordinating plan, and have a committee appointed to formulate a plan to carry out the general principles governing so far as we can educate the Saints to see that its application will be of benefit. At present some are much in favor of working in harmony with the actions of General Conference, but there are a few who still hold to the idea that it will be to the disadvantage. The Religion is trying to assume its work more in harmony with its responsibility, but it is a trouble to some to know where the other departments fit into the social and recreational work. There are some who like to have the departments act independently of other departments, and of the branch itself, but as fast as the principles of coordination are understood they are winning their way.

The church is now freed from debt on the sewer and water put in last fall, and the prospects are at present that we will have electricity for lighting purposes. I had the promise of the one in charge a few days ago that the line would be put in right away, and they have already left poles for the erection of the line.

We hold priesthood meetings twice a month, and greater interest is taken in them than in the past. The branch officials are busy in the interest of telling the gospel story when their special work will permit. We inclose a short article which will do us good. It is about as fair as any historical matter that I have seen for some time. Mr. C. C. Lyon of Columbus, Ohio, is the author. He has been fair in that when he saw his mistake which occurred in former articles he has corrected it. God bless such fair-minded men.

1012 Waverly Avenue.

J. F. MINTUN.

ERICKSON, BRITISH COLUMBIA, March 16, 1920.

Editors Herald: We have recently had a visit to our district, the Creston Valley, by Elder J. A. Bronson, who held a series of meetings here, and seven precious souls were baptized into the kingdom. We expect many more, as about fifty people attended every meeting, coming for miles through mud, snow, and rain. Elder Bronson has made many friends here, and everyone is delighted to see him come back.

There are about thirty-five Saints here, Elder Broadway being the first to come here to live, from Saskatchewan, about ten years ago. About five years ago, through his efforts, Elder Johnson of Spokane spent a few weeks preaching the gospel. He did not gain any converts, although he helped to prepare the way for Elders Newby, Yates, Reid, and Bronson. As each of these men came they received a heartier welcome than the one before. It seems as the people grew to know that they were not part or parcel of the Utah people, they gradually began to take an interest in their teachings. Some day we hope to be able to establish a branch here. Elders Leach and Broadway are the leaders. Sunday school and gospel services are held each Sunday p. m. in Elder Leache's home; also midweek prayer meetings.

The epidemic of influenza took one of our beloved Saints away only a week ago, when Sister Broadway passed away. Elder Bronson coming one hundred and fifty miles to conduct the last sacred rites.

We ask the prayers of the Saints for our welfare, as a small isolated band of Saints who believe the true gospel.

HILTON YOUNG.

Salmon packers do not expect to can a full pack this year because of low prices and slow sales of their products. Some expect to cut their production to a third, others to one half, and some will not pack at all. About 125 canneries were operated last year by nearly 90 companies, requiring five thousand men and scores of ships, working up the Alaskan coast.

In Chicago a proposal to build portable houses in large numbers to cut down the cost of living received the disapprobation of the carpenters' union, which declared it was a move detrimental to their business.

The attitude of the American housewife toward anything not according to her standard is shown in the recent announcement by the United States Grain Corporation that in spite of many efforts to dispose of it, the corporation could not sell in this country a large surplus of flour made from soft wheat. It is good flour but not so white as the standards of America demand, hence on the request of the corporation Congress allowed the sale of 5,000,000 barrels to Europe. As soon as ships are available, this flour will be sent to the needy peoples of Europe.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN OHIO.—At Columbus, Ohio, First Branch, March 6 and 7, in charge of F. J. Ebeling, assisted by Brethren Burt and Davis. Reports from following branches: First Columbus, Second Columbus, Shawnee, Limerick, Wellston, Dayton, Vales Mill, Middletown. Bishop's report showed an increase in tithing in district. Officers elected: G. E. Burt, president; C. W. Clark, vice president; Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary; J. B. Williams, treasurer; A. E. Anderton, chorister; Sister Davis, member library board; A. E. Anderton, auditor. Delegates to General Conference: E. D. Finken, G. E. Burt, D. J. Hannah, Sister Griffiths, U. B. Chambers, Marjorie Williams, Bernice Chambers, F. J. Ebeling, Harriet Griffiths, G. T. Griffiths, Sister Finken, Brother Dounard, Sister Dounard. Alternates: Sister Stephens, Brother Davis, Alice Bierley, H. E. French, E. E. Long, A. Allen, Elmer Moler, J. A. Becker, J. M. Hardin, Catherine Griffiths, Ora Lewis. Time and place of next conference left in hands of presidency. A goodly portion of God's Spirit was present and an enjoyable time was had by all present. Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary, The Plains, Ohio.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Topeka, March 5 to 7, District President Frank G. Hedrick and Richard S. Salyards presiding. Met coordinating, with all departments of church work represented; R. J. Tilden, district superintendent in charge of Religio work, Cecil E. Schmid, district president, in charge of Religio work; Mrs. Emma Hedrick, district president, in charge of Woman's Auxiliary; A. P. Crooker in charge of boy movement, and they rendered a nice program, too; James A. Thomas and R. L. Tilden in charge of musical conference. Nineteen members of the priesthood reported 154 sermons, 1,250 services attended. Bishop's agent reported receipts of $2,109.87. Report audited and found correct. Blue Rapids Branch declared disorganized and all records ordered placed in care of district officers. Seven delegates were elected to General Conference. Fanning chosen as place of next conference, September 3, 4 and 5. Officers elected: Frank G. Hedrick, president; vice president to be selected by the president; R. L. Tilden, secretary; superintendent of Sunday school, R. L. Tilden; secretary, Emma Hedrick; president of Religio, Ira Whipple; secretary, Eva Deller; president of Woman's Auxiliary, Emma Hedrick; secretary, Pearl Schmid. Mayor Corwine, of Topeka delivered a very cordial address of welcome to the conference, and both daily papers gave the conference favorable mention, making a distinction between our people and the Utah faction. Nineteen sessions held. A great degree of the Spirit was manifest in all the work of the conference, making it one of the best held for some time. President Richard S. Salyards of the Far West Stake and missionary James A. Thomas assisted in the work of the conference. R. L. Tilden, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Woodbine, Iowa, February 8 and 9, in charge of J. W. Lane and Fred A. Fry. Bishop's agent's report for the year 1919 showed total receipts $18,772.67, a gain over any preceding year. The matter of permitting the Lamoni Stake the use of the Little Sioux District reunion tent for the reunion of 1920 was referred to the reunion committee. Delegates to the General Conference appointed. The days of the week on which quarterly conferences are to be held in the future, was changed from Sunday and Monday to Saturday and Sunday. A recommendation from Sioux City regarding the ordination of E. L. Edwards, P. J. Zimmermann and Clement Streeter to the office of priest was approved and the matter referred back to that branch for their ordination. James F. Keir of Independence and Albert Carmichael of Lamoni, were present on Sunday and addressed the conference on matters pertaining to Zion conditions. Adjourned to meet at Pisgah, Iowa, in June, 1920. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—At Centralia, Illinois, February 28, 1920. District president, R. H. Henson, in chair, assisted by Henry Sparling. Statistical reports from the following branches: Joppa, Brush Creek, Parrish, and Dry Fork. Those not reporting: Springertown, Bungay, Tunnel Hill, Bellair, Skillet Fork, Poplar Creek, Centralia, and Mount Vernon. By recommendation of district president the Bungalow Branch was disorganized. A motion prevailed that the Southeastern Illinois District ask General Conference to send a high priest to preside over this district. Officers elected: President, R. H. Henson; associates W. B. Henderson and S. D. Goostree; secretary, W. E. Presnell; treasurer, W. W. Brown; chorister, Ruth Holman; librarian, Cora Henson; member gospel literature board, Mary Morriss. Delegates to General Conference: Henry Sparling and wife, W. B. Henderson, W. H. Helley, F. L. Sawley, W. W. Brown and wife, L. Brown, Charles Wesner, Hattie Savage, Ruth Holman, and they given power to cast majority and minority vote. Adjourned to meet with the Joppa Branch in June. W. E. Presnell, secretary.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—At Philadelphia, February 21, 22, and 23. Between 90 and 100 visitors present, including Bishops E. L. Kelley and Richard Bullard. Membership of district 1,152; gain 5. Bishop's report showed receipts of $2,089.32; $177.16 expended in district, and $2,012.16 forwarded to Bishop. Tent committee reported receipts of $113.20, and promises of $64.80. Committee continued. Committee elected last conference to locate grounds for holding reunion, reported they had found suitable grounds at Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania, and provision was made for holding a reunion the first two weeks in August. It has been learned, however, that the grounds are taken for the entire month of August. An announcement will be made as soon as possible by the district presidency as to the time and place of the reunion, and personnel of reunion committee. Officers elected: President, Ephraim Squire; counselors, Henry Carr and Herbert A. Cunningham; secretary-treasurer, Elizabeth Teal; member library board, Lee A. Hartshorn; member auditing committee, E. Leroy Squire. Delegates to General Conference: Calvin H. Rich, Sister Calvin H. Rich, William Nichols, Sister William Nichols, William Osler, Albert N. Hoxie, John R. Lentell, Lillian Zimmermann, Edmund J. Gleazer, Sister Ephraim Squire, Sister John R. Lentell. Alternates: John R. Lentell, Lillian Zimmermann, Edmund J. Gleazer, Eva Stadler. Woman's Auxiliary held business session, and an entertainment was given by the Temple Builders of the First Philadelphia Branch. At sacrament service admonitions were given to the Saints to put behind them the things of the world and consecrate their lives more fully to the service of the Lord; to be diligent in the payment of their tithes that the proclamation of the gospel to the nations of the world might be hastened. In the afternoon the following ordinations took place: Ernest Davies, elder; Ralph Jackson, Thomas Carr, and H. M. Valentine to the office of priest; William Henry Carter and Alson B. Croop, deacons. Recommendations approved by elders of conference for ordinations of William Evans, priest, Edward Mahoney, deacon, and Stanley Jackson, teacher. E. L. Kelley preached Sunday evening. Next conference to be held during reunion. Sunday school and Religio held business sessions on the 23d. Elizabeth Teal, secretary.

Notice to Eastern Colorado Saints

The Saints at Sterling, Colorado, have arranged to hold services every Sunday as follows: Sunday school, 10 a. m.; preaching, 11 a. m., except on first Sunday of the month, when sacrament and social services will be held. Services at home of Elder George E. McConley, sr., 129 Taylor Street. A public place for meeting will be secured as soon as possible. All Saints in vicinity of Sterling are cordially invited. Traveling missionaries are requested to stop and meet with us.

GEORGE E. MCCONLEY, SR.

Our Departed Ones

TRASK.—Burtrum Trask was born December 11, 1895, in Lincoln County, Kansas. Removed with his parents when a child to Oklahoma, near Seiling. Baptized November 26, 1911, by Hubert Case. Died near Seiling, March 7, 1920. Leaves father, mother, 2 sisters, and 3 brothers. Funeral at the Hope Cemetery, in charge of H. F. Durfey, assisted by some others of the Seiling Saints and friends.

GLICK.—Lucy, daughter of J. A. and May C. Fisher-Gunsolley, was born September 15, 1891. Died March 14, 1920, her mother having preceded her in death some 16 years. In 1906 her father married Mattie Brown Wight who became to her a real mother. In 1910 she graduated from the Lamoni high school, later attending Graceland and the University of Iowa, receiving from the last named institution the degree of B. A. in 1916. It was at this institution where she met and later married Professor George G. Glick, and to this union 2 children were born. Baptized in 1900, remaining faithful to the end. Funeral from the church in Lamoni, J. W. Wight preaching, J. F. Garver in charge. She leaves husband, 2 children, father, stepmother, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, a stepbrother, as immediate relatives.

STONER.—Frank Roland Stoner was born April 18, 1892, at Crowland, Ontario. Died January 9, 1920 at Niagara Falls, New York, from toxemia caused by burns received from an accident in his garage. Funeral from the Niagara Falls, Ontario Saints' church. Sermon by William J. Landes. The I. O. O. F. attended in a body and officiated at the cemetery. The wide acquaintance of the brother was evident by the crowded church. He leaves a mother and several brothers and sisters to mourn.

MOLER.—Anna Frances Moler, daughter of Elder James Moler (deceased) and Abigail Moler, was born November 21, 1892, at Limerick, Jackson County, Ohio. When 8 years of age removed with her parents to Holden, Missouri, which was her home continuously with the exception of one year in Creola, Ohio, in 1916-17. Baptized at Holden when 10 years of age. Graduated from Holden high school when seventeen years of age. Up to the time of her death and for some years previous had served as stenographer in the office of the Holden Stake. Died of influenza and pneumonia, February 6, 1920, at her home in Holden, Missouri. Funeral services at the church in charge of Holden Stake officers; sermon by I. M. Smith. Interment in Saints' Cemetery.

ERWIN.—Richard Erwin was born at Clarksville, Texas, December 17, 1858. Died at Wilburton, Oklahoma, March 11, 1920, with influenza. Baptized September 1, 1891, by A. J. Moore, at Manchester, Texas. Leaves 3 brothers and many relatives and friends. Though afflicted for many years he bore his affliction with great patience, and lived a good, Christian life. Funeral at the Saints' church in charge of H. R. Harder and Ed Kelsey. Interment in city cemetery.

BEATY.—Sister Zipporah was born in Rock County, Kentucky, July 27, 1849. Married in Adair County, Kentucky, to John Beaty, in the fall of 1866. Baptized about 1904. Died at Barry, Pike County, Illinois, February 27, 1920. The body was brought to West Plains, Missouri, for burial, and interred in the Union Hill Cemetery. Deceased leaves 4 daughters and 2 sons to mourn. Sermon by A. M. Baker.

CLIFTON.—Emma Orilla Slygh was born in Ohio, March 27, 1860. Married Andrew Johnson, August 2, 1877. To this union one child was born. September 30, 1887, married John T. Clifton, and to this union 7 children were born. Came to Kansas in the early 80's, settling on a homestead in Graham County, and resided there until death. Baptized March 25, 1918, by T. W. Curtis. A firm believer, and devoted mother. Died March 16, 1920. Leaves husband, 8 children, 8 grandchildren, and a host of friends. Sermon by M. L. Shoemaker at the home. Interment in Lucerne Cemetery.

BOOKER.—Olive Edna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charley Ruhle, of Vanleave, Mississippi, was born January 24, 1889. Married Grover C. Booker, October 1906. To them were born

3 children. United with the church when quite young. Died March 4, 1920. Leaves to mourn husband, 3 children, father, mother, and many relatives and friends. Funeral at parents' home. Sermon by A. G. Miller, assisted by N. L. Booker. Interment in Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

FARR.—William Henry Farr, born in Elgin, Illinois, November 1, 1846, died in Cameron, Missouri, March 5, 1920. Married Hattie Hurd, February 14, 1871. Two children blessed this union, Fred B. and Lulu M. both remaining to mourn. The mother preceded the father in death. Married Julia Carpenter September 6, 1917. Baptized in 1903, ordained a deacon the following year and later a teacher. His life was an honor to the church. Services at church, J. W. Roberts in charge, sermon by R. S. Budd. Interred at Green, Iowa.

DELONG.—James Madison, infant son of I. N. DeLong and Dola Fletcher DeLong, died February 19, at Wiley, Colorado. Sermon by M. F. Ralston at the Saints' church. Little Jamie, with his bright ways and sunny face, is missed by more than his immediate family.

SNETHEN.—Harriet Tolbert Seymour was born May 29, 1868, in Harrison County, Missouri. Married Joseph Snethen March 21, 1886. To this union were born 10 children, 3 of whom preceded her in death. Those who with her husband survive are: John W., Ananias, Theora, Ruth, Edith, Maud, and Mary. Also a little boy four years old whom they had taken to raise. Leaves 3 sisters and a great many friends. Was a member of the church and faithful unto death. Had resided in the neighborhood where she was born except one year. Sermon by Hubert Case, at the residence.

KELSO.—Margaret Ann Kelso was born in Ireland, July 29, 1844. Died in Chicago at the home of her daughter, Sister H. P. W. Kier, January 8, 1920, of pneumonia. A devout saint for over forty years. Was the mother of the late William Kelso, who passed this life a few days before his mother. She leaves 5 daughters, Mrs. John Lilley, Mrs. William Chapman, Mrs. Cora Keir, Mrs. Daisy Bradbrook, and Mrs. Maud Frantz; also 50 grand and great-grandchildren. Funeral at Central Chicago Church. Sermon by Ward L. Christy.

HOKE.—Eustace Guy Hoke was born August 12, 1872, at Monticello, Arkansas. Died February 3, 1920, at Canon City, Colorado. Death resulted from pneumonia. On November 29, 1919, married Mary E. Weise, formerly connected with the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri. Short funeral service in charge of E. J. Williams was held at Canon City, February 4. Interment at Monticello, Arkansas.

STONE.—Sarah Emily was born June 15, 1872, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. On June 24, 1896, married John Wallwork Stone. To this union were born 3 sons and one daughter. The husband and father passed to the beyond several years ago. Baptized at Philadelphia, January 31, 1892, by H. Robinson. March 11 she became seriously ill with chronic endo-corditis, and died March 15. Besides her own family, she leaves widowed mother, 3 brothers and 2 sisters to mourn. Loved and honored by all who knew her. Services conducted at the First Philadelphia Church by William Osler, assisted by Bishop J. Zimmerman. Interment in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

FARNHAM.—Mrs. Sarah Smith Farnham was born in England, July 29, 1842. Died in Woodland, California, February 18, 1920. Baptized when a young girl, and lived up to its teachings all her life. She was the widow of the late Elder Richard M. Smith, who died in 1886, in San Juan. In 1906 she married Daniel Farnham, who died five years ago.

SCOTT.—Addie I. Scott passed away suddenly of heart failure at her home in Seattle, Washington, on Saturday, March 13, 1920, at the age of 53 years, 6 months, 12 days. The remains were taken to Snohomish, Washington for burial. Sister Scott was firmly fixed in the gospel faith. Sermon by J. M. Terry. She leaves as chief mourners 3 children, 2 of whom were with her at her death.

NEWS AND COMMENT

DICK.—Alice May Dick, after a long struggle against disease, passed peacefully away at her home in Seattle, Washington, at the age of 31 years, 7 months, and 29 days. She leaves to mourn, father, mother, grandmother, one brother, and 3 sisters. She was kind and gentle, and begot to herself many friends. Sermon at undertaking chapel, by J. M. Terry.

FAULK.—James S. Faulk was born December 30, 1835. Baptized August 14, 1868, by T. W. Wadel, at Goldwater Branch, Florida. Died March 9, 1920. Leaves 2 sons, 23 grandchildren, 29 great-grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn. Services held at the grave. Sermon by R. M. King at the Grand Bay Cemetery.

An Exposure of Utah Mormonism

The following is taken from the Akron, (Ohio,) Sunday Times, of November 16, 1919, having been sent in by Brother J. J. Dildine, who furnishes the names of the librarians who published the notice and adds that in addition to the books mentioned the librarians have placed about two hundred tracts with the public, such as the Corner Stones of Utah Mormonism and All Brighamite Roads Lead to Polygamy. The HERALD and Ensign are received regularly at the library.

The statement was formulated and published while Mrs. Sheppard, the notorious anti-Mormon lecturer was making her usual indiscriminate attacks on what she calls Mormonism.

We all appreciate what such fairness and courage means to our work and wish there were many more as insistent for the promulgation of the truth.

AKRON, OHIO, November 1, 1919.

To Whom It May Concern: The writer, librarian of the Akron, Ohio, Public Library, does hereby recommend, after careful consideration and personal investigation, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, all books and tracts published by them at their Publishing House, known as the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, as reading material for all readers and students of the Scriptures desiring light upon the same.

As there are many who do not know the difference between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," the latter being so often mentioned as the "Mormon Church," for one, I will say, that I do not believe there is any relation existing between the two organizations at the present time, and from what I have been able to learn never did exist.

I therefore recommend to all public librarians, any books or tracts, published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; most of all the following, as they give the most complete set of facts and arguments against "Utah Mormonism," that can be obtained and further they are educational and give the true status of the menace we all desire to eradicate from this nation, namely, "MORMONISM," and that the members will gladly furnish to all librarians these books which I have added to the Akron, Ohio, Library and which I consider an asset to the community as well as to the library. The books which deal most directly upon the subject above mentioned are as follows:

The Church History (four volumes).

The Book of Mormon (not the Utah Church Edition, but the book as printed by the Reorganized Church from the original manuscripts.)

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed.

Trusting all public librarians will avail themselves of the opportunity of getting these books, which fill a long felt need, I hereby sincerely recommend the same to you.

CLINTON.—Religio, at Nevada, Missouri, district officers in charge. Met coordinately with the conference. Delegates to

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The State of New York is to have in operation this summer a daylight saving statute, which will take effect soon and continue till fall. A number of the larger cities of the East have in the past done this, and will no doubt continue.

The second plebescite in Denmark to decide the statue of the Schleswig zone resulted in a large vote in favor of German control. The important city of Flensburg is affected by the decision.

William L. Ettinger, superintendent of schools in New York, is authority for the statement that more than 223,000 children were turned out of schools between January 28 and February 17, and 115,000 sent home in a week later because of teacher shortage. Doctor John H. Finley, state commissioner of education in New York, urges a forty per cent raise in teachers' salaries of the lower rank, 30 per cent of those higher, and 20 per cent for those of the best paid positions.

A church alliance representing seventy per cent of the existing Protestant churches has been formed with the indorsement of government officials and extensive funds appropriated to fight the red propaganda in America.

Doctor Ernest Martin Hopkins, president of Dartmouth University, believes education of the worker will solve many of our present industrial difficulties. He attributes a great deal of the distrust on the part of the worker to the fact that he does not know the use to which his product is put. Doctor Hopkins says that seventy-five per cent of his graduates enter the business world, as compared with twenty-five per cent ten years ago.

In the vote taken in New Zealand in December on the prohibition question, the prohibition vote was the largest, but by the injection into the campaign of the issue of state purchase of the liquor industry, an absolute majority was not obtained, being lost by a comparatively small number. There seems no doubt that if the vote had been confined to a direct yes or no on the subject there would have been no question about it. Another vote will be taken in 1922.

Representative Ernest R. Ackerman has introduced a resogeneral convention elected. Velma Duzan was selected as member gospel literature board to finish unexpired term of Ada Hughes, resigned. Conference adjourned to meet with the Taberville Saints, May 28, 29, 30. Helen Hawley, secretary.

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—With Stockton Branch, February 28 and 29. District Presidency, C. W. Hawkins, H. J. Davison and A. J. Damron in charge. There was a good representation of delegates from all the branches in the district, with one exception. Reports were received from all district officers showing that the work in the different departments of church activities is in good, competent hands. There was a full report from all of the branches, indicating that the work is in a healthy condition throughout the district. At the election of district officers, the incumbent presidency and nearly all other officers were continued for the ensuing year. All of the branch presidents submitted spiritual reports of their respective branches. Also a full report was received from the ministry, both local and general. A full delegation was elected to General Conference. It was voted to pay the expenses of District President C. W. Hawkins as one of the delegates to and from General Conference. Preaching by M. A. McConley, A. C. Barmore, John Ely and W. A. Brooner. Conference and conventions adjourned to meet on reunion grounds at Irvington in August. John A. Lawn, secretary, Hollister, California.

lution in Congress which proposes to tax all matches one cent each hundred, to be paid by the person procuring same from the retail dealer. It is said that such a tax would raise $12,000,000 annually, and may be applied to compensating the men who served in the World War.

The "moonlight schools," which have done so much good for the mountaineers of Kentucky have been denied the State aid they so much deserve. The rules committee of the Kentucky legislature voted against consideration of a bill designed to continue the work. The women of the State sought an appropriation of $75,000 to provide better facilities for the stamping out of illiteracy among adults.

Three bills have been introduced in the Senate, which will provide for repeal of the federal fuel control, for the appointment of a federal coal commissioner at $10,000 a year, and a freight rate on coal thirty per cent lower in summer than in winter. It is estimated that the saving by this latter provision would total $1,000,000,000 a year for the American people.

The housing problem is evidently world wide. On every side one learns of serious shortage in places in which families may live. Not only is the situation bad, but there is nothing in sight to imply that it will be better. The prices of building material and of labor are so universally high that only the most courageous care to risk so prodigious an investment as compared with the result to be attained.

CHURCH NEWS

AN INTERESTING LETTER

[The following letter by one of the brethren closely in touch with the situation in Independence was sent us Saturday evening, and though some of the items are covered in other departments, we are giving it for the general news it conveys.—EDITORS.]

So far Walter W. Smith has given five lectures, J. A. Koehler two, Elbert A. Smith two, J. A. Gillen two and Bishop B. R. McGuire one. The latter gave his and left immediately for New York, as his mother-in-law, Mrs. George Potts, died to-day. He will give one more after he returns.

Word from President F. M. Smith was that he would be here the first. He is scheduled for five lectures. J. A. Gillen has two yet, S. A. Burgess one, and J. F. Garver one.

The attendance is wonderful and the interest is at a high pitch. Every man is taking notes and they have no hesitancy in asking questions. However, there has been a tendency to carry the questioning too far and a seeming effort on the part of some to discredit the meeting. There are two lectures a day, one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon, and they run from one and a half to two hours. It is the most remarkable stimulus that our men have received in years.

They gather around in groups and talk for hours on the subjects under discussion at the lecture hour.

The evangelistic services are proving a wonderful success. In spite of heavy rains all the meeting houses have been filled every night and large numbers of nonmembers are present and interested.

The missionaries are doing fine work preaching, and the entire community of Saints is back of this fine church enterprise. The city is being tracted every day, and no house missed. More than this, display space is taken in the daily papers, and publicity given in every way.

Elder Charles Derry, known to many of his friends as "Father Derry," is now so ill that he is hovering between life and death at his home in Wodbine, Iowa.

Bishop McGuire returned to Independence, March 22.

The Board of Publication met March 23.

At the opening of the preconference lectures men were to be seen from the extreme East, as George Robley, jr., of Atleboro, C. H. Rich, of Boston—but located the past year in Brooklyn, New York, and C. Ed Miller, from Providence, Rhode Island. And also men from the extreme West, as A. C. Barmore, from Santa Rosa, California, and David E. Dower, from Los Angeles. The attendance from the stakes is not so good as might have been expected. Local elections at this time of year doubtless affected attendance of many who would otherwise have been present, and necessary work before conference holds many.

On March 20 Joseph R. Lambert and wife both entered the Independence Sanitarium with the influenza.

Doctor G. L. Harrington and Doctor W. E. Messenger, who have been seriously ill the past month, have now recovered sufficiently to return to work in the Sanitarium.

Each day a new announcement is distributed over Independence of the series of sermons being given in the various churches. The title of the evening discourse is inserted on the first page, with an appropriate illustration. The second and third pages discuss the evening theme. The fourth page gives meeting places, speakers, and list of subjects yet to be discussed.

There is considerable interest in the local town election at Lamoni on the 29th. Two tickets are in the field and a heavy vote is being registered at this writing. The mayor, and five town councilmen are among those to be elected, and though there are no platforms enunciated, there is the usual amount of local agitation on the part of those interested.

We are pleased to note that the Ensign Office is to have a new press. They have been needing such equipment for some time, and we are glad they are in a position to make this much-needed improvement.

A letter from Bishop May reports the death of Patriarch James Baty, of the British Mission. The funeral was held March 3.

Elder Burgess has been recovering remarkably following his unusually severe operation. He left the Sanitarium not long afterward and took private rooms where he and wife and baby are conveniently near the Sanitarium for his regular treatment till all traces of the wound are perfectly healed. He will no doubt be returning to Lamoni following the General Conference.

The priesthood of the Wheeling District send us resolutions of condolence concerning the recent demise of Elder O. L. Martin, who has been a zealous and appreciated worker in the district, in church and Sunday school. We can ill afford to lose such good men from the ranks of our church workers.

We are pleased to note that the author of "High Spots in Ohio History," a series of short articles appearing in Ohio papers, has made a correction of some misstatements of his when they were brought to his attention by some of our brethren. This emphasizes the need of being more aggressive in our informational propaganda work, that such men may have at their disposal reliable material rather than only a few misleading works. We must do our part in these things if we expect justice.

Elder J. C. Chrestensen has been appointed by B. F. Brown as general solicitor for Eastern Oklahoma District.

A letter from Elder R. L. Fulk, from Malad, Idaho, reports the baptism on the 7th of fourteen at that place, seven adults and seven younger people. Three of the most substantial men of the town were among them. Many are interested and will no doubt come into the church. There have also been some baptisms previous to this time, and the work in Utah looks good. Brother Fulk is so busy he wonders if he will have time to attend General Conference.

Elder A. C. Barmore is holding a series of meetings in Santa Rosa, California, in which are a number of illustrated lectures which should prove a drawing card. His announced subjects are all timely and applicable to present-day needs.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Toronto, Ontario. Brother Williams closed his series of eighteen lectures at the Allen Theater March 14, with, "If Christ came to Toronto as his finale." The season's work as a whole was a decided improvement on that of last year, due in a measure to Brother Williams's untiring effort to break down the barriers of prejudice erected as the result of the Torontonians apostasy. He leaves immediately for General Conference. Is he coming back? We hope so. At a banquet given in his honor three hundred people partook of the good things of life. "God send you back to me" was the closing "Him." At our recent quarterly business meeting the envelope system was adopted for branch finances.

Seattle, Washington. The late conference was small but choice. The sacramental services are excellent in attendance and spirit. The work in Everett is determinedly moving along, Pastor J. M. Terry going there soon to perform a baptism. The Brenerton mission is moving on. F. W. Holman held a sacramental service there on the 14th. Saints are looking in wonderment toward conference. Robert J. Holman will be in attendance, and also Richard Hartnell and wife. S. S. Smith, our missionary, is already on the ground.

First Chicago. An interesting sketch was presented at the institute on the South Side in the form of a historical drama, in which various members of the priesthood took part, representing several court scenes in which Joseph Smith the Seer was tried and found innocent of the charges preferred. It was an excellent feature for Saints as well as nonmembers. The Woman's Auxiliary here has been reorganized with Sister Striblin as president, and they are beginning the study of "food and the body." Leaflets covering the course have been distributed. The better school contest is progressing nicely. Two sisters who were delayed by poor car service took a taxi and arrived in time but breathless. The girls of the church presented recently a one-act comedy: "How a woman keeps a secret," together with a short program for the benefit of the reunion ground fund. It was a success, and indications are that a goodly sum was taken in. The attendance was practically two thirds nonmembers.

First Branch, Chicago. The institute was well attended from the district and thoroughly enjoyed. Sermon subjects recently have been: "The fulfilling of the times of the Gentiles," and "The work of the plow." The priesthood have discussed "Some phases of Zion development."

Grand Rapids, Michigan. Two ordinations on the 14th: Ernest Shoemaker to office of teacher, and Roy McCaig as deacon.

Pontiac, Michigan. The presidency of the district, consisting of Elders James Gault, Ray Bennett and Matthew Liston spent Sunday, February 29 with Pontiac Saints. Some fine sermons were delivered on tithing and faith. The woman's department are announced to hold an apple pie social, with a prize for best poem composed from the name of an apple. The Religio is steadily increasing under the presidency of Carlile Whitehead. A picture of the members of the glee club, with their musical instruments will be sent to the Religio Exhibition to be held at Independence during General Conference.

Fall River, Massachusetts. During early March Elder C. Ed. Miller visited the branch and gave several illustrated lectures, using the stereopticon. His subjects were confirmatory of the Book of Mormon. A fair number of nonmembers attended and the lectures were appreciated by all. The Saints packed nine eleven-pound bags of clothing for Palestine Saints, it costing $2.20 each to mail them. The Temple Builders are preparing towels and pillow cases for the Children's Home in Lamoni. The place has been visited lately by Elders H. A. Koehler and J. F. Sheehy, the latter then on his way to General Conference.

Plano, Illinois. Brother and Sister Ward L. Christy were visitors from February 26 to 29, giving good instruction along the line of the different auxiliaries. Elder G. T. Griffiths called on Elder Eli M. Wildermuth, one of our old-time missionaries last week. Our members attending the institute meetings in Chicago report fine and instructive meetings. Elder Jerome E. Wildermuth, of Fargo, North Dakota, stopped here on his way to General Conference to visit his father, and preached an instructive sermon. Several of our members will attend General Conference.

Lamoni, Iowa. The usual activities are characterizing the community. The district or group divisions are being visited, encouraged and instructed by the various members of the priesthood assigned in charge, with good results. The college students are beginning to vision the end of the year, and one cannot but see many changes in the attitude and demeanor of those who entered in the fall. College closes for a spring vacation on the 5th and a large number of the students are expecting to attend the sessions of General Conference. The class in religious education will likely attend in a body. Three of those assigned to speak at the Independence churches on the afternoon of the 4th are members of this class. The choir gives a half-hour concert on the evening of the first Sunday of each month, and the junior chorus, composed of over a hundred children, give a similar contribution on the evening of the last Sunday of each month, assisted by the local orchestra. On the evening of the 28th, Elder J. F. Garver, occupied, with a presentation easily comprehended by the children and the large audience in attendance. The junior meetings held each second and fourth Sundays for the children and young people averaged an attendance of about 135 the past year and the results are gratifying. The Religio reports having reached over 600 people the past week, with its regular Sunday evening session, the motion pictures on Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, and the weekly meeting of the boy scouts, with a membership of over 50. The Sunday school attendance recently ran over 600, with an average of perhaps 550.

A goodly number of our news items in all departments were crowded out at the last minute last week by the late arrival of conference announcements.

Printer's Ink Has Been a Loyal Ally to Our Cause!

Almost as soon as our Church was established in 1830, a printing press was set up and the good news of salvation was published broadcast to the world.

Mobs came and the press shared like fate with its owners and all were cast into the street together, but truth could not be downed by violence and as soon as a refuge was established again, again was a press set up to give printed wings to the message.

Thus it has been through the troubled early years of the Church and through the more prosperous times since, the press has always been a loyal ally to our cause.

The power of publicity is recognized to-day as never before and our mission in the world is to carry by printed word the Gospel of Christ to all who will be glad for the tidings.

We are not missionaries in the field, but back at the base of operations our presses are busy long hours of the day grinding out essential weapons for the Christian warfare and our books and tracts support the missionaries in the field as well as stimulate the Saints at home.

Even as Graceland College teaches the use of books to its students, we would provide the books themselves. That is our ideal; whatever your book requirements may be, let us help you to obtain them. Write for free catalog.

SCENE OF THE FIRST VISION

THE GROVE—THE YOUTH—THE VISION

By Vida E. Smith—Granddaughter of Joseph the Martyr.

He stood in the grove—now called sacred,
And over him bent the blue sky!
And the sun of a glorious April
Stood burning and splendid on high,
The green trees, their strong hands out-spreading,
Invoked Nature's blessing and gift;
And the herbs, and the low, gentle grasses
Felt the call of the springtime uplift.

He heard as a sound strange and broken
His voice in first audible prayer;
For to ask of our Father in heaven,
The lad of Palmyra knelt there.
Long ago in a land called Judea,
An angel had stood by a tomb,
And answered the friends who came seeking
Their Lord in Death's shadow-filled room.

Your Lord is not here—"He is risen."
Go tell the disciples their friend
Will meet them where sunshine is falling,
For the power of the grave hath an end.
He met them—he left them, but ever
It is upward their eyes lift to greet
This Lord who will speak to his loved ones
And minister what shall be meet.

So the lad with his grove for a temple
Looked up to the vault of far blue,
And away from the gloom of men's priestcraft,
When he sought for the way that was true.
What though Aaron's rod had stood budding?
And a bush that was burned not consumed?
What though from the tombs of the ancients

Were the records of great things exhumed?

For back of the law lived the giver,
And back of king death and the tomb
Moved the power with its love all incarnate
That wakened the first Easter bloom.
That power in the sun in yon heaven,
In the tide of the deep restless sea;
In the earth, and beneath and above it;
The power that was and shall be.

In that voice that could comfort or counsel,
Or soften the sin-hardened heart,
Could come to the meek and believing,
And wisdom for ages impart.
When with sensitized soul tingling, eager,
And the white flame of youthful desire
Burning out other hopes and ambitions
In the heat of its prayer-fed fire

Came this lad, all untutored, untraveled,
To the grove where the spring breezes blew,
He heard from the heavens a message
That changed all the world that he knew.
A messenger stood 'neath the branches,
In a conduit made of pure light,
And spoke to the suppliant gently,
Explaining the way that was right.

And his voice filled the world with its music,
And his face was Divinity's mold,
Growing fair and all clear as earth faded,
Shut out by the curtains of gold.
Incarnated power sent its voltings,
To the innermost depths of the lad;
And forever thereafter it marked him—
This great testimony he had.

Could he tell Christ's disciples, where were they

To meet him, as in the old time;
The creeds of all men were as stubble;
'Tis the touch of the Spirit Divine
That shall bring forth the great restoration,
And plant in the heart of mankind
The brotherhood Christ hath endowed
With laws that eternally bind.

So it was from that sun-blessed Maytime,
From that hour, and that youth in the grove,
Came a message like that in Judea—
Go tell his disciples who love
The lessons he taught and the order
That Jesus the Master set forth,
Take up the old way of communing,
And heaven will bend to the earth.

In like manner—glory encircled,
And sweet and serene with God's love,
The gospel in fullness he planted
From the earth never more to remove.
Ninety and ten—have been garnered
The years, since that morning in May
When the lad from Palmyra came fearless,
And trusting to learn of the way.

And the message, still bright as the Maytime—
And as warm as the heart of a youth,
Has encircled the earth with its promise
Of law and of Zion in truth.
Also, the world shall be lifted and leavened,
By grace be enriched with much power,
When the Infinite giveth his vision
To each youth—in his grove—in his hour.

The Restoration, A la Milton

By Audentia Anderson—Granddaughter of Joseph the Martyr

"Hail, Holy Light! whose beams first shone
And didst illumine man's initial state
With glory radiate! Come to my aid,
Who, 'mid darkness Stygian, and 'fusion dire,
Dost 'voke thy powers' help to afford
In my dilemma sore! About me thick,
Mental clouds obscure the sun
Of Heaven's proud effulgence! Dismay
And soul's distress oppress me fell
Not knowing paths more safe, or laws
In harmony with thy will or kind decree,
That I might justify mine own heart's wish!"

Thus on his knees did one pure youth
The Maker and Diffuser of strength implore
What sense of new joy, of 'bedience rare
Accepted up on high, midst rejoicings sweet,
Might in some goodly measure to him vouchsafe,
Since long his soul had traveled in its search

For truth and right—so long bedimmed

That man had lost what erst had been most dear—

The favor and approval of his God.

So plead; and while thus he poured

At mercy's throne his 'plaining
off'ring up,

There came about him, shining from above,

A radiance, clothing him with starry beams
And confidence supreme. Upward he yearned,
To see, a-near, and standing in the air,
Two radiant persons, of aspect calm
And lordly, as of them who, in circles high,
Their regal course are wont to move,
All-glorious, confident and wise!

To them thus the youth addressed:
"O, ethereal visitants from other realm!
To me thy coming joy doth bring, and shame as well;
For all too clear I feel mine own remiss
And know my life is far from censure free,
Strive how I will to perfect it! On me, now
Thy pitying glances turn, and give
My heart new favor and new recompense!
Guide me, what way I now am lost
Amid all chaos and confusion grypt;
For incomplete I find my falt'ring mind
True values out of false to mould
And wisely choose my path!"

JOSEPH SMITH'S BIRTHPLACE, LOOKING SOUTH, WINDSOR COUNTY, VERMONT

To which, fair speaking, one did thus:
"God ever gives to man the food divine
When humbly he such food implore
With intent it to use aright. Know thou
O, blessed youth! that ever is the Father
More ready to bestow than sinful men
Are ready to receive. Wrongly have they Construed His good to them, and by their creeds
Have sought to justify their dark designs,
And thus have far removed from Him!

"Join none of them; they all are wrong;
Forms they have, of worship and of praise,
Fair semblance of the power divine, but oh,
How have they all His love ignored,
And all His counsels brought to naught!
His Spirit dwells not there; their sophistries
Still serve to injure mine elect

And darken all the minds of men Unto their great undoing, dividing all
From that sweet Comforter of Peace!

"But keep yourself from them, fair youth,
And, seeking first God's great empiric throne
With clean hands and heart contrite,
Joy, mixed oft with grief tho' over all supreme Shall come to thee,

for that Celestial One
His great commission shall entrust to thee,
Even to restore that long-lost light
Unto a darkened and dissembling world,
Groping in blindness gross, and proud conceit!"

Thus spake the seraph bright, and Softly gath'ring up the radiant light
About the shining forms serene,
They faded gently from his sight,
Returning straight to those choice realms
Where, eternal, unchanging and sublime,
In regal beauty and omniscience,
The gracious Ruler of the Universe
Most sovereign reigns, His glories sung
By choirs irradiate, their hymns of joy
And sacred bliss, filling all Heaven
With high extol, and praises adequate!

NUMBER 14

Centennial Number

BY S. A. BURGESS

One hundred years ago this spring Joseph Smith went out into the woods to pray and received his "first vision."

It is of great interest now to review the account of that vision, and realize how many have been the changes in creeds and doctrines during the past one hundred years.

Again it is light come into the world driving the darkness of ignorance away—light shining forth in darkness. The past century has shown the most remarkable progress in human thought and understanding of the world, and moreover of any within the realms of history.

In every field of human endeavor the progress has been remarkable, and the development of the United States also noteworthy.

Part of these developments are discussed in this number. It would not be possible to cover the field in one issue. But through the year the theme will be continued in other articles from time to time.

In commemoration of the same event, special sermons have been provided for the Conference, and a two weeks, missionary effort has been conducted in all the churches of Independence.

The First Vision of Joseph Smith

The account of this event as told by Joseph Smith himself.

"I was at this time in my fifteenth year. My father's family was proselyted to the Presbyterian faith, and four of them joined that church, namely, my mother, Lucy, my brothers Hyrum and Samuel Harrison, and my sister Sophronia.

The Religious Conflict

"During this time of great excitement my mind was called up to serious reflection and great uneasiness; but though my feelings were deep, and often pungent, still I kept myself aloof from all those parties, though I attended their several meetings as often as occasion would permit. But in process of time my mind became somewhat partial to the Methodist sect, and I felt some desire to be united with them, but so great was the confusion and strife among the different denominations, that it was impossible for a person, young as I was, and so unacquainted with men and things, to come to any certain conclusion who was right and who was wrong. My mind at different times was greatly excited, the cry and tumult were so great and incessant. The Presbyterians were most decided against the Baptists and Methodists, and used all their powers of either reason or sophistry to prove their error, or at least to make the people think they were in error. On the other hand, the Baptists and Methodists, in their turn, were equally zealous to establish their own tenets and disprove all others.

"In the midst of this war of words, and tumult of opinions, I often said to myself, What is to be done? Who of all these parties are right? or, are they all wrong together? If any one of them be right, which is it? and how shall I know it?"

"If Any of You Lack Wisdom"

"While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads, 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth unto all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given unto him.' Never did any passage of Scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. I reflected on it again and again, knowing that if any person needed wisdom from God, I did, for how to act I did not know, and unless I could get more wisdom than I then had, would never know; for the teachers of religion of the different sects understood the same passage so differently, as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible. At length I come to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs, that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to ask of God, concluding that if he gave wisdom to them that lacked wisdom, and would give liberally, and not upbraid, I might venture. So, in accordance with this my determination to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of 1820. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt; for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally. After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me, and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue, so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction. But exerting all my powers to call upon God; to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair, and abandon myself to destruction—not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such a marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being; just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, pointing to the other, 'This is my beloved Son; hear him!'"

Which Church to Join?

"My object in going to inquire of the Lord, was to know which of all these sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner, therefore, did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right—for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong—and which I should join. I was answered that I should join none of them, for they were all wrong; and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt. 'They draw near me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.' He again forbade me to join any of them; and many other things did he say unto me which I cannot write at this time. When I came to myself again, I found myself lying on my back looking up into heaven. Some few days after I had this vision, I happened to be in company with one of the Methodist preachers who was very active in the before-mentioned religious excitement, and conversing with him upon the subject of religion, I took occasion to give him an account of the vision which I had had. I was greatly surprised at his behavior; he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the Devil; that there was no such thing as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there never would be any more of them. I soon found, however, that my telling the story had excited a great deal of prejudice against me among professors of religion, and was the cause of great persecution, which continued to increase; and though I was an obscure boy, only between fourteen and fifteen years of age, and my circumstances in life such as to make a boy of no consequence in the world, yet men of high standing would take notice sufficient to excite the public mind against me and create a hot persecution; and this was common among all the sects—all united to persecute me. It has often caused me serious reflection, both then and since, how very strange it was that an obscure boy, of a little over fourteen years of age—and one, too, who was doomed to the necessity of obtaining a scanty maintenance by his daily labor, should be thought a character of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the great ones of the most popular sects of the day, so as to create in them a spirit of the hottest persecution and reviling. But strange or not, so it was, and was often a cause of great sorrow to myself. However, it was, nevertheless, a fact that I had had a vision. I have thought since, that I felt much like Paul when he made his defense before King Agrippa, and related the account of the vision he had when he 'saw a light, and heard a voice'; but still there were but few who believed him. Some said he was dishonest, others said he was mad, and he was ridiculed and reviled; but all this did not destroy the reality of his vision. He had seen a vision—he knew he had—and all the persecution under heaven could not make it otherwise; and though they should persecute him unto death, yet he knew, and would know unto his latest breath, that he had both seen a light and heard a voice speaking to him, and all the world could not make him think or believe otherwise. So it was with me. I had actually seen a light and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak unto me, or one of them did; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely, for so saying, I was led to say in my heart, why persecute for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision; and who am I that I can withstand God? or why does the world think to make me deny what I've actually seen? For I had seen a vision. I knew it, and I knew that God knew it; and I could not deny it, neither dare I do it—at least, I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation."—Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 727. Eight Great Religious Ideas Advocated By Joseph Smith

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

They were ideas that we have appreciated more and more as time has marched steadily on, and there has been no occasion to recede from our faith in any of them.

It will be remembered that Joseph Smith was in his fifteenth year when his first vision was received, early in the spring of 1820. His second vision came three years later. Contrast the importance, magnitude, and startling originality of the ideas contained in these visions, or growing out of them, with the youth, inexperience, and alleged ignorance of the boy who received them.

The first of these to which we naturally refer was that of renewed revelation. The religious world was almost a unit in teaching the idea that revelation had ended long centuries before, when John saw the closing scenes of his wonderful vision on Patmos. No other idea was dreamed of or suggested.

Yet like a flash out of the sky came to this boy the unique, dramatic, startling idea, of renewed revelation—God speaking again to men, angels coming to earth again, just as in all past ages when God had prophets on earth.

How many boys fifteen years of age are thinking such thoughts? How many would grasp an idea of such magnitude, and so adverse to the settled convictions of the world?

And how well this idea was unfolded! Had his revelations when presented been of such character as one would expect from an unlettered, backwoods boy, they need not have caused anyone a moment's anxiety. But this boy was able to bring forth revelation that agitated the whole religious world; that set every existing denomination of the old order against him; revelations that were in fact far beyond his power to conceive of himself.

Here was one, who, as Walter Rausehenbusch says of the ancient prophets, "went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world, and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."

Idea Number Two

The next great idea was that of the Book of Mormon. Robert G. Ingersoll said that the Christian God was ignorant of the existence of America until Columbus told him of it. The Book of Mormon challenges that idea. Here was a boy who conceived the idea of producing a book that would give a history of the peoples and races that inhabited the continents of North and South America during the dim ages of the past. This book was to set forth the remarkable fact that God knew of these people, and that Jesus visited them and told them the story of the cross. It was to be revealed by the hands of an angel, and to be translated by the power of God. What a unique conception! (For convenience of expression we say that Joseph Smith conceived these ideas. Our position on that point will appear later.)

How well this idea was executed! When his book appeared had it been an ephemeral thing, as we might expect it to be, coming from the hand of an uneducated, backwoods boy, nearly one hundred years ago, no one need have given it a second thought. It would have died of its own futility. It would have fallen of its own weakness.

The fact that the brightest and brainiest men of nearly all denominations have given their brains and their time and their money in a crusade against it, and societies have been formed to combat it, and learned men of no religious persuasion have attacked it, is evidence that it contained a surprising force and virility. Otherwise these men pay themselves a poor compliment, if they are to allege that they have found it necessary to unite their genius and money in a war against a weak and empty sham. Men do not go out with a cannon to hunt a mouse.

Strangely enough, archæology has come to the aid of the book, and the ruined cities of those people of whom the book tells have been discovered in the regions where the Book of Mormon story placed them. And early Spanish explorers, to their surprise, found in South America the cross as a sacred emblem, mute testimony of the truth of the statement that Jesus came to the Western World and told those people the story of the cross.

Idea Number Three

The twelfth chapter of the first Corinthian letter, and the fourth chapter of Ephesians state as plainly as anything can be stated that God set in his church, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Other officers, such as a part of the New Testament church. There were churches, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, with elders, and some with pastors, and some with deacons, and others with evangelists. But nowhere was one with all of the officers that God set in his church.

But this young man conceived the daring idea of organizing a church that should contain all of the God-appointed officers. Among the many church builders, he alone proposed to build after the original pattern.

How well his plan was carried out! When they met to organize the church, on the sixth day of April, 1830, there were only six members present—only half enough to fill the quorum of twelve apostles, which was to be a part of the proposed church structure.

It did not seem probable that one with the limited influence and resources that Joseph Smith then had would ever convert enough men to fill his proposed offices.

But Jesus said that he would "draw" men unto him. Jesus was in this movement, and presently his power demonstrated itself. Men came, one from here, another from yonder, by ones and twos, by scores and hundreds, and as God designated them they were ordained and set in order, until the organization was complete, with its prophets, apostles, seventies, bishops, evangelists, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, "all as at the first." Every officer mentioned in the New Testament as a part of the church, was in his place and at work. The great idea had taken concrete shape, as foreshadowed in the vision where it was said God was about to do a wonderful work.

A Scriptural System of Belief

Many efforts have been made to formulate a satisfactory creed or confession of faith. Resultant creeds have always been inadequate, and time has shown the need of revision; so that when the Lord told Joseph Smith that all the creeds were wrong, he stated a fact that time has demonstrated.

All of this labored creed-drafting is superfluous. In the sixth chapter of Hebrews there is a divinely stated system of belief. Paul, a special, chosen ambassador of Christ, states the principles of the doctrine of Christ as he learned them from Jesus Christ himself. He says that the principles of the doctrine are faith in God, repentance from dead works, baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and the eternal judgment.

Here we have six cardinal principles, based on the existence of God and the Messiahship of Jesus Christ, that are simple, yet all-inclusive. They take a man from the very dawn of faith, up through the ashes of repentance, baptism in water, the baptism of the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands of God's ministry, and on through the resurrection, into the presence of God in the great judgement. They cover the whole Christian experience.

There it was as clear as crystal, waiting through all the Dark Ages for some church builder to adopt it as a confession of faith, yet all had overlooked it.

Joseph Smith, with an idea bigger and better than any that had come to any creed-maker, cut the Gordian knot of all creed-making perplexities, and adopted this God-given statement of faith as his system of belief.

The Blessings of Primitive Christianity

Associated with these teachings he conceived the idea that the church of to-day should enjoy the blessings of old, healings, miracles, prophecies, tongues, and all the great manifestations mentioned in Mark 16, 1 Corinthians 12 and many other places, as a part of the divine system.

This was a startling innovation in an age in which nearly all religious teachers of every cult were agreed that such things were to be enjoyed no more.

Yet how well the idea succeeded. Scarcely was the church organized before men and women began to prophesy, and speak in tongues; and the sick were healed. And that has continued. Probably seventy-five per cent (perhaps more) of the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to-day can testify that at some time they have been healed or have seen others healed. And some of these testimonies are of a very remarkable nature.

Since that day great cults have sprung into existence, teaching divine healing. It was a big and brilliant idea that came into the mind of this youth, anticipating them all, and including divine healing in his program, thus squaring himself with scriptural teaching on another important point.

The Priesthood Restored

Priesthood was a clearly defined institution in both the Mosaic Church and the Christian Church. Men did not act without authority in heavenly things. They were duly called of God and regularly ordained by those having the priesthood. Thus authority went down from man to man until lost by reason of sin or apostasy.

How is it with the popular churches of to-day? The protestant churches unite in condemning the Catholic Church as an apostate organization, yet if the ministers of any of the Protestant churches attempt to trace their priesthood back, it will lead them, sooner or later, to the Catholic clergy.

So, to avoid this issue, if such clergyman is asked concerning his authority, the chances are that he will quote the injunction: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

But men do not get authority, they do not get priesthood, by reading a passage of Scripture. As well claim a seat in the United States Senate by reason of having read the Constitution. Priesthood presupposes a call from God, and also a valid ordination.

"Ye have not chosen me," says Jesus, "but I have chosen you, and ordained you." (John 15:16.) And when certain men who had not been so called and ordained attempted to perform priestly functions, the devils themselves mocked them, saying: "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" (Acts 19:15.) The Devil still laughs at a self-appointed ministry.

If priesthood can not be traced back by succession to the apostles, it can be had only by restoration. This is inexorable logic. There is no escape.

The great idea came to Joseph Smith to present a divine restored priesthood. On the fifteenth day of May, 1829, a heavenly messenger by commandment of God visited Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and conferred upon them the Aaronic priesthood. By his commandment they then baptized each other, and also ordained each other, thus respecting the two elements that figure in every ordination—the divine and the human. At a later date, in a somewhat similar manner, they received the Melchisedec priesthood.

So to-day any elder of this church who cares to do so may trace his priesthood back to a satisfactory source. One may say: "I received my ordination under the hands of Alexander H. Smith, who received his under the hands of President Joseph Smith, who was ordained by William Marks and others, who received their priesthood under the administration of Joseph the Martyr, who received his priesthood by angelic ministration from God himself. This line of succession is presented as an illustration, and not as an exact line of succession in any individual case."

But if any clergyman in any other denomination of which we have knowledge endeavors to trace his priesthood back in a similar way, he will run it to earth sooner or later in the Catholic Church. It can not be traced back to a satisfactory source. John Wesley frankly admitted that fact, and when his authority was challenged, referred to his ordination under the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who of course traced his priesthood right back into the Catholic hierarchy.

The only logical alternative is restored priesthood, and that is not claimed by any other people, so far as we are aware. This idea of restored priesthood is profound and startling. Compare it with the youth and theological inexperience of the one who announced it.

The Inspired Version of the Bible

Two other ideas we desire to mention, that appeared early in the ministry of Joseph Smith, though possibly not directly announced in the visions to which we have referred. The first of these was a divinely corrected Bible.

The King James Version of the Bible comes to us as the result of many translations. It comes to us from sources originally in the custody of the Romish clergy, through dark ages of corruption. No original manuscript is in existence. It is not surprising then that there are mistranslations and evident omission, interpolations, and contradictions. Vast research has been undertaken in the effort to secure correct renditions of the text.

King James in his time authorized the translation that has been so widely accepted. Later came the "Revised Version." The Catholics have a translation. Alexander Campbell tried his hand at correcting the Scriptures. We have been informed of late that the Baptists have gotten out a new version. Many others have translated the Scriptures in an effort to correct some obvious errors.

To Joseph Smith came the idea that it would be possible for the God who gave the Scriptures to correct some of the evident errors that have crept in. The Inspired Version resulted. It rests on its own merits.

The Eighth Big Idea

The last great idea that we mention is that of Zion as a gathering place. The Scriptures are replete with predictions of a time of destruction, war, and pestilence that shall precede the second coming of Christ. Jesus himself says that when we shall see these things we shall pray that we may be accounted worthy to escape them (Luke 21:36). Escape! How? Where? Modern theology is silent.

Into the brain of Joseph Smith came the idea of a gathering place, a Zion, where the people of God should be preserved from these calamities. Moreover, this was to be a place of equality and social justice, thus foreseeing in a way the present almost universal unrest due to social and economic injustice and the unjust division and distribution of wealth, with resulting class hatred and warfare.

That idea is still in progress of development. It was a great big idea for the brain of an obscure, inexperienced young man to grasp and hold.

The Ideas and the Following

When we consider the station of Joseph Smith, as a boy and young man, and then reflect upon the magnitude, dignity, and far-reaching importance of these ideas, and others that he projected into the religious arena, we perceive that every attempt to account for Joseph Smith and his work from the usual standpoint must fail. He is a conundrum. He is a riddle. A superhuman element enters in here somewhere. The world cannot explain Joseph Smith.

Men have tried to account for him on the theory that these ideas were suggested to him by some very able men among his followers. Unfortunately for this theory, these ideas were either announced in his visions and revelations, or were foreshadowed, before he had followers. He did not get his ideas from his followers; he secured followers because of the character of his ideas. Sidney Rigdon, in particular, has been pointed out as a power behind the throne. But it is a fact that Sidney Rigdon never heard of Joseph Smith until after these visions were given, the Book of Mormon in print, and the church organized.

Other churches have been built up on a single one of these ideas. Christian Science came into existence later, based almost entirely on the idea of divine healing; the same is true of "The Emmanuel Movement." Dowie started first with the healing idea, and later adopted the Zion idea. The gift of unknown tongues alone has furnished pretext for considerable religious movements. The second coming of Christ has been the main feature of others. But this lonely, unlettered lad in a then undeveloped country, without theological training, without a body of religious associates and advisors at the beginning of his work, grasped all of these ideas in advance of other men and women, and developed them to a fruition, so far as they could be developed in his time.

The truth is that in this work we see the "moving hand of God." For convenience of expression we have said that Joseph Smith conceived these ideas. The truth is that they were given him by divine revelation. They took form in his brain first among men; but the inspiration came from God. The world can not explain the remarkable man, Joseph Smith, but when we accept his own account of how he obtained these great ideas, and read and believe his story of the heavenly visions granted to him, all becomes clear as the white light of heaven.

Here was one who communed with God. Here was one who restored the present tense to religious terminology. Here was one who taught his followers to sing:

"The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth."

The Vision of 1920—Zion's Outlook from the Viewpoint of the Young Man

BY EDWARD D. MOORE

One of the sermons on the above subject delivered in Independence and Kansas City on the afternoon of April 4, 1920.

"Before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation; and all the people among which thou art shall see the work of the Lord; for it is a terrible thing I will do with thee."—Exodus 34: 10.

And inasmuch as my people build an house unto me, in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it, that it be not defiled, my glory shall rest upon it; yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart that shall come into it, shall see God: but if it be defiled I will not come into it, and my glory shall not be there, for I will not come into unholy temples. And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion cannot fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, THE PURE IN HEART; therefore let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn; for, behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet, it shall not be stayed until the Lord comes; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations, and all their wicked works; nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire; nevertheless, let it be read this once in their ears, that I, the Lord, have accepted of their offering; and if she sin no more, none of these things shall come upon her, and I will bless her with blessings, and multiply a multiplicity of blessings upon her, and upon her generations, for ever and ever, saith the Lord your God. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 4; 5.

To our way of thinking, the above passages largely typify the feelings of the young men of the church to-day who strain their eyes toward the culmination of our hopes.

The typical young man of our day likes the same sort of thing the typical young man liked in the days of Moses. Whatever interests him deeply must be moving, alive, vibrant with power. If there is a fair amount of the spectacular, so much the better. Strong adjectives, mighty developments, appeal to him, whether they be of one sort or another. His own being pulsates with newly-acquired power, often untried and not as yet evaluated, but constantly demanding recognition.

Therefore he reads with wondering appreciation passages like those quoted above. He may put the emphasis in the wrong place at times, but be assured there will be emphasis.

It was a new generation to whom the Lord spoke through Moses—all except two—and the young men must have thrilled at the words: "Marvels," "terrible."

To a band of young men almost a hundred years ago the Lord revealed his will toward his people of the latter days, and inspired by that revelation they marched forth in their virile, God-directed strength and did a work of evangelization such as this dispensation has not known. And it was but the beginning of "a marvelous work and a wonder."

The revelation quoted from is typical of many others we might suggest, and teems with strong action: "Build an house," (God's temple in Zion) "Not suffer any unclean thing," "my presence shall be there," "I will come into it," "if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible."

So the picture moves. We read here of vengeance, of the whirlwind, scourge, sore affliction, pestilence, plague, sword, devouring fire, blessings, multiplicity of blessings, it is surely a soul-moving panorama.

Recognizing, then, this natural affinity on the part of the young of the spectacular, we come to understand better some of his feelings toward the present situation in the world and in the church.

The Setting for Zion

When we wear jewels we put them into settings, that their natural beauty may be enhanced. Yet the setting is secondary to the stone.

When we hang a beautiful picture, we think of the frame and the wall and the light, else its beauty is not fully appreciated.

The Saint of God who thinks definitely about Zion must needs think of its setting as well as the natural beauty of Zion herself. To more fully comprehend the vision of the young man of to-day, let us throw our picture upon the dark background of a world in turmoil.

Every day it is borne in upon us that we are in the midst of times bursting with tenseness.

There is latent within the average heart an appreciation of the situation as it really is, but our environment, our natural selfishness, our ingrained indifference as to the welfare of our neighbor, dampen our natural ardor and we stand dumbly by, not knowing which way to turn.

From President Wilson with his admirable international ideals, to the man next door, there is a feeling as to what might constitute social justice between nation and nation, state and other states, community with other communities, neighbor with fellow neighbor.

Yet like the excitable person who when the house is afire siezes the wash bowl and dashes up the street, in our frenzy we often as fanatically attack the first thing at hand, and the chances are it is the wrong thing.

Our hearts are sore over the misfortunes of Europe and the Near East, yet their cries fall on comparatively deaf ears. We stand utterly helpless over the inormity of the problem. We stand aghast at the crime of Turkey in despoiling the Armenian race, but are doing little about it.

Truly, the seeds of world democracy have been implanted in our hearts, and are trying to germinate, but there is a pitiable lack somewhere. Individually we feel we can suggest many things to cure the ills of the times but collectively we are utter failures and voiceless.

As a nation we are not unified and lack the necessary cohesion to act. We cannot count on this thing called social consciousness to bring order out of our present world chaos, for there are too many qualities lacking.

A Washington contractor reports that he called on thrifty bricklayers and offered them a dollar an hour, but they refused to work. They can make in half a week as much as they can spend easily in a week, so they prefer to remain idle a good share of the time. And this is typical of conditions in little places as well as in big ones. We find it at home as well as across the continent.

And since the war the average daily production of coal by the miners of France has dropped from 2,136 pounds to 1,760. English newspapers teem with similar situations. Half of Europe is in idleness and suffering starvation, some with good cause, some because of the great world unrest.

Yet the world is threatened with famine in the near future because of shortage of production. Profiteering persists, and the lives of thousands of poor people and little children are actually in peril because of the greatly perverted economic conditions existing. In Chicago a milk dealer cut down his retail price six cents a quart. As a result his dairy was destroyed with a bomb!

The general public is disregarding previous standards of living, and buying as they have never bought before. When material prosperity comes, it is diverted to gratifying selfish pleasures.

We are depicting just a few of the general characteristics of the impending storm. Under these prevailing conditions, which are bound to grow worse, we must crystalize and establish our Zionie ideals and put into operation a practical demonstration.

So while we recognize some aroused public concept, we assert that it must be expressed in terms of Christian cooperation. The brotherhood of man to-day is but a relative idea, and to be understood fully must be associated with the fatherhood of God—God as he is, and not in the general ideals prevailing of him to-day. We must present God to the masses as a Being definitely behind a program for the salvation of mankind—a program that moves men to glorious impulses and deeds.

Individualism Versus Cooperation

It is conceded by all that the youth of the church must play an important part in the building up of Zion. Upon their shoulders will be laid a load which they will carry forward triumphantly. They may not all be ready now, but when the bugle calls sound they will come forward as an army.

The times have had a great deal to do with shaping the habits of our young people. From the day they wander out into the street to associate with children from nearby homes, they learn the necessity for group activity.

In their games, in their social activities, everywhere, they come to appreciate the fact that to succeed there must be leadership and cooperation. We often worry over how dependent they are upon their environment and social conditions, but it is a situation we cannot alter in a day, for it is the result of modern conditions, and did not come about in a day. Nowadays our young people outgrow their childish individualism by the time they have matured, or at least they have learned that there are many times when it must be fused into composite expression for the good of the whole.

To us this seems the proper utilization of the divine expression of the individual trait. It is but a sane recognition of our interdependence as well as of our independence.

We are not surprised that our fathers and grandfathers are individualists. They came by it naturally. They came up through a school where each man was largely a law unto himself. They went out into the frontiers, and by sheer force of individuality wrought out success. There was little dependence on others, for what they lacked they likely made or went without, and as a consequence they developed that wonderful pioneer independence which we so much admire but so seldom have.

Then we are not worried because they retain those sentiments to-day in the interpretation of God's law and prefer that which most nearly accords with the conditions of other days.

To a large extent the seemingly irreconcilable differences over interpretation have their genesis in this situation.

Are the young men of the church to-day discouraged over this conservatism by men more experienced and to whom we look as leaders? They are not. But they continue to insist that something be done. They want a glorious crusade to inspire glorious valor, but are willing to begin on simpler things. They demand a chance to do something worth while in the general plan. They are not even patient with those who have no faith in the ideal. But if one has a program, he will get a hearing. They insist that Zion can be redeemed, that it must be, and that in our day.

What if some minor mistakes are made? they ask. Life is mostly ahead of them, and they can start over. It is easier to respond to the call of God for volunteers than to answer the call of the Government in the recent war. Yet literal thousands went with triumphant step to victory.

Stewardships and Inheritances

It has been our good fortune to come into close personal touch with the Saints in a large number of average communities in the church. We always make it a point to discuss these features of our immediate church program, and discover that there is an almost universal readiness among the younger element especially, to cast in their all, do anything, for the sake of their ideal of Zion.

We know it is contended that this is not sufficient, and admit it. But we may not wait for all of the former generation who have acquired a competence and have the ability to contribute a financial nucleus upon which to build. If they will not rally, why should they be waited for. Of course we may have to wait, but we want to hustle while we wait and have the time shortened.

We must admit there is a strong tendency on the part of some of the older folk to propose reservations. Local ties are more numerous and harder to break, interests are more permanent and consequently more difficult to sever, and as it is often said, "I had to work very hard for what I have and I'm not going to let go of it too easily." We realize it is a greater struggle for them to decide affirmatively than for the younger element. Yet we are not convinced that the sacrifice is any greater, for the youth of the church are offering their very lives: the productive years of their earthly existence, which mean much to them as it has to those who have gone through the heat of the day.

And these young people are not asking something for nothing. Though they may not be able to bring great accumulations of actual wealth they are now—and will be glad to do it to a greater extent—putting the equivalent of great sums each year into the work through a consecration of their talents and time—and they have only begun.

Their demand is only that they be able better to cooperate in their efforts and eliminate a great deal of the present unnecessary competition. They want to give their best to the church instead of to the world, and the church needs it. It cannot afford to refuse the offer.

Inheritances are secondary in the minds of the young of the church. To "have something to leave to the children" is not so dominant a note in their lives as it is with our veterans.

But stewardships personifying unified action for the good of the whole, are an immediate necessity. And because of the training to which we have alluded above, they are strongly socialistic (but with a little s, as one brother puts it). Since they have little material wealth to divide, they generally believe in a community ownership of productive industries, and an equitable scheme of distribution. We are convinced that the majority of our young students of economics who arrive at their conclusions independently, are of that opinion. And they are convinced that a demonstration of group ownership will develop funds they do not now have, just as it is doing in numerous instances in the industrial world to-day.

Industrial democracy is a term they live, when interpreted in the light of real Christian brotherhood. It must come, though, from the group that organizes to carry on the industry, rather than as in the world to-day; a concession from those who dictate merely because they happen to have capital or facilities for securing it, accumulated in the course of years, even though the holders be members of the church.

Our vision of Zion naturally is not as a place of repose, as a large number seem to have, who write to the Bishopric and even to us: "We want to go to a place where we can have peace and rest."

As a new generation conquered Canaan and its difficulties, so we count on the new generation conquering many of the difficulties in establishing Zion. They must do the pioneering, and they are willing and glad to do it.

The young man imbued with the ideals of the church is thinking of Zion as a place and a condition. A place from which shall emanate a world evangelization beyond the dreams of those not inspired with the prophecies abounding in our church literature. Those who are really prepared for such work will have a wholesome store of knowledge and a desirable set of ideas which God can inspire and use. And we must remember that we are but instruments in his hands.

We can vision them going out under the spirit of the endowment in tens and hundreds and thousands, with the gospel message teeming with appeal to a sin-sick and starving world; a solution for the religious, social, and economic ills that so blight the prospects of the world to-day.

Yet all are not called to this special work, so other thousands and tens of thousands will need to help develop our internal conditions toward which converts will be drawn as a magnet draws steel. Both desire and necessity will furnish the men and women to swell the number and make Zion "very terrible" because of her righteousness.

We see in our vision of Zion in process of perfection, flourishing villages, towns, and cities, in which will be found a happy people, happy and prosperous because of the universal observance of the principles which shall bring about equality. There can be no poor because the causes of poverty are removed. There will be no rich, for the occasion for accumulation of wealth in the hands of individuals will be obviated.

Because of the elimination of competition and the establishment of intelligent cooperation, production will be at its highest point. The same sort of organization in distribution will prevent waste and provide necessities and comforts of life without the usual contribution to a long list of parasites who have no real place in our economic existence.

As we look more closely into the communities, we see they are connected by the best of modern transportation facilities. Radio stations everywhere contribute to instant communication between distant as well as adjacent places.

Every essential profession and trade will have its devotees and they have opportunity to serve to the full extent of their capacity. The skill one develops that makes him more valuable will not be counted in terms of dollars and cents, but in service to others: "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant."

Schools will function on the best modern lines, with the present serious teacher shortage overcome. When all are on the basis of needs and just wants being supplied, why should there be a paucity of workers in any good profession? The textbooks in the schools will be written by our own skilled educators—something which we were commanded to do years ago—which will eliminate many of our present inconsistencies, where our children are constantly taught ideas at variance with our belief in God and in his creation of man.

Our ideals of Zion's future includes a full development of such things as are typified in our church architect's department, in the ideals of the Woman's Auxiliary, in the educational work of the church, and in the Sanitarium and its wider import.

Where we now have one trained and consecrated architect for our public buildings, why not a school of trained, constructive engineers with the highest ideals of art and utility? Then we might hope to escape many of the usual ugly creations we now call houses, and instead have designs that combine beauty and convenience with economy and utility.

In every way there will be coordination of religion and industry and art. For instance, our clothing should be beautiful and artistic in lines, yet totally unlike many of the unholy creations foisted upon us to-day by degenerate Dame Fashion. Why should we not have a real development of this art by the sisters of the church who are willing to carry out a great ideal? It will require much skill and perception, it is true, but we believe there will be as much inspiration possible under such circumstances as in any other line of work. Where else shall we look for these things?

We might go over the whole range of legitimate activities and find them all developed in our Zion picture to the highest point.

The very dishes we use in our homes could express for us something after the meaning they have in the lives of the American Indian. We have the men and women with skill, the desire, and the initiative to carry on the whole process, from the clay to the table.

In fact we have the skilled workers in numerous lines so we might hope to be successful even without present available talent.

We mention specifically some of these minor items in our general development, for we think nothing should be overlooked. We must largely reorganize our whole scheme of living, yet retain and greatly enhance the functions of the home. From God-fearing homes we may expect results that will astound the world. We must have happiness and cheer, and opportunities and responsibilities for our children that will remove many of the handicaps under which they are working to-day. We should establish a standard of living so far ahead of Moore's famous Utopia with its slaves that it will be as a nightmare compared with a heavenly vision.

To be sure, we are aware that the land is the backbone of all our industries, but we also insist that we use it as it should be used and then it will require far less for our needs than with our present methods. When we can displace the present land-robbing system with really intensive and intelligent agriculture and horticulture, with the promises of God as to his blessing upon it, we shall look back to these days of amateurism with shame.

In this connection we hope the day will come when the farms, so far as possible, will be operated from the villages and towns. This will largely overcome the things that make people move to town now. They will have the same social and school advantages as urban dwellers, and have less of the usual isolation and loneliness that drives the boys and girls to other vocations.

We think of our industries on a scale commensurate with our needs, owned and managed in such a way that strikes and lockouts will be unthought of. Though individuals will have full scope for the development of their skill, there will be a general recognition of the need of definite management and superintendence. We cannot each be a law unto ourselves and succeed, so there must be a willingness to accept leadership and sustain it so long as it proves itself worthy of our support.

We would not forget the special needs of the aged among us, for there are many who must because of declining years and failing faculties step aside from life's vocations and watch with interest the progress of the work.

In this regard we think of the koustari of Russia, the system whereby whole villages in winter unite in the production of some one article or part of an article, developing special skill and taking great pride in the quality of their output. Sometimes they find they need a factory in which to work, and they build it. The total annual value of their product a few years ago was nine hundred million dollars, and includes the manufacture of lace, embroidery, wooden spoons, pottery, bird cages, dolls, ikons (for public worship), agricultural implements, barges, etc. These are marketed cooperatively and bring a maximum of returns. There is no taint of the sweatshop method.

We can well imagine the hundreds of aged people among us who would be glad to put all their remaining strength into the making of simple articles. They are not able to go out and work for others, but we know of hundreds who would take delight in doing some simple, useful thing for their beloved church.

We know of a certain aged sister who is poor and struggling, yet of that typical independence that will not allow her to accept something for nothing, so long as she can prevent it. There is little she can do, yet the fact that she was in debt to the Lord fifty dollars in tithing would not allow her to rest in peace. There was just one thing she found she could do, and that was to bake cakes in her little oven, and sell them to the public. She sent out word among her friends that she would bake angel food cakes for special occasions, and told the Lord she would turn the profits into her tithing account. She had hopes of paying a part of it in that way. But the Lord blessed her in her good resolution, and she actually saved the profits faithfully for a year, and by great sacrifice paid off that fifty-dollar debt. And she considered it a great privilege that she could do it. Whether the poor should be tithed is not a question to be discussed here. The point is, she wanted to do her part, and she did it, to the shame of many of us.

Suppose her needs were guaranteed by those able to produce more than they need for themselves. You need not try to tell me she would lack incentive and be willing to do nothing. She would work even harder if possible, that she might contribute something toward, say the temple.

There must be definite work properly assigned for all who are able to help.

Our vision of Zion includes the very best there is in community cooperation, the highest attainments of individualism, with a definite place constantly for the inspiration of the Almighty, for without that it would not be Zion.

Indeed the miraculous and the spectacular are taken for granted. Woven through it all is the manifestation of God in great power. We are conscious of the fact that we must do all we can for ourselves, but to suppose that human wisdom and ability is sufficient for the great program before us is to deny the divinity of the numerous prophecies concerning our times, many of which are being fulfilled now, and many more of which will as surely come to pass.

Our latent talents will be brought out; our dormant idealism will be revived, we shall have the highest possible incentive: a religion as comprehensive as the human needs are complex, and no power on earth can stay us. The Zion look is good; we shall succeed, and that in our day, with the help of God.

Joseph Smith, a Prophet of God

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR

"The words and work of Joseph Smith will forever stand unique and unexcelled amongst the men of earth."

In 1820 Joseph Smith announced to a stolid and startled world that the creeds were wrong, the churches were corrupt, and as such were incapable of bringing salvation unto man.

Needless to say his pronouncement as repudiated, and the churches intensified their opposition in a war of personal hate against the simple seer of Palmyra.

A Confession of Defeat

But a hundred years have passed away, and in that self-same region where his famous denunciation was first heard, in a country where full of churches working their very hardest, a veritable nursery of American religious institutions, we, now in turn, are startled by a cringing confession of defeat, that what Mr. Smith said was correct, both historically and prophetically, and this confession, too, comes from the representation of the biggest church movement in the world.

The following from the Literary Digest, February 7, 1920 speaks for itself:

"If it be 'that the roots of the religious and moral life of the nation are chiefly in the country church,' rural communities are in a fair way to degeneracy, and instead of being props for the Nation, are becoming means to its downfall. At least this is the conclusion naturally drawn from a three years' survey of Ohio by the Commission on Church and Country Life of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which reveals that the country side is overstocked with churches, too sparsely provided with ministers, and that many of these too-few pastors have been selected without regard to qualification. The result is demoralization of churches and people alike. But where the evil has been recognized and the remedy of inter-church comity and cooperation applied, spiritual awakening has resulted. Having effected cures in particular instances, the commission suggests general application of the remedy.

"The results of the survey are summarized in a volume called Six Thousand Country Churches (Macmillan), by Charles Otis Gill and Gifford Pinchot. In Ohio more than 4,500, or 66 per cent, of the rural churches have a membership of one hundred or less; more than 3,600, or 55 per cent, have a membership of seventy-five or less; more than 2,400, or 37 per cent, a membership of fifty or less.

"... A most striking illustration of the churches' inefficiency may be found in southern and southeastern Ohio. Here, www.LatterDayTruth.org in a region covering at least eighteen counties, the failure of the churches may fairly be called pathetic. These counties are: Adams, Athens, Brown, Clermont, Gallia, Highland, Hocking, Jackson, Lawrence, Meigs, Monroe, Morgan, Noble, Pike, Ross, Scioto, Vinton, and Washington. "In this area, after more than a hundred years of the work of the churches, the religious, social, and economic welfare of the people are going down. Altho the churches have been here for more than a century, no normal type of organized religion is really flourishing, while the only kind which, during the past fifteen years, has been gaining ground, the cult of the Holy Rollers, is scarcely better than that of a Dervish. The churches have failed, and are failing, to dispel ignorance and superstition, to prevent the increase of vice, the spread of disease, and the spiritual decadence of the people.' . . .

"These statistical data 'do not overstate the urgency of the appeal from the unfortunate overchurched and underministered communities of this section,' for 'her gross superstition exercises strong control over the thought and action of a large proportion of the people.' Immorality, intemperance, and crime are declared to be rife; politics corrupt, and schools badly managed and poorly attended.

"As in the eighteen counties some of the older and stronger denominations are well represented—no fewer than 526, or more than one third of the total number of churches being Methodist Episcopal—it is evident that the failure of the churches in this area cannot be laid to the weakness or poverty of the denominations represented, for they are for the most part neither weak nor poor.' On the other hand, 'in rural Ohio the worst moral and religious conditions are found where there are the largest number of churches in proportion to the number of inhabitants.'

"Having thus diagnosed the ailment from which the rural church is suffering, the commission then proceeds to its program for cure. The ministry must be better educated, and more care should be used in selecting pastors for this particular kind of work."

The Monument to the Memory of Joseph Smith

There is another and more emphatic way in which we may determine the calling of Joseph Smith. It is not chiseled upon marble, nor engraved upon granite. Rather is it to be read in the monumental works which he wrought, which with the passing of years becomes the more apparent to an astonished but learning world.

The wisdom of a Washington or an Alfred the Great is not revealed so much in what they said as in what they did, demonstrated in those splendid institutions of democracy, the United States of America, and the British Empire.

Behold then, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Consider her indestructible foundation of apostles and prophets, planted upon that ever-prevailing rock of continuous revelation.

Examine her equipment of quorums and councils, New Testamental in character and God-appointed in origin. Draw near to the genial warmth of her alters whose fires are replenished with an unceasing flow of the Holy Spirit, attested in those imperishable gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, prophecy, healings, miracles, tongues and interpretations. And all this is the monument of works wrought through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith.

The prophetic mission of Joseph Smith was never more strikingly attested than in the task he accomplished.

The callings of some are emphasized by a rule of force, or an era of conquest; others by political achievements scientific discoveries, excellent inventions, or some public benefaction.

But the career of a prophet of God must be marked by a message from God, by some rare prodigy of divine doings. And herein lies the difficulty of convincing an unbelieving generation, traditioned to reject everything that savors of revelation.

He Stands the Test of Inquiry

Two things are apparently necessary, therefore, in order to convince the world that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. The one is, that it is quite within the bounds of scriptural propriety that a prophet should be. And the other, that the work as accomplished by Joseph Smith was heaven ordered and inspired.

As to the first, we think it quite consistent, in view of the fact that not only does Bible history furnish us with unceasing instances of the ministration of prophets, but it also uncompromisingly decrees their continuance, inasmuch as the work of the Lord was to be carried on. "Behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes. (Matthew 23: 34.)

Never did the Church exist only as it was led and directed by a prophet. He served as God's mouthpiece, and if in anywise the promise of our Savior was to be realized, that he would be with the church even unto the end of the world, it could only be as he communicated unto that church. And that communication was invariably expressed through the mediumship of a prophet.

The message, therefore, that came through Joseph Smith will answer as to his prophetic calling.

The Feat of Organizing So Large a Following

Or, if we consider the calling of Joseph Smith from the viewpoint of an unbelieving world; we are forced to concede that to organize a body of believers gathered from long-established institutions whose deep-seated sentiments of centuries were diametrically opposed to the visions of Joseph the Seer, was an achievement of no ordinary kind.

Five hundred thousand living humans, if we include those outside of the Reorganization, acclaim their faith in the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, certainly a phenomenal acclamation in view of the traditional prejudice against modern revelation and modern prophets.

Joseph Smith possessed no worldly honors to confer upon his associates, and he offered no inducements, political or financial, for he had none. And yet within fourteen years from the commencement of his work as a Restorer, in 1830, above 150,000 flocked to his standard. They came from the councils of the learned, as well as from the cabins of the poor. They came as free born Americans, and they came as the oppressed of foreign lands, enticed only by the glorious liberty of a glorious gospel.

The Movement Born Under Best Circumstances

False prophets are the natural product of communities unaccustomed to freedom. They are bred amid serfdom and slavery. It was the dominancy of the few and the servility of the many that made it possible for Arabia to give birth to her Mahomet. But in a democratic country of the nineteenth century, a country whose keynote is tolerance and liberty, it is a matter of absolute impracticability for any man of vagarious pretensions to do business with any hope of permanent success. Dowie, Schwinforth, and Prince Michael of the Flying Rollers tried it, and came to grief.

And yet, here in the very bosom of American democracy, in the enlightened States of New York and Ohio, was born and brought up the whole institution of Latter Day Saintism.

How was it possible only and unless the extraordinary claims of Joseph Smith were found to be the very elemental principles of truth? In no other way could the movement as inaugurated by him have withstood the withering criticism of modern scrutiny and investigation.

Joseph Smith challenged his critics when he placed in their possession the Book or Mormon, a record at that time antagonistic to the prevailing religious and scientific opinions.

There was nothing in this record calculated to infatuate with flattery, nor yet to fetter with fear. There was nothing therein, concurring with the then popular opinions. The whole thing from beginning to end, from the story of its discovery to its recommittal unto the hands of the angel, was a bold, defiant, startling statement, standing upon its merits and its merits alone.

The Book of Mormon Cannot Be Impeached

And what has a hundred years done to solve the mystery of this mighty message? Answer: Every discovery, whether from the ethnologic traditions of the American red man, or the archæologic discoveries of intrepid explorers, or better still, the prophetic researches of Biblical students, has tended to confirm the singular story of this singular man.

And when it is remembered that Joseph Smith was but an unlearned youth, living on the frontiers of rural life, when he brought forth Mormon and Moroni's record, the marvel of the matter becomes the more remarkable.

Was there ever a prophet who so fearlessly and unreservedly submitted his case into the hands of his opponents as did Joseph Smith? What other than an unqualified assurance must have attended the man and his message.

The world is now passing upon the calling of this man of God. And while happy thousands are annually converted to a favorable decision, we have the assurance that like the prophets of the past, ostracized and assassinated in his day, yet when the world moving upon its axis of everchanging religious thought shall have had time to digest the indubitable evidences irresistibly forcing themselves to the front, determining his heavenly calling, that it will, as in olden days, garnish his sepulcher as a martyred prophet.

No shining shaft of speechless stone may tell the story of his immortal deeds, but better still, uncounted thousands affirm with an assurance heaven-born, their unshaken faith in that rare message of ponderous importance that fell from his inspired lips.

"Never man spake like this man," said they of the Nazarene two thousand years ago, and the words and work of Joseph Smith will forever stand unique and unexcelled amongst the men of earth, whether expressed in council conclave, or creed.

Continued Revelation

BY HUBERT CASE

Without revelation the churches are not able to enjoy the definite guidance of God and hence cannot really demonstrate the Christian religion.

One hundred years has made the great change. In 1820 when Joseph Smith told the world he had talked with God, they cast him out as a false prophet. To-day the great demand is a new revelation, we must hear from our dead.

As a people we have moved forward in the belief that God would speak to man now the same as in former times. This belief has brought us into disrepute with our religious friends and neighbors, because they had concluded that as God had not spoken to man for so many centuries that he never would speak again.

Our Claims Are Scriptural

We have based our claims upon the scripture for said belief such as the following:

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1:5.

"Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."—John 16:13.

Mr. Smith's claims that the avenue of communion with God and the angels was according to the divine plan from the beginning, and the only reason they were not now enjoying this blessing was because they had strayed from the pathway; seem fully vindicated by their own testimony, at least by the testimony of many.

"It seems impossible to believe in man and in a personal God, without believing in revelation. The aspirations of the soul demand it. Man himself as a reflection of the divine Image warrants it."—New International Encyclopedia, vol. 17, article, "Revelation."

New Revelation In Demand

Sir Oliver Lodge, who is now visiting America, and Mr. Arthur Conan Doyle, two great scientists, who have turned the tide of world thought into the channels of present-day revelation, are themselves to-day the greatest advocates of communing with the dead. Spiritualism has been the popular outlet for the burst of feelings caused by the many of our boys who were killed in the great World War. Church people and nonchurch people the world over are believing in new revelation, because this is the popular wave sweeping all lands. Ouija boards by tens of thousands have sold, even faster than they can be made. Simple trusting souls have gone crazy over them, believing they were talking with their dead. Both Sir Oliver Lodge and Mr. Doyle admit with others that they have received false messages; they have proven them untrue, and the mediums tell them that the spirits of dead people are all mingling together in the next world the same as here. If a man dies who is a liar he stays with the others and we are as likely to get messages from him as from the other ones.

This theory is far from the truth, because the Bible story tells a different tale. The righteous are to go to a paradise of rest, and the wicked are turned into hell or the prison house the abode of the wicked dead. The rich man and Lazarus is a fair example. Ezekiel 32 and many other references help us to determine. Galatians 1:6-9 shows that if man or angel "preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

John in his Revelation on the isle of Patmos, tells us that Satan rebelled against God, and drew one third part of the host of heaven with him and was cast down to the earth.

That those fallen angels have taken possession of the bodies of men and of beasts the Bible clearly shows, and that they have ever been ready to speak and have spoken to men in all ages.

The apostle of the Lord tells us we should try the spirits, for he says many false spirits have gone out into the world, and further admonishes that we should not believe every spirit.

Read the following from Mr. Doyle:

"For two hundred years the church of Christianity has been fighting a losing battle against materialism. First Hume and Voltaire, then Gibbon, and afterwards the great agnostics of the Victorian era, had bitten into it. The church had no defence against them save reference to authority, which was denied by their opponents, and which was therefore useless to debate. Now this psychic movement came forward with absolute proof of life beyond the grave, of the effect of one life upon the next, and of all the basic propositions of Christianity."

Mr. Smith told the world one hundred years ago that he had heard from God and that their creeds were wrong. They have been revising and changing them ever since.

Something Wrong

Mr. Rogers in his book The House Divided, page 16, says:

"We must admit an appalling deficiency in deep real godliness. This we find in all classes, from worldly spirited members, of the church to the denominational leaders. . . There must be something wrong with the kind and character of our modern Christianity."

Again on page 17: "It is evident that there is something wrong in the church." What do you suppose it could be? On page 20: "The authority of the old church was all gone. The reformed church, unable to unify herself, had failed to attain a place of authority."

The Reverend G. Vale Owen of England, has recently had published a series of articles in The Weekly Dispatch under the caption, "Messages from Beyond the Vale." This paper was sent to the editors of the HERALD by Brother Joseph Dewsnup and is filled with a startling message purporting to be from the dead. It is attracting and will attract much attention; thousands will believe in it.

The Worlds to Which We Pass at Death

He claims to be talking with his mother. This messenger claims that she has been shown that the houses are not built there in the next world but are just raised at will. They travel at will. Some have strong will power and travel much faster than others.

They make instruments of brass, etc., there. She describes the transit from the earth. Here is a paragraph which I wish to quote: "For it is more difficult, because the influences around those in darkness here are more evil than the influences on earth, where good is ever mingling with the bad. The work of those in my circle is mainly to help the fallen, and also the children when they come over, and to carry them to the place where they have been assigned for training."

Fail Because of Limiting God

Then we have a statement from Brother C. E. Wight, published in the HERALD for March 17, telling of his visit to the pastors' conference of the Interchurch World Movement held at Des Moines, Iowa. This movement is attempting to unify the church movements of all the great churches of the world. He mentions one speaker as saying: "The churches have failed because they have limited God. That if God could inspire the prophets of olden days, and could place upon Peter and Paul the inspiration necessary for the writing of the New Testament epistles, he could inspire men with a divine message to-day. He also urged that if one of the churches should be blessed with a pentecostal shower, it could accomplish single-handed the entire program of the Interchurch Movement."

This is exactly what Mr. Smith told the world in the far distant days of a century ago. Now they are coming to see that that wonderful vision he had is to come literally true.

Mr. Smith told the world he was visited with a heavenly messenger and that he and Mr. O. Cowdery were ordained by the hands of that heavenly messenger. He was told that the time had come for the restoration of the ancient gospel with the authority to minister for God in all the ordinances of his house as in former times, and that God would manifest himself to men on earth as in former times.

The revelations which have come to the church since that time came with the same authority as in former days and convey messages of intelligent information regarding the governing and setting in order the house of God as the apostles of old were instructed to do.

The Way to Test Revelation

God has given the standard by which every revelation can be tested: "If they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." Again to the law and to the testimony many are the references which might be sighted as proof positive to safeguard the interests of the people of God.

Every move now in the religious world is bringing them closer to the light as revealed through Mr. Smith, that the church cannot even exist intact, and in fact without revelation to perpetuate the officers. Paul says no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron. The authority, the gifts of the Spirit, the practical working out of the problems now confronting the religious world to demonstrate the Christian religion, never has been done without the revealment of God and outpouring of his Spirit to fill man with the love he should have for his fellow man that he might love his neighbor as himself.

Spiritualism nor any other move that the writer has ever found, aside from the coming of the angel in the restoration of the former gospel and ancient order of things has conveyed to the mind of man any messages of importance. What has spiritualism told us about the other world? Very little that agrees with the standard. What has Christian science told us? That there is no pain, no sickness, that material things do not exist, only in the mind. Is it true?

The Result of Revelation

What has the century brought to the Saints through revelation? The church restored, the information of the coming events such as the Civil War, foretold twenty-nine years before it occurred; the cholera scourge before it came, the plain facts regarding the great World War before it came, the restoration of the practices of the ordinances of the gospel which brings the membership of the church into possession of the communion of the Holy Spirit as in former times, and last but not least the chance to demonstrate the Christian religion in the Zionite sense, in a practical brotherhood as the Christ's teachings demands.

The Persecutions of Joseph Smith

BY L. G. HOLLOWAY

Any people making the claims we do would be persecuted. To claim divine recognition of itself is sufficient to raise a storm of abuse.

It was in the early spring of 1820 that Joseph Smith, then a youth in his fourteenth year, made the strange announcement to the religious world that God had again spoken from the courts above and gave divine direction concerning the plan of redemption. Considering the fact that for many hundreds of years the religious bodies claiming to be the church of Christ had not received any manifestation of Divine Providence in the revealing of his will to men, the above announcement was truly a strange thing.

It was not strange in the sense as compared to the history of God's dealing with his people in the ages of the past, but in perfect harmony with that which has been revealed on the pages of history as contained in the scriptures.

Many of the prophets of old brought forth messages of cheer and comfort or of rebuke as occasion required, all for the benefit of mankind. Isaiah clearly predicted the condition that would come upon the earth wherein he declared that "Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." (Isaiah 60:2.) After a condition of this character it would seem a strange thing to hear a youth go boldly before the world and tell the people that he had heard from God. Such a course would likely be renounced by the leaders in religious thought, and bring on the individual who would dare follow his religious convictions the persecutions of those who were not in sympathy with his experiences. Such was true of Joseph Smith.

Immediately on his telling mankind that he had sought the Lord and received an answer to his prayer, he was denounced by pulpit and press as an imposter, knave, fanatic and every evil thing that could be hurled against an individual. The world did not object to his asking for light, but it was because of his claiming he has received that which was in answer to his prayer. The attitude that was assumed by the ministers of his day and that which is still the opinion of many of the ministers of our coreligionist to-day it, "Pray for it is a good habit to pray, but when you pray do not expect to receive anything for you will not." The writer of these lines has heard declarations coming from ministers like the above.

The True Cause of His Persecutions

Was it because of immoral conduct as claimed by some that led to the awful persecutions that followed, not only this man but those who believe in his message? We answer no. Nothing could be said against him in the early hours of his youth when he had not come into contact with the evil forces that contaminate the souls of men, neither the later years of his life if the truth were known. It is true all the stories that it was possible for men to invent were hurled against him, but this was only for the purpose, as we believe, to discredit his testimony that God had given to him.

It will be necessary here to present some brief matters of history which will allow the reader to understand the true motive that prompted the persecution. It will be remembered that at the time of Joseph seeking the Lord on the important matter of his own salvation, that there had been in progress a revival meeting in which a number had been converted. At the close of the meeting there was a bitter strife between some of the ministers as to the dividing of the converts between the churches that were represented in the meeting. The contention grew so warm that it seemed these ministers were more concerned in the dividing of the spoils, than they were in the salvation of the souls of those converted. Under these conditions Joseph sought the Lord as to which church he should join, and the answer to him was not to join any, and further stated that those professors were corrupt and their creeds an abomination in his sight. Immediately this aroused the indignation of those who were contending among themselves in regard to the converts. They realized that if the statement were true, and believed by the people, it meant the death knell not only of their own institutions, but branded them as being unworthy of the confidence of the people. Something must be done; not a stone must be left unturned to prevent the people indorsing the statement of the boy. From that hour marks the beginning of the persecution that continued until death in Carthage jail ended his earthly career.

It will not be the purpose of this article to deal with some of the harrowing scenes incident to the persecution that became his common lot to endure, but to call attention to some features that we think would be for the enlightenment of those who love truth and righteousness. It is true that he was hunted by mobs, tarred and feathered, arrested many times on false acquisitions, driven from place to place with those who found comfort in the gospel he preached, sentenced to death for no other reason only that he claimed to have received divine recognition from God.

Not long since while standing by the unmarked spot where the mortal remains of this prophet of God now sleeps in silent repose, my thoughts were of his connection with the church he was instrumental in founding, and the many things he endured for its sake. I thought of him as a boy when men were assailing him and speaking all manner of evil against him, and yet under these trying conditions he never wavered but true to his convictions for right he went fearlessly to his death for the testimony he bore. No more striking example could be found of his steadfastness than his statement concerning his first vision. For the benefit of the reader we will here present it: [Omitted here for lack of space; see page 315 where it appears in full.—EDITORS.]

Certainly no stronger testimony could be given as to the sincerity and steadfastness of the man, than his account. Without any hope of earthly reward, with nothing as an incentive except the favor of God he continued to affirm this testimony to the end of his earthly pilgrimage.

Persecution Has Continued to Follow the Church

The church of to-day still believes in the same principle of God revealing himself unto man. As a result some of our ministers have been expelled from some of the ministerial alliances for no other reason than we believe God ever true to humanity will continue to speak when and where he pleases, without consulting some of those who pose as ministers for Christ. Persecution has followed and will continue to follow until He comes whose right it is to reign. Latter Day Saints prefer to receive the favor of God in divine guidance, rather than the favor of men. They verily believe the statement of the New Testament is true wherein we find it declared, "Seek and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." They also believe the inspired words of James wherein he declares. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." The Latter Day Saints have proven to their own satisfaction that the words of the inspired apostle are true. All men have the right to test the matter and find out for themselves whether these words can be depended on as the word of God.

The question may be asked, Is revelation to-day contrary to the will of God? While the world has decided it is, we may ask where is the evidence to be found that denies to man the right to come into association with his Maker? There is but one correct answer and that is, in all the revelations given of God nowhere do we find it hinted that God will cease giving revelations, but we do find that he has promised to give "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little."

A religion that does not connect man with his Maker is unworthy to be called the religion of Jesus Christ. Since 1820 the chasm between heaven and earth has been bridged over by the operation of the Spirit of God in what is termed revelation. The church or individual that has is so far alienated from God that divine communication is not received is to be pitied. Persecution will never solve the problem, neither will it prevent men from receiving that which will be for the good of man. The same cause will produce the same effect, and we can expect to find men who are so determined in their course in opposition to truth that they will resort to any known means to prevent men receiving divine communication even to-day. Even now we find men associating themselves together in leagues with the avowed object in view of causing trouble to those who have faith sufficiently to receive direction from God. These men are determined in their course, but will they succeed in preventing men from testifying to the goodness of God to the man or woman who desire light and counsel? There can be but conclusion, and that is man will continue to receive, regardless of the opposition waged against them.

Persecution has been one of the most prolific weapons ever used by Satan and his emissaries. It has caused sorrow and distress whenever the gospel of Christ has been preached. Defenseless women and children have been made to suffer for no other reason than the world despised them because of their association with God. Religious bigots will continue to oppose, because if men and women testify that they have received, it brands their religion as being unworthy of the confidence of men.

Let us close this article in the language given of the Lord as contained in one of the revelations of modern times. "He that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

The Religious Denominations in the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century

BY RALPH W. FARRELL

"One by one the great principles of the restoration have been heralded by sectarianism, but without giving credit . . . one hundred years of vindication."

We confine our research to an investigation of religious denominations which existed in the United States at the time the heavenly messengers appeared before Joseph Smith, jr., in the year 1820, and told him that he should unite with none of the sects, for they were wrong and their creeds were an abomination in God's sight. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 9) We do not intend to argue the point; let the facts speak for themselves. The reader is referred to the following books for a fuller discussion of the subject. They are before the writer of this sketch, and he believes them to be authentic: A View of Religions, Hannah Adams, 1801. Theological Dictionary, Buck, 1830. Confession of Faith, Presbyterian, 1762. Sketch of the Denominations, John Ewanis, 1807. Christ's Second Appearing, Shakers, 1823. Ratio Discipline, Congregational, 1829. History of All Religions, Benedict, 1824. Gazetteer of the United States, 1830. American Almanac, 1830. Baptist History, Bennedict, 1813. History of New England Baptists, Backus, 1777.

The following statement, taken from the Gazetteer, may help as a brief introductory. "Religious Denominations in the United States," 1830.

Jews and others	50,000		150

At this time we are not especially interested in the origin of these sects, but we do believe that as sects they are wrong and that an investigation of their creeds will reveal the abomination spoken of by the Lord. And I do not see how an investigation conducted in the proper manner can be construed as an attack on the various churches thus placed in the witness stand. Surely no cult should be afraid of having the light turned on its belief; such a thing ought to be welcomed. If there be error let it be detected and given up, for only truth will save the souls of men. If the churches have long ago abandoned these false teachings, as some claim to have done, let them so confess and acknowledge that the statement made to Joseph Smith was true.

At the time of the revival services conducted in 1820 in different parts of the United States, the three sects operating in the vicinity of Joseph Smith's home were Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians. Of this incident, Mr. Smith writes in his history:

"Sometime in the second year after our removal to Manchester, there was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. It commenced with the Methodists, but soon became general among all the sects in that region of the country. . . . Some were contending for the Methodist faith, some for the Presbyterian, and some for the Baptists. For, notwithstanding the great love which the converts for these different faiths expressed at the time of their conversion, and the great zeal manifested by the respective clergy, who were active in getting up and promoting this extraordinary scene of religious feeling, in order to have everybody 'converted,' as they were pleased to call it, let them join what sect they pleased; yet, when the converts began to file off, some to one party, and some to another, it was seen that the seemingly good feelings of both the priests and the converts were more pretended than real; for a scene of great confusion and bad feeling ensued, priest contending against priest, and convert against convert, so that all the good feelings, one for another, if they ever had any, were entirely lost in the strife of words, and a contest about opinions. . . . So great was the confusion and strife among the different denominations that it was impossible for a person young as I was and so unacquainted with men and things to come to any certain conclusion who was right, and who was wrong. My mind at different times was greatly excited, the cry and tumult was so great and incessant. The Presbyterians were most decided against the Baptists and Methodists, and used all their powers of either reason or sophistry to prove their errors, or at least to make the people think they were in error; on the other hand the Baptists and Methodists in their turn were equally zealous to establish their own tenets, and disprove all others."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 7, 8.

"War of Words"

It was in the midst of this war of words that young Joseph read the promise given in James 1: 5, and decided to ask God for wisdom. He retired to pray and received, in answer to his prayer, the instruction given at the beginning of this sketch.

"In the midst of this war of words," was well said; for every year brought forth its division among the churches. They fell out over the most trifling things, until to-day we have, seventeen different Methodist bodies, thirteen Baptist bodies, sixteen Lutheran organizations, differing in belief, six Adventists, twelve Presbyterian creeds, and so on. Even the Roman Catholic institution is divided in thought on many points of its doctrine.

There were a few over twenty-five in the United States in the year 1820. Not one of these churches had independent origin in America, and they all came indirectly or directly out of the papal organization. And that about the same sentiment actuated all of these reformed church, one can learn by a careful study of their respective creeds. Take the following for example, gleaned from "The Original Constitution, Order and Faith of the New-England Churches, comprising the Platform of Church Discipline adopted in

"Of the Holy Scriptures . . . the whole counsel of God concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith and life, is either expressly set down in scripture, or by good and necessary consequence may be deduced from scripture; unto which nothing at any time is to be added, whether by new revelations of the spirit, or traditions of men."

They adopted the language verbatim as contained in the Westminster Confession of Faith. And this view of the Bible and God's revelation of his will were adopted by comparatively every sect which existed at the time God spoke to Joseph Smith and told him that their creeds were an abomination in his sight. Can we justly question the veracity of this statement?

No New Revelation Desired

"Nothing at any time is to be added, whether by new revelation of the spirit, or traditions of men." This limits God. This locks the windows of heaven. It says that not only traditions of man but God himself can no longer speak to the children of men. We do not wonder that the claim of the Palmyra Seer meet with such a rebuff from the sectarian ministers of his day. Not only their crafts but their creeds were in danger. From the days of the Westminster fathers, and before, to the year 1820, it had evidently never entered the mind of creed defenders that the very first article of their faith contained a teaching which was abominable in God's sight. Man, with the audacity of an archangel telling the Almighty that not even a "new revelation of the spirit" could be received from him.

Next came that unsolvable riddle of the creeds, that statement about God: "There is but one only living and true God; who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible without body, parts, or passions." This, too, was the voice of every church of consequence which existed in 1820. And do we wonder that, in the light of the "riddle," an anathema was hurled at Joseph Smith when he testified of seeing "two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake to me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) 'This is my beloved son, hear him'?"

Surely his message came from the Devil, thought they, because, forsooth, it did not agree with the creeds! But it agreed with the Scriptures, and had it been received by the world, the introduction of pantheistic cults, such as Mary Baker Eddy's would never have found place.

The Baptismal Dispute

In this was had divisions. The common belief of the people called Baptists was that except a man was baptized by immersion (and he could be baptized no other way, for the only way you could literally sprinkle a man would be to reduce him to many pieces and sprinkle him out) he was not entitled to receive the communion of the Lord's Supper. This indeed was a marked difference of belief, and we wonder that the fires of dispute had not broken out before the revival ended. Joseph Smith was only a young boy, but his unprejudiced eye detected the inconsistency at once. If the Baptists were right the Methodist and the Presbyterian, who taught sprinkling and open communion, were wrong. Likewise the Congregationalist and other pedobaptists. Then came the question of infant baptism. And in the voice of the creed, "The baptism of young children is to be retained in the church," man shouted his insult at Christ who had said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Baptist being "for the remission of sins," it was, and is, a mockery to baptize infants who know no sin. This was indeed an abominable teaching which denied the mercy of Christ being extended to the innocent. In truth infants were not the subjects of his mercy, for through his atonement the Adamic curse had been removed from them; they needed no mercy. All the arguments advanced in support of this teaching of the creeds, fell impotent before the great command of Jesus Christ: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matthew 28: 19, 20.)

It was this flagrant "reading into the law" that brought so much puzzlement and confusion to the mind of the boy seeking for light. He passed over, with some degree of wonderment, the statement: "It pleased God . . . to create or make of nothing the world and all things therein."

Creed Reading General

I say he passed over certain things in the creeds. I mean to say that he doubtless would have done so had he read them. It suffices me to state that many persons in the days of 1820 seemed more fully to know the wording of the creed than of the Bible. And to one who was studying the Word of God, as Joseph Smith was doing, the great contrast between it and the creeds was apparent.

It matters not how sincere those ministers were, their understanding of God's dealings with men was terrible. We have only to quote from the Westminster Confession of faith, its teachings on predestination, which was the belief of Presbyterians, Calvinist Baptists, Congregationalists, and some other bodies, to show that God could call such teachings nothing but abomination. Reformers to-day cry out against the hideousness of that blasphemous insult to God. Dwight Hillis shouted that he would rather shake his fist in the face of Jehovah than to hold up the doctrine of unconditional election. But in the thirties the same church of which Mr. Hillis is a champion, laid hands of violence on Joseph Smith for claiming that God had spoken against the creeds.

I copy from the Westminster confession in a work printed in Scotland, 1762:

"By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite, that it cannot be either increased or diminished."

And to this may be added a line from the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England:

"Predestination to life is the everlasting purpose of God, whereby (before the foundations of the world were laid) he hath constantly decreed, by his counsel, secret to us, to deliver from curse and damnation those whom he hath chosen in Christ out of mankind, and to bring them by Christ to everlasting salvation, as vessels made to honor."

And to reveal the darkness of mind, which obsessed these men, the following sentiment was expressed: "As the godly consideration of predestination, and our election in Christ is full of sweet, pleasant and unspeakable comfort to godly persons . . ." And I suppose the same darkness inspired Watts to write his immortal verse, which was sung to the tune of Auld Lang Syne: "For hell is crammed with infants damned, without a day of grace."

If this doctrine is so pleasing and full of unspeakable comfort, why is it not preached to-day? The very silence of Joseph Smith's opponents is an eloquent proof of the truthfulness of the angel's message. In the creeds we find not only the "sin of commission but the sin of omission." For not only were things taught that challenged the goodness of God, but many points of Christ's unchangeable gospel were either frowned on or passed over in silence.

Creed-calls to the Ministry

Having denied present-day revelation, the churches must look to the people alone for calls to the ministry; notwithstanding the great apostle had commanded that no man was to take the honor "but he that was called of God as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5:4.) Hence we read of the "creed-call," in article XXIII of the Church of England creed:

"It is not lawful for any man to take upon him the office of public preaching, or ministering the sacraments in the congregation, before he be lawfully called, and sent to execute the same. And those we ought to judge lawfully called and sent, which be chosen and called to this work by men who have public authority given unto them in the congregation, to call and send ministers into the Lord's vineyard."

This little innocent statement, to the unobserving, may account for the confusion and multiplicity of beliefs; for men-made preachers would write creeds reflecting little but human judgment, and such is the case before us. The attempt to describe Deity is at variance with the Word of God. Baptism is perverted from its original mode and meaning. The blessed gifts of the Holy Spirit are passed over with a silence that borders on to the insolent. The changeability of God is taught in nearly every article of the creed.

The Real Call Unheeded

The tragedy of it all is that this trumpet call to repentance was spurned by the very men who of all others ought to have recognized it. For had not those "professors" read about Elijah coming "before the great and dreadful day of the Lord?" (Malachi 4:5.)

Did not the Spirit testify of a "restitution of all things?" (Acts 3:21.)

The sermonic literature of 1820 is filled with texts from the Old Testament. Did not any of those divines ever attempt to explain the plain teaching of Joel the prophet: "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, and your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions . . . before the great and the terrible day of the Lord shall come." (Joel 2:28, 31.)

Joseph Smith was a young man and he had a vision, but it was branded devilish because it vindicated God and exposed the creeds. In the midst of it all, this young man could only say:

"I had had a vision. . . . I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak unto me, or one of them did; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was lead to say in my heart, 'Why persecute for telling the truth?' I have actually seen a vision, and 'Who am I that I can withstand God?' or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen; for I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dare I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God and come under condemnation." —Church History, vol. 1, pp. 10, 11.

A Babel of Confusion

Confusion? No end of it. Not far from Palmyra worshipped the Society of Friends. They branded the doctrine of baptism in water as anti-Christian. Likewise the observance of the Lord's Supper was condemned. Ann Lee had come to America and introduced the doctrine of the Shakers. Marriage was condemned by them, as sinful; Mother Lee claimed to be Christ's second coming, in the form of a woman. Then the Seventh-day Baptists came with their doctrine of Saturday-sabbath. Was there a middle-ground between the teaching of the Unitarians that Christ Jesus was a mere man and the claim of the Catholics that the literal flesh and blood of God was present in the sacrament? Was the New Jerusalem Church right in teaching that there would be no literal resurrection of the body? Or should young Joseph and other seekers after the right way believe the claim of the annihilationist that only the wicked dead would never come forth?

The Fullness of the Gospel to Come Forth

Do we wonder that in the midst of this confusion, Joseph Smith took the matter to God in prayer? and do we wonder that God answered him in the following manner: That "All the religious denominations were believing in incorrect doctrine, his church and kingdom." "and," continues Mr. Smith, in his letter published in Daniel Rupp's History (1844), "I trine, and that none of them was acknowledged of God as was expressly commanded to 'go after them,' at the same time receiving a promise that the fullness of the gospel should at some future time be made known unto me." In the year 1823, an angel appeared to Joseph Smith and told him that he was chosen to be an instrument in the hands of God to bring about some of his purposes in this glorious dispensation; and that the gospel was to be preached in all its fullness to all nations, that a people might be prepared for the millennial reign.

One Hundred Years of Vindication

One hundred years have passed since that Divine Voice thrilled the soul of a simple-hearted boy. One hundred years have seen the churches tinkering at their creeds, and by words and deeds testifying to the truthfulness of the angel's message. One by one the great principles of the restoration have been heralded by sectarianism, but without giving credit. We may mention the gifts of the Spirit, healing, temple building, tithe paying including stewardships, visions, dreams, revelation, and so on; and the prophecies of the Seer of Palmyra are receiving literal and startling fulfillment.

One hundred years of vindication!

The Creeds Then and Now—1820-1920

BY ELMER E. LONG

Some wonderful changes in conception as to creeds have taken place in a hundred years.

One hundred years ago, society was in a state of expectancy. The nations were recovering from the disturbed equilibrium occasioned by the Napoleonic wars, and the feeling was shared by many that a new era had dawned, that the nations would learn war no more. The world was growing better. Religion had assumed a new aspect. Men of recognized piety and unquestioned integrity were breaking with the time-honored creeds, and many were running to and fro in search of the more excellent way. "Back to Jerusalem" was a popular slogan with certain reformers who endeavored to lead the van in quest of truth.

A few intrepid souls more daring than their fellows had braved the dangers of the hitherto unexplored depths of apocalyptic secrecy, and the study of prophecy was becoming a favorite pastime. The conviction was growing that something unusual was about to happen, as indicated by the multiplying "signs of the times." Churches with conflicting creeds were fostering a spirit of amity and good will, and concerted efforts at soul-saving were the order of the day. Patriarchal dreams, prophetic forecasts, and Messianic promise of a golden age on earth were soon to be realized. The western sky, still lurid with dying fires of the retreating Dark Ages, was becoming illuminated by the rising sun of gospel glory already appearing above the eastern horizon. Surely, the millennium was at hand!

In keeping with the growing spirit of the times, the Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists of western New York united their efforts to save souls in the early spring of 1820. Unity of purpose and concert of action characterized the meeting until a campaign of proselytizing was started, when "Lo, here, and Lo, there," was urged with sectarian vehemence, and the controversy became bitter embroiling the neighborhood. Among those affected by the unseemly discord was a family of Smiths, some of whom had united with the Presbyterians. Up to this time, as reliable history seems to show, nothing detrimental to the good character and reputation of this particular family had ever been heard. They were the descendants of worthy ancestors who had acquitted themselves with honor in both public and private life. The worst that could be urged against them at the time was their indigent circumstances, they having suffered financial reverses through an unfortunate business transaction.

A Boy Steps Forth

It was during this religious excitement that Joseph Smith, then a boy in his teens, stepped into the limelight. He was not a member of any church. In his own account of the affair, he says he was partial to the Methodists. But he was in doubt as to who was right. In his dilemma, he decided to go direct to the fountain head of the truth where prophets and seers in the ages ago had found surcease from vexation and doubt.

While reading the Bible, he says the following verse from the epistle of James made a profound impression on his mind: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." James 1:5.

Wisdom, the very thing he was in quest of, was there promised as freely as the waters of the Susquehanna, if he asked in faith and did not waver.

But what did it mean to read the Bible and pray? Was he to study the sacred pages through the murky spectacles of sectarianism? And must his prayer be prompted by the sentiment of the Westminster Confession of Faith? Was he to believe what he read and govern his actions accordingly? Or was he to accept only such portions of divine truth that happened to coincide with the creeds? Should he pray with the understanding that his intercession would be heard and answered? Or should his supplication be simply a formal importunity in keeping with the popular notion that God did not answer as in days of old? In a word, why pray unless a definite answer was expected?

The Vision He Saw

With the calm assurance that the holy of holies was open to him, he betook himself to a near-by forest, and there in nature's stately tabernacle, he laid his case before the God of all the earth. Would Jehovah hear the humble petition of this daring youth? Could his feeble cry penetrate the portals that have been closed for seventeen hundred years?

As he knelt on the leafy carpet and begun to offer up the desires of his heart, he says he was suddenly enveloped in midnight darkness, and in the grasp of some enemy from the unseen world. As he struggled to free himself from his enemy, two personages appeared descending in a halo of light! Angels appeared to that illiterate, obscure country boy! Incredible, 'tis said! Wait a moment. Stranger things than that have happened. Wait until the message is delivered.

Frightened at first, he was unable to speak until his fears were allayed by one of the personages addressing him by name, saying: "This is my beloved Son; hear him." Regaining his composure, he made known the object of his visit by asking which church he should join. On the answer, to this vital interrogatory, hung the fate of all the churches, and the destiny of the nations! Listen, ye ends of the earth, as the heavenly courier utters the fateful words!

You join none of them for they are all wrong; and their creeds are an abomination in the sight of God.

The Advantage of Youth

The churches all wrong! The cherished creeds embodying the wisdom of the ages an abomination in the sight of God! Who but an angel from the presence of Jehovah, clothed with the authority of Gabriel, would dare pronounce such a verdict? And will this stripling youth have the courage to bear such message to the world? And why should the Almighty intrust the sacred responsibility of a message fraught with such dire consequences to the custody of a mere boy? Was there no man in all the world trustworthy enough to receive it—none among all the nobility of earth worthy of divine recognition?

Perhaps it was well that he was a boy. Unacquainted with the fickleness of the human heart, as yet, he would more likely obey than a man who would hesitate to jeopardize himself by running counter to an inflamed popular prejudice, sure to be met in the delivery of such a message. Indeed, it was no new thing for God so to act. Did he not speak to a mere child and pronounce a similar judgment on the house of Eli? (1 Samuel 3:11-14.) David, the shepherd boy, was chosen when but a lad to displace the haughty Saul. (Samuel 16:12, 13.) Jeremiah was ordained before he was born to "root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." (Jeremiah 1:5-10.) John the Baptist knew his mission from childhood, and the boy Jesus confounded the learned doctors at twelve years of age because he understood his father's business. Why, then, should it be thought strange that God should speak to a boy in the nineteenth century when it is written, "I am the Lord, I change not"? (Malachi 3:6.)

His Message Rejected

At a favorable opportunity, the boy reported his experience to the Methodist minister who, after listening to the condemnatory message, replied: "It was all of the Devil." How familiar the sound! It was shouted with hurricane accents at Capernaum, Chorazin, and Bethsaida. It was hurled with titanic force at the Master in the synagogue at Nazareth, and reiterated in thunder tones on the mount of Olives, and on Golgotha. It was heard amidst the clashing of swords and the roar of flames at Wittenburg, Geneva, and Oxford, whence it crossed the deep and raised its dragon voice at Salem. Judging by the bloody history of this popular phrase, this last denunciation was but an echo of the past. The spirit that led the Pharisees to reject the Christ incited the sectarians to oppose the youthful Seer. Inspired by a sense of fear for the safety of his crown, Herod slew all the children of Bethlehem in a frantic endeavor to destroy him who was born king of the Jews.

In like manner, the sectarians sought to destroy the reputation of the Smith family to kill the force of the message delivered by the boy whom they hated without a cause. Rumor, with her thousand lying tongues, made haste to raise the alarm and warn the people against the coming delusion.

Suppose the boy did see a "vision of devils," as the sectarians asserted, by which he was deceived? Was that a legitimate excuse for the professors of religion to persecute the whole Smith family? If it was the Devil, or a clumsy hoax, would it not soon come to naught of itself? At all events, it was no part of Christianity to persecute whether the story was true or false. To persecute the boy and his family, though they believed the story implicitly, would not prove nor disprove that Joseph had seen a vision of angels. It would prove, however, that their persecutors were not moved by the proper spirit, for the Spirit of Christ does not so act. The spirit of persecution has always been a distinguishing characteristic of those in error.

But what would the Methodist minister and his fellows have said had the boy been told to join the Methodist Church? What a mighty shout would have ascended from Methodist alters all over the world had the stamp of divine approval been placed on that institution? But, alas! it was not so. The ax was laid at the root of the Methodist tree, and together with all other trees which the Lord did not plant, it was threatened with destruction.

From the sectarian point of view, the boy was a close rival of Ananias. But to the casual observer at this distance, the sectarians appeared to have formed an alliance with the Pharisees. At any rate, Satan was on the ground busily engaged at his usual occupation. The fact of his presence was agreed to by all concerned. It was only a matter of locating the field of his activity.

The Changes Time has Wrought

Time has wrought many changes during the century that lies between us and the first proclamation of this unpopular message: changes which no human sagacity could foresee. At the time of its delivery, communication with the world beyond was said to have been "done away," because "no longer needed." As a result of that popular belief, the churches were being directed by the wisdom of men, education having taken the place of inspiration. The practical results of such departure from primitive ways and means was confusion, for men of learning, then as now, could not agree on what a church was, organically, doctrinally, or practically. About the only point of agreement between them was that certain vital features of apostolic Christianity were unnecessary now. But to-day popular sentiment is rapidly undergoing a change, and communication with the world beyond is becoming a daily pastime. Modern Christianity is permeated through and through with the new-found hope, and the ouija board is more often consulted than the Bible. One of the latest and most profuse writers, John Huntly Skrine, D. D., says:

"I am so bold as to expect that this new science—for all this psychological research, telepathy and the rest, is a science, you know, a quite natural, sound, straightforward, wholesome one—is going to do great things in religion, very great things. Yes, if it is not becoming in me to say it, when I know so little about these researches, I am hoping this new knowledge will make all things new in theology, as when Copernicus widened out the skies for us. Why, just think! If it made such a difference when we learned that the earth goes round the sun, how will it be if we learn that a man can go round the earth without crossing his doorstep? But that is what he does, if by thinking a thought in England he makes a friend think the same in Japan. It will make earth a new place. And will it stop there? If an Englishman can be in Japan as well as at home, why not in Mars, provided the Martians have organs of consciousness like our own? New earth and new heavens too! . . . Shall we not have to rewrite all our schoolbooks on theology?"—The Survival of Jesus, page 64.

The writer of the foregoing is one of a rapidly multiplying school of doctors of divinity who are reversing popular opinion as regards revelation. If their deductions are correct, the principle involved was just as true one hundred years ago as it is now. No matter what they may call this new thing, it is a revelation, and Christianity is reaching out after it, inadvertently conceding the contention of Joseph Smith that divine communication is not only possible but necessary.

Doctor Skrine says further:

"I take a short road to express my meaning. I believe we have here the phenomenon which in other and higher aspects we call revelation, inspiration, prophecy. All these are communions of divine and human. For what is it when God reveals a truth or inspires a prophet? Prophet and poet, as we know, 'by the framework and the chord' of their personal make; the saint under inspiration must himself breathe in the truth which the Spirit inbreathes; and revelation, which some dogmatists still try to contrast with discovery, is only able to reveal so much as the recipient is able to discover. The revealing, the unveiling, is a drawing of a curtain by a human hand guided by a divine."—The Survival of Jesus, page 136.

So in this matter of divine revelation, Joseph Smith was only in advance of his fellows to be vindicated at a later date, and we who live a century afterward are furnished with a bountiful supply of material ready to hand by which the defense of the angel's message of a century ago is made easy.

Healing of the Sick—From 1820 to 1920

BY FRANK E. ALMOND

Divine healing as practiced by the other churches, has been developed almost entirely since the gospel was restored in 1820.

Nineteen centuries ago the Savior showed humanity that the healing of the body was possible. Further than this, he gave to the world the assurance that those who believed on him should "lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." This promise was as a glimmer of sunshine in the troubled skies of the early church, and was a reassurance to them of the presence of Jesus Christ. Amidst persecution and trouble, the church relied upon the words of their Master, and through the ministration of God bore witness to the world of the power of faith.

This simplicity and purity did not last long. Tempted and harassed by the forces of materialism, the church lost her clear vision. She compromised with the imperial power and splendor, and became a gilded, materialistic church. The gifts of the Spirit were then taken away from her, and the "dark ages" of ignorance and vice were ushered in. Century after century passed away, reformers came and went—engrossed in removing doctrinal errors, yet all overlooking the promise of Christ that the "signs following" should be the hall-mark of the true church of God.

It is true that here and there was a soul whose faith in the promises of God was rewarded by the healing of the body, yet as a healing ordinance of the church the laying on of hands was no longer practiced. In its stead extreme unction, a last rite for the dying, was given—a parody which all the Protestant churches shrank from copying.

Such were conditions in 1820, when Joseph Smith was told by the Lord that his true gospel was to be restored, in which the power of God would be made manifest, and one of the first claims of the restored church was that through the laying on of hands of authorized ministers of Christ, the sick were healed, and that through faith in the promises of Jesus Christ pain and disease fled away. Such a claim was not passed unheeded, and it brought opprobrium and ridicule from the various sects, and we read of some going so far as to expel from their organization those who were logically forced to believe in "the Mormon doctrine" of the laying on of hands.

Yet the leaven had begun to work, and to-day there is scarcely a church in the world which does not have among its honored members those who believe in spiritual or mental healing. We find even the conservative Episcopal Church utilizing the services of a layman to lay hands on thousands, many of whom are reputed to have been healed or relieved. Doctor E. L. House gives expression to this awakening of the churches to the doctrine of healing, as follows:

"Spiritual healing is not new. It is as old as the records of man in his relations to God. But it has been overlooked for centuries by the church of God, and at its best has been considered as an 'extra' on the Lord's table instead of a 'regular.' To-day 'healing' has become a great word on the lips of men, and in the thoughts of men, and in the practice of men. . . . To-day there is a cry for the man who has the gift of healing, and the church need no longer, stand dumb and helpless. She may claim her Lord's promise, and take the gift of healing through her ministry, to the souls bound fast in the fetters of vicious habit, or sunken in neurasthenic misery, or overburdened with griefs, and the weaknesses of the flesh."

So widespread had become this belief in the power of healing without medicine that in 1910 a committee of the representatives of the clerical and medical professions of England investigated many cases, and reported that "spiritual ministrations should be recognized equally with medical ministrations as carrying God's blessings to the sick."

Science Paves the Way

What has made these religious organizations change their attitude? Why is it that they no longer scoff at the claims of divine healing, but instead utilize the very therapeutic power which they refused to recognize for so many years?

If we examine the development of the great religious movement of healing, we shall discover that it was science that awakened a popular study of the healing principle, and thus brought the church to the recollection of the power which had once been hers. It was scientific research that forced the churches to adopt a program of social reform as well as an ecclesiastical ritual; it was science that gave to the church a broader understanding of the creative work of God; it made her recognize the supremacy of law; to erect hospitals and send medical help to the heathen; in short, science has taught the churches to utilize every legitimate means outside of the field of religion in order that they might hope to attain to the ideal of the Master when he said: "Ye are to be the light of the world."

Tracing the development of the modern movement of psychotherapy, we discover that prior to 1838 there had been a somewhat hazy idea of the subconscious powers of man. In mesmerism we notice that the belief was in a "magnetic fluid" supposed to surround a person, which was subject to the will of a stronger mind. But after 1830 the modern idea of the subconscious mind began to be understood, and with it developed the ideas of suggestion and auto-suggestion as the means of healing nervous diseases.

The Beginning of the "Healing" Sects

Doctor E. E. Weaver, in his thesis on "mind and health," claims the origin of the modern study of mental healing by religious sects to be about 1838, when Phineas Parkhurst Quimby began investigations. Quimby, as his experiments went on, became more and more convinced that disease was an error of the mind and not a real thing. He practiced mental healing, and intended putting his "science" on a religious basis, but he did not live long enough to do so.

"Christian Science"

Quoting Doctor Weaver, we find that among Quimby's patients were some who took up his work and made it a cult. From the work of this early investigator may be traced Christian Science and the New Thought.

"Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, had been cured by Quimby of a malady of years' standing. Profoundly grateful, she recognized him as a prophet of a new dispensation and began to study the 'truth' as Quimby had propounded it. . . . She was led from this to deny the reality of suffering, sin, evil, and all things material and laid as the foundation of her system an ultraidealistic philosophy. . . . While it guards its teaching very strictly, it has been the means indirectly of launching many other schemes of healing either by way of imitation or rivalry."

New Thought

Again quoting Doctor Weaver, we discover that—

"Another offshoot of the Quimby principles is the New Thought movement, first represented by Julius A. Dresser, another patient of Quimby's, who visited him first in 1860 and who began to practice mental healing in Boston the same year that Mrs. Eddy removed to that city from Lynn (1882). . . . The doctrines are expounded differently by different leaders, some laying more emphasis on the religious aspects of the movements, some on the philosophical."

"Dowieism"

Far removed from science, and basing its claim solely on the Bible, we find that Dowieism (founded 1882) in its incipency approached more nearly the method and teaching of the restored church, but as it developed it is too true that its leader became wise in his own conceits, lost himself in credulity, occultism, and fanaticism, and "his career is shadowed by falsehood and deceit, clever trickery and misrepresentation."

The "Emmanuel Movement"

Another attempt to combine religion and science was the "Emmanuel Movement," which started in 1906; in the Episcopal Church. It is a combination of suggestion and medical attendance. It has been a great success, but limits its sphere only to those cases which are nervous or functional, claiming no power whatever in organic troubles. In Religion and Medicine it is stated: "An authoritative case of recovery from organic disease through psychical means is what we are waiting for."

Recognizing the value of this movement the Episcopal Church is now trying to arrange its creed so as to allow the laying on of hands for the sick, and the using of consecrated oil.

Roman Catholic Claims

Spurred by the successes of its Protestant adversaries, the representatives of the Roman Catholic Church claim that for centuries their church has been teaching and practicing the doctrine of healing through the sacrament of extreme unction. To say the least, this is a far-fetched assumption, for this practice is only used when all faith and hope is gone, and the patient is to be prepared for the other world. On the battlefield it was administered to dying soldiers, as a last service of the church, and not as a healing ordinance.

The Basis of Healing

The many claims to healing among the various religious organizations are based on very different ideas. For instance, the theosophists (New Thought) claimed that the healing was through the spirit of man, and that it was a dangerous exercise of powers since while the body might be cleansed, the soul was injured. The Church of Christ, Scientist, bases its methods on the idea that there is no such thing as matter, but only mind. The Emmanuel Movement and other psychotherapeutic agencies base their successes on the power of subconscious suggestion. Indeed, it is evident that most of the modern movements towards divine healing or mental healing are postulated on the idea of the power of the mind over matter, or even further, of the power of the mind over other minds. There is much to this idea, and there are no doubt laws of mental science which account for many so-called faith cures.

Yet it is also to be recognized that there is a Mind which has power over all minds. If it be true that mental healing rests on laws discovered by man, relating to his connection with other men, it is not too much to say that we believe there is yet another step to be taken—the discovery of the higher law between the Divine Healer and the human soul. In the divine plan, under the restored gospel, there is no claim that the resultant healing is the exerting of human power. There may have been such instances among the cases healed, yet the only right way is for the administrator to place himself in communion with his heavenly Father, to pray that God, through his Spirit, may bestow the gift of health upon the sick. "Not our will, but thy will be done."

There is no imaginative unreality to such a procedure. Instead of the supposed evil aftermath, there is a revivifying of the spirit. It is not only a healing of the body, but a cleansing of the soul. By this ordinance, and through the administration of elders having the proper authority, God is willing to give the greatest blessing to the patient—that of forgiveness of sins. Hence we read in James the significant statement: "And if he has committed sins they shall be forgiven him." (Also John 20: 23.)

Magna Est Veritas Et Prevalebit

Having thus traced the development of the belief in divine healing, we feel to give thanks to God for the spread of his truth. Every restored principle which the early church advocated in the beginning of the nineteenth century has been vindicated in the light of the science of to-day, and there is scarcely a fundamental doctrine of the church which has not become popularized during the last half century, although in the first half the church was stigmatized and villified for those very opinions which are now held to be true. Truly, it is remarkable to notice so clearly that the principles of the gospel have taken root in the heart of humanity, and that it seems but a step before the world will comprehend the fullness of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

In the light of historic facts we are constrained to believe that the nations have indeed come up to "the mountain of the Lord," although it may be unconsciously, and now are learning of "his ways," and discovering the "paths of the Lord."

What may be done to replace the usual champagne use in christening ships is suggested in the announcement that the ship Evergreen City, named in honor of Bloomington, Illinois, to be launched soon will be christened with a bottle of water from a well at which Abraham Lincoln many times slaked his thirst.

Social Conditions in 1820

BY HEMAN HALE SMITH

A pen picture of life on the Western frontier about the time Joseph Smith received his first vision.

The manner of daily living of the people in this country has changed more in the last one hundred and fifty years than it did in all of the previous years of history combined. Most of these changes also have occurred since 1820. The world in which Joseph Smith lived as a boy was quite different from the world in which we meet and make our living.

In 1820 the line of frontier stretched along the Mohawk Valley in central New York to Lake Ontario, three fourths the way to Niagara, along the southern shore of the lake, thence back in a southeastern direction; so that all of northern New York and southwestern New York was in the wilds of the West. This line of frontier curving about the north-west of New Jersey, again stretching to the westward across central Pennsylvania about one half distance of the State, advancing south down the Allegheny Mountains to South Carolina and Georgia. West of this line there were settled areas around Pittsburgh and in southeastern Ohio, in the blue grass region of Kentucky, southwestern corner of Ohio, in central Tennessee, at Saint Louis, at the mouth of the Missouri, and about New Orleans in Louisiana. Indiana still held the lands of Michigan Territory, two thirds of Indiana, three fourths of Illinois and all of Missouri Territory, which then included Iowa except a narrow strip along the banks of the Missouri and south of the Mississippi. By reconstructing these lines on any map the reader can see that western New York frontier territory. As late as 1830 there were only six hundred thousand people in the whole western half of the State.

"Arrived at the nearest point to his destination on the Ohio, the emigrant either cut out a road to his new home or pushed up some tributary of that river in a keel boat. If he was one of the poorer classes, he became a squatter on the public lands, trusting to find in the profits of his farming the means of paying for his land. Not uncommonly, after clearing the land, he sold his improvements to the actual purchaser, under the customary usage or by preemption laws. With the money thus secured he would purchase new land in a remoter area, and thus establish himself as an independent landowner. Under the credit system which existed at the opening of the period, the settler purchased his land in quantities of not less than one hundred and sixty acres at two dollars per acre, by a cash payment of fifty cents per acre and the rest in installments running over a period of four years; but by the new law of 1820 the settler was permitted to buy as small a tract as eighty acres from the Government at a minimum price of a dollar and a quarter per acre, without credit. The price of labor in the towns along the Ohio, coupled with the low cost of provisions, made it possible for even a poor day laborer from the East to accumulate the necessary amount to make his land purchase.

"Having in this way settled down either as a squatter or as a landowner, the pioneer proceeded to hew out a clearing in the midst of the forest. Commonly he had selected his lands with reference to the value of the soil, as indicated by the character of the hardwoods, but this meant that the labor of clearing was the more severe in good soil. Under the sturdy strokes of his axe the light of day was let into the little circle of cleared ground. With the aid of his neighbors, called together under the social attractions of a 'raising,' with its inevitable accompaniment of whiskey and a 'frolic,' he erected his log cabin. 'America,' wrote Birkbeck, 'was bred in a cabin.'

"Having secured a foothold, the settler next proceeded to 'girdle' or 'deaden' an additional forest area, preparatory to his farming operations. This consisted in cutting a ring through the bark around the lower portion of the trunk, to prevent the sap from rising. In a short time the withered branches were ready for burning, and in the midst of the stumps the first crop of corn and vegetables was planted. Often the settler did not even burn the girdled trees, but planted his crop under the dead foliage.

"In regions nearer to the east, as in western New York, it was sometimes possible to repay a large portion of the cost of clearing by the sale of pot and pearl ashes extracted from the logs, which were brought together into huge piles for burning. This was accomplished by a 'logrolling,' under the united efforts of the neighbors, as in the case of the 'raising.' More commonly in the west the logs were wasted by burning, except such as were split into rails, which, laid one above another, made the zigzag 'worm fences' for the protection of the fields of the pioneer.

"When a clearing was sold to a later comer, fifty or sixty dollars, in addition to the Government price of land, was commonly charged for forty acres, inclosed and partly cleared. It was estimated that the cost of a farm of three hundred and twenty acres at the edge of the prairie in Illinois, at this time, would be divided as follows: for one hundred and sixty acres of prairie, two hundred dollars; for fencing it into four forty-acre fields with rail fences, one hundred and sixty dollars; for breaking it up with a plow, two dollars per acre, or three hundred and twenty dollars; eighty acres of timber land and eighty acres of pasture prairie, two hundred dollars. Thus, with cabins, stables, etc., it cost a little over a thousand dollars to secure an improved farm of three hundred and twenty acres. But the mass of the early settlers were too poor to afford such an outlay, and were either squatters within a little clearing, or owners of eighthy acres, which they hoped to increase by subsequent purchase. Since they worked with the labor of their own hands and that of their sons, the cash outlay was practically limited to the original cost of the lands and articles of husbandry. The cost of an Indiana farm of eighty acres of land, with two horses, two or three cows, a few hogs and sheep, and farming utensils, was estimated at about four hundred dollars."

The history of the settlement of western New York, particularly the district comprising Palmyra and Fayette is a very interesting one. This land was originally claimed by the colony of Massachusetts; the Indians also claimed it as well as the State of New York. The legal dispute between New York and Massachusetts as to preemption rights and jurisdiction occurred immediately after the Revolutionary War and the difficulty was submitted to commissioners who met at Hartford in 1786. These commissioners gave to Massachusetts the right to preempt from the Indians all land west of the line running through Seneca from Pennsylvania to Lake Ontario, except one mile adjacent to the Niagara River.

All of this vast territory west of Seneca, containing about six million acres, was in 1787 sold by the State of Massachusetts to Oliver Phelps and Nathaniel Gorham who agreed to pay for it one hundred thousand dollars, payable in three installments. These men next had to satisfy the Indians; Oliver Phelps called them in a council on the banks of the Canandaigua Lake. The subject was debated in a council for two or three days during which time some artistic specimens of Indian eloquence were related, particularly in the speeches of Red Jacket and Farmers Brother. Red Jacket opposed selling to the white men, Farmers Brother favored it. On the third day of the council, in July, 1788, the Indians sold their right to the two million acres of land lying directly west of Seneca Lake. The other four million acres were relinquished to the State of Massachusetts which gave back to Phelps and Gorham sixty-seven thousand dollars of the purchase price paid for it. These men immediately began a survey of the land left to them, beginning the policy since obtaining in all of the West, of having sections six miles square denominating ranges north and south and townships east and west. They then opened a land office and sold the land in one hundred and sixty acre lots to actual settlers.

Two thirds of a tract was sold in 1790 to Robert Morris of Revolutionary fame who in turn sold his tract to Charles Williamson who again conveyed it to Sir William Pulteney of England. In this strip lay the towns of Fayette, Palmyra, and Hill Cumorah. It is interesting to note that the agent of this English gentleman who handled this American property was Benjamin Franklin's son. From the year 1800 to 1820 the north half of this tract was settled very rapidly and by this year the State of New York was busy digging the famous Erie Canal which ran through Wayne County, New York.

Yearning for Education Insatiable

While family wants and needs were few in those days, the thirst for knowledge of the western pioneer was insatiable, and spelling matches, frontier academies, and debates were numerous. Professor West, in his History of the American People, characterizes the frontier as follows:

"The westerners of 1830 had developed a new American type—to remain the dominant one for two generations: tall, gaunt men, adventurous and resolute, of masterful temper, daunted by no emergency, impatient of authority but, with a leaven of high idealism. The West believe in the worth of the common man. Already it had become 'the most American part of America.' Here the new nation showed best its raw youth, unpolished, but sound at heart; crude, ungainly, lacking the poise and repose and dignity of older societies; but buoyantly self-confident, throbbing with rude vigor, grappling unconcernedly with impossible tasks, getting them done somehow, and dreaming overnight of vaster ones for the morrow. Some small embarrassment is felt for its temporary ignorance of books and art; but it exulted boastfully in its mastery of nature and its daring social experiments, and it appealed, with sure faith, to the future to add the refinements and graces of life.

This 'American propensity to look forward to the future' for whatever it lacked in the present, particularly amused the many supercilious and superficial English travelers of the day. These prejudice-blinded gentlemen delighted in portraying with microscopic detail, skin-deep blemishes of American society. Even Charles Dickens, whom America loved, saw little but the spittoons and the hurry at the lunch counters. No one of these critics saw at all the most amazing spectacle of all history spread before their eyes: a nation in the making, occupying and subduing a rebellious continent; felling forests, plowing prairies, clearing the rivers, hewing out roads; founding farms and towns and commonwealths; solving offhand grave economic problems, wastefully sometimes, but effectively; and inventing and working out, on a gigantic scale, new, progressive principles of society and government. 'You can't write books,' carped the visitor. 'We're busy just now,' shouted the West carelessly over its shoulder, 'but just wait till we get this bridge built, these prairies farmed, that new constitution framed.'"

No "Modern Conveniences"

There were in those days of course no trains, very few steamboats, no electrical devices, no harvesters or reapers, no anæsthetics to be used in operations, no fruit except that raised in the neighborhood, no modern roads. Yet in spite of these handicaps questions of the day were discussed with eagerness. Again quoting Mr. West:

"Ambitious boys, barefoot and in threadworn coats, thronged the little colleges, not for four years of a good time, but with genuine passion to break into the fairy realm of knowledge; and their hard-earned dimes that did not have to go for plain food went for books. English authors of a new sort of genius—Carlyle, Browning, William Morris—as well as English scientists with new teachings, like Darwin and Huxley, reached appreciative audiences in America sooner than at home. Many an English book, afterward recognized as epoch-making, found its way into far Western villages, and into the hands of eager young men and women there who had never worn evening dress or eaten a course dinner, long before it penetrated to even the 'reading set' at Oxford University. The North American Review and, a little later, the Atlantic Monthly, periodicals of fine literary tone, could be seen in isolated farmhouses on Western prairies.

"A caricature picturing a gaunt New England housewife on hands and knees to scrub, but pushing before her a stand holding an open copy of Emerson to which her eyes were glued, might have been applied, with no more exaggeration, to show the strenuous struggle for culture in many a modest home in Kansas or Minnesota. The village sewing society eschewed gossip to listen to one of their number reading aloud while the others plied the needle. Each village had its lyceum, for the winter evenings, with literary programs—readings, declamations, and debates—crude and quaint enough, sometimes, but better than 'refined vaudeville.' Such villages, too, aspired to frequent courses of lectures—with such eastern celebrities as Holmes and Everett on the program; and often the proceeds of the lectures were used to start a village library. Twice, on such lecture tours, Emerson penetrated beyond the Mississippi, greeted in barn-like 'halls' by hard-handed men and women, seated on wooden benches, with eager faces agleam with keen intellectual delight."

No Eight-Hour Days, With Saturday Holiday

Carpenters and masons worked from sunrise to sunset. Factory workers worked the same or longer if necessary. Children and women were worked with no restriction, often from four-thirty to nine at night. People who were feeble minded or insane were regarded as a curse put upon their families by the hand of the Almighty to be borne and often housed together with criminals in penitentiaries.

In the homes clean sand was often a substitute for carpets; pewter or wooden dishes provides the tableware. There was no linen on the tables or prints on the walls. No woman until the beginning of the nineteenth century had cooked by a stove. Household lights were candles molded in the home, or smoked wicks in whale oil lamps. It was a great hardship to let the fire go out for unless you were supplied with flint and steel you must go several miles to borrow live coals from a neighbor. Shoes and hats were sold in the village shop; the rest of the clothing was made in the home. Breakfast, dinner, and supper were often of the same combinations of salt pork, fish potatoes, turnips, rye bread, and dried apples. If the frontiersman had the time however, the table was often supplied with fresh game. Such vegetables as cauliflower, sweet corn, lettuce, cantaloupe, rhubarb, and tomatoes were unknown or else feared as poisonous. Bananas and oranges were luxuries of the rich as was also ice in the summer time.

This will be sufficient to show that those who would like to go back a hundred years and live in the good old past are either unappreciative of the benefits of the day or have not stopped to think of all of the inconveniences our fathers then suffered.

"I do not know exactly when she (America) began to call herself 'God's own country,' but her national anthem, 'My country, 'tis of thee,' dating from 1832, fixes the date when America, soon after the second war with England, which ended in 1814, consciously felt herself as a Holy land."—Chosen Peoples, by Israel Zangwill.

Educational and Mechanical Progress Since 1820

BY FLOYD McDOWELL

It is remarkable how the period of our advancement as a nation centers around 1820.

Of all the centuries of world history the nineteenth is perhaps the most remarkable. This seems particularly true when applied to America, for it is in this century that this nation has what we may call the second birth of adolescence, when she for the first time seems to come into full realization of all her powers.

It is during this period that those things for which America particularly stands in the world to-day first became prominent. It was then that the real meaning of democracy came to be realized. It was then that the literature which may be characterized as distinctly American was produced, and it was likewise during this period that there occurred the most remarkable development of industrial life that is known in all history. So remarkable indeed is it all that we are led to wonder if it was not all planned by the Divine Hand.

That this marked development should take place very soon after the vision of 1820 may be only a coincidence and yet all must admit that it is so striking a coincidence as to deserve special mention. One is surprised to find that in politics, in education, literature, and in business, there seems to have come from some source in the decades immediately following 1820 a most remarkable surge of human energy.

Says McLaughlin:

"These were years [1828-40] of great development and progress, as well as times of heated political controversy. The spirit of the Nation was fully awake; if we have thought that we could see before this time the real America, the land of opportunity and of active energy, the land where man unrepressed by class systems and social prejudices could move onward and upward and where each could find the place his own energy and merit entitled him to—if we have thought in our study that we have seen the real America before, we must realize when we came to Jackson's terms, that the past had been only a preparation. All the ruthless energy, the determination and the eager self-confidence of a young and buoyant nation now showed themselves in politics, in literature, in business activity, in the daily life of the people."

The Development of Literature

West in his American History, says,

"The real flowering in American literature came just after 1830. America's only earlier distinction in letters had been in political oratory. In this field, from 1812 to 1830, Webster, Clay, and Calhoun sustained the best traditions of the Revolutionary days; and those same years saw also the early work of Irving, Cooper, and Bryant. All these six, long continued to grow in fame and power. And now between 1830 and 1845, began the public career of Edward Everett in oratory, of Emerson, Hawthorne, Holmes, Longfellow, Lowell, Poe, and Whittier in the literature of creative imagination and spiritual power; of Bancroft, Prescott, Palfrey, and Sparks in historical composition; of Kent and Story in legal commentary; of Audubon, Agassiz, Dana, and Asa Gray in science. Noah Webster's Dictionary was published in 1828; ten years later, the Smithsonian Institute was founded; and midway between appeared the first penny daily, the New York Sun."

The Development in Education

Again quoting from West:

"The intellectual ferment of the thirties and forties transformed society. Exact and profound scholarship was still lacking; but an aspiration for knowledge, a hunger for culture, a splendid ideal, became characteristics of American life—until 'flattened out,' for a time after 1875, by a gross material prosperity. During that long era, to welcome 'high thinking' at the price of 'plain living' was instinctive in an almost unbelievable large portion of the people."

The educational development of this period is shown in a surprising way when we study the growth of Iowa schools and colleges. Of the 567 colleges and universities which were in operation in the United States in 1914, 519 have been established since 1825. Of this number 257 were established in the period of forty five years beginning with 1825. If we arrange these statistics in the form of a table we have the following:

Colleges Established

Before 1825	48
1825 and 1850	100
1850 and 1860	91
1870 and 1880	66

"Mechanical invention began now to revolutionize industry and life. From the inauguration of Washington to the War of 1812, patents for new inventions averaged less than eighty a year. From 1812 to 1820, they rose to nearly two hundred a year, and in 1830 the number was 544. Twenty years later, the thousand mark was passed, and in 1860, the number was nearly 5,000."

A partial list of these inventions follows:

Fulton's steamboat	1807
McCormick reaper	1831
Telegraph	1835
Steam navigation	1838
Steam hammer	1838
Photography	1838
Sewing machine	1846
Rotary printing press	1847

The Way They Traveled mostly in 1820

1890 and 1900	57

Perhaps a better indication of the growing public interest in education is shown in the following table showing the number of public high schools established by decades in the United States since 1820.

1830-1839	14
1840-1849	43
1850-1859	108
1860-1869	177
1870-1879	479
1880-1899	1320
1900-1902	202

Mechanical Inventions

Again quoting from West:

Electric fire alarm	1852
Steam fire engine	1853
Electric cable	1860
Breech-loading rifle	1860
Harvester	1860

Such has been the progress in this the land of Joseph, in this land of human liberty, in this land of God's own planting, since the angel's visit to the boy prophet in 1820. Such will always be the progress wherever and whenever truth supplants error, knowledge supplants ignorance, justice supplants intolerance, and light supplants darkness. The lesson for us to learn is that these advantages which have come to us in this "promised land" shall be used not for mere selfish aggrandizement, but rather to the end that these virtues of truth, liberty, and justice, be disseminated throughout the world. Such a thought indeed gives new meaning to the oft-repeated passage, "Let your light so shine." If it is only through the grace of God that we have been enabled to partake of these privileges then most certainly we are obligated to him to see to it that the mission of his son to this world finds its fulfillment in this the "latter day."

Palestine Then and Now

BY T. W. WILLIAMS

"Zion and Jerusalem will see demonstrations of what can be done when people work together in loving service, each concerned with the interest of his neighbor."

The angel which appeared to Joseph Smith announced:

The restoration of the gospel with all of its power, purpose and attainment.

A world-wide revolution—religious, political and social.

End of Jewish oppression.

Rehabilitation of Palestine.

Reestablishment of the commonwealth of Israel.

A new Zion in the western hemisphere.

History has confirmed prophecy. One short century has witnessed almost complete fulfillment of the angel's message.

The gospel has been restored—its divine power made manifest—its purpose visualized—its attainment expressed in loving service of regenerated men and women—its blessings and privileges enjoyed—all of which react as a blessing to the world.

Every creed in Christendom has been revamped. Dogmas have become obsolete. The fear and fetish of ages have lost their power and are being displaced with love and service.

Religion has a new meaning—old things have passed. The champions of cult and creed, of ceremony and form, have appealed to passion and prejudice all too long and to-day are making desperate effort at readjustment lest all be lost. The arena of religion has been transferred from a mythical and far-off heaven to a material and tangible earth.

The revolution has been marked—rapid—thorough—startling. Dynasties have crumbled—thrones have tottered. Political purposes have been revamped—antiquated governmental forms have disappeared. Readjustment has extended to the uttermost parts of the earth.

A new vision has come to the people. The shibboleth of past ages will not suffice. Ignorance and superstition is giving way to intelligence and reason. Nations no longer exist for themselves alone. Autocracy becomes the fertilizer for Democracy.

A new social concept grips the people—selfishness is yielding to selflessness—greed is giving way to altruism. We begin to sense that humanity is one. God is now "Our Father." "We all are brethren."

Palestine Reclaimed

From that eventful day when Jesus issued the pronouncement, "Your house is left unto you desolate" until the coming forth of the latter-day work Palestine was a barren waste—a retreat for bats and vampires. As a result of the return of the former and latter rains the land now "blossoms as the rose," needing only the lifting of political and social restrictions to restore it to its virgin productiveness.

From the time Titus invested Jerusalem in A. D. 70 when the city was sacked, burned, and destroyed until General Allenby's triumphal entry into the Holy City in December, 1918, the Jews were a "hiss and a byword" among the nations and their home land a prey to the "heathen round about."

Ever since Hadrian took Jerusalem in A. D. 134 and forbade the Jews to again settle in Judea until the publication of the now famous pronouncement of the British Government through its Foreign Secretary, the Honorable Mr. Balfour, the Jews have "hung their harp on the willows and wept" for the destruction of their native lands and in sackcloth and ashes have deplored their enforced exile from their homeland.

From the time of the Mongol and Tartar invasions of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when Palestine was laid waste with such barbaric thoroughness, until the close of this war, no one but a prophet of God or a gibbering fanatic would venture to predict the rehabilitation of Palestine, the revival of the commonwealth of Israel, or the centralization of Jewry. But the mills of God grind slowly though exceedingly fine. His word faileth not. His designs are not frustrated. His ways are one eternal round.

Zion and Jerusalem

Latter Day Saints have affirmed that God would establish a spiritual and material Zion the capital of which would be centrally located in the northern half of the Western Hemisphere. We have affirmed that God would direct in this work and that the inhabitants in all particulars would conform to the divine plan and would lead pure and holy lives. This now is in process with promise of eventual fulfillment.

We have affirmed that the Jews would return to Jerusalem, rebuild the waste places, and revive their religious and national life. An erroneous idea has obtained that the Jews would do this without the divine leading, that they would be imbued with their oldtime tribal vision and racial ignorance. It has also been pretty generally believed that the Jews in bulk would be gathered from all the nations of the earth to Jerusalem—the old kingdom reestablished as in the days of David and Solomon and that Christ would appear to them while they would be wholly unprepared for his coming.

There is no scriptural warrant for this last position nor is it true to fact. God will have a hand in the rebuilding of Jerusalem. He will lead the people back. All of the Jews will not necessarily return. God will make a practical demonstration of his plans for Israel which will react upon the whole earth. Zion and Jerusalem are to be two great strategic centers from which God will operate to the conversion and reclamation of the world. He will have as much to do in the return of the Jews and the establishment of the commonwealth of Israel on the Eastern Hemisphere as he will in the establishment of Zion on the Western Hemisphere.

Social Reconstruction

This dispensation, which is known as the dispensation of the fullness of times involves social reconstruction as well as individual regeneration. With the Gentile individual regeneration precedes reconstruction. With the Jew social reconstruction will precede individual regeneration. And, as God took the seed of Abraham from the servitude of Egypt regardless of individual morality and placed them in the land of promise whereby they could work out their destiny, so this race, upon which the blight of national ostracism has precluded individual privilege and vision, will be brought back to the land of their fathers and, under the social emancipation which God will work for them, the scales will drop from their eyes and they will come to a knowledge of Jesus their Christ. In no other way can this be brought about.

The ideals of Zion are clear and specific. They are:
God is sovereign and sole owner of all his handiwork.

Man is but a steward under God.

Stewardship versus the profit system.

Inheritance versus ownership in fee simple.

Cooperation versus competition.

Consecration versus selfish individualism.

Equality of opportunity versus special privilege.

Pittsburgh Convention

It follows that if Jerusalem is to be built up according to the leadings of the divine mind that the same general purpose must be indicated. In this connection we have but to recite the program for reconstruction which was adopted at the recent Pittsburgh convention comprising representative and influential Jews from all parts of the world, in order to show the parallel.

First, To insure in the Jewish national home in Palestine equality of opportunity, we favor a policy which with due regard to existing rights, shall tend to establish the ownership and control by the whole people of the land of all natural resources and of all public utilities.

Second. All land owned or controlled by the whole people should be leased on such conditions as will insure the fullest opportunity for development and continuity of possession.

Third. The cooperative principle should be applied, as far as possible, in the organization of all agricultural, industrial, commercial, and financial undertakings.

Fourth. The fiscal policy should be so framed as to prevent land speculation and prevent financial oppression.

Fifth. There shall be the widest measure of individual liberty, equality and religious freedom for all the inhabitants of the land without reference to sex, origin, or religious faith.

Sixth. The system of free public instruction which is to be established should embrace grades and departments of education.

Seventh. Hebrew, the national language of the Jewish people, shall be the medium of public instruction.

General Allenby's Achievement

The British Expeditionary Force in the Far East was a failure until Sir Edmund Allenby was placed in command in the fall of 1917. It took several months to prepare his plan of campaign and develop discipline in his army but it only required seven weeks from the time he made his first real offensive until his capture of the Holy City without the firing of a gun.

After months of comparative silence and much apprehension it was with, what seemed, startling and drastic suddenness that the news reached the public through the newspapers that on November 2, 1918, General Allenby had captured Beersheba. Seven weeks later he marched into Jerusalem. Scarcely had the world "caught its breath" over this achievement when Germany made overtures for an armistice and within one month the war was at an end.

Mr. Balfour's Letter

Of equal importance with this great achievement of General Allenby was Mr. Balfour's letter to Baron Rothschild on behalf of the British Government. It read as follows:

"His majesty's Government views with favor the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people and will use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object; it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in other countries."

Mr. Balfour's letter, with General Allenby's entry into the Holy City was electrifying. It was epoch making and attracted universal attention. This, indeed, was a most significant turn in the wheel of history that after nearly two thousand years of dispersion and exile there should suddenly develop a condition which was to put at an end the ostracism, persecution, and exile of this people and thereby restore them to their place among the peoples of the world which they enjoyed in the days of hoary antiquity.

In speaking of these people and their wonderful career

Doctor Hegel, the greatest philosopher Germany ever produced, remarked:

"It is a dark and troublesome enigma to me. I am not able to understand it. It does not fit in with any of our categories. It is a riddle. It is a mysterious nation—as mysterious as Jesus Christ is mysterious."

Effect on Jewry

The effect on the Jewish people was instantaneous. From every land and from all classes of Jews came congratulations. The Jewish Chronicle of British Jewry said that "amid all that was dark and tragic in the times there had risen for the Jews a great light." It also said: "The statement of British policy with respect to the future of Palestine was the perceptible lifting of the clouds of centuries, the palpable sign that the Jew, condemned for two thousand years to unparalleled wrong, was at last coming to his own." He "was to be accorded the opportunity and the means whereby, in place of being a 'hyphenation,' he would become a nation; instead of being a wanderer in every clime there was to be a home for him in his native land. The day of his exile is at an end."

The chief rabbi of London said:

"The good news that Jerusalem, which for ages has been the magnetic pole of the love and reverence of the world, was in the possession of the British had reached the Jews on the very day when, two thousand and seventy years before the Maccabees had freed the Holy City from the heathen oppressor, thereby changing the spiritual future of humanity. Who knows but that to-day's victory may form a glorious landmark in the history of mankind."

The Zionist Movement

Doctor Theodor Herzl had launched the Zionist movement in 1907 but it met with scant support. A few idealists and an occasional far-seeing Jew were attracted—nothing more. Leading Jews in all lands looked askance at the attempt to establish a Jewish state in Palestine. The conditions were adverse. It was wellnigh impossible. But with the British army capturing Jerusalem and the British Government supported by all the other allied nations committed to securing a "national home" for Jewry a nation was born over night.

At the first Zionist congress there were only one hundred and seventeen Jewish communities represented while at the last congress over five thousand Jewish communities were represented from every country in the habitable globe.

General Allenby's campaign and successes was in keeping with the onward march of civilization and in striking contrast with that of Germany. In 1898 the German Emperor entered Jerusalem arrayed in helmet and robes like a crusader amid the blare of trumpets and in the beflagged streets he posed as the envoy of Allah and the protector of Islam. General Allenby's entrance was in striking contrast. He described it as "a purely military act with a minimum of military display."

General Allenby's Proclamation

On entering the city General Allenby issued the following proclamation. It, too, is quite significant and in keeping with all the other events:

"Since your city is regarded with affection by the adherents of three of the great religions of mankind, and its soil has been consecrated by the prayers and pilgrimages of multitudes of devout people of these three religions therefore do I make known to you that every sacred building, monument, holy spot, shrine, traditional site, endowment, pious bequest or customary place of prayer of whatever form of the three religions, will be maintained and protected according to the existing customs and beliefs of those to whose faith they are sacred."

The London Times commenting on this matter said:

"The truth is the Jewish question cannot exhaustively be defined either in terms of religion or race. It has important social and political sides. The importance of the Zionist movement apart from its territorial aspect is that it has fired with a new ideal millions of poverty-stricken Jews cooped in the ghetto of the old world and the new. It has tended to make Jews proud of their race and claim as Jews recognition for the eminent service rendered by Jewry to the religious development and civilization of mankind."

Doctor John Shayne (Rabbi) has said:

"The destiny of the Jewish nation is in Palestine. In that land after nearly two thousand years of wandering over the face of the earth we will establish a great and powerful nation. To preserve the ancient traditions of our race and to leave an inheritance to our children, the time has now come in the history of the Jewish people that we must get back to Palestine, the home of our forefathers. That is our destiny, and to its early fulfillment we must bend every effort of which we are capable. There must be no faltering. In that ancient land as the home of the Jews after their delivery from slavery in Egypt we will build a nation, a great nation in a great land. There we can, without fear of persecution, prove to the world at large our true worth."

Position of Zionism

Baron Rothschild commenting on the Zionist movement said:

"We Zionists cannot see how the establishment of an autonomous Jewish state under the aid and protection of one of our allied powers can be considered for a moment in any way adverse to the position of loyalty of a very large part of the Jewish people who have identified themselves thoroughly with the citizenship of the countries where they live."

In the view of Doctor Herzl, Zionism is not a war cry. It is a message of peace and love. The Zionists are not going out to conquer. They are going into a land that is not thickly populated and there they are going to establish a culture that is natural and native to the country but has not existed there for centuries.

Palestine is a derelict country. It has an area of ten thousand square miles parts of which is sparsely populated, other parts already congested. Of the Arab population of 600,000 only 250,000 live outside the cities. About eight per cent of the land is under cultivation and eighty per cent of the residue is either unowned or held by titles which no legal land court would accept.

The population of Palestine at the present time consists of some 600,000 Arabs, 75,000 Christians, most of them natives, and 75,000 Jews, a third of whom use the Arab tongue, a third a jargon of Yiddish, Spanish and German and the other languages from the countries from which they came, and a third Hebrew.

Agriculturally, Palestine possesses far greater possibilities than is generally considered. It has three distinct climates. The sub-tropical of the coast region, the continental climate of the Jordan valley. It has a dry, hot, summer and a rainy, but comparatively warm, winter. Its spring and autumn seasons pass quickly. Its first rains usually fall in October and it is then that the ground softens sufficiently after the heat of summer to permit plowing. From December to February there are heavy rains and crops grow luxuriantly.

No Ambition for Independent State

The Jews have no ambition for the establishment of a new and independent state which will enter into political competition with other nations—a legally assured home is all they demand. M. J. Landa writing in Hibbert Journal, vol. 16, pp. 229, puts it aptly thus:

"The Jews ask for nothing more than to be permitted to live in peace to develop their own culture and worship in their own fashion. They seek no conquests, commercial or spiritual. They have never denied heaven to others. It is the first principle of their faith that the Almighty is the possession of all the people. They seek no converts. It is no part of their doctrine that only through Judaism can salvation be found. 'The righteous of all peoples shall share in the Kingdom of Heaven,' declare the Talmud."

Jews Not All Going Back

It is not essential to prophecy nor compatible with divine purpose or the relative facts that even a majority of the Jews return to Jerusalem. In fact reason and revelation lead us to the conclusion that the return is more in principle and purpose rather than in numbers.

The whole of Syria from the Taurus Mountains to the gulf of Akaba and from the Mediterranean to the deserts of Arabia is only four hundred miles in length and less than one hundred miles in width and much of this consists of rugged mountains and burning desert. In time there will be room for several million emigrants but this will only follow intensive development requiring time and much expenditure of money and energy. Some things God does by miracle, others through human effort.

The present habitable part of Palestine is twice as densely populated as is the United States. To make room for an influx of settlers means the reclaiming of the desert and the forestation of the land. It is estimated that there are from fifteen to eighteen million Jews in the whole world. If half of these people went to Palestine it would have a much greater population than in the palmy days of King Solomon. During the Roman period the total population of Palestine was less than 6,000,000.

All of the Gentiles are not going to be gathered to Zion before the second coming of Jesus nor are all the Jews going to be gathered back to their home land prior to that event. The whole earth is the possession and heritage of Jesus Christ and it is with this objective in view that the Almighty will gather together a select number in Zion as well as in Jerusalem and there make a complete demonstration of his will and purpose to the reclamation of the honest in heart among Jew and Gentile for the establishment of his kingdom and his millennial reign upon the whole earth.

Attitude of Arabs Favorable

The Arabs, blood cousin of the Jew, are not averse to the return of the Jew to Palestine. Al-Makattain, the Arabic daily of Cairo, commenting on this point said:

"By granting the Jews of all lands the assurance that their long-cherished hope will be realized, Great Britain has conferred upon them a right that nobody can dispute, so long as the British flag is hoisted in the east and the west, on land and on sea."

What Is Being Done

It would be utterly impossible in this short article to outline what is being done towards the reclamation of the land. Since the entry of General Allenby the following has been established:

An orphanage for both sexes where skilled directors devote themselves to schooling, mentally and industrially, these derelicts to bring them to normal conditions.

A day nursery where mothers of young children can leave their babies whilst they go out to work to earn and maintain a living for themselves and children.

Industrial school where instruction is imparted in all lines of industrial departments such as printing, blacksmithing, carpentry, tailoring, making of pottery and tiles, shoe-making, cement work, etc.

The intellectual training of the inhabitants of Jerusalem is not overlooked. There are food stations for the sick and clothing dispensaries for those in need. Help is denied all who are able to work, as the British Government is setting every able-bodied adult to doing something useful for the reclamation of the land.

The health and sanitation department has been turned over to the Red Cross. The city of Alexandria, Egypt, has allowed the celebrated engineer, Mr. Macklin, to go to Jerusalem at the request of the authorities there to inaugurate needed reforms. The English army of occupation is setting out forests in the wastes, planting trees in the towns of Palestine, in her streets, on her hills, in her valleys and high-ways, in order that the moisture might be conserved and the land become again "a garden not of the gods but God's garden." It is proposed to plant eucalyptus trees in the streets of Jerusalem in order to purify the air. Reservoirs are being built in the heights above the Holy City from which the surrounding country may be watered in the dry season.

There are now forty-six Jewish colonies in Palestine. The people are engaged principally in agriculture. A railway now extends from the valley of the Nile to Palestine, over which daily are brought fresh vegetables and fruit to the Egyptian cities which find a ready market and are a source of income to the people who have been living under the shadow of death.

The corner stone for a Jewish university has already been laid, and Jacob H. Schiff has personally donated $25,000 towards its erection. Five million dollars were pledged by American Jews for the reclamation of the land in 1918.

Thus God is moving to the realization of his promises. Jerusalem is nearer the fulfillment of its dream than is modern Zion. Shall we, to whom has been committed the greater light, falter and fail in our trust while God is working so many mighty and unprecedented miracles in this the "hastening time"? Shall we? Let every member of the church give answer!

Neither Zion nor yet Jerusalem will be mere political states. They will represent peoples not governments. They will stand for great social, industrial, and moral ideals. They will be practical demonstrations of what can be done when people work together in loving service each concerned with the interest of his neighbor. And as the Jews can never attain to the place and position destined of God while they are out in the world and following the ways of the world, neither can we, as the builders of modern Zion, succeed with the tools and materials which have wrought the undoing of the nations of the world. We cannot build up Zion only on the principles of the celestial kingdom. God hasten the day when we will have faith enough in God to cut loose from the heathen customs of the peoples round about and, without reservation or modification, set ourselves to the execution of the trust which was committed to us one hundred years ago.

Iowa was admitted to the Union December 28, 1846. At that time the population was 98,088. It did not have a mile of railroad, and very limited internal improvements. To-day an average quarter section sells for from $40,000 to $50,000; last year's crop approaches one billion dollars in value. It has made rapid progress in the growth of its cities, schools, colleges, and internal improvements. The settlement was largely of New England Puritans. It must be remembered that this was nearly 27 years from the spring of 1820.

Opinions of Early Writers as to the Origin of the Ancient Americans

BY F. M. SHEEHY

"1. Gregoria Garcia, a missionary in South America, published a work in Spanish in 1607, favors a Tartar and Chinese origin.

"2. E. Breveewood in 1832 claimed a Tartar origin.

"3. Morton says they were from the Trojans.

"4. Hugo Grotius published a work in Paris and Amsterdam in 1642 (there was an English translation 1883 by Edmund Goldsmith). 'He argued that all North America except Yucatan (which had an Ethiopian stock) was peopled from Scandinavian north; that the Peruvians were from China.'

"5. Johannan de Laet wrote an answer to Grotius, combating his views and contending that the Scythian race furnished the predominant part of American population. He supports his theory by a comparison of the Gallic, Irish, Icelandic, Huron, Iroquois, and Mexican tongues.

"6. This controversy brought out a work by George Horn, published in 1652, and also in 1669, who latterly took the view that the Carthaginians and Phœnicians settled the Atlantic side and Chinese the Pacific. Various writers of lesser note kept up the controversy.

"In 1762 a work appeared claiming for them a descent from 'Meshek the son of Jepheth.'

"In 1767 the question was brought into a learned disputation reviewing the arguments of Grotius de Laet, and Horn, claiming an antediluvian origin.

"Then followed the work of C. de Pauws, who maintained that 'all American products, including man, animal, and vegetation are degraded and inferior to nature in the Old World.'

"Count Carli in 1774 claiming a descent from Atlantis.

"President Styles, of Yale College, delivered an address before the General Assembly of Connecticut in 1783 arguing for a unity of American tribes and for their affinity with the Tartars. He also held to their being in the main descendants from the Canaanites expelled by Joshua.

"The earliest American with anything like a scientific training was Benjamin S. Barton, a professor in the University of Pennsylvania, printed as the transactions of the American Philo Association. (He was associated with President Jefferson who also made a study of the subject.) Claimed for them a descent from Asiatics now living.

"Humboldt in 1806 published his work favoring an Asiatic origin.

"Williamson in his History of North Carolina in 1812: 'In the first volume published found traces as he supposed of Hindu descent among the higher order of Mexicans but the North Americans to be of ruder Asiatics.'

"The American Antiquarian Society was founded in 1812. 'In the first volume published by the society, Caleb Atwater in a treatise on American antiquities gave the earliest sustained study of the subject, and believed in a general rather than a particular Asiatic source.'

"McCullach in his Researches on Americans, published in Baltimore in 1816, claimed they came across by land from the eastern hemisphere before the days of Peleg, when the earth was divided.

"He uses this as an argument against the renounced [renowned] Doctor Robertson who said they crossed Behring Strait.

"For a more extensive view of the subject see volume 1, Narrative and Critical History of America, by Justin Winsor and Notes on the Bibliography of Yucatan and Central America by Ad. F. Bandelier."—Report of the Committee on American Archæology, pp. 112-114.

Dates of American Antiquities—When Published

As to whether or not it was possible for Joseph Smith to have read works of antiquity, and then have written the Book of Mormon in conformity with the findings of the explorers, the following is very interesting: Bancroft writes,

"Since 1830 the veil has been lifted from the principal ruins of ancient Maya works, by the researches of Zalva, Waldec, Stephens, Cartherwood, Norman, Fredderickstahl and Charney. A general account of the antiquarian writings and explorations of these gentlemen is given in the appended note. . . . It will be noticed that all the authors mentioned who write from actual observation, have confined their observations to from one to four of the principal ruins, whose existence was known previous to their visits, excepting Messrs, Stephens and Cartherwood. These gentlemen boldly left the beaten track and brought to the knowledge of the world about forty ruined cities, whose very existence had been previously unknown even to the residents of the larger cities of the very state in whose territory they lie. . . . The visit of these explorers was the first, and thus far proved in most cases, the last."—Native Races, vol. 4, pp. 144-46.

Baldwin says of Central America: "Palacios, who described Copan in 1576, may properly be called the first explorer."—Ancient America, p. 102.

The discovery by Palacios was not published, however, until 1843, and not in English until 1860. (See Native Races, vol. 4, page 79, also American Encyclopedia, Article "Squier.")

In his Origin American Antiquities, published in 1839, Delafield says: "The antiquities of America are an immense field hardly entered, abounding in promise of reward for the most devoted investigations."

Priest says in his book of 1833: "It yet remains for America to awake her story from its oblivious sleep, and tell the tale of her antiquities, the traits of nations, coeval perhaps, with the oldest works of man this side of the flood."

Bancroft writes: "The only author who has attempted to treat of the subject of Central American civilization, and antiquity comprehensively as a whole, is the Abbe Brasseur de Bourbourg."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 116. The work cited was first published in 1857-9. (See American Encyclopedia, vol. 3, p. 214.)

He further writes: "Of all American peoples, the Quichees of Gautemala have left us the richest mythological legacy. Their description of the creation as given in the Popol Vuh, which may be called the national book of the Quichees, in its rude, strange eloquence and poetic originality, one of the rarest relics of aboriginal thought. In Vienna in 1857, the book, now best known as the Popol Vuh, was first brought to the notice of European Scholars."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 42.

The Book of Mormon was published in 1830, and so gave the facts twenty-seven years before this last-mentioned publication.

Bancroft writes: "For what is known of Copan the world is indebted almost entirely to the works of the American traveler Mr. John L. Stephens, and of his most skillful artist companion, Mr. F. Cartherwood."—Native Races, vol. 4, p. 81.

These gentlemen were sent out in 1839 by the United States Government. Mr. Stephens wrote: "I shall make one remark in regard to the work of Mr. Waldec, which was published in folio in Paris in 1845, and except my own hurried notice, is the only account that has ever been published of the ruins of Uxmal."—Incidents of Travel, vol. 1, p. 297; The Book Unsealed, pp. 54-56.

It may be observed that the above list of writers have all missed the mark so far as identifying the Book of Mormon having a basis in anything written previously. The Book of Mormon is very bold in distinct claims that are paralleled nowhere. The claim of the Book of Mormon is giving a clear statement of who the ancient Americans were and that they were principally Hebrews, where they settled, and what class

Why I Went to the Sanitarium

When I was taken ill with the influenza the latter part of January and with an abscess in my ear it was still with every expectation of an early recovery. The influenza, however, kept me confined to the bed for over two weeks, while the trouble in the ear prevented sleep and so delayed recovery.

About the middle of February a consultation with a specialist in Saint Louis fully confirmed the previous view that the ear trouble was only a cold gathering and presented no complications, so we fully expected to be able to return to the office by the first of March.

The last week in February matters took a decided change for the worse and by the end of the week four physicians agreed that an operation was necessary, if life were to continue.

I never expected to enter the Independence Sanitarium, though had recognized its service to the sick and especially to the sick of our church, but when the physician in Saint Louis ordered the operation the unanimous opinion of the family and our own inclination was to our Sanitarium. We had no doubt but that in Saint Louis we could have secured equally good medical service and equally good mechanical nursing, but we wanted something more than mechanical efficiency, and having observed several times before the manner of treatment, our desire was to secure treatment with personal consideration as a human being.

In the operation at Independence everything was done that medical science could suggest, even when the issue became desperate, for the operation proved much more serious than expected at first, and we are informed the physicians were very doubtful of the possibility of recovery. Still everything of Hebrews they were, namely: descendants of Joseph the son of Jacob, and that they were a cultivated people. Nephi, in the first chapter of the book says: "I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, therefore I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father and having seen many afflictions in the course of my days nevertheless, having been highly favored of the Lord in my days; yea, having had a great knowledge of the goodness and the mysteries of God, therefore I make a record of my proceedings in my days: yea, I made a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews of the language of the Egyptians."

Nadaillac, in Prehistoric Americans, p. 406, speaking of a part of America settled by these Hebrews says: "One thing we think certain: Such monuments cannot be the remains of a civilization of local growth, nor can a race, unaided, have developed from its own genius such architectural knowledge. We share the conclusion of Angrand that the civilization of which the remaining ruins bear the impress could not have taken their rise on these frozen tablelands. Man must have arrived upon them sufficiently armed for the struggle, by previous experience of social life."

Notwithstanding these external evidences used to sustain the claims of the Book of Mormon it is its own principal witness as recorded in the book of Moroni, chapter 10, verses 4, 5, 6: "And when ye shall receive these things, I would ask you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these are not true: and if you shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. And whatsoever thing is good, is just and true; wherefore, nothing that is good denieth Christ but acknowledgeth that he is."

Conference Minutes

FLORIDA.—With the Santa Rosa Branch, February 28, 1920. R. C. Russell and M. M. Turpen presided. E. N. McCall, secretary. Six elders and 2 priests reported. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts of $682.85; on hand $52.50. Delegates to General Conference: R. C. Russell, T. C. Kelley, M. M. Turpen, B. L. Jernigan, D. M. Rudd. Alternates: A. G. Miller, and E. D. Shelley. Those present to cast full vote of the conference, and in case of division to cast majority and minority vote. E. N. McCall was ordained to the office of elder by R. C. Russell and M. M. Turpen. Next conference to be held at Cold Water, time left with district president. E. N. McCall, secretary, Brewton, Alabama.

Book Reviews

Chosen Peoples.—By Israel Zangwill; the Macmillan Co., New York; $1. This book considers the claim that has been put forward in some quarters that Judaism resembles Germanism, and shows its utter fallacy. While this is Mr. Zangwill's main purpose, the chapters constitute, in effect, an ex-was done that could be done; and in the nursing every consideration was given for which we had hoped. On account of the seriousness of the case a special nurse, Miss I. I. Neff, was assigned and she answered our questions both wise and otherwise, and attended to our want and needs without regard whether they were just or not.

During the time of greatest anxiety, Miss Rodgers, the chief nurse and Miss Paxton, the assistant chief nurse came in once or twice a day to see how we were doing. So long as there was need the closest personal attention was given.

But there was another reason for preferring our Sanitarium. While I was sick at Lamoni I was administered to repeatedly, probably twenty times, and prayed most earnestly and yet seemed to receive, so far as my ear was concerned, hardly even temporary relief. Practically the same was the situation in Saint Louis. I tried to exercise all the faith possible, yet prayed for greater faith that I might have all that was necessary, but this fact was presented very forcibly to mind. Is it not easy for one sick to exercise sufficient faith to send for the elders and the Lord to heal them and for them thus to get well? Is not such faith and such a demand or request an easy way out? Have you faith enough to say, "I will follow thy way and leave the issue in thy hands"?

I told my mother that I felt that way about it, and that I felt to pray that the Lord would direct in his own way; and it was then very shortly the change came apparently for the worse.

During the first week at Lamoni I had received, what was to me, the assurance that I should recover. I had felt downcast, but this assurance was confirmed in a remarkable way in Saint Louis. It seems strange, and yet the more I prayed and was administered to and the prayers apparently not answered, the greater grew my faith, so that when the time for the operation came I had not one doubt that while the case was very serious, the Lord would raise me up and that I should be healed. There in our own Sanitarium we felt that the Spirit of God was near. In fact from the moment of the operation the recovery has been surprisingly rapid, not only to our friends, but also to the physicians and nurses. The minimum time required for each stage of recovery has been nearly cut in half.

The experience has been a peculiar one, so much so that we have thought of writing of it under the heading "Was this a lesson in faith?" We have felt there was a reason, and that it was in a way a test of faith.

Although not completely recovered, I feel as though arising with a new life, which I hope to be able to devote to better service than has been the case in the past.

position of the ideals of the Jewish people to-day. It will do much to make clear the teachings and thought of a race which has often been misrepresented and about which there is at best a confusion of ideas. The volume is in keeping with the tendency of the hour which is for a better understanding between different sects.

Our Departed Ones

VAN DINE.—Flora Ella, daughter of Frederick and Josephine Salisbury, died at her home in Burnside, Illinois, March 24, 1920, at the age of 42 years, 11 months, and 26 days. Baptized in childhood and lived a noble and consistent life. Married Bert Van Dine, to which union 2 children were born, one son, Warren, and one daughter, Marjorie. Besides husband and children she leaves aged father, 4 brothers, and one sister. Funeral service in Methodist church, and their members furnished music. Service in charge of George P. Lambert. Sermon by Arthur Allen. She was held in high esteem.

SCHALLER.—August, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Schaller of Battle Creek, Michigan, died at the home of his parents March 26, 1920, at the age of 8 months and 29 days, death being caused by spinal trouble. His mother, Mrs. Eve Schaller was baptized by Elder Pendleton and is a member of the Prestcott Branch. Services conducted by R. M. Young, and interment in Oak Hill Cemetery, at Battle Creek.

ROBERTS.—Harriette E. Roberts, of Battle Creek, Michigan, died February 17, 1920, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Fisher, at 41 Kelley Avenue. A faithful member of the church for many years. Suffered many years from paralysis, but was patient and cheerful. Too much cannot be said of her as to her love for the gospel, and her endurance in her peculiar trial and affliction. She leaves to mourn her husband, 2 daughters, one son, and many friends. Those who knew her well loved and honored her. Funeral service conducted by R. M. Young. Interment in Battle Creek Cemetery.

MCDONALD.—At Rochester, Minnesota, March 4, 1920, James L. McDonald, aged 61 years, one month, and 11 days. Born in Glasgow, Scotland in 1859. Came to America in 1867. Worked in mines and at farming in Wyoming and at Lamoni, Iowa. In 1885 married Minnie Simpson at Lucas, Iowa. The 2 sons and a daughter born to them are living, and mourn with their mother the loss of the kind husband and father. His body was brought back to Missouri for burial at Clarence. The family live near Anabel, Macon County, Missouri.

KETTLEWELL.—At his home, 198 Gladstone Avenue, Windsor, Ontario, December 25, 1919, George Kettlewell died. Born at Metcalfe, Middlesex, Ontario, April 21, 1850. Baptized October 16, 1887, at Metcalfe, by Arthur Leverton. Ordained teacher November 5, 1899, at Longwood. Survived by wife, Sister Fannie Kettlewell, and 2 daughters, Mrs. Joseph Blackmore, Mrs. Annie Saylor, and 4 sons, Richard, Benjamin, Floyd, and Willard. Funeral service was held at the Saints' Church, Windsor, in charge of Samuel Brown and Minnis Mifflin. Interment in Windsor Grove Cemetery.

DILDINE.—Harold Lionel Dildine was born May 18, 1904, at Akron, Ohio. Baptized September 6, 1917. Died February 12, 1920, after an illness lasting two weeks. He was one of the promising young men of the Akron Branch, and we all feel the loss of our young brother. Father, mother, one sister, and one brother are left to mourn. Funeral at the home. Sermon by Floyd H. Kelsey, assisted by William O. Kelsey.

BASS.—Sarah Caroline Jennings was born at Belfast, Alleghany County, New York, May 7, 1849. Married Seth M. Bass at Lawrence, Michigan, November 1, 1869. To this union were born 3 sons: George S., William H., and Harry J. George and Harry are residents of Lamoni, and were present. William H. died at the age of 5 years. Baptized June 14, 1873 at Lawrence, Michigan, by Henry C. Smith. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, March 23, 1920. She also leaves to mourn 3 brothers and one sister. Came with her family to Lamoni in 1882, where she resided until her death. Sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

INDIAN MEETING

Sunday morning, March 21, at 11 a. m. the junior meeting in the basement was in charge of Elder Gomer T. Griffiths and was held for and with the Indians. Elder Phillip Cook spoke and then interpreted for John Bull, Sister Bull and Sister Cook, but first they sang an Indian song. All spoke of the joy of the gospel and of their hope of the mission work among their own people, that they had come to learn and not to talk. They hope to be blessed in their work among their own people. As one of them expressed it, "I thank the Lord who has brought us to this church. I believe this is the Lord's church." "We want to work together for the good of the work of others." At home they live in houses that are equipped with modern facilities, they also wear the ordinary clothing as worn by the white race. But here they have brought two teepees and some Indian robes and blankets, thinking they would be of interest to the conference visitors, as doubtless they are to many. But we should not lose sight of the actual conditions under which they live today and that the Indian is preparing to take his place by the side of his white brother in the work of humanity.

Elder Daniel Macgregor is meeting with his usual success in his meetings at Central Church, Kansas City, in the series of preconference services.

The cafeteria in the dining hall back of the church at Independence is serving good meals for a reasonable price. One makes his own selection and pays for what he gets. As arranged they will hardly be able to take care of all the conference visitors, but will do well by those for whom it is able to provide.

One man remarked that Paul was outdone during one of the lectures to the ministry. Paul had to preach all night to put one man to sleep, but during one of the lectures eleven were counted asleep at one time. Yet some of these engaged in a lively discussion after the lecture was completed.

A. N. Hoxie arrived Thursday morning and at once that evening began practice on the "Creation" choruses.

The missionary services in the Independence Stake have proven a great success so far as attendance is concerned. We have reports from several of the branches that the smaller churches were crowded and some standing through the services, and the Stone Church are having some evenings at least the largest attendances for a week day night. This will mean a revival of interest at least among our own members as some hundreds of nonmembers should be better informed with regard to the teachings of our church. The process of advertising both in the Independence Examiner and in the distribution of leaflets each with two pages of discussion on the subject of the evening, should give information to many more.

LECTURES TO THE MINISTRY

After the first seven lectures the order of arrangement has been changed of necessity. Elder Arthur Gillen delivered one lecture on Friday, one on Saturday and one Monday morning and then was taken ill, but completed his series Wednesday morning. He discussed the principles and ordinances of the gospel and the source of authority to the priesthood.

Bishop B. R. McGuire spoke once on Saturday, but he has been called east by the death of Sister Potts, of Brooklyn, Sister B. R. McGuire's mother, and left Saturday night, March 27. At this writing he is expected to return by April 5. Those who have labored in the East will remember the hospitality of Sister Potts and of all of her family to the visiting ministry and will share in the sorrow of the family and of the church in Brooklyn at her loss.

The remaining two lectures on Zion and its work were given by Bishop J. F. Keir on Monday and Tuesday afternoons. They provoked a great deal of discussion, as is natural with this subject matter, but we trust they left the meeting better informed as to what is being attempted.

In the absence of other speakers. Brother S. A. Burgess spoke on Tuesday morning instead of Saturday afternoon on the theories and the origin of government, the different kinds and the purpose of government; on liberty and free will, which must be in accordance with law and a knowledge of the truth.

Elder John F. Garver had arrived by the morning of the 31st and spoke that afternoon on the atonement of Christ. This is a disputed question and one which is before the quorums. We trust that the public discussion has cleared up at least some points of doubt.

The last of the week President F. M. Smith spoke, since he returned Thursday morning, April 1.

Thursday morning J. F. Garger completed discussion of Atonement. In the afternoon the committee with the Church of Christ (Hedrickites) answered questions and presented the agreement with them.

President F. M. Smith returned Thursday and spoke Friday and Saturday.

There will be a short program given at Independence, Missouri, on the night of April 10, in the interest of the L. D. S. Sales Association. Everybody come.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

The Iowa Weather Bureau is contemplating the issuance of bulletins during the summer, based on telegraphic reports, concerning the condition of the various highways across Iowa. Each morning a large number of local weather observers telegraph the condition of the weather and the rainfall for the past twenty-four hours, and this feature will be included, and should be of special value to tourists who wish to travel over the roads for any distance.

The Christian Science Monitor reports that the central department of education organized by the All American Cooperative Congress expects to train members of the society for positions in that work as managers, accountants, bookkeepers, and cooperative employees of all kinds. This will be done through suitable literature, social centers, and discussions and lectures. The general public will be furnished with information on cooperative activities, accomplishments, and aims.

According to Paul S. Reinsch, former minister to China, the people of that country are aroused to resistance of further inroads by foreign powers. "There has been a national movement in China for some time, but only within the last year," Doctor Reinsch is quoted as saying, "has it become a strong, well-organized, popular movement, due to the impetus given by the Shantung decision, which profoundly affected the Chinese people."

The newspapers of Spain are having considerable trouble over an attempt to enforce the "descanso dominical" or Sunday rest law. The difficulties in securing proper rest hours for employees of the newspapers has caused some unusual situations and there is a general feeling that the decree will not endure. An edict was issued, setting forth a number of restrictions for the newspapers but in the evasion of the terms of many problems were raised that there seems little doubt that some change will be made.

An investigation before the House Agricultural committee regarding the campaign by the Department of Justice to increase the use of cheaper cuts of meats has developed the fact that the packers were behind the movement, with the intention of increasing the demand which would allow higher prices to be charged.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Windsor, Ontario. A series of sermons are being preached by Elder James Pycock and the attendance good. If he stays long a larger building will have to be secured to hold all who attend, a large percentage of whom are strangers. The branch has been exceedingly blessed of late with sermons by Elder Joseph Luff, J. J. Cornish, John Shields, and a number of others of prominence.

Toronto, Ontario. At the Allen Theater on Sunday, March 21, Elder J. J. Cornish blossomed forth as a lecturer, his subject being "probation after death." An average crowd attended. Tuesday evening he took his hearers on a trip to hades, proving to us that Paraoah and his host were being comforted and are prisoners of hope. A goodly number of nonmembers are noticeable at the midweek services. Some have expressed their readiness for baptism.

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin. The branch is about three miles from the village and has a membership of about 130, with about 50 attendance. The church is small but it is expected to build a larger one this summer. Some money is already raised and about a thousand blocks hauled. The Sunday school is large and progressing nicely under superintendency of Wesley Davenport. The women are having a contest against the men. The ones who attend the most services and are on time are served with supper by the losers. It lasts three months. There is an aid society and they are doing good work and expect to help build the new church. The Religio is progressing now; it had almost gone out of business when Brother Hield came and woke us up. There is a fine program each Sunday evening and preaching after Religio.

Grand Rapids, Michigan. Apostle J. A. Gillen preached four grand sermons about the first of February, and Elder J. J. Cornish also gave a few good sermons and lectures, using a chart to prove his statements. Elder F. F. Wipper, our district president, was with us nearly a week, and gave some good lectures, telling the Saints what they must do to get into Zion and feel at home. The orchestra and choir have been limping along with about half their number missing on account of illness but prospects are better now. There has been considerable sickness. The branch has a considerable problem with property advancing in price, lumber very high, and the church building which we intended to buy being remodeled into a flat.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

Democratic Ideals

It is well to remind ourselves once in awhile how clear are some of the fundamentals of democracy in the government of the church. It contains, it is true, the best of every kind of government.

Fisher Ames is quoted to the effect that "Humanity is like a merchantman. It sails well but occasionally strikes a rock and goes to the bottom with all on board. Democracy is like a raft; it never sinks, but your feet are always in the water."

A raft drifts. It may at last drift ashore, but where and when? We need purpose and the sailing power of the merchantman. We want to get somewhere, not simply drift. So the law of the church provides for a strong central government, though not of one man. It provides for calling the fit men as a priesthood of service—a royal priesthood—an aristocracy, but not one to lord it over others, but to serve and help.

The true ruler is the Lord's anointed priest—serving the people.

But with this there is the fundamental democracy of branch and conference. Nothing can be imposed on the people without their consent, or before they are ready. Not even, a revelation is binding without the vote of the Conference.

The humblest delegate can introduce a motion at the Conference—the initiative. Much of General Conference action is in fact, based on matters initiated in branch meeting or district conference.

Serious matters are very often deferred, so that further consideration may be given, the matter discussed, orally or in writing, and delegates may be instructed—the referendum in fact.

And every officer of the church is subject to vote at least once a year—the general officers, including the members of the First Presidency, at General Conference; stake or district officers at their conference; branch or local officers at the branch business meeting. Any officer can be removed by a majority of one vote—the recall.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were told they should not be ordained elders till there was a church to pass upon their call. Thus there has been for ninety years in the church these fundamental principles of a democracy, the initiative, referendum, and recall.

Loyalty

Loyalty may be considered due a king or prince. It may be due the government, and is. It may be from what is considered an inferior to a superior.

The word is based on the root for law—that which is legally due.

But its meaning to-day is not so limited. When loyalty is asked for, it does not mean a demand to be recognized as a dominant power.

Loyalty may and should exist between friends, and between lovers. It is due from husband to wife. It is due from a father to his family of children, as well as due from wife and child to husband and father.

It may, therefore, properly exist and be asked for between brethren.

The Master commanded his disciples when he was about to leave them: "Love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 34, 35.)

John goes even farther and says a man who says he loves God, but loves not the brethren, is a liar; for how can a man love God whom he has not seen, if he love not his brother whom he has seen?

Where there is love there is no fear, no jealousy of the advancement of the loved one. "Charity envieth not," "rejoiceth not in iniquity." (1 Corinthians 13: 4, 6.)

All of these imply that loyalty to God, Christ, and the church, which is required of us, and that loyalty between brethren which is meet. That is, loyalty of the priesthood to the presiding elder in branch or church, and loyalty of the presiding elder to other members of the priesthood.

Such loyalty is indeed according to the law—a fulfillment of law.

Changes in Personnel

The release of men of long and faithful services always produces a feeling of sadness. We would those men might continue always. But it cannot be, age and ill health will prevent, and younger men must prepare to take up their work, not as they have laid it down, but with more energy.

Particularly is this true of the missionary quorums, the Twelve and Seventy, their's is the great work of lifting the warning voice. Doctrine and Covenants 16: 5; 104: 12, 13, 16; 122: 3, 7, 8, and 9; 120: 3.) Since their work is and has always been under the law to labor under the Presidency in building up the churches and even pushing on into new fields, that the world may be warned we note that in the past young, active men have been called.

This was the case when the three witnesses chose the first Twelve in the restored church of Christ in 1835. It was true in 1873 when the quorum was reorganized and seven men called. It has been true at other times. The average age of all heretofore called to this quorum will be found to be surprisingly low. And there is a reason in the nature of their work. This allows time for preparation and for service.

Often has the anxiety of the people for changes in personnel been noted whether in branch, district, or stake, or in General Conference, yet changes of personnel cannot answer all our difficulties nor even a large part of them. It is not enough to vote for their acceptance, we must also sustain by our prayers and words and acts these men on whom is laid the burden of the work; whether locally or in all the world.

More than that we are approaching closely a time when not personnel, nor yea nor nay can answer, but a people who keep the commandments of God. It is not enough to say, but we must be ready and willing to do his will, then do it.

For our part, for those released there is personal sadness and an appreciation of past services long continued and well rendered; for those called, is hearty god-speed and prayer and a hope that we shall not be found wanting in doing our part. If we keep the commandments our right support will follow as a matter of course.

The work is onward let us move onward with it.

Ministerial Meetings

A prayer meeting was held Friday morning in charge of Gomer T. Griffiths and U. W. Greene. President F. M. Smith spoke in the afternoon and twice on Saturday, April 3, on the church, its origin, and organization.

He urged that all should be acquainted with such views as are expressed in Brinton's Religions of Primitive Man, as well as in the Biblical History. We need trained men, experts, as missionaries; men whom others will try to get from us.

The church is a business organization. "I must be about my Father's business." The missionaries are the sales force; the presidency, the executive; the bishopric, the credit department.

We should labor for service, not for wages, but if we do not get one hundred cents worth of service for each dollar expended, we will go bankrupt. In the laws of government we have executive, legislative, and judicial. There is no danger of one man power so long as legislative and executive authority are not vested in the one man. In the church it is not so; the presidency as a whole has not legislative power, not even when they present a "Thus saith the Lord," is it accepted without vote of the quorums at our conference. But the Presidency has the last word in executive department of work.

As we grow we find it necessary to divide some departments.

Prayer services for the priesthood were announced for each Sunday morning at 8 a. m.

Quorum meetings were arranged by quorums, but no meetings of the ministry as a whole were held Monday or Tuesday. Beginning Wednesday morning, April 7, at 8 a. m., these meetings were again held, as has been the case at the last several General Conferences. The pre-Conference lectures were the new factor.

A Wonderful Prayer Meeting

A veritable Pentecostal shower at the priesthood communion service at conference.

On the morning of Sunday, April 4, at eight o'clock, communion services were held in the various churches of Independence and Kansas City, according to the previously printed program. In the upper auditorium of the Stone Church a number of the bishopric presided over the general meeting.

In the lower auditorium the meeting was presided over by President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, assisted by Walter W. Smith and Cyril E. Wight.

The room was comfortably full, in spite of the raging snow-storm outside, which had been continuing fitfully since Saturday noon, impeding traffic and causing great discomfort.

Following the administration of the emblems of the Lord's supper and the singing of songs which to some in the upper auditorium "sounded heavenly," President Elbert A. Smith arose and delivered, under the power of the Spirit, a lengthy communication which cannot adequately be summarized, but contained some of the following sentiments:

The Lord was pleased with the spirit manifested in coming together on the occasion in the spirit of unity and prayer and fasting. During the past year the Saints had profited by the ministrations of the priesthood, and in return therefor God designed to reveal himself to them to their good and desired, that they open their hearts to the abundance of the Spirit which he was from now beginning to pour out upon his people. Those present were asked if any who needed had been denied the necessities of life, if there were any who had not had a home, if any had been denied a place whereupon to lay his head, yet all these things were the lot of the Savior when among men.

The day might come when dangers were to be faced, discomforts endured, doors knocked and not opened, yet therein would be an opportunity for men of God to evidence their love for Christ as he had manifested his love to us.

The brethren were admonished to avoid the sowing of the seeds of discord and division, for that which is sown must surely be reaped. If love is shed abroad, love will come back in great return. And in preaching to the assemblies of the Saints and to the world the brethren are not to present their own speculation, but the gospel as the books of the church teach, that the Saints may be edified.

Elder J. W. Wight exercised under the gift of tongues and interpretation, with a word of cheer and comfort to the effect that the Lord was pleased with the spirit of meekness manifested in the gathering and had sent his Spirit as an evidence that now he was beginning the long-sought endowment and it should be received in greater power if the admonitions given were acceded to. As God's people were gathered in from the north and the south and the east and the west, so has he sent his Spirit to meet them, and as the servants of God seek to act as men truly of God no power can overcome.

A brief message was given through Elder Charles F. Davis, that in the delivery of the gospel of the kingdom, the men of God who realized that there was no greater work than the establishment of the kingdom of God, should realize that there is no power that can curb, and in preaching, in healing, in all godly ministrations the manifestation of God should be clear and definite and convincing.

Elder Richard Bullard was an instrument in God's hand in a message that there was a responsibility in asking for and receiving these revealments. The admonition to be kind and to restrain natural criticism and exercise under the Spirit of God, if heeded, would result in there being no occasion for the cry to arise that one's work is not successful, but those who operate under the endowment will, as they are humble, feel its power and attain great success and proficiency.

Elder Walter W. Smith stated that in answer to special prayer—that, it had been revealed to him that in due time in the hands of God President F. M. Smith should become loved by the people beyond measure. And to Gomer T. Griffiths he delivered a message that his long years of service had pleased the Lord, and that God designed to make him of still greater usefulness to the church as a wise counselor; that his work was not done and his reward sure.

The time for the meeting was very short, and most of it was taken up in this manner, to the great edification of the men present, and to the eventual blessing of all the Saints who come under their ministration.

With the Opening of Conference

Under the most favorable conditions the annual General Conference of the church convened at Independence at 10 a. m. on April 6, 1920.

The audience was vast and animated, though one could feel a subdued spirit of devotion permeating from the beginning. The order of seating was as usual, the high priests, bishops and evangelists on the rostrum, back of the quorum of Twelve and the Presidency, with the secretaries to the left, and just below the railing along the front the large number of press representatives and the official stenographers of the conference.

When President Elbert A. Smith announced the old favorite: "Redeemer of Israel" Director Hoxie swayed the audience as though it were one voice singing psalms to God above. This was followed by a moving invocation by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, president of the Quorum of Twelve.

The songs sung by General Conference are significant to the Saints in a number of ways, because they are chosen with much care, are typical of the latter-day work, and sung by voices which in reality represent the sentiment of the thousands of God's people all over the world. As a great prayer to our Father the songs arise from throats attuned to his will. The second number was "Blest be the tie that binds."

During the singing of this hymn, representatives of the Vitagraph News Film Service were present, and with flashlights and moving picture cameras took pictures from the east gallery of the pulpit and surroundings. They added to this when President F. M. Smith later arose to deliver the opening address, and from another position took pictures of the audience. These will be shown in thousands of moving pictures throughout the country within a short time as a news feature.

In accordance with the program, Apostle U. W. Greene read the account in the first volume of our Church History wherein Joseph Smith gives in his own words the experiences that led up to and surrounded the first vision in 1820.

The song service which followed was led by Albert N. Hoxie, choir director of the church, who told the audience that he had received further assurance that the service of song should have an even more definite part in our work, and to that end desired that the audience should join wholeheartedly in the singing at this and later times.

Throughout the audience had been distributed thousands of the songbooks prepared by Brother Hoxie, and from these they sang with wonderful effect the following: "God is marshaling his army," "Hymn of admonition," "Praise ye the Lord," "Glorious things are sung of Zion," "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah," "How firm a foundation," "The Holy City," and "Pray, men, pray."

Not often is "The Holy City" sung as a congregational song, but it was effectively rendered on this occasion and the chorister said he had often had audiences of ten thousand in Philadelphia render it with great power.

"Pray, men, pray," is a new song by Brother Hoxie, sung to the air of a Russian folk song. He taught it to the men at the priesthood lectures prior to conference and asked that they help teach it to the present congregation.

President Frederick M. Smith addressed the audience in a most stirring address, a brief summary of which is presented elsewhere, which closed a notable service at the beginning of the conference of the Saints.

The kitchen is the most important room in the house from a health standpoint, says the United States Public Health Service. Keep everything about it and every one in it scrupulously clean.

The President's Address

A summary of the ideas presented by F. M. Smith in his opening address to General Conference, April 6, 1920.

President Smith stated at the outset that his remarks at this time might well be termed a prelude to what he cared to present at later sessions. He was glad to conform to the program which emphasized the centennial of the first vision of Joseph Smith and would endeavor to present something which might continue the sentiment.

His text was the latter part of Matthew 11: "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

He stated we cannot forget that we are living in times when men are weary of body and mind, weary of all the strife and turmoil and unrest, yet knowing not where to find the peace they so much need.

It is significant, he pointed out, that on the day of our assembling in this formal capacity the war dogs are again let loose in that the armies of France have invaded German soil, not necessarily in repudiation of the peace terms, but to demand that they be enforced. France is feeling the great throbs of human desire welling up into concrete expression, that strife be put down and peace brought about, yet there is no assurance that war will bring it.

The laborers throughout the world are toil weary, and added to this wholesale sentiment is the worse one of homesickness, intensified by the present situation whereby home owning is more and more impossible. Add all these and more, and we have something of an understanding of what feelings lie in the hearts of the laborer of to-day.

Then the organizations of labor are becoming more and more powerful. The spirit of domination and determination are becoming rife not only among the ranks of organized labor, but in the ranks of organized capital, till the inevitable clash of interests is nearer and indeed at our very doors.

We have often failed to understand the evils of our present deeply entrenched competitive system, but if so, it will be impressed upon us as the days go by.

At this time there is no necessity for defining what labor is, showing the distinction between those who work with their hands, and those who use their brains only.

Ceaseless toil for the mere privilege of existing has brought about a condition of despair in the ranks of the laborer. There is a constant fear of dependency and ill health adding to the natural gloom, which drives us toward the ultimate crash. The fear of sickness, of old age, of death, all contribute to this general despair, and embitter the minds of those experiencing it, till there is little room for wholesome, constructive thought.

Class consciousness is encouraged and cultivated by the rank and file, and by special agents who make it their business to see that it flourishes, till it becomes class hatred. Added to the fuel to fan the flame is the pinch of poverty, the hunger of loved ones, the sufferings of the sick, all contributing to the grand climax of emotion and desperation, the climax, the crash.

Picture a man who at his age should be in the prime of life. He has a job and should be in a condition to make the most of it, yet who goes slouchingly up the street, with head drooped, shoulders bent forward, and enters the factory where he works disconsolate and discouraged. He approaches the machine at which he daily labors with a feeling of loathing instead of delight. Finally, at the close of the day he emerges into God's sunlight where he should be happy and joyful, but because of the dejection he cannot shake off, the lack of control he has in his weakness, he is struck and injured by the car of the employer, who drives on. Can you imagine the bitterness that lies within his breast?

Then when he gets home he finds sickness has already preceded him in the place he must, for the want of a better name, call a home. It may be but a hovel. What worse things can befall a man than all these? What a medium he is for the spread of the doctrine of discontent, when he has no reason for feeling serene or even comfortable!

Then when he seeks solace in relating his troubles to his fellows in misery, he finds they are in the same position. What a travesty on our civilization that we must have hundreds of thousands of these cases among us constantly, fomenting and disseminating bloom and despair and desperation.

And then what about the employer who seems to thrive in luxury? Indeed what about him? Note closely that his face is marked with seams of worry and care. He has problems of many kinds constantly to solve. He is likely thinking day and night of the present turmoil and how it is affecting him. Perhaps he is thinking of the problem of securing material, of getting machines, of strikes among his labor, of production costs, marketing and costs, profits—profits for what? That he may continue in business and save enough so he can prevent his family from becoming dependent when he is no longer able to provide for them.

It is but the fear to which we are all heirs. We cannot wonder that in the system under which we labor now that it should be so, even though we know it will lead to the crash.

No matter in which way we turn our attention, if we go far enough we shall conclude that the crash must come. You may say it has for a long time been coming, which is true. It has been on the way many years, but the time is most propitious now for the great chaotic break.

From the standpoint of the employer the costs of production run higher and higher. From the standpoint of the laborer, he needs and demands more and more wages. There is extravagance in every direction. Because labor receives more dollars than it did formerly, there is a disposition to spend it for the things that cost most, with the idea that the best is none too good for those who have that with which to buy.

Nationally we are in an orgy of spending. In spite of the constant remonstrances from the Secretary of the Treasury, vast appropriations are being given right and left and we are fast piling up a great national debt from under which we may never emerge.

Labor is organized as it has never been before. Walking delegates everywhere stimulate anger and resentment, and they find many with willing ears and ready hands.

Officials of one of our strongest railroad systems admit that everywhere, in every department, their employees are closely organized and are preparing to make demands which will not be acceded to.

We were conversing not long ago with a leading financier of the Middle West over the outlook. He admitted frankly that the man on the street knew as much about the future as do the men who call themselves financiers.

Then on every hand there is a pitiful amount of disloyalty. It honeycombs the governments of the world; it affects us as a church. I have been criticized for trying to curb this tendency, but I shall continue to cry out against this ugly thing which would, if continued, disrupt the very church. Conditions of the times engender disloyalty, yet those who are alert will recognize that when we disrupt an organization and reorganize from the fragments, we secure as unstable a structure as we had before.

Waves of crime are sweeping over the country, each wave wider in its scope than the preceding.

But what is the solution of all these troubles? It is easy enough to point out the difficulties and join the ranks of hundreds of others who have done likewise. Many answers are offered, but it is difficult to put one's finger on one answer that will prove effective, unless it is a fundamental one, big enough to cover all. If we do that and rear our superstructure upon it, we shall be able to rest assured that it will stand the test.

Perhaps we have it in the words of the text read at the beginning of our discourse: "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest." There is no place for the idler in the economy of Christ, yet the worker who follows his plan will find the rest sought. Indeed in our system we must devise a way to insure the giving of work for the joy of working.

Think of the factory hand amply supplied at home, his needs all looked after—this same factory hand whose picture we painted awhile ago. It is easy to paint these beautiful pictures of better conditions, where peace and happiness conduce to efficiency. We like to think of this man going to the factory with manly step, working on his machine caressingly, increasing its capacity to its fullest extent, working—for what? For the service he can render, not for mere wages. With his family comfortably fed, clothed, and housed, health good, and spirits high, what a future he has!

Then what of the employer? He has problems still, many of them, but he is meeting them gladly, for the profits that accrue measure his service to humanity and he is happy in the idea that his stewardship conduces to the community's welfare.

Right there we have the keynote to the whole situation: Stewardship. And we do not mean the false conception of the word that is used by the sectarian world to extract funds from the people, but in the full meaning of the term as taught by Jesus Christ.

To the question of Zion's conditions we have paid all too little attention. We are prone to think too much of the condition of the Saints in the three glories, whether or not they attain to the highest, and about this question I am not interested. I am interested in conditions here and now.

The people are hungering for what we have to offer. The theories of communism, of socialism, of cooperation in their highest phases, all fade into insignificance beside that which we can offer in the divine plan revealed to us.

If I have my way, you will do a great deal and do it quick. We have gone on in this way long enough. As your leader I will wait no longer about calling together the Saints and putting into operation the stewardship plan. We have throughout the church a strong spirit of consecration, and so prevalent that we must utilize it. Young men of ability among us are offering their all on the altar of service. They want to begin now, and your leader will not rest a moment till they can.

And, for our part, we know that whatever blessing has come to us has come through love. It is not mountains and plains and rivers and food and clothing that make the world for us. It is the men and women and little children that make the world when they come, and that end the world for us when they go. So far as we have loved we have been blessed, and so far as we have hated we have been cursed.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

As a matter of fact, almost all men who have rejected and ridiculed prayer have been men who never prayed. . . . If such men do not care to experiment with prayer, they should not pronounce upon it.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

A Revelation to the Church

A revelation affecting one of the leading quorums of the church.

At the afternoon session on April 7, immediately following the opening exercises the president of the church presented a document, which he read to the assembly, and which he stated would be referred to the various quorums after an early adjournment. The communication follows:

"I have still one other matter to present to the church, but I wish to presage it by saying that as much as I should have desired, and as badly as is needed a third member in the Presidency, I am not yet permitted to suggest the name.

"I have been admonished that a number of changes will eventually be made in the Quorum of Twelve. Some I present to-day. Others will be presented in due time, contingent upon the development of conditions.

"To-day I wish to present for your consideration this document to the church:

"To the Church: Having given to the general missionary needs of the church and the condition of the Quorum of Twelve much thought and prayer, I am permitted to say to the church by way of instruction, through inspiration received:

"Let Francis M. Sheehy and Peter Anderson be released from the Quorum of Twelve; and to fill the vacancies created by these releases let Myron A. McConley and Thomas W. Williams be ordained apostles.

"Let the Quorum of Twelve be admonished that to discharge the responsibilities of the burden of the missionary work upon them, they should in humility before God and in sincerity of purpose apply themselves to this great task with unreserved devotion. The work in this line must be hastened. Let them not be unduly concerned with the work of the standing ministry, only as they shall be directed by the Presidency therein; and let contention cease concerning the prerogatives of the leading quorums. The work awaiting the efforts of the missionary forces is great and there is no time for contentions. Let the apostles move out, as they have in the past been directed, in the task of taking to the peoples of the world the message of peace, and they shall find comfort and satisfaction in their labors.

"FREDERICK M. SMITH, President of the Church.

"INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 7, 1920.

The Program of the Conference

This year the schedule for the meetings of conference is all prearranged; that is, in a general way all meetings are provided for and announced, but of course there must be necessary variations to meet existing circumstances. We shall present under this heading a general summary and outline of the program as carried out, and elsewhere in the issues of the HERALD during the conference period treat separately and individually the various parts that go to make up the general series. We believe this will be a pleasing variation over the method we have sometimes followed, of recording chronologically the events which occur, regardless of their relative importance.

Though the conference proper began on April 6, in accordance with the custom from the date of organization, in 1830, the decision to include April 4 and 5 in the program proved to be a very good one. A large number of the ministry of the church were already present, having attended for about two weeks, two lectures a day, and delegates and visitors from all parts of the country were present in large number.

The first meeting was a communion service at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, and though the weather was severe, a typical midwinter blizzard being in progress, the church was well filled in both auditoriums.

The Sunday school at 9.30 a. m. is always a mammoth affair, but especially so on occasions like this. We are printing elsewhere some figures which show the enormous size of our biggest Sunday school.

At the morning preaching services the theme was as announced: "The vision of 1820," with Walter W. Smith speaker at the Stone Church, upper auditorium, F. G. Pitt, lower auditorium; Richard Baldwin, South Side; John A. Dowker, Walnut Park; C. Edward Miller, Enoch Hill; George H. Wixom, Liberty Street; Frederick A. Smith, Central Church, Kansas City.

The attendance was not all that had been expected, but the severe weather prevented what might have been overflowing crowds from attending.

At 2.30 the theme was "The vision of 1920—Zion's outlook from the viewpoint of the young men." The speakers were: Floyd M. McDowell, upper auditorium of the Stone Church; Cyril E. Wight, lower auditorium; Cornelius M. Clifford, South Side; Frank B. Almond, Walnut Park; Edward D. Moore, Enoch Hill; W. R. Kapnick, Liberty Street; Heman Hale Smith, Central Church.

In the afternoon the storm had abated, and though a cold, searching wind prevailed, the attendance was in general satisfactory. In instances where these sermons were not reported, the speakers on the last-named theme have agreed to try to reproduce them for publications in SAINTS' HERALD, one of them appearing in the issue of the 7th.

The speakers in the evening at the various churches were assigned the theme: "The seer of Palmyra—his mission and message." The speakers were: J. A. Gillen, upper auditorium; U. W. Greene, lower auditorium; Daniel Macgregor, South Side; J. F. Curtis, Walnut Park; W. M. Aylor, Enoch Hill; Gomer T. Griffiths, Liberty Street; Joseph Luff, Central Church.

On Monday registration of delegates was the only big thing until evening, when Heman Hale Smith lectured to a large audience at the Stone Church on the "Historic setting of the Restoration."

The first session on the 6th was the official opening of the conference. Hours before time for opening there was a crowd present in the gallery, and when the first number was announced for congregational singing there was not a seat left, and standing room was not available.

The opening prayer, the song service, the reading of the account of Joseph Smith's first vision, the speech by President F. M. Smith were each of them appropriate and inimitable. Promptly at twelve the meeting adjourned till 2 p. m.

At 2 p. m. the second conference session, in charge, of Elbert A. Smith, was convened. In one of his usual eloquent prayers Doctor Joseph Luff dedicated the service to God.

At this time the official reports to the conference were distributed to delegates and ex-officios, thus establishing the identity of delegates and placing for consideration the various reports to the conference.

The usual question as to who should preside was asked, and the First Presidency were authorized to have charge and make all necessary arrangements. President F. M. Smith suggested that on account of the size of the task, the organization was necessarily about completed before the conference convened, consequently about all there is left to do is to call attention to those who are doing the work rather than to those who are to do it.

The rest of the hour session was devoted to a conclusion of President F. M. Smith's morning address, with the inclusion of various far-reaching recommendations, which if adopted will mean much to the church. These will appear elsewhere in more complete form, and will likely be the basis of consideration and action at later sessions.

Summarized, they included the disorganization of the Independence Stake as such and the recognition of the place as the center of Zion, under the direct supervision of the general officers of the church rather than subdivided as at present.

The reorganization of the standing high council.

The transfer of the legal headquarters of the church to Independence, Missouri.

The establishment of people on land and in industries as a beginning of the operation of the law of stewardships, with the organization of an industrial council.

The enlargement of the size and scope of the Sanitarium, changing the articles of incorporation so that the board in control would be ex officio. The logical board would be the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

The adoption of a building program to cover all the public needs of the church. This would include all the stakes, but especially should immediate attention be given to the providing of a meeting place for the annual conferences. The utter inadequacy of all our public building demands that something be done to provide for these and other assemblies of the Saints.

The adoption of the principle of biennial conferences (every two years) instead of our annual meetings, and that they all be held in Independence.

The evening service began before 7 p. m. at the church, though it had been announced for 7. This was largely because the crowd had to come early to get in, and they tire of waiting. So Elder Hubert Case addressed them for ten minutes on the subject of the pictures to follow. These were slides shown by The Graphic Arts Bureau, the moving spirit of which is C. Edward Miller. The Apache Trail was the subject, and some interesting and beautiful scenes were shown, including the details of Indian life among these people.

The sermon at 7.30 was by Elder T. W. Williams, on "Creedal revision of the past hundred years." There was an overflow meeting in the lower auditorium at the same hour, which was addressed by Elder G. H. Wixom.

The morning of the 7th began with the customary lecture to the priesthood at 8 a. m., addressed on this occasion by Frank A. Russell on details of the department of statistics.

At nine the various quorums met in separate session, and a general prayer meeting in the upper auditorium was held, in charge of J. F. Garver and R. V. Hopkins.

At 10.30 the first session of the Religio was held, largely devoted to getting under way for the next session. The Religio has considerable on hand in the way of changes to be made this year, and the resolutions committee was asked to bring in definite reports as to their opinion of matters offered the convention for action.

WEDNESDAY APRIL 7

The afternoon session of the 7th was a brief one, the president of the church presenting a document as the will of the Spirit, releasing Peter Anderson and Francis M. Sheehy from the Quorum of Twelve and naming Myron A. McConley and Thomas W. Williams in their stead. There were admonitions that the contentions cease as to the prerogatives of the leading quorums of the church. This document was referred to the various quorums for their consideration, all of them convening immediately following the session, except the Aaronic priesthood, which were called together on the morning of the 8th by a call from Bishop B. R. McGuire.

The various printed reports were mentioned and spread on the minutes, corrections noted, and the suggestion made that those responsible for them should see that any recommendations made are acted on by the conference.

The pictures shown by the Graphic Arts Bureau at 7 p. m. were well attended. They tell of a certain strong opponent of our present tendency toward social and recreational features that he sat in the audience during one of these presentations and at the close left with the excuse that he wanted to go home and go to bed, which at least shows that there is interest in good pictures sufficient to hold the attention of anyone.

The young people of the Independence Stake gave a "Trip around the world," to the visiting young people on this evening, (the 7th) an account of which is given elsewhere. It is reported that in the four "trains" were as many as eight hundred people.

The Religio program at the Battery Building at 6 p. m. with a series of films on "The passing of the third floor back." The house was crowded to capacity during this and the following features given in detail elsewhere, in fact those present during the earlier exercises were asked to vacate so those coming later could find entrance.

The Sunday school occupied at the church at 8 p. m., with a general program, and though there were two other big counter attractions, the house was comfortably full.

THURSDAY APRIL 8

The usual morning meeting of the priesthood was held at eight o'clock, and addressed by A. E. McKim, publicity agent for the church, on the immediate problems before the church in the imparting of information through the available means of advertising at hand.

The prayer service at 9 a. m. in the upper auditorium was as usual well attended.

"The Historic Setting of the Reformation"

A summary of the statements by Heman Hale Smith, Assistant Historian, in his lecture, April 5, 1920.

The speaker divided the field into three distinct divisions, each of them allied to the other and none of them susceptible of being considered intelligently alone. These divisions are, religious, political, and industrial or economic.

Though historic facts may of themselves seem prosaic, yet rightly considered, they are indissolubly linked up with our lives. In fact, we are the product of our ancestors and practically all of one family—that is, considering the great Aryan race. Tracing our ancestry back eight centuries simple mathematics demonstrate that each of us have sixteen million ancestors, and though this is considerably reduced by intermarriage, it still proves that we are related alike to prince and pauper, to the intelligent and the idiotic.

History is useless as a mere chronicle of facts. Only till recently have historians turned to recording of the doings of the great mass of the people who in reality make up history and made nations possible.

When Luther renounced Roman Catholicism he had no intention of organizing a church, but he defied Romish authority and denounced its practices on the grounds of the right of individual expression in religion. Likewise Henry VIII. took advantage of popular sentiment which he did not create, and as a result the Episcopal Church was organized, though it is not correct to attach the responsibility of church organization to him. And as each new church during that long Reformation period came into being it was along the line of democracy, then a new principle, each advance characterized by intolerance for other beliefs. The Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, etc., were pioneers in church organization in the south and east, in New York and the Ohio Valley. They taught and believed that no matter how sinful a man might be, on repentance at death he was in a position to be saved.

Into this atmosphere of intolerance and exaggerated concept, came the principle through this church of progression after death, and naturally a great storm arose. Indeed the setting for the Restoration was as unrelenting as in the days of John Calvin or during the Spanish Inquisition.

As a church we have had to fight this spirit of intolerance in Missouri in Nauvoo—everywhere the church has become established, yet among ourselves it is not extinct. All too much are we narrow and intolerant of other sects and creeds and peoples, when we who have fought this spirit for a hundred years should be the most tolerant people on the face of the earth.

The setting of political history at the time of the Restoration is not usually appreciated. It is a common thing to have a working knowledge of the history of this country during the twenties, thirties, etc., but not so many comprehend the real political situation in 1820 as related to the church, when a number of the pioneers of the Revolutionary days were in power in Washington. The issue of slavery was a tense one in those days, when there were as many slave states as free, with Missouri one of the former. The migration of a people from the North avowedly in favor of abolition there could result in nothing but opposition. At that time the matter of state rights was not settled as it is to-day. When Missouri oppressed the Saints and they appealed to the Government, the answer was that Missouri was a sovereign state, and nothing could be done. In this day it is conceded that the national government may step in and correct the wrongs of a state when necessary, but at that time it was not, otherwise the property to the value of fifteen million dollars in Missouri might have been recovered and redress for other wrongs had.

At first this Nation did not have a democracy. True, it was a republic, but complete man-suffrage was not in effect, and we had but a rule of aristocracy, the voting power being determined by wealth. Forty years after the Declaration of Independence, Andrew Jackson made the big fight for democracy, and was elected on that issue. And around the year 1820 the States began to remodel their constitutions to provide for manhood suffrage.

Then we have made more history in the last hundred years than occurred in the previous thousand years. In 1820 there were only three countries in Europe that had any semblance of democracy. Even England, was only partially under that system, while to-day there is but only one little kingdom in the world that does not have a constitution, and that is Siam.

The church we represent has for years held advanced ideas on democracy. In the system whereby we may recall an official by the simple expedient of refusing to sustain him, we have referendum and recall, regarded by many as the very acme of democratic principles. As a church in the time of impressing democracy we must be watchful to keep the spirit of democracy in our own organizations and remain always the enemy of autocracy.

One hundred years ago we had no electricity, no gas, few transportation facilities. The Erie Canal was being built, and when completed was hailed as one of the greatest achievements in the world.

There were no stoves, and when one's fire went out he must of necessity carry coals from a neighbor to start it over again. All these were conditions under which this church began, and from the beginning it went to the frontiers where these conditions were the most primitive.

The economic inequality of to-day is largely the result of the system whereby the Government gave with practically no limit the land to individuals who were able to purchase it for a small sum per acre, vast tracts being sold for as little as a dollar and a quarter an acre. It was not till 1862 that the homestead law was enacted, limiting the acquisition of public land to one hundred and sixty acres. Before this the spirit of speculation was rife, and those most competent in commercial pursuits were able to acquire large areas of land to be held in their families in the future, instead of recognizing that they were amenable to the rights of the people in managing and holding the property.

Economic history as a setting was marked by demand of labor unions for free schools; for first time man above dollars in 1832.

To-day the various churches are declaring for industrial democracy in pronouncements that cannot be misunderstood, and recognizing, as we should, that those whose prosperity is made up by public support should be counted as guardians in trust only. That the real test of one's character is service rendered rather than property acquired. Till we come to a full recognition and statement of this ideal we shall not advance as is required of us.

The nineteenth century bids us keep as we were one hundred years ago in the forefront in advancing tolerance, democracy, and service.

Department of Statistics

The following report was made by the department to General Conference.

With the closing of each conference year, among the questions which arise in the minds of many are these: How many baptized during the year? How many lost from our number? What is our net gain? To these questions we submit the following brief reply: The number of baptisms for the past conference year is considerably less than for the preceding year. During the year 1919, 2,988 baptisms were reported to this department. For the same period the church sustained a loss of 1,067 by death and expulsion, leaving a net gain of 1,921. This added to number reported in April, 1919; brings the total membership of the church up to 92,746.

Since being placed in charge of this department on July 15, 1919, we have been very busy in an effort to so arrange the affairs of the office that we could not be justly accused of camouflage in using the term "Department of Statistics."

A new system of securing the data for our general church record and of adding to and removing names from various group enrollments has been inaugurated, and is proving to be of special advantage in many ways. In this arrangement, we have sought diligently to emphasize the fact that membership is in the CHURCH and that branch enrollment as defined by General Conference Resolutions, Nos. 456 and 706, is a matter of geography—determined by the place of residence of the member.

Our present plan provides for but one place to report items for the general church record, namely, to the Department of Statistics, Independence, Missouri. In the case of a baptism, the minister officiating is expected to report his work to this department without delay. The new name is then entered in the general register, where it is assigned its special number for identification purpose. At the same time the name is enrolled with the branch suggested by the minister. If the location of the person baptized does not justify branch enrollment the name is carried upon the General record only. All necessary papers, including individual enrollment page, certificate of baptism for the new member, enrollment card, etc. are sent to the clerks of the branches concerned, the first of each month. Thus the general records have become the place of original entry for all names, the information required by the branches going out from the department to the respective branch clerks for use in the branch records. Heretofore the plan as provided for reports to be made by the ministry to branch clerks, the latter to prepare a report to be sent to district conference which report was expected finally to reach us for the purpose of making up a permanent record. We will not, at this time, attempt a detailed account of the difficulties encountered in this roundabout method other than to say that they were practically numberless.

The handling of transfers of branch enrollments under the "Letter of Removal" plan has long since proven inadequate and exceedingly unsatisfactory, not only to this department but to the branch as well, a fact well attested by the records themselves, page after page containing evidence of partially completed transfer of enrollments, a thing impossible under our present system. The new arrangement has been fully explained in the church periodicals.

For the purpose of putting into effect the change above suggested, the various branches in the United States and Canada have been provided with uniform loose-leaf binders, together with the necessary supplies, the cost for same being as yet charged up as departmental expense. Branch clerks have exhibited a splendid spirit of cooperation and a large proportion of them have completed their work incident to the change and have deposited their old records with this department. When all have been received this church will have stored, in its vaults, the books which have, in reality, been the general church record, scattered from one end of the country to the other. Checking these books with the general records will, though a large task, mean many changes in both additions and losses. The small amount of checking up of these records, already done, has convinced us more than ever of the necessity of a change in our methods.

There is another item which should be mentioned. Some ten years or more ago the General Conference authorized the transfer of all names from the old record books to cards. Upon assuming the duties of the department, we learned that but a small portion of this work had been done. A double system of recording was in operation. It was apparent that immediate attention should be given to this task. Accordingly, as many as could work upon the books to advantage have been laboring diligently since the latter part of August in an effort to finish this work of transferring. Many difficulties are encountered, but we indulge the hope of being able to complete the work early in the summer.

Our church record is very incomplete. Why? The answer is simply this: In the minds of many of the men of the ministry, but little importance has been attached to the necessity of reporting their official acts; and when as in the past, report of work was made to the branch clerk, the latter frequently either forgot it entirely or transcribed the items incorrectly. Those who have heretofore labored in this department deserve special credit for persistently trying to chase down errors which were constantly appearing in the old branch statistical report—an effort frequently ending in failure.

The gathering and analyzing of statistics is an important feature in the work of any organization. But before attempt is made to collect data the reason for such undertaking should be clearly understood and defined, in order that the assembled items may serve the purpose intended. In other words, if the product of the Statistical Department is not a special asset, what good reason could be assigned for its existence? The perpetual census suggested in Doctrine and Covenants 17:25 must have a place in the general development of the work. Not only has an attempt been made to "keep a regular list of all the names of the whole church in a book," but also to group these names according to localities where the members reside. This has developed a very elaborate system of transferring of names from group to group, which with its attendant difficulties is responsible for by far the greater portion of the expense of this department. After counseling with various ones on this subject we have already undertaken a thorough revision in this part of the work, some changes contemplated not yet having been put into operation.

We especially invite branch and district officials, also the ministry, both general and local, to visit our room; and you will be able to understand in a few minutes that which would require an hour to explain in writing. The office will be open during each forenoon. We hope each branch clerk in attendance at conference will make it a point to meet us personally. We want to get acquainted with you.

Our purpose: Eliminate nonessentials, in order that time may be devoted to the development of essentials, thus making the department to be a real, as well as valuable asset to the church.

FRANK A. RUSSELL.

Graceland College

This is the report to conference, covering the activities and needs of Graceland College.

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The attached reports of the president and treasurer and business manager of Graceland College were at a formal meeting of the Board of Trustees of the College held at Lamoni, Iowa, March 1, 1920, adopted and made the report of the Board to the General Conference. Respectfully submitted,

LAMONI, IOWA, March 3, 1920.

To the Board of Trustees: The contrast between last school year and this has been most striking. There probably has never been in the history of education a more difficult year than last so far as effectiveness in school work is concerned. With the uncertainties surrounding the length of time the young men might be able to remain in school, the earnestness with which the Government was urging all eligible young men to enter college to prepare as completely as might be possible to serve more effectively in the world war, the organization of the S. A. T. C. in October, the end of the war in November, the demobilization of the S. A. T. C. in December, the ravages of the Spanish influenza for four months, beginning within a month after the college year opened, resulting in the loss of much time and the demoralization of effective work was most heartbreaking. However, in spite of all the handicaps the student body and faculty of last year rallied as could hardly have been expected, and completed the year's schedule only a week later than contemplated.

This year opened under most favorable circumstances, the opening address being delivered by Honorable George S. Dick from the office of the State Department of Public Instruction at Des Moines. He emphasized the importance of the relation between church colleges and the state, pointing out the very great part played by denominational colleges, especially in higher education in Iowa. That the work and standing of Graceland College is fully recognized by our State Department of Education is evidenced by the following letter from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction:

STATE OF IOWA

"Department of Public Instruction

"P. E. McClenahan, Supt.

"Des Moines, July 14, 1919.

"President George N. Briggs:

"Dear Mr. Briggs: "Permit me to congratulate you upon your Junior college achievement. I am pleased to know that you have entered this field of education as a pioneer of Iowa, and now you are leading in a movement which I believe will accomplish much good in your locality and set a new ideal and a new standard in Iowa education.

"The Junior college in Iowa is yet in its infancy but it fills a place in local educational systems, where it can accomplish much good. It is confined to a field only half as broad as the standard college but this place in our system has been neglected. The Junior college, with its new course of study, with its revival of interest in Freshman and Sophomore years of college work, with its special emphasis upon a modern educational ideal, with its attention to vocational education, comes to fill an educational need.

"A man who has the right ideals and lives up to them fulfills his mission in this world; and in your college you are receiving young men and women and are helping them to form the right habits and to follow ideals that will make them better and happier in the future.

"I have been personally interested in this movement for several years past and am glad that you have a chance to start the work in Iowa. Your broad experience, coupled with your executive ability and scholarly attainments, make you an excellent leader in this new Junior college movement.

"I have been fortunate in knowing some members of your faculty and if all the faculty are as thorough, and well grounded in educational work as those I have known, you are indeed fortunate to work with such a group of educators and the education of your pupils will be of the highest type.

"Again permit me to congratulate you and to wish you and your college success and to assure you that you have my heartiest cooperation and sympathy in the great educational work that you are doing. Sincerely yours,

"(Signed) P. E. McCLENAHAN."

ACCREDITING

Our college department, academy, and commercial department, as previously reported, are fully standardized and officially accredited, our graduates being admitted to the third or junior year of the Universities of the land, and being granted State certificates to teach which are good for life or for so long as the graduate remains in the teaching profession.

By Iowa law our graduates who enter the teaching profession are guaranteed a minimum entrance salary of $80 per month which is increased to a minimum of $100 per month after two years of successful experience. All of our graduates of last year easily secured positions at salaries on the average considerably above the minimum, ranging from $80 to $133 per month. There is a very fine opportunity for service in this department of our work and the State fully recognizes what we are doing along this line.

ATTENDANCE

The following statistics will be of interest as showing the growth in the collegiate department.

Year	Enrollment	Increase	Per centage
1915-6	22
1916-7	39	17	77
1917-8	47	8	22
1918-9	79	32	70
1919-20	115	36	45

In the entire institution the enrollment on February first 1920 was 293 as compared with 246 a year ago, an increase of 20 per cent in enrollment while the increase in attendance and regularity is 50 per cent over last year. The effectiveness of an institution's instruction is gauged by the regularity of the attendance of students and with an increase of 50 per cent this year over last in that one respect alone it can readily be appreciated of how much greater value is this year's work.

NEW BUILDINGS

Provision was made by the last General Conference for a new building to meet some of our most pressing needs. We have been very greatly handicapped during the present year for lack of room, but the new building, which will be ready for occupancy September 1, 1920, will meet our requirements for the coming year, enabling us to make some readjustments in the old building to meet essential needs.

Our most urgent requirement is for added dormitory facilities. All of our rooms in both girls and boys dormitories were engaged several weeks before school opened last fall. Several prospective students who found they could not secure dormitory accommodations decided not to attend this year, while others coming without having made previous arrangements were compelled to find accommodations in the town. Our town people have shown a most excellent spirit of cooperation enabling us to make provisions for many students who could not otherwise be provided for. This arrangement, however, cannot be continued indefinitely. It is not best for the interests of the student, the town, or the institution. Adequate dormitory facilities must be provided at an early date. However, for the coming year it is believed we can meet the situation by using the upper story of the new building for a boys' dormitory, reserving the present girl's dormitory, the cottage and the present boy's dormitory for the accommodation of the girls. The architect is planning the new building with that end in view. Very little change will be needed and the following year when the new dormitory is constructed can be converted into regular college class rooms for which purpose they are permanently planned.

In view of the above facts, and in view of the well-recognized urgent demands from other departments of the church, it is recommended that the request for an additional dormitory be postponed for one year but that the church architect be requested to prepare plans for a dormitory so that there will be no delay in its construction when it is authorized.

It is a matter of general congratulation that when the church was ready to construct a building on the college campus, the first one of a series which will be needed within the next few years to meet our demands, she found a Graceland Alumnus as architect and another Graceland Alumnus as master builder, and a great deal of the work of construction will be performed by Graceland students.

GYMNASIUM

If the recent war demonstrated one thing more than any other it is the necessity for some form of definite systematic physical training for the youth of our land. With one third of our young men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty physically defective, and a large percentage of that defectiveness preventable and curable it behooves those responsible for the education of our youth to include as one of the requirements of a well-rounded-out curriculum a thorough course in physical education, which will prevent a large percentage of our physical incapacity. To meet this need Graceland must have at the earliest date possible a large well constructed and adequate gymnasium. The longer this crying need is postponed the further away will be the day when we are prepared adequately to meet the minimum requirements of our young men and women.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

In view of the fact that a systematic course in Religious Education was undertaken for the first time during the present year there is included herewith a brief report from the head of that department which will be of general interest.

"Considering the fact that this work was undertaken in the face of serious handicaps, it is felt that considerable progress has been made toward the permanent establishment of a thorough, worth-while course in religious training.

"The ideals of those instrumental in bringing into being this long desired and needed activity have not been to turn out 'trained preachers.' These ideals, on the other hand, may be summed up briefly as follows:

- "1. To cultivate in the individual correct habits of study.
- "2. To train the mind to think clearly, logically and independently.
- "3. To make possible a broad, general knowledge of history, religion, and philosophy and in particular a specific knowledge of the doctrines, hopes, and ideals of our organization.
- "4. To assist the learner in developing and improving his powers of expression.

"It would be presumptuous to say that these ideals have been accomplished. It is not too much to say, however, that satisfactory progress has been made toward their accomplishment.

"It was clear from the beginning that those entering the class during the first year of its existence would be compelled to sacrifice personally in order that the experimental efforts of this first year might be utilized to the good of future classes.

"As a result of the year's work, it is clear that certain changes should be made and such improvements provided as may be practicable. We therefore recommend:

- "1. That as soon as possible the course be lengthened to cover a period of at least two years. As at present constituted it is too burdensome for any except those of exceptional ability and a reasonable amount of previous academic training or its equivalent. A great deal of benefit is received by those who are not so fortunate as to qualify under the above classification, but far more good would be obtained if the course should cover two or more years. Such a change would not only provide for a more comprehensive scholastic education, but would make possible an opportunity for more practical work, such as preaching, visiting, etc. It would also lessen the tendency to discouragement.

- "2. That immediate steps be taken to provide satisfactory textbooks for the course in doctrine. These should include texts covering the following: Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, apologetics, principles of the gospel and the redemption of Zion. The work during the past year has been made very difficult because of a lack along this line. A text covering Bible study should handle the subject historically and should seek to evaluate the various parts of the book and establish their correct relation to the divine plan as a whole. Since our conception of Bible teaching is so different from that of the sectarian world, the need for such a text is imperative.

"A Book of Mormon text should include a historical treatment of the subject matter; Biblical proof of its divinity; internal and external evidence, including archæology; a study of Book of Mormon literature, etc.

"A textbook for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants should be both historical and topical. However, in view of a divergence of opinion as to certain teachings of the book, a general text might not be considered feasible at present.

"The subject of apologetics should be both general and specific. General in that it should present the best methods for presenting our teachings to the world. It should cover briefly the subject of argumentation and debate. Specifically, it should contain comprehensive analyses of the various questions at issue between us and the sectarian world.

"The last two subjects, principles of the gospel and redemption of Zion could without doubt be presented in a single volume, under some such caption as "The problem of the ages" or "The divine plan of salvation."

"The outlines worked out by the young men's class at the Lamoni Sunday School could well be used as a basis.

"3. That a correspondence course covering at least the doctrinal phases be prepared with a view to enabling those unable to enroll as resident students to obtain the benefits of the course. Such a course would depend largely upon the provision of the textbook above mentioned.

"4. That music be provided as an elective for women.

"5. That the course be altered so as to provide United States history and sociology in place of European history and foreign language for those preparing for local missionary service.

"In view of the expected increase in the size of the religious education class for the coming year, it will be necessary for the instructor in church doctrine to use the lecture method very largely. This can be made very effective, however, by a continuance of certain methods used this year, e. g., the assignment of various topics for report on the part of individual students, and the duplication of outlines worked out for distribution to the entire class.

"The work has been very arduous but has been done with an earnest desire to further the work of God. Many lessons have undoubtedly been learned which should be of assistance to those undertaking the direction of the course in the future."

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

This new department is just beginning to function in a way which is going to be of very great service to the church at large. The work of organizing and conducting this department is of such a nature as to require the services of one especially fitted by training, education, and experience. We have been unsuccessful in securing the services of such a person until quite recently, so that the department has not been able to accomplish what might otherwise have reasonably been expected of it. With the director who has recently consented to undertake the work there is every evidence that great good will be accomplished and that the department will be able to make as good a showing as any other department of the college.

RELIGIOUS NORMAL TRAINING

This department, taken over from the General Sunday School and Religio Associations, has actively entered upon its functions, but has just begun to be of service in any adequate way. There are at present two hundred active members enrolled.

During the year, up to February 14, the date of the last statement from the director of the department, there had been conducted two hundred twelve examinations and forty certificates granted, while there are fifty-five newly enrolled students who had up to that date taken no examination.

The possibilities for good in this department are very great, and the direction which is now being given to it will, with the cooperation of all Sunday school and Religio workers throughout the church, enable it to begin to function up to its maximum capacity within the next year.

MONEY VALUE OF THE YEAR

As was pointed out in the report of a year ago the United States Government had interested itself in determining the value of an education from the standpoint of money returns.

Taking the basis used by the Government in making its calculations we find that the earning power of Graceland students up to February first had been increased to the extent of $218,549 by reason of their attendance, and that the close of the year will record an increase in the earning capacity of the young people of the church of $382,063 as a result of the institutions year's work.

The money returns from the educated young people of the church is one of the least important results of the institutions work, but it is by no means to be overlooked and should be one of the factors in determining the effectiveness of the college.

I cannot close this brief review of the year's work without an expression of my deep conviction of the real awakening in all parts of the Lord's vineyard to the clarion call of President Smith, "for preparation by education for greater usefulness, an appeal, made by your leader, as he believes under the impulses of inspiration, calling upon you for earnest preparation against the coming of that day when the burdens that shall be thrown upon you will be greater than you can carry in your own strength only as you shall have qualified under the inspiration of Almighty God, and the development through your own energies of abilities that God endowed you with."

Nor can I neglect an expression of my very great appreciation of the very hearty spirit of cooperation and helpfulness from all interested in the welfare of the college, the members of the Board of Trustees, the faculty, the student body, the citizens of Lamoni, and the general membership of the church at large. They have all seemingly united to further the interests of our one institution of higher learning in the church. With such a spirit and with such helpfulness there is but one result, that of the accomplishment of the maximum amount of good.

It is the ambition of the college to perform so well the tasks allotted that there will be no question on the part of the state or the church of her ability to perform equally well other and more important tasks when either the state or the church is ready to enlarge her responsibilities.

To the end that she may be ready to meet these added responsibilities to be placed upon her by the state or church she needs the continued loyal devotion of faculty, students, alumni, and the membership of the entire church.

G. N. BRIGGS, President.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 28, 1920.

To the Board of Trustees: 1. Following the order of making pre-conference reports of the status of the work of Graceland College, herewith is presented a general statement of the year's work as concerns the financial and industrial features of the institution. A detailed statement of assets and liabilities, profits and losses, with itemized inventories of all the properties is made at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, and submitted to the Bishop of the church and the Board of Trustees of the college.

THE BUDGET

2. Comparing expenditures for the various items composing our budget with the appropriations made, counting actual amounts expended to February 10, 1920, and estimating balance required to June 30, the following showing appears:

BUDGET ALLOWANCE

	Allowed	Used to Feb. 10	Est. for bal. of yr.	Total
Allowance for faculty	$12,000.00	$ 5,840.67	$6,084.36	$11,925.03

	$11,100.00	$17,750.09	$ 250.00	$18,000.09

3. On allowances we have kept within the budget and have a small balance.

4. The amount provided for the extension department has not all been used. Developments in this department have not been all that was expected, though not at all disappointing.

5. The item heating plant has run considerably above the budget. Everyone knows of the unprecedented advance in fuel, so that the excess of fifty per cent above the estimate is no surprise.

6. Two insurance policies were renewed and additional insurance added, by advice of the executive committee, so that this item has more than tripled the amount asked for. It was thought by the executive committee that more insurance should be carried in order to have adequate protection, which, with the increase in rate, accounts for the showing.

7. Library care is a little less than the budget; and new books about even.

8. Advertising, including catalogue, is above the budget, owing to the advance in printers' stock, and labor.

9. Office help is even. Some additional help has been necessary, made so because of the handling in connection books and supplies, but this added expense has been charged to the bookstore.

10. The item of light and water is above the budget for the reason that the rate has been advanced on both since the estimate was made.

11. General expense has been held within the budget allowance.

12. Repairs and upkeep is within the amount asked for, but some of the important work is still to be done, which, it is expected, will be done before the close of the fiscal year.

13. Repairing and replacing of furniture is the same as the budget.

14. Taking the total of the budget, it is seen that the expenditures are $1,348.38 in excess of the amount authorized. Against this is the fact that the income from tuition, offerings, and endowments is $6,900.09 more than the amount estimated; so that there is a net margin of $5,553.71.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DEPARTMENT

15. This department has proven entirely satisfactory, though it is in its experimental stage. The increase of tuition as a result of the addition of this department amounts to about $1,200. Two instructors on part time have been provided, and a number of volumes for the library have been supplied to meet the special needs of the students in this department.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

16. This new department has been all that could have been reasonably expected. The amount appropriated has taken care of the work leaving a small balance. Three individuals have given quite a considerable time to it, and some furniture and other equipment has been purchased, and an office room fitted up.

SCHOLARSHIPS

17. The number of students taking advantage of the general scholarship fund this year is eighteen, and the amount of money borrowed is $1,417. This fund is supplied by the annual College Day Collection on the first Sunday in October, as a result of church action in General Conference asking that all Saints in their branches, or as individuals, upon this day make an offering for the benefit of the college. We do not know how much from this reached the Bishop, but the applications for such scholarships or loans, considerably exceeds the income at the Treasurer's office. No proper application, however, for this assistance, has been denied.

18. The Religio fund has been overdrawn, however, and some requests have been received that could not be accommodated. The amount allowed to any one student has been increased by the executive committee of the society from sixty to one hundred dollars in consideration of the increase in tuition and advance in cost of books and supplies. The number taking advantage of this means of help this year is more than in previous years, but having no account with this fund we do not know just the number. It would seem that this connecting link between the Religio Society and Graceland College should be strengthened, since the young of the society should naturally come to look upon the college as their school.

19. The Sunday school loan fund is still doing service, and there are several private scholarship funds, to some of which additions have been made during the year. A few small trust funds also are serving as aids to deserving young people seeking an education. The college would be glad to cooperate with any persons who might have it in their hearts to join in this good work, and will undertake to make the best possible use of funds for the purpose for which they are intended.

COMMISSARY

20. The unprecedented and unexpected increase in the cost of food supplies resulted in our boarding department ledger account showing a balance on the wrong side last year. In view of this, the price of board and room was advanced from $4.50 to $5.75 a week for the present year. The individual, or self-service plan of serving has been installed and some necessary improvements made. We are feeding many more students than the former year, in fact, we could scarcely have taken care of the number we now have by the old system. The monthly reports of the steward show a safe margin. Most of the work in this department is done by students, and affords a means of assisting many young people the opportunity for an education. The income from this department for the year will approximate $12,502.81 in cash and credits.

FARM

21. The farm was purchased primarily with the idea of making a place for more young people to work for school expenses. An effort has been made to carry out this idea and at the same time make it a profitable factor in conducting the institution. The dairy herd supplies the commissary with milk, the garden, with a considerable amount of vegetables, and the orchard, with a goodly quantity of fruit, and the poultry flock, with eggs. None of these phases of farm activity, however, can be developed to a high degree of efficiency until there shall be found individuals who will make such work their stewardship and enter into it with a view to making it contribute in the largest way possible to the development of the ideals of the church. The books indicate a profit for the fiscal year of $791.35, which is a fairly good showing, considering the frequent changes in farm help that have been necessary.

RECOMMENDATIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS

22. In the budget for 1920-21 is shown, the aggregate of funds to be appropriated for the coming year; but some other desirable improvements might be set out which should be made as soon as practicable.

THE FARM

23. In order to bring the farm up to a highly profitable condition several things are needed. First: An adequate water supply should be provided, either by the construction of good wells and tanks, or by extending the city pipe line from the college to the farm buildings.

24. Second. A shed for housing machinery, and granary and cribs for grain.

25. Third. A modern dairy barn to provide for from twenty-five to thirty cows.

26. These improvements logically should grow out of the proceeds of the farm; but it would take a long time for the farm to earn enough for these improvements; while if the money could be appropriated to supply them, it would take a much shorter time, because of the increased earning capacity, to pay it back. The amount needed is from eight to ten thousand dollars.

COLLEGE BUILDING

27. The old building, now nearly a quarter of a century old, needs quite extensive repairs. The outside brick work needs painting, or to be covered with stucco.

28. The natural expansion incident to increased attendance renders our office accommodations too small, and plans are under way to remodel room two, the northwest room on first floor, so as to provide adequate office rooms for both the president and business manager, retaining present offices for bookstore and extension department. This remodeling will cost approximately $200.

29. A door should be put in between the library and room four so that the reading and study room facilities might be adequately increased.

30. Some painting, varnishing and decorating will be necessary.

DORMITORIES

31. The usual amount of painting and decorating incident to a thorough cleaning up and renovation should be done with some renewal of furniture, etc., in the two dormitories.

ARBORVILLE

32. This is the cottage formerly occupied by Brother C. B. Woodstock and which we have rented with option of purchase. This with one acre of ground well set to fruit will cost $2,100, provisions for which is made in our annual budget. Some repairs on this building are needed, probably not to exceed $50.

SUPERINTENDENT'S COTTAGE

33. A home for the superintendent of buildings and grounds is much needed. With new buildings being added, the need for this man's residing convenient to the campus becomes more urgent. There will probably be enough lumber, or nearly enough, used in the forms for the concrete work in the building now under construction to build the frame work for this cottage. Some plans have been considered, and it is estimated that $3,000 would cover the cost. It would seem economy to undertake the providing of this building the coming year. Twelve dollars a month would be saved in room rent and a place for taking care of the lumber to good advantage that otherwise might be in large part wasted, to say nothing of the better service resulting from comfort and contentment of those rendering us excellent service.

COMMISSARY

34. With the increasing attendance and the expansion expected to come with the improved facilities afforded by the new buildings comes the question of enlarged capacity for boarding. Our present kitchen and dining room are taxed to their utmost to take care of the present number. It will be necessary to make some improvements which will cost approximately $200.

BUDGET 1920-21

Allowance for faculty	$16,000
Extension department	2,000
Heating plant, fuel, labor, etc.....	4,000
Insurance	1,200
Library care	850
Library new books	150
Advertising, including catalogue	450
Office help	1,000
Light and water	700
General expenses	500
Repairs, upkeep and improvement	1,500
Repairing and replacing furniture	400
Purchase of Arborvilla (Woodstock cottage)	2,000
Superintendent's cottage	3,000
	$33,850
Estimated receipts
Tuition	$23,000
Offerings	1,200
Endowments	500

36. It will be observed that the budget for 1920-21 exceeds that of the previous year $13,480. This increase is necessitated for the following reasons:

With the growth of the institution in its effort to meet more and more the legitimate educational demand naturally calls for additional courses from time to time, and that means additional instructors. The unprecedented advance in the cost of living has made some increase of allowances necessary. The allowance item is, therefore, $4,000 more than last year.

37. Arrangements have been made for the purchase of the cottage that we have been renting the past two years; and the erection of a cottage for the superintendent of buildings and grounds is regarded as a necessity. These will cost $5,000.

38. The addition of the new building will add to the fuel bill; and this addition with further advance in prices of coal and labor warrants an increase in our estimate on this item of $2,200.

39. Minor advances: Such items as insurance, office help, light and water, repairs and upkeep, and the few others, make up the remainder of the increase.

40. Upon the other hand attention is called to the fact that the estimated increase in tuition upon what is thought to be a conservative basis is $12,500; so that the deficit to be supplied by the church is only $330 more than last year.

41. This department desires to express the appreciation felt because of the greatly improved conditions brought about by the adoption of a budget system. The church is to be congratulated and the membership and councils commended, for the loyal support given to our college, as the logical consequence of such support has made it possible to put it upon an accredited basis educationally and a creditable basis financially. No one any more questions our worthiness to be credited for work done in the class room; and no one any more, at home or abroad, questions our worthiness to be credited for anything we see fit to buy, and our checks are as good as gold. With a keen desire to go on in this good way, it is our fond hope that Graceland may continue to grow in dimensions and influence until she shall come to be recognized universally as not only one among many worthy institutions, not only as one among a few leading institutions, but a leader among the many institutions of the country, and thus contribute to the grand realization of the hope held out by the words of the Master to his people: "I give unto you to be the light of the world."

J. A. GUNSOLLEY,

Business Manager and Treasurer.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 28, 1920.

The Religio Convention

The Religio Department started off with a swing on the morning of the 7th, at 10.30, T. W. Williams in charge and F. M. McDowell and R. A. Lloyd assisting.

At the beginning a telegram from New York headquarters of the Boy Scouts, by Lorne W. Barclay, in charge of the educational department of the National Boy Scouts of America was read, regretting his inability to attend, but stating that a representative would be present.

In accordance with the usual custom, the executive committee of the department were authorized to preside in their respective places, and make all necessary arrangements and appointments of necessary committees.

They appointed the following committees: Resolutions: C. E. Wight, Roy Cheville, David Dowker.

Notification: D. J. Krähl and Audentia Anderson.

Press: Walter W. Smith, E. D. Moore, Frank S. Dobbins.

Appropriations: T. W. Williams, J. A. Becker, R. A. Lloyd.

On resolutions of appreciation to retiring president, G. S. Trowbridge: Wardell Christy and W. W. Smith.

The treasurer reported verbally that the department had on hand now $4,628.09. This fund is obtained from the sale of Quarterlies.

Regarding the request of Elder A. H. Christensen, of the Society Islands, appearing in the Herald of recent date and noted in the report of the president of the Religio, the executive committee was authorized to provide such a machine soon, so it might be available at the time of the pearl diving activities of the natives.

Superintendent Williams said a good second-hand machine could be had for about $125 and all the Religio was asked to do was to advance the money and attend to the details from this end. The Saints in the islands are glad to pay for it, but do not have the facilities for securing the machine as we do.

The superintendent recommended that the executive be empowered to outline the scope of the recreational activities of the department and with the understanding that they report back to the Religio for ratification, they were given this responsibility.

The executive committee brought in a report that they favored strongly the appointment of some one to give full time to Religio work, that he be given sufficient help and equipment to carry it on, and that it be T. W. Williams. It developed that the executive, with T. W. Williams present had agreed on this idea, but Brother Williams declared he had in mind F. M. McDowell, hence was not a party to the picking of the man. The plan was indorsed by the vote of the convention, and the committee on notification expected to notify the Presidency.

In the past the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Department have cooperated on carrying out institute work in the various districts. The continuance of this scheme was referred to the Religio executive, so they might confer with the others involved and decide on the best methods of procedure for the future.

The minutes of a meeting of the Religio executive, held November 23, 1919 were read, from which we extract the following recommendations, briefly stated:

They desired a manual, setting out in detail the social and recreational work of the department, with T. W. Williams and F. M. McDowell as editors. This manual to cover all avocational activities of the department and cover a wide scope as a handbook of information for all Religio workers.

The tendency in the Religio and in the Sunday school, is to sooner or later dispose of the old constitutions and in their stead have extensive handbooks covering all the essential features of organization and procedure.

A further recommendation was to eliminate the word president entirely from Religio usage, and instead use the word superintendent. And vice presidents to give way to assistant superintendents. This was on the ground that the organization had been a department of church work for two years but had not changed its name. So they would recommend that the name of Zion's Religio-Literary Society be dropped and the term Religio Department be used instead.

Another recommendation was that all social and recreational activities in each church communities be under the direction and supervision of the Religio.

This set of resolutions from the executive committee further set forth the fact that they would encourage the production of literary and program features, by the department in its local work.

The manual recommendation was adopted.

In the report of A. W. Smith, in charge of the picture machine work of the Religio, he suggests a further extension of that work, but C. Edward Miller, of the Graphic Arts Bureau, called attention to the duplication of effort here, and suggested that instead of the Religio extending this good work under its own name, it turn it over to the Graphic Arts Bureau, with a good appropriation for putting the matter on its feet and providing possible film exchanges, etc. The bureau has not been able to function in the past for lack of funds, but this year it is coming before the church, the Sunday school, and Religio for money for an important work which it can carry on and which has been endorsed by the church authorities.

In some brief statements to the assembly, Superintendent Williams declared that the Religio department is promising to become one of the most active and virile organizations in the church, not to displace some other useful and necessary organization, but to fill a place of its own. However, there had in the past and still in the present been considerable duplication of effort, and this should be looked after and eliminated. To this end all the unnecessary departmental machinery should be eliminated. Some of the work now being done by the departments might well come under the work of the superintendent and his office and be carried on better, perhaps, than it has been with officials that can give but little of their time to the work.

If a full-time arrangement is made and a superintendent appointed on that basis, he or she should have opportunity to visit the districts and encourage and instruct them in their work. In all too many instances now the districts meet hurriedly, with only a few present, elect such officers as are most convenient and will accept with no special regard for the outcome. The result is almost disastrous. Not all districts do this, but all too many. But if district officers are to officiate properly, they must be provided for by having a part in the expense budget of the district, so they will not have to pay it out of their own pockets.

The convention was informed that J. A. Gunsolley, editor of the senior grade of the Religio Quarterly, desired release from this responsibility, and had the lessons completed to June 30, 1920.

We herewith reproduce the report of T. W. Williams, superintendent of the Religio, as presented to the convention in printed form. It contains a number of suggestions and recommendations which are to be acted on at the second session of the convention on Friday, April 9:

REPORT OF T. W. WILLIAMS, GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT

1. The transition of the Religio from a society to a department of the church has necessarily been gradual. The ukase of a General Conference could not effect the essential changes contemplated in the recommendation of the coordinating committee's report. It has required time and effort to make adjustment. This is even now in process.

2. The conference three years ago declared that the Sunday school, Religio and woman's Auxiliary were no longer separate societies but departments of the church. Despite this action we have continued to retain many of the forms and methods of work which characterize a separate existence. We have not, as yet, been able to fully function in accord with this action. Some farther legislation is necessary on the part of the conference to enable the department to carry out what was contemplated by the coordinating committee.

3. The resignation of Brother R. B. Trowbridge as head of the Religio Department was a material loss. He had filled this position with credit both to himself and to the church. His untiring zeal and perseverance contributed very materially to the success of the department.

4. Immediately following the declaration of the conference that the work of the Religio Department was primarily recreational and social, there developed a well-defined and pronounced opposition in several places. It was suggested that we were hastening to a fulfillment of Paul's prophecy—lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. An exaggerated fear was developed that the recreational and social would invade and do violence to the moral and spiritual activities.

5. During the year we have had opportunity to give full answer to all such objections and also to set forth in a positive though partial manner the real aim and purpose of the Religio with the consequent result that much, if not all, of the opposition has been dissipated. Many of those who at first opposed the work are now enthusiastic supporters.

6. The membership generally has come to see the moral and spiritual value of wholesome recreation and social activities. There has been a general awakening. Our workers are sensing the possibilities in this department. The district and local officers are getting in line and from all parts: north—south—east—west comes reassuring news and assurance of future activity and progress.

7. Reports have been received from forty-seven district superintendents: fifteen district superintendents have thus far failed to report. Most of the district superintendents have heartily endorsed the purpose of the Religio and are busily engaged in enthusing and stimulating action among the members under their jurisdiction.

8. We have circularized the various district officers at regular intervals. One of the weak points we have discovered is the lack of cohesion and cooperation between district and local organizations and of these with the general organization. Steps are now being taken to obviate this difficulty. The general department officers must be in close and constant touch with the local officers to accomplish the best results.

9. The work in the British Isles as well as in the Australian Mission has been retarded as a result of the war which depleted to some extent the ranks of our young men with the consequent reaction in all things which relate to our department. There are however unmistakable evidences that the workers in these lands are keenly alive to the work and will cooperate to the extent of their capacity.

10. The Religio work in Canada is promising indeed. There are many live, wide-awake workers in all of the Eastern districts and the workers in the West are doing all they can in their scattered condition to carry on the work. We are fortunate in having such an efficient corps of workers as are found in the Chatham, London and Toronto districts, and the coming year will witness a great work being done in Canada on behalf of our young people.

11. Brother A. H. Christensen of the Tahitian Island mission is very anxious to secure a moving picture outfit in order to combat the corrupting influence of the moving picture shows now operating in the Islands. He asks the cooperation and assistance of the Religio Department in this work. There are some difficulties in the way which makes it almost impossible to accord to his request but we are doing all we can to supply the demands here as elsewhere.

12. The work in Hawaii is moving forward under the faithful direction of the presiding officers. When one reads of the effort to place the work of the church before these islanders on the part of our representatives it stimulates to greater effort and more consecrated purpose.

13. Calls have come from Germany to supply necessary material to introduce and establish the work. These demands have all been cared for. The work is extending and there is multiplied evidences that the year 1920 will see the Religio Department keeping pace with every other department of church work.

14. Some far-reaching and extensive changes in procedure and organization will be suggested at the coming convention. When these matters are definitely settled we will issue a bulletin setting forth and in detail the work of the department.

15. The locals in the large centers such as Lamoni, Independence and Kansas City have developed the social and recreational activities beyond the experimental stage. The work is well organized and the results among the young people inspiring. One of the difficulties which must be met is to provide suitable diversion and work for the small isolated locals where there are not enough members to permit any recreational or social work.

16. There has been a demand in some quarters that we discard entirely the lessons and study hour and limit our activities to recreational and social diversion. This would be disastrous to the department. There may be occasion for the changing of the lesson course but we should supply our young people with a clearly-defined course of study which they can make of practical service in the affairs of life.

17. We suggest that the following changes be made:

(a) Changing the name from Zion's Religio-Literary Society to Religio Department.

(b) Adoption of the title "Superintendent" to apply to the various officers in charge of the general, district, and local work as "General Superintendent," "District Superintendent," "Local Superintendent."

(c) Dispensing with the present constitution as a separate rule of action and the incorporation into the general church law such necessary provisions as may govern this department.

(d) The transaction of all business of the department in general, district, and local organization in the regular business meetings of the church.

(e) The dispensing with vice presidents and placing one person at the head of each department with the power to appoint his associates.

(f) The right of nomination of heads of departments in local churches and districts to be given to local pastors, and district presidents.

(g) Classification and distribution of church activities so as to prevent duplication and overlapping.

(h) Dispensing with all superfluous church machinery and regulations which necessitates useless work produces friction and prevents rather than accelerates the work.

18. I can speak only in the highest terms of my associates in this department of work. Brother Floyd M. McDowell as second vice president has demonstrated what can be accomplished by a well defined program enthusiastically carried out. Brother Howard W. Harder has worked to bring the records up to date and to secure complete data of all the locals throughout the world. All the other officers have attended to the duties attaching to their office with credit.

19. Brother A. W. Smith has been in charge of the institute work of the Sunday school and Religio. Owing to the lack of understanding of what was expected of them the district officers have failed to avail themselves of means provided for district and local institutes. The outlines for the institutes for 1920-21 should be issued not later than September of this year and arrangements made for the winter institutes in every district and large local in the church. The determination as to institutes should not be left to the locals or districts. The departments should elect that these institutes be held and make provision therefor.

20. The department has reached that stage when the interest of the work demands that a definite headquarters be provided for the general officers and the head of the department be enabled to devote his or her exclusive time to the work.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

REPORT OF FLOYD M. MCDOWELL SECOND VICE PRESIDENT

As second vice president of the Religio Department having special charge of the Boy Movement work of the church I am glad to report as follows:

Work Done

Throughout the year I have endeavored to do all within my power to encourage the development of a more wholesome and sane attitude toward the needs and activities of the young people of the church, especially of the boys. Through the church papers and the distribution of printed material, and especially through personal correspondence, I have tried at all times to keep in touch with this work throughout the church.

During the first part of the year I found it rather difficult to keep up with my correspondence but have been helped in recent months in this respect by securing a stenographer who has made it possible for us to keep all correspondence up to date.

With the consent of President Smith and Bishop McGuire and through an appropriation allowed me by the latter I was enabled to send Brother Orrin Moon of Lamoni, Iowa, to a two-weeks' Scout Master's School in Iowa City. This proved to be excellent training indeed and Brother Moon returned to us very enthusiastic about this work, and has proved to be a very efficient scout master for the Lamoni troop. I am of the opinion that this practice should be followed each year, not only in Iowa, but in various other places. We should be in a position to encourage our young men to attend these training courses or in any other way make use of such opportunities as are available for training in this kind of work.

Lack of time and means has made it impossible for me to travel as one should travel to accomplish much in this field. I am hoping that the time will come when we shall have some Religio field workers who will be actively pushing this as well as other aspects of Religio work all the time. It is almost impossible to secure satisfactory results through correspondence alone.

We have made very definite arrangements for the Boy Scout exhibition in connection with the Religio exhibition to be held in Independence this spring. We are hoping that this will prove to be the most progressing step ever taken in the line of educating our people in the work that we expect to do. We have planned to have exhibition programs through printed material for free distribution, placards, pennants, etc., to illustrate the work of the Boy Scouts. By this means we expect to reach more people than ever before. We feel that once our church people fully understand the nature of the work that all opposition will vanish.

Progress

We are glad to report very substantial progress in this department during the year. Every attempt has been made to get each district of the church to elect as second vice-president some one qualified and willing to push this work. In this we have only partially succeeded. Many districts have for one reason or another failed to elect such an officer, and others have failed to report such to me even after they had been elected, consequently, I have at hand a list of only thirty-five district vice presidents.

Many of these officers have been active and enthusiastic in this work, in fact, I have been agreeably surprised many times to hear of their success. The most tangible measure of the work is found in the following report, of the number of troops organized and the number contemplated in the various districts.

W. O. Hands, Kansas City, Missouri, K. C. Stake.
 R. S. Budd, Cameron, Missouri, Far West.
 Warren McElwain, Lansford, North Dakota, N. D. district.
 Darl Hall, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Pottawattamie.
 V. G. Lents, Rhodes, Iowa, Des Moines.
 A. E. Bullard, Denver, Colorado, East. Colo.
 P. R. Burton, Nauvoo, Illinois, Nauvoo District.
 R. E. Burgess, Knobnoster, Missouri, Holden Stake.
 J. L. Parker, Lincoln, Nebraska, Southern Nebraska.
 A. M. Coombs, Fall River, Massachusetts.
 William Hill, Sherrill, New York, New York District.
 Wilmer Blair, Ontario, California, Southern California.
 Chesley W. Severy, Berkeley, California, Northern Calif.
 A. P. Crooker, Topeka, Kansas, Northeast Kansas.
 Robert B. Flack, Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio.
 L. L. Chreslensen, Joplin, Missouri, Spring River.
 Clyde S. Rice, Everett, Washington, Seattle and Brit. Col.
 Matthew Liston, Flint, Michigan, Detroit.
 E. R. Curry, Willoughby, Ohio, Kirtland.
 R. E. Miller, Oklahoma City, Central Oklahoma District.
 Wayne Richardson, Hamburg, Iowa, Fremont.
 Ben Van Eaton, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, N. Sask.
 Ivan Pritchard, Chatham, Ontario, Chatham.
 J. B. Wildermuth, Chetek, Wisconsin, Northern Wisconsin.
 Cecil Lyr, St. Boyne City, Michigan, Northern Michigan.
 W. G. Hubbard, Marion, Michigan, Western Michigan.
 Clarence Larhan, Freesoil, Michigan, Western Michigan.
 R. V. Hopkins, Independence, Missouri, Independence Stake.
 W. W. Richards, Davenport, Iowa, Eastern Iowa.
 Charles Bellew, Tyron, Nebraska, Western Nebraska.
 Vernice Rush, Huntsville, Missouri, Northeastern Missouri.
 Everet Hornocker, Indianapolis, Indiana, Southern Ind.
 Virgil Butterworth, Denison, Iowa, Gallands Grove.
 Wm. Lloyd Wallace, Omaha, Nebraska, Northeastern Neb.
 R. D. Davis, Sault Ste. Marie, Northern Mich.
 Lloyd Gregory, Ribstone, Alberta, Alberta.

In addition to the above we have reason to believe there are several Scout Troops, but since we have no official report we cannot include them at this time. We believe, however, more progress has been made than can be measured in this way, and that the effort of these leaders is gradually but surely overcoming any opposition to this work. Within the next few years we shall have several hundred boys engaged in a type of training that cannot fail to make them better church members as well as better citizens of their community.

Just one or two illustrations may be included to show to what extent this work has developed. Scout Master Hands of Kansas City reports that the Latter Day Saint troop did more during "Good Turn Week" than any other five troops in Kansas City combined. Brother Hands concludes his report with the statement that "Our troop will be in evidence during conference."

Brother R. V. Hopkins of Independence reports four active troops with a total membership of about 180 scouts, with two other troops in contemplation.

Brother Keck is in charge of a very fine troop in Sioux City, Iowa, and he informs me that 199 boys of that city have been led to join the church of their choice through the Boy Scout work. Many other instances might be cited.

We should not fail to mention also the enthusiastic workers which we have in England, Australia, and Canada, especially in the two former countries. Of course, it is not possible for them to take up the same kind of organization we have here, but it is at least encouraging to know that very much has been done in encouraging the organization of groups of boys under competent leaders in connection with the missionaries' work in these countries. Some of the most encouraging letters we have received during the year have come from these places.

Mention should also be made of the work that has been done along other lines outside of the Scout Movement. This includes various kinds of gymnasium activities, swimming, coasting, camping, skating, hiking, ball games, etc., as well as gardening, and community welfare work. Brother Darl Hall of Council Bluffs has been especially active in some of this work, and has sent in an extended report of his work.

The writer is convinced that the Scout work will be only a part of the work in the interests of the boys, as this new department becomes fully grown.

I have been repeatedly asked about the boys under Scout age, but have been unable yet to make definite arrangements for them. We have been of the opinion that it would be well to let this work grow gradually and expand naturally rather than artificially. We are very hopeful of some excellent results in these new fields.

Recommendations

In the light of my experiences of the year I should like to conclude my report with the following recommendations:

1. That a president of the Religio or some other capable individual be given full time in the field and office to represent the various activities of the Religio.

2. That every effort be made at the coming convention to completely remodel the present organization of the Religio to the end of simplifying its machinery and more clearly defining its work.

3. That instead of having what is called a second vice president that we have a superintendent of the Boy Department of the Religio.

4. That each district have a similar officer, having complete charge of the work in his respective district, and that this officer secure a special field commission from the National Scout Headquarters, so that he may more affectively carry on this work.

5. That the general superintendent of the Boy Movement should be free to devote more time to his work, or at least that an appropriation of $150 to $200 be made for office and stenographic help, in addition to the usual appropriation.

6. That a sufficient sum of money be appropriated so the general superintendent of the Boy Movement can encourage the attendance on the part of our boy leaders at the various training schools for Scout Masters in the country.

Assuring you that in all my efforts I have tried to keep the interests of the church and Religio paramount, and further that I sincerely believe that God is pleased with this new program, and wishing for the success of both the church and Religio in its undertakings, I am

Your coworker,

F. M. McDowell.

FROM A. W. SMITH

Dear Brother Williams: The motion picture and stereopticon correspondence has amounted to a greater volume this year than ever before. I have endeavored to answer all inquiries promptly and to give all the information required. There seems to be quite a demand or desire for these machines and their use, but the price seems to stop most of the schools before purchase is made. The many inquiries received from time to time show the interest and demand and it is to be hoped that before many months roll by the various schools will find the necessary finances with which to purchase.

I do not believe we will be able to successfully cope with this situation until we can open our own film and slide exchange, such as was suggested some two or three years ago in an article I prepared for and which was published in the church papers. Apparently this article was just a few years in advance of the time when a successful campaign of this kind could be launched. I hope the time is very near at hand when this movement will become a reality.

Since the institute work was turned over to my care I have secured corrected outlines from all the executives who were asked to supply material for these institutes, with one exception, that of the gospel literature. This was turned over to Brother Arthur McKim after he was appointed to occupy in the office of Publicity Manager. Up to the present I have not received this outline. All other outlines have been received and stenciled and copies have been run off to the extent of some 250 copies each. We have sent out some five general letters regarding this work to all the district church presidents, district Sunday school superintendents, district Religio presidents, and to such of the district Woman's Auxiliary appointees as I had addresses of. In addition to this I have written some three or four articles for the church papers.

I have written a great number of letters regarding the institute work in answer to personal inquiries and sent out one general letter to all the local Sunday schools and Religios asking that they get in touch with their district officers and let them know that they wanted the institute work in their local.

I have furnished institute outlines to 25 teams and while reports have not been received regarding institutes already held, I am looking forward to receiving some very good reports in the very near future. The last of the outlines were only received approximately ten days ago—this made me quite late in getting all the material in the hands of the teams.

There is a very great field for this class of work and most certainly a great need for it and if the work could be started earlier and carried on more systematically I feel that greater good will be accomplished.

I would like to recommend that the work be given more careful consideration by the general executive of both the Sunday school and the Religio and that more attention be given to the work. Carefully prepared programs might be suggested for use in all districts and would like to suggest that all the districts arrange for a special institute session to last over a period of three days. The general executive or the one appointed to take care of this work for the coming term to arrange this program and see that it is placed in the hands of officers in every district.

I would also like to recommend that more detailed information regarding cost of motion picture and stereopticon machines be arranged for and supplied to all schools, districts, etc., and that as soon as possible a regular film and slide exchange be arranged—this latter slide exchange may already be cared for in a small way, but it has not received the necessary publicity that is necessary to make it a success.

I have also stenciled and sent out copies of the Religio slogan to all Sunday schools, Religios and to all district officers.

In a general way I have done everything I could to increase the interest of the members in the Religio work and feel that I can see a greater interest in this department of the work.

Assuring you of my earnest desire to see this work prosper and sincerely trusting that great strides will be made throughout the coming year. I am, yours for a more enthusiastic, soul-stirring, definitely outlined program for all districts and locals. Sincerely your coworker,

A. W. SMITH.

The Liberty Orchestra

This is an aggregation of young people under the direction of Elder R. T. Cooper, made up of members from all the branches in the Independence Stake.

They have an important part in the musical activities of the Saints in Independence, a section of it playing in the lower auditorium at Sunday school each Sunday morning.

Occasionally they accept invitations from outside places to give a program and always give a good impression.

They are to give a program of the entire evening on Saturday evening, April 10.

The Dining Hall

The big crowds find dining service excellent this year, with new and extensive equipment.

It does one good to feel that the physical needs as well as the spiritual are to be well attended to at the big annual meetings of the Saints. At best it is a big problem to feed several hundred people each day in an efficient manner, yet to be under the handicap of doing it only once in every two years or so. Naturally the expense of such an undertaking is relatively high, and it is impossible to compete with established businesses which can cut down expenses by spreading them over a large period and to many patrons.

But we are pleased to note that the committee in charge of this work, Bishop J. A. Becker, has resolutely gone after the problem in a business-like manner, and with the evident idea of giving the right kind of service, even if it could not be made to pay all expenses.

New equipment has been purchased, which includes a modern cafeteria set, with heated trays and dishes, convenient self-service arrangement, and ice chests for the milk, ices, ice cream, etc. There are tables to seat eight people each, so 220 people may be served at a time, and as each person is through with his dishes he carries them back and thus makes room for others.

There is a good atmosphere to the room, the tables are clean and white, and there is a phonograph to furnish music for the patrons.

But of course the important thing is the cooking and the variety of wholesome food, which is very good, and the prices are as cheap as one can expect in these days of skyscraper prices. A fair meal can be had for from thirty to thirty-five cents, but of course if one is hungry it is easy to run his bill up to fifty or sixty cents. Yet as compared with the average restaurant, this is very reasonable.

In charge of the cooking department is Elmer Kaler, steward at Graceland College. He has had extensive experience in this kind of work in Uncle Sam's navy, and enjoys being of service in this capacity.

The Morning Prayer Meetings

A step which will contribute much to the efficiency and value of the morning prayer meetings at the Stone Church is the appointment of J. F. Garver, president of Lamoni Stake, and R. V. Hopkins, active in the presiding work in Independence, to have regular charge of the meetings. This will have the effect of giving all an equal opportunity of occupying, and we are sure will be much appreciated by those who attend. No one will be deprived of his natural rights, nor will the assembly be compelled to undergo trials occasioned by the lack of wisdom on the part of any individual. Especially is this true where the same men are more or less continuously responsible for the welfare of a public meeting.

The Evangelistic Services

As a result of the services in Independence and community eleven persons were baptized.

Altogether thirty-five thousand leaflets were distributed during the meetings in the churches preceding the conference. On Saturday evening, April 3, there were eleven baptized as a direct result of the meetings, and a number are deeply interested and only lack the final decision.

Altogether, the effort has been a notable one, and the people of Independence given a special opportunity to know of the special claims of the church. There is less responsibility now on the shoulders of the Saints in this regard, and more laid on those who live among them daily, but do not know what we stand for as a church.

When the Sons of Lehi Met

A touching though simple little scene was when amid the many passing along the aisles of the church on Sunday, the 4th, Paia Metuarora, a full-blood Society Islander, and Phillip Cook and John Bull, full-blood Lamanites met. Though they did not understand the language of each other, interpreters conveyed simple greetings between these sons of Lehi, both being pure descendants of the man who by the direction of God left Jerusalem to people this continent.

Sunday School Night

One evening of the conference was devoted to Sunday school educational work.

There are many interests demanding an evening of the few available during conference, so one whole session to portray the general scope of the Sunday school is really appreciated in these days of many activities in the church.

This organization in celebrating its twenty-ninth birthday provided an educational program of value and inspiration for Sunday school workers. The plan of the program was to have everything brief and to the point.

The first number was "A retrospect," by E. D. Moore, secretary, being a brief look into the past history of the organization, especially as to the literary interests of the school. During that time a number of important developments have taken place, all gradually, but many of them far-reaching in scope.

A piano solo was rendered by W. C. Phifer and Mrs. Sallie Forties a reading.

The second speaker was A. W. Smith, second assistant superintendent on "Value of organized enthusiasm in Sunday school work." He had a large chart with the following outline:

*Enthusiasm—Organized
What It Must Do*

Stimulate interest.
Awaken desire and action.

Have reason.
 Create spirit of cooperation.
 Irresistible—building.

What It Must Not Do

Arouse idle curiosity.
 Create exaggerated ideas.
 Misrepresent.
 Close avenue for further action.
 Noneffective—destructive.

Organized enthusiasm, backed by a real feeling of confidence, based on correct principles, was emphasized effectively by the speaker.

"Five minutes to laugh," was an enjoyable feature by Wardell Christy. He said one of the biggest jokes on the assembly was the fact that so many of the preachers and old people were at the Battery Building that there was no room for the young people. He related a number of jokes, some of them originating with Sunday school pupils—some just funny.

"The Stone Church Quartet," composed of Eugene Christy, Joseph Smith, Clarence Resch, and Frank A. Russell, rendered a number.

"A forward look," was the title of an address by G. R. Wells, superintendent of the Sunday school department.

He stated that "Where are our young people?" so often asked, could be largely answered by the fact that most of them outside Independence and Kansas City were in school and college.

He urged among the many good things said, that we must in the use of the contemplated new lesson course have better teachers or we should still lack much.

A vocal solo was rendered by Lester Fowler.

A. L. Sanford, first assistant superintendent, was in charge of the meeting, and the song service in charge of Eugene Christy.

In spite of the fact that the visiting young people were all invited to take a "trip around the world," conducted by local young people, and that at the Battery there was a big opening meeting, the auditorium was well filled by interested people. We are certainly growing in numbers.

The Publicity Work of the Church

*Ideas from an address to the priesthood,
 April 8, 1920, by A. E. McKim, publicity agent for the church.*

The morning service of the priesthood was addressed by Arthur E. McKim, in charge of the Department of the Publicity. Brother McKim has been in this work since the first of January, but for several years has been actively engaged as advertising manager for a large wholesale millinery house in Kansas City.

His effort was concerning details of the work of advertising, from the viewpoint of our own workers, rather than a generalization of advertising as a necessity. In these days no one with intelligence questions the value of advertising as a general proposition, though one missionary wrote in to the effect that it was not advertising that we most needed, but righteousness among the Saints. Which, of course, is true; but we cannot wait till all are righteous to spread abroad the information people need about our work.

In considering a plan of procedure in advertising anything we must analyze the advertising points of the thing we are presenting. When we enter a mercantile proposition we must understand the special merits of the article we are to sell, as compared with other articles, and in our presentation emphasize these as making the article desirable over other articles obtainable.

Our message has all the best in it as to morality, right living, regard for faithfulness, etc., but in addition we have many things distinctive and with special value in presenting our claims to the world. We have the advantage of arguments on authority, on inspiration, on gifts of the gospel, on economic lines, all high points in our "selling" plan, and should be used.

We should use the newspapers fully in our work. The editors are glad to use what we present to them, if we do it in a proper manner. They want the things we have that others will be interested in reading. The Kansas City papers, and the Associated Press are now carrying to the world news of our recent developments in the conference, and appreciate its news value. It will reach thousands with news concerning our work, who otherwise would not know what we were doing or offering.

There is a mistaken idea that our name is a handicap. It is a peculiar one, distinctive one, but if properly appreciated, is an advantage. In fact the anti-Mormon campaigns so frequently launched by our opponents to crush everything that sounds like Mormonism to them, are often a means for our getting a hearing that was hitherto denied us.

The newspaper is the very best medium we have in these days. It has wide circulation, is generally read, and has come to have an influence in the lives of the people. We should use the newspapers fully, paying for the space we need for direct advertising, contributing all the news items about ourselves that develop, and we shall soon have a real place in the religious life of our communities from being well-known and understood.

Locally, the responsibility for the handling of this work rests on the shoulders of the branch presidents. They should take the lead in all these things, and if they do not know as well as do others the special needs of the case, see that others handle it for them. Those who reside in cities should make it a point to get acquainted with newspaper men; see that editors have available at all times correct information about us so there will be little likelihood of making any glaring misrepresentation about us, or allowing such things to be printed. When we do not supply this, they have a legitimate excuse, but ordinarily, few editors wilfully misrepresent; they simply do not know, but would appreciate having the facts beforehand rather than afterward.

Feature in local newspapers what the local Religio is doing, who was elected president, what the branch is doing on Memorial Day, who is attending General Conference, in fact all news.

Of course not all appreciate what news is. Sometime ago this was illustrated by an account of an editor who sent out a new reporter with the instruction that if he went down the street and saw a dog run up and bite a man on the leg, that was not news. Many dogs were doing that every day. But if he saw a man bite a dog in the leg that was news, and should be telephoned in immediately.

Don't make all your reports propaganda. And don't think that when you put some of it into your news items you are fooling anyone. The editor knows it when he sees it, but will not object to a proper amount if it is done carefully and intelligently.

In addition to knowing the editor, be sure that he keeps watch of the headlines. A fine write-up may be utterly spoiled by the carelessness of the man who sets the headlines after it leaves the editor.

In advertising missionary work the ideal plan is to have the series of meetings all advertised before the preachers gets on the ground. For two weeks the community should be prepared, so that the missionary can go right to work. When possible this should be done. The effort of this department will be to aid those communities which want it, to do this very thing.

In small places, the first step in such a campaign is to enlist the aid of all the members in the project. The big evangelistic campaigns depend on this unity of effort for their success. Literature is available for branch presidents to encourage the members as well as circularize the town. As many personal invitations should be made as possible, but if not possible to cover the ground, send phone messages, or personal letters, or form letters; the latter always done neatly and carefully.

The expenses should be met by the local people, but in cases where missionaries go into places where the interest justifies the expenditure of money and there are no local ways to meet it, the department will undertake the task of helping out from the general funds of the church.

On all the literature used, keep the name of the church, in full, on it. Not too boldly, but see that it is there as a mark of identification.

A file of cuts is being developed, so those who need them may secure cuts made from pictures of all the present leading men of the church, as well as places of interest and church institutions. These can be used in the average newspaper and they are often very glad to get them.

Every minister should have a cut of himself to carry with him for use in his newspaper work. A one-column, news screen cut would cost around $2.50 to $3 and be of great help. It should not be a matter of false modesty, either, nor should one hesitate because he is not handsome. Often there is value in an unusually ugly picture.

Every branch should have an item in its budget for the advertising needs of the community. A good basis on which to make a start is a dollar a year per member. We buy coal to heat the church, we ought to be willing to spend some money to fill the pews, if that is necessary to fill them. The Presbyterians work on this basis of a dollar apiece; we should do even more.

In the reorganization of the gospel literature work, it is intended to relieve the Religio and Sunday school of this responsibility and let the church be responsible for it as a department of the missionary work. It is hoped eventually to have a publicity agent in every branch, and the cooperation of the missionaries is desired to enable people to appreciate the value of common understanding and general effort along this line.

An Exposition Program

The following program, beautifully printed in two colors, was distributed on the 7th, announcing the items in meeting of that evening:

Conference delegates and friends are invited to visit the Exposition during the day. Parties desiring to confer over Religio work call at Religio Headquarters, Library Building, or call Telephones 1590 or 1591.

"A Trip Around the World"

A most popular feature of the many events at the conference was the "Trip around the world," under the immediate direction of the Nonpariel Religio class of Mrs. E. S. McNichols.

It occurred at 7.30 p. m. on the evening of the 7th. Four "trains" of about two hundred each leaving the church simultaneously for the four stations arranged: Ireland, Japan, Hawaii, and Italy.

A ticket a foot long was required in order to take the trip. The schedule was so arranged that one train left a place as another arrived, after which all marched to the city square and in a body to the Battery Building, to spend the remainder of the evening. The chief idea was to get the young people all acquainted with each other, which was gratifyingly accomplished.

The stations named were each located at a convenient place near. All were appropriately decorated in accord with the nationality represented. One of these places, Ireland, was the office of the Quorum of Twelve, the building just north of the general church offices. The delegates were much surprised on that day to see the place all decorated with a large green and white sign reading Cead Mhile Faithe (One Hundred Thousand Welcomes), and over the usual sign: "Headquarters of Quorum of Twelve." Another big sign with a three-leaved shamrock and a word on each leaf: "Sein Fein Awan," (We ourselves alone). The signs were rather paradoxical, to say the least, in view of the matters before the conference on that day.

However, when the various personally conducted trains arrived, they were served Irish "spuds" and the trimmings.

The next stop was Japan, likewise in charge of a committee of eight local people, where tea and wafers were served to all.

Hawaii was also beautifully and appropriately decorated, and salads and buttermilk served.

At Italy, another home was fitted out with fruit stalls, and typical Italian paraphernalia, a hand organ, and a monkey.

When the parties all arrived at the Battery Building a series of historical tableaux were enacted beginning with 1620 and the landing of the Pilgrims and coming down through the various historical periods of our Nation, Puritan, Indian, Colonial, 1776, 1918, League of Nations.

The leaders of the parties were, Walter W. Smith, J. A. Becker, W. D. Bullard, U. W. Greene.

This was a much-appreciated event, especially by the young people, of which there are many on occasions like this, the age limit being pushed upward rather sharply.

The Nonpariel Class is the largest Religio class in the entire church, with an enrollment of more than one hundred, and an average attendance of more than one hundred and twenty-five.

"Ireland" was at the temporary office of the Quorum of Twelve, "Italy" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Royal Brocaw, "Japan" at Doctor and Mrs. E. S. McNichols, and "Hawaii" at the home of Professor and Mrs. R. G. Smith. "America," the final station, was at the Battery Building.

Social Surveys

Some tests for needs of social surveys, presented by Hale W. Smith, to Woman's Meeting.

1. Into how many homes is a train of Christian influence being directed through the work of your church.
 2. How many persons known to you are being definitely and regularly influenced for Christ and his people?
 3. How many faithful and active members are enlisted in your congregation?
 4. What definite things have your church done for the neighborhood.
 5. To what extent has your church aided in cooperating in social welfare?
 6. Has your church contributed to the reconstruction?
(See Community Survey in Church Efficiency, by Carroll.)
- If one's community cannot answer yes to these questions, said the speaker, something definite should be done about it.

Auditorium and Office Building

As presented by President F. M. Smith several years ago, the Conference is crowded—there is not room for attendance at business sessions, nor for the evening or Sunday services. President Smith now recommends an auditorium to seat seven thousand to meet present and future needs of the Conference and Independence, of the present generation.

The Independence Stake reports over 4,400 members. Again, the growth of the church requires provision for meetings of the various departments, especially the Woman's Auxiliary, Sunday school, and Religio, as well as all the various quorums. The result is, these meetings are crowded for space. At Lamoni the Herald Office building and Coliseum help out. At Independence the Church of Christ building on the Temple Lot, and the other church edifices, as Second Independence, help out, but it means long walks and even then inconvenience.

The dining hall is hardly adequate to feed a General Conference gathering.

GENERAL OFFICES

For the general offices the old Bartholemew house, formerly occupied by Bishop E. L. Kelley, is used. But it is evidently crowded, and not well arranged to handle the work effectively.

The church historian and publicity manager have a small room in the library building, not adequate at all for the historical department, its library, archives, and necessary equipment and records. There is no provision for caring for valuable documents there.

The library itself is much crowded, as well as being separate from the general offices.

Recently the Quorum of Twelve were forced out to other quarters, yet it is evident that they should be near so as to confer readily with the First Presidency.

The assistant hisotrian, the presiding patriarch, the church secretary, Sunday school department, etc., are yet to be provided for, as well as adequate quarters for some departments housed in name, but hardly in fact.

It is suggested by some that these various needs of (1) An Auditorium, (2) Meeting places for the quorums and departments at Conference, and (3) Adequate office space, may be best met in one building, with a saving to the church over the erection of two or more separate buildings.

Buildings

In looking over the various budgets we should keep in mind that it is the purpose of the Bishop and the Order of Bishops to keep out of debt and move only as we are able, and the church by its contributions, is willing. Some have suggested starting a building then adding to it story by story, brick by brick as the funds come. But such a method would be most wasteful. We can safely look for conservative business administration from the Bishops.

The reports this year in many instances take a long forward look. They consider the needs of the work as a whole, and then point out what is hoped for in the future.

Thus the Sanitarium report intimates that future developments will require "hundreds of thousands" of dollars, but asks this year for a building to house the help, heating plant, and laundry to cost $25,000. But as soon as the church can safely do so there is need for provision for nervous cases, for tubercular cases, for delinquent children, for clinical laboratory. There are many of our own people who cannot be cared for now. Yet this year they ask only a little more room by moving out these departments, and for operating room equipment.

The Children's Home asks only for immediate needs to provide better for the children. It will permit better care to be taken of their health and provide for the care of more children than is at present possible.

The Saints' Home also presents only present needs in farm buildings and equipment. A home gives permanency. Already the former residence of President Elbert A. Smith in Lamoni has been purchased for this purpose. Additional buildings are needed for effective farm management.

Thus the College Farm asks for dairy barns, granary, sheds for machinery, and better water supply. This is not included in this year's budget, but is urgently needed for the farm work there.

Also the College in its budget asks for appropriations to purchase one cottage and build another at a total cost of $5,000.

The College also presents as an early need, more dormitory facilities, and a gymnasium.

The budget requests for buildings this year are about $40,000, of which $25,000 is for the Sanitarium. Also provision should be made to finish the new building at Graceland College.

Budgets

We have not yet a budget for the church, though the report of the Bishop in making comparison of receipts and expenditures paves the way.

In examining the printed reports before the conference we note the following requests and recommendations for buildings:

In the President's message, an auditorium to seat seven thousand is urged. No estimate was submitted, but the cost would probably exceed $200,000.

A central hall and group of buildings, including adequate dining hall is also urged. This no doubt includes an office building, as is urged by the Presiding Bishop, so that adequate quarters will be had for all the various departments of church work. As planned five years ago, this building would then have cost $180,000. However, it may be simplified and erected only to meet our own needs, and so built for less.

Graceland College is having a new building erected which was estimated a year ago at $70,000. Most of this work remains to be done, though it is well started.

The college also wants dormitories by September, 1921, and a gymnasium as soon as practicable. The treasurer also urges for immediate action the purchase of a house and one acre well set to fruit, and the erection of a cottage for the superintendent of buildings and grounds. The two to cost about $5,000.

The Sanitarium asks at once a building to house heating plant, laundry, and help, to cost $25,000, and recommends soon additions for nervous and tubercular patients, also a clinical laboratory.

The Children's Home asks extensions to cost $2,500, and the Saints' Home farm, a farm house to cost $8,000.

Graceland College also asks water supply to farm house, dairy barn, granary, cribs, etc., to cost $8,000 to $10,000.

To meet current expenses and deficit in expected receipts, the various budgets show in excess of requests for buildings asked for this year and included in budgets, the following amounts:

Graceland College	$ 4,600.00
Saints' and Liberty Homes	11,441.60
Holden Home	11,285.00
Children's Home	10,277.96
Sanitarium	3,551.00
Woman's Auxiliary	3,000.00

The only buildings definitely provided for in budgets of the various church institutions are:

Graceland College, house and one acre	2,000.00
Superintendent's cottage	3,000.00
Saints' Home farm, new buildings	8,000.00
Children's Home extensions	2,500.00
Sanitarium	25,000.00
A total of	$40,500.00

All in making their requests recognize the needs of other departments of church work, and suggest as a plan of development for future needs.

No one alive to the situation can do otherwise than hope we are able soon to meet most, and even all of these recommendations. Yet we recognize the needs of the church as a whole, the missionary arm in particular.

Being out of debt we should be able to do something constructive for the good of the whole church in its institutions.

At 10.30 the Woman's Auxiliary (they are calling themselves Woman's Department this year) held a session in the upper auditorium, at which three main speeches were given. The first was one on "Thrift," by Bishop B. R. McGuire. "Housekeeping and the budget system," was the subject elucidated by Audentia Anderson, editor of the Woman's Auxiliary column in the HERALD. "The value of the social survey" was outlined by Hale W. Smith.

The quorums were all meeting at this hour, some of them having passed on the revelation to the church, others still discussing it.

Meeting places for the quorums are so hard to find that some difficulties are experienced. The elders held their first meeting in the Carson Building, the second at the South Side, and for the third and subsequent meetings arranged for a hall uptown. The seventies met in joint session at the South Side church.

At the 2.30 session of conference, reports were asked for from the various quorums on the document referred to them at the previous session.

G. T. Griffiths reported verbally for the Quorum of Twelve that as they had only six members to act on the proposition, they could do no official business, but would vote as individuals in the conference.

Successively, the high priests, evangelists, order of bishops, joint quorums of seventies, elders, and Aaronic order reported having indorsed the document.

There were seventy-five seventies present, twenty-one not voting, and one hundred and fifty-four elders present, one not voting.

On the adoption of the document by the following resolution, the vote was 701 for, 1 against. The negative vote was by Joseph Luff, who explained that it was only because he had not the personal evidence he desired to vote intelligently for the resolution, and had no objections to the men chosen.

"Resolved: That we accept the communication as inspiration from the Lord, and that the same be adopted as a law, to govern the church, and that the ordinations ordered, be provided for, and that it be ordered printed hereafter in the Doctrine and Covenants."

President F. M. Smith, who has been absent till this time, was sent for and arrived at this juncture. He said he had a letter from one of the apostles in Australia sometime ago to the effect that we could well surround with more dignity our ordination ceremonies. He agreed with this, and felt that an ordination being a sacred and holy charge should be given all the consideration possible.

Following the singing of "The Lord is my shepherd," and "Nearer, My God, to thee," by the audience without musical accompaniment, President Elbert A. Smith offered a special prayer, followed by the ordination to the office of apostle of T. W. Williams by Gomer T. Griffiths and Frederick M. Smith, and Myron A. McConley to same office by Frederick M. Smith and Gomer T. Griffiths.

On account of work before the joint council an early adjournment was had.

The films shown at the Battery at 6 p. m. were "Pollyanna," seen by a large audience, and followed with an excellent address by T. W. Williams, on "All for Christ." Several fine musical numbers and readings completed a full program.

At the church at 7 the films were of the recent eruption of Kileaua and other Hawaiian scenes and were very fine.

The annual oratorical contest of Graceland College students was held at 8, the successful contestant being Miss Fernell Briggs. The complete program is printed elsewhere.

FRIDAY, APRIL 9

The priesthood were addressed at 8 a. m. by Cyril E. Wight in explanation of the work of the class in religious education at Graceland College, and some of their ideals for future work.

The morning prayer meeting at 9 was an interesting and profitable one.

The Woman's Auxiliary were in business session in the lower auditorium at 9.30 till 11.30. In accordance with the action of the organization, the First Presidency nominated as head of the department to be known as director general, Mrs. F. M. Smith, with the name of Mrs. D. J. Krahl as president. Adjournment was had without action.

The Religio Department held its second session at 10.30, a number of important items of business being transacted and some left over till a later session.

At 2.30 the conference proper again convened, at which the church physician, Doctor G. Leonard Harrington reported. His recent illness had prevented an earlier report. He made several recommendations on methods of procedure.

The question of place and time to hold the next conference was brought up, discussed rather briefly and left to Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, to decide, and concurring in the suggestion in President's message favoring biennial gatherings. This was done after concurring in a ruling of the president that there might be a time set other than April 6.

The conference approved the recommendation of the president, favoring the erection of a large building to house the assemblies, and this without undue delay. The vote was practically unanimous, those in the galleries asked to give their views in a vote, which was enthusiastically favorable, and some one suggested that those outside were taking a unanimous standing vote favoring the idea.

A number of people suggested we ought to take names and amounts of subscriptions toward the new building, and in a short time about $40,000 was subscribed. It was announced that on the next afternoon at 4.30 a rally would be had on the lawn at the church offices, where any amounts could be given. Offerings from $5,000 to $50 were received at this time, payable as soon as possible but time limit within two years. It was an enthusiastic crowd.

The Men Affected

Francis M. Sheehy was born the 1st of June, 1851, in Norwich, Connecticut, but was not baptized till February, 1872, in Santa Cruz, California. As to his early life, his older brother, Moses Sheehy, informs us that he was given a good school education for that period. And Brother Sheehy has been a close student ever since.

After his baptism, he shortly entered the service of the church, and was ordained a deacon the 1st of December, then the following April, a teacher, and a year later, May 20, 1874, a priest.

He had in the meantime returned to New England. There, in fact, the above ordinations took place.

In 1873 he, with John Gilbert, reported the work in New England to General Conference, as is stated in volume 4 of Church History. April 16, 1876, he was ordained an elder, and in 1883 was appointed on a mission to New England. He labored there and in the Maritime Provinces by conference appointment continuously till 1898, when he was sent to California.

F. M. SHEEHY

His appointment read as a rule, Eastern Mission, but several times it was to New England or Massachusetts district.

In the meantime he was ordained a seventy, April 16, 1886, and one of the seven presidents of seventy in April, 1897. In 1887 and again in 1889 he was one of the secretaries of the General Conference.

In April, 1900 he was ordained a high priest, and sent to New York and Pennsylvania, and in 1901 to Chicago. But on the 11th of April, 1902, he was ordained to the Quorum of the Twelve, having thus occupied successively each office tending up to that high calling. He is probably the only man who has occupied in each office beginning with deacon.

As an apostle his work has been the Eastern Mission, the Pacific Slope, and Rocky Mountain Mission, and Central Mission of Missouri, Southern Illinois, and Kansas.

He was a member of the original archæological committee, and has continued in charge of the work, even after the committee was dissolved. His work in this department for over twenty years has been critical and thorough.

Of late years he has suffered in health. It is hoped that being relieved of the responsibilities of an apostle, his health will improve. Of course, he and Brother Anderson continue as high priests, and become members of that quorum.

PETER ANDERSON

Peter Anderson was born April 1, 1860, in Moen County, Denmark. We have no data on his early life, but on December 9, 1880, he was baptized at Weston, Iowa, and within a year he was ordained a priest at Sacramento, California.

He evidently offered his services at once to the church, as the conference of 1882 appointed him to Denmark on a mission (if possible to send him).

He evidently returned to Western Iowa and labored there, as he was ordained an elder at Crescent, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, May 27, 1883, and was appointed to Western Iowa and Nebraska by the General Conference in 1884 and 1885, but this was changed by the appointing powers to the Rocky Mountain Mission, in July, 1885, where he apparently continued for several years, until sent to Scandinavia in 1893. He was thus ordained a seventy on June 6, 1888, in Salt Lake City, not having attended the General Conference.

In 1884 he was placed on a committee to provide a church paper in Danish, and was made an editor.

The 1894 General Conference again appointed him to Scandinavia, but in 1895 he was sent to Minnesota, and in 1897 to Nodaway, Missouri District. 1900 found him again appointed to the Rocky Mountain Mission.

April 17, 1901, he was ordained an apostle and was thus next to Elder Gomer T. Griffiths in length of service in that quorum at the opening of this conference.

As an apostle he labored in the Rocky Mountains one year, then was sent to Scandinavia in 1902, and continued there for about ten years, half of the time being in charge of Germany as well, and in 1907 he was associated with J. W. Rushton, in charge of the whole European Mission, including Great Britain. About 1913 he was again placed in charge of the Rocky Mountain Mission.

The past few years ill health has unfortunately interfered with his work.

MYRON A. MCCONLEY

Myron A. McConley was born the 17th of September, 1885, and baptized the 27th of May, 1894. On June 20, 1907 he was ordained a priest at Denver, Colorado, where he was engaged in the jewelry business and doing well.

But in April, 1910, he offered his services to the church, and was ordained April 18, an elder, at Denver, Colorado, as the General Conference had sent him to the Hawaiian Islands, where he has labored since except for a short mission to California, and it was in that state, at Alameda, that he was ordained a seventy by F. M. Sheehy and others, in August, 1914.

Thomas W. Williams was born in San Pete County, Utah, August 23, 1866. He was baptized at Syracuse, Ohio, March 23, 1875. He removed to Lucas, Iowa in 1883, where he was ordained a priest December 18, 1887, and enrolled April, 1888, in the newly organized Second Quorum of Priests.

In 1889 he was one of the secretaries of General Conference, and was sent on a mission to Pittsburg and Kirtland Districts. This was continued in 1890 as Ohio and Western Pennsylvania. There he was ordained an elder June 11, 1890.

In 1891 and 1892 he was again appointed to Pittsburg and Kirtland, and on the 14th of April, 1892, he was ordained a seventy, and immediately chosen as secretary of the newly organized Second Quorum of Seventy.

In 1893 he was appointed to Pottawattamie District, and removed to Council Bluffs. He continued there till 1898 when he was appointed to California, where he labored till 1911, except for a year in Oregon.

On April 14, 1900, he was ordained a high priest, and the following year when Charles Derry resigned as president of high priests quorum, and Frederick G. Pitt was chosen in his stead, Elder Williams was chosen as a counselor to Elder Pitt, and so continued till the retirement of Elder Pitt, because of being ordained a patriarch, April, 1910.

After his ministry in the Central Church of Kansas City, Elder Williams withdrew from missionary service for a time. He was in his early life a coal miner with but little opportunity for study. He has utilized his opportunities in his ministry, and is well read.

All his ability has been and is at the service of his fellow laborer, who must toil in mine and factory.

He was for a few years secretary of the Socialist Party in California, but resigned when the Saint Louis Convention, after declaration of war by the United States, adopted resolutions he could not accept as an American citizen.

His son went over as a physician. The medical corps were not more safely placed than the men in the trench.

But prior to this in October, 1916, he returned to active church work and in 1918 was appointed to Toronto, where he has continued two years.

He was also in 1918 chosen as First Vice President of the Religo Department, and upon the resignation of G. S. Trowbridge, in November, 1919, became the head of this department.

If You Had Been There

Your Heart Would Have Overflowed, Your Money Would be on the Altar, Your Consecration Would be Redoubled.

THERE is a wonderful spirit in the church to-day. Its like has never been experienced before. The General Conference has shown a brotherhood, a consecration, a faith that cannot be denied. President Frederick M. Smith had only to sound the forward order this year and the response was magnificent. The Conference not only voted the erection of a General Conference auditorium big enough to seat 7,000 and also general office buildings costing altogether $500,000 but they subscribed $65,000 in a few minutes and showed what this people can do when united.

NOW these buildings are for every member in the church. Every one can help, the rich, the poor, each according to his means is asked to join in this wonderful task. Give to God like you gave to your country. Give, give till it hurts.

FIGURE what you can earn and save toward this object the next two years, for you are given two years in which to pay—pledge with a liberal heart. It's a sacred cause.

NUMBER 16

The evening program at 6.30 at the Battery included the showing of a film entitled "Revelation," and an address by G. S. Trowbridge, with appropriate program features. The usual capacity crowd attended.

At the church, following the showing of pictures by C. Edward Miller of the Graphic Arts Bureau, the oratoria, "Creation," was rendered by the big combined conference choir to the vast, delighted audience. A. N. Hoxie, church director, was in charge, and was successful in bringing out the very best that was in the best singers of the church making up this choir.

The soloists were L. Eugene Christy, tenor; Mrs. Bertha Burgess, soprano; Paul N. Craig, baritone. At the pianos Miss Ruth McMullen and Miss Belle Patterson did effective work, with Ralph Smith at the pipe organ.

SATURDAY, APRIL 10

The eight o'clock priesthood meeting in the basement was addressed by Henry C. Smith, church architect, setting forth some of the needs of the church as to better appreciation of our position as a people in building churches and dwellings, as well as some of the possibilities in this line.

The prayer meeting in the upper auditorium at nine o'clock was a continued manifestation of the same spirit prevailing at the various sessions of the conference.

The Woman's Department hold regular sessions in the basement at this hour, discussing their problems and taking up various items of business concerning their department, details being given elsewhere.

The session at 10.30 was occupied in a strong program by the women of the church in the upper auditorium.

At 2.30 printed copies of the recommendations of the Presidency were distributed to the conference assembly, taken up, proposition by proposition, and adopted, and then adopted as a whole. There was almost complete unanimity on the important matters proposed, and the assembly in a mood to express it. On the proposal to the establishment of stewardships immediately, a vote was called for from the gallery merely as an expression of sentiment, and the visitors there were unanimously in favor of it.

E. A. Curtis, of the seventies, was recommended by the council of seven presidents of seventy, to act as one of their number, and his ordination provided for, having been indorsed by the Presidency and Twelve.

The session adjourned to the lawn east of the church where a band played, and speeches were made, while contributions were received toward the erection of a new conference auditorium. The amount was raised from around $40,000 to about $65,000. It is estimated that $500,000 will be required to complete the structure, and plans are being made for the immediate pledging of this amount by individuals and branches throughout the church so it may be out of the way and other important matters taken up. While it is a big matter, and requiring the raising of large amounts, the response by the people at the conference indicates the general demand there is for such a building before the holding of another conference assembly.

Preaching services are held each evening at the Church of Christ building near the Stone Church. The names of those occupying will likely be reported in one place later.

The Religio service at the Battery included the film "Fortune Hunter" and a lecture by F. M. McDowell on "Will Boy Scouts made good Latter Day Saints?"

The program at the church at eight was by the Liberty Orchestra, under the direction of R. T. Cooper, of Independence.

SUNDAY, APRIL 11

Sunday began with threatening weather, which developed into a heavy rain before 8.30, but before this a large audience had gathered in both the upper and lower auditoriums at the church for prayer meeting. The priesthood—so many there was hardly good standing room—met in the lower room, and the general meeting in the upper room.

The priesthood meeting was presided over by Elbert A. Smith, who on account of indisposition turned the presiding over to J. F. Garver and F. G. Pitt. It was an interesting session, with two manifestations of the Spirit, one through J. F. Garver, and another through Brother Weston.

The Sunday school was seriously interfered with on account of the rain, but speeches were given by various workers, and the time profitably spent.

At eleven preaching was held in all the meeting places, the following occupying on "A review of our church history": Upper auditorium, S. A. Burgess; lower auditorium, F. F. Wipper; South Side, William I. Flegg; Walnut Park, D. J. Krahl; Enoch Hill, R. S. Salyards; Liberty Street, J. W. Peterson; Central Church, G. T. Griffiths; Battery Building, Heman Hale Smith.

At 2.30 the following bishops occupied on "The social and economic program of the restored gospel": Upper auditorium, B. R. McGuire; lower auditorium, J. F. Keir; South Side, F. B. Blair; Walnut Park, Myron C. Fisher; Enoch Hill, not reported; Liberty Street, Richard Bullard; Central Church, A. Carmichael.

In the evening the subject was "Our keynote: hear ye him!" and the speakers were: Upper auditorium, M. A. McConley; lower auditorium, C. F. Ellis; South Side, W. L. Christy; Walnut Park; R. W. Farrell; Enoch Hill, M. W. Liston; Liberty Street, O. Okerlind; Central Church, T. W. Williams. At the Battery F. M. McDowell spoke on the subject, "Youth and the church."

MONDAY, APRIL 12

The eight o'clock priesthood meeting was addressed by Mr. Oliver LaMere, a Winnebago Indian, on some conditions of the American Indian. He is an authority on these questions, especially as relating to his tribe, and spoke interestingly of some of the customs of the Indians, using a chart to illustrate some things which were found to be new even to our missionaries who have been working among the Lamanites.

The Sunday school held its first business session at 11 a. m. in the upper auditorium, enacting but little legislation. One resolution prevailing was that the practice of printing the names of individuals giving Christmas offerings be discontinued.

continued, and instead, the name of the school be used, with amount contributed.

The conference session at 2.30 was preceded by the sale of a large number of "Songs of the Legion," details of which are given elsewhere.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College reported that for some time they had realized the great need of more housing facilities for many of the activities of the college, including a place for the holding of recitals, debates, etc., and proposed an appropriation of $10,000 as a part of the college needs in the building plan adopted by the church. This was referred to the Presidency and Presiding Bishop, with power to act.

A resolution from the Massachusetts District favoring the creation of a film and slide exchange, and the furnishing of such materials for the missionaries, was laid on the table, and a motion made shortly after, to take from the table failed to pass.

A resolution prevailed that delegations attending General Conference are to cast the full vote of the district, except that no delegate is to have over twenty votes, and it is to be understood that delegations may in case of division cast majority and minority votes without special instruction.

The following names were presented by the seven presidents of seventy, recommended by them for ordination to office of seventy, and indorsed by the Presidency and Twelve.

William Bath, Joseph Yeager, Matthew W. Liston, A. C. Martin, Cornelius M. Clifford, Frank F. Wipper, Gomer Reeves, George E. Burt, Frank B. Almond, Amos T. Higdon, B. C. Flint, J. W. A. Bailey.

Owing to arrangements having been made to leave immediately for their work in Hawaii, Brother Reeves was ordained at this time by U. W. Greene and G. T. Griffiths, and Sister Reeves was blessed for her work by Frederick A. Smith and James A. Gillen.

Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the recommendations in the Woman's Auxiliary report were discussed, and adopted.

The request of the men's Bible class of First Kansas City for immediate action on the publication of the teachers' edition of the Inspired Translation was referred to the Board of Publication, with power to act.

The placing of Englewood Branch between Independence and Kansas City, was referred to the general administrative authorities for disposition.

The Battery program was the showing of the film "In the lion's den," followed by the pageant, "Restoration," perhaps the most magnificent affair of its kind ever put on by the church. It was attended by such a large crowd and so many turned away, that it was announced for a repetition on the following evening.

The Graphic Arts Bureau showed some good pictures at 7, and this was followed by the annual evening program of the Woman's Department, spoken of elsewhere, but one of the best—if not the best—programs the department has ever provided.

The weather was more pleasant, and the people extremely happy over the development of the conference.

TUESDAY, APRIL 13

Th morning session of the priesthood was addressed by Mr. Oilver LaMere for the second time, continuing his interesting depiction of Indian life and customs, giving some of the beautiful traditions among the Winnebagoes as to the creation, the destiny of the spirit, the coming to earth of the sons of God. And throughout it all is the sacred number 4 predominating.

The prayer service at nine was largely attended, as usual.

The session at 10.30 was by the Sunday school department, which went on record, officially, that hereafter all phases of the Sunday school work, general, district, local, should be known as Sunday school department, thus dispensing with the name association.

Resolutions were adopted favoring the plan of the executive council of the general department providing a series of adult quarterlies, a teachers' quarterly, and a Sunday school manual. The previous action of the council in employing an editor in chief and the appointment of an expert consulting board was indorsed and the council further authorized to carry the project to success.

The Presidency not having any changes to recommend, the convention unanimously reelected G. R. Wells as superintendent of the Sunday school department. As he had not had an opportunity to meet with the coordination committee to confer as to nomination of subordinate officers he was not ready at this session to make his nominations.

At 2.30 the conference convened.

A resolution giving our approval as a church of the Boy Scout organization for our boys until such time as we can provide a better organization, was adopted.

The following resolution prevailed by a vote of 422 to 54:

"Whereas, considerable discussion has arisen of late as to the propriety of using moving pictures in our houses of worship, be it resolved, that we place ourselves on record as favoring the use of such mediums of education insofar as they conduce to the proper education of humanity and the glory of God."

The first and third quorums of seventy reported. The former has 58 members, and the third 23 members.

The following names were presented for ordination to office of high priests, having been indorsed by the Presidency and Quorum of High Priests; and were all approved by the conference: A. M. Carmichael and R. A. Ballantyne of Lamoni, Iowa; A. E. Warr, of Des Moines, Iowa; J. O. Dutton, of Northeastern Illinois District; E. J. Williams of Denver, Colorado; Otto Fetting of Port Huron, Michigan; C. W. Clark of Columbus, Ohio.

The following were recommended to be ordained to office of bishop: A. F. McLean of Toronto; John L. Burger, Saint Thomas, Ontario; John C. Dent, Bothwell, Ontario.

The film shown at the Battery Building at 6.30 was "Anne of Green Gables," followed by the church play, "Restoration," written and produced by Independence talent. The crowd at this second rendition was far in excess of the capacity of the building, and announcements were made that it would be repeated after conference for those unable to get in to see the previous renditions.

Following the showing of the pictures at the church at 7 the nurses of Independence Sanitarium gave a series of tableau depicting the various stages of the training necessary to become nurses.

The day was pleasant, the spirits of the vast concourses of people continued high.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14

The priesthood meeting at eight was addressed by Floyd M. McDowell on the boy department, and by C. Ed. Miller on stereopticons and slides.

The Religio convened following the prayer meeting and completed their work, electing T. W. Williams as superintendent and associating with him F. M. McDowell, the latter having charge of the boy department. R. A. Lloyd was elected treasurer, and provisions made for the hiring of a stenographer-secretary and to establish a permanent headquarters in Independence for the department.

Steps were taken toward the creation of a periodical for the Religio and Sunday school.

The executives were authorized to use whatever method is deemed necessary to raise more funds, if a shortage arises.

At the 2.30 session the names of the following were presented for ordination to office of seventy and by separate vote indorsed and ordination ordered: Keith Rogers, of Utah (in the religious education class at Graceland the past year) E. L. Ulrich, Toledo, Ohio; F. V. Elliott, Lamoni; H. A. Merchant, Omaha, Nebraska.

Resolutions of appreciation and respect for the services of Apostles Peter Anderson and Frank M. Sheehy in the Quorum of Twelve were presented by the quorum and adopted as the sentiments of the body.

A resolution favoring the providing of a series of lantern slides for the use of the ministry was referred to the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

The election of two members to succeed the retiring members of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College for terms of three years each resulted in the selection of Bishop A. Carmichael to succeed himself, and Walter E. Hayer, of Lamoni, to succeed G. R. Wells, who desired release.

The nominations of the Presiding Bishop for the members of the Board of Publication were indorsed, the articles of incorporation requiring that the bishop be one of the members. The personnel now is: A. Carmichael, F. B. Blair, B. R. McGuire, R. J. Lambert, A. E. McKim.

A resolution was presented, attempting to express the sentiment of the church on industrial and economic ideals.

A substitute presented the following, which was referred to the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric:

"Whereas, it is the duty of the church to use its full power in the amelioration of the social conditions controlling the lives of its members; and

"Whereas, the program of stewardships will not seriously affect our economic system in the immediate future, therefore,

"Be it resolved, that the church lend its support to the desire of the workingman for an eight-hour day and for a living wage; encourage the movements for the abolition of child labor in factory and mine and for the limitation of the hours of woman's work, and it indorses the peaceful and legitimate efforts for the greatest cooperation between labor and capital and for greater participation and responsibility by labor in the management of industries."

A request for arrangements to hear from Elder Paia a Metuaoro, attending from the Society Islands, he was invited to the stand and made a beautiful address to the conference, interpreted by Elder Clyde F. Ellis, lately returned from the islands. We shall reproduce the speech later. He would speak a paragraph at a time, then await the interpretation. Brother Paia has been under conference appointment as a missionary in the islands for several years. He is a large man of pleasing countenance, thirty-five years of age. He speaks in the typical island manner (and which is an Indian characteristic), quietly and with even modulation, without gesture.

President Smith expressed his delight in hearing from the brother, and expressed the hope that no conference would be held without some representative present from the islands.

Adjournment was had, followed by a session of the Sunday school, which concurred in the desire of the Religio for a periodical, and referred the matter to the coordination committee for report to the conference.

The following officers were nominated by the coordination committee and elected by the convention: First assistant superintendent, A. M. Carmichael, of Lamoni; second assistant superintendent, A. W. Smith, Saint Louis, Missouri; secretary, E. D. Moore, Lamoni; treasurer, M. H. Siegfried, Independence; home department superintendent, Mrs. J. C.

Schwab, Independence; cradle roll superintendent, Mrs. Rebecca Mills, Independence; member library board, S. A. Burgess, Lamoni.

This concluded the work of the Sunday school.

The film "Christ from the manger to the cross," was shown at the Battery, with some of the films taken of General Conference in session, of the singing of the "Creation," and "close-ups" of prominent church men, followed by some on boy scout work.

The second rendition of the oratorio "Creation," was given at the church, with a large attendance. The conference film was shown following this, with one of the community sing work in the East by A. N. Hoxie, and the boy scout films.

The Mount Zion Sunday school gave a reception to visiting Sunday school workers following the "Creation," there being about two hundred and fifty present. Light refreshments were served and a pleasing program of speeches, music and song provided.

The only meeting on the forenoon of the 15th was a preaching service at the church, F. G. Pitt, speaker; J. F. Mintun in charge.

The meeting at 2.30 p. m. was not so largely attended as those previously held. A report of the credentials committee brought out the fact that there had been 515 delegates and 508 ex officios registered for the conference.

The proposal of the Sunday school and Religio that a periodical for their special needs be provided was adopted, including an authorization to the Board of Publication to meet this demand.

The coordinating committee favored the transfer of the home department of the Religio and Sunday school, also the cradle roll work of the Sunday school, to the Women's Department. This was indorsed by the conference.

Nothing was reported on the temperance department, referred to this committee, but it seems to be understood that the special work of this department may be done by the health department of the church, though the sisters may do something in this line in their educational work.

The recommendation that Levi Gamet be ordained a high priest was indorsed by the conference.

In the report of the order of bishops was a nomination of Bishop A. Carmichael to succeed himself on the Children's Home Board, which was indorsed.

They also went on record to "look with favor upon the erection of adequate dormitories at Graceland College, and commence operations as soon as funds will permit."

The Christmas offering for 1920 is to be used for the purchase and improvement of land.

A further feature of the report of the order of bishops, adopted by conference, was as follows:

"Whereas, the Board of Publication in their report calls attention to the fact that the best interests of the publishing concerns of the church would be conserved by the placing of the publishing houses as far as possible under one roof and one management;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the order of bishops look with favor upon the ultimate consummation of this object.

"They, however, suggest that the erection of a building for the housing of the publishing interests should become a part of the publishing interests of the church, to be undertaken under the direction of the general church authorities when financial and economic conditions render it advisable."

The various officials of the church were sustained by separate motions and vote.

Upon the sustaining of the Presiding Bishopric, Bishop McGuire arose and nominated Israel A. Smith as second counselor in the Presiding Bishopric. This was indorsed and the bishopric sustained. Brother Smith was ordained in the evening, by Frederick M. Smith and G. T. Griffiths.

The various boards, department officials, and standing committees were sustained.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Independence Saints for their courtesies to visiting members, and one to the press for their kindness. The representatives of the press also sent in a vote of appreciation for the courtesies extended to them.

Preceding the reading of the official list of announcements of appointments of missionaries, President F. M. Smith made some verbal statements of the probable work of the members of the Twelve. It is proposed that William Aylor shall proceed to South Africa to open a mission, and will be accompanied by Keith Rogers and wife, and Cornelius M. Clifford.

R. C. Russell will further extend the work in Quebec which has been cared for by Elder Philemon Pement the past few years.

At least one of the Twelve, possibly two, one of whom will be T. W. Williams, will, probably with one of the Presidency, visit England for important work there, and likely include in the trip Switzerland, Germany, and Palestine.

Gomer T. Griffiths will have charge of the work among the American Lamanites, assisted by Hubert Case in Oklahoma.

In a few months two of the Twelve will go to Australia to relieve at least two of the three there now.

Two of the Twelve have been asked to remain at the office for the present, and they are now U. W. Greene and M. A. McConley.

Two are asked to be minute men, available for any special demands in their line of work, and they are J. A. Gillen and J. F. Curtis.

The appointments were read and adjournment had, closing the best and most important conference ever held by the Reorganization.

An ordination meeting was held in the lower auditorium in the evening, those present who were recommended being ordained. The others will be provided for.

The usual Religio meeting was held at the church, the conference films being shown again and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." A program followed, including as speakers, T. W. Williams and G. R. Wells.

A Message to the Ministry

Communication given through Elbert A. Smith, to the Priesthood, in the Lower Auditorium of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, at communion service, Sunday forenoon, April 4, 1920.

This is the message of your Lord and Master: I greet you as I did my disciples of old; and though I am your Lord and your Master, yet do I call you my friends and my brethren.

During the year you have administered to others, and have carried the consolation of God to the people in far distant places. But now it is your blessed privilege to be administered to and to receive consolation from me. And I say unto you, Open your hearts that you may receive the Holy Ghost.

Is there one among you who has aught of complaint to make concerning his ministry or the blessings that he has received? Is there one among you who has been homeless, that he could say, I have not where to lay my head? Is there one who has been without food, or naked? Is there one who has been scourged or spit upon or crucified? Happily you have escaped many of these things, though in part you have tasted of the cup that I drank from and have been baptized with the baptism that I was baptized with. But the days will come when you will be required to walk in the midst of perils. And you will go upon many uncertain missions. And you will knock at many doors that will not be opened to you until they are opened by the power and demonstration of my Spirit. I have witnesses of my love for you, for I have the evidences in my hands and in my feet and in my side—for did I not give the very blood out of my heart for you? What evidences are you prepared to give in years to come that you love me?

I am not here to judge you or to condemn you. But I am here to warn you. You have been told in the past that in your public and private ministrations you should avoid sowing the seeds of distrust and division. That which a man sows he shall also reap. If any man shall sow discontent, he shall reap discontent and be unhappy. If any man shall sow doubt, he shall reap doubt in his own heart, and shall be fortunate if he shall not eventually deny the faith. But he who sows the seeds of faith shall reap faith and it shall cause his soul to enlarge and expand. He who gives forth love—love shall come back to him. And he who is tender and merciful, to him will I be very tender and merciful. But if any man shall betray my cause, him will I judge. And he who puts the trust of my people in jeopardy for a little thing, he himself shall be in jeopardy.

When you go forth to preach to the world, you are not to preach your own speculations or idle imaginings, and you are not to preach the philosophies of men. You are to preach the gospel, as it is in the books that have been given to the church, and you are to cry repentance to this generation. And when you stand to teach the Saints you shall say to them as Moses did of old, that they shall go forward. If you are to be called leading men you must become leaders of men—leaders and exemplars in all good works and Christian graces, and in showing forth all the fruits of the Spirit—that the Saints may observe you and be strengthened and comforted. If you will do this, and seek to work together in patience and love, and to obtain a common understanding of my law, I will be with you to bless and direct.

Notice to All Women's Department Workers

Please remember that in the taking over of the work of the Sunday school and Religio home departments and the cradle roll work of the Sunday school there will be no cessation of effort.

Certain changes will of necessity be made in some of the details and possibly in the plan of operations, but in the meanwhile reports should be made as usual and the work kept up.

We hope to make several announcements in our column in the near future regarding this work, but want all to know they are to continue as usual till any contemplated changes are effected.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON,

Superintendent Women's Department.

A letter from Elder Harry Passman, dated at Basel, Switzerland, says he has secured permission from British authorities to enter Palestine. He will first make a trip into Germany.

Word has been received of the death of Miss Florence Burgess, of Saint Louis, on the evening of the 12th. S. A. Burgess, her brother, left the conference to attend the funeral. She has been in poor health for years. The branch news from Saint Louis in the the Ensign have been from her pen.

The Budget of the Bishopric

The following estimate of cost of carrying out the immediate program of the church was indorsed by the conference.

APRIL 15, 1920.

To the President and General Conference; Greeting: We respectfully submit the following estimate cost of carrying on the work of the several departments for the fiscal year—July 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921.

EXPENSE

Administration.

Presiding Bishop's office budget.....	$ 20,750.00
General office expense	3,000.00
Quorum of Twelve office expense	1,510.00
Recorder's office expense	4,200.00
Architect's office expense	1,800.00
First Presidency's office expense	5,100.00

Stakes.

Independence	2,560.00
Kansas City	2,480.00
Lamoni	4,663.00
Holden	915.00
Far West	1,210.00

Women's Department 1,700.00

(Note: The Women's Auxiliary budget was for $3,000.00, with statement that $1,315.00 of this amount would be returned to the church treasury by assessment, sale of leaflets, manuals and year books. The order approves the budget with the understanding that not to exceed $1,700.00 is to be supplied by the Presiding Bishopric, the balance to be realized from sale of leaflets, etc.)

Graceland	9,600.00
Holden Home	10,676.00
Saints' and Liberty Homes	11,441.60
Saints' Home Farm	7,250.00
Children's Home	11,777.96
Sanitarium	28,551.00
Publicity Department	8,000.00

(Note: This is to include General Publicity Agent's salary.)

General expense	5,000.00
Aid	30,000.00
Elders' expense	50,000.00
Historian department	2,080.00
Missionary family allowances	325,000.00
Religious educational class	10,000.00
Completing New Graceland College building	80,000.00

Total$640,264.56

The estimated revenue is as follows:

Estimated incomes, tithes, and offerings	$500,000.00
Available assets	40,000.00

We have estimated that the tithes and offerings will increase $35,000.00 over the current fiscal year. If we have properly estimated the total receipts from tithes and offerings for the coming year, we will be in debt $100,000.00 at the end of the period if these appropriations are allowed and used.

It should be noted that this budget does not take into account a margin for the tithes and offering that may be received in kind (that is, nonavailable assets) and unforeseen requirements that may arise; nor will it give opportunity for extending loans to individuals or to local congregations for building purposes. Any funds spent for these purposes will increase the deficit to the amount spent; nor has any provision been made in the budget for expenditures to carry into effect the building program as approved by this General Conference. The cost of whatever is done in this regard will be in addition to the foregoing estimate of expense.

Recommendations of the Presidency

With scarcely a dissenting vote or uttered objection, the following recommendations were adopted by the conference assembly on April 10, 1920.

Stewardships

If I conveyed to you this morning the meaning that I intended, you have been impressed with the thought, as it has impressed me, that beside belief in the restoration of the priesthood, beside belief in the doctrine of continuous or continued revelation, the next most distinctive belief that differentiates this church from all others is its doctrine of social economy; the very crux of which is found in the doctrine of stewardships. Let me repeat, too, what I said, viz, that so far, our presentation of the doctrine of stewardships has been largely theoretical. I make one glorious exception to this, and one of which I am proud, and that is the splendid spirit of the ministry of this church, who have, to all practical intents and purposes, been upon a basis of stewardship in all the years they have worked for this church. So far as the work of the church is concerned, then, the time is here for the establishment of the practical aspects of the doctrine of stewardships, and for that the Presidency stands, and that we recommend to you, that we enter upon the establishment of stewardships without delay. Let me emphasize these last two words, without delay—for the time demands it. Now there may be those who will place themselves in opposition to this. There may be those who will attempt to delay the establishment of these stewardships. Let them take the consequences, if they succeed. My responsibility ends, as your leader, when I say the time is here for the establishment of stewardships, except that I expect to work for it with all the vigor of my powers if I remain the leader of the church, by your choice.

I appreciate the difficulties that we as a body of independent thinking men confront in attempting to evolve a common conception of what a stewardship means. I appreciate the task, too, of ironing out all the difficulties that will arise. I appreciate even the difficulty of holding in check those who are convinced that they have followed the right line of reasoning and have reached the only and indisputable result of those conclusions, and who therefore are not easily converted from the error of their way, if they have fallen into an error, or, to use a common expression, they must be clearly shown before they will retrace; and, appreciating as I have, some of the difficulties of the question of stewardships, especially on this matter of how they shall be held, I have thought how we could overcome these difficulties, and remembering in my own experience as an executive how, frequently, almost apparently insurmountable difficulties have disappeared before the free exchange of opinion, the widening of the circle of our common understanding, rather than an attempt to fight to the end our difficulties, I have finally concluded that perhaps the solution lay in calling into counsel with the spiritual authorities of the church the men who have become experienced in business, men of affairs, men who have shown themselves to be equals and even the superiors in some instances, to men in similar industries in the affairs and activities of the world. Meditating over this, in its general aspects, I was not long ago, while riding on one of the railroad trains in the East, permitted to see the unfoldment of this plan is practically all its details, to such an extent that I felt there lay the solution, ultimately, of all our difficulties, in regard to the working out of the problems of stewardship. Many of the men to form these commissions or head them were presented to me; and it is only a matter of detail or clerical work to notify these men and ask them to come to Independence for this conference; and the details of this we expect to present to the proper authorities in due time.

Reorganization of Independence Stake

The Independence Stake, in the opinion of the Presidency, has reached a condition in its evolution where we can easily and logically complete its transition into the "center place." The organization of the stake has gradually been brought into a condition where the final changes can be made with little or no interruption in the work, or jar in transition. The Presidency and Presiding Bishopric should therefore assume control of its affairs. To accomplish this, and to provide for the final steps, it is only necessary to authorize the dissolution of the present stake presidency and high council, and the reorganization of the present Standing High Council of the church into such an organization as will enable it to function freely as the Standing High Council of Zion. To so recognize the Standing High Council has long been in the mind of the Presidency, but we have awaited this occasion. We recommend an enactment fully authorizing the Presidency to complete the transition already so nearly consummated.

Transfer of Headquarters

This will involve transfer of the legal headquarters of the church to where now its real headquarters is; namely, Independence. Closely connected with the establishment of the center place is the question of establishing the Saints on the land and in the industries of the regions round about, according to the law of stewardships as we understand it. To meet the many practical problems in working into a reality the theory of stewardship, affords a task which is great, but which must be accomplished. That from this movement, the President of the church purposes calling the business men of the church into frequent consultation, and of forming commissions of qualified men and experts to intensively study and practically work out the many problems connected with the endeavors we must foster, encourage, promote, or develop, according to the aspect of the stewardship which is contemplated. The heads of these commissions we expect to form into what might be termed an industrial council. From the workings of this council we expect to see the practical obstacles to stewardships gradually overcome.

Sanitarium

There is urgent necessity for enlarging the capacity and widening the field of activity of the Sanitarium. It will be seen that the Board of Trustees has made some recommendations looking in this direction. In addition to those recommendations, the Presidency recommends the changing of the articles of incorporation of the Sanitarium so that the Board of Trustees shall be an ex officio one, rather than one composed as it now is. The location of the Sanitarium within the limits of the center place, the growing general character of its work, together with the strong probability of the Sanitarium becoming the center of the health movement of the church, the logical ex officio board is the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, and we so recommend. We feel that this would pave the way for the necessary expansion of the work of that institution and placing it upon the basis from which it can best function.

Building Program

And this perhaps leads very logically to the next recommendation that the Presidency desires to make on a matter which we have to present to you, and that is the question of a building program. You will remember last year in our presentation to the conference of some of the things for which we expected to stand, we spoke of a building program. Too long has this church delayed in having formulated a well-developed building program. Perhaps I can say, without any disrespect to those who have held responsible positions in the church in the past, in the line of construction, that we have not to-day in the church one building that is adequate for the purposes for which it is intended. Not one.

This building program therefore should include not only such things as general office building and assembly hall, but it ought to include a well-defined building plan; such as perhaps exists in a most beautiful form of imagery in the mind of our splendid young architect—a plan of a system of buildings which will meet every social need for us as an organization. A community of buildings, if you please. And we cannot possibly outline, conceive, or imagine a building program that will touch the center place, but what we find it will carry its ramifications farther than its environs, into the Kansas City Stake on the west; Holden Stake, in several directions; Far West on the north; and even the Lamoni Stake, for this is the organized form of the regions round about, and the building needs of these themselves in their general aspects must be taken into consideration when we are outlining this building program. And I suspect under the direction of our church architect it will not be difficult to form a commission of consecrated men who will study the building needs of the center place and regions round about, we can bring to us a well-definitized plan towards which we can work; and know that every brick that goes into place is going into place according to a plan worked out in all its details from the first, and working towards a definite goal. This is the building plan I should like to see instituted, and it must be formulated.

Graceland College

Reverting once more to the question of education, it would scarcely be logical for us, in the light of what we stated a few minutes ago, to do anything else than call your attention to the report of the trustees of Graceland College, and to the recommendations that are made therein, and especially in their budget, where the church is asked to support the college in their efforts to enlarge the activities of this, one of the most devoted servants and potential servants of the church. It seems to me that the college has so established its right to exist, well supported, that there is little need for us to plead for it though we might well ask that you strain your generosity to give this institution the means that will put it on its feet, to function as it has not yet fully functioned, as one of the greatest of the institutions of the church, looking to the welfare of the future generations.

Children's Home

Touching the Children's Home, the First Presidency recommends that to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric be referred the question of a revision of the work of this institution with authority to change articles of incorporation or reincorporate.

There have been a number of things connected with the Children's Home with which I have not found myself in full accord. I do not favor the maintaining of large children's homes. It is a trite saying among those who have made a study of child delinquency and dependency, "Only one thing can take the place of a broken home, and that is another home." Our Children's Home as an institution, should only be a channel, if you please, through which the unfortunate from broken homes may find their way to other homes that are waiting to welcome them.

Sanitarium Annex

In this connection we also suggest the advisability of providing an annex to the Sanitarium as a home for delinquent children. "Why Sanitarium?" I imagine most of you saying. It is a question of health, nine times out of ten. Many a child has been started on a career of crime because some medical man who knows his business has not had opportunity to analyze the child's deficiency. That is why I say our delinquent children should be fostered under the shadow of the Sanitarium, the headquarters of our health movement. There have been several things happen during the course of the years that have made this need apparent to us.

The Religio Convention

In its second business session the Religio Department, on Friday, April 9, proceeded immediately to the consideration of recommendations of the resolutions committee.

This committee had considered the proposal of the Lamoni Stake convention, which covered a wide scope, and was published in the April Autumn Leaves, and recommended the adoption of the first, second, and third proposals in that document. This was concurred in by the convention. They further stated that it was their belief that the other points were more specifically covered in the recommendations of the president.

They brought in a number of recommendations, each considered separately, discussed, and most of them adopted.

A summary of the work done includes the following:

The recommendations of the Lamoni Stake were concurred in, except that the latter part of them (printed in Autumn Leaves for April) were covered better in the superintendent's report.

The executive of the Religio and the First Presidency were requested to draft a plan of operation for the Religio, consistent with the new phases of Religio activity, as outlined by the coordinating committee, and it was understood in so doing that any plan they adopted would be brought back to the department for ratification.

These officials are to do this as soon as possible, and immediately on the adoption of their plan, the present constitution is to be abolished.

During this process of change the Religio executive is to be permitted such freedom under the present constitution as will be necessary for the development of Religio work.

President Williams had reported in paragraph 16 of his report, that though there had been a demand in some quarters for an elimination of the present lesson study, he felt this would be disastrous, though there might be some reasons for changing the course to meet present needs. The convention concurred in this idea.

A proposal to transfer the home department of the Religio to the Sunday school was discussed briefly and referred to the coordination committee for recommendation. The transfer of the temperance department to the general church was suggested by the committee, but this was also referred to the coordination committee.

The gospel literature work was turned over to the Department of Publicity, A. E. McKim in charge.

The office of vice president was entirely abolished and instead of two vice presidents we will now have a superintendent of the boy department, functioning under the superintendent of the department, in charge of the work of the boys.

The recommendations in paragraphs (c) to (h) of the report of President Williams were referred to the executive committee for consideration in their charge to work out a plan of operation. The convention in this action did not express itself as to the value of these, but left that in abeyance, to be settled when it comes back in its new form.

It was suggested by President F. M. Smith in a previous address to the Religio that the name Religio did not at present represent the department. While this sentiment is generally acceded to, yet in the expressions of those who spoke on the question there was a rather universal agreement that though this were true, we could well afford to wait till such time as we could find a name that would mean more to us than the present well-known term, Religio. The value of the name to us is considerable. The many who own pins bearing the Z. R.-L. S. of other days were consoled by the fact that they could now secure new ones with the word Religio on them instead, price 35 cents.

The action taken in adopting paragraph 17, sections (a) and (b), changes the name to Religio Department, which applies to local, district, and general organizations, and all officers in charge are to be called superintendents, general, district, and local.

A proposal from C. Edward Miller, of the Graphic Arts Bureau, that the recommendations of A. W. Smith in his report to the Religio be referred back to Brother Smith and the First Presidency and Bishopric for action, with an appropriation of $500, was referred to the appropriations committee.

This committee recommended the following appropriations:

Stenographic help superintendent	$450
Boy Department	250
Loan fund for college students	300
Secretary's expense	15
Treasurer's expense	15
Revising committee	30
Senior Quarterly Editor	260
Junior Quarterly Editor	140
Contingent fund	500

If a superintendent is secured who can give his full time to the department, his expenses will have to be added to this department, and this amount could not be determined.

A committee appointed at the previous session brought in a resolution of appreciation of the services of G. S. Trowbridge, president of the Religio for several years, which was adopted unanimously. On request, Brother Trowbridge made a feeling response. He wanted us all to understand that though he had been compelled to retire from active participation in the work as president, he was still greatly interested in the Religio work.

The election of officers and some other important matters depending on the outcome of this action, were for lack of time deferred till a later session, likely to be Wednesday, April 14.

At the third session of the Religio Department, held at 10.30 a. m. on the 14th, several important items of business were disposed of, and final adjournment had.

The coordination committee had met and a majority of them favored the nomination of T. W. Williams as superintendent for the coming year. Nothing was said of full-time services, but it is understood that though he has new duties and responsibilities, the period of transition of the organization is in such a critical and important stage that it must have the help of those best fitted to see it through. It is hoped in a short time to develop many young men and women who can take over this work and carry it on as it should be. The election of Brother Williams as superintendent was unanimous.

Floyd M. McDowell, who has been in charge of the boy department for several years, and who has given considerable time and attention to its development, was elected superintendent of that department. (It will be remembered that the Religio no longer has vice presidents in any capacity, general, district, or local. They are putting the responsibility on the shoulders of one man or woman, and making him responsible. He can call to his assistance such help as he needs to take the place of the vice presidents formerly elected. Yet it is urged that the work of the boy department be not neglected in the making of any changes in the personnel in districts and locals.)

R. A. Lloyd was elected treasurer to succeed himself.

Regarding a secretary, the following resolution, comprehensive in its scope and being a considerable change in method, was adopted:

"Resolved, that we recommend that the executive be empowered and directed to—

"(a) Establish a permanent headquarters of the department in Independence, Missouri.

"(b) To appoint a secretary who can devote as much of his or her time as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the office, and to fix the compensation for said services.

"(c) Notify officers of districts and locals of the changes in the present constitution and the provisions for further changes as made by this convention.

"(d) Notify officers of districts and locals that the present constitution shall govern, subject to changes made and provided for."

No name was suggested for this office, and it was ruled that he or she would when appointed become a member of the executive committee of the general department. An appropriation was made to provide the expenses of this office.

The executive committee were authorized to appoint the revising committee. Heretofore this committee has been an elective one. The appointment was not made at this time.

A resolution provoking considerable discussion was one proposing to ask for Autumn Leaves as a medium for the Religio and Sunday school, change its name, and leave the appointment of editors, etc., to the Presidency, Board of Publication and the executive of the Religio and Sunday school.

This seemed to some to be too revolutionary for the present, and the idea of a periodical for these departments was indorsed by striking out all reference to Autumn Leaves appearing in the resolution and adopting it.

The resolution as finally adopted read:

"Resolved, that we believe the time has come when the Religio and Sunday school should have a publication commensurate with the needs of these departments.

"Resolved, that we request the General Conference to authorize and direct the Board of Publication to make provision to supply this demand.

"Resolved, that the selection of editors and all other matters involved in carrying out the provisions of the foregoing resolutions be left to the Presidency and Board of Publication and executives of the Religio and Sunday school.

"Resolved, that these resolutions be submitted to the Sunday school department and General Conference for concurrence."

The resolutions committee had previously brought in a recommendation that a per capita tax of twenty-five cents a member be levied on Religio members, to be collected by district and stake organizations, payable by June 30 of each year, for the general expenses of the department. The appropriations committee indorsed this but after some discussion to the effect that this was a dividing of our efforts as to raising funds rather than a centralization under the financial officers of the church the collection of money, to which we should tend more definitely, the proposition was lost, almost unanimously.

However, realizing that there might be a need for the raising of more funds than the sale of Quarterlies now provides (the department's only source of income), a resolution prevailed without opposition to empower the executive, should they find the regular income insufficient, to use their judgment in inaugurating methods for raising such amounts as necessary.

The Church Architect

A few items from a paper by the church architect, Henry C. Smith, April 10, 1920.

The young brother to whom is intrusted the developments of the architectural features of our building program felt that he was not a capable public speaker, so he read an interesting paper to the priesthood, setting forth some most wholesome ideals concerning our buildings and what they should represent for us. Perhaps we can secure this paper for use later on.

From it we present a few things here. A community intending to build a church building should write to him as church architect, Box 255, Independence, and blanks will be sent for the securing of information, after which definite help can be extended. Even plans for homes are available, and advice offered. In some instances there may, of necessity, be a change made, but that is all made plain in the correspondence ensuing.

In all too many instances the results of our promiscuous building of church buildings results, not in the one the Creator attained in the beginning, where he said the work of each day was "very good," but rather, "It will do."

Some excellent examples of church architecture as developed in Europe were cited, built, not from the funds of potentates, but by the labor and sacrifice of the people.

There are some who believe we should have divine revelation as to our buildings, and though this may come, we may safely proceed now on our own best judgment. And we note that Kirtland Temple, the details of which were revealed, is a composite expression of the Colonial and Georgian styles, based on existing architectural ideals. It was not greatly different from the best the people were building in those days. So while we may have divine light on some things of this sort, we should not expect anything fantastic or incomprehensible.

The use of basements for church services is being discouraged in these days, for a number of reasons, chief of which are poor lighting, dampness, and the necessity for many steps for the first floor. There is one State at least, which prohibits the using of basements for church services. But, of course, in general we cannot get away from this, it being more economical than the other, as a general proposition.

In the erection of a new church building one should take into consideration the community developments, and if there is a consistent community ideal, follow it so far as possible.

This community ideal, in its broad application, is a wonderful thing, some cities here and there in Europe and a few in America, are being developed from the beginning largely after our Zionie ideal, where the agricultural and industrial may be merged and unified, thus getting away from the big-city handicaps.

The present-day troubles in the world due to the bad and insufficient housing forced upon us, is causing us to think seriously about an expression of our Zionie ideals in the building of towns and settling of communities.

Church Physician's Recommendations

In his report to conference, belated on account of recent illness, Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, church physician, presented four methods of procedure to increase the efficiency of the health department of the church. He believed the chief function of the department to be the dissemination of knowledge concerning the prevention of disease—physical and mental. His proposed methods to attain this are:

1. Presentation of health subjects in the church periodicals.
2. Sending instructors throughout the church for the purpose of giving lectures and demonstrations.
3. Placing trained workers in districts so that the homes of the members may be visited for the purpose of giving demonstrations on the care of the sick, and instruction in the prevention of disease, in a concrete way. Many people recover in a hospital, but soon their troubles return because the precipitating factors at home have not been removed.
4. Those coming to the Sanitarium will be so instructed in regard to the diseases afflicting them that they will not only be in a better position to care for themselves, but will be sources of information profitable to others.

It is very encouraging to learn there are a number preparing to help in this work.

In my judgment the Sanitarium should be enlarged and its corps of officers increased so as to make possible the proper care of all classes of cases seeking relief.

Songs of the Legion

A new collection of songs used by General Conference in all sessions.

Never before has a conference responded so unanimously to the spirit of congregational singing. And the reason therefore is to be found largely in the general distribution of thousands of copies of "Songs of the Legion," a new collection of hymns, chiefly from our Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises, but including many others of the old songs we all love, with a few new ones. It has 68 pages, with seven songs in the back with music as well as words.

It is a 68-page book, pocket size, with an average of about three songs (words only) on two pages. There is in the front a picture of Albert N. Hoxie, the compiler, our national director of music, and former director of music at the League Island Navy Yard at Philadelphia, and conductor of the Third Liberty Chorus.

Those provided for use by the conference visitors had an extra cover stapled on, while those for sale are the little book inside, nicely printed, and a most acceptable collection of songs.

At the beginning of several of the conference sessions these books were sold in large lots for special purposes. The money was sent in from the audience for collections of ten each for the missionaries, till on the afternoon of the 12th this sum had reached the amount of $304.05, over half of which goes to the organ fund of the new conference auditorium. In fact this is the rule concerning these books: all proceeds above actual cost are to be given over to the purchase of a pipe organ consistent with the needs of the new building.

Ninety of the books were bought in this way for Gomer Reeves, for use in the Hawaiian islands.

There is to be a big reunion for the Indians in Oklahoma, in August, and the L. D. S. Sales Association members went into the audience on the 12th to sell copies for this, mostly on ten-dollar contributions sent in. Altogether, funds were contributed to send 2,027 books to this reunion. At this reunion there will be representatives of the Cheyennes, Otoes, Arapahoes, and Omahas. It is hoped Brother Hoxie will be able to attend. The Indian brethren present at conference were arranged in a row on the platform, and were, Reuben Taylor, Philip Cook, John Bull, with their wives, and Brother Cook's granddaughter.

It was an enthusiastic meeting and the response very liberal toward this good work.

The music of most of the songs is available, details of which will be announced, and Brother Hoxie is arranging now for the Herald and Ensign offices to handle these books for all who want them, which will no doubt be a large number.

And in this connection, we were told by Brother Hoxie that within a few months orchestrated parts for these and other songs would be available and announced.

The Department of Statistics

From an address to the priesthood Wednesday morning, April 7, 1920, by F. A. Russell, head of Statistical Department.

From the beginning the church has made provision for the keeping of records of all church members, a sort of perpetual census. But it is the opinion of the incumbent now in office that there is much more involved in this work than the compilation of census items. There must be some method of clearing up past records as well as the making of new ones. For instance, many names are carried on the records, of persons baptized years ago, but of whose whereabouts no one knows. There must be some way of ridding the record of these names without injustice to the persons involved. Heretofore there have been two ways of getting off the church records: by death and by expulsion. It looks now as though there would have to be added a new one, closely related in method to the profit and loss column in bookkeeping.

The missionary goes out into various communities and makes converts here and there, whose names are recorded on the church records. He goes on to other fields and these people are neglected, lose interest in the work, move away, and are lost. What can be done for these? There are different schemes proposed, one of which is a compilation of district groups, so the members thus situated might come under the direction of the district officers in some way, when the members are not within reach of branches, and thus allow the church records to be kept up to date, because there are those who give their attention to at least keeping track of the members.

It has often been reported to the conference that there are from thirty to thirty-five thousand names on the records whose whereabouts are unknown. They may be members, or they may not? It is the duty of this department to clear up this item and allow us to know just where we are in regard to membership.

Circular letters sent out to district and branch secretaries sometime ago developed a consensus of opinion that there should be a list of the names of the members kept locally.

Some of the reasons for the change to the present method of handling the department are as follows: Reports from branches were piling up in the office to an alarming extent because they contained erroneous items. Often it was necessary to correspond with various individuals to secure the corrections, and in the meantime the names were withheld from enrollment on the general records.

In the first place, if the branch secretary did not forget to attend to it, the names and items of those baptized were enrolled on the branch record, and the items copied and sent to the district conference. Then after due course of time the district secretary might send it on to the church recorder. All taking time and making much delay.

The present system places the responsibility for correctness of items on the man who sends in the items direct. If they are manifestly wrong, he is asked immediately to correct, but if there is no way to detect the error, it must go on record that way. Which demands that the one who baptizes or ordains, or performs any ministerial work in this connection, shall take care to be very accurate in everything. He should see that each item is correct, that the name is not Eddie for Edward, or Edwin, or Edgar, that the middle initial is correct, and above all see that it is readable. In fact, the matter is so important that the printing of all names is being strongly urged.

The steps for the obtaining of a transfer of membership from one branch to another are as follows: When the secretary of the branch where the members has resided, learns that one of the members is to move or has moved to another place, a request is sent to the head of the department of statistics for a transfer card. On this the name and items concerning those to be transferred are filled in, with the new address of the persons removing. In fact so far this latter item of address has been required before a transfer is made. There should be a mutual understanding on the part of the secretary and the other branch officials as to the removal and the necessity for transfer, which will preclude the necessity for having branch action in the matter. Naturally there should be no arbitrary action in these matters, yet the standing of the official, whether he be a good member or a bad one does not enter in this matter. He is under the jurisdiction of the nearest branch, and if there is any reason for action on his membership that should come through other channels than this department which must record a man's membership till he is cut off from the church. The branch which receives the transferred members is not required to take action on receiving or not receiving transferred members.

Should the receiving branch refuse to accept the members? There is no ground for their refusal.

"Creation"

In addition to the congregational singing the department of music again presented an oratorio.

During the war, efforts were concentrated on community singing. This work is continued with unabated energy. Everyone should sing, and sing altogether for good fellowship.

But those who are specialists and have devoted years to study find their services also desired by the church.

It is fortunate that we now have many soloists in the church who work with such excellent spirit that the general director, A. N. Hoxie, says he has the happiest work in the church.

On Thursday evening, April 8, Haydn's "Creation" was sung by a splendid chorus under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie. It is the finest musical success yet secured. The choruses are beautiful and were splendidly rendered.

In "Creation" the soloists have a large share of the work, more so than in other oratorios previously rendered. Paul N. Craig, who sang Raphael, is well known as a conference soloist. Eugene Christy as Uriel, and Bertha A. Burgess as Gabriel also showed exceptional talent and training, and handled these difficult arias in a way that was most pleasing to music lovers and critics.

The rendition marks on the whole, the highest point yet reached by the choir movement.

It was repeated Wednesday evening, April 14.

The Work of the Women

The discussion of problems was taken up by the women at their first meeting on the morning of the 8th. Mrs. D. A. Emslie, of Des Moines, Iowa, spoke on the organization and development of the work in cities. Mrs. Susan Hayer, of Lamoni, Iowa, took up rural work, and others added individual contributions.

District organization was discussed, and the sentiment was strongest in favor of simple organization, each branch to have such assistance as necessary to development of local work, using as little machinery as possible.

The making of lessons simple, and getting them read at all, in fact, was discussed. Getting any reading at all done was considered worth while.

The business session on the 9th received the nomination of the First Presidency by Frederick M. Smith in person, suggesting Mrs. F. M. Smith as general director, and Mrs. D. J. Krahl, president.

No action was taken at this session.

A new edition of the Year Book is promised soon after conference, being delayed to get latest lessons course, and names of new officers. Orders will be taken at convention.

Miss Lucie Sears, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, has been appointed educational advisor.

At the Saturday morning session President Frederick M. Smith recalled the recommendation of the previous session as to officials of the department, pending such time as was required to consider the reorganization.

Mrs. J. R. Lentell addressed the convention, and at 10.30 adjournment was taken to the upper auditorium. Mrs. J. L. Harring of Centerview, Missouri, spoke on the subject: "The rural woman a factor in Zion building."

Mrs. Lydia Wight, of Lamoni, discussed the new child study course. She is supervisor of the home and child welfare bureau, and gave a clear statement of the needs of the course, with its aims and ideals. The course stands for several principles, two of which are: the forming of a policy covering the problems all parents know they must meet; the policy for each problem being worked out by the parents of a neighborhood. The second principle is that of honesty—that kind of honesty which makes parents willing to submit to intelligence tests which discover true ability.

Mrs. Vida E. Smith of Lamoni, spoke on mothers as leaders of girls and the speech will be published in these columns later.

On Monday morning the completion of the transition of the Woman's Auxiliary to a department of church work was effected.

The executive committee was authorized to make such changes as necessary in the governing rules to meet the demands, consistent with the policies of the general organization.

Mrs. F. M. Smith, general director, was authorized to appoint necessary officials, and named the following: Mrs. Audentia Anderson, superintendent; Mrs. William Madison, first assistant superintendent; Mrs. May Mather, second assistant superintendent; Mrs. A. Morgan, secretary; Mrs. Vivian Weed Barto, assistant secretary. These constitute the executive committee.

It has been planned to have all educational work of the department under the care of the President of Graceland College.

A headquarters will be established in Independence, and all mail should be addressed to the general church offices, Independence, for the Woman's Department.

The annual evening program, held Monday evening was perhaps the best ever given by the department.

Following a song service in charge of A. N. Hoxie, prayer was offered by B. R. McGuire.

A paper on "Women's part in government making" was read by Dora Young, of Holden, Missouri.

Two vocal solos were beautifully rendered by Aileen Bullard, an Oriole girl of Independence.

"Teachers for the times" was the subject of an address by Miss Lucie Sears, of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

The place of women in the immediate plans of the church was definitely emphasized by President Frederick M. Smith.

The Religious Education Class

The priesthood were addressed on April 9, by Cyril E. Wight, instructor in the religious education class at Graceland College.

The time was devoted to an explanation of the work done the previous year, with some of the ideals as to the future, set out rather extensively in the report of Graceland College to General Conference.

The lectures given to the ministry preceding General Conference were on the same subjects and by the same men as presented to the class during the past year.

It is very difficult to summarize properly an address of this kind, dealing with principles and ideals almost exclusively, but it is apparent that though this work is in its incipiency and will be improved, there is no danger of turning out a product that is ready to accept without question anything offered.

The instructors have endeavored to increase ability of the class to differentiate between fundamentals and incidentals. Dogmatic teachings are not indulged in, but the pupil is encouraged to develop his own expression to the highest point. They are trained to think clearly, logically, and independently—which naturally results in questions on everything, as to its relative importance, whether it be fundamental or not.

"Restoration"

One of the most appreciated events of the many General Conference meetings was the church play at the Battery Building, on the evenings of April 12 and 13 and repeated again, followin gconference for the many Independence people who could not find entrance the first two evenings.

The music was furnished by the Liberty Orchestra, directed by R. T. Cooper. Especially fine was the work of the string quartet, who gave two selections preceding the pageant proper. They seemed to have the art of expression developed beyond that usually possessed by people of their age and experience.

"Restoration" is a church play in three acts, developed and produced under the immediate direction of a committee composed of Mrs. E. S. McNichols, Mrs. Royal Brocaw, Mrs. M. T. Williams, and Mrs. Clifford Forties, all of Independence.

A synopsis follows:

Synopsis

"Restoration" is a play, portraying the history of the church from the year 1820 to the present day.

In the opening scenes Church, with her ever faithful companions, Faith and Hope, establishes herself with her various quorums according to the pattern laid down by Jesus Christ. She enjoys a season of prosperity.

Ere long dark and cloudy days come upon her. She experiences terrible persecution. Discord, with her emissaries, enters upon the scene, sowing seeds of discontent among the Brotherhood. Baneful effects follow. The ranks are broken. Confusion accompanies. Apostasy is ushered in. Church is plunged into the very depths of despair. Church laments because of her calamities. Throughout this distressing time Sorrow hovers near Church. Light, though it goes down, does not go out entirely.

After the Apostasy Faith and Hope prove a tower of strength to Church through the long weary years of waiting which follow. Church again establishes herself in all her original beauty and grandeur. Faith and Hope thereupon rejoice.

The closing scene finds Church in her World Garden intent upon the establishment of Zion. She is dealing with problems of the present day. Love comes to her assistance and success is assured.

The cast of characters is as follows:

Church	Mrs. Clifford Forties
Faith	Miss Louise Newton
Hope	Miss Vera Adams
Sorrow	Miss Florence Koehler
Discord	Mrs. Lida Andes
Emissaries {	Heresy	Mrs. Earl Cox
	Envy	Mrs. Robert Miller
	Jealousy	Miss Virginia Budd
	Ambition	Miss Coral Mottashed
	Distrust	Miss Leona Thompson
Spirit of Love	Miss Velma Brocaw
Priesthood	Mr. Gene Closson
Sunday School	Miss Virginia Budd
Zion's Religio	Mr. Walter Chapman
Woman's Auxillary	Mrs. Charles Koehler
Temple Builder	Miss Lillian Williams
Boy Scout	Mr. Leroy Smith
Oriole	Miss Rilla Leeka
Officers	Young Men of the Church

The outline is as follows:

Act One
Scene 1	Hill Cumorah	Time, 1820
Scene 2	Era of Church Prosperity
	Tableau
	Liberty Orchestra
Act Two
Scene 1	Era of Discord
Scene 2	Apostasy
Scene 3	Lament of the Church
	Liberty Orchestra
Act Three
Scene 1	Church Reorganized
Scene 2
Place		A Garden
Time		The Present
	Church: Departments: Necessities
	Love's Appeal
	Tableau

The combination of recital with tableau effect, supported by effective and appropriate chorus music was universally effective, the audience being perceptibly moved. "More effective than a sermon," "The equal in splendor of any five-dollar affair in the big cities," "The best I ever saw," are typical commendations heard.

The lament was written by Elbert A. Smith, the other parts by the committee.

We hope they will begin now to provide a pageant commensurate with the auspiciousness of the opening of the new General Conference building two years from now.

Annual Oratorical Contest

The successful contestant this year was Fernell Briggs, Goodland, Kansas.

The following is the college contest program at the Stone Church, on the evening of April 8. The gallery railing was beautifully draped with long blue and old gold streamers and bows, and the choir loft was filled to capacity with students, faculty, and alumni of Graceland. There was not even standing room for the audience. The decision of the judges was: Fernell Briggs, first; Forest Roberts, second; James Houghton, third.

Conference Notes

Baby likes church. He dearly loves to participate in the program, and help attract attention to his mamma. As soon as she is nicely seated he begins entertaining the childless old couple next to him. At least that is his name for the series of antics he performs for their benefit. He gurgles and drools and waves his bonnet string in imitation of the baton and squeals with delight when he has out-manuevered the leader of song. When they have gratefully left him their vacant seat, he considers it a just reward of his efforts and settles himself for a nap with the sense of having made this program interesting to somebody.

If the grown-up Johnnies could have been present at one of the services and heard their devoted mothers relate heart-rending tales of when little Johnnie was sick and wanted papa to pray out loud, they would be reminded of the "Moody and Sankey" stories of conversions, and perhaps regretted that a good meeting had been spoiled by what in movie parlance would be called "sob stuff."

We dearly love to step on peoples' toes, literally if not figuratively; especially if we weight two hundred. One can do it in a jolly crowd so easily and the victim doesn't know who to glare at.

Perhaps if the church photographer were to take daily pictures of the conference in session he would ask for a change of faces in the balcony's first row.

A bumblebee entered the church one day,
It buzzed and it hummed and it swished its wings,
Then out at the window it flew away,
Oh, beware of the one it stings.

For the germ of confusion it leaves behind,
Is heard in the murmur and whisperings
And a noisier crowd it is hard to find
Than the one the bumblebee stings.

One of the greatest tests of complete consecration is the giving up of our work to another—to be displaced and see another take our work is indeed a little hard, but it is one of the lessons we must learn that this work is too big to allow for individual feeling. We must be big enough to take defeat nobly.

Reports to General Conference

THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS

To the First Presidency and General Conference: As the report for 1919 was too late for publication last year, we will report some of the important items with this report. Those under General Conference appointment have been very active during the year, and some of those laboring locally have done remarkably well.

2. Out of a total membership of twenty-five we have reports from twenty-two. Some of those who have been unable to do any work have reported the conditions which have prevented their laboring.

3. The reports show the following work done: sermons, 1,633; meetings in charge, 668; baptized, 37; confirmed, 94; ordained 26; children blessed, 517; patriarchal blessings, 1,479; administered to the sick, 1,421; marriages solemnized; 22; official visits to members reported, 338, much of this work not having been reported. One brother writes that he visited 600 Saints in three months. One new opening has been made. Fourteen of the order are under General Conference appointment. Since last reporting two have been added to the order by ordination; i. e., R. Baldwin and G. W. Burt. We have lost three by death; Henry Kemp, J. W. Backus, and William Lewis; and Brother Jones of Australia by transgression; leaving our present number twenty-five.

4. There has been one gratifying feature of the reports of most of the men, that is, they have been blessed in their labors during this year and have rejoiced very much at the witness of the Spirit in their work. We believe they have accomplished much good in comforting and strengthening the Saints.

5. Ever praying for the success of the work and the final redemption of Zion, we are, yours in the hope of the gospel,

FREDERICK A. SMITH, President.
H. O. SMITH, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 13, 1920.

CHURCH ARCHITECT

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The office of church architect was created in January, 1919, and sanctioned by the following General Conference. The large amount of work in so many varied forms during the past year has proved the wisdom of such action. Constructions ranging anywhere from small remodelings, farm buildings, small and large churches, up to our new college development, have kept me busily occupied. There have been more than fifty inquiries received; for some, studies were made, while for others detailed drawings were necessary. As a result very little time has been left for intensive study on the several larger problems which we see before us.

2. From this brief experience as church architect, I realize that the work is already much involved, and from present indications will be much more so, and that there is urgent need for young men to prepare by intensive study in architecture and its allied fields, and be ready to consecrate of their time and talent to this part of the church work. In building up physical Zion there will be required master minds, trained in all of the arts and sciences.

3. In uniting such a corps of professional workers, we are not behind the world wherein the latest appeal is for inter-professional activities. In the church our professional services belong to the church and society—not as a charity but as a right. When there are enough who really care deeply and sincerely, we shall then have a true professionalism. Instead of the present competitive system where business, commerce and industry can hire or buy all knowledge, science and skill in order to make profits, we shall have created a system where science, knowledge and skill develop, direct and control business, commerce and industry as agents for the welfare of mankind. Then we shall materially aid in building Zion.

4. We look forward to the time when we can have uniformity in an ideal architecture, but due to the financial limitations of our building funds as well as our ideas and requirements varying from east to west, north to south, we shall find it a matter of time and education before satisfactory results are noticeable. Owing to these varying conditions and our cosmopolitan make-up nothing can be found more suitable for us than an adaptation of forms and motives universally recognized as useful, beautiful and true. The Colonial-Georgian period type furnishes the flexibility necessary for our purposes and should be doubly appreciated by us for being developed by a people foremost in their time in a struggle for religious freedom. This type is represented by the first permanent edifice built by our church—Kirtland Temple—which offers the best suggestions for us to follow.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. SMITH.

COMMITTEE ON BIBLE NORMAL BOOK

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The committee on Bible Normal Book respectfully presents the following report:

2. Immediately after their appointment they were notified that a manuscript was in preparation, to be submitted for such a book. Through a variety of circumstances, and the restrictions made by the author, this manuscript was not read by them, but was returned to the author.

3. By the original action appointing the committee, the committee were to provide for the writing of the book, such textual matter to be submitted to the First Presidency for approval, and later to the Board of Publication for printing.

4. One basic objection of the author was that the work should be passed upon by one of the three quorums, First Presidency, Twelve, or Seventy. The committee, as high priests, he said, had no right to pass thereon. The committee suggested to the Conference of 1918 that the manuscript be referred to the First Presidency to determine its value, and that the question of the demand for such a book be referred to the Board of Publication. The committee has felt that all they could do in the meantime was to await the action of these two bodies. They do not consider, however, that the question of demand is to be determined by the demand for this particular manuscript alone; but rather what demand exists for a specially prepared Bible Normal Book.

5. We have been informed that the manuscript aforesaid was returned by the Presidency to the author, and by him was placed in the hands of the General Superintendent of the Sunday School Department, Gomer R. Wells, and by Brother Wells turned over to the Board of Publication. We have not been advised either directly or indirectly as to the action of the Board of Publication, either with regard to this manuscript, or with regard to the demand existing for a Bible Normal Book.

6. Recently the General Sunday School executive council appointed an editor in chief for the Sunday school Quarterlies, and a consulting board. This work when put in order will cover from three to eighteen years of age, and still leaves a need for advanced work for adult classes. There are in existence a goodly number of works on pedagogy and child psychology, and the work of the teacher. But there still appears to exist a need for a suitable book on the Bible. Doubtless there will soon exist a need, not only for an elementary work, but also for one in Biblical research.

7. Under the latter head, the committee have considered a few lessons, but are informed that the author is unwilling to place these at the disposal of the Sunday School Department, though willing that they should be adopted as written, if so desired.

8. It seems to us that there is an increasing need for such a work in the Sunday School Department, also the department of normal work at Graceland College (an extension course) and possibly in the class in Religious Education at Graceland College.

9. But at present the matter rests with the Board of Publication, by such action to state whether in their judgment there exists a sufficient demand at this time to warrant the preparation of such a book. Respectfully submitted,

S. A. BURGESS,
F. M. McDOWELL,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

COMMITTEE ON TEACHER'S EDITION OF INSPIRED TRANSLATION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: Difficulty has beset your committee during the past year in attempting to forward the printing of the Teacher's Edition of the Inspired Translation.

2. As per our report of one year ago, the manuscript was finished and we have endeavored to have competent critics examine this manuscript, but up to date have succeeded only partially.

3. Brother I. M. Smith gave us the benefit of a brief examination of the manuscript and makes some good criticisms. Herewith we submit an excerpt from his report:

4. "I do not deem it necessary for me to report anything more. I noted a number of other mistakes, similar to those I have referred to, such as repeating texts in the same list of references and, once in a great while, a text which did not apply; but the work is remarkably free from errors of that kind; most of them are in repetitions; and it would be almost, if not altogether, impossible to escape that, where one man is doing the work alone. Hence, I think the work should be carefully gone over by two good men, men who are young enough for their minds to be active and alert and their memories good; but I do not think anyone should be authorized to make any changes in the manuscript, except the author, for it is a splendid work and should not be changed in any particular only by its author, that is, as long as he is able to make his own corrections. And that is why I recommend that those who go over it, go over it with Brother Lambert; he has given the matter months of hard study; and no man, after giving it only a very brief examination, as I have, is qualified to sit in judgment upon it. Some of the things to which I have called your attention in this report, might appear in altogether a different light if I could hear his explanation. I think the system of references which he has used is a good one; and I think, too, that he has done his work remarkably well; but no man could do such a work as that without making mistakes and allowing errors to creep in, unless he were divinely inspired all the time he was working at it."

5. Your committee is still trying to find the person or persons competent and willing properly to examine and if necessary revise this manuscript.

6. It would have been almost impossible to publish this work this last year even had we been able to have it examined, on account of the conditions prevailing in the printing market.

A. CARMICHAEL,

For the Board of Publication.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 16, 1920.

AUDITOR'S REPORT

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The reports submitted at this time by the different departments cover a period of only a part of a year—to June 30, 1919—caused by the Conference action changing the date for closing all books to that date.

This period can rightly be called a "reconstruction period" in our accounting departments and of necessity shows comparatively little of the improved methods and conditions which we have been endeavoring to bring about. We trust that the full year report from June 30, 1919 to June 30, 1920, will show the improvement clearly and be pleasing and gratifying to all.

I have given my entire time during the past year to my church work and I judge from the desires expressed and the kindly way in which they have received my suggestions, that the brethren in whose departments my work has entered, have heartily welcomed the changes made in most instances.

I have endeavored to keep the Presidency in full touch with my activities and have earnestly desired to discharge the trust imposed upon me in a way that would be acceptable to God and profitable to his work.

Praying that the peace and blessing of his Holy Spirit may be with and direct in all that is done, I remain sincerely,

Yours for service,

R. B. TROWBRIDGE,
General Church Auditor.

CHURCH HISTORIAN

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The action of the post-conference council of last June in reorganizing the historical department, assigned to me the task of Church Historian; and appointed as assistant in this office, Brother Heman Hale Smith. The work of the office has been done under great handicap, as much of my time has been necessarily devoted to the work of the Independence

Stake presidency, which I have had to administer without counselors; also the presidency of the Independence Institute, with some eight hours of teaching each week. Brother Heman Hale Smith has carried the department of History in Graceland College, teaching eleven hours per week.

The office work of the department has been carried on as best it could be with the office, records, books, and fixtures at Lamoni in charge of Brother Heman Hale Smith, while I have been located at Independence. We have been obliged to carry on the work mostly by correspondence, leaving the editing of the Journal of History largely to Brother Heman Hale Smith; while we arranged for the work at frequent conferences, in either Lamoni or Independence, as occasion required.

In the year some seventy local historians have been appointed or sustained in former appointments. These have reported to the office the local history of their various branches, districts, or stakes, new methods and plans having been installed. The press of other work, and the fact that I have not been able to go over the matters in the historian's office, render it impractical to report a lengthy survey of the year's history, as has hitherto been done by the Historian. Much of this matter has been presented already in the Journal of History. I have supplied material for a chapter on the Latter Day Saints, in the forthcoming History of Jackson County, Missouri by William Z. Hickman; have also answered a voluminous correspondence relating to the history of the church.

In addition to the work already indicated, Brother Heman Hale Smith visited several reunions and other church gatherings, and delivered forty-one lectures, chiefly upon the subjects, "The League of Nations," "Democracy and the church," "The pioneer and the church," and "Industrial Zion." He has attended meetings of the Nebraska Stake Historical Society, American Economic Association, and American Historical Association. As assistant historian he carries membership in the following associations, American Historical Society; Iowa State Historical Society; Mississippi Valley Historical Association; American Economic Association; American Political Science Association; and American Association for Labor Legislation.

He has arranged to furnish historical matter relating to Mormonism to the Wisconsin State Historical Society and the Texas State Historical Society; and has also perfected arrangements with Doctor B. F. Ssambaugh, Superintendent Iowa State Historical Society, for the writing of a volume entitled Mormonism in Iowa, to be published by the Iowa State Historical Society, as a companion volume to the one already issued, "Quakers in Iowa." This will be a valuable contribution on the history of the church in Iowa and elsewhere.

We desire to make the Historical Department of the greatest service to the church. We are anxious to preserve the current history, and present in the most available and useful form, the historical data already collected. We hope to be of service to the ministry, both local and missionary, in their work, and to this end we recommend the following program of work as what we would like to do.

The consolidation of the office, and the removal of same with its library to Independence, Missouri.

That the connection of the Church Historian's office with the department of history in Graceland, if maintained, be supervisory only.

That more opportunity for research work, with regard to original sources of the latter-day work, be provided for.

That a historical society or association within the church be formed, with a view to stimulating the collection and preservation of historical data, and the circulation of the Journal of History.

That the historian's office be the custodian of all historical manuscripts of original nature, letters, rare volumes and papers of historical value.

That additional help be provided in the form of assistant historian; that a curator of the library and museum of historical materials be appointed.

That the manuscript of the fifth volume of Church History be completed and published in the next few months.

That a shorter history of the Latter Day Saints, a handy reference volume, of popular price, be published at the earliest convenience.

Very respectfully submitted,

WALTER W. SMITH,

Church Historian.

COMMITTEE ON CHURCH OF CHRIST

To the First Presidency and General Conference: Your committee appointed to confer with the Church of Christ, begs leave to report progress. In the past year a number of joint sessions have been held with the Committee of the Church of Christ, in all of which a fine spirit of fellowship has been manifest.

For some months past this committee in joint session with the committee from the Church of Christ, have been making a searching comparison of the revelations of God to the church, as published in the Doctrine and Covenants (Kirtland, 1835, edition and subsequent editions); and the same as published in the Evening and Morning Star, published at Independence, Missouri, 1832-33, and reprinted at Kirtland; the Book of Commandments which was in process of publication when the Saints were expelled from Independence, 1833, manuscript copies of the revelations used by the printers of the Star and Book of Commandments; the John Whitmer manuscript history; and other publications. This has proved very interesting, and we hope to have some valuable data to submit for publication in the near future.

Very respectfully submitted,
WALTER W. SMITH,
Secretary of Committee.

MEMORIAL TO THE MARTYRS.

To the General Conference: Since our last report on he work at Nauvoo in connection with the church properties there, the west one half of Block 155 has been acquired from President Frederick M. Smith for a consideration of $500. This gives the church the full block on which the graves of the martyrs are located. During the year a substantial, attractive iron fence was placed around the graves not only of the martyrs but all others marked on this block.

During the early part of the year much grading in Block 156 was done under the direction of Brethren Lambert and Layton. It seems evident to the committee that some additional work will have to be done to protect the water front of this block as the bank is being constantly carried away.

Brother and Sister J. W. Layton have continued in charge of the work there and they report an ever increasing number of visitors and tourists. We hope, through the publicity department, to work out a more liberal campaign for advertising during the present year.

Respectfully submitted
MARK H. SIEGFRIED,
For the committee.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION

To the President and General Conference Assembled: Herewith is submitted the annual report of the Board of Publication.

THE PAPER CONDITION

2. The past year has been one fraught with much danger to the publishing interests not only of the whole civilized world but also of the church.

3. The condition of the paper market has been and is still in a chaotic state. Prices have fairly soared and it has not been so much a question of paying the price as it has been of being able to get the paper at any price. Through the efforts of those who have taken a personal interest in our publishing affairs, we have been fortunate enough to be able to keep our presses going. These and other untoward conditions have handicapped us in keeping our stock of books up to normal.

THE LABOR QUESTION

4. Another disquieting condition obtaining is that of labor and wages. A readjustment has been made in the wages of the publishing house employees, the Board of Publication feeling that justice required an advance in their wages. This, with the heavy advance in material of all kinds, has occasioned an advance in

THE SELLING PRICE

5: The members of the conference will remember that a substantial increase in the subscription rate of our publications was made last summer. This advance is not in any way out of proportion when compared with the advance of material and labor entering into the cost of production. That the Board of Publication has not made an unwarranted advance in price, we submit the following:

COMPARATIVE PRICES OF PUBLICATIONS

Name	Price	Total pages	Aver. reading	Aver. Per cent adver.	Per cent reading	Per cent adver.
Saints' Herald	$2.25	24-32	23-30	1-1½	95	5-Unpaid
*Youths' Companion	2.50	24	16	8	67	33-Paid
Gospel Trumpet	3.00	32	26	6	81	19-Paid
Christian Work	3.00	32	26	6	81	19-Paid
Christian Herald	2.50	32	17	15	53	47-Paid
The Presbyterian	2.50	32	24	8	75	25-Paid

*Equal to 24 pages in Herald.

6. All other papers (Youths' Companion excepted) charge from 50 cents to $1 extra on foreign subscriptions. We have refrained from doing this so that our brethren in foreign countries would receive their church literature as cheaply as possible. On these foreign subscriptions we have lost financially.

7. The fact that one of the principal (if not the principal) factors constituting the financial success of any paper is that of the income derived from the paid advertising matter and that we do not carry such advertising, makes the subscription price of our paper moderate indeed.

8. The policy of the Board of Publication has been to eliminate all paid advertising and give to our readers a paper full of solid reading matter. The size of the subscription list of the Herald does not permit it to become a successful competitor for advertisements. The subscription list is too small.

9. The board also feels that it is its duty to call the attention of the conference representation to the fact that the best interests of the publishing concerns of the church would be conserved by placing the publishing houses as far as possible under one roof and one management. A big saving financially would be the result not to say anything of an increased efficiency in management both financially and editorially. The board has sensed the necessity of this for several years but has not felt that the time was propitious for the change. We submit this for your consideration.

FINANCIAL REPORT

10. We submit also our financial report from February 1, 1919 to June 30, 1919. This report shows a loss for the five months due to the fact that it was thought best not to list certain plates and cuts as assets which had heretofore been so listed. The amount approximately credited to depreciation was $2,180. It should also be remembered that most of the subscriptions are paid during the last half of the year; so that a statement covering the first half year cannot be justly compared with the next report without taking this fact into consideration.

11. Also we note that this report is only approximately correct. The inventory used in making up this report was the same as was taken February 1, 1919. This financial statement also emphasizes the necessity of an advance in prices. During and previous to the time covered by the following financial report, material had greatly increased and our advance in prices had not kept pace with this increase. The financial report follows:

12. The following statement and balance sheet from the Standard Publishing House in Australia will be of considerable interest:

"I forward you a copy of our trading and profit and loss account and balance sheet for the year ended June 30, 1919, which was submitted to our mission conference at the end of December and approved.

"The balance sheet will give you the opening amounts of the real accounts at July 1 and you will be able, by comparing the trial balances from month to month, to see just how the asset and liabilities accounts progress."

LAMONI, IOWA, February 6, 1920.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT

To the Presidency, Conference, and Convention: Until this year, I have been comparatively free from serious sickness during thirty years of church service. The day after last conference adjourned I was attacked with a middle ear trouble that lasted eight months and took me to the Sanitarium twice, the last time for a major operation in the mastoid process. I have been unable to push my office work as planned but am thankful to have come through as well as I am.

REVISION OF LESSONS

However, a piece of work of great importance to the church was started. The body had for a long time borne patiently with a tardy delivery of Quarterlies, but the last convention requested that lessons be delivered to the schools earlier. The executive council took steps to remedy this at our meeting in June, when my recommendations of several years began to take form: that a thorough revision of the course be accomplished. At our next meeting in September it was decided to commence work on a final revision of the cycle due for publication January, 1922. To provide for lessons between now and then, it was decided to clip all lessons for remainder of present cycle and hand them in without editing; and to employ one editor instead of five. This is being done and I am happy to report earlier delivery of lessons, those for April-June being mailed a month earlier than ever before. Those for third and following quarters will be ready six weeks before, enabling us to deliver them in Australia in time for use on date intended. This far-away mission has always been at least three months behind date.

The revision of lessons will be carried on by an editor-in-chief, Mrs. Christiana Salyards, and an expert consulting board composed of S. A. Burgess, F. M. McDowell, and Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith who act as lessons committee and revising committee. The preliminary work of revision began early in January. They fully realize what an important work it is also their responsibility, and are proceeding carefully. They consider that certain research work should first be done, for which funds are being provided. The nature of this has already been published in the official church organ. This revision will take a year or more. It would be accomplished sooner if all concerned could give full time to the task. However, we expect they will turn over the best set of lessons to be had anywhere.

NEW QUARTERLIES NEEDED

Our revised lessons would be incomplete without an advanced senior or adult Quarterly. At present, those who finish the senior course must continue to review it or form classes in other lines of study such as, Church History, Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, economics, and sociology, and with no course or plan to give uniform direction to these studies throughout the church. The convention of last year gave the executive council power to act in this matter and the consulting board will be directed to give their attention, in connection with the revised cycle.

There is such an urgent demand for a teachers' Quarterly that we recommend and urge this convention to authorize the same, to be printed as soon as practicable.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MANUAL

New officers are continually asking for helps and simple instruction in school management which increases correspondence and would be too bulky if mimeographed in circular form. Every school should have a small handbook for constant reference. We recommend that the preparation and publication of such a book be authorized and that the constitution and by-laws be a part of the contents.

TEACHER AND OFFICER TRAINING

Reports show that in many of our districts this phase of our development is not taken seriously, showing that much work is yet to be done to create a desire for proper preparation in order that we may more fully function as a "department of religious instruction." In no other way can we dignify this new definition of our work, and that means that we must train our workers. If the Master requires study and preparation on the part of his ministers is it any less needed by those who are to instruct the children of to-day who become the church of to-morrow? Shall the church be satisfied with less efficiency in those who do this work than is required of those who give secular instruction in the public schools? We think not. From now on, this office will press this question harder and we believe we can promise a more efficient staff of officers and teachers in the near future. Larger plans for the coming year are now in mind.

I regret that my second assistant, Brother A. L. Sanford to whom was given the boosting of this important work last year reports that it was impossible to do anything because his time was so fully taken up with his secular employment and the local church work in Independence Stake. About the time Graceland College was in a position to do its part, the director of the normal division was nearly killed in an auto accident and my own serious operation followed soon after. For three reasons this phase of our work has not been pushed this last year. However, the normal director, Lonzo Jones reports 200 active students enrolled who have done work and taken at least one examination since November 1, 1919. Up to February 14, 1920 there are 55 newly enrolled students who have not yet taken examinations, 212 examinations had been given and 40 certificates granted. He says there are hundreds of names in the old file who have dropped the work uncompleted. It is a part of our plan to try to get some of these to finish the course.

REVISING COMMITTEE

As the appointing of a revising committee for the year past was left to the executive, they appointed J. W. Wight, E. D. Moore, and D. F. Lambert, but the last named could serve but one quarter. Reporting for the committee, Brother Wight says they have completed revision of lessons up to June 30, 1920. Since the lessons to follow, up to December, 1921, have been revised several times, the executive dispensed with the further services of this committee; and have asked the new consulting board to be the revising committee for the new cycle of lessons beginning January, 1922. The former revising committee closes report with these words, which fully justify the decision of the executive council to revise the course: "Feeling that the lessons thus far have come short of being 'graded lessons' we trust the new method will bring the necessary relief and place the Sunday school in its rightful and contemplated place."

ORGANIZED CLASS WORK

In June, the executives of Religio and Sunday school appointed Mrs. Anna de Jong Smith of Saint Louis, Missouri, to be organized class superintendent. Her efforts have been seriously handicapped by the want of an instruction pamphlet. An excellent treatise had been prepared by her predecessor, T. W. Williams, and the manuscript given to printers in September, but unusual delays were experienced and we regret to say the new superintendent did not get this much needed help in her hands until February—too late to produce the results for the year that were anticipated by her.

She reports having sent out three general letters totaling 2,502 to nearly every Sunday school in the church, urging class organization and pointing out its many advantages. She has written sixty-four personal letters in answer to inquiries, the percentage of which is small but there is every evidence of considerable interest in many schools that are following suggestions without reporting to her. She says, "there certainly is a very great need of continuing this effort and it is to be hoped it will get an early start this coming year. Feeling the need of carrying the classes just a little beyond the organization point, I have arranged a paper, 'After Organization What?' to be supplied with every organized class pamphlet sent out. I have done what I could to promote this work and feel that had we not had so much difficulty in securing our pamphlet we would have made much greater progress. This hindrance was quite a blow to us because of being kept from making prompt responses to calls for help."

HISTORIAN

Miss Nellie M. Anderson our historian reports the recording of important events of the last year, and is gathering Sunday school history material and preparing it for general use when needed.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

One of our hardest workers was A. W. Smith my first assistant. In addition to his business, the Christmas offering seemed sufficient to take all this spare time but when we were sick and found it difficult to get some one to push the winter institutes he consented to take that work too. His efforts in both directions were worth while. He writes:

The work in connection with this office has been rather strenuous throughout the past year. I have worked carefully in conjunction with the Presiding Bishop's office and they have given me every assistance necessary. There have been times when the stenographic help was not adequate and I had to do a great deal of work at home during the evening hours, but not as much as last year. I feel that the expense in connection with this particular effort has been fully warranted and believe that we should not hesitate to add a little more, that greater help might be given to the schools by way of suggested programs, rally days, and special days to be observed, simultaneously, by the majority of the schools. It would unquestionably result in increased interest, attendance, and membership. This means increased offerings.

Five hundred large and small clocks were printed, wrapped and mailed to schools. Was fortunate to secure help most of the time on this. I have stenciled, mimeographed, and mailed out to approximately 1,000 addresses eight different letters pertaining to the Christmas Offering. At this date I do not know just what the total will be, but it will approximate $100,000, hence I feel that the great amount of work was justified and has been very little as compared to results.

The result of the Christmas Offering effort cannot be measured in dollars and cents only, for in every case where the schools have gone about their work carefully, systematically, and enthusiastically there has been an increase in attendance, interest, spirituality, and sociability. The little folks have worked with the older ones and wherever there was a spirit of contest all trivial matters were forgotten, the losing contestants always joining happily with the winning side.

While we have not reached the aim set for 1919 and are disappointed, we are not in any measure disheartened; for we feel that a jump in three years time from $12,000 to approximately $100,000 is indeed a splendid showing and the good schools who have accomplished this, can, with the help of those who have not thus far done their part, easily reach the $150,000 mark in 1920, and why not? Hence, I feel greatly encouraged to believe that greater returns are in store for us this year. I have rejoiced on many occasions because of the splendid reports acknowledging a higher power helping in their efforts. Among these have been some of the greatest testimonies I have ever read or listened to.

THE WINTER INSTITUTES.—Since taking charge of this work, I have requested and received corrected outlines from all of the executives who were asked to furnish institute material with one exception, the gospel literature work. I have stenciled and run off about 250 outlines, and mailed a quantity to the Woman's Auxiliary and to various executives. The balance is being mailed out as fast as new teams are organized in the various districts.

Our plan has been to get each district church president, Sunday school superintendent, Religio president and Woman's Auxiliary organizer to confer and select a competent team to present the institute work in every branch where possible, and also hold a district session. Every local and district Sunday school superintendent, Religio president and church president has received a general letter telling of the institute work and urging cooperation and support. Have also written and had published three different articles about the work.

Thus far, I have supplied only twenty-five teams with institute outlines and I have not the assurance that every one of these will carry out the work planned. Some teams may have disorganized. It seems a sad condition when less than one third of the districts show sufficient interest to desire the outlines. Letters from a number of locals stated they sent in request to their district officers for institute sessions. I have noticed that in some of these cases, no response has come from the district.

In many answers from the various district officers they have manifested little or no interest, claiming they do not have any workers they can depend on for this work. I do not believe that such a condition exists. I am sure that we have workers in every one of the districts who are capable and willing to handle this work, if given opportunity and the cooperation of district officers. The outlines supplied are comprehensive and thorough and there is no reason why, with proper study and preparation, the matter could not be properly presented in every one of our districts. If the Religio and Sunday school are to advance and hold our young people, we are going to have to branch out in a more enthusiastic way into a broader field and give our young people a better understanding of the work.

There is both necessity and a demand for this work. I would recommend that the several executives take steps to increase the interest in this feature of the work and endeavor to secure competent help in getting it before the people. It should be started earlier. The one in charge needs to have the council of the various executives concerned in preparing the work and outlining a definite plan of procedure with definite program arrangements and closer cooperation between the departments concerned.

In a general way I have done what other work I could to keep up the interest of the Sunday school department and feel well satisfied that progress is being made throughout the church.

FINANCES

In the next two years it will require a larger expenditure of our funds in order to accomplish a thorough and creditable revision of our lessons, and design and make new cuts and maps which we hope to have ready for the new cycle that begins January 1, 1922. On March 1, 1920 our credit balance, at the Herald Office was $806.83 less than reported below, June 30, 1919.

In harmony with the change made last conference, moving our fiscal year from January to July 1, our treasurer submits his report for the half year, from January 1, 1919 to June 30, 1919:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 28, 1919.

CRADLE ROLL

Early in the year the head of this division, Mrs. H. B. Roberts, 1407 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, became ill and had to go away to regain her strength. On this account Mrs. Alma Burroughs of Independence was appointed to take care of the work for the three months ending October 1 and still acts as assistant. Her capable and willing service is appreciated. Since taking up this work Mrs. Roberts' development as an officer has been very creditable. Summarized, her report for 1920 is as follows:

Out of 67 district superintendents 11 failed to report although written to five times. We have 12 one-hundred per cent districts, that is, all local cradle roll superintendents reported on time. They are: Victoria and New South Wales in Australia; West Virginia, Western Colorado, Northwestern Ohio, Saint Louis, Independence Stake, Pottawattamie, Northern California, Portland, Kentucky and Tennessee, Kirtland.

In these 67 districts there are 448 schools but only 291 of them have cradle roll work. But is it growing; 36 schools started it this last year.

Cradle roll membership last report 2,975; present number 3,153, net gain 662. There were 530 promotions to beginner department—quite a school in itself. These totals would read different if the delinquent district superintendents had reported. Out of this total, 407 children are from nonmembers' families. Can you think of any better opportunity to interest them in the gospel? Our hearts have been made glad at times at seeing the parents of such enter the church by baptism. "A little child shall lead them."

Only 84 schools have a set time for promotion.

There were 1,957 visits made to parents by 133 superintendents.

$58.60 was reported as birth-offering, which was sent in to the Herald Publishing House, to be used in publishing good books for mothers and children, a very worthy object.

Only 33 schools are taking cradle roll papers for mothers. If the other schools could only realize how much good there is in these little papers and how much the mothers appreciate them, they would all be glad to help them in this way.

There are 46 cradle roll classes reported, 38 of them in charge of cradle roll superintendents. This is a very important class, because composed of children near three years of age who thus become used to school and learn to sit quietly before they are promoted to the beginner department. It has truly been said, "A perfect beginning in a life is a great factor in the perfect ending of a life." Let us start our children right.

One hundred Sunday schools have been visited by district cradle roll superintendents. Thirty-three superintendents have studied the art of story-telling and 85 wish to take it up. Great good can come from this study.

Only eleven schools fail to pay for cradle roll supplies. Why that many? Only 26 special cradle roll exercises were held.

Each year I can more fully realize why the Savior spent so many years in preparation, for so short a ministry. As I see it, we need more efficient and devoted workers, and more cooperation in all departments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

We have no more consecrated worker than the head of this division, Mrs. J. C. Schwab, 1130 South Pearl Street, Independence, Missouri. She is a conscientious, hard worker who constantly seeks the Master's aid. The glow of her enthusiasm has touched the hearts of many of her local and district workers while some have failed to sense the value of her services to them. From her report, ending March 1, 1920, we summarize as follows:

AIM.—Our aim has been to establish this work in every local, to organize classes throughout the districts where there is no local organization, and give special attention to individual families who cannot attend either local or class. Investigation has shown that organized districts have much territory not yet reached with this work and the main effort the past year has been to cover this fallow ground and at the same time not neglect the work in unorganized territory.

HINDRANCES.—We are happy to report this work is coming to the front in many places. However, there are only a few districts which report a home department superintendent in every local. There are many causes for this and the church shall continue to suffer the effects so long as the conditions are permitted to remain. I feel grieved to say we have many district and local superintendents who fail to see the great need of this kind of work. It is hard for us to understand their failure to appreciate when it's value to the church is being demonstrated continuously. By correspondence with local and district officers we have plead for cooperation with us to more firmly establish this work. In many districts where we have had wideawake workers with big enrollments accomplishing much good, others have been elected and notwithstanding the many efforts we put forth to assist the new incumbents the work has fallen to a low ebb. On the other hand we have superintendents who say they do not have the time and the work is suffering. I sincerely hope something can be done to overcome this.

I have had many very enjoyable experiences. Have often realized the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit dictating the things to do and say which has caused us to reap results. We are very thankful to our heavenly Father for his guiding hand, also for the kind hands that have so earnestly labored to assist us in the building up of this department.

SOME RESULTS.—The present home department enrollment 5,260, is less than the real figure because some districts with big enrollments put in new officers who did not understand the work and failed to report.

Schools reported having home departments, 392.

Number of home classes, 248.

Transferred from home department to main school, 425.

Dropped because of indifference, and death, 428.

Quarterlies used, 7,369.

Tracts, paper, books distributed, 6,311.

In United States and Canada, we have 79 district home department superintendents and 90 in unorganized places in districts, including extension superintendents, making 169.

Contributions in all districts and locals, $1,499.56.

The Christmas offering of $1,936.60 is $340 more than last year. Much more has been reported as having been turned in, but they failed to state the amount. We have laid definite plans for this year and expect greater results.

Over 2,000 letters and 200 post cards have been mailed from this office since May 1.

EXTENSION WORK.—Our General Extension Superintendent, Mrs. Hazel Burwell, reports 385 enrolled; 38 extension superintendents; 165 Quarterlies used; 24 home classes; 631 tracts, papers and books distributed, and a Christmas offering of $118.00. These are all included in the totals of main report. We are very thankful for the hearty support given by Sister Burwell. She has a broad field in which to labor, the unorganized territory.

TOO MANY CHANGES?

I close the conference year with gratitude to God for sparing my life for some further service and with appreciation for the forbearance and kind expressions from general church officers and my coworkers in this department. Out of 84 district superintendents 80 per cent reported. Had I been able to "follow up," this percentage would have been raised to the usual maximum.

The work appears to be in usual condition, but of course we are not satisfied and it is a part of our business to make all workers dissatisfied with present standards. There has been an unusual number of changes in local and district officers in the last three or four months. We hope each shift will prove beneficial and if so that the officers shall be permitted, if willing, to remain long enough to accomplish definite results.

As a rule, frequent changes are detrimental and make the work of this office less fruitful of results. As far as we see the Divine policy reflected in general and stake church organization, the Master seems to prefer settled administration.

GOMER R. WELLS,
Superintendent.

STATISTICS

It was too early at the time of closing this report for our secretary, E. D. Moore, to submit his annual tabulated report showing the numerical strength of each district. Many district secretaries hold their reports until after the March conventions, making the general report at this time impossible. Although the delegate list is on this account very incomplete Brother Moore sends in what he has with the hope that additions may be accepted later before going to press, but this is by no means sure. He adds:

"There is nothing unusual to report concerning the work of this department. There seem to be the usual number of changes in the district and stake personnel, especially in the superintendent and secretaries. Some districts are showing surprising losses in membership perhaps due to an overhauling of the membership list of the district. But the percentage at the time of making up this report is in favor of the gain column, and likely will increase by the time all the belated districts are heard from.

"Eastern Colorado continued last year as the only district with an all-women staff of district officers. Northern California was a close second with one male member of the executives, while Southern Indiana has in the past ranked high in this regard. We would estimate that fifty per cent of our district officers—not counting the cradle roll superintendents, which are invariably women—are of the gentler sex. Of course the quality of work done depends on the individual."

SUNDAY SCHOOL STATISTICAL REPORT FOR 1919

Table with columns for Districts and Schools, Latest Report, Previous Report, Gain, Loss, Teachers, Home Dept., Latest Report, Previous Report. Includes entries for Kansas, Hugoton, Kansas, Rexford, etc.

Main table with columns for Districts and Schools (1919), Latest Report, Previous Report, Gain, Loss, Teachers, Home Dept., Latest Report, Previous Report. Lists numerous states and districts with their respective statistics.

We now have a total of 84 districts, Southwestern Oregon being disorganized and the membership absorbed by the Portland District. Our total membership reported is 45,719, a net loss of 812. The thousand or more we gained from not having Eastern Michigan reported last year is now deducted in favor of Detroit changing a slight gain into a loss.

We have 3,836 teachers reported, a loss of 57. There are 832 schools reported, a loss of 2. There is but one first-grade district, Independence Stake, the others acknowledging their failure in normal work. The home department figures total 6,352, a gain of 1,006, 73 of these being in Australia and 115 in unorganized territory. We may presume that some of this number are members of disorganized schools.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

To the Presidency, Conference and Convention, Greeting: In reviewing the work of this department for the past year we can report that it has been marked with progress.

The appropriation granted by the last General Conference has permitted us to visit various localities and obtain a better understanding of the needs of the women of the church.

Our observations and impressions have convinced us that a more fundamental course in child study should accompany the one we were using. That it was first our maternal, patriotic and religious duty to study to save the infant life that God sends into the world; to help reduce the astounding rate of infant mortality, as set forth by statistics.

We have, therefore placed in the hands of the women of the church the opportunity to secure a course of study beginning with four lessons on prenatal conditions and thereafter the physical and mental normal development of the child. It is our purpose to have these lessons placed with the mothers of every branch of the church, that none need lack for knowledge in this most holy calling.

What genius—what poetry and song—what defense of the faith has been lost to the church and the world, we may never know, but this we do know; from now on, no present, or prospective mother need lack for guidance along the untried or mistaken path of child care.

Maternity, however, does not occupy a lifetime and since many have opportunity for "service to others" the field of social work has much of interest to women. The aid societies organized throughout the church are steadily falling in line with the general women movement in relief and service work. The natural fitness of women for such work and the value of her cooperation with branch officers becoming recognized, we have prepared a Course of training for social workers. In this training which deals with thorough investigation of unfortunate, social conditions and constructive relief therefor, we believe that the cooperation of branch officers and a social worker, or committee, will conserve the funds of the church, lift families to their proper place, and bring about wiser expenditures when an outlay is necessary. To engage in and perform one's chosen line of work requires the daily maintenance of energy. The demands of the body that material be supplied from which this energy can be taken is the subject of another course of study which we call "Food and the body." This should appeal to the entire membership of the church. Already the lessons which have only been sent out since the latter part of January, have won favorable comment.

In using the "First Aid" and home hygiene and care of the "sick" courses, of the Red Cross Society we are in possession of information already prepared by recognized authorities. Such knowledge is essential to those who would lead the largest lives.

In addition to the above main courses we are publishing through our columns in Saints' Herald, and in leaflet form, a series of articles entitled, "Latter-day motherhood." These are very high in order, treating the spiritual side of motherhood. We have two courses based on textbooks, "Mothers' and Teachers' Problems," text, Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush, and "Home economics," text, Foods and Household Management, by Kinney and Cooley. Four special short courses in leaflet form, "Parliamentary law," "Woman in politics," "Physical culture," and "Sex education." Twenty-three papers on home topics, for reading and discussion by classes and locals. These have been prepared by some of the best talent in the church and are becoming very popular. The studies of physiology, psychology and sociology, we anticipate will be outlined the coming year. Subjects in general education will be under the educational advisor.

Since the receipt of our first orders for leaflets, the latter part of January, 1,540 have been sent out, or an average of 770 per month, reaching that many women; this literature has gone into twenty-six States.

Soon after the beginning of the conference year, some changes were made, after long and thorough consideration. The resolution of the last convention requested the executive committee to reconstruct the bureaus with the view of connecting more closely, theory and practice; to work in harmony with and under the direction of the coordinating committee.

Heretofore the Home and Child Welfare Bureau and the Relief and Service Bureau were confined to activities and the Educational Bureau to education. This line of demarcation seemed too sharply drawn as it was quite impossible for the supervisors to conduct the work of their bureaus satisfactorily to themselves without introducing courses of study and instruction, and this they desired to prepare and direct themselves. Also under the former arrangement, if a member joined the Home and Child Welfare department and engaged in a study, she immediately became involved in the work of another department which later caused confusion in reporting. Since the program of the Woman's Auxiliary is almost entirely educational, preparatory to future and present service, it seemed no longer necessary to identify one bureau as educational, but to make every bureau a unit of educational preparation for its specific activities, making provisions for such former lines of study not coming directly under the Home and Child Welfare Bureau of the Relief and Service Bureau.

On presenting the matter to the coordinating committee the president stated that the Educational Department should be continued. In this the committee, composed of officers and supervisors, could not acquiesce, and for the present, an educational advisor was appointed. The functions of this office are to stimulate effort toward personal development, to urge preparation for service to the church, to coordinate our work with that of other educational departments of the church and to unify the various branches of education we have instituted. To give individual direction to those desiring to qualify for some pursuit in life. The person chosen for this office was Miss Lucie Sears, of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

The secretary and treasurer elected by the last convention both having resigned, it was ordered by the convention that the executive be authorized to fill the vacancies. This was found to be a difficult task. Since the work of secretary and treasurer has increased to the extent that it can no longer be expected that women of sufficiently matured judgment to do the work can give the large amount of time required, without some recompense. It was decided to partly combine the office of secretary and treasurer, making the office, recording and financial secretary. Bishop B. R. McGuire was asked to act as treasurer to which he agreed. The functions of the office of recording and financial secretary are to keep all records of the organization and receive all moneys. These are to be deposited with the treasurer and a statement of receipts and expenditures rendered to him each month. Moneys are placed in the bank to the credit of the secretary as needed, and paid out by her on order of the executive committee. The sum of $5 per week for the services of a recording and financial secretary was agreed upon. Sr. A. Morgan, of Independence, Missouri, was chosen, and accepted the office.

The office of publicity chairman was created within the executive committee and Mrs. J. A. Gardner, first vice president, was chosen. The president of the Woman's Auxiliary was nominated by the First Presidency to fill the vacancy on the Woman's Building committee occasioned by the resignation of Mrs. F. M. Smith.

GENERAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

On December 5, the executive committee and the Woman's Building committee met to consider the proposition of the Woman's Auxiliary taking a more active part in the affairs of the Woman's Building. A communication from the First Presidency stated this to be in harmony with their desires with the view to the Woman's Auxiliary undertaking, eventually, the responsibility of the full control of the building. The committees expressed themselves to be in accord with the suggestion of the Presidency.

President. I have presided over ten sessions of the executive committee, attended and conducted the woman's work at three reunions, visited Sister Lydia Wight, Lamoni, in company with Sister J. A. Gardner, on Auxiliary business, thence to Omaha and Council Bluffs, and the conference at the Hazel Dell Branch, where I presented our work. Addressed a meeting of the Auxiliary at the Stone Church and the stake council at the Woman's Building. Have presented the work at all conventions in Holden Stake during the year and attended to a correspondence of several hundred letters. To the character of the present study courses I have given much time and thought.

In regard to the work in Independence Stake, there are eighteen organizations of our work in the thirty-two groups, and considerable activity. But in my opinion the work needs reorganizing. A plan of procedure has been unfolded to my mind but too late in the year to introduce, knowing that many changes are likely to occur at the conference and convention.

First Vice President. Mrs. J. A. Gardner has fulfilled the duties of this office, together with those of publicity chairman. The work of the latter office has become voluminous and has finally been taken to a room in the Woman's Building where the mailing of leaflets, charts, circulars, etc., can be better handled. Mrs. Gardner visited four reunions and one branch, presenting our work and holding two sessions per day for the children, engaging in story-telling and manual training. She has prepared one of the special short courses in parliamentary law and two papers, "How to organize" and "How to study effectively." She has prepared some stencils and stencil copies of the leaflets.

Second Vice President. Mrs. William Madison has been active in this office, and by request of the executive committee made an extended trip through the Southern States visiting several reunions. This brought us in closer touch with the women in this region than we have been before and we hope to have a still further acquaintance with them and a part in helping them to solve their problems.

Recording and Financial Secretary. Mrs. A. Morgan has rendered efficient help in the work of her office though entirely new to her. Her services date only from the month of August. From her report we note the following for 1919:

Reported: Districts, 32; stakes, 4; locals, 6; number of organizations, 40; membership, 5,477; letters of organization, 633; personal visits, 202; organizations, 336; Relief and Service, 143; Home and Child Welfare, 104; Young Women, 62; Educational, 27.

For 1918: Number of organizations, 19; membership, 3,867; letters of organization, 1,012; personal visits, 130; organizations, 99; Relief and Service, 26; Home and Child Welfare, 9; Young Women, 24; Educational, 40.

Gains and losses: organizations, gain 21; membership, 1,610; letters of organization, loss 379; personal visits, gain 72; organizations, gain 237; Relief and Service, gain 117; Home and Child Welfare, gain 95; Young Women, gain 38; educational, loss 13.

Historian. Mrs. M. H. Siegfried reports a good start made in correspondence and research work. Plans are laid to furnish our official columns with news items from locals and biographical sketches of the leaders in Daughters of Zion and Woman's Auxiliary. The historian sees the need of more diligence and promptness on the part of local secretaries and historians in correspondence with each other.

Editor in chief. Mrs. Audentia Anderson advises that the contributions to our official columns in Saints Herald have been noticeably few. Only thirty-three letters and nine articles from general officers and supervisors were received. The editor has furnished a number of original articles herself and the series, "Latter-day motherhood" is the product of her pen. Mrs. Anderson urges a wider support of these publishing privileges and suggests "a staff of editors among whom the task of arousing and stimulating the sisters of the church to respond to the opportunities of the 'written word' might be divided."

Home and Child Welfare. Mrs. Lydia Wight. A set of charts were prepared with written discussion of each for use at reunions.

Outline of Child Study Course to be offered for publication, in Year Book.

A series of leaflets containing the lessons on above outline. Eight of these series are completed and four are in process of preparation. The correspondence of this bureau totals, approximately seventy-five letters.

For the personal preparation of the study of the "child," much time in research work has been spent, and attendance at the private class of Professor F. M. McDowell at Graceland College from 10 to 12 every Saturday. This class is doing special work in child study using chiefly laboratory and clinic methods.

This demands much research work also.

Recommendations of Home and Child Welfare Supervisor

1. Inasmuch as the Woman's Auxiliary is connected with the Children's Home and as the Child Welfare work might include the consideration of the children in that institution we recommend that the Woman's Auxiliary use its influence to secure the mental test of all children there by Professor McDowell and his associates.

We further recommend that the Auxiliary request the board of control to consider the recommendation of Professor McDowell, based upon his examination of the children as to the system of instruction to be used for their best development.

2. Realizing the impossibility of doing the best work in effective Home and Child Welfare work with mothers who are burdened with many home cares, and that the building of Zion homes depends greatly upon the perfect preparation of young women for mothers, we recommend that the Woman's Auxiliary foster some method of instruction in mothercraft for the young girls of the church until the public school broadens its curriculum to meet that need. The method to be used and the age at which it should be offered to be decided by a committee made up of men and women best equipped with the knowledge of child study, importance of motherhood and the standards of the church in building up Zion.

CHURCH NEWS

"I have been reading a borrowed copy of Autumn Leaves and have found so many good things in it that my heart runs over with joy. I am inclosing a dollar for some copies of the April number, as I feel I can do more good with them than I can with tracts. This number is good enough to awaken the world. . . . The article from J. W. Peterson is a rich treat." —From a letter by Edith Prideaux, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Young People's Day in Pottawattamie District

A general invitation is extended to all the young people of the Pottawattamie District to attend the special services at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Young People's Day, April 25, 1920.

The services will be as follows: Young people's prayer service, 8.30 a. m.; Sunday school, 9.45; preaching, 11; entertainment and lecture, 3 p. m.; Religio, 6.30; preaching, 8.

These services are being arranged for the benefit and advancement of the young people, and we sincerely hope to have a large attendance. All arrangements are being made to care for those who come, the Pyla Class, an organized class of the Council Bluffs Religio looking after this.

F. T. TIMM, President of Class.

A Conference Review

The late conference is certainly one of the most successful conferences, if not the greatest, ever held by the Reorganized Church. The president's message gives a glimpse of a forward look, and may be summarized briefly:

First: The establishment of a central place, and the establishment of the headquarters there; that that place shall be the place for the meeting of General Conference. This involves the erection of a suitable assembly hall and office building.

Second: That we should have a board to see that the erection of our buildings is consistently carried out on a plan which permits of their expansion as circumstances require an expansion. But there is immediate need at the Sanitarium of provision for the care of delinquent children, and as soon as can be provision should be made for the care of those nervously and mentally affected, and for tubercular patients.

Third: That Graceland College should have growing needs provided for in dormitories and gymnasium. Provision was made for a building for public gatherings and recreative education in Lamoni.

Fourth: That the Children's Home should be more of a clearing house; that the children should be placed as speedily as possible in private families.

Fifth: The provision for an industrial council.

Sixth: That the Sanitarium board should be made ex-officio of the Presidency, Twelve, and Church Physician, its work is not limited to the Sanitarium, but should include also public health work throughout the church.

The Children's Home Board should also be reorganized. No steps, however, were taken to do this yet this year.

The action of the conference was to approve the principles involved, except that immediate provision was made for procuring a General Conference building, and also immediate approval was given for provision at the Sanitarium for the care of delinquent children.

A new field of labor is to be opened in South Africa. This is no doubt but one step in advance, for provision is also made for at least one, and possibly two of the Twelve to go to Europe, visiting England, and the continent including Palestine, that the work may be reopened throughout that land and pushed more aggressively. Also more missionaries are sent to the South Sea Islands than has been the case heretofore.

Naturally one of the Twelve is placed in charge of the new opening to be made in South Africa; also one of the Twelve in charge of the work among the American Indians. There is a great work to be done among these native Americans. Three of the Twelve are now in Australia, and two are to be sent in the course of a few months to take the place of at least two there. This means a pushing out by the Twelve in their work as missionaries. Two are in charge of the opening and caring for of new fields. Two of the Twelve remain in charge of the office work, receiving reports from the various missionaries in the field.

The Bishopric, for the first time, present a church budget. This budget includes the completion of a building at Graceland College; the erection of a building to cost $25,000 at the Independence Sanitarium, so as to relieve the situation there; the erection of farm buildings at the Saints' Home farm, two houses at Graceland, and improvements at the Children's Home. The expense of the office of the Quorum of Twelve, for the architect's office, and for the publicity department are all extra over previous years.

But the largest single increase is for the families of missionaries, as this is over $118,000.

If the work is to be carried on successfully, the extension of the missionary work, the caring for of its various institutions, it will mean that the members of the church must give more liberally to its support.

Provision was made for the ordination of sixteen seventies, seven high priests, and three bishops.

There were also changes in the personnel of the Quorum of Twelve, releasing Elders F. M. Sheehy and Peter Anderson, and adding Myron A. McConley and T. W. Williams.

The Presiding Bishopric was completed by the addition of the name of Israel A. Smith.

More of the Conference

Outside of the business sessions of the conference, the matters of special interest were:

First: The celebration of the Centennial of the vision to Joseph Smith, jr., in 1820.

Second: The preconference lectures to the ministry which were largely a repetition of lectures given to the class in Religious Education at Graceland College.

Third: The lectures to the ministry during the conference, which were by the heads of the various departments—statistics, publicity, architect, boy department, an address by one of Indian brethren, and the like.

Fourth: Each of the various departments had an established headquarters—The Women's Department at the Women's Building, the Religio at the Battery and the library building, the Sunday school department on the lower floor of the building on the Temple Lot. At these places the officers could be found, during most hours of the day, for consultation.

Also special meetings were held by the women, and special meetings were held for those interested by the Sunday school. The Religio was more ambitious and ran a separate exposition of its work, having moving pictures each evening. This department went far in its effort to interest the young people, providing for the recreational, for the social, and along with it a serious talk each evening.

The Woman's Auxiliary has attempted the transition to a department, and as such has provided for a general director and superintendent, doing away with the former offices of first and second assistant superintendent, and for the revision of its constitution.

The Religio also changed its name to department, and will revise its constitution, providing for a superintendent instead of president and vice presidents.

In the near future it is probable that the necessary business of these departments will be transacted in the General Conference. They are becoming more and more departments of church work, instead of attempting to be independent organizations.

What Are We Doing?

When we consider the budget submitted by the bishop, and the probable cost of a church office building and assembly hall, we should also consider what other Christian churches have done and are doing. The Methodists, we are informed, raised 165 million dollars in two years. The Baptist Church, South, 100 million. This would mean hardly less than two million dollars in two years if we as a church averaged as well, member for member. And this is for the past two years, not the future.

Of course the Christmas offering must be taken into consideration. But we must also consider our responsibility as a church with the restored gospel to present to the world. Surely we should be ready to do more by way of spreading that gospel abroad than we have been in the past, and raise more than an average amount.

We are told years ago (1901) that tracts should be prepared in Chinese and Japanese, as well as Scandinavian, German, and Portuguese languages. (Doctrine and Covenants 125:11.) This was given nineteen years ago and would appear to infer the sending of missionaries to the countries of Asia, as well as to parts of continental Europe, not as yet reached.

It is a great work that is before us, and it means a great responsibility upon us to carry it out; not only for these young men and young women who volunteer for service abroad, but also upon the whole membership of the church, that each may do his or her part. Those who are in the affairs of business and labor, and who contribute to carrying on the work are assisting, as well as are those who go forth to the nations of the world.

We are in the midst this week of the great drive being made by the Interchurch World Movement to raise 36 million dollars. It naturally raises the question, What are we doing for the cause of Christ? It is a question to be asked and answered by each individual for himself or herself.

How Long Shall We Wait?

The position of the church at present interests us very much. As an organized body of human beings we naturally do a great many things just as individual humans would.

We are reminded of a certain young man who having found his life mate decided that to get a proper start he would continue single for ten years, work faithfully on a farm, and save a hundred dollars a year. At the end of that time he would have sufficient money to start in farming.

He did it, and in the meanwhile the marriage date waited for ten years. From a materialistic viewpoint it worked; from a broad viewpoint it was a failure, and he admitted he wouldn't have done it again. While he realized it would not have been wise to try the scheme at the beginning of the period, with practically no funds, somewhere between the first year and the tenth was a better time to unite their forces than they chose.

The church has known Mr. Stewardship for a number of years. There has been a mutual understanding that they were intended for each other, but the day has been put off year by year till all things were prepared, the details worked out, and the money in sight.

This may have been the best way; we do not know. But we do know that if the perpetuation of our race depended on an exact knowledge of the outcome for years ahead before men and women decided to unite their forces, we should very soon become extinct.

Somewhere between the extreme of plunging into a proposition totally unprepared and that of waiting till everything can be foreseen and planned for must be the psychological time to begin.

As a church we are not as the happy-go-lucky couple who get married with only sufficient funds to pay for the marriage license. Neither have we the money in hand for the accomplishment of our ideals.

And we are not entirely without the requisite faith and training and general understanding of the future responsibilities, even though we have not advanced to the point we expect to reach.

Perhaps an appreciation of this situation brought out the enthusiastic vote of the recent conference in favor of proceeding now. Everyone knows we are not entirely ready. In fact in some things we lack seriously, but in buoyant hope and latent possibilities we are rich. Our members who have devoted themselves faithfully to acquiring of this world's goods are willing to take some chances on whether or not we are all ready. Our members who have placed their all on the altar and have devoted their lives to ministerial, educational, and other fields of endeavor, are willing to continue to trust in the outcome.

All of which does not mean we would minimize the importance of decision on some of the basic principles. The manner of holding stewardships and the interpretation of inheritances and stewardships are as vital questions as ever, but we are of the opinion that like some of the vital questions young people discuss when considering their future lives together, they will have a different aspect when we get closer to them.

These must be settled just as all big questions must be, but evidently we shall have to have something happen to us to see alike, and that thing obviously is action; unified action that will get us ahead of where we are now. E. D. M.

Capital in Production

It seems difficult for a certain type of mind to think out clearly the relation of capital and labor.

It is quite true that for capital we must look first to natural resources—the land, minerals, water power, etc. Or, second, to the accumulations from past labor.

Now to many, it seems quite simple to claim that all natural resources, the land, and all that goes with it, above or beneath, should belong to all of the people. There is much reason in this view, as is shown by Henry George, and other single taxers who have followed him. But in attempting such an adjustment, we must remember that the industrial order, since the dawn of history, as well as now, has encouraged men to invest that which has been saved from labor, in land, so that with many it represents all the savings of a lifetime. An arbitrary confiscation would be most unjust.

Further, we have to consider that the plan given us for the establishment of Zion provides for a home as an inheritance.

The gain in national wealth in any year, the net income of a people for a year, after all living expenses have been paid, represents not only production and income, but it also represents in particular that which has been saved. It represents an element of self-denial.

There is where so many of the social schemes fail. They offer no incentive whatever for self-denial or thrift, or in other words, for saving.

Most of those who receive large salaries have secured them by hard and persistent work; for long hours, year after year.

They have secured personal qualifications, have practiced self-denial, and so have accumulated capital as that much has been saved by labor, but it is saved from their own labor.

We are confronted with men who receive the equivalent of one thousand dollars a month, having worked up from less than a hundred. Yet they spend it all. We are confronted with men receiving an income of one hundred dollars to one hundred and fifty dollars, or less, who are denying themselves, and so gradually build up the means to secure a home or inheritance and a stewardship, though it means but a store or a garden for older age.

It certainly is not correct to assume or assert that those who have so denied themselves are entitled to no consideration, and have nothing which they can consider in any sense their own. It is a mistake to assert that this accumulated savings of labor which has become capital has nothing to do with the building factor of railroad, farm, or warehouse. Even in the development of natural resources, the mining prospector has to be furnished a grub stake, often for a year or many years. If he finds a mine though it is a natural resource. Yet he could not do so were it not for the savings by some one which secured him food for the years of search.

The same is true of the man who trains to be a mining engineer. He must in some way be supported while he is making that special preparation, either by some one else, or by his own savings. The machinery, the timber, and other facilities are as much a part of the developing of a deep mine as is the contribution of labor in digging the hole. The material of brick, timber, and hardware, accumulated through past labor is as important in the factor of building as is the labor exerted.

An ignoring of the importance of capital, whether held by a few, or by the many, tends only to confuse our problem.

Some beautiful theories are at times developed, but we are confronted with the experience of thousands of years of our progenitors.

But, for us the divine plan provides the solution.

What the Indian Wants

As near as we can gather from a careful reading and conversations, only a small part of the Indians are now on reservations. Only a small part are living in tribal relations. The great majority are working, dressing, living like their Anglo-Saxon neighbors.

They want to be treated just like any other race—free to live their own life. They are intensely loyal, as is shown in the late war. It was a common thing for all of tribe between the draft ages to register, and not one to claim exemption, even though married and with several children. And others outside the draft ages voluntarily enlisted.

They want to be citizens with all the rights, duties, and privileges of citizenship. But though many of them can now register and vote, they are not permitted to handle their own property, though allotted to them in severalty.

There are incompetents among the Anglo-Saxon, the French, the German, and other races of our country, to say nothing of those from Southwestern Europe, and still less of the negro. For a negro can handle his own property. But an Indian, though a citizen and voter, is still a ward. He cannot lease, rent, sell, or buy. The Indian Bureau handles his property for him; nor is it surprising sometimes mishandles.

Now the Indian is not as a race incompetent, though naturally feeling the effects of decades of wardship. He may make mistakes in handling his own property, but they would be his own mistakes. Hence his desire to be set free from an irksome wardship. Of legal age, earning his own way, making marked success in the professions, in agriculture and business, he desires no longer to be treated as an infant at law.

Episcopal Ordination

A remarkable action of the tri-centennial convention of the Protestant Church at Detroit, was the asking for episcopal ordination, as presented by Doctor W. T. Manning of Trinity Church, New York. Eminent Congregational ministers have come forward asking Episcopal ordination to the priesthood. They are willing to be examined as to their soundness in the faith, to be confirmed, to be ordained deacon and priest, to minister the sacraments thereafter according to prescribed forms, and to remain always in communion into and under the discipline of the bishop. And they are to do all this with the consent of their own ecclesiastical authorities, and of their congregations.

This action is commented on very favorably in The Congregationalist, of Boston.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

The post conference council, twelve members, present: two of First Presidency, three of bishopric, and seven of Quorum of Twelve, have been in session since the closing of General Conference, and have worked on the appointments of missionaries. The meetings were quite in accord with the spirit of General Conference, the most harmonious and spiritual sessions held for many years.

Brother and Sister Silas Parker of Elkton, Michigan, request fasting and prayer on May 2 and following, for the recovery of their sorely afflicted young son.

Address of Bert Cooper, writing from Detroit recently, should have been 507 Continental Street, instead of 504.

Any Saints near Saguache, Colorado are requested to call on Brother G. M. Steele, who gets his mail at Moffet.

Word has been received from the Near East Relief officials and the authorities at Seattle, that Brother Augustine Dwyer was not in the hotel in Seattle, which was burned, and at which he was registered, but was at the time lecturing in a neighboring city. His personal effects were lost, including his valuable stereopticon pictures. Letters to the New Richmond Hotel, Seattle, will reach him.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Pontiac, Michigan. The Women's Department held a pie social on the evening of March 18, proceeds $61. Three more baptized March 28. The Glee Club held a Pot Luck supper social on the 29th. The branch is steadily increasing in numbers.

First Chicago, Illinois. A splendid Easter program was given by the Sunday school. The tornado seems to have done no harm to the Saints. A vote is proposed to decide on holding sacrament service alternately with South Side.

Flint, No. 2, Michigan. The branch numbers 122. Elder E. M. Orton preached three instructive sermons lately.

Beaverton, Michigan. About forty Saints gathered in honor of George Bailey's birthday, and presented him with a traveling bag.

Madison, Wisconsin. The golden wedding anniversary of Elder Hubbard S. Stevens and wife was celebrated at the church by the Saints on the evening of March 10. An extensive program was rendered. A loving cup was presented in behalf of the Saints, in appreciation of the long and faithful services of these dear people. Following this celebration a short series of preaching services were conducted by Elder W. A. McDowell, resulting in much good and spiritual uplift.

Barberton, Ohio. The branch numbers 110 members and have been favored of the Lord in the past year. The spiritual condition of the Saints is good. Elder James McConaughy was a welcome visitor recently, also Patriarch Archibald D. Angus. The latter made a visit or more to every home in the branch, which made for him a warm place in the hearts of the Saints. We are promised some wonderful blessings if we are faithful.

Waterloo, Iowa. An interesting debate took place at the Religio on "Resolved that the Book of Mormon teaches the fundamental principles of the gospel plainer than the Bible," the negative winning the laurels. Sister Ivy Carpenter Fisher is adding to the zest of the Religio programs with her experience and efficiency. Our aim is $75 for the Christmas offering this year. Come on, you Eastern Iowa schools, let's make a record for the district this year.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths,—No. 1

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

A valuable series, presenting some authenticated testimonies in favor of this marvel of the latter days.

Prior to the year 1829, in which was published the book of Mormon record of the American aborigines, very little professional attention had been given to the fields of scientific research that have in recent years so richly repaid the investigator of this subject. It had not, in fact, dawned upon the minds of people generally that any considerable evidence existed concerning the primitive nations which once lived here; and by some it was even supposed that no higher type of civilization than that of the modern Indian had ever been upon this continent. Now it is known beyond any reasonable doubt that powerful nations of intelligence and skill overspread this country at least two millenniums before the Genoese sailor startled the world by his thrilling discovery.

It is intended that this series shall cover briefly each of the principal branches of those sciences which treat upon phases of information contained in the Book of Mormon. Much of that which is very interesting must therefore necessarily be excluded in order to canvass a wider field of inquiry. In doing this, however, the firm foundation upon which the record rests will become apparent, and the concurring testimony of associated or divisional sciences in some instances will very strongly support our confidence in the genuineness of the history which it contains. Instead of presenting the whole subject under the broad term of archæology, therefore the evidence submitted will be arranged mostly under the heading to which it may properly belong.

It seems fitting that we should first consider the people of whom the Book of Mormon treats. This will be done under related studies in

Anthropology

According to the Book of Mormon the first inhabitants of America came from the Tower of Babel. Probably there are no means of proving conclusively that this statement is true, but it is referred to because it is opposed to the theory which has been advanced that the American nations arose from indigenous stock. That theory is, of course, opposed to the Bible, but we shall notice some of the conclusions of anthropologists in order to learn whether or not the Book of Mormon and the Bible, which agrees with it on this point, are unscientific, as has been claimed. The theory doubtless supports the evolution of man from lower forms of animal life, which requires the probability of a connection to be established. The nearest approach to this connection now known to us is the anthropoid ape or gorilla. On this point the Encyclopædia Britannica says, "The differences between a gorilla's skull and a man's are truly immense."

Among many of the anatomical differences found we may note: That the occipital foramen, through which passes the spinal chord, is but slightly behind the skull base's center in man, but in the gorilla it is located farther back, adapting him to locomotion on all fours as naturally as its location in man adapts him to the upright position. The capacity of the human cranium of the smallest adult is approximately sixty-three cubic inches, as contrasted with about thirty-four cubic inches in the largest gorilla. The extreme length of the arm and the formation of the big toe of the foot are radically different from the corresponding members in man. Indeed, the differences that exist are greater than those found between certain animals which are known to be incapable of perpetuating joint species. The work mentioned remarks: "On the whole, it may be asserted that the doctrine of the unity of mankind stands on a firmer basis than in previous ages." Man's inherent tendencies have always been the same, on every part of the globe, so far as is known from all research up to the present time. His fertility with all races is evidence of the unity of his species with a common source.

The connection of man in America, as an indigenous species, with the anthropoid ape becomes still more difficult; as none of the latter have been found here. It would indicate the probability that man has sprung from more than one source, and therefore includes more than one species; but inasmuch as Darwin and physiologists everywhere agree that two separate species cannot unite, or produce fertile offspring, the union of all races disproves the theory.

The importance of this fact is not lessened when applied to types supposed to represent separate eras, as are the palæolithic and meolithic. Had they really been distinct, as has been suggested, they would have remained so through all succeeding ages. This does not appear to be the case, as practically pure descendants of quaternary man, after thousands of years, are still identified with living races. It is now recognized that the Javan relic, pithecanthropos erectus, does not establish a connection with man; its skull being much shallower, of less capacity, and more suggestive of the ape species, with which it has more recently been classed. It may here be noted that from the earliest age to which man has been traced the bulk of his brain has not increased to any appreciable extent.

Psychological comparison of the ape species with man indicates a radically different process of brain functioning that seems to clearly disprove the theory of a common origin. Of the many interesting experiments that have been made with various monkeys, the following account, with observations thereon, by Professor S. J. Holmes in his recent work, The Evolution of Animal Intelligence, is representative:

"While monkeys are generally credited with unusual powers of imitation, the experiments of recent years have shown that imitation is far less frequent than was supposed. Thorn-dike tried to find if monkeys would learn to enter a puzzle box any more quickly after having witnessed a number of times how he opened the various fastenings. Several kinds of boxes were used, but the monkeys did not in any case make sufficient progress to justify the conclusion that they learned by imitation. Neither did monkeys which failed to learn how to enter the puzzle boxes after several trials imitate others which had learned to operate the fastenings."—Page 270.

There seems to be no evidence that monkeys have, with the passing of thousands of years, developed any noticeable degree of brain function. They fail to show a degree of intelligence to employ progressively the resources of their environment, neither do they have the least conception of language, which differentiates man from every other species.

The conclusions of scientists, that man is a unit of species, hence from a common ancestry, whose occupancy in America was the result of migration from a more ancient people, is being more firmly substantiated with the investigation of passing years. As stated by one of them: "Man, then, may be regarded as specifically one, and thus he must have had an original cradle-land, whence the peopling of the earth was brought about by migration."

Thus the Biblical declaration, that God created man upright, still remains as the best explanation given to the world upon the subject; and after tedious years of research it is admitted by an authority of note that solution of the question may involve, "the existence of some quite unknown intrinsic law of life which we are at present totally unable to comprehend or even conceive."

These and other evidences available, of representative anthropological trend, are not inconsistent with the Book of Mormon account of a migration from Babylonia to this continent, the time of the departure not being at variance with known data. Comparative chronology will furnish us with some interesting material for consideration, which will assist us to draw conclusions regarding this part of the subject, and will be presented somewhat later.

Paul's Missionary Policy

BY R. J. FARTHING

Paul labored as a leader of a group, from centers of first-rate importance, and his efforts were long-continued and thorough, then results left to local officers.

Was Paul's missionary work guided by a definite policy? If so, was this the general missionary policy of the primitive Christian church? And what were the main features of that policy?

As an aid to a solution of these problems, we will review the work of Paul and note a few other incidents in the missionary efforts of the early church.

A Concentrated Missionary Effort

It is apparent that Jesus was usually accompanied by his apostles as he journeyed and preached throughout Palestine. While the apostles did some work on missions not under the immediate supervision of Jesus, as did also the seventy who were sent two by two throughout the country of the Jews, yet this must have meant a concentrated missionary effort, when we realize that Palestine (including Samaria) averages but sixty miles in width while the extreme length is one hundred and forty miles from Dan to Beersheba.

Missionary Campaign on Pentecost

Again, on the day of Pentecost, the twelve apostles, no doubt assisted by over a hundred other disciples, under the Spirit's power, conducted a combined missionary offensive against the city that had killed the prophets, stoned God's messengers, and crucified the Messiah. Three thousand converts were made the first day.

Paul's first important missionary work mentioned in the Acts is that in the city of Antioch where he with Barnabas and others "taught much people" for "a whole year." Antioch was the third city of the Roman Empire, exceeded in size by only Alexandria and Rome. Being not far from Palestine and connected commercially with both the western and eastern portions of the Empire, it was a gateway and base of operations for the introduction of the gospel to the Gentile world. Each of Paul's three great missionary journeys commenced from Antioch.

From Centers of Population

Accompanied by Barnabas and John Mark, Paul set out on his first journey by sailing to Cyprus, where at Paphos, the capital, the governor of the island was converted. The party crossed to the mainland and began their work in Pisidian Antioch, a center of population and influences in the province north of Cilicia, Paul's home. Thence they proceeded successively to Iconium, Lystra and Derbe, being expelled from at least the first three mentioned. They returned to the coast by the route they had advanced, ordaining officers and organizing churches.

On his second journey Paul revisited the churches in Pisidia and, guided by the Spirit, reached Troas, a port on the Asiatic coast opposite Macedonia in Europe. Called to Macedonia, Paul, assisted by Silas, Timothy and Luke, preached the gospel in Philippi, an important city. Then he proceeded to Thessalonica, Berea and Athens, leaving Luke at Philippi and Silas and Timothy at Berea. Alone at Athens, he made a few converts, but in the main the results were disappointing. Proceeding to Corinth, a large commercial city and the residence of the procurator of Achaia, he was rejoined by Silas and Timothy, and labored in that city for a year and a half, with the gospel influence extending to other cities in that region.

Three Years In One Place

On the third journey, Paul revisited some churches on the way to Ephesus, the capital of the province of Asia. Here he spent three years. Besides Aquila and Priscilla, his helpers in Ephesus included Timothy, Erastus, Gaius, Aristarchus and others. Dissensions and other evils in the churches at Corinth and in Macedonia made it necessary for Paul to visit them. In returning from his visit and on his way to Jerusalem, he was accompanied as far as the province of Asia by Sopater, Aristarchus, Secundus, Gaius, Timothy, Tychicus and Trophimus.

Arrested at Jerusalem, sent to Cæsarea for trial and on appeal to Cæsar, sent under guard to Rome, he was accompanied by Luke and Aristarchus. Timothy, Tychicus, Onesimus, Marcus, Justus and Epaphras were soon after co-laborers with Paul at the world's capital, where, as an ambassador in bonds, he taught diligently for at least two years.

The Main Features of His Policy

Our inductions from the above are:

That the main features of the policy were: First, that Paul labored as the leader of a group of other missionaries. Second, that centers of first-rate influence and importance were chosen. Third, that, whenever possible, initial missionary efforts were long-continued and thorough. And fourth, that the churches were left in the care of local officers, visits afterwards being made while enroute to new fields or when called for by the exigencies of internal disorders.

That this was the general policy of the church in the days of its most fruitful evangelistic efforts.

And that laboring in harmony therewith brought to Paul a missionary success unparalleled for power and permanency.

The Day of His Preparation

BY MRS. A. MCKENZIE

Nahum 2:3 speaks of a day of preparation in these words, "The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation."

This is a subject to which justice cannot be done in this short article, and I am also aware I am in the minority in support of what I wish to say, as the majority believe God's work commenced in 1830, but I lay claim to the belief that the work spoken of in 1 Nephi 3:237 lies yet in the future.

I have no doubt in my mind of the fulfillment of Isaiah 29, and that the "marvelous work and a wonder" was established in 1830, but "the days of his preparation" is to-day, and the work of the Father is to commence in that day.

Clearly the day spoken of by Nahum is here, and has many evidences, among them the headlights on the street cars; also the bright lights on the autos testify that we are in the latter days, and that these words are true. When the gospel was established in 1830, these latter-day conveniences were lacking, proving that 1830 was not "the day of his preparation."

"The chariots shall be with flaming torches." It is something never to be forgotten when riding on a public highway to-day and meeting hundreds of those "flaming torches," to know that you are looking on the fulfillment of the prophet's words, spoken centuries ago. And this was to be in "the day of his preparation."

A special preparation is being made at Graceland College for the ministry, in studying the different languages, so as to be more fully equipped in carrying the gospel to the nations. This is the "hastening time." A preparation is needed; education is also needed. "Speed up" is the slogan; reconstruction is the word. A great war has come to an end, but peace is not here yet, nor the end of all wars. (1 Nephi 3:232-233.) Nephi beheld the power of God that it descended on the Saints, and they were "armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory." (1 Nephi 3:231).

Is this the endowment? We are living in momentous times, and know not what a day may bring forth. We are living in a time of great events to come in the near future, even greater than we have ever known. Who shall abide the day?

Thoughts of a Business Man on Going to Church

BY L. R. WOOD

All too often he seeks that which he does not find, consequently is not encouraged to come again.

Why do I go to church? Because I wish to worship God and get away from the noise and confusion of the outside; and when I get into the church I like to offer a silent prayer before the opening song that I may learn more of God and be benefited by the sermon, songs, prayer, and benediction.

Yet how many of our churches are just the opposite of the quietness and peace and solemnity which should attend the worship of God?

I go into the church. I find my way to a seat. Many are exchanging noisy greetings, children are running around hither and thither, making more confusion. There is no possibility of offering up that silent prayer or getting myself into that state of mind which is most conducive to the reception of the thought to be offered from the pulpit. In fact, I generally find just the opposite of the surroundings I would like. Not that I object to greetings, but should not they be of a character fitting with God's quietness and Christ's peace? Really, though, the time to visit is after church after the worship is over.

Then the ushers. In so many of our churches the usher stands back by the entrance door. One of them should be there, but other ushers should stand at the very front row of seats, and thus extend a quiet invitation to the people to come up to the front row. The people will fill in the seats between, it is true, but the next row in which there are vacant seats, thus showing to the incoming people just how far front they may go to find a seat.

And then during prayer, or the reading of the lesson by the minister, why, oh, why, do so many ushers noisily seat some late comer? If the churchgoer cannot get to church on time, then he should have the courtesy to wait in the entrance until the reading or prayer is over before wanting to be seated; or the usher should be a person of sufficient respect to prevent the party from taking a seat during the prayer or reading.

These last remarks also apply to seating a worshipper while the solo or anthem is being sung. It spoils the music and destroys the efforts of the soloist and the chorister. It attracts everyone's attention, and I can only size the situation up by believing that it is selfishness or extreme thoughtlessness on the part of the late church goer (who generally has no reason for being late) in wanting to be seated during the special music.

Another thing. The benediction to me should be a blessing on the congregation or a praise to God, not a prayer for the President, the whole world, the Armenians, the singers, the congregation, etc., ad infinitum. Such items should be included in the opening prayer. Has it not happened to you that a very good sermon has been marred by a long-winded benediction, a rambling utterance amounting to practically nothing? Have you ever studied the beautiful benedictions uttered by the apostles of old?

Let us cite a few of them, or combinations or variations thereof.

(a) "Brethren, the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, Amen."

(b) "Now the God of Peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen."

(c) "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God and Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and for ever, Amen."

(d) "And now may the peace of God, which passeth all understanding be with and abide in you all. Amen."

Benedictions like these uttered with solemnity and power, bless the hearers more than do the rambling prayers so frequently heard.

Life is dark, mysterious, incomprehensible, but it is greater in good and evil, more moving in its tragedy, more amusing in its comedy, than it seems.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

"The man who hasn't the time to do things that are worth while, is probably doing some things that are not."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

PEACE AND AFTER

The Treaty of Peace with Germany has been signed by the Allies, and ratifications have been exchanged. The brief official ceremony, probably the most momentous of its kind in history, was concluded by more or less formal greetings exchanged between the Prime Minister of France and the German representatives. The great war is over, and mankind, sadly disillusioned as to the early realization of great ideals, turns with hope to the daily problems and troubles which the war has left mournful heritage.

The League of Nations, from which so much was hoped, will hold its first meeting in a few days. President Wilson was designated as its first president; but to-day he is a man broken in health, and illusions as to his personal dominance in world councils have been rudely dispelled by his fellow citizens. The Peace Treaty, to which he attempted to commit the United States, is now the sport of party politics in America. How much of the dispute in his Senate is grounded on a desire to secure a political victory at the next Presidential election, or to what extent the objections to the Treaty are based upon American public sentiment, the future will reveal. To-day the figure cut by the Republic is in sorry contrast of the declarations of the President as to the great mission of the United States and its duty to civilization. The chivalry with which the manhood of America flocked to the colors, and the spirit which animated them on the field of battle, fail to find utterances in the angry voices of party politics. The hesitation of America profoundly disappoints civilization. But some room for hope exists that she will yet enter into the comity of nations and bear her part in the great work that awaits the League. Anglo-Saxon ideas of Peace and Liberty will be furthered by her presence, and great progress will be made towards deepening the friendship that must exist between all the English-speaking peoples if the peace of the world is to be secured. But if the great Republic stands aloof in selfish isolation and leaves the burden of keeping the peace of the world to Britain, France, and Italy, she will present the sorry spectacle of a mighty Power, having lingered almost to the last minute before entering into the combat to save liberty, repudiating her responsibility to civilization immediately after having exacted the tribute of enormous wealth from the Allies, who were engaged for long years in fighting costly battles in defense of her liberties as well as their own. This would be the sordid accentuation of merely material achievements. Her boasted altruistic ideas would be belied, and her national aims concentrated on collective money-getting on a colossal scale.

Peace has been made with Germany, but the peace of the world is by no means established. Whole regions are more disturbed than ever. The two hundred millions of people who once constituted the Russian Empire are still engaged in internal revolution and in war on their frontiers. The reports of events in that mysterious country are too conflicting to predict the ultimate issue. But a long period of disturbance, profoundly affecting other nations, is certain before the fires of revolution burn themselves out. Whether a purified Russia, making great strides toward civilization, will arise cannot yet be determined. The old order in Russia was a rule of military tyranny, blood-shed, and oppression, continuing for generations, and little modified in the most recent years. To-day the Bolshevik rule threatens Europe through the penetration of revolutionary ideas, and the realms propaganda of unrest. The motive of its external policy is obscure. Whether it is merely the counter-attack to secure the revolution from foreign support of reaction, or whether it is merely a fanatic attempt to scatter the seeds of a world-wide upheaval, will soon be made clear. The forces of Japan and Russia may again try conclusions in the Far East, and it is impossible to say what will be the issue. Equally impossible it is to-day to determine whether the victory of the Asiatic race would ultimately provide a new and graver menace to European civilization in general, and to British rule in India.

Peace has not arrived in Poland or the Balkans. Its coming finds Serbia and Austria in a state of starvation, and Germany itself in a condition of lowered vitality and arrested development. All the European countries are prostrate under the load of war debt. The debts of Germany and Italy alone represent the amount of their national wealth. That of France may amount to three-fourths of her assets. The load of Great Britain has increased tenfold. To remedy this, production must be speeded up enormously. The lessons that the war has taught us as to national capacity to meet new situations and new difficulties in the face of urgent necessity, may be repeated in the triumphs of peaceful reconstruction. But they can only be repeated by the united efforts of all the classes which constitute a nation. And in all civilized countries the masses of workers who are appealed to to discharge the main task of increased production have awakened to a new consciousness, and insist on sharing the benefits of civilized life to a much greater extent than before.

All this may mean fiercer competition than ever between nations, and a repetition of the conditions that led to the former upheaval. It may also involve the substitution of an age of materialistic struggle and the obliteration of the high ideas of altruism which soldiers, prophets, and statesmen during the war, declared would bring about a new world. Labor has been promised a new world by Prime Ministers and statesmen, and Labor claims it. But there cannot be a new world for labor unless there is a new world for humanity unless the sordid fires of competition are reduced or allayed by the altruistic principles which provide for peace between nations and among citizens of all classes. But the wisdom of mankind will assuredly be directed to compelling the leaders of the nations to walk in the paths of peace, to raising the standard of human existence, and to distributing more equitably the fruits of human achievement.—The Herald, Melbourne, Victoria, January 15, 1920.

STRANGE MOUNDS IN OHIO TO BE OPENED THIS YEAR

Some of the best of the so-called "prehistoric mounds," in Ross County, Ohio, have never been opened by archæologists. The owner of the farm on which they are located always refused to allow it. But during the war this farm was condemned and purchased by the Government. It now forms a part of the grounds of Camp Sherman. The war being over, persons high in the War Department have informed an archæological society that permission will in all probability be given it to dig into the mounds.

Once Yielded Treasures

Only once before was this group of mounds opened. That was 74 years ago. The mounds yielded rich results, but the curious relics then found were not at that time appreciated by American museums. All the discovered articles were sold to a museum at Blackmore, England, for $10,000. This "Blackmore Collection" remained until a few years ago the most valuable of its kind in the world. There is now a much more extensive one in Ohio.

Excavations Next Summer

Because of the richness of the discoveries in 1846, great things are expected when the mound is reopened. It was at that time that Squier and Davis published the theory that the mounds were the work of an extinct race that lived and perished long before the American Indians appeared. This theory was held by scholars almost without dispute for many years, but now it is denied by Dr. W. C. Mills, Curator of the Ohio State Archæological Society. He knows more about the mounds than almost anybody else, and he says they were built by American Indians of the Algonquin race. Archæologists are intensely interested in the excavations that are to be made the coming summer.

Pottery and weapons are the things most commonly found in the mounds. Whoever made these things seem to have been further advanced in civilization than the Indians of a later Events.

THE PLEASURES OF THE WORLD

[The following extracts from communications by the Spirit to the Saints was copied from Autumn Leaves for February, 1918, and sent us for republication by an interested sister.—EDITORS.]

"Blessed are ye when ye seek me, for I am near, and oh, so ready to bless. Yet there are some who have not sought: There are some who are turning to the ways of the world. There are some here, yea, I say it again, there are some here that think because they have done a thing in secret, behind closed doors, that it is not known, thinking that I cannot see into the secret thoughts. Think ye that ye can go where I know not? Think ye that ye can do or say aught I do not know? . . . Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time is near at hand when ye shall be called upon to account for the service whereunto I have called you. For the day of choosing shall come, and ye who are not worthy shall not stand . . . ye shall not seek longer after the pleasures of this world, but if ye will seek earnestly, if ye shall seek humbly for divine light, then shall I be with you, and ye shall stand forth free and in almighty power to declare my word. Yea, my Spirit shall come down upon you like a mantle, and ye shall stand strong and firm and wholly clean before me. . . . And my handmaidens, seek not the path of the dance, seek not the way wherein the pleasures of the world lie, for the time is near at hand when my handmaidens may stand shoulder to shoulder with my sons, for ye are called also, my daughters, that it may be given you assist in this work.

"He who finds contentment and pleasure, and from time to time waits upon the theater; he who takes himself to the dance; he who engages himself at the card table; he who consumes his goods to draw pleasure therefrom in the maintenance of an automobile; he who spends his energy upon the things of the world and the goods thereof, to the end that he may satisfy his own pleasures and heap upon his own family; he who engages in these things or any of them, or in anything like unto them, let him know that to this extent he is in the world, he is of the world, and the world has claimed him. And let him know furthermore: that from this hour, as never before, he stands in a place of danger; because engaging himself in these things or any of them, he places himself in an atmosphere where, unless he shall have extreme care, he shall move more fully into the world."

"There is a time for all things, but it is often not the time that we would select."

COOPERATION IN ECONOMIC LIFE

Cooperative reports show it is steadily becoming a powerful influence among nations.

By Special Correspondent of the "Christian Science Monitor."

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.—That cooperation is steadily becoming the greatest and most powerful influence in the social and economic life of all the peoples of the world is evidenced by the reports which continue to find their way to headquarters of the British cooperative movement.

The Italian cooperative movement which before the war numbered some 7000 societies now numbers some 10,000, while the turnover of the Italian Cooperative Wholesale Society has increased from 1,410,000 lire in 1914, to 9,000,000 lire in 1918.

Switzerland's Increase

Switzerland had, in 1914, 396 cooperative societies with a collective membership of 276,000, which by the end of 1918 had increased to 461 societies with a total membership of 341,826. The collective turnover of these societies during 1918 was 237,595,776 francs, and the wholesale trade operations of the union increased from 45,717,076 francs in 1914 to 129,719,746 francs in 1918.

At the end of 1918 the affiliated membership of the Swedish Cooperative Union was 849 societies, four of which were insurance societies, and the remainder distributive societies. The collective membership of these latter societies amounted to 203,600. These figures show an increase since 1914 to 266 societies and 92,307 members, the societies then numbering 583, with a membership of 11,293.

The total turnover of the union was 39,466,473 kroner in 1914 and 143,871,000 kroner in 1918, making an increase of 104,404,527 kroner. The union also conducts wholesale operations, which from their commencement have, with one exception, the year 1917, shown a yearly increase. In 1914 the turnover of the wholesale department was 9,889,252 kroner, which by 1918 had increased to 27,989,733 kroner.

Increase in Norway

The membership of the Norwegian cooperative movement has more than doubled during the war. In 1914 the members enrolled on the books of the 149 Norwegian societies numbered 31,000. In 1918, 67,910 members were on the rolls, the societies having increased to 235. The total trade of these societies in 1914 was 10,019,600 kroner, which in 1918 had increased to 48,139,900 kroner.

Cooperation has grown rapidly in Tzecho-Slovakia during the war as the following figures attest. At the end of 1913 there were 292 societies affiliated to the Tzecha-Slovak Central Union of Distributive, Productive, and Economic Coopeartive Societies, the total membership then being 14,267. The close of 1918 saw 450 societies in existence, which were supplying the wants of 150,000 members and their families. From 23,742,047 kroner in 1913 the total trade of the union increased to 90,000,000 kroner in 1918. The Cooperative Wholesale Society, with its headquarters at Prague, was doing a trade of 3,238,427 kronen in 1914, and 38,323,525 kronen in 1918, an increase in four years of 33,085,098 kronen, and it is anticipated that the turnover for 1919 will be double that of 1918.

India Records Growth

India, too has its record of cooperative growth to show, for during the year 1917-18 the number of societies in the Bombay Presidency grew from 1,281 to 1,615, the membership increasing from 131,000 to 156,800, and the working capital from 123.2 lakhs to 162.8 lakhs. The majority of the above societies are agricultural, and they increased in number from 1,091 in 1917 to 1,390 in 1918, while their capital expended from 52 to 72 lakhs. The remainder of the societies are principally people's banks, and societies formed by railway employees, government servants, and mill hands. Housing societies are also established in Bombay which have done good work, and a useful future is predicted for them.

Germany had at the end of 1918, 10,190 distributive co-operative societies with a total membership of 2,231,917, and a turnover of 670,753,153 marks, as against 1,109 societies, 1,717,519 members, and a turnover of 492,980,519 marks in 1914. It will be seen that while the number of societies has decreased, the membership and turnover have increased. The figures of the German Wholesale Society record a rapid fall in the turnover during the war, for in 1914 the total trade was reduced to 104,500,972 marks.—Christian Science Monitor, March 17, 1920.

TAKE SOMEBODY YOUR SIZE

Recently I invited a group of business men to lunch with me and talk over this matter. Every man of them allowed they were not facing this duty like courageous Christian men. I used this simple illustration. It has a point, a sharp point. When I was a lad in school, we had friendly fights. Some were not so friendly. Again and again it happened that some big overgrown bully would start to whip a fellow under his size. Then every one of us boys would set up the cry, "Ah, take somebody your size!" Then I turned to a big business man whom I knew well and asked the privilege of using him as an illustration. He was a very prosperous man, on the board of directors of big corporations. He was also a devoted Christian; loyal to his church; giving time and strength to the teaching of a men's big Bible Class. I said to him, "Mr. D., you are a teacher of a big Bible Class for men. Does it require any extra courage and superior consecration for you to teach that class?" "Oh, no!" he answered, "I delight to do it." "If I asked you," I continued, "to go down to the Salvation Army Citadel some night and present the gospel to the crowd that gathers there, would that challenge test your courage in a special way?" "Not at all," he replied, "I would be glad to do it." "Certainly," I answered, "but what about the man who sits by your side in the board of directors of your corporation who you know is not a Christian—what about him?" Quickly he answered, "That is another story." Then I said to him simply as an illustration to all the rest of the business men present, "Mr. D., take somebody your size."

One business man went out from that luncheon stirred to the depths of his soul. In a conversation with his pastor just a few days before the luncheon he argued that a business man must witness for Christ with his life not with his lips. The pastor urged that a courageous Christian man would do both. At the luncheon this man saw his duty to "take somebody his size." He went to the church officials' meeting and told the experience at the luncheon, and urged every church official present to join him in his new determination. Still another man went to his pastor and said, "Pastor, that man at the luncheon the other day got under my skin. He told me to take somebody my size. I had never done it. I tried. I thought I would take somebody over my size. He nearly floored me. Then I invited a big automobile man to lunch. He acknowledged his need of Christ and the Church. And that fellow is coming." So it went with men who determined to take somebody their size. Have you ever taken anybody your size?

May I plead with you for Christ's sake; for the sake of

PASTORAL

The Need for "Overtime" Pastors

BY VICTOR A. HALL

This brother is convinced that we have a definite responsibility toward those isolated from church privileges but who are within the scope of our ability of help.

"The need of pastors," by E. R. Davis, in the HERALD of March 24, prompts me to heartily agree, and add the following: That in addition to the need of more full-time pastors, the crying need is a few "overtime" pastors, pastors and members of the priesthood who are not averse to doing a little more than they think is really necessary to the fulfillment of their office and calling or to promote the Master's work, men who are willing to forego a few of their own desires and pleasures and comforts in order to go out among, not only the people of the world, but into the isolated places where there are a few of the chosen ones struggling to keep alive in the faith with which so many of them have so little real knowledge.

My whole experience in the gospel does not cover a period of ten years, but my experiences of the past two years have taught me that all too often, those who are newly ushered into the kingdom "which shall never be thrown down," are left, not only to their own not too tender mercies, but to the ravages of those "wolves in sheep's clothing," who so many times call themselves followers of the lowly Nazarene or ministers of his gospel, and with heinous lies and perverted tales, try to break down and destroy the little faith that has begun to grow in the hearts of those who have heard the gospel in its purity.

In a District With a Shortage of Help

It has been my privilege as a local pastor (in a district that, for the past two years, has never had more than two conference appointees, with one or both of them absent from the district at times) to wander around among some of the declining branches and isolated places, and in one place, just across the line in the next district I found two families of Saints, one of these had been in the place for about nineteen years, and they hadn't seen an elder and very few Saints for nearly a year.

People Gladly Help

I have always found these people ready and willing to lend any assistance they could to make the time spent with them profitable to both themselves and your humble servant, and the joy with which they received these visits was expressed, not only in the service they rendered, but financially as well. In the five trips I made during the months of January and February of this year, totaling an expenditure of over fifteen dollars for railroad fare, only one dollar and twenty-five cents came out of my own pocket.

I am living in a city (Waterloo, Iowa,) where if we had an elder or missionary devoting his whole time to the gospel work, he could reach hundreds of the Saints and possibly thousands of the people of the world and the expenditure in carfare would not be a very large item, especially where adthe manhood of your community; for your own soul's sake, will you "take someone your size?" Are you a banker? "Take somebody your size." Are you a lawyer? a teacher? a physician? a merchant? a mechanic? a farmer? "Take somebody your size."—Theodore S. Henderson, Director Evangelistic Campaign, Interchurch world movement.

vantage could be taken of the special rate granted to the ministry. A local pastor, with means to do so or appointed by conference, could do a marvelous work for the kingdom, not only in keeping alive the spark of love and faith in the hearts and souls of those who have already named his name, but could bring to the attention of many who are honest in heart, the teachings of the true gospel and kindle anew the fire of love and devotion which is so nearly burned out in the hearts and souls of those who have not yet been made acquainted with the more abundant life that Christ came to give to men.

A pastor who has to spend from eight to ten hours a day to earn a livelihood for himself and family cannot successfully cope with the situations that come before him even as a local pastor. If he is overly conscientious about his daily toil, as he should be, his church work suffers. If he devotes even the time that is absolutely necessary to his branch work, he incapacitates himself for his daily toil, as many a branch president can testify, and even then his flock is not looked after as it should be. More especially is this true where the branch has not a full quorum of officers, or has one or more officers in the quorum who are not honestly trying to do the little that they might to help the branch grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon" and do a good work for both. I know, for I find myself hating the things that keep me from even studying to show myself approved and more especially when they keep me from doing the things I should like to do for Christ.

Of Course the Branch Suffers

I would not be truthful if I did not confess that my branch has suffered because of my work and my wanderings, but I have felt, rather than heard, the cry that goes out from the hearts of the isolated Saints, "God send us some one to keep alive the little flame that struggles to burn and grow into a light that will be seen of the children of men and lead them into the way of all truth. It is the burden of their prayers, the groaning of their spirits and their hearts desire. May God give them understanding and help them to live up to the light they have received.

Many of them do, but many more of them do not realize that they have not performed their duty and helped to make possible the fulfillment of their prayers. Many have heeded the admonitions to accede to the renditions of the bishopric. Many have come beneath the spell of the slogan, "Every member a tithe payer." More have not and it will not be until we have learned to obey the whole law, and consecrate of our substances as well as our service that we will see the fulfillment of our fondest hopes and wishes and the answer to our prayers.

I am a strong believer in the doctrine that God will do nothing for man that man can do for himself and it is well for all of us to examine our lives and ascertain whether or not we are truly of the faith as well as in it.

My heart goes out to those who are isolated or are placed where the flame has flickered and almost died out, and I love to go to the people with the message "there is still a God in Israel" and that "we shall not be without a prophet and a law-giver until He comes to reign whose right it is to reign.

It is the sacrifice of the good that reclaims the evil. It is the sacrifice of the well that heals the sick.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

THE FORUM

God's Method of Apportioning Inheritances

BY JOSEPH FLORY

By observance of the method outlined here titles will come from God through the bishop, and "stand the test of the supreme court of the universe."

Inasmuch as the subject of Zion in its various phases has of late occupied considerable space in the Forum, as set apart in the HERALD for discussion of such questions, we feel to add some thoughts along some of these lines. The particular features we wish to treat upon will be in reference to stewardships and inheritances.

As an individual, we have for many years claimed that the law of God teaches that there are two classes of stewards and stewardships, and that the records of our church literature will sustain that idea. First, there is a stewardship to which all have claim in which "every man shall be made accountable unto me [the Lord], a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:9.)

In section 58:7 instructions are given to Martin Harris in reference to laying his money before the bishop, and then the Lord says: "And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his money according as the law directs."

In section 72:3 it is said: "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."

In section 42:8, 9 we learn that in the process of consecrating it must be done with "a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken," and that the properties consecrated "cannot be taken from the church, agreeable to my commandments."

From this we understand that more is required than simply to make a statement or inventory of our moneys and properties to the bishop, and then an agreement is made between us and the bishop as to how much we are to retain as our own, and how much we must consecrate to the church.

A Steward Over One's Own Property

Section 51 gives in detail the process of receiving the stewardship over which the individual becomes "a steward over his own property." The individual receives a deed from the bishop which secures to him a right that both the law of the land and the law of the church must respect—he cannot be deprived of his property legally, even if he is accounted unworthy to belong to the church. This stewardship is his inheritance in the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 51:2.) It is the means by which he makes his livelihood or the support of himself and family. The steward over his own property is accountable to God in that he is under obligations to pay one tenth of his net increase annually into the church treasury, as tithing according to section 106:1 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

In order to obtain the stewardship over which we become as a steward over our own property, or that which we receive from the bishop as our inheritance in the church, secured to us by deed from the bishop, we believe that we must consecrate all of our properties to the Lord through the bishop, by a deed that will stand the test of the laws of the land. And when we have done this, the bishop will be under legal obligations to give us our inheritance in the church—a sufficient amount of property to enable us to support ourselves and our families.

From a Version Not Officially Indorsed

To sustain our claim that the law of consecration requires us to consecrate all of our properties to the Lord, and that we then receive our inheritance from the bishop as the Lord's agent, I will quote from a reprint of a copy of the Evening and Morning Star, as published at Independence, Missouri, by the church, for July, 1832, volume 1, number 2, page 1. The article quoted from purports to be a part of section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants, as originally published by the church:

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments; and behold, thou shalt consecrate all thy properties, that which thou hast unto me, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church, and two of the elders, such as he shall appoint and set apart for that purpose. And it shall come to pass that the bishop of my church, after that he has received the properties of my church, that it cannot be taken from the church, he shall appoint every man a steward over his own property, or that which he has received, inasmuch as shall be sufficient for himself and family."

This version of the revelation as it was printed in 1832 clearly states that all properties must be consecrated to the bishop and afterwards the bishop was to appoint every man a steward over his own property, etc. This sustains my claim in the matter beyond question. The version as we have it, Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 9, does not in any sense deny or contradict our claim; it only specifies that we must consecrate for the benefit or support of the poor "that which thou hast to impart to them."

The Book of Commandments as published by the church at Independence, Missouri in 1833 agrees perfectly with what we have quoted from the Evening and Morning Star.

In quoting from these early church publications, we are aware that much has been written and published for and against the correctness of some of those early versions. It is an admitted fact that there are great differences in the reading in those early and the later publications of the revelations to the church. We will, however, state that we do not accept all that has been written against the correctness of those early versions.

From an Editorial on the Subject

So far as we are aware there has been no serious objections urged as to the reliability of those early publications in any other respect than those relating to the revelations given to the church.

In a reprint of the Evening and Morning Star for January, 1833, page 5, in an editorial we read:

"Every man ought to know his duty to God and man; especially the Saint that has the benefit of revelation to guide him; he ought to know his duty, not only to say, but to do in all things. He ought to practice holiness before the Lord, that he may be accounted worthy of an inheritance in Zion, and meet his Savior in peace.

"Every soul that comes up to Zion for an inheritance, for the present, must prepare temporarily and spiritually. He should settle all his concerns with the world, and be ready, when he arrives at the place of gathering, to consecrate all to the Lord, through whom the Lord has appointed for that purpose, that he may be prepared to keep the commandments, and do the will of his heavenly Father; or otherwise he may not hold communion with the brethren; or can he expect an inheritance, according to the regulations and order of the church.

"While the gathering is sounded, that Israel may come in from his long dispersion, and also as many of the Gentiles as will, the invitation is free, but unless the articles and covenants, the law and regulations; yea, verily all the commandments, are kept, all is vain. The Lord has order, and many that may come to the land of Zion for an inheritance, without obeying all the requirements of the Lord, will be weighed in the balances and found wanting. It is not every one that says, Lord, Lord, that shall abide the day of tithing. Every soul that is saved in the celestial kingdom, will be saved by its own faith and works: therefore, how necessary it is that the Saints should keep all the commandments, that others seeing a good example, may go and do likewise. If any should ask what is my duty? Let him read: To love the Lord supremely: To love his neighbor as himself: To consecrate all to the Lord? To be faithful to the end, and, above all, to have charity. A Saint must be holy, or he cannot have a portion in the holy city."

This quotation certainly sets forth in clear terms that the law requires the consecration of all to the Lord through whom the Lord has appointed for that purpose—the bishop of the church as taught in Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 9, and elsewhere, as we shall yet see.

There is also a clear inference that in obeying the law of consecration by which we are to receive an inheritance, that we are obeying the law of tithing, or in other words, we "abide the day of tithing." Thus sustaining as we claim that the law of consecration and the law of tithing are one and the same thing, as we shall prove later on.

In a reprint of the Evening and Morning Star for June, 1833, page 4, we read:

"It may be well to remark in this place, for the benefit of the public, that in proportion as the judgments of the Lord are poured out upon the wicked, the church of Christ flourishes, and the righteous are gathered; and when they are gathered, instead of becoming a common stock family, as has been said, or of making preparations to become rich in the goods of this world, as is supposed, each man receives a warranty deed securing to himself and heirs, his inheritance in fee simple forever; and all, after having embraced the fullness of the gospel, the everlasting covenant to be saved, prepare for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, being in full fellowship in a determination that is fixed, immovable, and unchangeable to be friends and brethren to the grace of God in bonds of love, to walk in all the commandments of God blameless, in thanksgiving for ever and ever."

This quotation proves beyond question that when a man received his inheritance (or stewardship) that it was secured to him and his heirs by a warranty deed forever, and that by the bishop, the man appointed of God to do that work. (See Doctrine and Covenants 51:1; 82:1, 2.)

A Letter by Joseph Smith

We will now quote from a letter written by Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, November 27, 1832, to W. W. Phelps, at Independence, Missouri. He says:

"Brother William W. Phelps: I say brother because I feel so from the heart, and although it is not long since I wrote a letter to you, yet I feel as though you would excuse me for writing this, as I have many things which I will mention in this letter, which are laying with great weight on my mind. . . . And while I dictate this letter, I fancy to myself that you are saying or thinking something similar to these words: 'My God, great and mighty art thou; therefore show unto thy servant what shall become of all those who are essaying to come up unto Zion, in order to keep the commandments of God, and yet receive not their inheritance by consecration, by order or deed from the bishop, the man that God has appointed in a legal way, agreeably to the law given to organize and regulate the church and all the affairs of the same.'

"Brother William, in the love of God, having the most implicit confidence in you as a man of God, having obtained this confidence by a vision of heaven, therefore, I will proceed to unfold to you some of the feelings of my heart and answer the question.

"Firstly: It is the duty of the Lord's clerk whom he has appointed, to keep a history and a general church record of all things that transpire in Zion, and all those who consecrate properties and receive inheritances legally from the bishop, and also their manner of life, their faith and works; and also of all apostates who apostatize after receiving their inheritances.

"Secondly: It is contrary to the will and commandment of God, that those who receive not their inheritance by consecration agreeably to his law, which he has given, (that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning), should have their names enrolled with the people of God; neither is their genealogy to be kept, or to be had where it may be found on any of the records or history of the church; their names shall not be found, neither the names of the father, the names of the children written in the book of the law of God, saith the Lord of Hosts."

From this letter we learn that some seemingly were going up to Zion with the idea of keeping the commandments of God, and yet did not receive their inheritance by consecration, by order or deed, from the bishop. Evidently they were not willing to comply with the law of consecration which required of them to consecrate all of their properties to the bishop, and then receive from the bishop by "warranty deed" their inheritance—that which "is sufficient for himself and family," (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9), or as we have it specifically stated in Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1, where the bishop was instructed to "appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs," for which the bishop was required to give a writing or deed in order to "make all things sure according to the laws of the land." This was to be their "inheritance in the church." It is fully in harmony with the duty of the bishop as stated in section 57: 3; "And let my servant Edward Partridge, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to divide to the saints their inheritance, even as I have commanded."

As already stated, we claim that the law of consecration and the law of tithing are synonymous terms, meaning one and the same thing. We will now give our reasons for so claiming.

In this letter of Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, as above quoted, Joseph Smith uses this language: "It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not their inheritance by consecration agreeably to his law, which he has given, (that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning), should have their names enrolled with the people of God," etc.

Method Determining Needs and Just Wants

The terms consecration and tithing are here used as undoubtedly applying to one and the same law. We will now quote from a letter written by the first presidency (Joseph Smith, jr., Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams, June 25, 1833), as found in Church History, volume 1, pages 300, 301:

"Brother Edward Partridge; Sir: I proceed to answer your questions, concerning the consecration of property: First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this: a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this he cannot be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church books: therefore, to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge how much he should receive, and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families. (See note below.)

"The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties; for, to give the bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the bishop's judgment, is giving the bishop more power than a king has; and, upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the bishops. The fact is, there must be a balance or equilibrium of power between the bishop and the people; and thus harmony and good will, be preserved among you.

"Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must show reasonably to the bishop that he wants [needs—J. F.] as much as he claims. But in case the two parties cannot come to a mutual agreement, the bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations; and the case must be laid before a counsel of twelve high priests; the bishop not being one of the council, but he is to lay the case before them."

Note: In tract on tithing, as published and sold by the church some years ago, the above letter was quoted as we have quoted it. At the bottom of the page (page 4) the author of the tract has added the following note:

"The individual consecrates all of his property, giving an inventory to the bishop, and then takes back what he needs, and this he does by right though with the consent of the bishop; and this is the manner of his receiving inheritance by consecration."

Not Only an Inventory But a Deed

When we take into consideration the fact that section 42: 8, 9, teaches that those who consecrate properties unto the bishop must do so with a covenant and deed that cannot be broken, and that the properties thus consecrated cannot be taken from the church agreeably to the commandments of God, we feel justified in concluding that the individual not only gives an inventory of his properties to the bishop, but that he executes a deed that will make the transfer legal and binding, according to the laws of the land, and that in return the bishop must also make the individual safe and secure in that which he received from the bishop, and which makes him "a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." This idea would be in perfect harmony with section 51: 1, and also with what we have shown from the letter of Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, that it is positively declared that those who go up to Zion for inheritances must receive the same by deed from the bishop—the man whom God has appointed for that purpose, and unless they did thus receive their inheritance that their names would not be enrolled in the book of the law of the Lord.

We have also quoted from the Evening and Morning Star that those who come to Zion would receive a warranty deed to their inheritances, which unquestionably was received from the bishop.

Section 58: 11 instructs all the churches to obtain moneys to be put into the hands of the bishop for the purchasing of lands for an inheritance for the children of God.

Section 58: 4 teaches that the bishop was to divide the lands of the heritage of God unto his children, according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God.

Section 102: 8 instructed the church to purchase the lands in Jackson County and that after they were purchased that the Saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration.

Evidently, in order to possess those lands according to the law of consecration, they must receive their title or deed from the bishop, who was to divide those lands among the Saints.

Webster defines possess as, "To have the just and legal title, ownership, or property of a thing."

All Land to Pass Through Hands of Bishop

We claim that the law requires that all the land of Zion must pass through the hands of the bishop; either the bishop must purchase the same from the Gentiles, or the Saints who now hold it (by title from the United States Government) must consecrate it to the bishop, according to the law of consecration, and then the bishop will divide the lands of the heritage of God among the Saints (section 58: 4) and thus the Saints will hold their title direct from God through his agent, the bishop of the church, who is to secure it to them by deed. By this process the land of Zion will become sanctified (made holy; consecrated; set apart for sacred services.—Webster), that it may be most holy, as required by the law in section 106: 2. And unless thus sanctified, the land of Zion will not be a land of Zion unto the Saints.

Those Saints who now own land in the land of Zion, holding their title from the United States Government, will by thus consecrating all to the bishop and receiving an inheritance back from the bishop, then hold the title direct from God, which will stand the test of the supreme court of the universe (in the day of judgment), and their title will secure them the right to inherit—or possess—it again in eternity, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4. Any other title will certainly not stand the test, as most of earthly governments cannot trace their rights to the titles they give to their citizens very far back, until they find that their rights or titles to their territory will be found in their "right of discovery," or their "right by conquest." And none can claim ownership conveyed to them by the original owner—the Creator of the earth.

Section 101: 2 teaches that God will provide for his saints, but that it must needs be done in his own way, and according to his way the poor shall be exalted [financially] and the rich are made low [financially]. The rich and the poor must all consecrate all they have—be it little or much—and by deed transfer it to the church through the bishop, so that it cannot again be taken from the church agreeably to the commandments of God (section 42: 8, 9). And thus they become legal heirs to the kingdom of Zion (see letter of Joseph Smith to Bishop Partridge as above quoted), and then by right they can claim their inheritance in Zion from the bishop, who must divide the heritage of God among the saints according to instructions given in section 51: 1, and thus all will be made equal according to their wants and needs, etc. Then the rich who consecrated more than they need for the support of themselves and families (see letter of Joseph Smith to Bishop Partridge, as above quoted), will be made low financially, inasmuch as they will only receive back from the bishop that which will be sufficient for themselves and families, and will leave their "surplus" (the beginning of tithing—section 106: 1) in the hands of the bishop to be used for the purposes named in section 106, as well as for the benefit of the poor, as mentioned in section 42: 8. (See also section 101: 2, latter clause of paragraph, and many other places in Doctrine and Covenants.)

When the poor man has complied with the law of consecration which makes him a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion, he also can claim his inheritance from the bishop, and will receive—not according to how much he has consecrated, but according to his wants and needs, according to his family, etc.

He may receive much more than he consecrated, and thus be exalted financially, and the Lord has said his way of providing for his Saints will bring to pass just such a condition of things among his Saints.

Unto Cæsar Things That Are Cæsar's

In section 63: 8 the Lord says that he holdeth the land of Zion in his own hands, yet nevertheless he will render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and for this reason it is his will that the lands should be purchased, that the Saints may have advantage of the world, that they may have claim on the world and avoid trouble later on.

We gather the idea from this language that God owns the land of Zion, not by right of discovery, or by conquest, but as the Creator and as the original owner by right of creation. Yet it was his will to respect the claims of Cæsar—which represents the governments of this world—to ownership of those lands which had been sold to the citizens, then occupying the land of Zion, and had given them a title to the same which title, however, as we have already said, would not stand the test of the supreme court of the universe in the day of judgment. By purchasing the lands from the citizens of the land and obtaining from them all that their title had secured unto them, the Saints then had advantage of the world, who could not then claim that they had been unjustly deprived of their lands by the Saints, and then when those lands were consecrated to the church, and the bishop, the Lord's agent, would divide them among the Saints—the children of God—and give them a deed for the same as their inheritance in Zion, the Saints would hold a clear title to those lands, as having been conveyed to them from God through his legal agent and representative on the earth—the bishop of his church—whom God had appointed to, do that work.

Thus the Saints will hold a title to their inheritances that no power on earth can successfully dispute or set aside. It will stand in their favor both in time and in eternity.

Stewards In the Order of Enoch

As to the second class of stewards and stewardships, they will be found described in the revelations given concerning the Order of Enoch in sections 77, 81, 93, and 101 in Doctrine and Covenants, which, however, we cannot fully discuss in this article as it will become too lengthy. But we will just say that the stewards in the Order of Enoch are to be officials in the church who are to be organized and bound by a bond and covenant that cannot be broken without subjecting those who break it to very severe penalties, such as are nowhere threatened against the class of stewards we have already discussed in case of disobedience to the laws governing them in their stewardships.

The second class of stewards are to be stewards over church funds, to be used for the purpose of carrying on business for the benefit of the whole church; they will not be stewards over their own properties secured to them by warranty deeds, as are the first class of stewards, as we think we have clearly proved, but are to be "stewards indeed" over the Lord's properties—stewards in the full sense of that term, as Webster defines it. They must turn all of the increase of their stewardships into the church treasury to become the common property of the whole church. They have no personal claim, right, nor title to the properties in their hands, but are only stewards over them. In fact there are many distinguishing features in the rules and regulations governing the two classes of stewards and stewardships. And the attempt to make both classes of laws to apply as though there were but one class of stewards and stewardships, only tends to mystify, confuse, and cause misunderstanding in reference to the subject.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Mother's Catechism

(From Bulletin 717, United States Department of Agriculture.)

At the close of the day the mother might ask herself questions like the following to make sure that she has taken into account the things to which her attention has been directed:

Did the child take about a quart of milk in one form or another?

Have I taken pains to see that the milk that comes to my house has been handled in a clean way?

If I was obliged to serve skim milk for the sake of cleanliness or economy, did I supply a little extra fat in some other way?

Were the fats which I gave the child of the wholesome kind found in milk, cream, butter, and salad oils, or of the unwholesome kind found in doughnuts and other fried foods?

Did I make good use of all skim milk by using it in the preparation of cereal mushes, puddings, or otherwise?

Were all cereal foods thoroughly cooked?

Was the bread soggy? If so, was it because the loaves were too large, or because they were not cooked long enough?

Did I take pains to get a variety of foods from the cereal group by serving a cereal mush once during the day?

Did I keep in mind that while cereals are good foods in themselves, they do not take the place of meat, milk, eggs, fruit, and vegetables?

Did I keep in mind that children who do not have plenty of fruit and vegetables need whole-wheat bread and whole grains served in other ways?

Did each child have an egg or an equivalent amount of meat, fish, or poultry?

Did any child have more than this of flesh foods or eggs? If so, might the money not have been better spent for fruits or vegetables?

If I was unable to get milk, meat, fish, poultry, or eggs, did I serve dried beans, or other legumes thoroughly cooked and carefully seasoned?

Were vegetables and fruits both on the child's bill of fare once during the day? If not, was it because we have not taken pains to raise them in our home garden?

Did either the fruit or the vegetable disagree with the child? If so, ought I to have cooked it more thoroughly, chopped it more finely, or have removed the skins or seeds?

Was the child given sweets between meals, or anything that tempted him to eat when he was not hungry?

Was he allowed to eat sweets when he should have been drinking milk or eating cereals, meat, eggs, fruit, or vegetables?

Were the sweets given to the child simple, i. e., unmixed with much fat or with hard substances difficult to chew, and not highly flavored?

Was the child made to eat slowly and chew his food properly?

A young child may be considered well fed if he has plenty of milk, bread, and other cereal food; an egg once a day or its equivalent in flesh foods; a small portion each of carefully prepared fruits and vegetables, with a small amount of sweet food after his appetite for other foods is satisfied. If there is too much or too little of any of these, his diet is one sided.

What gives its timeless and eternal character to Christ's teaching is that it is spun out of human life, the one thing that never grows old.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

The Right Start For Sunday School Children

When I first read my subject I was not very much enthused with it. If I must talk I wished to talk about the thing nearest my heart, the cradle roll department. I felt very much like the little girl who came running to her mother and said, "Love me, mamma." Her mother answered, "I do love you, Elsie; I always love you." Elsie replied: "I know, but I want you to love me out loud." So while my subject does not say cradle roll out loud, it is back of every word. Let me read it: "The right start for Sunday school children." All children should be Sunday school children so they all come under this head.

It has been truly said: "A perfect beginning in a life is a great factor in the perfect ending of a life," which corresponds with, "Bring up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." This must be good doctrine if we judge from the length of time it has been taught. It seems to me I have heard it as far back as I can remember, and I still believe it, don't you?

Did you ever stop to think that of all the hours spent on a journey none is quite so important as the hour of starting? These cradle roll years are the golden years, the hours of beginning. Baby is starting out on life's journey. You have chosen as a goal for him what you believe accords with God's will for his life, a beautiful, well-rounded, well-developed, useful manhood. What if you start him out in the contrary direction? Suppose you think, Oh, he's so small. These things do not matter now. He really does not understand. There will be plenty of time later on when he is older.

If it were a railway journey you were taking you would not say, "It really does not matter much for the first few hours what direction we take. There is plenty of time to get on the right train later on." No, indeed; you would see to it that the start was right.

The moment of starting gives direction, determines the course. Face the baby toward God and righteousness. Do not think the beginning is of small consequence, because the first steps do not show perceptible progress. He is bound in these years of beginnings to start in some direction. See to it that his first steps are pointed toward that splendid destiny God intends for him.

It has been said, "Character is what a person is in the dark." Thus we want to give our children the right start so they will be what they should be in the dark, if "perfect valor" is to do without witnesses what one would do before the whole world, we want our children to have "valor." You all know it is much easier to do the right thing when our mother or pastor is looking at us than when we are alone, so it stands us in hand to give our children the right start so they may be able to develop a character that they may be able to do without witnesses what they would do before the whole world. Character is not born but builded. You as a parent are the architect of your child's character; how are you causing it to be formed?

In order to teach children of God we must know him ourselves. It does very little good to teach cream and live skimmed milk. We must "feel his presence and his love, then with the thought of that love in our minds constantly, point out to the little children the many, many manifestations of his love. We do not need to explain the relationship of God and Jesus. All we need to say is, "It is God who makes the flowers so pretty and so sweet," or, "It is God who taught the birds to sing." Tell them of Jesus and the little children, how they crowded around him and sat on his lap and how he loved to have them there. Tell your baby of the baby in the manger and God's care for him.

A little boy who had been taught of Jesus and his childhood was playing in the sand pile; presently he came to get some water. His mother asked, "Shall I carry it for you?" "No, Jesus is helping me," was the quick reply. The mother went back to her work to think it over. He chattered constantly. It was apparent that some one was playing with him. "Who is playing with you?" his mother asked, pleasantly. "Jesus is playing with me; he is my brother," was the answer. And then some say, "They do not understand." Can we with all our superior knowledge get closer to the Christ than he did? Can we love him more? No wonder we are told, "Except ye become as a little child."

After all if we just say love we have told the whole story, and when we come to think of it, it is pretty near the whole thing for any of us. Did you ever stop to think that the one thing we are able to teach these little ones by the way of religious instruction is after all the very essence of religion, adult religion? It is so simple that it is the first thing that can be taught a child. Love is the fulfilling of the law.

Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy soul, mind and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself. On these hang all the law and commandments. Love is the easiest thing in the world to teach a child, in fact we hardly need teach love; it is almost second nature to them. So let us teach them early in life, of Jesus and his love.

I know a little child only eighteen months old who one day wanted to do a certain thing and his mother said, "No, you must not." The baby looked at her then walked out into the kitchen and came back with the razor strap, walked up to his mother and struck her with it, then went back and put it up and came in the room and began doing the thing his mother had forbidden. She again said, "No, you must not do that." The baby again went and got the strap, came in and struck his mother then put it away again and began doing the thing his mother had said he must not. The mother looked at him and again said, "Baby, you must not do that." He then walked up to his mother and looked at her and began to jabber with all the vim he had. Then when he found out it did no good he went and found something else to do. This baby had never been whipped with the strap, but he had seen it used a few times on the older boys, and although so little he knew what it was for. If it is possible for him so little to get the connection of why a thing was done, without anyone telling him anything about the reason of it, surely he would make great progress with a little teaching. What a wonderful opportunity mothers have!

Some men say, "Oh, cradle roll work is women's work; why need I bother about it?" We admit that it is, although some men have been very successful with it. One great Sunday school man has said, "Neglect the cradle roll and the effect will be felt throughout every department of the school." I agree with him.

I would like to cite you to some very important work women have done for us.

When the Federated Jewish Institutions, wanted ten million dollars for their building fund, they launched a campaign and raised the entire amount in a short time. Then what did they do with it? Handed it over to a woman, Miss Harriet B. Lowenstein, who will supervise the entire disposition of this vast sum. So women can be great financiers.

And again, three hundred and ninety years ago France and Spain fought a great war. When the fighting was over the commission which decided the terms of peace consisted of three women. Margaret of Austria represented Charles V, the Duchess of Angouleme represented Francis I, and these two chose Louise of Savoy for the third member of the council. They drew up a treaty known as the Ladies' Peace, which for satisfaction and durability compared very favorably with the man-made treaties of history.

Four centuries have passed away. Women have come into their own, they say, but only men sat at the peace table of Versailles. But I do not care to make a political speech, I only wished to cite you to where women have done very important things for the nation.

But what of the future America? That is what we are interested in. In millions of the quiet homes of to-day, we are making the American of the future, it is your baby, and the baby next door, and so on down the street and through the city, and the country, that will make up the Nation of the future. Every strong, kind, fine man and woman that steps out from a quiet home is raising the level of all. The nation is not an abstraction, it is living souls, and every one counts.

You cannot tell what position your baby will be called upon to fill. Prepare him for the highest and best, then if he does not have the opportunity to do great things he can at least do small things greatly, and remember, "All service rank the same with God. There is no first or last." Raise a real American for Uncle Sam; it is the biggest thing he needs.

I have heard my mother say she always wanted to do something worth while, but was kept so close at home taking care of her seven children (as she considered them first in her duty) that she had not time for outside work, and as I look back over my life, then look at my mother I wonder how she ever did the great work that she has, with the many difficulties she had to contend with, as the mothers then did not have the many helps they now have.

At present the world is in the throes of rebuilding. It will demand the best thought and energy of thousands of capable men and women. This great and vitally important work will be shared by the nursery-bound mothers of to-day and by the children whom they are training for citizenship.

Do you know that the physical condition of the Dutch people has improved faster than any other country of the world? The average height of the Dutchman has increased four inches in fifty years, and there is a reason. In Holland they have solved the problem of giving the baby the right start, and who conceived the idea? A woman, Doctor Aletta Jacobs, the first lady doctor in Holland. Do we want other countries to be ahead of our loved America in anything? If not, let us get busy.

To rebuild our nation we need babies who will not only be born but will live to grow up. What was added to the strength of our country by the three hundred thousand babies who died of poverty and neglect in one year? Yes, I mean just that. America lost three hundred thousand babies in one year. Was it necessary? What are we doing to give the baby the right start in life? How much are they worth to us?

It is sometimes surprising to know just how much we do value our children when it comes to dollars and cents. The last legislature of Kansas made the following appropriations:

For the health of hogs.....	$25,000
For the health of bees.....	8,000
For the health of babies.....	7,500

And Doctor Lydie Vilbiss who for four years has diminished the infant mortality in Kansas has resigned. Can you blame her? With these facts before me I cannot help but conclude that this legislature at least placed more value on the hogs and bees than on the children, or they were of the opinion that there were more diseases that hogs and bees were liable to than what children were subject to. You may form your own opinion, then find out what your State is doing. And when the women get the vote use it, by voting for the thing nearest your heart. I need not mention what lies nearest a mother's heart.

And some may ask, what has this to do with cradle roll work? It is cradle roll work. The possibilities are great. What use will we make of them? Cradle rolls like individuals get into ruts and fail to notice their own lack of progress. Shake your cradle roll out of its rut and make it a model. Of what use is your cradle roll to your Sunday school if it does not make it better and add interest to it? But remember, a cradle roll superintendent needs help. Get her the papers and books that she needs so she can post herself on subjects that are important to her department. And then see that she uses them. All cradle roll superintendents should try to know what the nations are doing for their babies, then try to help our nation be ahead of all the rest. We want the best and there is no reason why we should not have it if we work for it. We cannot know too much about babies but let us use tact in expressing that knowledge.

Don't think I would have the cradle roll superintendents go around telling the mothers how to raise their children. No! Far from it, but I would like them to be able to talk intelligently on the subject and be able to give good advice when asked for it. Study good books, magazines, and papers so you can suggest them to mothers. When you find a

Who Shall Appoint Stewardships?

BY THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOP RICH

The seventh of a series of letters sent out to the Saints of the Lamoni Stake.

The creation of stewardships: Who shall appoint?

"But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he be established."—Isaiah 32: 8.

We now come directly to one of the most perplexing, as well as vexing problems of the whole economic program, that of the distribution of wealth. Who shall do it and how, so as to produce the so-much-desired state of equality or equal opportunity.

The proper distribution of wealth is essential to bring humanity to that state of perfection intended for him to attain by his Creator. It is a means not an end, the end being character.

We cannot wait until perfection or the end to be attained comes, before we use the means. To do so spells failure. We must use imperfect man as the active agent to bring about the consummation—perfection.

From the dawn of history mankind has longingly and inspirationally looked forward to the "Golden age, whose light is of the dawn

And not of the sunset, forward, not behind."

The wreckage of failure after failure marks the stream of time, but "the divinity within us," though faltering has never slept and though the "light of morning" has been almost eclipsed and "darkness has covered the earth, and gross darkness the people," we have still potentially believed the story that

"Seer has told of when in trance and dream
They saw the happy Isles of Prophecy."

The ringing challenge of the psalmist still pregnant with its virility is about to be answered: "But thou, O Lord, shalt endure forever; and thy remembrance until all generations. Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time has come."

Human agents must do this work for the Master and mis-real good article, pass it on to others. Mothers are very busy people and sometimes do not have time to look over a magazine to find the article she needs. By the time she finds something good her time is up and she is called to other duties. So it is easy in making a call to mention the title and page of an article so it can easily be found.

While it is true that the accumulated wisdom of experts who have studied hundreds of babies is far greater than that of the mother who confines her observations to two or three, but no one can use that wisdom for the good of the baby better than the mother. We need to acquire every bit of wisdom which can be obtained from the best authorities, but a mother, just because she is a mother, can make a better use of principle than could even the one who determined it.

We can say with Kate Douglas Wiggin, most of all the other beautiful things in life come by twos and threes by dozens and hundreds. Plenty of roses, stars, sunsets, brothers, sisters, aunts and cousins, but only one mother in the wide, wide world. So in closing I feel that—

We may send our little, timid thought
Across the void, out to God's reaching hands;
Thought after thought until the little cord
Has greated to a chain no chance can break,
And we are anchored to the infinite.

—Edwin Markham.

MRS. H. B. ROBERTS.

takes may occur for humanity is fallible. Yet we may expect to find this very important work of the allotment of stewardships surrounded by as many safeguards as possible. What are they?

This power and grave responsibility to distribute wealth so as to aid in the creation of stewardships must necessarily be lodged in somebody. Who is it?

We find the Lord declaring that he is the one who will do this work. "I, the Lord, have appointed them, and ordained them to be stewards over the revelations and commandments." (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1.)

The Lord then may appoint stewardships directly by revelation naming the persons who are to receive their stewardship, also designating what shall comprise said stewardship. This has been done in several cases, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 101; also Matthew 25; etc.

If then, the necessity occurs, if there should needs be the appointment of a steward or stewards in temporal affairs requiring wisdom beyond the human ken, the Lord, as always in the past, can speak and make this allotment in temporal affairs as well as he does in spiritual matters.

In this the Lord works in harmony with himself and delegates authority to his servants to do this work.

Stewardships Made from Property Belonging to the Church

"Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over . . . that which he has received by consecration."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 7.

"Verily, I say unto you, that it is meet in mine eyes that . . . and receive an inheritance from the hand of the bishop."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 7.

"Wherefore, let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he hath chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 57: 3, 6.)

"And let my servant Edward Partridge, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to divide the saints their inheritances, even as I have commanded; and also those whom he has appointed to assist him."—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 3.

Here the Lord states plainly the work of the office of the Presiding Bishop. It is "to divide the Saints their inheritances." This responsibility is also placed on "those whom he has appointed to assist him." The Saints are to receive their inheritances from "the hand of the bishop."

"Wherefore the office of bishop is not equal unto it (presidency of the high priesthood), for the office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things . . . and also to be a judge in Israel, to do the business of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

Our next letter will continue discussing the creation of stewardships.

From Maoriland

Our missionary in New Zealand tells of conditions on those distant islands.

I received a letter from Elder W. J. Haworth, Editor of our Gospel Standard in Sydney, Australia. He said: "I have not lost interest in you, but, have you ever been so busy you could do nothing but work?" That set me thinking. I have been in that position and have come to the conclusion that the only remedy when your work interferes with your business is to quit work and organize. I am trying it in a modified form. Gum arabic dissolved in warm water is cheaper, keeps well and sticks better than the ordinary office paste. An extension alphabetic letter file cost me $1.50 and has already saved me much time and worry since I got my letters assorted into it out of a conglomeration of letters, notes, papers, etc., three years old. A friend gave me two Keystone binders, to keep the Ensigns and HERALD in. I want another one to keep One in. (Now Brother Haworth I know you had all these years ago so I am not throwing rocks at you.) A card index to information about our mission will help us now, and those who come after us to see where we have been and what we have done. Who's who and why.

President F. M. Smith once said: "I want to organize my work so well that I will not be missed when I am out of the office." My time has been saved or lost as I have followed his example.

We have been battling on as usual. Only those who have opened a new mission in a foreign land know what it is. We get large crowds in the streets here in Auckland as we did in Dunedin and the same slanderous opposition we got there. But that opposition has dwindled here as it did there to the atheists and infidels. There are also a few Roman Catholics who love to slander the name of the church and its founders. The Utah Mormons have their New Zealand headquarters in this city, as I have mentioned before, and they have been busy behind the screen. But they have not, to our knowledge, preached in the streets here since our last discussion with them about twenty months ago. Then they absolutely refused to discuss church propositions with us.

But in spite of lies and slander hurled at the truth we have to present, it has found its way to the hearts of some. Three more precious souls have covenanted with God since the New Year. That make us fifteen in all here in Auckland, twelve resident members and three of us missionaries, Elder Robinson's wife having recently left us for her home in Australia on account of her mother's illness.

There are seventeen members of the Dunedin Branch residing in Dunedin. In the south island besides these mentioned are Sister Cook and her little son at Timaru. Mr. J. Cook has heard the gospel and I believe he will accept in due time. There is also Sister Sanders in Christ Church. Her husband is a good man and worthy of God's blessing. I hope he may soon give obedience to the principle of baptism.

Elder Robert W. Hall, 46 Eskvale Street, Saint Kilda, Dunedin, is the president of the Dunedin Branch. Brother Whaler the priest and Brother J. C. Bradley, 33 Cornhill Street, is the teacher.

In Wellington we have Brother and Sister John Leberz, of 41 Palmer Street. Sister Tumor and Brother G. Wilson.

There are a few friends who have heard the gospel and who are near the water's edge. May God bring in those who are ready. Brother L. R. Hopper, recently baptized here, left New Zealand with his wife and family for Southern California, their native land, January 29, this year. I hope the Saints there will seek them out and give them the right-hand of fellowship.

We have a shop front here with living rooms at the back and overhead. The shop room is sixteen by twenty-four feet. Here we hold a tiny little Sunday school with from eight to twelve in attendance, at 2 p. m. Preaching at 7.30 p. m. Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening for two consecutive weeks and Mutual Improvement the following Wednesday. Preaching in the street Sunday afternoon 3.30 to 6 p. m. and Friday evening as well. Those latter are where we have our battles. We have sacrament here each first Sunday in the month, come.

We use this big room for an office, reception room, Sunday school room and other services as well as our study. But it is like some churches, too dark for a study room. So we often sit upstairs at our bedroom windows to study.

We look forward to a visit from Brethren Hanson and Rushton this year about September. They passed through Wellington en route for Australia in December last. Brother Robinson and I feel that if some new man could present the gospel in a new way just for a change there might be some good done here just now. But I suppose it takes long hard drilling with much patience to do much good anywhere.

New Zealand has a very damp climate, chilly and unpleasant in the south. Auckland is the most comfortable of the places I have visited, though Napier is not bad. We have very much rain and misty weather. Very little clear, sunny weather in comparison with Tahiti or Southern California, or any of the Plains States. The scenery is beautiful, and there is a great variety of climate, from semitropical to eternal snow.

We have done very little among the Maoris. Too busy among the whites; not enough help and funds to push out among the Maoris. We have not turned the world upside down but have tried to do what we could.

H. W. SAVAGE.

AUKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, 31 Eden Terrace, February 19, 1920.

A Group Seeking Location

Your message to the conference was deeply appreciated by myself, and it gives me joy to know your attitude toward those things.

For a twofold reason I am attending conference.

First to get the benefit of the same; second, to find a location if possible for our group of men who are organized as per my letter before.

Now it is the desire of this said group to locate in the regions roundabout, and occupy upon the stewardship plan.

The land held among us at present is used by the various members of our order, according to their families, etc.

We had wished even to grant titles of our holdings to each, but, because of instructions from Bishop Keir, we have thought to just work the land in this way, hoping that when we came to this place we could get closer, or more nearly in harmony with the law upon this point.

Our wish is to sell in the West as a group, settle as a group upon unimproved land, if possible, and improve the land to our liking; with our group storehouse and stewardships located about the same.

I am prepared to say that we have had some valuable experience in our work, and that we have no intention of caring for our families in an individual way again.

The Saints in our group are principally farmers who are industrious, and had to learn economy by hard knocks. We also have some tradesmen with us, such as carpenters and masons, whom we hope to use in building and improving in a general way for the group.

We feel that our experience brings us measurably at least, under the instructions: "Wait a little season," also, "have all things prepared before you."

(From a letter to President Frederick M. Smith.)

An Appreciation of the President's Message

It was and is a gladness in our hearts to see that in your opening message to the conference you were able to pass by the many petty matters that could so easily have crowded themselves upon your attention and ours, and to center the attention of conference upon the one great specific need of the hour in a message that makes a call to grapple with world conditions.

Your observations and pronouncements upon the matters treated in your message are so very exactly fitting, according to what might reasonably be expected at this momentous hour of world affairs, from one who occupies the unique position in which a president of this church stands, that the message will reach, and touch most stirringly, people inside and outside the church near and far.

Such a diagnosis of the world's illness, and definite pronouncement of the one and only remedy that can be effectual, will be better received in the church everywhere than could be expected were it possible that it should have been presented by one in less official standing than yourself.

Of course we all know that the church has had words and words, not to mention the failures that have resulted when men have worked with as much zeal as possesses us now, but did not build their economic structure in, the one and only way that is can ever be successful.

The nature of the task that confronts us in the establishing of the people upon a working basis of financial equalities, is such that if too much latitude be allowed at the first for evolution toward the perfect order it will evolve backward instead of forward, and the wreck of our failures be added in time, to the long list of broken failures of the past.

Such a splendid program as our books outline, and as you seem so enthusiastically aroused to see executed, it seems to me cannot fail to enlist the best energies there are in every one of us, when we can get even a glimpse of the wonderful possibilities that lie before the church if she can but learn to work with God.

WIGAN, ENGLAND, March 26, 1920.

Editors Herald: Since last writing to you, I have been demobilized from the army, after completing four years. I am proud to say I am back in Wigan and am taking up my duty again as teacher of the branch.

Surely the Lord has blessed me. I have not been wounded, and have had only one or two days of sickness. I tell you, dear Saints, the Lord was with me. I ever remembered these words, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil." I put my trust in the Lord.

I think we appreciate things more after having been denied for a time. How pleased and glad I was to be back in a Saints' meeting.

The Saints here gave me a very hearty welcome back amongst them, and they showed their appreciation by a tea party in my honor, which they called a "Welcome home tea party."

I am at this time pleased to say what a good spiritual condition the Saints are in here. We have a very fine Sunday school, and I am pleased to say we have commenced a Religio. Of course, we too have our drawbacks. We cherish the thought of a meeting place of our own. We have a building fund, which is very low as yet.

We have had a change in the presidency in this branch. Brother William Spargo who has held this office for nine years has now resigned, owing to his deafness, which was a great drawback to him. The Saints deeply regretted losing him. Now our Brother A. Smith has taken the office. He is a very capable man, and someone with good experience in the church, and one whom I am sure will carry on to the best of his ability the work which Brother Spargo has given up. So it should be, dear Saints, the young men ever preparing to relieve our dear older brethren when age or infirmities prevent their carrying on the work.

I should be pleased to see the HERALD in all homes of the Saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,

35 Greenough Street.

CROSWELL, MICHIGAN, April 1, 1920.

Editors Herald: About one year after being baptized, I decided to make my home in Crosswell. At that time there were only a few members, possibly ten or twelve in number. They being mostly aged members, we only held services during the warm weather.

But I am glad to say we tried to do the best we could under such circumstances. Many times only four or five attended, and this was very discouraging to one who was young. But with faith in God, we relied upon his promise. For when being called into the priesthood, he had said that he had directed that I should go to Crosswell, that I might lead his flock and if faithful, many would be added to our number. I can say his promise is true. In the three years we have grown from the ten or twelve to over seventy members.

Each department is working faithfully, and can see where advancement is being made.

To our church has been added a basement 50 by 30 by 9, which we expect to fully complete next summer.

Having completed the upper auditorium, we find it a place of worship indeed, where blessing innumerable have been poured out upon us, including many encouraging words from the Master.

We were favored with a series of meetings by our district president, William Fligg; also fall conference, from which we have received much good.

The services of the conference will be long remembered by those who were present, as a wonderful degree of the Spirit characterized each service.

The most important move of the conference was (after quite a lengthy session of debate upon a resolution in harmony with the coordination plan, moved by the writer), a motion was made to notify the high council that Eastern Michigan District had accepted the coordination plan. And this, we believe, is a very important step toward Zionistic conditions.

Our priesthood, which consists of three elders, two priests, one teacher, and two deacons, hold sessions every two weeks and study the Doctrine and Covenants and discuss branch activities.

The Lord has surely recognized our efforts, much direction has been received, and we have found that it pays to rely upon the Lord.

The Woman's Auxiliary has been very beneficial to our branch, spiritually as well as financially. Religio and Sunday school are prospering with "Onward and Upward" as their aim, and "Strive that unity and love may exist among us," for their motto.

Our prayers are for the prosperity of the work, honest in heart, and Zionistic conditions.

LONDON, ONTARIO, April 2, 1920.

Editors Herald: March has been a busy month in the interest of our work. Held a very good series of meetings in Saint Clair, quite a number attending the services. I believe we left some very near the kingdom. Brother Joseph Luff called on us quite unexpectedly and gave us two soul-stirring discourses. While there we ordained Brother Bert Lively to the office of elder, and look forward to his being a help in the great work entrusted to all.

Leaving Saint Clair on the 24th, we started for home to prepare for our trip to conference. Stopping in Sarnia, preached for them two nights, in the home of Elder Phillips. The Saints at Sarnia are about to start in the erection of a place of worship, their former meeting place having been sold for a place of business. Their unity of purpose is very commendable.

Leaving Sarnia Saturday, March 27, we held forth in the new church at Wallaceburg Sunday for afternoon and evening preaching services. Brother Richard Jones of Chatham taking the Sunday school hour in hand as a district officer, the hour was well spent, and we were pleased to see what a splendid fixture Brother Richard was becoming in Sunday school work. For the evening services, the lodge of the Knights of Pythias marched to the church in a body, about sixty members, and a host of outsiders. This was the first of an experience of this kind to me, but our heavenly Father was our helper. The choir rendered some splendid service.

Wallaceburg has a very inviting edifice; the location is of the best, and it speaks volumes of the untiring efforts of their branch president, David Campbell.

Leaving Chatham after having a visit with Chatham's grand old man in the person of Stewart Lamont, of Erie Beach Reunion fame, we reached home and loved ones to hear the sad news that Elder George Henley had passed away. Brother George had been sick and feeling poorly, but his sudden demise was a shock to us all. Monday morning early, he had a stroke; never spoke after that, and very shortly breathed his last.

He was baptized in 1878 and has spent the most of his church experience in London. I was asked to take charge of the funeral arrangements, and when the church was reached with the remains of our brother almost buried in flowers, as tokens of love and respect, I wanted to be brave and do my part, but in the memory of past years of comradeship and struggles in the interest of branch work and efforts upon the highway, I was all but overcome. I could feel and see new light in the thought, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Reports to General Conference

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Relief and Service. Mrs. Henry C. Smith attended the Kirtland and Pertle Springs reunions in the interests of the Auxiliary. Prepared fifty close-line stencils for lessons. Has had charge of a class in "Relief and Service" and "Foods" at the Independence Institute and is at the head of that division in the Institute. Is preparing the present courses on relief and service, and food and the body.

(The above reports of these two supervisors express inadequately the amount of time, labor and money used in the preparation of the work which they are giving to the church through the Woman's Auxiliary.)

Young Woman's Bureau. Mrs. Alice M. Burgess Supervisor of Bureau and Temple Builders, Miss Grace Thompson, Director of Oriole Girls.

Report of Oriole Girls Director: Has received reports from twenty-two districts with fifty-four circles alive and active. There is record of forty more that have been organized within the last two years. Some have organized into Temple Builder Chapters. The chief difficulty is to secure leaders for the girls. They are enthusiastic and only need some one to lead them.

In addition to her school work Miss Thompson has been able to keep up the correspondence of from five to ten and twelve letters per week. Michigan and Canada report the largest number of circles. Financial report of the Oriole Society.

Received from the sales of books and supplies	$46.59
Expenses	9.20
Balance on hand	$37.39

Mrs. A. M. Burgess, Supervisor of Temple Builders. On account of illness we have no statistical report. A manual for this society is nearly completed and would have been on sale at this convention but for the above reason. We anticipate it will be ready very soon.

Mrs. Burgess has conducted the "Parthenon" in the Autumn Leaves, a very attractive department of that periodical. Her staff of contributing editors seem to touch all phases of girl life.

Summary of Report of Auxiliary Members of the Board of Trustees for the Children's Home

The three members representing the Woman's Auxiliary on this Board are Mrs. M. B. Nicholson, Mrs. L. L. Resseguie and Mrs. Callie B. Stebbins. They have met with the trustees in all sessions and served on various committees. They have served on the clothing committee as heretofore. Mrs. M. B. Nicholson is a member of the admission and dismissal committee, Mrs. L. L. Resseguie and Mrs. C. B. Stebbins are members of the educational committee. In December Mrs. Stebbins was elected secretary of the board, thus becoming a member of the admission and dismissal committee. The Auxiliary member whose term expires at this conference is Mrs. L. L. Resseguie.

Forty-eight children have been cared for during the year. Seven children have been received and twenty sent out, twelve having been returned to friends and eight placed in private homes.

Patroness Society of Independence Sanitarium

The members have met every month the past year except one when sickness prevented. A good attendance is maintained. A great deal of mending has been done and many new garments made. Sister E. L. Kelley is president, Sister B. R. McGuire, Vice president, Sister F. O. Thomason is secretary, Sister Joseph Arber, treasurer.

The Laurel Club of Independence.

Nineteen meetings have been held during the year and three socials, two of which were free. The other only a charge of twenty-five cents to defray expenses. The object of these socials was to promote sociability. Ten dollars was paid for a membership in the Farm Bureau and Home Department work which entitled members to a series of lectures. The club also served a table for the returning soldiers of Independence. On Thanksgiving Eve a banquet

His wife and daughter, and two grandchildren are left to mourn. And now he belongs to the history of the London Branch. Faithfully yours, was served for the Stake Sunday school in the dining hall, with covers laid for two hundred at twenty-five cents per plate. $49.68 has been paid by the club for the upkeep of Triangle Park and $25.00 tithing paid. To date the club has on hand $222.26; approximate expenses, $99.

Institute Work

Late in the fall we were asked to join the winter institute movement, which we did, sending material prepared by our supervisors and others, to Brother A. W. Smith, in charge. We have not yet received reports. By action of the committee we agreed to contribute a pro rata share of expenses which were $62.98.

Reunion Work

Our association with reunion committees this year was very agreeable. The spirit of cooperation manifested by them made possible many opportunities for presenting our work. We value highly the occasions for a personal presentation of the Woman's Auxiliary which bring about a better understanding of our organization. Ten reunions were visited by the members of the executive committee.

Social Purity Work

The Social Purity work placed with the Woman's Auxiliary by the coordinating committee last year has received our attention in the way of a beginning, only. We have consulted with one of the members of the former Social Purity Board to learn what has been the experience of past efforts. In the transfer of this department of work to the woman's organization we desire it to be understood that we consider it to be a cooperative work with the priesthood, and an impossibility of accomplishment by any organization of one sex. Whatever may be the social condition of the men and women of the church let it not be said that a child is uninstructed because of lack of interest or competency on the part of parents or teachers. We have prepared a classified course of reading adapted as follows and will be placed for inspection at the coming Convention. Books—

To use with children up to eight years.

To use with boys and girls from nine to fourteen.

To use with youths over fourteen.

For the use of the married.

We feel that this work can best be carried on by personal sympathy and instruction therefore we hope to prepare Women as leaders and teachers for this work.

Foreign Lands

Australia. We have a report from the new president of the Australian Mission, Sister Ruth Henricks of Balmain, saying the second annual convention was held the 29th of December. They earnestly desire our study material and all literature that we have as they are deeply interested. They propose that we send our books and literature for sale, to their Standard Publishing House so that they may be able to make purchases more conveniently.

Switzerland. We have heard once, during the year, from our sisters in this country. They were making successful efforts in the Oriole work there.

British Isles Mission. Sister Pearl Crick our organizer in this mission wrote on September 12 that she had sent letters to the twenty branches in the mission asking their assistance and good will in helping to get this work started there. The result was that she discovered there was only one branch that had any kind of a woman's society other than a woman's prayer meeting. Some reported they would like to see this work taken up there. The previous month the district held their annual conference and reunion at Birmingham, eight days, the first of its kind. Two meetings were held by the women discussing the Auxiliary work after which they formally organized into a district. Three classes have been organized in Home and Child Welfare work and there are prospects of others.

Hawaii. We have organization in Hawaii, one at Honolulu and one at Hilo. At Honolulu there are twenty members actively engaged. At the time of writing they were helping to furnish the Mission Home to make it more comfortable for Brother and Sister Etzenhouser. They seem happy in their work.

At Hilo an organization was effected December 7, 1919 with fifteen members. In addition to the offices of president, vice president, secretary and treasurer they have a branch nurse who is doing effective work among them.

Budget of Expense.

We have prepared, by request, a budget of expense for 1920, covering salaries for help, office equipment, typewriter

MISCELLANEOUS

To the Saints in All the World

For the purpose of aiding in an intensive proselyting campaign we are anxious to get in touch with all the Saints, all the relatives or friends of Saints who may be in Chicago or the suburbs of this great city, with the view to soliciting their interest in the latter-day message. Many Saints are living in this city who never come to either of the churches, and many Saints living elsewhere have relatives and friends living here who would no doubt be approachable with the angel's message if we but knew where to find them. Please send us at once names and addresses, also telephone numbers, should you possess them, of any relative, (near or distant) friends or friends of friends who may be residing in this city and let us see what we can do to interest them in the gospel restored. Be very careful and give us full names and addresses, carefully written, and if you are not a good penman print the names and addresses. Do this now, just as soon as you see this notice. We wish to find every Saint, every relative of a Saint and every friend of a Saint from all over the world who is supposed to live in or near Chicago. Remember and be particular to give us full names and the latest known addresses, and from these we may be able to locate many who have changed addresses since you have been in touch with them. Send all these to Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Have You Old Church Publications?

The Historical Department wishes the names and addresses of all those who have any copies of old church publications, such as The Evening and the Morning Star, Messenger and Advocate, Elders' Journal, Times and Seasons, Millennial Star, Voree Herald, The Seer, The Messenger, The Prophet.

Or any other publication issued by the church or any of its factions, periodical, manuscript, tract, or book.

The department would like to have a list of all such publications in your possession and to know whether you are willing to part with them or not. Will you give, lend, or sell any of these? Address the Historical Department, box 255, Independence, Missouri.

WALTER W. SMITH, Historian.

HEMAN HALE SMITH, Assistant Historian.

Get a Set of Conference Wireless News

One of the most satisfactory ventures our people at Lamoni have supported was the Conference Wireless News, issued daily in Lamoni during the late General Conference, reporting by wireless a summary of all the important developments of the day. Within half an hour after the close of the sessions the Saints of Lamoni were reading in their homes the news flashed to them by this wonderful modern invention, gathered by a special reporter at the conference.

Not only was this greatly appreciated by the patrons during the sessions, but copies will be greatly sought after by Saints all over the church as the first daily wireless newspaper published in the Middle West. The Radio Department of Graceland College will send a complete set of these numbers to anyone remitting fifty cents. Every Saint will appreciate having these copies as a memento, and as a comparison with our attainments in this line a few years from now.

The time is coming when this department will serve all our chief centers of church population and keep the Saints in touch with the latest developments daily. It is a field teemsupplies, stationary, postage and express, printing, books and magazines, traveling expenses and advertising, amounting to $3,000.

Very sincerely,

MRS. D. J. KRAHL.

ing with interest for our young men who would like to qualify for expert service in radio work. The announcement in this issue contains some interesting information.

Appointment of Chorister

To Whom Concerned: At the last conference of the Southern California District Sister Lois Aldridge Grenawalt, of 224 F Street, San Bernardino, California, was chosen and recommended to us for appointment as chorister of that district.

We are glad to make this appointment, and bespeak for Sister Grenawalt the hearty support of all the musical forces of the district named. We trust that they will enter with Sister Grenawalt, in the true spirit of cooperation, into the active development of the district's musical work, that the glory of the cause may be enhanced thereby.

Arthur N. Hoxie, General Church Chorister; Arthur H. Mills, General Secretary. Approved by the Presidency: Frederick M. Smith.

To Establish Wireless School at Independence

A new wireless school is to be established at Independence shortly for the purpose of offering instruction in commercial radio operation. Arthur B. Church, a radio expert who has had charge of the work at Graceland since its beginning there will have charge of the school. It is intended to open the school about the first of September. Further announcements will be made later in these columns.

In connection with the instruction work mentioned above, the radio communication service of the church is to be enlarged. As soon as practicable new stations are to be installed at the various stake headquarters. Stations are now erected at Independence and Lamoni, and a new station is being installed at Holden. It is desired to put these stations on a commercial basis in the near future. This work will, of course, require the services of a number of trained operators. Young men having at least a high school education who are interested in the church radio work are requested to communicate with Arthur B. Church, Lamoni, Iowa.

Conference Notices

New York, with Niagara Falls Branch, June 5 and 6. Anna Brothers, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York; James E. Bishop, president.

The next conference of the Clinton District will be held coordinately with the Sunday school and Religio conventions at Taberville, Missouri, May 28, 29, and 30. Those coming by train should get off at Rockville. Notify A. I. Roberts of Rockville, Missouri, or Joshua Sandage, Taberville, Missouri, of the time you expect to arrive at Rockville. All those coming by rail should come on Thursday, the 27th. Reports should be sent by all the branches, and all who hold the priesthood. Send reports to the secretary, Mrs. A. C. Silvers, West Hickory Street, Nevada, Missouri. H. E. Moler, president.

Kansas City Stake, May 16 and 17, Central Church, Ninth and Lydia, Kansas City, Missouri. Special musical program 6.30, and preaching 7.30 p. m. Light luncheon for dinner, and supper served by Sunday school class. Let the Saints throughout the whole stake come prepared to spend the entire day. Coordinate business session 7.30 p. m., Monday the 17th. T. J. Elliott, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Clinton District, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 20-29. H. E. Moler, for committee.

Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, Iowa, August 13 to 22. The committee have arranged for the use of the fair ground at that place. With the splendid equipment at their disposal, and the growing interest throughout the district, we are looking forward to a very successful reunion. Milo Burnett.

Important Notice to Home Class and Cradle Roll Workers

Notwithstanding the transfer of the Home Class and Cradle Roll work to the Women's Department, it has been decided that the present organization will remain intact in respect to general, district and local aspects until further notice of change from the Director of the Women's Department is given.

Carry on.

GOMER WELLS, Superintendent,
Sunday School Department.

Our Departed Ones

BURGESS.—Florence, daughter of Samuel R. and Eveline Burgess, was born July 25, 1879. Baptized March 28, 1890. At the age of ten she was elected organist of the Sunday school. A few years later she became a member of the choir, to which she devoted some 25 years of service as a singer and organist. Member of the Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary, Rhotheta and Good Cheer organized classes, church choir, and interdenominational training class for Sunday-school teachers, and Saint Louis correspondent to Zion's Ensign. She was devoted to the interests of the church and especially to the work in the department of music. Died April 12, 1920.

EARLY.—Near Andover, Missouri, December 14, 1919, Sister Sarah A. Early, aged 79 years and 9 months. Born at Dudley, Worcestershire, England. Married William Early, and they moved to America in the 60's, living many years at Kewanee, Illinois. Of 13 children, 5 survive their mother. The father died several years ago. Sister Early suffered severe illness for a long time. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by James Martin, sr.

NELSON.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 9, 1920, Brother James Nelson, aged 70 years, 5 months, and 4 days. Born in Glasgow, Scotland. Came to America with his parents when he was past seven years. Married Carrie R. Hansen in 1873. Of 6 children, only one survives, John Nelson, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. James Nelson was baptized in April, 1915, at Lamoni, Iowa. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by D. C. White. His brother, John Nelson and wife, of Topeka, Kansas, were present at his death and funeral.

HANCOCK.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 14, 1920, Sister Eliza Hancock, aged 84 years and one month, born in Bristol, England. Married John Hancock in 1854. They emigrated to America in 1856, and lived in Brooklyn and Delaware. Went to Utah in 1863. There suffered greatly, but came away in 1865. For 37 years lived at Wathena, Kansas. Came to Lamoni in 1903. Husband died in 1905. She was very devoted to the gospel and to any good work she could do. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Joseph Bogue.

LAWRENCE.—At Los Angeles, California, March 31, 1920, after an illness lasting about one year, Mr. Thurman B. Lawrence. Born in Iowa, June 16, 1888, and was a bright young man of much promise, but the end came suddenly, leaving his young wife, bereft indeed. They were real companions working to establish a home, and success had crowned their efforts. He leaves besides his widow, his parents and one brother, the widow being a daughter of Sister Darrow of Stockton, California. Funeral services conducted by W. H. Garrett, in the beautiful chapel of the cemetery at Glendale.

WALLER.—B. N. Waller, born near Broadhead, Wisconsin, February 6, 1864. Died at his home in Des Moines, March 31, 1920, after a lingering illness. Married Katherine Holliday, September 1, 1889, at Persia, Iowa. To this union there were born 4 boys, one died in infancy. Donald H., Robert B., and Carroll D. remain to mourn. Leaves aged father and mother, one brother and two sisters, besides other relatives, and a large list of warm friends. Buried at Council Bluffs after funeral at Des Moines. F. A. Smith preached the sermon.

HEAD.—Margaret Jane Lambert was born August 28, 1852, at Nauvoo, Illinois. Married William Siegfried in 1871, and 2 children were born. Baptized in 1875. After the death of first husband, married Alfred W. Head in 1877, 5 children being born to them, 4 living: Walter D. Head, Omaha; Richard D., Dekalb, Missouri; Mrs. Sarah J. Bowen, Easton, Missouri, and Maude E., at home. Survived by 6 grandchildren and 4 stepchildren. She was a kind wife and mother. Funeral at Stewartsville, Missouri, D. E. Powell in charge, T. T. Hinderks preaching the sermon.

BROLLIAR.—Ernest Broliar was born in Wilber precinct, Saline County, Nebraska, March 17, 1891. Baptized by W. M. Self, September 27, 1903. Served during the World War with the United States Marines. Died at Portland, Oregon, April 5, 1920. Services at Saints' church, Wilber, Nebraska, by C. H. Porter. Members of American Legion in uniform attended.

DUNN.—Ammon Eugene Dunn was born October 10, 1902, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. Baptized during Far West district reunion, Stewartsville, Missouri, August, 1913, by Hale W. Smith. Died February 16, aged 17 years, 4 months, and 6 days. He leaves to mourn, father, John E. Dunn; 3 brothers, Joseph S., and Horace S. of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Mark H. Dunn of Independence, Missouri; and 4 sisters, Mrs. Frank Weitlich, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, Mrs. Arthur Ehlers and Mrs. Art Wood, of Stewartsville, Missouri, and Miss Helen Dunn, a nurse at the Sanitarium, all of whom are present. His life was one of purity, and few boys enjoy the reputation and record he has made in the few short years he was permitted to remain here. His delight was in the Lord and his promises. He never missed a meeting he was able to attend. He never used bad language, tobacco, or strong drink in any form, and was clean in all his habits. At the time he was stricken with typhoid fever, he was a student at the Ransomerian Business College, Kansas City, Missouri, trying to qualify himself for service to the church. He was a patient sufferer, and was firm in the faith to the end. Besides his immediate family, he leaves a host of relatives and friends who deeply feel their loss. Funeral services at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Walter W. Smith in charge. Sermon by Roy Hopkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HUGHES.—Alfred H. Hughes, eldest son of Henry Hughes, late of Shelbourne, Ontario, died at this residence, 170 Wychwood Avenue, Toronto, Canada, April 9, 1920, in his 41st year, after a lingering illness from pernicious anemia.

FLINT.—Mary Spinning was born in Cedarville, Ohio, March 20, 1848. Came to Illinois with her parents in 1871. Married J. L. Flint, August 5, 1883. Although not a member of our church, she was for many years a staunch friend of the work, and during her last illness experienced many blessings. Died at her home in Rockville Township, April 8, 1920. Leaves husband and 2 sisters, Mrs. Jameson of Clear Water, Kansas, and Mrs. Flaughter of Joliet, Illinois. One sister, Mrs. Rodgers preceded her in death only five days. Funeral at the home, April 10. Sermon by Earl D. Rogers. Burial at Wilmington, Illinois.

BRIGGS.—Emma Whitcomb was born at Beloit, Wisconsin, December 27, 1842. Married in 1861 to Edmund C. Briggs. To this union were born 4 children, 3 sons, and one daughter, one son having died in infancy. Both sons, Damon and Dayton were present at the funeral, the daughter, Mable being prevented from attending by illness. Death occurred at the home of her daughter, Mabel, in Independence, Missouri, where she had been an invalid—confined to her bed for three years. Funeral at the E. D. Briggs residence, sermon by John Smith. Burial at Rose Hill Cemetery.

POTTS.—Eliza, wife of George Potts, was born at Tatenill, Staffordshire, England. Died at her home, 1418 President Street, Brooklyn, New York, March 27, 1920, aged 55 years, one month, and 15 days. Cancerous conditions developed about one year ago, since which time our sister has received all that medical skill and loving hands could do. She bore her affliction patiently until relieved of her suffering, and has passed on to her reward. She was a faithful member of the church and will be remembered by many of our ministry, especially those who labored in the East, for her saintly hospitality. This being the first entrance of death into the family circle, she leaves to mourn her husband, 2 sons, and 5 daughters. A crowded church with beautiful floral gifts in abundance attested the high esteem in which she was held by a host of Saints and friends. Services in the Saints' church, conducted by Ephraim Squire. Remains placed temporarily in the Cemetery of the Evergreens.

HAYES.—Hazel V., beloved daughter of John A. and Molisa M. Johnson, was born in Clare County, Michigan, May 5, 1899. Blessed by J. J. Cornish. Baptized November, 1910, by Joseph Dexter. Married Clarence E. Hayes, April 13, 1917. Died in Lansing, March 22, 1920. A three-day old son preceded her by four days. Her husband, father, mother, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, other relatives, and a host of friends are left to mourn. She was of a kind and gentle disposition, and was loved by all who knew her. Funeral sermon by S. A. Barse.

THOMAS.—John Thomas was born November 8, 1840, at Llandsbis, Carmarthen, South Wales, Rebaptized June 6, 1909, by J. C. Jenkins. Reordained an elder May 15, 1910. Died at his home in Pontrhydyfen, Glamorgan, Wales. The faithful widow, with 4 sons, 2 daughters, and several grand children are left to mourn. By request of the brother, Thomas Jones conducted the funeral services, which were held at the Independent chapel, March 28, assisted by J. G. Jenkins, in Welsh. Many were present apart from the relatives. Our brother was highly esteemed, and always bore a strong testimony of the angel's message.

HENLEY.—George H. Henley was born March 27, 1861, at Forgay, Devonshire, England. Died March 29, 1920. Baptized at London, September, 1878. Ordained deacon, 1882; priest, 1885; elder, 1897, at Sandwich, Illinois. Married Rennie Baker, June, 1883. His only son, Albert, preceded him in death one year ago. Sister Henley and her daughter, Vera, have the sympathy of a wide circle of Saints and friends.

Funeral from Saints' Church, Maitland Street. Sermon by William Fligg, assisted by Frank Gray.

MUIR.—Ida May McKague was born November 13, 1887. Married Elder Harold C. Muir June 5, 1907. To this union were born 4 girls and one boy, who with their father survive her. Baptized May 3, 1908 by G. M. Shippy, and since that date has been a faithful worker in the church, and a true and devoted wife and mother. Died April 17, 1920. Services in charge of William Fligg.

Watch the Papers!

Much of the misrepresentation that appears in the public press can be corrected and can be made the opportunity of getting the truth before the people, if we would take prompt action. We want to ask our people everywhere to be on the watch for anything pertaining to our church and be prepared to get publicity for the truth. We will appreciate clippings of anything that is printed for or against our church, and this department is always at your service.

There is no finer habit to acquire than the habit of buying good books. Nothing will return so much profit on the investment. Nothing will bring as much pleasure.

In this life we can catch but fleeting glimpses of great men, and if we sought their company we would no doubt be denied, but in the company of books all are welcome, and there the great and the good are found at their best and all of their wisdom is ours for the seeking.

By all means build a library. For yourself and for your children call around you the written experiences of those who have achieved greatness.

As a Latter Day Saint you are enjoined by revelation to study good books, and you ought always to have your equipment ready at hand.

Make it a habit to buy books at Christmas, at Easter, on birthdays and for holidays. Train your family in the love of books.

First of all: own the church books. Buy them one at a time until you have them all. You will be more interested in the Church. As you study it, the more you will love it. Order some church books to-day.

Center Place of Zion Established

The following was sent us by wireless on Monday morning, May 2, by Arthur E. McKim. We extend our sincere appreciation to all concerned in furnishing this news so promptly and in such detail.

Sunday, May 2, 1920, was a memorable day in the history of the church, especially as it affected Independence, Missouri. The culmination of many years of training and effort was reached, and the threshold of a new day and new opportunities was crossed.

Zion as an organization was formally inaugurated and its mild reign, so long proposed, was in fact begun. The transition of Independence from a stake to the center place of Zion was authorized by the late General Conference, and that it could be accomplished with so little disruption was credited by President Frederick M. Smith to the splendid labors of Walter W. Smith, who four years ago was called to this charge with the understanding that his work was to be one of preparation, and who during that time perfected the machinery of organization to such an extent that the process of change was evident only in administrative readjustment, and all the group officers are in their appointed places as before. Their work will continue as a means of bringing each member into personal contact with the church through its pastoral arm.

The day opened rather drab and cold, but at 8 a. m. a large gathering of people experienced a wonderfully spiritual prayer meeting and at 11 a. m. the main auditorium was filled and some were permitted in the gallery. The First Presidency was in charge of the sacrament service and truly the Lord's supper was administered in a spirit of brotherhood and with a sense of consecration and unity that we have seldom witnessed before.

The love of God was in the midst of his people from the opening hymn, and the sacrament was one in which the Savior was verily present by his Spirit.

At 2.30 the Presidency was again in charge and the building was filled. Sisters Frederick M. Smith and Audentia Anderson spoke briefly and feelingly of the work lying before the women of the church, and the vision they have for the Women's Department. Doctor G. Leonard Harrington told of his ideals in relation to the health work of the church, and what as church physician he proposed to do.

President F. M. Smith then spoke, and reviewed the history of the stake, the causes and plans that have eventuated into a Zion organization and paid tribute not only to the work of Walter W. Smith who will now devote himself to the historical and educational work of the church, but also to the ability of R. V. Hopkins, on whom the Presidency has placed the detail work of the administrative problems. President Smith told how his heart was made glad to see his vision and ideals thus far fulfilled and expressed his feeling of deep responsibility and the realization that the great work still lay before us. As a leader he knew that he could go only as far and no faster than his people were willing to go, and his plea was that they might go forward to the accomplishment of the high and mighty task to which they had long ago been called. Much more was said by the leader of the church, and its powerful emphasis was felt by all present.

The center place as now organized is under the administration of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric of the church. The center city is divided into groups, each group having an elder, priest, teacher and deacon to care for its administration. These groups are under district supervisors, who in turn report to the Presidency. The Standing High Council of the church will also serve for the center place and will be organized so that it may be called together on very short notice.

Announcement was made that Bishop B. J. Scott would take charge of the Walnut Park Church, as Brother A. H. Parsons had been assigned other labors.

At the afternoon meeting J. August Koehler, at one time pastor at Philadelphia, and until recently one of the presidencies of the Independence Stake, was ordained a bishop under the hands of President Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith. Brother Koehler is now living in Lamoni, Iowa, he having been placed in charge of the Herald Publishing House a few months ago. He leaves Lamoni soon, being assigned, subject to the will of the membership, to the Far West Stake.

At 7.30 the church was crowded with an attentive audience to hear Walter W. Smith in his farewell sermon as pastor. Brother Smith was in a happy mood, and his congregation could share his feelings, knowing as they did that his new work would not take him from their midst, and that he and his family will still be present in Zion. Brother Walter was at his best in the sermon, and those who have heard him preach know that this is no small compliment. He is closing a wonderful period of service in Independence, and has builded an abiding affection for himself in the hearts of his people. He has been at their call night or day. In sickness or in rejoicing their life has been his chief concern and their happiness has been his reward. He has been a pastor in every sense and through it all, and as shown in this sermon he has ever sought to present his messages so that the people might see beyond him to the cause he represented and he expressed the belief that their devotion being thus attached to the cause rather than to the person, the new pastor would receive the same cooperation he had had.

A report of this first Sunday in May, 1920, is given thus detailed, because we feel that it is an occasion of interest to the entire church. Zion belongs to every soul that has taken on the name of Latter Day Saint, and her glory and perfection will be the joy of all. The Saints from the temple lot branch worshiped in a body at the Stone Church Sunday morning, and the sacrament was administered to all, for all are children in Christ. The experience of General Conference, the vision as pointed out by our leader will not soon be forgotten, and already the purposes of God are being worked out mightily among his people. This Sabbath Day experience was an earnest of the inheritance in store.

Our Theology

"For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead."—1 Corinthians 15: 16-21.

Great as is the economic plan for the establishment of Zion, of justice between man and man; wonderful as is the plan by which each one works for the benefit of all, and all for the benefit of each one—with a solidarity not made according to classes or artificial classification but broad as humanity, wide as our brotherhood under God, still we need sometimes to remember that the social plan is not all there is in the gospel. At times it seems social justice should be stressed beyond everything else, certainly it should be stressed far beyond a selfish ambition simply for the securing of personal gratification in a certain glory.

But there comes those times in life when in the midst of our planning and our rejoicing, death suddenly strikes and carries off some loved one. What means the money of this world; what then mean the pleasures of this world compared with the love borne to the one who has gone from us? No amount of money, no amount of material things can compensate for that loneliness.

Saint Paul goes so far as to say, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." That is expressing it rather strongly, for we believe the plan of Jesus Christ will be the best for our present happiness, for the good of our fellow man, and those of the household of faith now and here. Still when one considers the great sacrifices made by the missionaries, the great self-denial required, the pleasant things given up, a clear reason is given for the declaration of the apostle.

The mission of Jesus Christ for the redemption of the world; Jesus the Christ as the Son of God, the Messiah of Israel, the Savior of the world, is a vital part of the Christian religion. The economic solution must fail unless it is accompanied by the individual redemption, which comes with a realization of our sonship with God, and brotherhood with Jesus Christ and with one another. That our loved ones continue to live, together with our hope of seeing and living with them, is a vital part of our religion.

The fact that man is an immortal being, and that his life here is but part of his existence is the most essential fact to be considered in the planning of his life. It gives him a perspective—an outlook upon life that he lives not for a day alone, but that he plan for the ages of ages.

The belief and knowledge we have that the universe is not run haphazard, but that there is intelligent direction and that the power behind nature and all its manifestations is good, is essential to our moral stability, and to our consistent work of development. Theology, teaching us of God who is at once our Father and our Friend, all-wise, all-knowing, all-powerful, all-merciful, and all-loving, is a foundation for the erection of our spiritual and material structure.

Yet on the other hand we must remember that we are here for a purpose, and with a work to accomplish, and that work is largely done with material means, and with our brethren and sisters. Take away either the assurance of immortality and the hope of eternal life, or take away the material comfort that a right, industrial order provides, and life seems scarcely worth living. But it is more worth living with a hope of future peace and joy in the midst of present suffering, than it is in the midst of present plenty with no hope for the hereafter.

But having that assurance of the existence and goodness of God and of the life to come, the most important work for us to do here is manifested in our love of our brethren, in which we show our love of God, in doing good for one another.

"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—Micah 6: 8.

We have the assurance that God lives, that our loved ones are not lost, that here we may establish justice in Zion, the city of our God, and hereafter have life eternal.

Spiritual Progression

It is certain that progress will disturb many people because of natural inertia. We like to think of sitting down and considering ourselves saved. We have been baptized and go to church, and surely that is enough.

We are reminded that most of the people are people of grammar school education. Naturally that is true. It has been emphasized many times in these columns. Nevertheless, a person is not justified in remaining throughout life at a grammar school status. It is not simply a matter of going to school. If a person's reading and experience in life does not fit him for more than a seventh or eighth grade classification, though he is of middle age, he is still a child.

Shall we refuse to use the men and women who have had and through their earnest efforts secured a better preparation and are willing to give it for the church, remembering always that spiritual inspiration and power is a necessity?

To many the idea of studying in the millennium is discouraging. They dislike the idea of learning, even at the feet of Jesus. Yet they will insist that those who persistently have held themselves to a hard task shall be given no consideration.

The Lord has told us that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man that which he has prepared for those who love him. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7 practically the same thing concerning the celestial glory. What are we then to think of the possibilities of the terrestrial, to say nothing of the celestial?

After a sermon by one of our prominent ministers on the millennium, and the wonderful opportunity we would have in studying under the immediate direction of the Lord Jesus Christ, one of our younger sisters addressed one of our college graduates and remarked, "Well, you are reading and studying all the time. What do you think that you will do in the millennium?"

He replied, "In the millennium? Well, I will tell you. The more I read and study, the more I find out that I do not know. Just at present it seem to me that unless I am to progress more rapidly than I am right now, that I might have enough mapped out to keep me busy for the next million years or so."

"Oh, but that's discouraging for the rest of us."

But is it? After presenting in a public sermon some of the ideals of the kingdom, and the wonderful opportunities before us, a similar expression and reply was made. But is it really discouraging?

What it means is simply this: All the best, highest, and finest that you have ever seen, heard, thought, or dreamed of, you can accomplish. And you can call it your heaven if you choose. But God has planned yet better things for you.

If you desire to stick there, perhaps you may, but God plans far more beautiful and greater things to be yours. To our mind that is an encouragement rather than a discouragement, that we can learn, and yet learn again, and become more and yet more nearly in divine likeness, and come to know our heavenly Father better, and yet better.

As we have already indicated, to some it seems that when a message comes from God it should be at once accepted. This idea of heaven as a place to sit down and rest; this idea of God arbitrarily saving us; this idea of a word that should be spoken and that man must immediately obey, as an ideal condition, leaving no room for thought, has its origin in one place, and that is described in Genesis 3, Inspired Version.

Lucifer, himself a son of the morning, in the presence of God, offered to undertake the work of redemption. Only he asked the glory and power of God, and he guaranteed that not one soul would be lost. He would force every man to be saved. He simply would bring them back into heaven. But what would they be good for when they got there? To hang on the wall? To decorate the ceiling? They would be prepared for a secular heaven; simply to sit down and play on a harp, providing they had a good ear for music. But it is a narrowed ideal. Because he suggested it, because he would take away the free agency of man, God cast him out of heaven, and he became the devil.

Now why did God desire that man should have his free agency? So he could go to the devil if he wanted to? By no means. It is because the divine process from the beginning has been, always was, and still is a process of education, of teaching, and of development. Three modern prophets, one after another, have urged this factor in their teaching, as well as in the revelations given through Joseph the Martyr to the church. It is the way of God that man should be taught so that he will of his own intelligence, his own free will, choose that which is good. So that he becomes a power for good, not simply a puppet.

It is not the divine ideal that when he speaks all creation automatically must bow and say "Amen"; but rather the creature man should learn to choose that which is good. When God speaks, man should not simply blindly accept, but should, in the divine ideal, so develop that he may feel, with all my power, all my heart, with all my soul, with all my mind and strength, with all God has given me, I love the Lord; and that from the soles of his feet to the topmost hair of his head, he shall feel, not only to vote to accept the word of God, but that with it goes his intelligence, moral, spiritual, yet, and his physical support—his physical support in that in his life he tries to carry this new law of God into effect.

Since he loved man, he not only sent his Son in the meridian of time into the world to redeem man and bring him back to God, that whosoever believeth on him need not perish, but may have the light of life; but he has opened before man a prospect which is to us practically endless. He is God and possesses all power and knowledge, yet he desires that we should learn intelligently to give assent to his laws, and enter heaven, not as a manikin, but as a self-acting agent, choosing voluntarily those things that are good.

That old ideal of the prince of darkness is still in the world. He demands blind obedience, and that we let the priest do our thinking for us; and gives the presentation of heaven as a place where such a person who has never thought for himself might sit down and do nothing for the rest of eternity.

But that is not the ideal of our heavenly Father. He asks our loyalty, and wants our loyalty for his representatives.

He asks our recognition of his priesthood. He asks our recognition of his law.

Loyalty to God means an intelligent support to his law, as we know it to be good. Free agency does not mean that we are as free to do wrong as to do right, and that the consequences will be the same. It means that we have the right to choose, though there is no real right to tear down the work of God. There is no right to attack the ministers of God, though one may do all of these things. But this agency is given because only through the exercise of free will can a man possibly intelligently choose that which is good.

There are some who accept this proposition, and that which is presented as from the Lord receives as such their support.

But beyond that status there is the condition where the Lord takes us by his Holy Spirit and reteaches us his law, so that we can see that from the beginning, through all eternity he has chosen that which is best, that which is good, that which is true; and wisdom and knowledge are given us not alone as a matter of faith, but with divine assurance of the truth of that which is presented. We can vote to accept, because we know that his way is best; and not simply as his way, but that it is the best of all possible ways.

But that is an ideal so far beyond most of us as yet that perhaps but few of us can perceive it; that knowledge when we see not only the laws of God as his commandments, but the reason lying back of them; when the mind of the Lord is with us, until we know he has so commanded and why he has so commanded and know that which is best. But that is not a thing that can be taught to children, while our spiritual growth, because of lack of development, will prevent understanding.

The Lord has called us to a peace that passeth all understanding; for a rest from all turmoil, sickness, disease, death, and separation. He has not called us to idleness, neither in Zion, in the millennium, nor in the celestial glory. He still calls us always to an active service in which as we progress there will come an added greater joy leading on to yet greater things, and then to greater knowledge, where we shall see and know all things as they are.

Seeing that vision, the ideal of a place to sit down, and to rest in idleness no longer can make its tawdry appeal. Seeing that vision, and perceiving that which grows out of that meeting in heaven where God and Christ and Lucifer, the son of morning met, when the plan of the world was discussed, we perceive how fundamental are some of the errors into which at times we are in danger of drifting. The perfect theocracy is not a blind obedience, but is instead the intelligent and loving support of the sons of God.

Cooperative Societies in Bohemia

In 1907 a cooperative society was formed at Prague, in Bohemia. Bohemia is the heart of the Czecho-Slovak Republic. There has been a marked increase in these societies in the last ten years, so that now there are four hundred and fifty societies, with a membership of one hundred and fifty thousand, and doing a business of four hundred and fifty million dollars a year. These societies include, consumers' societies, productive societies, housing societies, farmers' societies, and financial societies. The consumers' society provides for cheaper buying. The housing societies are building a number of houses for the use of members. It is interesting to note the different purposes for which these societies are organized, yet united with one end in view through a central organization.

The Fight Against Materialism

We do not care to set up a man of straw and indulge in a little target practice for the mere diversion it affords, but it may be the following observations will answer an unuttered question that persists in the back of a number of craniums, namely: Is there not too much of the tinkle of the dollar in the note we hear sounded on all sides these days?

On every side we hear of stewardships, inheritances, industrial Zion, business cooperation, purchase of lands, etc., all involving transactions of prime importance and vast sums of money.

On the other hand, there is little written or said about the strictly theological matters that have for years been given first-page mention and occupied the attention of our church audiences. In fact at the late conference President F. M. Smith made a statement which might have shocked the superficial, in which he said he did not care about the differences in the glories in the next world, but did care about the solution of the problems immediately before us. Of course we must apply this with the intended qualifications. He evidently thinks, as does the average person, that the assignment to the glories in the after life is a settled matter so far as divine enunciation is concerned, and has not the same relative importance in our internal development as has the establishment of Zion, which will determine our fitness for rewards in future life.

Thoughtful people concede that doctrinal matters are still important, that we cannot afford to relegate any principle in our organic structure to the scrap pile. Anyone conversant with the ideals of this church knows that the second coming of Christ has as important a place in our hearts to-day as it has ever had with his disciples. But with its increasing imminence as an event, there is a sobering effect. As the occasional sign of his coming gives place to a literal avalanche of signs we are apt to do less discussing and more preparing for the event. So long as there was a prevalent idea that the ushering in of the millennium was a far-distant goal, the natural tendency was to consider it impersonally and with consequent lessened personal application.

But the blindest of us can perceive now that we are in the generation which is to build up Zion and create that condition of purity of heart that is to characterize it. When we realize that, we try immediately to get down to the bed-rock fundamentals and find that the great, untouched scheme for the establishment of equality and common brotherhood is the next number on the church program.

It is true that it will take money, a great amount of it, but only the unthinking believe that to be the most important element. Great wealth is but a mockery in the hands of the ungodly. A comparatively small amount of the thing that represents material values will perform wonders in the hands of people whose hearts are true.

Paradoxical as it may appear, we are urging that the thing we are fighting the hardest is materialism, and proposing to do it with material weapons. We are going to fight the great, onward-sweeping flame of greed for material gain, of seeking after personal pleasures, of selfish gain, of sex perversion, with the right use of these same perverted impulses. When we cry repentance, we are going to mean not only to stop the wrong, but turn to a definite plan of doing right; when we cry out against the selfishness so rampant in the world we are required to offer a religion that demonstrates the positive form of unselfishness: the loving of our neighbor as ourselves. This demonstration must be a real affair—no mere theoretical interpretation will serve.

The whole world is afflicted with a disease which shakes individuals loose from the bonds of unity and inspires selfishness. Men argue that with everything so insecure, why the petty observances of conventionality, of morality, even? Why share material things with a fellow being, when tomorrow Bolshevism or anarchy may demand all we have? Since an infraction of the law will at most bring a jail sentence, why worry over that? Going to jail is a common experience anyway. Such is the delusion men harbor until it comes to serve as a life-motive.

To reach people affected by this thing that is taking hold of the very vitals of civilization we must find the point of contact. The little there is to appeal to must be located and brought out, and its basis is in the gross materialism of life. Our panacea is not on the sordid plane of the soap-box orator who loudly declaims that there is no gospel but the bread-and-butter needs of man, but in the concept that though the Master performed miracles of the loaves and fishes, he also proclaimed that man shall not live by bread alone.

If we have a proper understanding of the demands of the hour, there need be no misgivings about materialism overcoming us. If we are pure in heart, we can handle millions and not be tainted by the transaction. If we are not pure, the dollar in our pocket may ruin us. Besides, the real object of all our monetary plans is to furnish the best possible setting for spirituality. Under our present condition of distraction and turmoil it is impossible for us deliberately to select the finest in life and give our attention to it, but when we rearrange our manner of living we shall provide the conditions under which character can develop and the noblest traits thrive unto perfection.

We are pleased with the genuine interest manifested by our people in matters of personal preparation. One Religion that we know of was struggling along trying to keep up interest in the old plan of lesson study and some program features. When the change was made to fewer classes and bigger subjects the interest doubled and trebled and continues. The classes teem with interest because the subjects under consideration are timely and all lead to preparation for service. We are glad the old days are about numbered when it was thought profitable to debate such questions as "Resolved that fire is more destructive than water." The real question of the hour, which should be debated from all angles, is: "Resolved, that we shall proceed to the establishment of Zion."

It is gratifying to note in the sermon subjects reported to us the men of God are pointing out the way to our success in the unique place which God has intended for us in these momentous days. We hope the day is near at hand when no representative of this church will hesitate to discuss in public or in private these immediate problems. We do not consider it so much a matter of rendition of the law as a better comprehension of what is involved so the rendition of the law will mean something to the average member. There is at present an intense interest in these subjects, and the leaders of the people, local and general, will have much to do with it being understood in its proper light and the elimination of the materialistic as such.

E. D. MOORE.

Taking the prices of 1896 as a basis, by 1914 prices had increased 50 per cent, so that the purchasing value of money was only two thirds; and by September, 1919, prices had arisen to 334, an increase of 234 per cent, so that the value of the dollar was less than thirty cents as compared with 1896. It means a real fall in the value of gold, for it means a readjustment of wages, and salaries must be raised to correspond if we are to maintain the same standard of living as in 1896.

The Vision of 1920

BY FRANK B. ALMOND

Zion's outlook from the viewpoint of the young man. A sermon preached at Walnut Park, Independence, April 4, 1920.

As I look into your faces this afternoon and recognize among you those who have toiled and worked for years that Zion might be redeemed, I feel very keenly the responsibility of expressing such ideals as will be fully commensurate with the struggles and labor with which the older members of the church have brought the great work of God to the position which it now holds; and as I see the many young people who have gathered here this afternoon I am made to sense the great responsibility of giving to you a message, of expressing those ideals, which shall quicken your souls to respond to the call for consecrated workers who shall take hold of the task and carry it to its culmination.

I call your attention, therefore, to a passage of scripture found in Romans 8:19-23:

"For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to tribulation not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected it in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Now we have no doubt but that the apostle had reference here to the resurrection of the dead and the complete redemption of the individual; but I do not think it will be presumptuous to infer that he also had reference to the great work of Zion whereby the world itself might be brought to redemption. And with this thought in mind let me call your attention again to the first verse of the text: "For the earnest expectation of the creature [the created universe] waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."

In John 1:12 we are told that to as many as received Jesus Christ, "to them gave he power to become the sons of God." Now, we believe, as members of the true church of Jesus Christ, that by obedience to the command of Christ to be born again (John 3:5) we have become the sons of God. If, then, we claim to be the sons of God, how great must be the burden we assume since the Apostle Paul tells us that the whole creation is groaning and travailing in pain for the manifestation of the sons of God.

The message, then, that I would bring to you to-day is that never in the history of the world was the responsibility so great or the opportunity so ripe for the redemption of Zion.

To-day we find the world in a terrible condition of turmoil and unrest. War and strife, poverty and famine, pestilence and sickness, strikes and industrial troubles, crime and vice, discontent and hatred—these are the characteristics of the present era. And I do not need to go very far from Independence to show you that this is true. As I came through Kansas City and thought of the many houses of shame where women are selling the most precious thing in the world for the sake of filthy lucre, I said to myself: "This is not Zion." As I thought of the hundreds of boys and girls being reared amidst terrible conditions of poverty and crime, in a place set apart for the perfecting of the gathering, I said again: "This is not Zion." As I thought of the political bribery, the industrial strife and hatred, the continual horrible struggle against fearful odds for mere existence, right in the center place for Zion, I said again: "This is not Zion."

Conditions in Kansas City and the "regions round about" are but a miniature of the chaos which the world finds itself in to-day. Of the Central European powers, particularly in Vienna and Berlin, it has been well said, "Youth is making a mad rush to ruin amidst a whirl of music and luxurious abandonment." A noted authority on banking in the University of Iowa states that there never has been such a riotous display of extravagance, such a spirit of don't-care-what-happens, as there is in the world to-day. He also claims that underneath this apparent don't-care attitude of the masses there is a terrible wave of unrest which sooner or later is bound to come to a head. Surely the whole world is travailing in pain for the manifestation of the sons of God—the redemption of Zion.

If, then, we remained content to look but at the surface of things it would be extremely difficult to believe that the redemption of Zion is near. We might possibly become so discouraged and disheartened that we should make no effort to bring about our ideal of the gathering; but we must remember that it was Isaiah who in the very midst of terrible conditions which he denounced with all the power of his very being, said: "Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with a vengeance. He will come and save you." And it was Jesus Christ, a few short months prior to his death on the cross, who taught his disciples to pray, "thy kingdom come." Later on, it was the Apostle Paul—and by the way, I have a great admiration for this man Paul who kept so steadfast amidst the trouble and toil of the early church—it was this man who said: "We look not at the things that are seen, but at the things that are not seen." He saw beyond the mere discouraging externals and caught a vision of the eternal facts.

So it must be with us to-day. We must look beyond the clouds to the eternal verities of life. We must recognize that in the very elements which seem to us to prevent the working out of the ideals of Zion, there appear the almighty purposes of God.

Let me, then, say that in my opinion there is under the turmoil and strife of the present hour the dawning of a new day. The collapse of the civilization of to-day reveals the weakness of the old foundations. It has shown to thinking men that the only foundations of all human endeavor are service—love—fellowship—and these will stand every test. There has been revealed the truth that all human schemes to solve the social problem fail before the grasping, selfish, greedy desires of man. The world to-day stands aghast and ashamed with its own attempts at self-redemption, and is now waiting for a prophet to say: "This is the way, walk ye in it."

Further than this, there is in the world a terrible, and perhaps divine, discontent—materialistic, it is true, and satisfied with the mere physical enjoyment of life—but which must be marshaled and spiritualized and made a power for good toward the redemption of Zion.

Turning now to a fresh aspect of the situation, we see in the sectarian churches an awakening consciousness to the social and industrial wants of humanity; and the very churches who one hundred years ago scoffed at the message of social redemption are now demanding a compliance with the very principles for which this church has contended for ninety years. The Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches have indorsed the principles of tithing and consecration of surplus. They are attempting to put into operation the ideas of stewardship. In fact, it is a remarkable truth that the churches are attempting now to put into operation a definite program of social service.

Amid the ranks of organized labor there has also come a system of new values, and it is remarkable to notice the similarity of the ideals of labor with the propositions laid down by the church. Let me read to you three of the principles laid down by the Labor Party of Great Britain, in the Whitby Report of 1916:

"1. The democratic control of industry.

"2. Taxation of luxuries and incomes above necessary cost of family maintenance.

"3. Surplus wealth to the common good."

Does this not read like Latter Day Saint doctrine? In other words, the Labor Party stands for the stewardship of labor, an income according to just wants and needs, and the consecration of the surplus to the common good.

It is true, of course, that the labor movement is altogether secular and expects to accomplish its ends without the help of religion, but there exists among the leaders of social reforms in the world a growing recognition of the fact that nothing can be accomplished without a social religion. That is what this church has stood for all these years, and it is intensely interesting to us to note the changing attitude of men of thought. For instance, take the following expression from the pen of George Lansbury, a prominent British labor leader and a former Member of Parliament:

"My faith for the future is built on what I conceive to be a surer foundation, which is what the churches call a change in heart and mind taking place in each one of us, making us all understand that salvation is from within, that heaven is here or nowhere, that hell and heaven on earth are of our own making—which in turn means that it is within the power of each of us to help redeem mankind, and that without our effort, our work, the redemption of the world from social and industrial evil will never take place."

This man does not belong to the church of Jesus Christ, but has he not caught the vision which this church has been holding out to the world?

Again, let me quote you from another prominent man, an authority on social problems—Doctor C. A. Ellwood, the professor of sociology in the University of Missouri:

"What the world needs is a new spirit, that is, a new set of values, even more than a new economic system. . . . As long as injustice reigns in the material conditions of life, we must not expect people to believe strongly in the ideals of brotherhood. On the other hand, without an ideal of brotherhood to guide their activity, no group of human beings can realize a brotherly society. . . . A social religion, in other words, is the one thing which can do most to save human nature from selfishness and brutality, and so to solve the social problem."

This man does not profess to be a member of our church, yet who will deny that he has not caught a vision of the part the church must play in the social redemption of mankind?

And this morning I read the following statement by H. G. Wells, in Collier's Weekly, which I consider the most remarkable statement ever made by anyone outside this organization concerning the social problem:

"Perhaps the Kingdom of God is nearer than we suppose; perhaps it needs but the faith and courage of a few, and it may be that we may even live to see the dawning of his kingdom; even—who knows?—the sunrise. . . ."

As I read that I thought of the prophecy delivered by President Elbert A. Smith some years ago in Lamoni. He then said under the inspiration of the Spirit: "I have many forces in the world that ye know not of." And in the light of these remarkable statements of men who, according to our understanding of the Scriptures, have not yet been born again, have not yet become the sons of God—can we not see the stupendous truth that God is preparing the world for the adoption of his plan?

But what of the church? In the presence of the world conditions of to-day, is the church awakening to the great work before it? Let me say right here that my heart rejoices to recognize that God is working mightily with his people, and to know that the church is beginning to respond to the call of the Spirit.

This morning when the priesthood assembled together, we received a veritable Pentecost—almost one continual revelation from God—and one of the things told us was that the time for the endowment had come. Do we sense what that means? Do we understand what it means for this people to receive the endowment? Why, it means that this work is going to go forward as it never has in the past. It means that the representatives of God are going to go out with such power from God that the gospel message will spread among all nations, and the world is going to recognize that God is with men. Oh, my soul overflows with rejoicing at the message which came this morning, and everything points to the beginning of a new period in the history of this church.

As I have already said, the church is awaking to its responsibility. The young people are realizing the splendid opportunity for worthwhile service to humanity. And, as I remarked some time ago, if we will but put our ears to the ground we can hear the tramp, tramp, of the hundreds, nay, thousands, of young men and women preparing themselves for the great call to serve. President Elbert A. Smith has also caught this vision, and I cannot refrain from reading to you a verse of a poem written by him:

"Hark! I hear a distant stirring and the sound of many feet
On the rocky road of ages, with a perfect rhythm beat.

Oh, I hear your pleasant singing and I see your faces shine, Youths of Zion, as you gather into column and to line."

Everywhere we see the dawning consciousness of the people of the church to the great mission of the church. And right here I might say that I believe the failure to redeem Zion in the early thirties, and the failure to redeem Zion even now, was not particularly because of immorality or impurity or wickedness among the Saints so much as a lack of vision. It is too true that many of the Saints conceived of Zion as a place where they could wrap their cloaks around themselves and assume a stand-off attitude toward the world. They conceived of Zion as a place where they might flee in fear from the wrath to come, forgetting that the voice of the Spirit was that "perfect love casteth out fear," and that without love Zion could not be redeemed.

In my opinion, and I believe it is the opinion of the young men of the church to-day, Zion is a place where the principles of true religion shall be put into operation, a place from whence the light of the Spirit of God may radiate to the world in the daily acts and kindnesses of the Saints. A place in which the people of the world shall recognize the only solution to their woeful condition, the place where the world shall realize that the "tabernacle of God is with men," not because of our evident superiority, but because of the active ministration of Zion towards the weak and needy among men.

There is to-day among the membership of the church a yearning desire to know just what Zion means, to know what the laws to which they must accede before Zion can be redeemed. I happen to be assistant teacher of the young men's class in the Lamoni Sunday school—about sixty or seventy—and you would be surprised to see the intelligent discussion and debate on the pressing problems connected with Zion. It is the same in the Religio class of which Brother E. D. Moore is teacher. Here is a large class of middle-aged, hard-working members of the church, many of them farmers and their wives, and everyone evinces the desire to know and to comply with the law of Zion. Indeed it is remarkable to watch the growing wakefulness of the church to the great responsibilities which it must assume, and I have great hopes that at this conference we shall receive a constructive program which shall encourage all of us to consecrate everything to the great work to be done.

And it may be well here to sound a warning note of danger. There has been in the past, and perhaps there is to-day, a grave danger of overlooking the trees for the forest. It is possible that catching a glimpse of the mirage, we shall pass the wells at our very feet. It is all very well to imagine the Zion of God in its perfection, but we must also recognize the secondary and instrumental things which must be accomplished before we can hope to attain the end of our ideals. It is true we must have in view the vision of the final ideal, but we cannot afford to overlook the many steps and the hard work which intervenes between us and the goal.

And it is going to be a hard work for us. Many times we shall get weary, we shall become discouraged and disheartened by the obstacles which shall beset us, our hearts shall grow sick with the everlasting toil and strife towards the culmination of our ideals. And so let me relate a little incident which happened in Eastern Maine some years ago. A visitor called upon a cobbler, who labored in an exceedingly small, stuffy room, and asked him, "Don't you get tired sometimes, and feel imprisoned?" "No," he answered. "When I have any feelings of that sort come up, I just open the door." And he opened the door, and there was a vision of the infinite sea and the eyes found rest and inspiration by the glimpse over the great deep. Then the cobbler could come back to his boots and begin work on them in the light of a glorious vision upon which he had been resting his eyes.

So it is with us. When the clouds of darkness shall seem heavy and ominous, and the daily tasks of life shall seem a drudgery, it is then we must hear the words of Isaiah:

"Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not. . . . The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap like a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert."

And finally, as he says,

"And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

That is the vision of 1920, which I should like you to have. Is it not worth working for? Shall we not put forth every effort to make that a reality?

As I have looked into your faces, and seen the Spirit of God reflected there, I am constrained to believe you, too, have caught this vision. I believe many of you are anxious to consecrate your lives to the service of Zion. Are you ready to do that? If you are, I already begin to see the fulfillment of the age-old dream of the centuries. If you are ready to go forward, to-day I see the new heaven and new earth. To-day, as with John on the Isle of Patmos, I can see the new Jerusalem coming as a bride prepared for her husband.

Perhaps, if Jesus were to come to Kansas City to-day, and see the tribulation and sorrow, the crime and the poverty, the ignorance and vice, he would weep over the city as of old, and would say: "Oh, how I would have gathered you!" But perhaps his face is lit with a smile of ineffable glory as he sees his people striving to bring to pass his eternal purposes, and as he watches us doing our best to help him bring peace and love to this care-worn world, we can almost hear him say: "Well done, good and faithful servants."

May we merit his love and benediction; may we move out and make Zion the city of God.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths—No. 2

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

With the aid of the Book of Mormon, many of the mystifying discoveries of scientists are clear and comprehensive.

It being evident that the aboriginal Americans are identified as having a common origin with the other races of man, it becomes of paramount interest to ascertain to what extent they may be traced to the country from whence they came. Outside of history it would be difficult to trace various of the nations of our time to their sources, and the closest study of Egyptian and Phœnician remains leaves the question unsolved as to the relative antiquity of their languages, besides other important points of resemblance or similarity the relation of which is uncertain. That which is difficult to solve in regard to nations known to have had intercourse with each other becomes still more perplexing when attempted concerning a people of whose past absolutely nothing is known aside from remains of recent discovery. Excepting the Book of Mormon record, therefore, evidences can be considered only as accumulative, and not conclusive. Some interesting material regarding this is found in

Ethnology

It has been suggested that man may have sprung from America, and that this is therefore the oldest civilization of the world. In reply to this it may be said that the most ancient ruins of Peru, Guatemala, Honduras, Yucatan, and Mexico, fail to indicate the high degree of antiquity accorded to Egypt and Mesopotamia, in the opinion of scientists who have considered the probabilities of the matter. It is evident, however, that the Americans have for centuries been a distinct race, and must have migrated at a very remote time if we are to account for their racial differences upon the principle of segregation and transformation by nature. The question not only involves Americans but races everywhere. Ethnologists admit that the distinctive races differ practically as much to-day as they did thousands of years ago, but do not agree as to how many distinctive races there are. The importance of this fact will be noticed.

The classification of races according to color, as white, yellow, brown, black, and red, is not recognized by some of our ablest students on the subject as being either scientific or desirable from an ethnologic viewpoint. Doctor Brinton names five races, it is true, but does not group them to accord with divisions of like number made by others. Some have recognized only three races, while still others have decided that there are at least as many as sixteen. The difficulties of the subject are too complex for a brief consideration, but largely typical of them is the fact that although the Caucasian race includes Arabs and Swedes, they differ nearly as much as do the American and Malay races. In the larger sense it may be truly said that there is only one race—the human race. Darwin says:

“Although the existing races of man differ in many respects, as in color, hair, shape of skull, proportions of body, etc., yet, if their whole organization be taken into consideration, they are found to resemble each other closely in a multitude of points. Many of these points are of so unimportant, or of so similar a nature, that it is extremely improbable that they should have been independently acquired by aboriginally distinct species or races. The same remark holds good with equal or greater force with respect to the numerous points of mental similarity between the most distinct races of Man.”—Descent of Man.

Referring to Doctor Brinton's arrangement, the Americana gives the characteristics of the American race as identical with those of Europeans, with the exception of color, hair, and language; which is not true of any of the other races. It is admitted that any system of grouping ever yet attempted is unsatisfactory. One leading writer concludes that, all things considered, the color system is as practical as any of them; and this seems to be quite generally accepted. The diversity among American tribes in this respect is, however, notable; and the various attempts that have been made to arrange them in order by racial groups reveal the hopelessness of the task.

Whereas some have placed them in three groups, the classifications of others vary greatly from that number. The distinctive characteristics of the American Indian are not inclusive of the aboriginal inhabitants here, as is evidenced by Short, Haines, Catlin, and others in various instances. They mention relics of curly, brown, auburn, and fine hair similar to that of Caucasians; and of tribes with fair complexion very different from that of the average Indian. So also their cranial differences are remarkable, presenting a variety that is not always in conformity with the usual Indian type; in some instances more closely resembling that of the white race. These marked differences that have been mentioned have led ethnologists to suggest that more than one source of what may have been separate civilizations is not improbable. Doctor Brinton believed the Andean race culture to have been indigenous, owing nothing to any other race. Mr. Squire thought this was true of the Peruvians; and Mr. Maudslay concluded the same with reference to the Mayas of Central America. Others have concluded there may have been two distinct periods of occupation in America, and have based this supposition upon various evidences, some of which will be referred to under other headings.

Besides the Babelite colony, there was a migration to this continent about six centuries prior to the Christian era, of Israelites from the vicinity of Jerusalem, according to the Book of Mormon. It traces the Indian to them, and claims their change of color was the result of Jehovah's wrath; after which time there existed here two distinct peoples of very different tendencies and habits.

Whatever may be said of the Book of Mormon explanation, it seems at least to be in harmony with all known facts bearing upon the subject. It may not be considered scientific, but it is not at variance with other phenomena that science is compelled to accept rather than to explain; and does not do violence to conclusions of some of our ablest scientists, as is indicated by an eminent anthropologist whose observations cover the range of traceable human occupation. He says: “This variation from a single stock within such period must be accounted for only by miracle.”

A comparison of the various opinions that have been expressed by equally competent authorities shows, as Professor A. H. Sayce has pertinently remarked, that: “Great as may be the diversity between race and race under the microscope of the ethnologist, the unity which underlies it is greater still.”—Races of the Old Testament.

The rapidity with which races have seemingly sprung into existence under this ethnologic microscope, is indicative of much uncertainty as to what the racial distinctions really are, or else proves that they are of so little prominence as to be indistinguishable even to some of the profession. A few examples will suffice to make this somewhat apparent, as, for instance: Virey recognized only two races; Saint-Hilaire found four; Huxley thought there were five, which were subdivided into fourteen secondary races; Topinard decided that there were sixteen, but a few years afterward (1885) increased the number to nineteen; Deniker concluded that there were thirteen in 1889, but reduced the number to six some ten years later, at which time he included in his list twenty-nine subraces, having given thirty subdivisions in his previous estimate.

The valuable work that has been done in this field of research should not be minimized, but it should not be expected that complete reliance is to be placed upon the statement, repeatedly made, that the races have remained unchanged during many thousands of years as distinct races. The inability to arrive at agreement in the attempt to specify the collocation of existing races, is an indication of the greater uncertainty which must exist concerning the time required for the development of supposed racial distinctions, and suggests the difficulty of identifying one of these races with a people of ancient time, if there is no recognized history of their past.

The First Metal Type

England and the United States share the distinction of owning the oldest set of metal type bearing Chinese figures in the world, a part of the set being in one country and part in the other; and a recent description goes back into the ancient history of that much-talked-about country, Korea, for there it was, at least as long ago as 1403, that separate types of metal were invented. In that early time the type was set in a bed of beeswax, the surface was covered with ink, a sheet of paper laid across the upturned faces of the characters, and the printing done by pushing the paper lightly with a cloth. The printer, if he was efficient, could make as many as 1,500 impressions a day, but he doubtless worked more than eight hours, and his method certainly would not have gone far in getting out a modern newspaper. But the Korean invention was an improvement over the printing from engraved tablets, and later from wooden blocks, that had been practiced in China in the second century A. D. and also over the movable types of clay which the Chinese inventor, Pi Sheng, made in the eleventh century.—The Christian Science Monitor, November 8, 1919.

THE FORUM

The Law of Stewardships

BY MARK H. SIEGFRIED

A presentation of historical evidence that stewardships in the early church were held in fee simple.

(A sermon preached at Independence, Missouri, February 29, 1920.)

After I heard our pastor's sermon on last Sunday, I felt that I could use at least a part of it as a basis from which to preach, and especially at this time of the year and in connection with the Interchurch World Movement toward enlisting every producer as a Christian steward. He told you that every day and every Sunday was stewardship day with Latter Day Saints, and called your attention in so many words to the fact that our people were expelled from this community for practicing what the world is now trying to get everybody to practice—stewardships.

While it may be true, and doubtless is, that the idea they have of stewardships does not entirely come up to the definition which we would give, yet it does show the trend of events, it does show that men are beginning to feel, if they have not in the past felt, that they owe a responsibility to society which has helped them make a financial success. And so I have thought, after listening to the sermon last Sunday, and taking note of that particular statement that we were expelled for practicing the thing Brother Waller thanked the Lord other churches were now trying to get every producer to do, I thought you might be interested in knowing how our people administered those stewardships. I have spent all my spare time during the last week trying to gather together information and bring together the historical facts in connection with how our people practiced these stewardships for which they were expelled in the early thirties.

I may say here, however, that in my search I have found little evidence of animated discussion over the question of stewardships, coming from the men who held the office of bishop and upon whom the responsibility of interpreting the law rested. There is a general unanimity of opinion running through their interpretations from the time of Edward Partridge and Newel K. Whitney until the present. The discussion has come largely from without.

Along with that, let me say, while I have been connected with the Bishopric for fourteen years and have lived in Independence nine years, in my endeavor to find out what is actually in the law and what the history of the case revealed, I have been compelled to reverse my opinion, because what I one time thought about the matter I have found was not in harmony with the law, the way and manner in which these men to whom and through whom these revelations were given, interpreted, and executed it. Having made that investigation, I can come to you this morning with what I have sought out and found in our church histories and in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

How Fifteen Titles Were Held

Now, having concluded, without further investigation, that it is true that our people were expelled for the practice of stewardships, naturally enough you will want to find out how they did it, so I have examined the records in the recorder's office here in Independence* and have looked up about fifteen titles to see how they held property. A number of farms were deeded to Edward Partridge, who was then presiding bishop of the church, lying in different sections and townships and ranges in the vicinity of Independence. Not only did we look up the property which was held by Edward Partridge, but we looked up different tracts of land in and out of the city of Independence to see how different men held their stewardships. The principal ones are those held by Edward Partridge, by W. W. Phelps and Company, by Whitney and Company, by Gilbert and Whitney, covering lots in Independence facing on Kansas Street, facing on Lexington Street, in various parts of the surrounding country, land lying southwest from here, land lying right here where a great many of our people live. What does it reveal?

This investigation revealed that Edward Partridge had title to a number of pieces of land and that these pieces of land were held in fee simple. Not a single piece was ever held in trust by him for anybody. Even the printing office from which revelations were published, from which The Evening and the Morning Star was issued, was held in the name of W. W. Phelps and Company in fee simple. Title to the storehouse, which was run, managed and controlled by Gilbert and Whitney, was in fee simple, and the men who owned it and operated it were stewards. The trust imposed upon them was higher and more far-reaching than any contract can be, and that was the trust and responsibility which they owed to the people and to the Almighty for the way and manner in which they conducted the business intrusted to their care.

The "Law of Consecration"

In connection with that, I should like to call your attention to a document which has been referred to as a possible basis upon which they might have endeavored to practice what is sometimes called the "Law of consecration." Let me say before I enter into an examination of it that the only evidence we have that it ever existed comes from our friends in Utah. There is no evidence in our own church history so far as I have been able so discover; no evidence in the old books of the church published in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, that this document purporting to be a deed conveying property from Titus Billings to Edward Partridge ever existed. The only evidence we have comes from Utah, and anyone who knows what those men have told us in times past knows full well how much credence we can put in it. I refer to it because it has been referred to as a possible basis upon which they sought to act. I want to read those documents to you this morning. I want to examine them in the light of the revelations and the history of those cases that have been cited.

"Be it known, that I, Titus Billings of Jackson County, and the State of Missouri, having become a member of the Church of Christ, organized according to law, and established by the revelations of the Lord, on the 6th day of April, 1830, do, of my own free will and accord, having first paid my just debts, grant and hereby give unto Edward Partridge of Jackson County, and State of Missouri, bishop of said church, the following described property, viz: sundry articles of furniture valued at fifty-five dollars twenty-seven cents; also two beds, bedding and extra clothing valued seventy-three dollars twenty-five cents; also farming utensils valued forty-one dollars, also one horse, two wagons, two cows and two calves, valued one hundred forty-seven dollars.

"For the purpose of purchasing lands in Jackson County, Missouri, and building up the New Jerusalem, even Zion, and for relieving the wants of the poor and needy. For which I, the said Titus Billings, do covenant and bind myself and my heirs forever, to release all my right and interest to the above described property, unto him, the said Edward Partridge, bishop of said church.

"And I, the said Edward Partridge, bishop of said church, having received the above-described property, of the said Titus Billings, do bind myself, that I will cause the same to be expended for the above-mentioned purposes of the said Titus Billings to the satisfaction of said church; and in case I should be removed from the office of bishop of said church, by death or otherwise, I hereby bind myself and my heirs forever, to make over to my successor in office, for the benefit of said church, all the above described property, which may then be in my possession.

"In testimony whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals this day of, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, eight hundred and thirty

"In the presence of

"Signed,

"TITUS BILLINGS,
"EDWARD PARTRIDGE."

Now comes the purported deed form from Partridge to Billings:

"Be it known, that I, Edward Partridge, of Jackson County, State of Missouri, Bishop of the Church of Christ, organized according to law, and established by the revelations of the Lord, on the 6th day of April, 1830, have leased and by these presents do lease unto Titus Billings, of Jackson County, and State of Missouri, a member of said church, the following described piece or parcel of land, being a part of section No. three, township No. forty-nine, range No. thirty-two, situated in Jackson County, and State of Missouri, and is bounded as follows, viz: Beginning eight rods E. from the S. W. corner of said section; thence N. one hundred and sixty rods; thence E. twenty-seven rods, twenty-five links; thence S. one hundred and sixty rods; thence W. seventy-seven rods, twenty-five links, to the place of beginning, containing twenty-seven and one-half acres, be the same more or less, subject to roads and highways. And also have loaned the following described property, viz: Sundry articles of furniture, valued fifty-five dollars twenty-five cents; also two beds, bedding and clothing, valued seventy-three dollars twenty-seven cents; also sundry farming utensils, valued forty-one dollars; also one horse, two cows, two calves, and two wagons, valued one hundred forty-seven dollars, to have and to hold the above described property, by him, the said Titus Billings, to be used and occupied as to him shall seem meet and proper.

"And as a consideration for the use of the above described property, I, the said Titus Billings, do bind myself to pay the taxes, and also to pay yearly unto the said Edward Partridge, bishop of said church, or his successor in office, for the benefit of said church, all that I shall make or accumulate more than is needful for the support and comfort of myself and family. And it is agreed by the parties that this lease and loan shall be binding during the life of the said Titus Billings, unless he transgresses and is not deemed worthy by the authority of the church, according to its laws, to belong to the church. And in that case I, the said Titus Billings, do acknowledge that I forfeit all claim to the above described leased and loaned property, and hereby bind myself to give back the lease, and also pay an equivalent, for the loaned (articles) for the benefit of said church, unto the said Edward Partridge, bishop of said church, or his successor in office. And further, in case of said Titus Billings' or family's inability in consequence of infirmity or old age to provide for themselves while members of this church, I, the said Edward Partridge, bishop of said church, do bind myself to administer to their necessities out of any fund in my hands appropriated for that purpose, not otherwise disposed of, to the satisfaction of the church. And further, in case of the death of the said Titus Billings, his wife or widow, being at the time a member of said church, has claim upon the above described leased and loaned property, upon precisely the same conditions that her said husband had them, as above described; and the children of the said Titus Billings, in case of the death of both their parents, also have claim upon the above described property, for their support, until they shall become of age, and no longer subject to the same conditions yearly that their parents were; provided, however, should the parents not be members of the said church, and in possession of the above described property at the time of their deaths, the claim of the children as above described, is null and void.

"In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this day of, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and thirty

"In presence of

"Signed,

"EDWARD PARTRIDGE,
"TITUS BILLINGS."

I call your attention to this because it has been referred to as a possible basis of action and worthy of our consideration. I do not know any thoughtful person who maintains that an individual has no right to possess in fee simple any property. I call your attention to the fact here that if this thing is to be used as a basis of action no man holds title to the blankets on his bed; he does not own the dishes on his table; he could not buy a chair for his house or a rake for his garden without danger of incurring the official displeasure of the bishop. Shades on the Roman priesthood with their ability to use the confessional as a power to control the conscience and dominate the souls of men and determine the destiny of nations! Why, as compared with the bishop under such an arrangement, their power would sink into insignificance. The operator owned absolutely nothing; everything was leased to him and owned by the bishop. Some job for the bishop! to buy all the tea kettles in Zion! I hope once and forever that no man will ever refer to this as a possible basis of action. It never was used as a basis for action. The real estate described therein did not then and never has belonged to the bishop of this church; it did not belong to Titus Billings. At the time this deed was supposed to have been given, on June 25, 1833, this property belonged to the State of Missouri, and it was not deeded to anyone until December 5 following, when it was deeded to a man by the name of Adam Christison.

I would like to call your attention to a number of statements in the history. I do this because I wanted to know, and I think you are interested in knowing, what these men thought about this question at the time when the revelations were given, what they interpreted them to mean and how they applied the principles involved. Certainly it is not unfair to presume that the prophet through whom the revelations were given and the presiding bishop to whom much of the instruction was directed, can be relied upon to interpret what was intended and expected.

An Important Letter

Here is a letter dated Kirtland, Ohio, December 10, 1833, and signed by Joseph Smith, jr., who was then president of the church and the man through whom these revelations came. I want you to notice the date, two and a half years after section 42, in which is the first mention of the question of consecration, was given. What he says here about these people after they had been driven out, and the manner in which he refers to their property and their property rights gives us some idea of the manner in which that property was held and the manner in which they exercised their right as stewards over their inheritances.

"I pray God in the name of Jesus that you all may be kept in the faith unto the end. Let your sufferings be what they may, it is better in the eyes of God that you should die than that you should give up the land of Zion, the inheritances which you have purchased with your moneys; for every man that giveth not up his inheritance, though he should die, yet when the Lord shall come he shall stand upon it, and with Job in his flesh he shall see God. Therefore, this is my counsel, that you retain your lands, even unto the uttermost, and seek every lawful means to seek redress of your enemies, etc., etc.; and pray to God, day and night, to return you in peace and in safety to the lands of your inheritance."

Purchasing Inheritances

I have heard it argued and you may have seen it in print that there was no such thing as purchasing your inheritance, but here is a statement to the contrary from this man to whom the revelations came and who had a great deal to do with the manner in which they were interpreted, working in harmony with the Presiding Bishop.

I call your attention to this for two reasons: first, that their inheritances did not include only that which they lived upon, but the inheritance was the farm upon which they lived and by which they made a living. It was referred to in the revelations and in the history, as Brother Walter spoke to you about last Sunday, as their stewardship. Their stewardships embodied their inheritances in every case. In connection with this, there is a statement made by the prophet, Joseph Smith, at a later time while living in Kirtland, Ohio, on October 30, 1835, after all the revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, given through Joseph the Prophet, except 105, 106, and 107, had been presented. Here is what he said about the manner in which they held property and exercised their rights there in Kirtland:

"Friday, 30th. At home. Mr. Francis Porter, from Jefferson County, New York, a member of the Methodist Church, called to make some inquiry about lands in this place (Kirtland), whether there were any valuable farms for sale, and whether a member of our church could move into this vicinity, and purchase lands, and enjoy his own possessions and property, without making them common stock. He had been requested to do so by some brethren who live in the town of Leroy, New York. I replied that I had a valuable farm joining the Temple Lot I would sell, and that there were other lands for sale in this place, and that we had no common stock business among us; that every man enjoys his own property, or can, if he is disposed, consecrate liberally or illiberally to the support of the poor and needy, or the building up of Zion. He also inquired how many members there were in this church. I told him there were about five or six hundred who communed at our chapel, and perhaps a thousand in this vicinity."—Vol. 1, p. 593.

That ought forever to answer the question of how they held property and the way in which they looked upon men occupying as stewards, so far as the Prophet through whom these revelations came was concerned. They had no such thing as common stock, but men lived upon, occupied and conducted their farms and other property as individual stewards and did not hold it in trust. Be it remembered, this was less than five months before the dedication of the Kirtland Temple; and, if the history of those times is to be relied upon, the church was at the apex of its spirituality.

Not All Things Common

Somehow or other the idea that the church believed in the doctrine of all things common had become somewhat prevalent, and here is the reason why it became so:

"I and my wife lived in the family of Brother Whitney several weeks, and received every kindness and attention which could be expected, and especially from Sister Whitney. The branch of the church in this part of the Lord's vineyard, which had increased to nearly one hundred [this evidently should read one thousand] members, were striving to do the will of God, so far as they knew it, though some strange notions and false spirits had crept in among them. With a little caution and some wisdom I soon assisted the brethren and sisters to overcome them. The plan of 'common stock,' which had existed in what was called the 'family,' whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel, was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord: and the false spirits were easily discerned and rejected by the light of revelation."—Times and Seasons, vol. 4; p. 368.

The idea was not born out of the church but came from those who knew not the gospel. This is an earlier statement than the former one, but no less significant and no less direct upon the question that is uppermost in the minds and hearts of a great many people in the church to-day as to how the stewardships are to be administered. Here the Prophet says the common stock idea was "readily abandoned" and the false spirits "were easily discerned and rejected by the light of revelation." There are a number of such passages, but I shall not have time to cover them all.

Fee Simple Tithes in Kirtland

A year ago the 24th of this month, I was in Kirtland, Ohio, in company with Brethren Charles Fry and Albert Carmichael. Brother Carmichael and myself made a journey to the old county seat to examine the records and discover if possible the manner in which our people held this property. Prior to that time I had examined the records here in Jackson County and had found disclosed what I have told you already. We examined the records for several hours and copied from them abstracts of seventeen deeds. We discovered identically the same thing there that I had found here. Not a single solitary piece of property, with one exception, was held in any way except in fee simple. Not a single piece except that on which the Temple stood was held in trust by anybody. That piece on which the Temple stood and on which the cemetery now stands adjoining it, was held in trust by Joseph Smith, jr., as president of the church. These other pieces of property were transferred as follows:

1. Newel K. Whitney to Sidney Rigdon.
2. Newel K. Whitney to Frederick G. Williams.
3. John Johnson to Joseph Smith, jr., President and Trustee (Temple lot).
4. John Johnson to Oliver Cowdery.
5. John Johnson to Joseph Smith, jr.
6. Newel K. Whitney to John Johnson.
7. Newel K. Whitney to Orson Hyde.
8. John Johnson to Miranda N. Hyde.
9. Reynolds Cahoon to Enoch Moore.
10. Oliver Cowdery to John Johnson.
11. John Johnson to Josiah Butterfield.
12. John Johnson to Sylvester Smith.
13. John Johnson to Parley P. Pratt.
14. John Johnson to Joseph Smith, sr.
15. John Johnson to John E. Page.
16. Newel K. Whitney and A. S. Gilbert under the firm name of N. K. Whitney and Co. to Gideon McNutt.
17. Peter and Sarah French to N. K. Whitney.

Here is a very significant thing, too, that ought to be taken into consideration in this connection: Section 101 in the Doctrine and Covenants has been repeatedly referred to as a basis upon which to conclude that all property outside of that on which a man lives should be held in trust. This section was given on April 22, 1834, and deeds 1, 2, 3, and 4 were given just a few days after this revelation was given and men named in the deeds were also named in the revelation as parties who should hold certain tracts of land as stewards, and every one of them held that property in fee simple. That ought also to answer the question as to how they administered stewardships. That is the thing for which the president of the stake said we were expelled from here. Maybe it is the reason they were expelled from Kirtland—for living up to their conception of God's requirements for the church ranked high in spirituality at this time.

"A Deed Which Cannot Be Broken"

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8 and 9, we find the following, and I expect you have heard this read so many times that you know what it is before I get to it: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken." You would not want to give any of your property in any other way, would you? Common sense directs that if you are going to give the bishop a piece of property that you give it to him and not keep any strings on it. "... with a covenant and a deed that cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it to me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church. . . ." What is going to be laid before the bishop of the church and his counselors? That property which you give, which you consecrate. "... two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose. And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, . . ." What? The property which you are going to give, which you are setting aside for the benefit of the poor and the needy. "... and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they cannot be taken from the church, agreeable to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, . . ." What he has given? It does not say so. "... a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family."

Responsibility of Great Wealth

Let me say now, there is no more serious trust and no greater responsibility placed upon any man than to be intrusted with great wealth, and any man who illy uses the powers and privileges that are given to him by virtue of that trust sooner or later will wake up in hell crying and pleading that "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!" (Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.) No greater trust can be imposed on a man or is assumed by him than when he assumes to direct great wealth. He assumes to direct that which governs in a measure the conduct of men, and when one has in his power and under his direction that which helps to shape the character, that which helps to make up the social life of your fellows, what greater power, what greater privilege, what greater responsibility can any man assume?

It is true that now and then some one springs up in our midst who prostitutes his calling; they do it in the church. They forget that the inspiration that this church has furnished them in their childhood and which perhaps has come to them through the faith of their fathers, has been the mainspring that has given them the force of character and the force and power of manhood to accomplish the things that they have. They have forgotten that success without benevolence is not prosperity. They have forgotten the statement of the law that "for unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." They have neglected, they have failed to comply with the law and some day they will find that the harvest is ended, the summer is past and they haven't even saved their own souls.

But because now and then a man fails to recognize the great responsibility that he owes to the Almighty, the responsibility which he owes to his fellow men, and has forgotten the inspiration that the church has furnished him in his early life, even to the power to do, shall we say that we shall take from every man and make all men paupers because one man has failed to recognize the responsibility of his stewardship? I do not believe it. To my mind, the revelations say no such thing, but they do put the responsibility upon every man who holds the priesthood to see that all people, whether poor or rich, bond or free, shall hear the message of the gospel; and no matter whether he has much or little, he has greater or lesser responsibility to the people and the church who have helped make him what he is.

"Shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." I know this has been interpreted to mean that a steward over his own property is that which he consecrated and then received back from the bishop, but the bishop never interpreted it to mean that, so I conclude that this is what is meant: That he is made a steward over his own property, answerable in time and eternity, for every man shall give an account of his stewardship; and if so, but has no property of his own over which he can be made a steward, but has placed in his trust and in his care, property that has been consecrated unto the church, he is a steward over that property as much as a man is a steward over his own. That is the way they interpreted it. Not in the sense of buying and selling and speculating, but in the sense of buying and holding and occupying.

The Nauvoo House

I want to call your attention to something given in the latter part of the life of Joseph Smith, and if there is anything in the book of Doctrine and Covenants that deals specifically with property rights, it is section 107. There is not a single section in the Doctrine and Covenants dealing with the question of property rights and titles so specifically as that contained in section 107. This was given after they had gone through all their experiences in Missouri and Ohio and were settled in Nauvoo. In 1841, here is what is said about property rights. I call your attention to the latter part of paragraph 18 so you may see what paragraph 19 is dealing with:

"Therefore let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, for ever and ever, saith the Lord, and let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House; and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls."

Then in the next paragraph the manner in which they were to hold that property is specifically set out. George Miller was, by the way, Presiding Bishop at that time.

"Behold, verily I say unto you, Let my servant George Miller, and my servant Lyman Wight, and my servant John Snider, and my servant Peter Haws, organize themselves, and appoint one of them to be a president over their quorum for the purpose of building that house. And they shall form a constitution whereby they may receive stock for the building of that house. And they shall not receive less than fifty dollars for a share of stock in that house, and they shall be permitted to receive fifteen thousand dollars from any one man for stock in that house; but they shall not be permitted to receive over fifteen thousand dollars stock from any one man; and they shall not be permitted to receive under fifty dollars for a share of stock from any one man, in that house; and they shall not be permitted to receive any man as a stockholder in this house, except the same shall pay his stock into their hands at the time he receives stock; and in proportion to the amount of stock he pays into their hands, he shall receive stock in that house; but if he pay nothing into their hands, he shall not receive any stock in that house. And if any pay stock into their hands, it shall be for stock in that house, for himself, and for his generation after him, from generation to generation, so long as he and his heirs shall hold that stock, and do not sell or convey the stock away out of their hands by their own free will and act, if you will do my will, saith the Lord your God."

That tells them in the manner in which they were to hold the stock in that house. I say that is the most specific statement in the Doctrine and Covenants on the question of property rights and titles. It was to be held by them and their children after them from generation to generation until they conveyed it away by their own free will and act.

Not to Sell Property

There are statements in section 98 to which I would like to call your attention. Here is one, made on December 16, 1833, after most of their trouble in Jackson County, and they had been driven out. I want you to notice the terms used:

"Verily, I say unto you, concerning your brethren who have been afflicted, and persecuted, and cast out from the land of their inheritance, I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions; yet, I will own them, and they shall be mine in that day when I shall come to make up my jewels."

And down in paragraph 3:

"Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances."

Because of these things they lost their right to occupy upon this land, and it was at this time when the statement formerly read from the president of the church, Joseph Smith, was directed to them, that under no circumstances should they sell their property but hold it that in time they might be reinstated upon that land. I have read to you the manner in which they held that property and in which they occupied on it as stewards, and which they understood to include their homes, what they oftentimes called their inheritances. In every instance their stewardship included their inheritance.

You have heard it stated that a steward could not own his property, that any man who owned his property was in no sense a steward over it. Let me read to you paragraph 12, Section 98:

"Let them importune at the feet of the judge; and if he heed them not, let them importune at the feet of the governor; and if the governor heed them not, let them importune at the feet of the president; and if the president heed them not, then will the Lord arise and come forth out of his hiding place, and in his fury vex the nation, and in his hot displeasure, and in his fierce anger, in his time, will cut off these wicked, unfaithful, and unjust stewards, and appoint them their portion among hypocrites and unbelievers; even in outer darkness, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth."

Men not even members of the church, in this revelation are called stewards. It does begin to look like the Lord recognized the fact that men are stewards over property to which they hold title—the state's recognition of man's right to control.

Title to the Storehouse

Then down in the 13th paragraph is something more. Title to this property, the storehouse, was given to these men to hold and occupy as their stewardship in Zion:

"And again, I say unto you, It is contrary to my commandment, and my will, that my servant Sidney Gilbert should sell my storehouse, which I have appointed unto my people, into the hands of mine enemies. Let not that which I have appointed, be polluted by mine enemies, by the consent of those who call themselves after my name; for this is a very sore and grievous sin against me, and against my people, in consequence of those things which I have decreed, and are soon to befall the nations. Therefore, it is my will that my people should claim, and hold claim, upon that which I have appointed unto them, though they should not be permitted to dwell thereon; nevertheless, I do not say they shall not dwell thereon; for inasmuch as they bring forth fruit and works meet for my kingdom, they shall dwell thereon; they shall build, and another shall not inherit; they shall plant vineyards, and they shall eat the fruit thereof."

Here the Lord calls this property "His storehouse," yet Gilbert and Whitney held the title in fee simple to the real estate on which the business was conducted (lots 51, 104, 105, 108 and 109, Old Town, Independence) and the business was operated by funds which these men had brought from Kirtland. That sounds like the Lord didn't want them to sell the land they had possessed, that not only they but their children after them should possess their property. That is what section 98 says after the people had been driven out, corresponding with the records in the case.

I would like to read several more passages from the Church History, found in volume 1 and 2 concerning the manner in which this property was held. Lyman Wight was living in Kirtland, Ohio, at the time when Parley P. Pratt, Oliver Cowdery and others started on the mission from New York to Independence. They passed through Kirtland and met Lyman Wight who was at this time a member of a society which holds its property in common. In his account of the visit of these brethren, Lyman Wight says that they abandoned the doctrine of common ownership when they heard the gospel as preached by these young men.

Section 72, paragraph 4, refers to certain men as stewards over the literary affairs of the church. W. W. Phelps was mentioned as one who should come out here and conduct a publishing plant in the interests of the church. They were, I say, specifically directed to come out here and buy the land. Phelps came and bought lots 98, 102, 99 and held them in fee simple and on that property he conducted the publishing interests of the church, his just wants and needs being supplied.

I think perhaps I have said enough on this question this morning. I hope that what I have said will be of interest to you and that it will awaken in you new life concerning this question; that it will be instructive and will help in the solution of the problem of bringing people together in an organized society which can really be called Zion.

However, before I close I should like to read a statement published from Nauvoo, January 15, 1841, signed by the Presidency of the Church, volume 2, page 502 of our Church History:

"Having been instrumental in the hands of our heavenly Father in laying a foundation for the gathering of Zion, we would say, Let all those who appreciate the blessings of the gospel and realize the importance of obeying the commandments of heaven, who have been blessed of heaven with the possession of this world's goods, first prepare for the general gathering. Let them dispose of their effects as fast as circumstances will possibly admit, without making too great sacrifices, and remove to our city and county—establish and

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Women's Work

It is with mixed feelings we return to our desk, after the interim spent at General Conference. We went, with the fixed idea of being relieved of some of the responsibilities we have borne for some years, and we return with not an iota of these removed or lightened, and also added burdens, the contemplation of which, in the light of inexperience and "unpreparedness," seems overwhelming. Were it not for the remembrance "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," we should certainly despair; but we feel that if anything has been demonstrated in this church of the "latter days," it is the fact that God will help to qualify the consecrated and willing worker. He will supply that which is needed, when human resources are tapped and exhausted. In that thought we find comfort, and so feel willing to try to accomplish that which has been presented to us as both duty and privilege.

Two years ago, in harmony with a report from the coordinating committee of the church, our Auxiliary voted to build up manufactories in the city, purchase and cultivate farms in the county. This will secure our permanent inheritance, and prepare the way for the gathering of the poor. This is agreeable to the order of heaven and the only principle on which the gathering can be affected. Let the rich, then, and all who can assist in establishing this place, make every preparation to come on without delay, and strengthen our hands and assist in promoting the happiness of the Saints. This cannot be too forcibly impressed on the minds of all; and the elders are hereby instructed to proclaim this word in all places where the Saints reside, in their public administrations, for this is according to the instructions we have received from the Lord."

Men who had something should come to the land of Zion and establish factories and buy the land that it might be a permanent inheritance for those who had come.

Payment of Tithing on Stewardships

Section 106 provides for the consecration of surplus; and it also provides for the continuance of the payment of tithing. Now, you will tell me how a man can pay his tithing if you take everything away from him and give him nothing to build upon and he has no right or title to anything. Whose duty is it to pay tithing? It is the man who owns the property. This law was given in 1838 and they are told specifically that after this first consecration there is required of them one tenth of their increase annually, and a man couldn't do it if you took away from him every thing that he possessed, as he wouldn't have anything with which to make an increase.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery made a solemn covenant with the Almighty back in Kirtland, Ohio. They found themselves in debt and they didn't know what to do, so they made a covenant with each other that if God should increase and multiply their possessions they would surely give him one tenth of all they possessed. They understood that they could have property, that they were called upon to exercise a stewardship over that property. They exercised this right not only in Kirtland and in Jackson County, but also in the counties north of here.

We now know how they held their property; we know the manner in which they administered their stewardships, we know they paid tithing. May God help us to do as they did, to develop our possessions, little or much, in such a way that every man shall know that he is a steward in the sight of God and the people.

consider itself a department of the general body. That we might be more consistent with that decision the following resolution was, this year, presented and adopted: "Having in view the necessity of making changes to meet new conditions of church work, and to complete the transition of the women's organization from a separate society to a department of the church, we see that the ultimate abolishment of the constitution under which we have been working will be inevitable; and inasmuch as some changes in the officers seem advisable now, we authorize the executive committee of the department to make such changes in the governing rules as developments shall demand, in harmony with the church authorities."

President Smith, in appearing before the women's convention, presented his reasons for wishing that the work of the women should be, for the present transitional period, under the supervision of a director general, and nominated his wife, Sister Ruth L. Smith, for that position. The wisdom of this step may be seen in the fact that she, being in close and daily association with the leader of the church, has a clear vision of the work the women are to do in the establishment and redemption of Zion—a vision possibly not easily obtained by one not permitted such association.

The convention indorsed this suggestion of President Smith's, and Sister Smith was empowered to assume the duties of directing the affairs of the organization. A further action was: "And in order to further facilitate the work of the executive in meeting the demands likely to be made upon our organization, we authorize our director general to appoint such officers as she may consider necessary in place of the present corps." This Sister Smith did, and her nominations being indorsed by the convention, the following officers were placed in charge of the Women's Department, under her direction: Superintendent, Sister Audentia Anderson; first assistant superintendent, Sister William Madison; second assistant superintendent, Sister May Mather; secretary, Sister A. Morgan; assistant secretary, Sister Vivian Weed Barto. These officers, with the director general, form the executive committee of the Women's Department, and will plan its reconstructive program.

Owing to the illness of Sister Smith, which followed the adjournment of conference, and the fact that the responsibilities of supervising some altogether new to us, but very important departments of activity formerly functioning through the Sunday school and Religio, were thrown upon us the closing day, the executive committee begs that great patience and forbearance will be granted to it, if it seems slow in getting everything adjusted. We are passing through a period of evolution, new visions of our opportunities are coming to us, and we find doors swinging open upon new vistas of achievement. As women of the church, a great and definite part is to be played by us in Zionic attainment, and the facility with which opportunity waits upon perception, means upon desire, impresses us with the thought that surely the "hastening" time is indeed here. For instance, the utmost we had visioned, heretofore, was that, through the home department workers of the Sunday school, by getting their permission and securing their cooperation, we might in time be able to place some of our study material in the homes, in the hands of the parents of small or adolescent children! And lo, in a twinkling, the whole machinery of the home department with its devoted workers was placed at our disposal, and, thus in addition to the limited area of service we had at first glimpsed, wide reaches of opportunity are now thrown open to us!

We had thought, through the workers of the cradle roll, we might place Child Welfare leaflets in the hands of mothers, when, in the tender moments of newly-consecrated parenthood, life is freshly touched with noble desires, with high hopes and spiritual yearnings which attend the ushering in of another of earth's pilgrims. And lo, as if in answer to the thought, comes the cradle roll department to our hands, and with it also, a corps of devoted workers, ready, heart and soul, to enter into the wider concept of their privileges therein.

How shall we meet these new responsibilities? Only one answer is adequate, and that is, as Latter Day Saint women! As wide-awake women, who see that the ideals of this church can be realized only to the extent that we perceive and cooperate, shall we not determine to take up the burdens imposed, carry them with credit and discharge them to the glory of God? Nothing shall hinder the upward progress of the mass, if the units persistently strive in that direction; nothing shall deter the church from demonstrating before the world the divinity of its conceptions if its women shall determinedly desire that ultimatum, and shall patiently work to that end. Eternal vigilance, eternal patience, eternal struggling towards the light, will spell victory at the last. It can be reached by each individual recognizing his place in the whole scheme, deliberately educating himself to fill that corner profitable, and then bending his whole energies towards doing the things which shall redeem! "Except ye do"—how can we hope to succeed unless we do? And how can we know what to do, unless we shall have the revealing light of truth and love?

Let us, as women, then, "study to show ourselves workmen approved," who will know how to meet the enemy of souls in every phase in which he is seeking to overthrow, and learn to "overcome evil with good," with love and good deeds. Let us move forward into the new conference year with a faith that shall not recognize defeat, a faith that will lead us to occupy new territory with the calm assurance that as God gives stewardships, he gives the power by which they may be borne successfully.

We need you; we need every woman in the church; not one should feel that she stands outside this call—not one but has a definite contribution to make to the upbuilding of this, our department. If it be in your local, well and good. If larger opportunities and larger responsibilities have come to you, please feel that it is only in their faithful discharge that you can stand right with God. Do not accept position for prestige, or honor. Such is unworthy of any of us. Remember that positions of power mean responsibility, and grave, at that. The circle of one's influence is wide, and the effects of his every act certain; so that it is a matter of prayer and duty, that the talent called into requisition shall be improved, with humility and conscientiousness. If you are a district organizer, what of your record? Is it a thing of which you are proud in the sense of duty discharged, and opportunity grasped? Is there a local branch within your jurisdiction which has, as yet, no vision of what its organized women may and should do?

Let us all make up our minds, that whatever the shortcomings of the past may have been with us, "from now on" (to borrow a slogan from our lively General Chorister) determine that we will leave no stone unturned, no field unplowed, from which we might derive a valuable harvest! Let us till and plant, cultivate and nurture, and God, with his sunshine and showers, his gentle, irresistible, wooing Spirit, will touch all with vitalizing influences, and Zion will soon be a reality—a place of wonder and delight!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

What's in a Name?

What's in a name, anyhow? "A rose by any other name," etc. However, there are times when it is well to remember names—countersigns, for instance, or the cognomen of your best friend when you wish to introduce her formally! Lo, when a baby comes into the family, the matter of names becomes a very serious and important one!

We have to announce to you, that again the name of our organization has undergone a change; and, strange to say, we now have a name so simple, so very appropriate, that we wonder we did not think of it years ago, when we tried out the others! First, it was the "Daughters of Zion," (which we hope we still are) and then the "Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service," (which we hope to still deserve)! Now we have become simply the Women's Department of the church!

Please notice the plural form of the first word, too! Some miscellaneous habits in the past seem to have called us sometimes "women," and sometimes "woman," but now we want it understood most clearly that "We Are the Women," and we sincerely hope to see the day when the entire womanhood of the church will be represented in our inclusive title! Come with us, "Every woman of the Latter Days," and share our weal and woes—if any of the latter there are to be!

There is a distinct work to be performed by the women of Zion. No other influence is more potent than theirs in the homes, for is it not there they reign supreme? No other factor is greater in educational work with the young, for are not women the teachers of their earliest and most plastic years? No other united force is more far-reaching or powerful than that of organized womanhood, when it stands for uplifted ideals, for progressive methods of eradicating evil in the community, or of purifying the legislation and administration by which the welfare of the homes is affected. What is true of the homes and the communities of the nation, is true of Zion's homes and the Zion's social fabric, and it becomes a duty which immediately confronts the women of our church, to definitely outline that course, both as individuals and as an organization, which will place them on the most constructive and progressive program for which they are prepared.

We would reiterate the need for preparational work! Be prepared! Be ready! Do not wait until necessity demands action on your part, before you qualify yourself in some measure at least, to act. It were poor policy to wait until your house burned down before you take out insurance, or to wait until your child tumbles into the pitfalls of sexual sin before you warn him of the dangers! One would not think of obtaining first a position as bookkeeper and then proceeding to study for the qualifications needed! How about child training? How about home-making? Are they less important, or less exact as sciences? We could go on, with almost limitless illustrations in many directions, but enough that each of us may feel a renewed inspiration to get busy, and study. Study something! De we need divine command for it? What of the "Study all good books," in our Doctrine and Covenants? Books of travel, of history, of countries and peoples; books of methods and meanings; books of counsel and competency; everywhere about us are opportunities to carry out this vital command.

As workers in the Women's Department of the church, we desire that the intellectual, moral, physical, and spiritual standards of our homes shall be raised to a degree commensurate with the wonderful principles of divine life which have been revealed to us. Were the dear Lord to come into our homes to-night, would we wish to set him down to a meal of soggy bread, of slushy vegetables, or tough, stringy meat? Would he be compelled to eat from sticky dishes, or rest his weary frame on an ill-kept bed, in a disorderly room? Would we wish him to hear our sharp words to those we love the best, or see the disobedience of our children, the lack of harmony in our home nests? Ah, no! We are sure the answer is "no!"; and as this longing for better things, for more wholesome conditions of body, mind, and spirit is duplicated in the thousands of homes throughout our church, and this ideal of uplift become a spring of living water to the units which comprise those homes, causing them to search for those pearls of wisdom and that poise of soul which are vouchsafed to those who, "seeking, shall find," may we not fondly expect that the effect of our "strong pull, our long pull, and our pull all together," will be seen in a Zion arising, "pure in heart" "beautiful for situation," out from whence the "perfection of beauty" shall shine—a lamp unto the stumbling, and a light unto the wanderer?

Here's to the goal set by the Women's Department! Surely it has "hitched its wagon to a star!"

Our General Office

With the "setting our house in order," which spirit has been marked by that of the recent conference, the Women's Department has been advanced to the dignity of having a general office, equipped with all the necessary essentials for carrying on its broad and important work.

In harmony with the rule under which many other departments work, our office is to be reached through those of the general church. Therefore, all mail intended for the Women's Department in any or all of its subdivisions, should be addressed, on the envelope, simply,

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
of Latter Day Saints

Independence
Missouri

Women's Department

This mail will then be transferred by clerk to our own particular office, which will be occupied by our general executive officers. The many advantages of this plan are obvious to all. In the past, very much confusion has resulted from the fact that the personnel of our executive committee changed, by vote of convention, from year to year, and few people could keep track of the varying addresses. Especially was it confusing to those at a distance, to whom these women were not known, personally. Now, you need be in doubt no longer. No matter what your business may be with the Women's Department, be sure that by addressing it to our main office as above indicated, it will reach the one for whom it is intended. Our general secretary, Sister A. Morgan, and her able young assistant, Sister Vivian Barto, are both well-trained business women, and will handle the correspondence with prompt efficiency, passing on to the superintendents of the various sub-departments, the matter intended for them. This includes all orders for leaflets, all dues, contributions, or moneys for whatever purposes.

Our New Departments

An unfortunate procedure on the part of the conference, threw into the Women's Department, on the last day, the supervision of the home department of both Sunday school and Religio, and the cradle roll work of the former, with the addition of a birth registry department. This has necessitated a considerable degree of reconstructive thought, and for several days succeeding conference, much time was spent in council with the various workers affected by the change.

We regard the move as one of great progression towards the ultimate goal of having all the work of the church placed in proper and consistent departments, and as little of it duplicated as possible. This change is decidedly in line, and originated with the action of the Religio in voting to throw its home department work into that of the Sunday school, should the latter consent. In turn, the Sunday school referred the matter to the coordinating committee of the church, which decided that the proper channel through which the work of home study should be carried on, is the Women's department—a department which is primarily concerned with education in and for the home and its members. The recommendation from the committee included also the transference of the cradle roll work, and, when placed before the conference, these changes in administration were heartily indorsed and ordered.

In effecting this transference, we have accomplished the following and feel sure that, with the hearty and sympathetic support of all former workers in these departments, the wisdom of the change will be felt by all, and the wider fields and higher objectives will prove inspirational.

The Home Department

Sister J. C. Schwab, of Independence, who has for several years so ably conducted the work of the home department of the Sunday school, has consented to continue to act as its superintendent under the new regime. She will call to her aid such assistance as she may need, and expects every worker, district or local, to continue working as usual, until such time as changes shall be made. The mechanism of this department really becomes a vehicle through which literature of various study courses may be placed in the home. The Religio Quarterlies, as well as those of the Sunday school, will be handled by the local workers, and, later, the Women's Department will also have material to be so placed. An effort should be made all along the line, to increase the interest in home study, and where demand is perceived for courses of study, that demand will be met, if at all possible. Mothers of young children should feel that it is not only a privilege but a duty, to be well-informed on matters which affect the welfare of their children. Older people in the homes can be interested in community responsibilities, and will doubtless welcome along with their Sunday School Quarterlies the social service leaflets put out by the Women's Department. There is a vast field to be cultivated, and the results will be worth the combined efforts of all departments of the church working in harmony.

The Cradle Roll

In falling heir to this work, formerly conducted by the Sunday school, we also fell heir to a new superintendent—Sister Cornelius Mills, of Independence. She brings to the work a preparation for work with, and for, small children, and with, and for, all those who care for them, having studied along kindergarten lines for years. Coached by the retiring superintendent of cradle roll, Sister H. B. Roberts, who, in several years of devoted labor in this department, has become most proficient and enthusiastic, Sister Mills will without doubt, be able to carry on the work without loss, and with every prospect of building up this very interesting connecting link between the church and its homes. She desires that all local and district workers shall continue as heretofore, until further announcement and instructions.

The Birth Registry

President Smith, in bringing to the conference the recommendations of the coordinating committee in regard to the two departments mentioned above, stated that he hoped to see added to the cradle roll work, a systematic registration of births occurring in Latter Day Saint families. Heretofore the first record obtainable is through the priesthood when the rite of blessing is performed, which, as all know, cannot be a very accurate account. Very fortunately for the prompt and efficient installment of this new bureau, we obtained the consent of Sister Rogene B. Smith to supervise the work of registering the births of Latter Day Saint children. Having been for some months in touch with our department of statistics, she, with the willing and enthusiastic assistance of Recorder Frank A. Russell, will be able to plan and care for this work with great efficiency, we feel sure. Too, her association with her husband, Brother Hale W. Smith, and her interest in his studies along the lines of social survey, will be of value to her, and we hope to see this new department make a record before next conference, which will justify the desires of our president in urging its establishment.

Important Notice

The important thing to remember just now, is that the Women's Department has established a central general office, through which all mail should pass, no matter for which sub-department it is intended. Thus all letters and communications, reports and requests, inquiries or suggestions, pertaining to any of the various departments of our Women's work, should be addressed:

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ

Inside, the letter should be addressed to the superintendent of the special department for which it is intended—such

LETTERS

Progress in Hawaii

The Saints of this district are a very progressive people, as some of our recent activities will show. Since Sister Etzenhouser and I arrived here in August of last year, the Hawaiian mission has been organized into a district with all departments of the work fully organized. We have held two very successful conferences under the new organization and the prospects for the future are very bright.

We have Saints on all of the important islands but the majority of our members are located in Honolulu and Hilo. Just before Brother McConley left for General Conference he and Brother James A. Puuohau made a tour of the islands and saw most of the isolated Saints. So by visit and letter we try to keep in touch with the scattered sheep.

Our Honolulu Saints have adopted some measures that speak well for the members of the metropolis. I feel to congratulate this people where I have been appointed to labor as their pastor.

The finances of all departments of the branch are deposited in the name of the church, under the direct supervision of the bishop's agent Brother Waller. Each department has its own treasurer who keep a record as in the old way but all withdrawals are made through the agent who knows at all times just how much money each department has on hand.

Just before the influenza made its appearance this year, Sister Clancy, wife of our teacher Thomas Clancy, and a nurse of marked ability, was elected as nurse of the Honolulu Branch on the stewardship basis. Her services were in great demand during the epidemic as many of the Saints were stricken. But through administration of the elders and proper care at the hands of our sister all have recovered and thank God for His mercy.

At a recent business meeting the branch voted to dispense with the selecting of a presiding priest, teacher, and deacon, a plan similar to that adopted in Independence and Lamoni. We're looking Zionward.

Eight members of the priesthood are taking the course in public speaking as outlined by Graceland. All are very enthusiastic over the prospects of preparing for greater service.

The bishop has in his hands the plans which we wish to follow in the raising and improving our church building. We are too crowded as it is now and with a basement fitted up for Sunday school and Religio, leaving the upper auditorium primarily for church service, we will have room in which to grow. All are busy raising funds to finance the proposition; the Woman's Auxiliary being second to none in raising the required amount.

While Brother McConley was still in Hilo, the branch there bought a hundred feet of ground adjoining the church and Brother Puuohau is now grading it down as that it may be made into a playground for the young of the Religio. So when Brother Reeves arrives he and Brother Hapai will have a championship game of tennis.

Hilo can now boast of a fine orchestra which has been as, "Birth Registry," "Cradle Roll," "Home Department," "Child Welfare," "Social Service," "Young Women," etc.

A splendid effect may be produced by all church members forming the habit of using the full name of our church upon the envelopes in which they send communications to headquarters. It will serve to keep the name of our church before the postal public, and will help materially in bringing us out of some of our past obscurity. We are anxious that the "Women's Department," too, shall be placed "on the map"; and so we urge that all mail intended for any of the numerous splendid women who are serving with us, in whatever capacity, shall bear the name, not only of the woman, but of our church, and our department as well.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

lately organized under the direction of a friend of the church, a native man of rare ability. I was privileged to hear them in their first public appearance and it was very fine. Brother Reeves with his violin will have plenty to do.

Brother Puuohau and Brother Kanui have just finished giving the interior of the mission house a coat of paint and the sisters have been busy fixing things for the comfort of the new missionaries.

Brother Waller, whose patience and fidelity has contributed largely to the success of the work here, is at present in San Francisco but intends to return to the islands in about two months. His fatherly advice and counsel is appreciated by missionary and member alike.

Ever praying for the success of Zion I remain, yours truly,
V. B. ETZENHOUSER.

Who Is to Appoint Stewardships?

This is the eighth of a series of letters being sent out to the members of Lamoni Stake by the Lamoni Stake Bishopric.

In continuing the discussion of the creation of stewardships—who to appoint, which was discussed in our last letter, we wish to present the following:

"The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the Church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the Bishopric, men holding the office of Bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contribution gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, freewill offerings, and consecration."—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

"The time has now come when the necessities of the work require that the servants of the church, Bishops Edwin A. Blakeslee and Edmund L. Kelley, should be more closely associated in the carrying on of the financial affairs of the church and the care of the properties belonging to the church . . . as an organization under the laws of the church and of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 131: 2.

The Presiding Bishopric are the ones to formally allot stewardships from property consecrated to the church.

The assigning of stewardships out of church property means the passing of the title to the property in fee simple, as soon as paid for. Or it may be held in trust either by the individual or the group, this title having been held by the Presiding Bishop as trustee in trust.

To be in accord with the laws of the land, then, every steward receiving a stewardship from church property must receive it legally (formally) through the Bishop.

It will simplify matters if we call the attention of the reader to this fact that all property received by the church must be so received through the bishop, and that all property disbursed by the church must be done so through the bishop, because the bishop is the legal representative of the church—the trustee in trust.

Stewardships Made from Property Belonging to the Individual

Stewardships may be recognized and entered into by Saints using property therefor which belongs to themselves.

"Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

In this case the title does not have to pass from the church to the steward, the title being lodged already in the steward.

A formal written acknowledgement and recognition of the stewardship may be given the steward by the bishop.

The reason for this formal written recognition of the "right" of the steward is to emphasize the importance and sacredness of the union between the steward and the church, or between the individual and the group.

We are told that the Saints shall retain the possession of their inheritances "forever." "Whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," is as true in matters pertaining to the Bishopric as that of any other church authority.

The giving of stewardships requires the very best judgment possible.

The Lord long ago said, "In the multitude of counselors there is safety."

When we remember that there will be thousands of stewardships to be given—that this financial system, providing for the proper distribution of wealth is the one that shall ultimately prevail, our interpretation of the law of procedure should be broad enough to provide for this necessary growth, yet not so latitudinous as to alienate us from God.

We lack nothing only willingness. The Lord has not only provided the necessary organization to accomplish his work, but has also given us broad but comprehensive instructions enabling us to proceed in appointing of stewardships.

The Order of Enoch

This order is a helping order to the bishopric and as such may allot stewardships. This order may be discussed in future letters.

In our next letter, we will discuss stewardships—who to have.

Handle Pleasures With Care

The HERALD of March 3 seemed to me to breathe a broad spirit, and the sermons and articles seemed to be nearer what may be termed the spirit of tolerance.

I am not a cranky individual as to pleasures, but I feel to say that this is a pleasure-seeking generation, and it is the silken cord referred to in the Book of Mormon with which the devil leads them on to destruction.

Many pleasures, such as billiards, football, moving pictures, etc., are in themselves harmless enough, but it is the contrast that causes me not to condone or advocate an all-the-way program with regard to the movies. The millions who celebrated the football and picture craze in all kinds of weather are not by any means the most religious folk in the world.

We have to face the problems of to-day, it is true, and the tendency is, "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

The movie has its good points as an illustrator. But do you think, editors, that if they gave demonstrations upon morality or immorality and its effects, and a really scientific series, that the pictures would last long? Sensation is the bad feature of pictures. So many feed upon it as they do the cheap novel.

I pray that we may not do a thing that we shall be sorry for in our fostering of harmful pleasures that appear innocent in themselves.

My own observation has been at work on these matters, and when I saw a growing desire with our own children to see pictures, I said "All right, I will come along." The result was that by showing the small amount of good and large percentage of evil, our children do not wish to go very often.

Some folks get to spend too much time and money upon these things. It positively does not increase the desire to study, nor does it increase the spirituality of the one who goes often.

May the Lord guide us all in caring for our young. The spare time, with the shorter hours of labor in England and Wales, is not spent for mental development. The mammon of selfishness—monetarily, and in pleasures, is topmost. Home life as God would have it is a great factor—in fact the greatest factor in my mind.

Your brother in Christ,

NANTYGLO, WALES.

Opening of Saint Louis Church

The writer spent Sunday, the 18th, in Saint Louis, assisted in the formal opening of the new church, occupying the pulpit at both services. This was a great day for the Saint Louis Saints. The dream of years had come true. The thing for which they had unselfishly labored and sacrificed had materialized.

They now have a real church home—a delight forever. The structure is modern in every way. There is ample provision for every department of the church: Sunday school, Religio, Women's. They have cloak room, reception room, class room, pastor's study, dining room, kitchen, Sunday school rooms, and auditorium. The acoustics are perfect. The main audience room is ample for present needs.

And what a bunch of enthusiastic workers in Sunday school and church! The building fairly swarmed with men, women and children vying with each other in an effort to make each service worth while.

Brother Ralph W. Farrell is pastor here. He has an excellent corps of workers. They expect to hold a series of revival meetings commencing Sunday, April 25. This is opportune.

Saint Louis is not one whit behind in the musical line—a first-class pipe organ presided over by an expert, a well-disciplined choir give promise of great achievements.

There is also a large group of ministers here—men of consecrated purpose who are willing to suborn individual aspiration to social service.

The work in Saint Louis should move forward by leaps and bounds. May God bless and guide these dear people and enable them to avail themselves of the splendid opportunities now opening up before them for social and spiritual evangelization. Sincerely,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Impressions of the General Conference

"Through this conference, many doubts have dissolved. A more thorough understanding has been gained."

The General Conference exceeded our expectations, and I think it came well up to those of all who attended it. A preparation of prayer had been going on throughout the church. The leading officers were especially and constantly remembered. How could God do otherwise than recognize those officers, when he had said:

"If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.

Long experience in the church convinces the writer that disrespect of authority and rebellion against it, is one of the most dangerous things for any individual to indulge in, as it is also injurious to the work of God. We have the history of the past as far back as the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram in Moses' time, as certifying to the displeasure of God visited upon those individuals in their particular case.

It is true the memory of the latter-day apostasy lingers in the minds of many, and confidence in man has been shaken thereby.

It is time, however, in the history of the Reorganization, for confidence to be restored, that the work may move on. No doubt the late President Joseph Smith suffered much from the attitude of suspicion on the part of many who were afraid of being led contrary to the law, and had not sufficient confidence in the leader to receive his interpretation of the law, which was his special province to give. (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2; 122: 1, 2.)

There is no comparison between the efforts of Brigham Young to annul "the books," and the efforts of the First Presidency of the Reorganization from 1860 until now, to apply the law in Zion and in the stakes and branches of the church. As we now see it, the efforts of the present Presidency have been for a more energetic and thoroughgoing execution of the law, and a more systematic prosecution of the missionary work in all the world, than ever before. Why should not confidence be restored? Why should not the work move on?

This Conference betokens that it will move on as never before, in the not-far-distant future. In the mind of the writer, the lectures to the priesthood before the conference did much good. They tended to remove misunderstanding in regard to several features of church work, and to unify the ministry. They made an excellent preparation for the conference.

The mass meeting of the priesthood held on Sunday morning, April 4, was a climax to the meetings of preceding it. God saw fit to speak through a number of his servants, including President Elbert A. Smith. A greater endowment was promised, and predicted upon faithfulness, even in the year to come.

We were not privileged to attend the auxiliary meetings throughout, but those we did attend were certainly worth while. One of the outstanding ones in our memory, was that of the Women's Department on Monday night, April 12. It was addressed by Dora Young and Lucie Sears and last, in a wonderful effort by President Frederick M. Smith. Not only did he dwell upon and give the official seal to woman's work in the church, but he insisted upon the value of education, and still more education beyond the bounds or limitations of degrees, if it were possible, even for every member of the church. We were fully converted to his viewpoint, if we lacked something of it before. God is in touch with all the works of his hands. He is in all and through all. By him all things consist or hold together.

Why should we not be privileged to come in touch with him through a knowledge of his creations, whether by the study of mind or matter; of animal, vegetable, or mineral life, and of the heavens as well as the earth. In reference to the kingdoms, we are told that, "Any man who has seen any or the least of these, has seen God moving in his majesty and power." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:12, 21.)

We are privileged to apply ourselves to learn by study and also by faith, or to enlarge our understanding by the accumulated efforts of human endeavor, and the inspiration of God in addition thereto.

The gospel closes no doors of knowledge. It opens those otherwise closed. It does not limit the human mind or its activities. It encourages it in all fields. Why should we with extra powers, be behind the whole procession of fact and philosophy in the material universe? I am glad we are waking up to a consciousness of our environment and a study of it, with a view to a more perfect adjustment to all the laws of God and man. Where is there apostasy in this? Where is it in a more thorough preparation in days of youth or youthful ministry, for later activity so strenuous that there is little time for study?

The class for religious training is going to collect the thoughts and concentrate the efforts of our youth, who would otherwise drift with the world current. A call to prepare by no means invalidates or unfits for a call for action, or in other words a choosing for action.

Through this conference, many doubts have dissolved. A more thorough understanding has been gained. A great amount of business has been initiated for the executive department to deal with. The touch of hastening is here; the beginning of a new epoch has dawned. Competition in business and all endeavor is going out. Cooperation is coming in. Stewardships will be appointed on the basis of consecration. The ministry will not be alone in their great sacrifices. The entire membership will be behind them, and all will be blessed. The next two years will see the program of the conference well under way.

A building suitable to all the needs and requirements of the General Conference is one of the first considerations for the whole church, and the same liberality characterizing the conference, will no doubt be in evidence throughout the church, and make the building a certainty for the next great gathering, two years hence. Certainly Brother Hoxie was happy before, during, and after the unprecedented money raising of $65,000 in a brief time, and will be still happier when the great organ to fit the building shall be provided for.

We credit Brother Hoxie with bringing a good spirit into the services, even before the opening of conference, for we so discerned it in connection with the first singing. His leadership in music and song was certainly one of the features of the conference. The singers and musicians who so ably seconded his efforts are worthy of full appreciation.

The carrying out of the program agreed upon, involves the consecration of men and money. The first consecration—that of men and women—will make possible and sure the second—that of money. The general good is in view in the measures planned and adopted. There is no violation of any command not to build "churches or place of entertainment not essential to the continued onward progress of the general work." (Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.)

Localities here or there may do this. The general church has not pledged itself or the people to such a program. As we see it, the work of twenty years must be done in five, for the safety and good of the people. The demands for money are, and will be, a logical part of the hastening. If we give cheerfully, God will give cheerfully to us, and giving will not impoverish us. It is to be hoped that cheerfulness, confidence, zeal, faithfulness, humility, charity, and every virtue, will commend us to God and man, and that the measure of our happiness will equal the measure of our devotion. "He that keepeth the law happy is he." There is no such happiness to be had as the diligent and faithful Saint has at his command, but it lays largely with the individual as to whether he shall realize it.

It is not to be found in doubt, fear, worldly pleasure, self indulgence of any kind, disloyalty to the leaders or authorities of the church, district, or branch. It is to be had in the grand cooperation plan of action in which each should vie with the other to render profitable service to God and man, such as this work and no other provides for and makes possible. Our reward will be immediate for willing obedience and responsiveness, in the gifts and blessings promised now, which in themselves are a great reward; yet a mere prophecy or foretaste of that which is to come. But happiness is ours now if we will do our part now, and not procrastinate.

We have said by conference action that we will do it now. Will we make our pledge good, men and women, rich and poor, old and young? It is for each individual to decide for himself, and not for another. There is no moving forward without decisions on our part to do so. The more good ones adhered to, the better. General Conference decisions are as nothing, unless reinforced by our individual decisions in harmony with them. It is up to you and me to make and carry them into effect, and we so leave it.

M. F. GOWELL.

Some Criticisms on the Lecture Series

A district president believes the preconference lectures should be given yearly, and questions allowed only at close.

In mingling with the home Saints it is wonderful to note the difference in the spirit manifested after this conference and the one a year ago. It is truly very encouraging. And yet I went out with a greater determination last year than I do this year; not that I do not commence the year with determination and zeal, but I really feel a relaxation, while last year I felt a tenseness that has all vanished with the passing of the year and the conference just closed, and in its stead there has come a peaceful calm determination that is really restful.

The lectures were very educational and worthwhile. One of the things to be regretted was the omitting of some of the lectures by President Frederick M. Smith, which was a disappointment to many, but unavoidable I am sure. I am very hopeful that these lectures will be continued yearly. If not in a central place, then in different sections of the fields of labor where the conference appointees can attend with less expense to the church.

By way of criticism may I say that in my opinion there was a mistake made in allowing any questions until the lecturer had finished his lecture, and then no negative questions should be allowed. There should only be allowed such questions as would clarify the thoughts presented by the lecturer. These negative (?) questions tend to confuse rather than educate. But some one suggests that suppose there is a flagrant mistake made by the one lecturing? Then in that case I suggest that it be presented to the one in charge in writing, and he arrange for its correction in its time and place, so that it will not confuse the lecturer at the time of his lecture, and if it is thought necessary to discuss the matter, then it should so be arranged by the ones in charge, and not participated in by the entire assembly, in order that some be allowed to explode their pet theory, and if it involves a point of doctrine, then it should be referred to the authorities of the church whose duty it is to interpret the law. This should end discussions and bring unity.

An Aged Tithe-Payer

I should have renewed my HERALD when the time was out, but I was away from home nursing, and earning money for the Lord. When I came home I gave all I earned ($90) to Brother Blakely for tithing. Last year I gave him $100, all for tithing. Now I have my tithing debt all paid up. I own my home (the place which Alexander Smith built) and four acres of land three fourths of a mile from Plano, Illinois. I cannot express the joy I feel over having paid my debt to the Lord. I will be seventy-six years old in June, and my trust and hope is in God, and I hope to have a home with him in the future state.

The Spirit of Consecration Very Prevalent

A letter from one of the missionary force which expresses much hope and appreciation.

The prayer meeting on Sunday morning preceding conference removed almost every vestige of hatred and doubt, and instilled in the brethren the spirit of brotherly love and unity. Previous to that prayer service there were some who seemed disturbed but if they felt the same after that wonderful meeting they never allowed that spirit to manifest itself.

The conference demonstrated what could and will be done when the church comes together in the spirit of unity. Lack of unity has been one of the greatest hindering causes that has largely prevented the accomplishment of the work designed of God in the work of the church.

The two weeks spent in listening to the lectures delivered previous to conference were very helpful, and the good resulting therefrom would justify the cost of time and expense in bringing so many of the ministry together to hear the subjects discussed. The men who delivered these lectures did all that could be reasonably expected of them in presenting in a very clear and concise manner the subject matter treated upon. I was surprised at the unity that existed after some of these subjects had been presented. Especially was the above true in regard to the subject of the atonement as presented by Brother Garver. I had expected to see considerable division and perhaps bitterness exhibited by some of the brethren who seemingly were at two extremes of this mooted question, but to my surprise very little disagreement manifested itself. . . .

To me the outlook is very hopeful and I never witnessed the spirit of consecration more fully developed in the minds of the Saints than now. It is hard to determine what the next two years will bring to the church, but I would not be at all surprised if it did mean the increase in membership of many thousands. I shall watch with considerable interest the many features of church work, but I have no fear as to the onward progress that we shall make as the body of Christ.

Though Far-Distant, Felt the Endowing Power

I think I must have had a measure of the endowment of the Holy Spirit enjoyed in the conference time, when I preached yesterday, for both morning and evening I had fine liberty, and it was a pleasure to minister in the word. I think it was greater than I have had before, and I have had many occasions when great freedom in preaching was given me, but never anything to exceed yesterday's experience. We had good audiences both morning and evening, and some non-members present.

It is very encouraging to read of the important, forward movements inaugurated at the conference, and we rejoiced at the unanimity shown and the support and loyalty given you. Sure the time, the set time, to favor Zion has come, and it is good to see the enthusiasm displayed in moving on to the accomplishment of this great work. It makes us feel that were we ten years younger, that we might have a further part in the redemption of Zion, we would stay right here a while to help these good people. But our strength is waning, and we can no longer sustain our part as we desire to see it done. We are hoping to hear that some one has been assigned to take my place, and that he will not delay getting here. The branch will be left in charge of Brother Claude C. Smith, our branch priest, after this month.

Next Sunday morning if all is well I will deliver my farewell address here. We are gathering up our things now and packing so as not to be in a rush at the last. Expect to reach Independence, May 7. Sister Emma Burton will be with us.

(Letter to the Presidency from W. H. Garrett, Long Beach, California.)

"Now Let Us Do"

A missionary writes to the Presidency that he is in full accord with all the conference did.

To say I am well pleased over the lecture course and the conference only feebly expresses my feelings. I am delighted. Even that does not express all that I feel. I feel that the greatest event in history since the time God took Zion to himself has been experienced by his people. I feel exceedingly thankful that I have lived to see this day. I realize it is but the beginning of a greater endowment. So that my joy of anticipation quite exceeds my present thanksgiving.

For nearly ninety years our preaching has been only a beautiful theory. We have seen only the blossoms; now we begin to taste the fruit not yet quite ripe. We fondly anticipate the coming feast of fruit divine. We have been talking and planning; now let us do.

When President Smith launched forth from theory to practice, the latent spirit in every Saint was awakened, and instantly they were on their feet to follow. The lost chord had been struck and every soul cried out, Amen. Instantly, all past differences were at an end. With some, scales fell from eyes that had not seen too clearly, but that now saw our leader no longer pushing, but leading. Some felt that they were just now through the wilderness and breathing the air warmed by the Son of Righteousness. Everyone could but feel to follow on. All present could not resist the leadings of the Spirit to aid as best they could and to redouble their diligence in doing so.

The fondest hopes the human soul is open to burst into our inner beings, and the future looks bright and joyous. If I mistake not, the church will develop by leaps and bounds both in numbers and especially in divine power. One can see and feel the truth of another divine message through another of the First Presidency. "Whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye reap. He that soweth love, shall reap love; he that soweth contention, shall reap contention; he that soweth evil shall reap evil; he that soweth mercy, shall reap mercy. As ye shall in meekness and righteousness perform your labors, there shall come to all such the endowment of divine power long since promised." Truly, one can but be thankful that we have arrived at this place and been permitted to live in this time. With much care, one should watch his sowing.

Not a single event of the conference but with which I am in full accord. I cannot, however, accept some points in some of the lectures. I cannot believe God is omnipresent, nor that Christ or the Holy Ghost are equal to God. The First Presidency on earth, I think, represents the First Presidency in heaven. One is greatest of the three in authority. In fact, without the chief, the others would not have been. From the fact that God is in heaven proves that he is not everywhere.

But lest I worry and weary you, I desist. May you all go forward, and in so doing, I am with you.

The Best Answer to God-Evolution

A district president who believes the lectures were of great value to the ministry.

Well, the past conference and the preceding lectures were a great experience to us. Of course, I could not agree with all that was said by the lectures, but it was all of great value to the ministry, I think, in leading them into great fields of thought and research. One of the greatest thoughts presented, to my mind, was that by Brother Walter Smith in reference to the Godhead, showing as he did, that "GOD IS," and that he does not develop or progress. It was the most complete annihilation of the Brighamite-god-evolution theory that I ever heard.

Brother Elbert's lectures were all good, and manifested a good spirit that seemed to touch all the brethren. I was disappointed in not being permitted to hear Frederick M. Smith's lectures on revelation.

In my own mind I questioned the wisdom of such great expense occasioned by the calling together of the ministry for the lectures, especially under the present existing critical conditions, but I hope that time may vindicate the wisdom of what was done. I know that I was helped, and very much enjoyed the lectures.

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN, April 5, 1920.

Editors Herald: It affords me great pleasure to tell you some of the blessings God is bestowing upon his people here in Muskegon.

We moved here two years ago, and the first meeting we attended was when ten of us met for Sunday school. There was not a branch or an officer here, so we labored together, and in the fall we had a school of thirty-five. Then in answer to our prayers, an elder came along and decided to move here, Elder Archie Whitehead, of Cadillac.

In the spring we had to rent a hall, and were organized into a branch on Easter Sunday, 1919. Since that time there has been one priest, three teachers, and two deacons ordained. One teacher left, and one priest moved here.

We had an entertainment Easter, as an anniversary of our organization, and you would surely be surprised at the talent in our Sunday school children.

We began to talk orchestra last fall, and some steps were taken by some getting instruments—all children from the junior and intermediate classes, and we had the privilege of listening to some selections on violins at our entertainment.

God spoke to his people through our elder last fall, and told us that the influenza would sweep the city again this winter, and would be worse than the year before, and that there would scarcely be enough well to care for the sick; but if we would trust in him, he would care for us and be our physician. Truly it came to pass, and only one was taken from our number. Some were given up by the doctors, but the elder was called, and through obedience, the disease departed.

Again the Lord spoke to us Easter morn through Elder

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

Elder Harry Passman writes that he has reserved passage on a boat leaving for Palestine from Marseilles, France, June 2, landing him at Joppa. He will first visit Germany.

In the Ottawa Journal for January 31, we notice an announcement of lectures by Elder Nephi Jensen, of the Utah church. This announcement is followed immediately by nearly half a column, two columns wide, setting forth the differences between the two churches, and ending with a challenge to Philemon Pement to canvass these differences in public. The announcement is made that these differences will be canvassed at the Sunday evening service. The announcement itself conveys considerable information to the reading public.

Do you know of anyone who would like to purchase at half price back numbers of Autumn Leaves? I have the following: Complete volumes—1915, 1914, 1918, 1903; all of 1905 except December, all of 1911 except January; all of 1910 except October and December; last half of 1904; first seven numbers of 1912; also several odd numbers of 1902, 1908, 1907, 1912 and other years. Peter M. Hinds, 1112 West 6th Street, Waterloo, Iowa.

Apostle William Aylor writes: "We will be leaving for our new mission, South Africa, about August 1. Anyone knowing of members, churches or friends in that country will please send me their addresses at 824 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri."

A group of brethren at Woodbine and Pisgah, Iowa, have decided to transfer their business interests to Lamoni, and to this end have purchased the Lamoni Storehouse, which includes the leading grocery and a coal and feed store, operated successfully for a number of years under the direct management of Charles E. Blair. The stock is being invoiced and the store will be operated for the present by Arthur Lane, of Pisgah, and perhaps one other of the men involved. It is intended to enlarge the business to include all kinds of general merchandise and finally utilize the services of all the men now engaged in the ownership and operation of the Vredenburg and Lewis general store at Woodbine and the Lane Brothers general store at Pisgah. These brethren are going into this on the stewardship basis, fully consecrating themselves and their means to the good of the cause of Zion. Those included in the group are: David M. Vredenburg, A. E. Lewis, D. W. Gamet, Ralph Travis, Lee Travis, L. W. Rollings, Fred A. Fry, Arthur Lane, Don Lane.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Lamoni, Iowa. At the preaching services of late the visiting missionaries have been taking an important part. At Whitehead, and put us in mind of his mercies, and promised to bless us more if we continue in his love.

We have a branch of about eighty members, and many are watching and waiting for the ice to depart, and for Elder Whitehead to again make his trips nearly every Sunday down to the water.

Muskegon is a coming town, one of the coming cities of the State, and for any one who likes city life, this is the place.

The elder surely was a busy man during the epidemic. He had to quit his job for about six weeks and devote his time to administering and helping care for the sick, yet God careth for his own, and he was supplied with the necessities of life. God cares for the ravens, and his servants are more worthy than ravens, so he cares for his own.

the Sunday evening session recently the children's chorus and the Lamoni orchestra furnished the musical numbers, and George Thorburn preached. The junior meeting at 11 a. m., continues popular, with an average attendance of about 145, mostly children under fifteen. Sermonets and lectures of about 20 to 30 minutes, with program features by the children are the usual order. The Sunday school and Religio attendance and interest are excellent. Housing is a big problem here as well as elsewhere, with few new houses being built. The season has been backward, and the farmers impatient. The sacrament service on the 2d was a fine, spiritual meeting. A goodly number of the young missionaries who will soon be leaving for the first appointment took part, and the Lord, through J. W. Wight, gave them a message of cheer, especially to those who because of their adherence to the church had been compelled to sever home ties. There are three in the class in religious education who because of their religious affiliation do not have a home. The monthly priesthood meeting was addressed as usual for a half hour in general session by the pastor, J. F. Garver, after which quorum work was taken up, some interesting subjects being under discussion.

Stockton, California. Some fine sermons have been preached by H. J. Davison on the Book of Mormon and latter-day revelation. Some Utah Mormon elders have been here, very enthusiastic in their work but have not succeeded in showing the "light" to any of our people yet. On Easter Sunday the Ceres Branch visited us and in the morning we had a spiritual sacrament and prayer service. Three were baptized. Brother Davison and family have moved to a far better location than they recently had, and all rejoice with them, for they deserve the best, being live workers for the Master.

Saint Louis, Missouri. Good success in the series of meetings being held. Large crowds are addressed by T. W. Williams, the interest is exceptional, many nonmembers and Saints united in making the meetings a success. With a new church, a first-class chorister, a fine choir, a supporting pastor and priesthood, an invincible combination is had.

THE WORLD AT LARGE

George W. Anderson of the United States District Court, of Boston, Massachusetts, has spoken in very clear terms condemning the methods used in the arrest of aliens called "Reds." He condemns the holding of supposed aliens, without warrant, for two weeks, and condemns also the methods used in the attempt to secure evidence.

There is nowadays the discussion of the wearing of overalls to keep down the cost of living. It is stated that one judge on Long Island mounted the bench in gray overalls and jumper. The immediate effect of the agitation has been an advance in the price of overalls. Ye editors have seriously considered at times adopting such an official garb, but have managed by wearing old clothes to keep from doing so for the present. It is evident, however, that we should be prepared to make all reasonable sacrifices to avoid the high cost of living, in order to meet our obligations in the family and church.

The London Weekly Dispatch reports in the April 11 number that a deadly form of influenza called "blue flu" has made its appearance in and around London. This form of disease is most rapid, death ensuing within forty-eight hours, or even less. The name comes from the effects on the lips and ears, which turn purple or blue, from the derangement of the circulatory system. It is not as infectious as ordinary influenza is supposed to be. There are many cases of influenza in London, it being on the increase. For the week ending the 8th there were 124 deaths, as against 57 the previous week.

The Omaha Bee in January, conducted a discussion under the heading, "Are women slipping?" It applies it especially to the change of dress; also to the fact that young men once

Our Departed Ones

DRAKE.—Laura Bell Mitchel was born at Fort Dodge, Iowa, May 19, 1859. Married M. P. Drake, April 22, 1914, at Maquoketa, Iowa, where they resided until March 23, when she went to the Independence Sanitarium to have a cancer removed, and passed away March 27. Baptized at Maquoketa, Iowa, in 1914, by Alaska McCumber; confirmed by John Heide. Funeral at the German-Lutheran Church. Sermon by John Heide. Interment in Mount Hope Cemetery. Her husband is the only near relative.

ANNES.—George William Anness was born in the town of March, Cambridgeshire, England, July 21, 1837. Baptized in 1892 and remained a loyal and devoted member. On December 2, he was taken with cerebral hemorrhages, and for 10 weeks was a patient sufferer. March 3 bronchial pneumonia set in, and March 5 he passed away. Leaves wife, one daughter, 4 granddaughters, and 11 great-grandchildren to mourn. Services at the residence, John Scheur officiating. Interment in the Inland Cemetery.

WHITEHEAD.—Margaret Whitehead was born in Dumfries, Scotland, March 19, 1833. Died in Toronto, February 7, 1920. She rejoiced in the gospel and was unwavering in her testimony. Survived by 2 daughters, 4 sons: Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Hunter, Robert, and John of Shelbourne, and Archie, of Michigan; Andrew preceded her in death. Services in charge of A. F. McLean.

BOGUE.—Isaac Almon Bogue was born at Brunswick, Ohio, December 14, 1821. In 1848 or 1849 married Sarah Wiltse. Two sons and 3 daughters were born, one son dying in childhood. His wife died in 1868. In 1883 married Emma Hemmingway, who bore him one son and one daughter. Was a member of the old church, baptized in 1844. After the recalled women "fairies," "angels," and "queens," while they now term them "chickens," and "good sports." Girls smoke, drink, and tell questionable stories. The discussion so far as we have noted is about equally balanced. It is evident that there is more freedom of speech and action now than there was in past ages.

organization was ordained a seventy, serving till his release in 1900. Died April 23, 1920, at Lamoni, Iowa, leaving 6 children to mourn, also 16 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren. A double funeral was held for him and his son-in-law, Oscar Thomas, in charge of J. F. Garver and sermon by F. A. Smith.

HUGHES.—Alfred Hughes was born at Laurel, Ontario, August 2, 1879. Baptized in March, 1914 by R. C. Evans. Leaves wife, 3 children, father, 3 brothers: John, Robert, and Joseph of Toronto, 2 sisters, Mrs. Melvin Hanna, and Mrs. Ritchie. Died April 9, 1920. Was a good Saint, kind husband and father. Funeral in charge of A. F. McLean.

THOMAS.—Oscar Irvin Thomas, born at Streetsboro, Ohio, October 26, 1853. Moved to Iowa in October, 1871, and to Lamoni, in 1880; married Emma Bogue in 1881. Three sons were born, all of whom died in childhood. Baptized August 1, 1880. Died April 21, 1920. Leaves to mourn: wife, brother and sister, and other relatives and friends. A double funeral was held for him and his father-in-law, I. A. Bogue, sermon by F. A. Smith, J. F. Garver in charge. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

BAILEY.—Clara Elizabeth Hite was born October 2, 1847, at Patterson, Ohio, where she lived until grown to womanhood. Married Frederick P. Bailey, July 19, 1866. Four children were born, 2 oldest dying in infancy. Baptized in May, 1876, and was a firm believer in the gospel. Died April 26, 1920. Funeral at residence of daughter, Mrs. Striley, near Olathe, Colorado, sermon by M. L. Schmid. Interment in Ash Mesa Cemetery.

RUPE.—John Decakard Rupe was born January 27, 1839, in Gallia County, Ohio. Died at his home in Osawatomie, Kansas, February 24, 1920. Baptized by I. N. White, November 12, 1893. Leaves 4 sons, 2 daughters, 16 grandchildren. Was faithful to the end. Services from the home, in charge of Joseph Arber, assisted by S. F. Shoemaker, interment in Osawatomie Cemetery.

Gifts for Charity

The Literary Digest of April 24 reports on the result of some solicitations for charity. One bazaar in New York took in $72,000 and netted only $645 for the benefit of any charity. Part of the trouble is a lack of proper audit and the easy methods of soliciting. In many cases the expense was found to be 79 to 80 per cent of the gross receipts. This has resulted in an organization to secure more desirable practices in social work and to prevent duplication of work. It requires a complete annual audit, no solicitors on commission basis, no use of the “remit or return” method; in fact it is their intention to secure the discontinuance of street soliciting, the sale of tags or buttons, the raising of funds by collection boxes in stores, and all entertainments for revenue.

The best method of making a donation is not through an entertainment or a bazaar in which the larger part of the receipts must necessarily be taken for expenses. The method provided by the Lord in his church is direct and simple, so that the whole benefit of the receipts goes to the purpose intended.

Would You Grudge the Lord His Share?

THE LORD is the Author and maker of everything we possess; yet of all his bounty, he requires only one-tenth of the increase as his own.

That is a standing rule to all the children of the kingdom; tithing is the first requirement of the financial law and no one is exempt.

And what is done with the Lord's share? The missionary families are kept that our ministers may go forth on the Master's business; the poor and needy are cared for, that none may be hungry or cold; the Church in all its good purposes is maintained that through it Christ may be made manifest and his work be accomplished.

One-tenth of our savings is to be dedicated to this noble cause.

Surely none would grudge the payment of a claim so fair when God is so generous with his blessings.

Home Work

One feature of the last General Conference was not noted in our summary, and is of great importance, and that was the action on the last day transferring the home department and cradle roll from the Sunday school and Religio, to the Women's Department.

In the past, the cradle roll has had as its primary purpose enrolling the little ones as prospective members of the Sunday school, and hence indirectly of the church; to see that they attend Sunday school upon reaching a proper age.

The home department was organized to extend to those unable to attend the Sunday school and the Religio, as much as possible of the work of each. The various Quarterlies were carefully studied, reports and collections made, and whenever possible, the class members were encouraged to attend the regular session of the Sunday school and Religio in branch or district.

On behalf of the Religio, in addition to the study of the Quarterlies, provision was made for the writing of papers, and occasionally a share taken in the district convention.

It can be readily seen a splendid field may be opened, if this work is taken up yet more energetically, the Women's Department being extended to every branch of the church (which of course it is not as yet, though this new movement will evidently act as an entering wedge).

The home visitor will see to the registration of all children, and the attendance of all of suitable age at Sunday school and of young people especially at the Religio, encouraging their attendance at church services, giving advice concerning the care of infants when it can be done acceptably and by a competent person. The visitor may help with home reading and in the securing of texts on home building, and on any other interest which may develop.

We are not informed that they intend to fuse these two departments in this way. But it can readily be seen that a good home visitor cannot possibly know too much. She should be a trained nurse, at least, and a natural teacher, as well as a friend of good intentions.

It may be noted that some of the things indicated above belong to the ordained visiting officers of the branch. It still remains their duty to help with home conditions.

It is very evident that the sisters of the branch can give their valuable help where permitted to do so. They can assist the deacon and bishop in the care of the poor and sick; and this with real economy to the church. They can give personal attention, which is so often needed, and real help in times of trial and of sickness by practical nursing.

It may be replied that women have been doing this for lo, these many years. That is quite true. But through better organization they should be able to do it better.

The sisters may also, where wisdom directs, assist in the visiting of the membership of the church. Probably most of our Sunday-school teachers to-day are women, and probably all cradle roll superintendents and nearly all home class superintendents. We have left this work of teaching very largely to the mothers and to the sisters. And there are other problems of the mother in the home in which a proper visitor can help her. Of course to do so, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred she will have to get entirely away from the ordinary idea of relief and service, that it has come to be and is a matter of quizzing and condescension.

It is evident that if it is going to be well done it is going to take prepared workers, and we are rather looking for the time in the near future when in various parts of the country the visiting officers of the branch, the local priesthood, will be gathered for instruction, and where regular school work will also be provided for our sisters, thus helping to qualify both men and women for this very important work. If the Women's Department can do this one work well, even though they accomplish nothing else, they will have made a splendid record.

Naturally we hope sincerely that the religious education work and literary work will not be diminished in any instance, but to it there will be added work in hygiene, sanitation, maternal care, infant care, dietetics, home furnishing, and the like.

We sincerely hope, also, that the day is near at hand when they can work harmoniously and for the good of the work as a whole with the visiting officers of the branch, each being trained for his own special service, each filled with the love of God and of their fellow man, and the ordained man moving forward according to the direction of the Spirit in his very important responsibility.

It opens a wonderful field for service. It opens before the women of the church a splendid opportunity to make their influence widely felt for good. Nor should it hinder in the least the important work of the priest, in his spiritual work.

May divine wisdom be given them in the direction of their work in small branches wherein dwell the larger share of our membership.

An Open Letter to Farm Boys and Girls

The following letter is sent us by Elder Charles E. Irwin, at the head of the agricultural department of our newly created industrial commission. His address for the present is 310 Agricultural Hall, Ames, Iowa. We hope his request will be heeded. Write to Brother Irwin about what you can do and want to do. Give him a great deal of concise information to work on; though he may get so many letters he cannot answer all of them, you may be sure he will give all of them consideration.

Not long ago we wrote him with some suggestions and found he was ready for them and turned the tables on us by asking for some further suggestions for putting them into operation!

This is not the only department you will be hearing from. From time to time other heads of departments are going to ask your consideration of their problems, and we are confident you will read and consider all that appear.

This is Brother Irwin's letter to farm boys and girls:

"Every normal boy and girl looks forward to a career which will give one an opportunity to give full expression to his or her talents. To work out fully one's own plan; to contribute to society for the betterment of civilization; and to create some positive factor which will represent a life well spent, should be essential features of the universal creed of youth.

"Unfortunately our educational institutions have, in the past, emphasized these features in such a way as to militate against rural life, thus striking a fatal blow at America's basic industry—agriculture. Our boys and girls have been directed toward the city as the only available field of promise for real wide-awake men and women. They have been taught by teachers who for the most part have either been trained in some great urban center or have been reared in a city atmosphere. The arithmetic lessons have been made up of problems of the merchant, the banker or the carpenter instead of problems related to stock raising, dairying or horticulture. We have centered the student's attention upon the great commercial and social activity of the city and at the same time we inquire with brazen innocence why the modern boy and girl refused to stay by the old farm homestead. We have spent our thousands in making sure that the hogs had proper housing facilities, while the home plant was inconvenient, unsanitary and unattractive.

"In the great work of building up an industrial Zion the farmer must be the pioneer; not the kind of a pioneer that endures isolation, hardship and social ostracism, but the pioneer which provides the dynamics necessary to make the wheels of a basic industry turn around. His is the task to produce the fruits, the cereals, the wool and cotton that the whole group may have all that is needful; to manage his stewardship that he may add his increases of five, ten and hundredfold.

"Let not our young people think that all worth-while careers are to be found in the city nor yet that they are all to be found outside of the farm. To assume such an attitude would retard the work of building Zion and entail a loss such as could be reckoned only in terms of human disappointment and despair. Rather let them devote themselves to the working out of the best methods of farm planning, or center their attention upon the adaptability of the central regions to the production of fruits, or give attention to the ruralization of the country school, or study the requisites of an ideal farm home, or seek to become familiar with the various types of soils and problems of fertilization, or train for leadership in the social and recreational activities of our rural communities. These are but a few of the many things in which our young people who have the rural point of view, can put their energy and be reasonably sure of a substantial return.

"If you have vision and determination, let us have your offer of assistance. No matter how young or how old, let us know your special interest in our agricultural problems and in what respect you are qualified to serve. The new day is here and the farmer must be the first to move forward."

The Professional Man

In the Atlantic Monthly for December, 1919, there appeared an excellent article in the form of a letter showing the gross injustice of charity to the man who teaches, or labors in the ministry or other professions. Such men, as with the supposed writer of this article, often possess equal or superior financial ability to most business men, but because of conscience have not entered into that department of work.

The writer states that her husband would have made a good politician, as he had keen practical sense, constructive imagination, intelligence in government, finance, and sociology, with a wide outlook and ability to meet and impress men.

He would have made a highly successful business man. He has been treasurer and chairman of many finance committees, and managed his home with wisdom. But the absurdities, inequalities, and crudities of present business would make it unendurable to him, so he has entered a profession which net him much less indeed than other employment would have done.

Most emphatically we must all agree that every man should be willing to render a dollar's worth of service for every dollar he receives. There is no room in Zion for the idler. The provision is that there be well-directed toil, and a just recompense, protection for old age and sickness. A man should be prepared and should give full value. The motto should be "Maximum service at minimum expense," not a "minimum service at a maximum expense."

But when men do consecrate and deny themselves for the common cause, the value of their service cannot be measured in mere dollars and cents. It far exceeds the value of money. Nor can comparison be made between a professional man, a minister, a teacher, a lawyer, or doctor, who labors for humanity, and the man who labors only for financial reward. The money test of recompense is not a fair one to apply.

Lately the matter has received serious consideration, if the social order should not rather be organized on the basis of the professions, so that business labors under the direction of the professions instead of being at the beck and call of the business man. The reasons set forth in favor of such a change are the high ideals and ethics of the professions.

The ethics of every profession is first and last service to humanity, not simply the gaining of selfish ends, or the laying up of wealth for self. The doctor's primary purpose is to heal the sick and to help people to keep well. The minister's primary aim is the salvation of the souls of men, including in this their conversion to the brotherhood of man, and social justice. The lawyer is the officer of the court, bound by honor to give honest advice and see that the laws are kept, as well as to see that justice is done his client. The teacher forms the future world and molds the mind of the child and youth.

They are all idealists, as are also such men as the architect, with his love of beauty. The architect has to consider the price of buildings, the necessary expense, and also the convenience and adaptability of the building for the purpose for which it is intended, as well as its lines of beauty. Architects are planning model cities, and are seeking to secure better housing and living conditions.

The mere fact that men have entered each of these professions and then have prostituted them for the sake of personal ends, the fact that a few have done so, is no reason for calling in question the excellent service of the many, and the high ethics and principles of these professions.

Service to humanity must be our test. Service to humanity is the ideal set before the professional man.

Centennial Heralds

On April 7 the SAINTS' HERALD published a Centennial Number, in commemoration of the first vision of Joseph Smith, in the spring of 1820. It is our present intention to continue this theme through the year, and at regular intervals issue further special centennial numbers. We already have several articles on hand for the next issue, and will be pleased to hear from our writers on questions which they consider of importance in interest concerning the change in religious belief, in political, and economic conditions, and in any other way in the world, especially in the United States the past one hundred years.

The article by Elder E. E. Long on "Changes in the creeds," which was started in the issue of April 7, has not yet been completed in these columns because of the intervening of General Conference. It is our present purpose and expectation to hold the balance of this article now for our next Centennial Number.

The purpose we have in view by publishing these articles in special numbers is, that these special numbers may be kept, and the information more readily preserved, by those who do not keep all of their HERALDS. Hence the continuation of Brother Long's article in the next centennial number will be quite in order.

"The scratch that hurts most is the scratch for a living."

The Reservation

The theory of the Indian reservation is, that the Indians are a separate nation with whom we make treaties. The reservation is then tribal territory to be respected. We have no right to run post roads or telegraph wires through a reservation without their permission.

As they are citizens of their own nation and tribe, they were not considered citizens of the United States. They constituted separate states, capable of managing their own affairs.

In time, however, the relative weakness of the scattered reservations and the advantage taken of the Indians, caused the development of the Indian Bureau, in an effort to secure more nearly justice to them. There have been difficulties and abuses, but at best an effort has been made towards justice.

Now we find a large part of the Indians educated at white schools, some of them marrying white girls, owning their own property, and enjoying the rights of citizenship, and there is a growing desire that the remaining Indians be set free from reservations, and as individuals take their place as do other races, as part of the citizenship of the country. That they shall own their own property, administer it as do others, and take their place, not as tribes or tribal units, not as a nation within a nation, but as individuals of the one great state.

The public mind is doubtless now much more ready for such a development than it was fifty years ago.

In the great war, Indians were enlisted and enrolled as white men. No separate Indian regiments were formed or desired. They took their place as individuals and did their full share in defending the ideals of the country, on the battlefield, in camp, and in the liberty loans and Red Cross subscriptions.

There might have been a spectacular aspect in an Indian regiment in full regalia. But they would not have been nearly so effective for service, nor would they thus have represented their own best interests as seen by leading Indians of to-day.

Not a nation in a nation, not wards of a people, but independent men and women taking their rightful place as part of the great commonwealth, is the present ideal of both the Indian and his Anglo-Saxon brother. S. A. B.

Vacant Tenements

The Christian Science Monitor of April 30, discusses the economic conditions of to-day. It calls attention to the frequent protest during the past decade that the American standard of living must be maintained. During the war and since the war, certain lines of work have been much more highly paid not only absolutely, but relatively, than was the case before the war; that is, relative to the cost of living. Some have gone down considerably, and hence have had to lower their standard of living.

The cost of building has gone up tremendously, and there is a shortage of flats, departments, and houses for rent. But despite this furious shortage of places in which to dwell, there are over 800 tenements vacant in Boston, and many more in New York City. It seems that the American people are no longer willing to live in smaller tenements and dilapidated dwellings, of which there were many thousand put up before the war. And by this indirect action are accomplishing a destruction of the slums, or at least a large part of them.

In the old days before the war these tenements had tenants, "why should they remain vacant in the far more intense and widespread demand of to-day?"

The Christian Science Monitor suggests the reason is that people will live in dilapidated houses while intoxicating liquor is a daily factor, but once they are living sober lives, they see what the squalor really is, and revolt.

It means that all of this will abolish the slums of America. It says it is decreasing the population of the jails, the poor houses, hospitals, sanitariums, and asylums, so will it decrease greatly the number of slum dwellers.

That people will not live in these houses to-day, the inference is fair that they never will live in them again.

The next important development is the increase in the number of single family houses, and two family houses; the decrease in the number of three-story houses, or three-deckers, and apartment blocks in course of construction, for experience is teaching the American workers that there is a certain security in possessing one's own home. This means a moving away from the urban section, which were once in demand. Public transportation makes possible living in the outlying portions of the suburbs where the price of land is lower.

Attention should, however, be called also to the article in this issue by our church architect on model towns. It is evident that the movement to-day is gradually turning in that direction, and will in the end tend to stop emigration to the large cities, if it does not cause a flow in the opposite direction of population, to the smaller industrial cities where there are ample agricultural lands in the immediate vicinity and as part of the plan.

The Pilgrim Fathers

This year is the third centennial since the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth, Massachusetts, in October, 1620.

This event is to be celebrated in Holland, August 29 to September 4, and also doubtless in the United States. This settlement of New England is one of the great fundamental dates of American history, even though the settlement at Jamestown had preceded it by some thirteen years. The rock-ribbed New England coast, and those who have settled there, have played a tremendous part in the settlement and development of America, in science, in politics, and in religion.

International Education

The outbreak of the recent war shows that most Americans were not informed concerning the problems involved, and the conditions in other parts of the world. It has shown also, that even the nations of Europe were not informed concerning this country. It has also shown the interdependence of all civilized nations, in fact, of the whole world.

Because of this lack of information steps were taken as early as 1917 to provide for an institute of international education. Because of the interest of the United States in the war, it was postponed until February 1, 1919. Its purpose is to develop international good will by means of educational agencies; to act immediately as a clearing house of information for Americans, of things educational in foreign countries, and for foreigners concerning things educational in the United States.

The first annual report of the director, Doctor Stephen P. Dugan, has just reached us to-day.

One aspect of the work is an interchange of professors; also the arrangement to receive foreign young men and women as students in American institutions, and to send American students to foreign institutions.

The person who considers everything will never decide on anything.—Italian.

Rent, Interest, and Profit

We note the Atlantic Monthly for January, 1920, states that two per cent of the people of the United States own sixty per cent of the wealth. We note this same statement was made on behalf of the Student Socialist Society in 1914.

Again by the latter it is shown that the bulk of the income does not go to the same people who have the wealth. It further affirms that less than one per cent live in idleness.

Excessive profits are to be condemned, but does that mean that when a man has saved, bought a farm, and in his old age is not able to farm it, so that he moves to town and rents the farm, he should receive no rent?

Does it mean that if you have saved up your money and place it in the bank, you should receive no interest? Does it mean that if you loan it to others that you should receive no support from it?

Does it mean in the case of your death, leaving a widow and small children, that you cannot turn over your factory to them, so that they receive a reasonable recompense?

Is it true that they are to be called idlers, receiving the bread and garments of the laborer? Yet they are not then helping present production. But they certainly are preparing for future production.

A mother can do no better service for the church or society at large, even from the viewpoint of material production, than stay at home and care for her children. And the children can do no better work than to get ready, by school work, for future service. It has been found by practical tests that no nursery, no matter how good, can care for babies as well as a mother can. There is no known substitute for a mother's love and care.

The church provides for that, and that the mother and children should be cared for by the late husband and father, if he has left means sufficient for their care; but if not, they shall be cared for by the church.

That implies strongly rent and interest, the income from that which is left by the husband and father. Rent, interest, and profit, within the right limits do not burden or limit the share that goes to labor. They are after all the contribution of management to the common good. That is, they are such under the plan laid down in the law of God.

Love Thy Neighbor

The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ provides for the life to come. Right living brings in its train blessings and fulfillment in a continuation of our life. It teaches also Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and teaches us what man has been able to comprehend of the nature of God.

Unfortunately the church in ages past has placed its principal, if not its whole stress on theology and eschatology; on "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," and upon the hope of the life to come.

But there is a second commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Under this, in the church in the days of the Master, and under the apostles, they had all things common; neither did anyone consider aught that he had his own. Under it, in the days of Enoch, they also worked in cooperation and mutual helpfulness, and brought to pass heaven on this earth, so that the city of Zion was taken to God.

Also when the gospel was restored in these latter days, we find early stress placed upon the social and economic law—on justice between man and man. The threat is even of hell fire for those who do not obey, though it is well recognized that that which is done in fear is not founded in sound morals; nor is that founded in sound morals which is looking only for a reward. Only that is of firm foundation which is founded in the love of God and our fellow men, and in the love of truth and righteousness.

It is a vital part of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye have love one to another." (John 13:35.)

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."—1 John 4:20-21.

If we love our brother, we will strive to help him. If we love our brother as ourself we shall give him the same treatment we would give ourselves, and share with him in clothing and food. Though this does not mean supporting an able-bodied man in idleness.

The economic law is founded on the plan of Jesus. With love one for another the details of stewardship, of inheritance, the storehouse, of tithing, consecration, and of Zion—the pure in heart—can readily be worked out.

Without love one for another, where instead we find jealousy, strife and bickering, no formal action of General Conference, no commandment of God, no effort on a part of a few can accomplish that which is designed we should accomplish under the law of Christ. Confidence in one another, loyalty to one another, and love for one another is essential.

Foreigners in America

The Literary Digest reports, quoting the Saint Louis Globe-Democrat, that 6,000 aliens of southern Europe are leaving the United States each week. They are returning home on account of their wine supply being cut off, because they have amassed in American money what would constitute a fortune in their home country at the present rate of exchange, and because they desire to know what has become of their relatives and their home country. As a result it is stated that prices will continue high because of the shortage of labor, amounting at present to nearly four million. They are one and a quarter million now in this country of men whose families still reside in Europe, and there are eleven million foreigners who have not yet learned to speak English.

Schools for Rural Pastors

At Lamoni and some other of our large branches some very successful schools have been carried on for the benefit of our church members. At other points some of our Sunday school teachers have joined an interdenominational training class and have secured a great deal of the same work in this way.

It is worth our while in any event to secure the viewpoint of other people. It is in this connection that we are pleased to receive from Elder Hale W. Smith an announcement of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from the Brooklyn Daily Eagle of March 15, with the announcement of various schools for rural pastors.

For the past eight years lectures have been given at General Conference to the priesthood, and especially the Melchisedec priesthood. At the late General Conference the ministry were called together two weeks in advance and the lectures given at Graceland College to the class in religious education were repeated.

This furnishes an opportunity for us to extend the field of our information, and advantage of it should be taken by as many as can reasonably do so. The announcement lists classes at fifteen Methodist institutions in as many places, on dates from May 10 to October 9.

A Plea for Higher Ideals in Our Future Building

BY HENRY C. SMITH

A paper read to the priesthood at the recent General Conference, by the Church Architect.

Although it is necessary to apply the word future to our undertakings yet the importance of works of art in all things round about us is as old as creation itself. In the first few words of Genesis the record shows that the Lord regarded his creation a divine work of art, for he applied the artist's test at the end of each day. The seventh time it is repeated; "God saw all that he made and behold it was good." We cannot disassociate the idea of good from that of the beautiful and uplifting. Neither can the beautiful and the good exist merely as an end in itself without connection with our religious, political, social, and industrial life. In history past the whole Greek epoch was characterized as preeminently that of beauty in all these phases of daily life. The Greeks have been unexcelled in glorifying their many gods in monumental places of worship. We marvel to-day that with a religion so superior to that of pagan worship we should seem contented with so much less expression to our one God.

"Behold, It Will Do

When we travel over the country and visit our churches, can we say to ourselves as did the creator at the dawn of history, "Behold it is good"? We are more apt to paraphrase the statement by reading into the intentions of the builders, "Behold it will do." And why is this? We may not be "of the world" but we are "in the world" and cannot help being influenced by the tendency of the age—that of industrialism and materialism. One writer says with despair, "The great production machine now has us in its clutches. Its appetite is insatiable. It can never be satisfied. Its clamor for quantity alone is the world's greatest illusion." Preston Bradley, in analyzing present conditions in the world, especially with reference to the effects of the war says, "Civilization as been put back five hundred years in development. There never was a time when music, art, and culture are so much needed in the world as they are to-day."

And that is why I am asked to discuss this subject with you at present. Because, if our constructional efforts in the future are to be superior to those of the past and a credit to our cause, we must unitedly strive to that end. We must combat the forces of the great production machine which is sapping so much out of almost every life. No time nor interest is left for an appreciation and enjoyment of the higher and nobler things. The wild rush for material gain and the selfish interest of the business world are the controlling powers, which, if need be are executed at the expense of life itself. On the extreme side we have only to call attention to the drudgery, the monotony, and the barrenness of the millions of lives in factory work.

We Must All Work Unitedly

As I have said we cannot do things unless we all work unitedly. To improve our homes, our places of business, and our churches cannot be done by one man alone at the head of our church who sees the crying need for such, nor by the one who has general charge of this work. If we could do so it would be an exception to all successful movements in the past. The people have to be prepared first. The revival of the Roman architecture, for instance, was a practicable proposition because there was brought into existence a public favorable to such revival. The same is true of the Gothic which was so closely connected with the religious movement of its day, Take for instance the magnificent Gothic cathedral at Cologne, Germany. Was it the kings and princes of that land who built it? No, it was built with the money from the toil of the plain German people who chatted in the market place. The fact that they were six hundred years in finishing it shows their untiring effort in aspiring towards what is above everyday levels.

And just to mention the cathedral at Amiens, France. It is described as "a structure of material, of glass and stone, so noble, so uplifting, so delicately mighty that nothing the human mind has ever conceived in architecture compares with it for grandeur and sublimity." And who built it? The citizens themselves shouldered the burden of money and labor in the sixty-eight years required for the main part of the construction; and so well was the work done that not even the German shells that fell upon it in 1918 were able to effect more than superficial damage to those soaring vaults which have stood immovable for six hundred and thirty years. Surely the sacrifice and devotion of those simple folk in achieving what they did centuries ago is an inspiration to us to pay the greatest possible tribute to our Creator, too.

If our churches to-day were such as these we have described, whose profound sublimity and grandeur fill us with awe and solemn reverence, as if we were truly in the presence of the creative Power who inspired such noble structures, we should not have the irreverence, noise, and confusion of which we are accused in our places of worship. Our young people especially need the opportunity to feel an ennobling influences commanding silence and reverence in our churches of the future.

The Influence of the Priesthood

That is our appeal to you of the priesthood, because you are the leaders all over the world to train and inspire higher ideals in the minds of the people—that they exert every physical effort and feel no sacrifice too great in order that the Lord might be glorified. Those who have heard Brother Augustine Dwyer in his lectures remember how often in commenting upon church building he made the appeal that love for the Master should know no extravagance, love should know no sacrifice, that we must not live in better houses than we give him in worship, that we should make our churches as beautiful as possible, even though we may not be able to build an Amiens of Cologne Cathedral. One of our great thinkers of the past, Horace Mann, expressed this same thought of sparing nothing, in these memorable words about the Cologne Cathedral: "If one single soul is brought in closer relation with the great God it pays to expend all energy and money." We all know the admiration that our very first edifice, Kirtland Temple, demands. We know the sacrifice and hard work it required in building, yet to-day it stands as a sacred memorial to those pioneer builders and the work of God in that early day. And if they could sacrifice and toil for the sake of magnifying the name of the Lord we can to-day with all the modern improvements to make construction work easier.

What Other Churches Are Doing

Our church is not the only one to-day which is trying to improve the building standards; the Lutheran, Episcopal and others have their bureaus of architecture. I have just recently received a very unique monograph on church building from the Methodist Episcopal Bureau of Architecture in Chicago. In speaking of the building requirements for the church to-day, Mr. Lowe makes the same appeal for sacrifice and toil that we have just made. He states:

"In the building of a church the most important consideration contributing more than anything else to success, is the right spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice. If we to-day are to have buildings as beautiful and as well built as those of our forefathers in ages past, we must have faith as they did and must be willing to exert our every effort to express that faith in the structures which we rear."

Again:

"Our forefathers lavished their scanty wealth and toiled with devout hands in gratitude and praise and thanksgiving; and nothing was too precious, indeed all things failed in measure to show the deep devotion of faithful men, and their solemn knowledge of the majesty of that Presence which should enter and dwell there.

"If, in the period which is now coming to a close, the designers and builders of our churches might have realized the importance of making the buildings expressive of this purpose, we should not have in every community the cheap, tawdry and ugly structures in which to worship. Their ill-proportioned mass, their pompous display of ornament, and their unfitness in every respect repels rather than invites one to worship."

Following Existing Styles

Mr. Lowe then goes on to point out what style or period of architecture would be most suitable for their line of building. Right here it might be well to comment upon a distinctive architecture most suited to our building. There are those who have been overzealous to think that the Lord will direct us in a most miraculous way to produce something not known before. We do not discredit the Lord's directing powers, but we maintain that we do expect direction in a natural way—along the lines of our existing architecture, from which we may adapt motives most appropriate to our construction. This we can say of the divine inspiration that is accredited to Kirtland Temple. The Lord was directing a people who carried into their new habitat the tastes and practices of a long-established colonial life of the east. They had brought with them the traditions of their forefathers who were devout worshipers and very early erected a number of architecturally excellent buildings, which served as precedents for virtually all of the later country buildings. There are no outstanding features in Kirtland Temple which would indicate that the builders endeavored to develop any original style bearing no traces of inherited tradition—which would have been a feat unprecedented in the history of architecture. Two thousand years of classic architecture development would have had to be forgotten. The Classic has something so inherently appropriate to the decoration and construction of buildings of all kinds that architects have been compelled to make it the dominant factor in their designs.

As I have stated in my report to General Conference:

"We look forward to the time when we can have uniformity in an ideal architecture, but due to the financial limitations of our building funds as well as our ideas and requirements varying from east to west, north to south, we shall find it a matter of time and education before satisfactory results are noticeable. Owing to these varying conditions and our cosmopolitan make-up nothing can be found more suitable for us than an adaptation of forms and motives universally recognized as useful, beautiful, and true. The Colonial-Georgian period type furnishes the flexibility necessary for our purposes and should be doubly appreciated by us for being developed by a people foremost in their time in a struggle for religious freedom. This type is represented by the first permanent edifice built by our church—Kirtland Temple—which offers the best suggestions for us to follow."

Elimination of the Basement

Here, too, is another point in which we agree with Mr. Lowe:

"The tendency too prevalent in the last decade of using the basement under the church for Sunday school purposes is discouraged by all church leaders. There are many advantages in eliminating the basement altogether except where needed for heating purposes. Usually it is difficult properly to light and ventilate the rooms so placed without raising the floor of the church auditorium high above the ground. For practical and architectural reasons the long flight of steps thus made necessary should be avoided. Furthermore, a basement room is an inferior place and any department of the Sunday school assigned to it must feel the disadvantage. The building laws of at least one State set forth that 'no room wholly or partially below the grade shall be used for worship or religious instruction.'"

Mr. Lowe also discourages the basement for social purposes.

"Practically every building constructed in recent years contains one room which may be used for social affairs, dinners, lectures, etc. Too often this room has been in the basement under the church auditorium, where it is not well lighted nor ventilated and where the ceiling is low and there are many posts or other obstructions."

Some of these points may seem foreign to the work of those who are ministers of the gospel. But there is a decided interrelation of the profession which provides the places of worship and that which later supplies the worship in them. Much is being written and agitated to-day about the inter-professional idea—that our professions so touch one another at every angle it is virtually impossible to be the so-called specialist, absolutely ignorant and careless of all that is going on around us. A general knowledge and appreciation of other fields is necessary to magnify our own.

Professional Culture

Your profession is a minister, mine an architect; others are doctors, lawyers, etc. By the term profession we imply all those callings which have as their distinctive feature service to others. For this reason the professional idea has been held to be a finer basis for a vocation than the business objective where a man uses his talents for the reaping of profits.

Another distinctive requisite of a professional man stated in the words of a certain authority—"that it is commonly regarded as necessary for a professional man to have more or less general culture. A man can build a railroad without culture, in the sense of a financier, he can finance a railroad, or he can operate a railroad without culture; a man can establish a great bank or a great financial system without culture. But it is a very difficult thing for a man to be a real lawyer, a real physician, or a real minister of religion without general culture, either acquired in his youth or acquired in his maturity, alone, and under greater obstacles." (By "general culture" is meant such a training as will so develop the life that is unique within us, that we may liberate our full contribution to the use and service of mankind.)

Hence, no matter how, nor where, whether studying by yourself or taking some course, we make the earnest plea that you realize the importance of this architectural work as a field most intimately allied with your church work, as a part of your general culture training. Grasp every opportunity to acquaint yourself with good design, simple yet dignified—that not only the interior but the exterior of our places of worship will be as beautiful and well kept as they can be. Make the lawns attractive, read and study some of the interesting things on landscape gardening. Sometimes the need of paint and run down condition in general of some of our churches do not make them seem a fit dwelling for ordinary mortals much less for the Savior himself.

This is all constructive criticism, and with your help we are going to develop higher standards. But you cannot do your part alone. You must have the cooperation of the people, they must be educated to appreciate all things. First get them to realize that they do not, and if they are sincere they will strive to learn.

Community Development

In very close connection with your interest in our church buildings should be the study of community development which might give us suggestions for our Zion. The most profitable study would be the Garden City movement in Europe, particularly that of Letchworth, England. For those who are not acquainted with the movement it may be interesting just to know what really ideal conditions have been attained in community building. And we should ask ourselves the questions, "Are we as yet able to improve upon them? And does it not mean a very profound comprehension of the economic, social and industrial problems as well as the spiritual to construct such a community?" When we stop to think of the stupendous task we realize not one moment nor a single opportunity should go to waste.

A Garden City

What is Letchworth? Letchworth is a Garden City. The Garden City movement was the outcome of study by a man of the people—Ebenezer Howard. The problem which Mr. Howard set himself out to solve was to show that by starting entirely new towns in rural districts, free from the vicious inheritance of generations of town life and slum degeneracy, an opportunity would be given for a fuller, freer life, and that the mental, moral, and intellectual development would follow as surely as the physical.

Some of the essentials of a Garden City are:

1. Before a sod is cut or a brick laid, the town must in its main outlines at least take form upon paper. By so doing traffic difficulties would be avoided in the future. Schemes of lighting, drainage and water supply would be planned out from the beginning. Also natural beauties must be preserved, the utmost degree of healthfulness must be secured and proper regard be had for communication with the surrounding district.

2. In the town area the number of houses to each acre should be strictly limited—not to the exorbitant amount of fifty-six or even sixty allowed in some of the municipal by-laws to-day, giving a population, even in cottage property, of some three hundred people, while in tenement districts the number is still higher—but to twelve houses to the net acre, and this with the provision of ample open spaces, parks and recreation grounds and a suitable garden for every dwelling. This means an average of five people to a house, and no greater population than thirty people to the acre.

3. The town area must forever be surrounded by a belt of agricultural and park land, so that while in the center the urban problem is being dealt with, the rural portion, which should be the larger part of the estate, may be available for farms and small holdings, in order that the small holder and market gardener may have a new market direct to hand for the sale of produce.

4. In order to overcome the undesirable features of cities which are too large the Garden City's growth must be limited to a population of twenty-five to thirty thousand in order that the great mass of dwellers may not be shut away from fresh air and sunlight and that the countryside may not be in danger.

5. The town must not be merely residential, but also commercial and industrial, thus keeping the worker and his work away from the crowded centers in the fresh air and country district, where not only the land should be cheaply obtainable for the employer, but also the worker should have a comfortable cottage at a convenient distance from his labor.

6. The return on the capital should be limited to, say, five per cent; any profit above that amount being applied to the estate itself for the benefit of the community.

Where Agriculture and Industry Balance

In the Journal of the American Institute of Architects the following comment is made on Letchworth:

"Letchworth is the most important experiment ever made in the science of community building. Its founder sought to find the law which governs wise community growth. Letchworth is founded on the principle that agriculture and industry should balance each other in the community. That we should not herd industry together in one Great Industrial Machine, and then leave agriculture to the isolated countryside where there would be no communal life. Letchworth embodies the principle of giving workmen a contact with the land and of giving farmers a contact with the community. That, in brief, is the Letchworth idea, and I believe that it embodies the law by which alone communities can grow wisely. Under that law they cannot grow large, but we do not want large communities. Every large community that man has built has perished and every one will perish, because, they utterly deny the social life of mankind.

"Look at the question from the economic standpoint. No business man tries to see how he can increase his transportation charges. On the contrary, he tries to see how he can reduce them. Yet, in the United States, it is a common belief that the more money we spend for transportation the richer we are becoming. But the truth is quite the contrary. Frankly speaking, it might be said that all transportation is waste. Potatoes are no better for having been carried across the continent and cotton cloth is in no way improved by a three-thousand-mile journey. Exigencies of climate and soil compel a certain amount of transportation, but, in a nation which kept a proper set of books from which a proper trial balance could be drawn, I am sure that its financial advisers would study how to decrease the amount of transportation, not how to increase it.

"Letchworth is based on the principle that the less transportation of goods the better. Every man who lives in Letchworth may have a garden if he wishes, while working in any of the forty industries that are there now established, and a part of Letchworth is set apart for farming of all kinds. Thus the food question in a very large measure does not involve a huge waste in transportation. Correspondingly, it permits those who farm to have access to a community which has already attained a population of over 12,000. Add to that the fact that Letchworth is built on the self-owning principle, with private ownership of land prohibited, and you have the whole principle of the Letchworth. I predict that there will be thousands of Letchworths in the United States before this century comes to an end. We have had them here, in embryo, in the early days of American industry in New England. I know one that still exists. We shall return to them, some day, for that I believe is the right law of communal growth."

Does not this sound more like Zion than anything you have heard of? Can we afford to neglect to study what is in the world?

Building the Home

Our third consideration for higher standards in building is the home, which is the foundation of all our Zion. We trust that as a people we shall soon no longer lack an appreciation and understanding of architecture to the extent that our houses will be so improperly built as they are to-day. Listen to this criticism on the tragedy of the houses; it has just been sent to me:

"In the United States we once built good houses. They were honest, sound, and very often beautiful. But as the country began to grow, a curious thing happened in our democracy. The more houses we built, the more houses continued to cost. As a natural sequence we sought to cheapen cost by cheapening quality, then by reducing the size, then by reducing the number of rooms. We bent our entire energy toward trying to defeat something that only mocked all our effort.

"Thus we began to give up the house. We adopted the flat and the apartment. But the same story repeated itself. The more we built, the more they cost. So we tried to reduce cost by reducing quality. Then we reduced the size of the rooms. Then we reduced the numbers of rooms. Then we began all over again and reduced everything all round.

"Our entire energy went into the same frantic effort to defeat something that only mocked at all our effort. We contrived and invented. We proposed all sorts of remedies. We forgot all about life, and human beings, and homes, and happy children, and fathers and mothers, and citizenship, and talked houses, and 'housing,' and 'housing reform.' We held conferences and formed societies and we propaganded and contrived and invented and talked.

"And all the time houses kept costing more and more. Rents grew steadily higher and higher. Finally there came a time when investors grew frightened. The risk became greater than the traffic would bear, they thought. Then came a housing crisis in the shape of not enough houses. The old crisis, that we have always had with us, related to abominable houses, filthy houses, uninhabitable houses, breeders of indecency, immorality, crime, drunkenness, degenerate children, and disease. They filled our asylums and jails. But we could not build them fast enough. And then came the new crisis.

"On and on went the process. It is still going on, at a greatly diminished rate, because private money will no longer flow into house-building operations and public money is not available for more jails and asylums.

"Do you think it is a tragedy? And do you think that anything ought to be done about it? And if you think so, where shall we begin?

"The question is before us, and it is not too much to say that the fate of the United States as a democracy and as a nation is dependent upon our ability to find the answer."

This shows the conditions we are confronting in our building of Zion. Our standard will have to be raised. Houses as unfit as these just described can be found on all sides, inhabited by some of our church people, too. I refer in particular to the poor ventilation, lack of sunlight and unsanitary conditions due to a lack of understanding of some of the fundamental building principles on the part of the builder. Think of how essential it is before we presume to know how to build houses to have some knowledge of the laws of health and hygiene—not build bedrooms, for instance, where never a ray of sunlight enters.

We Must Appreciate Our Problem

The need for urging public appreciation and understanding of better building and community development is not only felt by us but by the foremost thinkers and leaders of the day. Universities and colleges are beginning to realize the mistakes they have made in the past by not requiring a greater knowledge of the fine arts on the part of the students so that on building committees, town-planning commissions, etc., all over the country there would have been those with such uplifting, broadening and refining influence upon the people, that our Nation to-day would be on a much higher plane, for it is generally conceded that architecture is an index of the civilization of an age, a race, or a people.

The university presidents and professors suggest various ways for increasing appreciation of art in this country: having a professor of architecture lecture before the entire student body; having real architecture for the backgrounds and surroundings in the moving pictures; having instruction in drawing and the simplest method of design required in all public schools. Here they feel is the keynote to the solution of the whole problem—to start with little children who with fresh, eager and unprejudiced minds may be trained instinctively to see and enjoy the beautiful in everything. Then this training can easily be continued in higher education. In the coming generation we shall have cultivated the power of seeing things; bad architecture will then look ugly and offend and will no longer exist. Richard C. Cabot in his very fine book What Men Live By, which none of us should fail to read sometime, says: "We know that very few of the children who learn writing in our schools will ever reach any greater literary distinction than the composition of a good letter. But we do not, therefore, give up teaching them to write. Neither should we fail to teach children painting, design, and drawing merely because we know that only a few will ever get beyond the pleasures and appreciations of the amateur."

What an influence you of the priesthood, coming in contact with the public and so many homes can exercise in promoting these various schemes to bring people unconsciously to higher standards in all their buildings and surroundings of their daily lives. Traveling about as you do, many of you have rare opportunities to develop yourselves for this work. You have access to the museums, conventions of various kinds, public lectures, etc. Especially work with the young people, encourage them to develop their minds along these lines, showing them the great part they have to play in our future Zion. And when we have a body of people so developed that we shall be able to build a place so beautiful, so lovely, and so perfect that we can truly say, "Behold it is good," then we shall be ready for the Savior to come and dwell in our midst.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths—No. 3

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

Classification of races by colors and other arbitrary distinctions is often illogical.

Ethnology

The variety of bases upon which racial divisions have been made, include the following, which are of most importance: First, color was believed to be the distinctive feature, and divisions were accordingly made; but it soon became apparent that all could not agree as to the colors that should be chosen. Some thought there could be recognized only two, the black and the white races, while others included a third, the yellow race. As has been noticed the general opinion seemed to finally be that two more should be included, although several men of equal learning, apparently, added to this number somewhat extensively.

It was next believed that the shape of the head should be the deciding factor, but this resulted in a difficulty somewhat parallel to the one just mentioned, as it was uncertain what the distinctive shapes were in some respects. A medium between the two was then suggested, but later it was thought by some investigators that the hair was of more importance than any other one feature. More recently the psychologic differences began to be recognized as of great importance, and this opinion appears to be gaining recognition. Professor Butler, who is an anthropologist of some note, considers language to be "the chief of the psychical elements," and remarks that, "Some perhaps, with Horatio Hale, would make it the sole test of race." Five races are given by Professor Butler, arranged geographically, and named European, African, Asiatic, American, and Oceanic. He appears to consider the problem of the American race more perplexing than any other, admitting that, "The status of the American aborigines is left unsettled."

The significance of language will be considered under another division of our subject, and brief mention will be made of the other characteristics just noted as forming bases of racial divisions.

Three difficulties present themselves when an attempt is made to designate Americans as a color race, first of which is the fact that there is great diversity among them in this respect, as previously mentioned; their lack of uniformity of color making it impossible to include them as one race by this plan, with any degree of satisfaction. Secondly, the color of many of those included in other races is practically identical with certain of the American race, making identification by this means impossible. The third difficulty is that there is such diversity of color among other races, as well as Americans, that it serves to confuse rather than to assist the ethnologist in the attempt to trace some of the races toward primitive sources; the various shades overlapping in some cases where it is believed that no racial connection has existed.

In regard to the color theory, it is now claimed by physiologists that color is mainly, if not essentially, a matter of climate, diet, and mode of living, resulting in hereditary tendency with the passing of time. To this may be added the result of intermarriage by which is produced a variety of shades, more or less tending to a final permanency, especially if there are other contributing causes. It is difficult to predetermine the effects of intermarriage upon resulting progeny, except that it seems to be the rule that distinctive characteristics of the stronger type will prevail, and this is probably true as to color as well as in other respects. In America, for instance, all shades of dark yellow and of light colored types appear to be largely intermingled in some localities, such being the case in Bolivia. There is no absolute certainty as to what variations in color may have existed among prehistoric nations, but there is substantial evidence that it existed to a considerable extent. It is probably futile, therefore, to attempt to trace the nations to any source in this way.

The skull shapes indicate quite forcibly the differences existing between human and other species of animal life, but inasmuch as a unit of human species is recognized, it will be perceived that racial differences naturally might not be accurately traced by this means, aside from the reason already mentioned. It may be noticed that offspring impregnated with characteristics does not always transmit them very discernibly, and other causes intervening may change them as certainly as in the first instance. The isolation of a type for an indefinite time would result in it becoming more fixed and as general as the extent of its isolation, but the time required to accomplish the greater distinctions found in existing races no credible scholar presumes to state. There is much difference of opinion on the subject. Professor Butler expresses the trend of opinion that seems to be generally held, stating that, "Craniology alone cannot be depended upon to supply sufficient or trustworthy material for the proper classification of mankind."—Americana.

The variations of color and texture of the hair of American races have considerably modified the significance that otherwise might be supposed to attach to this feature. It is now thought to be one of the most unvarying of the physical features, but even if this be so, hereditary tendencies are such that it cannot be certainly relied upon in classifying races of to-day. Suppose, for instance, that a moderate number of persons, possessing what may be considered several racial distinctions, should be placed in some part of the world where no communication is possible with any other people for a period of one or two thousand years; on one could tell us what racial distinctions might be developed during such period under the conditions stated, among them as to the hair and other physical features; but it is probable that distinctive racial features might be developed during such period under the conditions stated. Professor C. R. Enoch remarks that, "Most writers agree that the natives of North and South America are substantially the same in race characteristics."—The Secret of the Pacific. This much can probably be said of all nations to the extent that their intercourse has been limited to themselves for many centuries.

In other words, while it appears to be convenient to group the races by color, hair, skull shapes and various other distinctions, none of them are entirely reliable for the purpose of tracing race origins or race producing causes; and the statement that existing races have remained unchanged for many thousands of years is hardly susceptible of proof when there are such conflicting opinions as to which are the distinctive races. If we cannot agree upon the classification of present-day races, it is difficult to understand how one can be relied upon to properly classify nations which have been extinct for thousands of years, by employing similar bases of racial distinctions.

In order to determine the time required to develop race characteristics we must have a demonstration, the essential particulars of which cannot be questioned. None of those thus far considered have been proven to require the long period of time assumed by some to be necessary for this purpose. Of the more important methods there is yet to be considered the psychologic. Reflection will indicate that this is largely dependent upon education conditions as affected by environment. Max Muller says: "A whole family, tribe, or race of men may in a very short time rise to the highest pitch of virtue and culture, and in the next generation sink to the lowest level of vice and brutality." This appears to have been the case with the American Indian, according to the Book of Mormon. It also accords with developments in individual instances, as in cases where one chooses an immoral course of life; the result is visible not only in the person but in the offspring, sometimes for several generations, and if there are no restraining influences the result may eventuate in a race type, so-called. The variations existing in this respect are as clearly to be traced to the causes mentioned, in the case of nations as they are in that of individuals, allowing for such intervening influences as may have been more or less effective in the instances considered.

From an examination of the chief points recognized we are assured that during the time of occupancy of the aboriginal inhabitants, even if common chronology be accepted, America had ample time to develop from the ancestry named in the Book of Mormon racial distinctions such as are shown to have existed here.

"It is probable that Zion City, Illinois, will not long enjoy the unique distinction of being the only No-Tobacco city in this country.

"Our Professor Lough reports a No-Tobacco victory in the city election of LaVerne, California, and no doubt in a short time the sale of any and all kinds of tobacco will be prohibited in that city.

"It is a school town and a fitting place to enact such a law. We hope to report in the near future that LaVerne is our first No-Tobacco city."—No-Tobacco Journal.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE AMERICAN INDIAN IS A THRIVING RACE

Their number in the United States increased from 230,000 in 1890 to 307,000 in 1919.

Indian mythology has it that some day the buffalo will return to the great plains and that the Indian will return with him.

The myth is in a way to be fulfilled. The buffalo is coming back in numbers, at least, whatever his environment, and the Indians probably are more numerous now than they were fifty years ago. The vanishing race has ceased definitely to vanish. It is a little mixed, to be sure, and part of it is more white than Indian, but the Indians as a racial class are increasing.

Vanquished race though they are they owe their regeneration to their conquerors. The contact of the two races, if left uncontrolled, would have resulted in the annihilation of the red men even after the tomahawk was buried and the rifle rang no more in border warfare. For several decades this harsh contact of the higher with the lower race tended mercilessly to the destruction of the Indians, but, thanks to the efforts of the later years to reinvigorate the race and educate its members to meet the conditions of what must be their life in a white man's country, they are gaining in numbers and growing in ability to cope with the changed environment.

"It's a great privilege to be instrumental in saving and restoring a race," said Cato Sells, the United States Indian Commissioner, when I called on him the other day to get some facts about the Indian of 1919. "Under our control or having some relation to our work," continued Mr. Sells, "there are now in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, 307,000 Indians, as against 230,000 in 1890."

A Doomed Tribe

"I estimate that altogether there are fully 350,000 Indians in the United States. Thousands have slipped away from all tribal and governmental relations and are living among the white population and making their way in life just as other people do. The normal birth rate exceeds the death rate by about six to the thousand, and the former tends to increase and the latter to decrease as the Indians attain economic stability.

"What has been done since I have been in office with a single tribe, the Jicarilla Apaches, illustrates how much vitality there is in the race and how quickly they 'come back' under suitable conditions. The Jicarillas have a reservation in southwestern Colorado and northern New Mexico. Disease had so undermined the tribal physique, their numbers were so reduced and their economic condition was so low that, tribally and individually, these people had lost all ambition, all interest in life and the will to live. They were simply waiting for death—a doomed and hopeless tribe.

"I have just returned from a visit to the Jicarillas, taken for the purpose of superintending the division of the tribal flock of sheep among the competent members of the tribe. During that visit I had a conference with several hundred men of the tribe that lasted for hours, there being no other white man present. They were full of the zest of life, keenly interested in their flocks and herds, absorbed in playing the game of the new surroundings and as delighted as a college crowd over a football victory because a shipment of 500 lambs to the Denver market had topped all records for the year by 25 cents a hundred."

Back to Life

"The dying Jicarillas had come back to life so gamely that they were able to beat the white man at his own game of sheep raising. Primarily, this people was saved by giving it a purpose and goal in life. We bought them sheep out of the tribal funds, we showed them how to play the economic game of sheep raising, we held before them the lure of individual ownership as soon as they were competent for it, and now they are up and coming. Of course, we have done much for them in the way of sanitation, medical treatment and general betterment of health, but it was necessary to revive their souls as well as their bodies. They did it.

"Some of them beat us to it in respect to individual ownership; they were not content to await the division of the tribal flock. One third of the families on the reservation have managed to start herds of goats and sheep of their own. Ed Ladd Vincenti has more than 2,000 head, and as he reviewed his flock for my benefit he declared, 'I loves my sheeps.'

"The other flocks range from 2,000 down to a dozen. Sheep have started these Indians, and now they are going on to agriculture. They raised so much grain this year that all the granaries were filled, and we had to convert an unused schoolhouse into one. Oh, I tell you, it's simply wonderful to watch a whole tribe come back from the gates of death."

High Rank in Wealth

The commissioner then took up his annual report with me, and as he went through it he brought out the high spots of the achievements of the reviving race in such an enthusiastic way that one might almost have thought that the Indians would soon be setting an example to some of the backward regions and decadent spots of the white domain.

It may be "Lo, the poor Indian" is some respects, but hardly in a dollar and cents sense any more. Economically the Indians are fully as well off as the whites, taken as a whole, and the per capita wealth of some of the tribes is far more than that of the average white.

The Indians have lost a continent, but they still have plenty of room. The conquering race has reserved to them some 60,000,000 acres of land, which if brought together would make a region more than twice as large as the State of New York. It is very conservative to say that this land is worth $363,000,000. Moreover, there is standing on it timber worth at least $71,000,000 and the annual income from the forests is about $2,000,000. Altogether the Indians are "rated" at about $700,000,000. One way and another they enjoy an annual income of $54,000,000, as compared with a little more than $3,000,000 in 1890.

Sources of Wealth

Besides the timber item just mentioned, they raise about $11,000,000 worth of crops, sell about $4,000,000 worth of livestock annually without depleting their flocks and herds, gather in about $5,000,000 a year from brother white man as landlords, sell about $4,000,000 worth of land a year, receive about $1,700,000 a year as interest on trust funds, $700,000 on treaty account and, in the last fiscal year, about $20,000,000 more from Indian money, mineral royalties and hard work, the latter item alone amounting to about $4,000,000.

Of course, some of the tribes are much wealthier than others. Some of them are among earth's most fortunate dwellers and others are very poor indeed—some literally having no place to lay their heads. The Osage tribe, for instance, realized a bonus the last fiscal year of more than $10,000,000 on oil and gas leases, with a royalty besides of 16 2-3 per cent on all the oil and gas that may be produced therefrom. On the other hand, the Indians of the Bishop, California, agency realized only $48,000 all told in the whole year for more than 1,500 persons.

More than 56,000 adult Indians are now self-supporting and less than 5,000 able-bodied adults received rations with or without labor equivalent.

Bought Liberty Bonds

In fact, the Indians as a class are now so prosperous that they were able to invest about $25,000,000 in Liberty Loan bonds, or approximately $75 per capita, which is far better than the per capita showing of many of the States, besides investing about $1,000,000 in war saving stamps. Jackson Barnett, a Creek, put $1,096,750 into Liberty bonds; Jeanetta Richards, a Creek woman, invested $414,250. Other Creeks invested as follows: Susan Bacon, $375,000; Mollie Davis, $330,000; Sandy Fox, $325,000, and the Maley Fier estate, $313,000.

Nor did the Indians content themselves with staking their fortunes on the outcome of the war. They sent 10,000 of their young men into the army and 2,000 into the navy, and they boast that the first American to cross the Marne in the battle that threw the Huns back for the last time was an Indian. Even Sergeant York was outdone by the exploit of Private Joseph Oklahombi, a full blood Choctaw, of Company D, 141st Infantry, who received the Croix de Guerre in recognition of a feat of arms set forth in Marshal Petain's citation as follows:

"Under a violent barrage, dashed to the attack of an enemy position, covering about 210 yards through barbed wire entanglements. He rushed on machine gun positions, capturing 171 prisoners. He stormed a strongly held position containing more than fifty machine guns and a number of trench mortars. Turned the captured guns on the enemy and held the position for four days in spite of a constant barrage of large projectiles and of gas shells. Crossed No Man's Land many times to get information concerning the enemy and to assist his wounded comrades."

Of other deeds of Indian heroism in the great war Commissioner Sells says in his report:

"It is reported that Francis Lequier, a young Chippewa, in company with two or three others, attacked a machine gun nest, and when left as the only survivor faced all that remained of the machine gunners and killed or captured the entire group. He was said to be recovering from eleven wounds received in action."

For "Exceptional Courage"

"James M. Elson (deceased), of the Tulalip reservation, was cited by his commanding officer for guiding sentry squads to an isolated post in No Man's Land and for guiding patrol to outskirts of Brioules, securing information of enemy occupation and showing exceptional skill, courage and coolness under fire.

"The superior officer of Richard Bland Breeding, a young Creek of Oklahoma, said of him: 'He was the most capable, daring and fearless platoon leader in the division.'

"Among those who won the Croix de Guerre was Volunteer John Harper, a full-blooded Uncompahgre Ute, of which details are lacking at this time; Chester Armstrong Fourbear, a full-blood Sioux of South Dakota, cited for bravery in swift running as a messenger at Bellicourt; Ordnance Sergeant James M. Gorden, of Wisconsin, cited for rescuing while under shell fire a second lieutenant of the French army who was wounded while on an inspection tour; Nicholas E. Brown, a full-blood Choctaw, who when killed was a corporal in the 142d Infantry, composed largely of Oklahoma Indians, the honor being posthumously awarded; Marty Beaver, a full-blood Creek, on the military records as Bob Carr, an orphan boy who enlisted in Company F, 142d Infantry, 36th Division, details at present lacking."

Into Foe's Lines

"Alfred G. Bailey, a Cherokee of Oklahoma, had been in regular service with General Pershing in Mexico. He was a sergeant when killed in action in France and was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for creeping into the enemy's lines alone far in advance of his regiment, where, unaided, he killed two German machine gunners and captured a third together with his gun.

"Walter G. Sevalia, of Brule, Wisconsin, a corporal in Company F, 7th Engineers, was cited for 'extraordinary heroism' in action near Brioules, France, in November, 1918. He swam the Meuse under terrific fire with a cable for a pontoon bridge, and later carried another cable over the Est Canal and across an open field covered by enemy machine guns. At this time he was wounded, but returned bearing a message of great importance.

"Sergeant O. W. Leader, a three fourths blood Choctaw, was foreman of a cattle ranch in Oklahoma when he entered the war. Greatly to his chagrin, an idle rumor gained currency that he was a Hun spy. He quit the cattle business at once and enlisted as proof of his American loyalty. He was cited for bravery in battle in the course of a brilliant record, of which the following is a synopsis: Fought at Cantigny, May 28, 1918; fought at Soissons, Chateau Thierry, July 18, 1918; fought in Saint Mihiel salient, September 12, 1918. Fought at Argonne Forest, October 1, 1918. Twice wounded and twice gassed. In addition to this military record is the interesting fact that Sergeant Leader was selected by the French government as the model original American soldier of whom an oil painting should be made to hang upon the walls of the French Federal Building, where will be displayed types of all the Allied races."

The army experiences of the young men has proved, for most of them, the most important education factor of their careers. Commissioner Sells refused to permit them to be grouped as Indians in service units. They volunteered or were drafted as individuals and were allocated as such to companies and regiments. The result was that for a year or two they lived precisely the life of the white soldiers, with white men for companions. Many of them were completely regenerated in the service.

Wounded and Gassed

"One Cheyenne, a typical no-account reservation Indian with long hair," says an Indian superintendent, "went to France, was wounded, gassed and shell-shocked. Was returned honorably discharged. He reported to the agency office, square-shouldered, level-eyed, courteous, self-reliant and talked intelligently. A wonderful transformation and caused by contact with the outside world. He is at work."

A California superintendent writes:

"In every case that I have encountered where an Indian has returned to his jurisdiction I have found that the Indian young man was greatly bettered through his work in the army, both physically and mentally. I do not know of a single case where it has not benefited the Indian to such a degree that it is plainly noticeable and commented upon by the whites of his community. I was over to see an Indian just the other day who had returned from active service in the trenches of France. This Indian, Phillip Jim, had the remarkable record of going over the top more than thirty times. He walked into the recruiting office at Quincy on his way home and laid down $100 for a Victory bond, saying that he was done fighting, now he could help some other way. This Indian went straight home to farm, and started hard work of putting in a garden, repairing his fences, buildings, etc., that had got in bad condition since he left, for his father was afflicted with an incurable disease and his mother was ill. He says that he knows much more than he did and that he wants to do more now than he ever did."

Are Outdoor People

The Indians naturally take to the outdoor occupation. They are sheepmen and cattlemen, lumbermen, fishermen, trappers, hunters and farmers. They now cultivate more than 700,000 acres of land, and 176,000 of them have their individual land holdings. Some of them are extensive farmers and some are intensive. Some succeed in the humid regions, some succeed at dry farming and others are irrigationists. They own about 250,000 horses, mules and burros, about an equal number of cattle and 1,230,000 sheep and goats. The total value of their livestock is $48,000,000, an increase of sixfold in twenty years.

The Indians are now going forward so rapidly that it is something of a problem as to how to relieve from government paternalism those who need freedom, and yet not turn loose any incompetent ones prematurely. However, Mr. Sells thinks the situation can be met successfully.

Establishing Citizenship

"There is no longer any doubt," he says, "that, with adequate provision for the expense of proper inquiry as to competency and with faithful adherence to the broadened declaration of policy, we shall speedily sift the Indians who should stand on his own merits, pay taxes, discharge the service and exercise the freedom of citizenship from those who will require the protection of the government for some time before taking on such responsibilities." In determining competency the general rule is laid down that all adult able-bodied Indians of one-half or less Indian blood, not mentally deficient, are competent, should receive fee patents to their lands and be "turned loose." In pursuance of this policy 10,956 patents have been issued in the last three years—more than were issued in the preceding ten years.

The full-blood Indians are declared competent as rapidly as their records show that they are able to manage their own affairs. It is recognized, however, that the physical environment on some reservations is such that the lands cannot be allotted wisely at this time because so large a part is desert or range land and so little susceptible of cultivation. In such regions tribal use and control of the bulk of the lands appears to be the only way for the present. As fast as the Indians take their land in severalty and receive fee patent to it, and their shares of individual and tribal funds are turned over to them, they become citizens. In further pursuance of the policy of reducing paternalism the plan is now being followed of making all Indians freed from government supervision, who have access to public schools, send their children to them instead of to the Indian schools, or pay for their support in the latter to an amount not exceeding $200 a year.

Thousands in Schools

As to the present-day educational, social and domestic condition of the Indians, it appears from Commissioner Sells's report that 61,000 out of 84,000 eligible children are in school; that 43,000 out of 54,000 families live in houses; that there are only 236 polygamous marriages; that 113,000 Indians are churchgoing; that 120,000 speak English; that 81,000 are literate in English; that 191,000 wear citizens' clothing; that 79,000 are citizens, and that 26,000 are voters.

Altogether, it appears that "the noblest savage" of them all has successfully won through from savagery to civilization, and that we shall have the Indian with us for all time unless with full independence and citizenship he should mingle his blood in the great stream of that of the general population of the country, though it is noticeable that at present only about one tenth of Indian marriages are with whites.—Theodore M. Knappen, in New York Tribune, January 25, 1920.

If I were the Devil, I would watch those men who are specially gifted in any way or who have some special work and I would point out the petty vanities and failings which are in such men; I would induce all their brethren to harp on those failings until the poor victims should find their influence destroyed, or until they would quit the field in bitterness.—Elbert A. Smith.

Distinct Classes of Stewardships

BY JOSEPH FLORY

A stewardship in the Order of Enoch is different, according to this view, from an ordinary stewardship.

We shall now attempt to set forth our reasons for claiming that the stewards and stewardships as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants, section 77, 81, 93, and 100—all relating to what is known as the Order of Enoch—are a distinct and separate class of stewards and stewardships from those stewards and stewardships where members of the church were made stewards over their own property or their inheritances in the church, as we have set it forth in our other article.

"To the law and to the testimony; and if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

We shall attempt to prove our claim by an appeal to that which is written in what has been accepted as a law unto the church:

"The Lord spake unto Enoch, saying, Hearken unto me saith the Lord your God, who are ordained unto the high priesthood of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, and listen to the counsel of him who has ordained you, from on high, who shall speak in your ears the words of wisdom, that salvation may be unto you in that thing which you have presented before me, saith the Lord God, for verily I say unto you, The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you. And now, verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient that all things be done unto my glory, that ye should, who are joined together in this order; or in other words, let my servant Ahashdah, and my servant Gazelam, or Enoch, and my servant Pelagoram, sit in council with the saints which are in Zion; otherwise Satan seeketh to turn their hearts away from the truth, that they become blinded and understand not the things which are prepared for them; wherefore a commandment I give unto you, to prepare and organize yourselves by a bond or everlasting covenant that cannot be broken, and he who breaketh it shall lose his office and standing in the church and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption. Behold, this is the preparation wherewith I prepare you, and the foundation, and the ensample, which I give unto you, whereby you may accomplish the commandments which are given you, that through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world, that you may come up unto the crown prepared for you, and be made rulers over many kingdoms, saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Zion, who hath established the foundations of Adam-ondi-Ahman; who hath appointed Michael, your prince, and established his feet, and set him upon high; and given unto him the keys of salvation under the counsel and direction of the Holy One, who is without beginning of days or end of life."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1-3.

And again, I say unto you, I give unto you a new commandment, that you may understand my will concerning you, or, in other words, I give unto you directions how you may act before me, that it may turn to you for your salvation. I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise. Therefore, verily I say unto you, that it is expedient for my servant Alam and Ahashdah, Mahalaleel and Pelagoram, and my servant Gazelam, and Horah, and Olihar, and Shalemanasseh, and Mehemson, be bound together by a bond and covenant that cannot be broken by transgression except judgment shall immediately follow, in your several stewardships, to manage the affairs of the poor, and all things pertaining to the bishopric both in the land of Zion, and in the land of Shinehah, for I have consecrated the land of Shinehah in mine own due time for the benefit of the saints of the Most High, and for a stake to Zion; for Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened; yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments; therefore, I give unto you this commandment, that ye bind yourselves by this covenant, and it shall be done according to the laws of the Lord. Behold, here is wisdom, also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an single to the glory of God. This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you and unto your successors, inasmuch as you sin not; and the soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3-5.

Some Things to Expect of the Order of Enoch

We will now notice some of the things that must characterize the Order of Enoch as described in that which we have above quoted.

In the first place the revelation was addressed to these who had been "ordained unto the high priesthood of my church," from which we draw the conclusion that the general membership were not included as being active participants in the management of the affairs of the order.

It is expressly stated that there must needs be "an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people" (section 77: 1), or as more fully expressed in section 81: 4, "to manage the affairs of the poor and all things pertaining to the bishopric both in the land of Zion, and the land of Shinehah."

If this organization was for the managing of the affairs of the storehouse for the poor and all things pertaining to the bishopric, then without question they were to have charge of the funds in the Lord's storehouse in the hands of the bishop, which had been consecrated to the Lord according to the law of consecration or tithing, as we have shown in our previous article.

An Unbreakable Bond and Covenant

Again, those who were to be organized according to the directions as given in the Book of Covenants were to be bound together by a bond and covenant that could not be broken without incurring the penalty of losing their office and standing in the church, and being turned over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption. (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 2, 3; 81: 4; 101: 2.)

The fact that they would lose their office, as well as their standing in the church proves that they were officers in the church, as they could not lose their office if they were not officers in the church, any more than they could lose their standing in the church if they did not have a standing in the church.

The Order of Enoch was appointed as an everlasting order unto those designated by names, and their successors—evidently their successors in office.

Some years ago we endeavored to find the true names of the officers who corresponded to these names and commanded to organize themselves into the Order of Enoch, and so far as we were able to learn their true names, they were all officers in the church in its formative period. We shall show later on what those offices were.

There is nothing written requiring those who were to be stewards over their own properties, or their inheritances, that they should be bound together by a bond and covenant, as were those who composed the Order of Enoch. Neither were they subjected to such penalties as they in the Order of Enoch were, in case of unfaithfulness to their trust.

Order of Enoch Stewardships Different

Therefore, we claim that those receiving stewardships in the Order of Enoch are a separate and distinct class of stewards, and are to be governed by an altogether different law. And the failure to distinguish between the two classes of stewards and stewardships, and the laws governing the same, has resulted in much confusion and misunderstanding upon the subject of stewardships.

"And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards. But verily I say unto you, I have appointed unto you to be stewards over mine house, [the storehouse of the Lord.—J. F.] even stewards indeed; [stewards in the full sense of that term.—J. F.]"—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

(The remaining portion of the paragraph we have just quoted from has reference to the publishing of the literary concerns of the church as commanded in section 70 and 72: 4, latter part of paragraph, the proceeds of which were to be kept in a separate treasury and subject to the rules governing, as commanded in Doctrine and Covenants 101: 11.)

"And again, there shall be another treasury prepared and a treasurer appointed to keep the treasury, and a seal shall be placed upon it; and all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward; but so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful, and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer that the treasurer shall not withhold. But in case of transgression the treasurer shall be subject unto the counsel and voice of the order. And in case the treasurer is found an unfaithful, and an unwise steward, he shall be subject to the counsel and voice of the order, and shall be removed out of his place, and another shall be appointed in his stead."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.

Control of Order of Enoch Treasury

From the above we learn that the treasury of the Order of Enoch is under the control of those who are organized into that order as they may counsel and direct among themselves. But any man belonging to the order may say to the treasurer that he has need of a certain sum to help him in his stewardship, and so long as he has proved himself faithful and wise in that which he has already been steward over, the treasurer cannot withhold from him that which he claims he needs to carry on the business of his stewardship. This is in harmony with section 81: 4 which says:

"And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God," etc.

There are no such provisions made for those who are stewards over their own properties. It is only for those who are stewards indeed—in the full sense of that term—over the properties of the Lord—who have the rights as specified in that which we have quoted.

All Moneys to Be Turned In

It is also specifically stated that all moneys received in improving upon their stewardships, must be cast into the common treasury, whereas those who are stewards over their own property are only to pay one tenth of their net increase, as required by the law of tithing. (Section 106.)

The stewardships in the Order of Enoch may consist of "houses or lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings." Now the term "all things" gives a very wide field to operate in—mining, manufacturing, merchandising, foundries, machine shops, telephone or telegraph lines, electric light plants, railroads, steamship lines—in fact everything that is legitimate and honorable, and which is now carried on in the world by men of means or corporation trusts and combines.

While those things are being done by the world largely for the benefit of the few—owners and stockholders of those institutions—the Order of Enoch will use church funds, and all of the increase will "be cast into the Lord's storehouse to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."

We can now see the force and meaning of the declaration found in section 77: 3:

"Behold, this is the preparation wherewith I prepare you, and the foundation, and the ensample, which I give unto you, whereby you may accomplish the commandments which are given you, that through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures [man-made institutions.—J. F.] beneath the celestial world, that you may come up unto the crown prepared for you, and be made rulers over many kingdoms, saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Zion."

Order of Enoch Covers a Big Scope

Thus we see that the Order of Enoch will eventually embrace within its scope all that will be needed for the prosperity, welfare, and happiness of God's people on the earth, from a temporal standpoint of view.

This work will not be accomplished in a day, or in a year, but will perhaps take many years to fully accomplish its work. God has said:

"My words are sure and shall not fail . . . but all things must come to pass in their time; wherefore be not weary in well-doing, for ye are laying the foundation of a great work. And out of small things proceedeth that which is great."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 6.

While the law governing those who hold stewardships in the Order of Enoch requires of them to turn over into the treasury or storehouse of the Lord all of the increase made in the management of their stewardships, we believe that they will receive a just remuneration for their services in the management of the same.

Who Compose the Order

As we have already stated, the Order of Enoch is to be composed of officials in the church. We will now show who those officials were to be.

In the Journal of History for January, 1920, page 34, we find the following in "Statements of Joseph Smith," (our late president of the church):

"President Joseph Smith in his history says:

"I received the following—revelation given July 18, 1838, making known the disposition of the properties tithed as named in the preceding revelation. (See Doctrine and Covenants 106.) "Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time has now come that it shall be disposed of by a council composed of the First Presidency of my church, and of the Bishop and his council, and by my High Council, and by mine own voice unto them, saith the Lord. Even so, Amen."'"—Millennial Star, 16: 183."

Now then, inasmuch as the Order of Enoch was to be an organization made for the special purpose of "regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people" (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1), or as more fully stated in section 81: 4, "to manage the affairs of the poor, and all things pertaining to the bishopric," we think there can be no question but that the Order of Enoch was to be composed of those three quorums as named in the revelation as quoted from the Journal of History.

Evidently their work, or stewardship, was to have charge of the financial arm of the church, to handle church funds by investing them in any and every business that could be done with profit to the church, and the income of the business of the Order of Enoch was to "become the common property of the whole church."

As we have already stated, so far as we have been able to get the true names of those persons with fictitious names who were commanded to organize themselves for the purposes named in the revelations from which we have quoted, they were all officers in the church in its formative period, and were also, in the early days of the church, all members of some one of the three quorums mentioned in the revelation as found in the Journal of History, and above quoted.

Thus we think we have clearly proven that the Order of Enoch will be composed of the members of the First Presidency, the Bishopric, and the High Council of the church, who will carry out that work according to the direction of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, and the voice of the Lord unto them.

The Christian Science Monitor informs us that prohibition enforcement is costing the Government nothing, as the amount of collection of fines, and the value of liquor confiscated is from two to five times the expense of administration. It says the money is being diverted to the education account, so it is increasing the opportunity of young people to secure better preparation for life. Even if it cost the county millions to prevent the waste of a billion dollars a year for liquor, it would be worth while, for it means the diversion of part at least of this surplus wealth to the schoolhouse. This is in addition to the economic gain.

THE STAFF

The Music of the General Conference

Those who were privileged to attend the General Conference just closed witnessed and enjoyed the musical features therein; but there are many of our musical workers who did not get to come and these are doubtless anxious to know what the others enjoyed.

Paradoxically, the music of the conference was just the same as at all previous conferences, only it was different. That is, many of the same things had at previous conferences were still had, only they were handled somewhat differently. Then, there was added other features, new in their character and some decidedly novel and unique.

To take the things that have been standard for years: there was the hymn singing, only it was conducted differently and on different lines, the congregation being induced to sing a wider range of hymns and sing them better, and more of the congregation were led to sing. Anthems were still sung by the big choir and progress in both finish and interpretation was markedly in evidence. But owing to the number of evenings devoted to institutional and departmental work the number of anthems that could have been used was less than at some of the conferences of the past. Then, there was the oratorio; and when we mention the oratorio we naturally feel that we are referring to the high water mark (so far) of our musical attainments; for the work of preparing and rendering an oratorio is unquestionably pretentious. Haydn's ever-vernal masterpiece, "The Creation," was the one rendered and it was given in such a way as to maintain the credit and previous reputation of our conference choirs.

But the new things brought out deserve particular place and mention because they mark a new era, perhaps, in our musical development and some of them will undoubtedly affect the future musical policy of the church.

First, there was the evident desire to diverge from the too well beaten paths of the past in our congregational singing; to get away from the persistent use of the too often over-worked hymns like "Redeemer of Israel" and others, and use some of our other hymns of equally appropriate and beautiful sentiment. This is well: we may sing a good hymn so often that its charm is forgotten and its singing becomes mechanical. Then there was the desire to sing our hymns in a better style and in a more spiritual as well as a spirited manner. Even the hymn work of the prayer meetings was on a much higher and more spiritual plane. This is good: if "the song of the righteous is a prayer" unto God then that prayer should be given in the Spirit and in a proper manner. Let those of our musical forces who have in charge the direction of our congregational singing look well to the development of better and more spiritual work.

In connection with the congregational singing of the conference we must advert to the work of Brother Albert N. Hoxie, who since 1912 has held the post of general church chorister. Brother Hoxie was in fine trim and fully up to his previous attainments. His two years service in the Government has given him some valuable things, or rather developed some valuable qualities. He has a broader vision and a greater mastery over things and is now more capable of promoting the musical interests of God's church than he has ever been. He was evidently fired by the Spirit himself and made the congregation sense his own inspiration and to respond in like measure. The result was that our singing en masse rose to spiritual heights of enthusiasm as never before. The people wanted to sing and they wanted to sing new things. And so they sang such things as "The Holy City," "The Lost Chord," etc. Also they quickly learned and sang his special song, "Pray, men, pray," words by himself, particularly suited to the belief of the church to-day regarding Christ's second coming. In all this work there is the evidence that the hearts of the Saints are being turned to song as a natural expression of their ideals and hopes.

One thing that should be mentioned as a strong factor in making possible this excellent congregational work and that is Brother Hoxie's song book, "Songs of the Legion." Bound in paper covers and containing the best from Hymnal and Zion's praises, together with some excellent popular songs sung throughout the Nation, it "filled the bill" for the occasion. While this little book cannot take the place of our church song books, it is an excellent thing for our reunions and for missionary work, where Hymnals are not easily available. Incidentally, those who may want a copy of it should address the Ensign or Herald Publishing Houses, with fifteen cents for each copy; and Brother Hoxie has promised that the profits from their sale shall go to the church. If they are not immediately available, they will be soon. Possibly the big demand at conference time used up all on hand.

Another thing very evident, and a fine thing too, is the growing spirit of song among the ministry and the increasing number of the missionaries who can sing quite acceptably. "The missionary chorus," a number of the ministry who get together each conference and render male quartet work very acceptably, sang very enthusiastically. Although their membership is transient in character they should organize in some way, that their work may be made a permanent feature. It is also gratifying to note the ability to lead in music work that is evident in some of our missionaries.

We must not close without commenting upon the orchestral growth that was evident at the conference. This work has been almost unnoticed for the past two years, but it has not been dead by any means. Although the showing of the work rested very largely with the Independence musicians, there were some others from other branches who played with them and the proof is not lacking that there is a very healthy orchestral spirit in many quarters of the church. The Liberty Orchestra, a church organization of Independence, which has developed under the leadership of Brother Robert T. Cooper, formed the nucleus of the large orchestra that rendered a very acceptable and enjoyable program on the Saturday evening of April 10. This orchestra's work on this occasion was gratifyingly good, sufficiently so as to lift it from the ranks of the indifferent tyro class and distinguish them as earnest, intelligent amateurs, with a serious object before them. And in view of the distinction we recently made in The Staff as to the rank of the worthy amateur, this appellation carries with it dignity and credit. The work of this orchestra on this occasion shows the great possibilities of orchestral development within the church—and we must work for such a grand attainment.

Altogether, it was an epochal conference from a musical point of view; not so much from the standpoint of the quantity of music rendered as from that of showing our musical desires, possibilities and growth.

Here's Something New

For some time we have been wishing that we had something really "new" for Staff readers, and now we certainly have it. Furthermore, it is not only new, and of great interest to all church workers, but we feel it will truly "warm the cockles of the hearts" of those who are interested in the church's musical progress.

For some years The Staff has been the official organ of the General Choir Movement and has sought faithfully to chronicle its many important interests. This general choir movement was instituted in 1912 for the express purpose of promoting the choir interests of the church. It has given some good service in the years of the past, the results of which are seen in a number of our choirs. But it was inevitable that, in the growth and progress of the church, this movement, somewhat limited in its original scope and intentions and caring for but a part of the church's music work, should give way to something larger and more adequate to the church's needs.

Now here's the "new" thing you are waiting to hear about and we know it will gladden the hearts of all our music workers.

The general choir movement as such has ceased to exist; but in its place has been instituted something bigger, better, more comprehensive; something that marks a very forward step in the musical progress of the church and that will give to music its proper place in the church. There is now established as a part of the church's organization and regular work, THE DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC, fully constituted and appointed and having as its vision and object the development of the musical spirit and work of the church.

Well, we did have something "new," didn't we? And we knew you would be greatly interested and gladdened when you learned of this important and forward movement of the church. And now we will try to tell you of some of the ideals and aims of this new department and of some of the good things we hope it may do for the church.

The Department of Music! Does not that have a ring to it of seriousness and of determined desire, and does it not seem to promise good things for the church? But further, we hope that our most fervent wishes and ardent promises may be amply fulfilled in time, for the good of the church and its work.

Of course this new department is in its very infancy; but oh, how it hopes to grow! And what an ambitious child it is in its ideals and aspirations, and how it prays that its services may bring to the church a rich harvest of development in all things musical. This newest child in the family of the church's departmental work feels that it has a divine mission and it starts upon that mission with a deep sense of its responsibility and stewardship and with the true spirit of consecration, praying that it may do God's work for the church. So it comes to you in much hope, earnestly seeking your cooperation.

It is impossible to tell all the good things this department hopes to do for the church. Its possibilities are without number and limit. But like all movements that have to do with the progress and development of mankind, it will surely evolve its full destiny. As time goes on it will not only do the humble things it now has in mind, but many other things as well and in better ways. Let us therefore endeavor to realize that its evolution must spell continual progression and development. In this way it will justify its existence and prove an important factor in the greater growth of the church.

But let us tell you of some of the good things this new department hopes to do for the church; and perhaps we may be able to help you to see a part of the vision that has been granted those who have had its foundational work and development in hand.

The great general aim of The Department of Music is to promote and encourage the spirit of music in the church in every possible way. This is quite an extensive undertaking but the church needs this big thing accomplished and we are willing to bend our efforts to do it. And when we say that the new department proposes to foster the spirit and work of music in all possible ways we mean exactly that thing. The former general choir movement aimed at the promotion of choir interests but the Department of Music aims at fostering and developing every musical interest in the church. Our church choirs, whether near or remote, are subjects of its care and entitled to its aid; the budding young orchestra, whether in Maine or Australia, anxious to give its service to the church or Sunday school, is an object of its interest and concern; even the individual student who is earnestly striving, perhaps far remote from advantages of musical surroundings, to cultivate his gift of music or of song, is dear to the heart of the department, for it wants him to succeed and stands ready to help him. Wherever God's people are striving to cultivate the gifts he has endowed them with, that they may use them in his service and to his glory, this department is anxious to render help and encouragement. Is not this desire a holy one, and do you not find your hearts responding with a determination to cooperate with us?

There are so many things that we need to do for the church's good that we can scarcely begin to enumerate them. For instance, the development of the missionary spirit among our singers and musicians, whereby they may help the missionaries of the church present the gospel message more attractively by a proper accompaniment of music and singing with their services, is one of the things needed. The development of the power of original composition, whereby our own people may produce more of the music we play and sing, is another. But why try to enumerate them; one eminence mounted, another rises to view and the horizon ever widens before us.

We cannot tell you how deeply we feel that in some way the church's music is to prove a very potent factor in the evolution of her destiny; the accomplishment of her great ideals and the salvation of her people. Else why did God speak so earnestly and place so much stress upon the one art of music above all others, and enjoin its particular culture upon his people? This church must be made a musical church, singing, as did the armies of America in the late war, its way to victory. And has not God promised that the victorious accomplishment of the church's ideals shall be had accompanied with "songs of everlasting joy"?

It cannot be expected that the new Department of Music shall spring, Minerva-like, into the full realization of its work and powers at once. Like all movements that men make for their betterment it must grow, becoming each day in its development, more proficient. Evolution is always a matter of comparatively slow growth, but true evolution is always upward. Therefore, while we expect the Department of Music to evolve into that which is higher and better, we shall also expect you to be patient, trusting that we may reach the goals we are seeking in due time. As we grow and as experience shall give us proficiency and wisdom, we shall some day be able to do better things for the church than we now can do.

In course of time (and we trust it may not be too far off) and as our work shall develop and experience shall show us just what is needed and how to secure it, the Department of Music expects to launch a campaign of education in music and music work. This campaign is intended to embody educational work to meet the needs of many in the church; that will aid the struggling choir in the isolated branch; the ambitious vocal or instrumental student away from the centers of culture. In many ways this may be made to function, and in such work we feel that the music work of the church may be more thoroughly accomplished.

Another thing the Department of Music proposes to do. You have all doubtless learned of the plans established at the last General Conference for the erection of a large auditorium at Independence. For the music work of this auditorium there will be needed a large pipe organ—a very large one in fact. This department proposes, in cooperation with the bishopric of the church, to work energetically for the promotion of "The Pipe Organ Fund" for this auditorium. Cannot the musical workers of the church furnish the means for this large organ, and would it not be peculiarly fitting that this magnificent instrument should stand as a testimonial to their zeal and devotion. More about these plans later.

The personnel of those now in charge of the work of the Department of Music is: Albert N. Hoxie, former general church chorister, 3119 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, General Director; Paul N. Craig, director of the School of Music at Graceland, Lamoni, Iowa, Assistant Director; Arthur H. Mills, former secretary of the general choir movement, 1514 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, Secretary. It is hoped that Brother Harold C. Burgess, superintendent of the light plant at Lamoni, Iowa, may be released that he may give his time to the work as managing director, in charge of the physical work of the department. As our work grows, doubtless others will be called to help us with our burdens, either in an official capacity or in assistance in various ways.

The work of The Staff as the official organ of the new department will continue as it is for the present until the public avenues of the department may be further determined. But we hope that it too will expand into something better and more comprehensive and more suited to the needs of a growing active department of the church work.

Well, we have told you all about the plans and ambitions of the Department of Music. Are you with us in this grand work, so important to the church's welfare? We know you are. Incidentally, we would be glad to hear from you at any time about it.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

In Memoriam

Florence Burgess passed into the life beyond at Saint Louis, Missouri, April 12, 1920. She was a pioneer in the work of the general choir movement, early championing its cause and laboring continuously for its good. She ever took an interest in its work and each year would master the oratorio and the special music for the General Conferences and attend in person, with others whom she had aided to in like manner prepare themselves, to assist in rendering the conference music program. This year she longed to be present and assist as formerly, but failing strength preventing, she urged her mother to attend, that, upon her return, she might tell her of the good things she had witnessed and heard. But even this slight boon was, in the wisdom of Providence, denied her, for a change for the worse came upon April 8, which hastened her end.

Sister Burgess's life was one of continuous musical activity. At the age of ten she was organist for the Sunday school; afterwards pianist for the Religio. She was one of the charter members of the Saint Louis choir and at her death had been in its continuous service over twenty-five years. She served it as chorister in its early days, when but little other than congregational singing could be had; but her efforts made possible the later development under others. In the latter years of her life she served it as organist until failing health compelled her to relinquish her burden. But still she continued to serve as strength would permit.

The chief characteristic of Sister Burgess's service was humility. Although possessed of unusual talents herself she did not hesitate to use them in ways and at times when the compensation seemed small and the sacrifice great. Whenever her services were needed, throughout district or branch, she served quietly and unostentatiously; and labors like hers render possible the work of greater things. Her reward is with Christ. The musical interests of her city and district will greatly miss her ministrations.

We knew her personally as a young girl of excellent musical taste and attainments and this tribute is in part ours. The limited space of The Staff will not permit of much beyond the work of our church music; but we have felt constrained to give this brief obituary concerning one who was ever a devoted worker in the church's music, that her example may receive the emulation of others.

The Secret of Success

I used to blow the organ in a good old country choir;
I kept the bellows crowded full and never used to tire;
I seemed to catch a vision of the promised happy land
When that old organ thundered underneath the player's hand.
Now here's the point I'm making—please to notice "where I'm at."—

That wind was raw material, and mighty raw at that;
But when it came a-rushing that old organ's piping through,
It then was finished product, way up on its finish, too.
I did the hard raw labor—pumping in the wind, you see.
The organist did better—a skilled worker, was she.

A hundred boys could handle my pump job at any day;
The church was minus music when that woman stayed away.
And so in early childhood I pumped out this settled law,
To dodge old competition, just quit handling the raw
And learn to make skilled products; you will live to find your fill

Of good things will be greater as you cultivate your skill.
The folks who at the organ stay, there ever pumping wind,
Have hardly cause to grumble when they tag along behind
Those folks who learn to handle every pedal stop, and key
That lets the wind from prison in a flood of harmony.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Zion

We have this morning returned from a hurried trip to Kansas City and Independence, where our Women's Department executive committee met in council for the first time since conference. We are still under the thrill and uplift of the wonderful experiences of yesterday, when the "Zion of latter days," the "city of Saints," the "central place," was formally opened. Never shall we forget the baptism of spirit which attended the services, nor can we feel too grateful for the vision and outlook, the assurance and confidence we sensed was spread, as a mantle, over the worshipping throng. It is not for us to record, here, the events of the day, but we feel to pass on some of the impressions received, concerning the work which is to be done by the women of the church.

Forming, as the women do, such a large percentage of the membership, can we conceive that the work to be done by "Israel of latter days" will be accomplished with us hanging back, shutting our eyes to opportunity, expressing by word and action our unwillingness to progress, to study, to labor, to keep step with the upward trend of the church? Or, can we conceive that progress in that direction (which must be made, if the church is to enter in upon its highest achievements) will, or can, be retarded if the women, unitedly, move onward and Godward? So, in that light, is there a woman in the church who fails to see that the real progress of the church of God upon earth, rests upon her shoulders equally with those of every other unit in it? If there be such a woman, should any others sit contentedly under the molding influences of God's Holy Spirit, and not wish to share with her the great impetus with which the church is being moved? Truly a hastening time!

In the home lies our field. In the homes of Latter Day Saints there are still inexperienced and indifferent parents, who do not sense the privileges which are theirs to chisel and carve, by the grace of God, a thing of eternal worth and beauty, from the materials given them in the person of a little child. There are still homes which are such in name only, where Christ, in the guise and spirit of a little child, is being daily crucified upon the cross of cruel misunderstanding and selfish neglect. There are still homes in which the exquisite blossoms of childhood, with all their glorious potentialities of fruitage and harvest, are drooping and dying because of the unfavorable and blasting nature of their environments. Can any woman among us say, with the high purposes of Zion in mind, that the well-being of such children, of the inmates of such homes, is not her concern, nor yet her spiritual responsibility before God, if so it shall be that by deep devotion, by great loving, by intense yearning, and careful and persistent study and preparation she might become a tower of strength and veritable salvation to the mother who presides over them?

Entering upon the day of Zion's establishment, witnessing the promise and consolation so freely extended from the courts on high, newly moved to consecrate our all upon the altars of its perfect and glorious demonstration in a sin-sick world of doubt, coldness, and selfishness, shall we hesitate upon the threshold? Because the task is tremendous, because it will call forth every ounce of the best that is in each of us, because it demands us all, and all that any one can give, shall we still hug to our breasts, any pitiful earthly thing which shall prevent its triumph?

"Zion, the pure in heart!" In the testing days to come, when, tried as by fire, the weak, the stained, the selfish, the unprofitable, the false, and the unwilling, shall be purged away, in order that only the pure, the loving, and the consecrated may remain, to become the great beauty which shall attract all men to Zion, what will be our fate, and where will our lot be cast?

The Executive Committee Meets

We feel sure that the readers of our column are anxiously awaiting the announcements which properly follow changes made in the plans or official personnel of our organization. We will attempt, briefly, to tell you about some of them.

It will be good news to those who knew of the illness of Sister Frederick M. Smith at the close of conference, to learn of her improvement. With a renewal of her strength and health, came the urgings of her devotion to our work, resulting in a meeting on the 29th of our executive committee. There were present, the director general, Mrs. F. M. Smith; the superintendent, Audentia Anderson; her two assistants, Mina Madison and May Mather; and the secretary, Marie Morgan. The assistant secretary, Vivian Barto, and our treasurer, Bishop McGuire, were unable to meet with us.

A quite thorough canvass was made of the field of work which has been ours in the past, as well as a most careful consideration of the new work that has fallen to our department, through that action of conference which placed the responsibility of prosecuting the home department and cradle roll work under our supervision. Various changes in our working plans were outlined, and the adaptation and assimilation of these new departments progressed with a fair degree of satisfaction. The importance of firmly establishing our work in Zion, from its very beginning, was impressed upon the committee, which indeed hopes to see it, in the near future, "blossom as the rose."

It is not possible to announce at this time, the names of the supervisors of our different study bureaus, but we may assure you that but few changes are anticipated. The scope of the work placed under the charge of each, may be broadened, and some "follow-up" courses to carry on the development along study lines be provided for later.

The home department and cradle roll work, as well as that of publicity, will be cared for by standing committees composed of those prepared, to some degree for service along the special lines indicated. Steps were taken for an early publication of the new Year Book. Those interested will be pleased to be informed, too, that the manual for the Temple Builders will soon be in their hands.

We hope to be able to publish next week, our completed list of officers, committees, and department heads. The value of this list will be to assure you that able and consecrated women are accepting the tasks and responsibilities involved in putting our women's work on its feet, and helping it to function effectively.

In the establishment of our general office at headquarters, it will no longer be necessary nor advisable for anyone to address any of our workers personally on matters of departmental interest. Communications of whatever nature, addressed to our general office, will, through our office force, reach the one for whom intended, as promptly as possible. This will eliminate the confusion which has yearly followed our conventions, where new officers were elected. It has taken the most of the year following such elections to become familiar with the changes made, and by the time such familiarity was nicely established, the year was up, and other changes were in order. So the plan we have adopted will, we feel sure, appeal to all our women.

Several new lessons in the Child Welfare Course which, is being prepared so ably by Sister Lydia Wight, are ready for mailing. Those who have placed their orders for the entire course, have doubtless received these numbers. Those who have been neglectful in ordering, will be glad to know that some copies still remain of the first lessons issued, so that, for a time at least, it will be possible to obtain the complete set. Twenty-five cents, accompanying an order for this Child Welfare course, will secure the entire series. Send your order to our general office. Remember the address:

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
of Latter Day Saints

Women's Department Independence, Missouri.

At our recent convention, Sister Wight explained the purpose and plan of her Child Study course. In response to our request, she has from memory, sketched her address, and we are glad to present it to our readers in this issue. No mother, who feels her responsibility to her child, should longer delay in ordering a set of these, as well as the other most valuable leaflet courses our department is putting out. Only by study and thought, mental concentration and meditation, and a purposeful line of action and ideal mapped out and set up as objectives, can the modern mother safeguard her children. God will help us, as he sees we are willing to try to help ourselves, and by putting forth the first efforts, he will encourage and enlighten through his spirit of truth, the light of intelligence.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Child Study Course

We come to you this morning with a topic old as the race; a topic treated seriously by some, laughed at by others, and misunderstood, or only half-conceived, by most of us. It is a topic old, but which should now be filled with rich meaning, because of its relation to the arduous task the church has undertaken—that of building Zion. As President Smith told the women yesterday, "no church can rise above the standard of its homes."

What a sight it is for those who sit in the gallery at the business sessions to look down upon the rows of broad shoulders and erect heads of our missionary force! Have you tried to estimate the energy represented in that body? The measurement of it would surprise us, and yet, do we realize that the tremendous energy expended by those men as missionaries and pastors is wasted to a great extent unless that same energy, coupled with that of the women of the church, shall as parental energy, be operative through the homes? Can we afford to waste even the smallest part of that force?

We feel that progress is being made, but most of us will agree that the church has not yet reached the height it is designed it shall attain. Then there must be something wrong with the standard of our homes!

Let us look at the situation. Here is a family of children; they look well-fed; they appear to be clean, and have no startling wrong habits. Their parents have done a pretty good job, we say. Here is another family; the same number of children. They have been properly nourished, scientifically fed; their faces shine with the health that comes from clean bodies, clean minds, and righteous living, and they have built up a fund of good habits. Shall we not say these parents have done a better job in thus building positive forces for good?

The first task is accomplished by the majority of our homes; the second which can yet be improved upon, can be successfully done only by trained and consecrated parents and teachers. There is, then, a need for a broad course in child study. The new course is not yet perfect; it is only a stepping-stone. The course attempts to serve two purposes: one, to assist the mother who is forced to get all her training after she has undertaken the task of home-making; the other, to educate our people to see the need for previous training in mothercraft.

What is mothercraft? Mary Reed says it is "the skillful, practical doing of all that is involved in the nourishing and training of children in a sympathetic, happy, religious spirit." Can instinct supply us with all that? What banker trusts his books to an inexperienced youth? What promoter of big business dictates his letters to a stenographer just beginning a course? What manufacturer of fine fabrics places his fibers in the hands of unskilled workers? All this would be considered inefficient, expensive and wasteful in business. How much more is it true in homes where human lives are the raw material!

The Child Study Course stands for several principles, two of which we mention. It stands for the forming of a policy covering each problem parents know they must meet. This policy should not be worked out by mothers alone, but by the parents of a neighborhood. Only by combined action can be met such problems as (1) the hours boys and girls shall play and hours they shall work, (2) playing or idling in the street, (3) motion picture show attendance and, in fact, all recreational and social problems. How much easier for Tom to do a certain thing when he knows John across the street is held to the same policy!

The second principle for which this course stands is that of honesty. We mean that kind of honesty which makes parents willing to submit their children to intelligence tests which discover true ability.

The New Child Study Course is divided into periods beginning with prenatal care, and extending through the adolescent period. It treats of the physical, mental, moral, and religious aspects of each age, and attempts to give mothers an idea of the development they might expect of the child at different ages.

The proper training of our children is a big responsibility, but we have a confidence in the women of our church, that they will rise to the new needs of the homes, and turn out young people free from taint, and fitted in every way to continue the upbuilding of Zion.

We leave with you this quotation from one of our foremost child welfare workers:

"One generation—one entire generation of all the world of children, understood as they should be, loved as they ask to be, developed as they might be, would more than begin the millenium!"

LYDIA THOMAS WIGHT.

Spring River District

Sometimes I feel the work in this district is slow indeed, but at others I am made to feel that the sisters are coming to a realization that there is something for the handmaidens to do in the redemption of Zion, as well as for the priesthood. In March I visited the branch at Pittsburg, Kansas, and enjoyed a spiritual prayer and testimony service. After its close, we were permitted to talk to the sisters, explaining the object of our organization, and answering questions to the best of my ability. An auxiliary was organized, the pastor of the branch, Brother Arthur E. Stoff, acting as secretary of the meeting and encouraging us as much as possible. They have about 20 members, and are willing to contribute their mite to the great good.

This makes the eighth branch in this district in which our auxiliary work is represented. We want to make a record here, of which the general society will not be ashamed. May the work receive divine help and we all be able to accomplish all that we are designed to do, is my prayer,

MRS. J. A. GRAVES,
Organizer, Joplin, Missouri.

Pontiac, Michigan

A report from this place shows an enrollment of 13, average attendance of 7, 12 meetings held, 2 socials, sewing, quilting, etc., and receipts of $139—and all inside of three months. We count this a good record. It is sent in by the secretary,

MRS. ANNIE McLEOD,

The largest body of fresh water in existence is probably that underlying the western prairies. It is not visible to the natural eye, but in the first one hundred feet of depth there is sufficient water to make a lake seventeen feet deep. Crops deplete it a few inches but the rainy season restores its level. Unfortunately, railroad cuts, ditches, and wells through this area result in draining this valuable supply. It has already had this effect in Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, and the Dakotas, to such an extent that legislative action is contemplated preventing the continued drain.

There is such a thing as genuine, intelligent, religion. There is also a faithful counterfeit: superstition. There is, moreover, an amalgamation of both, and it is quite evident that if all the religion of mankind or even that which is found within the precincts of the true church, were relieved of superstition, there would be immensely less of it; yet what would be left would be immeasurably more valuable.—H. J. Davison.

LETTERS

The Church and the Social Problem

The following from a letter from one of our most careful thinkers, will interest our readers, discussing as it does in a broad way the problem of the church and the social order.

Inasmuch as our own church seems to be anxious to develop a program of social and economic activities, it might be well to have the church understand the nature, extent and intricacy of the problem. The ideas which seem to be more or less vague in the minds of our people certainly will be the better of something in the nature of a catalysis. The sociological improvements making for the realization of Zion and the correlate ideals is a matter which lies deeper than the issuance of programs and the ecclesiastical legislation or indeed any legislation. In fact it seems to me to be a problem in which psychology must have primacy.

When Mr. A. says: "The church has said it can do nothing," he may be technically correct, for the church cannot by external means or mechanistic methods do anything much beyond charity, to bring about a permanent change. That, it would appear to me, is not the church's business. The business of the church as an institution is to direct its energies to educational effort and create a new mind, a new consciousness, a new life, and once the devotee and disciple of the church has passed through such a crisis then the new man will create a new environment by ceasing to correspond with those things which make for misery and iniquity and injustice and will commence a correspondence with those things which will make for goodness, virtue and justice, and then happiness will be the result. To illustrate by one of Comte's two correlative laws: "Moral evils can only be cured and not by material agencies." The church should by all means use its strongest and highest power to create such conditions in which church people will be able to realize the church ideals but at the best such efforts can only be indirect and mediate.

Of course the conclusion which A. reaches that the way to reform and betterment lies through revolution and chaos is dramatic rhetoric but impossible logic. Men do not have to appreciate sobriety only after drunkenness, nor virtue after orgiastic extravagances, nor is it necessary to sublimate spiritual character in the wild maelstrom of deviltry.

There is also something of merit in Dean Hart's reply to the charge that the workingman had not taken his complaint to the church. The church may have been unsympathetic at times and in places but generally speaking the church is the official champion of rights, privileges, and justice of and for all men, and though history shows many failures and possibly things of which the church ought to be and no doubt is ashamed, yet to the church modern civilization owes a great debt of gratitude and no matter what sectarian name the church may bear she is now as always the great human symbol of the place where God and man may meet in sympathetic and mutual converse.

Truly this is a great and wonderful age and the possibilities for good or evil are tremendous, but I cannot but believe that good is winning slowly, and possibly painfully its way to sure and certain victory. I am very grateful to have lived in this period and many, many times so fervently wish I knew how to serve it better and to greater effect. It is a great sorrow that so often the big and worthy call of humanity at large is disregarded because of the many trivial and lesser demands which crowd in upon one.

We think of Zion, we talk of Zion, we sing of Zion, and we pray of Zion, but we shall never be able to pierce the dense mists of selfishness that surround the shining walls of the temple: we must scatter the fog. O selfishness, thou unmerciful God of this century, begone from Israel! Zion is a myth, so long as thou art king.—J. P. Buschlen.

Graceland Notes

Graceland college closes its year's work on June 2 with a number of graduate recitals preceding that date. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached on the morning of Sunday, May 30, by Apostle Myron A. McConley. The commencement address will occur Wednesday evening, June 2, by Honorable Nate Kendall of Albia, Iowa, the Republican candidate for Governor of the State.

The graduating class will be the largest in the history of this institution, representing all of the departments.

Sister Laura Mann, R. N., a graduate from the nurses' course at the Sanitarium, has been assigned to instruct in nursing, hygiene, and sanitation, for the rest of the school year, having especially in mind the needs of the class in religious education. This service is going to be of great value not only to the students in the class, but to the student body generally.

Governor W. L. Harding of Iowa has appointed President George N. Briggs of Graceland College as one of the Iowa delegates to attend a National Conference on Education called by the Secretary of Interior and the United States Commissioner of Education to convene in Washington during the present month "to discuss the pressing problems of education from the standpoint of statesmanship and public welfare."

This conference will be participated in by the presidents of colleges and universities of the United States. It is believed it will be of great value to the general educational progress of the country.

Let's Hear From a Hundred Places Like This

It is needless for me to say I am beginning the year's work with renewed energy, for who could have been in attendance at the conference and lectures without going to his tasks in the church with more confidence and courage.

I think the lectures were a great benefit, and certainly will tend to broader views and greater unity.

I have just completed the arranging of the membership in the branch into "groups" and the priesthood will begin work under this arrangement this week. I feel assured greater efficiency will result if the priesthood do their part.

We are preparing to adopt the "budget" system in our finances, placing all the funds from all departments in one treasury.

The Boy Scouts are moving along nicely. One young man is studying "wireless," and we expect to install a station soon. Another young man is preparing to take up the study of medicine, and a young sister is taking a course in story-writing. We meet this week to organize a "junior" orchestra. Our church debt is paid and we are making some repairs and will soon be ready to dedicate the church.

The outlook is very encouraging and we are hopeful of good results this year. Sincerely,

W. S. MACRAE.

A Good Man Passes

Editors Herald: On last Tuesday, March 30, I was called to Nevada, Missouri, to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Arthur L. Crocker, who died quite suddenly on Sunday afternoon, March 28, while listening to a lecture in the High School building in Nevada. On Sunday morning he seemed perfectly well, attending church and taking part in the services as usual. In the afternoon, still feeling perfectly well, he went to hear this lecture; and while listening to the speaker, he suddenly pitched forward, in an unconscious condition, and died before they could get him out of the building. The cause of his death, the doctors said, was cerebral hemorrhage.

Arthur was born at Cornwallis, Nova Scotia, December 25, 1866. Was baptized on February 5, 1890, by E. N. Webster, and was confirmed by M. H. Bond and A. N. Hoxie. Was ordained a teacher by U. W. Greene.

His life, from the time he came into the church, was wholly consecrated to the service of the Master; and he realized, too, that one is serving the Master when he is doing good to his fellow man. Hence, like the Master, in this respect at least, he went about doing good to others. Time, money, and self, counted for nothing when duty called him. He invested many dollars in books on gospel subjects, which he loaned or gave to those who were investigating the angel message, or who were willing to investigate; and many dollars he gave, too, to those who were less fortunate in financial affairs than himself. One of the most unselfish men I ever met. All who really knew him loved him, whether they were of the same gospel faith or not. Quite a large audience attended the funeral, more than half of whom were not members of our church.

His death will be quite a loss to the Nevada Branch but his wife and foster son will, of course, miss him most. I would like to mention some of the good things which I happen to know of his doing for others, but I realize it would make this letter too long, hence I shall forbear; but I feel assured that all who came in contact with him, sufficiently long to really know him, were made better by that contact. His reward will be the reward of the righteous; and although he is now reckoned among the dead, his life still has its influence for good upon many who yet live. In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, April 12, 1920.

Editors Herald: Out here in Connecticut Jack Frost still holds sway with frosty nights and cold, bleak days. We wonder if in central Missouri it is any more comfortable than here.

April 4 was observed by us at the home of Sister Wilkes in Westerly, Rhode Island, where we were met at Brother George H. Gates who administered the sacrament to us, after which we had a good testimony meeting, followed by a sermon by Brother Gates.

Things look encouraging at Westerly. I trust that Brother Arthur Phillips may be appointed to this field as he knows many of the people and is well liked.

To-day's mail brought another tract and circular letter from John Zahnd in which he prints a letter to the conference assembled, requesting to be permitted to address the assembly. Then comes the polite refusal from the First Presidency by E. A. S.

For the past year Mr. Zahnd has been sending broadcast through the mails insulting and misleading literature regarding those in authority in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ.

Saints, without doubt many of you have been receiving these tracts and all-things-common books, and Zahnd's paper The Order of Zion, and read his articles in which he has endeavored to make us discredit those that God has called and set in the church to direct it in the ways of righteousness.

I was brought up a Quaker, and very strict. Was baptized into this church twenty-eight years ago this month. Have seen a real growth in the church. Have read church history thoroughly, and F. M. Smith is the only man on earth that can produce any real evidence that he has any call from God to act as prophet, seer, and revelator. The call of Brother Benjamin R. McGuire to the presiding bishopric, through Brother Smith was a divine call, a real revelation. The Spirit burned within me as I read it.

Saints, we have not read any unkind or slurring remarks in any of our church papers (written by God's chosen representatives) against Zahnd. They, like Michael the archangel, would not bring a railing accusation against Satan, but said "God rebuke thee."

For the past week I have suffered terribly in my hip and leg where it is broken in the hip joint, but hope soon to be all right. Two physicians told me that in time I will be nearly as strong as ever. One of them is an army surgeon. He advised against operating, saying nature will bind it up and make a new joint. So I live in hopes.

With love to all Saints, I am

Your brother in the only church that will bear the truth,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

MISCELLANEOUS

The Presidency

In this issue is a notice from the Quorum of Twelve touching the missionary work, group supervisors, etc. The Presidency calls attention to this notice.

Under the direction of the Twelve, special efforts towards missionary work are being promoted, and it is hoped that local members of the priesthood will cooperate with the missionary arm. Local officers are expected to give their first attention to the local work, of course, but much can be done to assist the missionary work, both individually and by coordinating branch activities with those of the missionary department.

It will be noted, also, that supervisors of groups of missionaries have been appointed. Let it be understood that the supervision is over men. The assignment to certain territories refers to the missionaries in these territories. These group supervisors are not in any way in charge of local work. But to these supervisors is given the task of promoting missionary work and interests, and we urge the local workers to heartily cooperate with them.

In this connection it is well to announce that the missionary work in Far West, Holden and Kansas City Stakes will be directly under the supervision of the members of the Twelve at headquarters. Brother G. T. Griffiths, in addition to his Indian work, will supervise directly the missionary work in Eastern and Western Oklahoma Districts.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, May 3.

THE WEEKLY LETTER

To All General Conference Appointees: The weekly letter will be continued, and all general appointees, local and missionary, are expected to write to headquarters each week. All communications, local or missionary, should be mailed to "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Box 255, Independence, Missouri." At the top of the first page of the letter indicate the character of the communication. For example, if it is a weekly letter from a missionary, write at top, "Weekly letter, missionary." If from a local worker, "Weekly letter, local." If it is a report, so indicate. If a letter of inquiry, so indicate. It is well also, to indicate the department to whose attention it is desired the communication shall come, as "Attention Statistical Department," "Attention Missionary Department," "Attention Bishopric," "Attention Presidency," "Attention Publicity Department," etc.

It is hoped that the brethren will make consistent effort to comply with the foregoing requests.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 1, 1920.

Elder Edward Rannie has resigned the presidency of the Central Oklahoma District, because of his appointment to labor in another field, and the Presidency has appointed Elder Joseph G. Smith to succeed him until the convening of the next conference of said district. Those concerned please take notice.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

To the Missionaries Under General Appointment

Constantly recurring complications at home and abroad are calling for a solution which the world is not able to furnish. In the gospel of Jesus Christ we have that which would solve all the world's perplexities. It therefore emphasizes the necessity for a speeding up of its promulgation.

We, therefore, urge that all the men will without delay enter the field to which they have been appointed. We are planning on putting forth an intensive missionary campaign this summer, with the assistance of such local singers and musicians as we may be able to enlist. We trust everyone who can assist in this kind of work will report at once, and assignments will be made so far as possible.

Two things quite necessary to successful missionary efforts are organization and cooperation; and that the benefits of both may be secured, missionaries have been arranged in groups, each group under a supervisor.

It is the duty of the supervisors to organize and direct the missionary work; and we earnestly solicit the cooperation of all conference appointees, district and branch officers. In fact every member of the church who feels personally interested should volunteer services for such work as they may be able to perform, in tracting, inviting people to the services, assisting with the singing, etc.

Every man holding the priesthood should be busy, and cooperate with the district and branch officers and missionaries in assisting these organized campaigns, or in filling week-end appointments near where he resides.

We expect missionaries to confine themselves strictly to missionary work, and not interfere with the work of the branches and districts, unless specially directed from this office. Neither should they accept local office therein.

Supervisors should keep in touch with their men and make weekly reports. Each missionary should keep constantly in touch with his supervisor, but this does not excuse him from writing his weekly letter as heretofore. In this he should state where he has been and what he has been doing. Each missionary should from month to month make his monthly statistical report, and under the heading of REMARKS give a summary of the month's work. Let the weekly letter to headquarters be mailed to "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Box 255, Independence, Missouri." Report at top of first page should be marked: "Weekly Letter, Missionary." The list of appointments follows:

Group Supervisors

Arizona: William Anderson.

It has been noted that some of the missionaries left their fields to attend several reunions. In some instances as many as twenty-four general conference appointees have been in attendance at one reunion. Missionaries should remain in the field to which they have been appointed, unless instructed or given permission to attend reunions in other districts.

We invite the fullest cooperation between the district and branch officers and the missionary force, and pray God's blessing may be with all in their efforts to spread the message of peace and goodwill.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE,

By U. W. Greene.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 1, 1920.

Requests for prayers

George E. Richardson, of Farmington, Missouri, requests prayers of the Saints. He is bedfast with kidney disease and his family, wife and six children, are much in need of his support.

Sallie Williams, of Eros, Louisiana, requests prayers for her stepmother, who has been ill for seventeen months.

Spokane Sunday School Officers

W. W. Wood has been appointed district secretary to fill vacancy made by death of Sister Gilmore. Will all local secretaries be prompt in getting in reports on or before June 12 so he may report to coming convention. Do not neglect this. Address him 127 South Regal Street, Spokane, Washington. Mrs. J. A. Bronson, superintendent, Gibbs, Idaho.

Conference Notices

Pottawattamie, at Underwood, Iowa, May 28, 29, 30. Elsie Lapworth, secretary.

Western Maine, Stonington, May 29 and 30. George H. Knowlton, Stonington, Maine.

Spring River, at Webb City, Missouri, June 12 and 13. John C. Virgin, secretary.

The Religio Department

Notice to Secretaries

All local secretaries who have not yet done so are requested to at once send to us a list of the names and addresses of all their officers, stating the district or stake in which they are located; and all district secretaries are likewise asked to send the names and addresses of the secretaries of all locals. We are issuing a very important letter of instructions and must have these names and addresses. Mark your letter for The Religio Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

General Secretary.

Pastoral Notices

Northeastern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Districts: According to the "powers that be" I now say adieu to good old Northeastern Illinois District and the Saints there, so far as my labors this year are concerned. However, I shall long remember my eight years of ministerial labor there, and nothing will ever erase from my memory the kindness shown me while your servant. While my labors will be in Southern Wisconsin, I am sure that I will find my mind now and then thinking of you, and while absent in person, I will be with you in spirit, and hope that this may be the best year that the district has ever seen. To all those desiring district aid or direction, please address Elder J. L. Cooper, 430 South Seventh Street, DeKalb, Illinois. As first vice president of the district, he will answer all calls. And I assure you he will do his best and will make you a willing officer. I am thankful he is this year under conference appointment in Northeastern Illinois. I hope for him the same kindly support that you have so freely given to me and those associated with me, in district work. This also includes my services as chairman of the reunion committee and let me say: I hope that every Saint in the district will remember, that the success of the committee, with the new reunion grounds, purchased March 1, depends on how you all stand behind them as your servants. It is a fine location and I am sure you will all be pleased when you see it. Elder W. L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Street, Chicago, is secretary-treasurer of the committee and will be glad to receipt for money at any time.

To the Saints of Southern Wisconsin district I would say: I have no sorrow so far as being returned here is concerned; in fact it seems like coming home! Unless there are more men sent here Brother B. C. Flint and I will be the only two under conference appointment, this year, but I am thankful that we have so many willing local men, who can assist us so much and in so many ways. Brother Flint being ordained a seventy, will give his special attention to missionary work, and I to the district work, as instructed by the appointing powers. Brother Flint's health is not the best, but being relieved of the burden of the district matters will I trust, have better health and answer calls for new places and missionary efforts, throughout the district, and at times we will combine our efforts. I wish especially to call attention to the fact that we also have Patriarch W. A. McDowell, who is appointed to Northeastern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin and I hope the branch presidents of the district will not be slow in asking the services of Brother McDowell, or Northeastern Illinois will get more than their share of his services.

In Doctrine and Covenants 125:3 we read: "The patriarch is an evangelical minister. The duties of this office are to be an evangelical minister; to preach, teach, expound, exhort, to be a revivalist, and to visit branches and districts, as wisdom may direct, invitation, request, or the Spirit of God determine and require, to comfort the Saints." So please do not fail to "request." So far as possible then we will try to have Brother McDowell assist in the special meetings held in each branch.

May this be a year of great growth to the church, not only in Wisconsin but throughout the church.

Brother Frederick M. Smith says our aim should be 10,000 baptisms instead of 2,500 or 3,000, as has been in the past. May each of us do our part that this may be realized. One and all should remember the reunion of 1920, at Madison, and make every effort to be there. The date to be August 27 to September 5. The date of the district conference at Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, in June, will soon be published. We hope there will be a good turnout at the conference. Matters in Milwaukee now demand attention, but will try and reach all the branches as soon as possible. Your servant in Christ,

J. O. DUTTON.

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, May 5.

To the Saints of the Southern California District; Greeting: Having been appointed missionary to the district, we desire to get in touch with all the scattered Saints or those who may desire preaching where opportunity may afford, or where new openings may be effected. The Lord has admonished us to warn our neighbors, and again in the late revelation to the church concerning missionary work, that "the work in this line must be hastened." Let us all then heed the call and do what we can. Address: Jesse M. Simons, 1315 East Sixty-first Street, Los Angeles, California.

Course in Religious Education

The committee of members of the Quorum of Twelve and other general church officers appointed by the First Presidency to pass upon the applications for next year's course in Religious Education at Graceland College expect to have a meeting early in June.

All persons interested or who know of others who are interested should take notice and be sure that all applications are in the hands of the President of the College before June 1.

For further information and application blanks address the President of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

WHORLOW—Mary Ann Sanders was born February 7, 1845, in Kent County, England. Married Edward William Whorlow January 5, 1865, in England. They with one child came to America in April, 1869. Emigrated to Kansas, where they remained 20 years. Moved to Allendale, Missouri, in 1889. To them were born 8 children. Died March 29, 1920, at Grant City, Missouri. Four of the children were present at her death. She had united with the church about 35 years ago, and remained faithful until death. Funeral at Allendale in the Saints' church. Sermon by Eli Hayer.

ANDREWS—Margaret Andrews was born May 27, 1840, at Irvington, New Jersey. Baptized October 28, 1866, Fall River, Massachusetts. Died March 15, 1920; funeral services at Saints' church, sermon by Horatio W. Howlett, interment in family cemetery, "Head of Westport," Massachusetts. She was one of the oldest members of Fall River Branch. Death superinduced by a fall and subsequent operation. She lived a patient and consistent life.

PYCOCK—James Pycok was born at Wainfleet, Lincolnshire, England, April 16, 1852. Married Elizabeth Ann Whitworth, May 16, 1878. Six children were born: James, David, John, Mrs. A. Hamilton, Mrs. H. Seymore, Mrs. Ed. Tiffin, who with his companion and adopted daughter survive. He left eight grandchildren. Died May 2, at his home in Humber Bay, Ontario. Came to Canada in 1886 and was one of the first baptized in Humber Bay, September 10, 1896. Services in Saints' church, by A. F. McLean. Interment in Park Lawn Cemetery.

weeks, up to April 23, and with splendid interest; many of the old-time Saints are renewing their covenants, and many nonmembers are in attendance. All seem to be universally delighted with his message.

The Des Moines District is to have some extra good numbers at the educational conference at Boone, Iowa, June 4 to 6. Stewardship and economic problems will be discussed, the college quartet will furnish a musical concert. District President H. H. Hand will resign, and there is talk of his moving from the district. Roy Cheville, of Rhodes, Iowa, will for the present look after publication items for the Dispatch. The Des Moines Young Men's Sunday School Class has a good ball team and has arranged a schedule of games with several other church teams in Des Moines, from May 3 to 24. The Dispatch is growing better right along and is filling a useful place in disseminating information in the district that is largely of local interest.

We are informed that a nine-pound boy has come to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Smith, at Independence, Missouri. We congratulate the architect department on acquiring the new assistant.

Dean Wight, stepson of Elder J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, has received an appointment as cadet at the United States Naval School at Annapolis, and will enter on the 8th. He took preparational work at Columbia, Missouri, the past year and in the examination ranked second in Iowa. He has attended Graceland College the past year. The course covers four years and graduates to the title of ensign, equal to second lieutenant in the army.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

The Saint Louis Branch has been fortunate in securing a building with unusual facilities. We are informed that it compares favorably with the best buildings held by the church in seating capacity and in acoustic properties, with a kitchen and dining room. They are fortunate in securing this building because the congregation which had previously owned it had moved to the west end of the city, upon receiving a liberal contribution from one of its members. As previously announced, the church was formally opened for services on April 16, with Apostle T. W. Williams as the speaker, and with excellent music under E. C. Bell, who presided also at the organ. The church building includes a fine pipe organ valued at several thousand dollars. Brother Williams has been holding continued sessions for at least two

FROM THE BRANCHES

Waterloo, Iowa. The Oriole Girls are but few in number but they have recently cleared $27 at a box social. They are to give an apron social soon. They and the Women's Department have completed a quilt which they jointly purchased and presented to one of their number who is soon to need these household necessities in a home of her own. We have a vacant lot back of our little church, which we are going to plant to potatoes, everyone donating a little of his time to the work, the proceeds to go into the branch fund. Ivy Carpenter Fisher has taken charge of the Home and Child Welfare department of the women's work and we are going to have something good.

Pontiac, Michigan. Special opening services for the basement of the new church located on Front Street, will be held Sunday, May 16. Those coming on the interurban get off at Pike Street and go west to the first street past the viaduct and one half block south.

PRINTERS' INK MUST GIVE HELP TO THE MINISTRY

Publicity is the power of an idea multiplied by Printer's Ink. Minds must conceive the thought but the printing press may copy it by millions and the true idea can be sent with the speed of an express into all parts of the globe, once it has been given the wings of publicity. All races of men now read, and what they read profoundly affects their beliefs and their lives.

Printer's Ink can never replace the personal ministrations of our traveling elders; it cannot, nor would it compete with their service to mankind. What it can do is to supplement their efforts; it can go ahead of them to prepare the way; it can follow after to keep their converts in the faith; it can go into foreign fields and unreached fields at home and wherever it goes it can say again what the preacher has spoken to a few, and can say that powerfully and with effect.

Printer's Ink is limited only by the funds which are supplied. Our task is the converting of the world. It is a missionary work in which we can all join. This is your chance.

A Review of Our Church History

A synopsis of sermon by S. A. Burgess at General Conference, Independence, Missouri, April 11, 1920.

How many of us have thought that when we all teach the same thing there may be at times a tendency to repetition, if not to monotony? However, there are some things which will bear repeating at this time. So even though they have been said before, we will not avoid saying them again if necessary to the topic assigned us.

The Church of God—the Gospel

A review of our church history properly considers the church of God in all ages of the world, its purpose as manifested in the ages past and what this age means. For this age is referred to by one of the apostles, Peter, as "the times of the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 21.)

It is the age of fulfillment and completion. It is the time of proving, and gives again the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to the world. It is because of the restored gospel that this is the age of fulfillment.

It is because it is so fully and exclusively the gospel of Jesus Christ that is restored that we take our text in the first chapter of the gospel according to Saint John:

"In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made. In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in the world, and the world perceiveth it not. Then was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came into the world for a witness, to bear witness of the light, to bear record of the gospel through the Son, unto all, that through him men might believe. He was not the light, but came to bear witness of that light, which was the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world; even the Son of God. He who was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; only to them who believe on his name. He was born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the same word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."—John 1: 1-14, I. V.

We note that while in him was the gospel and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men, it is also stated that he is the true light which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, even the Son of God. The same is stated in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3. Peter speaks of the gospel as a light in a dark place. (2 Peter 2: 19.) And in these latter days we are told the light is beginning to break forth among the children of men. (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4, 5.) And it is the light that shineth in darkness. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3.)

In all these passages and others is the gospel referred to as a light in darkness; as a light that lighteneth the minds of men, evidently increasing their understanding. Daniel expresses it clearly in the last chapter of his prophecy. (Daniel 12: 4.) "Shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

Age of Enlightenment

We should naturally expect that knowledge would be increased by the enlightenment of the gospel, and this plainly is the voice of revelation in the word of God. It is again illustrated in the parable of the woman and the meal, as recited in the 21st verse of the 13th chapter of Luke: "Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God? It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

In 1820 a young boy went out to pray and asked which was the true church. He relates that in reply to his prayer he received a vision; he saw the Father and the Son, and was given commandments which led up to the establishment of the church. This was light coming in the world, and the result has been a tremendous leavening force in the increase of intelligence. There is not a department of human knowledge but what shows the effect of the enlightenment of the past one hundred years.

Concerning our physical light alone there are those here before us this morning who can remember when the best light they had was a tallow dip. Abraham Lincoln studied by the light of a torch or fire. The tallow dip had been used for hundreds and thousands of years, and no progress made, but within fifty years we have seen the development of kerosene, the development of the kerosene lamp and special burners, gas, the Bunsen burner, the electric light, the incandescent light, and now special kinds of bulbs, such as the tungsten burner and indirect lightning. The development of even the past ten years has been remarkable, to say nothing of the past fifty years.

We cannot do more here than simply refer to the marvelous development in transportation; from the cart of the ages past, which was still the means of locomotion one hundred years ago, to the railroad train, the electric car, the automobile, and the flying machine.

It is true of science and education, of the study of the human mind in psychology, of medicine, theology, economics, and biology. Darwin did not advance his theory until the fifties. More progress has been made in human knowledge in the last one hundred years, by far, than in over two thousand years before. In fact, we know of no other age in the history of the world when the rate of intellectual progress has been as great as it has been in this past century. And this because light has come into the world.

Revelation

In the field of religion the gospel has indeed proven a leaven to leaven the whole loaf. There probably is not a so-called Christian church which has not changed its creed in the last one hundred years, while the membership ana whole, have gone much beyond what their creeds concede of truth. A revelation from God was quite universally denied a hundred years ago. To-day there are many individuals, and even some ministers, who are ready to teach that we should be able to hear from God as readily now as in the ages past.

It is true, however, that even to-day, the controlling authority—"those professors" as a whole, of these various churches still will call in question present-day revelation. And that is, after all, their principal cause of objection to this church. It is not on the grounds of Christianity. For it is true that no church teaches as emphatically the mission of Jesus Christ. Some others are now talking of a return to the New Testament church, and its evangelism, but this young boy preached a hundred years ago such a return and a restoration of the New Testament church. He went farther and insisted that the church to-day should have the same God-ordained and called officers; that the church to-day should have the same gifts of healing and the like, as in the times of the New Testament. And he taught revelation from God.

Some of our opponents have conceded in private, though we can readily see why they will not make a like confession in public, that they have no objection to our church on the ground of the morality of its members, or as a Christian church, but wholly on the basis of present-day revelation. And why? Because God has not talked to them. They have no revelation. They have the outward shell, but not the substance of the gifts and fruits of the spirits—they have a mere form.

But present-day revelation being a certainty, as it is, and that fact once generally conceded, they might as well shut up their doors. And that fact of present-day revelation is coming to be more and more conceded by the thinking public.

The doctrines concerning God, concerning hell, the power of evil, concerning baptism and the second coming of Christ, and in particular infant baptism, have all been changed in the last one hundred years. The laying on of hands for the healing of the sick is recognized now by some of the old established churches—in the Emmanuel movement, and other similar movements in other church organizations. Still we must recognize the great and vital difference between human administration and the Spirit of God; for the Spirit of God cleanses also from sin. It cleanses the soul as well as the body.

The attack of the agnostic that God is partial and that man was left for long ages without the gospel has been met in the Inspired Version and in the Book of Mormon, since it shows that God is the Father of all living, and will speak to one as unto another, when they are willing and ready to receive.

Social Justice

To-day the great problem is industrial unrest, the need of economic justice, the necessity of cooperation, and for the establishment of a city, to which even the name Zion is applied. Long before the danger and necessity were recognized in America, the church through this young man, Joseph Smith, presented the industrial solution in consecration, stewardship, inheritance, the storehouse, and spiritual and industrial Zion.

The gospel has had a tremendous effect in the religious and the industrial world of to-day, it has affected all departments of science in the greater enlightenment and understanding of humanity. What has been the history of progress of the church? These principles were all laid down in the first fifteen years of the century. What progress has the church made? Let us first review briefly that history.

History

Some one has stated that history is a record of progress of the Supreme One through the ages. The only right way to study history is to place one's self in accord with the divine mind, earnestly seeking to read the great lessons of the past. If that is true of secular history, certainly it is more completely true of religious history, the record of God's dealings with man.

Such men as Doctor G. Stanley Hall would recognize for America a new ideal of culture. The ideal of the German university has been simply the gaining of knowledge—the solving of a set problem. The English ideal was the creation and development of gentlemen. The American ideal should be humanism, and every field of knowledge should be considered in connection with the whole field of knowledge in epistemology, and its practical aspects in making life more worth living.

Nor do we mean this in an immediately pragmatic sense, but having a largeness of view, and the broadest possible basis. The purpose of the study of history is not then merely to memorize a few dates, nor is it simply mental gymnastics but is to help us to understand our problems of to-day, and to prepare us to meet the problems of the future.

Joseph Smith received divine instruction to prepare him for his work through the visitation of an angel on September 23, in the years of 1823 to 1827. At the latter date he was given the plates of the Book of Mormon. Through difficulties, the work of translation was completed, and the work prepared for the printer. He and Oliver Cowdery were both baptized and ordained to the Aaronic priesthood, and provision made for ordination to the Melchisedec priesthood, as soon as the church was organized, on April 6, 1830.

When Revelations Were Given

It may be a matter of surprise to note that the revelations included in the Doctrine and Covenants show in 1828 two revelations; in 1829, fourteen; in 1830, twenty; in 1831, thirty-seven; in 1832 and 1833, thirteen for each year. This means that in two years, 1830-1831, fifty-seven revelations were received. In five years, 1829 to 1833, ninety-seven revelations out of the one hundred and six received prior to 1844. In fact, there were only four received from 1835 to 1844, inclusive.

In the Reorganization in 1860 to 1873 three short revelations were received. In the fifty-four years, 1860 to 1914, fifteen revelations in all.

This is natural, because much more instruction was needed in the period of formation which is sometimes referred to as the period of the giving of the law; while some refer to the second period, 1860 to 1915, as the period of the interpretation of the law; and the present period since 1915 as the period of the administration and fulfillment of the law.

Of course, such classifications can only be partly accepted, since there is a continual need of further light and revelation in the giving of the law, and there is also a present need of interpretation. A great deal was done by way of interpretation in the first fourteen years, and a decided effort was made then to carry into effect the law for the establishment of Zion.

Historical Precedents

One of our good brethren suggested that we do not care to-day for historical precedents. That is not correct. The interpretation given by the men who first received and applied the law is of the greatest importance, and should be received with utmost respect. The inference is that the interpretation of the past is correct. It is upon those who would apply a different interpretation to show the contrary.

At the same time an interpretation of the past should not be considered in such a formal way as to close the possibility to all further consideration, for it is quite possible that with later progress we may act more closely in harmony with the law. Also with the changing conditions in this age of rapid progress and hastening time, our methods should be the best adapted to meet the present conditions and situations.

The fact that other methods were found acceptable in the past is not conclusive. But the fundamentals of the law, its principles, are unchangeable. It is good for us to see not only the interpretations of the past but also the application of the law then made—the attempts at the fulfillment of the law and its results in blessings—the failures that were made and why they were made.

As early as 1830 the trip to Jackson County was undertaken via Saint Louis, and the move also made to Kirtland, Ohio. The Temple Lot was dedicated in August, 1831.

First Presidency

It is of interest to note that high priests were ordained in January, 1831, and Bishop Partridge was called on February 4, 1831, Joseph Smith was ordained at Amherst, Ohio, as president of the high priesthood on January 25, 1832, and Frederick G. Williams was chosen as his counselor the following March, and Sidney Rigdon in 1833. Provision was made so early for the First Presidency.

We find it also provided for in the fundamental law in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1, 17. Joseph Smith called the first elder of the church, and provision is made for ordaining of the president of the high priesthood or presiding elder. Also as early as 1831 we find the First Presidency provided for in connection with the work of the bishop in Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2, and also 68: 2, 3. This is also confirmed in the call of Frederick G. Williams (section 80: 1), as well as in other passages.

Thereafter the high council was organized on February 17, 1834, at Kirtland, and shortly after a high council was organized in Zion. The fact that high priests were ordained in January, 1831, and the high council organized in February, 1834, is of great importance. Some have supposed that because of the work that was done by a council of high priests in the early church that the high priests should do exclusively such work to-day.

Twelve and Seventy

But we may note that the Quorum of Twelve was not called and ordained until the month of February, 1835, and the first seventy were also called on the last day of the same month. In the early days of the church, work was done by a council of high priests, which properly belonged to these quorums, when they were organized and set in order.

But, on the other hand, we should remember that the high council has very much larger powers and responsibilities than has been the case in much of the history of the Reorganization. Their decisions are provided for as being of equal weight with that of the Presidency or Quorum of Twelve. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, 15.) A council of high priests is also provided for if the church falls into disorder, or any part of it; and a like provision is made in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 10, for the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy.

The high councils have a great responsibility in the establishment of Zion and her stakes, as will readily be seen by a careful study of the fundamental law and revelations of God. Their responsibility is not simply judicial, but also that of an advisory body in the administration of the establishment of Zion and her stakes. And we rejoice to see the high council moving forward to undertake more and more of this work and duty.

To our present view it is rather startling to note the short time allowed for the carrying out of certain works and responsibilities. The Temple Lot was purchased in August, 1831, and a movement was made to settle Jackson County. As early as 1833 they were finally expelled from Jackson County, and by 1839 were finally expelled from Missouri. It was a period of trouble and of trial, and a surprisingly short time were they allowed for the establishment of Zion.

Why Driven Out

There is much speculation at times as to the cause. No doubt they made mistakes in boasting, and attempting to administer too much themselves instead of placing their confidence in God. But the Lord has declared plainly the reasons for their expulsion:

“Verily, I say unto you, concerning your brethren who have been afflicted, and persecuted, and cast out from the land of their inheritance, I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions; yet, I will own them, and they shall be mine in that day when I shall come to make up my jewels. . . . Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances. They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me.”—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 1, 3.

It was because of contentions and of strife. There was division between the leading officers of the church; they found fault with one another, and with Joseph Smith, unjustly. Contentions, jarrings, envyings and strife. How is it with us to-day?

The above was given in December, 1833, and the following June additional revelation was given on Fishing River, in Missouri:

“Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer. I speak not concerning those who are appointed to lead my people, who are the first elders of my church, for they are not all under this condemnation; but I speak concerning my churches abroad; there are many who will say, Where is their God: Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys. Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion.”—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, 3.

Again is emphasis laid upon their transgressions, and also their unwillingness to impart to the poor, and their unwillingness to do their share in the building up of Zion by contributing of their means.

Kirtland Temple

In 1836 the Kirtland Temple had been completed, and, by the way, some have estimated that if the church to-day made a similar sacrifice for a temple, it would mean the raising of several million dollars compared to the effort that they made in the building of Kirtland Temple. They made the most of these self denials, and went to work with all their might to accomplish that work of God. As a result the Spirit of God was poured out upon them in power, and to Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith the Savior appeared, and also Elias and Elijah.

We may speak of our progress to-day, but there was a high point reached in inspirational power when they were able again to talk with the Master of light and with these prophets of old.

The fact that they made mistakes by no means excuses the breach of all law and equity by their oppressors. It by no means nullifies the law, nor the sincere effort they made.

They passed the necessary resolutions, they moved forward in an earnest effort to establish Zion. They moved both in Far West and also in Nauvoo for the establishment of schools, and places of higher education. They stood clearly against slavery and against the liquor traffic. That has always been the position of the church. In Nauvoo a decided effort was also made for the erection of the temple. It was started in 1841, and in three years had not been completed. It has taken ten years at times to do a much lesser work. We need not speak in condemnation of their earnest devotion. Still it was not enough.

Reference has been made to the Masonic Temple. There were such difficulties there, but the building was a small one. The grave feature is that they had failed in their undertaking and in their responsibilities to build the temple of God within the time allotted.

We will say but little concerning the Nauvoo charter, and its extraordinary powers. It was duly granted by the State Legislature and was not unusual for that time, nor was the Nauvoo Legion a surprising feature, when we remember that Nauvoo was on the frontier, and that Iowa was not yet organized as a State, and many Indians were still to be found in Illinois. We make but little comment upon these now because they are not of the immediate importance to us, as are other portions of the history of the church.

The church failed to complete the temple. Probably because of the wrongs of men within the church, the continuation of this strife and bitterness within the church, Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith were slain, and the church which had once been so numerous was scattered abroad.

Factions

There were various factions started, by Brigham Young, by Strang, Lyman Wight, and others. The most significant feature is how very small a percentage of the church as it then existed can be thus accounted for. Probably not more than ten per cent can be thus accounted for in any shape or form.

Reorganized Church

The Reorganization was started in 1852, and gained marked strength with the coming of young Joseph, our late President Joseph Smith, in 1860. But still the Reorganization has gathered but a small part of the scattered fragments.

If we consider the estimate of Joseph Smith of two hundred thousand as being correct, and when we realize the number that were scattered through the valley, it probably is not too much to suggest that there are five hundred thousand descendants of old Latter Day Saints in the United States, not connected with the church. The importance of retaining our young people cannot be overestimated, and means fully as much, if not more, than the making of new converts.

The faction in Utah, under Brigham Young, with polygamy and other things has made the way difficult for the true church, so its development has been slow.

In the old church a mission had been sent to England as early as 1837, to Palestine and Australia in 1840, and to Germany in 1841. The Reorganization, as early as 1860, attempted to reestablish the European mission, and succeeded in doing so in the course of a few years.

In 1876 a return was begun to Independence. In 1865 the headquarters of the church were established in Plano. About 1880 the Herald Publishing House moved to Lamoni, Iowa, and Joseph Smith moved with it. In fact, the settlement had been made in Plano, prior to 1865, but that is the date when he moved there.

At the time that the church headquarters were established at Lamoni, there was at least one saloon in the town, but that was quickly abolished. The same thing proved to be the case in Independence, when the headquarters of the church, the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric were established there in the first decade of this century. It was again but a short time until the saloon was shut out of Independence, and that without waiting for national prohibition.

The past 30 years has seen the erection of Graceland College, and its development. It has seen the establishment of the several old folks' homes, and their development to their present day efficiency. It has seen the establishment of the Children's Home, and of the Independence Sanitarium. It has seen, in fact, a great development of the institutional work of the church. Yet much still remains to be done.

Zion

As we consider the establishment of Zion and what it will mean, we are reminded of those, who in early youth arose with a glad hope of seeing Zion and economic justice established in their day. They have labored long years, and in later years have lain down to rest, and their remains may be found in cemeteries at Independence, Lamoni, and elsewhere. They have had the ideal, but their hopes were not fulfilled. Can we establish it? Shall our hope be now fulfilled?

We have voted to make some decided forward steps, but voting is not enough. No, not even if the votes be backed up by our pocketbooks. It is not alone the moving up of our right hand; it is not alone in the devoting of our moneys that Zion will be established, for Zion is the pure in heart. We may give of our moneys, we may buy land, we may erect buildings, and still be no nearer the solution of the economic problem and the establishment of a place of righteousness than we were before we started.

We are reminded of a statement of our late President Joseph Smith, to the effect that he would rather be a watchman on some remote tower far away, and know in his heart, though he were lonely, that he was clean before God, than to sit down in the very midst of the city of Zion and know that his heart and life were not right before God. Zion is the pure in heart.

There is a necessity that we should cleanse ourselves from secret sin; there is necessity that we should set our ideal high and live to it; there is necessity that we should contribute of our means, it is true, still we cannot desire and hope for the blessings of God while there are contentions, envyings, and strife among us. The responsibility is laid upon the whole church, but in an especial sense is it laid upon those who are established in the central place.

The Receiving of Revelation

BY L. G. HOLLOWAY

A challenge accepted; the Bible itself is the result of men deciding on what is revelation from God—and even the ten commandments were accepted by common consent.

In a recent number of Messiah's Advocate, a publication of the Advent Christian church of Oakland, California, appears a criticism of the recent revelation coming to the church, and the manner of its acceptance by the General Conference. For the benefit of the readers of the HERALD we present the criticism, as it is on a par with many others of a similar nature. The first two paragraphs are taken from Zion's Ensign:

"The revelation presented by President Frederick M. Smith to the General Conference on April 7 came as no surprise to the church. It has been evident for many months that changes should be made if the Quorum of Twelve accomplished the strenuous work which seems to be so necessary. . . .

"When the conference convenes this afternoon and hears from the quorums as to whether the matter presented by President Smith on yesterday is in THEIR judgment a revelation of God's will, the first station in the journey of the Conference will have been reached.' Emphasis and caps, ours.

"We consider the above RICH! Any one who cannot see through the whole thing in an instant is surely stupid.

"Note: 1. The president has a 'revelation,' which, he, no doubt, claims, came from GOD.

"Note: 2. The 'conference' must convene to hear from the 'quorums.' What about? To see whether they will accept this 'revelation' or not? No! To see 'whether the matter' (this purported 'revelation') presented by President Smith, 'is in THEIR judgment a revelation of God's will.' If anyone can beat such a method of procedure, let him try it. Or if he can find anything like it in the Bible, let him show it.

"Now imagine that Paul when he got a 'revelation' that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs (see Ephesians) got the Ephesian church together to see if 'in THEIR judgment' it really was 'a revelation of God's will'!

"And let us suppose that Peter—when he had the vision of the sheet let down—when the Lord taught him about the Gentiles in a 'revelation,' said to the household of Cornelius, or to the church: 'I wish, brethren, you would get together at once and see if in your judgment this vision and revelation I had on the house-top is FROM GOD!' Supposing Peter had been so childish as to suggest it and approve of it, what respect could Christians then and now have had for Peter and SUCH a 'revelation'?

"The difference between men in Paul's day who got a 'revelation,' and these last-day false prophets is, THEIR revelation was accepted as 'a revelation of God's will'—and it was such. Modern prophets must have a quorum of uninspired men to see if a revelation is—in their judgment—from God.

"And IF they found on investigation—investigating a revelation of GOD and passing on it—that the revelation of this President Smith was NOT 'a revelation of God's will,' and if they had the courage and manhood to speak out the truth, would they not find Mr. Smith a mere pretender, just as the rest of us have known for many years? What think ye? How long will intelligent men and women continue to be fooled?"

No doubt it will appear strange to many of our readers that any man or church who has repeatedly refused to allow God to reveal anything now for the benefit of mankind can intelligently criticize the receiving or accepting of a divine message. It is well known to all that the Advent Christian Church has so far alienated itself from God that they have never in the history of that organization been known to receive anything that even had the slightest resemblance to a revelation from God. From such an organization as that we could not expect to receive any competent advice as to the proper procedure in receiving revelations.

The editor who makes the criticism (Mr. Schaumburg) raises the questions: "If anyone can beat such a method of procedure, let him try it. Or if he can find anything like it in the Bible, let him show it." For the benefit of the editor and others concerned let us direct attention to certain facts that every Bible student should know.

First, we ask the question, Who determined just what should appear in the Bible, as we now have it? Is not our critic aware of the fact that a great amount of material had to be passed on by men as to whether it was authentic or that which would not stand the divine test as it now appears in our Bible. Let us quote from a source the truthfulness of which he will not care to question. We here present:

"The Council of Trent (1545-63) at its fourth session (April 8, 1546) passed a decree concerning the canonical Scriptures, which gave a list of the books which were received, made the vulgate Latin version the sole authoritative source of quotation, and threatened with punishment those who presumed to interpret the Scriptures contrary to the sense given them by the Fathers."—The New International Encyclopedia, vol. 3, article "Bible."

From the above it will be clearly seen that this council determined what should appear in the Bible as being authoritative. Our friend the editor is compelled to accept the work of this council of the Catholic church as determining for him what is the word of God and what is not. There was a great amount of supposed sacred writings which was rejected by different councils as they sat and passed upon different documents coming into their hands for examination. Year after year different writings were added by different men as that which in their opinion represented the voice of God as the following will show:

"The Reformers separated the books which had no Hebrew original (i. e. the Apocrypha) from the rest, and placed them at the end; the remaining books, as they stood in the Vulgate, were then in the order which they still retain in the English Bible. The tripartite division of the Hebrew canon thus recognized by Jewish tradition can, however, be traced back far beyond the Talmud. The Proverbs of Jesus, the son of Sirach (c. 200 B. C.) which form now the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus, were translated into Greek by the grandson of the author at about 130 B. C.; and in the preface prefixed by him to his translation he speaks of 'the law, and the prophets, and the other books of our fathers,' and again of 'the law, and the prophets, and the rest of the books,' expressions which point naturally to the same three-fold division which was afterwards universally recognized by the Jews. The terms used, however, do not show that the Hagiographa was already completed, as we now have it; it would be entirely consistent with them, if, for instance, particular books, as Esther, or Daniel, or Ecclesiastes, were only added to the collection subsequently."—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 3, 11th edition, page 850, article "Bible."

To place the matter beyond the possibility of successful controversy we here present evidence which clearly establishes the fact that step by step other writings were sifted out until we finally received the Bible as we have it now. The italics are ours:

"Concurrently with the tendency to discriminate between the higher authority of certain writings and the lower authority of others, there was also a tendency to collect and group together writings of the first class. The earliest example of this tendency is in the case of the Pauline Epistles. Marcion, we know (c. A. D. 140), had a collection of ten out of thirteen, in the order, Galatians, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Romans, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, Laodiceans, (equals Ephesians), Colossians, Philippians, Philemon. We observe that the pastorals are omitted. But it is highly probable that the collection went back a full generation before Marcion. The Short Epistle of Polycarp contains references or allusions to no less than nine out of the thirteen epistles, including 2 Thessalonians, Ephesians, 1 and 2 Timothy. Ignatius, writing just before, gives clear indications of six, including 1 Timothy and Titus. The inference lies near at hand that both writers had access to the full collection of thirteen, not omitting the pastorals. Polycarp (ad Philemon 13: 2) shows how strong was the interest in collecting the writings of eminent men. . . .

"The famous passage from Irenaeus (Adv. Haer 3, 15: 8) assumes the possession by the Church of four authoritative Gospels and no more. This is the general view of the Church of his time, except the little clique known as the Alogi who rejected the Fourth Gospel, and Marcion who only recognized Saint Luke. But here again, we may go back some way farther. Irenaeus writes (c. A. D. 185) as though the Four Gospels had held the field as far back as he can remember. About A. D. 170 Tatian, the disciple of Justin, composed out of these Gospels his Diatessaron. If Justin used any other Gospel, his use of it was very subordinate. Practically we may say that the estimate of the Four to which Tatian and Irenaeus testify must have been well established by the middle of the century, though sporadic instances may be found of the use of other Gospels that did not become canonical. The sifting out of these was proceeding steadily and gradually, and by the end of the century it may be regarded as complete."—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 3, 11th edition, page 876, article "Bible."

Our critic will certainly be able to realize that we have as good a right to pass on that which is to govern in our church as these men and councils had to determine not only what should be regarded as sacred writings for the use of the Catholic Church, but also nearly every other church that claims to be representative of the Christian religion. In fact the Catholic Church to-day accepts more in their translation of the Bible than do other churches. As to whether the additional matter accepted by the Catholics is true or false we do not care to discuss here. All we want to say is that some men at some time had to pass on the authenticity of that which purported to be divine direction.

We are also challenged to show any place in the Bible where anything like our procedure in the matter of approving the revelation coming through President Frederick M. Smith, took place. We gladly accept the challenge and hope our critic will remember that which we are about to say, so that in the future he will not need to make a laughing stock of himself as he has attempted to do with us, in criticizing our manner of receiving revelation. We have a most striking example as to what a true prophet of God at one time did after the Lord had spoken to him and gave certain revelation that affected the children of Israel as the law by which they should be governed. We here call attention to Moses. When he received revelation from God he came and presented the words of the Lord to the elders and the people, and the people made answer "All the Lord hath spoken we will do." (Numbers 19: 8.) Here is the rule of common consent honored by God and his servant Moses. Is there anything wrong in the above procedure? We answer no. God always regards man's right of agency. If Latter Day Saints believed in popery as some do, then we would accept without question any purported communication without submitting it to the church for their approval. Should we accept without question that which claims to be divine communication then some wise editor would at once raise the cry of forcing on the people that which they had no voice in as coming from God.

Is it not a fact we all in our human judgment pass on whether a thing is divine or not? Would God ask any individual to suppress his own judgment and accept anything without evidence when he had the right to determine as to the truth of any matter? Certainly it is the ravings of an insane mind to think that God would censure any people for using every known means at their command to determine the truth or falsity of any matter on which may depend the salvation of the souls of men.

Yes, Latter Day Saints, although called a deluded and foolish people, believe in the thought that if a thing is divine it will stand all the investigation and light that can be thrown on the matter presented. As a result when anything is presented to the church claiming to be the voice of inspiration, they not only examine its contents, but also pass on it as did the children of Israel as to their willingness to be governed by it.

No doubt our critic, the editor, if he were to follow out the logic of his own argument, would not be permitted even to allow his mind to entertain the thought that he be permitted to pass on whether a thing was true or false. Did he ever consider whether the Bible is true or is he one who opens his mouth and swallows everything that comes his way? We believe in accepting a thing because it appeals to our intelligence. That is why we accept the Bible. No church in the world is pledged to that record as we are, because we have said by conference action that we are to be governed by it. The same is true of other revelations coming from God. We are pledged to them by the voice of the people, and certainly that is a safe rule.

Will a Panic Be Averted?

BY WALTER L. YATES

Man proposes many remedies for our present social and economic ills, but only God's plan can stand the test.

Even the most optimistic of men are free to admit that perilous times are ahead of the financial world. In spite of the warnings that have been sounded, from time to time, by men of broad vision, and the heroic efforts of the Federal Reserve banking system, the situation becomes daily more grave. No economic problem in the history of the world ever equaled, in size and urgency, the present problem of the restoration of the world's finances, commerce and industry. And if the world is to be made safe for civilization itself, the problem must be solved and solved quickly. Surely the divine inspiration that dictated the need of hastening the preparations for Zion, as delivered in President Smith's message to the conference, is being made apparent to each one.

Economic disturbances during the war were to be expected, but that which is totally baffling is the way in which these conditions still continue, more than a year after the cessation of the actual fighting. While the war was being prosecuted, a direct stimulant was given to production, which together with the thrift and economy then prevailing, made these changes less noticeable. This period, however, was followed by one of waste and reckless extravagance. Lulled by a false feeling of security, inflated incomes have been lavishly expended irrespective of prices, and business, in order to meet the unprecedented demands for commodities, has been compelled to expand credit to the limit. As a result speculative values have accrued all along the line.

Labor benefited by these increases for a season, and as promises were made of an immediate reduction in the cost of living, a temporary truce obtained. Disappointed, however, in these hopes, labor unrest is, again at the forefront and employees insistently are demanding higher wages. Strikes once more are ominously common; a forerunner of what may be expected to occur more and more frequently during the next few months, provided the retail prices of commodities remain at their present levels or continue to rise.

The wisdom of the advice contained in the revelation of the Lord concerning speculation is plain now. This, however, has little value to the world, as the stern facts now confronting us prove that it is now too late to give to the country advice upon the advisability of speculation. The harm has already been done, and the sole cure is found, not in the advice, but in the painful, though purifying financial and economic self-denial and thrift that should characterize children of God.

Japan, after an experience similar to our own, is now in the midst of a serious panic. An analysis of the conditions directly responsible for their trouble may have a direct bearing upon us. At the beginning of the war, Japan enjoyed a period of unusual prosperity because of increased exports. As a result, the gold deposits of the country increased enormously, a condition which permitted the government to issue great quantities of paper currency. Speculation and extravagance followed, bringing with them an increase in the cost of living double that which we experienced during the same time. As an outcome of the high prices prevalent, the total value of imports suddenly exceeded that of exports, thus creating an adverse trade balance which had to be met by heavy shipments of gold out of the country. This in turn left their whole financial fabric without foundation; credits were impaired; then came the crash.

The present trend of our own affairs has been, and increasingly continues to be, in the same direction. For instance our gold shipments to the country of Argentina, alone, since the first of the year have amounted to $110,000,000. During the years 1914-1920 our imports from them have totaled $358,751,000, in payment of which $220,000,000 have been shipped, leaving a large balance yet to be paid. With our present inflated currency, these heavy gold exports are beginning to prove embarrassing to our credit system and we are already feeling the results.

Many are the remedies being proposed by the wisdom of man. The Supreme Council of the Allies in its "Declaration on economic conditions of the world," calls for complete demobilization; hard work; careful saving; intense production of foodstuffs and coal; stopping of extravagance and further Government loans; cessation in the inflation of currency; reduction in floating debts; and the resumption of commercial credits.

How shallow these all seem as compared to Zion! Can we not all bend every energy to the task before us? The General Conference has been a wonderful emotional experience. Let us remember the advice of William James in his chapter on "Habit"—how we must not let an emotional experience "sluice away," how after every such experience, pleasant or unpleasant, we must go out and do something. Talk Zion; live as Zion and work for Zion, and then we will have a part in the consummation of the dream of the Ages, "Zion, City of our God."

The Christian Science Monitor reports that there are 4,000 cooperative stores in the United States, as compared with 500 two years ago. Through the cooperative store, a ten-cent loaf of bread can be bought for nine cents. There lies its significance for most people.

The Higher Life

BY FRED GREGORY

The purpose of this article is to build up and strengthen the study of the soul.

To assert the dual nature of man is no new doctrine. It has been advocated from the inception of the church and zealously defended in authentically published articles and forensic discussions. In our textbooks the subject is divided into numerous headings, such as, "Preexistence of spirit," "A spirit in man," "Spirit and soul interchangeable," "Spirit exists independent of the body," "Spirit the intelligent part of man," "The body a house for the earth life," etc., and under these various subheadings an abundance of scriptural texts is found in support of the subject matter, all of which commits the church in a general way to a belief in the immortality of the spirit or soul, a doctrine we presume none would hesitate to reaffirm at any time.

To Encourage Intense Study of the Soul

The purpose of this article is not to destroy but to build up. Not to lessen but to increase the emphasis, deepen the interest, and to encourage a more intense study of the soul. There is no other subject so vital to our present or future development. The perfection we seek as a church is an individual trust, and written by the God of heaven in every man's soul. Therein is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, the foundation stones of Zion. The discovery of one's own soul is the prime guarantee of spirituality. All other "ologies," "ics," and "pathies" are of secondary consideration. In the light of the Savior's query, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" there can be no greater study.

Why Is the Subject Neglected?

Is it not strange that apart from a debate calling for direct discussion of the question, or an occasional funeral discourse, the idea of the soul or spirit being the intelligent part of our person now, is seldom spoken of, with special emphasis upon the word now. Is all thought or study of the soul and its divine nature logically limited to funerals and debates? Why the oversight? Is it deliberate or accidental? Is it not a daily question for sober thought and mention, among true godly men and women of action, or should it be left to the sectarian world, to be referred to only by ranting evangelists in their zeal without knowledge when in pursuit of converts? Surely none would thus scorn the study of the soul.

If the "body without the spirit is dead," and the "Spirit beareth witness with our spirits," and "no man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of a man which is in him," the spirit, while we are now in the flesh is the part of man that requires constant notice and emphasis. The soul is our life as well as intelligence. By reason of its presence every organ of our body functions and its removal from the body means death. Recalling the account of creation as recorded in Genesis we read, "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," which was done. This creation refers to the spirit and not the body which was afterward made of the dust of the ground, and it will be noted that the body is not said to have been made in God's image or likeness. The spirit, or soul, being made in God's likeness must necessarily be perfect as well as immortal. It must also be divine, possessing divine qualities, and these qualities must likewise be divinely perfect. Moreover, as individualized spirits, we were created in the beginning by the Father of spirits, himself a Spirit, and so from the beginning we have been detained in the preexistent world until such time as we came into the body. The question arises, Were we not actively and intelligently engaged in some heavenly pursuit while in this preexistent state? And if thus employed are not the preexistent experiences yet in the memory of the soul? Why not? Can it be possible that a perfect intelligence has no memory of the past? Surely there is an eternity of knowledge locked up in our soul which would probably be of great service to us while in this probation, if we could but draw upon it, and why should that be thought incredible? When Christ came into the world as a baby he knew no more than other babies. It is written, "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away" but how came he to remember his preexistent state? Was it the result of his perfectly balanced life, his untarnished character, his complete harmony with God? If man would open his mind fully to the divine inflow, his whole being would be harmonized and his relation to God perfect. Great indeed are the possibilities of man. Jesus said, "If therefore thine eyes be single thy whole body shall be full of light." The "light of life" is our great need. It is within, awaiting expression, not without, to be acquired; a fact of which all seem too poorly informed. Christ knew man was capable of repeating his so-called miracles, and even enjoined it upon man to do so. He knew what he was doing and why he did it. The how of doing was no mystery to him, and it is reasonable to suppose he looked for the same intelligent procedure from his followers. Should they fail, the fault was in themselves. A true gauge of genuine oneness with God is but a test of man's higher powers.

Five Senses Not Sufficient

The outer man guided by the five physical senses is not spiritual, for spiritual things are not discernible to the fleshy touch, sight, taste, smell or hearing. Mentally, this man lives wholly in a material world. He lives to eat and eats to live. Such is his vision of life. Man as a personal being should be governed from the within out, and not from the without in. The latter method forbids the soul lawful utterance, and with the "inner man" denied its legitimate channel of expression there is no hope of a sanctified life. Our conscious thoughts, words, and acts, should conform to the "soul," "life," "intelligence," within us. Perfection is written in the soul and waits unfoldment according to the gospel plan. To live from what may be learned without can never elevate the personality to the spiritual heights the soul is capable of attaining. The basis of our entire philosophy compels this belief. It is the "inner man" that is made in God's "image and likeness." This inner man expressed fully would be a reflection of God. Nothing can be added to the spirit of man. It is already perfect, God's image. The improvement is in the personality. Harmony between the conscious mind and the divine intelligence within is the task mortal beings have before them to accomplish.

The Spiritual Mind the Better State

The carnal mind is the lowest state of mind. It is the soul's intelligence limited to the perception and reflection of the "flesh." The spiritual mind is the higher and better state of mind. It is the light of life, reflecting more or less of the perfect life inherent in the soul from everlasting to everlasting. To aid us in this unification we obey the gospel and have the promise of the Holy Spirit, bearing witness with our spirits, comforting, guiding, teaching, and otherwise showing us the things of God. This greatest of all divine agencies is to abide "in" us, and hence our acting from the within out. Harmonizing our whole being, inner and outer man as one, the inner or divine nature has free and natural outlet—God manifest in the flesh. Thus the carnal thought dies and the spiritual lives. With a proper understanding of the "principles of the celestial law" and the faithful application of our God-given powers to the same, the church would soon rise above all disintegrating forces and our loftiest ideals would become almost superhumanly real, a real Zion, the hope of all.

Man must knowingly and completely give his conscious mind to the cleanest, purest and highest thoughts. Jesus spoke from experience when he said, "If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light." Says James, "A double minded man is unstable in all his ways." The New Testament scriptures do plainly teach the "full of the Holy Ghost," "sanctified," "holy," "blameless," individual life. Can we do otherwise and hope to succeed? We are responsible for the state of our mind, which is determined by the character of our thought. Unfortunate we may have been, but let us immediately be consoled by the thought that we can make ourselves over, and evidently in this respect all have need to begin work. There can be no compromise with darkness. We must walk in light.

Education Never Makes Perfect

Using the term "education" for what it means to the majority of readers can never make one perfect. Perfection is a soul quality, and not the property of science or any school of learning. But this glorious soul heritage awaits expression through the mentality and every item of truth learned, if used in harmony with the truth of one's being, adds so much more to man's mental assets and thus contributes to the soul's expression. No doubt of this, but after all is said, the soul ranks first in importance as a matter of study. There is so much chaff associated with every subject taught in our colleges and universities that Latter Day Saints need a school and curriculum peculiarly adapted to their belief. A curriculum that includes the whole truth and nothing but the truth: all wheat and no chaff. This would conserve energy and time, and we need all we have at our disposal. May we indulge the thought that the school of the prophets is to be such an institution, and further indulge the hope that the soul nature with all its godly characteristics will not be the least of the subjects taught, since the whole object of life on this mundane sphere is the expression of the soul.

Unity in the Soul

Another feature worth considering is our oneness with God. This unity is in soul or spirit. By creation we stand related to God as his children. Spirit Father and spirit children. Add to this the fact that we are made in God's image, and then further considering our obedience to the gospel by which we humans are adopted into the kingdom, thereby given power (Spirit of God) to become the sons of God (in the flesh), the completeness of man's unity with God is assured. But to accomplish the unity we are aiming at as a church, and to our knowledge we are the only church organization thus believing and working, the brotherhood of man looms up before us as a doctrine hitherto neglected, but no longer to be held in silence. The order "stand to" should mean as much to church members as it does to the marine engineer. We have hope that every active Saint, alive to the situation and intending to participate in Zion's cause will respond when the time comes. But the law must be known and intelligently observed, and all together, conscientiously, unreservedly, and lovingly, move in one solid body like the Israelites the night they left Egypt, the Spirit of God permeating every individual through and through, that God may be in all, above all, and through all.

All Creation Is One

Spiritually all creation is one. Can we imagine the many billions of spirits, or souls, of which God is the Father? Each and all were alike made in his image, and God is the Father? Each and all were alike made in his image, and God is as near to one as to another. Let us not imagine God to be selfish like mortals. Rather let us rise above our little self and behold the world God made, which may I say without being thought benighted, is even bigger than the church as we visualize it. The celestial law is the law of genuine brotherhood, the law of love, of perfect peace, and all Christly virtues, all such virtues being inherent qualities of the soul. This is no dream nor is it mere sentiment. It is a reality, and the sooner we awaken to the fact, the sooner will our ideals become real. Live in the consciousness of the soul. Live mentally in the world to which that intelligence belongs, from whence it came and whither it goeth. That is the life of the soul, the true life of which all are partakers, and of which we may even now comprehend to a wonderful degree. Let us have the confidence in ourselves that God has in us, and work together in love as we are commanded, and all will be well.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths—No. 4

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

What elements go to make a distinctive race of people?

It has been objected that the characteristics of a distinctive race such as the American race cannot have been developed within the time indicated by the Book of Mormon, because other races have remained without material change for as long a time. Such argument is hardly good logic inasmuch as it does not point out the manner of acquiring the racial distinctions of the people thus indirectly referred to, nor even state what they are. We have already shown that it is not proven that any one of them, as usually recognized, requires even as long a period of time for acquirement as has been covered by the Book of Mormon. Some ethnologists believe that we should consider the collective characteristics of a race, and not any one of them. This seems a reasonable hypothesis, but we must still examine each characteristic separately in order to determine its value and relation as between races. Such examination does not result unfavorably to the Book of Mormon record but rather confirms it in some essential features. A clear distinction should be made between opinions that may have been expressed, which are more or less contradictory oftentimes, and facts upon which sound opinions must be based. Opinions usually are the conclusions drawn from such facts as appear, and we offer these as far as they relate to this subject in precisely the same manner that another may do who differs from them for any reason that appears conclusive to him. An illustration of this may serve as well to submit something of interest concerning the American tribes. For instance, we have the statement of Professor Sayce saying that, "Mixture of blood results only in sterility or reversion to an ancestral type." He also says that mixture of blood "does not produce a new race." If man is a unit of species, as is admitted, what does produce a new race? That mixture of blood may result in increased fertility instead of sterility is shown by Professor A. H. Keene, who says: "Indian women of more than forty years have on an average, approximately, six children, while half-breed women have on an average from seven to eight . . . the fertility among half-breed women is considerably larger than among full blood women."—Anthropology, p. 153.

Examining the first statement, we find that sterility does not always result from mixture of blood. As to reversion to an ancestral type, it seems apparent that if man is a unit of species, all races would revert to the ancestral type from whence they first came, if his opinion were correct; but this does not appear to be the case, for there is a constantly increasing variety overlapping racial distinctions. Because there may be instances showing such reversion to a type, it does not necessarily follow that it is a law of nature of universal application. Or, if we admit the liability to sterility, we must conclude that the Indian is of the same race as the white man, so called; otherwise the union could not result in increased fertility, as is shown to be the case.

American races are variously divided into from two to seven groups, according to the judgment of the investigator. Of the latter divisional plan it is recognized that five groups have left notable monuments of their intelligence, art and skill. Of the Quichuas of Peru, who belong to the South Pacific group, Professor Butler says: "They developed agriculture, domesticated animals, constructed large buildings of stone, were expert workers in metals, and devised a method of record keeping by means of strings and knots called quippus."—Americana. The domestication of the llama and the alpaca must have required a great period of time to accomplish, yet there are none of either species to be found wild. They are used to carry burdens, to yield wool, and also flesh for food, and were found domesticated as thoroughly at the time of their discovery by Europeans as they are at the present day.

It is generally considered that the American tribes are of all one race, but instances of contrary opinions indicate that racial distinctions are not agreed upon; hence some have claimed that the Esquimo is of a distinct race, while the majority consider that no racial distinction exists between him and any American tribe. As has already been noted, the same difficulty exists concerning many instances in distinguishing other races, and so many points of resemblance may be found between Americans and other of the lighter colored races that it would not be difficult to conceive the possibility of connecting them with any one of them in a more or less remote period, when judged by the characteristics referred to.

Comparative Chronology

Using Usher's chronology as a basis, it would appear that the first emigration to America recorded in the Book of Mormon occurred about two thousand and two hundred years prior to the Christian era. Investigations of recent years tend to indicate that this period is much too recent, and a few remarks upon this subject may prove interesting and perhaps beneficial as well, inasmuch as these investigations pertain largely to the antiquity of the Babelite people from whom the first inhabitants of America came, as claimed by the book referred to. The word Babel is synonymous with Babylon, the Bible birthplace of all nations and races of antiquity. Egypt and Mesopotamia are recognized as the oldest indisputably ancient civilizations of the world, the inscriptions of which form the basis of what is known of their antiquity.

The year 4004 B. C., given by Usher as the beginning of Bible history, or the creation, is now considered to belong to the well developed period of Egyptian and Babylonian nations; and the discoveries at Nippur lead to the inference that long before that time Mesopotamian civilization was well established. Whether or not the Egyptians are of Hamitic stock is still uncertain, but is supposed, as also that the Semitic people came from Arabia; but this uncertainty

THE DANGER OF SOCIAL CHAOS

Mr. Anstey, who was given a good reception, made his view clear from the outset. He repeated with approval a remark which he said had been made by Mr. George Swinburne at Hawthorn 15 years ago, that Christ was the founder of the social question and of social duty, and that the Church ignored those things—that it gave itself too much to routine and ritual and not enough to those matters that vitally affected the masses of the people. He was one of the millions, he said, who had been born in the highways and byways of the great cities of the world, and it was no good telling him that he should not be discontented. He did not believe that everybody had an equal opportunity in this world. He was quite aware that the poor man could climb to the throne. But the poor were many and the thrones were few. Christ had said, "The poor ye have with you," but he had not said, "Ye must always have them." Chattel slavery had passed away, and he saw no reason why poverty should not pass away also. Australia was called the paradise of the working man, but such conditions as had been gained here were simply the reflex of the better organization of the working class on class conscious lines. In 1883 a royal commission had declared that there were 20,000 men, women, and children working in Melbourne "under conditions abhorrent to every sense of decency and humanity." In the same year a British commission had declared that the kanaka trade in Queensland was "slavery based on cruel deceit, base treachery, deliberate kidnapping, and cold-blooded murder." Mr. Swinburne had declared that the Church was the most potent influence on the earth. But what had the Church done for the masses up to this time, before the Labor party came into existence? When a missionary from New Hebrides had sought to speak against the slave traffic in Queensland, the doors of the churches had been shut against him. The masses had cried out for help in the darkness, and there had been none to give it to them. Their only salvation, then and now, was in themselves and their own class. He who called upon the masses to tolerate the abhorrent conditions under which they were suffering in the hope that they would get something better hereafter, was simply an upholder of those conditions.

The Bible, continued Mr. Anstey, said that "man shall eat his bread in the sweat of his brow." But in modern society those who sweated least got most. Somebody had perverted the divine injunction. The fundamentals of Christ's faith were the most inspiring things in history, but they were being lost sight of. Henry George, the last of the idealists to exert any influence, had declared that the Church was a useful asset and agency of the moneyed classes, and that was the view of the average working man to-day. During the last five years the annual burden to be borne by the Commonwealth had increased by £25,000,000. Somebody had to pay that debt. The manufacturer and the wholesale and retail trader passed on their share of the tax in the form of increased prices, and the ultimate consumer came to the Church in his trouble. "I do not want to strike," he said, "but the whole burden is being put upon my shoulders. What are you going to do for me? You speak of sacrifice—but will you call upon these others to make sacrifices too?" And the church replied:—"I can do nothing." "Then," said the worker, "I must act for myself, and if the cost of living rises 50 per cent, then my wages must rise 50 per cent also." "But," was the reply to this, "every time you increase the price of labor you increase the price of goods." "Then go to the other man," said the worker, "and tell him that every time he increases the price of goods he increases the price of human labor." The Church, which professed to deplore the present conditions, had yet upheld them in every crucial test. Each day the balloon was rising higher and higher. Higher prices were followed by higher wages, and higher wages by higher prices. This could not go on indefinitely. The world was heading for social chaos, and it could not avoid it. The majority of the working men were neither Bolsheviks nor extremists. They did not know the fundamentals of a soviet government, but they were determined that their standard of life should not be reduced. They were determined in future to follow, not the preachings, but the practices, of the master class. They were animated by the master spirit—to grab everything on the table, regardless of does not materially effect the conclusions that may be formed from a decipherment of their inscriptions.

Some difficulty exists with the older events recorded, from the fact that the Babylonians recorded the most important official matters chronologically by reference to some noted event, as for instance: "The year he overran Karkhar," "the year in which Ine-Sin became king," and similar expressions. This method does not seem so strange if we recall the fact that even Herodotus and Thucydides in the time of the greatest splendor of Greece wrote dateless history, and, as noted by Professor Morgan, the annals of the Jews are nearly as baffling as those of the Egyptians, except for synchronisms. The Hebrew, Samaritan, and Septuagint texts are chronologically at variances; so much so that one writer has made 120 different computations, and a still greater number has been claimed by others. The result is that biblical creative periods range from 3483 to 6984 B. C., and none of them are authoritative. Just what period of time is represented by the Hebrew "Shanah," which represents men as living nearly a thousand years, is not absolutely certain. The word literally means "repetition." The word "year" is represented by the Hebrew "yamim." Were these periods fixed by the movements of the heavenly bodies? And if so, were the same astronomical calculations used in successive ages? We cannot say with certainty what changes may have been inaugurated in remote times, hence chronology may never be traceable, without a break through the various periods of antiquity, with precision.

The most dependable Babylonian data is based upon astronomical events the time of which is determinable. In this way, a rising of Sirius and a contemporary overflowing of the Nile, referred to in an Egyptian papyrus, showed that Usertsen III became king of the 12th dynasty between 1876 and 1873 B. C. This is the oldest certain date period that has been discovered; the divergences of estimated Egyptian dates among the most authoritative scholars vary from 500 to 1500 years during the time prior to 2000 B. C., says Mr. Morgan. So also the Chinese records give us 2277 B. C. as the oldest reasonable starting point, and is very uncertain. Strict investigation does not substantiate the reliability of prior periods.

Chamber's Encyclopedia says: "Fairly accurate chronology in ancient Babylon begins with Sargon I., king of Agade, 3800 B. C." Their history is traced to much greater antiquity, and Professor Clay remarks that, "Discoveries of the recent decade seem to confirm the idea that Babylonia is the cradle of civilization."

everybody else. The age of idealists had unhappily gone by. It was now an age of mere greed and grab. It was an age of tooth and claw. It was useless to try to patch up or shore up the present system. The world must walk again through the valley of death and suffering to the top of its Calvary. It must find salvation through mutual suffering and sorrow if it could not find it through mutual discussion and help. But the figure of Christ loomed in its immensity down the centuries. It was not the property of an institution, but belonged to the human race; and out of the valley of suffering, out of the struggle that was coming, out of the chaos that loomed ahead, men would see their common brotherhood and their common interests, and in the new order of society that was to come the Church would take its place as the reflex of that brotherhood. It would then be nearer to the primitive doctrines of Christ, and nearer to the heartbeat of the multitudes who toiled than it had been since the Crucifixion. (Applause.)

Dean Hart, in thanking Mr. Anstey, said that the address had reminded them of things that must not be forgotten. With the greater part of what Mr. Anstey had said everybody present would agree. The only thing he could challenge was the statement that the down-trodden worker who felt that his lot was becoming worse had come to the Church with his complaint. It might have been the Church's fault that he had not come, but the fact remained that he had not.—The Argus, Melbourne, March 3, 1920.

SOME RESULTS OF PROHIBITION

Notable reduction in crimes and dependencies in wet centers since prohibition went into effect.

National Prohibition, under the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act, became effective on January 17, 1920. Already the beneficial effects upon society have become very pronounced. Below are a very few of a multitude of items collated from the public press, showing effects in all parts of the country:

Camden County, New Jersey, workhouse closed.

Mercer County, New Jersey (Trenton), workhouse practically empty. Jail with very few inmates.

Essex County, New Jersey (Newark), jail, eighty-eight cells formerly all occupied by drunks and minor offenders, only fifteen cells now occupied.

Passaic County, New Jersey (Patterson). Order for new jail cancelled. The sheriff says not now needed, owing to Prohibition.

Bergen County, New Jersey (Hackensack), new one half million dollar jail with only twelve occupants. Consider remodeling into a tenement house.

Warren County, New Jersey, jail empty.

Hunterdon County, New Jersey, jail empty.

Sussex County, New Jersey, jail, one prisoner.

Somerset County, New Jersey, jail, one prisoner.

Cumberland County, New Jersey, jail, two prisoners.

New York City, Bellevue Hospital, alcoholic ward closed.

New York City, free clinic for drug addicts abolished.

New York City, Board of Inebriety—nothing to do—have requested the Legislature to dissolve it.

New York City, Commissioner of Charity reports few vagrants; lodging houses practically out of business; enormous decrease in destitute families; fewer children committed to institutions; appropriation reduced two million dollars.

Philadelphia City workhouse 1,100 empty cells, formerly all full.

Philadelphia General Hospital, alcoholic ward abolished.

In July, 1918, had 162 patients. In February, 1920, only 8 patients. Now none.

Chicago, Illinois, two municipal courts handling criminal cases closed, for lack of cases.

Chicago, Illinois, morgue keeper reports his business is very light.

Hartford, Connecticut, prisoners in jail under sentence reduced from 197, September 30, 1916, to 57, February 1, 1920.

New Haven, Connecticut, reduced during same period from 380 to 82.

Columbus, Ohio, 250,000 population, not a single arrest for any cause during twenty-four hours of weeks of March 20 to 27.

Detroit, Michigan, total arrests 1917—19,309; fell to 6,248 in 1919, under Prohibition.

Buffalo, New York, arrests for drunkenness fell from 2,761 in January, 1919, to 1,012 in January, 1920.

Erie County, New York (Buffalo), inmates in penitentiary reduced from 554 January, 1919, to 176, January, 1920.

San Francisco, California, total arrests fell from 4,105, February, 1919, to 1,988, in February, 1920.

Peoria, Illinois, (formerly the world's greatest whisky center), in March had only six inmates in the workhouse. Formerly the average was over 200.

East Saint Louis, Illinois, opposite Saint Louis, notorious for liquor-inspired race riots, and with a very large alien population, March 5, 1920, had not a prisoner in the city jail.

Salvation Army and industrial homes are being discontinued everywhere.

Keeley cures in White Plains, New York, and elsewhere throughout the country are discontinued.

These statistics might be multiplied by like figures from all parts of the nation.

Below are a few comments from the nation's very wet metropolis.

The New York World of March 20, giving an account of a speech delivered by Bird Coler, commissioner of public charities of New York City, prints the following:

"Commissioner Coler said that, since the dry era, the municipal lodging house has been practically vacant, only about 40 of its 900 beds being occupied. The alcoholic ward at Bellevue Hospital has practically ceased to exist as such, he said, only 15 or 20 patients having been received within the last month. Besides, he said, commitments of children, because of poverty, have shown a marked decrease.

"I can only say this to my friends in the Democratic organization in the city, state and nation," said Commissioner Coler, "that if any of them were sitting in my place, with a chance observer the betterment of civilization Prohibition has brought, he would take no other stand than to present these facts to the American people.

"The results of the disuse of alcohol have been more astounding than ever the claims of the most ardent Prohibition advocates."

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle adds its testimony, under date of March 26, by publishing from a speech by Frank Vanderlip, one of the great financiers of this country, the following:

"With a true combination of moral insight and plain common sense we have amended our Constitution and have provided the greatest single economic factor looking toward material prosperity ever created by legislative enactment. I believe that the economic value of Prohibition will eventually be an influence for the prosperity of society the like of which will amaze ourselves and the world."—The American Issue, May 1, 1920.

The Program of the Church

BY EDWARD D. MOORE

A convenient outline to help visualize the work before the church.

The idea of trying to develop, for our own information as well as an aid in proselyting, the essentials of the program of our church appeals to us as worthy our consideration.

While we do not have the distinction of being the only church organization with lofty ideals and offering a panacea for the ills of the world, we may consistently lay claim to having the most comprehensive and definite plan yet presented to humanity to save the souls of men. Making the claims we do, it becomes a duty to utilize every possible method to stamp indelibly our message and plan on the minds of all who come within our influence.

Since we have preached the beauties of our gospel plan for ninety years and are now putting into practical operation some of our ideals, it seems to us we may greatly facilitate our work by a simple graphic arrangement of our outstanding expectations.

Much as we may appreciate the value of such methods of learning the program of the church, we well know it is not fair to our friends who would investigate our claims—and sometimes, indeed, to an experienced member—to ask him literally to dig out this program from our standard books. We know it is there in surprising perfection, but must be put together by careful work.

So we present herewith a draft of such a program, reduced to very simple form, it having been worked out by a program committee, of which the writer is a member, for use in the quorum work of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Elders:

The Program of the Church

I. The Essential Preparation:

1. Spiritual.
2. Mental.
3. Physical.
4. Temporal.

For—

1. Presiding and organizing.
2. Preaching to Saints and the world.
3. Pastoral work.
4. Business, industry, and education.

II. Establishment of Zion:

1. Purchase of lands.
2. Inheritances and stewardships.
3. Building of industries.
4. Erection of temple.
5. Receipt of endowment.

III. Evangelization of the world:

1. By preaching the gospel in power.
2. By example and precept of those within Zion.
3. By righteous lives of those outside Zion's borders.

During the General Conference we addressed a meeting of the mass quorums of elders on this subject, using this outline, and noted with pleasure the interest manifested in the subject. It is meeting with favorable response in local quorum work, and is especially valuable when studied in detail and the full meaning of some of the items sensed. A bare outline like this lacks life and vigor, but when discussed rather intimately and the points elaborated properly, it is found to have a vital bearing on our future.

Since it was designed primarily for the consideration of ordained men, the emphasis in section I is placed on preparation for ministerial work, though in only the second and third points under "For—" is it at all exclusive. Preaching and pastoral work are purely ministerial yet we have many equivalents in related lines of work which may be done by an intelligent and devoted laity. And even the ministerial work to be effective must be supplemented by an intelligent cooperation and friendly assent of those concerned.

Perhaps we should not take the space to elaborate the points in the outline, but we must say a few things about sequence in program development.

We are convinced that it is not possible to arrange an unfoldment scheme which can be guaranteed to occur in the order given. So some items must arbitrarily be put first, even though they are no more immediate than the others following. Generally speaking, we are of the opinion that most of these will proceed simultaneously. It is possible that by stressing the preparational features we may earlier and more efficiently arrive at a realization of sections II and III, but we do not mean to imply that all will have qualified in all these before we begin (or even complete) some of the other features.

While the gathering is not specifically mentioned here, it is implied in "The establishment of Zion." When lands are purchased and stewardships and inheritances put into effect, we will at the same time, perhaps, be building our industries and providing for our internal developments. Naturally the success of these is contingent upon the fulfillment of the prophecies on the gathering.

Then there is the point concerning the temple and the one on receiving of the endowment of God's power. Now it is not necessary that we try to set any bounds on these events. We know the endowment has already begun, and we think it but logical to suppose that it will continue as we shall develop capacity, and finally, through the temple endowment reach that grand climax toward which we have long looked. Viewing it in that light, we placed the building of the temple first.

Again, regarding section III, by which we mean simply the carrying of our message to the nations, that God's chosen people may be gathered out, we do not necessarily suggest that it will follow the divisions designated I and II. They should all be in process of development at the same time.

In the formulation and study of such an outline (and we hope others will develop what best expresses their ideas) it is interesting to think over the relative effect of one item on the other. For instance, will the preparation suggested bring about the establishment of Zion, or will the establishment of Zion make possible the work suggested in those items? Will the preaching of the gospel and the conversion of the honest-hearted greatly facilitate the establishment of Zion, or will the establishment of Zion be a dominant factor in reaching the nations with our message?

We might well develop this idea of visualizing our church program by putting our version of it on charts or on stereopticon slides. It will strike a responsive note. The world needs what we are offering; it will want (at least many will) what we have to give when we make our plan comprehensive to the average mind. We have done well in visualizing the first principles; now we have a new responsibility in visualizing the economic program of the church.

Our own people will appreciate a simply arranged outline of our proposed activities so they may more easily explain it to their neighbors. It is a real opportunity for the ministry.

Poverty and Pauperism—Cause and Remedy

BY D. R. BALDWIN

"Never in this world can our constitution make us free and equal until we assert and maintain our rights at the polls."

We are pleased to note the serious thought that some of our writers are giving to this enigmatic topic, for it has become so prominent that we cannot dodge the issue; the subject confronts us in all of the walks of life.

The term poverty comes from the Latin word paupertas. The prime definition of pauperism is "a poor person: one dependent on others for maintenance." So Webster says they are synonyms.

Our standard dictionaries in no way associate the word pauper with indolent or vicious habits. There is no intimation that a pauper (a dependent person) is lacking in morals, self-respect, nor powers of initiative.

The highly-respected lady who was the former cook for the royalty of Great Britain is said to be in the almshouse. No trace of indolence, viciousness, nor association with bad companions; still she is a pauper. She is a pauper simply because she is "dependent on others for maintenance." There are thousands of temperate, frugal, honest, hardworking people reduced to dependence in these days; and a startling number who commit suicide to escape the curse of poverty which is more cruel than death. There are more than ten million people in the United States said to be living "below the poverty line," or as the Industrial Relations Commission puts it, "below the line of decency." Facts and figures given us by numerous investigations prove clearly that a heavy percentage of people who are reduced to dependence are in no way responsible for their humiliation.

The Cause

Sickness, unemployment, introduction of modern machinery, accidents, women and child labor, old age, vicious habits, intemperance, desertion, ignorance, and sheer laziness are all handed out to us as so many causes of the great misery of want in our land.

We do not propose to take issue with any of these causes so carefully searched out. We can easily see how each of these may be directly or indirectly responsible for a very small percentage of the great plague of poverty that confronts us.

We were amused the other day by reading a long, carefully-written article, wherein the writer traced "the most common cause of poverty" to sickness; and in searching for the prevailing cause of sickness he easily traced it to poverty. He seemed unable to sound this great perplexing problem to any greater depth.

For the benefit of those whose hearts are wrung by our Nation's great misery, I ask permission to point out just one more cause for poverty.

In Basil M. Manly's official report of the $320,000,000 income tax that our Nation was defrauded out of in 1915, which he prepared for the Government press, Scripps, and other newspapers, he estimated that three fourths of the wealth of the United States belongs to less than two per cent of our adult population. This was before the war; and our Federal Trade Commission reports that from the time we entered the great struggle these gentlemen have multiplied their profits by from two to four and one half. Many thousand dollars were spent in making these investigations; they were conducted by the keenest talent of our nation. These reports go into minute details; they explain where, when and how these figures were obtained. These estimates are not at all likely to be overdrawn.

Since as a nation we sacrificed three fourths of our net products, three fourths of all we produce above our living, to the idlers who eat the bread and wear the garments of the laborers, before the war, and since the beginning of the war their profits are from two to four and one half times greater than before the war, surely it should not tax our discernment beyond measure to see the one great cause that eclipses all minor causes of the rapid increase of poverty in our beloved country.

The Remedy

Utopian conditions, Zionite conditions, or the righteousness of God's kingdom by whatever name you choose to call it, cannot be realized independent of righteousness in the souls of men. It can never be realized independent of the gospel in its fullness.

Our grand old constitution (while by no means perfect), makes us practically equal along political and legal lines, but not without the proper effort upon our own part.

Never in this world can our constitution make us free and equal until we assert and maintain our rights at the polls. Never in this world can a fractional part of the restored gospel bring man to his own and banish poverty and pauperism from our midst. We must arouse, and diligently use our God-given blood-purchased franchise. We must take a positive stand for our constitutional rights.

To show you what the diligent and proper use of the ballot can do toward banishing pauperism from the land I only need to tell you of a few really big things done in North Dakota in the short space of two years, 1917-1918, namely:

Thousands of North Dakota farmers were mortgaged to the limit; two years' drouth had put them up against the wall; the banks could advance them no more money; feed and seed they must have or throw up the sponge. Just as they were about to give up in despair the farmer legislature passed the bonding act and placed three million dollars in the hands of drouth-stricken farmers with which they seeded more than one million acres that would otherwise have lain idle. This put these farmers back upon their feet again.

Their assessment of banks, railroad, telegraph, telephone, express, and sleeping car companies on the same basis of valuation as farm lands, increased the revenue of the state $2,558,000.

Their activity through Doctor Ladd secured a minimum price of $2.20 instead of $1.85 for wheat. This brought the farmers of North Dakota an increase of $43,750,000.

Their grain grading act of 1917 saved the farmers of that State $950,000.

Money and credit tax increased revenues $300,000.

State bonding her own public officials instead of patronizing Wall Street saved to the State $50,000.

Tax on property of corporations not taxed before, $75,000.

Preventing of fifteen per cent increase in freight rates within the State, $2,000,000.

Back taxes on private car line companies, $10,000.

An Unfortunate Error

On page 432 of the HERALD for May 5 Sister Anderson is made to say: "An unfortunate procedure on the part of the conference, etc.," when her wording was unforeseen. We certainly regret this, for it puts Sister Anderson in an entirely unwarranted light. We hope any who have been disturbed over this misstatement made by a typographical error will feel relieved.—EDITORS.

Mothers Go to School!

Our editor has asked me to write of the responsibilities of mothers to children as relating to their school life. That is a big subject, and the ground cannot be covered thoroughly in one short article, but I shall try to present some phases of the situation in a way that I hope may prove helpful.

To begin with, mothers, interest the fathers in the school, if possible. It is their duty as well as yours, to know something, at least, of their children's school life.

Do you parents know your child's teacher? I do not mean would you recognize her if you met her at church, or in Black's store—but do you know her? Of course you have heard Mrs. Jones say that "the new schoolma'am must be terribly extravagant because Susie said she had on a new waist every day of the past week!" Or your Jimmie said the boys didn't dare throw paper wads like they did the last term!

Have you visited the school to see how she is stirring up the spirit of cooperation by careful supervision of the play-time activities; or how she is fostering love of the beautiful by her taste in decoration and her care of the school room? Have you invited her to your home for supper, or to stay overnight? When she came to church, did you make her feel at home, perhaps ask her to teach that class of young ladies?

Once get acquainted with her, and you may find she is a charming, friendly person, with wholesome ideals of her own and ambitions for your children as well. On the other hand, she may be sadly lacking in the essential qualities of a teacher; in either case, you should know the facts, for yourself.

Don't criticize your child's teacher before him. When he relates the day's events (as you should encourage him to

All this and much more have they done by awaking to the fact that no change worth while can come only through our law-making machinery; only by legislating for themselves. All this and much more they have done by the diligent and proper use of the franchise.

Thus by preventing bankruptcy they have restored to downtrodden humanity the grand inspiration of achievement. The self-respect and the powers of initiative that were being crushed out of their souls has been resuscitated. Confidence in themselves and in their fellows is strengthened. Optimism is born again, and real character is being constructed.

"I have many forces at work in the world, saith the Lord. I have many spiritual forces at work in the world that you know not of: you see but the smaller part of my work and the world perceiveth it not at all."

Let the church put to the test the economic, cooperative principles of the gospel of the kingdom. Let the church see and know, and align herself with the forces that God has at work in the world. Let her diligently inform herself along political lines; let her uphold by her influence and her franchise just and good men who stand for freedom and the constitutional rights of all mankind, and as the Lord liveth, so shall poverty and pauperism disappear from our ranks.

do) be careful to avoid condemning the teacher, at least, to him, when he tells his grievance. If it seems serious, set yourself the task of finding out the facts and righting the matter without his knowledge, unless he is at fault. Once a child loses confidence in, and respect for, his teacher, he has lost interest in the school and the rest of the term is mainly wasted time, or worse, for him.

Do not expect too much of the teacher. Psychologists tell us that each person is "long" on some subjects, and "short" on others, or, in other words, he is especially equipped by nature for learning some subjects, while in other branches of learning, he cannot progress very far. When we combine this fact with the restrictions of environment we cannot expect any one person to know everything, can we?

One reason why we mothers should visit school frequently, is to become acquainted with the teacher, and, if possible, combine our efforts in a parent-teacher association, to help overcome faults. Perhaps Miss Jones is a stern disciplinarian and can teach so well that her pupils pass their tests with flying colors. She is also a good playground supervisor, but to her, the "open book of nature" is unknown. In such a case, you mothers should provide nature books for the children, take them out walking, have them keep a weather record, go kodaking in the woods, make collections of various objects, etc. To stimulate interest, see who can recognize the most birds, bird songs, flowers, trees, weeds, insects, and numberless other objects. After you have done all these things, you can probably outline your own nature study.

Perhaps your next teacher will be a keen student of nature and an excellent scholar, but has never acquired those little social graces which make one more pleasing to his friends. Here is more work for the mother, for we know that courtesy and tact do much to relieve the friction of life. You must teach your child, yourself, the simple rules of etiquette, and drill him in their use.

Another teacher may be at a loss as to how to manage the children at noon and recess. Mother and teacher, put your heads together and devise some means of getting playground apparatus.

Most assuredly mothers ought to be interested in school politics. They should know the source of the money in the treasury, how it may be increased, and for what it may be spent. They should be interested in school legislation, and they should do all in their power to prevent men not qualified for the office being elevated to a position on the school board. In at least three instances, personally known, the most ignorant, uncouth, immoral man in the neighborhood was elected director because only two or three voters were present at the meeting. These men hired the first teacher who applied, provided she were not a friend or relative of some one in the neighborhood, against whom the directors held a grudge. Would any man in that community have trusted the hiring of his farm manager or herdsman of his pure-bred cattle to one of these men? It is a crime against fatherhood for a man to provide better for his cattle, hogs, and horses, than he does for his boys and girls!

Let me describe an average country schoolhouse and grounds as they look when the teacher approaches in September. The yard had grown up to weeds during the summer, and having been, now, freshly mowed, presents the appearance of a stubble field, with big, wicked stubs, at that, to bruise the unwary toes. There are two dirty looking outbuildings with leaky roofs, or the sides caving in. There is no well, and not a sign of apparatus for play. There are no trees to protect the building from summer's sun or winter's storms.

Let us pass into the house. The floor hasn't been scrubbed nor the windows or curtains washed since the last teacher "cleaned house." The woodwork has been painted the drabdest color that ever took the joy out of life, and smoke and dust have enhanced the depressing effect. A few scarred desks, the teacher's desk and chair, a bookcase with a few worthless books, a rusty water pail, and rusty dipper, and a battered tin wash basin complete the equipment!

Here are some of the things which should be done, and are possible through a mothers' live-wire organization! The school yard should be seeded to grass and mowed often enough to keep the weeds down. Some trees, shrubs and perennial flowers should be planted. A well should be put down, careful attention being given to location and drainage, so as to insure a supply of pure water. The outbuildings should be made sanitary.

Then some provision should be made for playtime; swings should be put up; a slide, and trapeze bar for the older ones, with perhaps a tennis court and croquet grounds laid out, and basket ball goals set up. There should also be made provision for some indoors games for stormy days. The schoolhouse should be thoroughly fumigated, aired, and cleaned, each summer. There should be good slate blackboards, good erasers and hard chalk provided. A good set of maps, and a suspension globe are also useful.

The old seats should be replaced with adjustable ones. Then destroy the old worthless books, and get some really good ones; also subscribe for some magazines. I have seen the Alger books, Mary J. Holmes' novels and books of like character in school libraries! If you live in Kansas your state superintendent of schools will send you a list of books suitable for school libraries, and classified by grades. Doubtless other state superintendents will do the same. You can make a fairly correct estimate of the worth of a book by reading the description in the publisher's catalogue.

Here is a suggestive list of periodicals needed: Normal Instructor and Primary Plans, Scientific American, National Geographic Magazine, The Pathfinder, Needlecraft or Modern Priscilla, The Boys' World, some good agricultural paper, and a good weekly newspaper (the weekly Kansas City Star is a good one). Some would add a daily, but while it is well enough for the adult to read a daily, I very much doubt a child's having discrimination sufficient to choose the good grain from the chaff. Much in the average daily is absolutely rotten.

All of these improvements will not be made in one term of school, neither should everything be done by the mothers and teachers. The children themselves should be allowed to help in the transformation of the school, and then they will the more highly appreciate it.

If you saw a man building a chimney and leaving out every fourth or fifth brick, or perhaps several in succession, you would say he was crazy, wouldn't you? Or suppose the publishers had omitted paragraphs here and there in our splendid serial, "The call at evening," how would you like that? Then what sort of a structure of knowledge do you think your child can build if he misses school every few days? Can you wonder that he loses interest? When you start your child in school make up your mind that he isn't going to miss a day except for sickness, and encourage him to hold the same plan.

Perhaps some subject in the curriculum is hard for your child or distasteful to him. In that case, do not say, as I heard one mother say, "I told Jesse that he didn't have to study fizzleology if he didn't want to. I never did when I went to school!" Enlist the teacher's sympathy and the two of you can probably devise some way of making the subject interesting, and then it will be easier for the child to master it.

"Life is a leaf of paper white
Whereon each one of us may write
His word or two, and then comes night;
Greatly begin! Though thou hast time
But for a line, be that sublime!
Not failure, but low aim, is crime."

The great high-road of human welfare lies along the old highway of steadfast well-being and well-doing, and they who are the most persistent, and work in the truest spirit, will invariably be the most successful; success treads on the heels of every right effort.—Samuel Smiles.

A Shining Morning Face

A principle of psychology which every mother should know is that the last thought before going to sleep makes the deepest impression. Try it. You will find that the last thought at night is sure to influence the first thought in the morning, therefore the last waking thought should be a happy one. A child should never be punished just before going to bed if you wish to create in him a joyous disposition. A happy bedtime will mean a sunny morning face.

Another important fact, based more upon physiological than upon psychological principles, is the importance of a happy mealtime. Perhaps the child has done some little naughty thing and is scolded for it until he cries or is sent from the table. His dinner is spoiled. He needs that dinner. He cannot be happy if he is hungry or if he feels undue censure and he will be cross all afternoon. Did you ever indulge in weeping at mealtime or allow yourself to become very angry? If so, did you find your indigestion improved and did you have a happy day? As it was with you, so is it with the child. It is a well-known physiological fact that anger and grief interfere seriously with digestion. If you wish to lay in your child a foundation for indigestion you can find no more effective way.

It is even worse to send a child to bed supperless. Did you ever go to bed without your dinner when you were not ill and needed food? How did you feel next morning? Did you awaken with a song in your heart or did you feel the world a false and hollow place? The latter, surely, unless you are an unusual human being.

No one can be at his best morally and spiritually unless he is at his best physically. No child can be improved morally by being injured physically. To send a child away from the table hungry or to send him supperless to bed is a relic of barbarism. It will not only fail to bring good results at the time but will lay the foundation of future misery and unhappiness. A happy bedtime and mealtime are the right of every child.—Josephine Barclay, in The Mother's Magazine.

Wanted!

In casting about for workers to fill different demands in our department, we are impressed anew with the old cry for efficient and interested people. We happened upon this editorial in a city daily, which expresses the needs, and we would echo the demand for workers in this church who are interested in their work, who like their work, who think about it, who have new ideas in regard to it, and who are able and willing to put any amount of enthusiasm into it necessary to "make it a go!"

Promotion

Roger W. Babson, the noted business observer and expert, has just spent a month visiting factories—great and small—department stores, publishing plants and other great business establishments. In every case he talked to their owners or general managers. The most important question he put to these men was:

"What quality do you like best in the men who work for you? How do you pick men for promotion?"

Listen to the answers he got:

"We promote those who are most interested in their work."

"We pay for enthusiasm and not for time."

"We pay most for new ideas."

"Those who like their work are the ones who get ahead here."

"Enthusiasm, imagination and initiative are the qualities we want."

Do you get what this means? It means that America is just as democratic as ever!

Everywhere these big business men wanted qualities for promotion that any young man can have if he only makes the effort.

If you like your work you are in line for promotion. If

LETTERS

An Experience With Peyote

[This letter is of interest, showing the Indians' deep-seated belief in the efficacy of prayer. The Indian thinks objectively, and symbolism is always present in his ceremonies. One who understands this can see more in their ceremonies than those who are unsympathetic with what may differ from their own beliefs. President Smith, referred to in the letter, because of his understanding of Indian nature and customs, has seen the significance of the symbolism so pronounced in the peyote ceremonies, and is not disposed to antagonize the religion, but rather to sympathetically replace the ceremonies gradually by Christian ceremonies, as the religious education of the Indians progresses.—EDITORS.]

We are very enthusiastic over the work among the Lamanites. The Omaha and Winnebago Reservations lie just north of our town. The Lamanite Saints on the reservation were once members of our branch. We are intimately acquainted with a number of them and have learned to love and respect them.

Brother Wilson Walter and family who have resided among them for nearly eighteen years speak very highly of them as neighbors and citizens. Just recently he and his family had an attack of influenza. They were very sick, and as yet had not been able to procure the services of a doctor.

One of their neighbors and all his family were seriously ill with the same dread disease; three of them had died in less than a week, notwithstanding the fact they were blessed with the services of a doctor and trained nurse.

Their near neighbor (a peyote chief) stepped in and discovered that they were all real sick. Upon inquiry he found they needed wood. He brought a nice load of hickory poles, cut it, and carried it into the house for them. He then asked if they would drink some peyote tea if he would prepare it for them.

Brother Walter hesitated. He had always been prejudiced against the peyote, but the thought of their neighbor's great calamity caused him to feel that they must try to do something for themselves.

He thought of the faithful testimonies he had so many times heard among those people in favor of the peyote, so he decided to try it.

The chief (Paul Lovejoy) hastened to his home after the medicine, returning immediately, bringing his wife with him. They prepared a vessel, being very particular to have it perfectly clean. After putting in a sufficient amount of water, he placed it over the fire, and motioned across it each way with his hand, and said, "That represents the four winds." Then he took the peyote in his hands and knelt down on one knee and blessed it, asking God that which ever way the wind blew it would blow healing to this family, and that they should again walk upon the earth and mingle with mankind.

He prayed very earnestly for several minutes, asking it all in Christ's name. He then put the peyote in the water you have enthusiasm, they'll pick you, my boy. If you think—use your brains—they'll push you straight up the ladder.

It's all up to you. It does not matter whether you are of lowly birth or not. It doesn't matter whether you wear a swallow-tail or an overall. And you don't have to have a college education.

In a word, it's equal opportunity, equal rights, the golden age of equality. America, the paradise of the common man!

In giving publicity to the important information he picked up on his tour, Babson has done a valuable service to the people of this country, and his story should be blazoned across this land in box car letters.

Oh, yes; and don't fail to tell the bolsheviks about it.

very carefully, placing it right side up. He steeped it the required length of time, and proceeded to administer to each member of the family, blessing each cup separately and asking them to remember the Lord, and drink it in faith.

In about an hour they began to feel better. Brother Walter went to the bedside of his little girl (who previously had a high fever) and found that her fever was gone. About thirty minutes later the little girl arose and said, "I could practice my music lesson if you'd let me." Her father gave permission, and the older girl, hearing the music, arose and they asked her how she felt, and she said, "All right."

Inside of two hours they were all able to be up, notwithstanding the fact that a few hours before the two girls actually thought they were not going to live.

Brother Walter says his prejudice against the peyote is gone, for he misunderstood their motive in using it. They use it for a purely religious purpose and their faith is in God and not in the peyote.

Mr. Lovejoy had often told Brother Walter of remarkable cases of healing among them, but he never had any faith in it. Now he says, "I know the Lord is blessing them through that medium."

Mr. Lovejoy was greatly pleased when he returned the next morning and found the family all up and able to eat. He said to Brother Walter: "We like the Latter Day Saints, and sometime this summer the peyote boys are going to build a nice Latter Day Saint church in Macy, where they can hold services, and we can, too." He said, "The peyote boys all like Fred Smith. He is not opposed to the peyote. He is a reasonable man."

Also he said that the peyote caused them to love all mankind, the white man as well as the Indian. "I have a very bad temper," he said. "I have to watch myself every day or I'll do something I'll be sorry for."

It is very gratifying to note that the peyote boys are certainly striving to do right, for they forsake evil and trust in God to help them overcome.

Let us encourage them to do good, and pray that God's Holy Spirit will lead them into the light of the glorious gospel of the Son of God.

Any of the missionaries passing this way will be thrice welcomed by the Decatur Saints. Yours hopefully,
DECATUR, NEBRASKA. MRS. EDGAR BUTTS.

Hawaiians Anxious About Zion

We learn by letter from Brother Waller that the new missionaries are to sail to-day direct for Hilo. While we are disappointed in not having them come our way, it will be so much better for them as they will avoid the trip from here to Hilo by the small interisland boats. The Saints at Hilo are anxiously awaiting their arrival.

This week has been a glorious one for the Congregational church, as they are celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the landing of their first missionaries in 1820. Members of all churches have assisted in the celebration, many from our number participating. The pageants and parades have been quite wonderful, showing progress of the past hundred years. I trust we will have something to equal it in our celebration in 1930. The Saints here are looking forward to that time. We can have many races and nations represented by that time.

The early missionaries did much for the Hawaiians, but the natives have more than paid for the benefits. All of the best lands have fallen into the hands of the missionaries' sons, many, if not all, of the millionaires in the island are direct descendants. It is true that they brought the Bible in one hand but the other one grabbed the choice lands. As a result, very few natives are to be found on the land. Some of our members have taken up homesteads, but homesteading conditions here are not very favorable.

Just recently I have been asked about conditions in Zion. Some here would like to buy property there, residence or farming land. I have been talking to them of stewardships, etc. All are very much interested in the development of Zion. These islands have been spared to a certain extent from the conditions resulting from the war, but the oriental population is beginning to make trouble and the time is not far distant when all of God's people will be very anxious to leave the Paradise of the Pacific.

Many of the native Mormons some time ago sold all and went to their Zion in Utah but they are all back now and left their wealth behind. We will have no failures of that kind, but because of that experience it will require a great deal of faith on the part of some to move forward. In the eyes of many, we are all of the same stripe. Brighamism has surely done more to hinder the work of God than all other denominations combined.

We are all anxiously awaiting news of the conference, as it has been the subject of our prayers for many weeks. We expect to hear good news when the papers arrive. Yours in bonds,
V. B. ETZENHOUSER.

Why Do We Neglect the Boys and Girls?

Much of the disrespect and indifference on the part of our young people is our own fault.

At the different conventions and conferences it has been my privilege to attend, I have been made to realize how very selfish we older Saints are. Yes, even careless!

When the different programs are arranged, we find that almost every line of activity is directed to the maturer members, and nothing done to keep the boys and girls busy. These boys and girls are told to respect the house of worship, and my personal opinion of many of these so-called acts of disrespect can be traced back to the neglect of duty on the part of some one older.

A crowd of healthy boys and girls will find an outlet for the energies they possess, and if no attention is paid to them you can rest assured that the committee in charge will not have a very good opinion of the children that attended that conference or convention.

Among all the people, are there not some few who can be persuaded to forget selfish desires and take charge of something or do something for these children?

We are prone to look upon our young as fine to have about when we have time, but when it comes to sacrificing a good sermon or a chance to chat with some one on the gospel, we then fly to the old adage of children to "be seen and not heard."

I know of boys and girls to-day who are thinking of attending other churches. To hear the sermons? Nay. Because those boys and girls are now being neglected. I have heard many say that if we allow the boys and girls to have a club or anything but the Religio they will be weaned away from the church. I have more faith in the young than that.

Oh, how I wish that I could make others see the great need of attention to our lads and lassies.

They ask for a little recognition; what do they get? They are told to come out to prayer service and Religio. I am not saying that these are not essential; they are necessary, but these young minds are active and they want a good time, just as we did.

How many sermons are given to the boys and girls? Why, don't you know? Easter and Children's Day. I know of two elders in this district who can always draw a crowd of children. Watch the faces as they talk. Can you ask for better attention? Why, they can tell you all about the sermon weeks after. What's the matter? Are we as a people asleep?

Satan has attractions at every turn. He is straining every nerve in this fight for supremacy.

We sing:

"There's surely somewhere a lowly place,
In earth's harvest field so wide,
Where I may labor through life's short day,
For Jesus the crucified."

Here is a good place to prove that we mean what we sing.

The holy priesthood is the heritage of some of these boys; the responsibilities of wifehood and motherhood are waiting for the girls.

I hope some day I may see our selfish desires forgotten and something done for the young.

Marveling at the Goodness of God

Perhaps it is needless to say that during the conference just passed I felt to more fully consecrate my life to the service of God and the church. Doubtless few, if any, who attended that wonderful gathering, felt any spirit other than that of consecration, full and complete.

Since returning to my pastorate I have felt the spirit of this work as never before. I have felt in great power that Spirit which lifts, strengthens and assures. Moreover, there has come to me a peace and happiness which passeth understanding. Naturally, as a result of this influence I am able to discharge my duties more promptly, efficiently and satisfactorily. Verily, "The yoke is easy, the burden is light."

In many instances this has caused me to marvel at the goodness of God. I have tried to interpret the meaning of all this. In seeking an answer I am not disappointed. 'Tis a portion of that long-looked-for endowment. I pray that the church as a whole and the ministry in particular may so respond to this mighty influence that we may make that development which shall entitle us to a complete endowment in due time. Very sincerely,

Wants to Help Sanitarium Extension Work

I read to-day with great pleasure a letter by Mary L. Palmer in the Ensign. It was such a good letter from start to finish that I want to commend it. She is very generous in her ambition to help. She offers her services one year free when the annex is built to the Sanitarium for the delinquent of our church.

I am very much in sympathy with all that have friends mentally deficient. There are numbers of Latter Day Saints in insane asylums who should be cared for by our own church people. The elders could be available for administration and they could be cared for by kind and loving Saints, encouraging and helping them quickly to recover in many instances.

There are many of these people not actually insane. They need treatment and kindness. Some who have been removed from these places say they would have completely lost their reason if they had not been removed.

I am ready and anxious to contribute and will ask others to do so.

Is Our Salvation in Political Movement?

Care should be exercised by the Saints in their communion with the world in regard to the social and industrial problems which are now facing humanity. To the end that others might be warned as have we with regards to this vital issue I present here a manifestation seemingly given of God for our guidance and direction.

Some of our local brethren in the past have been lending their influence and efforts to the organizations in the world which are trying in their imperfect way to bring to the troubled with the panacea for its grievous ills.

One evening not long since, two of the brethren, one holding the priesthood, stopped at our home while returning from a meeting where the radical influences were manifest very freely, and having partaken to some extent of the spirit emanated became rather indiscreet in some of their statements. Among other things the following two thoughts were presented:

1. The conditions of the world must be greatly improved before the church can accomplish its work with regards to the redemption of Zion.

2. This improvement will come through some of the political movements of the day, thus preparing the way for Zion's coming.

This lack of faith in the church worried me greatly, especially since it came through one holding the holy priesthood, which God has given for our enlightenment, and a brother in whom I had placed much confidence in the past. We talked very freely and feverishly until the time of separation for the night came. After their departure I thought seriously and with deep feeling upon the condition into which my brother seemed to have allowed himself to be led. These thoughts did not depart at the time of retirement. I could not dispel them from my mind. While in this mental condition, whether asleep or awake I cannot say, there was presented to my mind the following:

I looked upon a condition of desolation and destruction. What seemed to me once to have been a forest was now a mass of debris and the earth seemed to be completely covered with litter and refuse. An animal of monster shape and huge proportions lay lengthwise upon the earth with its body extending from east to west, and the head turned toward the north. The appearance of this monster is indescribable. His head was similar to that of an alligator. His eyes were small and beadlike. The mouth appeared very large and vicious. It was filth personified, its whole body being a mass of scurvy and scales.

My brother, of whom I have spoken, and myself were standing directly in front of this ugly beast. He, the brother, had in his hand a crust of bread from which he broke fragments and cast into the hungry mouth before us which seemed never to have enough. Again and again did he cast bread to it, and each time its greedy mouth would come together with a snap, only to open with invitation for more. In the meantime I watched the expression upon the face of my companion which seemed to be very unpleasant. As the animal continued to greedily accept the bread an expression of disgust came over his features. With a stamp of his foot he angrily threw the last portion and exclaimed, "That's the last you get from me." At this the beast closed its mouth very slowly, and shut his eyes as though in resignation. As he did so I said to the brother, "Let us go while he has his eyes shut." As we turned to go I noticed a little child sitting upon a rise of ground, the sweetest baby I ever beheld; healthy, strong and beautiful. I called my friend's attention to it. We approached it in haste, for its condition seemed to be perilous. There were honey bees swarming about it on every side; but as we came near to the child our fears were allayed for the bees did no harm to the little one. My companion exclaimed, "Well, here is where my heart is, anyway." A new expression came over his face, and the tears streamed down his cheeks. The bees were busy at their tasks, paying no heed to surrounding conditions. The earth was literally covered with them. They were so engaged that they did not even notice our approach. This surprised me, for I was sure that when they saw us coming they would leave their occupation and seek safety in flight. But this was not the case, for these little workers stayed with their duties, seeming to be entirely unconscious of our presence. I said to my companion, "What do you think of that?" "Yes," said he, "this is just the way we must be before Zion can be redeemed. Busy as bees, and paying no heed to others." Then I remarked, "This goes to show that we must not pay attention to the things of the world." To this the brother consented.

I came to myself with a wonderful degree of the Spirit of God present. I pondered over the manifestation all through the night, and the presence of the Spirit continued with me until the morning. A great satisfaction came to me with the assurance that all would be well with my brother, who had worried me.

I believe the dream might be better understood should we label the beast "Radicalism"; the baby, "The church"; the bees, "Zion's laborers." The beast carries with it the filth and unrighteousness of the world having the great mouth of avarice and greed. We cannot improve our condition individually or collectively by feeding this monster. We had better let it die of starvation. The growing church of Christ is healthy and strong though just a child; and to it we owe the food which some of us are bestowing upon unworthy institutions. To feed the church of God we must be alive to every opportunity for the advancement of the common cause, as busy as bees. In the church is our only hope. May the Lord help each of us to labor to the end that Christ might be more thoroughly represented through his institution.

Sheffield Reunion

The Sheffield District Reunion was held in the Saints' Church, Fern Street, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Nottingham, England, on April 11, 1920. This building, which is an army hut, has only recently been erected, having been opened three weeks previous to convening of reunion. The Saints in Sutton have given their time, money, and labor necessary, liberally.

The reunion was opened in the morning at 9.30, when the president of the district (Elder C. Cousins) presided over the prayer meeting, which continued until 10.30 a. m. The vice president (Elder S. Holmes) was in charge of preaching service, with Priest G. V. Willis as associate. All the Saints both residing and visiting there had the privilege of hearing nearly all the priesthood in the district speak. Each speaker was allowed approximately ten minutes to make his observations and remarks. This meeting concluded about 12 a. m., when the Saints adjourned until 1.45 p. m. The president of the Sheffield Branch (Elder John Austin), who is seventy-two years of age, having experienced some forty years in this work, presented a paper entitled, "The predictions of Jesus Christ."

At 3 p. m. a fellowship meeting was held. The Saints gave forth their testimonies in song and thanksgiving. After this meeting the Saints adjourned until 6 p. m., when our district president presided over the evening preaching service. A duet was rendered, and then the vice president and Elder A. Hall were the speakers.

Everyone in expressing themselves said they had enjoyed the reunion, and the Spirit of the Master was with us in each meeting.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, April 18, 1920.

Editors Herald: It has been some years since Lower Lake has been heard from. Several years ago we were quite proud of our little branch, but many have moved and united with other branches, while others have been called higher, which leaves only three faithful ones. Still we meet and partake of the emblems and have our lessons in the Religio and Gospel Quarterlies, also keep in touch with different parts of the world as we receive the HERALD, Ensign, Glad Tidings, Journal of History, and other publications of the church. We have just finished reading the Braden-Kelley Debate and found it very instructive. I would advise all who have not read the book to procure one and carefully read it. After finishing the book we were anxious to know how the audience decided and Braden's final end.

We would like to hear from J. S. Roth; we always read his communications with great pleasure. As I am badly afflicted, I ask all the Saints to pray for me. Your brother in Christ,

E. F. ADAMSON.

The Christian Standard, a leading Disciple organ, has been compelled on account of non-delivery of paper to cut down its size from 24 to 16 pages and use a smaller size of type than usual. They are finding themselves in the same situation as affects all periodicals these days. Because of delay in transit of paper for THE SAINTS' HERALD we are compelled to make an extra run to get out issues of the usual size. We have ample paper for present needs but have exhausted one size of stock, which makes us the extra work.

BOOK REVIEWS

Habits that Handicap

A vigorous and arresting book by Charles B. Towns, on the growing drug and narcotic evil in the United States.

One of the most readable books of its kind that we have observed is a new one issued this year by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York, written by Charles B. Towns. ($1.50 net, $1.62 by mail.)

There is an introduction by Richard Cabot and a chapter on "The relation of alcohol to disease" by Doctor Alexander Lambert.

It is certainly astounding to have such a book of many revelations brought to us relative to the widespread use of habit-forming drugs in the United States, then to pick up the current dailies and find positive statements from China that the opium industry is again flourishing and the degrading habit on the increase. And that there are universal evidences all about us that the pernicious thing is becoming a world-wide menace.

It is hard for us to realize the extent of this awful blight that has settled over humanity to curse and lead it down to hell. No realistic devil could have a stronger grip on his victims than does opium and its many derivatives. Men lose their perception of right and wrong in the overwhelming craving for the drug. Women of exemplary character lose all sense of moral responsibility; in fact those in the grip of the horrid monsters lurking in morphine, heroin, codeine, cocaine, and similar pain-easing drugs to a large extent shut themselves outside the realms of normal men and women and must above all satisfy that insatiable craving which the body has become the victim of.

And the pity of it is that the habit is easily formed by some seemingly innocent cough cure or headache powder, or by drinking the so-called soft drinks at the average soda fountain.

Mothers often establish the habit in administration of soothing syrups or paregoric or other quieting medicines, little knowing that the innocent child must some day pay a terrific price for its mother's ignorance.

The sad conditions portrayed in this book are such that it makes one's heart ache, yet when we come to realize that it is but one of the conditions which will bring about the downfall of the race and general prevalence of godlessness that is to prevail in the latter days, we realize it must be expected.

But we wish there were some way in which the information in this book could be burned into the consciousness of every member of this church. If they could but realize that "it is not the quantity of the drug taken that creates the craving for more of the same. It is the nervous and organic reaction to the drug itself, plus the regularity of its administration, that starts the conflagration."

And continuing, the author says: "And remember, that combining the opiate with pink syrup, or with other ostensible 'remedies,' does not destroy the physical action of the narcotics. All the powerful potentialities for evil—for physical, mental and moral shipwreck—are present in these nostrums."

He tells in this same chapter of Doctor Grinnell, of Vermont, a man held in such esteem that in his effort to learn of the extent of the drug habit in this State he was able to receive replies to practically all his inquiries. "These replies indicated that sales of habit-forming drugs had increased so rapidly following the arid wave [recently established prohibition law] that, at the time of inquiry, there was a daily combining the opiate with pink syrup, or with other ostensible and codeine—equal to one and one half grains for every man, woman and child in Vermont.

This alarming increase was attributed solely to the prohibition of the use of liquor. Doctor Grinnell concluded that the attempt to enforce abstinence upon the man who wants to drink is not only ineffective, but actually destructive.

He quotes Doctor Copeland to the effect that "it is safe to say that in all New York one person in thirty is a victim."

We can well understand the basis of the opposition on the part of some people to the prohibition law. They contend that to deprive men of the use of alcohol is to turn them to other things even worse, therefore prohibition is wrong.

But we must insist that though a few million addicts to tobacco, alcohol and drug habits must suffer the consequences of their unholy practices, we cannot afford for their sake to throw down the bars for the recruiting of other millions of our youth who might escape when the temptation is less open and alluring.

The "take-something" habit is one that must be satisfied. "In India and China," we are told, "following the forced reduction in the consumption of opium, there has been a correspondingly marked increase in the use of alcohol."

The author pays his respects (?) to nicotine, found in tobacco. He says: "In the Fifth Edition of the National Dispensatory, on page 1576, there is a bald statement of a fact. This fact is that 'Nicotine stands next to prussic acid in the rapidity and energy of its poisonous action.' Prussic acid is probably the most deadly of all known poisons. A drop placed on the tongue kills like a stroke of lightning.

"Here are facts which, if realized by the good men and women who, during the late war, worked so faithfully to 'get smokes to the boys,' might give them pause, for scores of thousands of these fine chaps have been, and are being, killed by the kindness of these well-meant efforts.

"Many of them have been so thoroughly nicotine-soaked that, medically speaking, they may be properly classed as invisibly wounded men, along with the shell-shock cases and other forms of neurosis."

He tells how their livers, kidneys and other vital organs have been permanently damaged; how the blood vessels have lost their elasticity; their hearts degenerated, with Bright's disease, apoplexy, and "heart failure" invited to dwell.

The reason the poison taken into the system does not kill instantly is that the system is gradually impregnated with it, and therefore resists the effect so death does not follow, but one's judgment is perverted, his perceptions of the finer qualities of life are dulled, and he cannot be the man he otherwise would be.

He cites a few instances of unquestioned authenticity as to the harmful effects of tobacco:

"Doctor Edwin C. Clarke studied two hundred students of Clark College and found the scholarship distinctly lower among the smokers than among the nonsmokers.

"Doctor George L. Maylan, of Columbia University, found that the ratio of failures of smokers as compared to those of nonsmokers was ten to four.

"In the study of eight hundred high school boys, Doctor P. E. Henry found a school record difference ranging from 17 per cent to 28 per cent in favor of the nonsmokers."

We are pleased to have Doctor Towns strike another knock-out blow at the popular fallacy that we inherit the craving for habit-forming drugs or narcotics or drinks. He insists, and Doctor Lambert assents, that this is not so. While it is true that we may inherit constitutional weaknesses which make us an easy prey to temptation and habit, but we are not justified in charging our ancestors with our failings along this line, if we are unfortunate to possess such.

Doctor Town does not argue that we must let down the bars and make alcoholism easy. He insists that it is a serious situation that must be handled with firm grip and finally eliminated. While he admits frankly that to arrest a drunkard and deprive him of his liquor is often but the means of bringing on insanity, that it will not do to allow the general use of the cursed thing. He knows that mere deprivation in drug cases is not a cure, that tobacco saturated cells are sick cells not able to function normally.

His argument is that the system is poisoned so thoroughly in all these instances that a definite plan of depoisoning must be followed to eliminate the effects and dispel the craving. As a matter of fact he has been very successful along this line, and is willing to offer his methods to the various com-

AT THE OFFICE

BISHOP J. AUGUST KOEHLER

Brother Koehler has recently resigned his position as manager of the Herald Publishing House, and will remove soon with his family to Saint Joseph, Missouri, to labor in his office as bishop. His address will be 517 North Twenty-second Street. From now on, no matters pertaining to the Herald Office business should be sent to him.

BISHOP J. AUGUST KOEHLER

During the eight months he has been manager of the Herald Publishing House he has succeeded in putting into effect a number of changes in administration of the publishing interests and leaves the institution in better shape than he found it. But the insistent needs of the church for men of his type to labor in the general financial affairs has led to his present change of work, and we are sure his extensive knowledge of business and finances as well as the organic law of the church and the ideals of the people will serve him well in his new work.—EDITORS.

MISCELLANEOUS

Letter of Instruction to Religio Workers

The recent Religio convention which was held during the General Conference provided for a number of changes in general procedure. Religio workers throughout the world are anxiously awaiting instructions. We herewith call attention to some of these. A letter will be mailed to you directly outlining in detail the indicated and contemplated changes and supplying a comprehensive outline for work.

We ask that you carefully study these communications with a view to familiarizing yourself with all changes in general as well as local administration and also to prepare for other changes which will be imperative as we move into our ever-widening field of labor.

The convention directed the general executive to make effective immediately the changes provided for by the convention and also authorized the executive to make such other changes as it may elect.

We advise the locals to continue their work with unabated interest and with a view to making this a year of unprecedented activity and expansion. We urge that you make haste by going slowly. Abrupt radical departures are not wise and are often harmful. Do not attempt any change in procedure until you have carefully considered and have had time fully to explain the matter to all of the workers of your district or local.

The lesson course will continue as it is for the present. It is our purpose to make such gradual changes as will eventually furnish a systematic course along lines directly connected with recreational and social work. Our present study will not be displaced. It will be supplemented.

Special attention is called to the new name: Religio Department, also the new title for local and general heads—superintendent. The office of first and second vice president has been abolished. In lieu thereof we have a superintendent of the girl department and a superintendent of the boy department. The former second vice president who was acting as the superintendent of the boy department will continue as the superintendent of the boy movement. Local officers will confer with the superintendent of the Women's Department with a view to the selection of a superintendent of the girl movement. Where there is no women's department the local will proceed immediately to make selection. Every effort should be made to supply a place within the department for the rightful expression of the work of the Temple Builders and Orioles.

The Library Commission so far as the Religio is concerned has been abolished. The temperance department has been discontinued as a part of Religio work. The gospel literature department has been transferred to the publicity department. The home department has been transferred to the women's department.

Some difficulties will have to be overcome to effect this last monwealths which will use them, so anxious is he to see that something is done for the honest people who have fallen into the clutches of these awful monsters.

To read his book can but make us genuinely sympathetic for those who insist that they are unable to break away from the curse that holds them back. We get a greater appreciation of the cause of this condition. The breaking down of the resistive powers or the will of the addict is no light thing. Of course we church members know that when the victim can exert his faith and will to the utmost, that God usually does help him overcome the habit, yet the fight is only begun. The penalty for having yielded to the habit is often a severe one that cannot be escaped, but one can regain some of the things he has lost, if not all.

It is an important medical and sociological situation. It pays us to be fully cognizant of it, that we may be really helpful to those in need, and exert a wholesomely helpful influence on those who might be persuaded by the insidiousness of the numerous appeals made. To own and read such a book will open our eyes so wide to the enormity of the problem that we shall never again close them in secure complacency. The dread thing is at our doors. It is among us to a degree, but unsanctioned and unwelcome. We have been warned of it years ago, and in heeding the warning recognize the advantages that accrue. Having clean and wholesome bodies, we make a place for the dwelling of God's Spirit, which enables us to rise far above the appeal of such miserable things as we have suggested in this brief review.

change owing to the fact that we do not have local women departments in all localities where we have Religio and Sunday school departments. We suggest that those in charge of the home department work in each locality continue as heretofore until you receive further word.

The general superintendent is empowered to appoint field workers in districts, and these field workers will have general charge of the Religio work in their respective districts. These field workers will take the place of district superintendents. It is not the intention to continue district organization with elective officers as heretofore. The main function of the district organizations in the past has consisted in seating delegations and electing officers—an unnecessary procedure. Under the new plan the field worker will take general supervision of the Religio work in his territory; stimulate activity in organized locals and to give primary attention to extending the organization into new localities. He shall arrange for local and district institutes, workers' conferences, and supervise recreational and social activities at reunions, conventions, conferences and general gatherings. He is empowered to call to his help any or all of the active workers in the district. The present district superintendent will act as the field worker of his district until further provision is made. The office of district secretary is abolished as well as all other district officers. District officers other than the superintendent having any papers or property belonging to the district in their possession will please forward same to the district superintendent or field worker.

The delegate system of electing delegates to district gatherings has been suspended and hereafter all district gatherings of Religio workers will be mass gatherings comprising all workers in attendance.

Local secretaries will make quarterly reports to the general office on blanks furnished for that purpose. A duplicate of this report should be sent to the field worker in charge of the district where the local is situated.

The executive officers of the local or general organization will consist of the superintendent of the department, the superintendent of the boy movement, the superintendent of the girl movement, the secretary and the treasurer.

Each local should have the following committees: program, lookout, social, relief. Other committees may be arranged for, such as, calling, music, missionary, flower. The local superintendent should be chairman of the program committee; the secretary should be chairman of the lookout committee and the treasurer should be chairman of the social and the relief committee.

Field workers are directed to get in touch with the district president of the church and canvass the work of the Religio Department in connection with the regular church work. It will be well to go over the minutes of our convention with him. Have a general understanding. Establish a general working basis. There is no need for friction. No district president will object to our work if he rightly understands it. It is up to us to respect the church authorities.

There is no time or place for the laggard. To doubt is to be damned to-day. Have faith in God. Have faith in your fellows. Have faith in yourself. We are depending on you. We believe you will make good. We are boosting for you. We are praying for you. We are with you to a man in all of your efforts to build up the Religio work. We expect big results from you. You are not going to disappoint us. You are not going to disappoint yourself. You are not going to disappoint God.

You will please address all communications intended for the general office as follows:

General Superintendent of the Religio Department.

[Editors' Note: Our readers will be especially interested in the Religio Arena in June Autumn Leaves, wherein Brother Williams presents a fine review of the late convention, the Religio Exposition, etc.]

The Boy Department

Every Boy Can Be a Scout

One of the difficult problems that we have had to meet in connection with the Boy Scout work has been the large number of isolated boys throughout the church. We receive almost daily letters from church workers telling us that they do not have enough boys in their district to organize a troop. With this need in mind we took up the matter with the National Organization of Boy Scouts and have now on hand some literature in regard to what is known as the "Division of Pioneer Scouts." Through this organization it will be possible for any boy living anywhere to become a Pioneer Scout and thus have access to all the literature that is available for free instruction in the hundreds of things that a Boy Scout is taught to do.

We have ordered a supply of application blanks which will be furnished to any boy interested in becoming a Pioneer Scout. We will be glad to furnish a copy of instructions on how to become a Pioneer Scout to any interested. District boy leaders and especially isolated boys who are interested in this plan should get in touch with the undersigned at once.

Special Field Commission

Arrangements have been made to secure special field commissions for our district Scout leaders or for other field workers through the church. These commissions must be reserved for men who influence rather a wide territory and who would have an opportunity to introduce scouting into many communities. These commissions cannot be granted to those who do not have a chance to influence a large number of people. Any district leaders or church representatives who would be interested in taking up this work should address me at once, sending me information in regard to their field of labor, the amount of territory they will be able to reach during the year, etc.

Special Number of the "Autumn Leaves"

Arrangements have been made with the Editor of the Autumn Leaves to make the July issue of that magazine a special Boy Scout number. We are very anxious to secure pictures, articles, and letters of various kinds illustrating the Scout work in the various branches of the church. Contributions will be appreciated. If you have anything that you think would interest the boy workers of the church send it along. All material should be in by June 1, and pictures earlier if possible.

F. M. McDOWELL,

Superintendent Boy Department.

The Presidency

Notice of Appointment

By concurrence of the Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric the following appointments have been made: Samuel T. Pendleton, Fremont District. M

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Appointment of District Presidents

The following appointments of district presidents have been made by the Presidency, subject to the ratification of the next district conference. Those concerned will please take notice.

Elder J. A. Grant, President Southern Ohio District, vice G. E. Burt, resigned.

Elder H. E. Moler, president Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, vice F. F. Whipper, resigned.

Elder Edward Rannie, President Clinton District, vice H. E. Moler resigned.
 THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.
 May 10, 1920.

The Bishopric

Central Nebraska District

We have received the resignation of Brother Levi Gamet, as bishop's agent. This is made necessary by reason of the change of his field of missionary activities, and we hereby appoint Charles M. Sodersten, of Clearwater, Nebraska, as his successor, which becomes effective May 15.

This brother comes to us well recommended and we believe he will serve the Saints in this district in a creditable manner.

His aim for the coming year will be to double the tithing paid by this district during 1919. It can be done and with a willingness on the part of God's people to assist in the Master's work, the tasks will be accomplished.

May God prosper the Saints in this district in temporal things, and imparting according to their blessing, may an abundance of the manifestation of his Spirit be theirs to enjoy. Your servant for the Master,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District: The general authorities of the church have outlined for the coming year the most aggressive and intensive missionary campaign in the history of the church. That their plans may meet with ultimate success calls for the active cooperation of every member. In fact every member of the church should feel a personal interest in helping by becoming a tithe payer and sending in his tithes and freewill offerings that means may be provided for the promulgation of the gospel. I am at your service at any time, either by letter or personal visit to assist you in making out your property statements. Note my new address.

FRANK G. HEDRICK, Bishop's Agent.

President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams have engaged passage on the Rotterdam, to sail July 20 for England, and will reach there in time for the mission reunion.

"As Elder Mortimer and I are going to our home in Owen Sound for a month or so, would say, as district organizer for the Women's Department, as well as home department superintendent for Religio, anyone wishing the services of an organizer or superintendent, please confer with me at the following address after May 19: Mrs. J. L. Mortimer, 1796 Fifth Avenue West, Owen Sound, Ontario."

Personnel

We think much at times of personnel, sometimes more of the men who are called to office, or released, than we do of the important principles of law that are laid down. But personnel will not solve the problem of Zion.

In the early church there were no Quorum of Twelve or seventy for nearly five years. In the Reorganization the First Presidency has had less than three members for a little more than half the time. The Quorum of Twelve was not completed until about 1897, and at different times for several years has had less than its full number.

Personnel alone will not solve our problems, but only a sincere, deep conviction and desire to keep the commandments of God, in our personal life, in our association with each other, and in our efforts to help our fellowman in the establishment of spiritual and industrial Zion.

In the midst of conditions in the world to-day it will require a strong organization. We may repeat the statement of Fisher Ames, that "Monarchy is like the merchantman; it sails well, but every once in awhile strikes a rock and then goes to the bottom with all on board. While democracy is like a raft; it never sinks, but your feet are always in the water."

For in the plan of God we have the perfect combination of the two. We have democracy—the safety of the raft—the right of the people to accept or refuse to accept, to delay when they do not understand. After all that is the most prolific cause of delay, for we are inclined to balk when we do not understand. At the same time a raft on the face of the ocean may sometime get some place, but there is no telling when it will get, or where. That is not the ideal for Zion. We want to get some place, and we want to get there on time; and to do so requires something of the qualification of the merchantman under the direction of the seeming aristocracy of the priesthood and under the direction of God. A strong centralized organization in order that we may not drift with the current, but we need also the safety that is given us by the right of democracy, as represented by the raft.

How Long Shall We Wander

The Lord declared at Fishing River that Zion might have been redeemed even now, that is eighty years ago, and it is not redeemed yet. Ancient Israel wandered in the wilderness for forty years. We have wandered for eighty years. There are giants in the land. Shall we fear them, or shall we move forward? We have come to the River Jordan; the promised land lies before us. Shall we move forward, or shall we fear that we may get our feet wet? At the crossing of the Jordan to get to the chosen land, the priests of ancient Israel had first to wet their feet.

If we decide to go forward, shall we go with the full devotion and consecration to the service of God, or shall we find the spirit of Achan in our midst? Achan attempted to profiteer. He attempted to take that which did not belong to him, and to get rich quick without following the divine plan. To us to-day it would mean the man who speculates in real estate or other commodities; the man who is unwilling to cooperate in the building of Zion, or who, with his lips and with his vote, speaks and votes for Zion, still in his actions seeks to secure a special part for himself.

Shall we get discouraged if we should find an Achan in our midst, or an Ananias, who lies to the servants of God? Shall we fail if men do as Ananias did, and seek to keep a special share for themselves?

I know we have men in the church who do not speculate around Independence or Lamoni, but they invest their funds far away, in order that they may gain every profit that is possible. They will not help to buy land around the stakes for fear they be accused of speculation, so they go out into the world with their moneys and speculate there, even though they seek to gain some of the benefits of the stake organization for themselves.

Recently we saw a very interesting discussion of "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way." Comparison was made to the world championship baseball game. We crowd forward then to get in before it is too late. Have you ever seen the crowd at such a time? We crowd to get into the church, so as to hear special oratorios; we crowd the stairs and wait for hours to secure a favorable seat. Men sit up all night to secure good bleacher seats.

Of course in the kingdom of God we do not by our entering prevent anyone else. Yet there should be something of that earnestness and sincere desire, that we will sacrifice a night's sleep, sacrifice bodily comfort, and will press forward with all our might that we may accomplish the purpose in view and enter in. Are we not ready to do that for Zion? Are we unwilling to enter unless we can ride in easily in automobiles?

If we are going to follow the path of personal ease, we need not expect in this instance that we will accomplish the work before us, or be able to get in.

Let us then resolve to press forward with all of our power, and all of our means. Already in the east can the signs be seen of the coming dawn—the dawn of the coming day of the Son of Man. The issue is before us, we must choose. If we would, we cannot go back; we must press on. Are we ready to do so with devoted purpose and realize the splendid results which are possible under God? There are difficulties; there are giants in the land; there are weaknesses among our brethren; there are forces without and within which seem to make it hard, and at times impossible.

Shall, therefore, our faith fail, or shall we with confidence in God and our eyes set steadfastly towards the signs of his coming, move forward and in our hearts and lives continue to offer that prayer, "Lord Jesus, come quickly"?

“Twenty Thousand Converts Before Next General Conference, Each With His Face Toward Zion!”

That is the slogan set for the missionary arm of our Church by our President. It is setting the ideal high; it is assigning a mighty task; it is imposing a tremendous responsibility on the missionary department. But is it beyond achieving, or would we aim less high? The answer in the heart of every missionary will be, “No, we have been called into a great work; and with our brotherly unity and with God’s help we can achieve great things, even to the goal pointed out by our Prophet and leader!”

We have good cause to believe that the coming two years can be made to produce a great harvest. Do you know that last year, in spite of our discouragements, that we made a splendid gain in membership while the other Protestant churches, almost without exception, report appalling losses? Surely with the spirit of unity now animating our people, and with a foretaste of the endowment as experienced at Conference, we can go out and preach the gospel with a new zeal and with a spirit that will carry conviction to all who hear.

We have a message for the people of to-day. We can teach it by word and by example. Already the call to move in and occupy as stewards has been sounded, and with its demonstration our light will shine out as never before.

Our far-flung battlelines will reach to new continents this year, and our cause will have earnest men preaching it at home and abroad. They will be in the first line bearing the brunt, but the great army at home, and in the local branches and in the stakes of Zion will furnish steady reinforcements, and will aid mightily in the great task. Where will you serve in the army of the Lord?

The Church in World Problems

An address to the General Conference, April 6, 1920, at Independence, Missouri, by President Frederick M. Smith.

The text I have chosen is one which quite unexpectedly came to me as fit for the subject I have in mind. It is not new to you. Many of you have used it. Many of you have quoted it. And without doubt, many of you have used it to present the eschatological aspects of our religion, and I wonder if not a few of you have failed to see the economic aspect of this text. You will find it in the latter part of the eleventh chapter of Saint Matthew, the last three verses: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

This is a favorite text with our people who are desiring to present to the people of the world an invitation for coming into the fold—to introduce the message that will bring cheer and comfort to those whom they may have before them as listeners, and I challenge anyone to produce anywhere in religious literature an invitation which is more appealing, more enticing, which is more encouraging than this invitation that was given by the Master to those who might be weary with the affairs of this world: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Need for Message

Perhaps at no time in the history of the world was the necessity for this invitation greater than it is to-day. Perhaps at no time can it be presented with more appealing force, with more significance than to-day, if the import of that message is understood as Jesus intended we should understand it.

The world is war-weary, and yet is not permitted to rest. Anyone would have supposed a few short months ago that of all nations in the world that would be disposed to make haste to consummate peace, it would be the United States, and yet we have seen the Senate of the United States discussing for months a document as a basis upon which peace might be introduced, and finally rejecting it, leaving us technically at war. For over a year since the armistice we have been trying to establish peace, and yet it is significant that the French army is on German soil, and the French themselves have been disposed to disregard the terms of the treaty they were anxious to introduce a short time ago for their own protection. Not only that, but the Balkan situation, as we all know, is still uncomposed. Consult any European politician and he will put his finger on that situation as the keynote to the whole trouble; the fire, if you please, that keeps the European kettle still boiling, and is likely to for some time. The world is war-weary, and yet it cannot rest.

The laboring class is striving hard to improve its condition.

The laborer has become toil-weary. He has worked at his machine; he has worked at his trade for the purpose of gathering wages, that he might aggrandize his interests, ameliorate his own condition, not only toil-weary, under the conditions that exist to-day, but added to the weariness of body is that most awful of things which we call homesickness, and the homesickness of the masses of the laboring people to-day is intensified because of the hopelessness that exists in many instances of their ever having what they can call their own home. Add to the weariness of toil, the heart-weariness of homesickness and you can appreciate the depression the laboring man is fast getting into to-day, and the significance of what it means to society because it is arousing a bitterness within the heart of the masses of the laboring people that is bound to find its expression sooner or later, even though it might find it in destructive ways, for the time being. The world is weary not only of war, but it is toil-weary, and many of its masses are weary because they have added to the discomfort of aching muscles the heaviness of heart that comes from the knowledge of the fact that they have no home.

The Evils of Competition

The favored classes, therefore, find that the laboring man is banding and the organizations of labor are becoming more powerful and there is growing up within the organization of labor itself a spirit of domination, a spirit of determination to have their own way and to alleviate their condition that makes it inevitable that the crash will come sooner or later. The favored class is still trying to maintain its position of advantage.

Competition is what has crippled industry to a large extent. There are people to-day who still are devoted to the doctrine of competition, though they fail evidently to recognize its mercilessness, as it drives to despair and distraction not only the laboring man, but the man who employs labor, as well. The evils of competition have augmented the bitterness of the struggle that is being waged between the laboring man and the employer. Living without labor has become a false idea of success. Almost within a stone's throw of this auditorium, there occurred an incident not long ago that will illustrate what I mean. A man who had been making a comfortable living by sellings stocks, writing insurance, etc., said that as a young man he had completed learning the trade of shoemaking and one day he was boasting to a banker that he had learned a trade. He had evidently been reared among those who held it out as an ideal to be accomplished by an individual that every man should have a trade to fall back on if necessary. The banker who was listening ridiculed the idea and said, "That is all right to have a trade, if you haven't brains enough to get a living without work." The man had boasted that he had taken that statement to heart, that he hadn't worked since, although he had made a living. Living without labor is a false idea of success, and it has left its impress upon the condition of the world and has become a factor in contributing to the conditions that exist to-day.

The deplorable condition of society as we find it to-day increases the burden of the laboring class, for, for every man who is detracted from the ranks of honest labor, it means an additional burden placed upon those who remain therein. I am not going this morning to take the time to analyze this question of labor, to say what is or is not labor; it does not mean, of course, to say that just because one does not work with his hands, he is therefore not doing honest labor.

Fear of Dependency

Ceaseless toil for the mere privilege of existing (let me repeat that), ceaseless toil for the mere privilege of existing has brought not alone weariness, but has brought despair. And that is another factor that is functioning today that makes the condition critical. The fear of dependency through disability has added to the gloom. A man who feels that he has years of service before him, who goes to work rejoicing in his physical powers, that his muscles are working without aching, that his joints are not rusty, that he is robust in health, that he can breathe to the bottom of his lungs, that he can do more or as much work as any alongside of whom he works, has constantly the fear over his head that a misstep, a miscalculation might take off a hand or a foot and leave him disabled for life, and his family, who depend upon him, be left without their means of support. The fear of dependency in the laboring class in this age of competition has added to the gloom that exists, that is driving organized labor towards the clash, towards the conflict.

The fear of debt through sickness adds to despair. Any man who has had experience through his own family, or has seen what comes to the family of his friend, knows that the small savings are dissipated as snow before the June sun when the doctor comes into the house, when medicine must be secured, when the sick must be nursed. So that the fear of sickness adds to the despair that is creeping over the laboring classes.

And fear of still another kind adds and intensifies the bitterness of the struggle for gain; and that is the fear of old age without means of support. One of the most dreaded things in the life of the average man is the advent and advance of senility, and the fact that he has to rely upon other for his support. This embitters and intensifies the struggle for gain. Poverty, looking through the mists of misery, glimpsing the luxurious extravagance of opulence, has in resentment engendered hatred, jealousy, and smoldering desire for revenge. Class consciousness, aroused by the evidences of disparity, is easily fanned into class hatred by the efforts of those deliberately attempting it, especially when the pinch of poverty, the hungry cry of loved ones, the moan of un nourished, unsuccored sick augment the efforts towards discord. That is the purpose of creating class consciousness. And the realization of the disparity that exists in society creates this class consciousness and sets it on fire as nothing else can. And when to this effort to arouse class consciousness is added the pinch of poverty, the hungry cry of loved ones, the moan of the unnurtured sick, the efforts toward discord are tremendously augmented and multiplied.

A Word Picture

Let me paint you a picture. We see a man some bright morning, a man whom we recognize to be in his prime of physical condition, who apparently is in good health, and who is going to his work; and yet he goes droopingly, no spring in his step, his shoulders are forward, and when he looks up towards the factory he is about to enter, no joy is reflected in his face. He approaches the machine almost with hate, for he feels that he is tied to the machine, and almost as mechanically as the machine he operates he goes through the movements of the day, for wages—a mere chance to live. He leaves his machine and the factory when the whistle blows, and if, when dragging his weary muscles across the street, he comes close to being hit by a rapidly moving motor car, can you not see the strong inclination to raise the threatening fist of hate when he sees within that car his employer riding in ease to his home, while he is left to walk wearily the long distance to his? Joy in his work has long been taken away from him. And can you imagine how the despair, the bitterness can be augmented and will be augmented if on coming to that place he calls home, which might be a mere hovel, he finds in his absence while operating the merciless machine, disease has stealthily entered his house and stricken one of his family? Can you picture the despair when he sees in imagination the small savings account disappear and in place thereof come the burden of debt? I can picture him telling his troubles to a fellow laborer, and I can imagine somewhat his surprise when he learns that his fellow laborer is also a fellow in misery; and this bond of sympathy between men in misery is bound to expand its circles and draw together the laboring men until they can remove the conditions against which they revolt and protest.

And the employer who was apparently riding home in the machine in luxury—what about him? Is it as well with him as the laboring man perhaps misguidedly judged? I imagine that in nine cases out of ten if you could scan carefully the face of such employer you would find it was marked and seamed by the traces of care, and should he unburden his heart to tell you he would tell you stories of hours of meditating, contemplating, and thinking in trying to meet the problems that come to him—problems everywhere, problems of maintenance, problems of machinery, problems of difficulties in settling strikes, of satisfying discontented laboring men, of trying to get the raw material and considering the cost, the problems for converting the raw material into the finished product, always counting the cost, the problems of putting the product on the market, ever considering the problem of cost. Costs as offset against profits. Profits for what? Trying to protect himself, perhaps, against the same thing the laboring man is, an old age of incompetency, or an old age of dependency, because of sickness. Profits for mere gain for selfish purposes to protect himself and loved ones from the fear to which all seem to be heir. And so the struggle goes on and on towards the inevitable clash. Let me put the old trite expression, the conflict between labor and capital. Now I hear some of you perhaps who are optimistically inclined say, "Why ring that old cry in our ears? Has it not been in the world almost since the introduction of steam and power machinery, when it became impossible for one man to own and run machinery by himself, when companies were organized to carry out these things? Always has the cry been the inevitable clash or conflict between labor and capital." Yes; it is true that it has been. It has been looked for, and the looking for it will continue; but let me ask you in all sincerity, let me ask in all earnestness, Can you students of history put the finger on a page of history that records a time that was more propitious for the clash between labor and capital than it is to-day? Higher wages, higher costs; higher costs, higher wages—reckless extravagance on every hand; people buying because they have the money, turning away from low-priced things because they have the money in their pockets which they never had before, and not counting the cost. They want the thing that is highest priced.

Going It Blind

Extravagance in every direction! The Government itself going into extravagance of expenditure despite the fact that its treasurer is constantly calling out the fact that its treasury is being fast depleted, the Secretary of the Treasury indicating how by hundreds of millions of dollars almost monthly we are plunging into a condition of national debt with no promise of getting out. (I don't want to get into politics here, so will stop right there; I might go too far.)

Labor is organized, offsetting this organization of employers. Labor is organized to an extent not known before. Walking delegates everywhere are not only watching and safeguarding the interests of labor, but are constantly on the alert to stimulate the laborer to anger, if you please, and resentment against the conditions he is laboring under. And you who have come in contact with those conditions know that is true. Recently I have learned indirectly, but not very far removed, of a conversation between a large shipper and a railroad official of one of the most powerful railroad organizations in the country, one of the few which came through the United States Railroad Administration without financial depletion, in which the railroad man said, "We don't know what to expect, but we do know this, that from the stenographer in the office of the president, down to the humblest man working on the roadbed, our employees are organized to a man; and we do know that smoldering in their consciousness somewhere are demands they are going to insist upon to which we cannot yield." They are looking for a clash.

We are going it blind as a nation, economically, socially, and I doubt not but what we might be ecclesiastically. We are going it blind—no, not entirely; there are some who are calling attention to the condition into which we are plunged, but the man who is pointing out these dangers to the church is likely to be swept aside as an obstructing pessimist and told to get out of the way. Yet, talk with the leaders of finance, talk with the princes of business, and if they will speak frankly (and most of them will) their minds to you, they will confess to you that they do not see where they are going. I recently talked to the president of one of the strongest banks in the Middle West. It happened he was a man who felt free for the occasion to speak frankly, and when I said, "What is the outlook financially, so far as the country is concerned?" he replied, "Any man on the street knows just as well where we are going as do any of us men who call ourselves financiers. We don't know where we are going; we are going it blind." And you men who quote scripture know what is likely to happen when the blind lead the blind.

The Seeds of Disloyalty

And perhaps just as significant, and I don't know but what more significant, is the fact that to the alert eye there is evidence everywhere (now please note this) that everywhere in every organization there are not only the seeds but also the systematic propaganda of disloyalty, until the whole social fabric of this Government, and every other government in the world is shot through with decay and precarious conditions due to disloyalty. I have been rebuked by some of my brethren for crying out against disloyalty, but I shall keep on crying out against disloyalty as long as I see the insidious inroads that it is making in our own ranks by those who seem to be determined to split this church by creating disloyalty in its ranks, for I see the processes of disloyalty going on not only here but in our Government, and you have only to look at the condition in the world to-day where we see governments crumbling over night, to realize that there is nothing that can bring about such conditions except a widespread dissemination of the spirit of disloyalty. I will admit it has been engendered by causes that exist; and I admit, too, that this condition of despair in which the laboring man is finding himself compelled to work—this condition of despair that follows in the wake of the competitive system—I admit that there are perhaps reasons for this development of disloyalty; and yet on the other hand people who are alert and wise know that when processes are put into effect to disrupt an organization that is founded for good, any other organization built out of the fragments of the first organization is just as likely to be unstable.

Not only do governments crumble over night, but the news of strikes has become so commonplace that nothing short of a "scarehead" attracts attention any more. Switchmen walk out by hundreds in Chicago over trouble that nobody knows the cause of. They are immediately joined by other switchmen, though they do not know why. So the strike spreads until one of the biggest industries of one of the biggest cities of the United States is suddenly disrupted, and yet we read it with the utmost complacency and think nothing of it because it has become so commonplace. And if you have had your eye open to the signs of the times, you have seen lawlessness and crime sweep over the country and over the cities in constantly growing waves until each wave that succeeds the other is larger and more ominous.

What Is the Answer?

What is the answer to all this? It is useless for me to add myself to the numbers of hundreds of others who are calling attention to these conditions unless we might offer some solution. Social reformers have given many answers to the question, but frequently the answer is too simple, due to inadequate analysis and therefore simple in the application of the remedy. It is difficult of course to put your hand upon any one thing that might offer the remedy, unless that one thing is so constituted that it becomes fundamental to the whole social organization, that will constitute a basis on which this thing is built. If one is going to maintain the basis of competition, then one has a most difficult task in presenting an economic theory that will eliminate all the evil that exists in the world to-day and bring about the good condition we desire. But if the whole situation can be so analyzed that we can find what are the foundation stones on which the superstructure has been wrongly built, and then passing down to those foundation stones see to it that the proper basis is put in, then our superstructure will carry its own weight.

And a question of equal importance to this is one that we as a people should ask, "What is the church going to do about these conditions, and what has the church to offer?" It seems to me that the church to-day should be alert to the invitation that we read as the basis for our remarks, "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden." It did not stop at labor; it did not mean to say, Come unto me all ye who labor and I will teach you how to work without labor. Jesus did not say that, did he? He did not establish that false basis. But he did say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In other words, those who find their work burdensome, driving them into a constantly growing weariness—these are the ones who find labor burdensome. It was useless to come unto Jesus or anybody else, for a weary man, unless there was offered to him that that would relieve his weariness permanently, and I think Jesus meant to say, and that would be the interpretation of his message, the interpretation of this passage we would present to you—Jesus meant to say, "If ye come unto me and adopt the plan I have or will institute, then I can promise that every man who labors will labor joyfully and without burden, and every man must labor, for in my economy there is no place for the idler," for "in my kingdom there is no place for the idler," he says in another place. And so the economic significance of this passage is just that, that this church has the burden placed upon it of removing the burden from the laborer, that drives him home with aching muscles and a heart heavy with homesickness—in other words, the answer to this economic condition that we would change must be found in the instituting of a system that will enable us to work for the joy of working, produce for the pleasure of producing, and producing for service, because that is the one thing that will bring pleasure.

A New Motive

Let me in imagination now go back to the man we saw going into the factory, and let us imagine conditions changed, and see him again. This time as he approaches the factory his step is springy because there has been granted to him sufficient time to recuperate so that his industrial efficiency, his human machine, if you please, has been kept to the top-notch condition. He leaves his family joyfully because he knows it is comfortably located in a home they call their own, with enough food on the shelves so that there is no danger of his family becoming hungry; and he knows that in case sickness comes into that family while he is gone there are resources at his command that relieve that despair, and he approaches the machine almost with a song in his heart because he says, Here is the thing that is permitting me to bring my contribution to society; this machine is mine; I love it because I am master of it, and from its whirring wheels I can bring that and lay on the altar of the community that is protecting me, and I can make my contribution to society as well. Then when he leaves the factory at night he will not leave with his weary limbs dragging until he is in fear of being run down, but he will leave saying, It is only to go and rest, to keep me in condition, that I leave you, dear machine; I will see you again and we will still further produce that we can contribute to the welfare of society.

Let us take the case of the employer, the same one we saw riding down the street in his machine, luxurious, perhaps, to the casual observer. What about him? He has problems to meet. He is a man of capacity; he is a man of initiative, recognized to be able to accomplish much good, to direct great enterprises. He is still meeting problems; yes, problems; still considering the question of production, the question of output, but this time considering the question of profits not because it is selfish, but because profits measure the service he can bring to the community; and he, too, like the laboring man we have seen going home joyfully, is happy because his stewardship is bringing in his contribution to the community that is standing by him and protecting him against fear as well.

Stewardships the Keypnote

I spoke the keynote just then: stewardship. I do not mean the stewardship that is being taught perhaps even falsely to-day—another one of those peculiarly attractive things that will be seized by individuals who look to organization for selfish commercial purposes and thereby are permitted another instrument by which they can extract money from people; I am speaking about the stewardship that Jesus Christ himself brought to the world. I am glad the world is making some step towards it, but there is yet to be made a demonstration of this question of stewardships. It will take as its foundation stone that which is the deepest laid of all the stones on which and human endeavor is built, and that is true religion. Unless there is true religion as the basis of a social economy, that will even introduce the doctrine of stewardships, it will not accomplish its purpose. Christ lived, and worked, and died for the people, and the spirit and genius of his work, working not for wages, not for the mere chance to exist, but for the service, irrespective of the discomfort which it might bring to him—that is the spirit and genius with which this church must work, or any other that is attempting to introduce social reform to-day.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

What is the church going to do? To the question of Zionie conditions I must confess to you this morning I have given much thought. It has occupied in my attention a far greater amount of time, energy, and thought than have the questions we might call theological. I might be approached by a person who would ask me whether the Saints shall occupy the highest degree of glory. I do not know, and I do not care, for that will take care of itself; but between now and the time this glory will be meted out to us there lies a period of such tremendous work and responsibility and so much to accomplish that I am more concerned about that which lies just before us, and I would like to ask this people, not as to whether you are concerned about the degree of glory you are going to have on the other side, but what are you going to do now, to-day, to-morrow, to relieve the awful condition of misery that is existing in the world? A man's pockets may be bulging with money, but that does not mean that he is out of his misery; the very possession of the money under certain conditions intensifies the misery with which he finds himself dominated. But the conditions existing in the world to-day make it apparent to any man who may observe, that misery is extant, that people are unhappy, that they are hungering and thirsting for the very thing this church is qualified to give to them. Are we going to give it, or are we going to withhold it?

A Century of Theory

For nearly a century this church has been holding out the theory of the doctrine of stewardships in a system which makes the most appealing attraction to the individual that you will find anywhere. Take the theory of communism and the theory of socialism as suggested to-day and they fade in their light and brilliancy when placed beside this system of stewardships as was introduced to the world by the Seer whose message you heard this morning, and to me that is one of the greatest evidences of the divinity of this work, that an individual situated as was this individual could bring to the world that thing which will offer the solution of the difficulties and misery of the world and yet come from a man who was considered unlearned.

What are we going to do about it? If I have my way about it, as your leader, you will do a good deal and do it quick, for I am burdened with this responsibility that here is a people who, for nearly a century, have been holding out the ideal of stewardship and yet have made little or no progress to put it into application; and I say it here, I shall as your leader no longer take the responsibility of refusing to call on this people to put into effect its doctrine of stewardship, to gather to the place called Zion, to institute the Zionie condition and establish the condition that will organize us economically and industrially on a religious basis. That, this church alone offers, and I wonder if we are going to be equal to the task. The times are portentous; a place of safety must be built, and we must build it or make the effort, and I bear this testimony to you this morning, that the evidences we see and discern in the church indicated that the Spirit of God is working mightily among his people. Testimonies are being borne everywhere of the presence of God working among his people until the spirit of altruism which is essential to organization on this religious basis is being disseminated throughout the church. Young men with their lives before them, with all the ambition of a young man who is in his vigor and feels his power, and is therefore somewhat reckless of the fear that seizes the mind of an older person, and who feel confident that they can extract from this world a decent living—they are offering their all, laying their talents on the altar of service, and saying, What I am, what I possess, it is for the church to own and direct. And when that spirit is common, as it is, and we sense it; and when we see manifested in the meetings of the priesthood and of the Saints still widening the circle of this splendid influence, can we not arise in our joy and sing, Zion shall be redeemed; she shall put on her beautiful garments and stand as a flaming testimony to the world that the Spirit of the Master is having its perfect work?

The Time Is Here

If I have conveyed to you the meaning that I intended, you have been impressed with the thought, as it has impressed me, that beside belief in the restoration of the priesthood, and in the doctrine of continuous or continued revelation, the next most distinctive belief that differentiates this church from all others, is its doctrine of social economy; the very crux of which is found in the doctrine of stewardships. Let me repeat, too, what I said, viz, that so far, our presentation of the doctrine of stewardships has been largely theoretical. I make one glorious exception to this, and one of which I am proud, and that is the splendid spirit of the ministry of this church, who have, to all practical intents and purposes, been upon a basis of stewardship in all the years they have worked for this church. So far as the work of the church is concerned, then, the time is here for the establishment of the practical aspects of the doctrine of stewardships, and for that the Presidency stands, and that we recommend to you—that we enter upon the establishment of stewardships without delay. Let me emphasize those last two words, WITHOUT DELAY—for the time demands it. Now there may be those who will place themselves in opposition to this. There may be those who will attempt to delay the establishment of these stewardships. Let them take the consequences, if they succeed. My responsibility ends, as your leader, when I say the time is here for the establishment of stewardships, except that I expect to work for it with all the vigor of my powers if I remain the leader of the church, by your choice.

Any church which fails to be vitally interested in the welfare of its people in every one of the aspects of the manifestations of its life, comes short of its duty to-day; and any Christian church has upon it this duty more specifically and more burdensomely than others and that is especially true of a church such as is this, operated on the expressed belief, not only in the Christian principle, so far as religion is concerned, but in the belief of a society organized on the basis of stewardships in its economic and industrial life.

For long your leader has been calling for education. Calling for it with a vigor and a zeal that was backed by an intuitive knowledge—I can go farther and say an inspired knowledge—that things were before this church, the imminence of which was not at the time appreciated, that have now plunged this church in the midst of a time that we have been hoping our people would be prepared for. I thank God that the manifestations of the Spirit, the workings of the Spirit in the church, have been that we come into this time with a far greater degree of preparedness than I, in my deep concern, had thought we would manifest. For the Spirit of God, let me repeat what I said this morning, is working mightily among this people, if I can read aright the signs of the times, leading them surely and even rapidly towards the consummation of this application of the doctrine of stewardships.

Commission to Be Formed

Do you read the signs of the times thus? The time is here when these young people, and older ones, who have with the idea of being useful to the church in this economic Zionie condition—who have been pursuing courses of study, and amassing a wealth of knowledge—the time has come, let me repeat, when they are to be put to the test, to make a practical application of what they have gleaned; and so I will make a slight change in the note of my pleading with you, then, and that is that the education of the people of the church go on with even increased speed until every man and woman can feel the importance of seeing to it that every energy that he or she possesses, every ounce of nervous force that he has command of, is being spent towards his own betterment, not from a selfish motive, but with the idea of being, ultimately, of greater service to God and his church; and yet at the same time that the educational forces are in progress, we must take on an additional burden, and against that I have been warning you—and that is the burden of organizing, in a practical way, and demonstrating to the world the feasibility of the doctrine of stewardships in a society which is founded on religion. And so, recognizing the progress that we have made, feeling the weight of responsibility of the leadership that you have imposed, the Presidency unhesitatingly make some recommendations to this conference, and have some things to present to you that will require your careful and your prayerful consideration, because the adoption of them means the undertaking of a task the like of which few peoples have ever undertaken.

Closely connected with the establishment of the center place is the question of establishing the Saints on the land and in the industries of the regions round about, according to the law of stewardships as we understand it. To meet the many practical problems in working into a reality the theory of stewardships, affords a task which is great, but which must be accomplished. That from a multitude of counsel might be assured safety in this movement, the President of the church purposes calling the business men of the church into frequent consultation, and of forming commissions of qualified men and experts to intensively study and practically work out the many problems connected with the endeavors we must foster, encourage, promote, or develop, according to the aspect of the stewardship which is contemplated. The heads of these commissions we expect to form into what might be termed an industrial council. From the workings of this council we expect to see the practical obstacles to stewardships gradually overcome.

Unity Will Come with Endeavor

I appreciate the difficulties that we as a body of independent thinking men confront in attempting to evolve a common conception of what stewardship means. I appreciate the task, too, of ironing out all the difficulties that will arise. I appreciate even the difficulty of holding in check those who are convinced that they have followed the right line of reasoning and have reached the only and indisputable result of those conclusions, and who therefore are not easily converted from the error of their way, if they have fallen into an error or to use a common expression, they must be clearly shown before they will retrace; and, appreciating as I have, some of the difficulties of the question of stewardships, especially on this matter of how they shall be held, I have thought how we could overcome these difficulties, and remembering in my own experience as an executive how, frequently, almost apparently insurmountable difficulties have disappeared before the free exchange of opinion, the widening of the circle of our common understanding, rather than an attempt to fight to the end our differences, I have finally concluded that perhaps the solution lay in calling into counsel with the spiritual authorities of the church the men who have become experienced in business, men of affairs, men who have shown themselves to be equals and even the superiors in some instances, to men in similar industries in the affairs and activities of the world. Meditating over this in its general aspects, I was not long ago, while riding on one of the railroad trains in the East, permitted to see the unfoldment of this plan in practically all its details, to such an extent that I felt there lay the solution, ultimately, of all our difficulties, in regard to the working out of the problems of stewardship. Many of the men to form these commissions or head them were presented to me; and it is only a matter of detail or clerical work to notify these men and ask them to come to Independence for this conference; and the details of this we expect to present to the proper authorities in due time.

Let me say that the workings of the Spirit of God among his people, the deep devotion, the readiness to consecrate talent and labor as well as wealth, the turbulence of the times, the restlessness of the world, the absence of peace, as well as the testimony of the Spirit all indicate the advent of the hastening time. Let us be up and about the Master's business.

Mother's Place in Our Lives

A sermon by Elbert A. Smith on Mother's Day, May 9, 1920, Independence, Missouri.

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."—1 Corinthians 13: 4-7.

You may wonder why I have selected this scripture reading for this day, Mother's Day, as I am asked to celebrate that theme in my discourse. The reason is, I believe that in this very instance we could substitute the words "mother's love" for the word "charity," because it is a fact that mother's love is kind, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, but beareth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things, hopeth all things, and never fails.

There have been, of course, a great many spurious pleas made in the name of mother. A great many second and third date revivalists, imitators of "Billy" Sunday, and all other appeals fail, bring in a watery appeal to sentiment in the name of the memory of mother, in an effort to bring people to the mourners' bench; and many an appeal to charity either in the interest of pity or financial aid is "put across" fraudulently by arousing the sentiment of reverence for some one's mother. This indicates only that it is realized that the plea does have a profound influence on humanity; and when this sacred name is linked with a legitimate appeal it carries with it a force that is rivaled by few other appeals that can be made to man.

Most Nearly Like the Love of God

Real, true mother's love is perhaps most nearly like the love of God of anything we can comprehend: it is so full of charity, it demands so little and asks no questions, but gives itself freely, especially when most needed. And certainly it is fortunate for us that such is the case; every boy, and every girl, who has a mother, has a friend whose friendship is not based on beauty or merit. Here, for instance, is a little tow-headed urchin with a pug nose and freckles so thick that some of them stand on edge, perhaps dirty, and certainly boisterous; one who would stand no show whatever in a beauty contest. He doesn't appeal to you or to me, but if he were a beautiful golden-haired cherub from the gates of glory his mother could not love him any more than she does; she would not love him any more, because she could not. A mother gives all that she has and she could not give any more. She asks no questions and she does not criticize that which God has given her. It suits her better than any other woman's child could, and she takes it and loves it.

The Mother Bird's Love

Mother's love is a noble thing, even when it is manifested among animals. I remember one occasion when as a boy I was crossing the prairie with my dog. (No real boy ever got anywhere satisfactorily without a dog. I suppose that the friendship that exists between boys and dogs is because boys to-day are just about where men were when they first formed the friendship of dogs—the boy is just about where man was when the dog first came in out of the forests and attached himself to society.) I was crossing the field with my friend when from under my feet there sprang up a prairie chicken apparently with a broken wing. She flopped through the air and fell to the ground about ten feet away from me. The dog went after the bird, but he got only a few feathers and the poor wounded animal struggled on a little farther. The process was repeated until we had gone two or three hundred feet. Then, suddenly, this "wounded" bird sprang into the air and flew away absolutely unhurt, and we realized, of course, that we had been fooled. This mother twenty times in as many minutes risked her life to save her brood. I have seen this done many times since that time, by plovers and other wild fowl. It is an old trick of the mother prairie chicken, to lead an enemy away from her nest.

On another occasion I was crossing the prairie in the wake of a fire. It was always a great experience to follow after a prairie fire and see what had been uncovered—and this time I happened to come upon a little brown prairie bird that had remained on her nest and perished in the flames rather than leave the two little fledglings that were under her. She had two strong wings and she could have flown away at any time into the sky far beyond the smoke and heat, but she chose to stay and perished with her children. They say that self-preservation is the first law of nature, but there was a stronger law, a primary law, and she perished in an effort to save her young. She was just one of the humblest of the animal creation, but Jesus said, "Greater love hath no man than this: that he should give his life for another."

Recently I read a report of a discussion carried on in the papers among physicians and college professors as to what is the duty of the physician when it is a choice between saving the life of the mother or the child. It seems that physicians have always held that in such an instance the life of the child should be sacrificed, as the mother is of more importance to society, and that is the determining factor. But I believe that almost invariably if it is left to the choice of the mother the child will be saved and the mother will be sacrificed. Certainly this was true in the instance I have recounted of the prairie bird.

Mother's Love Most Enduring

Now, of course, when we come to consider the love of the human mother, we find that it is much more godlike because it is so much more intelligent and associated with so much more imagination and feeling. In the animal kingdom even the greatest mother love seems to end with the period of dependency. The little wren that cherishes her young so carefully now, in two or three months will cast them off and even will not know them from other wrens. That is true to a greater or less extent of all animals, but it certainly is not so with the human mother. Neither time nor distance lessens her affection. I knew an old man, perhaps seventy years old, whose mother, ninety years of age, watched over him just as jealously as she did when he was a little boy. If he was gone from her sight on some errand an undue length of time she worried about him and chided him on his return.

The passage of time had made no difference. The mother whose baby died five, ten, twenty, or fifty year ago still cherishes the little lock of hair and the little blue shoes that are silent helps to a memory that needs no help.

Neither does distance seem to make any change, for the mothers whose boys not long ago were in far-off France loved them just as dearly as when they were at home. To that extent, love becomes godlike, because it is not subject to change, or time, or space.

The Most Interesting Experiment

I believe that to a mother is intrusted the most interesting experiment a human being can engage in. Some people are deeply interested in the culture of flowers; some are interested in the culture of fruit; and still others in the culture of animals; but the mother is engaged in the culture of a human being, and to her is intrusted the welfare of a human soul. Certainly no one can say to her that she can dream this dream and may not dream that one; and no one can put a barrier around her dreams because no one can say what will come from the experiment she is carrying on. She may be cradling a Moses, or a Solomon, or a David, or a Saint Paul, or a Gladstone, or an Abraham Lincoln. No one knows. There is absolutely no limit to the dreams she can dream or the ambitions she may entertain.

But on the other hand, of course, there is no limit to the fears that may come into her soul, because it is true that while she may be nursing a Saint Paul, she may be nursing a Judas Iscariot! Some mother did! While she may be rearing a Mary or Martha, she may be rearing a Jezebel! Some mother did! And even if moral catastrophe is avoided, there is always the danger of other catastrophies that bring anxiety to the mother's heart.

Do you remember the statement that was made to Mary the mother of Jesus, "And because of him a sword also shall pierce through thine own soul." And there is a second statement found in the nineteenth chapter of John and the twenty fifth verse. Just a few words: "There stood by the cross of Jesus, his mother."

The Mother of Moses

I want to tell you this morning the story of three mothers. The first of these was that Hebrew girl, a daughter of Levi, who married and lived on the banks of the Nile. In due time she gave birth to a boy, and nursed and cared for him as long as she dared, being afraid of the edict that had gone forth that all male children of the Hebrews should die. Then she formed an ark of bulrushes, coated it over with slime, put the baby in the ark and set the ark afloat on the river. Presently the daughter of Pharaoh came to the river to bathe and found the little boy and, loving him immediately, adopted him and wanted a nurse to take care of him. Miraculously the mother was just at hand and consented to take the little one and nurse him. It is a wonder that the suspicions of the Egyptian were not aroused, that this Hebrew woman should be so conveniently at hand. So this mother took her boy and nursed him and cared for him for wages—no, not for wages, but for love.

The significant thing is that when she cradled that boy in her arms, she cradled in her arms the destiny of a nation, and more than one nation, because it was said to Abraham that his wife should be the mother of nations; she held the Hebrew race, she held Hebrew literature, Hebrew theology, Jerusalem and the Holy Land, Gethsemane, and Cavalry in her arms—because this was Moses who was destined to lead slaves out of Egypt and make of them a nation and give them a law, and organize them, and lead them to the very edge of the promised land into which they would move and occupy; and it was destined that under their administrations all the children of the earth should be blessed.

In other words, here was a woman to whom was intrusted the safety of a state, the destiny of a nation; and it is also true that every nation must to an extent intrust its destiny to its women. And it might pay us to pause and ask ourselves concerning the character of our ideals regarding American motherhood and womanhood and the ideals that the women of the world themselves are cherishing today that will make them fit mother to safeguard the destiny of this nation. Of course there are many women who have the highest of ideals, especially if they have been touched by religion, but there are many others, apparently of a worldly nature, who do not give very much promise for the future. I noticed recently an article written by a member of the faculty of one of our great universities and he was describing some of the girls who took part in a college play. He said they appeared upon the stage half disrobed, smoking cigarettes, and using language that was indecent. He thought it a very poor augury for the Nation's future.

The Mother of Joseph Smith

The next story is that about the widow who was left living upon the banks of the Mississippi River following the tragedy at Carthage that robbed the church of its prophet and president, and its patriarch. Brother Walter W. Smith, our historian, told that story some time ago much better than I can.

You remember how she was left alone in that day when the church was breaking up, when ambitious men and false doctrines were wrecking and ruining that which God had sought to build up. From the East where her father lived there came a plea that she should go and live with him. There was the promise of ease and plenty and respectability (she had not been considered by the world respectable from the day when she united her fortunes with the "Mormon prophet"). She could renounce her religion and go back to her father's fold and live in comfort, but instead she chose to live in Nauvoo in poverty and drudgery all the days of her life.

And there also came the appeal from the dominant church out west to come to them with her children and they would take care of her, but these, too, she rejected and chose to stay at home in Nauvoo in the midst of strangers, teaching her boys the pure principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ as they had been intrusted to her husband, and teaching them reverence and honor of the law.

And so, early in April, 1860, she caused her son Joseph to harness "Tatty" and hitch her to the buggy and the two of them drove to the Amboy conference and she handed over to the church her son, and the church received him on the 6th day of April. She had kept her charge. A little later for good measure she handed over Alexander, who was to be the presiding patriarch of the church, and David, who was destined to write some of the songs that we yet sing. We may say that at that critical time when she gathered her children about her in the old Mansion House of Nauvoo, and made her decision she held in her hands the destiny of the church; in her hands was the reorganization of the church, and the return to Zion. If she had not proved true I might not be here preaching to-day, and what is worse, you might not be here as a congregation. What would have happened if she had proved unstable or untrue. Of course, the Lord would have found some other way, but from a human standpoint the destiny of the church was intrusted to his mother, as it often is to mothers. Women have no priesthood, it is true, but in some regards they are the greatest religious teachers, and always have been. They seem to have a simple faith that is not vexed by some of the things that come into the minds of men. When the Disciples doubted and slept, the women were faithful; when the Disciples said, "It is all over; let's go fishing," the women went to the tomb—faithful even to the death. It has been said that women were the last at the cross and the first at the resurrection.

The Mother of Jesus

The third story is that about Mary, the mother of Jesus. The Catholic Church has carried the worship of the Virgin Mary to an extreme that is ridiculous; still, there is in the story that which appeals to the heart of humanity. When we stop to think that a woman mothered the Son of God when he was a little boy, that she washed his face and mended his clothes, that she corrected him, bound up his finger when it was cut, and that she rocked him to sleep in her arms—we may say that when she did that she was cradling in her arms the hope of humanity.

So, then, we see back of Moses, the Hebrew girl to whom was intrusted the destiny of a nation; and we see back of Joseph, his mother Emma, to whom was intrusted the destiny of the church; and we see back of the figure of Jesus Christ, his mother, Mary, to whom was intrusted the destiny of humanity. And the experiences of these three women come home to the heart of every mother, because no mother can tell all that is intrusted to her care. Certainly, we know one soul is intrusted to her care, and perhaps many. No one knows.

One speaker on a certain occasion commented on the fact that back of each man to the very beginning there is a long series of human lives, and that the human being when it comes into the world is absolutely helpless, the most helpless of all living creatures, and must be immediately cared for or it will perish. Having nothing with which to hire care, it must appeal to love, and so each man can look back and say, "If at any link in the long chain love had failed, I would not be here to-day." If at any point mother's love had failed, or the love of some woman who would consent to be a mother, we would not be here to-day. We owe our lives to love. And it is conceded now that there is no institution that can take the place of the home or mother's love. In the best equipped institutions, the most sanitary and spotlessly clean, with the best trained nurses in attendance, the mortality among children is higher than it is in homes, even of the second or third rate.

Motherhood Should Be General

I believe that every married woman at some time in her life ought to have the experience of motherhood or she will miss one of the finest things in life. I want to approach this thought with a good deal of caution, because it is a delicate one. I remember how, after my wife and I had been married for a number of years, we were made to suffer because of a thoughtless, ill-considered, hard sermon that was lambasting the childless home. Death had robbed our cradle of the first born and our home was childless at that time. But where children are denied the home, there is still recourse and that is that the childless home shall make a place for the homeless child. And certainly the woman who does this, to my mind, has right to the title of mother and to recognition on a day like this. The woman who is willing to love into maturity the child that some other woman has loved into being is entitled to the name of mother, and has taken a mortgage on humanity that certainly is not a second mortgage.

Abraham Lincoln was reared to maturity by a woman who was not his mother. Can you realize the indebtedness that this Nation is under to that woman? All people in America to-day love Abraham Lincoln, and so do many in foreign lands; but there was a time when no one cared for him, excepting one woman, who was willing to go into a poor, old, log house and take the homely and unpromising and ungainly boy, Abe Lincoln, and be a mother to him. We cannot realize the debt that this Nation owes to her for that which she did, because it was said that she exercised a most profound influence on his life and character.

So, to-day, we meet here to honor the name of mother—those mothers who have taken into their hearts and into their homes the helpless of humanity and cared for them.

In conclusion, perhaps the status of a mother in the home is best set forth by a poem that I will read to you, entitled, "Mother":

"I am the pillars of the house;
The keystone of the arch am I.
Take me away, and roof and wall
Would fall to ruin utterly.

"I am the fire upon the hearth,
I am the light of the good sun.
I am the heat that warms the earth,
Which else were colder than a stone.

"At me the children warm their hands;
I am their light of love alive.
Without me cold the hearthstone stands,
Nor could the precious children thrive.

"I am the twist that holds together,
The children in the sacred ring,
Their knot of love, from whose close tether
No lost child goes a-wandering.

"I am the house from floor to floor,
I deck the walls, the board I spread;
I spin the curtains, warp and woof,
And shake the down to be their bed.

"I am their wall against all danger,
Their door against the wind and snow,
Thou whom a woman laid in manger,
Take me not till the children grow!"

It is no sin for Saints to differ, but it is a sin for them to quarrel about their differences. God has been offended in the past, not because his people have seen things in different lights; but because of the way in which they have treated each other as a result of those differences.—E. A. Smith.

Subjects Being Discussed

Mothers Needed

The result of the Children's Bureau Conference held in May and June, 1919, is to show conclusively that a mother is the best person to care for a baby, and that a good private home is far better than the best institution can possibly be. Even in the horrors of the war, in the earlier stages, when the mothers were home with insufficient nutrition, they did better and fewer died than they did in the earlier period when the mothers were trying to work out. A trained nurse cannot take the place of a mother in the care of a baby. The ideal, of course, is where the trained nurse advises with the mother, and the actual care is left in the mother's hands. No trained nurses can take the place of a private home, even though it means a foster mother instead of the child's own mother.

A child should have fresh air, it should be kept clean, and given all proper attention. In addition to this, they need something else, something like the vitamins in food, and that something only the mother, by her personal attention can give.

High Cost of Living Unjustified

The high cost of living appears to be unjustified. The price of sugar has been forced up by repeated sales between middlemen. The price of kerosene and of gasoline have been forced up in like manner, by competition between the buyers for distribution.

An Explanation of Spiritualism

A. A. Brill, a prominent American psychiatrist, who has translated several works of Sigmund Freud, Jung, and others of that school, declares that spiritualism is only an effort to escape reality; that the consultation with the ouija board is the same as those who go to fortune tellers and the like, and that 75 per cent of them are women.

Doctor Brill who is eminent as a psychoanalyst declares it is the result of an unfulfilled want; he even explains Sir Oliver Lodge in similar terms. He was brought up in a religious English home, became an absolute materialist, but as he grew older the thought of death was distasteful to him, so he wished to live. But when his son died, his own wish to live was transferred to the wish that his son should be alive. Not being willing to accept the Christian conception of a hereafter, he makes up a hereafter very much like this present life. It may be done in perfect good faith, as it comes up from the unconscious.

Interest in the League of Nations Persists

There is doubtless less discussion on the League of Nations to-day than there was a few months ago, still popular interest has not entirely died out. Hamilton Holt is reported in the New York Globe to have taken a vote during a lecture at the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. The result follows:

"How many favor the adoption of the League of Nations just as presented? Seventy per cent voted.

"How many wish to see it adopted with slight modifications? About 20 per cent.

"How many wish to see it adopted with drastic reservations? Seven to ten per cent.

"How many wish to see the league utterly rejected? 3 to 5 per cent."

Mr. Holt made the statement that in every case the vote was substantially the same as that just taken. He comes to the conclusion that 70 to 90 per cent of our people want the treaty ratified and the league approved, as it was presented, or with slight modifications.

We believe that a majority sentiment favors the adoption of the Treaty of Peace and of the League of Nations. Still we must remember that Mr. Holt was speaking in favor of the league, and those in his audience who came to hear him would be more likely to be those who were in favor of the league.

Cooperative Stores and Income Tax

The British income tax commission has suggested in a majority report that the cooperative societies of England should be subjected to an income tax, but they state the amount would not be large. The minority take a different view because of the nature of that organization. The cooperative society and the minority of the commission insist when a number of individuals pay in a certain amount for the purpose of purchasing staple supplies, that this amount is in excess of the actual cost of procuring and delivering is not so much a profit as it is an amount on deposit, belonging to the members. It will be interesting to note the final outcome, because of its effect upon the cooperative movement as a whole.

Indian Objections

Why the Indian who is able to look out for himself, objects to the present administration should be clear to anyone. The Carlisle Indian schools have been taken from them, hence their protest. Last winter 30 million acres of Indian mining land were leased from the Indians. A reimbursement system was arranged without the approval or consent of the Indians.

The Indians are kept as wards and practically in bondage. Some, it is true, prefer to be taken care of, but many of the able-bodied Indians want the chance to stand upon their own feet, and do their work as men and women of America.

Yet the Government forces the Indian to buy cattle and other things and requiring them to pay for it at the prices set. It is inconsistent to force them to buy things without their consent, and make it a lien upon their property.

The Indians, through a recent delegation to Washington, reported as a result of leasing land, the money has been placed in the treasury, while many have died of starvation who have thousands of dollars in the treasury. Also the cattle and cattle men have destroyed the hay and gardens and other savings of the Indians; it is reported, but nothing is done to pay for the damage.

Bolshevik and Menshevik

Some of our readers have been confused by the two terms "Bolshevik" and "Menshevik." Bolshevik means majority; it does not mean those who favor rule of government by the majority; but those who favor an extreme socialistic and communistic platform—adomination by the proletariat, and a few men in the name of the proletariat. The Menshevik's are those who favor a moderate program, and so are called minority men. They stand for a conservative application of the principles of socialism. They favor a constitutional government, a democratic government by all the people. The Bolsheviks represent a special class—those who have no property, the proletariat. Both terms are Russian, and are applied to the two wings of the Socialist party of Russia.

There is a right wing in this country of the Socialist party, which favors political action. The left wing favors direct action and revolution and has separated from the Socialist Party to form two other groups.

Workmen's Compensation

A. B. Funk, the Industrial Commissioner of Iowa, states that workmen's compensation was first installed in Germany in 1884, and before the close of the century had become a part of the jurisprudence of most European nations. It was

The Chief Harm of the Lie Is to the Liar

BY C. B. HARTSHORN

Lying, whether white or black, is a useless evil, having a boomerang effect upon the liar.

It has been said that "truth is so precious that people economize in its use." It alarms me as I grow older and find by actual experience, how many men and women have forsaken the cardinal virtue of truthfulness, and blandly say it does not pay to be honest and truthful. Of course, with such people, getting the money is of first concern. As a Jew once told his son, "Get it honestly if you can, but get the money."

All forms of dishonesty have their common origin in the seed of lying. From this seed, like the little mustard seed, we find a mighty tree springing up which gives the birds shelter in its branches. It bears fruit in many shades and colors. When well matured it is very black. "White lies" are really the green fruit and are the most pernicious and sickening to the consumer. Cholera morbus is a picnic in comparison to the effects of absorbing the un-ripened fruit of this tree. Why? Well, because half truths are the most dangerous. Just as a good counterfeit is more deceptive than a poor one.

A common practice in shops and offices is to send a new boy after things which do not exist, such as "brass" magnets, "left-handed" monkey wrenches, etc. When he reaches his destination the party who was supposed to have the desired article had been "put wise" to "steer" him to some one else and so on—ad infinitum.

But who is injured most by these practices? The boy is being schooled in the art of suspicion and self-defense. He is becoming what you call "sophisticated." But such "fun" could not be perpetuated were it not for the aid of the fruit of the tree. I am reminded of the wolf story in the old second reader. The shepherd boy called, "Wolf, wolf," when there was no wolf, and then laughed gleefully when the whole village ran out to assist him to protect his flock. The next day he repeated the proceedings, only not so many came; some had become sophisticated by the previous experience. But the third day the wolf really came and the boy cried, "Wolf, wolf," but nobody came to his rescue. I ask you, who is most harmed by the lie? Everybody is harmed, but the liar most.

But back to the shades of fruit again. It takes a long, hot season for this fruit to turn jet black. There are many colors and shades between the white and the ebony.

What do you do when memory falters as you are relating a story? Do you dash on to the climax with "he said" and "I sez," when it is doubtful if a court reporter could have gotten the conversation verbatim? When you have forgotten to perform a given task or keep a promise and are sud-

United States. Building costs have increased 150 per cent since 1914, and the expense of handling office building a like amount. This accounts largely for the increase in rents. Great as is the immediate need of 800,000 houses, it appears probable it will be several years before the supply will catch up with the demand for residences. In the meantime, the value of the model city with not over 25,000 inhabitants, and with agricultural grounds surrounding the city and owned by the community in a way to prevent its being imposed upon is becoming more and more apparent.

introduced in the United States in 1912. This system revolutionized the law of relief in cases of personal injury, so far as it affects employees. Assumption of risk, negligence, the amount of pain and suffering, etc., were eliminated as conditions involved in the settlement. Adjustment is based wholly upon the loss of earnings, and punitive damages are not paid.

But this idea met with much opposition both from employers and working men in America, and was sometime making its way. The objection was due largely to lack of understanding, and the workmen hoped to secure exceptional and excessive judgment, overlooking the fact that such judgment would be either set aside or made nugatory by repeated appeals. In fact, such excessive verdicts were not the rule. To the employer it seemed to make access too easy, and he preferred to insure himself against liability, and then to fight every case on the basis of assumed risk or contributory negligence, or the fellow servant law.

The workmen's compensation law, however, is now making its way in America, and it seems that the burden is placed upon industry of paying for the necessary damage or injury which arises out of industry. This is as it should be, except that every provision should be made that is possible to prevent injury.

Coal Profits

According to a recent investigation by a Senate committee as found the Senate document 259, 65th Congress, second session, it appears that nearly 99 per cent of bituminous coal corporations made 15 per cent net income, and nearly 18 per cent made more than 100 per cent net income for the year 1917. A few small companies made over 300 per cent. The large companies made less than 11 per cent. The income was very much higher than in 1916 for most companies. It is evident from these figures that with most companies the percentage of income was decidedly high, apparently about 40 to 45 per cent for the year. Doubtless 1918 and 1919 will show yet larger ratios of profits.

Extravagance in England

In the London Daily Mail, which has been reaching us through the kindness of Elder Joseph Dewsnap, we note that in England the objection is made to the extravagance of the government the same as it is made here. The cost of civil service list is from five to six times as much as it was before the war. Some clerks are discharged, but those drawing $5,000 a year or more have rather increased in number. This is one aspect of the social unrest, and one reason for the present difficulties of economic conditions. Heavy taxes are collected from the people, directly and indirectly, but are not managed with economy and in behalf of the real good of the government.

No Reason for Coal Shortage

Herbert N. Shanton, the secretary of the United States Bituminous Coal Commission, states positively that there is no justifiable reason for an advance in the price of bituminous coal at this time. There is no real shortage of transportation, nor of coal production. There is no fear of real scarcity on account of the foreign demand, even though much coal is badly needed in Europe. With the present facilities for foreign transportation, we will not be able to ship over two per cent of the probable 1920 production.

Housing Difficulty General

Though there is a shortage of houses throughout much of the world, it is particularly acute in the larger cities of the denly confronted with the question by the party interested, do you say, "Oh, I forgot," and repeat it over and over again—because it isn't just once a day that we forget, you know—or do you use that familiar device more recently called an "alibi"? Perhaps it's the truth, but not the whole truth. It is what the Sunday-school boy described as a lie when he said: "It is an abomination in the sight of the Lord and an ever present help in the time of trouble."

Then, if you always told the whole truth it would spoil many a good joke that your friends "pull off" on some unsuspecting victim, so you simply must act as co-respondent for friendship's sake. De you suppose it's a sin to do that? And who does it harm most? A fellow's got to have a little fun, hasn't he?

But where does joking become lying, and when does lying become a joke? This is a more serious question than may at first appear. The tendency of little things growing into big things, just like acorns become oaks, was no doubt the reason the Master said, "Let your yea be yea, and nay, nay," and again when he warned us to be "sober-minded."

White lies ripen into black ones. Stealing and debauchery frequently follow as self-esteem is lost. I think the liar is the one most harmed in the end, and that is the wrong end.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths—No. 5

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

Book of Mormon chronology is as safe as that of the Bible, as set forth in this article.

Chronology

We shall mention some of the discoveries made that indicate something of the antiquity of Babylon, inasmuch as the Bible account of this city is connected closely with the dispersion of the race to various parts of the world, and tends to show to some extent at what period the migration to America, mentioned in the Book of Mormon, may have taken place. The importance of this point is considerable, as the antiquity of the New World civilization is limited to the time in which it can be shown that the dispersion from Babel must have occurred. The discoveries made on the American Continent cannot prove a more ancient occupancy of man here than will correspond to the time when the confusion of tongues took place, if the Book of Mormon account is true.

The Bible states that as they journeyed from the east, "they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and they dwelt there." It was here that they burned brick and built the city and tower afterward called Babel, from whence came to America the people whom the Book of Mormon calls Jaredites.

A. T. Clay, Ph. D., in his work, Light on the Old Testament from Babel, tells us that Shinar is an alluvial plain where brick was used, and that what little stone is found there had been brought from the region of the Euphrates and elsewhere. If done by the Sumerians, who were the earliest inhabitants of the valley known to us, a high degree of antiquity is indicated; but we have other data that appears to be more dependable. The name of Sargon I is inscribed on bricks of the assumed date of 3800 B. C., and Babylon is mentioned in a tablet of that date. Furthermore, Belshazzar's father, Nabonidus, refers to Sargon as having lived 3200 years before his own time. This record, which is found on a cylinder, agrees very closely with the first date mentioned, as the reign of Nabonidus was from 555 to 537 B. C.

The name "Babel," in the earliest known reference to the city, was understood by the writer of the inscription in which it is found to mean, "Gate of God." In an inscription of Sumu-la-ilu the Babylonian king, of about 2200 B. C., mention is made of the tower, but it must have been some time after it was built, for the Bible account mentions no inhabitants or city being found there by those who began to build the tower, but infers to the contrary; and there is evidence that Semites, who conquered the Sumerians, had arrived there by that date or before. Both Sumerian and Semitic names were had by the more ancient gods, but it is not known with whom they originated.

Allowing for the possibility of miscalculations, the last date mentioned seems not to be greatly at variance with the Septuagint version, which places the flood at some time near to 3800 B. C. In this case the building of the tower, which probably succeeded by a substantial period the building of the city, may have taken place at a more remote time than is indicated by Usher chronology; and the peopling of America would be placed at a correspondingly earlier date. If we are to rely upon the conclusions formed from the more recent research the time arrived at in the old estimate must be extended at least, and this does not necessarily conflict with Book of Mormon chronology but, on the contrary, apparently supports it.

The Book of Mormon mentions thirty generations of the Jaredites besides generations that may have intervened in at least two instances, as appears in references to individuals who were called "descendants" of certain kings who had reigned. This indicates thirty-two or more generations from the time they arrived in America to the time Coriantumr was found by the Zarahemlaites. It is shown further the more that it was not by any means unlikely that these men of ancient-vigor should live to be one hundred and forty or more years old, and beget sons in their "old age" who as their successors. It does not appear as altogether exceptional for the father to be more than a hundred years old when his successor was born. This is emphasized by the fact that the record states in many instances that the father "begat in his old age" the son who succeeded to his throne. It was not only an age of tremendous virility and length of life, but it seems that the younger sons succeeded to the kingly office rather than those who were older.

The Jaredite occupancy ended with Coriantumr who lived evidently until about 580 B. C. It is believed therefore that the Book of Mormon indicates a greater antiquity for its people than is sometimes supposed, and corresponds to the chronology of Bible lands so far as known to us with any degree of certainty.

The results of archaeological investigation, though indicating the meagerness of Biblical history, show that the events there narrated actually occurred. In this connection the remarks of Professor Clay are of considerable interest. He says:

"Thousands of inscriptions are brought to light, by the help of which a knowledge of the life and customs of the people prior to Abraham's day are unfolded before our eyes, changing our entire conception of those distant times, and revealing a civilization which had advanced in an astonishing degree centuries before the patriarch. Instead of possessing only the names of a score or more of individuals between Adam and Abram as found in Genesis, many thousands become known. In a single document for instance, written two thousand years before the patriarch, about five hundred names are given."—Light from Babel, p. 24.

These discoveries make clear references to events that were previously obscure, but do not in a single instance contradict the Bible account. Professor Clay remarks that:

"Instead of the historical background being altogether different from that represented in Genesis, it is now admitted to be in strict accordance with it. And on the other hand, while so much light has been thrown upon this chapter, in which the very 'atmosphere' is acknowledged as having been restored, absolutely nothing has been revealed whereby its accuracy can be impugned."—Page 141.

That there were two distinct periods of occupancy in America, as shown by the Book of Mormon, is testified to by careful investigators of the subject. Of the stone building age Professor Enoch remarks: "We seem to find overlapping rather than evolutive stages therein, as if man had suddenly learned to build pyramids and temples from some instructor, rather than by the process of evolution."—Secret of the Pacific, preface. One writer considers that it may be assumed that the Americans of the neolithic age were on a level with those of Europe in their knowledge of the arts and in social and religious conditions. Mr. Baldwin says: "The monuments suggest successive and varying periods in the civilized condition of the old inhabitants, some of the oldest and most mysterious monuments seeming to indicate the highest development."—Ancient America, p. 76. Mr. Short tells us that the later people "were preceded by a race possessed of no inferior civilization, who were not their ancestors, but a distinct people."—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 27.

This was stated by the Book of Mormon years before the subject had assumed the proportions of the definite consideration given to it more recently. The antiquity of American civilizations has, it is true, been the subject of much and varying conjecture, ranging from a few thousand years to several thousand centuries. The later trend of thought, however, appears to be very largely in accord with the former estimate. This is also the conditions of Professor Vignaud in his summary from the bulletins issued by the Bureau of American Ethnology, as recently published in a French journal, where he says that research tends to show that the theory of extraordinary antiquity of man in America is untenable. This, we believe, is the opinion of the more experienced observers. We should estimate the length of time, nevertheless, so as to reasonably account for the fifteen to twenty millions of people who occupied throughout both North and South America at the time of the discovery by Columbus, and the well-developed state of their civil and religious institutions. These we shall examine more minutely in another connection.

From what has been ascertained we conclude that the Book of Mormon chronology is, to say the least, upon as reasonably safe grounds as is that of the Bible, and is supported by rational conclusions from what has thus far been discovered either in the Orient or the Occident.

Delinquency Hereditary

How far delinquency runs in a family may be indicated by a remark of C. F. Applegate, superintendent of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, State Hospital:

"We have all heard of family reunions. It's a mighty nice thing to have family reunions. At Mount Pleasant we have had family reunions in which four generations were represented in our institution at one time."

This emphasizes again the fact that 90 per cent of the feeble-mindedness and insanity comes from five per cent of the family.

A health center with a public health nurse should be a great educational center like our public schools. It is not possible to combine well a hospital with a health center, because it takes too much time of the nurse in hospital work, as well as even in minor operations as those of the nose and throat. A public health nurse must be free to make her regular rounds.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON

Some of our elders have asked us what data can be secured concerning the battle by which the British, under General Allenby, were able to free Palestine from the Turks.

We have not been able to make an exhaustive search as yet, and it is probable that some years later it will be better written up than has been the case as yet. In A Pilgrim in Palestine, by John Finley, we note the following statement by Mr. Finley:

"But there was a more significant day in my acquaintance with General Allenby than that in whose night I read the prophecy. It was the day in which one caught a glimpse of the Apocalyptic vision rather than of the Isaian. I was again at headquarters. It was the morning of the 20th of September, when the army that had 'dug in' fifteen or twenty miles north of Jerusalem, and had waited patiently for months, was at last advancing to the complete recovery of the Holy Land. (It was ready to make the attack in May, I have heard, and the day was set, but the exigencies of the western front demanded a sudden change, a transfer of some of the divisions, and the developing of a new army.) I had driven over from Jerusalem in the early morning in my Ford car. The 'C-in-C' was outwardly placid and even playful; for a child, an American child, was at headquarters, having just arrived by train that morning with her mother, from Egypt, on her way to Jerusalem, and the commander-in-chief was for the hour the host. One could not have guessed that over the hills to the north the most momentous battle of all the Christian era in Palestine was being waged under his direction and in accordance with plans made to the last minutest detail. How momentous it was I did not then, of course, surmise. And when the General a few minutes later smilingly announced, as he came from his map-room, that his cavalry were at 'Armageddon,' I did not then give to the announcement the interpretation which came to me later, as I reread the chapter in the Book of Revelation, describing the gathering of the hosts on the Plain of Megiddo, which is in the Hebrew 'Armageddon.' I do not impute to the General this interpretation; but I think that what was happening that morning up on the Plain of Megiddo, as it is sometimes called, or Armageddon, or Esdraelon, was as fateful for the good of the world as that which is foretold with such striking analogies in the Apocalypse.

"There has been no more completely successful campaign in all this world war, I suppose. An English military observer and critic has written more emphatically and unreservedly: 'There never was a victory more absolute in the history of war. . . . It was a battle without a morrow.' And certainly none more dramatic, with this wonderful background of scenery and sacred and secular history. 'What a plain it is!' says Sir George Adam Smith, 'upon which not only the greatest empires, races, and faiths, East and West, have contended with each other, and each has come to judgment.' One has but to read his chapter on Esdraelon to see the mighty pageant that has been enacted upon this plain since the days of Deborah and Barak.

"It was out to the north of this Plain of Armageddon (Megiddo, or Esdraelon) that I next saw the commander-in-chief a few days later. He had sent me a message one morning to tell me that if I would wait, that is, postpone my return to America a few days longer, I might perhaps find it possible to walk to Dan (for I had already walked from Beersheba up to the old front). I acted immediately upon this intimation, starting out that very evening and walking all night to Janin, the edge of the plain, then the next night to Nazareth, then on to the Sea of Galilee. It was on this walking journey that I saw the 'Chief's' car go flying past me, he and his general so engrossed in the panorama that they did not see the pilgrim at the roadside. And I think I never saw a more enticing landscape than that before me as I came down toward the Sea of Galilee that late afternoon. I was ready to say with the rabbis: 'Jehovah hath created Seven Seas, but the Sea of Gennesaret [the Sea of Galilee] is his delight.' I recall only one scene to put beside it in my own experience, and that was sunset over the Lake of Geneva in Switzerland. It has the colorful beauty of the Yellowstone without its awesomeness. - And I have General Allenby in the foreground of that memorable Galilee landscape."—Pages 21-26.

Then at the end of that chapter there is General Allenby's official report on the campaign which effectually put through the war. It is as follows:

"With the exception of a small and scattered reserve, the whole of the Turkish force [the Seventh and Eight Armies] west of the Jordan, was inclosed in a rectangle forty-five miles in length and only twelve miles in depth. . . . The destruction of these armies, which appeared to be within the bounds of possibility, would leave the Fourth Army [east of the Jordan] isolated, if it continued to occupy the country south and west of Ammon. . . . I determined, therefore, to strike the blow west of the Jordan. . . . I decided to make my main attack in the coastal plain rather than through the hills north of Jerusalem. . . . The route along the plain would enable the cavalry to pass through the hills of Samaria into the Plain of Esdraelon at the narrowest point, thus insuring greater speed and less likelihood of being checked.

"By reducing the strength of the troops in the Jordan Valley to a minimum, and by withdrawing my reserves from the hills north of Jerusalem, I was able to concentrate five divisions and the French detachment for the attack of these defences [described as lying in the narrow plain, which is some ten miles wide at Jilgulieh, the ancient Gilgal]. . . . In addition to the infantry, two cavalry, and one Australian mounted division were available for this point.

"The rains . . . usually commence at the end of October, rendering the plains of Sharon and Esdraelon impassable for transport, except along the few existing roads. Consequently, operations could not be postponed beyond the middle of September.

"I intrusted the attack on the enemy's defenses in the coastal plain to Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Bulfin, commanding the Twenty-first Corps. . . . I ordered him to break through the enemy's defenses between the railway and the sea, to open a way for the cavalry, and at the same time to seize the foot hills southwest of Jilgulieh. The Twenty-first Corps was then to swing to the right . . . and advance in a northeasterly direction through the hills, converging on Samaria and Attaro, so as to drive the enemy up the Meessudic-Jenin road into the arms of the cavalry at El-Alfule.

"I ordered Lieutenant-General Sir Harry Channel, commanding the Desert Mounted Corps, also the Australian and New Zealand Mounted Division, to advance along the coast directly the infantry had broken through and had secured the crossings over the Nabr Falik. On reaching the line Jelameh-Hudeira, he was to turn northeast, cross the hills of Samaria and enter the Plain of Esdraelon. . . . Riding along the plain, the Desert Mounted Corps was to seize El-Alfule, sending a detachment to Nazareth, the site of the Yilderim General Headquarters. Sufficient troops were to be left at El-Alfule to intercept the Turkish retreat there. The remainder of the corps was to ride down the Valley of Jezreel and seize Beisan.

"I ordered Lieutenant-General Philip Chetwode . . . commanding the Twentieth Corps, to advance his line east of the Bireh-Nablus road, on the night preceding the main attack [the night on which Sir Philip was dining with me and excused himself early in order to carry forward the movement], so as to place the Fifty-third Division in a more favorable position to advance and block the exit to the lower Jordan Valley. I ordered him to be prepared to carry out a quicker advance with the Fifty-third and the Tenth Divisions on the evening of the day on which the attack in the coastal plain took place, or later as circumstances demanded.

"The main difficulties lay in concealing the withdrawal of two cavalry divisions from the Jordan Valley, and in concentrating secretly a large force in the coastal plain.

"To prevent the decrease in the Jordan Valley being discovered by the enemy, I ordered Major-General Sir Edmund Chaytor to carry out . . . a series of demonstrations with the object of inducing the enemy to believe that an attack east of the Jordan was intended, either in the direction of Madeba or Ammon. The enemy was thought to be anticipating an attack in these directions, and every possible step was taken to strengthen their suspicions.

"At this time a mobile column of the Arabs, being accompanied by British armored cars and a French mountain-battery, was assembling . . . fifty miles east of Amman. The real objective of this column was the railway north, south, and west of Deraa.

"The concentration on the coastal plain was carried out by night, and every precaution was taken to prevent any increased movement becoming apparent to the Turks. Full use of the many groves round Ramleh, Ludd, and Jaffa was made to conceal troops during the day. The chief factor in the secrecy maintained must be attributed, however, to the supremacy of the air which had been obtained by the Royal Air Service.

"The operations which followed fall into five phases:

"The first phase was of short duration. In thirty-six hours between 04.30 on September 19 and 17.00 [that is, 5. p. m.,] on September 20, the greater part of the Eighth Turkish Army, had been overwhelmed and the troops of the Seventh Army were in full retreat through the hills of Samaria, whose exits were already in the hands of my cavalry. [It was on the morning of that day that General Allenby said to me: 'I have just had word that my cavalry are at Armageddon.']

"In the second phase, the fruits of this success were reaped. The infantry, pressing relentlessly on the heels of the retreating enemy, drove him into the arms of my cavalry, with the result that practically the whole of the Seventh and Eighth Turkish Armies were captured with their guns and transports.

"This phase also witnessed the capture of Haifa and Acre, and the occupation of Tiberias and of the country to the south and west of the Sea of Galilee.

"As a result of the rout of the Seventh and Eighth Armies, the Fourth Turkish Army, east of the Jordan, retreated and Maan was evacuated.

"The third phase commenced with the pursuit of this army by Chaytor's force, and closed with the capture of Ammon and the interception of the retreat of the garrison of Maan, which surrendered.

"The fourth phase witnessed the advance by the Desert Mounted Corps to Damascus, the capture of the remnants of the Fourth Army and the advance by the Twenty-first Corps along the coast from Haifa to Beirut.

"In the fifth phase, my troops reached Homs and Tripoli without opposition. My cavalry then advanced on Aleppo and occupied that city on October 26. Aleppo is over three hundred miles from our former front line. The Fifth Cavalry Division covered five hundred miles between September 19 and October 26, and captured over 11,000 prisoners and 52 guns. During this period the Fifth Cavalry Division lost only 21 per cent of its horses.

"Between September 19 and October 26, 75,000 prisoners have been captured. Of these, 200 officers and 3,500 other ranks are Germans or Austrians.

"In addition 360 guns have fallen into our hands, and the transport and equipment of three Turkish armies."

The London Times of December 31 makes a very favorable editorial comment from which we extract one paragraph:

"This ruin of the Turk in Palestine—swift, overwhelming, wholly complete—made it impossible for Turkey to continue the war. That was the reward of the autumn campaign fought by General Allenby, his men, and his allied contingents—a campaign that was a model of perfection in the achievement of all arms, as brilliant in execution as in design."

Also in the History of the World War, by Funk, Wagnalls Company, the following is given:

"Allenby, in April, continued his slow but sure progress in a northeastward advance from Jerusalem, having two objects. One was to cut the Hedjaz railway on the eastern boundary and so isolate Turkish forces operating south at Medina. This he accomplished by taking Amman, while Medina, the last holy Mohammedan city in Ottoman hands, seemed about to surrender. His second object was, by advancing northward along the Jordan, to threaten the flank of the Turkish-Syrian army facing him from Jerusalem to the sea. He had already arrived at Es-Salt, thirty-five miles northeast of Jerusalem. By proceeding further north, he could by a flanking movement, force a retirement of the enemy beyond the boundaries of Palestine. By such strategy he could avoid the losses entailed by a frontal attack on strongly entrenched Turkish positions.

"Not until autumn did any further notable event occur in Allenby's program. Then something happened which thrilled the whole Entente world. British forces, aided by French, Anzacs, and Arabs, and themselves reinforced by troops from India, in the third week of September launched an attack on the Turkish line on a fifty-mile front from the Mediterranean to the Jordan. In smashing blows they broke through and swung forward nineteen miles in the coastal region and more than twelve miles inland. Three thousand prisoners and great quantities of stores were captured after 18,000 Turkish troops had been almost surrounded. The Holy Land once more was aflame under the impetus of a great stroke. In less than a day Allenby's forces, with those under the flag of the king of the Hedjaz overran the Turkish defensive system. The railway and highway junction points were captured, strong forces of cavalry got well in advance of attacking troops, threatening to carry out a turning movement, while along the Mediterranean naval units cleared the coast-roads of Turks by gun-fire. The predicament of the Turks was heightened by operations carried on by the Hedjaz tribesmen east of the Jordan which prevented them from taking refuge across the stream. The Turkish army was virtually annihilated. Allenby's forces, sweeping across Armageddon, soon advanced sixty miles, captured 25,000 prisoners, and took 120 guns. Nazareth was occupied and the gateway opened to Damascus and even to Aleppo, the supply-base of the Turkish armies in Mesopotamia as well as those in Palestine. Allenby had completely crushed the main Turkish army; he had enveloped and destroyed it.

"The event promised to free Syria as well as Palestine from the Turk. It gave control of the whole Turkish railway system from southern Syria to a point not far south of Damascus. Strange memories and poignant associations were recalled by news that British cavalry, after galloping over the actual field of Armageddon, had occupied Nazareth. One more sacred place was in Allied hands. Armageddon overlooked the great plain of Esdraelon, southwest of Nazareth. It was one of the most famous battlefields of the world. It was there that Barak defeated the Canaanites, and Gideon the Midianites; there Saul was slain by the Philistines, and there Napoleon, in 1799, defeated the Turks.

"British troops had advanced more than sixty miles. Two entire Turkish armies were wiped out. Twenty-five thousand prisoners and 260 guns were taken on the two sides of the Sea of Galilee. Forty thousand more had been trapped by the British and could not escape annihilation or capture. The British coup was probably the quickest and most successful of the war. The end of a hot summer had been the signal for a renewal of military operations in Palestine just as the beginning of spring had been on the plains of Picardy. The prospect seemed clear for a rapid march upon Damascus and from there to Aleppo, carrying with it the collapse of Turkish resistance in Mesopotamia where the road already opened to Mosul carried a threat against the line which Turkish armies still held stretched out to the Caucasus. All Asia Minor had been shaken. Kut-el-Amara had been thrice avenged; first, when Maude's army took Bagdad and drove the Turks far up the Tigris toward Mosul; second, when the British entered Jerusalem; third, when virtual destruction came to the Turkish army that barred the Allied road to Damascus—the key to Syria—now practically undefended.

PASTORAL

A Combination of Priesthood and Laity

An account of one branch president's method of obtaining results in local work.

(The following is excerpted from two reports by Elder William Landes, president of the branch at Niagara Falls, New York, Branch to the the First Presidency.)

We are going strong, forging ahead with the work, and I may tell you to begin with that we are going to make good.

I called the priesthood together last Wednesday evening, and to meet with them four men of the branch, one of them being the treasurer and another one the secretary, all four of whom are priesthood timber if developed.

The result of the above was that all the priesthood met and we had the best meeting, I believe, in years; in fact, bubbling over with enthusiasm, and the meeting ended with a unanimous good feeling and followed by a very spiritual prayer service. The idea of this is to get the priesthood and laity together, and likewise to overcome the past difficulties. We met again to-night one and a half hour before church service, and we are moving fine. I have asked all the men to meet me next Sunday evening one hour before church. The object in view is manifold. I will name some:

First: To get everyone busy.

Second: To boost family altar.

Third: To raise spiritual standard.

When Damascus fell all British armies in Asiatic Turkey could be linked up with Aleppo, their common as well as ultimate objective. The Turks seemed now to have no forces in Syria or in Mesopotamia that were equal to stopping any British drive. The Allies had traveled a long way from Kut-el-Amara and Gallipoli. The military power of the Turk was fast waning. Bulgaria and Turkey alike were beginning to eat the bitter fruit of a covetous alliance with Teutonic powers.

"Arab forces from Hedjaz successfully raided Derat, seventy miles north of the latitude of Jericho, and the junction of the Damascus-Hedjaz railway with a British line tapping the fertile Houran district and the country of Druses, from which the Turks had received grain. It was the first time the modern world had heard of Arab forces operating so far north. They were now in close touch with the Druses, who had never been well disposed to Turks at whose hands they had suffered much. Allenby's victory promised to make it possible to cut the Hedjaz railway permanently, which would enable the King of Hedjaz to clear the remaining Turks out of his territory and give him possession of Medina, the last of sacred cities remaining in Turkish hands. On September 25 more than 40,000 prisoners and 265 guns had been taken by the British. They were extending their occupation about the Sea of Galilee—had occupied Tiberias and Semakh and, east of the Jordan, the strategic town of Amman on the Hedjaz railway. Here the Fourth Turkish Army had been virtually surrounded. Its annihilation completed the clearing up of Turkish forces in Palestine and accounted in all for 70,000 men and 350 guns. Syria, with a large anti-Turk population was now open to invasion.

"For the first time since the World War began, we saw, not a huge territory occupied which might count for little, but an entire army in a given theater of operations destroyed, which was the object of war, and what all military commanders aim to achieve. The Turkish army in Palestine had ceased to exist. If Aleppo could be taken, the Turks for all practical purposes would be shut up behind the Taurus Mountains, with nothing of value left in Asia, everything in the hands of Great Britain and her Allies. Turkey's only hope was a peace with the Entente."—History of the World War, volume 8, pages 224-228.

- Fourth: To get acquainted with the needs.
 Fifth: To use some of the experience of the successful men of the branch, (a) business, (b) handling men, (c) obtaining system.
 Sixth: To paint our church building.
 Seventh: To stain the floor.
 Eighth: To repair the basement stairs.
 Ninth: To overhaul the electric lights.
 Tenth: To boost, first of all, Tithing, (every man a tithe payer).
 Eleventh: To boost Christmas Offering.

These are a few of the things planned. I plan to have the committee visit where possible and develop the coming priesthood as inspiration directs.

I plan to start a study class in the priesthood in applied psychology, and other needs. We will have talks to men, to women, to boys, to girls. Every progressive Saint here is going to work. I feel very optimistic over the results thus far obtained. Why not?

I sent you a report last month of conditions at this Niagara Falls, New York, Branch, and some of our plans by way of advancing the good work, and I am writing this letter to inform you concerning some of our results thus far.

I stated we had organized or rather selected a committee of four men to meet with the priesthood to confer on branch needs. This is proving very beneficial, and in fact one of them got busy and found a colored church in the city without a pastor at present and he made arrangement that we do their preaching for the present. He took me over in his auto last evening (Sunday, 9th) and I gave them a talk which seemed to be very much appreciated. They have a nice little church building with a bell on it, stained front windows, and very nicely equipped inside, and plans under way to build a new building. We are going carefully, but it is possible we may be able to give them the real gospel.

I am trying to find an opening to start services in the old historic town of Lewiston, seven miles down the river and may get started during the summer months.

I have arranged a talk to men only next Sunday, 3 p. m., by Doctor Weegar of Buffalo branch.

I am preparing talks on what will we do with "The men" and "The women" of to-morrow, "The boy and girl" of to-day.

I am organizing a public speaking class which we need here. We will probably use T. W. Williams's (whom we grew to love very much) lecture course.

We are not expecting spectacular results but hope for a steady growth.

It is deplorable, the need of fireside visiting, etc., and we are losing out in many homes because branch officers do not visit, so I plan to develop a priesthood that I can divide the city into sections, and try out having a certain one develop that particular section, as to attending church and family duties, etc. It must be done, and in fact I notice this need is apparent everywhere out this way.

I was worried recently over how to move out, and after retiring I had the following dream which seemed to fit our needs: I was plowing a big field and the man in charge came and noticed my work was very nice and neat; that is, I was particular about turning up a nice comb, as the farmers call it, but he said, "You are too slow; we must get the field plowed; flop a wide furrow; rush the work. It won't be so neat, but the harrow will make or finish the seed bed. Push on."

The lesson to me seemed to be: develop every help, every talent available in the branch. Get the gospel plow working to full turning capacity.

May the work move on, is our prayer.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Transition Meeting in Zion

The Women's Council of Circles of Independence held a "transition meeting" at the Women's Building Friday, May 14, 1920. The meeting was semisocial in its nature, as there was very little either of old or new business. There was much of the same spirit present that had characterized the "First Sunday of Zion" which celebrated the passing of the Independence stake two weeks ago.

To illustrate the close coordination between the general women's work and the new Zion interests, those of the general executive who were present sat at the table with Mrs. C. J. Hunt, the new organizer, and Mrs. A. Morgan, the new secretary of the work in Zion.

Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, director general of the Women's Department of the church, presided over the session. In her opening remarks, Mrs. Smith explained how in the adjustment of the women's work to the new order introduced by the action of the coordinating committee and the General Conference, the necessary changes will take place quietly, the old constitutions acting as a working basis for the future work of the Women's Department, in Zion and in the locals, except in such cases as the general executive shall make the essential changes.

Mrs. Audentia Anderson, the new superintendent of the Women's Department, who lives in Omaha, was unable to be present. The director regretted her absence at this particular time, and spoke of her as a woman well-known throughout the church, and one who brings a large contribution to the women.

In introducing Mrs. William Madison, the first assistant superintendent, Mrs. Smith mentioned having known Mrs. Madison since the latter was an instructor in Graceland College, and that in addition to being an educated and scholarly woman, she was "a woman who goes about doing good." Mrs. Madison in responding spoke earnestly of her especial interest and delight in upbuilding the work in Zion, and of her responsibilities in taking charge of the general office recently established in Independence where she will be willing to answer letters and questions from the outlying districts as well as from Independence women.

Mrs. Joseph Mather, the second assistant superintendent, was introduced as an "all-around" woman. The assertion was shortly proved as, in addition to supervising the refreshments (which were served, later, in true "Women's Building" style with the assistance of Mrs. Rosa Tier, the matron of the building) Mrs. Mather made an able talk, in which she commented on the way in which her vision of the women's work had broadened and the degree of consecration with which she wished to apply herself to larger service.

The children remarked that the women were fortunate in securing as secretary not only of the Zion movements, but of the general executive as well, a woman who was one of the ablest stenographers in the church. Mrs. Morgan spoke confidently of the assurance she feels for the future of the women's work.

The director general explained that although Mrs. C. J. Hunt, the newly appointed organizer for Independence, had not been officially connected with the Women's Department in the past, the success which she has attained along other lines of service and her reputation among those with whom she has been associated, are evidences of her ability to succeed in her new work. Mrs. Hunt's address, in which she evinced a spirit combining humility and determination to a degree that marks a woman of power, would have been a sufficient recommendation if there had been no other. Mrs. Hunt mentioned her intention of working in close cooperation with the general executive committee.

Owing to other functions which were being held the same afternoon, the retiring officers were not present and could not be included in the program.

After the close of the program, the meeting resolved it-

LETTERS

The Indian and His Problems

The viewpoint of a majority of the American Indians presented by one of the race.

For some time I have had desire to write concerning my people but have restrained myself. Now I feel I owe it to those of the church who are giving their services for them that I should do so. It seems the church has suddenly aroused to its mission to the Indian and I know better than any of my white brethren what they are up against in prosecuting that work.

The general mistaken opinion seems to be that the Indian has plenty of money, lands, and an easy time, while the actual truth is that he has none of these. If he has been allotted land, he cannot sell without the consent of the Indian Bureau, and, with few exceptions, when he is permitted to sell the land, the money is controlled by the Indian agent and doled out to him by the month. Should he need anything more than what that monthly sum will bring, as for instance a cow, horse, or other like expense, he must humiliate himself before the Indian agent, explain all the details as to why, who from, and condition of purchase, which will then be investigated by the Indian agent, and if he concludes that all things are to his notion he will allow the issuance of the extra money, but if he thinks not, no matter how great the Indian's need may be, he is denied the right to use his own money.

There is an investigation of the Indian Bureau being carried on now at Washington, District of Columbia, and on page 277 of serial No. 5 you will find the following illuminating details as to how the red tape of the Indian Bureau is unwound in permitting an Indian to lease his land for oils. I quote at the bottom of the page, Congressman Carter's statement as follows:

"Mr. Carter: Well, then it goes through, before it reaches Washington, three sources; after it gets to Washington it goes through four more—some division you spoke of—and then back to you, and here, and then back to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior. That is six—three here, and then back to the Superintendent, that is seven, and then where does it go from the superintendent?"

"Answer: Indian Commissioner Meritt: The Superintendent notifies the Indian.

"Mr. Carter: Doesn't he send it back to the field clerk?"

"Mr. Meritt: He notifies him through the field clerk.

"Mr. Carter: Then that is seven hands through which that application passes before the final action is taken.

"Mr. Meritt: Seven, I think."

And while this red tape is being unwound the leasee passes on where he can obtain immediate returns.

You are told that all the needs of the Indians are supplied, etc., doctors, medicine, food, when necessary, but by reading on page 23 of the Hearings before the Indian Committee on Indian Affairs of the House serial No. 4 concluded reads as follows (note the quality of the doctors mentioned.)

"Congressman Elston: Before we leave the health section, are the physicians and dentists, particularly, permitted to charge fees for work done by them for unrestricted Indians or white patients they may have, or do they confine their duties entirely to the Government work and are forbidden to take outside work?"

"Commissioner Meritt: We have a limited number of dentists in the Indian service and they go from one school to another, and they are kept constantly engaged in the dental work for our restricted Indians. As a rule we require our physicians to devote their entire time to the practice among Indians on the reservations. Occasionally where a physician lives among the Indians, as well as among white people, and there are not other physicians available, we will permit him to render professional services to white people.

"Mr. Elston: What salaries are paid to those physicians?"

"Mr. Meritt: Anywhere from $1,000 to $1,400. In addition to that we furnish quarters and an automobile or conveyance of some kind.

"Congressman Rhodes: Do you have trouble in holding medical men in that branch of the service?"

"Mr. Meritt: Yes, sir; we had a great deal of trouble during the war. Of course there was great demand for physicians in connection with the war.

"Mr. Rhodes: Well, under prewar conditions did you have difficulty in securing the services of competent physicians for that work?"

"Mr. Meritt: No, sir; we had our force fairly well filled all the time.

"Mr. Rhodes: What class of physicians did you secure the services of, young graduates, or older men?"

"Mr. Meritt: Usually young men who have not yet established a practice who enter the service and who will just grow up with the service. They become attached to the Indians and to the work, and they stay in the service indefinitely."

I myself have stood in their operation room—dusty, unsanitary and unequipped and seen a so-called surgeon claw out the tonsils of a small child with his uncovered fingers. Whenever a so-called specialist appears on the reservation he operates at will, and the consent of an Indian parent is totally unnecessary. So likewise are the other "wonderful" provisions for the Indian's happiness. I speak not from experience on one reservation only, nor as an isolated individual. In their councils both on reservations and at Washington, District of Columbia, the leading men of many reservations thus raise their voice in protest.

I note a late congressional action towards "freeing" Ireland, while the Indian remains within the borders of the United States in the most abject degradation. Why prate about self-determination of subjected people in Europe and attempt to cover our humiliating ignominious treatment of the Indian people? (See Luke 6:42.)

I beg of the church, as individuals and as a body, to rally to the support of the Indian and give him an equal chance to develop his manhood as any other individual. The Indian asks not for special privileges nor special method of treatment. Give him half the chance this nation has accorded the Negro and he will prove his equality with any race.

The church does well to turn its thought towards my people, but more is required than just preaching. In fact it seems to me that, at present, is the smallest part of the obligation. The church from its own experience should have large sympathy for a persecuted people.

WILLIAM MADISON.

self into an informal reception in honor of the director general, Mrs. F. M. Smith, who is leaving soon for California. Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Madison regretted the fact that the executive were losing the services and advice of their director, the latter attributing much of the success of the organization to her ability to take the disappointments and arduous labors of her service on the rebound, thus becoming an inspiration to those about her, and that her enthusiasm was such that wherever she was she would undoubtedly be serving or preparing herself further for the work she loves. Mrs. Smith expressed her gratitude for their appreciation.

Mrs. Fred Koehler offered the benediction, praying for the one who was leaving them, and for the good of the great work.

More and more I am convinced that there is room in this work for every man upon God's footstool; room for him to work; room for him to help, and thus helping develop the talents given him, and by such development fit himself for the reward of the faithful, whether those talents be one or many. The great lesson all must learn, is to occupy faithfully where called to labor, and work with the means given us to use, and by constant, daily right-living, bear our testimony that this is the work of God; that we are the children of God; and that Jesus is indeed the Son of God.—M. E. Gillin.

Who Shall Have Stewardships?

BY THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC

Another of the series of letters sent out to The Saints of the Lamoni Stake.

"Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

"A commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and APPOINT EVERY MAN HIS STEWARD-SHIP."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; . . . let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toil-eth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

In Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1, Edward Partridge is told to "appoint unto this people their portion." In paragraph 5, we learn "this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches."

"And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

These authoritative texts give us to know without a doubt who it is that is to have stewardships. "Every man," "all are called," "none are exempt," are expressions that need no explanation.

Qualifications Necessary to Receive

A belief in and a full compliance with the laws governing initiation into the church, known as spiritual laws. These are faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, eternal judgment, etc. (As this article has to do more particularly with the law of temporalities, we do not enter into this phase of the question.)

A belief in and full compliance with the law of temporalities as revealed in the three standard books of the Church, namely, the Bible, Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and KEEP ALL MY COMMANDMENTS. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and CONSECRATE OF THY PROPERTIES for their support, THAT WHICH THOU HAST TO IMPART unto them, with a covenant and deed which cannot be broken; . . . and they shall be laid before the bishop of my Church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

"Impart a portion of thy property; yea, even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5.

"They have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands . . . and do not impart of their substance as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

"It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7.

"I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop. . . . It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, 2.

"A certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the bishop in Zion. . . . A few words in addition to the laws of the kingdom, respecting the members of the church; they that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion, and they who are privileged to go up unto Zion. Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 4, 5.

"For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.

Notice briefly: "Keep all my commandments," among which are the following:

Lay our moneys (this is a comprehensive word including all kinds of property) before the bishop of the church. This is done by making an inventory (called testimony in 42: 9) and placing it in the hands of the Bishop. This inventory to show the total assets or what the person has, and the total liabilities, or what the person owes. If this inventory shows that you have more than your needs and just wants, then:

"Impart a portion of thy property; yea, even . . . all save the support of thy family." (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5.) This support being your needs and just wants. This portion to be imparted is your "surplus properties." (Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.) You are now doing with your moneys "as the law directs." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7.) This portion imparted or given to the bishop is to be done so "with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.)

"Your interest" (Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1), "your increase" (Proverbs 3: 9), "the abundance" (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2), "a portion" (18: 5; 101: 2), "all save the support of thy family" (18: 5), are all synonymous expressions meaning the same thing as surplus. Also see Church History, volume 1, pp. 259, 260, 300.

In our next letter we shall discuss surplus, what it is; also allotment of stewardships, when and where.

The Protecting Hand

In 1914 I was led to go to America with my son. When we left Jerusalem all was serene and peaceful and we were blessed with a very pleasant voyage.

However, shortly after locating and starting our farms in Montana, the world was in a terrible turmoil. War and the spirit of it was throughout the whole world. But I was in a peaceable, quiet place out there in Montana. We named our branch the Jerusalem Branch, in Opheim, Montana.

Year after year passed and we were worried about our property in Palestine and not hearing for three years about what had been done to it. In 1919 the permission came so that I could get back, and when I arrived I found the property in as good condition as one could expect.

In 1920, after Jerusalem had been taken without bloodshed, I was obliged to go to Jaffa on business, as I have three houses in the first colony founded in Palestine in 1866. The Adams American Colony was the first or beginning of colonization there. But there are many colonies now.

During my stay in Jaffa there was a riot—two hundred wounded and several killed. It surely is blessed to feel myself to have been led off in time to escape both exciting times just before they happened.

At my confirmation I was told God had kept me as it were in the hollow of his hand and I cannot but feel that he is still doing so. Therefore I thank and praise his holy name.

MRS. M. J. FLOYD.

Arrived at Hilo, Hawaii

We left Independence on Monday, April 12, and expected to reach San Francisco by the evening of the 15th, but we were delayed one day on account of snow on the Missouri Pacific and another half day on account of a mountain slide on the Union Pacific, so we reached San Francisco about midnight, Friday the 16th. As our boat left the next noon, we did not have as much time with Brother Waller as I had anticipated.

The first two days we were on the water we had the worst storm they say that has occurred in over a year. The second morning out when daylight came we found all our grips, trunks, shoes, and some of our clothing floating around in about ten inches of water. About four in the morning the waves washed over the decks, and in so doing broke some of the skylights and a window in the social hall, and of course the water came pouring down upon us.

Brother Puuohau and a few of the other Saints were to meet us at the wharf Sunday morning when we arrived. I gave them a short talk in the morning and preached at night. The attendance was not as large as I had expected, about twenty-seven being present at night and not as many in the morning.

If my discernment is correct, I believe I can see a rich field of labor in this place. There is much to be done. I am earnestly praying that I may be given much wisdom in caring for the work now intrusted to my care. I am trying to use all the prudence possible in adjusting matters, being careful not to lose the support and confidence of the Saints and priesthood. There are some bad conditions here that are quite obvious, but will give the matter a more careful study, then give you the benefit of my observations and inquiries.

We are more than pleased with the place here. It is all much more beautiful and pleasing than we had really expected. Very sincerely yours,

HILO, HAWAII, Box 922.

(Letter to the First Presidency.)

The Testimony of an Aged Sister

While laboring with Brother Frank G. Hedrick in the western part of this district (Northeastern Kansas) we were called to Belleville to administer to Sister Kelley, whose testimony I am sending with this letter. We found the sister in bed suffering with rheumatism, but as cheerful as could be. Neither of us had met her before but we soon realized that we were visiting one of God's true children. This aged sister (she is ninety-four) has always been isolated from church privileges but her faithfulness to the profession she has made is worthy of imitation by those more blessed than she. Never have I seen anyone more joyful over the privilege of receiving administration. It seemed to us that her heart's desire was granted, but we were soon to learn that she has a full conception of the duties of the Saints. From a small cloth sack which she kept conveniently near, she drew what money she had at hand and handing us more than enough to pay our expenses, asked that the balance be sent to the bishop as tithing and freewill offering. She was pleased to learn that Brother Hedrick is bishop's agent, and her satisfaction over being able to pay that tithing seemed greater than that over the administration. It seems that she had been concerned lest she might not get an opportunity to send it in.

This sister is a consistent reader of the HERALD, and was grieved that she had been unable to read the latest copy. We were preparing to open and read part of it to her during the hour we had to spend between trains, when she said there was a little writing she would like to have done. She then asked us to write the testimony which she gave. I, accordingly, took notes as she talked and have sent you the substance of what she told us. I spent there one of the most enjoyable hours of my life, and one I shall never forget.

A few days later, while we visited over night with some Saints at Centralia, we were asked to administer to a sister past eighty years old, who came from Scotland under the cruel deception of the Mormons when they vowed that no such thing as polygamy was taught in Utah. She and a sister, who is a member of the Reorganization, living in Atchison, trudged across the plains and pushed a cart in the first handcart company to enter Salt Lake City. As we stood with our hands upon her head it seemed as though we were almost in the presence of God himself, and I remarked shortly afterward to Brother Hedrick that when privileged to administer to those who have endured the storms of life and remained firm, enjoying yet their strong mental faculties, I feel that the greater blessing is mine. These are the experiences which give us courage when we find so many growing cold and indifferent. Oh, that we might find more such as we go from place to place; but so often we meet the expression: "If you could only have come some other time." Such a great part of the world is looking for a more convenient day. Truly, Emerson was inspired when he wrote, "One of the illusions is, that the present hour is not the critical decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is Doomsday."

JAMES A. THOMAS.

A Testimony by Margaret Kelley, Aged 94

I feel that I want to add my testimony to what others have said for this gospel. From the time it was first presented to me I was inclined to believe it. I first heard of it through my daughter who was visiting me from Illinois about thirty years ago.

One night I dreamed that I stood in the doorway and saw two horsemen approaching the house. Their horses' feet did not touch the ground, but they seemed to ride through the air. I thought my husband (who was opposed to the work) stood in the yard, and I called to him, "Pa, look!" As they drew nearer I saw that they were dressed in officers' uniforms. They rode at a gallop across the yard in front of the house and disappeared in the distance. When I told the dream to my daughter she remarked that I had seen what I had been looking for: some one with authority.

At this time I was suffering with a growth on my ankle which the doctor called a cancer. It was so serious that at times I could get around only by crawling on the floor like a baby. For eleven months I suffered pain beyond description; could not sleep at night. I wanted to have the elders administer to me but there were none within reach. At last we prepared for amputation. Before the operation could be performed the operating physician was taken sick and died. The doctor in Belleville then undertook to treat the ankle with medicine. I received some relief, so that I was able to get about with crutches, but was not healed.

All this time I kept praying God to spare my life till I could be baptized. My husband was opposed to my desire for baptism and when I asked him why, he said it was all foolishness for a woman of my age to be baptized; that I would die if I went into the water afflicted as I was, etc. At last, however, he gave his consent and when the time came he took me to the water with his team. I walked down to the water's edge with my crutches and leaned upon the elder as we went out into the water. I was baptized and came out walking on the lame ankle. My husband took me to the schoolhouse for confirmation, where he left me and went home with the team. In nine days I laid my crutches aside, and continued to gain until within a short time I was out husking corn. I rejoice in the goodness of God, and can say that the side he healed has, since then, been my stronger side.

I have had many testimonies of this work and want to see it go on. I want to do what I can to have this gospel carried to others.

Graceland Notes

Several changes are being made in the faculty at Graceland this year, some of which are as follows: Paul N. Craig, who has been in charge of the vocal work will spend a school year in New York City to perfect his education in voice, and his work will be handled here next year by Mrs. Bertha Burgess.

Lonzo Jones, who has acted as dean of the dormitories and in charge of the normal work in the extension department, will spend a year or two at the University of Iowa in the department of philosophy, preparing him for more efficient work in Graceland College.

C. E. Irwin, who spent two years at the University of Chicago, attaining his doctor's degree, and who has been at the Iowa State College at Ames the past few months making rural surveys, will return to Graceland in September to have charge of the department of social science.

David Hopkins, who graduates from the University at the end of the summer quarter, and who has made an enviable record at that place in forensic attainments especially, will return to Graceland next year to assist in the department of public speaking.

Gustav Platz will have charge of the department of science and mathematics the coming year, graduating from the University of Nebraska in June.

It is intended to choose a class of about forty members in religious education for next year. The committee meets in June.

Three lectures have been delivered to the class in sociology the past week, J. A. Koehler, on "Scientific socialism," A. M. Carmichael on "The educational factor in society," and B. M. Russell on "Crime as a social factor."

A. E. Bullard and wife have arrived from Denver, Colorado, he to assume position as superintendent of buildings and grounds. T. T. Forbes has resigned and moved to Kansas City.

Testimonies Concerning the Conference

Our experience at the General Conference was one that will long be remembered. I have attended nearly every General Conference at Lamoni in the past thirty years, and some at Independence, but to my knowledge none have been characterized with the spirit of unity and peace to the extent that our recent conference has been. I truly believe it to be the mark that in the future history of the church will designate the beginning of greater things. From the beginning of the lectures to the close of the conference a wonderful degree of the Spirit was directing and its influence was enjoyed. No doubt others have spoken of it, but the writer only wishes to add his testimony. As we reported these good things to the Saints last Sunday, and spoke of some of our possibilities through faithfulness, some said that the Spirit bore witness of its truthfulness.

D. J. WILLIAMS.

Brother F. M., as I study the revelation given to the last conference I see much more in it than when first read, and I hope it will forever bring unity relative to the matters set forth therein. Brother Elbert, as I read the revelation given to the priesthood, the morning of April 4, as contained in the HERALD, I could most fancy myself back in that wonderful meeting. I hope to follow the instruction therein. Again I can say I feel good over the outlook of the church, and want to do faithfully and well my humble part this year, that if possible there may be an ingathering of 10,000 this year!

Two Letters from Hawaii

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, May 4, 1920.

The First Presidency: My letter of appointment has been received and I now start in upon my new term with more courage than I had at my first appointment. Many things have happened since last June to confirm me in the work. With the aid of my heavenly Father, the prayers of my beloved parents, and the untiring support and encouragement of my companion, I trust that I have been able to do some little good for this people.

The developments at the late General Conference have been more than gratifying, to say the least. God has most certainly been mindful of his own. The Saints here are delighted to learn that Brother McConley has been called to a more responsible and honored position in the Master's cause. We feel that with him in closer touch with the powers that be, the needs of this mission will be properly presented to them.

As we read of the wonderful outpouring of the Spirit upon the Saints our hearts are filled to overflowing with gratitude to Him for his recognition of us as his. My, how we long to have been there, but it will be repeated again and again and we will have our chance.

Wherever the Saints may gather, the conference is the subject of their conversation. In our priesthood meeting last night stewardship was the topic of discussion and a lively session was held.

We have heard indirectly that we are to have Brother Pitt with us some time this winter and I only hope and pray that the rumor is not without foundation. It would be a great boon to the work here I am sure. The Saints are very anxious to have their blessings, and a visit from a man of such wonderful experience as Brother Pitt would have a far-reaching effect.

Ever praying for the success of Zion, I am,

V. B. ETZENHOUSER.

HILO, HAWAII, May 1, 1920.

The First Presidency: My time has been confined to the branch work all of the past month, and since the arrival of Brother and Sister Reeves I am now ready to go out and reach more people and tell them of this great gospel of our Master.

I wish to say that the Lord has been good to us by sending Brother Reeves to us, and we are more pleased because he stayed to be present at General Conference, which I understand to have been one of the most wonderful in the history of the Reorganization. Thanks be to the Lord.

Brother Reeves has arranged to hold a series of meetings to run for three weeks, and this is something new in our city. He has some handbills ready and we are going to fill this little town of Hilo full of the gospel of Jesus Christ, hence our duty to warn the people here.

Brother Reeves is a very live wire with lots of pep, and very spiritual. It puts life into us all to do our part, and I am glad he is of that kind.

It does not take a prophet to tell us what he is. You can read it in his face. And I want to say again the Lord made no mistake in sending him here. I may say it is true God is all wisdom, but man doesn't admit it.

We feel this is going to be a pleasant year, not only here but everywhere, if we be up and doing.

May the Lord bless all his servants and people is my prayer. I remain, your brother through Christ,

ELDER JAMES PUUOHAU.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, May 19, 1920.

Editors Herald: Here at Rock Island we are enjoying the Spirit of God more than we have for a very long time in the past. The spirit of the recent General Conference has certainly encouraged us to greater activity, or at least to a desire for more efficient service. Evidence of this is shown by the various things the people of our branch are becoming active in.

First of all the branch elected a publicity agent. In the future we expect to do a great deal of work along the line of advertising. We realize that there are many and great opportunities for the work of God in this place. Our agent, the writer, has not had a chance to do much along this line yet but expects to push this work soon.

Our Sunday school is progressing very well. Our superintendent, Robert Gunlock, has started to organize the classes in the school. We believe this is another step toward efficiency.

We have five saxophones and two violins in our local, and also several good pianists. Our Religio department is using them to good advantage. Our programs are quite interesting. The membership is increasing and more are attending the meetings. We have a Religio kindergarten class, and one of our senior classes is taking up Book of Mormon normal lessons. Sister Nellie Elvin teaches the normal class and we surely do appreciate her ability along this line.

Last Sunday about fifteen of the local members met at the church to go over their second lesson in public speaking. This class was organized two weeks ago and very keen interest is taken in the work. We are trying to induce more to take this opportunity to increase their ability. The writer has charge of the class and he is especially urging the Sunday school and Religio teachers to take part in it. We are using Arthur Edward Phillips's Effective Speaking as our

Pastoral Notices

Saints of Utah, Idaho, and Eastern Oregon: The time for intensive missionary work has come, and we hope to see every Saint alive to the interests of the church, and doing all they can in the warning of their friends and neighbors of the "hour of God's judgment." By the action of the joint council the undersigned has been appointed as group supervisor of missionary work in the above-named territory, and we are desirous to see the coming year one of the best in the history of the church in the field named.

In order to do this it will be necessary for all the members of the church to take a special interest in the work and cooperate to the end that the warning cry may be heard in places that have not been reached by missionaries in the past. Wherever there is a possibility of arousing an interest we should not hesitate to make an effort to present the gospel to the people. One of the greatest tasks ever given a people is placed on our shoulders: carrying the gospel to all the honest in heart. Will we fail as a church? The answer comes back, We will not, for God is the author of the work and we will do all we can as "laborers together with God," in the accomplishment of the work that has been intrusted to our care.

Let all the Saints seek for a place where the gospel may be presented and then write the undersigned and we will do all we can to render the proper assistance. Let all the local brethren volunteer their services as far as possible, not, however, neglecting their local work, but supplementing their efforts in this direction, so that many may hear the gospel that have never heard it before. The missionaries are ready to respond whenever the call comes to them, so now it is for the Saints to render the assistance necessary and we will see much good done.

The joint council has decided that the supervisor will be asked to make a report of the brethren under his direction each week. In order to do this it will mean that we either personally or by correspondence come in contact with them. While we may think our burdens great along the lines of writing, yet I am going to ask each missionary in the field, over which we have charge, to write me often, especially if there is any change in location or special interest. For the present Brethren R. C. Chambers and Leonard G. Hoisington will be associated together in tent work in Idaho. Brother W. P. Bootman will labor in such localities as he may be able to arouse interest in the western part of Idaho and Eastern Oregon.

In Utah we expect to arrange the brethren so they can labor "two and two" so far as we can. We have a most excellent number of men, and while some are new in missionary work we expect to see these men make a good record for themselves. With the aid of the missionary automobiles, together with other cars that may be furnished by the Saints, we hope to put on one of the most extended campaigns in street services ever held in Utah. We would like to suggest to those who are talented in music that a special effort be made in this mission to assist the missionary whenever it is possible to do so.

My mission address will be 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. We would like to hear from any of the Saints who desire missionary work in their locality. We promise to render every assistance possible. Yours in the interest of humanity,
L. G. HOLLOWAY.

To the Missionaries, Local Officers, Saints, and Friends of the Western, Northern, and Central Michigan Districts; Greeting: Having again been appointed by those in authority to supervise the missionary work in the above-named territory, we solicit the hearty cooperation of all those who love the cause of the Master.

We hope that the same spirit of unity and love that characterized our labors last year may continue with us throughout the year that is now before us.

We would like very much to have the Saints assist in ef-textbook. We will study the laws that govern public speech, and in the class a certain amount of time will be used in putting into practice these laws. Also the members of the class will be called upon to prepare speeches and give them before the Religio. The two hours spent in this way each Sunday afternoon will surely help us to serve the Master. We are glad to say that Brother and Sister C. I. Carpenter are members of our class. At the last meeting Jennie and Evelyn Gunlock each gave us a very interesting three-minute speech. Their talent along this line is very promising.

Brother I. M. Barnes preached at the morning service and Brother H. J. Archambault occupied in the evening. Both services were presided over by Brother Carpenter.

Ever praying and striving to work for the establishment of God's righteousness, we are, in gospel bonds,

ELMER OHLERT, Local Publicity Agent.

FRANKLIN, TEXAS, May 7, 1920.

Editors Herald: We are the youngest branch in the district and have forty-eight members enrolled. I preach on the first Sunday for our branch, the second for Central Branch, near Hearne, third Sunday at Bishopville school-house. This is a new field and I have preached here at the New Baden Branch but twice and had a good audience each time, with splendid attention from nonmembers as well as Saints.

I note we have appointed for this district a new missionary force and, so far as I know, none of them have ever been in the district before except Brother Palmer. I want to extend a cordial welcome and invitation to visit and preach for us. I live about one and a half miles northeast of Franklin, Robertson County. All missionaries have a standing invitation to my home. My prayers are for the onward progress of the work.

J. M. CLEVENGER.

EROS, LOUISIANA, May 11, 1920.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading your pages, which prove to be very beneficial, and I know there isn't a lay member anywhere who is more interested in this church work than I am. We feel that many Saints are praying for us as we have requested because many are coming into the kingdom. Ten were baptized Sunday, May 9, and this makes twenty new members including the ones Brother Erwin baptized, since February of this year.

The last time I wrote to the HERALD our branch consisted of about one hundred members; now it consists of about one hundred twenty.

I know this increase is due largely to the great influence of our noble leader, Brother W. H. Fuller. If we will do our duty and assist him as we should, he will lead us on to victory. It is wonderful to know that we have a man leading us who is spiritual at all times and willing to overcome all that Satan can bring upon him.

We hope soon to be in an organized district and continue to help the honest-in-heart to see the light.

I would be pleased to receive personal letters from any Latter Day Saints who have time to write. Your brother in the true faith,
E. C. LARCHE.

The National Bank of San Francisco reports an increase in deposits of more than 666 million dollars for the first two and a half months under prohibition. This is the swiftest increase in the history of the city. Practically the same condition exists in other dry districts.

Liberty Bonds are selling below par simply because they were so widely sold and so many different people are trying to dispose of their bonds. They undoubtedly will be worth par when the time of redemption comes. Our readers should not dispose of their bonds if they can possibly avoid doing so.

The Jerusalem News, an American newspaper established December 9, 1919, claims to be the first daily in Jerusalem published in the English language.

fecting new openings, by informing the missionaries where such openings may be made, and then assist as much as possible in getting the gospel before the people in the various localities.

I would like to have the missionaries under my supervision report to me every two weeks, that I may know your location, the prospects of the work in the different parts of the mission, and in case of an emergency, I would know where to get help, etc.

Let every man labor in his own territory where he was appointed, and not infringe upon the rights of others, not trespass upon another's territory, without consent of those in charge.

I hope we may all labor together in love, and do all we can to carry the greatest work ever committed to men.

My home address is South Boardman, Michigan, box 45.
In gospel bonds, W. D. ELLIS.

Saints of the Clinton District: I request all members who are absent from branches and who cannot attend the regular branch services, to write me and give names and addresses. I desire to write to each one, or family, and visit all that my time will permit. Please do not disappoint me, but answer promptly, as it will assist me in rendering service to those who come under my care. Edward Rannie, president of district, 709 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District; Greeting: I am in the district in harmony with my appointment as missionary and shall be glad to know of any opening for meetings along our line. Shall be especially glad to hear from isolated Saints who would provide lodging while we hold meetings in their schoolhouse or other available place near by. If all will do their part we may be able together to help to bring in the new 10,000 members we want this year. The call to labor rings out to every Saint. "Come, let us labor together." All mail will be promptly forwarded to me from my home address and so I urge that you write without delay to the end that we may cooperate.

Your coworker in the service of the Master, MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

CHARLES F. PUTNAM, Presidency.

The Presidency

Elder Frank G. Hedrick having resigned as president of the Northeastern Kansas District in order that he might give his attention to Bishop's agent work in that district and in the Northwestern Kansas District, the Presidency has appointed Elder James A. Thomas to act as district president of the Northeastern Kansas District until the convening of the next district conference. The appointment of Brother Thomas will, therefore, read "local" rather than "missionary."

Elder William I. Fligg having resigned as president of the Eastern Michigan District in order that he might give his entire attention to missionary work, the Presidency hereby appoints as his successor, Elder William H. Sheffer who has been acting as vice president. This appointment to hold good until the convening of the next district conference.

By concurrent action of the Presidency and Quorum of Twelve Elder Bruce E. Brown's appointment has been changed from the Southern Missouri District "local" to the Southern Nebraska District "missionary."

May 18, 1920.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

The Presidency has appointed Elder Peter Anderson to cooperate with Elder Peter Muceus in editorial work on Sanhedens Banner. Brother Anderson will also travel somewhat in the interests of this publication.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 19, 1920.

The matter of a general church librarian having been referred to the Presidency, we hereby give notice that for the present Walter W. Smith, church historian, will supervise the general library interests. This appointment will, unless changed, last until the appointment of a general church librarian, which we are not in position to make at the present time. Further notice touching the work of the librarian will be issued in due course of time.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

The Bishopric

Alabama District

Having received the resignation of Brother G. O. Sellers, as Bishop's agent of the Alabama District, we hereby appoint Brother John W. Baldwin of McKenzie, Alabama, as his successor.

Brother Baldwin's aim will be to make the Bishopric's slogan for the year a "Million Dollars Tithing," a reality. This will mean that the tithing for this district should be double this year over that of last year.

We have every confidence in the ability of the Saints of this district, coupled with the energy of Brother Baldwin, to make this possible. Our responsibilities to humanity as a church are increasing, and year by year we must prepare to do greater things than we have done in the past. You will want to be a helper in this worthy undertaking; we pray that God will enable you to do your part.

Brother G. O. Sellers has served us well as a Bishop's agent, and for his splendid service, we desire to make this public acknowledgement.

B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Southwest Texas District: Having received the resignation of Brother H. H. Davenport, as Bishop's agent of this district, whose services we gratefully acknowledge, we hereby appoint Brother D. S. Palmer of Tuff, Texas, as Bishop's agent of the above district.

Brother Palmer is well known to the Saints of this territory and needs no words of commendation from us. Being familiar with the work of Bishop's agent, he will be able to take care of this work in a creditable manner, and I am sure with the loyal support of the Saints will be able to make our slogan for the year, A Million Dollars Tithing, a reality. Our prayer is that God will abundantly bless the Saints of the Southwestern Texas District, and that by their careful manipulation of their everyday affairs they may be able to contribute to the Lord's work freely, and that the tithing for the year 1920-21 will at least double that of 1919. By constantly keeping this thought before us we shall give more careful attention to our business affairs, which in itself will contribute to our success.

May the spiritual and temporal blessings which are in the hands of our heavenly Father to give be the heritage of his people.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Minutes

BIRMINGHAM.—At Handsworth, Birmingham, England, April 3 to 5. J. Schofield presided. Statistical and spiritual reports were read from the four branches of the district, nine ministers, and from the district officers. Several young brethren preached at the Sunday morning session, including J. H. Coggan, priest; T. Norton, teacher; and E. Bates, deacon. The afternoon service was given over for a sacrament service, which proved a very spiritual feast, the gift of prophecy being manifested. Edmund Norton and F. Henry Edwards were ordained elders, and W. Eldridge priest. W. Ecclestone and J. Schofield preached in the evening. Officers elected: J. Schofield, president; F. H. Edwards and J. T. Norton, vice presidents; W. B. Arrowsmith, secretary; F. Smith, assistant secretary; H. Smith, treasurer; E. Norton, chorister; F. H. Edwards, jr., historian; Blanche Edwards, librarian; F. Smith, F. H. Edwards, and F. C. Schofield, auditors. Place of next conference left to district presidency. In the evening a prayer and testimony service was held, lasting two hours and of a very high spiritual character. The young people especially took part in the meeting. The gift of prophecy was again manifested, exhorting the Saints to stand firm and fight on. The conference was one of the best and most spiritual held in the district for several years and the attendance good all through. The catering was splendid indeed. All went home realizing more than ever that God is working among his people. Walter B. Arrowsmith, secretary.

Conference Notices

Holden Stake and departments of church work will meet at Warrensburg, Missouri, June 18, 10 a. m., continuing over 19th and 20th. D. J. Krahl, president.

Little Sioux, at Pisgah, June 12 and 13. Election of officers and other matters of importance. Come, brethren, and let us get together. The hastening time is here. We want a good attendance. We expect to hold two priesthood meetings. Joseph W. Lane, president.

Northeastern Illinois, with Deselm Branch, near Manteno, Illinois, June 19 and 20. Trains will be met at Manteno, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, but not on Sunday. Notify Arthur Shreffler, chairman reception committee in plenty of time. All holding priesthood send reports to J. O. Dutton, Manteno, Illinois, care Abe L. Rogers, R. F. D., by June 1, reporting from December 1 to June 1 inclusive. Each branch president is asked to report his branch for the same time, showing the number at last report and the present number, and the general condition of the branch, also the average attendance for the same time. We trust this may be a spiritual gathering, with "unity" as the watchword. J. O. Dutton, president; F. E. Bone, secretary.

Eastern Iowa conference and conventions of Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department, at Waterloo, June 11, 12, and 13. Programs will be sent to each branch president. A committee will meet all trains Friday and Saturday. All planning to attend, write as soon as convenient to Ivy Fisher, chairman reception committee, 1221 Ackermant Street, Waterloo, Iowa. Amos Berve, president.

Utah, in Ogden, June 19 and 20. We hope all Saints in the district will be present, as President Elbert A. Smith will be present and assist in the conference. Annual election of officers. Provision will be made for a reunion in the district this summer. A report from each officer holding priesthood is desired. Send these to L. G. Holloway, 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah, at least a week before conference. A very interesting conference is assured, as all missionaries will be present, and business of importance will be transacted. Let all prepare to attend. L. G. Holloway, president.

Convention Notices

Joint session of Sunday school and Religio of Southern Nebraska, at Lincoln, June 11, 2.30 p. m. Conference on 12th and 13th. Blanche I. Andrews, superintendent.

Minnesota Religio and Sunday school, Clitherall, June 14. Religio at 2 p. m., Sunday school 3.30 p. m. Alta Kimber, secretary.

London Sunday school and Religio, Stratford, Ontario, June 5 and 6, 2 p. m. Mrs. Duesling, secretary, 815 York Street, London, Ontario.

Old Books Wanted

It has been decided to establish a missionary library in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is especially desirable to secure for this library works on Mormonism in all its phases, but more particularly old publications of the Mormon church, as well as the church in Nauvoo, such as volumes of the Millennial Star, Journal of Discourses, Times and Seasons, etc.

Those having volumes to donate to such a library will please send them directly to the office of the First Presidency, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. If duplicate copies are sent they may be placed in the general church library or elsewhere where they can be of service. Those having such literature certainly have an opportunity now to place it where it can do much more good than it ever possibly can do in a private library. THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Heralds Wanted

W. P. Bootman, of box 822, Deer Lodge, Montana, needs a copy each of Saints' Herald for January 25, 1890, and March 13, 1912, especially the former, as it contains matter of importance for one meeting representatives of the Christian Church in debate. He would like to receive them soon.

Reunion Notices

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove districts will hold joint reunion in the city park at Dow City, Iowa, August 20 to 29. Watch the HERALD for further announcements. F. R. Schafer, secretary, Dennison, Iowa.

WALKER.—Sarah Elizabeth Powell, daughter of William and Jane Powell, was born in Minnesota, November 18, 1860.

NEWS AND COMMENT

CHURCH NEWS

Elders Charles May, Clyde F. Ellis, and Paia a Metuaoro recently visited the branches in Flint, Michigan. One day they visited the factory of the Imperial Wheel Co., where Elder Ellis spoke on island customs and they both sang in Tahitian with favorable effect on the men.

Elder T. C. Kelley writes from Lynnville, Kentucky, May 18: "Spring is very backward here, and farmers are far behind with their work. This adds to the difficulties of missionary work in the country places. We trust conditions may improve soon and the good work move on apace."

The Athenian Literary Society is very nearly as old as Graceland College herself. Owing to the growth of the Collegiate Department this society was recently divided into three: The Victorian, with Orley Reneau as president; the Nikete with Forest Roberts as president; and Alpha Phi Sigma Athenian with David Lewis president. Leonard Lea is president of the confederated society. They have been very busy the past week in securing new members for the coming year; they have not only pledged members of the faculty, and expected student body, but also certain of the church officials. President F. M. Smith has accepted nomination as honorary president of the Victorians, and M. A. McConley has accepted honorary membership with Alpha Phi Sigmas.

"I have a widowed friend who desires a situation in the home of Saints in or near Zion. Anyone having employment for her will please write to Mrs. C. J. Dixon, R. F. D. A., Jay, Florida."

The erection of the new college building for Graceland's expanding needs is being rather seriously delayed by the failure to receive certain structural steel greatly needed at the present juncture.

The Omaha Branch have moved into temporary quarters in Druid Hall, at Twenty-fourth and Ames Streets, where they expect to remain until the new church basement is completed, probably three or four months. The address of the presidency is: Roland W. Scott, 1502 South Twenty-ninth Street, telephone Harney 4266; T. A. Hicks, 2924 North Twenty-fourth Street; secretary, Miss Anna Hicks, same address, telephone Webster 4266.

Baptized November 22, 1868. Married to Orson Walker, November 19, 1882. Four of their 6 children preceded her to the better land. The husband, daughter Emma, son Edward, one daughter-in-law, one granddaughter, 5 sisters and 2 brothers, besides many other relatives and friends mourn her loss. Funeral from the home, at Ravenwood, Missouri. sermon by R. S. Salyards.

Any Saints happening to be going to England on the Imperator, sailing from New York July 17, are requested to write F. Browning, 1716 Adeline Street, Oakland, California, with a view to having his company on the voyage.

One of the best, and certainly the largest, reunions and Sunday school conventions ever held in the Victoria District, Australia, is reported by J. H. N. Jones in a letter dated April 6. Brethren Rushton and Hanson were present and added much to the interest. The former spoke on "Coordination," and the latter on "Efficiency." Two hundred attended the Sunday evening service. The two brethren left soon for the northern states, having done a splendid work in encouraging the local workers on the up-to-date policies of the church. Three were baptized at Richmond during the month. There is every prospect of future progression throughout the district, especially in the metropolis.

Mrs. Emma Kohl, R. F. D. 6, box 1000, Santa Ana, California, wants the address of the church at Santa Ana. Will the Saints there please see to it?

The Publicity Department informs us that they have sent out a small folder to all bishops and bishops' agents and solicitors, with instructions to place them in the hands of all wage earners belonging to the church. It is expected that such a leaflet will be sent out each month as a reminder. The one before us advises "nine tenths for yourself; one tenth the Lord's share," that this is tithing and a standing rule, and the first requirement of the financial law. The folder states personally what is done with the tithing—the sending out of missionaries, and the caring for the poor and needy.

The Publicity Department has worked out a new appointment card to be used in place of the old certificate of appointment. These cards are small enough to slip into a card case, and can constantly be carried as a means of identification. They plan to issue these cards to all general church officials, as well as to each conference appointee.

Elder Hubert Case left Lamoni on the 19th for his field in Oklahoma, after spending some time in Independence, helping develop the general plans for Indian missionary work. Apostle G. T. Griffiths has been securing information on the Indian situation in New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, in addition to that already had of Nebraska and Oklahoma. He expects to arrive in his field in Oklahoma about June 14 after a trip to other fields, to work there till the Indian reunion in August.

"At Bradner, last week one of the most prominent and highly-respected ladies of the town was baptized by Brother Ulrich, which caused quite a commotion, as she was a member of the "Campbellite" faith, and all the preachers were on the warpath. Some of the best people of the town have united with us. Much could be said about things there. I look for many good things in Bradner."—Excerpt from letter of Jesse M. Harden.

"I am very busy in my mission field and cannot begin to fill the calls for service. Will send in all the subscriptions to the church papers I can."—C. W. Hawkins, Northern California.

The Ensign states that Elder Paia a Metuaoro, accompanied by Elder J. Charles May, has left Independence on a tour which will include Saint Louis, Kirtland, Hill Cumorah, Chicago, Nauvoo, and Lamoni. He expects to leave for his island home some time in June, perhaps with the party of newly-appointed missionaries who will go.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Bellair, Illinois. The few Saints here are strong in the faith, though there are few church privileges. The Sunday school is small but the interest is increasing. On May 9 there were 31 present.

Dayton, Ohio. The gospel light is shining here. Sunday, May 2, was "Rally Day," our object being to reduce our church debt. We greatly enjoyed a visit from Patriarch J. E. Matthews and wife of Columbus; he preached two fine sermons. The Lord manifested his pleasure concerning our efforts. We were greatly blessed and the day will long be remembered.

First Branch, Chicago. [Ruby I. Sumption, branch correspondent, was recently married to a Brother Newman, his initials not reported. We extend congratulations.—EDITORS.] An overall club is to be organized for a special performance at the reunion grounds on May 31, using for the demonstration pruning hooks and grub axes. Patriarch W. A. McDowell will conduct a series of evangelical meetings through the week of May 23. Members are invited to interest others, attend, pray.

Bisbee, Arizona. Quite an interesting and active normal class has recently been organized under the leadership of Brother T. R. Davis. Brother Davis has been quite successful in interesting a number of the young people in this work. About twenty of our young people participated in a moonlight hike on Tuesday, May 4, and on Sunday afternoon the 9th they are planning on a young people's open-air prayer meeting at the Country Club. These activities are under the auspices of the Religio Department. At the last branch business meeting it was voted to hold a special series of meetings in the near future. Arrangements are being made to hold those meetings during the month of June. Steps are being taken to procure a suitable building centrally located and to raise money for an advertising fund.

Lamoni, Iowa. The baccalaureate sermon for the Lamoni high school graduating class was delivered on the evening of May 16, by Bishop A. Carmichael. Mother's Day was observed May 9 by the Sunday school, by the junior meeting with an address by G. R. Wells, and at the church service with a sermon by D. T. Williams. With the close of school and college so near at hand, there are many school events taking place in the community. Miss Laura Mann, R. N., is giving a special nursing course to the female members of the class in religious education, including others who wished to enroll. She has charge of the health department work in the community and stake. Recently she made a trip to Independence to accompany an inmate of the Children's Home to Independence Sanitarium for an operation for appendicitis.

Coldwater, Michigan. Elder Clyde F. Ellis spent a few days here on his way home from the Society Island mission where he has been for nearly six years. Our services are as follows, and we invite any coming this way to attend: Prayer meeting 10 a. m. Sunday, Sunday school 11.15 a. m., preaching 8 p. m. Religio 8 p. m., Thursday. Brother Roark, of Lansing, was with us over the 16th, and spoke about the reunion we are planning for 1920.

Flint No. 2, Michigan. Two were ordained to the priesthood recently, also three added to the branch through baptism. Two were heads of families. Elder Ernest M. Orton has been with us a week, giving us good spiritual food.

Centralia, Illinois. We believe we are holding more church services than any other branch in Southeastern Illinois. We have a church house to build, however, if we keep this up, for the place we are now renting has been sold and our lease expires November 15.

Seattle, Washington. The gospel work is moving along nicely up here in the northwest corner, and the Saints are growing in spirituality. The British Columbia Saints report advancement. Brethren Pope of New Westminster and John Hartnell of Bellingham branches are caring for their flocks. We are looking forward with anticipation of a spiritual time at our reunion. With Brother G. R. Brundage added to our missionary force we expect a greater work this coming year.

Lamoni, Iowa. The Memorial Day services were held in the church on the 23d, the speaker being C. D. Cottingham, pastor of the local Methodist Episcopal church, who was in service at the front in France in the Salvation Army. A few of the "Boys in Blue," veterans of the Civil War, were present, and a goodly number of the lads in khaki. National Boy Scout week is to be observed throughout the United States during the week beginning May 31, but on account of college commencement and similar exercises, the week beginning the 24th is being observed in Lamoni. There are about forty Boy Scouts enrolled, and they participated in the Sunday evening service at the church on the 23d, at which F. M. McDowell was the speaker. The high school commencement address was by Heman Hale Smith, a class of 32 graduating, ten of these being boys.

A MILLION DOLLARS TITHING

This must be our goal for 1920-21. It is possible. Barraclough said we would raise it and I believe he was right. The Lord spoke before Barraclough did, however, for he said many years ago that there was enough and to spare. I believe God.

Missionaries have been sent to Africa, Australia, Society Islands, England, Switzerland, Palestine, Germany, and all over our own land.

We know that no wide-awake, enthusiastic, red-blooded Latter Day Saint will be satisfied until he has done his part in supplying the "sinews of war" that the gospel may be preached in all the world for a witness. Let your ambition be to pay twice as much tithing this year as you did last. Pray over your flocks and herds that God may so bless you that you may help in this unselfish work for the salvation of men.

If you know of some who should be paying and who are not, make them the subject of your prayers daily for a month and then pray that God may assist you to so approach them upon the subject of tithing that you may be an instrument in his hands of persuading them to observe his law. Be it little or much, you will render them a great service, for giving is God's antidote for selfishness.

Religious Statistics for 1919

Our Goal for 1920

In this week's HERALD there appears, under the department of General Interest, a summary of a 1919 religious census. This is taken from the Religious Digest and is a reprint of part of an article in the Christian Herald for April 10. It will be noted that the increase the past year is over 720,000 below the average for the last ten years. And for 1918 it is over 617,000.

The original article gives also some interesting figures on the decrease in the number of ministers in many churches, and the small net increase for the year. With nearly 104,000 ministers the increase was only 474.

The original article also gives some very interesting data about the church organizations, including our own. In the summary it combines this church with the church of Utah, and shows an increase in the United States of 4,000 in membership for the year, and an increase of 200 in the number of ministers.

But the individual statistics given show that three sevenths of the church edifices, and over 40 per cent of the ministers in the two organizations are credited to the Reorganized Church, and the increase in membership and ministry is entirely due to the efforts of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

This means that of the total increase in ministers in this country, 200 are credited to this church; that is, nearly half of the total increase for the whole country. Also the percentage of increase in the number of communicants is apparently the highest for our church.

But even a gain of 4,000 is not sufficient, in this the hastening time. Though other churches are losing, that is all the more reason that we should put forth a greater effort. The Presidency has set as a goal before us, a gain of 20,000 before the next General Conference. Why should we not do that and then go beyond it? After all, that is a small figure compared with the honest in heart who have yet to hear the gospel of the kingdom and signify their willingness to accept.

To some it may seem like asking too much. That is not the case. It is a goal set before us for a greater effort, by exercise of greater faith and confidence in God, for a more earnest seeking for the direction of his Holy Spirit, that we shall not arise simply to make an effort to speak and sit down, but that we may seek earnestly for the inspiration of his Holy Spirit that the hearts of our hearers may be touched, and that many who are looking for our Lord may signify their acceptance and conversion.

It is a time not for many words, but to be up and doing. It is a time for accomplishment; a time for faith in God, and for thanksgiving for his goodness. Twenty thousand converts with their faces set towards Zion! Is that too much? If we are to trust in the arm of flesh, to follow after the world and after our own ways, it is much to ask. But with our faith in God and in his promise, with his help, we can do it.

One million dollars tithing this year! Twenty thousand new converts, with their faces set towards Zion before next General Conference! With the grace of God we can and will do it.

The Word That Became Flesh

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, December 21, 1919.)

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth."—John 1: 14.

You may sometimes have noticed in a crowded, busy city street some person of such striking appearance or character that as he passed by every eye was turned to observe him. Jesus Christ crossed the stage of human action once, he passed through this old world once and every eye has been turned to observe his passing. John looked up from his baptizing in the Jordan and said, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!" Pilate looked up from his political intrigues and said, "Behold the man!" And he added, apparently in some perplexity, "What shall I do with this man that is called Jesus?"

That question must be answered by every person some time. If he doesn't confront it in this life he will certainly meet it in some other world. And so to-day all civilized nations are agreed in celebrating the birth of our Lord and Master, the only individual who seems to have so attracted the attention of all men.

Every newspaper that comes to us, every letter that we read, every document by its date line says that so many centuries, so many years, so many months, so many days ago Jesus was born into the world, while most men seem more or less anxious to at least claim his authority for their undertakings in the world. All kinds of fads and reforms and fashions appeal to him and lay claim to his authority. The Socialists tell us that he was a great socialist; Spiritualists tell us that he was a great medium; Mrs. Eddy says he was a Christian Scientist, and of course all denominations, Catholic and Protestant, claim to march under his banner. It would seem that all men feel that the name of Jesus Christ is a mantle so broad they may hide under it with any folly or fancy that may claim their allegiance; but we ought to remember that we can bear the name of Christ only when we have the Spirit of Christ.

Why Did Jesus Come to Earth?

We as a church believe that we have found Jesus, that we have found the law of life and salvation. If so, it will behoove us to study it carefully; and certainly I do not know where we will find any more powerful exposition of that law than in the life and character of Jesus, the Master. The text that I have read says that the "Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth," and in the Inspired Version in the same chapter the statement is made explicitly that the Word of God is the gospel. The gospel, then, became flesh and dwelt among us.

I wonder why God determined that the law of life and salvation should become flesh and dwell among men. I wonder why Jesus chose to take upon himself flesh and blood. I think it was because he wanted to appeal to the hearts of men and he wanted to appeal to the intelligence of men. The thing that appeals to one will not always appeal to the other. I suppose that not every young man who falls in love pauses to analyze the thing that has happened to him. It does not interest his intelligence, particularly; he does not care. But certainly it has had a profound influence on his heart. On the other hand, there are many things that we understand clearly that have no appeal to our hearts. We can work up a perfectly intelligent defense of taxation, for instance; but the man who goes to purchase a marriage license feels quite different to the man who merely gets a tax receipt.

I have pictured to myself Jesus in meditation. I have imagined him following that occasion when in the councils of heaven he volunteered to come to earth and undertake the salvation of man, and I have fancied him thinking to himself: "Now I have undertaken this mission, how shall I go about the task of reaching men? Shall I call ten legions of angels and send them forth with trumpets to sound the message through the heavens so that every living creature shall hear the law of life and salvation? If I do that, some men may look up and say, 'Your law is all right for the angels, but I am no angel; I am dragged in the mire; I may be part angel, but I am part beast and cannot even attempt to live by your law.' Shall I summon ten legions of angels and send them forth to write billions of tracts and scatter them broadcast over the land, like snowflakes in January? If I do, some men may look up and say, 'What is a printed page to me when God remains in heaven and I am chained to the earth?' Shall I summon the archangels and gather together the lightnings of heaven and blaze the gospel upon the sky in letters of fire so that all men may see? Men are children, and if I do that they will be afraid. I do not want their fear; I want their love."

When I imagine that the corrugated brow is smoothed and Jesus says, "Father, I know how to reach men; I will go to them myself and I will live the law of life and salvation." So it came about that the Word became flesh and dwelt among men. That was the only way to reach men. That is the secret of the success of some of the men who have represented this church in the past who have not been men of exceeding brilliancy, but they have gone out among the people and have shared with them their privations. You would be surprised sometimes to follow the trail of some man, who in Independence is not considered so very forceful; but go out in the rural districts where he has ministered to the needs of the people and you will find that they consider him a wonderful man, and the secret is, that in that field in the person of that minister "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

His Appeal to the Heart

The appeal of Jesus was to the heart. A cold, abstract statement of law does not appeal to the human heart. You cannot reach your child by handing to him a written list of things he may do and things he must not do. He will obey his father either because he loves him or because he fears him. Jesus chose to appeal to us through the avenue of love, and so he attempted to identify himself with us in all the phases of our lives.

I think that I remarked from this stand when preaching about the character of Jesus at one time in the past that by becoming a little child Jesus consecrated all childhood and took all children into his fellowship; by receiving birth from a woman and resting upon her bosom he consecrated all womanhood; and when he became the man of Galilee and mingled with men he consecrated all manhood, and so he has put every man and every woman and every child under obligations to him, and his message is to every man, and woman, and child.

I do not see any reason why Jesus Christ should not have come into the world as a babe. It was the most natural way for him to come. All of us came into the world in that way, and Jesus wanted to identify himself with us in all things. And I suppose that it was perfectly natural that he should be born of humble parentage. It is conceivable that he could, if he so desired, have been born in some rich Jewish home or in some aristocratic Roman household, but not very many men are born of rich or aristocratic parents; the great men of the world have come from humble surroundings. So Jesus chose to come as he did and identify himself with us. As he grew to manhood he had his temptations and trials the same as we do.

Jesus was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. He knew what it was to lose his friends by death: he loved Lazarus, and Lazarus died. He knew that which is infinitely harder to bear, the treachery of his friends: Judas sold him for thirty pieces of silver, and Peter denied him. If we are to trust the Apostle Paul, Jesus was subject to the very temptations that appeal to you and me. All of the temptations that come to the normal man Jesus met and overcame, and he endured privations as he went out in his missionary work homeless and practically penniless. On a certain occasion he voiced the sad lamentation, "The birds of the air have their nests, and the foxes have holes, but the Son of Man hath no where to lay his head." Some of our missionaries, perhaps, who have gone into some city or village at night with no place to go and not a single friend, have walked the streets and seen the windows of many homes lighted up, but no place for them, have perhaps realized how Jesus felt when he walked through Galilee and saw those little villages among the hills with their windows lighted up, but no place for him to lay his head. He encountered all these things, including death on the cross, because he wanted to come here and identify himself with man. And I believe in that you will find the secret of the atonement—in his desire to identify himself with man.

Out of all that experience came the great invitation that he voices, found in Matthew 11: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart and ye shall find rest unto your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Most of us know what it is to bear burdens. There may be a few very young people who go singing through life, thus far at least, with their shoulders straight and not bearing any burdens; but man does not need to live very long until he finds his shoulders borne down with burdens of sorrow and perplexity and toil and adversity and possibly temptation and sin. Jesus says: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Lay aside those burdens of unnecessary anxiety and worry; lay off those evil habits, temptations, and worldly cares; cast them all aside and take upon your shoulders the legitimate burden of responsibility and service, but his yoke goes with it and his yoke is easy and his burden is light and ye shall find rest to your souls. That is the wonderful message that comes to us when we think about the Master. I wish that we could all drink it in and realize what it means.

His Appeal to the Brain

Jesus desired, also, as I have said, to appeal to the intelligence of man. It is difficult for man to understand the idea of God in the abstract. To think about God just as an abstract idea is very difficult and men for ages past have been endeavoring to understand that idea. Every idol that man ever carved out of wood or stone represented an effort to understand God. It was his attempt to visualize something that would aid his imagination in an effort to comprehend God. Of course, now it seems ridiculous and absurd. Little better, perhaps, were the creeds, along the same line. They represented man's effort to understand the abstract idea of God; and it has been a task almost insurmountable.

It seems almost that God himself in attempting to reveal his character to man comes against a difficulty that perplexes even him. It is not that he is not willing to reveal himself, but it is so difficult for man to comprehend. How can a man whose abilities are taxed to administer the affairs of a nation or a state or a village, or even his own home—how can he understand the great Being who builded the earth and administers the affairs of the universe? In what terms can God speak that we will understand, that we will not misunderstand and misconstrue? In section 85, God says, "Unto what shall I liken these things that ye may understand." He seems face to face with that problem that I have mentioned: I understand these things, but to what shall I liken them that men can understand?

But we can understand Jesus; and as a last resort—perhaps not the last resort of divinity, but the best recourse—Jesus came into the world and the "world became flesh" so that we could understand it. There cannot be propounded any printed or spoken statement of the law of life and salvation that will apply to man that will be understood by him if it is divested of the personality and the life of Jesus Christ. It would not appeal to him, would not be understood. But he came to interpret God in terms that would appeal to man and that might be understood by man in other words, he came to live by the law of God.

Does God in the Bible command obedience? Jesus Christ was obedience! Does God command love? Jesus Christ was love! Does God require sacrifice? The whole life of Jesus Christ was sacrifice. Every chapter, every line, every word in the law of God as we have it in the printed page, Jesus Christ came here to live, and certainly in our status as members and as a ministry we ought to carry with us his example, his precepts, and his personal touch, because we can hardly find ourselves in a situation where we will not find some example that Jesus Christ set that will help us to solve that particular perplexity. His every human deed was beneficence and his every divine deed was full of blessing. I mean that in his human deeds, such as you and I can perform, all that he did was for the good of humanity. And in his divine deeds, his miracles, he also was beneficent. I cannot recall that he ever exercised his supernatural powers to bring harm to a single individual.

You remember the occasion when he and his disciples were passing through Samaria and he wanted to spend the night in a certain village, and the Samaritans would not permit them even to remain in the city over night, the disciples spoke up and said to Jesus, "What shall we do? Shall we pray the Father to send down fire and destroy them?" That was man speaking then. Jesus answered them and said "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them." I think sometimes we might well ask ourselves the question, What spirit am I of? We should be sure that we are of the spirit of Jesus Christ who came not to destroy but to save. He came to transform human lives, and he transformed them by his personal contact. He came not only to teach, but to exemplify in his life. In that particular, he was a supreme teacher. There is not a thing that he teaches us that he did not first live. His gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and the greatest miracle that Jesus ever wrought was in the transformation of human lives as he came into contact with them. That was the greatest demonstration of his power when he was here and it is the greatest demonstration of his power to-day, greater than the healing of the blind, the cleansing of lepers, the raising from the dead, is the transformation that is wrought in human lives, and you and I can remember miracles of that kind to-day.

Our Greatest Need To-day

If I were asked the question, What is the greatest need of the church to-day, what do you suppose I would answer? What do you think is the greatest need of the church to-day? Is the greatest need of the church that God should just hand us out five millions of dollars and say to us, "Use it in buying land in Zion and in sending a great force of missionaries into all of the world"? I think if that were our greatest need, God could very easily supply it. This summer I tramped around through the gold⁶ fields of Colorado, and I thought when there: "If our greatest need were money, God could tell me where we could find untold wealth for the church in a very short time." But evidently our needs along that line must be supplied by the legitimate and usual avenue of tithes and offerings through sacrifice.

To my mind, the greatest need of the church to-day is a thorough baptism in the Spirit of Jesus Christ. Paul tells us that, "As many of you as have been baptized in Christ have put on Christ." If we have put on Christ we have conformed ourselves to the nature of Christ, we have taken on ourselves his nature.

I notice that in this old world everything clearly acts in harmony with its own nature. Syrup never forgets to be sticky, vinegar never forgets to be sour, and iron never forgets to be heavy. But sometimes we forget to be Christlike. Jesus Christ never forgot to be Christlike, because he was Christ; and if we fully put on the nature of Christ we would never forget to be Christlike, because we would always act in harmony with our inner natures.

I think there is a great need that we should be baptized more thoroughly with the Spirit of Jesus Christ. I will say frankly that I sometimes have seen among our church members quarreling and contention and bickering and fault-finding and division, and have found myself that it is so difficult to avoid this thing that in hours of despondency I have said, "Is there on earth a single Christian, one man who is thoroughly Christian all the way through?" But then has come to me this cheering thought, "Though all men fail, Jesus is the same to-day as he was yesterday," and he has blazed the trail. Though I might fall often, he will assist me to rise again and follow in his footsteps; and what he will do for me, certainly he will do for others. Then, as I look around me and see some noble character among the Saints who is conforming to the law of life and salvation, my heart is encouraged, and I look around and see others—I believe there are many of them, though, like myself—they may make their mistakes and in hours of weakness may for awhile cease to be Christlike, yet they are endeavoring to endure: they have within themselves that spirit that eventually will transform their lives.

I believe that is the hope of the church. I believe our hope is in those who are trying to carry on the work of Christ, who have, like the Master, transformed the word of God into a living being, who have made it, as the Apostle Paul said, a living epistle known and read of all men.

I hope and pray that our hearts may be touched by His Spirit, that our lives may be like his life, that it may be said of us that in our lives the "Word became flesh and dwelt among men, full of grace and truth."

Expense of the Interchurch World Movement

The Presbyterian for May 13, states that despite the fact that none of the official bodies of the churches have yet taken legal action turning over the direction of their work to the Interchurch World Movement, it is said that this movement has attempted a complete organization, and rented offices in New York at a rental of $1,000 a day; which with furnishings, heating, lighting, and care, and the salaries of the clerks will make a considerable item. In addition to this, some district organizers are receiving large salaries, at least so this writer states.

He also states that cooperation has been the rule long before the Interchurch World Movement was organized. For years the different churches have joined in building and sustaining theological seminaries, medical schools, colleges, hospitals, etc., as well as dividing up the foreign fields and making arrangements to prevent overlapping. As to the survey, it is not full and accurate, while the work of needy churches is sufficient to fully occupy the workers, without taking on new work.

Concerning the overhead expenses, Harry Boyd states for the Presbyterian Church, that the amount underwritten to the Interchurch Movement of one million dollars is twelve and a half per cent of the amounts received by their various church boards to the first of April. To this would be added ten per cent for the New Era committee, and to this the overhead of each board.

For the year ending March 31, 1919, the administrative expenses of their foreign board was only seven per cent of the receipts, so that ninety-three cents of every dollar went to the field. This year twenty-two per cent goes to the Interchurch and New Era groups before the board pays the expense for its own upkeep. What is then left goes to the field.

The Christian Work for May 22 continues this same discussion, and states that it was expected that 40 million dollars would be raised for the Interchurch Movement from "friendly citizens," who, though outside the church, nevertheless would gladly contribute. It was intended that after paying the expenses of the World Movement, the balance of the fund would be turned over to the denominational treasuries. But in fact less than three million has been thus collected, so that it will be necessary that the amount underwritten for the various churches be actually paid. This is causing a great deal of concern among certain denominations.

So serious did the issue prove that some thought the whole movement should liquidate and go out of business. At a recent meeting in Cleveland, an effort was made to revive it, and the field and survey men made considerable personal donations to this end.

But finally, we note in the daily papers of May 27, that the Presbyterian Church has practically withdrawn by vote of general assembly, from the Interchurch Movement, and that the appropriation for the New Era Movement has been cut from nine hundred thousand to four hundred thousand dollars. However, the general assembly agreed to direct its executive committee to contribute one hundred thousand dollars for the ensuing year for the Interchurch Movement "when properly reorganized," to be used for the purpose of current operating expenses only.

On top of this the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South adopted on the same date a resolution prohibiting the church boards and executive secretaries from advancing financial assistance to the Interchurch World Movement in excess of donations made for that specific purpose. The previous day a resolution had been adopted favoring further cooperation, but such cooperation is to be through individual donations.

At the same time other churches are finding the heavy expense a serious handicap.

One Million Dollars Tithing

Can we make it this year? If not, why not? Last year the Methodists, the Baptists, and other organizations undertook special drives, and secured some twenty dollars a member. Twenty dollars a member would mean nearly two million dollars from our church, instead of one million, in one year. Nor does last year stand alone, for we have noted the budgets for some of the sectarian churches, and the amount to be raised this year is larger than it was for last year.

We have recently seen the budget of a small local sectarian church in a certain city of the West, and noted the many thousand dollars that were to be raised. This included the recent drive of the Interchurch World Movement, but the amount of that drive was only part of their local budget, and much less than one third. It was shown that these special drives include only a few general church purposes, and do not include local expenses.

The drive by the Interchurch World Movement has already passed into history. It was to raise considerably over three hundred million dollars, by a few organizations as a basis for a million-dollar drive. It apparently did not accomplish all that was expected of it, but it did accomplish the raising of funds for the various denominational boards. The amount that was expected from those not belonging to any church fell short, and the special donations to the Interchurch World Movement were not all that were hoped for.

But this does not change the basic fact of the large contributions that others are making for their own particular church, and that one of the sectarian churches.

Are we less devoted? Are we less willing to consecrate? Are we less willing to assist in the establishment of that industrial condition which will prove the best for all of us? These drives of other churches appear to cover certain religious needs, while the purpose of our church is broader. It includes everything of religion that is included within any other Christian church, and then a great deal more in present-day inspiration and revelation. But it also provides for the economic needs and for social betterment, or as we express it tersely, the establishment of Zion.

Are we going to reach our goal? We will not reach it if we wait for some one else to start. We will not reach it if we look for some one else to do the work. We will not reach it if the whole burden is laid on the church in one section. We only can accomplish it if the church in every part of America, in Canada, in Great Britain, in Australia, in fact throughout the world, exercise a united, devoted effort, each one considering what he or she can do.

Two weeks ago a special announcement appeared in the HERALD to which we would call the particular attention of our readers. Clip the announcement on "A million dollars tithing," and put it in a prominent place where it will act as a daily reminder, so that in making up your annual budget you will consider what you can do this year to establish and carry on the work before all of us.

The work of conversion is not for the missionaries alone. They need our support. The work of the branches is not one

The Vision of 1920

BY HEMAN HALE SMITH

A lecture delivered at Central Church, Kansas City, April 4, 1920.

I appreciate very deeply this afternoon the privilege of representing here in this church the young men of my faith in their vision of what Zion is to be. I ask of you your sympathy knowing that alone I cannot do this. It is a delicate and difficult thing to take the dreams of youth and unravel the warp and woof of them and spread it before you to see whether the threads are of fine enough texture to make a garment for the people of the Lord.

Visions have since time began been the forerunners of progress. I shall not repeat to you some of those from scripture with which you are familiar, but I want to mention a few taken from what thirty or forty years ago we used to call the vulgar history of the world.

Eight hundred years ago a man of science, Roger Bacon, seeking to know the reasons why this world existed, of the truth of the fundamental things about him, stated that he saw in vision a time coming when carriages should move about without the aid of horses, but by a power generated from within themselves; that men sitting in vehicles should propel this through the air by conveyances similar to the wings of a bird; that boats should move upon the water without the aid of rowers.

Over four hundred years ago a Genoese sailor claimed that an angel of the Lord came to him in a vision and gave into his keeping the keys of a new world. That sailor was Christopher Columbus.

In the first of the sixteenth century a German student in the monastic school returning joyously to his vacation at home ran into a thunderstorm, and the lightning flashed in the sky and struck his companion by the side of him dead. He states to us that the heavens opened and a message was delivered to him telling him that he should be the instrument through whom God should bring about a great reformation. This student for the Catholic priesthood was Martin Luther.

In 1534 a Spanish warrior and priest while sick almost to death from wounds received a vision commanding him to do a certain work. In obedience to this vision he founded the Jesuit priesthood which carried the message of Christianity into the new world, founded colleges, and until it became corrupted two centuries later, was the greatest moral influence in the Catholic church. This man was Ignatius Loyola.

In the nineteenth century a backwoods boy having sold the produce with which he had floated down the Mississippi River; while standing watching the slave market in action in New Orleans, said to himself: "If ever I get the chance to hit that thing I will hit it hard"; and it came to his wondering mind like a flash, the consciousness that somehow he was chosen to be a great instrument in stamping out human slavery in this country. It was Abraham Lincoln.

Who shall say that these men saw not these visions and heard not these voices? Who shall say that there was not need of vision in the times in which they lived? Is there need of vision to-day? Is there need of a higher guidance than ours? Not alone in the spiritual side of life except as it influences the daily life about us. Not in a purely religious aspect but even in the economic world, the sordid material world about us.

For decades men have fought for betterment of laws and fought against poverty and social distress. A long, long struggle for the laboring man who wanted the right of leisure and the freedom from long hours of monotonous toil and yet in spite of the fact that no employer of any consequence has ever gone back to the ten-hour day after having once tried the eight-hour day; in spite of this fact there are only two million five hundred thousand men out of thirty million working men in the United States working under the shorter day system. It needs no argument from me to convince the average audience to-day that the eight-hour day gives greater efficiency because of less fatigue and more leisure and it's not a problem of hours alone but of wages.

Wages Have Risen

Some have thought that wages have risen rapidly in the last few years, and in some industries the rise has been rapid. Since the beginning of the last war the wages in shipyards and steel industries has increased about 85 per cent but in the building and painting trades its increase has been only 20 per cent. Among the clerks of our thousands of stores this increase has been only 26 per cent and the same time the cost of living from 1914 to 1918 rose according to the statistics of the Department of Labor of the United States Government, based upon thousands of commodities 106 per cent; and everyone knows that this cost of living has not decreased since 1918.

The laboring man to-day may get far more wages than his father did in 1885 or 1890 but the money he receives will not buy as much and that is the real measure of difference. Until minimum wage laws are made, the laboring man is forced into unions and into the process of collective bargaining in order to insure what advances in wages in proportion to the cost of living he can get.

There is the question of health—two hundred and eighty-four million working days were lost last year because of sickness, $750,000,000 last in wages; doubtless one third of which could have been prevented with the simplest precautions. The cost of accidents, 700,000 men disabled in one year; 3,000,000 industrial accidents. There is the problem of child and woman labor where the preventive laws are still too few and too far between, and where the preventions which ought to be upon the books have often been nullified by adverse decisions of the courts. The courts are usually the last to recognize the principles of human and social advances among the institutions, and the legal struggle to insure the safety of minimum wages and maximum hour laws has been slow and painful. With these problems facing the world is there need of vision to-day?

Five Obstacles Seen by Socialists

The socialists tell us (and whatever you may think of socialism, you will have great difficulty in combating these objections to the present system), socialists tell us that there are five great obstacles in the way of social progress:

1. We are threatened with the danger and power of private monopolies.

2. As an alternative we are face to face with a competitive system which is a waste in capital, in men, and natural resources.

3. The competitive system is often immoral as because of it we have such things as child labor and the adulteration of food. Men do not hire little children or poison food for the mere joy of crippling the next generation and killing the present one. They do it to make money to beat another fellow with reference to cost.

4. The present system gives to some men the wealth from which a living may be obtained, a fortune already made at the outset of life. To others it offers a handicap because of the cruel necessity of supporting families from whom the natural protection of a father has been removed. The present system makes for the inequality of opportunity.

5. In the fifth place the present system exploits labor, the great producer in the final analysis of wealth, by allowing the owners of capital the right to dictate the price of labor according to the laws of demand, and supply fixed by population alone.

Some Solutions Offered

In the face of these things is there not need for an economic vision to-day? What is the way out? Are men hunting a solution? Yes, there are a great many solutions offered, some of which I want to outline this afternoon. One way out of the difficulty offered is, by the average type of business man. It is to let business alone. Its policy is to encourage the youth to look at the wonderful success of a great packer, for example, who rose from obscure position to a place of financial power. This we are told is due to brains. And to the young man we say, "Go thou and do likewise." It's the doctrine that only the fit survive and only those fail who are worthless. It pushes to the logical extreme the biological doctrine that all weak and helpless should be cut off. It's the very antithesis of the spirit of Christianity. Economists called it the laissez-faire or "let alone policy." The exponents of this belief make a god of the law of demand and supply.

When I began to teach economics ten years ago I followed the old textbooks and taught the necessity of following this law. I glibly explained mistakes in the economic world as violation of this law. God helping me I shall never again be guilty of holding such a law up as perfect or moral or religious. There is no justification in following the logic of the law which would crush humanity for the sake of industry, coin the blood of our women and children into dollars, wipe from our statutes every law limiting hours of restricting labor of women or children or safeguarding the health of workers.

The law of demand and supply exists, but we are combating its tendencies every day and its divine right is as dangerous as the one which suggests that only the employer and the employee are concerned in the contract between them. This also I deny for I believe that society is concerned with the wage received by every one of its members and the conditions under which every one shall work.

Public Schools as a Solution

Why not the public schools as a solution, and the public schools have changed policy with regard to industrial affairs very radically within the last few years. To test a man's education we no longer ask how much does he know but what can he do. For this purpose we have trade schools and vocational guidance and yet the public school training for service and efficiency, excellent as it may be, cannot of itself change the economic world into which its students are flung.

Trade unionism is offered as a solution and in this connection let me say, that we have passed the time when the intelligent man or woman confuses unionism with anarchy or such general terms as radicalism, Bolshevism, etc. You cannot meet the argument of unionism any more by calling names, for the unions have come as a necessity in the public life of to-day. They have come to protect the principles of collective bargaining. They have been the one greatest force in ameliorating the conditions of the workingman during the last century. Have the unions caught a vision? I say yes. And let me prove that by reading to you from the program of the British Labor Party embodied in the famous Whitley report something which will sound very natural to Latter Day Saints, even the very phraseology of the message.

The Surplus for the Common Good

"In the disposal of the surplus above the standard of life society has hitherto gone as far wrong as in its neglect to secure the necessary basis of any genuine industrial efficiency or decent social order. We have allowed the riches of our mines, the rental value of the lands superior to the margin of cultivation, the extra profits of the fortunate capitalists, even the material outcome of scientific discoveries—which ought by now to have made this Britain of ours immune from class poverty or from any widespread destitution—to be absorbed by individual proprietors; and then devoted very largely to the senseless luxury of an idle rich class. Against this misappropriation of the wealth of the community, the labor party—speaking in the interests not of the wage earners alone, but of every grade and section of producers by hand or by brain, not to mention also those of the generations that are to succeed us, and of the permanent welfare of the community—emphatically protests. One main pillar of the house that the labor party intends to build is the future appropriation of the surplus, not to the enlargement of any individual fortune, but to the common good. It is from this constantly arising surplus (to be secured, on the other hand, by nationalization and municipalization, and, on the other, by the steeply graduated taxation of private income and riches) that will have to be found by the new capital which the community day by day needs for the perpetual improvement and increase of its various enterprises, for which we shall decline to be dependent on the usury-exacting financiers. It is from the same source that has to be defrayed the public provision for the sick and infirm of all kinds (including that for maternity and infancy) which is still so scandalously insufficient; for the aged and those prematurely incapacitated by accident or disease, now in many ways so imperfectly cared for; for the education alike of children, of adolescents and of adults, in which the labor party demands a genuine equality of opportunity, overcoming all differences of material circumstances, and for the organization of public improvements of all kinds, including the brightening of the lives of those now condemned to almost ceaseless toil, and a great development of the means of recreation. From the same source must come the greatly increased public provision that the labor party will insist on being made for scientific investigation and original research, in every branch of knowledge, not to say also for the promotion of music, literature, and fine art, which have been under capitalism so greatly neglected, and upon which, so the labor party holds, any real development of civilization, fundamentally depends. Society, like the individual, does not live by bread alone—does not exist only for perpetual wealth production. It is in the proposal for this appropriation of every surplus for the common good—in the vision of its resolute use for the building up of the community as a whole instead of for the magnification of individual fortunes—that the labor party, as the party of the producers by hand or by brain, most distinctively marks itself off from the older political parties, standing, as these do, essentially for the maintenance, unimpaired, of the perpetual private mortgage upon the annual product of the nation that is involved in the individual ownership of land and capital."—British Labor Party Program.

Man Does Not Live by Bread Alone

Why is unionism not the solution? For the very reason suggested in its own message, that man does not live by bread alone, that the world will not be saved industrially by the triumph of a class consciousness, or the triumph of either labor or capital. Capital cannot save us. It has demonstrated that in its special policy for centuries. To suggest it is a huge joke to the millions of oppressed workers of the world and yet the vision has been caught by even capitalists, as witness the present movement for cooperative management and for laborers' participation in management. The movement joined by industry after industry in the last eighteen months, Proctor and Gamble Co., United States Tire Co., Walter Baker Chocolate Co., Ford Motor Co., are but illustrations.

Unionism alone cannot solve the problem, so we come in the next place to a political solution, that of socialism, and again I say, only the ignorant call "socialist" to down the opponent's argument to-day and there is a newer term for even the ignorant to use now in deriding a policy too advanced for them. It is popular for them to call it "Bolshevism" and its advocates "Bolsheviks" and "Reds." There are as many kinds of socialism as there are of so-called Christianity. When I tell you that the private control of property is limited to the desire of society, that a man's talents, his wealth, his labor are not his to use as he pleases but only for the good of society. You can call this socialism and it is, not necessarily Marxian or Bolshevism which are merely forms of one class of socialism, but it is socialism, not socialism with a big S but with a little s. It is more than this. Let me give this argument again in a little different words: A man's talents and a man's wealth, a man's labor are not his to do with as he pleases but are given to him as a stewardship by the Almighty to use for the benefit of his people and the surplus shall be given as a whole, shall be consecrated for that purpose. This if you believe the Doctrine and Covenants, if you believe your own laws, you must admit is good Latter Day Saint doctrine. But this illustrates the reason why socialism like unionism standing alone as a political organization will not solve the problem. It tells us that we are gathering inevitably toward a conflict between two classes and out of this conflict the class of labor shall emerge the victor. It has no use for the regenerating influence of religion because it appeals to the very influence in man's effort to make a living which denies that influence. So, good as may be its aim, it alone will not solve the problem.

The Churches a Saving Power

Finally we come to the church, the church speaking generally, not in any specific type. For centuries it has pretended to be the saving power of mankind. Has it succeeded? Let me quote in answer to this question from the introduction to the remarkable book, Your Part in Poverty:

"The National Mission organized by the Church of England is an effort to arouse men and women who care for religion to a higher sense of their corporate responsibility for the well-being of the nation. The old idea that a man or woman should accept the teaching and sacrifice of our Lord as a means of escape from the torments of hell, or as an admission to a future heaven beyond the clouds, has proved quite futile as a force for regenerating mankind. We all agree now that this life is a much more serious thing, and that it cannot be dismissed and put out of account by the very comfortable belief that, no matter how wicked a person may have been right up to the last hour of life, if at that moment he accepts the sacrifice of Christ's death all will be well with him through eternity. I do not here discuss the theological question, but I do insist that, in the experience of those of us who have lived through the last half of the nineteenth century, the doctrine of salvation, as taught in almost all the churches, has been, in its effect on life and conduct, a ghastly failure. This failure of Christendom to redeem the world is written large on the blood-stained battlefields which to-day stretch across Europe, Asia, and Africa. But it is written still deeper on the social life of all those nations who profess to serve God and to believe in the teaching of his blessed Son."—George Lansbury.

Also in another part of the book:

"I shall write, not as an economist (for that is the last thing I would want to claim to be), certainly not as any sort of philanthropist (because that, too, is rather a weariness to the flesh), but just as an ordinary person who sees a good deal of what is evil in the world, not in others only, but in himself, and who is conscious that to many people money and money's worth is the alpha and omega of life; as one aware that for those who have children to feed and clothe, and wives to maintain, either on low wages or by an interminable struggle in small businesses, life is one miserably mean, sordid grind against poverty, in a world in which men, women, boys and girls, are but pawns in the struggle of mankind to heap up riches. I write as one who knows that nothing divides friends and relatives so easily as love of money; that nothing causes so much hatred and contempt, so much bitterness between families and friends, between good people as well as what are called bad people, as the loss of money. The poor, we must all realize, so far as material wealth is concerned, are always poor. Multitudes live in debt, through no fault of their own, from one year's end to another, till they die. The West End money-lender is well known for his grasping demands of usurious interest, but the poor are also victims of the same kind of men and women of their own class, and in many poor districts big incomes are received from the business of money lending. This condition of things comes about mainly because of low wages, times of sickness and periods of unemployment, and often, too, because people long for a fuller life than their ordinary means will allow—that is, they long for recreation and pleasure, good clothes and food, all beyond the reach of their scanty earnings. Even gambling and betting are often due to the fact that by these means men and women hope to secure more of the good things of life.

"Yet if I know these things, and understand these aspects of life, I am nevertheless convinced there is much more good-will than evil in the world. But evil is organized, evil is strong, and the good in many gets crushed beneath the heavy load of unnecessary care which accompanies them through life. My object in life is to strive by God's help to beat down selfishness and greed and evil-doing in myself; and by every means in my power to seek to remove from other people the weights that hold them down—from the poor the burden of need, from the rich the burden of those riches which make the poverty of the poor. The first step towards this fuller life for the nation is to cast out fear and have faith in our fellow men. We often deceive each other because we are afraid of the truth."—Your Part in Poverty.

The Church Has Caught a Vision

These are strong indictments but the church has caught a vision recently. I have mentioned in this church before the stand taken by the employer's committee of the Quaker Church in England in defence of the principle that no man is entitled to profits unless service is rendered, that all property is held but in trust for the society. I have read to you before, the statement of that once powerful defender of private property, the Church of England, advocating principles of democracy in industry. I want to read now an industrial creed adopted by the Bay Association of Congregational Churches in America.

"The Bay Association puts forward the following industrial creed: "We believe in a family living wage for every man, until there can be some modification of the wage system; in equal wages for women for equal service; and in drastic legislation against child labor. We believe in the right of labor to organize for collective bargaining regarding wages and labor conditions. We believe in the right of labor, through union officials of shop committees, to participate in all matters that concern employees. We believe in the right of the employer to expect a fair day's work for a fair day's wage, as long as the wage system is maintained. We believe in government employment service and in government prevention of unemployment. We believe in accident, unemployment, illness, and old age insurance and in mothers' pensions. We believe in housing laws. We believe in some plan, of long-time, low rate government house-building loans to laborers. We believe in safeguards for the health and morals of men and women in industry. We believe that every able-bodied and right-minded person should be engaged in some sort of useful occupation. We believe that everyone living in unnecessary luxury is harming society by increasing the cost of living, and by setting a standard of living that causes unrest, and endangers the morals both of men and women. We believe that one cause of high cost of living is to be found in the inefficient functioning of the present wage system which limits production and entails waste.

We believe that the cost of living may be reduced materially by means of efficient management and labor, government regulation, and by cooperative enterprises. We believe that no scheme, however excellent, will save society apart from the inclusion of the spirit of Jesus in the personal lives of people. We believe that bad social and economic conditions largely nullify Christian preaching, and that in order to the conversion of individuals the social and industrial order must be brought as nearly as possible into harmony with Christian ideals. We believe that, if the church, which has been the chief factor in saving the country from the curse of alcoholism, would champion a progressive democratic industrial movement, it not only would save itself but also our country from threatened disaster."—The Christian Work, November 8, 1919.

Can anything be more forward-looking than this?

Let me read also from the resolutions adopted at Cleveland, Ohio, in a meeting of the Federal Council of Churches representing the Protestantism of America:

1. "That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the cooperation of all groups. We deplore class struggle and declare against all class domination, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.

2. "That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy, and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.

3. "That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through government labor exchanges, public works, land settlement, social insurance, and experimentation in profit-sharing and cooperative ownership."

Even the Roman Catholic assembly last year uttered these words:

"The right of labor to organize and to deal with employers through representatives has been asserted above in connection with the discussion of the War Labor Board. It is to be hoped that this right will never again be called in question by any considerable number of employers. In addition to this, labor ought gradually to receive greater representation in what the English group of Quaker employers have called the 'industrial' part of business management—'control of processes and machinery; nature of product; engagement and dismissal of employees; hours of work, rates of pay, bonuses, etc.; welfare work; shop discipline; relations with trade unions.'"—The Christian Work, July 19, 1919.

The important thing is that this is but a recent vision among the churches, while the Latter Day Saint Church almost a hundred years ago had the principles of cooperative living, of stewardship and of service in industry in a program of Zionists laid down as its basic law. How far has the Latter Day Saint Church gone in its development of those ideas? Can we measure in understanding of the industrial world the statement I have just read? Is it not time that we should first not only propose a law but claim it is divine instruction to us to carry out and give to the world some practical demonstration of the plan? If we do not do this isn't it reasonable to suppose that the world will come to us saying, "Why we have all these and without any of your pretended revelation. What need have we of that?" The testing time for us is not only here but it is passing and slipping away from our grasp. Has the church the solution? The other churches are acknowledging a vision of it and we have had it on our books for these many years.

Vision of Zion

If I can picture to you to-day the vision of a Zion dreamed of by the young men of this church, if I can carry you outside of the four walls here I would plant you in a city where labor is undertaken under the rule of efficiency, where each man is working at the task which God appointed him to do, which his nature fits him to do. Where there shall be such a democracy of labor, that no man can say to another "my work is higher" or "lower" than yours, for all work shall be consecrated and the test of its value shall be its efficiency and its service. This would be an efficient Zion.

I would take you to a city where there is no want, where there are no aching muscles, no tired men or women who toil day after day not knowing where the extra money to pay doctor bills is coming from, no hope for a home. Where there are no women made slaves to the drudgery of household work, for this Zion shall be a city of prosperity, and there is enough and to spare in this world of ours for such a city.

I would take you to a city where conservation shall be a natural law. Where there shall be saved the wasted raw materials that we see all about us. Where there shall be saved something that is far more valuable than raw materials, that which John Ruskin calls the greatest conservation; that of men and women, saved for society because they have leisure, they have time for the enjoyment of art and literature and the wholesome pleasures of life.

I would take you to a city where the goal of all should be for service, where the test should not be how much can you sell, but how can you serve those to whom you sell. Where the professional men like lawyers and doctors shall live up to the high ethics of the profession they have adopted; where there shall be a code of ethics not only for the professional man, but for the man of commerce, for the man who sells shoes and the banker and he shall be one who knows how to serve. He who sells groceries shall not sell those things which make a profit but shall be an expert on the groceries needed by the people about him.

I would have you see a city that is not only efficiency, prosperity, conservation of living and service, but a city in which shot through all of these shall be love and charity, a charity which covers with a warmth of mercy the mistakes of life, which knows the counsel which comes of old age; a love which appreciates the work of building that has been done by the men who have gone before. For the coming of such a city is my prayer this afternoon.

Now or Never

BY JAMES E. YATES

"The great sieve of gospel economics will divide the people into two distinct classes: those who will, and those who will not."

In President Smith's opening address to the General Conference the church was reminded that the distinctive thing that differentiates this church from all others is its doctrine of social economy.

Also that the doctrine of stewardships is the very crux of the social order. We have long heralded the excellent theory of our social order with eloquence and courage, but when it comes down to the "brass tacks" on the question of practicing what we preach, we have been, and possibly still are, afraid of our shadows.

We have invented nearly every subterfuge possible for the mind to concoct in trying to make ourselves believe that we are justified in slipping easily around the most drastic parts of the law of God given to govern the social order, or in fixing up such nice and well-modified interpretations of the law that we emasculate the whole system and make it so utterly impotent that it is not one whit better than the social economy of the world.

The whole church has been largely under condemnation in this matter, to the extent that she has deprived herself of many blessings. What she needs now more than anything else, is to repent and remember the former commandments not only to say, but to do the things that are written.

God has said that when his people obey his whole counsel they shall be the head and not the tail in the matter of property possessions, and in this world's goods, as well as in spiritual matters. (See Deuteronomy 28:1-3.) But when the people of God are disobedient as we have been, they come near being the tail most of the time. God said his people should be in a position to lend, and not to borrow (Deuteronomy 28, and many more places), but we have seemed to be content with the worldly system of economics which not only makes borrowers of honest men, but beggars as well.

Our superior doctrine, and our inferior practice, has been the mark of our distinction for nearly a hundred years. The world never was so ripe for a practical demonstration of the divine law of economics as to-day.

God has laid out a mighty work to be accomplished in this age. Where there is a great work to be accomplished, a great door of opportunity is open. But so far as the determination as to what people will do this great work, it is now or never with us.

If for any reason the church should fail now to function according to the law of the Lord given for social and economic salvation, movements will spring up in the world, and among people who are supposed to know not God, that will make us ashamed of ourselves. We have given expression to a large extent to only one side of the gospel law; namely, the spiritual, to the neglect of the material and economic requirements of the gospel for so long a time that we have become a one-sided people. The proper balance has not been kept. And now we are having the terrible fact burned into our consciousness, that to single out and focus our minds so much upon the spiritual side of the gospel that the material things are forgotten or illy kept in order, is a sure guarantee of the ultimate death of the very thing we seek the hardest to revive.

For spirituality cannot live and thrive and abound in health of fullest vigor, when divorced from its God-given mate and working companion, the material economics of equality in the church.

Our fear of the practical application of the law of equality in the church is as utterly foolish as the fears of the child lost in the woods, who upon getting a glimpse of rescuers runs rapidly away. Ancient Israel wandered in the wilderness and modern Israel is not yet out of the woods; but rescue is at hand, and she will be saved if she does not get frightened at the appearance of those who would lead her to safety; or if she does not fear the one and only path that can possibly lead her out of the woods, namely: the path of stewardships adjusted upon a basis of having personal possessions limited to the supplying of the just needs and wants—all other amassed and accumulating wealth to be held by the body in common, and being administered by wise stewards whose stewardship is real. That is to say, that it will not take a Philadelphia lawyer to determine whether it is a real stewardship, or whether it is in fact just a simple ownership, posing, nicely masked, and sanctimoniously calling itself a stewardship.

A property ownership, trying in spasmodic contortions to ease its conscience, and to make itself believe that it is a stewardship to the church by making stated donations, or by paying an occasional, or even an annual tenth, will, instead of being a blessing to itself and the church, ultimately and surely prove a damnation to both.

When our financial leaders in the church meet together in council with the spiritual authorities, and when the bishops meet in council to define and interpret the law, and when any man coming up to Zion enters the office building or council chambers for the purpose of determining how much of his property should be consecrated to the Lord, and whether that which he is supposed to be steward over from now on is still to be his own property in personal holding about the same as before; when all these councils meet to determine these various questions it would be well to have the following six leading statements of the word of the Lord framed in bold letters and placed conspicuously upon all four walls of the council chambers.

These pointed scriptures, portions of which I have italicized for emphasis, might be thus placed upon the walls as a gentle and constant reminder of what the Lord's voice in the matter really is, and to keep unsteady and nervous or nerveless men from slipping:

Wall Motto Number One

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."—James 5:1, 3.

Wall Motto Number Two

"It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Wall Motto Number Three

"Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, . . . and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; . . . otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—Ibid., 102:2.

Wall Motto Number Four

"Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, . . . and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, . . . saith the Lord. Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you."—Ibid., 106:1, 2.

Wall Motto Number Five

"But it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin."—Ibid., 49:3.

And this next scripture, which we are suggesting as wall motto number six, might well be put in red letters, or illuminated with intermittent electric lights; since it seems so very difficult to understand and to make it read with any sense to it at all when tacked on to most of the interpretations of the law as we have been straining ourselves to try to apply it for nearly a hundred years of wandering in the wilderness.

Wall Motto Number Six

"Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld."—Ibid., 70:3.

We believe that the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man, or with groups of men, or even with those of his church, when God's law is repeatedly trampled under foot and spurned aside.

We are also of the opinion that since there has been a recent call to the church to go forward, that the door of opportunity is still open for us, but that it is now or never, so far as the people of the church now living are concerned.

It is high time that we as a church do one of two things, either apply the law as God has given it to us, or else get to work and do like the Presbyterians are trying to do, and like many others are doing, change our creed.

In The Continent, for May 6, 1920, a Presbyterian paper published in New York, we read this astonishing statement in an editorial: "But the original libel on divine mercy and divine fair play still stands unaltered in the text of the creed, (Westminster Confession) declaring yet, that 'some men and angels are . . . foreordained to everlasting death' and 'their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished.'"

If Presbyterianism can have the nerve, at this late date to make an attack upon that old time-honored but disgracefully insane creed, we should surely either muster up the courage that would be commensurate with our convictions that God has outlined to us the most splendid economic program the world has ever seen, or else be consistent enough to turn about face and quit pretending to believe it, and just change our creed to make it fit what we are doing rather than what we profess to believe.

If we decide upon the latter course, we might change our suggested wall motto number six to read: "Nevertheless, in your temporal things ye shall not be equal, for equality has been tried, and it won't work; but you may have the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit anyway."

Motto number five perhaps had just as well be changed to read: "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another, in the world, but it is all right in the church, wherefore the world lieth in sin, but the church lieth in righteousness."

This you see, will make it perfectly all right for one brother to own a railroad in fee simple, with the appurtenances thereto, while another brother owns a wheelbarrow, together with all fixtures and appurtenances thereunto; and he may also hold the same in fee simple, or, if desired, the "fee" part could be left out and the brother could just stand and hold the wheelbarrow and look simple.

In the same manner of creed revision, section 106 of the Book of Covenants could be made to agree with our fond policies of procedure along lines of least resistance, by reversing much of the wording as it now stands, for it is evidently more acceptable to the inclinations of human nature to believe that just one tenth of their property is all that is required as a "beginning," and then to make that kind of a beginning stretch out to extend through an entire lifetime before facing that fearful proposition of giving all the surplus. It is more acceptable, I say, to human nature, to give that one tenth first, and annually thereafter, than to do as the Lord has said, namely: "I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church . . . and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; after that, those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth," etc.

We might, therefore, revise section 106 to make it politely ask for the tenth first, and then some little surplus at some remote period afterward, provided said so-called surplus cannot conveniently be used to increase and enlarge the business of the individual who owns and controls the same.

Of course, when we get our creed nicely revised in all these points so as to fit our inclinations and our past and present procedure, we would discover that such a plan of economics is no better than that which is followed by the world and by the churches of man-made origin and doctrine.

President Smith was right in naming our revealed system of economics as one of the leading distinctions between the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and all others, but it yet remains for this church to prove by actual demonstration that this is not a distinction without a difference. But up to the present time one would have to exercise very fine powers of discrimination to determine just where our application of the financial law has been in any way superior to that practiced by any other church, so far as the welfare of the individual factor in society is concerned, or the social, or group commonwealth, either.

But the time to go forward has come. We will soon learn the fuller meaning of the term "the sifting time." The great sieve of gospel economics will divide the people into two distinct classes: those who will, and those who will not.

Those who will do, shall be blessed beyond the dreams of many.

They who know what to do and will not do, shall surely find themselves involved in increasing snares and entanglements of wrong and misery, and under darkening clouds of sorrow and ultimate despair; for the Spirit of God will not always strive with man.

Let us go forward.

Our Influence

BY MRS. HELEN MCKENZIE

"I am here, I know not whence I came." "I am part of every influence I met on the way."

When Mr. Dick spoke those words before the students of Graceland College on September 5, perhaps he was not aware that he may have "built better than he knew." "Influences I met on the way" are words that contain greater significance and are broader and more far-reaching than many of us are aware. Influences reach down to generations and cannot be cast to one side as of no value. Each day our words and actions have their influence on some one and they take of what we give and weave it into their lives. Influences never die but live on after we have crumbled into dust. Nations may rise and fall, perish and decay, but our influence still remains, and like Tennyson's brook, "goes on forever."

Many people think it is a solemn thing to die, but if we would take it into consideration, it is a very solemn thing to live. It is a solemn thought that our words are recorded and will stand for or against us in the great judgment. We would be more careful of our words if we only knew the influence they would leave. James 4 deals with this matter and says, "the tongue is set on fire of hell." How many times harsh, unkind words are spoken, meant only to leave a sting. Words like these are surely set on "fire of hell."

Divine influences were at work and Isaiah twenty-nine had its fulfillment. God had a divine purpose in bringing forth this work, and influences were at work guiding and directing it, silent and unseen, and the same influence is still guiding and leading, and will be with it to the end. The forces of evil have ever been arrayed against this work, but "truth is mighty and will prevail."

We can see the hand of God in this work. A late revelation

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE 1919 RELIGIOUS CENSUS

A summary of religious statistics compiled by H. K. Carroll, LL. D., and published in the Christian Herald. The smallest advance in thirty years is noted.

The only year that is comparable with last year was 1918. The average increase in membership for the ten years previous to 1918 was 771,947; therefore, the net increase for 1919 falls below the average of the ten years ending with 1917 by nearly 716,000. What makes this slump, for such it is, more significant is the fact that it marks the second successive year of vanishing increase, for, in 1918, according to corrected returns, the increase was only about 155,000.

Analyzing the returns for 1919, we find that only about forty denominations have any increase at all, and for most of these it is below normal. But it is the denominations reporting actual decreases which give special significance to the year and make it practically a year of losses. Look at the heavy decreases in the largest and hitherto most prosperous denominations for 1919:

Churches	Decreases in Membership
Methodist Episcopal	69,940
Presbyterian, U. S. A. (Northern).....	32,308
Disciples of Christ	17,645
Methodist Episcopal, South	16,404
Northern Baptist Convention	9,156
National Baptist Convention	35,007
Presbyterian, U. S. A. (Southern)	8,811
United Presbyterian	2,986
Cumberland Presbyterian	1,645
Welsh Calvinistic Presbyterian	992
Norwegian Lutheran	2,910

There are many other bodies which report smaller losses than the above. The denominations which show gains, excepting the Roman Catholic and one or two others, have for the most part much smaller gains than usual. Of the three leading Baptist bodies, the Northern Convention loses over 9,000, the Southern Convention gains 32,348, and the National Convention (Colored) loses over 37,000. The Protestant Episcopal Church has less than 5,000 increase, which is a good deal better than its decrease of 1918 of nearly 11,500. The Congregational increase of 6,204 is an estimate which may be enlarged by actual returns. The Roman Catholic increase of 158,294 is based on the actual official returns for 1919 of Catholic population. It is an improvement over the increase of last year, which was 113,000.

The first question that springs to the lips as we survey the statistical record of 1919 is: What is the cause of the actual decreases, where we always look for increases, and where there are increases, why are they so small? It is not easy to give an exact diagnosis of all the denominations, and there are more causes entering into the decline in growth than appear on the surface; but it is quite clear that among the causes entering into the decline in rate of growth are these:

First—Interruption or suspension of the regular work of said, "I have many forces at work that ye know not of." A holy influence was at work leading, guiding, and directing by silent, unseen influences and the wonderful outcome of this powerful divine leading is the restored gospel. From 1830 to 1844 there was accomplished a task which has never been equaled in this or any other age—the translation of the Scriptures, and thousands brought into the gospel.

many parishes, due first to the war and its sudden and imperative call, and second to the Centenary, New Era, and other drives for gigantic funds. The war called into service many young and vigorous ministers, who left their churches on short notice, putting an end to parish work and leaving in many cases only pulpit supplies, who could do little or no pastoral work. A large number of churches were left without the kind of service that brings additions to membership. Country churches, especially, suffered heavily. Sources of ministerial supply, theological seminaries, and Bible training schools, etc., were directly affected by conscription, which took their students into the Federal service. The ministers serving as chaplains, secretaries, etc., have returned to their church work, and the seminaries are filling up, but the benefits must be waited for for at least another year.

Second—Pastors in large numbers were called into the Centenary and other campaigns for millions for missions and other benevolences, and a new program was offered to the churches which they loyally accepted. The program included evangelism and intercessory prayer, as well as the obligations of stewardship and giving on an unprecedented scale. Many of these churches yielded their pastors to these movements, and had to take pulpit supplies in their places. At a recent meeting of the pastors of three Methodist Conferences in the Metropolitan area, to devise plans to protect the pastoral office from calls to outside work which laymen can do, it was stated that in the last three years the number of pastors in one of these conferences had declined from 310 to 270, and that fifteen pastoral charges had been abandoned.

Third—Among other causes of the poor showing of the year is the great increase in deaths in membership. In one denomination, the Methodist Episcopal, the increase of deaths reported in 1919 over those of 1918 was more than doubled—35,629 to 71,677. No doubt the influenza epidemic affected other denominations in like manner.

Fourth—The concentration of effort in the raising of enormous sums for the work of the churches may have had an influence in reducing the rate of increase of members; yet it should not be overlooked that the spiritual appeals accompanying the request for increase in contributions must have had a salutary effect. Still, the question arises whether the concentration of the church in one supreme effort for funds would not result in less emphasis than usual upon regular pastoral work.

No doubt the question will be asked: Why does not the Roman Catholic Church suffer with other churches in a comparative decrease in its rate of members? The answer to this is not difficult to find. Although the church has not had the benefit, as it did in former years, of a large immigration belonging to its faith, its regular parish work has been carried on much the same as usual. The only thing likely to affect unfavorably the increase of the Roman Catholic Church is the birth rate. The children born into Catholic families are not only immediately baptized, but they are gathered into classes and taught in the parochial schools and in Sunday schools the tenets of the faith. The catechism is a power in the Roman Catholic Church, as it used to be in most of the Protestant Churches. The Catholic Church never loses sight of its children.

The following table will be interesting and valuable as showing the total increases of members in the past twelve years:

Year	Total Members	Gains
1908	33,885,287	323,391
1909	34,703,821	818,534
1910	35,245,296	541,475
1911	36,095,685	850,389
1912	36,624,462	528,777
1913	37,859,975	1,235,513

1914	38,641,982	728,007
1915	39,184,811	542,962
1916	39,941,811	756,867
1917	41,281,368	1,339,557
1918	41,435,688	154,320
1919	41,491,989	56,301

Another significant fact is the decrease in Sunday school scholars. The church that has the largest number in the aggregate, the Methodist Episcopal, lost over 135,000 at home and abroad in 1919. It lost also 2,710 in the number of children baptized, and 13,430 in the number of adults baptized. The Presbyterian Church, Northern, also had fewer infant baptism by over 3,000 and of adult baptisms by over 9,000. All the Lutheran bodies report 92,200 infant baptisms for 1919, a very large number, but there are no figures for 1918. The Lutheran bodies appear to have lost 141,574 in 1919, but most of this loss seems to be due to lack of returns from the Norwegian Lutheran and other bodies.

In their finances, the churches have done well. The Protestant Episcopal Church received a grand total of $21,451,346, an increase of about $745,000. The Methodist Episcopal Church, thanks to its Centenary Movement, had unprecedented incomes for missions, home and foreign, raised $21,890,134 for ministerial support—an increase of $1,472,000—and $9,384,576 for current expenses of the local churches, a gain of over half a million dollars. The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. (Northern) has a total budget of a little less than that of 1918, the chief decrease being in congregational expenses. The Lutheran bodies report $17,374,738 for local expenses, a gain of $1,807,410.

The churches, taken as a whole, by a campaign of combination, concentration, and strategy, have the courage and enthusiasm to endeavor to raise a thousand three hundred and twenty million dollars for their treasuries. Could they not, if they made the effort, win a million converts from the masses of the unchurched, with a working force of 194,000 ministers, 231,000 churches, and well on to 41,500,000 members?

PLANNING THE NEW PALESTINE

The rejoicings of the Jews over the prospect of their revived nation in Palestine have been preceded by scientific preparations in every sort of detail for the creation of a perfect kingdom.

Students have been busy with agricultural research at Rothamstead (Herts) and elsewhere with a view to making the desert blossom as the rose. Indeed, a young school of agricultural students of quite unusual capacity is spreading from England over the world.

One of the ablest is a young Serbian, whose mission it is to revive agriculture in the Near East and give it a really scientific direction.

A committee of young Jews has been busy with the language, chiefly in the invention of names for all the new things that have arisen since Hebrew was a language with a local habitation. Motor-car, aeroplane, propeller, dynamo, and hundreds of other new or newish words have been compounded not in our manner, principally from Greek and Latin, but from old Hebrew roots. The nation is to start with at least two desirable accomplishments—knowledge of a pure and perfect language and the control of the latest art of intensive and extensive cultivation.

Mr. Bonar Law informed Mr. Charles Edwards in the House of Commons yesterday that the pledge given to the Jewish people to restore Palestine to them had been agreed upon by the Supreme Council. Great Britain was to become the mandatory power under the League of Nations.—London Daily Mail, April 28, 1920.

THOUSAND POUNDS A YEAR FROM AN ACRE

A Triumph of Intensive Culture

At Golden Green, near Tombridge, Kent, is to be seen what is probably the best garden in England. Its two acres produced £1,630 worth of food in nine months, or more than £1,000 a year per acre. I have seen nothing quite to equal this even in the intensive gardens of France and of Holland, the best of which I have visited.

There would be no call for any imports of food if more people followed the lead of Mr. M. A. Philips, the eager and enterprising New Zealander, who, on the eve of war, created this garden out of a rough paddock, built the wooden and comfortable dwelling house, the glass houses, on his own pattern, and the dark corridors for mushrooms. The soil is now golden in many senses, but the plants grow so thick that you must lift their leaves before you can catch a glimpse of the mold.

This really astonishing mine of edible wealth has been developed through the agency of the two brothers Le Coq, whose names are famous in the annals of intensive gardening in France as well as England. They were the pioneers of intensive gardening in this country, working with that doyen of women gardeners, Miss Hughes-Jones, of Thatcham, in Berkshire; under Major Fraser at Brighton, where the King visited him; and Mr. Fells in Essex.

Geometric Patterns

What first strikes you is the geometric precision of it all, thousands of outdoor lettuces with not one plant missing or out of line; many thousands of indoor tomatoes with overhead wires and vertical bamboos, all so regular that the plants seem to conform to the structure and take on a geometric pattern. Every inch is used.

The one available bank of a pond yielded £10 in one of two successive crops. The manure is used three times over, first for the mushrooms, secondly for the tomatoes, thirdly for the open garden.

M. Le Coq, an undoubted genius, has, along with Mr. Philips, developed the best English form of the French garden. He has rejected the cloche, or bell-par, as taking too much labor, in favor of a glass house without any visible brick walls, of frames, of dark tunnels, and of outdoor gardening.

Land Previously Unused

It is beyond dispute that this enormous crop has been raised per acre, has been raised at a good profit on land previously unused, and all this in times of exceptional difficulty in regard to labor and supplies.—W. B. T., in London Daily Mail.

PRIVATE INITIATIVE

The Des Moines Register for May 20 contains an interesting editorial under the above heading. The first paragraph is as follows:

"Nobody questions but that private initiative has done an enormous work in this country, and done it on the whole well. Nobody questions but that, so far as possible under changed economic conditions, the benefits of private initiative should be preserved. In other words, wherever the benefits of private initiative outweigh the defects of a system organized on that idea, it should be preserved, and wherever it is necessary to abandon part of that system, but is yet possible to retain some of private initiative's benefits, that also should be done."

Discussion is then made of the two railroad bills, the Plumb plan, and the Cummins-Esch bill. It is pointed out that while the one emphasizes principally democratic management, and the other puts the emphasis on private initiative, still neither of them calls for unregulated private initiative nor straight bureaucratic governmental management. Where there is a guaranteed income control by interstate commerce commission, there is not unregulated, private initiative, and some of the limitations were placed there at the request of private initiative advocates. The editorial continues:

"Innumerable like instances could be cited in other fields than railroads. Getting the Nation's business done is clearly recognized to be a national responsibility. The great processes whereby the Nation lives are no longer conceived as sacred pastures wherein only private initiative can play. And this is true both as one thinks of the capital phase of private initiative and as one thinks of the labor phase. . . .

"The kernel of every great economic problem of the present is, and the kernel of the next generation's economic debates will be, the desire for effective assertion of the public rights and interests. How far, ultimately, this will curtail private initiative remains to be seen."

CHILDREN'S HEALTH

Doctor Thomas D. Wood, Chairman of the Committee on Health Problems in Education, gives the following figures:

At least one per cent, or 200,000 of the 22,000,000 school children in the United States, are mentally defective.

Over one per cent, or 250,000, at least are handicapped by organic heart disease.

At least five per cent, or 1,000,000, have now, or have had, tuberculosis, a danger often to others as well as to themselves.

Five per cent, or 1,000,000, have defective hearing which, unrecognized, gives many the undeserved reputation of being mentally defective.

Twenty-five per cent, or 5,000,000, have defective eyes. All but a small percentage of these can be corrected, and yet a majority of them have received no attention.

Twenty per cent at least, or 4,500,000, are suffering from malnutrition. Every child who is 10 per cent or more below weight for his height and age is suffering from malnutrition, and persistent efforts by cooperation of school, home, and community should be made to correct this. Poverty is not the most important cause of this serious barrier to health development.

From fifteen to twenty-five per cent, 3,000,000 to 5,000,000, have adenoids, diseased tonsils, or other glandular defects.

From ten to twenty per cent, or from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000, have weak foot arches, weak spines, or other joint defects.

From fifty to seventy-five per cent, or from 11,000,000 to 16,000,000, of our school children (and in many communities as high as 98 per cent) have defective teeth, and all defective teeth are more or less injurious to health. Some of these defective teeth are deadly menaces to their owners. This is the greatest problem, from the standpoint of its seriousness and from the standpoint of its enforcement, that we have. The teeth of the children of America can never be brought into proper shape without a social program to provide for the payment of tremendous bills. May I ask you to remember that Sir William Osler, our greatest living English-speaking medical authority, said ten years ago that more national physical deficiency in Great Britain was due to defective teeth than to alcohol?

SOME NONPARTISAN ACCOMPLISHMENTS

[The following appeared in a recent issue of the Montana Nonpartisan in explanation as to "What is Townleyism?" The editorial explanation accompanying is to the effect that each of the planks mentioned (except the coal mine) has been confined, enacted into law or carried into effect by the present administration in North Dakota.—EDITORS.]

1. Better grain grades, based on milling and baking values.
2. Pay for dockage or its return to the farmer to be used as feed for his animals.
3. The milling of wheat in the State, thereby preventing a double haul and saving the by-products for use in the state, increasing business and industry and conserving soil fertility.
4. The state-owned bank, whereby the funds that belong to all the people are made available to finance the activities that belong to all the people.
5. A state owned coal mine to supply at least the State's own buildings.
6. An industrial commission charged with the management of the State's industrial activities elected by and responsible to the people.
7. Hail insurance at cost.
8. Fire insurance on public buildings at cost.
9. State bonding of public officials at cost.
10. State aid to drouth sufferers.
11. State aid to dairy associations.
12. Rural credits.
13. Reduction of the spread between the prices paid to producers and the prices charged to consumers.
14. A state of home owners. (The homestead act was the most beneficial piece of legislation ever enacted by the federal Congress; may the Home Building Association Act passed in North Dakota prove to be the most beneficial piece of legislation ever enacted by a State Legislature.)
15. Exemption of farm improvements from taxation.
16. Exemption of the small city home from taxation.
17. The redistribution of taxes more in accordance with privileges enjoyed and ability to pay.
18. Compliance with the constitutional provision that has been in effect for 30 years requiring all property to be assessed according to its true value.
19. Encouragement of improvements and discouragement of speculation.
20. Equitable assessments of property for taxation.
21. A soldier's bonus law, the first and the most liberal enacted by any State.
22. A moratorium act, effective until one year after peace is declared.
23. The lowest draft cost per soldier of any state in the Union.
24. Workmen's Compensation, the most liberal in existence.
25. Benefits to dependents of employees killed.
26. Beneficial and just labor laws.
27. Woman suffrage, with provisions enabling all women entitled to the ballot to cast their votes.
28. The eight-hour day.
29. A minimum wage for women.
30. Stringent regulations as to employment of minors.
31. Pool hall inspection and control.
32. Enlargement of school facilities.
33. Rural school betterment.
34. Recall of public officials.
35. Loyalty to the state and obedience to its laws.
36. Patriotism and love of country.
37. Free speech and free assemblage.
38. Fairer railroad rates.
39. Food control.
40. Encouragement of cooperation.
41. The realization of democracy, as written into our constitutions and preserved in our traditions.

We may live constantly with the one who is dearest to us, but each lives in his own dream.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

PASTORAL

The Man With a Message

BY EDWARD D. MOORE

The man with a message will find a gratifying response, but without one he is "as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

The local man who time after time addresses the same audiences has a somewhat different problem than that of the traveling missionary who is constantly meeting new people and facing new audiences, yet in a general way the responsibility is the same. He who is sent yet has nothing to deliver, deludes nobody but himself.

It matters not as to the scope of one's reading or his acquirement of knowledge, unless he has transmuted these advantages into a message of import, the sound he makes is a hollow mockery.

There are preachers (and our church, unfortunately, has a few of them) who are interested talkers, and there are others who are interesting. The difference lies in the fact that the first class are interested in their own efforts, while the second succeed in interesting the audience. One has a right to be interested in his task, but it should not be an exclusive interest, so self-centered that no one else cares.

It has been our privilege to hear a great many of our ministry in action. We have found points of excellence in all of their methods and personalities, some more, some less, but naturally some had more appeal for us than did others. While we lay no claim to being scientific in our method of classifying these public servants of ours, yet we have gone on, consciously or unconsciously, just as you do, making our own comparisons.

The sum of our conclusions is that the man with a message is the one who causes us to forget all else but that message and its application to us. Though he does not give us all the details, we instinctively know he had far more in reserve than the limited time allowed him to deliver—we know it, too, without his closing with "and I have only begun to say all I have on this subject."

Again, he does not forget his message and lose himself and us in a maze of minute and petty description.

The man with a message may be illiterate, but when we are interested in the importance of what he brings us we can forgive his violations of grammatical rules. He may be awkward in his pulpit mannerisms, but when we are intent on watching every process of his creation of a beautiful structure which delights us, we do not worry over that.

This carrier of good tidings of whom we speak may not label his wares with large letters and have his name prominently attached and an insurance value written in the corner, but we are allowed to use our own judgment as to the importance and value, which pleases us who sit in the pews.

We don't want to have nothing left for our imagination; neither do we want to strain our imagination in trying to figure out what it is all about. There is a happy medium there, the finding of which distinguishes the good preachers from those who may be sometime, but are not now.

The man who does not have a message leaves us disappointed and critical. We would like to help him if we could, but his need is so overwhelming that none of us can furnish it; he must acquire it himself. Mere wishing does not bring capacity, neither does it imbue one with the power of an authorized message bearer. We may have the authority without the message. Yet again hard study or diligent application may not of themselves furnish the lacking essentials.

A message is an elusive thing. We may seek it as did the other wise man, never locating its definite form to our satisfaction, yet come to a realization that it has imperceptibly arrived and we have it.

The man without a message may or may not know his need. He may attribute the hollowness of his own voice to everything but the right thing. It may be "I haven't had time," or "the people were not responsive," or any of a number of things which are more or less plausible to him, but if he is wise he will sift the evidence till he gets to the bottom, then seek to correct it.

In the larger sense the carrying of this gospel to the honest in heart is message enough for any purveyor of truth, but simmered down to actual sermonizing one may feel very insignificant in the presence of the reality and find he has almost nothing at all to say.

By this time the reader will have reached his own conclusions on this matter, and we have no objections. It may be you have decided that the difference between a message and delivering it, and having nothing at all and failing to deliver even that gracefully is in the possession or lack of the Holy Spirit. And we agree.

But even yet we must insist that except there is fuel present, the enkindling ray can light no flame. We may pray with great eloquence for the receipt of blessings that if sent could not possibly find lodgment in a heart as cold as ours. We may plead for a heavenly vision yet obstinately close our eyes to the human panorama passing our door daily, furnishing the inspiration for appeals that would melt hearts of stone.

But if we give the Holy Spirit a place to dwell and earnestly seek its presence, our intelligence will be accentuated, our hearts will glow, our love will be so spontaneous that no effusiveness nor affectation will be necessary to lend fervor. It will bring a radiance to our countenance, a kindness to our demeanor, a positiveness to our declarations that will establish conviction.

Depending on the individual character of the phase of the message we present, it will, when inspired by the impelling influence of God's Spirit, cover a wide range, from the wooing, gentle persuasion to the vigorous challenge to the stronger sentiments. If we always woo, we will come to seem effeminate; if we always challenge we shall be called dogmatic. If we are always delivering jeremiads we encourage a reputation as pessimist, while if we are too persistently optimistic our hearers will think we are blind.

We may have the elements of a real message yet spoil its effect by disregarding the little social demands made on us. We know an eloquent preacher who in his day glowed with the power of fine logic, but as soon as the meeting closed after his sermon was delivered he dashed for the outside, evidently to elude the "madding crowd." People forgot his message in their resentment at his aloofness. It was a little thing, yet it was a big thing in results.

It is not necessary for us to sit in judgment on any man or men. It is not required of us because the man who has a message realizes it and the man who does not, must come finally to feel his emptiness.

It seems to us there is much in the choice of subjects as well as in the consideration we give them. One man we know always seems to choose subjects of insipid character, and his discourses are but mere moralizings, fitting no personal situations. Another we know never fails to choose subjects which have a direct application to present-day needs and have a personal bearing on any listener in the house. There is little difference in their general manner of delivery, yet the audiences of the former are left cold and unmoved, while the latter stirs the emotions to their depths and is able to see real results in actual life activities.

Very often we have seen young preachers—and who of us have not done the same thing—search far and wide for a subject that would interest them because of its newness and freshness only to fall flat in the presentation, because they were out of their field. All the time we knew they had training and experiences that would form the basis for some wonderful discourses. It was a simple lack of imagination.

And here we come to imagination from the standpoint of the speaker. The audience has imagination and likes to use it; the speaker has it and should use it. His first duty is to imagine himself in the place of the listeners and try to feel as they feel, hear as they hear, yearn as they yearn. If he can do that, he will know they are wanting to know about problems he has considered and qualified himself to solve. He will realize that an effective minister must reach the hearts of the people and help them reason from the things they know. He will realize to a large degree what those things are. Having sounded the depths of human sorrow and scaled the heights of human aspirations, he will select with discretion the best incidentals for the presentation of the salient points of his message. And let us emphasize again, that the man with a message has so much real, usable material for the edification of the body of Christ that one effort or a dozen will not impoverish him. What he presents in one discourse is but a ray of light from a sun of power. They may be occasions of disappointment but the general experiences will be satisfactory.

These are days of tenseness. The very air is filled with uncertainty, from a worldly standpoint, yet wonderful assurance from the divine. We need to see that we are fully acquainted with the basic causes of all these conditions and the real solution. It is a time for few words but moving power, yet there are still men content to indulge in rapid moralizings over petty points and irrelevant applications. Especially is this true in the sectarian press where one looks almost in vain for the elements of a real message, but we are afflicted with some of it ourselves.

Let us as ministers for Christ strip our mental machinery of all ornamental parts and proceed to our Master's business. It is a time when we must, as a pastor recently put it, "work in or work out." If we have qualities of leadership, in one way or another, we must demonstrate them, otherwise we should be grateful to be assigned if need be as "hewers of wood and drawers of water." We must make the necessary inventory of ourselves. What you think of me or I think of you may help both of us, but what we do about our own conclusions of ourselves is the thing that will determine our fitness as effectual instruments in the hands of an All-wise God. We may all have a message if we but search deeply for it and develop it. We cannot afford to do less.

The Man in the Moon

The most sensational discovery of his life was the discovery that for more than twelve years he had been preaching sermons at Kilmany that bore no relationship to the actual lives of the people to whom he ministered. For more than twelve years the parish minister at Kilmany had been preaching to the Man in the Moon. Then came the great awakening; Chalmers was seized by sudden illness. During his convalescence his mind underwent what he called a great

WHAT WE BELIEVE

Faith in God. Is It Scientific? Is It Biblical?

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

"And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God."

The human mind knows no bounds of time or space. A word or a gesture starts a train of thought, and we are off to other lands or other times.

These words of Jesus take us back to a lonely road in Judea. We see a group of men journeying from Bethany to Jerusalem. Our attention is immediately attracted to the leader.

As they journey in the ruddy glow of the morning light, his gaze is drawn to a fig tree at some distance. It is luxurious with pleasant green foliage, a glorious promise of full fruitage. Apparently hungering, he wends his way to this tree for refreshment. But lo, it is barren.

To our surprise he rebukes the tree, and declares, "No man eat fruit of thee hereafter forever."

Is this some madman? Is this some fanatic? Is this some irresponsible neurotic?

We must wait until another day for our answer. It is morning again, and we see this same group of men journeying again over this same road toward Jerusalem. As they approach the tree one of the followers cries out in surprise.

At its foot the luxurious leaves of yesterday lie withering in jumbled confusion. The tree itself is blasted and shriveled,—dried up, root, trunk, and branch.

Stricken into sharp attention, as by a lightning's flash, these men stand with bated breath while their leader turns and delivers this short, pregnant sentence, "Have faith in God."

Jesus Preaches in the Open

The mystery is solved. This man is Jesus of Nazareth. These are his followers. Having at once secured their attention, demonstrated to them the fate that overtakes hypocritical profusion of promise without fruitage, and impressed them with the power of God over all living things, he preaches a sermon by the wayside.

Jesus was never dependent upon pulpit accessories. He preached upon the mountain's inspiring height, in a boat upon the tossing sea, by the river's brim, by the side of the lonely road, or within the dim and hollowed interior of the synagogue.

On this occasion he preaches a short sermon on faith and forgiveness, fronting as he does so the morning light of heaven, that reverently touches his splendid forehead with a hint of the glory that is to be, the shadow falling behind revolution. In due time he returned to his pulpit. The people were electrified. The minister was no longer preaching to the Man in the Moon; he was preaching to the men of Kilmany. And Kilmany was touched to tears in consequence. "He would bend over the pulpit," says an old hearer, "and press us to take the gift as if he held it that moment in his hand and could not be satisfied until everyone of us got possession of it." The effect was instantaneous. As long as Chalmers preached to the Man in the Moon, the Man in the Moon made not the slightest response; but when he preached to the men of Kilmany, Kilmany became a new village.—Watchman-Examiner.

"Do the thing that you think is best and abide by it like a soldier."

him, predicting the cross that temporarily shall eclipse the glory.

For the time being we remember only a single sentence of that discourse: "Have faith in God."

Is Faith in God Unscientific?

Is the message that Jesus gave to the world that morning a message for this age? Does that commandment require of us anything that is contradicted by the reason, research, and scientific conclusions of the studious ages that have followed each other in orderly procession since that morning in Judea?

Is it possible to-day to have faith in God and yet keep step with the vanguard of truth seekers everywhere? The men of whom Whittier wrote:

"Hail to the future singers!
Hail to the brave light bringers!
Forward I reach and share
All that they sing and dare."

You will meet men who will tell you that science has stormed the citadels of faith. That scientists have undermined and overthrown ancient religion.

Our Appeal to the Court of Science

We propose to prove that these statements are untrue. We take our appeal to the court of science.

In answer, Sir Oliver Lodge, president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in his presidential address of 1913, said: "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."—Continuity, p. 106.

Science Affirms Creative Power

Lord Kelvin, in an address before the Christian Association of the University of London, 1902, said:

"Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matters that we live and move and have our being, but in the creative and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief."—Christian Apologetics, p. 25.

Remember when next you turn the pages of the Bible and read as the great initial postulate of that book that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, that Lord Kelvin, called "the prince of scientists," is in harmony with that statement. And he added:

"If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion."—Ibid., p. 26.

A Dominating Mind in the Universe

Edgar Lucien Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory, says:

"I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the Sidereal Universe—A Dominating Mind."—Within the Mind Maze, p. 346.

It is not enough to say that faith is not unscientific. We affirm that it is fundamentally and eternally scientific.

Jesus of Nazareth in simple dignity, with clear-cut brevity, stated a principle that to-day is supported by Lord Kelvin and Sir Oliver Lodge.

Where then originates the brunt of this opposition to faith? Perhaps, having failed to find it among scientists, we shall find it among the

"Camp Followers of Science"

Professor Alexander Macalister, M. A., M. D., D. Sc., LL. D., F. R. S., of the University of Cambridge, says:

"In my opinion there is no conflict between science and the moral and spiritual teachings of the Bible. . . . It has been my experience that the disbelief in the revelation which God has given in the life and work, death and resurrection of our Savior, is more prevalent among what I may call the camp followers of science, than amongst those to whom actual scientific work is the business of their lives."—Religious Beliefs of Scientists, p. 33.

And among the Small-Minded.

Professor J. J. Walsh, M. D., of Fordham University, New York, says:

"All the greatest scientists have been believers. They have no trouble at all in reconciling science and faith. It is smaller men who have found that their little buckets of minds were not large enough to hold science and faith."—Ibid., p. 162.

A Second-Hand Smattering of Science

Professor Frank Cavers, D. Sc., professor of biology at Hartley University, Southampton:

"As the alleged 'conflict' between science and religion, I believe you will generally find that the science which is pressed into service by agnostics and atheists is many, many years behind the times, and that these writers and lecturers have only a second-hand smattering of the biology of forty or fifty years ago."—Ibid., p. 77.

Professor A. H. Sayce, LL. D., D. Lit., professor of Assyriology in the University of Oxford:

"There are a few 'leading scientists' who are irreligious, but the vast majority, so far as my knowledge goes, are quite the reverse. The 'irreligious' are for the most part those who have merely a smattering of scientific knowledge."—Page 52.

Why We Believe in God

We are admonished to give a reasonable answer for the hope that is in us. Accepting Jesus as our teacher, we accept also his dogmatic precept, "Have faith in God." But there are other reasons which may be set forth in their order. We believe in God because:

It Is Natural to Believe in God

It is both natural and scientific to believe. Kelvin says, "Science positively affirms creative power." Lodge says, "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."

Go where you will, in Patagonia or Alaska, in the islands of the Pacific, in the Orient or the Occident, you will find that all races believe in some supreme or superhuman being.

They may not call it God, but they do their best to carve their rude presentment of deity in wood and stone.

Probably in the first instance they did not worship the image, but rather that for which it stood. Their vision of God is obscured by ignorance and superstition, and so their presentation of him is distorted and grotesque.

Their belief is not because of ignorance, but in spite of it. When we ascend to higher peoples, we find as strong a faith coupled with a clearer perception that forbids men attempting the impossible task of picturing in wood or stone the lineaments of deity.

The clearest-headed statesmen, the most profound philosophers, the greatest scientists, the most inspired poets have believed in God.

Our parents walked and talked with God, as did Seth, Enoch, Noah, and many others. They knew him in the long ago, and that knowledge became a mighty force through all succeeding generations. It has been dimmed by time and distance, yet fostered by all that we see around us.

Atheism, on the other hand, is acquired. It is the result of perverted or incomplete education. Doubt may be and has been nursed and fostered to the point where one will doubt the existence of his own body and of the earth itself. But hunger and cold and hard knocks, as well as joy, comfort, warm sunshine and glowing landscapes, bear testimony that most men heed; equally positive forces testify of God.

A Matter of Choice

Next, we believe in God because we wish to do so. It is a choice between anarchy and law. We do not care to go out and tell people that there is no ultimate lawgiver to whom they must sometime give an account.

A noted anarchist said: "I believe in no God. I believe in no hereafter."

Now note what followed in that creed, as naturally as darkness follows the setting of the sun:

"I believe in no God; I believe in no hereafter; I believe in no civilization; I believe in no marriage; all property is robbery; all government is tyranny; right and wrong are prejudices; I believe in the red flag of anarchy; the rich and the rulers are only proper food for gunpowder, and dynamite; I am sworn to live and die by the articles of this creed."

This was simply carrying things to their logical conclusion. And let us tell you, if you convince all men that there is no God and no hereafter, you shortly will have no civilization, you will have no marriage, you will have no government, you will have no property. You will have anarchy, with every man his own best law, and bound to respect none else.

Observation Confirms Faith

Again, we believe in God because the natural tendency to believe is strengthened by what we see around us.

Chance as a creative force is not in evidence. It is now quite universally accepted as a scientific fact that life must spring from preceding life. So we trace it back until we reach the point that Lord Kelvin said God has "reserved for his own appearing,"—the beginning of life.

We find in every city certain statutes enforced. For instance, there is a statute against trespass. No one need tell us that such a law introduced itself, voted on itself, inscribed itself on the statute books, enforces itself. We know there is a city council and mayor back of it, and that a very material policeman looks after us if we violate it.

No one need tell us that all the houses in that city designed and builded themselves, or that they sprang up in a night by chance, or that they evolved from a single crooked stick that came into existence years ago as the result of "a fortuitous concourse of atoms." We have never seen the designers or builders, yet their works testify of their intellect.

Though men might burn the Bible and publicly renounce the God idea, we are sure that the first time they found themselves free from artificial restraints, out under the eternal stars, their hearts would whisper over the articles of faith that their fathers repeated ere the Bible was written or infidelity was dreamed.

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork."—David.

Man himself is one of God's greatest revelations of wisdom and power.

"A man went down to Panama,
Where many a man had died,
To slit the sliding mountains
And lift the eternal tide:
A man stood up in Panama,
And the mountains stood aside.

The Power that wrought the tide and peak
Wrought mightier the seer;
And the One who made the Isthmus
He made the engineer."—Mackaye.

A More Sure Word

We believe in God because we have in the Scriptures a revelation of him that speaks for itself. We find there things which man of himself could not have written.

Daniel pictured the future of the world, and for over twenty-three hundred years the events of history in their orderly march have fallen into line to fulfill his prophecy.

Isaiah pictured the coming of Christ, his life, his betrayal, his death. Christ foretold of the destruction of Jerusalem—it is history.

Now we submit that the written word speaks for itself and shows an understanding of futurity that man of himself could not have. Its moral character is also its own best testimony of divinity. It meets human needs in every age.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts."—2 Peter 1: 19.

Personal Testimony

We believe in God because we find in his word the revelation of a perfect law, that if heeded would fill the world with love and peace, bringing to pass the ancient ideals—liberty, equality, brotherhood.

We believe in God because we have something in addition to the written word, or that which we may see.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7: 17.

We have felt the influence of that Spirit promised to those who do his will, and know that it is not of earthly origin. We do not depend solely upon the word of others. Our gospel came not unto us in word only. We received it not of men. It came in power, with much assurance, and with the Holy Ghost, as it came of old to Paul.

Faith Positive and Dynamic

Faith is affirmative, positive, dynamic. Atheism is negative (when not evasive); it is static, or reactionary; the creeping paralysis of human aspiration. It makes no affirmation, and has no program. Its gospel is the gospel of doubt and despair.

Atheism, agnosticism, infidelity do not affirm. The more intelligent opposers of the God idea have avoided definite statement.

You may read the lectures of Ingersoll from beginning to end, and you will never find where he says there is no God. You will find where he says, "There may be a God; I do not know." You will find where he said, "In the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

That calls to our mind the statement of Lord Bacon, "Atheism is more on the lips of men than in their hearts."

Faith is aggressive. It is affirmative. It is constructive.

"I will build," declared Jesus.

"Let us create," said God.

Let us join forces with the builders. The iconoclast has his work in the demolition of error; but it is transient. The Christian has his work; it is eternal. "Have faith in God."

Faith in an Immanent God

Biblical faith is faith in an immanent God. Note his statement:

"Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

We must believe in God's existence, and in his divine justice, and in his approachability. True faith presupposes a God that IS. The great I AM, who in the midst of most primitive surroundings spoke to Moses from the burning bush, is still at work in the world among the complex and artificial conditions of modern life.

He is able to speak now as of old: he is able and willing to "reward" those who now "diligently seek him," as anciently. He has never drawn a line through any day or year in all the calendar of time and said, This can not be a day of revelation and of miracle. The unbelief of the people has cut them off from revelation and healing—not the will of God.

Walter Rauschenbusch said of the prophets of old: "They went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world, and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."

This age needs an awakening sense that God IS, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Faith in Jesus and in the Word

Faith in God includes faith in Jesus his Son, and in the word of God.

On the road to Jerusalem Jesus admonished his disciples, "Have faith in God."

Very near the close of his ministry, after the last supper had been eaten, after Judas had received his sop and gone out to earn his infamous thirty pieces, Jesus seized the opportunity to give his followers one more impressive admonition and precept: "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in GOD, believe also in ME." (John 14: 1.)

This same Jesus called the attention of the Jews to the necessity of scripture study, and faith in the Word: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.)

Faith Must Be Associated with Good Works

It is true, Paul said that we are "justified by faith," and on that statement is postulated the confession of some professed Christians: "That we are justified by faith only is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort."

But such a dogma may be very unwholesome and very full of deception. It must be understood that the faith that Paul had in mind is inseparably associated with good works.

Thus James says:

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?"—James 2: 14.

"But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?"—James 2: 20.

Beware how you subscribe to the ancient and "orthodox" heresy that men are justified and saved by faith only.

The faith of which we write is associated with good works, character building, complete obedience to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is a living faith in a living God.

Such a Cloud of Witnesses

Faith in God is both biblical and scientific. It is confirmed by the revelation in his written word, by the immediate testimony of the Holy Spirit, and by the works of nature: "The three grand pillars upon which faith builds her glorious and imperishable works for the life that now is and for the life that is to come."

Every star, every blade of grass, every song bird, is a witness of God. And these things are so wonderful that Professor Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory, says:

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

To All Home Departments and Cradle Roll Workers

As is perhaps quite generally known by this time, the action of last conference transferred the home departments of the Sunday school and Religio and the cradle roll work of the former to the Women's Department of the church. This change has entailed a considerable amount of time, thought, and effort on the part of those in charge, and we appreciate deeply the patience with which the workers in these departments have awaited our announcements and instructions. We trust this patience is only an earnest of the hearty cooperation and support with which our plans will be met now, and feel sure that everyone concerned will have sensed the importance of having had the work carefully considered in all its phases, and properly coordinated with that of every other church effort.

We have been deeply impressed with the spirit of consecration and devotion to duty which has marked the work of many of the superintendents in these departments in the past. We have sensed the new endowment of the Spirit which has attended the important, progressive actions of the last conference. We feel that God is quickening, by the touch of his divine influence, the people of this church, and here and there, whether in close contact with the happenings at the "center" places or not, many are feeling that sacred impetus, and are responding to the urgings of their souls, to align themselves more actively with the interests of this latter-day Israel.

Because of this we feel a sense of confidence in disclosing to the former workers in the home and cradle roll departments the plans we have to present at this time, and we trust God will place with each consecrated helper the impression of his guiding and approving sanction.

1. Eliminate District Officers

In harmony with the trend in many other departments of the church, it has been deemed wise to eliminate the district home and cradle roll superintendents and have our general superintendents deal directly with local ones. While we realize that in making this change we are losing many loyal and efficient workers, as such, we feel quite sure that in every case those workers will be quickly absorbed by local demands, and that none need have empty or idle hands in these "hastening" days. We trust they will find, in local service, the same joy that has attended their work hitherto.

2. Local Superintendents Appointed

Local superintendents of cradle roll and home departments will, hereafter, be appointed to office by the general

The retina of the eye is a portion of the brain, an exploring expedition . . . the brain tissue itself come forth to see! The visible part of the universe is so supremely magnificent, that the very matter of the brain comes out of its prison of bone—the skull—to behold. . . . The seeing ones tell those in interior darkness of the beauty and wonders of the stars and starry vaults of the celestial sphere. And of the flowers, and the warbling birds, of crystals, colors, and of sparkling gems. These and the radiant sun, the brain came forth to see.

"He that has seen any or the least of these" has seen a witness of God. For, as Emerson says, "Nature is so thin a screen, God breaks through at every point."

Well did Jesus say, "Have faith in God." Well did Paul name faith as one of the six fundamental principles of the doctrine or gospel of Christ.

[The above article may be had in tract form, one of the Angel Message Series, 5 for 10 cents; 100 for $1.75. Order of either publishing house.]

superintendents of those departments, in council with the executive officers of the Women's Department.

3. Present Appointments

In order that the important work of these departments shall not be retarded because of the change that has been ordered, we hereby request every local cradle roll and home department superintendent, of both Sunday school and Religio, to accept appointment at this time, and keep the work going on. That it is dear to the hearts of all these consecrated workers we feel sure, and they will be glad and willing to continue it under the new administration. In accepting this appointment, let each local worker feel that her work is to progress as in the past, and is worthy the same devoted zeal. The only differences will be in those of detail, which will be explained more fully in letters sent out sometime in the future.

4. Lists of Local Superintendents

In order that the general superintendents of the cradle roll and home work may get their lists complete as quickly as possible, we hereby request every local superintendent in these departments to send her name and address to the general office of the Women's Department, without delay. Include also, if you please, the name of the branch and district, and the number of home and cradle roll members to date. These items are important for record, and we feel sure all will sense the necessity for full and prompt cooperation here. Address,

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
of Latter Day Saints,
Independence, Missouri.

Women's Department.

5. Home Collections

Collections will be continued as heretofore. Christmas offerings will be collected quarterly and sent to the Women's Department treasurer, at general office, where separate and proper record and credit will be kept. All local workers and superintendents should keep duplicate records of all such collections and their disposition.

6. Financing the Home Departments

The work of these departments was placed with the Women's Department without having been included in their expense budget for the coming year. Manifestly it has been a problem to get the matter of financing the quarterly supplies adjusted properly. The following points have been agreed upon:

- a. Local superintendents should order Quarterlies for home classes, directly from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.
- b. According to rules of the latter, money should accompany order.
- c. Since the collections taken from the March visits of home workers were turned into local Sunday school and Religio channels, it is requested that all local Sunday schools and Religios order the home supplies for the coming quarter along with those for their school, paying for the same out of their local treasuries. Hereafter, the local home superintendent shall retain out of collections from home members, the amount necessary for the succeeding quarter's supplies, and remit the balance to the treasurer of the Women's Department at their general office, as per above address.
- d. Supplies will cost as follows:

Sunday school Quarterlies—

Senior	10 cents per quarter; per year 30c
Intermediate	7 cents per quarter; per year 20c
Junior	7 cents per quarter; per year 20c
Primary	7 cents per quarter; per year 20c
Beginner	8 cents per quarter; per year 25c

Religio Quarterlies—

Senior	10 cents per quarter; per year 30c
Junior	8 cents per quarter; per year 25c

7. New Home Department Members

Constant efforts should be made by all local workers to extend the field and influence of the home department. Its value as a missionary department should be kept in mind and every possible advance opening made. As in the past, the General Sunday School Department stands ready to furnish Quarterlies for new members or classes free of charge, so far as the first supply is concerned. In ordering, therefore, local superintendents should plainly state what number of Quarterlies are desired for new members, and for these no money need be included (for the first quarter of their enrollment, only).

8. Some Further Duties of Local Superintendents

Local workers should bear in mind that their work has broadened to include the placement in homes of Quarterlies from both the Sunday school and the Religio. In addition, they should remember that the Women's Department is primarily a department for home study, and for the education of women along the lines of their higher responsibilities. This department is prepared to furnish leaflet courses of study in "Child Welfare," "Food and the Body," and "Social Service." In addition, there are courses of study with text books in Mothers' and Teachers' Problems, Home Economics, Home Nursing and First Aid, as well as carefully outlined programs of study and activities for the girls and young women of the church.

9. Reporting

All local home superintendents should report to the Women's Department executive four times a year, viz: the first of January, April, July, and October. These reports should include all phases of the work done, blanks for which will be prepared later. It will be obvious that new and more comprehensive blanks will have to be furnished; until they are ready, use the old ones. Reports should be sent direct to our general office, above indicated, where they will reach the hands of the general superintendent of the home department.

10. Concerning the Cradle Roll Work

Our plans for this department are not perfected as yet. In harmony with the wishes of the First Presidency, steps are being taken to prepare blanks through the use of which "all vital statistics" might be secured by the cradle roll visitors. Our church statistician and the head of the health department of the church collaborating in preparing these, and we have some very interesting plans to present later. Until such time, however, we earnestly ask that the work continue as in the past, reports being made to the Women's Department at our general office.

A Final Word

Altogether it should be understood that it is our desire that the local worker who enters a Latter Day Saint home with the Sunday school or Religio Quarterlies, or in the interests of the cradle roll work, shall try to interest the various inmates of that home in all lines of educational activity which would be of specific value to them. Leaflets of instructions in detail, concerning the many things which may be offered through this channel, will be mailed to all home and cradle roll workers as soon as they can be prepared, and the lists of such workers be completed, as requested above.

The Women's Department will appreciate any special information or suggestion based upon experience or observation which any interested worker may feel like making.

Working together in harmony, and with the one object in view of promoting the best good of the people of God, humbly desiring to assist in Zion's "redemption" by the direct method of assisting in elevating the atmosphere and efficiency of the home, we can be assured that God will guide our efforts and abundantly bless our labors of love.

Importance of Early Care

From the standards set forth by the national Child Welfare Conference of last year, (below which none of our children should fall if we expect them to be fully efficient as citizens either of the nation or Zion,) we cull a few paragraphs which may help to impress upon us the grave responsibility which rests upon parents in the early years of the lives of their children. These statements are general, but are sufficiently pointed and concise for us to gain a clear vision of some of the ideals towards which we should work, and without which we cannot hope to reach the standards which our God has put before us. Is he not constantly urging us to "Come up higher, O my people!"

"Every child should have normal home life, an opportunity for education, recreation, vocational preparation for life, and for moral and spiritual development in harmony with American ideals, and the educational and spiritual agencies by which these rights of the child are normally safeguarded. The conference recognizes the fundamental role of home, religion, and education in the development of childhood.

"Aside from the general fundamental duty of the state toward children in normal social conditions, ultimate responsibility for children who, on account of improper home conditions, physical handicap or delinquency, are in need of special care, devolves upon the state. Particular legislation is required for children in need of such care, the aim of which should be the nearest approach to normal development. Laws enacted by the several states for these purposes should be coordinated as far as practicable in view of conditions in the several states, and in line with national ideals.

"Social work for children in rural parts of the country has been neglected. The essential principles of child welfare work should be applied to rural needs, and agencies for rural service encouraged.

"The desire for recreation and amusement is a normal expression of every child and an important avenue for moral education and for the prevention of delinquency. It should be the concern of the state that wholesome play, recreation, and amusement be provided by cities and towns and that commercialized recreation be supervised and safeguarded.

"The value of the first seven years of childhood from the point of health, education, and morals, and formative habits, cannot be overestimated. Throughout childhood attention should be given to the mental hygiene of the child—the care of the instincts, emotions, and general personality of the child, and of environmental conditions. Special attention should be given to the need for training teachers and social workers in mental hygiene principles."

Latter Day Saint parents would do well to acquaint themselves with every avenue by which the child welfare workers of the nation are attempting to conserve the mental, moral, and physical health of our children. They should do all in their power to help along that legislation under consideration which will, if passed, materially improve conditions and opportunities for all children. Women will be as powerful as men at the ballot boxes, and they should line themselves up solidly with those forces which are aiming at uplift, and the bettering of our communal environment.

We hope to be able to keep in touch with important measures of this kind, and pass on the word to you from time to time, by means of this column, that being "forewarned is forearmed," and your influence may thus be thrown into the channels of constructive progress. Help given to a child is help given directly to humanity as a whole, and we parents should take a care that our children do not start out with handicaps which through our ignorance or neglect shall impede their progress through life and thus impair their usefulness, either to God or their fellow men. A. A.

A health nurse can open the closed windows, can remove superfluous clothing, can give object lessons in the care of the baby. Fifty thousand public health nurses are needed in the United States to-day, and good nurses with practical experience and tact. A high school education should be a minimum prerequisite.—Standards of Child Welfare.

LETTERS

A Visit to Nauvoo

After many years of reading about "Nauvoo the Beautiful," it has at last been my privilege to tread its sacred soil, visit its historic landmarks, and behold for myself its scenic grandeur.

Leaving Independence early in the morning of the 12th inst. in company with Sister Emma Burton, who has been the greatest woman missionary of this dispensation, we took our journey toward the far-famed city of Nauvoo.

It was dark, and a drizzling rain was falling when we reached Montrose, where we were met by Brother Layton who had engaged a gasoline boat to take us across the river as we were too late for the ferry.

Sister Emma spent the night with her sister, Sister Layton, in the Mansion House, while I had the honor of sleeping in a room in the Nauvoo House overlooking the broad river where the waves of the old Mississippi sang their lullaby as they beat upon the shore only a few feet away through the peaceful hours of the night.

We have been through the Mansion House, the Nauvoo House, and the old Homestead (Joseph Smith's first home in Nauvoo). The church owns these buildings and they are all in a fine state of repair.

The homestead is a splendid log house with a frame addition in good condition and is clean and attractive, but it is used at present only for its historic value, a place where tourists visit the home of the latter-day prophet.

The Mansion House is a frame building with weather boarding outside painted white. Inside it is unique. The rooms are as they were in 1842 when it was first built. The same woodwork, distinctive and artistic, adorns the place and bright wood fires glow in the many homelike old fireplaces just as they did in the days of Nauvoo's glory.

Brother and Sister J. W. Layton, natives of Nova Scotia, Canada, are in charge of this place. Their genial, kindly manner and great faith in and loyalty to the latter-day work make them able exponents of the faith to the many visitors who come to see these historic places. No less than 1,118 visitors were shown through these buildings in the year just closed. An abundance of tracts and pamphlets are kept on hand with which visitors are liberally supplied, and these are carried far and wide by the tourists.

The Nauvoo House is in charge of Brother P. R. Burton and his excellent wife, from whose hospitable hearts emanates the home spirit which the house was originally intended to possess.

The massive walls of this building, three feet in thickness, of solid brick, are in a splendid state of preservation, and the big, light, airy rooms remind one of the command of God, "Let it be a good house, worthy of all acceptance, that the weary traveler may find health, and safety while he shall contemplate the word of the Lord, and the corner stone I have appointed for Zion." This house shall be a "healthy habitation."—Doctrine and Covenants 107:9.

We visited the graveyard, adjacent to the homestead where the bodies of the two martyrs lie. Here also rest the wife of Joseph the Seer, and the first wife and two children of Joseph his son. The graveyard is nicely fenced and well kept, befitting its honored dead.

We stood upon the site of the Nauvoo Temple and viewed the landscape o'er. The scene cannot be described! From this eminence the river can be seen a mile and a half in width and forming an almost perfect semicircle around Nauvoo while the valley between with its grape vines, its fruit trees covered with blossoms, and its green gardens lies open to the view.

We have been permitted to visit many beautiful places in the past but I think I can say without exaggeration that for beauty of scenery and peacefulness I have never seen the equal of Nauvoo.

This spot was surely appointed of God as a gathering place for his Saints and is an attractive "corner stone of Zion," where the weary, wayworn traveler may find rest to his soul in a peaceful habitation in a fruitful land which seems like the garden of God.

We were fortunate in being in Nauvoo at the opening of their new church which the Saints have just redeccorated. It was a fine pressed brick schoolhouse which was purchased by the Saints for a place of worship. It is an excellent building and a credit to the church.

Sunday, May 16, was the day for the opening. Saints were present from Fort Madison, Rock Creek, Elveston, Burlington, Ferris, and other points and an excellent spirit was enjoyed.

A Sunday school was organized with Brother Lee as superintendent by Sister Gladys Smith, assistant superintendent of Nauvoo District.

Following the organization the writer was asked to give a talk on Sunday school work, which she did by relating experiences of the past wherein God in a marvelous manner supplemented the teacher's efforts by the power of his Spirit.

Sister Emma Burton was then called upon to address the meeting. In her talk she related a very interesting vision she had when the Sunday school association was first formed, in which she saw an ever-increasing army of Sunday school participants, clothed in light-colored garments, marching, and a desire arose in her heart to be young again that she might enjoy in her youth the privileges that the young people of our day have. She closed her address by singing a song in the Tahitian language.

At 11 a. m. an excellent sermon from Brother James McKiernan was enjoyed. At 2.30 we held prayer service at which many earnest prayers and spiritual testimonies were offered. The Spirit also spoke to the Saints through Elder P. R. Burton by way of admonition and encouragement. Part of the gift was addressed to Brother Lee, the deacon, in which he was strongly advised to preserve order in the house of God, and if he would do so rich blessings would follow.

One lady, a stranger, bore testimony of evidences received that day of the truthfulness of the work and expressed her intention of obeying the gospel in the near future.

We have been pleased to note the friendliness of the citizens of Nauvoo towards our people and have thought "the set time to favor Zion" and her corner stone has come.

In the evening it was raining quite hard, but notwithstanding this a goodly number of strangers were in attendance. Brother P. R. Burton preached a very fine sermon on the gospel of human helpfulness, declaring that the purpose of the Saints of Nauvoo is to do good to others, and expressing their feelings of fellowship and good will towards their neighbors.

Those feelings of good fellowship seemed to be reciprocated by the citizens present to such an extent that they remained after meeting chatting and handshaking, seemingly loath to leave the building.

The Saints in this place are few, but of the right kind: plain, humble, noble, energetic, and full of faith and zeal for the work. They had just received a valuable addition to their number in the persons of Brother and Sister Lee who have recently moved there. These are earnest, devoted young people, sociable and unselfish, with great desires to see the work progress.

With such a nucleus there seems little doubt that the work will again flourish in Nauvoo.

On Tuesday morning we started back to Independence, being accompanied to the boat by the faithful little band, and as we bade them good-by and watched their waving kerchiefs until we sailed out of sight we thought of "the tie that binds" and marveled at the wonderful love of God which can so cement the hearts of his people together on so short an acquaintance.

Pastoral Notices

Having been recently appointed as district president of the Eastern Michigan District, I take this means of requesting all branch presidents to report to me on July 1 all labor done. Also write me as to any special work needed in your branch, and we will do all we can to help. Confer with me in regard to one- and two-day meetings. Let every man learn his duty and set himself to the task of fulfilling his calling. Send all communications to William H. Sheffer, Uibly, Michigan.

To the Saints and Ministry of the Little Sioux and Pottawattamie Districts; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor with you this conference year, I take this means of getting in touch with you. I am anxious to see the work of the church reach a maximum height in both pastoral and missionary work, and it is up to us to see that this is done. One man by himself cannot do the work, but if we all work together the task shall be accomplished. Let us therefore learn our respective duties and then do them.

It will require a few days, at best, for me to become acquainted with the territory and with the people, but I trust to have the cooperation of the entire membership of the districts and thus be able to readily overcome that hindrance. I will therefore be glad to receive suggestions or invitations for missionary work from any or all of you. I will then do my utmost to meet the emergencies as they arise and render a service that shall bring glory to God and blessings to mankind.

For the present mail sent to my home address at 1302 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri, or to 134 Park Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa, will reach me.

May our best efforts be united in a common cause.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

To the Saints and Friends in the Virginias: Having been appointed as missionary to labor again in the Virginias, I am very anxious to get in touch with all the scattered Saints, and Otter Lake, and Orion branches showed great interest in their visit among us by turning out and crowding the church to capacity.

After a talk from the visitors a program was given, in which the Flint branches took part. On Friday noon the brethren went to the factory of the Imperial Wheel Company, where Brother Ellis spoke of the customs and work among the islanders. Brethren May and Paia sang in the native tongue, which was enjoyed by the men. The report coming from the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. who took them to the factory was to the effect that their coming to Flint has left a good impression with the people who heard them. Only a few of the church members are employed at this factory, so most of their audience was made up of nonmembers.

Carried Off the Honors

I have just returned home from Springfield, Missouri. I stopped at Bozeman, Montana, and replied to some lectures that a Presbyterian preacher by the name of R. M. Stevenson had delivered against our work.

The Bozeman high school closed for the season on May 13, and James W. Moore, fourteen-year-old son of Elder A. J. Moore, won the honors in a class of sixty-five pupils, with a grade of 97, and 20 credits. The professor in charge believes he is the youngest graduate in the States, especially with such high grades. He is a small lad but a big fellow in the school room. He is now ready for Graceland and waiting for next term with joy in his soul—and he has the missionary spirit, too. The honors obtained were by faithful and diligent study.

with a view to make new openings and preach the gospel in your vicinity, thus publishing the glad tidings of salvation throughout the two States.

Brother James McConaughy and myself are, so far as I know, the only General Conference appointees to your States, so we ask the earnest cooperation of all the priesthood and membership to assist in every way to accomplish the great work before us. God expects us all as his servants to do our part in developing the talents he has given us. To this end I would be glad to receive a letter from all, or any who can secure a place where preaching services can be held.

Ever praying for God's richest blessings upon you,
THOMAS NEWTON.

Address: VAN VOORHIS, WEST VIRGINIA.

To the General and Local Ministry and Saints of the Northern California District; Greeting: The appointing powers of the church have been pleased to appoint me to have charge of the above district as group supervisor. It is therefore necessary to say something as to the policy to be pursued. To begin with: We are entering upon a period of more than two years' activities. It is believed by some that at least two years and a half will elapse before the next General Conference. It is evident then that we have ample scope as to time within which to plan and work.

We have but two real missionaries besides myself. They are Brethren Brooner and Ely. The rest of the General Conference appointees are local and while they will help us all they can yet their primary responsibility relates to the organized work of the church. For at present the brethren named will devote themselves to the tent work, Brother Brooner to lead. They will select their own scene of operations. I have heard the use of the tent in the Sacramento Valley is already contemplated. If so, it pleases me. Whether this is so or not, said valley will be the sphere of my own labors until the reunion. I expect to radiate from Sacramento itself and may make a special effort in the city. I also expect to visit the tent once or more during the summer, and wherever I am one of my principal aims will be to back up the tent work. It may please the tent workers to change their field of labor after reunion but no matter where the tent may be used a strong effort should be made to concentrate the work so as to follow up by other means and consolidate the work done, and thus maintain our advantage and keep the people in preparation for the possible use of the tent in the same locality next season. To facilitate this kind of work it would be well to select for tent work places where the density population will admit of several stands not far removed from each other. By this method there is a better prospect of gathering the results of tent work in the form of branch organization.

It must be apparent to every close observer that tent work, that is, everywhere, is not the success it should be. This is due to several causes: First, it has ceased to be a novelty, second, it is neutralized in a measure by counter attraction, third, we as a people have not altered our methods of doing the work in accordance with the changes in the times. Common place subjects advertised and discussed in an ordinary way no longer attract the public notice. There should be a more liberal use of pictures, charts, tracts, and advertising material. We have also failed to realize the importance of music; our musical forces where available have not been well organized. All these are points in which we are behind others who are working in the same field.

Through Brother Orman Salisbury of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who is noted among Latter Day Saints as a traveling salesman, I have been led to a course of reading on modern business efficiency which has led me to the conclusions that what makes for business efficiency will also lead to church efficiency. One of the primary requisites of business success is good health. Therefore, anything which lowers a man's mental and physical fitness, and especially whatever keeps it low, spells failure. Hence sleep, always best secured by having a regular sleeper when traveling by train and the best bed possible elsewhere, the required quantity and quality of food, attention to exercise, etc., are as necessary for missionaries as any other class of traveling men. This means rational living. California is the best State in the union, or at least one of the best for tent work, and yet it can be done in the wrong manner in more ways than one. For instance: There is no reason why a missionary should wake with a nightmare or splitting headache when he can just as easily be awakened by "daylight's soft surprise" or the California morning breeze as it flaps the curtains of the tent. The same principle applies to all other kinds of missionary work.

My address for the present will be 903 Morgan Street, Santa Rosa. Would be pleased to hear from all as to the opportunities for mission work in various localities. In gospel bonds, A. C. BARMORE.

May 28, 1920.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

The Bishopric

Tennessee and Kentucky Districts.—Having received the resignation of Brother J. R. McClain as Bishop's agent, we hereby appoint Brother Curtis L. Ross, Cottage Grove, Tennessee, as his successor to become effective July 1.

We desire to impress the Saints with the thought that in supporting the Lord's work financially, there comes to them a development, accompanied by a joy born of the consciousness of divine favor.

Those who fail to observe this divine law are shutting out the life-giving forces which God has placed before us. The work of the Lord is developing and it is our privilege to be helpers in pushing it forward. Our slogan for the year is A Million Dollars Tithing, and we feel confident that the Saints of this district will not be found lacking in their efforts to make this a reality. Yours sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

To All Branch Presidents

At the meeting of the L. D. S. Sales Association held during the late General Conference, it was voted to compile and publish as soon as possible a directory with the names and addresses of all branches of the church, so that the members when traveling would be able to visit the branch where they happened to be. This will also be available to the general membership of the church.

Will you kindly therefor send me at once the name and exact street address of your branch with your own name and telephone number? Please do this now so as not to forget, as it is extremely important that we have all the branches listed.

WILLIAM MURRAY, President.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, 8 South Dearborn Street.

Reunion Notices

Change of Date.—Because of the grounds upon which we are to hold our reunion being let for other purposes during the time we were to hold our gathering, it has been thought advisable to change our dates; so all planning to attend notice that the dates will be from June 25 to July 4 instead of June 18 to June 27. We greatly regret that the change must be made, but in no way can it now be avoided. All who plan to come, notify either P. P. Reed or J. A. Bronson, Gibbs, Idaho, that we may know how many tents to order. Please write us at once and state just what you want by way of tents, beds, etc. We are not able to quote prices to you as yet, but think that both tent and bed can be had the ten days for $5—this will not include bed clothing; bring that. Plan on coming, no matter what may be placed in your way. Consider the spiritual food for your soul as well as the earthly bread. How many will write at once and say "we are coming"? J. A. Bronson, for the committee.

North Dakota, at M. D. Graham grove, six miles northwest of Burlington, June 19 to 28. Those coming by train wishing to be met at Minot or Burlington, notify M. D. Graham. Conference on 23d. J. W. Darling, secretary, Thorne, South Dakota.

Eastern Montana reunion will, on account of prevailing high prices and lack of funds, be postponed for this year. Notice of conference will be given later. James C. Page, president of committee; W. R. Hillman, secretary.

Southern California, at Convention Park, near Hermosa Beach, California, July 30 to August 8. Those desiring tents and cots can secure them of Peter Kaufmann, Montebello, California. Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Departments will be represented. Educational and interesting programs will be presented by each department. Cafeteria will be in charge of Mrs. H. S. Pankey; those interested in this department address her at 207 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana, California. All Saints in district urged to make a special effort to be present at all services of this reunion.

Two-Day Meetings

Alpena, Michigan, June 12 and 13. No charges for meals, so all who can do so, bring well-filled baskets and especially bring minds and hearts consecrated to God's service. We desire good attendance for a spiritual awakening in this part of the district. Arthur E. Starks, president.

Coleman, Michigan, June 19 and 20. All invited to come and bring well-filled baskets. A collection will be taken. All-day meeting on July 4, at Leota, Michigan. Spend the Fourth JONES.—Hattie M. Jones was born November 26, 1886, at Lucas, Iowa; died May 7, 1920, at Taylorville, Illinois, from complications following an operation for goiter. Baptized when about 13 years of age and had always been a consistent church worker. Survived by husband and 3 small children, parents, Brother and Sister W. J. Boswell, of Independence, Missouri, one brother, and 2 sisters. Funeral from Saints' church, with Luther Simpson in charge, sermon by Walter L. Daykin.

JENSEN.—Anna Mickelson was born September 4, 1866; married Andrew Jensen October 22, 1885. Died May 14, 1920, from peritonitis. Leaves husband, 3 children: Marion, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, Oscar and Effie, of Terre Haute, and one brother. Baptized in 1876 and lived a consistent life. Funeral from residence in Terre Haute, Indiana, sermon by J. E. Warne.

STOWELL.—Edna Joice Stowell, youngest daughter of John and Zena Stowell was born at Baylor, Montana, May 9, 1918, and died at the home of her parents in Flasher, North Dakota, November 4, 1919. Services from Congregational church of that place, sermon by J. E. Wildermuth, and burial in Flasher cemetery.

PARSONS.—Edgar Parsons was born December 22, 1859, in Indiana. Lived in Oklahoma for twenty years. Baptized 18 years ago. In 1880 married Miss Edna Short, of Jewell County, Kansas. To this union 13 children were born, 10 now living. He died at Independence, Missouri, May 14, 1920. Funeral from the home of his sister, Mrs. Ed. Fender, sermon by J. E. Vanderwood. His wife and 7 children were present. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SHIELDS.—Percy Claremon, son of Elder John and Janet A. Shields, born at Grand Valley, Ontario, July 2, 1895. Drowned in Kenogami Lake, New Ontario, October 21, 1919. Remains recovered May 9, 1920. Interred at New Liskeard, May 13, services at Saints' church, in charge of Albert Shepherdson, sermon by J. M. A. Copner. He had been overseas and wounded in last heavy fighting of World War. Was engaged in mine prospecting at time of death. Leaves father, mother, 3 brothers, and 3 sisters. The brothers are John Stanley, William Nephi, and Thomas Alma. The sisters are Mrs. William Wilson and Mrs. William Bartleman. Was not identified with any church but sought to be generous and just. Lost his life trying to save his companion, Harry Brooks, who was also drowned, and leaves wife and four young children.

LINDSEY.—Opal Arlene Lindsey, youngest child of George and Anna Lindsey, of Fargo, North Dakota, was born at Sentinel Butte, North Dakota, December 24, 1918, and passed away May 6, 1920. Funeral from Saints' Bungalow Church, Fargo, Thomas Leitch in charge, sermon by J. E. Wildermuth. Interment in North Moorhead cemetery.

HEALY.—Rena B. Healy, daughter of Welcome and Mary Healy, was born June 20, 1902, and died April 22, 1920. She was stricken with paralysis January 1, 1919, from which she never fully recovered. Was very cheerful and bore her affliction patiently.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

On May 9 to 16 there took place in Rome very elaborate ceremonies conducted for the sanctification of Joan of Arc. According to the ceremonies of that church she was admitted to heroicity in 1904. There have been various preliminary petitions and actions reaching back to 1869. In 1908 alleged miracles were admitted, and in 1909 she was beatified. In 1919 the miracles presented for canonization were read and the necessary orders received. The ceremonies in the week ending the 16th, were the final ones to make her a Saint in that church, and a subject for worship.

According to the report on income made by the Secretary of the Treasury, the number of persons in 1917 who had for an income $3,000 a year, or more, was less than one million. The total income in excess of that amount for individuals was a little over six billion dollars. In other words, if all incomes of $3,000 or more were pooled, and equally distributed among our 110 billion people, each individual would receive less than $60 additional.

CHURCH NEWS

The elder at Brantford, Ontario, is requested to call on Mrs. William Hewson, 56 Grant Street, that place. Request comes from Mrs. Lester Hadley, Duffield, Alberta, her sister.

Arthur E. McKim, the manager of the Publicity Bureau, was in Omaha on May 22 and 23 and strongly urged the value of publicity in connection with our work. He also reports securing $150 worth of subscriptions and orders for church publications. This week he is in Indianapolis attending the National Ad Men's Convention. He expects to push the publicity work while he is in the East.

E. M. Wesner and wife, of Rasback Avenue, Centralia, Illinois, want to adopt a child, preferably under eighteen months of age, having no children of their own. They will give a good home to a child.

FROM THE BRANCHES

South Boardman, Michigan. On the 29th Elders May, Ellis, and Metuaoro were with the branch and a reception held for them with good attendance. There were talks and songs in both languages. Four of our young sisters learned a song in Tahitian, which was enjoyed by all, especially by Paia. A good offering was made to them.

First Branch, Chicago. Elder Christy was scheduled to preach on the evening of the 30th, on "The world's greatest asset," illustrated with 45 beautiful stereopticon slides. Sister Christy was to lecture at 11.15 on "What will the Women's Department do?" The Religio continues the study of the Quarterly lessons and has as a program feature the reading of the local Religio paper, The Echo. A. E. McKim, publicity agent, is to preach on the evening of June 6.

Lamoni, Iowa. The Saints are pleased to learn of the gratifying convalescence of Elder J. W. Wight, who has been at the Sanitarium for several weeks. C. E. Blair has also returned to Lamoni following a brief "vacation" there. College recitals and other season-end activities are scheduled for each evening. As noted elsewhere, Elder M. A. McConley delivered the baccalaureate address to the graduating class and preached in the evening. His wife and child accompany him. Memorial Day is being fittingly observed by the local people on Monday, with D. F. Lambert speaker.

Grand Rapids, Michigan. Elders Ellis, May, and Metuaoro visited the branch and participated in the best all-day meeting the branch ever had.

A Tribute to Beautiful Maine

By Joseph Luff

In a letter to the "Ensign" last fall Elder Joseph Luff gave the following tribute to the beautiful State on our eastern boundary

MAINE is a beautiful place in which to spend the summer months. With its forests of spruce and birch and maple and beech; its rocks and hills and groves; its promontories and capes and coves; its numberless watercourses and spans, filling the thousands of avenues of indescribable beauty and almost endless variety, with their swelling and receding tides, their gorgeous sky reflections, and their irregular intervals of turbulence and placidity; its hundreds of picturesque islands; its magnificent panorama of moving steamships and crafts of diminishing sizes and catchy designs, including the sputtering motor, the rippling yacht, and the white-winged fleet of varying dimensions—all speeding along in the interests of commerce or pleasure, or liting and lolling on the remnants of surf and swell that roll into the harbor where many are held at anchor. These and a host of other equally beautiful features that characterize the State are scattered or grouped in such a way as to transfix the beholder and make him temporarily oblivious to all else, except the praise and adoration which instinctively ascend in volume from his heart and lips to their Creator.

Au revoir, place of beauty! May it be my good fortune to again wander and labor among your scenes of delight and your humble, genial, and hospitable people.

NUMBER 23

Our New England Number

The special articles for this New England number have been secured and arranged by Apostle U. W. Greene. He has been for many years in charge of New England and the Maritime Provinces, and has a warm place in his heart for the people there. Their love for him is indicated in the articles in this number.

In July, 1836, Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and Hyrum Smith, went on a mission to the East. They visited Providence and Boston, but proceeded to Salem where they made their headquarters in August and September.

Apostles Brigham Young and Luke Johnson followed, and in a few weeks in Boston baptized seventeen.

In September, Joseph Smith returned to Kirtland, but a few years later we find him requesting the Twelve to send a missionary to Salem.

It may be remembered that in Massachusetts was the old family home—at Pittsfield, and that in Vermont (at Sharon) was the birthplace of Joseph Smith.

Preaching was done in Vermont, but the death of the martyrs apparently put a stop to all work in New England.

This number deals with the work of the Reorganization, and furnishes a brief cross section.

Many leading men of the church have been associated with the work there, and many not greatly known to fame have done their part.

We wish we might have more space for the many interesting things to be said of the New England Mission. S. A. B.

One shoe factory in Massachusetts has a daily output of 14,000 pairs, each pair marching through the factory in fourteen days in ordinary times. The industry has its own peculiar parlance. A "cripple girl" is not crippled at all. Rather she looks after the "cripples," as defective parts of a shoe are known. "Vamping" has nothing whatever to do with the activities of sirens, but is only the process of joining the vamps and quarters to the shoe. "Blackball" doesn't relate to club proceedings, but rather to a mixture of grease and lampblack for blacking the edges of shoe soles.—Na-

The Pioneer Missionary of Maine

BY U. W. GREENE

Elder George W. Eaton was born at Little Deer Isle, Maine, October 25, 1831, and grew to early manhood among the islands of Penobscot Bay. He was a giant in stature and strength, and was recognized as the strongest man who lived in the State. During his early manhood he was captain of a Grand Banks fisherman, but his winters were spent around Little Deer Isle.

During the years of the Civil War he was living at Campa Bello, New Brunswick, and one day while seated in a grocery store and whittling, as Yankee seafaring men are apt to do, and swapping sea yarns with other men of like occupation, a stranger entered.

The stranger, who proved to be a preacher, said, "I have just returned from Grand Manan, and there are two men there preaching who are as bad as the Devil can make them."

Instantly Captain Eaton wheeled around and said, "Why, they are men of God."

The preacher drew himself up in a dignified way and replied, "I say they are just as bad as the Devil can make them."

"And I say they are men of God," answered the captain.

"How do you know?"

"They carry the evidence with them. If they were of the world the world would love them, but because they are not of this world the world hates them and will say all manner of evil against them for Christ's sake."

As the preacher left the store amidst the laughter of the sailors, Captain Eaton arose and said, "I am going to Grand Manan to hear those men."

Going at once to his ship he gave orders to get under way, and the next morning at daybreak they cast anchor at Woodwards Cove, Grand Manan.

As the captain went ashore he saw a stranger walking on the hill, and recognized from his dress that he was a preacher.

Approaching him he asked, "Are you the Mormon preacher on this island?"

APOSTLE ULYSSES W. GREENE

Elder Greene has been an indefatigable worker in the Eastern States and through his direct efforts made this magazine number possible.

The stranger laughingly replied, "That is what some people call us, but we are not Mormons, neither are we representing the Mormon Church."

"I have come here, sir, to ask you some questions," stated the captain.

"All right," the gentleman replied. "My name is Lindsley, George Lindsley. I am not as well versed in the Scriptures as I should be, however if you will come to the house we have a brother there who will answer any question you may care to ask him."

Upon entering the house he was introduced to Elder John Landers, and immediately they entered upon a religious controversy which continued until time for the meeting. It was taken up at the close of preaching services and continued without interruption until time for the evening service, after which the subject nearest their hearts was brought up again and they talked far into the night.

"Well, old man," said the captain next morning, "you have knocked the last prop out from under me. I am satisfied that you have the gospel, and if you think I am a worthy candidate I would like to be baptized."

Arrangements were made immediately. Brother Lindsley baptized him on the 25th day of September, 1865, and in his confirmation the spirit rested upon Father Landers, and he ordained him to the office of an elder, and in the spirit of prophecy gave some wonderful promises to the captain.

Listening to what was being said and marveling because it was beyond his comprehension, the captain said to himself, "That may do for you, old man, but it doesn't do for George Eaton. If God wants George Eaton to preach the gospel he will have to tell George Eaton so."

He declined to preach or take any part in their preaching services other than to pray and bear testimony, but gave himself to fasting and praying until one day, while thus engaged, his mind suddenly opened in vision and he saw himself with Father Landers in a small schooner sailing up the coast of Maine, and from time to time when the course changed, the wind changed with it, so that without shifting sail they were able to make the entire trip to his brother's home in McGlatherys Island. In the vision he was shown the critical illness of his brother's wife; saw her healed by administration; saw himself perform the ordinance of baptism; heard the words that were used, and witnessed the manner in which the rite was to be performed. When the vision passed away he thought, of course, that such things were impossible, but should they come to pass he would then know that God had called him.

During the early winter of 1866, he received a letter from his brother, S. S. Eaton, asking him to visit him for his wife was in a critical condition and not expected to live. As missionary opportunities on Grand Manan were practically closed, he invited Brother Landers to accompany him and present the gospel to his people. In the latter part of December a trip around the coast of Maine is a dangerous undertaking, but recalling his vision he related it to Father Landers, and after praying over the matter they felt to move forward. It was necessary for them to make this trip in a small sailing boat (what is ordinarily called a schooner on the coast), and after again praying for direction and divine protection they started upon this perilous voyage.

As soon as the spray struck the side of the vessel the sails and rigging froze in the blocks as hard as ice could make them, but the wind was blowing fair and as it became necessary to shift their course from time to time the wind would suddenly change so that it was always a fair wind. The Lord had promised that the wind and waves would be at their command, and surely his promises were fulfilled. Aided by a full moon they sailed all night, and on the second day found a safe harbor under a lee shore, and all hands slept in safety. The following day was beautiful and with the wind still fair they reached their destination and cast anchor in the harbor at McGlatherys Island just as God had promised.

At the time this picture was taken Elder Landers was ninety-two years of age. He died at the age of ninety-seven past and was buried at Lamoni, Iowa.

Upon explaining the gospel to the sick woman and the promises of God contained therein, she immediately asked for the ordinance of administration, and was instantly healed. She arose from her bed, waited upon them, and prepared herself for baptism. As Father Landers was then seventy-six years of age he requested Brother Eaton to perform the ordinance of baptism. As he stood upon that beautiful sand beach and gazed upon the clear water his vision came back to him, and as he entered the water and performed the rite of baptism the spirit of God rested upon him to such an extent that he was made to realize that the God of heaven had called him to preach the gospel. It was the captain's good pleasure to baptize his father, mother, brothers, and sisters into the church.

It was but a short time after this that he visited Little walked onto the deck of the vessel, and asking permission to hold a meeting there preached to a number of the crew who assembled on the after deck. That sermon made a profound impression upon this man. (The preacher on this occasion was Joseph Clapp.) With his mind filled with thoughts of that sermon he traveled across the continent and was much surprised to hear a similar message as it fell from the lips of Father Landers. The mob quietly dispersed and no harm was done. A day or two later he asked for baptism, and remained a firm believer of the gospel to the day of his death.

Upon another occasion, while laboring in the eastern part of the State of Maine, they received an invitation from a doctor to come to his district and hold a series of meetings.

He said, "Come to my home; you will be made welcome. I own everything there is down there."

It was midwinter that they made arrangements to go to this place which was about fourteen miles from Lubeck. They found upon arriving that the doctor was out of town, and his wife was anything but cordial upon learning that they were Latter Day Saint preachers whom she called Mormons.

She ordered them from her home and said, "I will see that you don't have a place to stay in this settlement."

Taking their bags they left the house and entered a grocery store where they feasted on crackers and cheese. When evening came they went to the schoolhouse—the building was packed—and at the close of the service stated that they had been invited there by the doctor, but turned out of the house by his wife, and that now they had no place to stay. Different men came to them and said they would be glad to take them home but the doctor's wife had notified them that they would lose their job and be turned out of a home if they took the preachers in. They could not afford to do that for they must support their families. The preachers asked for permission to remain in the schoolhouse, but the janitor notified them that the doctor's wife had sent special instructions that they were not to remain there that night.

It had been snowing hard all day—the ground was covered with about eighteen inches of snow—and as often happens in that country, the wind changed to the southeast and it began to rain, making it extremely unpleasant under foot.

As they left the school building Father Landers said, "My! My! Brother George, what are we going to do?"

"Do? I am going back to the doctor's house."

"Don't you know she has turned us out?"

"Yes, I know it very well, but if I get my foot through the crack in the door I will stay in that house for the night."

Going up the steps in the soft snow they made but little noise. Finding the door unlocked they opened it and walked in to find the doctor's wife seated by the fire.

Upon seeing who her visitors were she said, "I thought I told you to get out of my house."

"You did," exclaimed Brother Eaton, "but you have ordered every person in this settlement not to take us in and even refused us permission to stay in the schoolhouse, and we have no place to go. This minister is an old man and a crip-

ANOTHER GROUP OF EASTERN WORKERS

Deer Isle and began preaching in earnest. It was here, too, that he endured great persecution, for the people were extremely poor and rough in those days. Had it not been for the giant strength of Brother Eaton, and the fear of him entertained by the islanders, they would probably have driven Father Landers away.

In order to show the remarkable way in which the Lord works with his people and how he prepares them to defend his work, I will relate the following circumstances:

A mob collected one evening determined to put a stop to the preaching of Brother Landers, but no one dared to lead them for fear of Brother Eaton, until finally a man, who had been away for a number of years, entered their midst and said, "Come with me. I am not afraid of George Eaton or any other man that walks this earth."

When they reached the house the service was in progress so they concluded to wait until preaching was over, but at the close of the sermon the newly-found leader turned to the mob and said, "You can't touch that man without walking over my dead body. That man is preaching the gospel. I have heard that same message before, and I know that every word is in harmony with the Bible."

It seemed that this gentleman had been on the Pacific coast for a number of years, and one Sabbath morning a man

ple. He will die if he were to stay out of doors to-night, but don't get excited for we are not going out of this house until morning."

"When my boys come home I will make them throw you out," she replied.

Brother Eaton straightened up, and, raising those giant hands of his, exclaimed in a loud voice, "Madam, I have power in those hands to squeeze the life out of those boys, and if you set them upon me it will be the sorriest day's work you have ever done in your life."

She looked him steadily in the eye for a moment, and then asked them if they had had supper. They replying in the negative, she arose and prepared an excellent meal for them. She also built a fire in the parlor; prepared a warming pan, and put it in the bed for them.

When the boys came in they were very friendly and appeared pleased to think the preachers had gotten the best of their mother.

They enjoyed a good night's rest, and in the morning, after a good warm breakfast, they took their bags and started on the return trip to Lubeck. They traveled about three miles when Father Landers said, "My! My! George, but I can't walk any longer." Then this mighty man of God took the aged minister upon his back, and with one bag in each hand carried him the remaining distance to Lubeck. He has often said that he received supernatural strength during this trip for he was not conscious of the burden, but rather enjoyed it because of the opportunity it afforded him to do something for God's servant.

Brother Eaton labored many years in various parts of of the Lord accompanied by the angelic hosts and the church of the First Born.

I heard him shouting, "Glory! Glory! Glory! My Lord is coming!"

Stepping from the door I saw him with his hands stretched towards the heavens, and his face illuminated by the Spirit of the Master.

Turning towards the village he said, "I see the people running from their homes; I see some of them as they tear their hair; I see and hear their cries of fear; I see them trying to hide among the rocks in the quarries."

Again turning his face towards the heavens he cried, "Glory! Glory! Glory! My Lord is coming!"

After the vision had passed I took him by the hand and led him to my home, and with tears rolling down his cheeks he told us of the wonderful vision which filled his heart with joy and caused his soul to rejoice.

Brother George W. Eaton passed from this life to the paradise of rest on the 22d day of October, 1900, beloved and mourned by hundreds of Saints. His faithful service for the Master and his wonderful testimonies to the truthfulness of the gospel still live in the hearts of those who knew him.

Pioneers of the Reorganization in Eastern Maine

BY MRS. E. M. WALKER

Having been requested to write an article regarding the pioneers of the church work in Eastern Maine, I will make the attempt.

As this Eastern mission includes the Maritime Provinces, let me direct your attention there in 1865-1866. Father John Landers and John Shippy visited the islands of Grand Manan and Campbello, sounding the trump of the gospel to the inhabitants thereof, which resulted in a number of conversions to the true faith, among them George W. Eaton, the first missionary in Maine, and the organization of branches on each of the islands, and a good foundation for their successors to build upon.

In 1868, T. W. Smith of gospel fame, was sent as a missionary to the Eastern field, and he baptized a number at Grand Manan, among whom were Joseph Lakeman and J. C. Foss, who will be referred to later on. He continued in this mission two years, baptizing many and organizing two branches, Kennebec and Masons Bay.

In 1870, Father Josiah Ells came as a missionary, his objective point being Jonesport and vicinity where he labored a few months which resulted in convincing a few that they had been deceived by one G. J. Adams, an apostate from the church. Five were baptized which formed the nucleus of Jonesport Branch, including B. K. Rogers and J. S. Walker, who were ordained to the office of elder later on, and each occupied as branch president, serving faithfully as local workers. They have long since gone to their reward, but their good works and influence are still

A LATER PICTURE OF A GROUP ATTENDING REUNION

We are not sure when this was taken, nor where, but it is thought it was at a Silver Lake, Massachusetts, reunion. The names are, left to right, standing: John Gilbert, M. D., Richard Bullard, O. A. Coombs, William Bradbury; seated: H. J. Davison, George W. Robley, Joseph Luff, M. D., A. H. Smith, E. L. Kelley, M. H. Bond, N. C. Eldridge.

Maine. He baptized a great many people into the church. During the closing years of his life when his health was failing, he started one day to visit the writer who lived in the adjoining house, and while part way between the two buildings his mind opened in vision and he saw the coming fresh in the memory of the older Saints. Father Ells was a man of exceeding faith and sterling qualities.

In 1873, T. W. Smith was again assigned to this mission, and was very successful in bringing many more into the fold, and encouraging those already enlisted in service.

In 1880, he made his last visit, much advanced in years, but still enthused with the gospel spirit. His wife, Helen, accompanied him in this mission, and proved a great help in the work.

In 1868-1869 T. W. Smith ordained Joseph Lakeman and J. C. Foss to the office of elder, and in 1873 they were called into the Quorum of Seventy. These two brethren partook largely of the missionary spirit, and they were soon heralding the glad tidings of salvation throughout the hamlets and towns of the old Pine Tree State with great success. The former did missionary work to quite an extent and was self-supporting.

He organized the Jonesport Branch, having baptized many of the members. He, too, has passed over the great divide, but his memory is still cherished by those who knew him. The latter continued in missionary work until within a few years, has labored extensively in Maine and other States, baptized hundreds into the fold, and organized branches in Addison, Indian River, East Machias, Holmes Bay, and Head Harbor. He labored under difficulties many times—never showed discouragement, but always rejoicing in the hope of the gospel, and never wearied in telling the angel's message. He has visited his old mission a few times since settling in Independence, and we are always glad to welcome Uncle John. His brother, S. O. Foss, has served in this mission many years with good success, laboring in different counties in Maine and the provinces.

In 1875 we were honored by a visit from Joseph Smith, president of the church, who sojourned with us but a few weeks, yet was busily engaged in visiting the several branches, preaching both in public and at the firesides of many Saints in which he delighted.

In 1890 we had the privilege of extending a cordial greeting to him again and listening to his beautiful and simple story of the gospel, with many of his experiences which were both interesting and beneficial. At this time Jonesport entertained a reunion of the Eastern New England States. There was a large gathering and a spiritual feast to the Saints who had gathered from near and far. "The spirit of God like a fire was burning." A number were converted and Brother Joseph had the privilege of baptizing five beneath the waves of the beautiful Atlantic.

What a grand and noble man was he in every respect. The church lost a father and wise counselor when he was called to his reward, but he will ever be remembered by what he has done.

In 1876 Elijah Banta, a genuine Westerner, labored a few months in this mission with good results. From this time the work was prosecuted by Joseph Lakeman and J. C. Foss, conference appointees, assisted by the local ministry until the year 1881, when F. M. Sheehy appeared on the scene of action. He came to us well established in the doctrine of Christ, who by his logical reasoning and expounding of the scripture, accompanied by the Holy Spirit, convinced many of the fact that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. He was continued in this mission until 1888—much beloved and respected by Saints and friends. He visited us from time to time, and during the summer of 1918 after an absence of thirteen years, we were much pleased to greet him again, and find him still in the conflict, staunch and true.

In 1886, the church saw fit to send to this mission a strippling of a youth, U. W. Greene, serving in the capacity of a priest, to succeed the "American preacher," so-called, but am sorry to relate that many of the Saints showed their dissatisfaction by word and action, which would have discouraged an ordinary preacher. But wait! Time advances, he enters into the work with zeal, growing in knowledge and wisdom of the Lord, puts on new strength, presents the gospel in plainness and simplicity, congregations and interest increase, and many called from darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel by his continued labor. The Lord calls him to the office of elder, then to a seventy, and he now occupies in the Quorum of Twelve. All of which was accomplished by faith, study, perseverance, and the aid of the Holy Spirit. He grew up in our midst and showed by a well-ordered life and godly conversation, that he is the Lord's anointed. He has visited us many times and always finds a welcome in every Saint's home as well as friend's.

During the missions of F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Greene, W. H. Kelley and E. C. Briggs of the Twelve served as missionaries in charge, and through their wise counsel and administration the church was built up and the name of Saint honored. During these years, from 1889 to 1899 this mission was favored by the efficient labor of Joseph Luff, a bold defender of the faith, and one well calculated to give impetus to the work. He is truly a man of God, fully consecrated to the Master's service. In 1899, he was accompanied by Richard Bullard who has labored quite extensively in this mission, and has been richly blessed in his efforts. As bishop he has never failed to teach the law of tithing to the Saints, and those who have observed it can testify of blessings both spiritual and temporal. Last summer we were again favored with a visit from these ambassadors of the cross, who preached the word in power and demonstration of the Spirit, giving strength and comfort to the Saints, also admonition and counsel which, if heeded, will bring us to a higher standard of righteousness. It is impossible to write of all who have labored so faithfully in this mission, but will mention a number.

Patriarchs: A. H. Smith, H. O. and I. M. Smith and F. A. Smith. These divinely appointed men, by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, imparted blessings to the Saints that afford comfort and consolation in the hours of trial and affliction, strengthen faith, and brighten hope when dark clouds obscure their spiritual vision.

Apostles: Thomas W. Smith, Josiah Ells, Zenos Gurley, Edmund C. Briggs, William H. Kelley, Joseph Luff, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, and Gomer T. Griffiths.

Bishops: Edmund L. Kelley, George H. Hilliard, and Richard Bullard.

Elders: John Smith, T. C. Kelley, M. F. Gowell, J. McDowell, M. T. Short, H. J. Davison, M. H. Bond, C. H. Rich, S. F. Cushman, G. W. Robley, J. A. Koehler, H. A. Koehler, F. J. Ebeling, J. F. Sheehy, and Newman Wilson. These have magnified their office and calling unto the honor and glory of God. U. M. Kelley was a local elder who served long and faithfully in this district. He was a minute man, ready to render service when occasion required. He became deaf and blind ere the summons came to join the innumerable host beyond which hindered in the work he loved so well, and deprived him of public service. It can be truly said of him that he fought a good fight, and kept the faith.

At Brockton [Massachusetts] one may see more shoes being made than in any other city on the globe. It is interesting to journey there and see how modern men are shod. First of all, it will be discovered that Brockton is preeminently the man's shoe town. Lynn claims first place in the manufacture of women's shoes, and Haverhill prides itself upon being the slipper city of the world.—National Geographic Magazine.

An Early Missionary's Experiences

BY J. C. FOSS

In 1869 I learned of the church of the living God, called the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on the Island of Grand Manan, New Brunswick, with the pure gospel of our blessed Lord, with all its gifts and blessings, which was restored to earth when the angel came to Joseph Smith.

I listened to but three sermons preached by Apostle T. W. Smith, and was satisfied that he was right, and that my Methodist gospel could not put me through Saint Peter's gate.

On March 11, 1869, I demanded baptism for the remission of my sins, and the 14th I was ordained a minister of the gospel, and for over fifty years I have learned by experience that God has wonderfully blessed me.

I read in the 16th of Mark that the ministers for Christ went forth preaching, the Lord working with signs following, and the angel that appeared to Joseph Smith restored to earth the gospel which is the power of God.

The preacher said the like precious gifts of the gospel were for the church of Christ to enjoy now as were enjoyed by the ancient people of God, to confirm us in the gospel as it did them. Upon these promises, I took God at his word, and so far I am well satisfied and established in the faith once delivered to the Saints.

Once I was preaching at Chases Mills on the resurrection. It seemed to me that I was standing in mid-air. Old Grandma Chase said my face shown like a glass bottle. I baptized forty or more at that place.

At Masons Bay where lived my people, I was commanded to go and preach to them. I did so, and raised up a branch at that place. Sister Peasley at this place had a cancer on her cheek. I administered to her before the close of a meeting. While I was praying she exclaimed three times, "It is gone! It is gone! It is gone!" There was no sign of a cancer left on her face.

At Jonesboro where lived my oldest brother, B. F. Foss, his wife had a cancer on the womb. I administered to her, and after being treated by seven doctors, and all gave her up to die, one of the doctors told me only the power of God could save her. Under my hands the cancer disappeared, for there is the hiding of our power.

For many long years I traveled day and night, with blistered feet, tired and weary from the long walks. We had no train, no motor cars, no money to pay for a ride, so it was on foot and alone. I labored hard all along the coast of Maine and I raised up and organized a branch on Head Harbor Isle, Indian River, Addison, City of Rocklands, Saco, East Machias, and assisted in raising up several others.

What I experienced during these long years has been a lasting school to me. God worked with us, and I brought into the church many precious souls of which many of them have gone to get their reward. May our God bless them.

I remember one meeting we had presided over by Apostle T. W. Smith, which closed at two o'clock in the morning. It was a heaven on earth during that meeting. I listened to eight different tongues and prophecies.

The Spirit was poured out upon his people. I saw many cured of different kinds of disease, eyes of the blind made to see, the lame to walk, quick consumption and many other serious disabilities cured.

I labored hard at Jonesport, Indian River, and Addison, where George J. Adams raised up his hand and went to the Holy Land. Most of them we brought into the Reorganized Church.

We met with a great deal of opposition, good old so-called Christians coming out to tar and feather the preacher, but the Lord stood by us. Near Brooksville there was a mob laid wait in the bush and cast stones at me, but not one hit me. At another place, the shingles on the house were pelted with stones. I told the congregation to be quiet, for the Devil was on the outside, and to let him stay there.

At Indian River where lived Brother Aaron, W. Kelley, Doctor Holland, and I called to see him and found him so badly off that he could not get out of his chair without help. I said to him, "Are you going to conference?" He replied, "I look like going to conference, don't I?"

I said, "Haven't you got any faith?" He said, "Well, yes, I think so." We administered to him and at once he arose to his feet and walked to his bedroom, put on his clothes, and walked with us three miles to attend the conference. We learned that God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform, and like one of old, I have learned by experience that the Lord has blessed me.

I wish to bear my testimony that the gospel we preach is true and that it will save as many as will obey. The church cannot save you, but you can be saved in the church. Being baptized isn't all. That admits you in the house of God, and after you have entered the house you must learn how to behave yourself in the church of the living God.

A Scheme that Failed

BY H. J. DAVISON

On a small plateau upon the crest of quite a high hill overlooking the placid waters of the Basin of Minas with Grand Pré in the distance, and about five miles from the grand old Cape Blomidon upon whose brow the fog king pitched his tents, stands a building known as Minas Hall.

The lower floor was used for school purposes. The upper floor, reached by a winding stairway, was the union meeting house for the community.

In this room, because of the persistent effort of those most interested, and the spirit of fair play upon the part of some influential men who were not particularly religious, the Latter Day Saints would occasionally hold religious services, especially when a missionary would appear among them. On one occasion Elder F. M. Sheehy was announced to speak in the evening. A goodly number were present and apparently everything forecasted an enjoyable service.

The meeting was regularly opened and the speaker well along in the intricate stages of an interesting and forceful discourse, when in an instant the whole quiet, impressive scene was changed into one of alarm and bewildering confusion. A stone weighing one ounce less than a pound came crashing through a window behind the speaker, missing his head by perhaps a foot, and struck an oil lamp which was standing on a high, old-fashioned side post of the pulpit, and sent it in fragments and in flames out in the wide aisle in front of the stand.

Women screamed and men shouted. Two men with fortitude and presence of mind pulled off their coats and with them smothered the fast-spreading flames. Another man sprang to the door and with natural authority demanded "quiet."

It is well that he did so, for it was subsequently discovered that short round sticks of stove wood had been placed upon all the steps of that winding stairway and the light had been extinguished. The reader can imagine what the result would have been had a stampede been made down that stairway in the dark.

The schemers' designs, however, were frustrated. Order was restored and the undaunted proclaimer of "Peace on earth and good will to man" proceeded with his "sixthly, lastly, and conclusion" with a sangfroid suggestive of a Gladstone or a Julius Cæsar.

The only indication of common clay that marked his courageous demeanor was that he stood back a little closer to the wall and well between the windows.

Aroostook County, Maine

BY CLEDA SIMPSON

I was very glad to hear that there was to be a special number of the HERALD for New England and the Maritime Provinces. I have been a citizen of both so of course am interested. I was asked to give an account of the coming of the gospel to the northern part of Maine.

The first Saint that ever set foot in Aroostook County was my thirteen-year-old sister, Eva Newcomb. She, with my father and mother, were among the first converts of Brother and Sister Joseph F. Burton in Delhaven, Nova Scotia. Eva lived and taught her religion, and I know I ridiculed her ideas and was chagrined to think she had a better understanding of the Bible than I, her oldest sister, had; although I had been an active worker in the Baptist Church for years.

This sister is now Eva Glover, of Kirtland, Ohio, and I hope she sees this tribute to her faithfulness.

The first missionaries were Elder H. J. Davison and F. M. Sheehy. I was glad to welcome my Uncle Holmes and took him to a prayer meeting at the Baptist Church. In bearing his testimony he said that he would be in the village for a time engaged in gospel work and would like the cooperation of the pastors. At the close of the service the pastor came and shook hands and asked what church he represented, and when he said, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," the pastor drew back and exclaimed, "What! Go into barbarism!" Well, he would have nothing to do with cooperating, but we secured the town hall and had a meeting. A goodly number attended, and five honest-hearted souls were baptized, myself among the number.

The second year Elder U. W. Greene came with Elder Davison and we had some grand preaching and more were baptized. We gained members each year as the missionaries came for a few weeks in the fall. Brother S. O. Foss and Eugene Brann and C. H. Rich were among those who labored there.

We soon built a neat little church in the center of the village. I wish I had space to tell of the things that faithful little band had to contend with at the hands of the so-called Christian people of the town where we had worshipped together for ten years.

This same minister whom Brother Davison met first, prayed that we might be removed from their midst by death, if there was no other way. But the prayer was not answered.

Another pastor said in his prayer, "There are those in our midst, who are teaching that there is a chance after death, but don't you believe it, Lord."

As a result of the gospel seed sown there, between forty and fifty noble souls were born into the kingdom and the greater part of them remained true to their covenant.

In the colonial period the population belonged mainly to the Congregational Church. Before the end of the eighteenth century the Baptists and Methodists had become prominent and are now leading denominations. In the early part of the nineteenth century Massachusetts became the center of Unitarianism in the United States. The Episcopalians have a considerable following. With the coming of large numbers of Irish about the middle of the nineteenth century the Catholic Church for the first time became prominent, and it is now much stronger than any one of the Protestant denominations.—New International Encyclopedia.

Nova Scotia

BY H. J. DAVISON

The Province of Nova Scotia as many know, is Acadia, or the Land of Evangeline, immortalized by Longfellow in that masterpiece of pathetic poetry entitled "Evangeline."

It was called by the French who possessed it before 1621, Acadia (Ak-a-dee). The name said to be derived from the Mec Mac Cadia, signifying abundance—Latin Acadia.

The name Nova Scotia (New Scotland) was given to the country in 1621 when it was ceded by James I of England to Sir William Alexander.

The inhabitants are sometimes designated by the appellation or sobriquet of Blue Noses.

From legendary lore we learn that the name was given to them or rather to those who migrated from the Eastern

ELDER HOLMES J. DAVISON

Elder Davison was in the East a number of years, but is now at Stockton, California.

States to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick about the time of the revolution.

While in sympathy with George Washington et al they had conscientious scruples against taking up arms against their own flesh and blood. In other words, they thought it a crime for blue blood (as they called it) to shed blue blood if to avoid it were a possibility.

They desired freedom, but favored evolution rather than revolution. So we see that if the term Blue Nose should be applied at all, it could only be consistently applied to that portion of the inhabitants referred to, and their descendants.

Whatever the truth may be as to theory, as a matter of fact the writer, though a Nova Scotian by birth, habit, and sentiment, is not a Blue Nose—his progenitors having been in Nova Scotia long before the American revolution.

That which was desired by both peoples has been achieved.

When some of the tourists from the great republic visited the "tight little province" by the sea, and beheld the peace, prosperity, and liberty, they were wont to cry, "How did you do it?" The logical answer was, "We preferred taking a little time, getting the key, unlocking the door, and walking in, to skinning our knuckles in smashing the door and jumping into it."

Of course, there are arguments favoring either method. We are simply telling the story as we learned it.

It is not necessary to describe the recent Nova Scotian. There are few localities on, above, or under the earth where he is not well known. A man who had traveled quite extensively observed this, and the solving of it was quite a problem, seeing that Nova Scotia is such a small country. Until later when visiting the province he was immediately attracted by seeing a man and ten sons all mowing in one hay field. He at once came to the conclusion that Acadia, the Indian word for abundance, was right.

Until recent years, the doctrine which the late T. R. Roosevelt so strenuously opposed was unknown to them. In those days they read the Big Book, and the first commandment found in it was considered applicable—"replenish the earth"—and they did it.

A writer who claimed to be something of a statistician once said that there were actually more Nova Scotians in the Eastern States than there were in the province itself, and the greater part of them were in Massachusetts. It was once asked, "For what is the city of Boston distinguished?" The answer came, "For being the capital of Nova Scotia."

Years ago Nova Scotia was distinctively religious. The Sabbath was venerated, and the clergy considered a sacred institution; not always with a zeal according to knowledge.

In some cases at times of decision, it was not so much a question of "Is it right according to divine instruction?" as it was—"Will it displease our minister?" So it was not a strange thing that the latter-day work met with strenuous opposition when the missionaries first began to preach it.

There was an incident occurred some twenty years ago. One of our missionaries who had received fine treatment at the hands of the Nova Scotia Saints and friends, made the following remark, "I have been in this country several weeks and I have yet to hear anybody swear or use indecent language. Are they all good or don't they know how?"

As a matter of record, they were not all too good, and they really did know how to swear, but it was not a common or universal practice and scarcely ever heard before ladies or ministers.

Since that missionary went among them, I understand they swear more. I perhaps should say, since about that time profanity has gradually increased, owing to more intimate contact with a world that is waxing worse and worse, especially along those lines.

While there may be some events written up concerning this work, which would not appear to the general advantage of the people, nevertheless the writer has yet to find a more hospitable—more honest—more warm-hearted, lovable people than can be found in that land of beautiful scenery, long snowy winters, deliciously-flavored fruit, incomparable vegetables, and where famine is unknown.

Concerning the latter-day work, it cannot be said that it occupies a very large or important place in the religious activities of that little country. Yet there are a faithful few maintaining the excellency of the cause. One noticeable feature relating to Nova Scotia membership is, that they become in a manner cosmopolitan.

They have been, and are found in many places, and as a rule are quite active workers. Some instances come to mind at first thought: Boston and Attleboro, Massachusetts; Washburn, Maine; Providence, Rhode Island; Sherrill and Hammondsport, New York; Kirtland, Ohio; Independence, Holden, and Lees Summit, Missouri; Nauvoo, Illinois; Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa; Heatherdown, Alberta; Nanaimo, British Columbia; Santa Ana, Colton, Long Beach, Los Angeles, Dinuba, San Francisco, Livermore, Hollister, Sacramento, and Stockton, California; Tacoma, Washington.

Their missionary efforts have embraced the Maritime Provinces, a large part of the Eastern States, and Western Canada, Missouri, Illinois, California, Society Islands, and Australia.

What the future of that country will be in connection with the gospel is, of course, unknown to us, but if years of longing counts for anything, it should have something bright and beautiful.

A Testimony

BY EMMA B. BURTON

Elder J. F. Burton received the "angel's message" and was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ under the leadership of Joseph Smith, the son of the Martyr, and by his authority under Christ was sent to Nova Scotia on a mission in 1882.

He had a few relatives on the Burton side still living on the Island of Cape Breton. In the early day of the settling of Nova Scotia, the English Government had given a large "grant" of land on this island to his grandfather and the descendants, all except his father who embraced the Baptist faith and left for the mainland; therefore, Elder Burton had it in his mind before leaving California to include this island in his mission.

The first and most stormy introduction of the gospel in Nova Scotia was in Delhaven.

My brother, H. J. Davison, and wife, and my sister, T. A. Newcomb, and husband, were the first Saints; figuratively speaking, they came up out of great tribulation. But they came prepared to stay, and to work for the Master.

During the summer, after visiting Halifax, the missionary and his wife drove to Yarmouth, over one hundred miles distant, but finding none who were ready for the gospel returned to Delhaven, added a few more to the little band of Saints there, and started for Cape Breton. He knew it was late in the season for such a trip, but felt that he must go in order to return to California in the coming spring. The weather was still fine and warm at the starting, but the second day out there came a decided change in weather, and the day ended in a cold snowstorm. In seeking the Lord for direction, his counsel was to go not forth; if we did, "all things that you fear shall come upon you," to remain in that place and the Lord would build us up. So the winter was mostly spent in South Rawdon and vicinity, where Elder Burton baptized ten heads of families.

The missionaries were kindly received in all that vicinity. More were added later, and a branch was built up.

Elder Burton still felt constrained to go to Cape Breton before returning to California, therefore, another year was added to our stay in Nova Scotia. It was in early September, 1883, when he and his wife—with their faithful horse "Brun"—made the second start for that long, tedious journey. It was a journey that required the exercise of faith, knowing as he did that there was very little travel on that far eastern end of the continent, where settlements were few and far between, and those settlements were composed of French people, the descendants of those who were in the country in the days of "Evangeline." Few could talk English, and knew nothing of the condition of roads or bridges, or the facilities for crossing the straits of Canso with a horse and buggy, nor could he obtain any information regarding these matters.

But nothing daunted, he affirmed that there must be some way, and pushed ahead. The Lord was leading him. He had to take the long route in order to visit Amherst to fulfill a promise made before he left California.

In passing through Parrsboro, it came about that we tarried there one week, having a most pleasant visit with my sister Ida and her husband, J. W. Layton. Both gladly received the gospel and were baptized. Thence to Amherst, where it was needful that we remain a few days, including Sunday, and expected to resume our journey on the following Monday.

By invitation we were at the house of a new-found friend, one Mrs. Quigley, and by reason of her becoming deeply interested in the gospel message, and wanting to read some in both Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, she insisted upon our staying with them till Wednesday morning. Because of that delay the straits of Canso were reached upon the day that the steamer came from Sydney and crossed over to the other side in the which we could take the horse and buggy; then we recognized the hand of the Lord in being detained in Amherst, and thanked God and took courage.

When we were passing through the most dismal section of our journey—no inhabitants for miles and miles—it seemed as if we were going to be overtaken in a bad storm. The clouds hung low and heavy, and threatened to empty their contents on our defenseless heads. Being in September the wind was raw and cold and blew in fierce gusts. The solitude became oppressive. The wife lifted her heart to God in a pleading cry, “O thou that hearest the cry of the young raven, be mindful of thy children in this dismal place, and let not the storm burst upon us.” The cry was surely heard and the storm was averted for a few days at least, but soon followed in our tracks, filling with snow the canyon on the island through which we had passed only the day before.

Elder Burton was wont to have good liberty in preaching in Nova Scotia but he excelled himself on this island. Had great liberty in expounding the scriptures and explaining the gospel. Had good congregations also, considering the size of the town, and the number of inhabitants. Ministers also came and took notes or commenced to, but would become absorbed in the discourse and forget their notes.

The writer thinks if ever she heard the gospel preached in power, it was upon that island. The only church that was represented in that vicinity, was the Episcopalian, consequently all were church members from infancy. The clergy becoming alarmed lest some of their flock would be turned from their faith to embrace the gospel, turned and commenced to fight it, and since Elder Burton’s time of stay was limited by the oncoming winter, he deemed it unwise to stay longer, lest there be trouble stirred up. The clergy were the power in the island, and the offenders were made to feel their iron heel. But before leaving he heard a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel that he brought to them.

One Sunday afternoon while at cousin Ephraim Burton’s one of the neighbors was in, listening to the talk—a man sixty years old. He had attended the meetings and seemed deeply impressed, and preoccupied in thought. Presently he said, “Yes, I know it is true, have known it since the first sermon I heard you preach, and I will tell you why I know it.

“When I was a young man, I was doing some teaming between here and Sydney [the seaport town on the other end of the island]. I usually drove home in the nighttime, though it was a long, lonely drive. Upon this occasion, it was getting on towards midnight, when I overtook an old man walking, and asked him to get in and ride. He did so, I supposing he had come from the seaport that I had just left. I began speaking of the new minister that had recently come to that place, and asked if he had seen him. Then he commenced to talk, and in his talk said all the churches were wrong, and showed by the scriptures where they were wrong, and expounded the scriptures in a manner that I had never heard before. He seemed perfectly familiar with it all. He said also that the church that Christ left would be restored to earth again with apostles, prophets, and all its gifts and blessings, and the same gospel that was preached by Christ and his apostles will be preached on this island, and you will live to hear it, and when you hear it, you will remember my words and know that it is true. But the people will not receive it. They will be very angry instead, and turn and fight it. And,” added the narrator. “I had forgotten the whole circumstance for years, till I heard you preach, then it all came back to me, and I am satisfied this is what he had reference to. He rode with me some time expounding the scriptures from beginning to end with astonishing clearness and rapidity. Then he said, ‘I have ridden far enough and will get out.’

“I stopped the horse and let him out without thinking of where we were, until I had started on again. I did not even look to see which way he went. When alone again, I began to wonder who he could be that was such an able preacher, and yet not known. There were not so many people on the island in those days that a stranger could come and go unknown to the people. He was not in the garb of a minister, nor did he claim to be one, and again, where was he going on foot and on that road?

“It was not one that diverged in two different ways, but was the one road through an uninhabited region of country—the only road between the two settlements. If he were going to the village ahead, why did he get out while so far from it? The more I thought over the event, the more strange and unnatural it appeared. And, as I recalled what he said, it dawned upon my mind that he spoke with more than man's wisdom and knowledge, and I began to get scared, and gave the horses the whip, and drove fast the remainder of the way."

By the above testimony, it seems that our trip to Nova Scotia and Cape Breton was one of the "times before appointed."

I have given this instance in our experience in the Nova Scotia mission because of the double testimony contained therein. First, that the same gospel that was preached by Christ and his apostles, was to be restored to earth again, with all its gifts and blessings, and that it was to be preached in that island in the lifetime of the man spoken to by this messenger, and that it was fulfilled by Joseph Burton is sure since no other man has preached anything claiming to be the restored gospel on that island, nor can it be fulfilled in the future.

And second, that Joseph Smith was a leader of the church approved of Heaven, or that prophecy would not have been fulfilled in his day, and in the Reorganization.

Truly the Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Elder Burton was led from Nova Scotia to receive the gospel, then led back with it to Nova Scotia to fulfill the prophecy of the ancient one, for no other missionary would have gone to Cape Breton.

At the First Baptism of the Reorganization in Nova Scotia

BY H. J. DAVISON

All advancement of the latter-day work in Nova Scotia has been quite stoutly contested. Even the work that was begun in the early days, of which there is little on record seems to have been beset with many difficulties.

It is certain that the movement under the auspices of the Reorganization, in Kings, Hants, and Cumberland Counties, of which George N. Davison was a pioneer, followed by Joseph F. Burton, F. M. Sheehy, U. W. Greene, and others, met with strong opposition. So much so, that it really seemed that men and women also appeared to step out of their own individualities and assume another, in which they surprised and shocked even their closest friends of many years, to carry out their designs for the frustrating of this work.

In this, however, we only have the verification of a fact, that our own experiences prove, which is, that we really do not know what we are ourselves, until we meet up with some of life's strange and tragic vicissitudes. Who of us have not been shocked, chagrined, and almost paralyzed to find a slumbering lion or reptile within us, which only needed to be aroused to assert itself.

This feature of life was manifested at the time of the baptism of the first four candidates who accepted the faith under the preaching of J. F. Burton. Men and women who had been hitherto close friends and associates of those parties, and who had seemingly lived exemplary lives along the lines of neighborly good will, seemed suddenly to change into beings of vengeful hatred, and nothing but the power of God itself prevented more violence, even after the restraining influence of propriety and the fear of the law had been passed.

Here was an instance where an unrecognized law prevailed, and the majesty of an unseen power triumphed. The impression made on the minds of many of the more thoughtful ones was of such a nature, that, though they never accepted the work, they have never fought against it.

There is little of the spectacular to record, except that when the foremost of the mob approached Brother Burton to seize him, and throw him into the water, which was an arm of the Basin of Minas, the power behind a quiet word from him caused them to wilt and slink back as if some hitherto unseen supernatural being had presented himself before them.

While a large crowd witnessed the confirmation that followed, there was good order and no signs of violence.

Historical Sketch of the Massachusetts District

BY W. A. SINCLAIR, M. D.

Many years before the territory now known as the Massachusetts District was organized, ministry of the Latter Day Saints visited these regions, preaching, and baptizing a few individuals.

In the very early thirties Joseph Smith, jr., made a visit

JAMES W. GILLEN.

Old-time apostolic missionary who labored much in the East. to Boston and surrounding territory. History does not record him as laboring in Boston proper, but he did preach in the, so-called, "wizard" town of Salem.

James Snow made a trip through the country preaching and baptized Mary Webber in August, 1831, and George C. Smith, who later became one of the missionaries of the Massachusetts District, was converted by the preaching of D. McArthur and baptized by him in September, 1838.

F. Nickerson, a missionary of the old church, preached through the Eastern States, and it is recorded that he held services at Medway, Massachusetts, in July, 1842. Erastus E. Snow held services at Salem, Massachusetts, where he baptized a few in April, 1842. The following year (1843), E. P. Maginnis held services at East Boston, Massachusetts, and baptized one candidate. According to the record these men in their tour through the East baptized at least five people previous to the apostasy of the church in 1844-1850.

The events leading up to the organization of the Massachusetts District reach back to the early days of the work in England. In the thirties and forties the work spread very rapidly in England and many of the Saints who later composed the bulk of the pioneers of the work in Massachusetts were brought into the church in England.

The McKee family of Fall River, Massachusetts, was probably the first name in the East that the missionaries under the Reorganization had, as probably being favorable to the work. They were members of the old church in their old home, Ashton Underlyne, England. But the apostasy of the church had taken place long before they came to America, and the branch to which they belonged had been absorbed by the Utah authority. In fact, these very people were sacrificing many comforts of life, in order to save the amount they would otherwise spend, to send it up to Utah to help build the temple.

When the Utah missionaries began their teaching of polygamy among the Saints in Ashton Underlyne, many of these people renounced the faith. Mother McKee withdrew her name from the church, but John McKee still continued as a member, though with less zeal than formerly. He was reluctant to give up his faith and still attended the meetings, but for this he was very often "rotten egged" and stoned by the neighbors, and called a "Mormon."

During the panic in England caused by the American Civil (uncivil) War, these people came to America. John McKee came ahead of his family, and went to work in the coal mines at Pottstown, Pennsylvania, to get enough money to bring his family out from England. Later they came, with the idea of going to Zion, which of course was Utah.

These people landed at New York in January, 1863, and immediately went to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. They remained here for six months, when their work gave out, and hearing that there was work in the cotton mills of Fall River, Massachusetts, they removed there.

Two other former-day Saints, Henry Heywood and David Leather, also worked in the coal mines at Pottstown at the same time John McKee was there. And Leather also moved to Fall River, Massachusetts, leaving Heywood as the only one of the English Saints in Pottstown.

In 1864, four years after the reorganization of the church, Elder James W. Gillen was sent on a mission to the Eastern States to represent the Reorganization.

En route, he stopped off at Pottstown, and upon inquiring if there were any Latter Day Saints in the city, he came in contact with Henry Heywood. In conversation with Heywood, he was informed that there were a number of old-time Saints who had immigrated to America at different times, and located in the city of Fall River, Massachusetts. He accordingly made up his mind to visit Fall River. In this conversation, Heywood told him of John McKee. Thus, the McKee name became very early mixed with the work of organization of the Massachusetts District.

Brother Gillen arrived at the McKee home in a severe snowstorm, December, 1864. The McKee home was small and afforded little accommodation, but when he had explained his mission, and who he was, they offered him the best they had, which was only a bed of straw on the floor.

The next day the storm abated, and in company with John McKee, he started out to find the other families who had been members of the old church in England. There were several families who had come from different parts of England, and were not known by each other. These families when rounded up, comprised the Rogersons, Hackings, Gilberts, Cottams, and Rigbys.

Elder Gillen finally rounded them all up, as he had their names, made his home with the Gilberts, and immediately started preaching services, rebaptizing the members of the several families, and continued his work until December 3, 1865, when he organized the Fall River Branch with thirteen members.

The Massachusetts District conference was organized October 13, 1866, at Fall River, Massachusetts, under the guiding hand of Apostle W. W. Blair. The district was at this time composed of two branches, Fall River, Massachusetts, with a membership of 49, and Dennisport, Massachusetts, with a membership of 9, and a scattered membership of 5. William Cottam, the president of the Fall River Branch, was elected the first president of the Massachusetts District, and John Gilbert was elected the first clerk.

The conference arranged to hold missions in a great many places in the surrounding country, which arrangements were completed at the next conference, held at Fall River, Massachusetts, June 29, 1867. The ministry noted as given missions were: E. C. and George C. Smith, and E. N. Webster to Boston, Massachusetts, and vicinity; John Smith and John Gilbert to Fall River, Massachusetts, and vicinity; Cyriel E. Brown to Providence, Rhode Island, and vicinity, and Jesse W. Nichols to New Bedford, Massachusetts, and vicinity.

From the labors of these men and others of later date, the district broadened out, until the record shows that there were at least 21 branches in the Massachusetts District. Ten of these have become past history, and most of the membership which composed them have passed on to their reward.

In the beginning of the district work, conferences were held every three months, and the sessions held three days. There was no district Sunday school organization of any kind in the district, until July 27, 1889, when by former instruction delegates from the different schools met at Providence, Rhode Island, at 7.30 in the evening, and organized what was known as the Sunday School Union.

The same year, August 19, 1889, the first reunion was held at Jonesport, Maine, and reunions have been held every year since—the first two or three in conjunction with the Maine Saints—then two or three in Plainville, Massachusetts. In 1895 until 1899, with the exception of one year in Maine, the reunions were held at Dennisport, Massachusetts. In 1899 and including 1904, the reunions were held at Silver Lake, Massachusetts. In 1905 at Touisset, Massachusetts. In 1906 at Touisset Point, Rhode Island, and from 1907 to 1910 at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. In 1911 we purchased the present reunion grounds at Onset, Massachusetts, and have been holding the reunions there for the past nine years.

The men who have served as district presidents from the organization were: William Cottam, October 13, 1866, to November 23, 1867, Cyriel E. Brown, November 23, 1867 to November 12, 1869, Elias N. Webster, November 12, 1869 to sometime between April 11, 1874 and September 30, 1886 (the minutes of the district are lost for this period). September 30, 1886, John Smith is the president, and he continued until January 26, 1889, Myron H. Bond, January 26, 1889 to May 9, 1891, Francis M. Sheehy, May 9, 1891 to May 12, 1894, George H. A. Gates, May 12, 1894 to October 27, 1894, Francis M. Sheehy, October 27, 1894 to February 1, 1897, Richard Bullard, February 1, 1897 to August 11, 1900, Frank O. Coombs, August 11, 1900 to February 8, 1902, Richard Bullard, February 8, 1902 to November 5, 1904, Charles H. Lake, November 5, 1904 to February 24, 1906, Myron C. Fisher, February 24, 1906 to February 15, 1908, John D. Suttill, February 15, 1908 to February 5, 1910. Myron C. Fisher, February 5, 1910 to February 4, 1911, Calvin H. Rich, February 4, 1911 to October 2, 1915, John D. Suttill, October 2, 1915 to August 3, 1919, C. Edward Miller, August 3, 1919 to the present time.

Missionaries in charge of the mission in which the Massachusetts District is included, during the period from the organization to the present time were: W. W. Blair, Zenos H. Gurley, Josiah Ells, Edmund C. Briggs, William H. Kelley.

Joseph Luff, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, Gomer T. Griffiths.

Since the organization there has been recorded on our records 2,618 names. This includes the removals and received among the branches in the district, but the actual baptisms in the district were 1,815. Received from outside of district 191. Removals to outside of district 225. Deaths 461. Expulsions 242. Present membership of the district 1,068. The record shows the following list of officers have served in the district: apostles, 2; high priests, 11; high counselors, 1; bishops, 2; seventy, 12; elders, 109; priests, 132; teachers, 120; deacons, 93.

The spirituality of the district seems to be in a very good condition at present, and there has been quite a healthy growth in numbers during the last few months, of which we have no official record at present. The statistics as given are based on the reports of the May conference.

Early Historical Notes of the Providence Branch

The beginning of the work in Providence, Rhode Island, is due largely to Brother Charles N. Brown, who became interested through correspondence with Sister Carrie Thomas, the writer of the hymn "In the light," she being a relative, and at that time living in the West, while Brother Brown was a resident of New England. He had become something of a skeptic through what he had observed of the incongruities of sectarianism. Formerly he had been active in religious work, a member of the Baptist Church, and was a man of high moral character.

Correspondence with Sister Thomas aroused his interest in the gospel, so that he attended a conference of the Massachusetts District held at Dennisport, Massachusetts, which was also attended by Elder T. W. Smith. He also was impressed by the sentiment expressed by James, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." Also in the Book of Mormon: "Yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words."—Alma 16: 151.

He tells of how weak his faith was towards such ideas—his skepticism bordered onto atheism. "If there be a God hear my plea" was the frame of mind he was in, as stated by himself when under the advice of the church he essayed to try. He was in the condition of those mentioned in the Book of Mormon, where Alma told them: "If any have not faith, desire to have it, let the desire grow and it will unfold into faith." The response to his soul was satisfactory. He was baptized by T. W. Smith. Upon his return to Providence, he began his efforts with commendable zeal, and soon had others interested in the message. Brother and Sister George S. Yerrington were among the first to join with him. They opened their house for meetings. The prejudice was so strong in the neighborhood that Brother Yerrington was informed, if he continued such propaganda, it would ruin his business. He was a man of a good deal of independence of mind, and went ahead according to his convictions. Instead of lessening his business, it increased very much. Later they moved from the private house meetings into a hall, and from thence the work began to grow.

Soon others took active part, among whom were John Holt, who had been a member of the old church in England, James Compton, William Bradbury, S. H. Morse, C. E. Brown, H. H. Thompson, C. A. Coombs, and others.

There were some very remarkable manifestations of healing occurred, as well as the other gifts of the gospel, confirming them in their faith. A sister named Atwell had been sorely afflicted with disease so that she was bedridden. She was informed in a dream to go to a certain little chapel, and there she would see two servants of the Lord, and she would be healed. The day arrived for her to go, according to her instruction, when her family tried to prevent her from going, insisting that she must be out of her mind to follow such hallucinations. Notwithstanding this, she persisted and went as she was directed, having been shown in her dream the place and the men whom she would find.

Upon arriving at the chapel she found it to be a little insignificant place, where negroes were especially in attendance. She took her place in one of the pews and watched the people coming for some time, and was discouraged and thought probably she had made a mistake. The negroes gathered in and no sign of the men she had been shown in her dream. Time arrived for the meeting, opening services were on, and no one there that she knew or had seen before. As the meeting started, in came two white men and walked into the stand to preach. She recognized the men as being the same she had seen in her vision. After they had preached, she in harmony with her instructions was administered to by the white men, and was instantly healed. She lived for years and then died in the faith.

I will relate one or two of her manifestations, as she related them to me. She saw a field of wheat ripening, and beheld sitting upon a seat a number of men in the following order: Charles N. Brown, G. S. Yerrington, William Bradbury, H. H. Thompson, S. H. Morse, F. M. Sheehy, and F. A. Potter. Subsequently these men became presidents of the branch, succeeding each other in the order mentioned. This was years before some of them came into service in the church. F. M. Sheehy was at that time in California—had not been in the Providence Branch.

She also had the following manifestation: She was led by a personage to where there was a tree growing, and hanging from the limbs of the tree dispersed through the branches were several human faces, with their names upon their brows, and some of them were waving as if unsteady, while others were quiet. Two had fallen to the ground, and she stooped to pick them up and put them back in their place on the tree, but the guide told her "no," they had fallen and could not be put back. Afterwards they were expelled from the church, and the names never returned to the record. Among those who seemed to be unsteady and wavering, one was her husband, who afterwards came into the church, but never was stable therein. Subsequently I came into the branch, and when she saw me in the meeting, she called me by name, spelling my name as she had seen it on the tree. I was a total stranger to her, had been baptized in California, and she had neither heard nor seen my name before. Another case was Sister A. M. Barnes, who was an invalid for thirteen years, afflicted with a tumor—was administered to and instantly healed. Also the case of Sister Kate E. Blood, now Sister John Smith of Lamoni. She was a confirmed victim of tuberculosis. She was administered to before being baptized and completely healed of that trouble, which occurred forty-five years ago. She is still living. Space will not allow us to tell any more of the manifestations of divine power which were very numerous in the history of that branch.

The work spread from Providence into the surrounding country by the zeal of the local ministry. In those days General Conference appointees would not visit there over once a year. Cranston Branch, Pawtucket Branch, Plainville Branch, from which came the Attleboro Branch, were the offspring of the work in Providence, also Womsocket, Cumberland Hill, and Arnolds Mills.

The work in that earlier day was built up by the labors of the local men, who commonly walked miles into the surrounding country, holding meetings in schoolhouses, private houses, or elsewhere that opportunity offered, glad to sacrifice for a cause so dear to them. To mention by name the ones who were participants would not be within the province of this sketch. The records of the Book of Life are doubtless replete with them.

The History of the Massachusetts District Reunion

BY M. C. FISHER

The Massachusetts District Reunion was not born in a tent—but rather was a sort of protracted conference held during the summer in the churches of the beautiful coast towns of Jonesport and Stonington, Maine.

Apostle Ulysses W. Greene, then a stripling missionary known as "Lissie," claims, I believe, to be the father of the plan, which was to blend a summer vacation with a religious gathering and to promote the fellowship of the Saints in the Maine and Massachusetts Districts, which plan, in subsequent years, has determined the location of so many of the vacations of our people who take vacations and taught those who did not the value of a few days relaxation and concentrated effort to improve their spiritual condition.

At the first, the Saints at both of these branches opened their homes and entertained the visiting brethren and sisters, but the reunions became so popular they were obliged to abandon this method, and board and rooms were procured at a reasonable price from those who could accommodate them.

To these Eastern meetings were invited then, as now, church dignitaries and other good preachers that might not only instruct the Saints but be a missionary to those who were outside of the faith. Only a few days ago I saw a photograph of the ministry of one of these Maine reunions. Brother Joseph was seated; around him were gathered W. H. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, A. H. Parsons, U. W. Greene, John Foss, W. H. Garrett, and some of the Maine brethren.

About 1890 the first reunion was held in Massachusetts at Plainville. The services were held in a tabernacle tent and a few camped about it—but the people roomed in homes in the neighborhood for the most part. The following year, the reunion again went to Maine, meeting at Tenants Harbor. Here lived Brother Seavey, a Saint well-known to our missionaries to Maine. The services were held in a tent. There appears to be no records of these assemblies, and we have only the word of the people who were present, that a pleasant and profitable time was enjoyed. Tenants Harbor was a beautiful place and Brother Seavey did all in his power to have the people well located and enjoy the occasion. It proved to be the last reunion in Maine.

For two or three years Plainville was again the camping ground. We met for prayer service and preaching, morning, afternoon, and evening. There was no provision for auxiliary work in those days, no entertainments, no afternoons for swimming and athletics. Yet somehow we managed to have good times in between: social intercourse and pleasant trips that we well remember, yet sermons are long ago forgotten. Romance blossomed, as it will when young people meet and mingle.

In 1896 we went to Connecticut. Some zealous brethren were sure a good work could be accomplished by such a move. Those who attended the reunion at Poquonnock will never forget the heat and mosquitoes of that place during our ten days' stay. The reunion idea was growing and we were learning.

Following this, we were invited to Dennisport on Cape Cod for three successive years. It is a vacation and a benediction to visit this place in summer. The neat white cottages, the green lawns and such a beach and water for bathing. Among the ministry who visited us here, I well remember Alexander H. Smith. But as beautiful as Dennisport is, it was not central and we endeavored to find a spot within easy access to the branches, that could be reached on the Sabbath day by those who could not come for the entire time.

A grove on the shores of Silver Lake, not far from Plymouth, was next obtained—a beautiful spot with many pines. It had been a picnic ground owned by the New Haven Railroad Company and had been laid out and beautified. Here we began to be a city of tents. We established an eating tent on the grounds, nearly all boarding there.

A BAPTISMAL SCENE AT THE ONSET REUNION GROUNDS

Others began to hear of us and Brother Zimmermann with his family and many others from Philadelphia and New York District joined us. I believe it was while at Silver Lake, the afternoon meetings were discontinued and the time given to recreation. It was not easy for some of the faithful to see the time so spent, but they graciously gave way, that the needs of all might be satisfied. Frank M. Sheehy was the champion of the young people in this.

President Frederick M. Smith made his first visit east as a representative of the church while we camped at Silver Lake.

He could not preach much in those days, but he could play ball, as the Fall River boys can testify.

The city of Brockton took this lake for a water supply and again we moved. The idea of a permanent ground had begun to work in the minds of the Saints. Moving was expensive.

The next year, 1905, we camped at Touisset on the Taunton River, very accessible to Fall River and Providence. Here and at Touisset Point where we camped the following but we expect to have it paid off this season. Henry C. Smith, now our church architect, blue printed the grounds, laying out lots forty by sixty feet—reserving a liberal part of the best grove for a public park and another tract for the tabernacle plot. Calvin C. Sears was the surveyor, and Cal, Harry, and M. C. perspired many a day in getting this land surveyed and staked. Herbert Eaton, now deceased, was our electrician, and wired the main grounds and dining hall which was a great improvement over our old oil lamps.

year, we had the largest gatherings of any in our history. The Saints of the New York and Philadelphia District came in large numbers. Also the Saints from the branches near here hired teams and drove over with their families and household goods, making themselves comfortable while tenting.

We were found in 1907 at Highland Lake on the Midland Division of the New Haven Railroad. Here Walter W. Smith began the work of normal teacher training at the reunions. Everywhere, you came onto groups learning the major prophets or bounding the book of Zephaniah. This was the beginning of definite lines of educational work. Brother Joseph's last visit east was while we met in reunion at Highland Lake.

The following year we were destined to find our permanent reunion home. Through the efforts of Brother George Brayton, who has just died, was found a tract of timbered land at Onset, Massachusetts, on an arm of Buzzards Bay, one of the most beautiful bays on the Massachusetts coast. It was as central as perhaps could have been obtained. It had fine railroad and trolley facilities. It was near a town but not "of it." It looked good to our people who had journeyed with the reunions from Jonesport, Maine, to Cape Cod.

Our first purchase of land was thirty acres at a cost of $3,000, but the next year we bought twenty acres adjoining at $2,000 more, giving us about one half mile of salt water front. This fifty acres is timbered with oak and pine, except about twelve acres of salt marsh.

The Saints loaned the first $3,000 in amounts ranging from $5 to $100 until we were able to take up a subscription. The $3,000 was collected without any trouble and about $500 more which was used in clearing up the grove. When the twenty acres were purchased, the Saints again loaned the money in small amounts to pay for the land. This amount is still due

How were we to divide the land so everybody could have an equal chance for a lot? This was done by giving due notice that a drawing would be held at our next conference when all members desiring could participate. Names were put in a shoebox, and Alfred Toombs, then a child of about four years, drew out the names. The first name drawn was Samuel W. Ashton who had first choice of the lots. The second name drawn had second choice and so on until all names were drawn. About twenty took part in this drawing. Since that time any member desiring a lot simply chooses from the remaining lots and we have plenty for all. This land is not sold—but leased to the member for life with the privilege of heirs moving building away or selling. In this way we will always hold title to the land and can control it. We enjoy this equality of opportunity, for any member can choose a lot as an inheritance and can build upon it, or tent—as he desires.

In 1917, tents were difficult to get, so we decided to build a few cottages, the local bishopric financing the proposition on the installment basis from private funds. Fourteen cottages were put up—12 by 14 and 16 by 16—some with a sleeping porch and kitchenet, costing from $235 to $400. Others have increased this number until we have twenty-four cottages, a large dining hall which is used for storage during the winter, a store building and four comfort stations. Excellent water is had by driving twelve to fourteen feet in sand.

An athletic field of two acres will be ready for sports next spring—such as baseball, tennis, basket ball, etc.

The "old swimming hole" has nothing on our bathing beach at high tide. Church presidents, apostles, patriarchs, bishops, and lesser lights have all "ablutioned" here.

Our reunion ground is fast becoming the summer center for our people. Barges and auto trucks convey picnics from the branches on holidays.

When the city schools close, those who have cottages go to them with their children, who run like Indians during the summer months. Here they are under the church influence, and their associations are largely with those of the church.

Our reunion is held usually the last week of July and the first week of August, to which we most cordially invite our friends.

The immigration into the State of Maine during recent years, including the large number of French Canadians, has increased the Catholic population until Catholic communicants number over one third of the total church membership. The strongest Protestant denominations in their order are the Baptists, Methodists, and Congregationalists.—New International Encyclopedia.

Outlook for the Work in Jonesport and Eastern Maine for 1920

BY JOHN F. SHEEHY

At this time of the year of 1920 Eastern Maine has a very gloomy outlook for the missionary. With the thermometer registering twenty below zero we find the reason why our woodpile is fast diminishing. The ground is covered with two feet of snow and the Reach partly frozen over. Looking westward up the Reach, off in the distance Mount Desert looms up in her winter garment of white glistening snow, which is also the boundary line of Eastern and Western Maine. From the world renowned and beautiful Bar Harbor, the summer home of the wealthy business man, artist, and idle rich we start to take our survey of Eastern Maine.

Along the Coast

Rightly is it called the rockbound coast of Maine. Dangerous are the islands of rock that rise up out of the water and the walls of rock along the shore. Many lighthouses and whistling buoys and coast-guard stations are to be seen along the coast. Out in the darkness can be seen the flashlights, the revolving lights, and the small lights on the bars, warning of rocks and shoal waters. Recently the writer made a trip of eighteen miles down the coast in a small motor boat. With the missionary sitting on the engine box, his feet on the engine to keep warm, the man of the sea at the tiller, we watched for the lobster trap buoys as we sailed on. To hit one of these many million buoys that are to be found all along the coast might not do much damage—and then again it might result in shipwreck and loss of life. Somehow for years past our work has been mostly confined to the towns along the coast: Jonesport, Addison, Beals, Head Harbor, Kennebec, Cutler, and many other coast towns are places familiar to many of the old guard. Saints are still living who recall the days of T. W. Smith and Father Ells.

Local Conditions

In this district we find some conditions prevailing that present some very peculiar problems. The workingman of Eastern Maine is really a "journey-workman." Jonesport and Kennebec now have conditions somewhat alike. The last two years the people of Kennebec have been employed in the fish factories at Machiasport. In any coast town where you find a sardine factory these conditions prevail. Everybody works in the summer months—even father. The high school boy and girl spend their vacation in the factories. The mother, old or young, listens for the call of the "packers" and hearing it drops her housework and hustles off to her bench. It may be early in the morning or late in the afternoon, that the "call" will be heard but when the whistle blows they are ready. To hold a successful series of meetings in a coast town where a sardine factory is doing business is absolutely impossible. If it is a night when there are no fish, the tired housewife must take advantage of the spare time at home to do her housework or some cooking. The lobster fisherman in the fall is a man that devotes long hours to his toil. At the early hour of two and three he is off in his motor boat. After hauling a hundred or more traps he is back with his catch, puts his lobsters in a car (a large trap), and sells them to a buyer and he is off to "dip" herring. The herring is used for bait to catch the lobsters. This keeps him busy from early morning till late at night and sometimes all night. The lobster fishman is to be found in all the coast towns. To reach him with our message must be at a time of the year when the mad rush for the poor little lobster is over.

Back from the Coast

These rural towns and hamlets divide the year into three seasons instead of four. It is not spring, summer, fall, and winter with them, but "farming time," "blueberry time," and "lumber time." You find them at home only in the "farming time," and what a time is that to hold a series of meetings? The farmer's life during farming time at least has no time limit, unless it is the length of a spring day and part of the night. Here in Eastern Maine in our rural towns they plant their seed, do a little hoeing and cultivating, and then the whole village is likely to move away to what is called the "barrens." To visit the barrens and cast your eyes about you quickly discover that the name is misleading. Here on the barrens you can see in the month of August a beautiful and most interesting picture that only nature can produce. The ground for miles around is blue, blue with berries, for it is "berry time." Here they live in tents until the berries are all carefully raked and shipped to market or to some canning factory close by. As soon as the berries are raked they are back to harvest their crops, make hay, prepare their firewood for the cold days that are sure to come, and then it is "lumber time." The men now leave home to go into the tim-port Saints came into their own. He broke the cold ice of prejudice and won his way into the hearts of the people both in and out of the church. The church building was completed during his stay and many were sad when through the poor health of Sister Ebeling he was forced to depart. Now the church is paid for and a few improvements are under way. With a new coat of paint, the lot graded into a beautiful lawn, a concrete walk and steps made, the building will be dedicated in the summer of 1920 and presented to the Bishop.

Lives of Great Men

So wrote Longfellow: "Lives of great men all remind us," and we are reminded time and again by Jonesport's people that these men have so lived in their midst that the name of the church is thereby respected. If there is a name that is respected and loved by all the people of Jonesport it is that of Apostle U. W. Greene. During the years that these missionaries labored in Jonesport, and before the day of Elder Cushman he made many visits and held many services, converting many to the gospel of Christ. He had great faith in the future of Jonesport. Through the Spirit he greatly encouraged them to build their new church when at the time it seemed so impossible. Only eight years ago, true to his word, they had a beautiful church completed and paid for.

The Outlook

Many are interested in the gospel. Opportunity for great work in a lively Sunday school.

Young people of talent who demand attention that they might be kept in touch with the church. Once the work in Jonesport went to low water mark. Sad, but true, very few of ber lands miles "up river" and are gone from October until April. Some of my largest congregations, however, have been in just such places. The year 1920 will not change these conditions, but will afford opportunity for work, for our observation is that the so-called "old time religion" of reformation age is surely dying.

Jonesport

Here is a typical New England town. With a population of two thousand this town has no foreign element and no Roman Catholic. The chief industry is canning fish. Jonesport has an historical distinction in church history. From this beautiful, peaceful harbor went forth a colony to find a new home in old Judea, under the leadership of G. J. Adams, once a high priest in the days of Joseph. Many missionaries have visited Jonesport since that time and have held meetings in what is called the "Old Church." Going back to the days of Elder S. F. Cushman let us briefly tell of the work in Jonesport. The work then was at a very low ebb. Elder Cushman went about the town visiting the Saints and encouraging them in the faith. He soon developed a lively interest. They held many meetings and were greatly blessed of God. Then along came "Gus," Elder J. A. Koehler, who followed in the wake of Elder Cushman, and Jonesport took on new life with this young energetic servant of Christ as their leader. A larger place of meeting was necessary in a very little while, for the "Old Church" could not seat the people. A new church building was started, and with the help of several young men, who had just come into the church at this time, they went to work. During the week Elder Koehler was hard at work on the new building and working just as hard on Sunday winning his way into the hearts of the people with sermon and song. With this hard work he soon broke down. A change of climate was needed and Elder Koehler went west. Elder Robley came for a time and after him Elder F. J. Ebeling. Under his careful, spiritual leadership Jones-the children of the old Saints are in the church or ever come. Many are members of other churches. Why did they drift away? I will not attempt an answer. Shall the same story be told of the present generation that is told of the past? It will if we neglect the young of to-day. Let us push the boy movement, the girl movement with all our vigor. Let us plead their cause. Let them know that in us they can find a friend—that we are interested in their play as well as their study. In 1920 Jonesport is promised electric lights. That means power. It can be used in our work with the boy and girl to entertain and instruct. The boy loves to be called a "Scout." Many useful lessons that will be of much use to him all through life are taught in the Boys' Manual. Some people call this time devoted to the boys "time wasted" and some people call the gospel a delusion. Why? They don't know any better. The sick, the aged, and the outsider must be visited. From December to May is the only time that a successful series of meetings can be conducted. The interest must be kept intact. As swings the pendulum, so swing the emotions of the people. Preach the word. The labor is bound to bear fruit.

The Outlook Demands a Change

The work in the district needs consecrated, devoted workers. Let me say here with all due respect to those concerned that after years of study as to the needs of Eastern Maine, a mistake has been made in this: a young inexperienced man has been sent into Eastern Maine as missionary, with a great field of work before him yet with no knowledge as to how to work. Jonesport has had some able men. Jonesport needs a pastor. If we have a true vision as to the outlook we can see clearly that these two changes should be made. For the advancement of the work, with such an encouraging outlook for the future we trust that the missionary for 1920 will be a man of experience not only to direct but to labor. As a young man we feel that the past has not been successful because of youth and inexperience. Eastern Maine has not yet reached her zenith, but the time is ripe.

A Reminiscence

BY TERESSA T. SEARS

Living away from Saints and with few opportunities to meet with those of like precious faith, my mind often reverts to the associations enjoyed in the past and, as I think of the blessings that have come to me as a member of the household of faith, I rejoice that in the days of my childhood I heard the gospel story and recognized it as coming from God.

A missionary of the "old organization" had found his way to the shores of Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and there told the gospel message. It was the same gospel that Christ told to the men of Galilee and so it found a ready acceptance among the humble fisherfolk of Dennisport. A branch was organized and prospered. The church appealed to rich and poor, the esteemed of the town and the humble. Suddenly there began to be whisperings that all was not well with the church in the West. Vague rumors flew through the air that a dreadful doctrine was being taught by the church; then came the verifications of the report that shame and dishonor had fallen upon the church. All was confusion; some of the Saints went west, others scattered, never again coming under gospel influences. A very few of the once-flourishing branch remained faithful, waiting for God to reveal his will to them.

When in the winter of 1865-66 Elder Thomas Gilbert of Fall River came to Dennisport with the news of the Reorganization and that young Joseph Smith had taken his father's place and the church again had a leader, he found a mere handful of Saints and the name Latter Day Saint a hiss and a byword.

The blight of polygamy was attached to the name, and in the eyes of the general public to be a Latter Day Saint was the equivalent of being associated with the Devil. Well do I recall the excitement caused in the town by the arrival of two elders in November, 1866. Many of the younger generation looked from the windows and gazed after the men as they passed in the street expecting to see real horns and hoofs upon them. It was not an enthusiastic welcome that greeted the gospel message this time. It required more faith and courage to accept it under these conditions than when first it had been preached in town; but in spite of slander and persecution those who were hungry for truth opened their homes for meetings.

A few had been baptized by Elder Thomas Gilbert in the early spring, and these formed the nucleus of a branch which was organized at the home of Sister Foster Rumert, November 26, 1866. At this meeting John Smith presided and John Gilbert acted as clerk, Ebenezer Joy was elected president and James Eldridge priest of the branch. There were nine or ten members at this time. One of those left from the original branch was "Uncle" Nehemiah Eldridge, for many years a familiar figure to the Saints of Dennisport, and never did he fail to state in his testimony that he was a member of the "old organization" and in later years to compare himself to the Apostle Paul. Many a quiet smile has passed over the faces of his young hearers as "Uncle 'Miah" testified, "Last night I went clean down from Genesis to Revelation." To us it seemed a long trip from the garden of Eden to the New Jerusalem to take in one night, but we admired the constancy of the old man in his allegiance to the faith once delivered unto him and for his unflinching testimony.

My oldest sister, Effie Joy, a young married woman, lived in the village and often attended these meetings. In a little while she and her husband were baptized. My home was on the border line of the adjoining town, a short distance away, and often I was allowed to come to Sister Effie's and remain over night. It was a great pleasure to me to visit her. It was on one of these visits that I accompanied her to one of these meetings of which I had heard so much said. It was a prayer and testimony meeting held at the home of Sister Hannah Humphrey, another of the faithful few left from the old branch. The meeting was presided over by the branch president, Ebenezer Joy, and Thomas W. Smith who had been sent here on a mission.

To me everything was new and strange and my childish eyes took note of everything that went on. To be sure the people present were all known to me, but there had been so much discussion that I wondered how different a Latter Day Saint meeting would be from the Baptist meetings which my family attended.

Elder T. W. Smith had charge of the service, and, fresh as though it were but yesterday, I can hear the Saints singing from the little red hymn book, "We are wandering here as strangers and as exiles from our homes."

There was a spirit manifested in that singing which I then felt and have always remembered. I noticed how different the prayers sounded from those to which I was accustomed. After the prayers came the testimonies. Never shall I forget the thrill that went through me as Jane Humphrey placed her hand on my shoulder and spoke in tongues. "Strange gibberish," townsfolk called it, and said these were a peculiar people. Peculiar they were, for the knowledge was given me that night that they were the people of God and that this woman spoke by the power of God. Sister Foster Rumert gave the interpretation, encouraging words to the branch and to T. W. Smith, which I do not now recall. The Spirit of God was poured out upon the Saints in that meeting. Many spoke in prophecy and Sister T. W. Smith sang in tongues, the most beautiful singing I had ever heard.

I went home filled with what I had seen and heard, thinking how delighted my parents would be with the glad tidings I was bringing. To my dismay my father heard my story in silence then said, "Teresa, if you go to those meetings I can not let you visit Effie."

I was brought up to render obedience to my parents yet many times after, while visiting my sister, I accompanied her to the meetings and said nothing of it at home. There was a drawing power to them that I could not resist.

A short time before this happened my sister had been gladdened by the word of the Lord coming through Jane Humphrey that not only would her father come into the church, but also his children and his children's children. Father was at that time a deacon in the Baptist Church and would not come out to hear the Saints.

The fulfillment of the prophecy began in October, 1870, when our father, Wellington Bearse, was baptized and in a few years ordained to the office of elder. In January, 1871, my oldest brother, Eliel Franklin Bearse, was led into the cold waters of the Atlantic Ocean for baptism and in April, 1874, mother's name was put upon the church record. Years have brought about the rest. To-day upon the church record are the names of six children, fifteen grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, a witness that the word of the Lord is sure to those that seek to keep his command.

Many marvelous manifestations of God's power have been witnessed among the Saints of Dennisport. The blind have been made to see, the deaf to hear, and the lame to walk. Angels have met with us in our services, their presence being known to many of the congregation and their songs heard. The power of darkness has also made itself felt. Many prophecies have I heard, and in the passage of years seen their fulfillment.

The branch was at one time the largest in the district. For years the district conferences were held at Dennisport, but now it is one of the smallest branches, many having passed on to their reward. Some have wearied of the race and dropped by the wayside; many others have moved to the manufacturing cities and there helped to build up the work of the Lord. It has been visited by nearly every elder and missionary who has ever come to this eastern district. As some one has quaintly expressed it, "There has been preaching enough in Dennisport to sink all Cape Cod."

Dennisport has passed through many vicissitudes. It has prospered and dwindled, revived for a season and then declined in accordance with the prophecy spoken in its early history that the branch should "reel to and fro like a drunken man; it shall fall but by the power of God be raised up and the work shall never come to naught in Dennisport." There have been times when only a few sisters, oft-times only six, have met in the little chapel and with no member of the priesthood to lead them have prayed together, given their testimonies, and then gone home strong in their faith that God would yet send some one to build up the work. Through their faithfulness the work was kept alive, and the chapel tidy and in repair.

Often as I go about my daily tasks wishing that some Latter Day Saint lived near enough to come in and talk with me about the gospel there rise before me the faces of those sisters I knew in my girlhood days and I hear again the valiant testimonies of Aunt Hannah Humphrey, Jane Humphrey, Foster Rumert, Jane Eldridge, and others. In memory I hear again the sweet singing of Sister T. W. Smith and Rebecca Ann Chase. One memory recalls another and then my heart swells with gratitude to God that in the days of my youth he led me among his people and that ever since he has guided and directed me, adding to the knowledge he gave me at the first Latter Day Saint meeting I attended, line upon line, precept upon precept.

Our Missionary Outlook in New England for 1920

BY ARTHUR B. PHILLIPS

Three aspects of this mission are more or less observable, that may be largely localized. In southern Maine response to missionary effort is characterized by enthusiasm and religious fervor, usually. The members are apt to be aggressive in their efforts to supplement the work of the missionary in their midst, and the people are generally quite approachable and easily interested in scriptural subjects. This is also true of localities in other States where the modern amusement curse has not sapped the people of spiritual desire, but not to as wide an extent perhaps.

Many openings are doubtless available here, but those already obtained need the labor of every missionary thus far appointed to this territory. Missionary work in the branches is also in much demand, due in part, to the facility with which "outsiders" may be reached by protracted effort, and also to the difficulty of maintaining complete and effective activities by the branch organizations.

In Massachusetts and Rhode Island is found most of the membership of all New England. The industrial advantages found here serve as a financial magnet to draw from localities less favored—but for the same and other reasons less opportunity is afforded one to obtain satisfactory results from missionary work, with few exceptions, though this disadvantage is somewhat modified by the benefits of stronger branch organizations as a rule.

Greater conservatism and less religious fervor appear to characterize this part of the mission, but the staunch fidelity of those who become members would indicate that this is to be attributed to the difference in social conditions rather than a lack of real interest in church work. Indeed there appears to be equal activity but of a more varied character.

As yet, openings in this section are few and not as readily obtained nor as productive as could be desired. On the other hand, very little real pioneer work has been done for years. Two difficulties are, that missionaries have been localized in their efforts on account of the benefits of local assistance, and very few have been appointed to this field, hence, local opportunities absorbed practically their entire time. With more missionaries appointed to pioneer work and financially well supported, there are reasons for feeling confident of encouraging results awaiting us.

From present indications, the prospects for numerical increase appear to be better in Maine and Connecticut, in ratio to the present membership, than elsewhere. The elements of support, financially and otherwise, are to be noticed there in particular. However, the center part of the latter State and also the States of New Hampshire and Vermont are virgin soil, practically nothing having ever been accomplished there. These fields should be opened and vigorously and persistently cultivated.

There seems no good reason to doubt that for the time and money expended, satisfactory results will follow. The initial expense must naturally be greater than will be required after permanent openings have been effected, but not necessarily more than in many other places.

In this large territory there is not one branch in existence, yet Vermont is the birth state of the one who by God's direction was the chief instrument in founding the latter-day work.

The entire population of New England embraces one fourteenth part of continental United States, but in ten of its cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, there is no branch of the church. Its area is more than sixty-six thousand square miles, or nearly the size of Missouri, but within that area there are one hundred and seven cities of more than ten thousand inhabitants each, in which not one branch of the church can be found. With the exception of eight branches, the efforts resulting in local organizations have been confined to small towns and rural communities. Doubtless these accessions have served as feeders to the city branches, but many strategic points have been neglected, possibly because of the greater immediate expense involved in prosecuting the work at these points.

For nearly one half of this entire territory there is only one man in the field whose appointment is to missionary work. The outlook for 1920 then will depend on the number and character of the appointments made to this mission and on the financial and moral support accorded those who are sent here. In the event of these being supplied sufficiently, the result should, I believe, be a gratifying increase in numbers and the establishment of the work in new localities.

In nearly every part of this mission, where the work has secured a footing, the morale of the membership and friends of the church is distinctly encouraging at the present time.

If a proper coordination of these forces can be secured and given unified direction and administration, there is reason to look forward with hopeful anticipation to the completed year as the precursor of bigger and better things to be realized in the years to follow.

The three M's: Men, Morale, and Money are potent factors in bringing us that success for which we labor and pray; and when this blessed trinity envisions the glory of God, the millennium is not a distant hope.

Outlook of the Work in the Massachusetts District for 1920 branches, a number of which are very small but have devoted officers and members.

Attleboro. Presided over by E. B. Hull, a conference appointee. He has had branch experiences in some of the larger branches and has the work well in hand. There are quite a number of active young people here, and they have a fine choir. Prospects very good.

Boston. Presided over by Edward L. Traver, a successful business man. Evangelist Richard Baldwin has given most of his time to this branch since being assigned here. It is in fine working condition, with considerable talent to use and the prospects are very good.

Brockton. Presided over by Ensign Baker. He has the confidence of the people and is a safe leader. They meet in a hall. They have quite a good-sized building fund on hand. Recently a number were baptized. Their membership is 54. Located in one of the largest shoe manufacturing cities in the world. Prospects good.

Cranston, Rhode Island. Located in a small manufacturing place. Several of the young men of the branch went to war; other discouragements arose; the branch ceased to function, and meetings ceased to be held. Elder B. F. Harrington and wife were asked to look after the work and now matters are running smoothly, the soldiers have returned and are faithfully doing their part. They have their own church building. Prospects encouraging.

Dennis Port. Located on Cape Cod. Presided over by Elmer Lewis. This branch was organized in 1866, John Smith of Lamoni, well known throughout the church, acted as chairman at the time. Apparently there is not much of a future for the work here as the town is on the decline so far as permanent residents are concerned. The young people are going to the cities. There is a membership of 53, largely made up of elderly sisters, who faithfully help carry on the work. This branch has sent out many faithful workers and its influence has been quite extended. Two baptisms took place recently.

Fall River. Located in a great cotton mill city. Organized in 1865. They have a very comfortable church which has recently been renovated and is in fine condition. Many have left this branch to go to other cities, yet it seems to hold its own. Elder Harry Howlett is faithfully acting as its shepherd. Apostle F. M. Sheehy's brother lives here and has been a faithful officer for many years. Membership at the present time 108. The city is about eighty per cent Catholic, so proselyting prospects are not very flattering, but I think the prospects for the branch are very good.

Haverhill. The work has never made very much progress in this thriving shoe manufacturing city; however we have a very earnest band of Saints there, meeting in a hall and keeping the work going. Elder Leon Jordan is faithfully acting as the pastor over the faithful little flock. Membership 33.

Little Compton. A small branch of fourteen members with a Sunday school of about 30. They have their own church building and if speakers were available for Sunday evening services, prospects there would be good. Elder Howlett looks after them at the Sunday morning service.

New Bedford. Membership 64. Abram Law, pastor. The church building here is the equal of any in the district and there is a very faithful band of Saints holding aloft the banner of King Emmanuel. This is the home branch of our talented Lucie Sears known throughout the church. As there are a number of young people active in the work, the prospects for this branch are good.

Plymouth. In charge of Benjamin Leland. Membership 42. They have a very neat chapel, but wish to eventually build in another part of the city, so they have a building fund in operation. There are a number of young people developing, so the prospects are fair for this place.

Providence. Presided over by Daniel Joy, a successful business man, whose life has been dedicated to service for the Lord. Membership over 300. They have a nice church in a good location. There are a number of talented speakers here, whom we use to help out some of the other branches and also in proselyting efforts. The branch has good financial backing and they take a deep interest in spiritual matters. The prospects are very good.

General Observations. The district owns a fine reunion ground, located at the head of Buzzards Bay, near the famous Cape Cod Canal. These annual gatherings are a potent force for good in the district, and all-around development of the people. As the grounds are being improved this year and means are being considered whereby the cost of meals will be reduced, we expect a large gathering this year, consequently a better outlook for the district work.

Proselyting Prospects. The writer is the only conference appointee who can travel through the district, so proselyting is largely confined to the branches. Doctor Sinclair and Brother Blanchard are making an effort to place the work before the people of the beautiful, busy city of Lynn and are making progress. Brethren Roberts and Johnson of Providence have the real missionary spirit. We have newly baptized Saints at Westerly and Killingly.

The Baptists, et al, seem to be making persistent efforts to reach our people by sending them advertising matter relating to LaRue's book written against us. The law of recompense seems to be in operation in this connection. We have recently had a number of fine people baptized into the church, who were Baptists, who are now rejoicing with us.

The outlook for proselyting in this district will largely depend upon the appointing powers.

I believe it is generally conceded the older a country the firmer are its customs and religions fastened upon its people. Conservatism is the normal state of mind. The existence of these branches is a tribute to the faithful laborers in the Lord's vineyard. Their continued existence is a tribute to the claims of the restored gospel. Their existence is a tribute to the honest desire of the people who have come out of the world and the creeds of men, putting aside tradition and accepting the beautiful restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are rejoicing in its blessings and their children are rejoicing that light has come to them, to guide them in the footsteps of the meek and lowly one.

An Abbreviated History of the Boston Branch

BY M. C. FISHER

The Boston Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized by Apostle James W. Gillen, missionary in charge of the Eastern States Mission, June 23, 1867, consisting of six or seven members. Elder George C. Smith, president; Elias N. Webster, clerk.

At the Massachusetts District conference held in December, 1867, the Boston Branch reported a membership of 23, only one of whom remains on our branch records to-day.

From February to April, 1873, the branch was reported disorganized, but when again organized at the latter date embraced the members of a branch in Waltham. Total membership 19.

Until 1889 the Saints met in their homes or in hired halls; then a small church was purchased on Howard Avenue, Roxbury. The congregation was small, and the debt heavy, so after occupying it about four years, it was sold and an amount of $2,600 was held in the treasury as a nest egg toward a church home in the future.

Again the Saints opened their homes to the prayer meetings and other social gatherings, while the Sunday services were held in halls. In 1899 a small chapel at 54 Broadway, Somerville, was rented, and used exclusively by us for all services. Here we stayed until the spring of 1905, when our present church was ready for occupancy. The lot cost $1,500. The church was built by H. D. Gerrish, from plans drawn by A. B. Phillips, at the cost of about seven thousand dollars. Bishop E. L. Kelley came on for the formal opening. The total enrolled membership is 617. The present membership is 235 with a scattered membership of about 65.

Thirteen good men have presided over this branch in the fifty-two years since its organization. Namely:

George C. Smith, 11 years.

Elias N. Webster, 11 years.

A. H. Parsons, 1½ years.

Joseph Woodward, ½ year.

Richard Bullard, 11 years.

M. C. Fisher, 9 years.

John D. Suttill, 3 months.

E. H. Fisher, 9 months.

C. H. Rich, 1 year.

R. W. Farrell, 2 years.

H. J. Davison, 2 years.

S. A. Burgess, 8 months.

E. L. Traver, 3 years and still in office.

Perhaps there is no other branch in the country so subject to the ebb and flow of its congregation as is the Boston Branch. Saints living in outlying districts, particularly Maine, contribute much during the winter season, as they come here to get work, and to attend schools. We feel justly proud of some who have made this their church home, and have been trained for fields of greater usefulness in the church.

THE SAINTS' CHURCH AT 10 SEWALL STREET, BOSTON

Gradually we have paid off the debt, and have now dedicated this building to the Lord—and ourselves to the cause for which it stands.

The Sunday School and the Religio of the Western Maine District

BY H. A. KOEHLER

There are seven Sunday schools and three Religios in this district. The following places are listed as having Sunday schools: Stonington, Vinal Haven, Mountainville, Little Deer Isle, Sargentville, Dixfield, and West Surry. There are Religios at Stonington, Vinal Haven, and Sargentville.

The Stonington Sunday school has prospered under the able leadership of Brother George Knowlton. Although their numbers have diminished very perceptibly, there is a manifest interest by those who have remained there. Considering the scattered condition of the members of the Vinal Haven school which numbers 28, the attendance and zeal shown is not excelled in any of the Sunday schools in the church. It is well to remember that they hold the Christmas offering banner for 1917. Brother Eugene Barton, their superintendent, is seeing that all do their bit in developing the school. And if the herring catch is good in 1920, they will make every Sunday school in the church hump to get ahead of them in the Christmas offering. The Little Deer Isle

Sunday school is still on the map with the Billings, Eatons, and Plastows composing the greater part of the membership. Brother Al. Billings is at the head of the "triple alliance." Uncle John Billings still attends school, and at the age of eighty-four makes the youngsters hop lively to get there any more times than he does although he walks two miles to get there. "Hosea B." Eaton is still numbered among their singers, and long ago was considered as a permanent fixture to the school. In Sargentville we have a small body of stickers numbering twenty-three who have selected Arthur Robbins as their leader. While their average attendance is small, they are able to draw a good churchful of people on special occasions, who walk from ten to twelve miles over the country roads. Most everything is country east of the Penobscot River. At Mountainville, West Surry, and Dixfield we have a noble few who are striving against innumerable obstacles to keep things afloat and to make sail.

One really needs to know the fluctuation of business, and the itinerant ways of the people east of Rockland in Maine to fully appreciate the hard work the officers of each school have in "keeping school" at all. And very seldom have they an opportunity to increase their attendance because of the change of things from spring to summer and during the rest of the seasons. Men and boys are called away during the spring to go yachting, fishing on the Grand Banks, or freighting along the coast. A great many are called upon to "tend slips" and run boats and autos for the summer people. This takes away most all of the men from May to December, some returning during October and November. During the last two years those who ply or work along the coast near home during the summer go away from their homes to seek employment in some of the industrial centers for the winter. We have not a single school in Maine in an industrial center or in a city, nor ever had one since our work has been established in Maine to my knowledge. And as a consequence there is a lack of permanency to our work. This accounts for the fact of our people having to go somewhere else to get work. Logging camps take many more of our male members during the winter. Our women folks are the only ones to rely upon for support even during the winter months. And even they are busy during the spring and summer, and sometimes late in the fall with the summer people, in hotels and private homes, who flock to this State in great numbers. Our girls go to the summer hotels and blueberry fields where they work until the season has gone by. This incessant moving around keeps our schools intermittently changing, and to those officers who are able to keep things going I take off my hat. Stonington gives us a good illustration of the changes that are being brought about in most every place where we have a Sunday school. At one time this town was animated with life through the different stone quarries that came into being. The Sunday school there numbered ninety-five until the business fell flat and almost everyone was compelled to "board ship" and seek for other quarries where we had no branch. This left but a mere handful to attend the school. At different stages the quarries would start up to go only a few months, and then shut down. Just now there is hardly a hammer struck at the quarries and consequently the Sunday schools have but a handful to keep things going. Many people are moving west of the Penobscot River, and this part of the State is largely given over to the summer tourists.

We hope soon to be able to commence several schools in the near future in some of the industrial centers, as negotiations to this effect have been going on with our members who reside there.

This is the present aspect of the Sunday schools in this district. As to Religio we are unable to give an extensive outlay of its work, only to say that the same conditions confronting the Sunday school affects the Religio.

At different stages such men as Daniel Macgregor, E. B. Hull, F. G. Ebeling, Johnny Sheehy, and the writer have acted as district workers or superintendents, and I believe the scholars as a whole have appreciated their efforts.

The Sunday School Work in Massachusetts

BY LUCIE H. SEARS

In 1865 Elder J. W. Gillen came to Fall River with the news of the Reorganization and there, December 3 of that year, organized the first branch in Massachusetts. Here also was the first Sunday school, attended by the children of the Hacking, Rogerson, Gilbert, and McKee families. Later we learn of Sunday schools being formed at Dennisport, Providence, Attleboro or Plainville, and Boston.

Quite different than our modern schools were these old-time gatherings at which children and their elders studied a chapter of the Bible. There were no Quarterlies, no lesson helps, no pictures for the children, no cheerful marching songs for the little folks, the use of maps and blackboard almost unknown, yet in spite of all that they lacked of what we consider necessary equipment for a Sunday school those schools were successful. They filled a need and satisfied a longing for instruction and social intercourse.

A prominent feature of the Sunday school curriculum was the study and recitation of Bible verses. Prizes were bestowed upon those who made the best and longest recitation of Bible verses and it was not uncommon for small children to recite several chapters. Among the treasures of my mother was a small thin book that she received from the superintendent of the Dennisport school for her recitation of four chapters from the book of Matthew.

When that pioneer in Sunday school progress, Sister Walker, brought out her little brown Question Book it was hailed with delight, a harbinger of the Quarterlies that were to follow, and was soon in use in the Sunday schools of Massachusetts, each pupil or family buying one as Sunday school funds were not then used for such purposes. The introduction of a textbook marked the beginning of a new era in Sunday school work. It tended toward uniformity of work in the district and was the first step toward the union of schools that came when the time was ripe.

The Sunday School Union of Massachusetts

Things run along in a certain groove for years it may be, then suddenly to one here, to another in a different part of the country, comes a thought that spells progress, the influence of that thought, unspoken as yet, is felt. It is "in the air" and the time is ripe for another revolution of the wheels of progress.

Not only has Sister Sears been a bulwark of strength in church work in the East, but she has written the present series of intermediate grade lessons used in all our Sunday schools.

To George W. Robley, the wide-awake superintendent of the Boston Sunday school, such a thought came. He began to consider the possibilities of a union of the schools in the district, and saw that in this way they could act more in harmony and secure greater uniformity in the lessons studied. About this time he read an account of such a Sunday school union formed somewhere in the Middle West, and at once decided the time had come to introduce his plan. At this juncture we will quote Brother Robley:

"I spoke to Brother Greene about my plans and he approved. Conference soon convened at Boston over which Brother Greene and Brother Bond presided. In the business session Saturday evening I brought up the matter and presented my plan, which was this: Every school in the district to be notified that there would be a meeting called at Providence, Rhode Island, on a certain date for the purpose of organizing the Sunday schools of the district into a district association, that they might act more in harmony with each other and secure more uniformity in their methods of conducting services and in their studies. It was voted that the schools be notified and the convention held at Providence.

"July 27, 1889, this convention met in Providence in a hall on Westminster Street. Brother Myron H. Bond presided over the meeting, which was attended by delegates from all the schools in the district comprising the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. Brother M. H. Bond presided over the business meeting held Saturday evening. After the nature of the meeting was explained the body selected a nominating committee consisting of Richard Bullard, George Yerrington, and one other, who presented the names of George Robley for superintendent, George Gates for assistant superintendent, Julia Glover, secretary and treasurer. These were approved by the body.

"The convention was a very spiritual one, the order of exercises being very similar to those held to-day. Sunday morning we had a prayer meeting; in the afternoon a general meeting was held at which we discussed Sunday school topics; in the evening the Providence school gave a concert which I recall as being excellent.

"At our business session we voted to have some rules printed to govern us and I was selected to get that work done. I began my work as superintendent by visiting the schools in the district to find out what was needed, that we might all be working together. I was kindly received and found the Saints willing to conform to the new order and to try out what some considered 'advanced ideas.' We had to go slow at first as we did not have the talent that developed later in the work. However, we had some good workers and we began to write essays and take up a systematic study of Trumbull and other books on Sunday school work.

"During my term of office conventions were held in the larger branches, Providence, Dennisport, Plainville, and I think one was held at Boston. It was some time before the entire time of convention was devoted to Sunday school work. We had to fight continually to keep the convention out of the district conference as there were some who wished to shove it in a corner and give it an hour at conference. We considered the Sunday school of sufficient importance to have its own place so I used all the influence possible to keep it separate from the conference. I still think I was right in doing that.

"All this was before there was any association formed by the church. Massachusetts was the second district in the church to organize and when the general church organized a Sunday school association we at once joined."

Brother Robley was followed by George Gates of Providence, E. H. Fisher, M. C. Fisher, Albert L. Sanford of Boston, all of whom brought to the district work new methods and new interest. Through the systematic study of Trumbull and other standard texts on Sunday school work there had grown up a corps of workers who made the name of Massachusetts District known in the church as a result of their zeal and enthusiasm. Among those workers were Ora Holmes, for over twenty years secretary of the district and for a number of years a director of the musical work done in the district; the "Fisher boys," E. H. and M. C., both teachers who contributed the views and standards of pedagogues to the work, thus bringing it to a higher standard; Susie Blanchard, Ruth Sheehy, Daniel Joy, Edward Fox, Josie Gerrish, Florence and Ada Sanford, Florence Smith, Georgie Goff, Arthur Phillips, Arthur Crocker, John Suttill, Susie Gilbert, Fred Roberts, and many others.

Massachusetts has ever been interested in the Sunday school and tried to keep abreast of the times in the work. A willingness to try out plans of the superintendents, to take suggestions and to make use of them has characterized the schools and placed the district in the front ranks of progressive districts.

Massachusetts was one of the first districts, if not the first, to have a primary superintendent, who visited the various schools to instruct the teachers in the methods of teaching the little folks. Sister Susie Gilbert of Fall River in her early teens began to teach the small children in Sunday school. A consecrated worker, she became very successful and under her training there grew up a group of young women, who are doing efficient work in the primary department of the various schools.

An Experiment in Superintendents

For twenty years the affairs of the district association were directed by members of the priesthood chosen to serve as superintendents. Then the convention did something that surprised itself—a woman was elected superintendent without a dissenting vote and another woman chosen as her assistant. Perhaps it was the influence of another thought "in the air," suffrage was being discussed at the time. Once again Massachusetts put itself on record as being in favor of progress, and the names of Lucie Sears and Mary Lewis were written in the secretary's book as the new superintendents. Some of the conservative members thought it a dubious experiment, but none regarded it more dubiously than the young superintendent whose chief qualification for the position seemed to rest upon the fact that she was a school-teacher. To be suddenly taken from private life with only personal responsibilities and put in the limelight with the responsibility of public work is disconcerting to a young person. A younger brother with the philosophy of youth started her on the right road with this sage remark, "Cheer up. It isn't a life sentence. Those people elected you because they thought you would make good. Now show them that you can."

Whether that superintendent "made good" only time will tell. Summer school courses in Sunday school work, teacher training, and executive problems helped her to meet the problems of the district and to help others struggling to improve their work. The people of the district gave her loyal support, helping her over the rough places with words of encouragement and appreciation, working all together to build up the district and make it first grade in the association which position it held for several years. For nine years Massachusetts continued its experiment, until the superintendent thought it had passed beyond the experimental stage and was becoming a habit. The present superintendent is Edward Yerrington of Hartford, Connecticut, formerly a general worker in the teacher training department of the association.

Massachusetts has eleven schools in its district association: Attleboro, Brockton, Boston, Dennisport, Fall River, Little Compton, New Bedford, Haverhill, Plymouth, Fiskville, Providence, and an aggregate membership of about nine hundred.

Conventions for many years were held semiannually in conjunction with the Religio, the entire time being devoted to auxiliary interests in class work, lectures, talks, and workers' conferences. Written papers have passed almost into oblivion. Our young people are learning to talk to an audience rather than to read at it. In 1918 it was voted to have conventions annually.

During the past decade many important changes have come about. Graded lessons are filling a long-felt want, but as we continue to grow, so must they change to meet those needs. Institutes have become a prominent feature of the Massachusetts reunion, and there is a closer relationship between the Sunday school of Massachusetts and the church than ever before.

From the secretary's book I take two resolutions passed at recent conventions that show the trend of the Sunday school work in the district:

November 11, 1916. "There shall be an educational committee consisting of the superintendent, associate superintendent, and one other chosen by the body, the same to be elected annually. The duty of this committee shall be to supervise the educational interests of the district which may be summarized as follows:

"To do all in its power to institute promotion day throughout the district; prepare suitable examinations which may be used as a standard for promotion; to arrange for awarding of diplomas; to promote religious educational interests of the district."

May 12, 1917. "In consideration of the growing needs of the Sunday school of Massachusetts District, and whereas the time now allotted for the Sunday school work at reunion is extremely short, we the Massachusetts District in convention assembled respectfully petition the reunion presidency when appointed to allow two hours for institute work each day of the reunion."

Institute Work at Reunion

The first institute was held at Highland Lake reunion in 1896 under the direction of Walter W. Smith. It was called the Highland Lake School of Methods. Classes were formed to take up the study of Hurlbut's Normal Course.

Under the direction of Daniel Macgregor the institute was a feature of the Onset Reunion the following year, and with the years has grown in importance until now it is a necessary part of the reunion.

So many isolated Saints attend reunion that it has become to them like a summer school where they learn what is doing in the branches and general church and where they come in contact with those who are workers in the church. It is these people and the young people that we desire to reach so we are trying to make our reunion institutes educational and present the phases of the work that seem to be most needed at the time, using the best talent at our disposal.

Dedication of the Boston Branch

[The following letter was written by Sister Alice E. Fielding, for three years in charge of the infant class work, that is the primary and beginner departments in the Boston Sunday school. It is a beautiful expression when we remember that it is only about a year since she lost her companion, Brother Tom Fielding, who was also taking a great interest in the work. His beautiful tenor voice was missing on this noteworthy occasion.—EDITORS.]

Around the first of November, after valiantly trying to bring our Christmas offering up to an amount that we had set and having accomplished that fact, we felt that we could rest upon our oars. But, on the first Sunday of the month, Brother Baldwin came to church and startled us by telling us that it had been shown to him that we were to make an effort to pay the debt on the church and he had a plan of campaign whereby he meant, with our united help, to raise two thousand dollars before the end of the year.

It quite took our breath away, for had we not been doing as much as we could for many years and had not been able to pay more than interest and upkeep? A great many shook their heads and said, "It can't be done." But Brother Baldwin met with scarcely any refusals as he went from one home to another and asked for pledges to be paid before December 15.

And, though Brother Baldwin had to go home on account of his physical condition, our president, E. L. Traver, took hold of the campaign and carried it to its completion. So on Sunday, January 4, we were able to dedicate our church building.

With what joy in our hearts did we go fasting to the sacrament service with a prayer on our lips that the Lord would add his blessing to the event. We had a wonderful meeting and everyone was so anxious to express their joy that often three and four were on their feet at one time. We had present with us Bishop Richard Bullard, who had been with the Boston Branch in its early struggles and whom the people regard as a father and dear friend. We also had Brother C. Ed Miller, the district president, and Patriarch Richard Baldwin.

During the sacrament meeting, Brother Bullard prophesied about the glorious things that were for us in our future as a branch and Brother Baldwin verified that which had been given and also added a word of warning and caution to the Saints, which everyone took to himself.

Brother Traver, the president of the branch, told us of the many things we had to be thankful for, among them that Brother Bullard was able to be with us on this momentous day and how everything he had prayed for had turned out just as he had asked, even the weather, it being a glorious day, which enabled so many to get to the services.

At three o'clock we again gathered with our hearts full to overflowing and the Spirit of God with us to a great degree. The church was full, and as the word came to us in the morning that many of the honest in heart would be gathered in we wondered how many of those, our dear friends, would be among that number.

Brother Myron C. Fisher read a history of the branch and many were touched by the Spirit on hearing the names of the many workers who had made up our history, some who have left us for other fields of usefulness and some who have gone on before us, but whom we will meet again some day. And many of the names are of those who are still with us who have not always had the pleasant surroundings that we have now and who have borne the harder part of the work for us to enjoy their efforts.

Then came the dedicatory prayer by Patriarch Richard Baldwin and all who have heard Brother Baldwin pray may know with what beautiful language he presented the building to God and presented God's children to him also, to be more fully dedicated from that day to the service of God. Surely such prayers must reach the throne of grace and everyone who heard must have felt the Spirit to such an extent that it moved upon them to give all that they have to the service of God.

The dedicatory sermon was preached by Bishop Richard Bullard and will long be remembered by those who heard it. It seemed so fitting that Brother Bullard should have this honor as he had worked so valiently in former years to build up the branch.

Then followed the presentation, by our president, Brother Edward L. Traver, of the key and deed of the building to Bishop Myron C. Fisher, representing the general bishopric of the church who, in a few touching words, accepted the same and in turn presented the key to the local deacons.

We must not forget the special music which was one of the beautiful features of the service. The choir, under the direction of Sister Enenora Whiting, rendered an anthem and Sister Whiting sang a solo. There was also a ladies' quartet. We had visiting us Professor Fredyum Hendrickson, who is not yet a member of the church and gives as his reason that he is not good enough. He played a violin solo which held the congregation breathless until after the last note died away. Some one remarked that he did not play alone and others said they could hear the angels. It surely was a beautiful thing and none who heard it will ever forget it.

And so our dedication service was over. But in the evening we again had a treat in listening to one of Brother C. Ed Miller's incomparable sermons which made us realize the vastness of God's creation and his magnitude better than we have ever understood it before.

So, the most eventful and happy day in the history of the Boston Branch came to an end and everyone who attended was given an added degree of strength and a desire to live closer and re-dedicate our lives to the service of our Master.

Historical Sketch of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society

BY MARIAN E. CONGDON

Since the days when Roger Williams proclaimed the principle of absolute religious freedom in the Providence plantations there have been many beneficial impulses which have emanated from this place. Not the least of these (from the church standpoint) was one that together with others resulted in the organization of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. I believe I am safe in saying that the organization effected in Providence, 1891, did give a strong impetus to this organization for the welfare of our young people, although there had been all over the church a growing sense of the need of some organization in which the young people could function and develop, and this demand had been met locally in many places in different ways.

In the year of 1891, Elder J. F. McDowell, being located by the general church as pastor of the Providence Branch, in which there were a goodly number of young people, and being a man of literary tastes, conceived the idea of organizing the young people for the purpose of literary efforts. Accordingly he gave out invitation to all the young people to meet him at the home of one of the Saints, and when they were all assembled he announced the purpose in his mind and suggested the name for the organization, The Religio-Literary Society of the Providence Branch, which name was approved and the society organized at that meeting. This was in the fall of 1891. Under the guiding influence of Elder McDowell this organization took up some very excellent work in the study of some of the best literature and its presentation in discussions, papers, recitations, etc., and continued their work until the general organization was effected.

In visiting this Providence Society, Elder F. M. Sheehy, missionary in the Eastern mission, was impressed with the work of the society and the appropriateness of its name for a general organization for which there seemed to be a growing demand in other branches of the church. The question was brought before the General Conference of 1892 and referred to the societies for action. Elder Sheehy being one of the committee of organization at the conference of 1893, introduced the name of this Providence Society, prefixed by the word Zion's, to express its intended scope and the name was so adopted for the general society.

Boston fell in line shortly after the general organization. Attleboro was organized in 1901. Plymouth was also organized in the same year. In 1902 at a Sunday school convention held in Boston, an opportunity was given for the Religians present to organize themselves into a district. George H. A. Gates called the meeting to order. F. M. Sheehy was chosen temporary chairman. The following were chosen officers for the first six months: Ruth M. Sheehy, the Boston local president, was chosen district president; vice president, L. H. Lewis; secretary and treasurer, J. A. Leckney. This same year, the reunion granted an afternoon to be used for the promotion of Religio work, adding to institute work already being done by the Sunday school. T. A. Hougas representing both auxiliaries was in attendance there and gave much instruction. At the May convention, a motion was made to make the conventions delegate conventions, supported by collections from the locals. This system prevailed until the convention of November, 1919, when it was changed to the mass system.

In the early years of the work, many of the executive offices were filled by women. The organization in Brockton was largely effected by the efforts of Brother Frank and Sister Emma Dobbins, who going there in 1907 interested themselves in forming a Religio there.

New Bedford reports their organization to have been in 1908. All locals reporting have more than doubled their membership in the past few years.

In scanning the minutes of these early meetings, it can be noted that some very serious work was attempted in the way of discussions and papers, on many phases of church work, such as the doctrines of the church, its missionary work, its results in the lives of members; on social problems, prohibition and other reforms; and literary criticism such as "Whittier's influence on life and religion" and "Criticism of Dante's Inferno." Topics on music and art are also found in these records and various social entertainments entered into their activities.

When the Religio programs were issued, they were followed largely for the principal outline of work and later the Quarterlies with the lessons on the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants were used.

The interest and membership of the various locals have fluctuated more or less with the years and its personnel has almost entirely changed, some few drifting away into the world but the majority holding to the church work. As the older members have been called to other fields and duties, it left the Religio activities to the new and younger members, until at the present time the Religio is conducted largely by the children of the charter members and those added to its enrollment in later years.

The present officers of the district association are: President, Herman Chelline; first vice president, Frank S. Dobbins; second vice president, Peter Whalley; secretary, Marian E. Congdon; treasurer, M. C. Fisher; superintendent temperance board, Harold Garfield; superintendent library board, Raymond Garlick; superintendent gospel literature board, Verna Randall; superintendent normal board, Hazel Gates Garlick; historian, Calvin Sears; superintendent home department, Sylvia Magathlin.

EDITORIAL

The Passing of Apostle Peter Anderson

News of death of Elder Peter Anderson, for nineteen years a member of the Quorum of Twelve, was received after last week's HERALD was ready for mailing. The end came suddenly on the evening of June 1, from heart failure, and was quite unexpected.

In this issue of the HERALD for April 14, last, page 336, there appears a brief sketch of his life. For that reason we do not repeat the items here. He was in the sixty-first year of his life, and had given nearly forty years of it to the service of the church. Since the last General Conference, it had been arranged that he should act as one of the editors of Sandhedens Banner, and also engage in some special work for the church, requiring some traveling.

He has been active in the work of the church, especially in his homeland of Denmark, and the neighboring Scandinavian countries, and also in the Rocky Mountain mission. He was one of those instrumental in the establishment of Sandhedens Banner, which is a church paper published at the Herald Publishing House, in the Norse language, and has been editor in previous years. His work as an apostle has, however, interfered with his continuing editorial work.

He gave freely of his strength while it lasted, with the result that his health became such that he had been compelled to drop his most active service.

The services were held at the Stone Church in Independence, Friday, June 4, Elder Joseph Luff preaching the funeral sermon, and as many of the Twelve, and other leading officials of the church, as could possibly reach Independence in time were present.

Graceland College Commencement

The annual commencement of Graceland College, completing her twenty-fifth year of service to the church, was held at the Brick Church in Lamoni, June 2. Honorable Nate Kendall, a candidate for the nomination for governor of the State of Iowa, was the principal speaker.

In presenting the college class, Professor McDowell commented upon the fact that this is the first class that has been fully accredited, not only by the University of Iowa, but also by the North Central Association of secondary schools and colleges. This latter means that the graduates from Graceland Junior College will be accepted by other colleges, and universities in any part of the United States for the taking of advanced work.

There are sixty-five graduates presented; 15 from the junior college; 15 from the class in religious education; 9 from the shorthand and typewriting department, 8 preparatory, 4 business, 5 radio, 6 academy, and 3 from the piano department, as follows:

Graceland's Twenty-Five Years of Service

When this HERALD reaches our readers, Graceland will have completed her twenty-fifth year of service, and the faces of her officers will be turned to the future. The plan is better facilities and a better Graceland for the next quarter of a century.

The past week has been filled with college affairs, including some picnics and athletic events, along with the announced program. On the program provided by the president of the college there are three graduate recitals in the studio department, given on the evenings of May 27, 31, and June 1, in the college chapel. The Athenian graduation occurred as usual on the last Saturday evening, May 29.

The morning service on Sunday, May 30, at the Brick Church, was the baccalaureate sermon by Apostle M. A. McConeley. It was a splendid effort and especially fitted to the completion of Graceland's quarter of a century of service.

June 2 was, as has been usual in recent years, given over to Class Day and Athenian festival until evening, at which time occurred the final graduating exercises, with an address by Mr. Nate Kendall, of Albia, Iowa, candidate for governor of Iowa. As this is the date of the mailing of the HERALD, it is not possible to give a summary in this issue.

There are many events in Graceland's history the past twenty-five years worthy of note, and we hope to be able to present them to our readers before the summer is over.

Commencement in Independence

The annual commencement of the Nurses' Training School of the Independence Sanitarium and the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences was held, according to information reaching us, on the evening of Sunday, May 30, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

An excellent and appropriate program was given, including an address by Floyd M. McDowell, Ph. D.

The following graduated from the nurses' training school: Katherine Bertha Keairnes, Iowa; Dana Idella Watts, Illinois; Irene Editha Pope, British Columbia; Ina May Martin, Missouri; Laura Emogene Martin, Missouri; Henrietta McCants Dahl, California; Carmen Hatch McClean, New York; Victoria Minerva Blackburn, New York.

The pictures of the class members appeared in a recent issue of Autumn Leaves. The superintendent is Miss Sarah M. Rodgers, R. N.

The following, all of Missouri, under the directorship of Eunice Winn Smith, A. B., graduated from the normal kindergarten training course: Ella Mae Cargyle, Edna Mae Kaler, Rebecca Dickinson Mills, Edith Charlotte Orick.

The Sanitarium has the following faculty in the training school: Sarah M. Rodgers, R. N., G. L. Harrington, M. D., Joseph Mather, M. D., H. E. Braun, M. D., Calvin Atkins, M. D., E. D. Twyman, M. D., Charles Nickson, M. D., J. R. Green, A. B., M. D., W. E. Messenger, M. D., Charles Keown, M. D., William W. Hobbs, M. D., Paul Rannie, B. S., Elizabeth J. Paxton, R. N., Drucilla Messenger, R. N., May Richard, R. N., Gela Cook Moorman, R. N.

The faculty of the Independence Institute has the following personnel: Walter Wayne Smith, Ph. B., B. D., president; Eunice Winn Smith, A. B., registrar; Mabel Knipschild Smith, B. S., M. A., Roy V. Hopkins, A. B., Anna M. Mather, M. D., J. R. Green, A. B., M. D., Dora Glines, B. Pd., Ruby M. Williamson, B. Pd., Tessie Smith, Ruby McKim, Zella Harder, Etta Hunt, Arthur E. McKim, Richard J. Lambert, Gladys L. Newton, Florence Chatburn McNichols, Fannie Gurwell Pender, G. William Eastwood, Harry G. Barto, Vida Watson, Coral I. Mottashed, Louise Hagler, Esther K. Ward, Viola V. Short, librarian.

Woman Suffrage

Thirty-five States have ratified the amendment for woman's suffrage. The women of America have been waiting the past several months for the necessary one additional State. Delaware appears at present the most probable, as its legislature has been meeting, and the senate has already ratified. Still to the date of this writing, the thirty-sixth State has not as yet appeared.

It appears reasonably certain that women will vote at the presidential election this fall, but several primaries have been held and in only a small part of them have they been able as yet to vote. The delay may prevent them voting at other primaries, as Iowa holds its primary the first Monday in June, and Missouri holds its primary early in August; the primary, however, for State and local officers, as the presidential primary, was necessarily held sometime since.

Notes from a Former Missionary

Thinking that readers of the HERALD and our old-time friends might want to hear from us again, we have thought to convey through use of pen and HERALD columns, information regarding location and happenings since leaving our home in Independence, the morning of April 24, Brother Webster taking me with him in his car to Kansas City, leaving there for Davenport, Iowa. Was met at the station by Brother Amos Berve, and given a cordial and saintly welcome, and generous treatment at the hands of Brother and Sister Berve during my stay in that city. Was invited to occupy the pulpit in churches of Saints located in Davenport, Rock Island, Illinois, and Moline, during my sojourn. Favorable signs of a distinctly forward movement, especially among many of the young people, we are glad to be able to note.

Leaving Davenport on May 3 we found the country and lowlands flooded nearly all the way of our journey through Illinois. Arriving at Englewood, we found our old-time friend and brother, Joseph McGuire, awaiting our arrival with his car, and after a pleasant hour's ride, were landed at his hospitable and comfortable home in Hammond, Indiana.

Last Friday afternoon the ladies of the Hammond W. C. T. U. met in the rooms of Sister McGuire, and by previous arrangement we were introduced by the president of the society as the principal speaker, and have felt that we were aided by the Lord's Spirit in presenting to them authentic evidences of the truth of the claims made by our church as having been found by those acquainted with our history in the foremost rank of consistent and constant supporters of legislation in favor of the complete and successful suppression of the opened door of the saloon—rear or front—and annihilation of intemperance through alcoholic stimulant.

"Mother's Day" was celebrated one week ago yesterday at the South Side Church, Chicago, a full house greeting Sister Wardell Christy, who gave an excellent address and timely suggestion in regard to the evils even among our own ranks and in the homes of Latter Day Saints through the lack of sanitation in regard to physical, moral, and spiritual needs of children.

As a matter of fact, is it not true that every day is "Mother's Day," to the woman into whose care God has given children to ceaselessly watch over and control; while the father may be, and so frequently is absent in person or privilege, or perhaps disposition to control?

"A partnership with God is motherhood;
What strength, what beauty, and what self-control;
What love, what wisdom should belong to her,
Who helps God fashion an immortal soul."

Officials of the Church of Rome have said that the intellectual tendency, and the basis for the formation of a permanent character in religious matters especially, are acquired through environment, association, and teachings during the first eight years of their life.

Believing this to be largely, if not altogether true, what tremendous responsibility is placed upon the shoulders; what imperative demand for opportunity of enlightenment and dispersing of the clouds of ignorance or indifference to matters of vital and permanent value to the child by the future mothers of the race of men, whose right and duty it is becoming so clearly apparent to thoughtful or enlightened minds, that recognition of the rights of the child to be "well born," as well as to a subsequent wise and godly training in the years of early and easy or pliable training that ensue.

But what of the "Father's Day," and what of his interest or duties in this matter? But, as Kipling would say: "That is another story."

Last Sunday morning we occupied the pulpit at the South Side, and at night was invited to address the young people of the Religio Society at West Side Church. Was greatly blessed in preaching to an interested congregation of old-time associates in gospel work, and of new additions to their number since that time.

The consolations and comfort of the restored gospel have been signally emphasized in our experiences since leaving home. Nothing that we have ever found in this world approaches in interest or satisfactory result of an abiding and permanent character as the results that flow out from God and into the lives of those who yield themselves to the mandates of the law of Christ Jesus, our divine Lord.

I must mention my appreciation of some of the things we experienced at the late General Conference, referring to the prayer service by the priesthood of the church held in the lower room of the church in the early morning of April 2, and Sunday, April 4—the experiences there and then felt and witnessed by everyone, without exception, as I believe, of the power of the Holy Spirit that rested upon all, and to our mind constituted the greatest exhibition of what might properly be called “an endowment from on high,” and poured out as I have never before witnessed, under the influence and power which only the Holy Spirit enables men to pray and speak as did each and every one who engaged in oral service, in a most intelligent, convincing, comforting, and assuring way that God had not forgotten his people, or his church, and of the culminating experience felt and witnessed when Brother Elbert Smith, under great pressure and power of the Spirit, delivered a message of warning and of comfort, and in a seemingly matchless way gave us the sample of “the divine imitation” of the visible Christ.

My heart flows out in gratitude to God for his goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering toward his children. I am happy in the revival of power to still plead with people for reconciliation with the ways of God and with the unanswerable claims which the great head of the church permits its ministers to offer to a distressed and doubting world.

In gospel bonds,
M. H. BOND.

Pastoral Notices

To the Priesthood and Members of the Church in Texas: Having been appointed by the powers that be to act as group supervisor, we take this method of reaching each member of the church throughout the State, not knowing where many of you reside. Truly Texas is a large field and the laborers few, of the missionary force.

We would be pleased to hear from every member that is isolated from church privileges, and we will make an effort to reach you sometime during the year.

To the priesthood: we will appreciate a personal letter from each one of you throughout the State. I feel sure if we can so organize and have the cooperation that we should, we will be able to conserve the interests of the church far better than it would be possible for us to, working each one to himself.

Trusting the Lord will bless each one in his efforts and as a whole our work may be crowned with success, I remain your servant and coworker in bonds,

TUFF, TEXAS.

D. S. PALMER.

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Districts: There will be no conference in June. The conference will be held during the reunion; time and place to be announced later. I will be glad to hear from each branch of the district as regards their condition and need of help. Will all of our members who are absent from branches, please write the undersigned giving their addresses. Address me at 400 East Fourth Street, Holden, Missouri. I hope to be able to name a field address later.

H. E. MOLER,
District President.

To the Saints and Friends of the Idaho District and Eastern Oregon; Greeting: I am in this mission again in harmony with my appointment and I trust that I may have your hearty cooperation and kind assistance in the way of informing me of places to hold meetings, also with your presence, and in song and prayer.

I will do all in my power to serve as many as I can. The hastening time is upon us; the laborers are few; let us unite our forces, talent, and ability, and convey the angel's message to as many people as we can.

Please let us hear from you. Until further notice my address will be Minidoka, Idaho. Or if it should be more convenient for you to write Brother L. G. Holloway, do so and he will communicate with me. I will try to keep in touch with him at least once a week. Let us keep in mind the request of President Smith, “Let the slogan of the missionary force for this year be twenty thousand converts, and all their faces turned toward Zion.” While this is being done we will try to keep in mind the needs of the financial arm of the work, $1,000,000. Dear Saints, let us unite and go forward. I desire to be your servant in the gospel for Christ.

W. P. BOOTMAN.

To the Saints and Friends of the Kansas City Stake; Greeting: There never was a time more potential than the present for missionary work, and we would like to see every Saint in the stake alive to the full interest of the church, and doing everything in their power to warn their neighbors and friends of the perilous times in which we are living. Think of it, over half a million people in the two cities, and how many have ever heard of the angel message! Will you not help us to reach some of this vast number where the gospel may be presented? Have you or your neighbors a good lawn where we could hold a series of meetings or where work could be done in that locality, and thus help warn the people of the hour of God's judgment? Will the local priesthood who can spare the time assist us in an extensive campaign this year to help reach the goal set by the president of the church in our slogan “twenty thousand converts before next General Conference”? Who will help? Any having relatives or friends in the two cities that are or might be interested in our work will please send their names and addresses to me, so that we may look them up and try and interest them in our work.

The spirit of the late General Conference is still with us which makes the labor in service for Christ a delight. The people of the world are clamoring for the word of life. Shall we not do our part? Will we serve in the army of the Lord? Come, let us labor together for the accomplishment of God's purposes and thus help to redeem Zion.

All mail addressed to the undersigned at 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri, will receive prompt attention.

Your servant in Christ,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

JOSEPH ARBER.

To the Saints of the Wheeling District: Having been appointed to labor in the Wheeling District this conference year, I desire to solicit the cooperation of the members of the district in an intensive missionary effort.

We believe the existing condition of the world offers a splendid opportunity for the sowing of the gospel seed. The universal unrest and discontent only demonstrate the fact that without Christ, man's efforts to solve the problems of life are vain. Even the secular churches of the day have been compelled to admit their inability to meet the needs of the human soul. Humanity still goes on groping in the dark in search of something that will satisfy the natural longing of the soul for the Divine.

The Old Jerusalem gospel in its purity, as taught by the Master, and restored to us in these last days is the only panacea for the world's spiritual ills, and, moreover, it offers the only solution to the social and economic problems that are baffling the mind of man to-day. So we are anxious to get our message before the people. However, much time is spent by the missionary in hunting a place to preach, which often could be saved if those who know of available places would but make the effort to secure them or notify the missionary of their whereabouts. So we wish to solicit your help in this regard.

You have often wanted to get the gospel before your neighbors and friends. The opportunity is now at your command. Write to the undersigned, or to Elder J. D. Carlisle, R. F. D. 3, box 39, New Philadelphia, Ohio, and arrange for meetings in your home or some other place nearby. Then invite your friends to the services, and we will do our best to convince the honest in heart that we have the “pearl of great price.”

We also trust that those blessed with the gift of music and

song will offer their services in this noble work, as the amount of help they can render is immeasurable.

Hoping that all will cooperate in this worthy endeavor, and praying that this conference year will prove the most fruitful of our experience, I am,

Your servant,

JOHN MARTIN..

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, 3735 Eoff Street.

The Bishopric

Australia. Beginning with July 1, Bishop A. W. Craig, Union Street, Brunswick, Melbourne, Australia, will look after the work of the Bishopric in the following territory: Victoria, Southern Australia, Western Australia.

The Saints in Australia have been generous in their support of the Lord's work. We believe that with the additional help which the Lord has so graciously furnished they will be able to do more now than heretofore. As we see new fields opening before us we should move forward with renewed courage, each one determined to do his part in supplying the sinews of war, so that the battle against darkness, ignorance, and sin might be successful. Our prayer is that God will bless the Saints of this district in their temporal affairs so that the Lord's work may not suffer. Respectfully,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Far West Stake. Beginning with June 1, the work of the Bishopric in the Far West Stake will be under the direction of Bishop J. A. Koehler, 517 North Twenty-second Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

We feel that the Saints of this district are to be congratulated upon having Brother Koehler to cooperate with them in the interests of this department. He is a man of consecrated purpose and will be tireless in his endeavor to work for the interests of the Saints in his bailiwick. Among other things, he will aim to make the slogan of the Bishopric for this year—A Million Dollars Tithing—a reality, and in this we know that he will receive your hearty cooperation.

In making this appointment, we are not unmindful of the splendid services which have been rendered by Sister Minnie Scott Dobson during the interim since the former stake bishop resigned, and we make this public acknowledgement of her work. Respectfully,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Conference Minutes

POTTAWATTAMIE.—At Underwood, Iowa, May 29, 1920. Matter of two-day meetings left to district presidency, they to confer with the branch officials. District decided to purchase a tent for missionary work. Next conference in Boomer, October 2 and 3. Fontanelle Branch disorganized. Visiting missionaries were Brethren Vanderwood, Long, and Macgregor. Elsie Lapworth, secretary.

Conference Notices

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

Table with 2 columns: Article Title and Page Number. Includes items like 'A Tribute to Beautiful Maine, by Joseph Luff' (538), 'Outlook of the Work in the Massachusetts District for 1920, by C. Edward Miller' (557), and 'EDITORIAL: The Passing of Apostle Peter Anderson' (563).

Notice to Religio Workers

Religio officers and workers will please take notice that Sister Zilphia Monroe of Lamoni, Iowa, has been appointed general superintendent of the girls' department of the Religio. Sister Monroe is general supervisor of the girls in the Women's Department. This makes for coordination. For several years we have had a general superintendent of the boys' department but none for the girls'. Sister Monroe will take general supervision of the social and recreational activities of the girls of the church. We bespeak for her your hearty cooperation and support.

T. W. WILLIAMS,
General Superintendent Religio Department.

Our Departed Ones

MARSH.—Joseph Bancroft Marsh was born December 14, 1844, at Jersey City, New Jersey. Was a veteran of the Civil War, and continued in the service till 1874, during which time he was sent to the Dakotas, after which he went east for a couple of years, when he entered the service for five years, then taking up a homestead near Fort Rice where he remained till his death August 22, 1919. Mortimore, Hamburg, Iowa. Interment in Thurman Cemetery.

NEWS AND COMMENT

THE WORLD AT LARGE

Some of the largest department stores of the United States have announced a reduction of 20 per cent in their prices. The reason for this reduction is not stated. It may possibly be because the public has not been buying as freely as formerly; or it may be to reduce the cost of living, as some of the stores announce.

As the result of a controversy between William H. Anderson of the Anti-saloon League and Archbishop Hayes, head of the Catholic Church in New York State, it becomes apparent from the discussion in the Catholic Press, that that church is, at the best, only lukewarm in its support of prohibition.

CHURCH NEWS

The Presiding Bishop reports that the total Christmas Offering for 1919 is $101,051.89. A fine record.

The Sunday school lessons committee has been in session at Lamoni several days the past week, developing the new course designed to supercede the present course of lessons. This includes Mrs. C. Salyards, S. A. Burgess, F. M. McDowell, Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith, Gomer R. Wells, and A. M. Carmichael.

Elder Walter W. Smith, church historian, has been in Lamoni recently, looking after the rearrangement and distribution of the general church library.

FROM THE BRANCHES

Provo, Utah.—We can now boast of two Sunday schools, as we organized one at Provo Branch, last Sunday, with an enrollment of eighteen members, and a good outlook for the future. The name of this new school is Riverside. Our school in town is attended by between 25 and 30 every Sunday.

Pontiac, Michigan.—About two hundred people attended the opening services of the basement of our new church on Sunday, May 16. One more was enrolled on the branch record Sunday, May 30, when Neil McLeod was baptized.

Artland, Saskatchewan.—We have a new organ installed in our meeting house, the result of donations by kind friends, and the proceeds of three socials. The ladies' aid will have a sale or bazaar June 20, to gather money to repair our house of worship. Elders A. J. and W. J. Cornish were called to-day to administer to a grand, old veteran, Elder Joseph Shippy, who, though failing, has not yet laid down the sword. He is ninety-three years old, and under the power of God many wonderful results have been obtained through his administrations to the sick. We record the death of Sister T. E. Harper, eldest daughter of Elder J. J. Cornish, which occurred on May 5. Her babe, a few hours old, preceded her to the better land. Conference convenes here the second Saturday and Sunday in July. Among the ministry expected are Elders Birch Whiting, Daniel Macgregor, J. W. Peterson, J. J. Cornish, Bishop Bullard, and several local ministers.

Lamoni, Iowa.—Elders Charles May and Paia a Metuaoro visited us recently and addressed the Saints on the evening of the 3d. The address of the latter has been stenographically reported, and will be printed in an early issue of the HERALD.

First Chicago Branch.—Sunday school work has been progressing very nicely. A week ago Sunday, the school was entertained by the orchestra from the South Side Branch. May 23 to 28 a series of evangelical meetings have been held, Brother W. A. McDowell in charge. The attendance has been quite satisfactory, and those in charge feel that much good has been accomplished. A special prayer service has been held each evening before service. With sadness we report the death of Morris Kane, husband of Sister Bessie Kane, on the 25th. He was always one of the church's good friends and liberal supporters.

A Typical Group of Our Young Missionaries

It being convenient for them to do so, we urged that these fine young people arrange a group picture for publication, even though the many other missionaries in the church, young and old, deserve the same commendation for their consecration to the work.

We are thrilled with pride that so many of the younger element among us are finding within their hearts the desire and willingness to serve their fellow men by taking to them the great gospel message.

The two couples on the left have been appointed to go to South Africa, in company with Apostle William Aylor, and will leave as soon as passport arrangements are completed and transportation privileges possible. Sister Brackenbury Clifford is a Lamoni girl, they being married June 3. Brethren Clifford, Rogers, and Almond and Sister Almond have attended Graceland the past school year, enrolled in the class in religious education. Sister Elliott has also attended, taking other subjects, while Brother Elliott has been teaching science in the college the past two seasons. Sister Needham Elliott is a Lamoni girl, her literary work being well known to the church. Brother Elliott is of Canadian birth and training.

Sister Danforth-Rogers has taught school in Lamoni two seasons, she and Brother Rogers marrying a few months ago, having been in the church about three years. Brother Rogers is from Utah.

Brother and Sister Almond are of British birth, having attended Graceland and resided in Lamoni several years.

Brother Clifford is a Canadian, having been in the missionary work in Michigan and Ontario several years.

Brother and Sister H. A. Merchant, of Omaha, are to go to the islands this year, perhaps with the party in July. They have one small child.

The brethren go as seventies—minute men for the church.

We are glad the church is recognizing in a proper manner the value of the services of our young people who have the best of their lives before them and is willing to provide for their special training if need be, that they may the more easily take up and carry on the work before the church in these last days.

May our army of church soldiers speedily increase in numbers and efficiency, that the world may be warned and the honest in heart gathered out.

Mission to Africa

For the first time we are sending missionaries to Africa, not to the whole of the continent, but only to South Africa. From a Rand-McNally map of 1908 we are very much surprised to note the number of large cities of 100 thousand or more on that continent: Alexandria, 319,766; Antananarivo, 500,000; Bida, 90,000; Cairo, 570,000; Cape Town, 83,718; Algiers, nearly 97,000; Fez, 140,000; Johannesburg, 102,000; Kano, 100,000; Oran, 85,000; Tunis, 153,000. These are all old censuses. By census of 1904 Johannesburg had close to 160,000; Abeokuta, estimated at 150,000; Algiers, 1906, 138,000; Antananarivo, Madagascar, estimated 1904, 70,000; Cape Town, 1904, nearly 170,000; Constantine, Algeria, 1906, over 58,000; Durban, South Africa, in Cape Colony, estimated 1906, about 70,000; Zanzibar, East Africa, 100,000.

That is one reason for giving those between 90 and 100 thousand, because in each instance the census is at least fourteen, and many of them are probably nearer twenty to twenty-five years old.

From a hasty perusal we note that even on an average of twenty years ago there were seven more cities having over 50,000 inhabitants; twenty between 25,000 and 50,000; and 27 listed between 10,000 and 25,000.

As our missionaries expect to make their headquarters at Johannesburg, a brief summary of its situation may prove to be of interest. It is located 26 degrees, 11 minutes south, which would correspond in latitude with Brownsville, Texas, south, or with the southern extremity of Florida in the north. On the other hand, it is situated 5,764 feet above sea level, and is a little higher than Denver and Salt Lake City. It is quite new, since it has arisen within the past forty years. The streets are laid due north and south, and east and west. It is in the vicinity and a little north of the center of the gold fields.

The elevation of the city makes it a healthy place for Europeans despite its nearness to the tropics. It is however, subject to frequent dust storms, and to wide variations in temperature. The nights in winter are frosty, and snow falls occasionally. The average temperature is 53 degrees, and in summer 75. The rainfall is about 28 inches. There is a good school system, both grammar and high school, and also a university, offering courses in science, mining, engineering, and law. The university was started in 1904, but received its impetus in 1906, when Alfred Beit bequeathed a million dollars for the erection and equipment of buildings. There is a much larger white population relatively than is the case with Cape Town and Durban, and a large part of it is transient, and comes from all over the world. The cost of living is much higher than London or New York, including house rent, provisions, and clothing.

In 1887 the population was about 3,000; in 1890 it was 25,000; by 1896 it was 102,000; by 1904, 155,642, of whom 53 per cent were whites; 35 per cent of the whites were British, while 62 per cent of the whites were men. By a later census, in 1908, the population was given as nearly 181,000, so it would seem conservative to estimate its present population as probably 200,000 to 250,000.

The city owes its existence to the discovery of gold.

Cape Colony, a little south of the Transvaal, contains an area of 276,995 square miles, or is about five times the size of England, and four or five times as large as Iowa or Missouri. The land arises in terraces to the immense plateau which forms seven eighths of South Africa.

The Cape of Good Hope rises abruptly 840 feet above the sea. Cape Town is located on a tableland. Immediately back of the town is Table Mountain, 3,549 feet high, so called because it is flat-topped, and often covered with a tablecloth of clouds.

There are many ranges running parallel to the shore, these mountains supporting walls of successive terraces. There is first the coast range, 600 feet; then the first range of hill, followed by the first dry plateau, about 40 miles wide, a second range of hill, and a second dry plateau about 80 miles wide; finally there is a chain of mountains leading to the vast interior table-land, only a small part of which appears in Cape Colony.

Cape Town is noted for the healthfulness of its climate, the clearness of the atmosphere, and the considerable daily range in temperature. The temperature is upon the whole lower as compared with countries in the same latitude north of the equator. This is caused by the large extent of the ocean in the immediate vicinity. Still the atmosphere is dry because of the elevation. The days are hot, the nights cool, the daily range being 27 degrees. The population of Cape Colony in 1904 was only 8.7 to the square mile, which gives a total population of 2,400,000, of which less than one fourth are white.

Cape Town has a population, with its suburbs, of nearly 170,000.

From the 1904 census, we note that Cape Town had a population, with its suburbs of nearly 170,000; Kimberly 34,000, or with the adjoining city of Beaconsfield, nearly 44,000; East London, 25,000, as well as a number of other towns from two to eleven thousand. Durban in 1906 was estimated at 70,000. Only a small part of the land was cultivated up to 1910, because of continued drouth in the interior. The educational system leads up to the university of the Cape of Good Hope, established in 1874. This university grants degrees equal with those of any university of Great Britain. It was patterned on the university of London. Originally only the bachelor and master of arts, bachelor and doctor of law, and medical degrees were conferred, but later degrees in literature, science, and music, and in 1908, in divinity were added. In 1905, 539 students matriculated.

Our Missionary Drive

"Twenty thousand converts before next General Conference, each with his face turned towards Zion" is an ideal goal set before the missionary body of the church. But it is not a goal for the general church missionary alone, but rather for the whole church.

The Spirit of God is moving upon the inhabitants of the earth, calling forth the honest in heart. Twenty thousand, fifty thousand, or a hundred thousand would be a small number for him to call. But if any such number are baptized in any one year, who is going to take care of them?

This is a burden which belongs to the standing priesthood of the church—those in charge of the various branches, stakes, and districts. It is not enough that they should be baptized, and that their faces should be turned in the right direction, for God has set in the church, officers; not only for the work of the ministry, but also for the perfecting of the Saints, and the edifying of the body of Christ.

As we see it, the greatest need, if any such a drive is to be successful, is that our local churches be prepared to care for them; that young men be called to the priesthood and prepared by careful, spiritual instruction and experience for the work of the local ministry—for presiding over various branches in the household of God.

We have long been convinced that many times this number could and would be called if we were ready, with our house prepared to care for them.

This call, then, to the missionary forces of the church is also a call upon the local priesthood, that they set in order their house, also upon the men who are placed to preside over the various branches, that they see that the house of God is set in order; but first of all, that the priesthood be set in order and prepared for effective work, and a place and people prepared.

With the Spirit of God working with our missionary force it is not a difficult task that we set before the missionary of the church. But to accomplish the necessary work of preparation in our branches and stakes will also require the direction of the divine Spirit.

It is a hastening time and a time when the local priesthood should be up and doing, preparing the way for our Lord, preparing his household to care for those so soon to be newly adopted into his family.

The local priesthood may well help also with missionary work as their time and means permit. But their first great duty is the work of perfecting the Saints, and edifying the body of Christ, preparing the people of God to move forward, caring for those already adopted through the waters of baptism, and preparing to care for those so soon to be chosen.

Success requires a united effort—each man working with his brethren for the accomplishment of the work of God.

The Church on Dancing

Question. What do you think of Saints playing cards and going to dances, and taking their children, and the man holding the priesthood?

Answer. Concerning dances the following has been adopted by the church in General Conference:

"Resolved, That the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel."—General Conference Resolutions, No. 317.

"Resolved, That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."—Ibid. No. 377.

The latter also answers the second question concerning card playing.

We Want Some New Pictures

We are often embarrassed as editors—and we know others must feel humiliated—in having to print pictures which we realize are not representative of the persons whose names appear therewith.

We have a considerable number of photographs of men and women of prominence in the church, but most of them are now out of date. Time has worked many changes.

One brother recently sent us a humorous letter—yet saturated with plenty of seriousness—that he would sue us for libel if we again printed a certain picture of him. He was sure that the Saints who tried to identify him in his travels by that supposed likeness would not recognize him at all. Therefore he was asking us to consign to oblivion the cut we were using and accept another he was sending. Which is the right way to do.

We would like to get a new cut of each of our general church officials and of as many local people as possible for our files. It would be a great advantage to all concerned, for we like to know who is who in the church in a more intimate way.

But if we cannot have cuts all made up for printing, we should have clear photographs. It would be an excellent plan for every missionary and church worker to keep us in mind and send us one of the latest of each photograph taken.

Never mind sending the fancy folder, in fact we would prefer the bare print, inscribed on the back with items as to birth date, character of work done in the past, offices held, etc.

Do not consider it at all presumptive to comply with this request. We should be required to send separate personal requests. It is a simple matter of accommodation to the Saints as well as ourselves. If we have these pictures we will use more of them in the church papers.

And not only photographs of persons are desired, but good photographs of interesting church scenes, of orchestras, choirs, groups of workers, etc. Often good action scenes can be used to illustrate a story to advantage.

Send them to us and they will be available for the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Stepping Stones. And please remember that this appeal is to you. We will acknowledge the receipt of each and appreciate the kindness very much.

EDITORS HERALD.

Farm Help

The agriculture papers of to-day, as well as many papers of general circulation and newspapers and magazines, are full of the warning of a coming food shortage in this country. To prevent it there must be early help assured to the farmers.

Some of our correspondents have asked what our church members should do. The immediate answer would be the same as for any other citizen—to volunteer our service where we can help to harvest the crop, and get others to volunteer so that the farmers will be assured sufficient help to justify the raising of sufficient grain.

As a church the remedy is deeper. All talk of model cities and of Zion begins with a discussion of the agricultural problems; the securing of agricultural land, and the growing of crops, for that is basic. The first thing to be done is the purchasing of farm land in the various stakes of Zion, with as many as can safely gather in one place, that is, without unduly forcing up the price on themselves.

The second thing to do will be for men to farm these lands, and the formation of farm organizations.

The third necessity will be cared for under the Zion plan, and that would be the assurance of sufficient help to put in the crops and to harvest them when they are ready.

In Zion, as originally laid out, there was ample space in connection with each home for a home garden. That will be an additional source of help: a home garden cared for in the spare hours of morning and evening, combining the benefits of outdoor exercise, together with the partaking of home-grown vegetables.

This last is a second emergency procedure to be used now, a continuation of the wartime garden. It is a matter of self-protection, meeting not only the high cost of living, but also preventing the shortage of food stuffs which eventually means a famine.

Under the Zion plan the farmer will not only be encouraged to farm and assured sufficient help, but also will be assured of a reasonable income from his labor. He may be, and is asked to sell at a reasonable profit when prices are high; also he will be assured of a reasonable profit when prices are low. In the community he will be protected, securing the safety in old age and sickness which that plan offers, and he will go forth without fear to the sowing of his field, and look forward with joy to his harvest, receiving the Lord's reward of a service well done for humanity, well knowing that his family and he himself are amply protected.

Subjects Being Discussed

Too Much Profit on Flour

A. J. Lauck, who is making the investigation of war profits for the railroad brotherhood, states that the expense of producing a barrel of flour in 1917, including interest, freight, and all other expenses, was $8.60. On this basis we should have been able to purchase at retail this flour for not more than $11.57, had the miller, jobber, wholesaler, and retailer contented themselves with reasonable profit. Instead the consumer was forced to pay from $14.50 per barrel, up. The millers increased their profit from 13½ cents to 52 cents a barrel, and some as high as $2 a barrel. The Government permitted a double profit, though 13½ cents a barrel paid 12 per cent returns on capital invested. The cost of operation, including labor costs advanced only about 5 cents a barrel, and compared with this the millers' profit advanced 43 cents a barrel. He states that each one, from the miller down to the grocer, took an excessive profit.

Excessive Clothing Profits

The man mentioned above, who was formerly secretary of the war labor board, and is now consulting economist for the railroad brotherhood, states that his survey shows that the price of a suit to-day is nearly twice the cost. That is, a suit retailing for $65, the cost at present is $37.36, which includes all materials and labor, and also transportation. The remainder of the price is made up by the middleman's and retailer's profit, a total of $27.64, of which the retailer receives on an average $22.77. The additional cost of labor does not explain the high prices. A suit now sold for $65 sold in 1910 for $25. That would be an increase of $40 in the price of a suit, while the increase of labor costs is $7.44. The increase of profit is considerably more than twice the additional labor cost.

New Jersey Not a Wet State

The Christian Science Monitor calls attention to one significant factor in the New Jersey primary. New Jersey has been in the front rank because of Governor Edwards, and perhaps because of its own inclination in opposition to prohibition. It is seen that this is the opposition of a few, and not of the people, for Senator Frelinghuysen was a candidate for delegate-at-large, but in the Senate had voted for prohibition. An attack was made upon him on this account, but he stood squarely by his vote, and called upon the dries for support. He did not as a politician attempt to dodge the issue, but met it squarely. The result is that he received the highest vote on the ticket. On the other hand, the lowest vote was for a candidate who sought not to offend the wets, and spurned the assistance of the dries. From this it would seem that the moral element, and those in favor of prohibition are exercising a decided voting strength in New Jersey, as well as elsewhere in the United States.

The Golden Rule As a Solution

Complaints of a large section of the employer group in the United States that the demands of labor are exorbitant, and that employees should show more moderation in wage scales, now that they are in an advantageous position, come strangely from those employers who are showing not the slightest mercy to the great mass of consumers, from whom they are extracting unconscionable profits. Employees should not be blamed by employers as long as the latter set such a wretched example before them. Of course, neither group in the economie system should use the other's conduct as an excuse for its own, and the remedy for the whole round of selfishness lies in a simple, quiet application of the Golden Rule, which is not merely good morals, but good business.—The Christian Science Monitor.

Growth of the Cooperative Movement

At a meeting held at Cambridge, England, attention was called to the fact that Cambridge has long been run on cooperative lines, as the whole system had been used there for a long time. It began as a development of a system for helping the poor man to get a university education. At this meeting, T. W. Mercer, of the Cooperative Union, declared that it was indeed remarkable that cooperation was not hindered by the war, but that the most significant feature of the past six years, instead of being the war, was the great growth of the cooperative movement. Never before had such rapid progress been made, as the people are coming to see that the whole social order founded upon competition is crumbling, and that a new order must be founded thereon. In England, India, Ireland, and Russia, decided progress has been made, and they base their economic structure on cooperation.

The Sugar Shortage

The grocers in Boston and vicinity, as well as elsewhere, are alleged to be making unfair profits on sweetened canned goods, because of alleged shortage of sugar. In addition they are making a profit of three to four cents a pound on sugar. The list of canned goods indicates an advance of 50 per cent in the selling price over the cost price of many canned goods.

Nutritive Value of Milk

Doctor Graham Lusk declares that the milk of cows fed on clover will be of higher value than that of the cow fed with corn ensilage. Vegetable oils, like olive oil and pork fat do not contain the fat soluble vitamins and cannot take the place of milk. Beef fat, eggs, liver, and kidneys, are, however, rich in this material, and it is present also in spinach, lettuce, beet tops, etc.

On account of the great value and lesser cost of milk, he urges that a family of five should not buy meat until it has purchased at least three quarts a day.

The curse of the ignorant and poorer classes is the giving of tea and coffee to their children instead of milk. In these families meat is regularly purchased. Milk is cheap and is well-nigh indispensable, and is far better than tea, coffee, and meat.

Constructive Zionist Program

A convention of the Zionie Organization of America was held in New York, Sunday, May 9, with more than 1,500 delegates. The convention, after expressing its gratitude for the action of the Supreme Council at San Remo in conferring the Palestine mandate on Great Britain, began a constructive program to carry out their aspirations. In line with this, Nathan Strauss donated $100,000 to found a medical research and health service department at the University of Jerusalem, while $106,000 more was subscribed at the night session. The nurses' Zionist medical unit, in lieu of a money donation, volunteered to serve one year in relief work in Palestine. Doctor Stephen S. Wise and United States Supreme Court Justice, Louis D. Brandeis, were in attendance.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A Missionary Program

BY T. W. WILLIAMS

"It is for us to discard the superficial and immaterial and provide a missionary program."

"What is the missionary program of your church?"

This abrupt and startling question was propounded to me several months ago by a gentleman who had been attracted to our philosophy through a series of meetings which I had been holding in Canada. My questioner was a student of world religions. He was interested in knowing our missionary purpose.

I should have been able to answer the question promptly and in detail. I did not. I attempted to do so but even this stranger must have detected my discomfiture. My answer was not an answer. It was an admission. The reason why I did not answer this question was because I could not. We have no missionary program.

True, Jesus gave some very specific instructions to his apostles and disciples in Palestine and in America regarding the work of world evangelization. The revelations to the church in our day contain some very clear and comprehensive statements as to missionary work. All these are fragmentary. They are scattered through the various books. To enunciate a working program for to-day we must not take things for granted. The piecing together of these fragments must not be left to individual determination.

No Definite Program

I have been engaged most of the time for thirty years in the missionary service of the church. During that time I have not known of any comprehensive definite program which every missionary going out for the church could take as an official pronouncement and consistently follow. As missionaries we have been left too much to our own initiative. Our program has been individualistic rather than universal.

I am exceedingly anxious that we have such a program. The desire does not answer the demand. Many of our leading men have missionary perspective. Some of these men have a fairly clear idea as to what should constitute this program. There is no general agreement, however. These various ideas have not been crystalized and arranged. We have not even collated and classified the sayings of Jesus along this line.

The history of the church should indicate a comprehensive, enlarging, unfolding program. It should have a definite objective. It must embrace more than making converts. The time demands that we have such a program. We are moving towards world evangelization. It is imperative as we do so that our program be uniform. It must be definite and workable. It must be universal. It must restate the purpose of religion in terms of to-day. It must be so clearly defined that every missionary going out in the name of Jesus Christ will tell the same story. As crusaders for God and humanity we must be moved by the same spirit and follow the same line of action.

Jesus Christ—Center of Action

A missionary program which does not make Jesus Christ the center of all action will fail. We have one leader. Jesus Christ is that leader. He stands singly and alone. He is not only our "leader." He is our "commander." He is our "witness." He is our pattern. No human being has ever come up to the requirements of leadership but him.

We are not sent out to defend men. We are not preaching

Moses or Peter or Joseph Smith. We are not called upon to proclaim the virtue or divinity of any human being. We are not called upon to explain humanity. We are sent out to interpret divinity. Though all men be liars, still Jesus Christ remains true. The one great personality in our missionary program is Jesus Christ—God "manifest in the flesh." He is the captain of our host. He is our Master—all others are but servants.

This missionary program must reflect the spirit and purpose of Jesus Christ. A missionary program which does not comprehend a consuming passion for souls, an intense love for the sinner, a spirit of communion and fellowship with those who lack virtue and character, a willingness to give out regardless of merit or returns, a desire to bless, a beneficence based on need rather than deed, must necessarily fail.

A missionary program which is not actuated by love is futile—love for God, not because of his power or his beneficence, but love for God because of his inherent goodness and purity; love for humanity, not because of affinity, or worth, or oneness, but because of its lack and its need, this is the program which will liberate our latent divinity and call to our aid all the divine forces of the universe.

Our mission is to help men to find themselves. This implies self-abnegation and selflessness. We forget position and station and rank. We break away from imaginary boundary lines. We do everything as though we are doing it for the whole world. We avoid church trade-marks. We do not brand or copyright our thoughts.

A Universal Language

We write and speak and think so that the whole world may understand. We speak a universal language. There is no place in our work for sectarianism, much less Latter Day Saint sectarianism. Sectarianism and provincialism divorce us from God and separate us from humanity. These cramp and fetter. We are sent out to break these fetters; to dissipate the imaginary lines of caste and creed and peoples and to install the universal brotherhood.

We must think in terms of the universe if we are to have the universe with us. We must sense the universal kinship. A church institution at best is only a means to an end. It is never the end. The legitimacy of the means depends on the sequence as well as the source, the end as well as the beginning. Divine authenticity is oftentimes a cloak for clerical prostitution. The vindication of our claim to divinity is doing not saying. It is what we are, not what our fathers were, which counts. Ancestral worship passeth. This applies to ideas as well as ideals.

Our missionary program naturally comprehends the gathering. This gathering will be from condition to condition more than from place to place. The purpose of this gathering is to enable men and women to make spiritual preparation in order to do more valiant service for humanity. Zion is not a fortress nor yet a walled city of refuge. It is the recruiting station for service—the concentration camp for discipline and preparation—a post where consecrated human beings may be trained to go out and win the world for God and Christ. Our mission is to win men from evil and wrong to truth and righteousness; from selfishness to selflessness; from individualism to brotherhood.

Must Reach Heart As Well As Head

Our missionary program must embrace the whole life of the people. To add to our numbers is not necessarily evidence of success. It sometimes proves the very opposite. To convert men and women to the mere doctrinal interpretation of Scripture is not sufficient. We must reach the heart as well as the head. We must stir the emotions as well as the mind. We must win men and women to self-surrender to the subordination of individual purpose, to the will of Jesus Christ.

We should not concern ourselves nor strive to bring men to our individual way of thinking. As ministers for God we are not sent out to preach opinions. Abstract philosophy has very little place in a real missionary program. The exploiting of personal views, however meritorious, serves no good purpose. Speculative theology is a real detriment to missionary work. It is not within our province to treat of the unknown. We do not know where we came from nor whither we are going. It is enough that we are able to point men to the way of life as it relates to the now and to leave the past and future with God where it rightly belongs. Those things which God has purposely hidden from men may well remain with him. Our mission is to teach Jesus Christ and him crucified. Theories and pet hobbies have no part in a real missionary work.

There is no place in our missionary program for provincialism. Our message is universal. It recognizes no country, no family, no favored people. It postulates the common fatherhood of God, the universal brotherhood of man. If fatherhood, then the fatherhood of all. God is the Father of all human beings. His love is extended along precisely given lines to every human being, regardless of color, race, people, place, condition, or time. The determination of sonship rests with men. God is willing to preserve relationship. If it is forfeited the responsibility rests with man, not God.

No Special Privilege

There is no place for the advocacy of special privilege in our message. God has imposed no religious handicaps. A Hottentot, a naked Society Island native, or a Chinese stands upon precisely the same terms with God as the more cultured or civilized. God has no prejudices. He is just as anxious and willing to save the hordes of India as he is to save the Anglo-Saxon race. The Gentiles have equal opportunity with the Jews. God's love, his mercy, his blessing, extends equally to all.

Our mission is not simply to bring men to become members of a particular church. It is not simply to have men change their church affiliation. It is not to bring men to believe in the spiritual leadership of men. It is to rally men and women under the banner of Jesus Christ—to bring them into spiritual communion with God. The real purpose of religion is to interpret God in terms of human consciousness—to bring men and women into relationship with the divine.

The whole world stands in need of our message. It is for us to discard the superficial and immaterial and provide a missionary program which will command the respect and elicit the support of every man and woman who loves God and fire with a new zeal consecrated men and women to preach the gospel as a witness to all nations before the end shall come.

"Dawn is breaking in the east; the night of waiting is over. For well-nigh two thousand years the Jewish people have dreamed and hoped and prayed and worked for the restoration to the land of their fathers; to our generation the realization has been vouchsafed.

"On April 25, 1920, the supreme council of the peace conference forever freed the Holy Land from Turkish misrule. The Mandate over Palestine was entrusted to Great Britain under the League of Nations, and pursuant to the declaration of His Majesty's government made by the Rt. Hon. Arthur James Balfour as Secretary of Foreign Affairs on November 2, 1917, subsequently endorsed by the other powers and President Wilson, and incorporated in the Turkish treaty, Erez Yisroel will now be re-established as the national Jewish homeland."—Judge Julian Mack.

Sidelights on Human Nature

BY JAMES E. BISHOP

A mixture of bits of psychology, philosophy, and religion.

What knowledge is the most valuable, was a question discussed by Herbert Spencer. McDougall without hesitancy places psychology at the base of the social sciences. This science, defined from the standpoint of the functionalists, is the science of behavior. No one can expect to orientate in social life without some definite understanding of behavior. No successful man ever lived that did not have some definite ideas about human conduct. It is interesting to notice the various divisions of mind that various writers have provided.

The oldest division of mind is the tripartite, in usage since the days of Aristotle. This is a very illuminating division which presents the feeling, knowing, and willing, as aspects of mind. The scriptures teach us that we should feel the sublimest, know the greatest, and will the most. Plato made this division of mind the basis of his Republic. Thereafter many writers have been seeking ultimate reality in the nature of the individual.

Professor Royce made a novel departure from this old-fashioned view and suggested sensitiveness, docility, and mental initiative as a truer account of all mental processes. His main reason for so doing was that the tripartite division of mind tended to sunder the intellect from the will, which according to his chapter on action and perception is impossible. The psycho-physical circuit involves knowing and willing in a single percept. Other authors show that the feelings and the will are equally complex, and cannot in actual behavior be split or sundered. But each of these divisions have their value.

Another suggestive division is the objectivity of childhood, the subjectivity of adolescence, and the coordination of objectivity and subjectivity in adult life. The child is interested in objects and does not introspect. The primitive man worships objects, such as mountains, large bodies of water, etc. The youth reflects and broods, and the direction of his mentation is inward. Religions like Buddhism and Christian Science seem to be on this level. The normal adult coordinates the objective and the subjective phases of life and a real religion must have these phases. God must be an objective reality or an imagination.

The bipolar aspects of subject and object side of consciousness is interesting. Professor James indorsed Ladd's definition of psychology as a study of tastes of consciousness. For their psychology "states" were fundamental. Yet James recognized that these "states" must inhere in a stable core of consciousness which was the ego or the permanent subject side of consciousness. Mary Whiton Calkins in approaching this issue of definition says that Ladd and James seemed to fluctuate between the permanent, stable side of consciousness and the constantly shifting states. So she gave her definition of psychology as selves and facts for the selves. There must be a willer and a thing willed, a knower and a thing known, a feeler and a thing felt. When we try to determine the time that the child distinguishes between the object and subject side of its consciousness we are obliged to say that these phases are coterminous with consciousness itself.

G. Stanley Hall says, in common with many others, that there are two aspects to consciousness, the phylogenetic and the ontogenetic. These terms were applied by Darwin to distinguish between the development of the race and the individual. It is held by many that the biology of the individual is a recapitulation of the historic biology of the race. And some psychologists apply this to the psychic side of life and try to discover the reason for all phenomena, whether social or religious in the mind of the ego. Thus it is stated that the phylogenetic side of consciousness is more general and deeper and more difficult to stir into activity than the ontogenetic side of consciousness. When a person tries hard he is liable to break into these reserve energies and in such a state a prophecy, an inspiration or some great work is done. This may be attributed to the Holy Ghost, but is only the tapping of the reserve energies of the soul and what really happens is the "soul of the race breaking in on the individual." Those who adopt this view do so because of their unwillingness to accept the doctrine of an extra-mental world. The Holy Ghost is an extra-mental phenomena and can only be received by obedience to the principles of the gospel. Again, these strictly individualist psychologists neglect to take into consideration the tremendous influence of social psychology. No wonder Ross says that the older psychology was individualistic in its interpretation when we hear such claim as the human mind groping for centuries until, Presto! the idea of God pops into the mind, and lo! religion is born. Irving King points out that such a conception is anything but scientific. He shows that religion is a social attitude as much so as any of the arts and sciences. One of the differentiations between philosophy and religion is that religion is social and philosophy individual.

The vital molding of social influence has been sought for. Some have held that it was geographic and climatic conditions, others that it was the economic factor. Still others felt it was to be found in superiority and inferiority. And again imitation was thought to be fundamental. But it is now held, by some at least, that the fundamental principle of social life is association, or interaction of minds. Dewey holds that a sharing of purposes and a communication of interest is the strongest form of social control. It is these vital social principles, as set over against the strictly individualistic side of psychology, that are set forth in the account of the origin of religion as set forth in the Holy Scriptures, commonly called the Inspired Translation.

Book of Mormon Rays on Scientific Paths—No. 6

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

Geologists agree that the ancient Americans had horses, elephants, cureloms, and cumons many centuries before the Christian era.

The Voice of Archæology

Materials of archæological investigation are mostly included in the following classifications: 1. Human remains. 2. Structures; including monuments, earthworks, etc. 3. Tools, implements, utensils and various articles. 4. Inscriptions.

Aside from what has already been said with reference to human remains, a word concerning the geologic periods in America will more clearly show the significance of discoveries of this kind that have been made. In its article on "Archæology," Americana informs us that, "it is practically demonstrated, in the judgment of those who have most exhaustively explored this southwestern region of the United States, that when the country was first occupied by the ancestors of the present Pueblo Indians, the physical conditions and climate were more favorable for human occupation than at present."

Besides the human relics that extend through the quaternary period, the bones of the mammoth and other semi-tropical animals have been found in the north. In Canada have been found some within a comparatively recent period that are of considerable significance. The climatic change that has left this region so much colder is thought to have taken place in connection with the raising up of mountains, transformations of the earth's surface, and its relative position to that of the sun, but the reason is not known with certainty. Americana states that "the horse, camel, and rhinoceros originated in North America as late as tertiary times, but have practically disappeared."

That the physical features of this continent have been remarkably disturbed is indicated in the following statement of the author last quoted: "The destruction of animal life in America proves by itself what was probable on geologic and physiographic grounds, that the proper division between the two countries is not at the Isthmus of Panama, but at either Nicaragua or Tehuantepec, and that the junction was relatively late." At whatever period this junction took place, it has since then been evidently disturbed. Otherwise Panama would not to-day be the more apparent point of connection in physical formation. The light thrown on the matter here referred to, in the Book of Mormon account of upheavals that occurred about nineteen centuries ago, is significant. It states that over extensive areas the face of the land was so transformed that cities were buried and new mountains and valleys appeared, some portions of land being sunk in the sea, while other portions were raised up in various places. When studied in connection with this narration the geologic disturbances that are found to have taken place are more readily understood; and if the reader will study the record in regard to the manner and direction in which the ancient Americans extended their occupancy of this continent, the accuracy of its statements will, I believe, convincingly appear.

At the time the Book of Mormon was published it was commonly supposed that the horse was first brought to America by the early Spaniards. It was so taught in Robertson's History of America, which was written by the historiographer to the King of England, and was therefore considered a work of highest authority. Geographies of not more than fifty years ago contained similar statements, as many now living will doubtless remember. Geologists of our time, however, show that the horse, elephant, mastodon, and mammoth lived on this continent ages ago and roamed over a wide area of the country. The Book of Mormon, years before scientists confirmed the fact, gave us the information that the ancient Americans had horses, elephants, cureloms, and cumons, many centuries before the Christian era began. It seems probable from this statement that the mastodon and mammoth were known to the ancient Americans as the curelom and cumon. It is hardly credible that a writer seeking to induce belief in a fraudulent work would have ventured to make so daring a claim concerning animals that, according to instructors of that period, had no existence here anciently. In this particular the Book of Mormon is therefore doubly authenticated by modern research.

Ancient American Racial Diversity

We have already noticed many of the characteristics of the American races. That ancient colonies of different periods existed here is clearly indicated both by the diversity of cranial types and the evident distinctions in structural development, of which more will be said concerning the latter under another heading. Three colonies are mentioned in the Book of Mormon. The first, the Jaredites, came here more than a thousand four hundred years earlier than the second and third, known as Nephites and the people of Zarahemla. The two latter arrived here about two thousand five hundred years ago, the Nephites preceding by about twelve years and continuing a separate nation for about four hundred years, when the two colonies united and amalgamated, thereafter being called Nephites. An important division of the Nephites occurred soon after their arrival in America, from whence was formed still another nation called Lamanites, who are supposed to have been the ancestors of the American Indians. The Nephites were highly cultured and made remarkable development in science and art, but the Lamanites were of nomadic traits and were frequently engaged in war with the Nephites. As a result of this many captives were made and kept in bondage or were assimilated by intermarriage.

That more than one cranial type has been discovered on this continent is perhaps too well known to need more than a passing reference. The statement of Americana that "skulls have been discovered in undisturbed glacial strata that are of wholly different type from that of the Indian," is so significant that I need only to remark that various similar statements can be presented from other authors qualified to speak on the subject. But that archæologists should recently prove it to be a fact that a mixture of such a character as described in the Book of Mormon actually took place is so convincing that it becomes almost startling. Yet numerous instances of this truth have been found, one of which is presented from the Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections, volume 67, number 18. In it Doctor Ales Hrdlicka writes, on pages 12 and 13, concerning work in Peru in 1913, as follows:

"Anthropologically the people of this region show again two cranial types, the more oblong one, which seems to be characteristic of a large part of the central western Sierra, and a more rounded one, related and possibly identical with the prevailing type on the coast. In some of their ruins one of these types is seen to predominate and in others the other, but in most instances there is also present some mingling and probably intermixture."

In 1920, 2,200 skulls and thousands of other bones were obtained near Pachacamac for the United States National Museum, and the burial grounds there are still far from exhausted. The natural conclusions formed with reference to the various instances of these distinct types are aptly expressed by Morton, as quoted by Doctor Hrdlicka in Physical Anthropology in America, Panama-California 1914 edition, where he states: "That the American nations, excepting the Polar tribes [Eskimo], were of one race and one species, but of two great families [Toltecan and Barbarous], which resemble each other in physical, but differ in intellectual character."—Page 517. The history of the highly civilized and industrious Nephites, who were of a deeply moral and religious character, and that of the degenerate, shiftless and indolent Lamanites, who were of gross instincts and habits, is most wonderfully confirmed by these recent disclosures of men trained in the various phases of this most interesting subject. Discovery thus nearly runs parallel to the Book of Mormon record, though it comes almost a century later.

Jerusalem is rightly called the Holy City, for it contains sacred relics and traditional sites that are observed as holy by the three important religions of the world—Moslems, Christians, and Jews.

It has been estimated that in Jerusalem itself not less than 23 different languages are spoken, and during Easter week, when pilgrims from every corner of the earth come to visit the holy sites, it has been increased to 30. There is in Jerusalem every kind of race and nationality, each vying with the others by buildings, by opening schools and convents, or by building hospitals and churches. Thus Germans, English, Americans, Italians, Russians, Spaniards, Austrians, Hungarians, Greeks, Abyssinians, etc., have very magnificent buildings that add to the beauty of the city and that will stay forever as monuments in the holiest of cities.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE ARK AND THE CART

[The following article contains much that may be of interest to our readers at large. It is taken from The Presbyterian, published in Philadelphia, and represents the extreme conservative membership of that organization. They do not favor the entrance of the church into economic fields, to consider such problems as eight-hour days, the employment of women and children, night work for women, health insurance, and the like, nor such a movement as the Interchurch. We should, however, consider not only both sides, but every side of the problems submitted for our consideration. As has been clearly set out in our pages, nothing else can possibly be substituted in the place of the Spirit of God in our work, and no outward activity can possibly take the place of the prayer service, and the declaration of the word of God from the sacred desk.—EDITORS.]

From reliable sources it is now reported that the Interchurch Movement acknowledges failure and will make a complete and full statement to the church. In round numbers the account stands thus: Eight million dollars liabilities, three million dollars assets, and five million dollars unprovided, of which the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., has been obligated by the action of the executive commission for one million dollars. In the intensity of the hour, some have pronounced this the most colossal collapse in the church since the days of Pentecost. Such pronouncements may not be profitable, but it will be wise and well to counsel God's word for instruction and support. We find the prototype of this whole matter back in the days of struggle of Israel with the Philistines. The ark of the covenant was the symbol of God's presence with Israel. It was in every way guarded against profane secularism. No one was allowed to touch it. It was to be approached only by men chosen, instructed, consecrated, and ordained for the purpose. When moved, it was to be by staves extending out from the ark and resting upon the shoulders of the priests. During the depravity and degeneration of Israel under Eli and his sons, the ark was carried out to the battlefield and used as a weapon of war. God was greatly offended, and the profanity was rebuked and checked by the defeat of Israel, the destruction of many Israelites, the death of Eli and his son, and the ruin of their families. The Philistines found no pleasure in the ark and, smitten with fear, they sent it back to Israel. In removing it, because of ignorance and sin, they ignored God's plans and requirements for its carriage, and used a machine of their own device. It was a new cart drawn by two cows.

Sunday morning is a pleasant day in Jerusalem. Bells from the various church towers are heard ringing from every corner of the city all the day long, calling men, women, and children to prayers. Each bell has a distinct tone which is recognized by the respective sect to which it belongs.—Detroit News.

Doctor Pasticci, an Italian chemist, has discovered a method of cheaply producing liquid hydrogen. Liquid hydrogen will give 250 miles to the gallon, and may prove an excellent substitute for the carbohydrates of gasoline.

Representatives of the League of Nations met in Rome early in May, and presented a very practical program for consideration, including arrangements for the first meeting of the assembly of the league, the league budget, and the constitution of the commission on disarmament. The essential sessions were public.

The animals were left to their own wandering, and they finally drew up at the field of Joshua, in Beth-Shemash. Here again the degeneration of the people appeared. They profaned the ark, and again God rebuked and restrained them by the death of many. When David made Jerusalem his capital, he brought up the ark.

In removing it, they disobeyed the commands of God and adopted the more up-to-date and apparently efficient method of the Philistines, and used another machine of their own make—a cart drawn by oxen. At the end of their journey, Uzzah, one of the priest's sons, profaned the ark by touching it in order to save it. Again God rebuked the profanity by the death of Uzzah. Secularism and profanity was thus corrected, and for generations we hear the majestic song of praise from the courts of God's house and the tones of joy and refreshment and the worship of God by offering at his own altar.

This whole scene has direct bearing upon the entire modern situation in the church. For years secularism has been growing in the church of God. In some places it has been treated as a playhouse. All manner of entertainment has been used to attract people. The gymnasium, the bath tub, the games, athletics, and like things have taken the place of prayer and the Word. Sermons have been reduced to political and social essays, and social service has supplanted the worship of God. In the matter of offerings we have forsaken God's way, and imitated the ways of the world. The semireligious organizations have used the big clock, and the wide canvass, and the expensive dinner, to raise their thousands. The men of the world have used the drive to meet emergencies and to force unwilling contributions. Sad to say, the church of God, forgetting his instructions, has copied these Philistian ways, and the house of prayer was fast becoming a house of merchandise, and would surely end as a den of thieves. We have builded a great machine of our own planning, we have spent millions, and we have forgotten the tithe and offering in the courts of our Lord, and the laying aside on the first day of the week, as God has prospered us. God has rebuked us and restrained us from our vanity as his own children, and the tower of Babel has collapsed; men are in confusion, and the church has been rescued from great degradation. The death of Uzzah has always been a sad matter to us. His motive and purpose were good. We find no disposition to belittle him. His death was for our example. In the present-day movement, there are some splendid men, worthy sons of God, whose motive and purpose we do not question. But God rebukes and chastises even his own sons. Personal criticism is not fitting in this situation. The case is too serious. It behooves us all to humble ourselves before God in sincere repentance and to return to the house of God in prayer and obedience.

Some strong things are being said in connection with the breakdown. Some have declared that it is the greatest blow to Protestantism since the Reformation, and that Roman Catholicism exults over it. This is no time for exultation in any part of the church. God is visiting the nations, and he is also trying out his church in the fire. Romanism has for years boasted in her great organization. She introduced heathenism into her life and practice, and she has used every method to secure money for these purposes, from the priestly command to the lottery and card party. We Protestants need to humble ourselves in repentance because we have imitated her both in her methods and in the attempt to destroy the liberty of the people by a great organization, with one man or a few men directing all. Let Romanism take warning. God is moving and the spirit of liberty is awakening and rising among her own people. God has smitten the power on the Tiber, and the day may not be far distant when by a general uprising the last vestiges of papal bondage may break asunder, and liberty reign.

THE FULFILLMENT OF ZION'S HOPE

The action of the San Remo conference is the fulfillment of a long-awaited hope. Ever since the Balfour declaration of November 21, 1917, the question of Jewish life has been "when would the British Government be enabled to translate the Balfour declaration into the terms of life?" The San Remo decision is the answer to that question. It had been thought that the mandate over the Jewish Homeland of Palestine would be conferred by the League of Nations. Pending action on the part of the League of Nations, the supreme council turns to Great Britain to fulfill its promise to the Jewish people.

It must not be imagined that this is the end of Zionist effort. No nation nor all the nations together can make a gift of Palestine to the Jewish people covetous of securing Palestine by way of gift.

The Jewish people have asked that the door of Palestine be opened; that they be enabled in increasing numbers, to settle in Palestine and by the British Mandate, at the very earliest possible moment, become self-governing. Does this mean that Palestine is to become a Jewish state? The question cannot be given by human beings to-day. It lies on the lap of history. It is a matter of no importance whether or not in 10 or 20 or 30 years, Jews are to have a state. The question is "whether Jews shall be free to live a Jewish life in the land that long was Jewish, and through Jewish service and sacrifice is to be made Jewish once again.

Naturally, we hope that ultimately the Jewish Palestine will resolve itself into a Jewish commonwealth, the highest and most completely socialized form of democracy. We are not thinking of reestablishing the ancient monarchy but of building the foundations of a great forward-looking democratic socialized commonwealth. I must correct any misapprehension that may have arisen as a result of the public statement that a Jewish citizen of Palestine could retain his citizenship in the land from which he came or in the land in which he previously held citizenship. Of course, that is unthinkable. The Jew who wishes to become a citizen of the Palestinian commonwealth, must and will be ready to give up every other national relationship. He must make the choice. No celebration of the great event would be fitting, that failed to take account of the enormous service rendered the Zionist cause during recent years, by President Wilson, whose approval of the Balfour declaration did much to make it possible. The president said to me in June 1917, in the White House, within 60 days after our entrance into the war, "The land will never go back to the hands of the Mohammedan Apaches; one is Christian Armenia and the other is Jewish Palestine!" That prophecy has been fulfilled. On one and the same day, the allied nations of the world offered America through President Wilson, the mandate for an independent Christian Armenia, and made possible the fulfillment of the conditions basic to the establishment of a Jewish Palestine. —Doctor Stephen S. Wise, in the Jewish Daily News.

ZIONISM MEETS SERIOUS OPPOSITION IN PALESTINE

Christians and Moslems have united to oppose the encroachments of Zionism in Palestine, according to a set of resolutions sent out by the Islamo-Christian Conference, which met recently at Nablus. Here are two resolutions, as given in The Literary Digest.

"1. To boycott the Jews completely as a countermeasure against their covetous spirit toward this country.

"2. To refuse them dwelling space in our district, and to hinder their admittance thereto in every way.

"3. To persevere in this boycott and opposition until there remains no trace of the Zionist idea, or until we perish to the last man.

"4. To submit this decision to his Excellency the Chief Administrator of the Occupied Territory, and, through the medium of the allied representatives in Jerusalem, to the delegates of their respective governments at the Peace Conference; and to publish the same in the newspapers for the information of the civilized world, so that it may be understood why the inhabitants of this country are forced to sacrifice their lives for its freedom." (Signed by "Youssuf" with the seal of the Islamo-Christian Conference at Nabulus.)

Already riots have occurred in Palestine between the native Arab Moslems and the Jews, with some casualties. The Arabs form about four fifths of the population, and take seriously the program of Zionism. According to some millennial teaching the end is near and Jesus is to come again to Jerusalem and set up his kingdom. We shall see.—The Gospel Trumpet.

A PROPHET STILL WANTED

The following extract appears in The Literary Digest for May 29, being taken from the London Guardian. Comment was first made by the London Guardian on the fact that so many young people have seemed to have so little instinct for worship, while religious service is mostly calculated to be an expression of the instinct for worship. Mere revision of prayer books and rituals will not do to meet the present situation. The writer continues:

"We believe that what is most necessary of all is a revival of the prophetic office as supplementary to the priestly. Think how the Old Testament prophets stood out against the background of the priestly services in the days when men were as indifferent to ordered religion as they are now; how mightily they spoke for God to a nation for whom ordered religion had become an empty form; how they arose to recall the people to God and to religion in an age which was all too like our own.

"Think of Saint John the Baptist, the last and greatest of them all, who by the spell of his preaching moved the consciences of the proud children of Abraham, the outcast publicans, the coarse soldiers of the Roman Army of occupation, all sorts and conditions of men. Think of Saint Paul and his revival of the prophetic office in the nascent Christian Church. Think of Saint Francis of Assisi, and Savonarola, and all the host of them. Might not the clergy, in these days again, add to their priestly office among the devout a burning prophetic messages to the undevout?

* "Let them no longer try to do two incompatible things at once. Let them minister to the devout in an evensong as brief as may canonically be, and reserve the sermon for an after-service in the church or in the street. Let them raise the cross aloft and tell its message to a world like ours. Let them preach penitence as Saint John the Baptist preached it, and godliness as it was preached by Isaiah, and the grace which bringeth salvation as Saint Paul proclaimed it throughout the Roman Empire.

"The time is ripe again for prophecy, and the Spirit of God is once more calling aloud for prophets. 'Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?' The church is not now for the first time facing a pagan world. There was a time when all the world was undevout, and that was the very time when 'it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe.'"

"If the modern church is to serve the world of to-day, it must seek to state its creed so as to satisfy the intellect, and it must provide an organization that will satisfy the spiritual needs of man."—The Christian Work.

HYMNS AND POEMS

My Vision

BY ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY

I see a city grandly rise,
Most beautiful it is to view;
Its spires point to the smiling skies;
Its towers are builded strong and true.

Its glittering walls stand full four square,
True to the angel's measuring rod;
Its builders work with solemn care
To build the city of our God.

Building it straight to the line with care,
There soon—oh! laborers—shall be
Beyond earth's wonders, rich and rare,
The glorious city that I see.

O God, fulfill the work begun,
And be thyself that city's light;
Far from its temple dome be flung
Rays to those groping in the night.

Zion, may we thy glories see,
And worship in thy holy shrine,
With all the ransomed meet in thee,
O city of our King divine.

Moroni's Last Song

[Brother J. S. Roth sends in the following for publication, believing there are many who will appreciate it. It is a hymn that was written by some member and sung by the early church, but is now out of print. It was rewritten from memory by Brother N. Brooks, or Little Blue, Missouri.—EDITORS.]

"I have no home; where shall I go?
My heart is pained, my friends are gone,
And here I'm left on earth to mourn.

"I see my people lying round,
All lifeless here upon the ground,
Young men and maidens in their gore,
Which doth increase my sorrow more.

"Our fathers looked upon this scene,
And in their writings hath made plain,
How every Nephite's heart did fear,
When he beheld his foe draw near.

"With ax and bow they fell upon
Our men and women, sparing none,
And left them prostrate on the ground,
Lo! here they now lie bleeding round.

"Ten thousand that were led by me,
Lie round this hill called, 'Cu-mor-ah,'
Their spirits from their bodies fled,
And they are numbered with the dead.

"Well might my fathers in despair
Cry, 'O ye fair ones, once how fair,
How is it that you've fallen? O
My soul is filled with pain for you.

"My life is sought, where shall I flee?
Lord, take me home to dwell with thee,
Where all my sorrows will be o'er,
And I shall sigh and weep no more."

Thus sang the son of Mormon, when
He gazed upon his Nephite men
And women, too, who had been slain
And left to molder on the plain.

The Tranquil Soul

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

The Spirit speaks, let man arise
And gird his loins with truth.
Let him behold the true, the wise,
And lead his fellow men unto the Christ
Who gave his life for men; that he Might teach them how to live.

It is a solemn, sacred hour. My friend,
Be ever on thy guard, and pray
That God will give you light and power
To do his will to-day. That you may Lead the hosts of fearful men
Unto that perfect, peaceful day.

Why do you wait? Let neither tongue
Nor pen be still; but let the truth abound.
Clothe mind with truth, and life with love,
And at thy task be found. There is no time
To waste in idle reverie—then haste
If thou wouldst set thyself and others free.

O tranquil soul, thou art my goal,
Thy blessed visage causes me to bow
In admiration; and I forward press
With earnestness, and here confess
That nothing short of thy eternal self
Can satisfy my thirst for peace.

I pray to know thy secret power,
To share thy blissful life of love;
I would that I might apprehend thy law
Of life, and ever feed on truth divine
Until the goal is reached; and I
In life, in joy, and service, Lord, am thine.

Yes, teach me how to will, that I
May overcome and conquer self.
Sustain me in my quest of truth, for
In thy truth is life; and I
In life will triumph, too, and live
To serve, as thou hast bidden me.

One action taken by the National convention of the Socialist Party on May 11, was the refusal to substitute the International Socialist Declaration for one submitted by the resolutions and platform committee. The convention went on record as opposed to the dictatorship of the proletariat. Last spring those of the left wing insisted that the only road to victory was under the red flag. The vote was 103 to 33.

The figures quoted in the HERALD of May 12 state that there are 307,000 Indians in America with property valued at $700,000,000. This would be about $23,000 apiece, and is a little below the average for the whole of the country. Their annual income is stated as $54,000,000, less than $180 apiece, which is between one third and one half of the average for the United States.

OUR PUBLICATIONS

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR JUNE

The leading feature of the June number is a new serial story, "Hoagath, son of Jacob," based on Book of Mormon events sixty years after the landing of the Nephite colony in South America. It has a very pleasing style, much action, and considerable value as a story to engender interest in the Book of Mormon. The author is Fred W. Smith.

"The Indian in American archæology" is by Mrs. Henry C. Smith, from notes taken at a lecture by Edgar L. Hewett, noted American archæologist, given at Independence. It impresses one with the value of strong ideals which may color our lives and make our work distinctive.

"Teaching in a school of eight hundred Mexicans" is by Sister Ruby R. Speer, now teaching in a school in Arizona, where the pupils are "all dark-skinned and shiny-eyed."

"Those old shoes" is a missionary experience in which Elder J. B. Barrett tells how he in company with Elder (now Apostle) Myron A. McConley in the Hawaiian Islands took a trip around the island of Hawaii on foot.

"From our poets" features two good poems this month, "The man in overalls," by Edith Frazer Beggs, and "All for Christ," by Elbert A. Smith.

"True evolution" is a timely subject, the text being an address by the late Heman C. Smith at Graceland College in 1914.

"The part that music plays" is by Lois Aldridge Grenawalt, district chorister in the Southern California District.

In The Parthenon we note that Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess has resigned as supervisor of the Temple Builder organization and announces that Miss Zilpha Monroe, of Lamoni, is to succeed her. We are very much interested in the question of a young girl, presented in that department, on "What shall I do?" She offers not only a general problem of the isolated, but a more definite one which every girl must solve: How best occupy my time?

The Religio Department has some very important announcements and explanations as well as reports from T. W. Williams, head of the general Religio Department. A picture of Brother Williams also appears.

The Sunday School Department has some extra good material that every Sunday school worker should read.

STEPPING STONES

An interesting serial by Elder James E. Yates, entitled "A true story of travel and adventure," is now running in Stepping Stones. It is illustrated by John Collin and contains some very interesting situations. A "Puzzle Corner" is soon to be started, furnishing some interesting material for old and young.

ZION'S ENSIGN

A very valuable series is being presented by the Ensign on various phases of the gospel. These are especially good for nonmembers and Saints who are not conversant with the structural facts concerning the gospel. The sermons by various leading men of the church are eminently worth while, and the news from leading branches in the church appreciated by many.

JULY JOURNAL OF HISTORY

The coming number of the Journal is going to be in keeping with the pace the new editors have set. In addition to presenting new light on old history, this number elaborates somewhat on more recent developments such as "The General Conference of 1920," "Peter Anderson," an account of his life's work, "The new officers," being a few pertinent facts and observations about the newly chosen members of the

An Interesting Event

The First Saint Joseph, Missouri, Branch is one of the fortunate branches of the church, for it possesses a really first-class, proficient choir. It isn't a large choir as choirs usually go, and in fact it isn't as large as First Saint Joseph really should have; but it is an enthusiastic, progressive, and devoted choir and it renders some very excellent and valuable service to the branch it represents. And it may be stated in passing that the element that so largely determines the character of its work is the element every choir should possess—the spirit of consecrated service.

Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, one of its members, sends us a letter describing the second annual banquet of this choir, given in the lower rooms of the First Branch church on the evening of May 13. Ninety-six guests, mostly the active and associate members of the choir, sat down to the "spread" provided and were partakers of the enjoyable features of the evening. This banquet and these features were so original and so timely and their character so fitted to the cultivation of true choir spirit that we must describe them.

When the banquet was served the guests found their places at the table by means of appropriate "place cards," designed in a unique manner, each containing the name of a guest and in the upper left-hand corner inscribed a musical staff containing a short strain from a well-known hymn, while at the bottom of the card was found the divine injunction to the church to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.)

Sister Dobson did not tell us what they ate but we venture the assertion that it was consumed all right. During the progress of the courses there were prologues and toasts rendered to which responses were had. These prologues and toasts were so pertinent to choir spirit and work that we give them entire. Sister Dobson is the author of Prologues and Toasts one and two while the toast to the associate members comes from the pen of Brother Austin M. Dobson:

Prologue One

Better than riches of worldly wealth
Is a life that is ever cheery,
Beaming with happiness, hope and health,
With service the heart's true desire.
And sweeter than honors the world can bestow
Are the hours that we give to thee,
So come let us sing, let praises ring,
In a toast to our own church choir.

Toast One

Here's to the Choir of First Saint Jo,
Here's to our choristers, two;
Here's to our organist, stanch and strong,
Here's to our soloists, few;
Here's to our patrons gathered here,
Here's to our voices all;

apostolic quorum and Israel A. Smith of the Presiding Bishopric.

Then there is a history of the class in religious education at Graceland College the past year, with names of the members and an outline of the work done.

Under "Interesting women" some of the work of Sister Marietta Walker is reviewed, with interesting personal sidelights.

"The official statements of Joseph Smith" are continued, some valuable matter being presented therein.

"Early days on Grand River" is concluded, being an unbiased account from a disinterested viewpoint concerning the church in Missouri in the thirties.

"Current Events" and "Necrology" continue as usual.

Here's to the church that we strive to serve,
Heeding our Master's call.

Prologue Two

Oh, First Saint Joe! old First Saint Joe,
Thy cause so dear we love;
To it we pledge our lives anew,
And know that God above
Will grant us peace and happiness
If, in his church below,
We do our part, with contrite heart,
And try his will to know.
He'll help us grow, as on we go,
If we will do our part.

Toast Two

Here's to the branch of First Saint Joe,
Here's to her helpers four—
The school that teaches her children truth,
The one where her youth learn more.
Here's to the women and their work,
Here's to the choir and all,
Here's to the church that we strive to serve,
Heeding our Master's call.

A Toast to the Associate Membership

We welcome you, our friends, to-night,
Your presence here affords delight;
In truth, this spread of food and cheer,
Were incomplete without you here.
We count you friends for whom we long
To serve, to help, through cheerful song.

The choir of this Saint Joseph land
Extends to you its welcome hand;
We bid you leave behind dull care
And this our banquet freely share.
Your fellowship on this May night
Shall linger long in Memory's light.

And now we look beyond this day,
Beseech the Lord to hear us pray
That he will bless, attune each heart,
In songs of praise to do our part.
May those who have as freely give
As did our Lord that we might live.

To you, our patrons, this our toast,
Who giveth best receiveth most.
We thank you all for help, for cheer,
Invite you here another year.

After the banquet an enjoyable musical program was given, and in order to get the guests seated and "paired off" a very clever little game was played. Duplicate slips were prepared, numbered one and two, on which were written the words from familiar hymns and folk songs. The holder of slip one was required to circulate around among his fellow guests singing the song called for on his card whereupon he would find his "mate" by her responding with the same song. (We imagine this is just like the birds do in the spring when they mate.) Picture the amusing situations that might arise in the carrying out of this stunt.

The program that followed was arranged to give the social, intellectual, and spiritual finish to the work of the evening. There was a cornet solo by Evan Ehlers, a reading by Ruby Jackson Hitch, a contralto solo by Grace Mason Woodside, an address by the stake president and pastor, R. S. Salyards, a musical reading by Gladys Christiansen, and two piano solos by Pearl Kinnaman. In conclusion the choir sang "Blest be the tie that binds," and the guests departed with many expressions of appreciation and approval.

We have dealt with this event at length for a good and sufficient reason. Were this occasion merely a banquet, or were choir banquets a matter of common occurrence, we would not care to dwell upon it. But this event exhibits an effort towards the cultivation of the choir spirit in its better form and it serves to show that what otherwise might be only a social function may be made the means of developing choir enthusiasm and loyalty and the spirit of true service. Other important choirs of the church might with profit follow the example of First Saint Joseph and engage in a system of social functions that would serve to render their cohesion much stronger and their work better.

The First Saint Joseph choir has another system that strikes us favorably and one which we think some of our choirs might copy to advantage. Its membership is divided into two classes, active and associate. The active class is composed of those who sing in the choir, giving their service to the church in that way. The associate members are those who do not sing in the choir, but who are ardent supporters and sympathizers with its work and who desire to show their appreciation by associating themselves with the choir in its support. These pay one dollar per year for this privilege and in return doubtless receive some of the courtesies that are possible for the choir to bestow. It is an excellent idea.

Honors for the Independence Choir

Several times in the recent past the Independence choir has been a participant in the choral functions of Greater Kansas City, being asked to sing as a part of large choral bodies on two occasions when Handel's Messiah was given, and upon one occasion in 1918 on the May Festival programs of the Kansas City Community Chorus, which were given in conjunction with the splendid Chicago Symphony Orchestra. The war intervened, and last year there were no functions of this sort. But the choir on each occasion acquitted itself with full credit, showing itself able to compete with the singers of other choirs and choruses of Kansas City, both in point of ability and finish. With the resumption of choral activities last autumn the Independence choir was again asked to sing with the Kansas City Community Chorus by Mr. John R. Jones, who had been chosen to the post of director in chief of this movement in Kansas City by prominent individuals of musical leadership and public spirit. This spring Mr. Jones heard the choir sing Haydn's "Creation" during the session of the General Conference (he had also previously heard it in "Elijah" at the conference two years ago) and again invited it to participate in the programs of the May Festival of this year, singing in conjunction with the community choruses of Greater Kansas City. But the honors were greatly enlarged this year, for the choir was asked to come as an individual body and as an individual organization render two numbers independently of the chorus as a whole, under their own director and accompanist.

This they did on the evening of May 24, and their work as an individual body was of such character that the credit and reputation of past efforts was not impaired in any way. The Kansas City Times of next morning's issue commented most kindly as to the excellence of their work and Brother L. Eugene Christy, their director, is feeling happy over the successful termination of his anxious work of preparation.

A Musical Festival for Independence

The Department of Music plans to hold a musical festival and institute for the three stakes, Zion, Kansas City, and Holden, at the Stone Church, Independence, July 19 and 20.

The purpose of this event is to extend the work of the department in these stakes, to develop the work and spirit of music therein, and to give aid and instruction to the music workers of the stakes along lines connected with their work.

The present plan of sessions is as follows:

Saturday, June 19:

3.00 p. m. Opening session and institute work.

7.30 p. m. Musical, lecture, choir rehearsal.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audencia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Household Budget

(Through a combination of circumstances, the matter contained in the following article was not presented to the sisters of the Women's Department at conference time. We are glad to fulfill the promise made then, and present here some thoughts on the above subject, though, of necessity, in greatly condensed form.)

No one can make a success of a business unless he has a clear ideal towards which to work. In like manner no woman can make a thorough success of running her household unless she first definitely establish some objectives, and then work in a systematic and trained way to reach them.

To be able to discriminate clearly between essentials and nonessentials in the home, is one fundamental principle upon which successful management depends. The woman who spends her strength over nonessentials is seldom the one whose home runs smoothly and effectively.

No contractor would enter upon the task of erecting a building without definite and concrete plans and estimates of cost. Should a woman undertake to establish or maintain a home with less than that?

Possibly the very first requisite shall be that a cooperative spirit shall exist between the partners in the home business. The provider and the spender must come to some mutual understanding in regard to what objectives shall be set up in that business, what ideals established, what needs covered, what purposes achieved. What man in business would do less with a partner, especially the one who is managing the expense department of his establishment?

Then must follow a careful survey of the income of the household "firm." To be accurate, this should include not only the salary, but the income from investments, real estate, and production of all kinds. In a rural home this latter is not always taken into consideration, as much of the table supply comes from garden and dairy. In the city, the wages received by all members of the family who work outside the home, should be included. Often children contribute to the income of a family. In this connection, justice indicates that whatever salary or income a husband is able to bring into the family treasury has already been, in part, earned by the wife, who contributes steadily both labor and time to their joint enterprise.

Just how the total income of a family is to be handled is the rock upon which many domestic barks come to grief. Some men seem to forget that it takes money to run a house, to feed and clothe and educate a family. They need to be reminded too often to suit the delicate and sensitive natures of their wives. On the other hand, some women seem to be utterly indifferent as to how the money comes, what needs it should cover, what emergencies met, just so they have enough to satisfy their selfish desires for pleasure, pomp, or fashionable display. We must conclude for the purposes of this article, that both husband and wife are willing to review their resources and expenses with that good feeling of co-operation and mutual trust and confidence such a life-partnership deserves.

A common method for the housewife to receive money is

Sunday, June 20:

8.00 a. m. Prayer service.

11.00 a. m. Preaching service, with sermon on special musical theme.

3.00 p. m. Institute work.

7.30 p. m. Musical program.

Brother Albert N. Hoxie, General Director of the department, expects to be present and to have charge of the work of the occasion, and this festival and institute will perhaps be the forerunner of other events of like character, to be held under the auspices of the Department of Music at strategic points in the church.

called the "doling method." When she needs something, the larder becomes empty, or the children's shoes need repairing, (etc., etc., ad lib.) she must needs ask her lord and master for the necessary wherewithal! This often entails a scene, and always works ruin to a woman's sense of justice or fair play. Often she loses respect for the man, who, fine and honorable in all things else, fails to see that this humiliation imposed upon the woman he vowed to cherish, may, in time, choke to death even love itself!

The "allowance" plan is some better. One difficulty with this is that it is often inadequate to meet unforeseen and unavoidable expenses. Then, too, it is often not so planned as to allow any reasonable margin for the wife's personal expenses. She gets only what she is able to save out of the family expenses, and when there is no margin she goes without. Besides, this plan sometimes means that an amount of money is left about the house, which is not always safe or wise. Another objection is that certain seasons require a difference in the amount of money needed. Fall clothing, or the winter's supply of fuel, or some other expense peculiar to particular periods, prevents a flat allowance from being always adequate to meet the needs.

Some husbands prefer the "charge" system. This means that a charge account is established at certain stores, and the wife can get what is needed, and the husband pay the bills once a month. This plan has many advantages, one being that there is no ready cash lying about the house to be lost or stolen. Likewise there is none for an emergency! This plan followed by even very wealthy men, has brought about the spectacle of their wives, with unlimited buying privileges at certain stores, often at their wit's end to find car fare, money for postage stamps, or a dime to contribute to charity!

Authorities on household management seem to agree that the only fair and business-like method of handling the expenditures of a family is by the checking system. Not all women are acquainted with the details of this plan, but with sincere spirit they and their husbands could study it together, and together work out this cooperative system of management. Thereby a woman is made aware of the true financial condition of her husband's affairs, and the true wife will be one who will enter, heart and soul, into the business of promoting the common good of the family. The joint bank account in the name of both husband and wife, is a stimulation to the economical spirit of the home, and is productive of good team-work. If a man cannot trust a woman with his earnings (which are partly hers) could he trust her with his "honor, his reputation, or his name"—all of which the real man values more highly?

It is in keeping accounts that the average housekeeper finds her Waterloo, but in nine cases out of ten, this failure is caused by a lack of a proper system, and in a wrong conception of the purpose of such accounting. The real value lies in classifying expenditures, so that a fairly accurate estimate may be made of the costs of certain divisions. An account may be extremely accurate as to dollars and cents, and yet lack in essential information concerning expenses; another may be very satisfactory from this standpoint even if every penny of outlay is not accounted for. When a home maker can tell how much is being spent for food, for shelter, for clothes, by the week or month, and can compare accounts with previous weeks or months, she is in a fair way of knowing just where and how expenses may be reduced with safety to the welfare of her family. Then, too, an expense account showing the date of purchase of articles, will not only help to determine how long such articles will give service, but has often prevented the duplicate paying of bills. Tradespeople are not infallible, and sometimes it happens that a bill is sent the second time for collection. A housekeeper's expense account is valuable in such a case.

The "budget" is simply the planning ahead for future expenditures, and its value will be that it is made adequate to provide for the various avenues of outlay in proportion to their demands. Too often do families have experiences of "feast and famine"! Too often at the beginning of the month, on receipt of the monthly allowance, it seems so ample that certain indulgences are allowed, only to find, before the month is over, that there come days of very extreme scrimping in order to tide over until another pay day. The carefully planned budget is designed to help the housekeeper distribute her resources to cover all lines of expense, and that in proportions adapted to their needs.

In establishing a budget of family expense, many different things must be taken into account. As a foundation for a wise and proper proportioning, careful accounting for several weeks or months is a decided advantage. Going over such accounts, one is able to arrive at percentages of expenses, and one is led to ask, "Is our food expense running too high this month in comparison to last? Are we paying too much rent in proportion to what we pay for clothes? Are we spending more for material things than is justifiable, and too little for things of the higher life?"

Of necessity a budget cannot be a fixed affair. Some months expenses run higher than in others, and, to be useful, a budget must to some extent be flexible. However, none should feel discouraged at apparent failures to live up to a budget; perhaps the budget is faulty. Try readjusting it. Failures are but the stepping-stones to success.

Many things must be considered in making out a budget. The physical condition of the family, whether or not there are invalids, or special expenses for health needed, such as teeth and eyes attended to, tonsils removed, etc., has a bearing. Then the home itself, whether a separate house or apartment, heated or unheated, lighted or otherwise, in the city or country, near work, school, church, or remote from any or all of these, whether there is a garden or not, facilities for keeping cow, chickens, or other sources of table supply, all enter into the proposition.
